3 p.m.

Tuesday, February 22, 2022

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Clerk: Good afternoon.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated February 10, 2022, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now like to invite the Royal Canadian Artillery Band brass quintet to play our national anthem. I ask that in observance of the COVID-19 public health guidelines you please refrain from singing.

Please be seated. Well, good afternoon, hon. members. It's an absolute pleasure to see you back in the Chamber and distinguished guests and others. You know, there's something very special about hearing the Canadian national anthem played by the brass quintet here in the Chamber.

I'd also like to mention, hon. members, that you will have noticed a pin on your desk. The pin commemorates the platinum jubilee of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. While I will provide further remarks about this historic milestone later, I wanted to inform you that these pins have been provided to you by the Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani. She will be joining us shortly, and on behalf of all members I would like to thank Her Honour for presenting each of us this special keepsake for such a memorable event.

I'd also like to now introduce a musical interlude by the RCA Band brass quintet. The piece performed is called Grand Valley Fanfare by Eric Ewazen.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LLD, and His Honour Dr. Zaheer Lakhani, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Her Honour: Please be seated.

Good afternoon, everyone. It's such a pleasure to be here with all of you today. Before I begin the Speech from the Throne, permit me to make a few brief comments. Treaty relationships are an essential part of the Crown in Canada, and I am proud to honour them in my role as the Queen's representative in Alberta. In the spirit of meaningful reconciliation I would like to acknowledge all our First Peoples, who have called this place home for thousands of years and welcomed us here to make our own lives. May we always dwell together on these lands with peace, respect, and understanding.

I would like to offer my most heartfelt thanks to all members of this Assembly, to all elected officials, front-line workers and essential workers, and to my fellow Albertans across our province for your care and commitment toward one another and our shared communities. I'm truly proud of the strength and perseverance that Albertans have shown over the past two very difficult years, and I am confident that we can overcome whatever challenges the future may bring through hard work, careful thought, and mutual respect. While the pandemic has limited our ability to meet in person, I'm very much looking forward to meeting many more of my fellow Albertans in the months ahead. I am looking to the future with hope and optimism.

With that, I will turn to the business at hand.

Speech from the Throne

Her Honour: Hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly and my fellow Albertans: I open this Third Session of the 30th Legislature as Her Majesty the Queen's representative, doing so as we celebrate her platinum jubilee.

The Crown that I represent has always had a special relationship with the Indigenous peoples of these lands, so as we gather here on traditional Treaty 6 territory, we renew that relationship, rededicating ourselves to the spirit of the treaties and to the essential work of reconciliation.

For 70 years Queen Elizabeth II has lived a life of selfless service. Shortly before her accession to the throne, then Princess Elizabeth famously declared, "My whole life, whether it be long or short, shall be devoted to your service." Her Majesty has kept that commitment with dignity and grace, a stable symbol of enduring traditions and virtues in an ever-changing world.

When she spoke to this Assembly during Alberta's centennial, in 2005, Her Majesty said:

When looking back on the story of Alberta, we see it extend well before 1905 . . . Your First Nations Peoples inhabited the prairies over 10,000 years ago, living in harmony with nature – then, as they do now. By the 1800s, these first citizens, along with the Métis, were joined by explorers, homesteaders, and railway workers from all over the world.

They had a dream to build homes in a land where freedom reigned. They created a spirit of belonging to a bountiful country under the principles of "peace, order, and good government" and the unifying influence of the Crown. It is a fitting homage to these ancestors that your motto is Fortis et Liber . . . Strong and Free.

The government will introduce the Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act as Bill 1 to create honours for Albertans who have done remarkable things caring for their communities, including the presentation of 7,000 medals to recognize 70 years of service. We have all witnessed many such acts of compassion and kindness through the great adversity of the past two years.

Much has been lost through the COVID era. Our lives have been disrupted in ways large and small. But the people of this province have risen to the challenge time and again, proving what it means to be Alberta strong. As restrictions begin to ease here and around the world and as the signs of economic renewal take hold, we can begin to sense the beginning of an Alberta spring. Winston Churchill once said, "Never, never, never, never – in nothing, great or small, large or petty – never give in." These words are hard-wired into Alberta's character. Albertans deserve a province that's just as resilient as they are, and we now have reason to believe that we are on the verge of those better days that once felt so far off.

We begin this session with Alberta leading the country in economic growth. For the first time in years more Canadians are now moving to Alberta than leaving. Our taxes are low, our economy is strong, and our quality of life is second to none. This has led to major investments from some of the world's largest companies, that will create good jobs for Alberta families. Our economy is diversifying, with record investment into technology companies, big film and television productions across the province, and record manufacturing sales.

The government will continue this positive momentum through Alberta's recovery plan, designed to create jobs, diversify the economy, and provide opportunities for every Albertan. Part of that plan will be a renewed effort to tell Alberta's story to the world, highlighting the many reasons why there is simply no better place on Earth to pursue a dream, raise a family, and build a life. This campaign will focus on attracting both job-creating investment and hard-working people from across Canada and around the world.

The important work of the new Environment, Social, and Governance Secretariat will be part of this effort, showcasing Alberta's achievements in lowering emissions and improving our reputation as a world leader in responsible energy production.

The government will continue to support the Oil Sands Pathways to Net Zero alliance to achieve their goal of net zero carbon emissions in the industry by 2050 while pressing the federal government to create strong fiscal incentives for investment in carbon capture utilization and storage technology.

Bills will be introduced to advance the vision of making Alberta one of the freest and fastest moving economies in North America. This will include a red tape reduction implementation act to enhance our regulatory environment and advance the goal of reducing Alberta's regulatory burden by one-third to attract more job-creating investment. A bill will be tabled to promote innovation in the financial services sector by allowing companies to test new products and services. As part of financial services modernization, legislation will make it easier to establish a reinsurer in Alberta, helping to reduce costs and spurring growth in our financial services sector.

To further diversify the economy, the government will create a Clean Hydrogen Centre of Excellence to help achieve Alberta's vision of becoming a major global hub in this future multitrillion dollar industry. And it will begin the process of dissolving the Balancing Pool to reduce costs on our economy.

The government's strategy to expand access to broadband Internet will bring high-speed connectivity to rural, remote, and Indigenous communities, ensuring they can participate in the digital economy.

New legislation will solidify Alberta's position as a modern electricity powerhouse and a magnet for investment in emerging technology like data storage and cryptocurrency as well as in traditional sectors like forestry and petrochemicals. The bill also clears the way for more self-generation of electricity, allowing major consumers to sell power to the grid, thus increasing supply and helping to lower prices for Albertans. And to protect consumers from higher utility costs, the government will introduce a natural gas consumer protection program similar to rebate programs used in the past.

The budget for fiscal year 2022-2023 will be tabled later this week, reflecting a dramatic improvement in Alberta's finances resulting from carefully reducing costs and from dynamic revenue growth across all sectors of the economy. It will focus on building health care capacity, getting Albertans back to work with the skills needed to succeed in the economy of the future, expanding the province's proven model of school choice, and making key investments to achieve a more diversified economy.

During the COVID-19 pandemic Alberta's health care system has often been under great stress. Our brilliant front-line health care workers have gone above the call of duty over the past two years. We all owe them a debt of gratitude. Despite having one of the best funded health care systems in the world, COVID has revealed shortcomings that we simply must address. First and foremost, that means building greater capacity while getting more value for our immense health care spending. To do so, the government will accelerate the Alberta surgical initiative, significantly increasing the number of surgeries performed in chartered surgical facilities in order to reduce wait times, that have grown during COVID.

Major capital investments will expand and modernize hospital capacity, including completion of the Calgary cancer care centre, a historic expansion of the Red Deer regional hospital, and expansion of Edmonton's Neuroscience and Mental Health Institute. The government will increase health care capacity by expanding intensive care while training and recruiting more key health care workers. This will make our system more resilient for potential future waves of COVID-19.

The government will improve care for Albertans with a new continuing care act, implementing recommendations of a recent review to make the system more responsive and sustainable.

A bill will propose sanctions for health practitioners who perform the misogynistic practice of female genital mutilation. It's part of the government's broader effort to protect vulnerable women and girls from sexual violence.

The government will implement the recommendations of a report from the Member for Peace River on improving access to palliative care. Patients facing end-of-life decisions must know that there are life-affirming options to physician-assisted suicide. Improvements will focus on beginning palliative care as soon as possible and keeping individuals in their homes and communities with support from those they know and love for as long as possible.

Keeping Albertans safe is as vital as keeping them healthy. Acting on recommendations from the Human Trafficking Task Force, chaired by Paul Brandt, the government will expand its efforts to combat the scourge of this modern form of slavery. This work will complement recommendations from the Alberta Joint Working Group on Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls. Amendments to the Missing Persons Act will equip law enforcement with new tools to find victims of human trafficking and bring their captors to justice.

Many vulnerable women and girls have inadequate support during pregnancy, which can affect their child's health and life chances. To assist low-income mothers and improve health outcomes for their babies, the government will significantly increase and expand prenatal benefits to mothers receiving AISH and income support.

The government will ensure full implementation of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and Motion 501 to simplify and accelerate the adoption process, connecting children with loving parents eager to be their forever families.

Upcoming changes to the Employment Standards Code will provide extra job protection to workers on two fronts. The three-day bereavement leave currently offered when a family member passes away will be extended to employees who experience a miscarriage or stillbirth, recognizing the pain and grief experienced by parents who lose an unborn child. The 20-day limit for unpaid military reservist leave will be removed, recognizing that reservists often train for longer periods. We must honour and support those who serve our country in uniform.

Amendments to the Police Act will address the recommendations of the Police Act review, strengthening local policing and holding officers accountable to the communities that they serve.

New legislation will broaden the services and supports for victims of crime, and a new regional approach will ensure that victims in all parts of Alberta can access support. Right-to-know legislation will allow more information to be shared with the public about individuals on bail, probation and parole, and criminals pending deportation. These measures will complement the implementation of Clare's law, allowing people to be informed if their partner has a violent criminal record.

The Minister of Education will introduce legislation to strengthen protection for schoolchildren, ensuring that staff who are found to have engaged in misconduct face the full force of the law. The bill will ensure that investigations into teacher misconduct are conducted by an independent body, ending the conflict of interest which allows the union representing teachers to regulate its own members. With this reform Alberta will join the rest of Canada and teachers will join all other professions in having an independent process for disciplinary issues.

Parents know what is best for their kids, and Albertans have long supported pluralism as a key principle in our education system. That is why the government will bring forward a package of regulatory improvements to help create new charter schools and better support existing charters to realize the promise of the Choice in Education Act. A growing number of Alberta families are choosing home-schooling as the best choice for their families, but many home-schooled children with special needs cannot access services that are available in the public school system. Access to specialized services will be expanded to home education families through a new program to ensure all children in Alberta, regardless of educational choice, receive the supports they need to be successful.

Alberta is a pluralistic society, united in its diversity. All Albertans deserve to live free of fear and prejudice, yet too often we see people from minority communities targeted by acts of hatred. To address this, the government will launch a review of recent apparently hate-motivated incidents, working with police to identify common patterns and to make recommendations on how better to prevent such crimes in the future. Last summer some 50 Christian churches in Canada, many of them in Alberta, were destroyed or damaged by arson, vandalism, and other forms of hate-inspired violence. These were attacks on the constitutionally protected freedom of religion and our belief in peaceful pluralism. That is why the government will more than double the size of the security infrastructure program, which was launched last year to upgrade security for community facilities targeted by hate crimes, including mosques, synagogues, gurdwaras, mandirs, and other vulnerable facilities.

Last October 62 per cent of voters endorsed a proposed amendment to the Canadian Constitution regarding equalization. The government will use that mandate to press for negotiations on equalization this year while also seeking the appointment of Alberta's elected nominees for the Senate of Canada.

Consultations will be completed on the prospect of an Alberta provincial police force, and the government will continue to examine a possible Alberta pension plan as potential reforms to strengthen the province.

The effort to build a strong, resilient Alberta will include a program to deepen knowledge of the province's past and appreciation for what makes Alberta unique. As part of this effort the Minister of Culture will table a bill creating a process for the designation of commemorative days and a bill recognizing ammolite as Alberta's official gemstone. The source of the sacred buffalo stone, or iniskim in the Blackfoot language, ammolite is a unique symbol of the province's natural beauty and history.

Strengthening Alberta's sense of identity means honouring those who have gone before us to build this remarkable place that we call home. That is why the government will launch an initiative to memorialize prominent Alberta historical figures by attaching their names to provincial buildings and infrastructure, beginning with the Terrace Building on the Legislature Grounds, which will be named after Chief Poundmaker, the great Cree peacemaker. The building lies near the site of the original Hudson's Bay Company's Fort Edmonton. It is fitting that a great chief who was a bridge-builder between the First Nations and European settlers would now dominate that historic site.

Recognizing our history also means facing the reality of past injustices. The Minister of Indigenous Relations will complete consultations with Indigenous communities and will establish a memorial on the grounds of the Legislature, forever to remember the victims of the Indian residential school system.

Hon. members, the last two years have tested us all, both as individuals and as a society. Together we have overcome those challenges. Thank you to Albertans for your perseverance and your courage in the face of the storm. Prosperity and opportunity are returning to Alberta. There is space again for big dreams, the kind of dreams that thrive where the prairies meet the mountains, where opportunities are limitless and everyone's full potential can be achieved. The clouds are breaking, and the sun is starting to shine through. A stronger and more resilient Alberta awaits for all of us.

God save the Queen, and may God bless Alberta.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

The Speaker: We will now be led in the playing of God Save the Queen.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[The Mace was uncovered]

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee

The Speaker: Hon. members and guests, I would like to make some brief remarks about a very important anniversary that we are celebrating this year. As Her Honour so eloquently noted, this year is the 70th anniversary of the ascension to the throne of Queen Elizabeth II, and we are therefore celebrating the platinum jubilee of the reign of Her Majesty. Queen Elizabeth II ascended to the throne on February 6, 1952, becoming the Queen of the United Kingdom and the Head of the Commonwealth. Subsequently Canada and other Commonwealth nations passed legislation to recognize the Queen as their sovereign, and hence Queen Elizabeth II is not only the head of state, but she is the Queen of Canada.

The Queen's reign is the longest of any monarch in the history of the United Kingdom. This reign has been characterized by service and dedication to Her Majesty's people at home and abroad and to the fundamental principles that underpin our system of government.

On Coronation Day Her Majesty uttered these important words. "Parliamentary institutions, with their free speech and respect for the rights of minorities, and the inspiration of a broad tolerance in thought and expression – all this we conceive to be a precious part of our way of life and outlook." As we celebrate the platinum jubilee, let us be thankful for Her Majesty's continued service and dedication to the principles that we each hold so dear.

To commemorate and celebrate the jubilee, we have launched and dedicated a jubilee website highlighting information about Her Majesty and the history of jubilee celebrations. The site also provides an opportunity for Albertans to offer messages of congratulations or to share memories, videos, or photos of monarch moments that they, the Albertans, may have experienced over the number of years. I would invite each and every one of you to check out the website.

So in this jubilee year we are thankful for the 70 years of service to Canadians and to Albertans. God save our most gracious and noble Queen.

Hon. members, I have two brief notes before we proceed to the remainder of the Routine. As just a brief reminder, there will not be a reception held in the rotunda at the conclusion of today's events, as was noted in your program.

Tablings

The Speaker: I also have the honour of tabling a copy of the speech given so graciously by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Motions

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration on Wednesday, February 23, 2022.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader has the call.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to Her Honour congratulations on a well-delivered throne speech. A tremendous amount for members to digest.

As such, I move that we adjourn the Legislative Assembly of Alberta until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:54 p.m.]

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, February 23, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, please remain standing as it is our custom that we pay tribute to members who have passed away since we last met.

Today I would like to welcome members of the Campbell family, who are present in the Speaker's gallery.

Murray John "Jack" Campbell
May 14, 1931, to December 21, 2021

The Speaker: Murray John "Jack" Campbell served three terms as the Progressive Conservative Member for Rocky Mountain House from 1979 to 1989. Born in Drumheller, Mr. Campbell graduated from SAIT to work as an electrical lineman and a construction foreman. His career then turned to farming and real estate. Mr. Campbell was active in his local community, serving on a variety of agriculture and recreational boards and associations. His time in the Legislature: Mr. Campbell admitted to enjoying, quote, the people, the travel, the situations, the questions, and the answers. He described his approach as one of perseverance and understanding. Jack Campbell passed away on December 21, 2021, at the age of 90.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask that you remember Mr. Campbell as each of you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let the light perpetual shine upon him.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is a special gratitude that goes to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome some of those family members. Members of the Campbell family who are present in the Speaker's gallery, please rise as I call your name and remain standing until you have all been introduced: son of Jack Campbell, Jeff Campbell, and his wife, Lee-Ann Simmonds; step-daughter Susan Manning and her husband, John Manning; granddaughters Abby and Kate Manning.

Hon. members, also joining us in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon is a guest of the Minister of Seniors and Housing, a familiar face around the Legislative Assembly, the minister of, I think, just about everything and the former Member for Calgary-Nose Creek, Mr. Gary Mar.

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements Chamber Practices during the Spring 2022 Sitting

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to just provide a brief statement about the daily Routine prior to us proceeding to the remainder of the Routine. I would like to inform you that my office received a House leaders' agreement on February 18, 2022, with respect to the Oral Question Period and Members' Statements rotations. The agreement modifies the rotation to address the in-caucus composition in the Assembly since the fall sitting. The Member for Edmonton-South, who now sits as an independent, is entitled to one question per week starting with question 9 on day 4 of Oral Question Period rotation, which will be Tuesday, March 8, 2022. In addition, the member is allocated one member's statement in the first week of the three-week rotation starting February 24, Thursday. The Members' Statements rotation is outlined in the projected sitting days calendar, which was distributed to all members last week as part of my procedural memo, which I'm sure you have all read thoroughly. I will table a copy of the House leaders' agreement at the appropriate time in the daily Routine.

I would like to also inform members that we will resume the regular distribution of documents in the Chamber this session. Pages will distribute copies of bills, motions, and amendments as they are introduced. They will also resume the delivery of notes between members and collecting from members documents that have been tabled and petitions that are presented. As members can see, the pages have also resumed regular water service at each desk and will provide coffee and juice upon request following the Orders of the Day being called.

Members' Statements

Speech from the Throne

Ms Rosin: Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's throne speech the Lieutenant Governor laid out a strong vision for our Legislature to inspire hope and optimism across our province. After two difficult years Albertans are ready to move forward beyond the pandemic and into the next great chapter of our story.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is starting to feel like Alberta again. For the first time in a long time more people are moving to our province than leaving it. With lower taxes and massive red tape reduction Alberta is once again a global destination for workers, investors, entrepreneurs, innovators, and dreamers. We just had our best year of oil production and our highest agricultural receipts on record. Our economy isn't just growing; it's diversifying. Through massive investments in wind, solar, film, technology, hydrogen, and lithium Alberta's recovery plan is creating high-paying jobs in every corner of our province, including rural, remote, and Indigenous communities.

This won't just be a session focused on the economy, however. This session will also focus on protecting the humanity of our people, particularly our most vulnerable, by expanding our health care, continuing care, and palliative care capacity, increasing prenatal benefits, providing supports for bereaved parents, and simplifying the adoption process. Our Minister of Education will also move forward with legislation to end once and for all the conflict of interests that allowed the teachers' union to investigate and protect its own members in cases of gross misconduct involving our kids.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans sent this government to Edmonton to get the job done, and that's exactly what we're doing. It's been a tough two years, but we have so much to look forward to. Our economy is rebounding, our finances are in good shape, and I'm confident that Alberta's best days are certainly yet to come.

Postsecondary Education

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, in the last three years postsecondaries have seen cut after cut after cut. Adjusted for inflation and population growth, the total cuts so far have been more than $690 million, and that's before tomorrow's budget. This has led to staff cuts, program closures, steep increases to tuition, and fee hikes for students. These cuts are felt deeply by students and right across our postsecondary sector. We must be investing in our colleges, universities, and polytechnics. An investment in advanced education is an investment in our communities, in our future, our young people and future leaders of our province.

That is why our caucus has worked hard together with students, faculty, schools, industry leaders, and subject matter experts to develop a series of proposals to strengthen advanced education. Our suggestions centre around a well-funded postsecondary system that can provide all students, staff, and faculty with high-quality education and learning environments. We would address the extraordinary tuition increases that are causing students to pile up debt. We will comprehensively review the student aid system to ensure that every Albertan has the opportunity to participate in postsecondary. We will support students in finding valuable work experience, apprenticeships, and access to digital and other work-ready skills in addition to core programming. In this environment Alberta will be best equipped to undertake world-leading research, support growth in emerging industries, and support all Albertans in developing skills they need in the labour market of now and the future.

Postsecondaries are a key factor in keeping young people here in the province. Last year Statistics Canada reported that for the first quarter since 1988 we saw a net out-migration of 18- to 24-year-olds from Alberta. We must address this challenge. That's why we're proposing the future leaders council to work collaboratively to keep young students learning and staying here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40 COVID-19 Related Restrictions Removal and Postpandemic Reflections

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, as we begin the spring session of 2022, I want to take this opportunity in my first member's statement of this session to address the removal of provincial restrictions that take place just days from today. The past two years have been one of the greatest challenges for many within our province, and most importantly the impact on our youth is a toll that we have yet to fully understand. I hear stories from new moms and dads of deep concern that their two-year-old children cry when they see individuals removing their masks. Examples like this sit heavy on my heart.

The need for restrictions to end and for a return to normal is abundantly clear. Unfortunately, for many this has not come soon enough. But is the end of restrictions enough, Mr. Speaker? Is merely returning to normal enough for Albertans? There is now an apparent and growing concern that the normalization of the use of emergency powers is something that elected officials must address. As well, as Alberta MLAs we must address the mistakes and shortcomings of the past two years. Moving forward, the most important conversation is: how do we prevent a similar situation in the future? I am confident in the move to remove all provincial COVID guidelines and to allow our society to begin to heal from the impacts of COVID.

I also stress the need for everyone to put behind us the differences that COVID has created. We must remember that we are a community, a community that needs each other. More importantly, I feel that each and every one of us in this Assembly and all politicians across Canada need to address the changes that will provide confidence to all Canadians on how we move together forward. We must acknowledge the division this has created among Albertans. We must listen to those concerns and make changes to build a better path for the next generation, because the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over and expecting a different result.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Government Record

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've spent a lot of time recently knocking on doors in Mill Woods and asking my neighbours about issues that matter to them and their families. I've heard from families affected by the health care crisis this government has mismanaged and worsened, from parents with great concerns about the UCP's unsupported and untrusted new school curriculum, and I certainly heard concerns about exploding utility and insurance costs at almost every door. As I walked around and talked to more and more people in Mill Woods, a theme emerged. We are all suffering from what I call conservative chaos.

Many of my constituents expressed concerns about the recent breakdown in law and order and this government's tolerance for and even encouragement of those who chose to unlawfully set up blockades, blockades that reduced quality of life, freedom of mobility, and had real economic cost for fellow Albertans and Canadians. While I understand and respect the right to protest, it was seeing members of this own government caucus cheerleading and even participating in these blockades that reinforced for me that what we are seeing is conservative chaos. While the Legislature was out of session, Albertans were outraged to learn that the Alberta Justice minister called a chief of police after receiving a ticket, and that member still sits on the government front bench today. It's no wonder Albertans are rapidly losing faith in this UCP government's ability to keep the peace and to ensure law and order are maintained.

So on behalf of the people of Edmonton-Mill Woods I'm calling on this Premier to end conservative chaos. Alberta is looking for real leadership, something it hasn't had since the last election and something it needs now more than ever. It's time to reinvest in Alberta's public health care, reinvest in Alberta's public education, scrap the unsupported and untrusted UCP curriculum. It's time to get Albertans' skyrocketing bills under control, and it's time to end this conservative chaos.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat is next.

Federal Single-use Plastics Regulations

Mrs. Frey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all that's been going on, it's easy for things to get lost in the shuffle. For example, did you know that consultations for Trudeau's single-use plastic ban end on March 5? To recap, this plan aims to ban the manufacturing, import, sales of everything from checkout bags to stir sticks. Many disability advocates note that necessary items like plastic straws are already in scarce supply. Interestingly enough, research from the Columbia University Climate School found that plastic bags actually use fewer resources than their other options. In fact, for a plastic bag's pollution to be zeroed out, a reusable bag would have to be used 7,000 times and a paper bag 40 times. When does that happen, Mr. Speaker? All in all, this is just another left-wing fad.

Without being forced by government, businesses already use less carbon-intensive options like biodegradable cutlery, take-out containers, and even straws. Local greenhouses have switched to cardboard packaging alternatives, and local recycling agencies have stepped up in huge ways.

Trudeau's plastic ban is yet another direct attack on Alberta's energy industry, a leader in responsible petrochemical production, a leader in plastic production. Alberta's government has taken steps to support the work that Albertans have already started, and Environment and Parks continues to work on extended producer responsibility plans to reduce plastic waste at the source, a very worthwhile objective. In addition, throughout the pandemic we relied on single-use plastics heavily, and they will continue to play a role in our recovery. From face shields to rapid tests to masks and other PPE, petrochemicals protected our communities and our most vulnerable. Right now, however, medical grade plastics are already in short supply.

The federal government is making headlines for all the wrong reasons, Mr. Speaker, and I don't need to tell you that. It's hard not to see that they have more pressing issues than a desire for plastic straws at a restaurant. We all agree that we need to take care of our environment. Pollution is a very real problem that needs serious solutions, not needless virtue signalling.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a statement to make.

Health Care Workers

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start today by thanking the hard-working, selfless health care workers in our province for their tireless work over the last two years protecting the health and saving the lives of Albertans. They fought on the front lines of a deadly pandemic that put pressure like we've never seen on our health care system and on them. They've had to put up with threats of violence, protests at their place of work, attacks on social media, and actual physical assaults simply for doing their jobs.

Sadly, they've also had to endure this while battling with a government that constantly undermined them, belittled them, mused about drastic cuts to their pay, accused them of holding knives to the throats of Albertans and more, a government whose incompetent management and lack of leadership nearly collapsed the health care system, caused tens of thousands of urgent surgeries to be cancelled, and caused wait times for ambulances to reach unacceptable levels.

No government in our history has done as much damage to our public health care system as the UCP, and now they're trying to blame the very workers who are left to clean up their mess. The Premier in recent days has ranted about union-run hospitals and talked about how more privatization would help address the huge backlog his government created. Mr. Speaker, unions don't run hospitals; they protect and support the tens of thousands of Alberta health care workers who do. Those Albertans are heroes, not the villains that this Premier and his government are trying to paint them as.

Only days ago our leader stood with two nurses who have seen the impact that this pandemic and the UCP government have had. They talked about the burnout, the stress, the long hours, the lack of time off or rest. They talked about how health care workers have given their all to protect Albertans. That's why it's deeply insulting to all Albertans to watch a Premier who attacks our public health care system and the incredible, hard-working people who kept it afloat after his government's incompetence nearly collapsed it.

To the Premier. During this pandemic health care workers saved countless lives, protected and provided support to countless more, and are owed our eternal gratitude. They deserve better than his insults and attacks. They deserve an apology.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Viking Cup

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the winter break many hockey games were played all around Alberta and the world, including just last week with the Canadian women's hockey team winning the gold medal at the Olympics. In the Camrose constituency we love our sports, especially hockey. In the past we have played host to an international hockey tournament called the Viking Cup.

A constituent in Camrose and former MLA, LeRoy Johnson, has written a book titled The Viking Cup. In the early days Camrose Lutheran College was challenged to compete in a hockey tournament with international teams. In 1980 it was their turn to host. This feat was accomplished with the international exchange program. During its 26-year lifetime the NHL successfully drafted 400 players from this talent pool. With his book Mr. Johnson has created a historical account of events with a vast collection of old photos and good memories. To borrow a quote from John Short, who prepared the forward for the book:

Here, you will read and sense the comfort of small, rural Camrose, Alberta, blended with the size and requirements of numerous nations, including Russia at a time when the world's political Cold War was an everyday reality. International politics, pure athletic competition, and large dollops of goodwill came together and created an event worth holding and a story worth telling.

I'm proud of the work LeRoy has done to preserve such a valuable piece of Camrose history. Thank you for all that you have done and continue to do for our community.

Speaking of communities, we have seen so much happen over the past few months. With the REP program gone and restrictions lifting, I look forward to getting back to normal. Alberta is well on the way to recovery, thanks to the Alberta recovery plan. As Alberta's swagger returns, everyday Albertans are top of mind, with record investments last year and a focus on getting Albertans back to work. I look forward to seeing what this year will bring to Alberta, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Private Health Care Services

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, public health care is our greatest gift to one another as Canadians, a fundamental right that we cherish, yet for our Premier it's something that he wants to carve up and hollow out. We've been through two years of stress, hardship, and heartbreak in our hospitals, Albertans who lost loved ones, Albertans still waiting in pain. Doctors, nurses, and front-line staff are burnt out. Retention is a challenge, never mind recruitment. To the Premier: who exactly does he believe is going to get to staff his private, for-profit hospitals?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, Alberta is spending more on health care than ever in our history. Alberta is the second-biggest spender on health care per capita in Canada. Alberta has more doctors and nurses working in our hospitals and system today than at any point in our history, yet we have faced very serious capacity constraints through COVID that we must forthrightly address. That's why in last year's budget this government added nearly a billion dollars to speed up surgeries through the Alberta surgical initiative. Tomorrow the Minister of Finance will make an announcement about another historic investment, and that started today with the largest ever hospital renovation program, $1.8 billion, in Red Deer.

Ms Notley: When it comes to Red Deer, no one will believe it until long after they've seen it with these guys.

Mr. Speaker, we do know that we need more capacity, but padding the bottom line of private operators is not the solution. It only leads to less integrated care, more patchwork in delivery, and higher costs as the surgical system becomes beholden to profit motives. A B.C. study found that knee surgery in a for-profit clinic cost three grand; in a public hospital, $900. Why doesn't the Premier stop the misinformation, stop attacking health care workers, and start investing in our public, front-line health care supports?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, on the Red Deer hospital, in 2017 she got a report from AHS saying that there were serious shortages. She got a report saying that people were dying because of the lack of a cath lab in Red Deer, and you know what she did as Premier? Absolutely nothing. Not one cent for additional health care capacity in central Alberta. Today we made the largest ever taxpayer capital investment in the history of central Alberta, the largest ever single investment in a hospital renewal program, $1.8 billion to $190 million over the next three years to increase hospital capacity there by 54 per cent. But why was the NDP missing in action?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we committed to that hospital at the beginning of 2019, and then the Premier did a few months later. Then the year after there was no money, and the year after there was also no money, just press releases. Everyone in Red Deer understands that the only thing they know how to do for that hospital is print press releases, and they have no trust that they can count on the Premier to deliver better health care in their city.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, they had the wheel for four years and not one cent invested in that hospital. Thanks to the hard-working central Alberta Conservative MLAs fighting for this project and thanks to this government getting our finances back in order by growing the economy, we can afford investments like this. When it comes to contracting out surgeries, I want to remind her that the NDP approved 42 private, chartered surgical facilities, was adding 40,000 private surgeries to Alberta every year, 15 per cent of the total. Apparently, it's fine when the NDP does it, but it's privatization when we do.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition. Second set of questions.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is budget day, but we know that the most important budget is the family budget. Under this Premier families have been hit with too many fee and tax hikes to count. With inflation at an all-time high this Premier's sneaky tax grab and his freeze on low-income benefits make things worse. Alberta families will lose an average of $400 every year while seniors lose $250, and an Albertan on AISH, the most vulnerable among us, loses $1,000. To the Premier: will he reverse these bad decisions in the budget, or will he keep picking Albertans' pockets?

Mr. Kenney: What a question from the Premier who brought in the single largest tax hike in Alberta history, Mr. Speaker, the NDP carbon tax, that we repealed as Bill 1. Now, what crocodile tears to hear her raise concerns about the high cost of energy and of gas when she thinks that's a feature and not a bug. That's why the NDP loves Justin Trudeau's carbon tax backstop. Why? It forces up the cost of heating your home and filling up your gas tank. The NDP wants to punish people for doing things like that, but we are opposed to those carbon taxes.

The Speaker: I just might remind both members to direct their comments through the chair. The member or the Premier using directly "he" or "she" creates the sense that it is a personal attack that either of you may be making on each other, and I know that wouldn't be the case.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, most of what the Premier just said is not true, but if he wants to play the blame game, fine. Who hiked tuition on students? He did. School fees on parents? That's him, too. Property tax hikes? That's because of his cuts to municipalities. Car insurance? He removed the cap on premiums. Power prices? Three times higher than the cap our government had in place. The Premier can't deny it. His reckless decisions have led to massive costs for Albertans. Will the Premier act now and reverse any of these bad UCP decisions that have hammered household budgets?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we did reverse the NDP cash grab, their carbon tax. We did fight their friend Justin Trudeau's carbon tax all the way to the Supreme Court with six other provinces. But here's the problem: the biggest government cost driver on the cost of living now is the carbon tax. It went up by another 10 bucks on January 1, and they want to do it again and again and again. They are aligned with Justin Trudeau wanting to move it from $50 a tonne to $170 a tonne. We will fight that every step of the way to try to reduce the cost of living on Albertans.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's talk about utility bills. Last week, when the associate minister was asked about an Albertan's $1,200 bill, his answer was to blame that poor woman for not asking for price protection. Seriously? Albertans should not be choosing between the power bills and the grocery bills. We want to talk about what's rising? How about a 300 per cent increase in electricity bills because they removed the price cap that was protecting Alberta families. When are you going to do something for those families?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons for higher electricity prices was the NDP's fiasco on the Balancing Pool, where because of their ideological zeal to shut down inexpensive and reliable forms of power production – guess what? – they passed on a $1.3 billion bill to Alberta electricity ratepayers. I've got news for you. In the days to come we'll be keeping our platform commitment to release an independent audit into the NDP electricity Balancing Pool fiasco. It's going to throw a spotlight on how they drove up electricity prices.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Coutts Border Crossing Blockade

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our largest border crossing was blockaded for 18 days. Not only did it blockade emergency vehicles and damage our economy to the tune of nearly a billion dollars; it also threatened public safety in Coutts as it contained an extremist cell stockpiling weapons. Simple question. Does the Premier believe it was okay for members of his caucus to support, participate in, attend, and negotiate with those blockading Alberta's economy and plotting violence? If not, will he remove those MLAs from his caucus today?

Mr. Kenney: Of course, the question is false, Mr. Speaker. Nobody was negotiating with these individuals. I was absolutely clear that the law should have been enforced, and ultimately it was by the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker, a member of the Legislature visiting constituents to hear their concerns is actually their job. I know the NDP doesn't believe that, and like Justin Trudeau they regard everybody – everybody – involved in all of these protests as just a bunch of Nazis and deplorables. It's that kind of language that has inflamed a combustible situation and is completely irresponsible. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, on January 29 the Member for Taber-Warner attended the blockade at Coutts. On February 1 the Premier said that he was, quote, concerned but that the member had apologized and wouldn't go back. For the next week the blockade stole $40 million a day from Alberta's economy, but on February 8 – guess what? – that same MLA went back and called them inspiring on the same day the Attorney General called them illegal. To the Premier: why is this MLA still in his caucus?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the real question is: why didn't the NDP respect the operational independence of the RCMP? Why day after day did they shout, demanding immediate enforcement action, when the RCMP was in possession of intelligence of an extremely dangerous and combustible situation? All I can say is thank goodness the NDP wasn't in office during that situation because, like their friend Justin Trudeau, they would have made a bad situation much worse.

Ms Notley: Well, speaking to members of the police, the MLA for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland openly posted a request to law enforcement to consider disobeying orders, orders that actually flow from laws made by democratically elected members of this House. Right as that MLA was encouraging sedition, RCMP seized body armour, 13 rifles, and high-capacity ammunition stockpiled in a plot to murder officers. Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: how on earth is the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland still in this caucus? What in heaven's name is he thinking?

Mr. Kenney: More deceit and division from the NDP. He did no such thing, Mr. Speaker. He called on law enforcement officers to respect their oaths, and you know what their oath is? To uphold and defend the law, and that's exactly what RCMP members did with great care and precision to deal with the situation at Coutts. Meanwhile the NDP is onside with Justin Trudeau's invocation of the successor law to the War Measures Act. The NDP used to stand up for civil liberties. Now they just lie down for Justin Trudeau like a rug.

Premier's Leadership

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that we don't have to wonder why the Premier is defending these MLAs who were supporting illegal occupiers and blockaders or why he's making public health decisions based on his politics. It's because the Premier is weak and desperate and facing a leadership review he knows he may well lose. He's so scared that rather than working to address the many, many issues facing this province, he's dispatched his top and most senior staff member to campaign for his job. To the Premier: why do the lives and livelihoods of Albertans always come second to your issues?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I never saw the NDP so concerned about what Conservative political staff are doing. I can tell her this. This government tomorrow will present a moment of historic importance in this province, demonstrating the progress of our platform commitments, the Alberta recovery plan, and an amazing Alberta turnaround story. I know the NDP leader. She's angry. She's angry that we're lifting restrictions. She's angry that six-year-olds aren't being forced to wear masks. She's angry that Alberta's government is standing up against the invocation of virtual martial law. Albertans support the forward focus of this government.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the people who are angry are the 20,000 Albertans waiting for surgery, the 30,000 people in Lethbridge with no family doctor, the 32,000 Albertans who've been looking for work for over a year, the hundreds of thousands of families who can't pay their car insurance or their power bill. Why doesn't the Premier understand that those issues matter more than his leadership campaign, and why did he send his most senior official in his office to focus on his future rather than what Albertans are looking for?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what Albertans are looking for is economic growth, and what they're getting is a government that has led the country in economic growth last year and is projected to do so again this year. A hundred and thirty thousand net new jobs created last year, record investments across our economy, unprecedented diversification, the finances coming back in order: none of this would have happened if the NDP had continued their reckless spending, their job-killing taxes, their burdensome red tape, and their antibusiness attitude. Alberta is back on track.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's recap. The Premier who signed a public health guarantee is expanding private health care, the Premier facing a massive surplus won't stop raising costs on families, the Premier who preaches law and order allows his own MLAs to blockade the economy, and the Premier with a million problems is only focused on one, saving his own job. So here's a question to the whole front bench: will anybody who thinks that the Premier's office's biggest priority should be saving the job of the Premier stand up and say so?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that NDP leader: she's angry. She's angry still that Albertans fired her after the last election. She's angry that Albertans didn't agree with her carbon tax cash grab. She's angry that this government is not imposing a hard and endless lockdown on this province. She and her friends in the Federation of Labour and the Teachers' Association are angry that five-year-olds are not being forced to wear masks indefinitely. Albertans are happy to see these restrictions lifted, to see this economy recovering, to see a government that's keeping its word.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo is next.

Road Construction and Maintenance in Fort McMurray

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all acknowledge that the oil sands are a key driver of Alberta's and Canada's economy, creating jobs and tax revenue, supporting social programs and infrastructure projects across the province and the nation. Unfortunately, we don't necessarily feel we get our fair share of government reinvestment in Fort McMurray. I still drive 190 kilometres on a single-lane highway to go home. To the Minister of Transportation: in this upcoming budget how much will you be investing in ensuring that our road infrastructure is taken care of considering the economic contributions from this region? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for this question. Public safety is a top priority for Alberta's government and is considered in every single decision we make. Priority is given to highways with higher volumes, including our economic corridors, and that includes Alberta's oil sands. Budget 2022 will be tabled tomorrow, but I can tell you that Alberta's government will continue to invest in road safety improvements across the province.

Mr. Yao: It is given that, Mr. Speaker, the freeze-thaw cycle affects our roads every year, creating kilometres of pothole-ridden highways. Compounding the situation is the fact that so much heavy machinery traverses these highways, further damaging the roads. I drive these highways, and my vehicle is getting absolutely destroyed by the sheer size of these potholes and ruts as I drive back and forth between Edmonton and Fort McMurray. Can this government give me assurances that these highways will be maintained? Do they hold these contractors accountable and ensure that they do a good job?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Transportation has and will continue to invest in highway maintenance. Highway conditions are closely monitored to ensure a safe and reliable transportation network. That includes having crews filling potholes, crack sealing, and line painting. Thank you to highway maintenance contractors for the work they do to keep Albertans moving safely on our roads.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, it is given that road infrastructure is vital to the prosperity of a region, allowing access to resources as well as services, and as an escape route when the occasional wildfire passes through an isolated community. During the wildfires of 2016 lives were at risk because we only had one escape route out of the city, highway 63. In 2017 in Portugal 62 people died under very similar circumstances on the highways. Can the minister tell me if they will be investing in or at least investigating investments in road infrastructure for Fort McMurray?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, as someone who worked in the oil and gas industry for over 20 years, I'm very cognizant of and sensitive to the importance of the oil sands to our province, and my government colleagues would agree. Alberta Transportation is investing in critical infrastructure that northeastern Albertans can rely on. My department is in the designing phase of a twinning project on highway 63 north of Fort McMurray. We hope to have more to announce this summer. We have also undertaken extensive paving projects in the region over the last few years worth $27 million.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has a question.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week Albertans can expect to hear the Finance minister crow about his fiscal genius when the budget is tabled. But the truth hurts, and the fact is that Albertans know that with oil prices where they are, a traffic pylon could balance this budget. Rather than unseemly gloating and swaggering, will the Finance minister explain whether he will use this opportunity to invest in Alberta families, or will he continue to add to the cost of living as he has done since taking office?

Specifically, will he take action now on out-of-control electricity bills? Now.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the hon. member; the Finance minister is brilliant. As the member knows, the budget will be presented tomorrow by the Finance minister, and it will be a good budget for Albertans. My prediction is that the only Albertans that will be really unhappy are the ones across the aisle, because they don't put Alberta first. On this side of the aisle we do.

Ms Phillips: Given that under this government Albertans have dealt with a sneaky income tax hike, higher property taxes, higher school fees, higher insurance costs, higher electricity bills – the list goes on – and given that for the last two years it's been the UCP MO to reward their friends and insiders with billions while Alberta families watch their cost of living rise, will the Finance minister admit that the billions he's given away to the already wealthy have done nothing to help ordinary people and that that is why his Premier remains so deeply unpopular and no one trusts this government?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, people distrusted the NDP government so much that they fired them after one term. You know what? When the hon. member talks about ordinary Albertans, you know what would help them pay their bills? A job. Their business being successful. This government has put policies in place that have brought in record investment, high numbers of job growth. Those are the things that allow Albertans to pay their bills. It happens under this government. It never would have happened under the NDP. They made it worse and worse and worse, piling on costs and showing disrespect for job creators. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Phillips: Well, given that a good way to test the minister's theory would be to call the election now and given that balancing this budget does not have a single thing to do with any decision made by this Finance minister, will the Finance minister rise where the Speech from the Throne has fallen and commit to action on cost of living, solving real problems like electricity and car insurance, and commit that this one-time windfall will actually be invested in our people and province for the long term? Or is it just short-term politics to get the Premier through his April leadership review? Albertans want a real plan.

Mr. McIver: The hon. member thinks that the Finance minister isn't concerned with balancing. Apparently, she agrees with Justin Trudeau that the budget will balance itself. Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. On this side of the House we understand that. Our Finance minister has worked very hard and diligently to put a responsible plan in place, supporting Alberta's families, growth, jobs, investment, all of the things Albertans want, all of the things we're concerned about on this side of the House, and the things that the folks on the other side never cared about, which is why they got fired after one term. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Red Deer Regional Hospital Expansion

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost exactly two years ago the Premier stood in the Red Deer regional hospital and promised $100 million to redevelop it, but there was only $5 million for that hospital in the entire 2020 four-year capital plan. The promised $100 million didn't show up in the 2021 capital plan either. The UCP was back in Red Deer today, but Albertans know they can't be trusted. The Premier has never delivered on a tiny fraction of any of his promises in 2020. Why on earth would a single Albertan or the residents of Red Deer believe him today?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. I was very pleased to be part of the announcement today, a historic announcement in Red Deer, $1.8 billion for a new hospital, and I thanked the folks at AHS, our front-line health care workers, who have been working incredibly hard in doing the detailed budget, the plan for actually increasing capacity. We know that we need to increase capacity. We made a commitment in this government to increase capacity. We made that commitment today in Red Deer, and we're going to make that commitment to Albertans and do it across the entire province.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that it's lovely that this minister also got a chance to reannounce the same thing that the government didn't follow through on but given that when it comes to the Red Deer hospital, the Premier said in 2020 that the bottom line is that construction work will begin on the expansion refurbishment of the Red Deer hospital next year, in 2021, and given that that construction work did not start in 2021 – as recently as December Alberta Health had no idea when it might – and given that the UCP broke their promise to the people of central Alberta, why should anyone believe this new pack of promises that they're claiming to make today?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased that as part of this $1.8 billion historic announcement – and this is the largest amount announcement, the largest infrastructure project in the central zone in the history of health care and actually in the history of all infrastructure projects of the government in the central zone in the history of the province – we announced that this project will provide up to 570 beds. That's an increase of 200 beds; 54 per cent. This announcement – and we confirmed today about three more operating rooms and a cath lab. We will provide better services for Albertans in health care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government can wrap itself in its promises but it's clear to Albertans that these emperors have no clothes, given that the Red Deer hospital is only a few minutes' walk from the hotel ballroom where UCP members will gather in six weeks to decide whether or not to remove their leader and given that the Premier is so desperate for votes that he's sent his own chief of staff away on unpaid leave to find them, isn't it true that this Premier is simply repeating the same promise that he broke and failed to follow through on two years ago in a desperate bid to save his political career?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This historic announcement that we made today, $1.8 billion for the Red Deer regional hospital, a commitment that we made – as indicated by the Premier, the other side didn't make such a commitment, but we made this commitment. Not only is it $300 million over the next three years, but the commitment on the books, $1.8 billion to deliver on the infrastructure project, is about our commitment to deliver increased capacity in health care for our entire province. This is the start, and you'll hear more about this tomorrow in our budget. We are going to deliver on surgeries. We're going to deliver on better access for Albertans because that's what Albertans deserve, and that's what they're going to get.

Hydrogen Industry

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is coming back stronger than ever. Throughout 2021 our province saw billions of dollars in investments. Our government is focused on diversifying our economy to support up-and-coming industries like hydrogen and carbon capture while reducing carbon emissions. Many of these investments were made in the capital region and in Alberta's Industrial Heartland. To the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity: what do these kinds of investments mean for Albertans in the capital region in this new year?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is absolutely correct. We have seen an incredible amount of interest in the Industrial Heartland. We have seen Air Products. We've seen ATCO and Suncor. We've seen the largest private-sector investment in 15 years: Dow Chemical. These are mortgage-paying jobs for Albertans. And do you know what the NDP had to say about these investments? Absolutely nothing. The silence was deafening.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that we see increasing investments in various industries – some of these industries are brand new to Alberta – and given that hydrogen has played a significant part in our economic diversification and will place Alberta as a leader in emissions reduction, can the minister elaborate on how investment in hydrogen will benefit Albertans in the short and the long term?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. While the opposition has proven that they are agnostic to investment, I am proud to say that we are not doing that on this side. We have embraced the hydrogen industry because we know it's going to be a 2 and a half trillion to 11 trillion dollar industry by 2050. It's going to create tens of thousands of jobs for Albertans. It's going to diversify our economy. It's going to create royalties for the government. I look forward to revealing more information as we continue to roll out the hydrogen road map in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that Alberta's hydrogen road map came out in November 2021, outlining a plan to increase clean hydrogen production, increase exports, and expand the use across the province and given that Air Products will build the world's largest net zero hydrogen energy facility in the capital region, to the minister: what is the total capital expenditure that this project brings, and how many jobs will be created right here in the capital region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I am thrilled to tell members of this House that the expected capital investment for Air Products is $1.3 billion. We anticipate 2,500 skilled trades during peak construction. This project is so exciting. They're actually going to be using autothermal reforming. It will capture 95 per cent of the carbon emissions from this facility. It's a made-in-Alberta technological advancement that will help create generational wealth for Albertans.

2:20 Calgary Downtown Revitalization

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, the government claims that yesterday's throne speech offered a vision for Alberta as it comes out of the pandemic and charts a course for the future. Well, you wouldn't know it if you're a Calgarian. Calgary was mentioned one time in the speech – once – and that was the Calgary cancer centre, which, to be clear, the NDP government funded after a decade of Conservative neglect. Will the Minister of Finance explain why he has no plan for Calgary's future? Why hasn't he created any jobs for the people of my city, and why has he failed to provide any plan to revitalize the downtown?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the hon. member may be spending too much time in Edmonton, because if he spent any time in Calgary, he would notice that beside the cancer centre there's a little thing called the ring road under construction. Hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of good-paying jobs. There's the green line LRT, that the government's committed to. Listen, it's all good that he wants to support Calgary, but he may need to pay attention to what's happening there. My advice: go home. Have a visit. Look around. You'll see lots of good stuff being done there.

Member Ceci: Given that it was the Minister of Finance who claimed that it wasn't his job to revitalize Calgary's downtown and given that this government has stalled on major infrastructure projects like the Calgary green line, which, by the way, would transport Calgarians downtown, and given that the Premier is a representative of Calgary himself and has sat by and done nothing as the unemployment in the city topped all major cities in Canada and we saw record vacancy rates in downtown Calgary, my question is simple: will somebody on that side of the House apologize to the people of Calgary for failing them over and over?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member actually finds time in his busy schedule to visit Calgary, where he lives, he might also note that the Deerfoot needs fixing, and our government has committed to a major project to do that. It's well known. For someone complaining about nothing happening, you can hardly look around from the top of any hill in Calgary without seeing more than one major project that this government is performing right now. I guess it'll probably hurt the hon. member's feelings when we see the budget tomorrow, because there's lots of support for Alberta projects and for Alberta families, including Calgary.

Member Ceci: Given that Alberta's NDP is working on a strategy to bring new life into downtown Calgary and given that our proposal will include funding for building retrofits, a renewed focus on affordable housing, and a push to establish new faculties and a postsecondary campus in downtown Calgary and given that the UCP government has produced nothing even close to a plan despite having a full year and all the resources of the public service at their disposal, will the minister of economic development commit to reading my proposal when I release it next week and adopting the ideas since he can't come up with anything original himself?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm out of breath talking about all the things this government is doing in Calgary and area. The downtown is obviously always a support. It's historically been a driver of economic activity. Our government is well aware of that. We will not take advice from the other side. The biggest thing they did was to promise $10 billion worth of stuff just before they lost government two and a half years ago, none of which was funded, none of which would have been done. No promises were kept. We've cleaned up the mess. We got things better, on the right track, which they never did.

Government Policies and Women

Member Irwin: For women across the province the throne speech was yet another disappointment. Women in Alberta are powerful pillars of their communities as advocates, caregivers, business leaders, and so much more. Shamefully, this UCP government continues to repeatedly treat women as the most vulnerable in our society, women in need of saving. We, the NDP, know that as women thrive, society thrives, the economy grows. We acknowledge the critical role that women play. We're listening to Alberta women. Why aren't the UCP, and why are they ignoring the lived realities of women?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Status of Women.

Ms Issik: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting. I could have sworn that I spent the entire summer doing nothing but travelling the province and listening to women, listening to their lived experiences. Then do you know what I did? I came up with a plan to deal with issues that women face every day, like appointing a parliamentary secretary to deal with elder women issues, to deal with women in STEM. That's what I've done, and that's what I'm going to continue to do. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. When the Speaker stands, you're welcome to wait, and then I'll provide you the time remaining to conclude your answer once I can hear your answer.

The minister has eight seconds remaining.

Ms Issik: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've listened. I've worked a plan. I'm going to continue to work a plan to deal with the lived experiences of women in this province. I'm going to continue to do it.

Member Irwin: Given that women are looking for concrete action – they're not looking for committees; they're not looking for parliamentary secretaries – and given that there are countless women who need support in our province and many of them are still being ignored by the UCP and given that AISH and income supports under the UCP have declined and that the costs associated with children only increase after giving birth, to the minister apparently responsible for status of women: why is this government only providing nominal support to prenatal mothers, and why are they refusing to provide support, resources, solutions for low-income women and parents when they need the help the most?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Status of Women.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm guessing that perhaps there was some gap in somebody's memory somewhere where we missed the entire announcement about child care in this province.

Our Minister of Children's Services put together an amazing deal that has helped parents to make sure that child care is available to every single parent in the way families need it. It's an Alberta plan. She worked hard on that plan. I can't believe it seems to have slipped their memory.

Member Irwin: Given that that's an excellent segue, let's talk about child care. We know that child care has long-term positive impacts for workforce participation, for the economy, for education outcomes, and given that we lost 20 per cent . . .

The Speaker: I would remind the member – and I know that it's the first day back after a break – that the preamble after question 4 is not allowed. I think it's difficult to make the case that starting your question with "That is a really great segue to talk about something else" isn't a preamble. I appreciate that you might disagree, but that's not correct. You're more than welcome to continue your question without a preamble.

Member Irwin: Given that we lost 20 per cent of our child care workers in the last few years due to low wages, especially in areas like Fort McMurray, that saw wages decrease by up to $1,000 per month by this government, to that same minister: does she agree with the Minister of Children's Services that the low-income workers in this sector, many of them women, don't deserve the same wage security that workers in other provinces are getting?

The Speaker: That was much better.

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to talk about our made-in-Alberta child care plan any day and compare it to their record and their plan, which would have left out 70 per cent of those licensed child care spaces across Alberta. We listened to parents. We listened to operators. There is $300 million earmarked to support educators. We have been rolling out this plan. Child care fees have been reduced by half already for parents in every single licensed space right across this province, not just centres or spaces of our choice like the members opposite chose to do. Why? Because we listened, we learned, and we're rolling this out right now. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Hospital Emergency and Obstetric Services in Northeast Alberta

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I recently received an e-mail stating that the Cold Lake emergency room will be closed for 45 eight-hour time slots due to physician shifts needing coverage between now and March 31. In addition, Bonnyville is losing their obstetrics department because of a shortage of nurses for the entire month of March. My constituents are worried about the inconsistent coverage in the ER, and they are worried about expectant mothers being unable to deliver their newborns close to home. To the Minister of Health: what are we doing to address the current and severe shortage of ER physicians, nurses, and anesthesiologists in the northeast?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Emergency room disruptions are an all too frequent reality in rural and remote parts of our province. Rural doctor coverage is a problem across the entire country and something that we are taking head-on. I can confirm that at Cold Lake nursing staff have been on-site providing triage and assessments. EMS emergency calls have been rerouted to the surrounding health care centres to ensure local residents continue to have access to emergency services that they need. Meanwhile AHS continues to work to secure locum coverage and recruit additional doctors to the Cold Lake health care centre. We are working on this, and we will deliver on it.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Minister, for the answer there. Given that Cold Lake has continuously seen shortages in ER doctors and given that their current compensation for doctors is being negatively affected by the hospital being classified as urban despite their 293-kilometre distance from the Edmonton metro region and given that the Ministry of Health recognizes Cold Lake as rural enough to permit the department as eligible for rural education supplement and integrated doctor experience program, to the minister: where are we at with the redesignation of the ER department in Cold Lake hospital from urban to rural?

Mr. Copping: Thank you to the hon. member again for the question on this topic, and I want to thank the hon. member for his support of the RESIDE program. As I announced a couple of weeks ago, RESIDE will provide 20 medical residents per year for the next three years for health care in 15 rural communities across Alberta, including Cold Lake. RESIDE is part of our $90 million commitment to recruit and retain rural doctors in Budget 2021. Now, our review of Cold Lake's ER department is ongoing, Mr. Speaker, but I want to commit to the member that we will keep him and the residents in his community aware of any decision on this matter, and we are committed to providing service across the entire province, including . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the rural, remote, northern program is in place to ensure that all Albertans receive proper medical care in the right place and at the right time and given that Cold Lake is 293 kilometres from Edmonton and that their variable fee premium is currently at 9 per cent and a community only 146 kilometres from Edmonton receives 21 per cent and given that Cold Lake's ER department is currently struggling to provide the care my constituents deserve, to the Minister of Health: what steps are we taking in regard to the variable fee premium to ensure Cold Lake and Bonnyville residents are receiving proper care by making them more attractive in terms of recruitment?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, we're providing $57 million through Budget 2021 to directly compensate physicians who practise in underserved areas in the province and, particularly, northern Alberta, and that's part of one of the most generous rural recruitment and retention programs in the entire country. Now, under the rural, remote, northern program high-percentage premiums are in place to attract physicians to more remote communities based on a number of factors, including the availability of GPs and specialists, proximity to regional centres, and proximity to Calgary and Edmonton. The more remote a community, the higher the premium. We'll continue to look at the premiums along with the ER designation . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the call.

Teacher Retention

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, a recent survey revealed that a third of Alberta's teachers probably won't be teaching in our province next year. Two years of the pandemic, mishandled by an unsupportive and uncaring government, has left them exhausted and anxious. Teachers are seeing cuts to the education budget, unmanageable class sizes, and a failure of this government to prioritize the safety of staff, students, and their families during a global pandemic. Will the government admit that their attacks on public education and teachers are to blame for this morale and staffing crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I disagree wholeheartedly with what's just been said. In fact, we have supplied school divisions with over a billion dollars of supports so that they could address the pandemic. We continue to supply supports for our students and our teachers, and we recognize the invaluable work that our teachers have been doing each and every day. They have the best interests of their children at heart, and we value our teachers, and I just can't say enough good things about them. In fact, we will continue to support our teachers and our schools to the highest level.

Ms Hoffman: Given that many teachers are finding it unbearable to work with this UCP government, like Patricia Mosby, who says that even on the hardest day she still loves her job but that for the sake of her own physical and mental health she will be leaving Alberta, and given that there are many reasons teachers like Patricia are feeling disrespected by this government – like having to pivot between in-person and online, losing their educational assistants, managing COVID with no supports, paying for classroom supplies personally – will the minister admit what Albertans already know, that the UCP can't be trusted with public education?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, the ATA and the NDP's claims are based on a survey where approximately 1,300 K to 12 teachers, representing only 2.8 per cent of 46,000 teachers in Alberta – a very small sample. Of that percentage that was asked, 16.4 per cent of respondents indicated that they are retiring, approximately .5 per cent of all teachers in the province. This is in keeping with what happens in retirement each and every year.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, given that that scientifically sound, peer-reviewed survey shows that a third of teachers have lost faith in serving this minister, this UCP government, and given that teachers feel disrespected every day by this government, who tries to seize their pensions, force a disgraceful curriculum on them, underfunds classrooms, ignores concerns about safety – and still these teachers are professionals. They stand up in front of their classrooms each and every day with calm confidence, a smile on their face, because that's what kids need. Today is Pink Shirt Day. We're supposed to stand up to bullies, so will the government apologize for the bullying that they've done to so many teachers and their profession?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I could say the same to the member opposite, but I won't.

This was a poll survey of a self-identified group of teachers who indicated that they will participate in surveys from the union, so this does not represent a random sample of teachers and does not paint an accurate picture of the more than 46,000 teachers in our province who do an amazing job each and every day and who I have heard from directly thanking us for the great work that we're doing. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

AISH and Income Support Indexation

Ms Renaud: The added cost pressures of inflation are hitting Albertans with the least money the hardest. Rising costs, from utilities to groceries, are the difference between being able to pay for a place to live or not. For so many people receiving AISH and income support, this is the reality. The NDP government indexed benefits to inflation so people could meet their needs. The UCP pretended to support this, the current Premier promised he would never cut it, but the Premier and the UCP broke that promise as soon as they could. Will the minister of social services commit to tying benefits to inflation so all Albertans have a fighting chance?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government continues to help Albertans with permanent disabilities to meet their daily needs and help them live independently and reach their full potential. At about $1.3 billion the AISH budget is the highest in Alberta history. The monthly AISH benefit of $1,685 is the highest in the country. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Luan: Shame on the opposition; they can't behave themselves.

Mr. Speaker, the $1,685 monthly AISH benefit is the highest in the country. We are very proud of the strong stand we took in this government. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. I see lots of finger pointing across aisles from various individuals. I can assure you that that rarely helps decorum.

Ms Renaud: Given that high oil prices provided the UCP with an opportunity to present a balanced budget tomorrow, given that the most vulnerable in this province have never really had a voice in this government – in fact, the Premier went out and gloated about cutting AISH in his first budget and has never apologized since – and given that while the Premier continues to gloat, when factoring in the cost of living and inflation, his broken promise will cost Albertans on AISH nearly $1,000 a year by 2023. This isn't a funny, laughing matter. I don't know what the government finds funny. Will you reindex AISH?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, sometimes it feels like the opposition is falling on a deaf ear. Not only will this government continue to be there, to protect the most vulnerable, but also we will create every opportunity to help vulnerable Albertans to reach their full potential. As we unveil the budget tomorrow, stay tuned. There is more good news for Albertans.

Ms Renaud: Given that the UCP's ridiculous, stale talking points of AISH and income support are profoundly false and all the stats they throw in mean absolutely nothing when poverty and homelessness increase in this province, to the minister: why does your government continue to ignore calls and pleas of the most vulnerable in this province, who simply want to pay their rent, put food on the table? Why are Albertans with disabilities living in poverty still and are continually ignored by this government?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, what's ridiculous is that the opposition never understand the fundamentals. When we increase our economy, when we have wealth added to Alberta, when we have the money to help the most vulnerable: those are tangible ways how we protect most Albertans. I will ask the opposition to stay tuned until we release our budget tomorrow. We have more good news on the way for Albertans.

The Speaker: That concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River has a statement to make.

Prime Minister of Canada

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canadians are watching. They are watching as their own Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau, plays political games and brinkmanship and cynical politics with our political and parliamentary institutions. The truth is that I can't use the kind of language my constituents are using in the constituency about the Prime Minister; it's unparliamentary. To be honest, it's, appropriately, words that rhyme with "trucker." Never in a million years would I imagine living in a Canada where leaders call their own citizens, simply because they disagree, racist, misogynist, Nazis. Never could I imagine those Members of Parliament sitting in the Chamber of our House of Commons in Ottawa listening to that same Prime Minister accuse Jewish opposition members of standing with those waving swastika flags. Embarrassing and inappropriate, Mr. Speaker. These are not the actions of a leader, and Canadians are starting to catch on to Justin Trudeau's game.

The Coastal GasLink suffered yet another extremist attack on the pipeline and its equipment. We hear nothing from the Liberals and the Prime Minister. Is it not worth condemning as well? Are these oil and gas workers who are threatened not worthy of acknowledgment from our Prime Minister? Clearly, the answer is no. Mr. Trudeau has no interest in supporting Canada's most prominent industry.

Canada's economy continues to inflate like a balloon, and Justin Trudeau is losing support and doing nothing to stop it. Alberta has the solution, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Alberta is the solution. Our oil and gas industry is the beating heart of Canada's economy, and it is what is going to fix our problems. It would be best if the Prime Minister stopped trying to kill it every single day when he woke up.

While Mr. Trudeau has long passed his opportunity to support Alberta and support our oil and gas industry and support the economy that is going to bring Alberta back and Canada back from the edge of oblivion in this inflation that is creeping up, I do look forward to a day when he is not Prime Minister, when we have a leader that can bring people together, empower Canadians, unite Albertans to the rest of the country, knowing that Alberta will be the recovery, and lead this country forward. Mr. Speaker, we've had enough.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

University of Calgary

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Did you know that according to research Infosource's latest list of top 50 research universities for the first time the University of Calgary is ranked in the top five of Canada's best research universities? This is an important acknowledgement of the great work that's taking place at the University of Calgary, especially as Alberta is diversifying and growing its economy. The university is helping to pave the way. In addition, the university's Faculty of Kinesiology was ranked number one in Canada for the third consecutive year. I am excited that the dedication and excellence at the University of Calgary is being recognized nationally.

In just five years Creative Destruction Lab, housed at the Haskayne School of Business, has helped participating ventures generate well over $1 billion in equity value. Programs like this support the diversity and innovation we see in our job market and our economy.

Lastly, I wanted to talk about the monumental partnership between the University of Calgary and Mphasis to launch the Quantum City Centre of Excellence. This initiative will create up to a thousand jobs and solidify Calgary as a hub in the emergent quantum sector.

In my riding of Calgary-Klein there are 577 students, 5,184 alumni, 351 staff at the University of Calgary. I wanted to thank the hard work and diligence of students and staff throughout the last two years. Undoubtedly, there have been challenges, and they have overcome these obstacles, stronger and more resilient than ever. I'm excited to see the impacts that the University of Calgary students and new graduates will continue to have on our economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has the call.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future I'm pleased to present on behalf of the committee its report on the presentation by Radicle Balance on December 9, 2021. I would like to thank Radicle Balance for taking the time to present to the committee. This report will be posted on the committee's public website shortly.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to provide notice pursuant to Standing Order 42 that I will be moving a motion at the appropriate time which reads as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge (a) the importance of the border crossing at Coutts to Alberta's economic security; (b) that aiding the blockade of the border crossing at Coutts from January 29, 2022, to February 15, 2022, represented, according to the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters, a direct loss to the economy, particularly in the agriculture, oil and gas, manufacturing, forestry, and retail sectors, of $44 million per day in trade, for a total of almost $800 million; (c) that the government of Alberta has the authority and resources to prevent and dismantle a border blockade of an economic corridor such as the one at Coutts, including resources that can be mobilized through the Provincial Operations Centre under the authority of the Minister of Municipal Affairs; (d) that the government of Alberta, particularly the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General and the Minister of Transportation, did not carry out any of the following actions in respect of the border blockade at Coutts: (i) apply for a court injunction in respect of any activities associated with the blockade, (ii) invoke the Emergency Management Act for the purpose of marshalling resources, and (iii) use existing authority under the Traffic Safety Act to revoke commercial licences of those participating in the blockade; (e) that on February 5, 2022, more than a week after the Coutts border blockade began, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, being the minister responsible for the Alberta Emergency Management Agency, rather than take other actions available to him, wrote to the federal ministers of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness requesting personnel and equipment to assist the government of Alberta in moving the blockade.

Be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly call on the government of Alberta to apologize to the people and businesses of Alberta for failing during the period of January 29 to February 15, 2022, to effectively mobilize resources or take any effective action to disperse, relocate, or otherwise abate the border blockade at Coutts.

Be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly order (a) that the Standing Committee on Families and Communities meet for the purpose of questioning the members of the Assembly representing the electoral divisions of Taber-Warner and Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland in respect of their activities during the border blockade at Coutts, which may have encouraged or otherwise abetted the disruption of trade and traffic at that border crossing and (b) that these members appear before the standing committee to answer those questions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have the appropriate number of copies when needed.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(3) I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of the 2022-2023 main estimates schedule.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 20(1) of the Auditor General Act it's my pleasure as the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices to table the following report from the office of the Auditor General: Alberta Advanced Education Report on Post-secondary Institutions 2021.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings?

Seeing none, I do have a tabling today. I rise to table six copies of the House leader agreement which was signed February 18.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the appropriate time the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall gave oral notice of Standing Order 42. He will have up to five minutes to briefly describe the urgency for such a motion. Having said that, given the short period of time between his providing of notice and the distribution of the motion, I will allow the pages about 30 seconds to make sure that the appropriate members of the House have that motion, and then I'll call upon the member momentarily.

Hon. member, we just need you to provide your original signature on the document. Then once we have that back, we'll proceed.

Mr. Sabir: That was with a black pen but the original.

The Speaker: Sorry. I couldn't hear you. Go ahead. You can rise and speak.

Mr. Sabir: They wrote with a black pen, but I think I signed one with this pen. But there was the original copy included with that one.

The Speaker: Okay. One second.

It's fine. You can sign that document again, and it will become the original. Then we'll proceed.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Coutts Border Crossing Blockade

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I provided the notice of Standing Order 42, and it was my first opportunity to rise in this House and provide notice in relation to what happened starting on January 29. There was one of the most significant incidents that I have witnessed as a member of this House, where a group of people, in the name of protest, blocked Alberta's major economic corridor. Those blockades were related, and they also happened elsewhere in Canada – on the Ambassador Bridge and in Ottawa – and essentially the whole country was shut down by these protesters. That was a significant event, and I would say that that was a significant attack on our democracy, where the writ of the state was challenged by these illegal blockades, and we had a government sitting here in Alberta whose caucus members were participating in and cheering on those illegal activities.

That's why it's important that we debate this motion and that this Assembly order those members to come before the Families and Communities Committee and explain why they think that it was okay for them as part of the government caucus to cheer on those illegal activities that cost Albertans $44 million to $48 million every day, that caused significant problems for many Albertans who were trying to move around, who were trying to exercise their Charter rights, mobility rights. People were not able to attend their family funerals because of those activities, and members in the government caucus were cheering on those activities.

It's important that we talk about this blockade, that we talk about what we could have done differently, and that we talk about what resources we have available should there be similar blockades in the future, because those blockaders have not gone away, and this Legislature, as the representative of Albertans, needs to take that threat seriously and discuss this. That's the first opportunity that I had to raise this issue. I hope that all members of this Legislature take this motion seriously and stand up for Albertans who were impacted by, threatened by these illegal blockades and activities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 42(1.2) a member of Executive Council has up to five minutes to respond to the request for the SO 42. I see the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and address what's before us. The member opposite said lots of words, and none of them indicated any need for urgency on this matter. It's an important matter. That's not what I'm saying. What I'm saying is that the blockade is gone and has been since February 14. It is now more than a week after that, so there clearly is no urgency.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say the important things that Albertans and Canadians had to think about during this period of time. One is that the Charter rightly protects Canadians' right to protest things that they may be happy or unhappy about. I hope we can all agree on that. That is what happened, but that's not the only thing that happened. Also, there were illegal activities: blocking roadways, blocking border crossings. None of that is okay. Those two things need to be kept separately. I hope all members of the House can agree that the right to protest is protected. The right to block a road is not part of that right to protest. When you block a road, you're no longer protesting; you're breaking the law.

The police dealt with it. Some may complain that they didn't deal with it fast enough, but the fact is that it's certainly my opinion that the RCMP did their jobs. They obtained, as I understand it, some information about caches of firearms and intentions to do harm to police officers and others, for which I understand now there are charges laid, and the courts are the right places to dispose of those charges, not this important room.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important issue, but the blockade is gone. I guess there's no guarantee that somebody in the future won't decide to try to re-create it, but I think the police and many others have learned what they can from what occurred. None of us can predict the future for sure, but I believe the police are better situated to prevent a reoccurrence at this point than they were a month or two ago, before this all happened.

So, Mr. Speaker, I won't be supporting the debate of this. The issue has been resolved. I certainly don't want to downplay how important this is. Millions of dollars of trade were stopped daily. Our government certainly took it seriously, worked co-operatively with the police. Thankfully, due to the professionalism of the police and the activities that they took, the arrests were made on February 14. On that day there was an agreement to take down the blockade, and that's what happened.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42 is a request for unanimous consent to do away with the remainder of the business of the Assembly to proceed immediately to the motion as proposed.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Amendments to Standing Orders

8. Mr. McIver moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, effective July 1, 2021, be amended as follows:
 - (a) in Standing Order 5
 - (i) in suborder (1) by striking out "20 Members" and substituting "10 Members" and
 - (ii) by striking out suborder (2) and substituting the following:
 - (2) If, during a sitting of the Assembly, a question of quorum arises, the Speaker must, on determining that a quorum is lacking
 - (a) order that the bells be sounded at the beginning of a 15-minute interval and during the last minute of that interval,
 - (b) on conclusion of the 15-minute interval, conduct a count of the

- Members present in the Chamber, and
- (c) if, on conclusion of the count the Speaker determines that quorum is still lacking, the Speaker may declare a recess or adjourn the Assembly until the next sitting day.
- (b) in Standing Order 7(8) by striking out “or member of the Executive Council” and substituting “or member of the Executive Council or Deputy Government House Leader”;
 - (c) in Standing Order 52.01
 - (i) in suborder (b) by striking out “Culture, Multiculturalism and Status of Women” and substituting “Culture and Status of Women” and
 - (ii) in suborder (c) by striking out “Agriculture and Forestry” and substituting “Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Economic Development.”

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These changes update the names of two government departments which changed last year. It clarifies that the Deputy Government House Leader is able to extend the daily Routine past 3 p.m. if needed. It also clarifies the process for a quorum call, and by extending the division bells to 15 minutes, it allows MLAs in the Federal Building the opportunity to return to the Chamber.

Finally, we are making a permanent reduction in quorum to 10. This change comes as a result of the temporary changes that had been made during COVID to reduce quorum and allows greater flexibility for MLAs to take a phone call while the Chamber is in session. I would note that this reduction isn't out of place with other Canadian jurisdictions. For example, quorum in B.C. is 10 out of their 85 MLAs, Ontario quorum is 12 out of 107, and the House of Commons is 20 out of 338.

In closing, I would ask all members to support these changes.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 8 is a debatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(j). I see the Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Government Motion 8 I want to speak specifically to section (a), the changes to quorum, as the Official Opposition has no concerns with sections (b) or (c). But the change to quorum, I think, deserves a little bit of discussion because, as the member opposite has put it forward, the change to 10 is a result of COVID and provides greater flexibility. When we are thinking about quorum, when we are thinking about the business of this place, quorum should be an accurate reflection of the number of people you can reasonably expect to attend a regular meeting. Quorum should be based on: how many people does it make sense to have in this space in order to make good decisions that are well rounded and balanced?

The Official Opposition objects to quorum being reduced from 20 down to 10 and suggesting that it could be tied to COVID. Specifically, there's a serious issue with trust when it comes to this government. The change in quorum is going to allow this government to have fewer MLAs attending in this Chamber to conduct business.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, in his introduction of Government Motion 8 the hon. minister did talk about the quorum levels in other provincial jurisdictions, and that is appropriate to enter into this debate, but he neglected to mention that none of the other provincial jurisdictions allow for 15-minute bells so that someone in the Federal Building counts as the quorum for the business of the Legislature here. That is completely out of step with the Canadian norm. That is out of step with what other provinces – B.C. doesn't have a 15-minute bell for MLAs to be doing work somewhere else and then to arrive here at the last moment for a vote.

Having, out of 87 elected members, 10 as the minimum for important decisions – when we think about the bills that are debated, when we think about the budgets that are passed in this Chamber, I believe strongly that Albertans expect more from their elected representatives and do expect to be able to count on their elected representatives to be here. I am certainly not suggesting that all 87 members must be in the Chamber at all times. Quorum is important as a minimum, but we also, I would suggest to you, Madam Speaker, have not had issues with quorum even during COVID, so the logic as to why this government is now choosing to drop that from 20 down to 10 does not make sense to me and again brings up the issues that I and many of my constituents in Edmonton-Mill Woods and others across Alberta have when it comes to trust in this government. Making this change really, in my view, lets the government caucus focus on things other than the business that's happening in this Legislature during the times that we are sitting.

As a member of the Official Opposition I certainly do not support the change to this quorum rule that we see here. As well, Madam Speaker, I would suggest that all members would reject Government Motion 8 because, again, there has not been a good reason for this change to be put in and the government seems to have deliberately ignored the change and the difference in Alberta of having that 15 minutes. We are literally talking about 10 people being in this room for a vote or a decision. Why do we need 15 minutes to achieve that minimum threshold? Is the government intending to have all of their MLAs work in the Federal Building while the Legislature is sitting? Like, it just logically does not make sense. Again, I certainly object to the way that this change has been brought forward into this House.

I believe I've made my main point, which is that I don't trust why this government has brought this forward. They have not provided a reason for why the 15-minute bells are so different here than other jurisdictions. The minister did mention people coming from the Federal Building. Why the government does not have 10 MLAs here in the Legislature Building, especially when so many of their Executive Council members have offices in this Legislature Building, raises great questions for me. So I would recommend that all members vote against this change, and certainly I know that all members of the Official Opposition will be voting against this change, Government Motion 8.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to join the debate on Government Motion 8?

[Government Motion 8 carried]

Physical Distancing in Legislature Chamber

9. Mr. McIver moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:

Be it resolved that despite Standing Orders 13(7), 16, and 32(4)(b) and for the duration of the 2022 spring sitting of the Third Session of the 30th Legislature a member may sit in and speak from any seat that has not been assigned to that member provided that the member immediately relinquishes that seat upon the request of

 - (a) the member who has been assigned that seat or
 - (b) the Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to join the debate on Government Motion 9?

Seeing none, I will call the question on Government Motion 9 as moved by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs on behalf of the hon. Government House Leader.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Williams moved, seconded by Ms Lovely, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LL.D, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I would like to first note that I am happily and proudly a monarchist. I believe in our constitutional monarchy that we have in Canada and that Alberta has a direct relationship with Her Honour the Queen, as outlined in the BNA Act and our Constitution. The reason I'm so proud, contrary to what many of my good republican friends think, having a monarch does not mean a dictatorship or a tyrant relationship. Throughout the history of the English-speaking world, beginning with Alfred the Great and then moving on to Magna Carta in 1215, the truth is that the entire history of our Constitution as we have it today is passed down with rule by consent between the monarch and the people.

I think it's important that we understand that it's a relationship of service between the monarch, developed into now service for us in this parliament and especially for Executive Council, to the people. It's my pleasure now to be able to address what Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor brought forward to us in this speech and why I wholeheartedly support it and encourage the Chamber to support the speech as well.

Now, one thing more important than the other is this government's focus on average families and making sure we fulfill our commitment to look out for jobs and the economy. That, I think, was laser focused in that speech right from the very start. While the pandemic has disrupted many plans, it's clear our province has persevered and is back on a path of normality, balance, and prosperity. Alberta's nation-leading economic recovery, highlighted in the throne speech, can be felt in every corner of our province, including a northern constituency like mine, where families are going back to work in high-paying jobs after two challenging years.

In my riding in particular oil and gas but, even more so, forestry is our largest employer. It isn't just back to normal; it's booming. We have not seen forestry levels like this for the price of lumber in, I think, the history of the industry. That's good, that we see that our biggest problem now is a demand on labour. I think that that is something that I'm happy to try and deal with. It's a challenge in my constituency, and I know many of my colleagues are dealing with the same. It's much better than the problems we had in years past, especially under previous governments, where unemployment was much higher, and they had no pandemic to deal with. This economic boom is what is going to be creating jobs, and that is going to put a roof over the head and food on the plate for average families in each of our constituencies. No matter who you voted for, no matter what part of the province you're in, this tide will raise all boats with the boom that we're seeing.

But the recent good news in our energy sector isn't just for the sole reason of a vastly improved economic picture that I expect to see in this budget next week. As the Finance minister said, to get into the position we're in today, the government has had to bring its per capita spending in line with other provinces and keep its net debt to GDP ratio under 30 per cent throughout the pandemic and re-establish a time frame to get back to balance in our budget. I'm very optimistic with what the Minister of Finance is going to be bringing to this Chamber tomorrow for us to be voting on.

I'm sure it wasn't easy, Madam Speaker, to get to this point. I know the minister has worked hard, but I think Albertans are about to see the payoff of the hard work that they have put forward, collaborating with rule by consent with our government to make sure that we are fiscally responsible and that we are looking after the interests of Albertans today and into the future. This is something we never would have seen under previous governments, which lost hundreds of thousands of jobs, including in my own constituency. We saw in the year the first budget came out in 2015, under the NDP, Carmon Creek effectively shutting down. We saw Shell pull out of my constituency and across the province because of decisions made by former governments.

The truth is that Alberta has had a tough couple of years going and has been battling over the last two years, but it's starting to feel like our provincial motto again, Fortis et Liber, strong and free. Mr. Speaker, this isn't coming out of nowhere. The truth is that our strength comes from our freedom. The truth is, for example, that our economic freedom, the decisions we made early in our term to support industry, to support businesses that employ families, that work in our communities are exactly why we have the strong, booming economy that we're seeing right now.

It has been carefully built on a foundation of strong conservative principles that embrace Albertans' entrepreneurial and free spirit and launch new ideas into fruition. We saw more businesses open up in the downturn than we've seen in many, many years past because Albertans are entrepreneurial and cannot be held down. Their strength and their freedom are built into who they are, hard-wired into our nature.

The Alberta being built today is reminiscent of the past and recent province of Alberta where it was a global destination, either at our foundation or even just a few years ago, before the NDP, where immigrants, entrepreneurs, skilled workers, and job seekers and dreamers alike all sought out the province of Alberta to get the best education with the best opportunities for their families and the best chance of being able to have a lifelong career in the industry of their choice and continue to provide for themselves and for their communities.

As our Lieutenant Governor said, for the first time in a long time more Albertans are coming to Alberta than leaving it. I think this is a sign, Madam Deputy Speaker. This is a sign that Alberta is back and we're moving in a direction where people want to be a part of our economy and our communities again. If I don't know what's a signal of our growth and that we're doing something right in this government – other than that, I'm not sure what could be a better advocate for our province and for our government's policies.

Alberta is already leading Canada in economic growth, but I believe the legislation initiatives outlined in the throne speech will only further accentuate and enhance the momentum we're currently seeing in our economy. This is more than just a session focused on economic prosperity, Madam Deputy Speaker, however. The throne speech has confirmed that this upcoming sitting of the Legislature will have a strong focus on the dignity of every single Albertan and particularly those who are most vulnerable.

One of my favourite quotes from Karol Wojtyła says: we will be judged by how we treat the most vulnerable. I know members opposite have a deep heart for the vulnerable, and I know we would disagree sometimes on how to achieve that, but I think it's important that this throne speech highlighted, above almost any other aspect, the dignity of every single individual Albertan and the fact that the vulnerable deserve the protection and support of our government and our society.

Among other things, I'm very humbled that the report that I helped produce in my review of palliative and end-of-life care was used to bring forward initiatives. The truth is, Madam Deputy Speaker, that when I started that report, I was asked by the Minister of Health to begin a month-long review to see where we're at, not only to fulfill the $20 million above and beyond any previous commitment, that this government made in its election campaign for palliative and end-of-life care, but also provide a road map for where we should go in the future and how we can highlight this.

Madam Deputy Speaker, every single Albertan or a family member is going to pass through palliative or end-of-life care. It is not a sexy, hot topic and is not the kind of thing that is going to get many front-line headlines, but the truth is that it is important. It is important for those individuals who go through it to have dignified and loving, charitable, caring support for them as they pass away. It's also important for the family members to know that those supports and offers are there.

I did not know when I started that my own mother was going to be diagnosed with a very aggressive form of terminal cancer halfway through the report. I did not know before I finished the report that my mother was going to pass away. I was very, very grateful to have what we have in Alberta, being a leader internationally when it comes to palliative care.

I mentioned this at the news conference with Minister Copping, how important it was for me to make sure that we got this right. I think that no matter who you are, you should be supporting access to charitable, loving, and dignified care in our end-of-life and palliative care to make sure there are options for families, for caregivers, for support of their family members who are passing away.

It will come for us all, Madam Deputy Speaker. It's a sad reality, but it's a true one. It's important that we as a province and a society face that head-on. That's why I'm so happy that the government has taken the initiatives that I worked with with the minister and, more importantly, with thousands of average Albertans who work in the field who are almost exclusively volunteers in many of these communities, especially when it comes to hospice centres and societies across the province. It's important that we heard them and listened to their key recommendations, and the Speech from the Throne, that the Lieutenant Governor offered, did highlight a number of these and two of them in particular, one of which is early access for palliative care.

The reason that's so important is because no matter why someone is feeling sick, we have to know that their pain can be alleviated. No matter what you have, we have the ability to be able to alleviate the most aggressive pain. We can do the work that we need to do to make sure everyone can pass away in comfort and do so with dignity intact. It's important that we continue moving forward on this initiative, Madam Deputy Speaker, because without this we will end up in a society where we're not caring for the most vulnerable, those who often are dealing with end-of-life crises, who have life-limiting illnesses, who will end up passing away perhaps not knowing that these services are there, not knowing that the province and our medical community can continue to support them even in their difficult days.

I hear members opposite talking about those on AISH. This applies to every single Albertan. These are supports that'll be accessible no matter who you are, and that's rightfully so. It needs to be that no matter who you are, you know you can have access, because the fear of passing away in pain and alone, without support, the fear of being unwanted is one of the saddest things that I contemplate in my job as an elected official that I had to consider head-on. But the good news is that for Albertans who otherwise would feel sad and alone and isolated, because of the supports that we can give them, because of the volunteer networks and the average Albertans there, they can move forward knowing that they have the comfort provided by the province. I'm very, very grateful for that, and no matter who you are, what side of the House you're on, I believe that those individuals and their family members will be grateful for that as well. It's important that we recognize that no matter what we do, we have to be held accountable to the Albertans we serve.

Another important initiative brought forward in the throne speech, Madam Deputy Speaker, is bereavement leave, currently offered for a limited time, three days, but now is going to be expanded for those women who have had miscarriages or stillbirth. A few weeks ago, when my hon. friend the Member for Sherwood Park presented this as a private member's bill, I rose in the House and I spoke to how important it was. I had just, by providence and chance, gotten off the phone with one of my constituents. This young woman had had seven miscarriages, and she had the fear every single month that she and her husband might not have a child. She so desperately wanted to be able to raise her son or her daughter, hold and kiss and love that individual child. She couldn't. She also was afraid that maybe she would be pregnant but that it would end in another miscarriage, and that was unbearable. She was afraid to continue trying to have a child for all the hardship and pain that she had.

This is probably one of the most emotionally difficult situations that any young mother can find herself in. It is hardship month after month, either being afraid that there is no child or that if there is a baby, that unborn baby is lost. We have to recognize the dignity of that baby but also the mother who suffers. We have to recognize that that is real loss, and I think not only is it important that we pass this law but that we in this Chamber all speak to those young mothers, recognize that they are mothers, that nothing can take that away from them no matter what, that they are mothers even if they've had miscarriages, that those are just as real losses as any other. I think it's important that this bill passes to afford respect to those young women, and I'm so very happy that it seems we'll have bipartisan support for this, from what I could gather in the last debate.

Further to this, I am pleased to see that the 20-day limit for unpaid military reservists for leave will be removed as reservists often train for longer periods of time. This government is very happy to support our armed services, and I know every single member that I've spoken to is very, very supportive of the work that they have done, both past and present, to ensure that Canada is the great country that it is. I know that it is also the envy of many other countries in the world, and it's in large part due to the sacrifices men and women have made to defend this country, including, especially, those volunteer reservists, who maintain their day-to-day lives, who still raise their children, who work in their communities, who participate in civil society but, on top of that, know that they have a service to our country as a reservist.

I'm proud to know that the government will be tackling the scourge of human trafficking, which is tantamount to modern-day slavery, Madam Deputy Speaker. By acting on recommendations from the Human Trafficking Task Force, this work will be completed by implementation of recommendations from Alberta's Joint Working Group on Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls. It is so important, especially for those of us who have communities with high numbers of First Nation and Métis, that we do tackle this problem and we tackle it seriously. They have been deeply harmed and grieved because of the violence committed against their individual women and their communities at large.

We need to take action as a province and defend these individuals. Yes, at times they're vulnerable, and we have to take the responsibility as a province to look after them. My riding, Peace River, has one of the highest First Nation populations in the province. I know that without initiatives like this, my riding will suffer because of that more than any other.

The government is also smart to move forward with right-to-know legislation, which will allow more information to be shared with the public about individuals on bail, probation, and parole and criminals pending deportation, as well as Clare's law, which will allow Albertans to be informed if their partner has a violent criminal past. This is an incredibly important initiative, again, for protecting women and those who are vulnerable. Now, those two are not always overlapping groups, but all Albertans at some time can be vulnerable, whether it is a mother who has a miscarriage, whether it could be an elderly or sometimes even a young individual with a life-limiting illness that needs palliative care. That could be an individual who is stuck in a difficult position and is faced with sexual violence in my communities.

The work that this government is doing, announced in the Speech from the Throne, prohibiting and fighting against female genital mutilation, a barbaric, tragic practice that has unfortunately made its way into our province in some communities – we must fight against it. We must recognize the dignity of those young girls who are being abused and who are being tortured and manipulated, to be perfectly frank, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important that we stand up and we voice that in this Chamber loudly and clearly, united, that we as Alberta's Legislature and the government, with its legislation, oppose that kind of barbaric practice.

As you know, my constituency has also been affected by the scourge that is rural crime, increasing all the time, spiralling out of control. I'm happy this government is bringing forward legislation that will broaden services and supports for victims of crime and support new regional approaches so that my constituency and my communities can find tailor-made approaches that will work for our communities. We do not need to have a one size fits all across the province. This is not just an issue in my own constituency, Mr. Speaker; all of my colleagues, many rural and urban both, fight with this problem. These problems are, sadly, unique and widespread, but with the kind of tailor-made solutions that we're offering, we are hoping to see solutions that will be able to reduce rural crime and bring security and comfort to communities that are afraid of the kind of violence that can happen and the threat to their private property. A government has no higher quality than protecting the lives of its people, and the throne speech has confirmed that this session will have a strong focus on the dignity and lives of Albertans.

As my time here comes to an end, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that it's been an honour to speak to the Legislature on behalf of the people of Peace River. It's been an honour to move this thanks of the accepting of the throne speech from Her Honour Salma Lakhani, the Lieutenant Governor of our province. After these two difficult years that we've been through as a province, I want families and businesses across this province and in my riding in particular to know that we are moving forward, that better days are ahead, that this Conservative government cares about your dignity and your communities. We will fight for, yes, freedom, economic and otherwise. I will continue to do that, but we also care about the dignity of you and the social lives that you have. We want them to be improved. We care about the most vulnerable in our communities.

This Speech from the Throne articulates a broad vision of Alberta moving forward that is inclusive and welcoming to those who come, whether it's for economic opportunities because of where they're coming from or fleeing tyrannies and a lack of economic freedom or because they come here for the opportunity to practise their faith and religion as they see fit. Whoever they are, Alberta will be that place and a beacon of hope for the rest of the country to lead forward with these values that are infused into every single Albertan and infused into our past, the past that has made us and brought us to where we are today.

It may be the beginning of a new chapter in Alberta's story. I believe it is, but we have to understand that it's one chapter in a longer book. My grandparents moved to Canada from Poland, and they settled one quarter section in what was the edge of the wilderness at the time in my colleague from Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock's constituency. From that quarter section there are pipefitters. There are janitors. There are doctors. There are journalists. There are members of the Alberta Legislature. There are a number of different Albertans who give back in their vocation, in civil society, in their faith communities, and by raising families.

This new chapter that we're embarking on today with our throne speech is a continuation of that book. It might not be another quarter section across the province. It could be a fintech company coming to Calgary. It could be the opportunity provided by a young girl who knows she does not have to be threatened by female genital mutilation because of the work that we've done, or that an elderly couple knows that they will have the opportunity to die with dignity that is bestowed upon them by having the opportunity to have palliative care accessible.

This is the Alberta that I believe in, and I'm very grateful that I've had the chance to accept the speech from the Lieutenant Governor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and second the motion to accept the throne speech presented by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. I'd also like to extend my gratitude to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor for putting forward her vision for the Legislature and the province we all hold dear. This week's throne speech clearly laid out the core priorities that this government will seek to achieve in the upcoming legislative session.

After two challenging years marked by pandemic, Alberta is ready to move forward into a bright and prosperous future. Alberta is leading Canada in economic growth. Investment is coming back in our communities, and our people are going back to work. This session will ensure that the momentum we have seen in our economy continues and that our province comes out of this pandemic not just strong but stronger than ever.

It's ridings like mine, the beautiful constituency of Camrose, where the rebound in the economy can be felt in traditional industries like energy and agriculture. But our economy is diversifying as well, with record private investment being seen in burgeoning industries like technology, film and television, hydrogen, and renewables. The basis for this strong recovery has been and will continue to be Alberta's recovery plan. Strengthening the workforce, growing our resources, building for the future, helping everyday Albertans, and diversifying the economy: these are the pillars upon which the brightest chapter of the Alberta story will be written.

The government is trusting in time-tested conservative philosophies of fiscal restraint and responsibility, but it is also looking forward to the jobs and the economies of the future. I'm inspired to know that the government is telling Alberta's story and that investors across the world are taking note. Alberta is back, and we are once again the best place to live, work, play, start a business, or raise a family in the entire world.

The legislative agenda ahead is robust and will benefit our entire province. As a rural legislator I am proud to see the government expanding access to broadband Internet to rural, remote, and Indigenous communities. This will ensure that all Albertans can participate in the digital economy and achieve their full potential as citizens.

As we move past this pandemic, it is important that we nurture the entrepreneurial spirit of Albertans. That is why I am also proud to see the government continuing its red tape reduction efforts, which have already reduced Alberta's red tape burden by 21 per cent and saved taxpayers an impressive $1.2 billion. Well done.

We know that Alberta could be a global hub for renewable power, which is why I'm pleased to see the government continuing to work towards diversification in the energy sector, pledging to create a clean hydrogen centre of excellence to help Alberta become a major player in this multitrillion-dollar industry.

I'm also pleased to see the government acting to protect consumers from higher utility costs by introducing a natural gas consumer protection program and by bringing forward new legislation to modernize the electricity market and further fix the $2 billion electricity boondoggle that the disastrous previous government left behind.

As we have learned, we must ensure that our health care system is strong and resilient for future crises. Despite our health care system being one of the best funded in the world, I'm happy to know that the government is investing further towards building capacity in our health care system, in part by accelerating the Alberta surgical initiative. Further, I'm happy to know that the government is making major investments in infrastructure to expand hospital capacity, like completing the Calgary cancer centre and a historic expansion of the Red Deer hospital. This will also help ease the burden on our system and deliver high-quality patient care to every Albertan that needs it.

There is no higher duty of government than protecting its people, particularly its children. As a mother I'm beyond grateful to hear that the government will be taking steps to protect Alberta children by ending the egregious conflict of interest that allows the Alberta Teachers' Association to investigate its own members in disciplinary matters. This follows high-profile cases of abuse that have shocked our province and fuelled calls for change.

I'm also grateful to note that the government is taking steps to expand education choice, and I am overjoyed to know that the government will be increasing prenatal financial aid to mothers receiving AISH and income support, as we must do all we can to support our most vulnerable in this fragile time of our economic recovery.

The throne speech, presented by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, outlined a long list of actions that this government is taking to make life better for Alberta workers and families. As a proud Albertan I was particularly proud to see that the government will continue our province's fight for a fair deal in federation, following a first-of-its-kind referendum in which Albertans called for major changes to Canada's broken equalization system. With 62 per cent of Albertans endorsing a proposed change to the Canadian Constitution regarding equalization, I hope to see the government use this mandate to press for serious negotiations on equalization with Ottawa.

The throne speech laid out our pathway to opportunity, prosperity, and balance. As we enter this new session of the Legislature, I can confidently say to the people of Alberta that our province is rebuilding the Alberta advantage for all and that this session will be a continuation of that work. Soon we will learn the details of the budget, which will likely reflect a dramatic improvement of our province's fiscal fortitudes, resulting not only from increasing commodity prices but careful fiscal management and restraint. I look forward to learning more about the budget and how it will help to boost our economy and recovery.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is coming back stronger than ever. Just as previous generations did, we have preserved through challenging circumstances and we are ready to be leaders. We were born to be. We will not succumb to the politics of fear or cynicism. We will move forward to the next chapter of the Alberta story with the fortitude of those who came before us. I want to thank each and every Albertan for their courage and sacrifice over the past two years. The government is working tirelessly to ensure the benefits of our rapidly growing economy affect every one of them in a positive way today and for generations to come. With that, I'm pleased to have this chance to second the throne speech.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to now adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

Emergencies Act

10. Mr. Kenney moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon: Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly
 - (a) condemn the unnecessary invocation of the Emergencies Act by the government of Canada as the Assembly is of the view that this is a measure which infringes upon the constitutionally guaranteed rights of Albertans and all Canadians, including the right to due process and natural justice;
 - (b) is of the view that the government of Canada has failed to demonstrate that the present circumstances meet the threshold that the law requires to invoke the Emergencies Act and that, as demonstrated in Alberta, governments and law enforcement agencies already have adequate authority and resources to end illegal blockades and restore order; and
 - (c) is further of the view that this invocation of the Emergencies Act constitutes an unnecessary intrusion into provincial jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to one of the most obvious overreaches of government power in my lifetime and, I believe, in modern Canadian history: the recent invocation of the Emergencies Act by the government of Prime Minister Trudeau.

Mr. Speaker, I note that the Prime Minister, just 90 minutes ago, announced that the application of the Emergencies Act has been suspended. That, however, does not change at all the profound concerns of Canadians, of Albertans, of this government and this Assembly with this unnecessary, unjustified, and disproportionate use of arbitrary police power in our own time with no good reason, so we will proceed with this debate.

I can inform the Assembly, right at the beginning, that Her Majesty's Alberta government intends to proceed with an application for a judicial review about what we regard as the unlawful application of the Emergencies Act before the judiciary, Mr. Speaker, because while the act may no longer be in operation, the rights of Canadians and Albertans have been violated. Provincial jurisdiction has been violated, and a dangerous precedent has been created, so Alberta's government will give the independent judiciary the opportunity to speak to these critical issues and we hope, in our pleadings, will result with clear limits around the exercise of these emergency powers to constrain such arbitrary application of them in the future.

Let me begin with some historical context. In the First World War some 9,000 Canadians, largely of eastern and central European origin, were unjustly detained as, quotes, enemy aliens, the majority of whom were people of Ukrainian ethnicity, and their detention was under the War Measures Act. These were loyal Canadians from communities that had a disproportionately high level of volunteerism to defend Canada in the Great War, yet because they had arrived in Canada as subjects of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, they were regarded as suspect by the then authorities at a time of popular xenophobia against Galicians, Ruthenians, and other then-pejorative expressions for people of Ukrainian origin. Nine thousand were interned between 1914 and 1920, many pressed into forced labour. Now, Mr. Speaker, we now recognize the historical injustice of this. As the Canadian minister for multiculturalism I signed an agreement with the Ukrainian Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the Ukrainian Canadian Congress to redress that injustice.

From 1939 to 1945 thousands of Canadians of Italian origin were unjustly interned under the War Measures Act for precisely the same reasons, an injustice which led to a formal apology by the former Prime Minister the Rt. Hon. Brian Mulroney.

In 1970 the same law, the War Measures Act, was invoked by a different Prime Minister Trudeau to roll tanks and soldiers into the streets of Canadian cities and to arbitrarily arrest thousands of Canadians because of their suspected political affiliations during the October Crisis. Now, undoubtedly, Mr. Speaker, there was a serious risk to law and order and to national security with the violence of the Front de Libération du Québec, but there is now, I think, a clear historical and political consensus that invocation of the War Measures Act, thousands of detentions, and the use of the military in our streets was a massive and unjustified, disproportionate overreach and a shameful mark in modern Canadian history.

In fact, that consensus was so strong that even Pierre Trudeau subsequently recognized the overreach, which is one of the reasons that he campaigned so hard to patriate the Constitution and write into it the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1982. That is further why Prime Minister Mulroney's government was elected on a commitment to repeal the War Measures Act, as they did in 1988, replacing it with the Emergencies Act. The new Emergencies Act sought to remove some of the extraordinary martial powers of the War Measures Act yet, of course, retained truly extraordinary powers.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that in a truly extreme context the state must have extraordinary powers to deal with potentially overwhelming context of warfare, civil war, insurrection, of situations of mass violence and gross social disorder, of anarchy. Every sovereign state governed by the rule of law must have access to certain extraordinary powers for extraordinary times, and that was the purpose behind the 1988 Emergencies Act.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the recent invocation of this extraordinary and arbitrary police power by Prime Minister Trudeau's government is completely unjustified, totally disproportionate, without precedent, and that it will not pass the test of our courts nor the test of history. I think this has been a grave and shameful mistake.

Casting back to the earlier Prime Minister Trudeau's application of the War Measures Act in 1970, the late leader of the NDP famously said in his principled opposition to that decision that it was the equivalent of using a hammer to crush a peanut. You know, Tommy Douglas was speaking against the popular sentiment at that time. His was a minority view, but it was a principled defence of civil liberties, something that we used to be able to expect from the NDP and the Canadian left but no longer, Mr. Speaker, as they've shamefully and cravenly folded to the political whims of Justin Trudeau to invoke arbitrary police powers in trampling civil liberties. Whatever happened to that principled NDP? They sold out. They gave away their soul as a principled voice of civil liberties.

Mr. Speaker, let's move the analysis to recent events. Over the past two years we have seen extraordinary applications of government power, unprecedented certainly in our lifetimes, to deal with the challenge of COVID-19, and these unprecedented applications of government power, at least unprecedented for a hundred years, have caused great social division and discord. We must admit it, and that is true in Alberta as elsewhere across Canada and the entire world.

Mr. Speaker, no government has had a textbook about how perfectly to respond to a new and unknown pandemic of this lethal nature, and every government has sought to respond in a way that would avoid mass deaths but also a catastrophic situation in their hospitals. That is what we have sought to do in Alberta while also seeking to minimize the damaging effect of restrictions on people's lives and the limitation of people's normal rights and freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a loud and dynamic and at times divisive debate in this Assembly, in this society, about how to strike the right balance. I don't believe any government got it right. I think all governments in all parts of the world were facing impossible choices often with only bad options. In all of that, many of our fellow citizens have become deeply frustrated with the impact of these impairments of rights and freedoms and their economic well-being, the disruption to their ordinary lives. I am one of those citizens who has been frustrated deeply by all of this, so I understand and sympathize. [interjections]

I'm being heckled by the opposition because they don't seek to listen. They don't seek any empathy for the people whose lives have often been turned upside down by the last two years here and across the world. The thought of them with their hands on the levers of power during this time is chilling, Mr. Speaker. The total disregard they would have had for the negative impact of restrictions would have meant that this province was under a hard and sustained, devastating lockdown for most of the past two years. Thankfully, they weren't.

I would argue that Alberta sought to approach restrictions as a last and limited measure, being criticized by the NDP, by many in the media for having been reluctant to bring in restrictions and eager to lift them, as we are now. But the context is this. We have a large number of our fellow citizens who are deeply frustrated and are saying to those in leadership that we must find a way out of the disruption that COVID has had on our lives. They have every right to do so, Mr. Speaker. In fact, in our democracy I think citizens have a responsibility to speak out when they feel so strongly, particularly about the impairment, albeit justified I believe, of rights and freedoms.

That is what led to the trucker convoy movement recently, Mr. Speaker. But the more immediate cause was the bloody-minded decision by Prime Minister Trudeau and his government to impose a vaccine mandate on cross-border truckers. Now, let's put this in context. That decision was made at the end of January, after the policy of a vaccine mandate for cross-border workers had been announced in the fall as a bilateral policy between Canada and the United States.

But exemptions were granted – why? – because those two national governments recognized that it would have a negative impact on essential commercial traffic which is key to the integrity of our supply chains at a time of growing inflation. With so much stress on the economy they implicitly recognized that it would be counterproductive to introduce this vaccine mandate on cross-border truckers, so for four months they granted an extension after an extension. But suddenly, Mr. Speaker, that all ran out at the end of January, just when we in North America were beginning to move past the peak of omicron COVID-19 infections, just when governments around the world began to announce their plans to ease and eliminate public health restrictions.

So we had this bizarre situation – it's not just Ottawa – where the two national governments decided to apply this pointless and counterproductive policy at exactly the wrong time. If they thought this had any putative public health benefit, they would have introduced the measure at the beginning and not the end of the omicron COVID-19 spike, Mr. Speaker.

You know, as somebody who has had to defend difficult and painful restrictions in order to slow viral spread and prevent a catastrophe in the hospitals, as somebody who's had to study closely the data and the international experiences of COVID measures, I can say with confidence that the trucker vaccine mandate has and will have zero measurable public health benefit. This is nothing but bad public health theatre. It is not public health science; it is political science, Madam Speaker.

Right now, as we speak, it is reasonable to infer from confirmed active COVID cases across North America that we currently have millions and potentially tens of millions of current active infections. That was certainly in the tens of millions between Canada and the United States when this policy came in at the end of January.

Now, according to the organizations representing truckers, over 90 per cent of cross-border truckers have received the safe and effective protection of vaccines, and I say to them: thank you for stepping up to protect yourselves and to help us protect our hospitals. Madam Speaker, it would appear that we have less than 10 per cent of the cross-border trucker workforce who are not vaccinated, and that would within Canada constitute a few thousand people. A few thousand people. And how do they work? They work in the isolation of their truck cabs. These are people who don't go out and party in casinos and attend superspreader events. These are by definition some of the most isolated workers that you can find, and they are also some of the most important workers that you can find. Regardless of vaccination status let us all come together to say a huge thank you to the truckers on whom we have depended more than ever over the past two years.

You know, Madam Speaker, I remember I was chairing the inaugural meeting of our Alberta economic recovery council in the second week of COVID, in March of 2020. It was some of the leading thinkers from the Alberta business community, organized labour, and others. I'll never forget what Clive Beddoe, the founding CEO of WestJet, said to us on that call as we were trying to figure out: what is going on? What are the implications? What are the stress points? How do we have to respond to this unknown crisis? Mr. Beddoe said: keep an eye on the supply chains. He said: if this virus takes the truckers off the road, we'll be starving in Canada in two weeks. I'll never forget when he said that.

It raised the alarm for me and, I think, decision-makers that at all costs we had to keep those supply chains moving, that we had to keep those semis coming north, filled with groceries and food and essential goods, without which we could not survive in our modern, complex, cold northern Canadian economy here. You know what, Madam Speaker? While so many others were able to stay at home, the laptop class, and work in the safety of their homes, those truckers went out there every single day, day in, day out, the long-haulers, keeping our economy running, keeping our grocery store shelves full, and we should all be deeply grateful for them and what they did.

Madam Speaker, the point is this. When they bring in this vaccine mandate for the truckers, you've got tens of millions of active omicron infections across North America and a few thousand unvaccinated, isolated cross-border truckers. If this really was a public health emergency, if they actually constituted a serious threat of widespread viral transmission, then they could have been asked to take a negative rapid test, like other workers have been, like we've had in this Assembly for a period. There are practical workarounds that would have kept them rolling and working. But, no, the government of Canada had no consideration whatsoever. This was bloody-minded. It was in bad faith. As I say, it was political theatre.

It was done for one reason, I believe, because the Prime Minister won a plurality of seats, not a majority. He won a plurality of seats with less than a plurality of the popular vote in the last federal election by running on a campaign of COVID fear, by using COVID, like the NDP here, relentlessly as a divisive wedge, to promote fear and hysteria in our population. The Prime Minister has done this consistently. He's the one who said that people protesting, expressing a concern about public health policies were, quote, a small fringe element in this country that is lashing out with racist, misogynistic attacks, unquote. Misogyny means hating women, Madam Speaker. The Prime Minister claiming that tens and tens of thousands of Canadians expressing their concerns and their fears were just a bunch of mouth-breathing racists and misogynists and hateful people. How dare he.

Now, I have no doubt that some of the people who have shown up at some of these protests do harbour extreme views, as is the case with every social movement. The NDP doesn't mind hanging out there at rallies with Greta Thunberg and Extinction Rebellion, Madam Speaker, that promote violence and blowing up pipelines. They never apologize for that extremism of the far left that they fraternize with. But nor do we say that everybody who shows up at – I believe the vast majority of people who participated in these protests in recent weeks and months are normally law-abiding Canadians who have deep frustrations, are hard-working people who simply want their voices heard. And you know what? Maybe they don't have a professional left-wing PR shop to refine their messages for media, for CBC consumption. Maybe sometimes they say things a little inelegantly, and it must be said that some did cross the line and break the law, but that does not justify what has happened in recent days.

That is the context. The Prime Minister lit the fuse of the crisis which he has now bungled. He lit the fuse with the vaccine mandate. By the way, just a little coda here, a little note: when the government of Canada announced that they were removing the exemption from truckers for the vaccine mandate, actually that same day the Canada Border Services Agency announced that the exemption was going to be extended. A few hours later the government came out ham-fistedly and said: “No. We’re actually wrong. It’s a mistake, a misunderstanding.”

Now, as someone who has sat around the federal cabinet table and, by the way, was partially responsible for CBSA, Madam Speaker, I can tell you that I think I know what happened there. I think a decision had been made – I’m going to go out on a limb here; it’s a hypothesis – by a cabinet committee that this didn’t make any sense, that they should extend the exemption, and CBSA didn’t want to enforce it because it didn’t make any sense. They’ve got bigger fish to fry than harassing a bunch of unvaccinated truckers. What happened was that the PMO saw this. They put the hammer down. They said: “No. This is a great political wedge. Stop the exemption. To heck with the truckers. We’re going to make them pay. We’re going to make an example out of them, and we’re going to set a trap for the Conservatives to fall into defending these” – well, Hillary Clinton would call them deplorables, I guess, Madam Speaker. Justin Trudeau would call them racists and misogynists, a fringe group of racists and misogynists. Political theatre, not public health policy: that’s what brought us to the beginning of the freedom convoy.

While I sympathize, while I agree with the participants of the freedom convoy that the vaccine mandate on truckers is unjustified and counterproductive, all it did was put further pressure on supply chains, further increasing food inflation in our country without any public health benefit. While I agree with their broader frustrations with public health measures and policies, it must be said, Madam Speaker, that many of the participants did cross the line from legal and peaceful protest to breaking the law. I am sworn, as are all members of this place, to uphold the laws, and we must, without favour or fear, all consistently support and defend the equal application of the rule of law. I think that what we have been facing here is, in part, a longer term failure of the rule of law.

What do I mean by this? Well, the people who parked trucks on streets in downtown Ottawa, at the Coutts and Windsor border crossings, you know what they have observed over recent years? They have observed radical left eco protesters blocking pipelines and railways, highways, roads here in Edmonton and other critical infrastructure without enforcement, without penalty, without charge. What they have seen, in some cases for 40 days or longer: the largest railway in the country at various points being blockaded without effective law enforcement. What they have seen is court injunctions, for example, against illegal protests around the oil refinery in Burnaby not being enforced by local law enforcement agencies. In other words, what they have seen is a growing trend to violate the rule of law, and I believe the chickens have come home to roost, Madam Speaker, because of this approach.

This should be a wake-up call for all of us, and I say to our police agencies that, yes, I understand that they have a job to do, and we respect that. They have intelligence. For example, we know about the sensitive issues at Coutts, and they need to have some tactical flexibility about how they deal with the situation. But at the end of the day citizens must depend on the equal application of the rule of law. Again, I think many frustrated people saw the lack of law enforcement against environmental protesters in recent years as a new standard of nonenforcement. That is a problem.

But, Madam Speaker, now we come to this. The protests occurred. We had initially a hundred and then 40 trucks intermittently blocking the border crossing at Coutts. Now, the good news is this. The government of Alberta – and I want to commend Minister of Transportation, Municipal Affairs, the Solicitor General, and their officials who were working very closely with the CBSA, with the U.S. Customs and Border Protection agency, with the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and with the RCMP. We all worked very closely together to ensure that five of the six Alberta-U.S. border crossings stayed open and unimpeded. We were able to move U.S. meat inspection facilities to different border crossings, to extend hours, to work with the truckers, to work with the livestock producers to minimize the damage and inconvenience.

To those who were involved in the Coutts blockade, really, Madam Speaker, I would just say to them that I think what they did was unnecessary, it was illegal, and all they did, really, was create inconvenience for other truckers, for livestock exporters, and for law-abiding motorists. I hope they’ve learned that lesson and won’t repeat that kind of illegal protest. We would urge them to engage in lawful and peaceful protest to make their point.

Madam Speaker, the point is this. Despite all of that, that matter was resolved. It was resolved with the use of ordinary law. There was no lack of law. There was no need for the extraordinary measures of the Emergencies Act. Alberta never sought its application. In fact, there’s been something made of the fact that the hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs, in his capacity as the minister responsible for emergency preparedness for Alberta, wrote to his federal counterparts seeking some logistical assistance from the government of Canada, which is the conventional thing to do, because the RCMP had been unable to acquire heavy tow equipment and operators.

You know what the federal response was? “No.” The federal government would not step in to support Alberta in a request for some additional equipment. We did obtain about 40 additional RCMP officers but not thanks to the government of Canada, not as a result of that request but through going through the Canada-Alberta police services agreement and having officers transferred here from E Division in British Columbia on a bilateral basis, with no thanks to the federal Minister of Public Safety.

When we went to Ottawa to seek a little bit of assistance to safely apply the law, we were told: go away, Alberta; we’re not going to help out. We never asked for the power for the federal government arbitrarily to freeze people’s bank accounts, to seize their assets because of who they donate to. We never sought any of those powers. We didn’t need them, and neither did the government of Ontario in addressing the devastating border blockade at the Ambassador Bridge between Windsor and Detroit.

The Ambassador Bridge was cleared on February 12. The successful RCMP operation in Coutts began late on the night of February 13 and was completed early on the morning of the 14th. The Prime Minister invoked the Emergencies Act later on February 14, after those operations had been successfully prosecuted by provincial police authorities. Yes, the RCMP is a federal agency, but in this respect it acts on behalf of Alberta. We didn’t require these emergency powers.

Nor did they require these powers to clear the streets of Ottawa. Madam Speaker – guess what – it is illegal to park a truck in the middle of a road in Ottawa or in any other Canadian city. It is illegal to do that, particularly for two weeks. There are countless offences that the police can use for ordinary law enforcement here in Alberta. I made it plainly clear to the RCMP that they had not just the highways act but the rules of the road regulation, various provisions of the Criminal Code, and, helpfully, the defence of Alberta critical infrastructure act, under which they did lay one charge. But they had no shortage of law. What we had was a lack of enforcement in Ottawa using the ordinary legal tools that were available. They did not need extraordinary legal tools.

Now, having said all of that, on the 14th the Prime Minister invoked sections of the Emergencies Act. Let me read from section 3 of that act.

For the purposes of this Act, a national emergency is an urgent and critical situation of a temporary nature that

- (a) seriously endangers the lives, health or safety of Canadians and is of such proportions or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it, or
- (b) seriously threatens the ability of the Government of Canada to preserve the sovereignty, security and territorial integrity of Canada and that cannot be effectively dealt with under any other law of Canada.

Let's walk through this, Madam Speaker, because with our forthcoming application for judicial review the courts will be walking through this. Was this a national emergency? I would argue no. Two intermittent border crossings that were periodically blocked and trucks on the streets of downtown Ottawa: I don't think that meets any standard definition of a national emergency.

Did it seriously endanger the lives, health, or safety of Canadians? No, Madam Speaker, with one possible exception. We did receive intelligence, of course, that there was a group, who is now under detention, at Coutts who allegedly had violent intent and stockpiled weapons to jeopardize the lives of police officers. That matter was dealt with through diligent police work, intelligence gathering, and tactical operations without resorting to the extraordinary powers of the Emergencies Act. Was it of such a proportion or nature as to exceed the capacity or authority of a province to deal with it? Well, no, as I just pointed out.

Did it seriously threaten the ability of the government of Canada to preserve the sovereignty, security, and territorial integrity of Canada? No once more, Madam Speaker. Are we seriously going to say that a few dozen trucks parked on Ottawa's streets were a threat to Canadian sovereignty or territorial integrity? No. It was a law enforcement challenge. It was a logistical challenge. It was not, as some have argued, an insurrection.

Could it have been effectively dealt with under any other law of Canada? Yes, and it was at Coutts. It was at the Ambassador Bridge. It was at Emerson, Manitoba. It was at the Surrey border crossing. It was in Quebec City. It was in downtown Toronto, where police effectively prevented these kinds of blockades. It was in almost every instance but, ironically, downtown Ottawa, where I would argue there was just an enforcement failure, not in enforcement of the law but in the application of the law.

So I believe that on the face of it the invocation of the Emergencies Act did not meet any of the key statutory criteria outlined in the law.

But, Madam Speaker, what was the consequence of it? Well, we still don't fully know, but the federal government arrogated to itself the power to seize and freeze bank accounts on unclear criteria. I do know this, though. The federal Minister of Justice, Mr. Lametti, said on television last week that, quote, if you are a member of a pro-Trump movement who is donating hundreds of thousands of dollars and millions of dollars to this kind of thing, then you ought to be worried, unquote, about having your bank accounts frozen. So the top law enforcement officer of Canada actually said – like, this isn't a conspiracy theory. He actually said on the record that if he doesn't like your political views and you make a donation he disagrees with to some pro-Trump organization – what does that have to do with it? I mean, what about a pro-Clinton organization? This is the problem. The rule of law must be impartial. It can't be based on what U.S. politician you support or oppose. This is an admission of not impartiality but partiality in the application of extraordinary police powers.

Some will say: well, it wasn't like the FLQ crisis, the October Crisis; we didn't have thousands of detentions. But our lives are now inextricably bound up in the digital world. You can't get a telephone, can't get heating for your home, can't function in modern society without a bank account, and if that bank account can be frozen and seized arbitrarily, without recourse, without judicial review, through the extrajudicial application of police power – and you don't even know who's doing it. Is the bank doing it because the government told them to? Is the government doing it themselves? Which government agency? To whom do you appeal? Madam Speaker, this is a widespread, invasive violation of fundamental rights that has occurred in our midst, in our time, setting a very dangerous precedent for the future.

Madam Speaker, another issue that counsel on behalf of the Alberta Crown will be raising in our judicial review application is that this is a gross and obvious violation of the Canadian Constitution with respect to provincial jurisdiction. Under the Canadian Constitution provinces are responsible for ordinary law enforcement. This essentially was a usurpation of our constitutional jurisdiction over law enforcement by the federal government.

Now, the act requires that provinces be consulted, and, yes, the Prime Minister convened a teleconference with the 13 provincial and territorial Premiers on Monday last week, which lasted for about an hour. I spoke strongly against the invocation of this power, and while I can't reveal what others said in that private call, I can say – it's a matter of public record – that six other provincial Premiers have joined me in stating their opposition to the use of this act. It requires consultation with the provinces; 70 per cent of the provinces said: no; this is unnecessary; it's unjustified; it violates our jurisdiction; it's counterproductive.

Madam Speaker, I refer the Assembly to the letter that I wrote, in formal response to the Prime Minister, laying out our arguments in this respect, arguments that will form the basis of our application for judicial appeal in addition to potential intervention in support of the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the Canadian Constitution Foundation and their pending judicial applications.

Madam Speaker, let me wrap up by saying that this is a fiasco. The Prime Minister lit the fuse. He then inflamed the situation not by seeking to deconflict it, but when tempers were rising and the protests were growing, what did the Prime Minister do? Did he act as a responsible national leader and appeal for calm? Did he show a shred of humility? No.

What he did was to pour gas on the flames of this conflict with his irresponsible comments. He said, well, just last week – I mean, he said on January 28: this is a troubling, small, but vocal minority who are lashing out at science, at government, at society. He said that the people of Ottawa don't deserve to be harassed by the inherent violence of a swastika flying on a street corner. He said on February 16 – last week a dear friend of mine, the Member of Parliament for Thornhill, Melissa Lantsman, who is the descendant of Holocaust survivors, asked the Prime Minister why he was dividing Canadians, and here was his answer: "Conservative Party members can stand with people who wave swastikas. They can stand with people who wave the Confederate flag," et cetera.

Instead of seeking to calm the country, the Prime Minister sought to inflame the conflict. He created the conflict unnecessarily with his vax mandate on truckers. He inflamed the conflict with these comments, and then – and then – as a diversion, a cynical diversion from the disaster that he created, he goes and invokes the son of the War Measures Act.

Madam Speaker, this, I believe, will go down as perhaps his legacy. Perhaps he'll be remembered for it, because I don't know what else he's done of merit. This will go down in history as a central mark on his premiership. This will go down – look at how Canada and his government have been the subject of international ridicule. The same Prime Minister who used to be the toast of the liberal international media is now the laughingstock of the same global media because of this gross and unjustified overreach, this violation of civil rights to deal with a few dozen trucks parked illegally. If this is how he acts in that kind of a situation, imagine how he would react to something like an FLQ crisis.

Oh, how about this? I think maybe we have a test case, Madam Speaker, because last week armed, machete-wielding eco terrorists attacked a group of blue-collar workers and security guards at a Coastal GasLink construction camp, threatened their lives, set the equipment on fire, and literally terrorized those workers, many of whom are Indigenous Canadians. If you go up to those camps, Madam Speaker, you'll see that most of the security guards, many of the construction workers are hard-working members of the First Nations, and they were terrorized largely by left-wing, urban, southern, Caucasian eco terrorists. Actual violence, potentially lethal violence, that happened a week ago. The Emergencies Act was in effect. I didn't see the government of Canada springing to freeze the bank accounts of those associated with that act of eco terrorism.

Again, this is a dangerous precedent. This is the partial application of law, not the impartial application. This is a precedent that apparently he's willing to use against a few dozen truckers illegally parked but not against people wielding machetes, threatening lives, and setting equipment on fire dangerously. So how can he and how will his government ever be able to deal responsibly and credibly with real threats to national security? Madam Speaker, I don't think that that government can do so.

In closing, let me say that this is a shameful moment in our history. It is an echo of the 1970 use of the War Measures Act, and it is an echo of the kinds of injustices that that same law was used to apply in the First and Second World Wars. It must never happen again. That is why this government will go to the wall using every legal means at our disposal. Yes, the application of it may now have been suspended, but the legal issues raised, the rights that have been violated, the provincial jurisdiction that has been interfered with are still very much live issues.

Finally, Madam Speaker, what a shame that in all of this the once-great New Democrat Party has gone from being a champion of civil liberties to a lapdog for Justin Trudeau and his abuse of power. You know, they and their NDP friends in Ottawa have enabled and facilitated this gross power grab. Maybe the NDP in Alberta have been distracted because they've been more focused with their friends in the Alberta Federation of Labour and the teachers' union on forcing five-year-olds to wear masks indefinitely. That's their priority right now, not defending civil liberties like the NDP did so courageously in 1970. But this government will defend those liberties, will defend the Constitution, and will go to the Supreme Court using every resource at our disposal to defend law and order as the basis of our democratic society.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to this motion regarding the federal government's invocation of the Emergencies Act. Let me say this first. I respect and support everyone's right – every Canadian's right, every Albertan's right – to protest and disagree with their government and their right to peaceful assembly. I note that the Emergencies Act has been lifted by the federal government, but here we are debating that because this government and this Premier needs something to deflect from their failure to act in the matter of the Coumts blockade. That's why we're debating this.

I'm deeply disappointed that this is the situation that we face as a province and as a country. We never should have gotten to this point, and I'm frustrated that once again the UCP government is choosing to play politics rather than show leadership. Earlier the Premier was talking about political theatre. That's exactly what this government is engaged in.

What Albertans have seen over this past month has been the failure of multiple levels of government. When these blockades first started, Albertans looked to the government and the Premier for leadership. Hundreds of millions of dollars lost due to the border blockade. People stranded for days with no food, washrooms, or access to medicine. Communities in southern Alberta were isolated. Many of those who were stranded on the border also live in the northeast part of Calgary. There are many who are in the trucking industry. None of them were part of this illegal blockade. They were impacted by these blockades.

Security experts have reported that the Premier's weak response was emboldening the protesters, and I couldn't agree more. People expected that their government, that claimed to champion law and order, would do whatever it took to end these unlawful blockades. But, instead, what did they see? They saw UCP MLAs taking part in the illegal blockade and celebrating and endorsing illegal activities at Coumts. The Member for Taber-Warner attended the blockade, and if the Premier wants Albertans to follow the rule of law, he must say something about his own caucus member participating in an unlawful, illegal blockade. When that member went back to participate in this protest multiple times, the Premier did nothing. Not one UCP member said anything about their colleague participating in unlawful, illegal activities. When the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland publicly encouraged law enforcement to break the law, to essentially create their own laws, the Premier did nothing.

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. McIver: Under 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. member just accused another member of the House of saying what his intentions were, making false allegations against another member. You just heard it. It's as plain as day. Would you please instruct the member, respectfully, Madam Speaker, to not do that anymore?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was listening to my colleague speak, and my colleague was speaking factually about the attendance of a member at an event that has been deemed illegal. I did not hear an accusation or a point of order, but I look forward to your ruling.

Mr. Sabir: Further to my colleague, I was referring to a statement that was made by the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

I'll also ask those in position of law enforcement, as well as military personal to remember your oaths that you have taken, the country that you represent, and the citizens that you are to protect.

I want you to consider that, when the orders are delivered to you in the coming days.

That's the statement I am referring to, and I don't think it's a point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I think this is probably a good time to start by expressing caution throughout the course of this debate about illegal activities and members' involvement or noninvolvement and what may invoke anger in this Chamber. Certainly, there is a fine line between accusing a member of something that they may or may not have done and reading a quote, for example, that a member may or may not have posted on social media. I can appreciate that we might be in this form of points of order throughout the course of this debate, and I think that knowing that, I'm going to lay out a general caution for all the members in this House to be aware of the words that they say that can inflame anger in this Chamber.

This is your opportunity. For every single member in this House right now, this is our opportunity to – sorry. Hon. Member for St. Albert, do you have something you'd like to say?

Ms Renaud: No. Over to you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. I can appreciate, you can certainly appreciate that when the Speaker is standing, the Speaker has the floor and not the individual members of this Assembly. That would be most helpful.

I'm giving caution to all members in this Chamber that we are to respect one another as elected representatives for the people that sent us here, and that will be the tone of this debate as we proceed throughout the course of the day. I think that's what Albertans expect of us, and we all know that. That is how we're going to move forward.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has the floor.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the caution. I will try to be respectful, but at the same time I think that facts are facts. Whenever I'm describing those facts, I will try to describe them with the utmost respect.

Let me start with what the acting Justice minister said about this blockade. She said that it's illegal. She said that it's intolerable. That was the description coming from this government of this blockade, that it is illegal, that it is offside, although she also did nothing about it at all.

Our caucus encouraged the government, encouraged the Justice minister to go to the court, seek an injunction, and look at other tools that you have at your disposal such as suspending commercial drivers' licences and more. These were concrete steps to show that the government supported the rule of law and would stand with law-abiding Albertans against the lawlessness at Coumts. Instead, the government did nothing and even continued to stand with their colleagues who proudly defended the blockaders, saying that they inspired nations or called them good folks. Then the seriousness of the situation became clear: 13 long guns, handguns, a machete, multiple sets of body armour, 21 rifle magazines for semiautomatic rifles, and other stockpiles of ammunition. All of that was seized at Coumts, and four of them have now been charged with conspiring to murder RCMP officers.

The acting Justice minister stood up with the RCMP, who were the target of this vile plot to murder law enforcement personnel, and has still refused to condemn her colleagues' reckless and selfish actions. The fact that the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland would suggest that the police side with the protesters and stop enforcing the laws that a democratically . . .

Mr. Getson: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Getson: Yeah. A point of order, Madam Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j), soliciting false motives, causing disorder. We just went through this. I take exception to the member opposite continuing to reference me with causing disorder, eliciting any illegal behaviours or activities.

Again, given that the Liberals and the NDP voted in an Emergencies Act, which is going to be proven in a court of law to be unequivocally – unequivocally – out of line for what that context was, the simple statement that I made for people to remember their oaths of who they swore to protect in this country: that is sedition? That is sedition according to the socialist opposition. It is not a seditious act to make people remember. I might add, Madam Speaker, that I would also say the same thing to that member opposite now. Remember your oath and who you swore to protect. Remember those flags and those colours and who you should be patriotic to. If that's sedition, I'll say that all day long.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I may caution the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland. While I will deal with the point of order, it is certainly not appropriate to speak directly to another member in this Chamber. Words like "you" and pointing are definitely not helpful, and maybe I should have broadened my earlier caution to include such things.

Having said that, the opposition to respond and then the Government House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I understand the point of order was under 23(h), (i), and (j). While I continue to listen to my colleague's remarks and he has made an effort to enter into the record the facts of the matter, I do not believe this to be a point of order and look forward to your ruling.

Mr. McIver: Well, Madam Speaker, you get to caution us. We don't get to caution you, so I won't do that, but I will point out the historical fact that when I asked you to rule that what the hon. member said a few minutes ago was out of order, you chose not to, which is your right. But now you have a second chance because the hon. member has continued to do exactly what you cautioned him not to do, under (h), (i), and (j), create disorder in the House. This is the disorder: to accuse, to impute false and unavowed motives to another member, which he did to the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, and to make allegations at another member. Madam Speaker, it's your wisdom that we depend upon. Might I respectfully say that the sooner you rule this out of order, the less time we'll probably spend having these conversations, because I promise to stand up every time that they do this.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, I certainly don't think you were challenging the Speaker on a ruling.

Mr. McIver: No. Not at all.

The Deputy Speaker: I would expect that the way that was worded will not happen again, because that would be most inappropriate, as you would know.

While these matters are sensitive and while I believe there are different perspectives on what has been said or posted or whatever outside of this Chamber, that doesn't make it not true. That, therefore, makes what is being said a matter of debate and not a point of order. However, we know that this type of language is not helpful. We've all known that before this debate even started. Now we're here for the second time in a very short period of time.

I would ask the hon. member to tailor his remarks to the motion at hand, which is about – you can certainly read it for yourself. I think that if we stick to the matter at hand as opposed to other things, we can have a good, fulsome debate in this House. The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has heard my words and will proceed in such a manner.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am trying to keep my remarks to the motion at hand, which is about the invocation of the Emergencies Act in the context of these blockades, in the context of what this government did or did not do, in the context of what the member of this government caucus did or did not do. Certainly, the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland would have the opportunity to explain what he wrote, but I was exactly trying to comment on the public statement that he made, and that included that he wants law enforcement to consider their oath when the orders are delivered to them in coming days. That's, in my opinion – the member can, again, get up and disagree when it's his turn . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, and I can appreciate that you're trying to defend the things that you've said. That time has passed. I have made a ruling, and I would ask that maybe we move to your next point. While I certainly don't want to tell you what to say or what not to say, I am making a very strong suggestion that we move past this and really stick to the matter at hand, which is the motion.

Mr. Sabir: I am not trying to defend what I said. I am trying to make the point that the presence of a member who makes a statement in government caucus worries me because at the end of the day that's the government for all Albertans. It worries me because of the fear of the influence that that member may have on the Premier, with the cabinet, and whether the Premier didn't do anything because of that influence about all of this situation. We know that the UCP did nothing to condemn these statements from government caucus members.

Like, we heard from the government, we heard from our acting Justice minister that these are illegal blockades, that these are illegal activities, but we didn't hear from the government why their caucus members participated in those illegal activities. Earlier in question period today the Premier was defending those members, and the UCP has defended their colleagues who made multiple visits to that illegal blockade, where there were people plotting to murder police officers. So it's absolutely disgusting hypocrisy from this government. Clearly . . .

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. McIver: Under 23(h), (i), and (j), imputing false motives. The hon. member just suggested that members of this caucus supported the idea of shooting police officers. It's what he inferred. Clearly, that is intended to create disorder. I once again implore you to rule it out of order. I know how much you enjoy me standing here talking to you, but maybe you don't enjoy it enough to want me to do it all the time, particularly when this is so obviously out of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This is not a point of order. I listened incredibly closely to what my colleague was saying. He did not imply motive. He did not say anything that should create disorder in this House, because these are factual things. We know that at the Coutts blockade there were those planning the murder of officers. This is on the public record. We know that UCP MLAs attended these blockades. My colleague has simply put on the record here in this Assembly, where we should be able to have a factually based discussion of these things, the occurrence in this situation, and it is incredibly important and relevant to Government Motion 10.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Municipal Affairs is being incredibly sensitive and is trying to curtail the debate in this House, is trying to influence it, and I do not think that there is a point of order. My colleague continues to address this respectfully and, I believe, should be able to continue his remarks, because he has not said anything incorrect, unfactual, or accusatory towards another MLA.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, I thank you for your remarks. I have two thoughts to say on your argument in particular, hon. Official Opposition House Leader. This is not a point of order. However, this is getting to be very off topic. The motion – and perhaps we could provide a copy to all members of this House who don't have one – is fairly clear in a direction, and while I can appreciate that there are certain arguments to be made to make your point as a whole, this debate is becoming about something that this motion is not. This is not a point of order, but it is becoming off topic and will become a point of order in a different matter and which the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is arguing at this point.

Hon. member, please proceed with the debate on Government Motion 10.

Debate Continued

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In our view, in my view, this motion is entirely about politics and not about serving Albertans. Also, the Emergencies Act has been revoked, but still this Premier, who is facing a review of his leadership in a matter of weeks, insists on using people's concern and fear to play politics.

[The Speaker in the chair]

All I am suggesting to the government here is this. If the government wants to be taken seriously, if the Premier wants to be taken seriously, I'm asking this government to take some action about those colleagues within their caucus who put a spirit in this or who cheered on or supported this illegal blockade. That's all I'm saying.

Mr. Hunter: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order under 23(h). Specifically, it says:

23 A Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . .

(h) makes allegations against another Member.

Specifically in this case, the member just made an allegation that I attended and was participating in a blockade. Mr. Speaker, it is on record – and I have also put out a press release stating it to Albertans and to the world – that I was never there when there was an illegal blockade going on. That is public knowledge, and that is the truth. This member knows full well that that's the case, yet he continues to make these allegations that are false. This is a point of order, in my opinion, because the member continues to do these unavowed motives and also makes the allegations against this Member for Taber-Warner.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), making allegations against another member, the member of my caucus has been responding to Government Motion 10 and has entered into the fact what is on the public record about members of the government caucus, including the member who has just spoken, attending and visiting blockades and participants there. This is on the public record. I don't believe that he is intending to make allegations but, rather, connecting these events to Government Motion 10, specifically because the invocation of the Emergencies Act is related to how this government and its MLAs handled the situation here in Alberta. I do not believe that it is a point of order, and I look forward to your ruling.

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You have wisely said in this House many times that you can't do indirectly what the rules don't allow you to do directly. The speaker from the other side has said that the blockades were illegal, and he's right about that. I agree with him on that. He also said that our member was participating in the blockade. Now, he has accused our member of committing a crime. He's done it indirectly. Your wisdom, which I agree with, is that you can't do indirectly what you can't do directly. I think we just saw a textbook example of that, and I would implore you to rule it out of order.

The Speaker: Well, I am prepared to rule. I've also said many times that we may have to accept two versions of the facts because both hon. members will be stating what they believe to be the facts. What I will say is this. I have listened to the debate intently. I also know that the Deputy Speaker has had much to say about this particular issue. The debate on Government Motion 10 is going to be a debate which invokes a significant amount of passion as both sides of this particular issue view the world very differently.

If members of the government would like to see the Speaker intervening at every opportunity when a member of the opposition makes a claim or a statement that isn't specifically related to Government Motion 10, then in return, when members of the government make statements that aren't specifically related to Government Motion 10, in the future of the debate the Speaker will have no option but to be interventionist, and my sense is that members of the government or otherwise would find that displeasurable. When members of the opposition make claims about the government that are displeasurable, while I may or may not agree with those statements, they are entitled to make them. Now, I don't believe that the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall was claiming that the Member for Taber-Warner committed a crime. He merely stated his presence at an event, which the member has also acknowledged. The member has specifically and on the record stated the times at which he was there, which indicate he did not attend an illegal event. We will accept that as fact.

The member of the opposition is equally entitled to make a statement based upon his version of the events that have taken place. It doesn't necessarily mean he's making an accusation that the member committed a crime, because that would be against the rules. I intend for the rest of the evening, whenever possible, to apply the rules fairly and equally, but because the member – I will provide caution. I know that the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has been cautioned now on three separate occasions about making these accusations. He knows it's unhelpful. He knows it's created disorder, yet he continues to do so. There is a significant amount of opportunity to debate many issues to do with Government Motion 10, and he ought to be doing just that.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I will try to wrap up fairly quickly here. I think that the Premier is moving this motion because he is more interested in politics than serving Albertans. This is all a big sham. The Premier likes to claim he knows best, but the Ontario Premier, also their Conservative bro, Doug Ford, has supported the use of the Emergencies Act because he knows the situation in Ottawa was very serious. Also, we know and Albertans know that the people organizing these blockades are all interconnected. That's why I think Albertans don't trust this Premier when they say that this motion is somehow about invoking the Emergencies Act. That's not true. The Premier claims to be defending Albertans and defending the rule of law, but really this is a hollow political stunt. The Premier always puts his political fortunes first. He'll put saving his job over his duty to the people of this province. That is what has driven the disaster at Coultts over the past several weeks.

Again, if the UCP was serious about defending the rule of law by taking action against these illegal and criminal blockades, I think they will start looking at their own actions. They will start looking at what they have been doing to disperse this blockade, how their members have behaved. Until they take this basic step to support the rule of law, Albertans see this motion and this government for what it is: playing political games rather than serving the people they were elected to serve. Shame on this Premier, shame on this government for putting our economy, the safety of our residents, the rule of law at risk to ensure the Premier keeps his job. I've never been more disgusted in this government, and that's saying something with this group.

Alberta's NDP supports the right to protest, respects the right to protest and to peaceful assembly. We support the rule of law. The UCP supports neither. The only people standing for the Premier are those who would stand for the Premier. Thankfully, Mr. Speaker, that is fewer and fewer Albertans. I suspect that, come 2023, Albertans will get a government that has a real leader, a Premier that relies on her values and on what she hears from Albertans, and I can't wait.

Thank you.

The Speaker: My, so much interest in debate today. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis, and then we will assess the situation.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk on Government Motion 10. I want to start by just quickly reading the first part of it.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) condemn the unnecessary invocation of the Emergencies Act by the government of Canada as the Assembly is of the view that this is a measure which infringes upon the constitutionally guaranteed rights of Albertans and all Canadians, including the right to due process and natural justice.

I'll stop there, reading part of Motion 10.

It is necessary for this Legislative Assembly to speak with one voice in denouncing Justin Trudeau and the government of Canada's authoritarian imposition of this Emergencies Act. Absolutely. Even though it's been revoked, considerable damage, the unintended consequences, will reverberate through our country, our province, and our economy for a long time, maybe forever.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a time for politics as usual. This is a time to put Albertans first. This is a time for taking real action to defend Albertans. Even though it's been revoked, it is still the time to do that. I agree; Justin Trudeau clearly acted in bad faith. I agree with a previous speaker that, clearly, the federal government did not need these powers to clear blockades or break up occupations.

The predecessor to the Emergencies Act, the War Measures Act, used in World War I and World War II and the FLQ crisis, with bombs in the Montreal stock exchange and mailboxes and murders and kidnappings – my goodness, the overreach from this government. Mr. Speaker, do you know what's ironic? By invoking the far-reaching emergency powers and then attempting to make these powers permanent, Trudeau has proven himself to be everything that the freedom convoy participants travelled thousands of kilometres to protest against. He proved them right.

Mr. Speaker, also, though, from the beginning Alberta's Premier and this government failed to grasp the urgency of the situation. The fact that the Premier put his throne speech ahead of passing this motion when the Emergencies Act was still in effect is clear evidence of this. When will they put Albertans first? You know, look at how the world has noticed the draconian overreach, the imposition, the seizure of bank accounts. Think of what that's going to do for our investment confidence, our tourism, our immigration, all those things that have made Alberta and Canada so great. Just think of what this overreach is going to do to all those things.

But, you know, Mr. Speaker, I want to give a shout-out to how Albertans and Canadians spoke up. My constituency office and, I bet, everyone's in here was inundated with people that wanted to peacefully speak up, peacefully demonstrate, people that were worried about the seizure of their money in the bank account even though they had just wanted to support a peaceful, legal demonstration. I saw on BNN Bloomberg this morning that $7.8 million were seized by Canadian banks. It sort of sounds like a lot, but can you imagine if it was your money? Can you imagine the stress and fear that goes with that at the same time of the two years that we've been through? Many, many Albertans, many, many Cypress-Medicine Hatters reached out to my constituency, worried about their civil rights, their Charter rights, their legal right to peacefully and legally support, and our Prime Minister blew it.

Do you know what it was also nice to see? An independent MLA in Ontario. I don't know if it was his petition or if he was just promoting it. Almost 90,000 Canadians signed the petition asking the Senate to vote against the Emergencies Act, and he peacefully and properly put it out there and, my goodness, got the attention of Canadian Senators, although I think we never got to that point, in just 48 hours. That's an incredible accomplishment for Canadians, for Albertans to peacefully and legally get involved in our system and have effect.

I want to give a shout-out to the Premier of Saskatchewan, who was the very first one, initially, that started to remove the mandates as omicron moves to the endemic stage. I've stood up in this House and I've talked so much about the mental health crisis, the economic crisis, and the physical health crisis that Cypress-Medicine Hatters have gone through. The inconsistency from this government, the flip-flops have been a big factor in the stress level and a big factor in what happened, so hopefully this government can use that as a learning experience in the time that they have left.

I know it's been revoked, Mr. Speaker, but there are still things that we can do as an Alberta Legislature to have one voice and to put Albertans first, to prioritize Albertan families. Why don't we have a motion or a law – ATB. It's a Crown corporation, wholly owned by the province. Steps must be taken to prevent seizure of account holders' assets under future, similar situations. Let's do something to prevent the overreach from Ottawa.

Secondly, the province regulates vehicle insurance and registration. Why didn't this government take steps to prevent the cancellation of registration of insurance of Albertan vehicles? Hard-working truckers, and so many have said it: we owe so much to them for the last two years, you know, supplying our goods, stocking our shelves, bringing us our fuel, doing all those things that make our last-in-time inventory system work and allow us to feed our families and live our lives. We didn't defend them. We didn't stick up for them when we could. That was a huge mistake.

Thirdly, the province has a duty to defend Albertans' property rights. Any attempt by the federal government to seize or conscript Albertans' property must be stood up against and prevented. I had constituents, I had Albertans e-mail me asking if it was possible that the Alberta government temporarily cover any money seized by Ottawa, temporarily protect Albertans' civil liberties, Albertans' right to live in a full and a free democracy. We heard crickets from this government. We did a throne speech instead of this motion. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker – I've said it before – Albertans are tired of hearing this Premier's excuses for failing to take real action on this, on many other issues with Ottawa's overreach, and it forces Albertans to wonder where this Premier's allegiances truly lie.

Mr. Speaker, I started by saying that it was a shameful time, a shameful time that the government of Canada overreached, you know, into our civil liberties, into our right to live in a full, fair democracy, and hurt our quality of life and hurt our reputation going forward. But it's also a historic time. Hundreds of Albertans stood outside of my constituency office on the two or three Saturdays in a very legal, peaceful protest, waving Canadian flags, waving Alberta flags, sticking up for their neighbours, for Alberta to be free and strong. Unfortunately, they heard crickets from this government, but that's what it was about. I absolutely support and applaud all of those who exercised their legal right, their civic rights for peaceful and legal demonstration, and I applaud their effectiveness. Let's use this opportunity to continue to make Alberta the freest and most prosperous place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is such an honour to rise today in this House and speak to this motion declaring Alberta's opposition to the imposition of the Emergencies Act. I want to thank government leadership for putting this motion forward on behalf of every single Albertan in this province today. There is a lot of important work that we as legislators undertake within the walls of this House, but there are truly very few moments in our history that hold such significance as this one right here and now. To be able to use the voice that God gave me to speak to this motion and address the events of the past week in our country is an honour.

Now, I understand that Justin Trudeau recently rescinded the Emergencies Act, conveniently right before our debate started in this House today, but that does not negate the need to have this debate today and to discuss the matters of the past week and ensure that they never happen again in our country. As I said, Justin Trudeau's unilateral invocation of this Emergencies Act is not something to take lightly. It needs to be talked about today, it needs to be debated by all members of this House, and we need to do everything in our power to ensure that the events of the past week do not happen again in our Canada.

This was not an elected official merely making use of a piece of legislation to take care of ordinary business. Mr. Speaker, this was an attack on our values, this was an attack on our Canadian identity, and it was an attack on our way of life. This was the declaration of a culture war that has been brewing beneath the surface of our nation for years. Will Canada continue to be a free country, where our citizens are able to speak freely and express their support or opposition towards government policies without fear of reprimand and imprisonment and where citizens can work, save, spend, and donate their life savings wherever and however they choose? Or will Canada become a police state, governed not by the rule of law but by the will of a functioning tyrant whose only ability to govern is propped up by the votes of socialists who, by their very ideological nature, are too reliant on that government to think critically and make decisions for themselves appropriately? Anyone who believes that the latter could not become permanent in Canada best revisit the events of Venezuela short years ago.

Mr. Speaker, these are moments in our history that we must not allow to pass us by as though life will just carry on tomorrow as usual once the police raids and arrests of innocent people are over. We must not allow that to happen, because even if we wish to stick our heads in the sand and pretend as though it were possible and it never happened, that's not possible. The events of the days ahead will set precedents in defining our nation for a generation. These are the defining moments for us as Canadians, who were once known for our peaceful and friendly nature, and one which the entire world is watching. Will our maple leaf stand for freedom, or will it fall to oppression?

The Emergencies Act gave the federal government the power to bar Canadian citizens from travelling to or from specific areas, to deport others, to confiscate private property, to spy on our every private communication in whichever form they deemed necessary and appropriate, and even to freeze the private bank accounts of our citizens, and the power to do all of these things not just for the reasons related directly to matters at hand, which in this instance was the freedom protests against the government lockdowns and health mandates, but for suspicion of any other dissatisfactory behaviour that the leader of the government may not like in the moment.

The Justice minister of our nation went so far as to declare, on national television, as was noted by our Premier earlier today, that if you are, quote, part of a pro-Trump movement, you should be worried about having your bank account frozen by the government. End quote. You heard that right. The Justice minister of Canada just declared on national TV that anyone who supports the former leader of a political party politically maligned to his own should know that their assets are at risk of seizure by his government.

Mr. Speaker, let's all put our political opinions about Donald Trump aside in this moment, because I know that many people listening will have big opinions about that man. Let's really think about the implications that such a position taken by our Justice minister against a political opponent of his could have on the future of our supposed free and democratic society in Canada. Further, when asked which powers within the act the government planned to use, the Prime Minister himself declared: everything is on the table. This should terrify all of us.

Mr. Speaker, this act was first introduced over a hundred years ago, in 1914, for the sole purpose of declaring a war or investigation under the name of the War Measures Act. The act was then later amended, in 1960, to legislate that anything done under that War Measures Act could not be an infringement or abrogation on any right or freedom outlined in our Canadian Bill of Rights. The irony.

Today the current version of that act, the Emergencies Act, is legislated so as only to be used for the purposes of combatting espionage or sabotage; foreign-influenced activities; threats or use of serious violence for political, religious, or ideological objectives; or covert acts intended to undermine the constitutionally established government. To put that last point into simpler terms, these would be acts to topple the very existence of Canada's constitutional monarchy and democratic institutions, not acts of the day to undermine electoral outcomes. So very serious offences that this act is intended to be used for in 2022. None of the events at the freedom protests constitute a breach of any of these four criteria or even anything close to a breach of these four criteria. To be frank, the single only threat undermining the constitutionally established Canadian government is Justin Trudeau and his Liberal caucus.

I should remind everyone watching and in this House that this is not the Emergencies Act. I want to be very clear that this is the rebranded War Measures Act from 1914. The fact that Justin Trudeau tried to use the powers of this 100-year-old War Measures Act under the guise of the Emergencies Act without any justifiable reason to do so, other than to make his actions more palatable and relatable to Canadians and to set a precedent that such actions and power could become commonplace for the use of any ordinary, present-day event that the Prime Minister may consider to be a threat to his sovereignty, is repulsive, it's disgusting, and it is flagrantly dishonourable to the people, the values, and the historical events that built our nation. Make no mistake; this was the former War Measures Act, and when it was first written, it was meant for war times only.

Mr. Speaker, the Merriam-Webster Dictionary defines democracy in two profound ways, which, when put into context of this year, 2022, are very profound. The first definition is common people constituting the source of political authority, and the second is an organization or system in which everyone is treated equally and has equal rights. Those definitions in today's context should give anyone the shivers. The events of the past two years, especially the decisions of our Prime Minister in Ottawa this past week, are an absolute affront to our way of life. The thousands of Canadians who rallied in their towns and communities in the name of freedom from government overreach and tyranny understood these definitions, and they understood that they were no longer being upheld in our nation.

Throughout the demonstrations there was not one statue toppled down, not one flag defaced, one piece of private property set ablaze, nor one business window smashed. Instead, the people stayed up all night to man the National War Memorial and ensure the monument was respected. They cooked and distributed meals for the homeless. They shovelled sidewalks for small-business owners and jubilantly flew our country's maple leaf with pride as they demanded better for their children and our future.

The majority of these individuals participating in the protests were not anarchists or radicals. Rather, they were our friends, our neighbours, our dentists, and our hairstylists, ordinary good people pushed to the brink by pandemic restrictions and left bewildered, wondering what became of the free and compassionate country they once called home but feeling as though they had a moral obligation to do something about it rather than sit at home complaining and wishing for someone else to take charge for them. These were patriotic people who cared about their country and embodied the most Canadian principles of all: compassion and equal treatment for their fellow citizens and self-determination over reliance and dependency on the government. Our Prime Minister may divisively refer to these individuals as racists and misogynists. But, Mr. Speaker, do you know what I refer to these people as? People; human beings with a voice who deserve to be heard, deserve to be listened to, and deserve to be represented by their government. Perhaps Mr. Trudeau should remember that.

The past two weeks I went and actually hung a huge Canadian flag on my front balcony, something that I've never done before. It's duct-taped in place in true redneck fashion, so it doesn't quite look as pretty. It doesn't have quite as much curb appeal as perhaps it could, but it's the thought behind the flag that matters and the message that it sends. The freedom fighters across our nation have reminded me why I'm so proud to be Canadian. I've never in my life been more proud to support the maple leaf than I am right now and to see it turned into an emblem of freedom and democracy all across the world. We cannot let Justin Trudeau take that away from us, and we will not. Our elders gave their lives and sacrificed so that we as present-day Canadians could live peaceful lives, free from tyranny and free to think, believe, speak, and vote with our own consciences.

To every Albertan: this government stands opposed to Justin Trudeau's imposition of the Emergencies Act, and this government will continue to defend you against this attack on our very way of life. To every Canadian living outside of our province, especially those in provinces with Premiers supporting the imposition of this legislation: this Alberta government will continue to defend you as well from halfway across the nation. There is no more important time than right now for Canadians to rise up and use the power of their voices to alter the trajectory that our country is on for the better. Our Canada can be saved, but we as citizens need to save it.

Mr. Speaker, I will close this speech with the ever-fitting quote by Ronald Reagan, which I know that I've cited in this House before but becomes more relevant by the day.

Freedom is never more than one generation away from extinction. We didn't pass it to our children in the bloodstream. It must be fought for, protected and handed on for them to do the same, or one day we will spend our sunset years telling our children and our children's children what it was once like . . . [when] men were free.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has the call.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank my friend the Member for Banff-Kananaskis for her wise words. I appreciate listening to her. Even though I'm a much older man, she is wise beyond her years, and I really appreciate her words.

The members opposite said that the government did not show leadership. Mr. Speaker, what is the best way to show leadership to Albertans? I would suggest that the highest and best way to do it is to get rid of destructive restrictions, to listen to Albertans. I know that there's still a little ways to go, but I appreciate that we are moving in the right direction. That is the best way to bless the lives of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, about a month ago I had the opportunity to attend the trucker convoy rally near my home, in Gasoline Alley. It was packed with friends. It wasn't an angry gathering. It wasn't a lawless gathering. It had a positive atmosphere filled with hope. Why is that the case? Why was this a positive atmosphere? I'll tell you why. Men and women and families had felt voiceless. They had felt disenfranchised by federal and provincial governments, but now they had a voice in the trucker convoy. That was cause for celebration. They had not felt listened to. They had felt ignored.

I think all of us to some extent can understand that feeling. I've felt it myself. Too often we have seen a top-down, command-and-control approach that treated adults as children, not respecting and trusting them to govern themselves and their families in respectful ways. What I have witnessed, what many of us witnessed offends my core values as a public servant. I never want to see this again. Many Albertans feel the same. In the end the truth will prevail, and I'm so grateful for that. History will show that across-the-board vaccine passports and mandates were gross errors and in many cases caused more harm than good, especially for young adults and children.

Mr. Speaker, I have sorrow. Public health authorities undermined their own authority with biased reporting and using fear and coercion as a tool. I've spoken on this before, and I will be bringing forth a motion in this Legislature for there to be a comprehensive public inquiry into COVID, including a full cost analysis of COVID restrictions, mandates, and passports, especially on children and young adults. The truth must prevail. The truth produces hope, and it produces healing.

Mr. Speaker, in respect of the trucker convoy we know what the Prime Minister did. He went into hiding, and then he sought to cancel and delegitimize the protesters, calling them a fringe minority, labelling them as racists and misogynists. That is not leadership. That weakens the public authority of important institutions.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition here sits in a thoughtless stupor. If they do not vote in favour of this, they are shameful. I don't use that adjective very often, but it is shameful, actually. Perhaps they agree a great deal with Canada's first NDP Prime Minister. That is what he is. While perhaps he belongs to a different party, his actions speak for themselves. He is Canada's NDP Prime Minister. Their false ideas are lies.

Over the past two years Albertans have seen for themselves the results of too much government in our lives. We should resist government taking away our freedom and prosperity and get them away, get them out of our lives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there were a few protesters who did blockade public roads, and I do not condone that. I have spoken against this with Extinction Rebellion. It is always wrong to break the law. I do not believe, like some, that the ends justify the means. Even in a cause that is just, it is not right to blockade. It undermines the moral high ground of a just cause. I sorrow that that would ever occur.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister enacted the Emergencies Act. While he has just revoked it out of political expediency, why did he do it in the first place? This was not an emergency, but this is a very serious matter. The Emergencies Act is a nuclear option – it is a nuclear option – and should never be used as a political tool, attacking an entire movement of Canadians, including Albertans who felt disenfranchised, whose crime was disagreeing with government. It labels an entire movement which disagrees with government as a public danger, an emergency, a voice that must be stomped out and silenced. This is very dangerous. This is not leadership. This is certainly a very bad precedent. What will the government do when there is a real emergency? Will citizens need to look over their shoulders if they support causes that an insecure, unprincipled government feels threaten maintaining their power and position?

Mr. Speaker, I visited with the protesters yesterday outside the Legislature. Many of them are principled men and women who just want government to leave them alone, to get out of their lives, to stop dividing them from their families and friends. They are rightly concerned that government has been so destructive to the national fabric, posing a threat to their freedom and prosperity and of all Albertans. Government is supposed to protect freedoms that support prosperity for its people. In many cases they have done the opposite. There is cause for concern. Turbulence is on the horizon; in some respects it is already upon us. There is an urgency to prepare. These men and women are not breaking laws – and I appreciate their leadership – who are raising voices of warning and, with the truth, inspiring hope in so many where government failed to do so.

This political use of the Emergencies Act demonstrates that our federal government is rudderless. It is a morally and fiscally bankrupt government that acts as an enemy to Albertans' freedom and prosperity, and I condemn it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Perfect. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Government Motion 10. I'll read a condensed version into the record so that people following along can understand what we're discussing this afternoon.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) condemn the unnecessary invocation of the Emergencies Act by the government of Canada . . .
- (b) [that the Legislative Assembly] is of the view that the government of Canada has failed to demonstrate that the present circumstances meet the threshold that the law requires . . . and
- (c) [that the Legislative Assembly] is further of the view that this invocation of the Emergencies Act constitutes an unnecessary intrusion into provincial jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's very important that we work to try and understand how we got to this point. Over the last two years we have seen that, time and time again, governments throughout Canada, throughout the western, developed world, most of the world have asked their citizens to trust them as the governments attempted to address the uncertainty around the COVID-19 pandemic.

Over these two years we've learned a lot, a lot about the threat of COVID-19 and a lot about the effectiveness of various responses trying to minimize the consequences from the disease. Mr. Speaker, early in the pandemic there was little known about the threat, but two years in we have gathered a lot of information, made vaccinations and various treatments available for individuals, and are now able to move on, away from government dictates. With that, governments from around the world have moved in a direction away from mandates and restrictions.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, the federal government of Canada chose to move in a direction of requiring truckers travelling to the U.S. to be vaccinated at a time when it was obvious that vaccination status has little bearing on whether an individual could be considered free from infection of COVID-19. We have over the last, well, pretty much two months now, with the omicron variant circulating within North America, recognized that the vaccination status of an individual did not necessarily show that the individual was healthy and free from spreading the virus. But the federal government, in putting forward a restriction, a guideline, a mandate, a vaccine mandate, on the truckers, moved in a direction where I believe they needed to use some common sense, recognize that the pandemic was swiftly coming to an end, and also realize that the free world was moving on. They were beginning to remove COVID restrictions, and the federal government needed to refrain from implementing a completely unnecessary public health policy at the time, the trucker vaccine mandate.

Introducing a vaccine mandate currently, at this point in time in the pandemic, really makes no sense. We've learned over the last two months, with the prevalence of the omicron variant, that we now have viral spread occurring throughout our population. I know many people within my community, vaccinated, unvaccinated, that have been exposed and infected with the omicron variant. We also see that currently in our hospitals about 70 per cent of the people in hospital with COVID-19 have been vaccinated. So we are at a point in time where I believe we can move in a direction where we allow the individuals to take responsibility for their decision-making, and then we move away from government dictates.

But I believe the Prime Minister, Prime Minister Trudeau, ignited this emergency. He added fuel to the fire by name-calling those that opposed his choice to implement the trucker vaccine mandate and now expects Canadians to just trust him with their future. Sure, they've now revoked the Emergencies Act, that they just put in a couple of days ago, but I believe that they invoked it irresponsibly. I do not believe that, as is stated in the motion, they had met the threshold that the law required. To invoke the Emergencies Act to essentially deal with a parking problem in Ottawa: it's a serious stretch to say that that met the conditions for invoking the Emergencies Act. I would argue that it did not.

I think the Prime Minister and the federal government introduced a completely unnecessary vaccine mandate on truckers, who largely are, at their workplace, isolated from everyone around them. They're largely by themselves in their truck going up and down the highway delivering goods. The Prime Minister added fuel to the fire. Those that opposed the policy: he called them names, called them a fringe minority, racist, misogynist. That leads us to no good. To resort to name-calling because people did not agree with the health policy that was being introduced was irresponsible, unnecessary. I think that that did not help.

Now the Prime Minister pretends over the weekend that there's a national emergency, a national threat to our democracy, and has used the Emergencies Act to address the parking problem in Ottawa, essentially the equivalent, I would suggest, of using a firehose to put out a candle.

Mr. Speaker, we know that in this country the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is in place to protect individuals, their rights from government tyranny. We also understand that it is up to government to demonstrably prove or provide evidence when it is necessary to interfere with those freedoms that Canadians hold so dear. I believe that after two years of individuals being willing to restrict their freedoms for the good of all, citizens of this country – I believe that they were at the point that they felt that now it was their turn to actually be responsible for their decisions, for their future, for their families' future. I truly respect the ability of Canadians, of Albertans to be able to make those decisions based off the information that they now have.

The trucker vaccine mandate is bad policy. I think the Prime Minister felt that it was a health policy that was necessary. I don't understand his logic based off the experience that we've had over the last couple of months. I think that when we take a look at how the western world was moving away from restrictions and then to introduce this specific policy, I believe that it was an unnecessary restriction and simply an egregious expression of abuse of power by the federal government.

At this time I think it's imperative that governments move in a direction to help our society heal, that governments move in a direction to understand what was done, what could be considered done well, the things that were maybe not so good, and the things that should never happen again. I do believe that we need to have a full evaluation of whether or not the cure was necessary in regard to government mandates and restrictions and lockdowns or if we have opportunity to see that we maybe could have handled the emergency in a better way.

Currently I think in our society we have largely a social issue. Division within our society has grown, and we need to be able to address the need to heal within our communities, within our families, within Alberta, within Canada. A lot of healing takes place in society when individuals feel like they are free, living within their responsibilities, and able to collaborate together with others around them. For future prospects, for the ability to have hope for the future, it largely hinges on their ability to feel free within their society.

Instead of liberty I believe the federal government chose even more restrictions, and instead of freedom our federal government chose to grab even more power and control through the Emergencies Act to essentially address a problem of their own making. I believe that, like in Motion 10, item (c), the "invocation of the Emergencies Act constitutes an unnecessary intrusion into provincial jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada." I condemn the use of the Emergencies Act at this time. Prime Minister Trudeau ignited this emergency, added fuel to the fire, and now expects Canadians to trust him with their futures.

I think it's time to move on. I am very glad that the federal government has decided to revoke the Emergencies Act. I think that as we move forward, history will show that it was an abuse of what the intention of the Emergencies Act was and that we should take this as a precedent of when not to use it, not as a precedent of when to use it.

With that, I conclude my remarks, Speaker, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak to this important item.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me here today. I will most certainly be speaking in favour of Motion 10 today. I don't know if I've ever seen a more tumultuous time in my lifetime. For two years I have watched as communities, church congregations, and families have fought and argued about what they individually think is the right path with this COVID pandemic. Should there be restrictions? Shouldn't there be restrictions? What restrictions should there be? Should only the cities be restricted and the rural communities not be restricted?

Then what about the moving goalposts? First, it was just two weeks. Then we were debating what businesses were essential. Then we shifted from saying that all health care workers and truckers were heroes to saying that only the vaccinated health care workers and truckers were heroes. Now we have a Prime Minister that invoked the War Measures Act, now called the emergencies measures act, which allows him to freeze bank accounts of anyone who donated to the freedom convoy. And some wonder why the people are upset.

Mr. Speaker, the difference between democracy and dictatorship is that in a democracy individuals have the right to peacefully protest actions that they do not agree with and that they are allowed to do so without the fear of persecution from the government. Weeks ago many courageous truckers and everyday Canadians decided to take a stand against government overreach that violates the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is completely irrelevant whether the Prime Minister agrees with the protesters or not. They have the right to peacefully protest decisions that they feel make them second-class citizens. These protesters are not the fringe minority that the Prime Minister repugnantly stated they were. Instead, they represent the silent majority of Canadians that are fed up with the changing goalposts.

For two years Canadians have jumped through every hoop they were asked to jump through: weddings missed, funerals of loved ones viewed only on Zoom, parents not able to attend their kids' hockey games, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. One grandfather called me up a year and a half ago and told me that he didn't want to live if he couldn't see his grandchildren. He lives in a seniors' home and wanted to go out and visit his grandchildren. When he tried to leave, the staff told him that they couldn't stop him from leaving but they could stop him from coming back. He had nowhere else to go, so, in his own words, he said: I went back into my room, sat down in my overstuffed chair, and turned on the news, just to be more depressed by watching who was being bombed and murdered.

People wanted their lives back and got tired of waiting for politicians to get their ducks in a row, so they did what any frustrated individual would do. They peacefully protested. This movement represents the majority of Albertans that want their lives back. They want normal back. They are sick and tired of being unable to go about their lives without having to constantly show a QR code.

Now, to be clear, Mr. Speaker, I have always stated that I don't support the illegal protests. The rule of law protects our entire society. I am a lawmaker, not a lawbreaker, as some in this House have stated in the past.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has constantly shown that he will meet with pretty much any controversial figure. He has met with the likes of Joshua Boyle and Greta Thunberg. Yet when a bunch of hard-working Canadians come calling, the Prime Minister not only refuses to meet with them but abdicated his responsibility of leadership and went into hiding for weeks. When the Prime Minister finally did emerge, he decided to go from zero to a hundred by invoking the emergencies measures act for the first time in Canadian history.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for the vast majority these protesters were peaceful: bouncy castles for the kids and singalongs for the adults. I never saw them looting stores or burning cars like we saw a few summers ago from another group of protesters who were not being peaceful. How do these peaceful protesters represent a threat to our country? Instead, it would appear that the Prime Minister's use of the emergencies measures act is just a heavy-handed approach aimed at punishing the protesters and their supporters by seizing their bank accounts and assets.

Mr. Speaker, I have received calls from single mothers who gave $20 to the freedom convoy GoFundMe account that they have their bank accounts frozen and are unable to buy groceries for their children. Jagmeet Singh's brother-in-law gave $13,000 to the freedom convoy. I wonder if the NDP in this Chamber have asked their federal cousin if he thinks his brother-in-law's bank account should be frozen as well, or are they working a double standard? Is it that everyone but the Liberals and NDP should be held to this law?

I have other questions that the NDP and every Albertan should be asking themselves. Seeing as only $1 million of the GoFundMe money was actually disbursed to the freedom convoy organizers and the rest was returned or kept by governments, whose bank account should be frozen? Should only those who were part of the $1 million that was disbursed have their bank accounts frozen, or should everyone who had the intent of donating to the freedom convoy be frozen as well? And how do we even know which people's money actually got through?

Mr. Speaker, you can see the incongruity with the NDP's and their best friend Justin Trudeau's approach. No, this is just complete bollocks, and the NDP-Liberal overlords know it. Perhaps that's why just this afternoon the Prime Minister revoked the implementation of the emergencies measures act, which I'm sure Canadians are elated to hear, but it brings up a few very interesting questions. ATB is a provincial Crown corporation owned by the Alberta government and the hard-working taxpayers of Alberta. What steps would have been taken to protect Alberta's bank and their assets from Trudeau's overreach?

Also, recently Chrystia Freeland spoke about cancelling the insurance of those in the freedom convoy. Insurance and vehicle registration, as you know, Mr. Speaker, are provincial jurisdictions, yet I'm hearing from people losing their insurance and registration.

How are we going to protect our provincial jurisdiction in this matter and make sure that those Albertans get back their insurance and registration?

The emergencies measures act retroactively determined that these protesters were illegal and that anyone who had donated to the cause was committing an illegal act. Think about that, Mr. Speaker. The law was implemented before it was passed. What happened to due process? It allows for the punishment of individuals who decided to donate small amounts to a cause that was not initially illegal. The peaceful protesters have left on their own accord, and those who are left have been cleared from Ottawa, the Ambassador Bridge, and Coutts.

Mr. Speaker, I will be voting in favour of Motion 10, and I think that it is the duty of all elected representatives in this House to stand up to protect the rights of peaceful protest and to send a strong message to the Prime Minister and to everyone that we will not allow Albertans' freedoms and liberties to be eroded ever again.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Taber-Warner has timed his remarks very appropriately because the time is now 6 o'clock, and that means that the House stands adjourned until this evening at 7:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening, hon. members. Please be seated.

Government Motions

Emergencies Act

10. Mr. Kenney moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly
- (a) condemn the unnecessary invocation of the Emergencies Act by the government of Canada as the Assembly is of the view that this is a measure which infringes upon the constitutionally guaranteed rights of Albertans and all Canadians, including the right to due process and natural justice;
 - (b) is of the view that the government of Canada has failed to demonstrate that the present circumstances meet the threshold that the law requires to invoke the Emergencies Act and that, as demonstrated in Alberta, governments and law enforcement agencies already have adequate authority and resources to end illegal blockades and restore order; and
 - (c) is further of the view that this invocation of the Emergencies Act constitutes an unnecessary intrusion into provincial jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada.

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. The hon. Member for Peace River is the first to catch my eye.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I'm very glad to rise on Government Motion 10 tonight. It's an interesting circumstance we find ourselves in. This morning the government of Alberta had written a motion we planned to debate. By this afternoon the federal government had decided to reverse course on the implementation of the Emergencies Act.

Now, I wanted to talk a bit, before we get into the content of my concern, about national institutions. Institutions have many rules, and they take many different forms. But two important criteria that I believe institutions must have, whether it be the family as the foundational building block of our society, as the most fundamental institution, or about Parliament itself and cabinet and the Constitution which we have inherited from tradition that came before: every single institution needs to have wherewithal, needs to have some ability to exist beyond the manifestation of one individual or one time in one place that exists over time, continuing to keep a culture and a sense and a purpose and, secondly, institutions must be formative. These institutions must be able to have people and society and groups enter one way and come out another.

That's why families are the most fundamental institutions. Children go in blind and ignorant to the world outside of them; they come out, hopefully, mature, responsible children, graduating from their home, out of their parents', to raise their own families. We respect the institution of the military for a reason. These impressionable young men and women go in; they come out with a set of virtue and discipline, able to accomplish something greater than they did before. Our schools are institutions that do this.

Well, it's also true of our national political institutions, our constitutional institutions, that they have existence over time. Whether or not one Prime Minister does something one day or another, the institution needs to still last past an individual, past an individual government, and it needs to be formative.

My concern right now, Madam Deputy Speaker, is that the institutions that we've inherited are being eroded by the current federal government, and that's no small matter. These institutions are the institutions that fundamentally, when all is said and done, guarantee civil liberties, guarantee the ability to have solidarity as a collective society to accomplish something greater than we could as individuals. It's these institutions that protect us from the tyranny of a majority or tyranny of a dictator, tyranny of any kind, being imposed upon us. These institutions are foundational and fundamental to who we are as Canadians.

Our institutions are not American institutions; they're Canadian. They're decidedly, distinctively, uniquely, descriptively Canadian. My fear is that what is happening right now, what we saw today from the start to the end, is a grave blow to the institution of the rule of law, a grave blow to the credibility of the institution of the government, the executive itself, and to the legitimacy of Parliament. Now let me explain, Madam Deputy Speaker, why I think it's so concerning.

The Emergencies Act is, by definition, not meant to be used in normal times. It must be extraordinary measures. If normal means could deal with it, it must, as the Premier pointed out in his opening speech this afternoon, and should be dealt with with the laws that we have on hand. It's interesting to note that in Alberta the illegal activity going on at the Coutts border crossing was dealt with within the law, without needing to go into what used to be the War Measures Act, now in its manifestation the Emergencies Act. It must be reserved for extraordinary circumstances. If ordinary circumstances could deal with it, they ought to. The truth is, Madam Deputy Speaker, that they did and could in Alberta and in B.C. and in Ontario. I have no idea why the federal government and cabinet believed it was necessary to implement the Emergencies Act. I think they did not meet that standard.

But that's not what I'm focusing on tonight. What I want to focus on tonight is the fact that they went through this, and within the seven days legally required, according to the act they must vote on it within Parliament. Parliament, Madam Deputy Speaker, as everyone knows here as a member of the Legislature, is given the authority of the sovereign, represented by our mace, just like the mace in Ottawa, to govern. That mace used to be a weapon. It has the authority of the monopoly of violence. Folks don't pay their taxes? Folks don't follow the rules? Folks want to break the law? We will use that authority to maintain civil order, to maintain ordered liberty in our society. Now, if we abuse the power that we get from our sovereign, Her Majesty the Queen, and her vice-regal, our Lieutenant Governor, as we saw here just yesterday, or the Governor General in Ottawa, then that severely damages the credibility of this as a body.

Let's be clear. What the federal government did, under Justin Trudeau, is implement an extraordinary, unprecedented implementation of an act reserved for situations of terrorist attacks, wars, other dramatic situations because there was a political group protesting against his preferred political direction; froze bank accounts of hundreds, it seems, average citizens who politically opposed; and then decided without allowing the vote to continue through Parliament. Parliament is not just the House of Commons, as you know; it's a bicameral system in Ottawa. The commons themselves voted; the Senate had not.

Before that vote could happen to ratify the use of these extraordinary measures, taking away civil liberties, taking away the right to have property – Madam Deputy Speaker, the right to have property is fundamental to the right to have a conscience, to the right to have a personal life, the separation between public and private, for families to organize, civil society to be able to move forward. The right to have property is instrumental to the right to be able to protest. If protesters are allowed to gather but are not allowed to control their own bank accounts, not allowed to control their own vehicles, then that's not much of a political protest. It's a pyrrhic protest. It's not real in a meaningful sense in terms of opposition to a government.

Inherent in our system is to be able to oppose a government. I just visited a protest yesterday, Madam Deputy Speaker, here in front of our Legislature Building. I was very glad that our government has done nothing so draconian, dramatic, and tyrannical in its nature as to limit their ability to protest by taking away their own private property, their means of being able to achieve that end and make that voice heard. Now we're in a spot where the federal government has implemented, done its deed, and not allowed the voice of the people, the ultimate sovereign authority, the authority that grants cabinet its own authority, the Parliament, to speak on it.

Now, I do not know the answer to the question I'm about to ask, but I wonder if it was true that the Senate was going to vote against Justin Trudeau's, you know, radical implementation of this act. If that is the case, it makes this all the more nefarious, Madam Deputy Speaker. The fact that the government of Canada, the executive that is meant to be there to serve the people, circumvented Parliament in the most extraordinary use of government powers that the government of Canada has used in decades, probably since Trudeau Sr. implemented the War Measures Act in the FLQ crisis – I think it is absolutely concerning, no matter what your political affiliation, that this happened.

I know that members opposite are highly politically motivated when it comes to issues that we would differ on. If the shoe was on the other foot, would they be rising making speeches? I should hope so, but I would as well. I would be there with them saying that the government of Canada under a Conservative government, hypothetically, that would implement the Emergencies Act without a ratification after they had done the work of clearing any kind of protest, without allowing Parliament to have voted to support it – no matter who the group is, that is fundamental to who we are as a society.

I understand, just as I know any rational Canadian would, that if it can be done to me or can be done to you, it can be done to them as well. What would be the categorical difference if there were a radical environmentalist group blocking a pipeline? There needs to be consistent application of the rule of law. That is inherent in the rule of law, predictability, as a criterion for the rule of law to work.

This is why I opened my speech talking about national institutions, because they are increasingly broken. They're broken because the west feels left out; equalization doesn't seem fair. They're broken because we see situations like this, where the credibility of the media has gone out the window for many people sitting on the right side of the aisle, where the credibility of Trudeau and his cabinet has been lost. But now increasingly there's a concern that Parliament itself, the body meant to be the representative of the people and to hold the cabinet accountable, is no longer able to do its job. That fundamentally, Madam Deputy Speaker, is striking at the heart of who we are as a democracy. Those individuals who sit around the cabinet table in Ottawa, who are members of Trudeau's cabinet, ought to be terrified of what they bring.

I think, in my closing comment, of one of my favourite pieces of media. I think it was a 1966 film, A Man for All Seasons, where the chancellor of England, Sir Thomas More, found himself in an awkward position with his liege lord, King Henry VIII. Everyone knows the history of King Henry VIII. There's an important moment articulated by Thomas More, where he would give the devil the protection of law, arguing against his new-found son-in-law. The reason he would give the devil the protection of the rule of law is because once you've gone and cut down every tree in the land and every law – not God's law; man's law – then where will you have to hide when the winds of the devil and evil blow against you? You've cut down all the trees. It's a plain. It just comes right back at you.

The law is there for the protection of everyone, man's law that we implement here, that the Constitution guarantees. The consistency of the rule of law is inherent in allowing any function of the law to work. If it seemed to be inconsistent in the most dramatic and necessary of times, it will not have credibility in the smallest of times either. This collapse and trust in the rule of law, that we've seen throughout this COVID pandemic, has maybe climaxed for many Canadians and Albertans in this moment, where we see Justin Trudeau's cabinet taking the rule of law and fiddling with it, toying with it, twisting it into contortions to fit his political purpose and ends.

That, Madam Deputy Speaker, is why we must guarantee the rule of law, why we must all stand regardless of political affiliation or how much you sympathize or don't with the truckers or any protest. If we give this up – this – it's all for naught. It serves no end and serves no purpose. It doesn't have any purpose at all if we do not agree that there is consistency in that application. What Justin Trudeau has done by circumventing the ability for the Senate, the full Parliament to vote on the Emergencies Act and its implementation for a so-called national crisis is shameful. More than shameful; it's scary.

Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Government Motion 10. I considered asking for an emergency debate on this issue but wanted to make sure there would be some action that came as a result of our debate here. With emergency debate there isn't any motion or any action that comes of it.

That's why we announced by press release that I'd be bringing forward a motion in the Assembly at the earliest opportunity, which is today. Interestingly enough, the Premier, three hours later, tweeted out that he would also be bringing forward a motion in the Legislature regarding this issue. Then we sent a letter to the Premier on February 18 regarding a number of issues with the Emergencies Act, including it violating the rights of Alberta jurisdiction and suggesting that the Alberta government take specific actions to protect Albertans' rights. The following day, on February 19, the Premier, again by tweet, shared a video where he mentions provincial jurisdiction. Now, I truly appreciate the Premier following our lead on this issue, though Albertans may be more impressed if he communicated to them on a platform other than Twitter. Regardless, the most important thing is that we are here today discussing this important issue.

I want to point out that I was the only MLA in this House to travel with the convoy to Ottawa and spend two days on Parliament Hill at the rally. I did that to see first-hand what was happening there and so I could talk to people and get a feeling and understanding of how they felt and what they were asking for. I was sure glad I did. On the way there my wife described the trip as a 14-hour-a-day parade, where people lined the streets, people came out on the highways to wave their flags and cheer on the convoy as it went by. There was so much joy. There was so much pride. There was so much patriotism.

Now, what happened is that after two days on Parliament Hill at the rally I sat in a home in Ontario listening to the news. I didn't recognize what I'd seen on TV. I thought maybe it was at a different rally. I thought maybe there was something else going on. The Prime Minister's comments that day were filled with hate. He name-called. He made horrific accusations. A man that can't remember how many times he dressed in blackface accused hundreds of thousands of people of being racist. It was deplorable. It was disgusting. At that time the media called me from Alberta here wondering what I'd seen. I guess they didn't like what I said about how the media reported the events because they didn't use any of my quotes in the article the next day. The only hate I saw or heard was from our Prime Minister.

I was there. I never saw the Prime Minister there. I never saw the mayor of Ottawa there. I didn't see the NDP leader there either. I was there. I got to see and feel what was happening on the ground there; they didn't, but they all had an opinion afterwards. That was just horrible to see, what those people said about that event.

So how did we get here? How did we get to this point where we have a Prime Minister invoke the Emergencies Act? All of this was caused by the Prime Minister when he demanded vaccines instead of testing for truckers crossing the border, riding alone in their trucks. There is not a lonelier occupation than a truck driver. This is a Prime Minister that called them heroes in the past. Those were just words full of hypocrisy. The Prime Minister's vaccine mandate was a border blockade by policy. It restricted thousands of truckers from hauling goods across the border. That, by definition, is a blockade. Unvaccinated truckers go from Victoria to St. John's, from Inuvik to Coutts, but for some reason beyond my understanding the piece of highway between Coutts and Sweetgrass and other similar pieces of highway across Canada are a no-go zone unless they are vaccinated. A negative test was not good enough.

There are consequences to policies. We see that here with an emergency order that was brought forward by that Prime Minister. The pains of Canadians were caused by the Prime Minister. His response was to lash out viciously and use the media to try to portray a change of events, events that didn't take place. Now, the problem is that we in Alberta are in no position to resist these draconian measures. We had a Fair Deal Panel report, that's been out for almost two years now. I was there at the Fair Deal Panel meetings. I heard Albertans. I know what the people were saying. But now, after almost three years of this government being in power, nothing.

This Premier has done nothing but talk. We expected from this government a bulldog towards Ottawa, but in fact we got a lapdog. Seizing bank accounts: banks are seeing their accounts drained from lack of trust. That's not good for our economy. We have the Alberta Treasury Branch in Alberta. Why can't we push back on this federal intrusion? But we see nothing from this Premier. I even heard a federal Liberal talking about this on the news the other day, talking about: how do we get tourism back in Canada? Well, I tell you one thing: this doesn't help. This is very hurtful. People around the world are looking at this situation that we're in and they're looking at it with disappointment and dismay. We had the federal NDP leader support this Emergencies Act and then go on to say: oh, except maybe Quebec and then, like, the protesters that I support; we wouldn't want to use that on them. I mean, that's pure hypocrisy.

Now, I know the Premier never asked the Prime Minister to invoke the Emergencies Act, but it appears there's a great comfortableness between the Premier and the Prime Minister.

There is no daylight in between them until Albertans respond. Then he answers with words. No action, just words. His heart is not in it. His heart is on winning the leadership review. That's it. As many of the members of this Assembly are certainly aware, we are dealing with a Prime Minister who is clearly acting in bad faith. The federal government did not need these powers to clear blockades or break up rallies. They're using these powers to seize bank accounts, confiscate property, and punish Canadian citizens who do not break a single Canadian law other than to have a different ideology than the Prime Minister. They are doing all of this without due process.

It also appears that the government is using the sweeping powers it has granted itself to retroactively search out justification for invoking these powers in the first place. Justin Trudeau was searching Canadians' private financial records, desperately trying to justify his arrogant and authoritarian overreach. This is not acceptable. The blockades are gone and the rallies have ended, yet police and government officials continue to threaten Canadians who choose to exercise their constitutionally protected right to support and take part in peaceful protests. Obviously, this is about ideology and crushing ideology that doesn't align with the Prime Minister's.

Using the Emergencies Act is an affront to the Constitution of Canada, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Without the rights and freedoms delineated in the Charter, things like freedom of expression, freedom of association, and freedom of religion, Canada ceases to be Canada. By invoking far-reaching emergency powers, the Prime Minister has proven himself to be everything that the freedom convoy participants travelled thousands of kilometres to protest against. The question before this Assembly is: what are we going to do about it? We need to denounce Justin Trudeau's authoritarian imposition of the Emergencies Act and call for it to never happen again. The Government House Leader has offered up a motion on this matter, one that we're discussing right now, that denounces Trudeau's use of the Emergencies Act.

Let me be clear. Denouncing it is not enough; we must act. Albertans are sick and tired of this Premier's elbow-bump diplomacy with Trudeau. This is a time for taking real action to defend Albertans. Unfortunately, from the beginning this government has failed to grasp the urgency of the situation. The fact that the government put the throne speech ahead of passing this motion is evidence of how seriously they're taking this situation.

The government has indicated it will begin a legal challenge against the imposition of the Emergencies Act. The hypocrisy of this government, under the leadership of this Premier, officially requesting help from Justin Trudeau in ways that the Emergencies Act would facilitate and then suing the federal government for passing legislation to facilitate that help: it is an astounding display of hypocrisy. That has made the Premier the laughingstock of the Canadian Parliament. Again, the Premier didn't ask for the Emergencies Act, but he sure seems to be willing to use it when it suits him.

We have asked for debates in this House regarding the emergency powers that the Premier invoked under the Public Health Act. This Premier has invoked vaccine mandates that have caused job losses, livelihoods to be lost, and now this Premier has the audacity to speak against the Prime Minister's mandates in this Emergencies Act. There have been rallies across Alberta against the Premier's mandates also. At least the feds had a chance to vote on it. We never had that chance in this House. It appears that the Prime Minister believes in democracy more than the Premier does. I agree that this is necessary, but it won't help the lives and livelihoods of Albertans who are having their assets frozen and property seized now, in real time.

The government must immediately take steps to protect and defend Albertans from the long arm of Trudeau's authoritarian government. The government of Alberta can and must exercise its jurisdiction in several key areas. First, ATB Financial is a Crown corporation wholly owned by the province. Steps must be taken to prevent seizure of account holders' assets. Secondly, the province regulates vehicle registration and insurance. Steps must be taken to prevent the cancellation of registration and insurance of Albertan vehicles. Thirdly, the province has a duty to defend Albertans' property rights. Any attempt by the federal government to continue to seize or conscript Albertans' property must be opposed and prevented.

Of course, I'm open to any and all other potential ideas for protecting Albertans. However, simply denouncing the federal government while taking no action to defend Albertans is not acceptable. This is the coward's way out.

Thank you.

Ms Phillips: Both overpolicing and underpolicing are lethal to our civil liberties. I may be alone in this House and maybe even in terms of parliamentarians in terms of the depth and breadth of the extent to which I have been a target and a victim of overbroad police powers and abuse of authority. I certainly have felt alone often.

This has been recognized by both parties, on both sides of the House, the Premier, and the Attorney General. As someone who has been surreptitiously photographed, unlawfully surveilled, all by in-uniform officers – those are agreed-to facts – as someone who has had officers make memes of me on work time and with work resources that have been described to media as toxic, humiliating, and offensive, as someone who has had their records unlawfully accessed by police, all at the hands of the Lethbridge Police Service, all to do with my political affiliation and daring to exercise my basic democratic rights under section 3 of the Charter, I cling tightly to my civil liberties. I am fundamentally, ca-te-flippin'-gorically uninterested in broadening state powers over the individual any more than absolutely necessary.

I have always held a more civil libertarian view in terms of the social democratic family, but my view of state authority has only been cemented by my own experience of years of documented intimidation – attempted intimidation: they did not succeed, Madam Speaker – and harassment by armed agents of the Crown. In fact, the first lines of my last appeal submission to the Law Enforcement Review Board quotes the R. v. Mann 2004 Supreme Court decision:

Absent a law to the contrary, individuals are free to do as they please. By contrast, the police (and more broadly, the state) may act only to the extent that they are empowered to do so by law. The vibrancy of a democracy is apparent by how wisely it navigates through those critical junctures where state action intersects with, and threatens to impinge upon, individual liberties.

By February 1 we were at such a critical juncture that the Supreme Court wrote about in that decision.

On the weekend of January 28 to 30 southern Albertans were no longer able to exercise their right to peaceful enjoyment of property. They were no longer able to engage in trade and commerce; $44 million a day was being stolen from them by the blockade at Coutts. The week of February 1 I received e-mails from families close to the blockades in southern Alberta. I will not give any more identifying details than that because people are terrified. Their e-mails said that their kids weren't going to school, that their groceries were not being bought, that folks were not going to work.

Southern Alberta farmers texted me concerned about the underpolicing happening at the border. Nothing was being done, nothing at all.

Economic Development Lethbridge spoke out publicly during that first week, indicating that shifts were beginning to be cancelled at the plants of some of their members. Product from manufacturers in the Lethbridge industrial park was piling up as trucks could not be booked. On the Sunday a UCP MLA visited the blockade. On the Monday we should have had a clear indication, two or three days into this thing, from the province about what they were doing to clear the blockade. Twenty-four hours of closure of an international boundary should have been enough. It was a clear matter of national security by this point, and that should have been enough for a former Minister of National Defence, who is the Premier, to take that oath for public order seriously. By midday on the first Monday of the blockade the province ought to have been in front of a judge seeking an injunction. Later that day we should have had a Premier who treated this crisis as the national security risk that it is and an indication of any localized state of emergency powers that cabinet could invoke.

There should have been an indication of any ministerial orders on commercial or farm vehicle licensing that were imminent, any potential orders in council that cabinet was considering with respect to commercial or farm vehicle insurance policies, and even any statutory measures that they were examining. There should have been resolute leadership at the helm. There should have been a willingness to recall the Legislature early if statutory changes to licensing or insurance were required. There should have been a clear indication that the province was examining civil liability for the operators of the large equipment that was being used for the blockade and causing millions of dollars of harm at the border.

All of this should have been communicated swiftly: break the law, and there will be consequences. It's not difficult. Certainly, anyone using civil disobedience for the aims of social change understands this chain of consequences and are prepared for it, and that should have been day 1 of the occupation of Coutts. That's what it should have looked like, but the consequences never came. There were no consequences on day 2. There were no consequences on day 3. There was no indication that there was a plan, but there was UCP action. Let me explain.

After day 1 of the occupation, after the war memorial was urinated on, after the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier was danced on, after a homeless person was beat up, after a shelter was threatened for not giving the occupiers food, after residents were subjected to their first 24 hours of three weeks of street harassment and sonic torture, after all of the flags and the conspiracy theories about globalism, after all of that, there was UCP action. One of them went to Coutts and supported the occupation of Ottawa. They made excuses. They cherry-picked from the Charter, and they did not care about any of the harm they caused.

Instead, it was as if the terrorized people of Coutts and Milk River did not even exist. It was as if the $44 million, the day of economic theft by the blockade, did not exist. It was as if the cattle producers awaiting live cattle imports or those waiting to ship boxed beef south did not exist. It was as if the manufacturers who couldn't book trucks or had to cancel shipping contracts out of the U.S. ports did not exist. It was as if this was simply a minor skirmish, a disagreement over a few parking spots, not a massive national security crisis. Can you imagine, my fellow Albertans, what would have happened if a border blockade had occurred in the aftermath of 9/11?

They blockaded a border not for an hour, not for a day. Instead, it was left to build, to fester, to grow into, as the Hip once sang, Gord Downie of the Tragically Hip, "something we could no longer contain.” Given that this was a Canada-wide crisis, Madam Speaker, I’ll lean in on one of our best poets for some inspiration here. After a few days it became clear that the border blockades were not going anywhere and that the poor behaviour was just getting worse. This was the time when grown adults should have said to themselves, to quote Gord Downie from the same song again: this is horrific; I’m embarrassed; I don’t endorse that; I don’t want this.

They did nothing of the sort. They shamelessly followed lawlessness, encouraged it, feted it, held it up as an expression of our values when it is the opposite. The blockade then spread. The highway was blocked off at the Nobleford roundabout. The highway was blocked south of Fort Macleod, the road onto the Blood reserve, with two school buses of children waiting in the February cold. For what? The overthrow of the government? The Governor General to get back to people on their e-mails? It is here where we pause on the stated objective of the blockades because their stated motivations have been flattened and ironed out of the narrative given as they are quite unsavoury.

The blockade organizers are calling, in the first instance, for interference in the decisions of private companies to mandate that private capital capitulate to their interpretation of occupational health and safety and an end to vaccine requirements for business. The blockade organizers are calling for removal of vaccine requirements in municipal facilities. Finally, perhaps parenthetically, they are calling on the Canadian government to unilaterally renege on a cross-border agreement with the Biden administration.

The blockade organizers, in their manifesto, also are calling for the removal of the currently constituted House of Commons, the suspension of its authority to pass, amend, and review legislation, and the replacement of our elected Members of Parliament with a committee of self-selected Facebook uncles. These were the stated terms of negotiation. Somewhat parenthetically as well, the organizers at Coutts threw in some demands of the provincial government. By the end of the first week they had achieved those goals because the Premier capitulated, a hostage at his own cabinet table. But it didn’t matter because it wasn’t ever really about the vaccines, was it? The Coutts occupation remained.

The blockade organizers do not take any responsibility for the economic harm they have caused. None at all. I listened to the main Coutts organizer in a radio interview. He did not express any sympathy for the almost billion dollars of economic damage or the fear experienced by the residents of southern Alberta, those parents who have worked hard to keep it all together during the pandemic, who have behaved responsibly, got vaccinated, and resisted the urge to fall down an antiscience, antivaccine disinformation rabbit hole.

All of this was greeted by capitulation from our Premier. He removed the vaccine requirements for restaurants and other public spaces at midnight. Was it the right decision? It could have been, but we don’t know. They have not released any evidence that it was the correct decision. I would be happy to see the evidence, but it disappeared like Cinderella at midnight due to the wish casting of a fairy tale that antivaccine, antigovernment insurrectionists can be appeased in this matter. They cannot. They were not. The blockade continued.

It is about this time, it appears, that far-right extremists began running stockpiles of weapons to the border. It’s not entirely possible for this to have happened on day one if the organizers are to be believed that they had no knowledge of this new group’s plans. The guns came primarily from two people in Lethbridge, and their stated purpose was to kill police officers, officers who would have been empowered to clear out the blockade on day one had the province shown some leadership. The guns came from Lethbridge, from behind doors that I could easily have knocked on. They came from people with very dangerous ties to the far right, the Diagonal movement, a white supremacist accelerationist movement. We know about these ties from the Canadian Anti-Hate Network. The guns came from doors that my canvassers could have easily knocked on. They came from radicalized people who live next door.

Now, I pause for a moment to take on a spurious line of reasoning that I have heard the Premier indulge in, that he cannot direct police. Okay. We understand that: not directly. Executive Council cannot ask law enforcement to target an individual or even a group. Executive Council can talk to a police chief about public safety and does. Executive Council can talk to them about resources. They can’t ask them to do one specific thing, like interfere in one person’s proceedings, but Executive Council is well within its rights to ask questions of or give direction to and solicit advice from police services. There are informal discussions for this and formal consultation forums. More formally, cabinet can direct policing standards. That’s in the Police Act.

Here’s a quote from Bill Sweeney, the director of law enforcement, on Tuesday, April 6, 2021, on the topic of directing police services. “We’ve had many conversations with the chiefs and authorized employers where we were encouraging a measured approach to enforcement.” He’s talking here about public health orders. “Given that the pandemic is a rather unique situation for all of us . . . the intent was to inform, to educate, to warn, and, only as a last resort, to charge. That was an approach we encouraged . . .” That’s a quote.

Now, as I have demonstrated, the provincial government did not undertake any of its options, not one. Not an injunction. Not the many administrative penalties that could have been levied. No additional resources were sent to the border. In other words, we live in a province that actively abdicated its responsibilities and vacated its own jurisdiction over public order.

We come to the Emergencies Act. After the Coutts insurrectionists were left to set up shop and their rot was allowed to spread, it is quite possible that intelligence agencies had information that other cells were doing the same. It was not at all clear that anything was going to happen in Manitoba at Emerson or even at the Ambassador Bridge. Conservative provincial governments were dithering there, too.

In all those instances you had provinces who either did not want to or could not or felt they would not appropriately enforce the Traffic Safety Act, and the federal government had its own jurisdictional responsibility for trade and commerce, border security, not to mention firearms, intelligence services, and counterterrorism to uphold. I, too, was extremely concerned – I am still – about the Emergencies Act until I read the perspective of Perrin Beatty, one of the Conservative framers of the act, and Ed Broadbent, the NDP opposition leader at the time, who voted against the War Measures Act but whose caucus brought in dozens of thoughtful amendments to the Emergencies Act in the 1980s in order to ensure that it does not inappropriately infringe on our fundamental freedoms.

Now, I share the Premier’s reticence on section 8. I share his reticence on section 7. I have had those rights infringed upon, Madam Speaker, and I do not want to live in a country where that is the norm.

I wholly support any of the occupiers charged under the Emergencies Act to vociferously defend their Charter rights, too. But this was less about the Emergencies Act and our Charter rights and more about jurisdiction. In the end, it was the requirement for better integration of the Ambassador Bridge, a more coherent antiterrorism approach, and the clearing of the sonic torture and systemic harassment of the residents of Ottawa that were the impetus for this act.

There was the problem of FINTRAC not capturing crypto and crowdfunding technology, an oversight that I believe Conservatives would enthusiastically support redress for if it concerned jihadi terrorist threats but evidently not if it concerns those who would shut down our economy, a strange double standard for them to indulge. Regardless, it is appropriate for FINTRAC to be able to capture those cross-border transactions and those new technologies, and it is doubly appropriate when there is evidence of cross-border flows of money to finance the blockading of our borders and to shut down and paralyze our capital city.

Even those actions, though, should be challenged and reviewed, and I am pleased that Parliament will be doing so. I actually don't mind the Premier's desire for a legal review to best flesh out how his inaction led to the Emergencies Act. I would welcome an inquiry by a judge to examine all of the evidence and why this province did not uphold its constitutional responsibilities to provide local policing and take all available public safety measures in order to ensure peace, order, and good government.

I welcome an articulation of part 1 in this context. What are the reasonable limits to federal powers when provinces simply refuse to govern because they are in the midst of a political crisis that they believe forces them to capitulate to an armed minority of people?

I conclude my comments with some thoughts on the future of liberal democracy, and I am not particularly hopeful, in particular because I am seeing Conservatives falling into two camps. [Ms Phillips' speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Apologies, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to speak in favour of Motion 10, which reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) condemn the unnecessary invocation of the Emergencies Act by the government of Canada as the Assembly is of the view that this is a measure which infringes upon the constitutionally guaranteed rights of Albertans and all Canadians, including the right to due process and natural justice;
- (b) is of the view that the government of Canada has failed to demonstrate that the present circumstances meet the threshold that the law requires to invoke the Emergencies Act and that, as demonstrated in Alberta, governments and law enforcement agencies already have adequate authority and resources to end illegal blockades and restore order; and
- (c) is further of the view that this invocation of the Emergencies Act constitutes an unnecessary intrusion into provincial jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada.

Madam Speaker, the right to protest is a fundamental freedom in any democracy. It is what sets us apart from the dictatorships of the world. Three weeks ago many Canadians decided to take a stand against vaccine mandates and other measures they feel violate their freedoms. Everyone is entitled to their beliefs, and whether or not we agree with the position, it is that person's right to peacefully protest, and this right must be upheld.

These protests took place at many different locations in the country. It caused a shutdown of roads in Ottawa's downtown core and allowed blockades at vital border crossings such as the Ambassador Bridge from Windsor to Detroit and the Coutts border crossing here in Alberta. Let me be clear that we do not support the blockage of vital transportation and infrastructure. In fact, our government passed Bill 1, the Critical Infrastructure Defence Act, in order to make blockades illegal if they can cause significant public safety, socioeconomic, or environmental consequences.

We all know that the Prime Minister has shown a willingness time and time again to meet with many controversial people of his liking – and this includes the likes of Joshua Boyle – yet he is unwilling to hear and meet with Canadians who hold different viewpoints, just like his refusal to meet with the truckers. Instead, he went hiding for days.

Madam Speaker, when the Prime Minister finally did emerge, he decided that it was necessary to invoke the Emergencies Act, for the first time in Canadian history, to deal with the protesters. It does not matter that the Prime Minister has revoked the Emergencies Act this afternoon; he should have never invoked it to begin with. For the most part these protesters were peaceful and were only taking advantage of their right to protest government actions that they did not agree with.

The police have always had the tools to deal with the unlawful protesters and are responsible for their own operational decisions. We have demonstrated in Alberta that we have provincial law enforcement agencies which are able to deal with these illegal blockades without extraordinary federal powers to seize assets. The Emergencies Act added no relevant additional powers or resources to deal with these blockades. In fact, Madam Speaker, the protests had been cleared from Coutts and the Ambassador Bridge in Ottawa. Instead, the Emergencies Act was a heavy-handed approach aimed at punishing the protesters.

The original intent of the Emergencies Act was to give the federal government additional resources to deal with dire national emergencies. This could be instances of war or domestic terrorism. Madam Speaker, I think we all can agree that these protests did not represent the original intent of the act against threats to our country. Using this act to deal with the most peaceful protesters was a heavy-handed overreach which was no longer needed since the blockades had been cleared.

For all these reasons, the Prime Minister was forced to change course due to the outcry of many Canadians who were opposed to the act. For these reasons, I'm willing to vote in favour of the motion to condemn the unnecessary invocation of the Emergencies Act by the government of Canada and encourage all members of this House to do so. Let's stand up and support Canadians' right to a peaceful protest.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. This is a government that claims to care about the economy, that claims it understands rural Alberta, that it understands agriculture and how we get food from our farmers to our kitchen tables, yet when the people of rural Alberta needed the Premier to lead, he hid in the United States while his Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Economic Development was silent. The Premier sat on his hands for more than two weeks while the Coutts border crossing, Alberta's only 24-hour border crossing and the only Alberta crossing that allows live animals to pass through, was blocked. Albertans know how damaging this was for Alberta's economy. The UCP know how damaging it was to the economy. The ministers knew exactly how damaging it was going to be to our economy, yet they did nothing.

The UCP, this government, made a choice to choose the party voting base over the livelihoods of farmers and our agricultural producers. This government's divisive politics are hurting our rural communities. The government is asking for leadership from the federal government, yet they've shown none themselves.

The fact that I'm standing here talking about the Emergencies Act, when the federal government today announced that it would no longer be used, is clearly a demonstration of this UCP's political stunts. We shouldn't be doing this, but some people in this province need to have a voice because clearly the government is not listening. They're not listening to the people who don't agree with them. They're cheerleading for certain people within a small minority group and ignoring the rest of what Albertans are saying.

For the beef producers who couldn't get their livestock to market or who couldn't get their feed from the United States and for many of our other producers who couldn't export their products, this government was silent. Now the government plays games instead of offering real support. I'm not surprised. They have ignored our agricultural sector during the pandemic, and they ignored them during the drought. They ignore agriculture all along.

This government claims to care about the economy. Well, here's the number that I care about: $864 million. I'll say it again; $864 million is what our economy has lost because of the Coutts border blockade, the illegal blockade that this government chose to do nothing about. This blockade hurt all of our economic sectors in Alberta, but it hit agriculture the hardest. Delays at the border meant cattle had to wait to be transported. JBS and Cargill, which process two-thirds of the nation's beef, cut their shifts, delayed shipments, and delayed purchasing.

This government should stop cheering on those who illegally blocked our trade corridors. They should actually just stand in this House and apologize to Albertans and then pledge to do better. It's time for real leadership. This is a time for this government to start unifying Alberta instead of picking a select few, picking the special interests of a small group and putting it over the best interests of all Albertans. Hope comes from the top, Madam Speaker. For the people of this province to have hope, they have to see it in their leadership. That starts with this Premier. We are at a time that will be reflected on as a very historical moment for Alberta and for Canada, a moment that can lead to the unity of a province or a nation or a moment that will be used to further divide us. The most important part of democracy is the value of public trust, to know that those who are responsible for being the leaders are actually going to lead, that they're going to lead with honesty and with good intent.

Clearly, our democracy is at risk. We know that Albertans are exhausted by the emotions of COVID, by the uncertainty of the future and the economic impact that it's had on all Alberta families. That exhaustion brings fear for the future, a feeling of constant uncertainty, creating a desire for people to gain back some sort of control of what is happening in their lives. Honestly, I can say that I believe that for those who attended the rallies, even outside the Legislature recently, that's what they're trying to express, trying to get some control back into their lives. However, the 18 days at Coutts was not a rally; it was an illegal blockade that furthered the uncertainty for all Alberta families, that furthered the economic impact that families are already facing and created more uncertainty than it did bringing us together.

For Albertans to feel they have some control in their lives, this government needs to step up, address the fear that Albertans are facing, lead, and start giving them some more certainty in their lives, something that they continuously, continuously fail to do. It's time for the government to reconsider the direction that they're taking. It's time to return to the basic ideas of our democracy, bring faith back into our democratic process. I honestly could care less about the UCP leadership review. I don't care about the Premier's fight to save his job because the reality is that he made the mess. But what I do have an issue with is the fact that he thinks that Albertans now have to clean it up for him because he refuses to do it for himself.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Madam Speaker. For many years Canadians, including myself, have been proud to call themselves one of the greatest democracies of the world. Under this current federal government that seems to be changing very quickly. Since coming to power, the federal government and the Prime Minister have done nothing but cause division within our country.

The most recent example of this is the invocation of the Emergencies Act. Thankfully, the public's outcry has forced their hand to revoke this ridiculous, power trip fuelled move. When the federal government invoked this act, it showed their incompetence by failing to listen to people's concerns and using force to get their way. What's more, they thought that depriving Canadians of expressing their constitutional freedom of free speech would go unnoticed. This is not the only instance of division and chaos we have seen under this current Prime Minister.

Since 2015 all their government has done is overspend on programs that are focused on advancing their ideological agenda. This overspending goes back to pre-COVID times. We all remember: the budget will balance itself. Obviously, that still appears to be the theme of this current government. Their 2019-2020 spending was $24 billion higher than the original plan. They used COVID as a way to throw Canadians $314 billion further into debt. Among a myriad of fiscal issues, the overspending and overborrowing by the current Prime Minister means that hard-working Canadians now have to pay the consequence in the form of increasing interest rates. While many may not realize it, such poor economic policies cause a great divide among Canadians, this with the threat of higher costs in our economy looming.

The Prime Minister's sleight of hand does not end there. The current federal government is obsessed with control to the point that Canada is beginning to look more like a dictatorship. For example, Canada already has stringent gun control laws. Still, the Prime Minister decided to take things one step further and push his party's agenda to tighten that gun control, practically moving toward banning them altogether. Current advertising that we witness on media and social media continues to spew the rhetoric that we've mentioned many times in this Assembly.

As bad as his evident thirst for control has been for Canadians, it is nothing compared to the horrible cover-ups and ethics violations that have been used strategically to distract the public from what is really going on in Ottawa. The Prime Minister and his loyalists are so obsessed with control that they have now decided that they need to control the Internet. Under the guise of protecting consumers, they passed Bill C-10, giving his regime the power to regulate any content posted online. Of course, we would expect this behaviour from dictatorships, not here in Canada. This bill is so incredibly controlling that even Google's president and chief legal officer for global affairs voiced his concerns and cautioned about how this could impair people's online experiences. As Canadians began to speak up against Internet control, the federal government distracted the public by making headlines as they promised $400 million for four years to make CBC less reliant on advertising.

Since assuming office, our current Prime Minister has been charged with three ethics violations. Many will recall that in 2019 he received a $500 fine for exerting influence over the former Attorney General in a matter relating to criminal prosecution. This small fine may lead some to believe that the issue was not a huge matter of concern. However, it is essential to note that $500 is the maximum monetary penalty for public officials guilty of violating the Conflict of Interest Act. Can you imagine the uproar his party would have made had another person committed an ethics violation of such a degree?

What is worse is that he didn't learn from his mistake when he violated the Conflict of Interest Act when he vacationed on a private island owned by the Aga Khan, again to a penalty of $500, the maximum. What I've mentioned today are the actions of a person who does not think of anyone but himself and will do everything in his power to distract people from his constant attempts to sow division among Canadians.

By invoking and revoking the Emergencies Act, they've failed to respond to the people's concerns. The tyranny and lack of accountability are the concerns that need to be addressed. I condemn what is happening in Ottawa under this current regime, and I will continue to ask people from coast to coast in our great country to hold them accountable for everything, including their intrusion into this recent provincial jurisdiction.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and join the debate tonight on Government Motion 10. As we all know, this is just more political theatre from this government and the Emergencies Act itself has been revoked by the federal government, but tonight's debate still allows us to talk about the failures of this government to stand up for southern Albertans, the trucking industry, and the working Albertans they effectively abandoned. Like my colleague from Calgary-Bhullar-McCall, I'm disappointed that this is where we find ourselves as a province over the past few weeks.

As the Official Opposition critic for Transportation I am and remain profoundly disappointed by the actions of this provincial government during these illegal blockades. Watching members of the UCP caucus going forth to join the protest, to celebrate with them, to praise those who were breaking the law and hurting Albertans was unthinkable. Watching as well this government that flatly refused to take action and do the simple things that would have supported the truckers and working people who were just trying to do their jobs and who got caught up in these convoys – some were stranded for days with no food, no water, no access to washrooms or medicine. I heard about shipments that were lost, spoiled, and some had to be thrown away. Businesses lost revenue. Workers lost employment. These workers lost money, lost employment, saw delays, and dealt with more than I could possibly list here today.

But the people in the trucking industry that I've spoken to are upset with the government's lack of response to the crisis that they and their employees faced. I've heard the stories from truckers in the South Asian community who faced instances of racism, disgusting comments from those illegally blockading our border. These are individuals who stood up and worked to keep our supply lines strong during a pandemic. Madam Speaker, they deserved better.

Their government refused to stand up for them because they were too busy standing with those who were illegally blocking our border. The Member for Taber-Warner repeatedly visited these illegal blockades. It wasn't a secret. It wasn't a mistake. It was deliberate, and he bragged about it. He told people holding our border hostage that they had inspired nations. There were individuals who travelled to bring those stranded on the other side of the border food and supplies while the government sat on their hands. They could have revoked the insurance of those who were illegally blockading the border. They could have revoked commercial drivers' licences of those who were openly breaking the law. They could have done this simply. Instead, they did nothing.

They didn't see a need to go to court to request an injunction, as my friend from Calgary-Bhullar-McCall and I urged them to. They equivocated, fudged, and pussyfooted for weeks with the illegal blockaders until the RCMP found a cache of weapons and ammunition and charged 13 people who were part of the blockade group with serious offences. The balance of the blockaders promptly abandoned their blockade, claiming to just then realize that they had been co-opted by bad people with ulterior motives and disavowing any connection with them. They further expressed surprise that the RCMP had allowed the blockade to continue as long as it did.

Now, this government, Madam Speaker, is very low in the polls, with a Premier who is facing a leadership review, who has failed to support Albertans when they needed his support and is now playing political games rather than doing the work to support Albertans. At a time when we need to be bringing Albertans together, the Premier and his MLAs, through their actions and statements, have only divided communities.

Well, Madam Speaker, let's reel this in a little bit. Let's throttle back and really ask ourselves what this is all about. Think of the number 36,000, give or take: 36,000 COVID deaths. During World War I 61,000 Canadian soldiers died in battle. Now 36,000 have died during the pandemic versus 61,000 in World War I; 60 per cent of the number of people who died in World War I in service to Canada died during this pandemic and counting. In World War II 45,400 Canadian soldiers died versus the 36,000 Canadians who have died so far in this pandemic. That's 80 per cent of the number of people who died during World War II in Canada as Canadian soldiers have died as a result of this pandemic.

Let's reel it in, and let's talk about what we're really, fundamentally trying to get our hands around, and that is to prevent further deaths at the hands of this pandemic in this country. We have a duty to do that. Now, people who, indeed, were conscientious objectors in World War I and World War II had certain consequences. There were consequences to their conscientious objection. Indeed, with those who refuse to accept that a society has a right to protect itself from a vicious disease, there are consequences as well for not getting vaccinated. There are mandates, and a society has a right to do that.

Madam Speaker, insofar as this pandemic is concerned in Alberta, there have been over 3,830 people dead and counting. The social responsibility that we seem to be forgetting, this necessity to look out after each other, reminds me of a story I've heard my grandfather tell me about. He was born in Quebec, but his family moved out here in 1911, when he was seven. At the age of 14, on the homestead, he worked out for a number of months in the fall of 1918. On the way home, making his way home after being away for a number of months, a farmer with a wagon pulled by a horse picked him up, and on the way home, a little further, another young fellow was picked up. They didn't talk a whole lot, but close to the farm gate the farmer slowed down. Both the boys got off. My grandfather was a bit perplexed. He hadn't been home in a number of months, and he didn't recognize that it was his younger brother, Phillippe, who was getting off with him because Phillippe was wearing a mask, Madam Speaker.

North of Edmonton about 60 miles, in the village of Thorhild, before cars were running around Alberta, in the horse-and-buggy era, we knew well enough to protect each other with a mask during a pandemic like the Spanish flu in 1918. Albertans are rightly asking: what in the world has gone wrong with us since then? Why can't we, as a matter of social responsibility, realize what they knew in 1918 and accepted without so much as a howdy-do? Why are we railing against vaccine mandates? That is what 90 per cent of Albertans are asking. We have an obligation to protect one another in this war on disease and the public health emergency. My grandfather Napoleon LaBelle is probably rolling in his grave. I'll say that again. Shame on this government.

To conclude, I urge this Premier to take a step back, realize the harm his weak leadership has caused, and apologize to the Albertans he failed to support time and time again and to hearken to the real spirit of Alberta. For over a hundred years Albertans in times of crisis have fully accepted their duty to help one another, whether building a barn, fixing a flooded county road, or wearing a mask to protect each other from a deadly virus like the Spanish flu or now COVID-19. We forget this crucial duty of self-preservation at our peril.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I count it a privilege to be able to rise tonight and to speak to Government Motion 10. We have a long history in Canada of a vibrant and thriving democracy that has grown out of our deep ties and our history with the British Crown. It has endured through war and the strains of economic hardship and the stresses of a growing and diverse multicultural nation. Our democratic institutions have proven to be a wiry, tough, old soldier, stronger and wiser and more adaptable than many of us could have foreseen. Yet democracies can also be fragile.

Our parliamentary democracy is built upon some very important foundation stones that help to keep the ship of state functioning in the interests of its citizens: free and fair elections, representative and responsible government, separation of powers, the rule of law, Charter rights and freedoms, a free press, independent judiciary, trust in our institutions. All and more of these foundation stones combine to ensure that the government is a reflection of the will of the people and that it respects minority rights. When these foundation stones are abused, ignored, or set aside, the democracy can become weak, the people can lose trust, and it may ultimately fail.

COVID has divided our nation, and it has made the divisions that were already there deeper and more serious. It has begun to create a people who are visibly frustrated and distrustful of our political institutions and prepared to challenge the very laws and the institutions that govern them. Our nation has been divided before – divisions between French and English, divisions over conscription policy, divisions between east and west – yet we have seen past political leaders in this country rise to the occasion, listen, and eventually address the divisions and develop a unique Canadian consensus that heals the wounds and rebuilds the people's faith in democracy. This can happen again, it must happen again, but it will only happen again if the political leadership at all levels and the people across this nation take a step back from the abyss of anger and mistrust and start to listen to each other.

There have been some consistent themes that I have heard over and over from my constituents as we have had to live and adjust our lives through the COVID pandemic. One is the expectation that we will do our best to protect the vulnerable from COVID. Another has been that our COVID policy must respect the individual rights and freedoms of our citizens. It cannot be one or the other. Any government action must pursue both policy goals.

The invocation of the Emergencies Act allows the government to rule by emergency decree. It is not about listening, dialogue, and developing consensus; it is about action and power. It provides the government with unparalleled power to set aside the checks and balances that are integral to a democracy. Under this act the government would control the regulation or be able to prohibit any public assembly that may lead to a breach of the peace. It can control travel to and from any specified area. It can control the use of specified property. The government can evacuate people and remove property. It can requisition, use, or dispose of property. It can direct any person to render essential services, and it can regulate the distribution and availability of essential goods, services, and resources. The government is given extraordinary powers that they would never normally have. Therefore, the Emergencies Act should only be invoked in the most extreme of national emergencies.

Built into the act are thresholds that must be met before the act can be invoked. The emergency must threaten the security of Canada and be a national emergency. The emergency must be of such significance that the government clearly needs the power to protect and preserve the government of Canada, the sovereignty, and our territorial integrity. We are talking about a scenario like a war or a threat of war or insurrection. It must be a serious threat that endangers the lives and the health or the safety of Canadians, and it must exceed the capacity of the province or the state to deal with it.

So the question that must be asked and must be answered is: were the thresholds for the invocation of the Emergencies Act actually reached? I believe that most Canadians would reasonably say no. I believe that the courts will ultimately conclude that the protests have not come close to meeting the thresholds set out in the Emergencies Act. There is no territorial threat to Canada. The protests may have broken the law, but they did not reach a level of violence that would constitute a national emergency. This was not World War I or World War II. These protests did not come anywhere close to the national security threat of the FLQ crisis. People were not being kidnapped, buildings were not being blown up, and banks were not being robbed to finance terror. The protests were not made up of revolutionaries but of ordinary people who believed their rights were being abridged by a policy of mandatory vaccination, and they wanted their government to listen to their concerns.

What has been remarkable has been how respectful and how nonviolent and how peaceful these protests were. Property was respected, and they even policed themselves, stopping any protesters who were about to cross the line. Even in Courts the protesters showed their commitment to peaceful protest. When the police arrested a small handful of radical protesters who appeared to be willing to use violence, it was then that the leadership of the protesters said: "Okay. We'll pack it in. We don't want our message to be associated with any kind of violence."

Yes, people were inconvenienced, and, yes, there is evidence that the protests were breaking the law. There is no doubt that the protests hurt the Canadian economy. Yes, the rule of law needed to be applied, but the fact that the arrests were delayed so long in Ottawa was the result of federal political incompetence and a police force in Ottawa that seemed utterly unprepared to uphold the law. The blockading of ports of entry was very serious, but did the provincial and federal governments have the necessary law to be able to deal with the situation? Yes.

Clearly, in my opinion, the thresholds for invocation of the Emergencies Act were not reached, yet it was invoked, and its use prior to today's announcement has at times degenerated into something of a farce. Look at what many protesters in Ottawa are being charged with: mischief or counselling mischief. Those were the charges that were needed to gain control of this national emergency? I feel like Allen Iverson when I say: mischief? I mean, we're talking about an emergency of such national importance that the charge is mischief? You mean mischief? Not treason but mischief? We needed to invoke the Emergencies Act for the first time in Canadian history so we could charge protesters with mischief? I'm just saying: mischief?

Yet for all of its farcical overtones, the invocation of the Emergencies Act was very serious stuff. By refusing to meet with the protesters and by trying to use wedge politics and heated rhetoric, the Prime Minister made a bad situation much worse. Rather than trying to build a consensus for how to move forward, as he has with so many progressive causes, he tried to demonize these totally average Canadians and use the sledgehammer of the Emergencies Act to make them behave. In so doing, he has sown distrust and alienation among a significant base of Canadians.

While other provinces, including Alberta, had been removing COVID restrictions, the Prime Minister appeared to be doubling down by mandating vaccinations on truckers. The Prime Minister's action and his rhetoric and the invocation of the Emergencies Act have done more to endanger our democracy and our respect for its institutions than anything the protesters could have done.

As a result of the invocation of the Emergencies Act, many Canadians feared that a small donation to the truckers or the purchase of a T-shirt in supporting the convoys could have resulted in the freezing and the seizing of their bank accounts. Basic civil liberties were lifted. People who funded a perfectly legal protest could have broken the law retroactively.

It is crucial, therefore, that we determine that the thresholds outlined in the act were actually met. A precedent for the act's further use has been set, and I believe that it is critical that a court rule on whether the thresholds were actually reached. If we want to draw this nation together, if we desire to live in a democracy where the foundation stones are strong, if we want to ensure that the government rules with the support and respect and trust of the people, then we must support this motion.

Today we stand in this Legislature as elected representatives of the people of Alberta. We have the opportunity to be statesmen, to look at what is in the best interests of the people and our democracy. The answer is clear, and I believe our duty is clear. We must vote in support of this motion, and then I would argue that the government of Alberta should challenge the invocation of the Emergencies Act in a court of law to determine whether or not it has met the thresholds of invocation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members joining the debate? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Of course, as we all have heard today, earlier this month the Prime Minister had brought in the emergency measures act, and just a few short days ago he forced a confidence vote to defend its use in Parliament. Today he has announced that he is rescinding the use of that act, which is probably embarrassing for those members of his government who were defending it just hours before. Even as protests were cleared, the Prime Minister continued to defend the use of these powers. As public pressure mounted, it came from the sources that Trudeau fears the most, the progressive news sources of the New York Times, for instance, who are criticizing his government for its use. That criticism came from Australia, the United Kingdom, the United States, and other countries.

The NDP state that their support of the emergency measures act comes with the stipulation that it can't be used on First Nations protests, climate or environmental protests. The NDP support significant government powers to be utilized only to pursue protesters that they disagree with. If this blockade in Ottawa or in Coutts or elsewhere in this country was about pipelines, the NDP or the Liberals federally would never have gone through with the emergency measures act. They never would have done it. You can see this because it wasn't that long ago that a blockade of a rail line lasted 19 days. It took several injunctions, just to show the uselessness of injunctions. It took two injunctions to try to get the police to move in. The government did not invoke the emergency measures act for that because it was about something that they agreed with.

The NDP have been on the front steps of this Legislature protesting pipelines. The NDP Party has endorsed the protests of the Coastal GasLink. Recently workers there have been violently attacked with axes, threatened with heavy machinery. One worker had their vehicle set on fire, I believe, while they were still in it. And it doesn't matter to the NDP. They would not have supported the emergency measures act for that protest.

At this time, Madam Speaker, when parts of the world are on edge, for instance, about war in eastern Europe, the decisions of a weak federal government really come to light. Not only will they use extraordinary powers to quell opposition voices, but they are propped up by the NDP, who only want to use extraordinary powers on certain people. Decisions made on natural gas and oil infrastructure, that could have been used to help supply Europe with energy, have left the continent receiving about a third of their energy use and supply from Russia. People in Europe will still use oil and gas, and the federal government has ensured one thing. The supply from Canada is not an option; they must rely on Russia.

Here in Alberta we have of course had situations recently with the blockade at the Coutts border crossing, and what we have shown is that these protests can be resolved with regular policing and the laws that are already available. In no way was it necessary or acceptable to invoke the Emergencies Act. The NDP tried to use, I believe, political pressure, directly or indirectly, on the RCMP to act, and that was an incredibly volatile situation which the RCMP dealt with. I understand that you might want to have this go faster and you want it to be over with quicker, but there are times where you have to have some patience. It's just an unfortunate fact of policing. I have been at standoffs. I have done this, same with other members in this Chamber, where patience is important, right? You get trained not to rush some of these situations because of how volatile they can become. Would the NDP still be pushing for action to have happened if the RCMP moved too quickly and it became a shootout? We've seen that there are clearly guns on both sides and a lot of innocent people trying to protest, sure, trying to get their voices heard. That's a lot of crossfire. Sometimes you have to take time with these things.

There have been a lot of firsts, Madam Speaker, over the last two years. Lots of lessons, of course, to learn, but even as we come out of these restrictions and see a chance to move forward, I think that the instinct of the federal government was not to diffuse the situation with dialogue, but it was to inflame the situation with government overreach, and it was a desperation to politicize the pandemic for political gain. I've heard loud and clear from my constituents in Leduc-Beaumont about their disbelief in the Prime Minister. They, like many Canadians across the country, ask: when does this end? They've also asked: what opinion do they have that's going to result in their bank account being frozen? I think that that's a question that many have on their mind, and maybe you don't consider that until it's on your doorstep that it's happening.

Like, I would get calls over the last years on restrictions, and many times it was the first time the government had ever done something to restrict someone's freedom, so they challenged it, and so they should challenge it. The government should never feel comfortable restricting people's freedoms, and how lackadaisical the NDP are with people's freedoms is unbelievable to me, that they feel that if they get questioned on this, you're clearly just against overall public safety or you don't care about your neighbour. That's just not true. You're taking away people's freedoms to do something. The government should never feel comfortable doing that, and frankly a lot of Canadians, lots of people in my constituency have had enough. They and with a lot of other Canadians, of course, have voiced their opposition to the Emergencies Act. Today due to the tremendously large outcry from Canadians across the country opposing the Emergencies Act, Justin Trudeau is forced to revoke it. However, the fact that he brought in the Emergencies Act in the first place is still a problem. It is still very concerning.

The Prime Minister said that invoking the former War Measures Act was the responsible and necessary thing to do. Madam Speaker, I would strongly disagree with this. In fact, invoking the Emergencies Act was an irresponsible thing to do. Justin Trudeau put Alberta in a state of emergency when there, in fact, was no emergency to justify this. The Emergencies Act took away civil liberties and democracy and gave the Prime Minister all kinds of new power.

Over the past couple of years citizens have endured a tremendous amount. Some have lost their jobs or businesses. Others have lost the right to be able to participate in things that they love: sports, in-person education, socializing with friends, visiting family members, funerals, weddings. All have been curtailed, and it is to deal with a common problem of a pandemic, but this still puts a lot of stress on people, and when that stress turns to demonstrations and protests, it is best for political leaders to listen, to reassess the situation, to have a dialogue with people and come together to make the best decision on the path forward.

It is not a time to inflame the situation, and just because Trudeau doesn't agree with those protesters does not mean that he should have the power to put in the emergency measures act to stop them. Consider the precedent that this sets for the future. These protesters just wanted to be heard, and while we heard them, Justin Trudeau, Madam Speaker, tried to silence them.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members to join the debate? The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Mrs. Frey: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to kind of start a little bit unconventionally just because I saw that Russia has officially declared that it'll be going into Ukraine tonight. I think that's a sobering moment for every single person in this Chamber regardless of the debate that we're having. There are some pretty crazy things going on in the world right now, and I just wanted to send my – as a provincial politician I'm not sure what else I can do, but I just wanted to send my prayers and say that my thoughts are with the people of Ukraine tonight as they brace for potential terror. I just can't imagine what they're feeling right now. So to start off with saying that just because I think it's important, no matter how crazy things get in this Chamber, to remember that there's always more.

Completely unrelated, I guess, I will move on. I was pretty struck by what was going on in Ottawa. I mean, it was, I think, a Monday morning. I was driving to Brooks. I'm from Medicine Hat. My riding is in both places, of course, Brooks-Medicine Hat, but Brooks is about an hour away from my house. So for those who don't speak in time and actually use kilometres, it's about 100 kilometres, for those of you who don't really venture down to that side of the province.

As I was driving, I noticed just a really large number of people out for 7 o'clock in the morning. I went to grab my coffee. I left McDonald's, I crossed the highway, and all of a sudden there were trucks and people and Canadian flags and families all over the highway. I mean, like, we could be hyperbolic and say that there were tens of thousands, Madam Speaker, but there were literally a thousand people, I bet, between Brooks and Medicine Hat that day. It seemed like the entire city of Brooks was out. Half of Medicine Hat must have been out. And that was early. I think the truckers were expected to come through Medicine Hat at, like, 10:30, and I'm not even sure they came through till 1 o'clock, but people just kept piling on. I saw families, like I said. I saw people that I knew through church. I saw people all over the place, and it was really compelling to see just ordinary people – as we know as politicians, not everybody engages in politics the same way – severely normal Albertans, the Henrys and Marthas, if you will, and their kids coming out in large numbers to wave to the truckers.

I think it's worth saying, you know, that just because you were out there doesn't mean that you support every single aspect of what they were talking about. I mean, this grassroots movement, which is something that I think every politician – if there are that many people lining the highway in your riding, you better stop and take note. So that's exactly what I did. I pulled over, and I was waving as I saw it. All of a sudden a bunch of trucks started coming through. I mean, they were going at highway speeds, so it was hard to read everything that was on the trucks. But it was just – there were things like: I want my freedom back. There were things like: stop the mandates. I didn't see anything really vulgar, quite honestly. I mean, there was some colourful language about the Prime Minister, sure. I mean, it's not as bad as I've heard in my riding about the Prime Minister, but it was colourful nonetheless.

Of course, they should be parliamentary, but I think what was shown that day was just how angry people really are and how they're, you know, at the point where you just can't get blood from a stone anymore, Madam Speaker. They wanted change. They want something done. They see this as a never-ending battle, as something that they are never going to get out of, and I understand because for the past two years it has felt like it was never-ending, and I say that as a government MLA who – it feels like every time you come into work, there's something else that has to be dealt with for a problem that we thought was going to be solved months ago, a year ago. Heck, I was hopeful it would have been way sooner than that, but here we are – right? – still talking about the same darn thing.

You know, I really thought: this many severely normal people out on I think it was a Monday morning, out to cheer on a bunch of truckers, like, somebody's got to listen to them. Lo and behold, nobody did. These truckers came to Ottawa. They set up shop, and their intention was to lobby the Prime Minister. Their intention was to ask the Prime Minister, with gusto, of course, to end the mandates, to support them, to recognize their autonomy, and recognize that they want to live their lives.

What did the Prime Minister do? Well, he did what his father did but with words. He gave us his version of the Trudeau salute. Let's put it that way. You know, I will say – I've heard hon. members asking what the Trudeau salute is. I think the railcar has been preserved that the Trudeau salute took place in. So without being unparliamentary, I would just say: google it.

The protest, of course, started garnering a lot of national attention. It started garnering international attention as it had gone on for quite a while. I was, of course, horrified to see that there were some very disturbed people who decided to co-opt such a peaceful movement by displaying such hateful symbols. I'm glad that the convoy organizers immediately denounced them. I'm glad that politicians of all stripes denounced them. I do as well. Of course, we know that those symbols have absolutely no place in Canada. They have absolutely no place in any sort of peaceful protest. Hate symbols of any kind should not be allowed.

But I do find it ironic that we can see hammers and sickles, the symbols of communist oppression, with Greta Thunberg and every single protest, eco justice protest, and the CBC doesn't write one story about that. But one person, a terrible person with a horrible symbol – I'm not excusing that, and I want that on the record over and over again. That same photo will receive countless hours of media coverage. I guess that's what happens when you get $600 million, isn't it?

You know, I don't support illegal blockades. Never have, never will. I was heavily criticized because I actually put forward Bill 1, the Critical Infrastructure Defence Act. It was supposed to be my private member's bill, but the Minister of Justice at the time liked it so much that it became a government bill. I support that bill a hundred per cent. I did then. I do now.

We need to have those kinds of tools at our disposal, and we can't be inconsistent, and we have to remain principled, that a blockade is a blockade is a blockade. When a peaceful protest turns into the blocking of critical infrastructure, it does need to be dealt with, so I understand that.

However, what I don't understand and what I fail to understand is why it ever had to get to that point. If we didn't have a Prime Minister that is so derelict in his duty to lead, we would have never gotten here. If the Prime Minister would have stopped the unscientific, unwarranted mandates, allow people real freedom of choice, not compelling them, not coercing them, we would have never . . .

An Hon. Member: Bullying them.

Mrs. Frey: He bullied them. Exactly.

We would have never gotten here if he wouldn't have gone out instead of listening to people and said – if he would have just gone out and said, "Hey, I'm here; I've met with every other controversial figure in the world; why can't I meet with you?" and just said for a moment: "I hear you. I understand. You must be in pain for you to come out here, all the way out of your way, to spend time on my doorstep."

If he would have just given them a moment of his time instead of immediately resorting to calling them racists and misogynists and every other name out of the book, we would not be here right now, but we are. This Prime Minister: even members of his own caucus and the Senate, I believe, have said that he is stoking division in this country at a time when western alienation was already high.

You know, I've heard many people enhance the calls for separation, which is something that I don't support. I'm a monarchist. I love this Confederation. I love Canada. My great-grandfather fought in World War II. He'd be turning in his grave right now knowing what's going on here and what our Prime Minister has done. He didn't like the first Trudeau, and I'm assuming he wouldn't like the second one very much either. But, you know, I refuse to let Justin Trudeau kick me out of my own country. I refuse to be alienated and refuse to feel like that is my only resort.

I want to thank the Canadians who are going there and protesting. I want to thank them for their bravery in speaking out against the Emergencies Act, and I want to thank our government for giving me the opportunity to do that as well.

I've also noticed in the last few days, or the last week or so, that the word "freedom," which I think to be a wonderful thing and something that we should be yelling from the rooftops, has now become a curse word according to the left. You know, I saw the CBC article a while ago about the 18 words we need to remove from our vernacular because they're offensive and everything else, and of course we should be mindful of how other people feel, but the word "freedom," Mr. Speaker? Since when did that become a dirty word? We have people who fought and died so that we have the right to say that word, and I bet there are people around the world right now who wish that they could be as proud of a nation as we are to be Canadian. I'm so proud to fly that maple leaf, and I will be every day till the day I die.

You know, when we see Liberal MPs getting up in the House and making any kind of equivalency between the words "honk, honk" – I mean, I thought, when I was young, it was a duck sound; now it's a symbol of a movement – for them to equivocate that with "heil Hitler" just goes to show you the lengths to which the Liberals and the left are willing to go to alienate and further divide Canadians. It's pathetic, Mr. Speaker. It's despicable, and it's unbecoming of anyone who holds elected office. Shame on them.

I heard colleagues of mine today. The hon. Member for Taber-Warner said: you know, I'm a lawmaker, not a lawbreaker. I'll stand by that as well, because we are. We are here to make laws, but we also have the obligation to know when we've gone too far and not do that. The Prime Minister, instead of pulling it back last night, held on to power for a second longer. He didn't even vote on it, from what I understand. He implemented the Emergencies Act only to rescind it today. I wouldn't like to be a Liberal MP right now, Mr. Speaker – although I wouldn't ever, I wouldn't like to be a Liberal MP right now especially – because they just spent the last however many days with a confidence vote, a matter of confidence in a minority government situation, defending that kind of gross overreach. It blows my mind that that is what we have come to in this country.

You know, for the Prime Minister, the man who doesn't even know how many times he's done blackface, to run out and accuse people of being racist misogynists and part of a fringe minority: that's pretty rich. This is also the same guy who goes out and makes these defamatory statements about everyday, ordinary people, some of which were from Brooks-Medicine Hat. He calls them everything under the sun. His MPs call them everything under the sun, including terrorists. This is the same guy who paid $10.5 million to Omar Khadr – the same guy, Mr. Speaker – and he wants to lecture us about who the bad guy is here. We have a responsibility as lawmakers to know when we've gone too far. Unfortunately, I feel like the moral compass has gone on this Prime Minister. It was gone a long time ago.

But all I have to say to my constituents is this. I hear you. I support you. We have to keep our eye on the ball here, which is getting Justin Trudeau out of office at the earliest possible moment, but we can't divide ourselves in the process. Right now you see so many people – Conservatives, Liberals, otherwise – turn on each other because it's a heightened, awful political environment in which we live. I want my constituents to know that I stand behind them, that even though sometimes I might vehemently disagree with them, sometimes I might think that the methods that they've gone to are not the most effective, I hear them.

This has been an awful two years, Mr. Speaker. It has been hard. It has been long. There have been people who have lost their lives, their livelihoods, their homes. I mean, now they're losing access to their bank accounts. And we are coming out on the other side of this. I hope that this week, starting with the throne speech, is a point of a new beginning, and I hope that we can put this behind us once and for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Government Motion 10. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore has the call.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this opportunity to my colleagues, too. It's been really a pleasure to hear everybody tonight. We have heard it all before, and we're going to hear it again, because the last few years – and I think it's worth repeating again – have been absolutely horrible and some of the most trying times for our nation and our province, our friends and our families. But I'd like to start off, first, by commending Canadians and Albertans for their strength and their resilience and their spirit. It's really, really hard when we see our leaders take a different direction, especially when that direction goes to undermining the feelings and values of our own citizens.

If you think about it, so many of us, right across this beautiful province and across Canada, have been through so much – the trials, the losses, the stress, the isolation – and every citizen in the nation and globally has experienced this collectively. Then we see leadership go in a space where they are attacking the democratic rights of our people, and they've already been through so much. We've asked them to restrict their freedoms and their rights, and you know what? For the most part, Mr. Speaker, we understood those restrictions, and people sacrificed being with their loved ones, their businesses – it's been said before, but I'll repeat it again – birthdays, weddings, funerals to help each other, to keep our citizens safe, and especially to keep our health care systems working. Thank you so much to the thousands of health care and front-line workers who have kept us safe throughout this pandemic. There are just not enough words of gratitude.

When you are a leader of a nation and you are at a time when your nation is hurting and you have this amazing opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to unite us and the opportunity to actually sit for the first time and listen to regular, everyday folks and hear their pain because they've assembled at their House in Ottawa – it belongs to them just like this Legislature belongs to the people of Alberta. Instead of hearing the good, honest folks – and I'm not talking about the ones that were there to undermine the messages but the real everyday Canadians – who needed to know at that time that the leader of their country cared enough to have a conversation with them and instead used this opportunity to exploit powers that could limit everything from rights on housing, finances, and faith.

Not only was it completely undemocratic – I have to say that I am so grateful to have seen the Prime Minister change his direction – but despite the revocation of the act as of earlier today, we have to ask the question, and I think we have to get back, fundamentally, to why we're asking this question about exercising grave measures of power upon the citizens of the nation and where the Emergencies Act is only supposed to be used. I mean, the circumstances have to be really serious, Mr. Speaker, and it has to be challenging the lives and health and safety of Canadians and compromise the government's ability to be able to preserve the sovereignty and security and territorial integrity of Canada. It comes with a pretty major caveat, too, that it can only be invoked in circumstances that cannot be addressed by any other law in Canada. It's very, very difficult to understand that the government proposed an order to open up the Emergencies Act when there are many other opportunities to be able to talk about critical infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, protests are a pillar of democracy, and they are meant to bring attention. They're a plea from the citizens who have a feeling of being marginalized and who, when they've had their freedoms restricted like this – and I realize that there were massive disruptions and the attention, but we have to ask if those protests warranted the enforcement of this authority. They did not threaten the lives of Canadians. They do not threaten the well-being of Canadians. They do not harm the nation. I want to be clear. I will never support illegal blockades, shaming, censorship, or bullying. I have close friends in my riding, too, that lost serious money because of the blockades. We really need to make sure that we all understand where we all sit with this.

I will never support voices that invoke racism or bigotry or discrimination from anyone, but the question we fundamentally have to ask, Mr. Speaker, is: why specifically did we need the Emergencies Act? I mean, let's look at the facts. Blocking critical infrastructure violates the Criminal Code. Both provincial and municipal governments have any number of tools through the RCMP, from impounding vehicles to arrest. Police can already freeze bank accounts under the Proceeds of Crime (Money Laundering) and Terrorist Financing Act if the blockade continued. You can even call in the military without the Emergencies Act. The National Defence Act allows the army to be called out with any disturbance to the peace that overwhelms the normal police resources, and we can always call upon our Mounties, both provincially and federally, to come in as reinforcements.

We have to respect democratic safeguards. We have to respect and properly consult with our provinces and territories. We must make sure that we are not invoking legislation that acts callously and reacts so quickly, and we must always, when we're invoking control on citizens and encroaching on their lives, not also encroach on provincial legislation and jurisdiction. We also have to have faith in our law agencies and the committed groups to handle these situations. It just screams that it did not require this level of overreach in order to be able to attain the needed desire to remove these blockades.

I want to make sure that we all understand that the Prime Minister never had the legal justification to invoke that act, and when you have this level of authoritative power move on to the people just because they disagree with his policies, we have to ask the question of a failure in leadership. We are a democratic nation, Mr. Speaker, a peaceful nation where we thrive on the ability to be able to express ourselves and coexist. We cannot at this time, when we are hurting so much, when there's so much pain, look to divide the nation.

I wanted to also highlight that in the federal House of Commons the vote was 185 to 151. There were only 34 votes that actually separated the vote at the federal Parliament. My goodness. That is awfully close to make a decision to invoke the Emergencies Act when so many people are asking the same questions that we were.

Instead of being divisive and taking away democratic spirit, we have to question leadership. We have to question whether or not the leader of our nation has the capacity to talk to everyday people and reassure them that they understand where they're coming from. It is time for us to unify and to come together and to work together. Isn't that what our federal government said? It's what we've been saying, for sure.

I think what was really interesting is that the federal government had spoken about not keeping the act in any longer than necessary. Then why, after seven days, did they go back to make a motion to extend the act? This is another fundamental question we need to ask.

I mean, the struggle is real, isn't it? So many people have spoken about it in here, and I think that if we take the time to honestly reflect back on what we've all been through, there is not a single person that any of us meets every single day that hasn't been impacted by this. All of us in here have to change our rhetoric, and we have to work together to make sure that we're actually here for the people of this province and not working against each other.

If we're going to get back to that day one day where we can look at whatever that normal looks like, we also have to begin to heal, Mr. Speaker, and that healing can only happen if we lead by example and we show that we are there for the people that need us in a time of crisis. That's true leadership. It's being willing to listen and to respond, to be able to take in that information and participate with your fellow Canadians. It doesn't matter whether you agree with them or not. The Prime Minister didn't need to come out and say that he agreed with people. He just needed to listen to them. You don't run away from difficult conversations, and you don't allow the bullies and the keyboard cowboys or the trolls to rule your behaviour.

Showing up to a protest is fundamental to democracy. I am as disgusted as anyone about the racist comments, the flying of swastikas, defacing of statues, and any other inappropriate and, frankly, concerning behaviour in those instances is deplorable and should absolutely be called out, but as gross as those actions and behaviours are, you have to answer the question: was the Emergencies Act the right intervention to that behaviour? That's the question.

Again, I'm grateful that the federal leadership has changed the direction of where they went with this. Quite frankly, there's no judicial oversight in that government section of that act. That's very, very concerning.

I ask this question, too: how can we become a nation stronger and more united when we are compelled to jump into emergency acts as a normal part of our privilege? I would like to quote, from the National Post, an article by Tristin Hopper.

[The] Freedom Convoy blockade is now gone, and it notably occurred without any Emergencies Act assistance. After RCMP arrested 13 people and seized a cache of firearms, traffic is now flowing freely at the Coutts, Alta. border crossing for the first time in two weeks. In a strange development for a police operation that saw the seizure of a large arsenal of high-powered firearms, the Coutts blockade ultimately ended with hugs between the police and blockaders and the joint singing of "O Canada."

Again, while I am grateful for the revocation of the act, justice prevailed, and injustice was put to rest although this does not change the fact that our leader saw an opportunity and erroneously saw an opportunity to overreach into a space that was not necessary, justified. After some of the most enduring and most difficult and hardest years that Canadians and all of us have experienced globally, it is time to unite Canada and unite us in democracy and peace. It is going to take a true leader, one who understands Canadians, to truly see us there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others on Government Motion 10? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to start. I'm not going to speak for long because I would just be repeating what many have said in the Chamber this evening. I wanted to thank all the Canadians who stood up against this abuse of power, all of you right across the country. I just want to say thank you for standing up for democracy, for standing up for freedoms, and for standing up for accountability and transparency in government.

The Emergencies Act is in place to be used in situations where the lives, health, or safety of Canadians are in critical condition. Since this obviously was not the case, the Prime Minister has already revoked the use of the act. Evidently, it was not needed at all. I think that's become very clear to the Prime Minister and to his cabinet, and I suspect it's become very clear to others that are watching. Other countries, as had been mentioned by previous speakers, have spoken out against what's happened here in Canada. It's been embarrassing.

But it's been a proud moment for me as a proud Albertan and Canadian to see Canadians stand up and say: we've had enough; this is not okay. I just wanted to stand and thank them for that, Mr. Speaker.

I really don't need to say much more other than to say that once again the Prime Minister was wrong in what he did. It was a gross overreach. It was a gross abuse of power. I think that's become clear to everybody, and I hope that he's learned something from this experience. I hope other governments will be watching with great interest to see what comes next, and I hope he pays a price for it in the future elections. That's my hope. I believe that Canadians have spoken loud and clear that they're not going to accept this kind of behaviour. I think that we will see some changes in governments as a result in the future. I think that's the good news, that people have said: we've had enough. It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker.

As I said, I'm going to be very brief, and I will. I'm more than happy that this motion is no longer needed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak up in support of Motion 10, which says essentially:

Be it resolved that the ... Assembly ...

- (a) condemn the unnecessary invocation of the Emergencies Act ...
- (b) [further] that the government of Canada has failed to demonstrate that the ... circumstances [even met] the threshold that the law requires ...

Essentially, they broke their own law.

- (c) [further that it's]... an unnecessary intrusion into provincial jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it's time for Canadians to awake. Canada has changed under our noses. Without a doubt, the events of the last few days have shaken many of us to the core, at least the ones who like to live in a free and fair society. Louis Riel stood up for his people, and the Ottawa elite hanged him, and then later, in 1998, the government of Canada apologized for having done so. Canadian Prime Ministers have apologized in Parliament for the abuses of the War Measures Act, employed during World War I and World War II.

But there was no war in Ottawa this time. There was no foreign invasion, yet he invokes the War Measures Act, which is now called the Emergencies Act. There were no tanks in the street, Mr. Speaker, just food delivery trucks and furniture delivery trucks. There were no rocket launchers to be seen anywhere, just Canadian flags. There were no Navy SEALs. There was no airborne assault, just children with their parents, waving flags and trying to speak their voice and to be heard. There was no war in Ottawa streets, and there hasn't been, so what is the threat? Harmless, happy Canadians with flags waving, arriving in Ottawa to try and speak their mind, to try and be heard, and Trudeau, on the other side of Ottawa, running like a chicken with his head cut off, feathers flying, scared to death. Run; the fringe minority are coming. Head for the COVID bunker. What's the threat?

The only threat is to Trudeau's delusion that Canadians should obey his every command. Nobody should question him, and anyone who dares to disagree should be assaulted by the police. Their bank accounts should be frozen. They should be thrown in jail, and they should be denigrated as subhuman. The real abuser is Trudeau himself and his chicken Liberals, who refuse to stand for what they know is right. Any Canadian who votes for the Liberals or the NDP after this supports tyranny and the abuse of power and needs to give their head a shake. Canada is a democracy, and I will never support turning it into a socialist police state. The Canada I knew is one of freedoms. They have made it into a dirty word. Alberta will be free. I warn you that one person's freedom gone today is yours gone tomorrow.

All Canadians need to wake up to this, especially the members across the aisle. Kelly McParland reported in an article in the National Post a few days ago that the leader of the federal NDP Alberta party – it's all the same party – would support, was willing to grant the Trudeau Liberals extraordinary powers against ordinary Canadians on the condition that it not be used against Indigenous land defenders, climate change activists, workers fighting for fairness. Really? And why not? On what moral or legal grounds? The barrier has been broken down. Now the truth is out: some Canadians deserve more protection than others. Protections have now become politicized according to a person's personal viewpoint.

Mr. Speaker, a Canadian is a Canadian, and I genuinely want to know if Alberta's NDP is onside with their federal leader. Can they say right here and now that the character and protection of our rights applies to all of us equally and not just those we agree with? Or is it okay to attack construction workers on pipelines with axes to destroy equipment, to burn their vehicles and their buildings? I didn't hear a word about that, not one whisper of condemnation of that, because they actually support it. They actually support that kind of violence.

Do only people who have acceptable views deserve protection in an overzealous federal government that has literally no idea how to govern, who is literally willing to trample Charter rights, the freedom of assembly and the freedom of speech? We are back to the future of Nineteen Eighty-four, truly. Are we actually living in such a country that if you do not share the same beliefs as your government, you will go to jail? We will make sure of that. The sad reality seems to be yes.

I call on all Canadians to rise peacefully, to assemble, to speak up every day, to assemble as often as you have to. Wake up. Canada is changing, and this cannot be allowed to continue. I know Trudeau revoked the act a few hours ago, another panicked reaction by him. I hope we never ever forget as Canadians how easy it was for him to enact that, to trample on your personal rights, your personal freedoms, the guaranteed Charter rights of our Constitution. To him, the Constitution apparently means nothing. I hope we never forget that. The federal government will tell us that it was a last resort, but it wasn't. It was a political action. They have politicized the Charter of Rights. This is a historic, irresponsible, and colossal overreach and abuse of power against all Canadians. The federal Liberals now think that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is just a suggestion that they can do or not do if they want to. The precedent has been set by Trudeau. There are no rights left according to what he has done this week.

Mr. Speaker, this is an embarrassment on the world stage. I don't care if you tune into the news in India or Africa or Asia – I've tried to listen to them all lately – Europe. Everywhere you go, they mock what's happening in this country. It's a shameful, shameful moment in Canadian history.

There is no greater task than defending the rights and the civil liberties of our fellow Canadians. There is a sense of pride in supporting democracy. Trudeau and his supporters have failed their leadership. They have failed Canadians. They have failed Canada, and the members across the aisle join and stand with him. There has been no respect, co-operation, or partnership, only disrespect and antagonism.

Mr. Speaker, I love this country, and I'm proud to be an Albertan, and as Albertans and Canadians we have to stand together during attacks on our fundamental Charter rights and freedoms and on a fair and democratic society that we have worked so hard to build. The price of freedom is eternal vigilance. We will fight for it. Don't let it go. The denial of rights to one Canadian is a denial of rights to all of us, and we must never let this become the norm. We must look out for Canada and for one another and never become complacent in our own democracy. Canadians, wake up.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has the call.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue that we face today is one of misuse of power, the erosion of trust in the government, and the careless destruction of the rights of Canadians. I never would have thought that in my time as an elected representative, a Canadian, and, most importantly, an Albertan we would have to speak on these topics, but due to the power-grabbing actions of the Liberal government with support by the NDP, sadly we are here to do just that.

A little under a month ago we saw an unnecessary implementation of restrictions targeting one of the most important sectors of our country and our economy, truckers. While we were already experiencing a trucker shortage across the country, our federal government chose to hurt Canadians and Albertans even more, causing more shortages and increasing inflation on consumer goods like groceries. What started off as a peaceful protest of people protecting their livelihoods and supporting other truckers alike turned into a national and international movement of people wanting their own livelihoods and freedoms back as the pandemic started fizzling out.

But as most large movements come and go, there will always be a few bad apples in the bunch that attach themselves to a movement to do more than just peacefully gather. With this, we've seen the blocking of critical border crossings and the blocking of the downtown area of Parliament in Ottawa.

Sandy Williams, a constituent of mine from Kinuso, proudly took three of his children and a big truck and embarked with the convoy to Ottawa. He updated me every few days and remained peaceful and focused in what he was trying to set out to do, to try to put an end to the restrictions.

Trudeau refused to acknowledge the harm he was bringing to the trucking industry and to the country. He instead refused to listen to them. He compared them to Nazi-flag-holding white supremacists and even went as far as to accuse a Jewish Conservative MP of standing by the swastika. It is sad to see that we are in a time where our Prime Minister could make such a comment.

Going against the consultation of many Premiers across Canada, he decided to enact the Emergencies Act, not because there was a national emergency or grave threats to national security. It was enacted for specific tasks: to increase his power and to suppress the rights of those who oppose him. Provinces already had the power to clear blockades on their own even right here in Alberta at the Coutts border, where we were able to peacefully end the blockade without the use of the Emergencies Act.

I have had the distinct pleasure in my life to be a class 1 certified truck driver for over 30 years. I've been a member of the trucking industry for a great deal of time, and I have met many awesome people in it I call my brothers, sisters, and my friends. These are the people that constitute the heart of this very nation. The majesty of this Assembly we see every day only carries the weight it does because behind it are the constituents, the people who work day in and day out and have passions and dreams and stay focused and work hard. A government cannot help its people achieve these dreams acting against them in the way the federal government has done, but these very people are what this is all about.

It has been the privilege of my life to serve my constituents, and they tell me, very sincerely, that the invoking of this act is wrong, that the pretense under which it is enacted is wrong, that the politics that have led to its implementation in Parliament are wrong. The way the Liberal government implemented the Emergencies Act has done a tremendous disservice to Albertans, Canadians, and the rule of law. Canadians and Albertans have seen this gross misuse of powers, and they have made their voices heard along with added pressure from your Alberta government, as has been applied through our courts.

I would like to say thank you to all Canadians and Albertans. Thank you for your work. We have caused the Liberal government and their NDP supporters to cave as they were caught in this unlawful grab of power. Just this past afternoon we have seen them hastily rescind the Emergencies Act before the Senate could even finish debating. This shows their cowardice to allow the courts and the highest offices in the country to rule on the legality and legitimacy of the implementation of this democracy-eroding act. They know they had no foundation to implement it. They did it to take the rights away from everyday, law-abiding citizens that protest peacefully, and they did this just because they oppose the Liberal and NDP agenda.

It's interesting to see them rescind it so quickly as an attack happened at the Coastal GasLink site. This shows a double standard as some of these protesters who have done nothing but stick around and stand up for their rights and freedoms have had swifter actions taken against them than the defence of our own natural resources.

It is on this basis, Mr. Speaker, that I ask both my colleagues in the government and my colleagues among the members opposite to send a firm message from Alberta to the Prime Minister and his cabinet that our great province treasures dearly not only our inherent freedoms but also the rationality that makes our society one of the rule of law. Without it, we will find ourselves remarkably astray.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on Government Motion 10, are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 10 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:35 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

The Speaker: Hon. members, a division has been called on Government Motion 10, but prior to calling that division, I wanted to give members of the Assembly the opportunity. Pursuant to Government Motion 9 all members are required to be in their seat for divisions. Again, happy to provide members the opportunity to shuffle around the Chamber should they be required to do so.

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, February 24, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, please remain standing for the playing of God Save the Queen.

Recording:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the Queen!

Members, I ask that you please remain standing.

Statement by the Speaker

Ukraine

The Speaker: As Speaker of the Alberta Legislature, the province with the largest concentration of Ukrainians in Canada, in a country with the second-largest diaspora of Ukrainians in the world, I say that today we are all Ukrainians because we believe that all peoples of the world should be able to choose democracy over tyranny, and for that reason the Legislature of Alberta is with Ukraine and prays for peace.

As the saying goes in Ukraine and, even more importantly today, for those confronting the Russian aggressors and protecting their families: [Remarks in Ukrainian] Glory to Ukraine. Glory to the heroes.

I ask that you remain standing in solidarity with the people of Ukraine as we play the national anthem of Ukraine.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, today I'm very pleased to have a face that many of you will remember and know and appreciate sitting in my gallery today, Wayne Drysdale, the former Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. I think everyone will agree, all of our favourite Drysdals; his wife, Sherry, is also joining him.

They are joined by Vaughn Bend, the CEO of Aquatera Utilities. Please welcome them.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, also seated in the gallery of the Speaker today are Mountain View county councillor Alan Miller and the Laubenstein family: Scott, Heather, Gunter, Martin, and Linea.

Today in the public gallery are special guests of the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul. Please welcome Her Worship Elisa Brousseau, mayor of Bonnyville. Welcome. Thank you for joining us.

Ministerial Statements

Ukraine

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I stand on behalf of the government of Alberta to express our solidarity with the people of Ukraine, for the territorial integrity and sovereignty of the great modern democratic Ukrainian state. As you eloquently noted, Alberta has been built in large part thanks to the contribution of hundreds of thousands of Canadians of Ukrainian origin. We owe much of our own freedom and prosperity to people of Ukrainian descent who have built our own society, so there is a special, deep, and abiding relationship between Alberta and Ukraine and indeed between Canada and Ukraine.

We are all shocked and horrified to see the images of a full-scale military invasion of Ukraine by the forces of Vladimir Putin and the Russian Federation in what constitutes the largest act of military aggression in Europe since 1945, the scale and consequences of which are unthinkable: the loss of human life, the deprivation of security and basic freedoms, the dislocation potentially of millions of peaceful civilians in what can only be described as a brutal and horrific war crime.

Mr. Speaker, this did not begin yesterday. Vladimir Putin's aggression against Ukraine began eight years ago with his invasion of Crimea and his de facto invasion, through Russian separatist forces, of the Donbas region in the provinces of Luhansk and Donetsk. Canada proudly has played a role in supporting Ukraine and its military in better responding to these challenges to its sovereignty. As Minister of National Defence I was proud to deploy Her Majesty's Canadian Forces to Ukraine in Operation Unifier, which for the past seven years has trained over 60,000 Ukrainian troops, modernizing them and improving their tactics to prepare for, sadly, this inevitable day.

But the story of Russian aggression against Ukraine did not begin eight years ago. Indeed, for centuries there have been efforts to obliterate Ukrainian nationality, language, and its distinctive culture, an effort that reached its apogee during the Holodomor famine genocide of 1932 and '33, when some 10 million Ukrainians were victims of a genocide planned and executed by Vladimir Putin's predecessor in Moscow, Joseph Stalin.

When we as Albertans stand to remember the victims of the Holodomor, what we are doing is remembering a lesson of history about the underlying aggression that has long existed with Muscovite expansionism and Russian imperialism, which today is wreaking havoc on the streets of Ukraine.

Mr. Speaker, we express our most profound solidarity with the women and men and children of Ukraine at this moment of great adversity. But we also express confidence in the Ukrainian spirit to overcome this violent effort to obliterate the Ukrainian nation by Vladimir Putin, who for too long has been allowed to develop the wealth, the military strength, the policy of aggression, not only in Ukraine but elsewhere. His participation in the Syrian civil war was simply one part of the path to this day of horrific aggression.

I believe I speak on behalf of all hon. members when I call on the government of Canada and indeed the entire civilized world to stand together in unity and strength and solidarity with the people of Ukraine. To do otherwise is to invite further aggression. I am encouraged to see that article 4 consultations amongst the NATO member states have begun today. We are encouraged to see the provision of humanitarian equipment to Ukrainian civil society by the government of Canada, to which the government of Alberta is making a contribution.

Mr. Speaker, more must be done. The world must impose a hard and immediate sanction on all Russian energy imports. It is an unpardonable scandal that Russia should be able to continue to fill its treasury to finance this act of mass violence through its global energy sales. That must end immediately with the hardest possible and broadest economic sanctions on Russia, that must be co-ordinated by all peace-loving countries around the world. We call on the government of Canada to lead the way in that respect.

Mr. Speaker, I further call on the government of Canada and our allies around the world to be relentless in freezing the assets of and making life impossible for the billionaire plutocrats of Putin's Russia, his enablers, who have assets here in Canada and all around the world, who have profited from two decades of corruption and aggression. We must make it clear that Vladimir Putin and his gang of thugs are personae non grata throughout the democratic world.

Mr. Speaker, let me close by saying that we are all moved by the scenes that are emanating from Ukraine, but I have been to Ukrainian military bases. I have seen our Canadian troops equipping them with world-class knowledge and skills. I, for one, have confidence that the people of Ukraine will valiantly defend the promise of their freedom and independence that has been so hard fought and hard won.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Ukraine are also people of a profound faith, so I join with so many others in praying for the intercession of the Theotokos for the protection of Ukraine and her people. [Remarks in Ukrainian] [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: I believe the hon. the Premier has a special request for unanimous consent.

Mr. Kenney: At this time I wish to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 39 in order to provide notice of a government motion in support of Ukraine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I now rise to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7 in order to proceed immediately to consideration of Government Motion 11.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

Russian Actions in Ukraine

11. Mr. Kenney moved:
- Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly
- (a) condemn the Russian invasion of Ukraine as an unprovoked and illegal act of aggression;
 - (b) affirm the solidarity of Alberta with the people of Ukraine and Albertans' support for the territorial integrity and sovereignty of Ukraine;
 - (c) call on the government of Canada to impose the strongest possible sanctions on the Russian Federation and to provide with the greatest urgency generous humanitarian support to Ukraine.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 11 is debatable. Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate?

Seeing and hearing none, I am prepared to call the question.

[Government Motion 11 carried unanimously]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to respond to the ministerial statement on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Bilous: [Remarks in Ukrainian] As our eyes and hearts are fixed on Ukraine, it is vital that we come together in support of those impacted by the atrocious actions of Vladimir Putin, condemning in the strongest possible way these brazen attacks on a sovereign, democratic nation. Alongside the 245,000 in our province, I am also an Albertan of Ukrainian descent. For so many of us, this invasion has a deeply personal impact.

Alberta has the largest population of those with Ukrainian heritage in our country. We have brothers and sisters, aunts and uncles, friends and loved ones who are now living through horror I cannot imagine. I'm reminded of our parents and grandparents who came to Canada, in many cases, to escape these types of horrors who may be looking back at their own histories, reminded again of the harm caused by tyranny and egregious, unprovoked attacks. My heart goes out to each and every one of you.

Ukraine has been explicit in their desire for peace and harmony with their neighbours. The NDP caucus stands proudly with those supporting Ukrainian sovereignty and independence. By choosing to instigate a catastrophic, unprovoked, and unjustified attack, the Russian Federation is infringing upon the rights and freedoms of a democratic nation, violating international law and bringing on catastrophic loss of life and human suffering. We must all come together in our province, in our country, and across the globe to support Ukraine and its people's rights to determine their own future, protecting the democratic institutions and values we hold dear.

Now more than ever the world needs to respond swiftly and firmly, holding the Russian Federation accountable in a united and decisive way. We must show solidarity with the people of Ukraine and provide whatever help we can as individuals and as institutions. We must show compassion to those who are living in fear for their lives or the lives of their loved ones who are experiencing loss and devastation on an overwhelming scale.

I alongside my colleagues unequivocally condemn Vladimir Putin and the Russian Federation's invasion of Ukraine and their blatant violations of sovereignty, territorial integrity, and the right to self-determination. [Remarks in Ukrainian] [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has the call.

Ukraine

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I, like so many Albertans, have been horrified to see the violent actions of the Russian Federation President, Vladimir Putin. I feel for the many, many Ukrainians living here in Alberta who are watching with horror and worried about the safety of their loved ones. I do know the government provided $1 million in humanitarian aid yesterday for the Ukrainian community, and I want to thank the Premier for that. Can the Premier tell the House what else is being done by the government of Alberta today to assist Ukrainians in our province, and what support has he committed to the federal government to aid in this humanitarian crisis?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his eloquent statement and his thoughtful question. Last night I hosted a round-table meeting including His Excellency the consul general of Ukraine in Alberta, former Premier Stelmach, and leaders of the Ukrainian-Canadian community to seek their input on exactly that question. At that meeting we announced a million dollars of monetary support for the Canada-Ukraine Foundation to provide humanitarian relief to Ukrainian civil society, and I've indicated that we would like to receive input on what additional practical support the government of Alberta could provide.

Mr. Bilous: Through you, Mr. Speaker, thank you for that answer. Alberta's NDP reaffirms our solidarity with the people of Ukraine, and we believe diplomacy, not conflict, is the best way forward. Still, the situation before us is largely out of the control of this Legislature. What we can control is how we support those struggling to locate loved ones in Ukraine. Will the Premier begin establishing specific supports to help Albertans with family in Ukraine reconnect with their loved ones in the country?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the member is right to be concerned about this. In fact, there is a member of my office, the Premier's office staff, who was speaking to his mother in Kharkiv last night as bombs were falling, audible on the telephone. Our hearts go out to all of those Albertans who have loved ones who are being so directly affected by this. The question that the member asks is the responsibility of the consular section of the Department of Global Affairs, but we will provide any necessary assistance to connect Albertans seeking Canadians or relatives to ascertain their well-being.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Premier. Our government was so pleased to celebrate the opening of Alberta's Ukrainian consulate and to declare Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day on September 7 – each year we mark this important occasion – but while those decisions were important and I was proud to play a role in them, they provide little comfort to those seeking some reassurance, some hope in these dark days. People need that comfort here and now. Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier, I'll be attending and speaking at a rally outside of the Legislature this evening in support of Ukrainians here, across Canada, and back home. Will the Premier join in a show of solidarity and unified support of this House at tonight's gathering?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I commend the member for that, and I encourage all members, as I did with the government caucus earlier today, to attend events such as that, which likely will be happening all across the province. As I mentioned, I hosted the event last night, and if I'm able to, I will certainly be present at the function here. I expect that in the days to come, we can see Albertans of Ukrainian origin, but I hope this is a moment for solidarity outside of the Ukrainian community. I hope that all people of goodwill in this province will find a way to express their voice of revulsion at the military aggression of Vladimir Putin, because if it can happen in Europe today, it can happen anywhere.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has the call.

Private Health Care Services

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For two long years Alberta's public health care workers have worked tirelessly, heroically to shield their communities from the COVID-19 pandemic. Sadly, at every turn they've been failed by a UCP government that's more interested in protecting its own political interests than the health of Albertans and their families. Now, instead of taking responsibility for their failures, the UCP is bent on dismantling the public health care system that served us so well. Every dollar spent on profit and shareholding dividends is a dollar not spent on maintaining or staffing public hospitals across Alberta. Why is this Premier doubling down on his plan to funnel health care dollars into the pockets of the UCP's wealthy friends?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that is just completely ridiculous. Under the NDP 15 per cent of surgeries insured by Alberta Health were performed in privately operated chartered surgical facilities. We are simply proposing to increase the percentage in order to perform more surgeries. The NDP's preference, I guess, now that they're not in government, is to create a complete monopoly for surgeries only to be performed in government hospitals, which would only have the effect of lengthening the surgical wait times, forcing people to live in pain as their physical condition deteriorates. That is not compassionate.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of lengthening wait times and people waiting in pain, the Premier likes to tout Saskatchewan as his model for private delivery, and that example is actually very instructive because surgical wait times in Saskatchewan are longer today than they've ever been. They poured tax dollars into a scheme that definitely made a few people very rich but completely failed patients and families in Saskatchewan. Why won't the Premier tell Albertans the whole story about this failed experiment with for-profit health care that he's determined to force on patients and families in Alberta?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, under the current NDP government in British Columbia there is significantly greater private provision of surgery and other care than is the case here in Alberta. In Saskatchewan the Saskatchewan NDP has said that they will not reverse the Saskatchewan strategic surgical initiative because it has been successful, and here in Alberta, under the NDP government, they approved 42 private chartered surgical facilities, adding 40,000 private surgeries to Alberta's capacity, 15 per cent of the total. Why was it okay under the NDP, but innovation is bad under a Conservative government?

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, data from the Saskatchewan health authority, published in the Saskatoon Star Phoenix today, shows that more than 35,000 people are currently waiting for surgery, almost three times as many as were waiting in 2015. Saskatchewan is the third-worst province in Canada for getting knee replacements done on time, the second-worst for hip replacements. They trail Alberta badly on every measure, so why is this Premier so obsessed with imitating this expensive, failed experiment in for-profit health care and imposing higher costs and longer wait times on Alberta patients and families?

Mr. Kenney: I appreciate the question from an expert on surgical wait times, because while he was in office, Mr. Speaker, open-heart surgery wait times increased by 50 per cent in Alberta. Cataract surgery wait times increased by nearly 30 per cent. Hip replacement wait times increased by nearly 30 per cent. Knee replacement wait times increased by 23 per cent. The percentage of patients from the emergency department treated and admitted to hospital within hours had declined from 46 to 44 per cent. We will not accept the NDP's failed record of longer surgical wait times. We're taking action to get the problem under control.

Utility Costs

Ms Ganley: Despite the rosy tweets and videos this government has been sharing, Albertans have been struggling to make ends meet because of skyrocketing utility prices. Yesterday the MLA for Lethbridge-West and I illustrated the choices facing many families, like whether to buy food or keep the electricity on. The Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity dismissed the struggles of these families and blamed them for not seeking price protection. Will the Premier today commit to standing up for these families, or does he share the views of his associate minister?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that coming from a member, first of all, whose government spent $4 billion on new transmission infrastructure, forcing up electricity rates, that shut down in a rush the lowest source of electricity in Alberta, our baseload thermal coal plants, that brought in a massive carbon tax and wedded it to Justin Trudeau's $170 carbon tax plan, that completely screwed up the Balancing Pool, costing Albertans over a billion dollars. If there is problem with electricity prices in Alberta right now, those are the culprits.

Ms Ganley: Since this Premier took office, electricity prices have nearly tripled, and the Premier ruled out any sort of supports for those who are now scaling back on food in order to keep the lights on during an Alberta winter. There are multiple options to help struggling families, but the UCP won't consider any of them. Combined with the UCP's increases to income taxes, park fees, tuition, property taxes, and more, it's making life unaffordable for Albertans. Is the Premier really fine with making families choose between paying their electricity bills or buying diapers for their babies?

Mr. Kenney: No, absolutely not, Mr. Speaker, and that's why Bill 1, passed by this government, was the carbon tax repeal act. That's why we told the power companies that if they wanted to continue to generate power with coal until 2030, they could, unlike the NDP's plan that forced them off the grid. That's why we have stopped new transmission infrastructure, which the NDP overbuilt, that has forced up power prices. If they want to know who's responsible for unreasonably high electricity prices, to coin a phrase, the NDP, well, they should look in the mirror.

Ms Ganley: Last session, when asked about supporting these families, the associate minister proudly bragged to this House that their plan was to do nothing – nothing – as Calgarians are seeing bills increase by up to $460 over last year and nearly half of Albertans report they're having difficulty feeding their families due to these rising costs. Alberta families should never have to choose between putting food on the table and keeping the lights on. Premier, one last time: what are these families supposed to do? Eat in the dark?

Mr. Kenney: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the minister said no such thing. Secondly, will the member rise and admit – admit – that the NDP ideology supports higher electricity prices, higher power prices, higher gas prices, higher heating prices? That's the whole darn point behind their carbon tax. They are trying to make energy less affordable so that people then – what did they say? – take the bus to work. Their carbon tax, their Trudeau carbon tax is what's punishing people. Will the NDP join us in fighting it? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Coutts Border Crossing Blockade

Ms Sweet: Forty-four million dollars per day; $864 million in total. That's how much the illegal Coutts blockade cost the Alberta economy. This blockade hurt all economic sectors in Alberta but hit agriculture the hardest. Delays at the border meant cattle had to wait to be transported. JBS and Cargill, which process two-thirds of the nation's beef, had to cut shifts and delay payments, causing a decrease in auction prices. What will the Premier do to support farmers who've experienced economic loss as a result of this illegal blockade? Will he be providing compensation?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Coutts blockade was an illegal action that was a violation of the rule of law, which is why the RCMP enforced the rule of law. However, while there was great inconvenience, particularly for livestock exporters, the truth is that we worked around the clock to keep the five other ports of entry between Alberta and Montana open and operating with extended hours, with U.S. livestock safety checks. We got the job done to continue with traffic for exports.

Ms Sweet: The UCP should have taken action to stop the illegal blockade, yet instead of acting quickly, and fanning the flames, they didn't. Multiple members of the UCP supported the illegal blockade online, and the Member for Taber-Warner even went to the front lines of this illegal blockade and claimed to be inspired. The supply chain was disrupted greatly over the past few years, and this blockade made those challenges so much worse. Why did the minister of agriculture stay silent while members of his caucus supported illegal blockades which hurt the law-abiding farmers trying to transport their goods? The Premier needs to remove both MLAs out of his caucus and do it today.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, no member of the government caucus supported illegality. A member visited his constituents because that's a member's job. You know one thing that has disturbed supply chains in Canada and in North America? It is Justin Trudeau's ridiculous vaccine mandate for cross-border truckers, that is supported by the NDP, just like his arbitrary use of extraordinary police powers in the Emergencies Act. Why is it that instead of standing up for Albertans, the NDP always stands up for Justin Trudeau?

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, the Coutts border crossing is our only 24-hour border crossing, and a single day of it being closed is too long. There are many actions the government could have taken: seeking a court injunction, suspending commercial operator licences of people blocking the border. But, of course, the minister of agriculture did not want to support those ideas because he never once expressed condemnation of the illegal protest. What were the priorities of this government and the minister of agriculture? Was he concerned with the financial hardships of the agriculture industry, or did he just give up?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we've made very clear our expectation that the law had to be enforced. But while the NDP was screaming, demanding imprudent law enforcement, the government was in the possession of sensitive intelligence from the RCMP about a group of individuals who could lead to potential violence. The NDP would have pushed the RCMP into a provocation that could have led to a violent situation. Thank goodness they were not in office. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South is the only one with the call.

Red Deer Regional Hospital Expansion

Mr. Stephan: Yesterday the Premier, joined by ministers, including of Education and the Member for Red Deer-North, announced a monumental expansion of the Red Deer regional hospital. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and I were also very happy to attend what my mayor called a “monumental day.” To the Premier: could you please share details about this monumental investment and how it will bless families and individuals throughout central Alberta? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you to the Member for Red Deer-South, Mr. Speaker, for his question but, more importantly, for his diligent work on behalf of his constituents, together with the Member for Red Deer-North and all members from central Alberta, who have fought for years together with the community for this critical renewal and expansion of hospital capacity in central Alberta. Yesterday: the single largest capital investment in the history of central Alberta, the single largest hospital expansion in the history of Alberta health care, $1.8 billion investment, that will increase by 54 per cent the number of beds in the Red Deer hospital.

Mr. Stephan: Given that the NDP did jack squat, given that we know that an expanded hospital is only as good as the services it provides and the health professionals serving in it and given that there are perpetual, chronic shortage issues for health professionals at the hospital and in other locations, can the Premier share how this government plans to address the ongoing AHS shortages of health professionals required to provide health services at the hospital? [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. Order. My only guess is that “jack squat” is very close to the edge of parliamentary language.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can inform the hon. member that there are more nurses and doctors working in our health care system today than ever before, and the member will be pleased with additional investments to expand our health care workforce and capacity.

But in 1997 the NDP received a report saying that the Red Deer regional hospital was under massive pressure and needed urgently an expansion, and do you know what their response was? The square root of nothing. Not a dollar. Not a dime, Mr. Speaker. Why did the NDP abandon the people of central Alberta?

Mr. Stephan: Given that the NDP occupies seats doing nothing, given that for too long residents of central Alberta have experienced reduced service, even diversions, because of AHS, the NDP, and growing demand and population at the hospital, can the Premier tell the Legislature why he thinks it took AHS so long to get to this day and why this government decided to make this a priority?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I share the hon. member’s frustration at how long these projects take, but we must avoid – we must avoid – a repeat of the Grande Prairie hospital situation that took several years and went twice over budget. I’m just saying that he sympathizes, not that he’s responsible. I know that the hon. the Finance minister is very focused on making sure that we do this right, and the Minister of Infrastructure will work with the Member for Red Deer-South to make sure that it’s done on time and on budget.

The Speaker: I know that the Premier would never bring a member of the public in to the debate here on the floor of the Chamber.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Member for Edmonton-South West

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans were rightly concerned when they learned that the former Minister of Justice, now the Member for Edmonton-South West, called the chief of police after receiving a distracted driving ticket. Actions like this are completely unacceptable and violate the rule of law that all Albertans follow on a daily basis. While a report into this serious matter has been completed, it has been hidden from the public, who deserve to see it. Will the Premier, while leaving, commit to releasing the full report today? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I know, Mr. Speaker, that you know it’s a point of order to mention whether a member is in the House or not or anything about that, which just happened.

But the hon. member also knows – and he’s only right about one thing – the report has been received, and in due course, which won’t be too long, there will be a report coming back to this House, and that would be the orderly way to resolve this issue, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: My hesitation was that I thought that perhaps someone was referring – I just didn’t hear it quite correctly, and that would be a point of order if he was referring to the presence or absence of a member. I’m sure he won’t be doing it again.

Mr. Sabir: Given that during the week of lawlessness we saw at the Coutts border crossing, Alberta had a part-time Justice minister and given that Albertans didn’t see any action from this government except that members of their caucus were encouraging law enforcement to break the law and others in the government caucus were actually breaking the law themselves by joining in the blockade, would the minister without title, the Minister for Nothing perhaps you might call him, have done anything different to end the illegal blockade?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy and the Acting Minister of Justice.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite that barrage of insults against me, I’d like to affirm to the room that our government took action with respect to the Coutts blockade. It became very apparent partway through the border blockade that there was a very dangerous system and a very dangerous element of people down there. While the NDP was tweeting about getting an injunction, we were cautious. We let the police do the work. It wasn’t escalated. There was no violence. There was no violence, and the border was cleared.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the Member for Edmonton-South West, the Minister of Nothing, is still a member of Executive Council and given that Albertans who are working longer and harder to deal with a government that has made life harder and more expensive for families have a right to know what a member of this cabinet is doing to support them, can the minister without a responsibility from Edmonton-South West explain what exactly he is doing these days in Executive Council? Be specific, Minister of Nothing.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:11.
The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The way that question was asked was below the hon. member, really based on attempts to make personal insults, which I suppose is the NDP way of doing things. This issue will be resolved in due course. As the hon. members have noted, there's a report forthcoming. It will come to this House shortly, and that is the proper way to deal with this, not through personal insults, which seem to be what the other side is up to today.

Coal Policy Committee Report

Mr. Schmidt: Speaking of reports that we're waiting to see, Mr. Speaker, it's been 57 days since this minister has had the coal report dropped on her desk for review. Fifty-seven days is a long time. In 57 days you can sow and harvest a crop of carrots. In 57 days you can study and train to get a pilot's licence. In 57 days you can, arguably, sail around the entire globe, but for some reason this minister has not been able to review and release the coal report presented to her 57 days ago. My question to the minister is simple. What's the holdup?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. We'll be releasing the coal report in the next couple of weeks along with our answers to their very, very thoughtful recommendations. We'll be taking action to ensure that the eastern slopes are protected.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that this coal committee spent months putting together their findings for the minister to review and given that multiple other reports have been completed on coal mining in the eastern slopes in that time, including a wide-ranging analysis from the University of Calgary concluding that the net economic benefit of coal mining in these areas is minimal, and given that even in the initial survey from the coal committee the very first step concluded that this government must immediately stop coal exploration in the Rockies, why is the minister dragging her feet to review the hard work of this committee and answer Albertans? Does she simply not agree with their findings?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, I share the member's concerns and his love of the eastern slopes. Every place in Alberta is beautiful, but the beauty in the eastern slopes is unparalleled, and that's why we will be releasing the coal report with a series of measures to ensure that the eastern slopes are protected now and for future generations.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that in an update to the High River town council earlier this year the mayor described the Premier as, quote, a full-on, unapologetic supporter of coal mining, end quote, and given that this minister's backpedalling after rescinding the 1976 Loughheed coal policy made it very clear that this report was to look for ways to responsibly mine coal in the Rockies even after Albertans have made it clear that they want zero coal mining activity, when is the minister going to finally listen to Albertans and stop this government's attempts to mine coal in the eastern slopes? Just say that you'll ban it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The coal committee heard from Albertans over a period of about five months. They've made some very thoughtful recommendations, which I'm looking forward to implementing. We'll be releasing the results from the Coal Policy Committee in the next couple of weeks, with steps to ensure that we will be protecting the eastern slopes. That is something that you'll be hearing from more in the future. There's nothing more beautiful than our eastern slopes, and our government will protect them.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Mr. Barnes: The theme of this week's Speech from the Throne was self-congratulatory rhetoric, proving once again this government couldn't be any more tone deaf. With unemployment above the national average and runaway inflation destroying savings, Alberta families are worse off today. A speech claiming that "our economy is strong, and our quality of life is second to none" doesn't change the harsh reality Alberta families are facing. At 2,500 words the throne speech didn't mention inflation once. To the Premier: exactly how detached from reality is your government?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. Our economy is strong, and our quality of life is second to none. Our very skilled, talented, and hard-working Finance minister will rise in this House this afternoon to lay out our plan going forward, which will be in the interest of all Albertans, will strengthen the economy, will strengthen the quality of life, will strengthen the investment in Alberta, will strengthen the health care system, and will strengthen the way that Albertans will want to be here forever, because that's the great job he does.

Mr. Barnes: Given that in the Speech from the Throne the government is trying to claim, as he did, that Alberta is in great economic shape and given that the government is also doubling down on corporate welfare in some misguided scheme to fix the economy and given that far too many Albertans are struggling to make ends meet while inflation destroys their savings, again to the Premier: if you truly believe Alberta families are better off under your leadership, why are you doubling down on Liberal-style corporate welfare and NDP-style tax-and-spend schemes?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, the Finance minister is going to be making his presentation here momentarily to highlight the improvement to the fiscal situation here in the province of Alberta, and I'm excited to hear what he has to bring to this Chamber. On top of that, 130,000 jobs created last year alone in this province, recovering all the jobs lost during the pandemic. Alberta is going to continue to lead the entire country in growth, more diversified than ever.

Mr. Barnes: Given that it is obvious by the throne speech that this government has become completely disconnected from the realities facing Alberta families and given that in December Albertans paid 4.8 per cent more for goods and services and given that meat prices are up 13 per cent, electricity prices are up 34 per cent, gasoline prices 37 per cent and given that prices continue to rise – some restaurants now are writing their prices in temporary marker – my question to the Finance minister: how much does a jug of milk cost Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry the hon. member is so offended by 130,000 new jobs. I'm sorry the hon. member is offended by the investment, the job creation, the things that'll actually allow Albertans to afford that jug of milk, the things that'll allow Albertans to support their families, the things that'll allow Albertans to pay their mortgages. I know the hon. member is offended by the success of this Finance minister and this government in helping Alberta's economy come back. We're guilty of that good work.

Children and Youth in Care

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, every year the office of the Child and Youth Advocate reports progress made by ministries that serve youth and children on implementing the advocate's recommendations. These recommendations come mainly from mandatory death reviews, which identify the circumstances that led to the death of a child or former child in care, and have their roots in policy and procedure, yet the UCP government allowed 21 recommendations to close last year due to lack of progress. Can the Minister of Children's Services explain to this Assembly what work has been done on improving child intervention under her watch? Clearly, that work did not address the recommendations of the advocate.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do actually appreciate the question from the member opposite. We are absolutely committed to continuously improving our child intervention services and the programs that we offer children and youth in care. The Child and Youth Advocate is a valued and respected partner in this work and adviser, and I do want to thank him, as I know his retirement is upcoming, for the very important work that he does and the relationship that we've built over the last two years. We do review all recommendations that come out of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate to determine whether or not changes to current policies or practices are needed to help improve safety for children. We will continue to do that.

Ms Pancholi: It's a lot of talk and no action. Given that the 2018 Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention recommended enhanced accountability for youth-serving ministries, reviewing the annual report of the Child and Youth Advocate is part of that and given that all those reviews have taken place under this government and that each time the UCP has used their majority to refuse the advocate's calls to hear from relevant ministries on the work that they've done to address these recommendations, to the same minister. This is a pattern of dodging accountability. Are UCP committee members acting to protect the government because there are no answers, or is it because no work is being done by this government?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell you – and I've committed to this a number of times in this House – is that unlike the members opposite, part of the reason why members on our side of the House called for an all-party panel on child intervention was because there was absolutely no transparency and no accountability under their government. That is not the case. In fact, every time we receive recommendations from the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, we do look at those recommendations, we respond, and those responses are in fact posted publicly online. We can send the link if she needs it.

Ms Pancholi: Well, here's the minister's chance to prove she's committed to accountability. Given that when the Legislative Offices Committee met in January to review the Child and Youth Advocate's annual report, the Member for Calgary-Currie said that that committee wasn't the right forum for the government to answer questions about its work, if any, to protect children and youth in care and given that last week I wrote to the chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities asking her to call a meeting to hear from all ministries with outstanding recommendations from the Child and Youth Advocate, will the Minister of Children's Services commit today to supporting this call for public accountability to ensure improved outcomes for children and youth in care?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite would know, I can't speak to what had gone on at committee, but what I can tell you is this: we are absolutely committed to looking at every single recommendation that comes to not only Children's Services, but I do know that my colleagues in other ministries, whether that be Justice, Health, Community and Social Services, mental health and addictions, take those recommendations seriously, and we will absolutely respond with changes, whether they be to legislation, to regulations, or to policy and practice, where they're needed.

Seniors' Benefit Program

Ms Sigurdson: Cost of living is increasing for all Albertans, and seniors are feeling the hit. Insurance has skyrocketed, and utility prices are out of control because of this UCP government. As inflation continues to increase, it's harder for seniors to afford their basic needs. As minister I was proud to index the seniors' benefit to the rate of inflation for the thousands of seniors who require it so that when the cost of living increases, so does their support. Will the Minister of Seniors and Housing commit to tying the seniors' benefit to increases in inflation so seniors are supported?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, of course, we always protect seniors, and we provide a number of programs, services to seniors and make sure they stay healthy and connected in the community. It's just wonderful, your record. Every year the Minister of Health and myself and other ministries provide $8.6 billion in service and support for investing in seniors. We will continue to look after our seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that many seniors are desperately in need of affordable housing – in fact, over 45 per cent of seniors spend more than 30 per cent of their income on housing – and given that as the cost of living continues to increase, seniors are worried if they'll be able to remain in their own homes, for seniors in need of affordable housing the seniors' benefit is crucial. Will the minister explain why she thought cutting the seniors' benefit was a good idea, and will she commit to reversing this cruel decision?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, we have been building up to 15,000 units so far in two and a half years, way more than the NDP built in the last four years. We will continue to build more affordable housing for seniors, for the most vulnerable, who need housing the most.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that seniors have been disrespected by this government as they were neglected throughout the pandemic, as their pensions have been attacked, and as those on the seniors' benefit are forced to make ends meet amid skyrocketing costs and no government support and given that if the seniors' benefit was reindexed to inflation, a couple would have $350 more to help them – I know for many who have been reaching out to me, that would make a real difference in their lives – can the minister explain why the UCP is so committed to ensuring that seniors have less? Why is she forcing many to live in poverty?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, in Alberta most of our seniors are enjoying the highest benefits across Canada, and we have the lowest poverty for the seniors, so we will continue to do that. But I remind you that I don't understand that the NDP in the last four years hasn't done much for the seniors, and now they question this government. But I remind you to wait till you hear the budget for later on this year, and then you'll know how much we support our seniors in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Digital Economy Program and Rural Internet Service

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. COVID-19 has created numerous challenges for small businesses. As people become more reluctant to shop in person, the digital marketplace is increasingly important. Many small and medium-sized businesses do not have a business website, mainly because of the lack of technical expertise or high costs. In order to help these businesses overcome these hurdles, our government provided funding to ShopHERE, powered by Google. Can the Minister of JEI advise this House on the objectives of this program and its eligibility criteria?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to that member for the question. Small businesses during the pandemic were disrupted, and more and more activity was happening online, so we want to help small businesses across Alberta digitize and get on there so they can access their customers through the web. So we have partnered with ShopHERE, powered by Google, as well as a digital service squad to have those free services to Alberta-based businesses with 50 or fewer employees to help them get online and serve their customers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that it's become increasingly important for small and medium-sized businesses to take advantage of digital marketplaces to get their goods in front of customers and given that this program is an important tool to help business owners set up and manage their online store, can the Minister of JEI update this House on how many small and medium-sized businesses have applied for this funding and what the application deadline is?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to that member for the question. Over 1,000 small businesses from across Alberta have taken advantage of this program to get online or improve their online presence. Applications remain open. Go to Digital Main Street. Just google Digital Main Street. You'll be able to get there in order to access those programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the importance of a larger digital presence for small businesses for their growth and recovery and given that many small businesses in rural communities, like those in my constituency, do not have reliable connectivity and given that that digital divide can make it difficult for small-business owners to access services of the digital economy program, to the Minister of Service Alberta: can you please tell us what the government is doing to eliminate the digital divide so that small-business owners in rural Alberta can take full advantage of these programs?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and it's a great question. You know, there are so many reasons why access to reliable connectivity, reliable high-speed Internet, is so important to help Albertans and Alberta businesses reach their fullest potential. That is why I am so excited that our government was able to announce last summer a $150 million commitment to building high-speed connectivity infrastructure in rural Alberta. Furthermore, I was even more excited to be able to announce that we had negotiated with the federal government to convince them to match our $150 million. That's $300 million, and now we're working with the telcos to get that number even higher. We'll be announcing many projects in the very near future.

Mr. Dach: I've heard many tragic stories from Alberta's trucking industry about companies impacted by the criminal blockade at Coutts. I've heard of truckers stranded for days with no access to food, water, or even washrooms. These truckers lost work, money, and in some cases entire shipments were spoiled and had to be thrown away, real impacts hitting working people hard. But the UCP has done nothing to compensate them for these hardships. Can the Minister of Transportation please tell this House what specifically she did to support these workers, or was she joining her caucus colleagues in cheerleading for those who held the border hostage?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, I had heard those same stories as well. In fact, I have a number of truckers in my constituency. One of the things that we did was that we made sure that we had extended hours at other border entries across the border to ensure that alternate routes were available for truckers. There were a number of other measures that were undertaken, but ultimately clearing that blockade, that illegal blockade, was within the purview and realm of the RCMP.

Mr. Dach: Given that the blockade in Coutts lasted more than two weeks and cost the Alberta economy at least $864 million and given that the MLA who in theory represents Coutts could care less about the harm caused and given that he said that the illegal blockaders were, quote, inspiring nations, given that statement, will the minister rise in this House and tell him and others in the caucus that supported this illegal blockade that they were wrong? Will she then join me in calling for them to be removed from the government caucus?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I had gone on my social media and clearly articulated that the blockade was illegal, and I had called for law enforcement to do their very best to ensure that the border was cleared. In terms of what we did as government, we supported the RCMP and law enforcement to the best of our ability, but ultimately it was within their purview to take care of the situation.

Mr. Dach: Given that independent truckers were especially hard hit by this illegal and intolerable blockade and given that one company owner reported that he missed out on nearly two weeks of work because of the blockade and given that this same employer reported that the blockade was having a trickle-down effect on the pay of warehouse workers and delivery drivers – the inaction and lack of support from this government for the people who work to keep our supply chain open is shameful notwithstanding the comments of the minister – does the minister regret not standing up against her colleagues who supported the blockade? What will she do to make amends for this failure? Again, tell the Premier to kick these MLAs out of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I have no regrets around the efforts that the government of Alberta undertook to help clear that blockade. Ultimately, it was within the realm of law enforcement to take care of it. I have been in touch with truckers who have been impacted, and we have had many conversations. Yes, the supply chain was disrupted, but we mitigated it by making sure that we had other border entries that were open with extended hours.

Rogers Communications

Member Ceci: In the last election the Premier promised his corporate tax cut would fill the office towers in downtown Calgary. A year later the Premier accelerated the tax cut and told companies that they would be irresponsible for not moving to Calgary. Since then the number of head offices went from 117 to 102. Now the downtown office vacancy rate sits at record-high levels, with a third of the office space sitting empty. Now another head office is about to leave as the Shaw-Rogers deal goes through the regulatory process. What is the government doing to ensure this deal won't hurt Calgary's downtown even further?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, it's a great question even if the hon. member is ill informed, who ought to know because it's been explained to him and others in this House numerous times. There are head offices moving to Calgary on a regular basis. The economy is being diversified at a rate higher than ever before in Alberta. Investment is at record levels. That's how you fill up the towers. That's how you get the head offices in here. Those folks raised the corporate taxes, collected less. We dropped them, and now businesses are coming back.

Member Ceci: The numbers are the numbers, Mr. Speaker.

Given that before the pandemic investment dropped, our economy shrank, 50,000 full-time jobs were lost, and companies packed up and left and given that Calgary already had the highest unemployment rate in the country among major cities and given that Rogers has promised to maintain the jobs in Alberta but has gone through a transition at the top, what guarantees does the government have from Rogers that the promise to maintain jobs hasn't changed with the new leadership at the company?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, it's time to give a little bit of a legacy tour again on the NDP. Their Energy minister literally told Albertans to go to B.C. to get a job. In 2021 a hundred thousand jobs were created in Alberta. Venture capital records: under the NDP just a nugget of $100 million in venture capital; five times that in 2021 in Alberta. We're more diversified than ever, and we're going to come out of this pandemic stronger than ever. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Member Ceci: Given that Rogers initially promised to create a fund to connect rural, remote, and Indigenous communities to high-speed Internet and given that combining these two companies has led to concerns about decreased competition that would lead to higher cellphone and Internet bills at a time when Albertans are already struggling to make ends meet due to the rising costs under the UCP and, once again, given that Rogers has gone through a leadership change, what guarantees does the government have that the promises of increased access to broadband and affordability will be maintained? Please be specific.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, Rogers is dedicated to establishing a western headquarters in the city of Calgary and, in addition to that, creating a 500-person engineering hub as well on top of that. We'll make sure we continue to work with them to make sure that that commitment is fulfilled. They're also promising to invest billions of dollars into the province of Alberta, creating thousands of jobs. We're going to make sure we hold them accountable to those commitments. On top of that, we're creating the best possible investment environment, period. Rogers wants to be here because of the talent that we have and the jobs that can be created.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Alberta Health Services

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The past two years have brought to light the need for accountability in health. The Department of Health and Alberta Health Services, a government-funded organization, have ultimately been the source of information from which Executive Council received recommendations on responding to COVID-19. Can the Minister of Health tell the House about the process for receiving information from AHS and Alberta's Department of Health which was used to determine the types of public health measures implemented here in the province?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The COVID-19 pandemic has challenged governments world-wide. Alberta's government continues to rely on Alberta Health Services and Alberta Health to share information, as we have throughout the entire COVID-19 pandemic, including data, trends, and information related to the pandemic's impact on the health care system. In addition, the AHS Scientific Advisory Group provides research and evidence-based advice to Alberta's government on a number of pandemic-related issues, concerns, and trends. This is in addition to the public updates by AHS leadership, Alberta's chief medical officer of health as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta Health Services' vaccine mandate led to rural Alberta losing access to health care to the point that our government had to intervene and given that those who returned to work didn't feel welcome as a result of their earlier vaccine mandates, that placed hundreds of nurses and doctors on unpaid leave, can the hon. Minister of Health tell Albertans why the United Conservative government felt the need to step in on this workplace vaccine mandate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the hon. member for the question. I can tell this House that I heard directly from the hon. member and many others regarding the challenges created by the AHS workplace vaccine policy and the impact that it could have on providing health care services during the fifth wave, particularly in rural Alberta. That's why Alberta's government took steps to ensure that Alberta Health Services employees would have the option to submit a negative test every three days so that they could continue to work and provide services to Albertans during the fifth wave.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the minister. Given that our government had to put in restrictions to protect the health care capacity and given that these restrictions have led to negative impacts on Albertans' lives and livelihoods and given that AHS is responsible for ensuring that the system has sufficient capacity, to the Minister of Health: what is the government doing to ensure that we have capacity in the future and that there will be an assessment of AHS's response, including leadership, to the COVID-19 pandemic and its impact on our health care system?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are continually reviewing AHS's programs and processes, and that will always be a part of our effort to improve the health care delivery system here in Alberta. The audit completed by Ernst & Young in 2019 informed that initiative, augmented by the lessons we have learned throughout the pandemic. As we have committed, we will review the whole-of-government approach to COVID-19, which includes AHS, and as affirmed in the Speech from the Throne and as we'll hear later in this budget, our government is committed to increasing our hospital capacity, lowering surgical wait times, and ensuring the continued care of Albertans no matter where they are in the province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. There will be no break between now and when we move to Members' Statements as we will have a recess at 3 o'clock, where members can prepare themselves for the Budget Address.

Calgary Downtown Revitalization

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, like more than 30 per cent of Albertans, I'm proud to call Calgary home. Calgary is a wonderful place to live, full of ambitious, forward-looking people, but there is no denying that our city has faced tough times in recent years. From the oil price crash to the pandemic, we have been hit by one crisis after another. Calgarians know we need new ideas and bold leadership to come out of this time stronger. That's why I was shocked that in the entire throne speech, a speech in which a government outlines its core priorities, Calgary was mentioned just once.

Mr. Speaker, let's be honest. Calgary has never been this Premier's priority. He promised to fill Calgary's office towers, but the latest CBRE figures show the vacancy rate at 33.2 per cent, the highest ever recorded for a major Canadian city. When it was finally announced, after years of UCP obstruction, that the green line would go ahead, the Premier didn't even bother to show up to the announcement. The truth is that this Premier won't be looking an inch south of Red Deer until after his leadership review in April.

Well, I'm glad to say that the Alberta NDP caucus is picking up the slack. We have been undertaking consultations with Calgarians, elected officials, and industry experts, and we have formed a plan that will bring new energy into Calgary's downtown. Our plan includes the creation of an innovation district in downtown Calgary, encouraging collaboration among postsecondary students, entrepreneurs, start-ups, and business incubators, all located within blocks of each other. It includes establishing new postsecondary campuses and supporting the city of Calgary's downtown office conversion plan. We are proposing storefront revitalization grants, the reinstatement of Alberta's investor tax credit, and the creation of a new venture fund for Albertans to help them invest directly in early-stage companies, start-ups, and scale-ups. We will be releasing our plan in the coming weeks, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. I'd just remind members during Members' Statements to keep all of their private conversation as quiet as possible or discreetly move it to your respective lounges.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville has a statement to make.

Ukraine

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night I was humbled to participate in a round-table with the Premier and key representatives from Alberta's Ukrainian community. I'm a descendant of the first Ukrainian settlers to Canada, and I'm proud to be part of the 350,000 Albertans of Ukrainian descent. Ukrainians have made untold contributions to our province and to our country. Our beautiful culture stands in stark contrast to the horrific roads we've walked. The unbridled evil we are witnessing in eastern Europe is all too familiar to Ukrainian people.

My maternal grandfather, Mike Huley, left Ukraine in the early 20th century due to the famine inflicted by the evil Communist regime of Joseph Stalin. He came to Canada with his brother at the age of 17, never to return to his homeland again. There would be nothing to come home to as his father and brother were killed by the Russians and his mother and sisters were forced off the farm. Later in life a priest gave him a picture of an elderly woman begging on the street. It was his mother. He would send her money, only to have it seized. He sent her babushkas, which she sold on the streets to survive, and this is how she spent her final years.

Last night many Ukrainians lost their lives at the blood-soaked hands of Vladimir Putin, and this is just the beginning. Just as I did when I wrote the Prime Minister on January 21, I am again calling for the Canadian government and democratic governments across the world to impose the strongest sanctions possible on Vladimir Putin and his regime. History will not be kind to Vladimir Putin, and it will not be kind to those who fought against energy security for the free world. But there will be a time and a place for those conversations. Right now my thoughts are with the people of Ukraine. A humanitarian crisis is unfolding, and democratic nations must stand together and unite to protect the innocent, peaceful, and beautiful Ukraine.

God bless Ukraine.

Economic Diversification

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to diversifying Alberta's economy as we work to create jobs, opportunity, and prosperity for all, and it's working. In 2021 it was a record-breaking year for Alberta's exports, and we saw significant investments in tech, film and television, energy, and record investments in venture capital.

Alberta is now home to more than 3,000 technology companies. To support this growing momentum and strengthen our workforce, we've introduced the accelerated immigration pathway for the tech sector. This initiative aims to attract highly skilled tech professionals and will help tech employers grow their businesses while bolstering the skills of the wider Alberta workforce.

We're also diversifying and growing through Alberta's booming film and television industry. In 2021 alone we had nearly $1 billion in production costs. The Last of Us, which HBO shot right here in Alberta, was Canada's largest ever film production. With high-budget, high-profile projects putting Alberta on the map, we hope to attract even larger projects moving forward.

At the same time, this government is dedicated to investing in clean, renewable energies. We have developed strategies to capitalize on opportunities in hydrogen and essential and rare-earth minerals, which are critical to supporting a low-carbon economy. As a result, Alberta is already among global leaders in emissions-reducing technology. At our current pace we are set to fully transition from coal-powered electricity by the end of 2023, six years ahead of the federal target and despite the pandemic.

Furthermore, in 2020 we broke an all-time record for venture capital investments, closing $455 million in deals. As of September 2021 we had surpassed that record by 5.5 per cent, and just this past month the Alberta Enterprise Corporation announced $31 million to help Alberta technology and health innovation companies grow.

Mr. Speaker, against all odds Alberta's economy is growing and diversifying. I'm excited to see the new and diverse opportunities for my constituents from Calgary-South East and for all Albertans.

Thank you.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Mr. Carson: This UCP government is hammering household budgets for Alberta families every single month. Thanks to the UCP, Albertans are paying more income tax, more property tax, more school fees, more tuition, more interest on student debt, more for camping, more for car insurance, and more for utilities. We can all see what's happening at the grocery store as well. The same basket of groceries is getting more and more expensive every month.

In a recent Angus Reid poll 47 per cent of respondents in Alberta said that it was difficult or very difficult to afford enough food for their family. Now, when in government, the NDP put a cap on auto insurance rate increases. The UCP, of course, removed that cap to pander to insurance lobbyists, and now Albertans are reaching out to me with bills that have spiked by 40 per cent or more when they are barely even driving their vehicles. We've heard from Albertans who've had to abandon their car they used to go to work because they can't afford the insurance.

The UCP dismantled the price protections that the NDP built into the electricity system, and now Alberta families are paying hundreds of dollars more every month. Yesterday my colleagues showed what that means in real terms. A shopping cart stacked full of food and diapers: that's being taken away by these soaring costs. Young Albertans are being hit with massive hikes to postsecondary tuition and have had to pay higher interest on the debt they're piling up to pay them.

Seniors and vulnerable Albertans can afford less and less food every month because the UCP uncoupled their benefits from inflation, something they specifically promised they wouldn't do. Even the child and family benefit buys less and less every month, making it harder and harder to raise a family in Alberta.

Instead of fixing these mistakes, the UCP wants to press ahead with more expensive vanity projects that Albertans don't want and gamble away their pension savings. This UCP government, simply put, is incompetent, Mr. Speaker, and they are completely out of touch with the punishing monthly costs they are forcing on Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Utility Costs

Mr. Rowsell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently Albertans have seen significant increases in their utility bills, and some of my constituents have written to me asking: what can be done? A few repeat the opposition canard that the removal of the NDP price cap is entirely to blame. By using the Alberta consumer advocate comparison tool, I have demonstrated to several constituents that the cap removal is virtually an irrelevance. It is also important to recognize that all this price cap does is mask the true cost and move the burden from ratepayers to taxpayers, who are often the same people.

I also pointed out that while distracting consumers with their price cap, the NDP simultaneously gouged them with an unnecessary carbon tax. We made it our first order of business to remove this tax. I have spoken previously in the House regarding the incomprehensible ideology that believes a carbon tax will save the planet. These taxes disproportionately harm the poorest in society, a group the NDP claims to champion. The true cause of the price increases is threefold: increases in distribution and transmission charges due to infrastructure development and maintenance, a steep increase in the federal carbon tax, and global market conditions.

Not to mention that the NDP made matters worse by prematurely closing coal-fired power stations. They celebrated this phase-out without ever mentioning to Albertans that moving away from that reliable and affordable power source would inevitably mean that bills would increase. They didn't warn Albertans. They didn't have a plan to mitigate the negative effects of their policy. The closest thing that came to a plan was hiding behind a rate cap, which they also did not share the true cost of.

Mr. Speaker, among the many thankful announcements in the throne speech, I was delighted to see the government give notice to introduce a natural gas consumer protection program. While this is good news, it is incumbent upon this House to seek to remove carbon taxes on personal utility bills and find more sustainable ways to fund vital energy infrastructure.

Law Enforcement and Public Safety

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, I want to express my deepest condolences to the family and the community of Latjor Tuel. Last week Latjor

Tuel was shot in a confrontation with Calgary Police Service. His death is a reminder that the use of force must always be the last resort and is not a substitute for trauma-informed care and mental health support. Racialized communities deserve better care and compassion from institutions, including the police.

I stand before you today to advocate for those who see themselves, their family, and their communities reflected in Latjor. As elected officials it is our moral responsibility to ensure the safety and well-being of the people we represent. As part of that responsibility, the NDP caucus consulted with hundreds of Albertans on the issue of public safety. The communities we have met want to take an approach to public safety that extends beyond policing. Participants told us that they want better and deeper consideration for how social determinants of health impact public safety, more wraparound services, and community-centred approaches to law enforcement.

That is why I am calling on this House, this Legislature, to take action to strengthen citizen oversight processes and bodies to address and investigate complaints against law enforcement; to ensure ongoing antiracism, cultural knowledge, sensitivity education, and trauma-informed training for law enforcement; creating cultural and diversity liaison positions to integrate better the needs of communities in policing; building and supporting trauma-informed mental health supports for vulnerable populations; and, lastly, I am calling for a special antiracism panel to be involved in a review of the Police Act that would specifically bring a report with recommendations on improving policing and the broader justice system.

As we navigate through the challenges of this modern world, I hope this Assembly can work together to make Alberta better for all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has a statement.

Ukraine

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this House meets today, Ukraine is being attacked from the air, sea, and land, from the north, south, and the east by the Russian superpower in a blatant act of imperial aggression. The armed forces and the people in Ukraine are resisting the invader. It is clear to this MLA that it is time for this Legislature to place this issue before God. I would like to read the 23rd Psalm and ask the Legislature to use the remaining time of this member's statement in silent prayer for the people of Ukraine.

The Lord is my shepherd. I shall not want. He makes me lie down in green pastures. He leads me beside the still waters. He restores my soul, and He leads me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil for You are with me. Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort me in the presence of mine enemies. You anoint my head with oil, and my cup runs over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Mr. Stephan: Amen.

Red Deer Regional Hospital Expansion

Mr. Stephan: Mr. Speaker, the Red Deer regional hospital serves about 400,000 throughout central Alberta. In 2017, in response to negligence by AHS, NDP governments, citizens formed the Society for Hospital Expansion in Central Alberta, or SHECA. SHECA forced, through FOIP, AHS data showing that the central zone was ignored and neglected over the past decade, receiving only about one-tenth of health funding compared to the rest of the province. In the result, residents of central Alberta were forced to Edmonton and Calgary for services that should have been available locally. Sometimes they died in the process of doing so such as from heart attacks.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP were aware of this unfairness, but what did the socialists do about it? They did nothing. They were too busy forcing an NDP drug site on Red Deer, but we should remember that throughout this unfairness one variable remained the same: AHS. AHS needs to be dismantled and built back better.

Nevertheless, yesterday marked a transformative day for the hospital and for central Alberta with a $1.8 billion expansion. I am happy for community leaders like SHECA, who advocated for fairness based on merit and need. Thank you. But, most important, I am happy for families and individuals in central Alberta, who will be blessed by this monumental investment with better health services and outcomes as they live and work in our communities.

Speech from the Throne and Red Tape Reduction

Mr. Nielsen: This week we heard this government's throne speech, and for those Albertans watching, it's clear that the speech was more about saving this Premier's leadership than putting forward a vision for Albertans. The plan for our largest city: not present. A plan for agriculture: nowhere to be seen. A plan to make life more affordable for Albertans: not this government's priority, apparently.

Instead, Albertans heard the same thing they've been hearing since this government took office, including promises of more red tape reduction, which, sadly, is the closest thing this government has to an economic plan. Their trophy: a pair of golden scissors. But the pain experienced by Albertans: that's what really cuts deep. While the Premier spends $10 million to $12 million on this ministry, Albertans are left wondering: what exactly are they getting for this? Some of the, quote, red tape that the UCP cut includes a corporate handout that went towards creating jobs in Newfoundland, Wisconsin, and others but not in Alberta; firing the Election Commissioner, who was investigating the UCP leadership race; cancelling environmental monitoring during the pandemic; lifting the Loughheed policy designed to protect the eastern slopes from being torn down for coal mining; selling parks; trying to steal the pensions of teachers; raising income taxes; slashing supports for the most vulnerable; cutting education funding; and more.

As they've hinted at, I'm sure Albertans can expect to see the next great red tape initiative from this government to be a headlong drive to privatize our health care system.

After nearly three years of this UCP government, Albertans deserve a real plan, a plan not based on dated buzzwords and the Premier's failed priorities but one that reflects the priorities of Albertans and builds the future. Even though Albertans didn't get that in this plan in this throne speech – and many doubt that they will see that in today's budget – rest assured that in 2023 they will have a plan and a leader to build Alberta in the future.

The Speaker: Unfortunately, the daily Routine has not been extended, and now that it is 3 o'clock, it concludes the daily Routine.

We will take a 15-minute recess as the Minister of Finance, budget officials, media, and others prepare for the Budget Address. The House will reconvene at 3:15.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:59 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Members, prior to moving to the Budget Address, I'd just like to invite members of the Assembly. Immediately following adjournment, for those that would like to join the Speaker here around the dais, we will be taking a picture as members of the Assembly in support of the people of Ukraine. Completely optional. I know that many people have many responsibilities immediately following the address, but you would be welcome to join me. We will be prepared to do that immediately following the address.

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise.

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province of Alberta for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2023, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government of Alberta for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2023, and recommends the same to the Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2022-23 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the 2022-23 government estimates. In addition, I also wish to table the 2022 to '25 government of Alberta strategic plan and the Budget 2022 ministry business plans.

Budget Address

4. Mr. Toews moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the government's 2022-25 fiscal plan and move Government Motion 4.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honour to rise in the Assembly today to present Budget 2022. This is the fourth budget I've presented on behalf of Albertans, and although each one was unique in context and at times extraordinary, the overarching themes in all have remained steadfastly unchanged. We remain relentless in our focus to position our province for not just economic recovery but long-term exceptional economic growth. We're unwavering in our support for health care, with record-high investment to support key system capacity, and we're committed to responsible and sustainable fiscal management, tethered by three key fiscal anchors.

I want to pause, Mr. Speaker, and begin to unpack these tenets. Why does any of this matter? Do we discuss fiscal anchors or economic growth and job creation to pat ourselves on the back or to tick a box in our list of goals? Is this just a procedural exercise and the shuffling of numbers on a ledger? The fact is that behind every number I present and every principle I set forth is the life of an Albertan.

Mr. Speaker, behind every job created is dignity and independence for an Albertan. Behind every thriving small business is the opportunity to impact a family, a community, our province. Behind every dollar that we don't add to our deficit stand our grandchildren, free from carrying the burden of a debt they did not incur. It is the real-time, everyday impact in the life of Alberta families, both now and in the generations to come, that makes these numbers matter.

It is with this in mind that I begin with our fiscal progress. Our government was elected on a platform committed to responsible fiscal management. To that end, we established three fiscal anchors to inform policy and guide decision-making. The first anchor was getting our per capita spending in line with comparator provinces. In 2019, when we took office, as per the MacKinnon report we inherited a government that on a per capita basis spent $10 billion more per year than similar provinces. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the previous government's operating spending was increasing by 4 per cent per year. Had we stayed on this trajectory, many of the programs and services essential to Albertans would have simply become unsustainable and out of reach.

Over the last three years I'm pleased to announce that we have brought that 4 per cent annual operating spending increase down to less than half a per cent per year, and if we exclude health spending increases of nearly 2 per cent per year, our operating spending has essentially remained flat over the term. Winston Churchill once stated, "In finance everything that is agreeable is unsound and everything that is sound is disagreeable." Mr. Speaker, yes, we've made some difficult but, I believe, necessary choices, and by doing so, we've kept our promise to be accountable to Albertans. The commitment to ensure that we receive the best possible value for our tax dollars has been honoured.

In Budget 2022 I'm pleased to report that we have arrived. As a province we have done the heavy lifting. Our costs to deliver government services are now within the range of those comparator provinces. We're no longer an expensive outlier, and that is tremendous news for our province and the sustainability of the programs and services we provide to all Albertans.

The government also established an anchor committing to keep Alberta's net debt-to-GDP ratio below 30 per cent. Abiding by this principle preserves our net financial position; in other words, ensures a strong balance sheet. Our projections for the net debt-to-GDP ratio have continually improved over this last year. In Budget 2021 the ratio was estimated to be 24.5 per cent but with an improving fiscal picture is now forecast to be 18.3 per cent at the end of this fiscal year. Alberta has one of the lowest net debt-to-GDP ratios in the nation, and a responsible fiscal management will maintain that strong position. With increased economic and fiscal capacity and by maintaining discipline in our spending decisions, our fiscal future as a province is vastly improved, the positive effect of which is significant and tangible for Albertans today and is of exponential value for the Alberta of tomorrow.

It is no exaggeration, Mr. Speaker, to say that our government has been unrelenting in its focus on investment attraction, economic growth, diversification, and job creation. Our broad-based economic recovery plan creates sustainable economic diversification. When I say broad-based, I mean fostering a competitive, predictable business environment where market signals and the essential tension between sector competitiveness is maintained and where capital deployment decisions are not distorted.

Mr. Speaker, at this juncture in our history we have the benefit of observing two recent very distinct economic approaches taken when dealing with an economic shock or downturn. The previous government took the approach of increased spending, increased taxes, and increased regulation. In spite of fiscal challenges they increased government spending well in excess of population growth and inflation. They increased personal taxes, corporate taxes, and introduced a carbon tax, making life more expensive for all Albertans. What followed was an exodus of investment, economic decline, massive job loss, and perpetual deficits.

Mr. Speaker, when faced with an historic economic challenge, our government took the opposite approach. We doubled down on investment attraction, economic growth, and job creation. We relentlessly pursued red tape reduction and regulatory modernization, and we significantly reduced our business tax rate. While we ensured Health had all the resources needed to battle the pandemic and we increased capital spending in a targeted, countercyclical manner, we continued to be disciplined in operational spending, ensuring we were not building in permanent entitlements.

In less than a decade we have two case studies on how to respond to an economic crisis, and the results speak for themselves. Investment is pouring into this province across regions and sectors, and more jobs have been created than lost in the downturn. Moreover, economic growth is creating expanded fiscal capacity, resulting in additional government revenues. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we will collect $400 million more in annual corporate tax revenue at an 8 per cent rate than the previous government did at 12 per cent, which speaks to the incredible investment climate we've restored in the last three years. Disciplined operational spending is reducing our need to take on additional debt, and all of this is putting the province on a more sustainable fiscal trajectory.

I visited with business leaders, small-business owners, and entrepreneurs. There's an overwhelming agreement that a nimble, predictable, outcome-based regulatory environment is critical to business competitiveness, economic growth, and diversification. Mr. Speaker, it is for this reason, led by the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction, we have intentionally and persistently worked to modernize our regulatory environment from the first day we took office. While this work will be ongoing, I'm pleased to report on our progress. We have materially improved Alberta's regulatory environment, eliminating more than 20 per cent of the government's requirements and saving Albertans, business, and government more than $1.2 billion. Many initiatives directly address recommendations from industry and the public, and we've seen our efforts pay off.

In 2021 Canfor moved substantial capacity from B.C. to Alberta by purchasing three Alberta mills while shutting down four in B.C., explicitly stating that their decision was due to our province's business-friendly regulatory environment.

Another key part of our recovery plan was a strategic and countercyclical approach to infrastructure investment, as reflected in our capital plan. Our focus included projects that would improve our competitiveness and productivity, projects that would position the province for job-creating investment attraction. This includes a $390 million investment in rural broadband, leveraging an additional $600 million of federal and industry funds, ensuring all Albertans have essential digital connectivity.

Mr. Speaker, these carefully constructed government policies are working. There's a great deal of global capital finding a safe home in Alberta because we've created, by a wide margin, the best environment for investment in the nation. In fact, the Conference Board of Canada, Desjardins, and TD all have Alberta leading the nation in economic growth in 2022. Last year Alberta broke its venture capital record for the third year in a row. Billions of dollars of private investment are pouring into our province in the agriculture and agrifood industry, the petrochemical and hydrogen economy, as well as the technology and aviation sectors, to name a few.

Amazon Web Services has announced a $4.3 billion investment in Alberta with the creation of a new computing hub near Calgary. Infosys and Mphasis are adding thousands of tech jobs in this province. RBC is creating a tech hub in Calgary with 300 seats. EY chose Calgary for its Canadian Finance Centre of Excellence, creating 200 positions. We had a record year in film and television. Lynx Air, Canada's newest low-cost airline, will join Flair and WestJet as Alberta-based airlines. Dow Chemical has announced the world's first net zero ethylene cracker to be built in Edmonton's Industrial Heartland. There have been five hydrogen project announcements, including Northern Petrochemical's $2.5 billion project in the MD of Greenview. Bunge is working to build a $650 million canola-crushing plant near Lamont, and Fortune Minerals is investing $200 million for a refinery near Edmonton, citing the province's corporate tax rate as a key reason for choosing Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on. It would take literally hours for me to list all of the new business investments and expansions that are under way or have been announced in this province.

Meanwhile in January, while Canada lost 200,000 jobs, Alberta's economy gained over 7,000. This is in addition to the more than 130,000 jobs gained in 2021. In fact, we've not only fully recovered all the jobs lost since the pandemic, but we've added an additional 33,000 jobs as of January, and in 2022 employment is expected to grow by a further 4 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, we're seeing broad-based investment and economic diversification at rates I may not have seen in my lifetime. Over the next few years this increased investment will create job and career opportunities in a host of occupations and professions. This matters for every Albertan who is unemployed or underemployed, and this matters to the next generation, offering them greater freedom as they pursue their career aspirations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as we work to increase diversity in our economy, I also want to celebrate the strengths of our foundational sectors, and key among them is our energy industry. For our government the energy industry is not about binary choice. It is not either/or. It is not either energy or diversification. It is both. It is not either the protection of the environment or the development of natural resources. It is both. Alberta is a global leader in emerging energy and emissions reduction technologies. This is evidenced by our ongoing investment in carbon capture and storage and a $40 million investment in a clean hydrogen centre of excellence.

But even as we lead in energy transition, global oil demand is expected to exceed prepandemic levels in 2022, and many expect it will continue to increase for the next several decades. Alberta is the ethical choice to satisfy that demand. We are a world leader in sustainable and responsible resource development, with the highest ESG performance among oil-producing countries world-wide.

Mr. Speaker, a lack of pipeline capacity has limited our energy industry, at times resulting in crippling Alberta price discounts. However, I'm pleased today to say that there's significant progress on that front. The Enbridge line 3 replacement was completed in 2021, adding 380,000 barrels per day of increased capacity. In spite of the fires and floods in B.C., the Trans Mountain and Coastal GasLink pipelines continue in their progress. Within the province the NOVA Gas Transmission line, the Pembina Peace pipeline expansion, and the Keyera liquids line are all moving forward. When completed, these projects will eliminate the bottleneck of Alberta energy and provide essential additional capacity to export markets. The much-improved, very narrow discount currently applied to Alberta heavy oil reflects the increased pipeline capacity already achieved. All of this is very good news for the future of the Alberta energy industry.

Now, while some are operating under the belief that hasty divestment of oil-producing assets is a positive move, they're mistaken. Premature divestment is contributing to a global energy crisis that will have very real consequences environmentally and for the most vulnerable globally. Given the increased demand for oil and the geopolitical events we see unfolding in Europe today, we have an opportunity and, Mr. Speaker, indeed a responsibility to maximize production from Alberta. The most principled, productive, and innovative energy investments are right here in our own backyard, and we remain committed to support initiatives that ensure the ethical supply and export of Alberta energy for decades to come.

Mr. Speaker, increasing energy prices and commodity prices generally, combined with excessive federal stimulus and supply chain disruptions, have resulted in inflation rates not seen in decades. This is pushing up costs for Albertans, and it's elevated concerns over the costs of utilities. To alleviate the fear of spiralling utility costs and to allow Albertans to benefit from an owned resource, Budget 2022 implements a consumer price protection mechanism similar to the measure Ralph Klein put in place in 2003. If natural gas prices exceed $6.50 a gigajoule, a consumer price measure will be triggered. This means that Albertans needn't fear a run-up in natural gas prices of the variety currently experienced in Europe and Asia.

While Alberta is not immune from the effects of inflation, we offer a more affordable province to live than virtually any other Canadian jurisdiction. Albertans earn more than Canadians in any other province, and this is true in both the energy and nonenergy sectors. Albertans have some of the lowest home prices and rents among Canadian urban centres. In fact, Albertans are able to purchase at least two homes for every one home purchased in Toronto or Vancouver. Our gasoline and diesel prices are the lowest in Canada, owing in part to low fuel tax rates and no provincial sales tax.

Advantageous tax rates are not just for corporations. Albertans continue to pay less in overall taxes than any other province, with low personal income tax and no provincial sales tax, payroll tax, or health care premiums. We also have the highest basic personal exemption amount among provinces, allowing individuals to earn more before they have to pay any provincial income tax. In fact, Mr. Speaker, 40 per cent of Albertans do not pay any provincial income tax at all. That, combined with our status as the highest earners, means that the after-tax incomes of Albertans are the highest in Canada. Canadians are taking notice and voting with their feet. In the third quarter of 2021 Alberta led all provinces in interprovincial in-migration, attracted to abundant opportunities and a lower cost of living. During times of inflation the most beneficial and durable government response is to spend less, borrow less, and tax less.

Mr. Speaker, as our economy grows and jobs are created, there's a new challenge on the horizon. In fact, in many ways the challenge is already upon us. It is a labour and skills shortage. It is difficult to understand that in an economy with an unemployment rate of over 7 per cent we could experience a labour shortage, but this is indeed the situation we find ourselves in, and our government is working hard to address this complex and unique challenge.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's workforce is facing a unique pressure on a number of fronts. The unprecedented challenges presented by COVID-19, a global recession, and energy price collapse overlaying a job market still struggling from the 2016 investment exodus resulted in extraordinary job loss. The very real challenges of getting back to work after being out of the market for a sustained period of time are legitimately overwhelming for some.

I want to tell you the story of Larry. Larry has been a pipefitter for over 30 years. He has always enjoyed working, being able to provide for himself and his family, connecting with colleagues, the rhythm of 10 days on and five off. In early 2020 he, along with many others, lost his job due to the economic downturn. He accessed the financial supports available to him, but he was only surviving, not thriving. Family and friends expressed concern over his social isolation and declining mental health. He considered retraining in a different field – he just wanted to get back to work – but he felt quite paralyzed as he thought about learning something new. Was he even capable of retraining? Who would hire him at his age?

I think Larry's story resonates with many people right across our province. Mr. Speaker, our core needs, to be independent, competent, productive, and socially connected, are often met through our work. Extensive research has shown that periods of unemployment can have detrimental impacts on both personal health and socioeconomic outcomes as well as broader family and community impacts.

Beyond personal well-being, Albertans contribute to the well-being of this province with every paycheck. They help pay for health care and education. They pay for the many programs that exist in Alberta to help the most vulnerable. They contribute to salaries, pensions, and benefits for our public-sector workers, and they give generously to a wide array of community and not-for-profit organizations. So, Mr. Speaker, our focus now must be to ensure that every Albertan has the opportunity to secure adequate and meaningful employment.

For those Albertans who need a hand up in order to get onto that path, this budget provides new and additional funding with the goal of eliminating barriers to work. For those who want to upgrade their skills and improve on their current work situation, we're designing a new program of bursaries for low-income workers. For those re-entering the job market but unable to meet all the job qualifications, we're providing targeted supports, from work equipment to training to microcredentialing.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize the need to create pathways to success for all Albertans regardless of where they are on their career path. Budget 2022 provides over $600 million in incremental funding over three years to help create those pathways. We've developed the Alberta 2030 initiative, a 10-year strategy to develop a highly skilled and competitive workforce within an already world-class postsecondary system, one that enhances connections between programs and the needs of employers, is highly responsive to labour market needs, and contributes to an innovative and prosperous Alberta.

I'm pleased to announce that we're providing $170 million over the fiscal plan to expand enrolment in areas with skills shortages. Approximately 7,000 seats will be created in areas such as high technology, finance, agriculture sciences, health, and aviation. We're also making a generational investment at the University of Calgary to expand the Faculty of Veterinary Medicine. This $59 million investment will address a critical emerging shortage of large-animal veterinarians in rural Alberta. Budget 2022 designates $30 million for enhancing apprenticeship programs and programs that enable students to acquire skills linked to emerging technology sectors.

This budget also reflects Alberta's agreement with the federal government to support the expansion of the accessible child care that gives families the choice they need.

Mr. Speaker, the COVID-19 pandemic has brought with it significant challenges for all Albertans in every aspect of daily life, and nowhere has this been more evident than in health care. Throughout the pandemic and out of necessity Health responded to the fluctuating need for ICU spaces. I would like to thank my colleague the Minister of Health and his predecessor for pushing AHS to find capacity to deal with the pandemic pressures. I would also like to thank the nurses and doctors and front-line health care workers who sacrificially served Albertans over this last year. Your contribution did not go unnoticed, and on behalf of all Albertans: thank you.

The past two years have exposed a systemic lack of margin within our health care system, and while this has at times put considerable strain on our hospitals and front-line workers, it has been exceptionally instructive and brought into sharp focus the areas of deficit, specifically surgical, ICU, and critical care capacity. By identifying and addressing these challenges, we will substantially improve our ability to not only cope with future health care crises but to more effectively address the ongoing basic health needs of all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, the budget I'm presenting today includes a record-high health care investment in response to these identified urgent needs. Budget 2022 will support the implementation of findings from a review of health system capacity, with the goal of creating the ability to better deal with COVID and future inevitable health care challenges.

In January of this year the United Nurses of Alberta membership voted 87 per cent in favour of a new collective agreement that, in the words of UNA President Heather Smith, "will benefit our members and [is] . . . fair to the people of Alberta." This agreement ensures that our nurses remain the highest paid in Canada while reflecting Alberta's fiscal reality. It acknowledges the remarkable contributions of our nurses during the pandemic, and again I want to personally extend my appreciation for their sacrificial service over these past two years.

Along with providing stability to our health care system, this agreement also addresses rural health care challenges. We're allocating $5 million per year for nursing recruitment and retention strategies in rural and remote areas of the province and another $2.5 million a year for relocation assistance. AHS continues to pursue international and domestic physician recruitment opportunities, and Alberta continues to be among the highest in overall physician compensation in Canada. Alberta's government is spending $90 million this year to address rural physician recruitment and retention. The rural education supplement and integrated doctor experience, or RESIDE, provides benefits to new family physicians to practise in rural Alberta communities of need.

Budget 2022 includes $64 million for EMS to address capacity needs and other pressures within the system and $20 million over four years to improve access to palliative care and caregiver support for Albertans and their families. Mr. Speaker, the government spends approximately $1 billion annually on mental health and addictions, and Budget 2022 invests an additional $20 million to further implement a recovery-oriented system of care that builds on the strengths and resilience of individuals, families, and communities.

A number of significant capital investments in health care capacity are also included in this budget. We're accelerating our work to build a new hospital in Red Deer. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister of Education, the MLA for Red Deer-South, and their colleagues, who have been effective advocates for this new hospital. Budget 2022 also provides $50 million to begin construction on the University of Alberta hospital brain centre neurosciences intensive care unit and $133 million for the Alberta surgical initiative, expanding surgical capacity right across the province.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's ongoing economic and fiscal contributions to Canada play a vital role in driving and sustaining the national economy as well as in funding the federal programs upon which all Canadians rely. While Alberta's economy is showing real signs of life, the Canadian economy continues to struggle with tepid productivity growth and competitiveness challenges. This is reflected in ongoing weakness in business investment, which remains well below 2014 levels.

When the federal government posted their fiscal update, late last year, it was my hope that Canadians had taken a close look at the fundamentals driving the good news in their revenue forecast. It was us; it was Alberta. When the Canada Pension Plan Investment Board posts their annual results, it is always my hope that Canadians take a close look at the fundamentals that have driven its growth. It will be us; it will be Alberta. As Alberta once again leads the nation in economic growth, I hope all Canadians will be watching to see how our shared standard of living is maintained. It will be us; it will be Alberta. Mr. Speaker, simply put, Canada needs a strong Alberta.

Now, while I've already addressed two of our fiscal anchors, there is a third. We committed to Albertans that as we got through the pandemic and global economic crises and when we had additional economic clarity, we would provide a timeline and path to a balanced budget.

Now, Mr. Speaker, standing here one year ago, presenting Budget 2021 as we were just beginning to recover from the depths of the pandemic-driven economic and energy price crisis, the prospects of a balanced budget seemed so distant, so foreign to the fiscal reality of the day. So it is that context that makes what I am about to say so incredible. We've worked hard across ministries to make responsible fiscal decisions and have relentlessly positioned this province for exceptional economic growth and expanded fiscal capacity, and it gives me great pleasure today to present Budget 2022, a balanced budget. [some applause]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Toews: While it is immensely gratifying to have fulfilled such a significant election promise during these extraordinary times, to check another box on our promise made, promise kept list, Budget 2022 is ultimately about making life better for every single Albertan.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, there will be some who say that the rebound in energy prices is the only reason for the balanced budget I've tabled today. To respond, I would say two things. First, yes, it's true that we're seeing a significant increase in resource revenue projections, and without a doubt it is helping our bottom line. But we're seeing dynamic revenue growth across the entire budget, not just resources, and that is a direct result of this government's relentless pursuit of progrowth open-for-business policies.

Second, balancing the budget requires more than good fortune; it takes discipline and leadership. Mr. Speaker, the previous government increased spending by 4 per cent every year. Even factoring in the energy price projections in Budget 2022, we would be tabling a $6 billion deficit this year if we had continued on the previous government's rate of spending. This government has made the difficult decisions, decisions that weren't always popular but decisions Albertans sent us to this House to make and decisions that have put us on a much stronger fiscal path for future generations.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, Larry the pipefitter, out of work for almost two years with declining mental health, rusty skills, and lost confidence: well, about four months ago, in his words, he got the call. With an improving economy and employers hiring again, Larry was called back to work, back to the ability to provide for his family, back to community, and back to a hopeful future. He says that he's never been more excited to go out on a job. Budget 2022 is for Larry and every Albertan that needs a hand up. It is for the entrepreneurs that have a vision not only for their business but for their community. It is for future generations who may never know the choices we made today so that they have greater opportunities tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, it is ultimately Albertans who deserve the credit for this achievement. This belongs to the health care workers, the truckers, the oil field and grocery store workers, and every Albertan who went to work every day serving Albertans in spite of the pandemic. It belongs to the farmers and ranchers, the entrepreneurs, the thousands of Albertans with a vision to see opportunity in hardship. It's the moms and the dads, the pastors, the volunteers, and neighbours who cared for the least of these, bringing a bit of light into dark times.

Budget 2022 and the long-term economic trajectory of our province is not an intellectual or accounting exercise; it is a blueprint for strength, for prosperity, for hope to rise again in the province for years to come. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 7, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, as is our custom, let us pay tribute to former members who have recently passed.

Mr. Graham Lisle Harle

December 9, 1931, to February 9, 2022

The Speaker: Graham L. Harle served for four terms as a Progressive Conservative Member for Stettler from 1972 to 1986. He was the minister of consumer and corporate affairs from 1975 to '79 and the Solicitor General from '79 to 1983.

Mr. Harle was born in England, and his family moved to Edmonton when he was a teenager. He completed his bachelor of science in agriculture and then a law degree at the University of Alberta. Called to the bar in 1960, Mr. Harle practised law for a short time in Edmonton before establishing his own practice in Stettler in 1961.

Mr. Harle reflected on his accomplishments in the Assembly with pride and appreciation. He noted the challenge of balancing the needs of the whole province against those of your constituency.

Graham Harle passed away February 9, 2022, at the age of 91.

Mr. Dennis M. Barton

September 14, 1939, to February 27, 2022

The Speaker: Dennis M. Barton served one term as the Alberta Social Credit Member for Lesser Slave Lake from 1971 to 1975.

Raised in Barrhead, Mr. Barton moved to Slave Lake in 1965 to open the town's first pharmacy with his wife. There he became involved in local organizations, including the chamber of commerce, the Lesser Slave Lake development corporation, the Native Friendship Centre, and the Slave Lake developments.

Mr. Barton devoted his time and efforts to projects that built schools, roads, housing, and even hospitals. He was deeply committed to his community and to development. Dedicated to his work through public service, he was fondly referred to by many as Mr. Slave Lake.

Mr. Barton passed away on February 27, 2022, at the age of 82.

In a moment of silent prayer and reflection I ask you to each remember Mr. Harle and Mr. Barton as each may have known them.

Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them.

Please remain standing for the singing of O Canada, led by Ms Brooklyn Elhard.

Hon. Members:

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Klein.

Education of Blind and Visually Impaired Students

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to welcome our friends from the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, CNIB, to the Legislature today. They have met with many MLAs today to discuss educational outcomes for students with sight loss. I wanted to be able to touch on a very important topic, and that is that education is a key predictor of future employment and quality of life for the blind and partially sighted community. Put another way, we need to increase the supports available for students with sight loss now to save the province money in the future but also help ensure a better quality of life for these folks.

We have a parent of a student with sight loss visiting us here today, Krista Lee Frattin, who said that in her eight years of experience with a child in the education system she has yet to meet an educator that has experience teaching a visually impaired child. We also have a young student here today who I had a chance to talk with, Gabriel Pigeon, who said he wants to know why his parents must supply the things that he needs to have a basic education.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, sending your child to school every day knowing that their educators are ill equipped and ill prepared to teach your child? Can you imagine having to provide the tools that your child needs just to have an equal chance at an education with their sighted peers? As a government we need to allocate funds specifically to provide resources, training, and technological services for the blind and partially sighted in the K through 12 school system. This is an issue that is important to our government, and I look forward to talking to the Minister of Education about the need for this funding.

Once again I want to thank our friends from CNIB, who are in the gallery, of course, here today, for all their hard work, for their advocacy. It has not gone unnoticed. Together we can work to ensure all students, including those with impaired vision, can have a strong education in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Budget 2022

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, 234 pages is the length of the UCP's budget. Two hundred and thirty-four pages and not a single aid for Alberta families. No natural gas rebate despite promises from the Premier; instead, we got a fake program that is unfunded and one that the vast majority of Albertans will never qualify for. Two hundred and thirty-four pages and not a single program or benefit to help off-set school fees, property taxes, tuition, and student loan interest, all of which have gone up under this government. There's nothing for car insurance, which has increased by 30 per cent or more for some drivers. There's nothing in there for small businesses hammered during repeated incompetent decisions by this UCP government during COVID-19. Two hundred and thirty-four pages and there's little hope, mostly just boasting a balanced budget, but is a budget really balanced if most of the needs people aren't getting enough for? If this budget is passed and there is nothing added to help them, is it really worth boasting about? No is the answer.

Mr. Speaker, financial help for these families cannot wait any longer. Less money in the pocket of Albertans is less money that goes back into the local economy. Not a single family in Alberta should be forced to choose between paying their bills or putting food on the table. This is a complete mess, and I demand that the UCP acknowledge their mistake and start to help the very Albertans that elected them. It's the right thing to do, and it's what they were elected to do. Have they forgotten about all that as they've been too busy with infighting and using government resources to save their Premier's jobs? Have they forgotten that it's their job to serve all Albertans, to help them in their times of need? On this side of the House our Official Opposition cares about Alberta families, and we're going to show up every day to do our actual jobs, to help Alberta families in their times of need.

Thank you.

Ken Albrecht

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, in a recent group meeting in my constituency I was able to spend some time with Ken Albrecht. I was saddened to learn that on February 24 he passed away at the age of 80. Ken was a well-respected pillar in his community and spent his life serving government in different roles. He was a councillor for improvement district No. 14, now known as Yellowhead county, from 1983 to 1989 and the district's chairman from 1989 to 1994. Ken also served as a board member of the Alberta Workers' Compensation Board and the tire recycle management board of Alberta. After improvement district 14 was incorporated into the municipal district of Yellowhead in 1994, Ken was elected as the first reeve and held the position through 2001.

In addition to his work in government, Ken was always actively involved in the community. His dedications include his involvement with the Yellowhead county Jerry Vanderwell Memorial Park, facilitating the creation of McLeod Valley recreation area, establishing the annual Gold Dust Daze, which is a point of pride in Peers, Alberta, and serving on numerous boards and committees for the betterment of Yellowhead county residents. Steadfast on improving his community economically, he was also involved in many entrepreneurial pursuits such as logging and heavy equipment hauling.

Ken Albrecht was a selfless and devoted man who was committed to a life of service: service to his family, his community, and province. Ken's contributions improved the lives and communities he worked faithfully for and served throughout his lifetime. I want to express my heartfelt condolences to his friends, his family, and his community. May he rest in peace.

Budget 2022 and Rural Alberta

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, this budget should have been an opportunity for this government to show that they support rural Albertans. Instead, once again we see this government ignoring and abandoning the people and the communities of rural Alberta. Instead of supporting rural communities to grow, diversify, and build on the already existing economic drivers they possess, this government plans to punish rural communities by making it more expensive to build needed infrastructure, at the same time hiking property taxes of the residents. This is a time to work with rural communities to build this critical infrastructure, and instead this government is actively adding barriers and blockades. It's a shameful abandonment of who should be their rural partners.

The UCP's reannouncement of rural broadband still hasn't even been costed to where it needs to be costed, which means that rural Albertans once again will have to wait for this much-needed and essential service because, again, this UCP stalled for three years, ignoring the concerns of rural Albertans and, again, taking their voices and their votes for granted. While rural communities are preparing and concerned to deal with another flood or drought in the future, the UCP is refusing to show the leadership expected of a provincial government and is actually committed to providing less support than they should be when it comes to natural disasters. While the Finance minister and the Premier travel, celebrating a balanced budget, rural Albertans are left struggling to make ends meet under the weight of crushing utility bills. This budget was an opportunity to support those dealing with skyrocketing bills. For too many, even turning the lights on is an expensive choice.

Instead, this UCP continues the UCP track record of raising and hiking every fee, every tax, increasing costs, and doing the most to make life more and more expensive. Rural Alberta deserves better than a government that views them only as a cash cow and not the economic driver and vibrant communities that they are. They deserve a government that focuses on them year-round and is committed to forming a real partnership with them, and in 2023 they're going to get just that when we're elected into government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont has a statement to make.

Utility Costs

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans have noticed the prices in their utility bills skyrocketing, as we are still feeling some of the effects of the NDP government today. This is because when the NDP were in power, they did not care about the long-term effects their decisions would cause. They just wanted a quick fix that would mask the problem at hand. The NDP's electricity rate cap was just that – it was a mask – and in under two years it cost taxpayers over $108 million. The NDP created long-term problems that will cost Albertans for years.

During 2015-2019, the years that the NDP were in power, $7.5 billion were spent on building out their transmission system, and where does that $7.5 billion come from, Mr. Speaker? Well, it has to be paid by ratepayers; it has to be paid by Albertans.

Today Alberta is making tremendous progress in making its energy system more affordable. Since 2020 only $100 million was spent on new transmission, and in the past year zero dollars were spent. Compare this to the 7 and a half billion that were spent when the NDP was in government. Because of the way the NDP handled Alberta's electricity system, it led to an additional $1.3 billion loss that Albertans will be repaying on their utility bills until at least 2030, Mr. Speaker. These high utility prices are taking a toll on many Albertans. Citizens need basic utilities in their day-to-day lives. They need to be able to heat their homes in the winter, they need to be able to turn on the oven, and they need electricity to survive and to run their households. They have to pay these utilities, and these prices are placing a financial pressure on many Albertans.

This spring new legislation will be tabled that will increase competition in our energy system and improve available market supply. We are making changes and progress to bring these prices down and to make these bills more affordable for Albertans.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Standing Order Amendments

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed to Oral Question Period, I would like to point out to members that copies of the amendments to the standing orders that were approved by the Assembly on February 23, 2022, have been printed on green paper and placed on the members' desks for ease of reference. I encourage you to – I'm sure you'll be reading them intently.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the call.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Booming oil prices are usually good news for Albertans, but instead this UCP budget was a huge bust for Alberta families: no real plan for economic diversification, 1,000 fewer teachers, more private health care, less community infrastructure, and more debt for students. Right now Alberta families are asking for more help with out-of-control costs, and businesses need support to recover from COVID. The Premier used to blame the low price of oil for his failure to support Albertans. What's his excuse this time?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is right in one respect, that Albertans need help with the rising cost of living. The question, then, is: why does the NDP support Justin Trudeau's planned April Fool's Day joke on this whole country with another carbon tax hike? Why does the NDP cheer on the federal Liberal plan to triple the carbon tax? This is the government that scrapped the NDP carbon tax, and this is the government that is leading today by eliminating the Alberta gas tax on fuel and providing a rebate for electricity prices, real action for Albertans.

Ms Hoffman: If the Premier wants to spend his time asking the NDP questions, he can stop musing about it in the media and he can actually call an election, and we'll see which side of the House everyone is sitting on.

Sneaky tax increase: that's what the Premier was told by his former employer, the CTF, about the budget increases and the hikes to personal income tax. Let's talk about that. The Premier had a chance to put back the $400 he's taking from families. He didn't. He could have put back the $350 he's taking from seniors. He didn't. He could have put back the $1,000 he's taking from people on AISH. He didn't. What does the Premier have for his excuse now?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this government inherited the fiscal and economic catastrophe of four years of NDP. This government inherited an $8 billion NDP structural deficit, four years of economic decline and stagnation, hundreds of thousands of unemployed Albertans, and this is the government that, working through multiple crises, has balanced the budget for the first time in eight years, that is presiding over the strongest economic and job growth in Canada. Why? Because we had our eye on the ball, attracting job-creating investment, showing that Alberta is open for business, and getting our finances back in order.

Ms Hoffman: Let's have a little recap here. Under this Premier Albertans are paying higher income tax, higher property tax, higher school fees, higher tuition, higher car insurance, higher power bills. When Albertans need help paying the power bill, why is the only power that the Premier is concerned about the power he holds in his office?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, imagine the NDP talking about higher taxes when they imposed the single biggest tax hike in the province's history, the carbon tax. Now, we repealed that as Bill 1. Promise made, promise kept. Unfortunately, their ally Justin Trudeau then imposed his carbon tax on us. Today we have announced effectively the reverse carbon tax by eliminating the gas tax on Alberta consumers, just when the NDP wants to increase gas and fuel prices on April 1. We won't let them. We're going to cut those taxes instead.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for her second set of questions.

School Construction and Modernization

Ms Hoffman: Alberta students deserve good schools and good teachers close to home. Alberta is growing, and so are our communities. We need more schools to keep up with demand. That's why our NDP government started catching up from years of neglect under former Conservative governments. We funded about 60 projects every year; the UCP, less than a quarter of that. Why is the UCP failing kids in need of new schools and modernizations right across this province?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy that as a result of our fiscal discipline, getting our finances back in order, we can invest in more public services. We can invest in 15 new schools and school refurbishments. We can increase the support for our schools in the operational budget. We can increase the Health budget by $600 million, on top of $900 million last year. We can build the new Red Deer hospital and the new cancer clinic in Calgary, the cancer care centre. Record investments in public services: why? Because the economy is growing, and our finances are back on track.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the list of school capital has some massive holes in it: nothing for Edmonton public, no new schools for Lethbridge or St. Albert, and after two years of nothing for public or Catholic kids in Calgary, they're getting a whopping two schools. The UCP believes that classrooms with 40-plus kids, with desks in the hallway is a feature, not a bug. For the first time ever the government presented a budget that refused to tell Albertans how many students they expect to be going to school next year. To the Premier: how many more new students will be going to school in Alberta schools next year? It's the first time they've never told us or that any government hasn't told us.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the member is that with the new schools and the revamped schools already under way as part of Alberta's economic recovery plan, in addition to the 15 additional schools that we announced last week, that's 65 new schools and refurbished schools under this government, more than the 60 done under the NDP.

Ms Hoffman: If the Premier doesn't know or if he doesn't care how many kids are actually going to be going to school in Alberta, he could let the Assembly know, and if he would actually put a little effort in, he could find that number and bring it back to this place, because there are going to be thousands more kids going to school next year, Mr. Speaker. At a time when more kids than ever will need help, the UCP's plan is to have bigger class sizes and fewer teachers. Edmonton public students need Delton school replaced, a junior high in McConachie, a junior-senior in Glenriding Heights; Fort McMurray needs a francophone school; Calgary Diefenbaker needs a renovation; and we need a Catholic high school in the west end, just to name a few of these projects. Why do the UCP . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows perfectly well that schools are prioritized in terms of capital investments based on complex metrics. In the case of the Edmonton public school board, they submitted as their top two priorities schools that are below 70 per cent current utilization. The minister is committed to working with that board to bring forward new school projects in this city where there is dynamic population growth and that are being underserved, but . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The Premier has the call.

Mr. Kenney: I apologize for the NDP, Mr. Speaker. For some reason, they're angry. They're angry that Alberta is opening up, they're angry that the economy is strong, they're angry that we're dropping the provincial gas tax, but I think Albertans are pretty happy. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Utility Rebate Program

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, Albertans who can't afford to pay for their heating bill in January were encouraged when this Premier told them that he was going to offer a rebate, but as usual with the UCP you have to check the terms and conditions. His natural gas rebate doesn't apply this winter, and even if it did, the prices are set too high, so most Albertans wouldn't qualify. In other words, the rebate is fake. I've spoken to Alberta families who feel misled by this Premier's promise. Why didn't he follow through?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, psychologists have a term called "cognitive dissonance." It means: when you hold two completely contradictory ideas in your head at the same time. It perfectly explains NDP policy, because on the one hand they want higher gas prices, they want higher fuel prices, and they want higher electricity prices. That's their goal. They want to punish people for heating their homes. This government doesn't. That's why we put in place a natural gas rebate and have eliminated the excise tax for fuel and are providing a rebate to electricity consumers.

Ms Ganley: First, the carbon tax came with a real rebate, not a UCP fake out. Second, this Premier has raised the cost of living in every single one of his budgets. Third, Albertans are struggling right now, today. The UCP could help them and is choosing not to. Is this Premier too busy fighting for his own political career to listen to Albertans? Where are his priorities?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP carbon tax came with higher gas prices, higher home heating prices, higher prices for groceries, higher prices for everything, and, by the way, four years of economic devastation. They sucked $1.3 billion out of the pockets of Albertans on a tax they never ran on. Today we have delivered, on an annualized basis, $1.7 billion of relief to Alberta families.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, Celina Thibault is a mother of two. She lives in Calgary on a fixed income and must regularly travel for medical care. Quote: I feel the choice some days is whether I can pay my utility bills or go to Edmonton for my treatments. I know a lot of people who thought the UCP saw this as a problem and were prepared to act. Instead, Albertans got nothing and no help. What does this Premier have to say to this Albertan, who feels betrayed by his budget? Does he think she deserves an apology?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have this to say, that the NDP forced up these electricity prices through billions of dollars of unnecessary costs in infrastructure, by their fiasco on the PPA that cost us $1.3 billion, by shutting down in a rush the coal plants, through their carbon tax. Those are the folks responsible for high electricity prices, but the problem that they created is a problem that this government is solving. Now, will they stand and admit that they are cheering on their ally Justin Trudeau to raise the carbon tax on April 1? I know that Albertans certainly aren't doing that.

2:00 Calgary Downtown Revitalization

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, in the UCP's budget all they could muster for Calgary's struggling downtown was a paltry $5 million. The reviews are in, and they're not good. The CEO of the Calgary Chamber called it, quote, absolutely inadequate, and the mayor said that it was a pittance amounting to only 2 per cent of what was requested by the city. Meanwhile even allies of the Premier said that it was, quote, not enough; it's symbolic rather than an investment. Calgary doesn't need symbolic noninvestments. It needs real action. How could this government come up so short of what's needed and fail Calgarians?

Mr. Kenney: What classic socialist economics. They think that you revive an entire civic economy – by the way, hammered by the NDP. They think that you revive that with a few million dollars in grants, Mr. Speaker. They miss the point. The entire central point of this government is to bring back job-creating investment so that we can revive the downtown core of Calgary and our entire provincial economy. They derided the job-creation tax cut. They said that it was going to cost us $4.6 billion, but in fact we are raising $400 million more at an 8-point rate than they did at a 12-point rate because of new investment in Calgary and elsewhere.

Member Ceci: Let's talk about that corporate handout. In the last election the Premier promised that his corporate tax handout would fill the office towers in downtown Calgary. He even accelerated his giveaway and said that companies would be irresponsible for not relocating in Calgary. Since then the number of head offices went from 117 to 102, Mr. Premier. In contrast, our leader released some of the key planks of our platform in her speech to the Calgary Chamber. We promised to match a hundred million dollars in city funding for office conversions as well as support small businesses to move downtown and revitalize their storefronts. How can the Premier tell us that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: NDP economics: tax people more. When they stop moving, regulate them more. Mr. Speaker, what they did was wreck this province's economy, especially the economy of Calgary. Tens of thousands of energy workers put out of work while – what? – they were cheering on Justin Trudeau killing Northern Gateway and Energy East, bringing in their carbon taxes. Calgary is benefiting from the largest boom in diversification and high-tech, digital jobs in its history. The largest tech investment in the history of Canada: $4.3 billion from Amazon Web Services. That's in Calgary.

Member Ceci: Let's talk about what is actually going on in Calgary. It has the highest unemployment rate amongst major cities in Canada, Mr. Premier. The latest investment figures show that Calgary is falling further and further behind our other cities but for attracting capital in the tech sector. We need to make diversification a priority, not a luxury. That's why our plan for downtown will focus on economic diversification, the creation of an innovation district through the relocation of postsecondary institutions in the downtown core. Can the Premier please tell Albertans how far $5 million will go in bringing down that office vacancy rate not seen since the Great Depression?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Calgary's downtown office vacancy rate has finally started to come down after a four-year climb because of the NDP. Calgary has the fastest growing high-tech sector in North America. The NDP devastated investor confidence. Tens of billions of dollars of investment fled this province. That is turning around now in the greatest economic recovery this province has ever seen, leading Canada in economic growth, leading Canada in job growth. I know that the NDP thinks the solution is to give a mayor tens of millions of dollars to hand out in grants. We know the solution is to get investment back in Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Budget 2022 and Cost of Living

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we can all clearly see that budgets don't simply balance themselves, nor does taxing and spending your way to prosperity. Fiscal conservatism, disciplined spending, reduction of taxes, and, quite frankly, a strong demand globally for energy as we break free of the COVID pandemic: Alberta is literally just beginning to take off, and we're finally getting a tailwind. However, with the high inflation, poor federal fiscal policies that are causing inflation to rise, unseen in generations, Albertans are really feeling the strain of increasing utility and fuel prices. To the Minister of Finance: please advise any plans that can help Albertans off-set these costs of energy.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. In Budget 2022 we announced the natural gas rebate program, that protects Alberta consumers from rising natural gas prices such as we're seeing in Europe. Moreover, to deal with energy price increases, increases of gasoline and diesel, unlike the members opposite, we're not raising taxes; we're cutting taxes by 13 cents a litre effective April 1, which will provide more protection for Alberta consumers and trade-exposed industries.

Mr. Getson: Amen, Mr. Speaker. That's all I got to say to that, Minister. Thank you.

Given that the previous NDP policies and regulatory uncertainty led to the premature shutdown of coal-fired power plants, raised the cost, a $1.5 billion boondoggle building out of the breaking of contracts, the overbuild of the transmission infrastructure, what specifically is going to be done, to the Minister of Finance, by the current government to combat the high electricity prices? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The Minister of Finance is the one with the call.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta consumers are certainly dealing with bad policy choices by the previous government, and they're dealing with that on their electricity bills today. The members opposite overbuilt the transmission system. The members opposite prematurely moved from coal to gas, costing Albertans $1.3 billion. On top of that, they brought in a job-killing carbon tax that added costs to every Alberta family and household and every Alberta senior. We're bringing relief on utilities and energy costs today.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the minister: thanks again for the history lesson of what the NDP did in my area.

Mr. Speaker, given the rising overall cost of goods and services, what other measures can be or has the government taken to reduce the cost of living for Albertans? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. I know the member likes me to correct other members when they use a preamble in this Assembly. Perhaps that was a good example of one as well.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. In fact, Budget 2022 included a number of affordability measures for Albertans. In Budget '22 we're providing relief for low-income students in high-demand programs with $15 million in nonrepayable supports, relief for parents of young children with $666 million this year to bring child care costs down, and relief for Albertans in rural or remote locations by making affordable, accessible broadband a reality in rural Alberta.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Labour and Immigration Minister

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year we learned that the minister of labour attempted to interfere in the administration of justice when he called the Edmonton police chief about a ticket he received. That is in black and white on page 15 of Justice Kent's report; there's no other context required. It is clear that the minister of labour has no business sitting around the cabinet table in any capacity after so brazenly trying to break the rule of law in Alberta. Can the Premier explain why he is ignoring the findings of the Kent report and rewarding the former Justice minister with a new cabinet post?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member actually is not accurately quoting the report. The report made it clear that the minister of the day did not interfere with the administration of justice. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The Minister of Municipal Affairs is the only one with the call.

Mr. McIver: The report clearly says that the minister did not interfere with the administration of justice. The report did have other complaints about the minister. The hon. member knows that and should stop trying to say things that are not in the report.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the minister has not read the report and, like the Premier, is ignoring two out of three findings of Justice Kent's report when justifying why the labour minister should remain in cabinet after attempting but failing to interfere in the administration of justice and given that the labour minister should have been shown the door and fired from the cabinet instead of being rewarded with another new portfolio, what message does this send for law-abiding Albertans who watch a minister that tried to interfere in the administration of justice get a new job in the cabinet?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows what was in the report and what wasn't. The hon. minister is in a different portfolio. [interjections]

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the folks across are pretty bold talking this way when they haven't revealed what they knew about their member from south Edmonton, that was potentially criminal charges. They're pretty quiet about that, yet what's public and everybody knows they're complaining about. All the while they hide what they knew, which is potentially criminal.

2:10

Mr. Sabir: Given that Alberta should not have a single cabinet minister found to have attempted to interfere with the administration of justice or investigated by the RCMP and given that the Premier stated that if it was found that the minister interfered with the administration of justice, he would have immediately removed the labour minister from cabinet and since Justice Kent found clearly that the labour minister attempted to interfere in the administration of justice, one last time, will the Premier honour his words and Justice Kent's report and immediately remove the labour minister from cabinet?

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader has risen.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be very clear, the report concluded that the minister did not interfere with the administration of justice, and it is rich for that hon. member to even raise RCMP investigations in this . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. You may not like the answer, but the Speaker needs the ability to be able to hear the answer.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it is rich for that member to raise RCMP investigations in this place when an NDP member of this Chamber has had a search warrant served on his place. What did that member know about the Member for Edmonton-South? Did the Leader of the Official Opposition know what was taking place? Yes or no? The NDP need to explain the actions now. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: You can always count on me to restore calm and order in this place, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I think the best thing for decorum at this point in time would be the hon. member to continue immediately to the question that he's prepared.

Mr. Schmidt: As always, great advice, Mr. Speaker.

Coal Development Policies

Mr. Schmidt: On yet another Friday afternoon the UCP released their latest report. This time it was their coal report on the so-called path forward on coal mining in the Rockies. In it they recommended a ministerial order banning certain coal mining activities and the reinstatement of the 1976 coal policy. However, it was this government that rescinded the coal policy, on the Friday afternoon of a long weekend, that led to the widespread backlash from Albertans. What assurances can this government give to Albertans that they won't try this once again, to rescind the policy when they think that Albertans aren't watching?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Parks and the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I can say on behalf of the Minister of Energy that this government is very happy to have been able to fix the mess that the NDP made with the 1976 coal policy, when they sent out a letter paving the way for coal mines to be built on some of the most sensitive landscapes inside our province. The Minister of Energy has been able to move forward to be able to fix that with the reinstatement of the 1976 coal policy, and I'm happy to report to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the entire Chamber, that the department of environment will be working forward to be able to make sure that that is enshrined in land-use planning to finally fix the NDP's mistake when it comes to coal.

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, given that no one trusts this government, not when it comes to our mountains, our provincial parks, or really anything for that matter, given that a ministerial order gives the minister full discretion to rescind it at any moment with the stroke of a pen and given that the UCP already did this once, when they removed the coal policy in the first place, and given that this government has shown that they are more willing to listen to the coal lobby than to Albertans whose drinking water and jobs are threatened by coal mining in the Rockies, will the government promise to never remove this ministerial order?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Energy has already said, my department, the department of environment, will be moving forward with putting the 1976 coal policy into the eastern slopes policy of our province, where it will stay until each land-use plan is completed, and then it will move over into each land-use plan across the eastern slopes going forward. Again I want to reassure the House that the problems that have been created on coal in the eastern slopes by the NDP have been fixed. That hon. member was part of a government that made four coal mines in the eastern slopes while he was in power, one for each year, but we have been able to provide clarity for investors as well as for Albertans, and we're going to make sure that our precious eastern slopes are protected from the NDP when it comes to coal.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, given that it's been three years and we've seen no action on any land-use plans and given that the UCP has already rescinded the coal policy once without consulting Albertans and given that a legislative ban would require any changes to be debated in this House in front of Albertans and not negotiated behind closed doors with coal lobbyists and given that it stops short of what's really needed, a legislated ban on coal mining in the eastern slopes, will the government support our bill, the Eastern Slopes Protection Act, this session to enshrine a coal mining ban in legislation and protect our mountains from the UCP?

Mr. Jason Nixon: The NDP continues their anti-industry stance, Mr. Speaker, trying to block all industrial activity. The hon. member is completely incorrect about no land-use planning being completed underneath this government. This government is proud to move forward with subregional planning when it comes to caribou, that saved 75,000 jobs. Emergency protection orders that would have seen the destruction of the entire forestry industry inside northern Alberta, which that hon. member and his party tried to do – but we've been able to use an effective land-use process to protect one of our largest industries and, again, to stop the NDP from sterilizing our landscapes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Premier's Office Staff Political Activity

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every member of this Assembly understands the need for keeping party business and government business separate. Taxpayer resources must not be used for party business, and even the appearance of government members offering favours for political support is a crime under the Criminal Code. The Premier's chief of staff oversees all of the operations of the Premier's office and is currently on a leave of absence to shore up votes for the Premier's leadership review. With this in mind, would the Premier tell Albertans what steps are being taken to avoid the mixing of party and government business?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier's office has been clear on this. Staff that are working on his campaign full-time have moved out of government business for the time, have taken a leave of absence to work on the campaign, which is a normal process as you head into political activities along those lines. Again, I think this is rich coming from the hon. member who has been travelling around the province with staff, not defending or sticking up for his constituents and instead spending his time playing junior high games, which is the ineffectiveness of his ability to be able to represent the people of Central Peace-Notley. He has a lot to explain, I think, going forth.

Mr. Loewen: Given that prior to the UCP's AGM last fall, the public learned that senior officials within the Premier's office were in fact calling corporate leaders, seeking assistance in stacking the convention with attendees who support the Premier and given that at least one corporate leader jumped at the opportunity, stating that they could, quote, leverage that into further meaningful dialogues with cabinet, unquote, and given that I have written to the RCMP seeking further investigation of this matter and that we know that the Premier's chief of staff, that oversees all operations in the Premier's office, is currently on leave, campaigning for the Premier for the leadership review, why is the Premier so comfortable with the appearance of influence peddling?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member opposite would like to distract Albertans from the good things that are taking place in this province. I was privileged to rise in this House approximately 10 days ago and deliver a budget that was a balanced budget, the first balanced budget in eight years. But it was much more than that. It was a budget that ultimately revealed the fiscal progress this province has made and revealed the incredible investment attraction policies that are leading to jobs, job creation, additional opportunities for small businesses, and increased government revenues.

Mr. Loewen: Given that that's deflection right there and given that, of all of the possible campaign managers, the Premier has chosen his chief of staff to take a leave of absence and given that the Premier has stated on multiple occasions that his priority is governing – and there is a lot of governing to do right now, and the government has numerous pieces of legislation to present to the Assembly, not to mention a budget to pass – and that if government business is truly the top priority of this Premier, why is the Premier's most senior official taking time off to campaign for his leadership at this time?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's kind of shameful to see the member across trying to besmirch the reputation of a citizen of this province, one that has done things properly, according to the rules. If you want to do political activity, you have to take time off from your job and not get paid. That's exactly what's happening. I wonder if the hon. member is meeting that standard. I wonder if he's put in expense accounts for the last few weeks that he's been travelling across Alberta to campaign against the Premier. I'll tell you that there are some people that should be careful when they throw stones.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

2:20 COVID-19 Vaccines and Health Care Workforce

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that vaccines have been a vital, important tool in our fight against COVID-19 and remain so. While hospitalizations from COVID are still at the highest point they have been in recent waves, I was disappointed to see the Premier say that he wants to remove this vital, important tool from the staff at Alberta Health Services. Those people who are ill in hospitals, especially vulnerable populations, should have the assurance that the front-line staff caring for them have all of the tools available to them to help fight against this virus. Why is this Health minister ending vaccine requirements for staff at Alberta Health Services?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The hon. member is quite correct. Our focus is actually on protecting Albertans and protecting our health care system. We have supported the widespread use of vaccines across the province. I'm very pleased that over 90 per cent of people are vaccinated. Now, in regard to the policy of AHS – the Premier said this last week – we have asked AHS to review the policy by March 31, and this was a directive that was provided by our government and by myself. We are waiting for the input to come back to us, and we'll be making a decision in the near future in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that the facts are that this government has continuously spread misinformation about COVID-19 and the efficacy of vaccines, which has led people to have more questions and confusion, and given that this misinformation has caused the Premier himself to flip-flop within his own caucus on vaccine messaging, leading us to believe that these decisions are being based more on politics than science, and given that Albertans rightfully expect a unified message on vaccination from the leaders in their province and to answer their questions and set a good example, can the Health minister explain where these recommendations have come from, what data he has to support them, and if AHS supports this decision?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government has been very clear that vaccines are the best tool for us to be able to combat COVID-19. I announced last week in terms of measures to be able to get more vaccines out to kids ages five to 11 so that parents could have better access to clinics after school, and we've also provided kids' vaccines to family physicians. We're looking at additional measures to be able to roll out in terms of supporting vaccines. Let me be clear. In this government we are very supportive of vaccines, and we know that is the path forward to be able to not only protect against omicron but to protect against severe outcomes.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister waited weeks, months to take those steps when he could have taken them far earlier to protect children and given that Alberta has one of the lowest rates of third-dose boosters compared to the rest of the country, doses that are proven to help with adverse effects from the virus, and given that continuing to use tools such as boosters will help insulate our already stressed and overburdened health care system from being overwhelmed again and given that public health experts from across the country have advocated for the effectiveness of mandates to ensure the safety of our vulnerable populations and our health care capacity, what message is this Health minister trying to send to Albertans by removing that line of defence for health care workers?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I've already said, we support vaccines, and vaccines are an incredibly important tool. As mentioned by the Premier, you know, vaccines have protected significantly not only through the delta wave but through the omicron wave against severe outcomes. Now, admittedly, two doses of vaccines have not been as effective against omicron in terms of transmission but incredibly effective against severe outcomes. It's very important that we support vaccines to be able to protect against severe outcomes, and we'll continue to do so. In regard to the AHS policy decision we'll be making that in the near future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood has a question to ask. Oh, wrong Sigurdson. Of course, the use of any name in the Chamber for any reason would be wildly unacceptable. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is next.

Affordable Housing and Budget 2022

Ms Sigurdson: The need for affordable housing is increasing as more Albertans struggle through these tough economic times. Municipal leaders, housing providers, and business communities all want to see investment in housing. While the UCP receives revenues of high oil prices, they made no significant investment in the affordable housing budget. The UCP is leaving hundreds of millions of dollars from the federal government on the table untouched. Can the Minister of Seniors and Housing please explain why she is yet again neglecting substantial investment in much-needed affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was so proud to introduce our stronger foundations 10-year affordable housing strategy back in November of last year. This strategy will increase households by an additional 25,000 to serve our Albertans. We are continuing to support our Albertans. We have a plan, we have a vision, and we are executing it.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the mayor of Edmonton called this budget a slap in the face and said that it is being balanced on the backs of vulnerable Albertans and given that the city has yet again not received help in operating their permanent supportive housing and given that much of this concern was also shared by the mayor of Calgary, highlighting the devastating impact on low-income households by reducing funding by 23 per cent – at press conferences the minister has no problem standing with municipalities, saying that housing is important. Why is she so comfortable ignoring their requests once she leaves the podium?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The opposition member should well know that the whole affordable housing system wasn't working for tens of thousands of Albertans: wait-lists, a 65 per cent increase in their four years; and no growth, no matter what the investments were from the government. That's why our government is working closely with all levels of government, including the federal government, with local leader experts so we can build new affordable housing, including helping the homeless. We will support all of the homeless.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the UCP claimed to have a plan to support new units of affordable housing, yet the budget shows that the UCP will build fewer than 4,000 units within the next three years, nowhere near their claim of 25,000 units, and given that at this pace the UCP would only create half of what their intended goal is and given that the federal government has available funding and that municipalities are ready to act – the only people we're waiting for are the UCP – why is the minister not investing to ensure that all Albertans are part of the economic recovery?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned before, our plan of stronger foundations includes an additional 25,000 households by the end of 10 years, and we will continue to do that. I'm so proud to continue to work with the stakeholders, municipalities, and the federal minister. As I mentioned, that particular rental supplement: we are so proud to say that we are working with the federal government and cost matching for $222 million for the rent supplement, a benefit to all Albertans who are in need.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted by the Deputy Government House Leader at 2:28.

The hon. Member for Camrose has a question to ask.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP seems to think that Alberta's government is not taking school infrastructure seriously, yet it's my understanding that the minister has released a very exciting capital plan as part of Budget 2022 that includes 15 priority projects, including a new Catholic school in the Camrose constituency. Given that the NDP only wants to talk about projects that were not prioritized this time, could the minister please share with us what kinds of projects are receiving funding and how much the government is spending on these projects?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud that Budget 2022 and our capital plan include $2 billion over the next three years to support new projects, modulars, maintaining existing schools, charter school infrastructure, including collegiate programs. This $2 billion investment includes more than $251 million over three years for 15 much-needed new school projects on top of the over 50 school projects that are currently under construction. The new construction funding includes new schools in Calgary, Edmonton, Camrose, and Manning, school modernizations in Acme, Cochrane, Evansburg, and Milk River, design funding . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose is next.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Minister. We've heard from some school divisions who feel they were left out of this budget. Given that there are 63 public and separate school divisions in the province and given that our government has committed to keep spending under control to balance the budget, can the minister explain to the House how the ministry selects priority capital projects?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you. We have a very robust gated process used to select school capital projects. This process was actually brought in in 2018 on the recommendation of the Auditor General, who felt the process could be improved to greater transparency. Each year school boards are required to submit their three-year education plan to Alberta Education that outlines their capital needs. They are then evaluated, and priority projects are selected based on health and safety, enrolment pressure, building condition, functionality in programming, and legal requirements. Mr. Speaker, we are investing in school infrastructure for our students under a balanced budget. Promise made, promise kept.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Minister. Given that many schools around the province still have aging school infrastructure and some require upgrades but may not have been prioritized for a project this year based on needs around the province, could the minister please tell us what other resources are available to schools who need to upgrade, maintain, or replace the infrastructure in their schools?

The Speaker: The minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you. The capital plan also includes $209 million over three years to support the maintenance and renewal of existing schools, building through the capital maintenance and renewal program. It also includes $300 million over three years in school authorities' self-directed capital projects. If a school authority is experiencing enrolment pressures, there is also $118 million over the next three years to support the continued implementation of the modular program. As well, Mr. Speaker, there's over $249 million sitting in capital reserves by school authorities to address emerging issues.

Child Care Funding

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, last year the federal government made a record investment in Alberta's economy by investing in affordable quality child care. However, this UCP government seems intent on making sure that that investment fails Albertans. In their budget there isn't a single additional provincial dollar invested in child care. Why does that matter? Because without it the UCP will not reach the goal of $10-per-day child care for all families across this province, and the UCP knows it. Why isn't the Minister of Children's Services investing any additional money into child care to ensure that all Alberta families will have access to this life-changing support?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The agreement that we signed with the federal government is great news for Alberta parents and Alberta kids right across this province. Unlike the members opposite, who had a system where they picked and chose winners and losers when it came to parents and centres, we did not do that. We learned from their failed pilot and took that feedback from Alberta parents and child care operators to make sure that every single licensed space in all day homes and licensed centres and preschools was included in this plan. A billion dollars being invested to support working parents this year is good news.

Ms Pancholi: And almost none of that is provincial funding. Given that Alberta lost 20 per cent of our early childhood educators from the workforce, leaving the sector extremely short-staffed and unable to offer families spaces, and given that the UCP was one of the last to sign a deal with the federal government, leaving $268 million on the table in Ottawa last year which could have been used to recruit and train staff that are desperately needed to open new spaces for families, and given that no matter how many new spaces this government claims it will create, they're no good to parents if operators don't have staff to open them, to the minister: why is she refusing to increase wages for educators to attract more workers when Albertans need that so badly right now?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I have said a number of times in this House, we're not. This agreement with the federal government does in fact commit to looking at the wage top-ups that we provide early childhood educators. Why? Because we know that quality staff drives quality programming, and we need to keep early childhood educators in this system. I'm happy to say that our educator workforce is nearly back up to prepandemic levels. This is good news. There's $300 million in this agreement to support the workforce, and we're going to continue to take feedback from operators and educators on how best to roll that out.

Ms Pancholi: Given that Tracey Manuel, a new mom in Fort McMurray, put her family on a waiting list while she was pregnant and still doesn't have a child care space as she heads back to work in two months and given that Matt Beauchamp in Calgary has been searching for months to find spaces for his two kids but is facing wait-lists of up to 50 families and given that the continued ambivalence of this government to affordable, accessible, quality child care is costing these families money, causing them stress, and threatening their participation in the workforce, why is this minister refusing to invest a single new dollar into child care to make sure Albertans like Tracey and Matt and thousands of others can access quality child care now?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, if the members want to talk about families not being able to access affordable high-quality spaces, they don't have to look back further than three years ago, under their pilot program, to see what type of disruption that created for parents who absolutely could not access those spaces. We did . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Minister of Children's Services is the only one with the call.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we learned from their pilot program. That is why we fought for a made-in-Alberta deal that included all licensed spaces, so that if parents need access, they can access a space of their choosing and still have affordable child care in their community.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, this UCP government continues to gut postsecondary education here in Alberta. Since they took office, there's been a system-wide cut of more than $690 million. Funding is unstable, forcing postsecondaries to increase tuition and cut programs and faculties. Under the UCP everyone is paying more and getting less for postsecondary education. To the Minister of Advanced Education: why has this UCP government allowed record tuition increases and forced higher interest rates for students to repay their loans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's a good opportunity to inform the House that as we stand here today, tuition levels in Alberta are comparable to other jurisdictions. They actually continued to remain below the national average despite what the members opposite like to scream and yell about. Further, I encourage the members opposite to take a very close look at the budget. There's $171 million over three years to create 7,000 additional spaces in our postsecondary institutions and $15 million to create new bursaries for low-income students. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, in 2019 students owed a total of about $2.5 billion in debt. Given that this year the UCP's budget said that that number will pass $3.7 billion, by 2025 we expect that Alberta students will owe more than $5.3 billion, more than double what it had been in the past. How does this government expect Albertans to seek further training to grow our economy if they can barely afford to go to school, much less start a business after or plan for the future, without the looming spectre of unmanageable debt?

Mr. Nicolaides: Again, Mr. Speaker, I think the member opposite needs to take a close look at the budget. He'll see there a $249 million increase to student loan funding, which equates to $1,000 more per semester and an increase of $10,000 per student to their lifetime limit. Again, as I mentioned earlier, there's $15 million over three years to create new bursaries for low-income students; as well, $12 million over three years to support our scholarships that continue to exist. If the member is so concerned about prices, why is he working with Trudeau to jack up the fees?

Mr. Eggen: It only gets worse, Mr. Speaker. Given that the UCP is imposing billions of dollars in additional debt on Albertans pursuing a postsecondary education, given that they have forced postsecondary schools to hike up tuition, given that they themselves have increased the interest rate on student debt to above the already increasing prime rate, given that this means that the UCP is actually making money off students and their debts, how can this Minister of Advanced Education stomach the fact that this government is turning a profit on the backs of struggling Alberta students?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, if he's so concerned with the cost of living and affordability, why is he siding with his ally Trudeau to jack up the carbon tax on April 1? That's what I want to know. Where's the answer to that? I haven't heard that at all from the members opposite.

As I said, Budget 2022 contains $15 million in new funding to create new bursaries for low-income students; as well, $12 million over three years to expand our scholarships that already exist; as well, as I mentioned, $171 million over three years to create 7,000 additional spaces so that families and students right here in Alberta can find the spaces that they need in our incredible postsecondary institutions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

La Francophonie Albertaine

Ms Renaud: Je suis née au Québec, mais ma famille a beaucoup déménagé quand j'étais jeune. Afin de bien m'assimiler dans ma nouvelle communauté, j'ai perdu beaucoup de ma culture francophone. C'est devenu plus important pour moi de renouer avec la riche et belle culture francophone et de renouer mes racines.

Je suis extrêmement reconnaissante envers les organismes francophones qui travaillent si fort pour assurer que la langue et la culture françaises soient préservées et protégées. Les organisations comme l'ACFA travaillent à unir les forces vives et les sociétés afin de protéger les acquis, faire progresser les droits, la vitalité de la communauté francophone en Alberta.

L'Alberta possède un riche patrimoine francophone. Un bon nombre des premiers colons étaient des Canadiens français. Aujourd'hui nous avons plus de 30 communautés francophones à travers la province : Falher, Grande Prairie, Legal, Plamondon, Lac La Biche, Miette, Beaumont et St. Albert, la communauté que je suis chanceuse et fière de représenter. Un Albertain sur 10 est d'origine française ou canadienne française. Les nouveaux arrivés de l'Europe, de l'Afrique, et d'ailleurs ont la possibilité d'intégrer aux communautés françaises florissantes. En 2018 Alberta a déclaré le mois de mars le Mois de la Francophonie Albertaine. C'est une occasion chaque année de souligner l'énergie que la francophonie apporte à l'Alberta. Je vous souhaite à tous un excellent Mois de la Francophonie Albertaine 2022.

Merci, M. le Président.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Economic Recovery Plan and Budget 2022

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over this last year Albertans have ridden this roller coaster of good and bad news. I'm happy to say that we can finally exit that ride and enter an amazing new year. With all the record investments Alberta has seen just this past year, employment numbers have returned to pre-COVID levels while we see an increase in the diversification of our economy. This shows that the Alberta recovery plan is working and is working for all Albertans.

I've also had the pleasure of seeing investments made by our government throughout Lesser Slave Lake through the municipal sustainability initiative into the rehabilitation of gravel roads and the replacement of a roof on an administrative building. Just over the past couple of weeks our government released their budget, where all of us have not only worked hard together over this past year to get it balanced but succeeded, as we have a surplus of $500 million, the first balanced budget in seven years. It is packed full of great announcements for Albertans and constituents of Lesser Slave Lake. Broadband investments will increase accessibility to services with more stability to individuals in Lesser Slave Lake. There are many in Lesser Slave Lake whose livelihoods depend on the reliable service of this connection. I'm also happy to see that our government is putting a focus on recruiting 50 new Crown prosecutors. This is great news as this will increase the efficiency in dealing with crime and our legal system. It is also great to see that $90 million has been provided towards programs for family physicians to practise across rural Alberta.

Lastly, I would like to take a moment to offer my sympathies and support to the Ukrainian people. They're facing an unprecedented attack by Russia. The rest of the world should not give up. We need to continue to be there for the Ukrainian people as they continue to show an overwhelming amount of courage and tenacity in their fight for freedom. I will continue to advocate for the rights of their . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Social Workers

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you. Each day Alberta's 9,000 social workers show up for work. Their service is essential. They may be serving people experiencing homelessness by connecting them with permanent supportive housing. They may be offering mental health services to youth at school. They may be meeting with community members regarding concerns in their neighbourhood. They may be presenting workshops on diversity or supporting seniors to navigate the challenges created by COVID. Or, like me, they may be elected officials advocating for social justice in government policy.

Sadly, Albertans are experiencing tremendous challenges due to the decisions of this UCP government. Despite significant revenues the UCP continues to prioritize profitable corporations over Albertans, keeping taxes low for them and increasing taxes for the rest of us. In addition, each one of us is paying more out of pocket for essential goods such as utilities, insurance, and groceries. In tandem the UCP is depleting public programs.

Seniors' programs received no funding increases. The Alberta seniors' benefit was deindexed when the UCP became government in 2019. With revenue flowing into the province and the escalating cost of inflation, now is the exact time to index the Alberta seniors' benefit to inflation. Tragically, the UCP looks the other way, choosing to take care of their elite corporate interests at the expense of seniors on fixed incomes. Instead of seeing the real need for support due to circumstances beyond the control of any individual, the UCP celebrates, patting themselves on the back as if their wise policies put Alberta in the black. This is ridiculous.

Despite all this, social workers show up for work each day. They work to mitigate the negative consequences of uncaring UCP policies. They do this because they stand for fairness and justice. They do this because it is the right thing to do. They do this at a cost to their own well-being.

Thank you to each one of Alberta's 9,000 social workers. Happy Social Work Week.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Utility Costs

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government and others have said that the best way to support our seniors is to help them stay in their own homes and communities for as long as possible, and I couldn't agree more. Unfortunately, more and more seniors are telling me that they are worried about being able to stay in their own homes on fixed incomes because of the drastic increases to utility costs. They're not alone. Many of my constituents have reached out to me, worried about increases in utilities, some doubling and even tripling over the last few years. My own power bill doubled over last year. They aren't complaining about the cost of the electricity or the natural gas they consumed. No. What they can't accept is the extra cost due to the carbon tax and transmission and distribution charges. These are the majority of their bills. I have one bill that was $118 for gas, but the total was $332. I understand their anger.

My understanding is that other provinces, like Quebec, use the profits from selling energy, like our royalties, to reduce the burden on their residents' and businesses' utility bills. At the same time they reduce their provincial revenue to the point that they qualify for – guess what? – equalization payments funded by provinces like Alberta. I have suggested to our government that we do the same. We should use a small part of our significantly increased oil and gas royalties – you know, the oil and gas resources that actually belong to Albertans and not governments – to reduce the massive burden being experienced by Albertans and their businesses.

These very high transmission and distribution charges came about because of poor decisions by previous governments, both the NDP for their meddling in the power purchase agreements and early closure of our cheap and clean coal power plants and the PCs for their transmission overbuild. Our residents and businesses are not responsible for poor decisions by previous governments and should not be expected to pay the price. It's time for us to step up and use Alberta's royalties to reduce the burden that previous governments have stuck them with. If we do it right, we might even reduce the equalization payments from Alberta that get sent to other provinces that block the development of our natural resources.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice of the following bills: Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, sponsored by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance; Bill 3, the Special Days Act, sponsored by the Minister of Culture; Bill 4, the Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022, sponsored by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Government Motion 7 there shall be no evening sitting tonight.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to provide notice pursuant to Standing Order 42 that at the appropriate time I will move a motion, which reads as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge the following: (a) Albertans are facing rising gasoline prices in excess of $1.55 per litre; (b) electricity rates per kilowatt hour are more than double the rate cap put in place by the previous government, with the current government failing to provide relief to Albertans in respect of these rising costs; (c) the government promised to provide relief to Albertans in respect to skyrocketing natural gas prices through its 2022-23 budget but failed to do so by introducing an unfunded program that only comes into effect in October, for which the vast majority of Albertans will not qualify. Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta call on the government to consider immediately providing each of the following types of emergency relief to Albertans: (a) in respect of rising gasoline prices, a suspension of the 13 cents per litre provincial tax, to be reassessed on a reoccurring three-month basis; (b) in respect of rising electricity rates, either a rebate program to take effect immediately to off-set the rising costs or a re-establishment of the rate cap of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, that was put in place by the previous government; (c) in respect of rising natural gas prices, a rebate program that takes effect immediately and for which eligibility threshold is lower than the $6.50 per gigajoule threshold proposed by the government's current program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have the appropriate number of copies when needed.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul has a tabling.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I actually have three tablings today. The first is a copy of a Quebec hydro bill for power and heating, where they have just the cost of power plus their harmonized sales tax. It's all they get charged.

The second tabling is a copy of an Alberta power and gas bill, where in addition to the cost of the fees for power and gas we pay an administration fee, transmission charge, distribution charge, Balancing Pool rider, deferral rider, transmission trace up rider, municipal franchise fee, interim shortfall rider, rider B property tax, and transmission service charge. I can't even explain what some of those are.

Of course, being that we're in a new session, I would like to table five copies of the Leap Manifesto, the favourite document of the NDP.

The Speaker: Are there any other tablings? The hon. Member for Highwood is on his feet.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table, as provided to me by the reeve, Delilah Miller, on behalf of the Foothills county and residents, a petition conducted online in which 1,127 residents are requesting that Foothills county be removed as a member from the Calgary Metropolitan Region Board.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has a tabling.

Mr. Getson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table a February 14 comment I made on Facebook, that the opposition had gone after me nonstop for making comments for people to remember their oaths when they evoked the emergency measures act. I would like very much for everyone to read that at home, as well as the opposition, to get the full content of that.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act the Members of the Legislative Assembly pension plan annual report for the year ended March 31, 2020; pursuant to the Insurance Act the Alberta Automobile Insurance Rate Board annual report 2021, for the year ended December 31, 2021.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I wish to advise the Assembly that the point of order from 2:28 has been withdrawn.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: At the appropriate time the Member for Calgary-Mountain View gave the Assembly notice of Standing Order 42. The member now has five minutes in which to make their argument for why unanimous consent should be granted.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Fuel and Utility Costs

Ms Ganley:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge the following: (a) Albertans are facing rising gasoline prices in excess of $1.55 per litre; (b) electricity rates per kilowatt hour are more than double the rate cap put in place by the previous government, with the current government failing to provide relief to Albertans in respect of these rising costs; (c) the government promised to provide relief to Albertans in respect to skyrocketing natural gas prices through its 2022-23 budget but failed to do so by introducing an unfunded program that only comes into effect in October, for which the vast majority of Albertans will not qualify. Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta call on the government to consider immediately providing each of the following types of emergency relief to Albertans: (a) in respect of rising gasoline prices, a suspension of the 13 cents per litre provincial tax, to be reassessed on a reoccurring three-month basis; (b) in respect of rising electricity rates, either a rebate program to take effect immediately to off-set the rising costs or a re-establishment of the rate cap of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, that was put in place by the previous government; (c) in respect of rising natural gas prices, a rebate program that takes effect immediately and for which eligibility threshold is lower than the $6.50 per gigajoule threshold proposed by the government's current program.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to unanimous consent to proceed with this SO 42. I'll begin by addressing urgency.

Mr. Speaker, this matter is incredibly urgent. It is urgent to all the families out there right now choosing between buying groceries and heating their homes in the middle of an Alberta winter. We're hearing from more and more Albertans who cannot afford skyrocketing energy bills.

Last week gasoline prices spiked to over $1.55 per litre. The current government promised action on natural gas prices but then presented a budget with a fake program. The rebate would not come into effect until October, it's currently unfunded, and it sets a threshold that few, if any, Albertans will ever qualify for. In fact, their plan depends on things getting considerably worse.

Meanwhile Albertans have been sending us copies of utility bills in excess of $700, and that's in addition to the other decisions the UCP government has made that have hammered household budgets. They've increased income taxes, property taxes, tuition, student debt interest, car insurance – and the car insurance, Mr. Speaker, I might add, without even requiring the documentation that we asked for proving that those costs were increasing at greater than 5 per cent a year. Even camping fees are all rising as a direct result of the decisions of this government.

This is completely unsustainable for many families. It will force many to park their vehicles or to pile debt on to their credit cards. Mr. Speaker, this cannot go on. We have heard the Premier announce some measure of supports, but Albertans need a complete set of measures, as set out in our motion, in order to support them. This government needs to take responsibility for the impact that it is causing on household budgets.

We heard the government today: Albertans will need to wait 24 days to see relief at the pumps. This is obviously an important step, but it's insufficient. We're hearing as well about massive increases in bills and many with outstanding bills. Mr. Speaker, the government certainly announced that they would be providing families with a rebate of $150, but many families are facing arrears of hundreds or even thousands of dollars. These are forcing them to make incredibly difficult choices between basic necessities like food and rent and heat. Many are at risk of being disconnected. In 2021 the average Alberta family had to pay an additional $250. That's $100 more than the government is offering without the increased cost of transmission or distribution.

Mr. Speaker, I think the actions that we saw today from this government are inadequate to address the concerns of Albertans, and I would urge the House that this matter is urgent. I can only imagine that members on all sides are getting the same e-mails that we are getting on our side, of Albertans struggling, reaching out to us, saying that they can't afford the cost of their utilities at the same time that they pay for their medication or for their food. These are decisions that no Albertan should ever have to make. These Albertans need action immediately.

We know the government's actions are insufficient to support Albertans, so I think, Mr. Speaker, that every member of this House owes it to their constituents to engage today in a real debate about how we can help these Albertans struggling with costs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader has up to five minutes to respond.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do agree with the hon. member that something needs to be done about the unfortunate mistakes that the Official Opposition made when they were in government when it comes to both our electricity system as well as their catastrophic policies like the carbon tax impact on fuel prices. That's why today the government has already announced, in fact, some of the stuff that is asked for in the hon. member's motion. It includes more than 13 cents per litre of the gasoline tax being removed and $150 in electricity rebates for Albertans that are experiencing high prices right now from this winter. That's in addition to this government that removed $1.3 billion from the NDP carbon tax, which was on our economy.

These are very serious issues which the government is taking seriously, which is why they took action today, and we need to continue to take action in the days to come to help Albertans. But here are the biggest things that we could also do right now. We can continue to fight against the federal government's carbon tax when it comes to the impact on fuel costs. That member and her party, the Official Opposition and the NDP party, continue to support Justin Trudeau and his job-killing carbon tax. In fact, they support the increase in gas taxes that will come from the federal carbon tax in just a few days, on April 1.

If we are going to debate this issue in the Chamber, I think, Mr. Speaker, we should start with that member and her party standing up and apologizing to Albertans for bringing in a carbon tax that they never told them about when they were in government and for the catastrophic impacts of that tax on the people of this province. They should stand up and apologize for continuing to support Justin Trudeau with his job-killing carbon tax and join this side of the House right now in calling on the federal government to remove the job-killing carbon tax on our economy inside our province.

Second, they should stand up inside this House and apologize to Albertans for their boondoggle that they made when they were in charge of our electricity system, Mr. Speaker, that is impacting the very Albertans that she spoke about today, that is impacting Albertans who are struggling to pay for their bills because of the Official Opposition and the NDP's mistakes. That's what that member should do, stand up and apologize for that today.

That said, Mr. Speaker, the government is taking action today. We're going to continue to take action, and they can rest assured that we will continue to be here to defend them against the NDP and their Justin Trudeau allies, who are doing everything they can to continue to cost Albertans money. Our side of the House is going to lower taxes, make things easier for Albertans going forward. Their side of the House, if they ever get to this side of the House again, will continue to do everything that they can to tax Albertans, kill jobs, and make investment flee this province. As such, because clear action has been taken today, I'd ask everybody in this Chamber not to support this motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42 requires unanimous consent of the Assembly.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: As such, we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika and the opposition deputy – the Deputy Government House Leader.

Drug Abuse Prevention

501. Mr. Schow moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue working to combat the impacts of drug abuse in Alberta and urge the government of Canada to make all efforts in conjunction with its allies to prevent the export of lethal and highly addictive opioids, including but not limited to fentanyl and carfentanil and related chemicals from which these opioids are formed, from all foreign countries, including the People's Republic of China and Mexico.

Mr. Schow: We got there, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Thank you for that.

It is my honour to rise this afternoon and speak on Motion 501, my motion, a private member's motion. Now, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion regarding the ongoing opioid crisis in Alberta. The import of dangerous and illegal drugs must end, Mr. Speaker. These drugs continue to affect thousands of Albertans every year, resulting in the destruction of lives and livelihoods, and in some instances – in fact, in many instances – causing death.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful and honoured to work with my government colleagues as we strive to assist in the recovery of these addictions. It is important to recognize that those who sit on this side of the House are opposed to the methods that the opposition would take to combat this. We may not see eye to eye on these issues regarding drug abuse in Alberta, but I think that this motion is a good motion and a step in the right direction, and I would hope that all members would support it. That being said, I deem it very unlikely that members opposite wouldn't support a motion that urges both the provincial and federal governments to stop the export of illegal drugs from countries across the world.

The United Conservative government is committed to finding the best treatment options to help free people from the cycle of addiction. Unfortunately, the NDP members continue with their tunnel vision in claiming that if we as the government were to supply the drugs, there would be fewer fatalities. Recently organized was the Select Special Committee to Examine Safe Supply. Mr. Speaker, in this committee each member had the opportunity to hear from experts in the addiction field as well as some first-hand experiences regarding addiction in the province of Alberta. The organization of the safe supply committee was further to the work that the hon. Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions has already done, my good friend.

Just a couple of months ago the United Conservative government doubled up on the original 2019 commitment of 4,000 addiction treatment spaces and announced an additional 4,000, giving Alberta 8,000 addiction treatment spaces. Our government has also eliminated user fees for Albertans who need access to these treatment spaces. Mr. Speaker, with thousands of people who are trapped in addiction, I think that we can do better than simply handing them the very substance that has controlled their lives to the point that they see no future for themselves. Recovery is possible, and our government is committed to putting forward the necessary resources. Individuals who are trapped in addiction are worth more to their friends and families and to society than the cost of the drugs they're addicted to.

Our economy is on the verge of – it is booming, Mr. Speaker. Our economy is booming, and though members opposite may suggest otherwise, I don't know what their definition of booming is – it certainly isn't what we believe on this side – simply giving money away. We have a labour shortage across Alberta. When those that are suffering from addiction receive help, they will have the opportunity to get a job and create a much better life for themselves. Albertans have never asked for a handout; they've only asked for a hand up.

There is hope for these people, but our government as well as the federal government must work together to first stop the import of dangerous drugs into our communities. Each year thousands of 911 calls are made in Alberta to respond to drug overdoses. In Edmonton and Calgary alone roughly 200 overdose calls are made each week. Mr. Speaker, continuing to give dangerous substances to those who suffer from addiction is irresponsible. There must be more done. For that reason, there must be strong attention given by governments at all levels to ensure that these substances do not make their way into communities, cities, and even our homes.

Representing the constituency of Cardston-Siksika, I would like to share with the House some of the things that I have concluded when it comes to drug abuse. It is important to recognize that this is not just a city problem. This is a problem that affects all Albertans, and it is very likely that we each know a few if not many individuals that suffer from dangerous addiction. Even the south, the place I love so dearly, is not immune to addiction. I see it regularly, and it is very unfortunate, and those people who are struggling and caught in the cycle of addiction are asking for help. I believe that we are doing the right thing in expanding treatment spaces for those individuals because I believe that we have a great opportunity in this province for everyone to become meaningful contributors, and that's what people want. There is dignity in that, Mr. Speaker. There is dignity there.

In my riding there are two of the largest First Nation reserves in Canada, namely Blood Tribe and Siksika. Thus, last summer it was brought to light, the horrific tragedies that took place at residential schools. These residential schools caused severe trauma for thousands upon thousands of individuals, and the trauma is present today and largely contributes to substance abuse that takes place on reserves. Mr. Speaker, I have hope for these individuals. I have hope that they will take the opportunity and accept the help and overcome their addictions as well as those who are not on-reserve, because we're all Albertans and children of God. Our government is committed to reconciliation. Although there have been many ceremonies and memorials that have taken place following the tragic discoveries of the unmarked graves, there is more work to be done to reconcile and build a positive relationship between the government and Indigenous communities.

As part of this, the Legislative Assembly must recognize the damage that is caused by countries allowing the export of dangerous drugs such as fentanyl and carfentanil as that is the first opportunity to stop them from making their way into Alberta. For that reason, we must be urging the government of Canada to make all efforts preventing countries such as the People's Republic of China and Mexico from exporting these opioids. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my gratitude to law enforcement across Alberta, that has worked together with the government of Alberta to bring safety to Albertans and responsibly enforce the law upon those who have brought drugs into our country. It is crucial that our government and all Legislature members in this House support the prosecution of those who are responsible for supplying Alberta with dangerous drugs that have caused death and destruction to families and communities. The act of supplying these drugs should have no tolerance in our province as the consequences are made clear by the sheer number of addictions that they are fuelling.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to sponsor a motion that will move Alberta even closer to overcoming the opioid crisis that we face. There is certainly action that must be taken if this motion should pass, and I look forward to contributing to that work on behalf of my constituents and all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members looking to join debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has risen.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join debate on this very serious issue here in Alberta. We know we are in a crisis situation regarding the opioid crisis. It is so sad to say that four to five people die each day in our province from an opioid poisoning, and certainly I want to extend my condolences to all of the families who have lost loved ones due to this very difficult situation.

I, certainly, want to say that, you know, this caucus, the NDP caucus, is extremely concerned about this issue, and when we were in government, we did significant work to expand harm reduction services across the province that we know are evidence based and support people where they're at, which is really crucial to addressing this issue. Sadly, the UCP have a different view, and a lot of those services are being closed, not expanded, not supported, and what we're seeing is that more and more Albertans are dying from this. We're on record in 2021, although we don't have the statistics for the last two months of that year, to have the most deaths from drug poisoning ever since they've been recorded. Obviously, the policies of the UCP aren't helping. The crisis is out of control. So many vulnerable Albertans' lives are being taken from this.

I would like to present an amendment, Mr. Speaker. I do have the original here and copies for other members.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Should any member wish to receive – are we handing them to everybody? Everybody will receive a copy of the amendment. Look at that; it's like the good old days.

If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview could please read the amendment in for the purposes of all those at home and for the benefit of Hansard. As well, this will be referred to as amendment A1.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm putting forward that Motion Other than Government Motion 501 be amended by striking out “to prevent the export of lethal and highly addictive opioids, including but not limited to fentanyl and carfentanil and related chemicals from which these opioids are formed, from all foreign countries, including the People's Republic of China and Mexico” and substituting “to prevent the illegal importation of lethal and highly addictive opioids, including fentanyl, carfentanil and related chemicals from which these opioids are formed, from all foreign countries.”

May I speak to the amendment?

The Acting Speaker: You can absolutely continue, and there's about seven minutes and 20 seconds remaining.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying before I presented the amendment, the UCP government has dramatically stopped the funding supporting harm reduction services across the province, and that's a key service, a key support for vulnerable Albertans, because what it does is that they support people where they're at, which is fundamental because this is a very vulnerable population. A lot of times they may have distrust certainly for, you know, any kind of law enforcement service. They may distrust health care. I mean, they're involved in an activity that could put them in jail, but they're not criminals. They are people who have trouble with substance use.

But what's happened over the last few years is that that substance on the street has become more and more lethal, so people are dying. They don't want to die. Yes, they use drugs, but using drugs shouldn't be a death sentence for people.

It's really important for us as legislators to look at that from “How can we fix this problem?”, not what we think, you know, righteously, these people should do. It shouldn't be sort of an ideological decision that, well, they just need to quit drugs, then. These are vulnerable people who are sometimes under the control of these very powerful drugs. In order to support them, we must start where they're at. We must be there for them in their communities.

One of the significant evidence-based services is supervised consumption services across our province, and those we expanded when we were government. That was making a difference. We had seen a reduction in opiate poisoning deaths just before the election, and the UCP came in and they reversed those decisions. They closed the busiest supervised consumption site in the province when they closed ARCHES in Lethbridge, and they did it with a red herring. They made up some financial concerns about the organization and said: this is why we're closing it down; they're not using funds correctly. Then it came to light that that actually was false. That wasn't even an honest fact that the UCP was using to make the decision.

Over and over we must know that we need evidence-based solutions. Certainly, if you talk to physicians, if you talk to experts in this area, if you talk to front-line workers, we know – the front-line workers, these experts, medical professionals know that harm reduction services make a key difference.

Now, I'm not saying that we don't need a plethora of services. We do. There is no panacea. It's not just one thing. There is no panacea. It's a complex problem, and we need support right from harm reduction services all the way to having treatment and recovery beds, which is where the UCP is focusing most of their attention. That's a good thing. We want them to expand treatment beds – that's great – but not at the expense of harm reduction services.

In the summer of last year, to address this significant issue, we called for an emergency action plan and said that we need the expansion of supervised consumption sites, drug checking, and safe supply. Safe supply is pharmaceutical alternatives to highly toxic drugs. This is a sad piece of rhetoric that the UCP uses as they say, “Oh, these are NDP drug sites” or that we're going to go give free drugs to everybody. That's just to confuse citizens. That's not what it is at all. This is very carefully done, and we want to make sure that people are supported.

Oftentimes with safe supply, you know, these are prescriptions that people get, and it's oftentimes for people who have had repeated difficulty being able to stabilize. Nothing else has worked for them, and it helps them. It keeps them on the planet. It keeps them safe, and it helps them function. Certainly, I've heard many stories from people whose lives have been able to turn around because they had safe supply, and it made such a significant difference for them. Please, let's have this on the record very clearly that we know there is no panacea and that there is a broad range of services, and recovery beds only will not help.

We must actually understand that there are many things that are needed. Certainly, the social determinants of health are also a key piece. Again, this UCP government isn't really looking at that at all. Affordable housing: we know that we have about 2.6 per cent of affordable housing in our province available, and the national average is more like 4.9 per cent. So many people who are vulnerable: they need a house, they need a place to live and a place to stabilize and be supported to do that, but instead, you know, the UCP is not investing in those kinds of fundamental services to help vulnerable people. You can't just fix this very complex problem by only one solution, so it's very important that we have an array, a continuum of services, and the big, key issue that the UCP is neglecting is the harm reduction model.

This amendment is certainly important. We need to have law enforcement. We need to make sure there are government policies that are making sure that toxic drugs aren't coming to our country. But I guess one of the egregious things about this motion, that the amendment addresses, is that the United States and many other countries – here in Canada toxic drugs are being created. Why are China and Mexico being singled out? This should not be.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, we are on amendment A1, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has risen.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the opportunity to speak to amendment A1 to Motion 501 from the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika. I appreciate both this motion and this amendment. Any time we have a chance to speak about the opioid crisis that we are experiencing here, not just in the province of Alberta but right across the country and indeed in many parts of the world, I think it's very important for us to not just remind the public about the severity of this epidemic but to remind ourselves about what our responsibility is in regard to trying to mitigate this crisis, which is killing and destroying the lives of so many people here in the province. As we've heard many times – I'll say it again – we have between four and five people dying here in the province of Alberta every single day from opioid overdoses.

Mr. Speaker, I mean, this is a crisis that, if we equate it to any other number of activities by human beings, we would, you know, call an emergency and swoop in to turn it around using all means necessary. Four or five people dying every day, not to mention how many people's lives have been ruined. Their health has been ruined by addiction to opioids, and I think we cannot just ignore this. We have to take decisive action using as many of all means which we can throw at this crisis to reduce death rates, reduce addiction rates, and to try to save lives and get people back on track to living a more productive and healthy life.

As the previous speaker from Edmonton-Riverview said very appropriately, we have to use a plethora – I just wanted to see if I could say that, and I did – of different ways to approach this crisis. Certainly, not one particular approach would be a panacea – I did it again; got it – that would solve this issue but, rather, a combination thereof.

I know from my own personal experience with members of my own family that work in addictions centres around the province, safe consumption sites and treatment centres as well, that, one and two, they will often work hand in hand with each other in order to, first, make a connection with an individual perhaps through the safe consumption site and then moving that person to the treatment that they need over a number of weeks or months or, you know, perhaps for a good deal of their life afterwards. Those things can work together. In fact, they must work together because in between is where you have those deaths occurring every single day.

One of the misconceptions, of course, of this epidemic is that, you know, people are dying on the streets, that they're homeless and they're dying in bus shelters and so forth. That is true – I mean, there are people certainly living a very difficult life and circumstance as houseless individuals – but the vast majority of overdoses and deaths are occurring in homes where people live, in fact, because they are not with somebody and taking the drugs which are unstable and not regulated and often very crudely mixed. If you're doing that alone, then the chances of overdosing and then not getting any emergency treatment through naloxone and so forth – that's where the majority of the deaths are occurring across the province and across North America today.

So we need to kind of aim at all of those things, and the first thing that I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we all need to do is to get onboard, on the same page and not use this crisis as a political wedge issue, suggesting that, you know, we're just trying to foist and give drugs to people and whatever, right? I mean, that's all just peripheral to dealing with the actual problem.

What we do need to do, as we, you know, try to do with other emergencies, is to focus as a single unit and work with health professionals and members from across the aisle to find out what the best thing is, the best place to go is, and so forth. That's why I said from the beginning of my remarks that I appreciate both this motion, because it brings attention to something we need to deal with right here, right now in this House, and the amendment, which I think would help to clarify the language that the hon. member brought forward in this motion in regard to the source of opioid drugs and particularly synthetic opioid drugs.

I mean, although I'm not an expert, certainly, I know that it is a home-grown product, right? You can make fentanyl and carfentanil and all of the different versions of that right here in Alberta, and they are made right here in Alberta. If they're not just from that source here in this province, then they will be coming from different provinces in Canada, and if they're not coming from different provinces, they'll be coming from the United States of America, a very large country to the south of us that has a similar opioid crisis taking place in their country. I think just removing and changing the motion in regard to talking about foreign countries, including China and Mexico – I mean, singling that out, I think, is just a bit of a reductive element to this motion that takes away from the laser focus that we should try to work with to talk about the opioid crisis here in Alberta.

One of the things I know that I've learned besides targeting the product itself – because it's very porous, right? It's like trying to hold water back with your hands. If you do perhaps find a source and shut down a source of synthetic opioids, then it will come from other places. So while you'll need to do that, for sure, chasing down dealers and sources of the drug, you're not going to stop the crisis just by doing that. You need to have addiction treatment centres that are available and that are in easy proximity to where people are using the drug. As I said, people are using it in their homes, and this is all over the city, all over the province, but being able to have easy access for treatment, addiction treatment centres, I think, is absolutely necessary.

The reason I bring this up is that I'm very concerned about the movement of a treatment centre downtown, just a few blocks from here.

In April they will be moving it up to Alberta Hospital, and while, you know, we need to use space and have access to treatment for all people in all parts of the city, I just am wondering why we would move a treatment centre from downtown, where there's easy access with buses and affordable housing and so forth and more people, quite frankly, that are using synthetic opioids, up to the far north part of our city. I mean, correct me if I'm wrong, hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but is there a bus that goes to the actual Alberta Hospital? Maybe, kind of, sort of, probably not, right?

Ms Sweet: No.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Exactly.

You have to kind of work with what you have, but then you always have to assess: what is the best for the people you're trying to serve? Again, I'm just speaking out on this issue of Alberta Health Services' choice to move an addiction centre out of the downtown and many, many kilometres away in the far north, to Alberta Hospital.

Yeah, you know, if we're looking for ways by which we can reach over the different approaches and views towards this issue around addictions and the opioid crisis that we are experiencing here, here is a small way by which we can do it. I'm saying here now that this motion shows some promise. I think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is saying the same thing because she took the time and the effort to help clarify the language around this same motion to make sure that if we are aiming at the sources of production – right? – the places where these drugs come from, then we have to make sure that we are acknowledging that they come from all over the place, including right here in our own province, manufactured illegally, across the country, across North America, and indeed around the world, not just China and Mexico.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Just prior to seeing anyone else with regard to discussions on A1, I would just draw to the attention of all those here that sometimes it can be difficult to have amendments go through during private member motions like this. However, just for the benefit of everybody here, this amendment was approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and as well the sponsor did see it in time and was provided notice. Therefore, it is in order.

I see the hon. Member for Calgary . . .

Mr. Jones: South East. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that clarification. I agree with the member opposite that the motion has promise. I'm not sure I see the need for this amendment.

The overprescription of medication was a popular topic of conversation in the early 2000s, and unfortunately over the last two decades this trend has not only increased but has also turned into an epidemic. The opioid epidemic has gotten out of hand so rapidly that Canada is facing a national opioid overdose crisis. This crisis has devastated communities and families as their loved ones are harmed and lost to opioid use. While we can't know the exact mortality rate from chronic high doses, in 2015 the Canadian Medical Association admitted that our available numbers may have severely underestimated the fatalities. Unfortunately, this remains true to this day.

What we are faced with today is more than the undisciplined, unstructured, and arbitrary use of opioid prescriptions. Instead, it is the replacement of drugs such as OxyContin with more potent opioids such as fentanyl and hydromorphone. We are also seeing a boom in street heroin and street fentanyl. As a result, Canada is now the second-highest per capita user of prescription opioids globally, second only to the United States. In Alberta we have witnessed and continue to see the overwhelming effects of drug abuse in our communities. We continue to hear about it on the news, and increasingly Albertans know someone who has been negatively affected by opioids.

We also have data from the Public Health Agency of Canada on opioid-related harms. The most recent data, from January to June 2021, is disturbing. According to this report 90 per cent of all apparent opioid toxicity deaths during that timeline occurred in B.C., Alberta, and Ontario. Between April and June 2021, 1,720 apparent opioid toxicity deaths occurred. That is approximately 19 lives lost to the opioid crisis per day, and to better put the severity of the issue in perspective, this is a 66 per cent increase compared to April to June 2019. Sadly, our young and middle-aged people, primarily males, are disproportionately impacted, with most deaths occurring among individuals age 20 to 49; 30- to 39-year-olds alone represented 31 per cent of accidental opioid toxicity deaths by fentanyl between January and June 2021, and males accounted for an astounding 75 per cent of accidental apparent opioid toxicity deaths in that period. Now, "fentanyl" is a name we've all heard and are familiar with, but what many may not know is that 87 per cent of accidental apparent opioid toxicity deaths in 2021 involved fentanyl.

To combat drug use in Alberta, including fentanyl, the government has introduced three different pathways to healing, focusing on prevention, intervention, treatment and recovery. This approach allows Albertans and their loved ones to choose a path that makes sense to them. Alberta Health Services also has resources available for harm reduction under the DrugSafe initiative. This initiative focuses on saving lives in the event of an overdose by teaching individuals how to spot an overdose, what to do when it's spotted, and how to respond to opioid poisoning with a naloxone kit. Naloxone kits, introduced in Alberta in 2015, can be a temporary antidote, acting to reverse an overdose until help arrives. These kits are free of charge at pharmacies, and individuals do not need to present a health care card, ID, or prescription to receive them.

Aside from overdose prevention, Alberta also has a range of treatment housing, including recovery housing for both pre- and posttreatment, intensive residential treatment, opioid agonist therapy, and support for families. In each of these pathways dedicated, licensed professionals provide treatment services focusing on providing safe and effective treatment options for addiction.

In addition to these services, those struggling with opioid addiction now have access to Sublocade and Suboxone to treat opioid addiction. These medications stay in a person's system for 30 days, providing stabilization, reducing cravings, significantly enhancing protection against overdose, and helping with maintaining treatment in an outpatient setting. The benefit of this medication is that when properly prescribed and dispensed, a person on either medication can function more normally, with reduced drowsiness and withdrawal symptoms. Both of these medications are safe and can be utilized long term once prescribed.

With voluntary and confidential services such as these available, more than ever before it is vital for the government to continue working to combat the impacts of drug abuse in Alberta. Although Alberta has been tirelessly battling the harmful effects of opioids and other drugs, this is not a battle that we can win alone. Furthermore, it's not an Alberta-specific issue, which is why I also want to call on national and other provincial governments to work together to prevent the export of lethal and highly addictive opioids from foreign countries.

Currently fentanyl and cocaine are the most used illegal drugs in Alberta. Fentanyl, which can be a hundred times more potent than morphine, is often transited into Canada from China and Hong Kong through the U.S. while most of the world's cocaine is produced in just three countries: Colombia, Bolivia, and Peru. However, its main entry points into Canada are also the Caribbean islands, the U.S.A., and Mexico.

Since January 2020 Canada and the United States have been involved in a bilateral initiative to find solutions to the opioid crisis affecting both nations. Currently the focus of their action plan is combatting opioid trafficking. This includes fentanyl and other synthetic opioids. Additionally, they are seeking to address the health consequences of problematic opioid use through the means of institutional co-operation through public health, law enforcement, and border security as well as through information-sharing and best practices.

This collaboration is a great first step. However, given the severity of the issue, it is paramount for Canada to continue to build partnerships and work with domestic and international partners to not only stop the flood of fentanyl, cocaine, and other highly addictive drugs but also to ban the chemicals that make up these substances.

We've experienced two very difficult years. Based on recent data from the National Health Service and further research conducted by Alberta Health Services, the University of Alberta, and the Canadian Centre on Substance Use and Addiction, we know that several factors contribute to the worsening of the overdose crisis. These include an increasingly toxic drug supply, increased feelings of isolation, stress, and anxiety, and limited accessibility to services for people who use drugs.

Aside from the negative societal impact of these highly addictive drugs, the opioid crisis has resulted in significant economic losses. Canada lost an estimated $4.7 billion in labour productivity as a result of this crisis between 2016 and 2019. Between 2007 and 2014 Alberta's estimated economic costs of substance use sat at roughly $1,300 per capita compared to $1,100, roughly, for Canada. However, in 2017 alone that number rose in Alberta to nearly $1,600 per capita compared to Canada's $1,250.

We know that this growing issue requires immediate intervention, which is why the 2021-2022 operating budget for Mental Health and Addictions has been increased and is focused on recovery-based services. I support these investments and the focus on recovery, and I would like to thank the government, the Minister of Health, and the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions for their work to address the opioid crisis.

I encourage all members of this House to support the motion, and I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen on amendment A1.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the amendment, which has been a little bit forgotten here. But I do want to say that I actually appreciate the speech that we just heard from the Member for Calgary-South East. I appreciate the inclusion of significant amounts of quite reasonable arguments and good information. Nothing in what he was saying, you know, raised my concern, and I really appreciate that, because that's not the case with the member who actually moved the motion in this case, who presented a number of facts which I think are demonstrably arguable.

You know, this is too important to be using it as an opportunity for dog whistles and, well, really, mildly racist comments. I'm very concerned that we have a crisis in this province, but of course what we do know is that we have a crisis in the western world. It isn't just in the province of Alberta that we have high rates. Alberta is just one of the worst examples, and of course it seems to fit into a number of other areas of concern we have around things like domestic violence and so on. We seem to have a culture in Alberta that somehow supports some of these negative behaviours, and I'm very concerned about it, and I certainly would love to be able to stand up and support this government in taking a number of steps to address those issues that are causing the underlying structural drivers that lead to these kinds of negative outcomes in the province.

I guess I want to say that I support this motion, because, of course, I do, but I really think it is very important that we approve the amendment. The primary thing that is being changed in the amendment is the reference to two particular countries who have people with brown skin, to the neglect of all the other countries with people that are producing these kinds of drugs. To single out two countries is simply a racist dog whistle, and I don't understand why it's in this particular motion. The concern that we have here is one that is quite substantial and is one that I actually believe everybody in this House is very concerned about. Nobody wants to see this number of deaths in society. You know, to undermine the good work of trying to address an important crisis like this with these kinds of dog whistles is very disconcerting.

I also just want to point out that we are in this position for many complex reasons, but one of the things I want to point out to the House and that the House should remember is that it was actually under the Conservative Prime Minister Harper that the Canadian border services were reduced in April 2012. In fact, the government at the time said that there were about 1,000 members of the CBSA, the Canada Border Services Agency, that received letters with potential job reductions and that about 250 people actually lost their jobs. At the time the president, John Pierre Fortin, the national president of the Customs and Immigration Union, said, quote: these proposed budget cuts would have a direct and real impact on Canadians and our communities across the country; more child pornography entering the country, more weapons, illegal drugs will pass through our borders, not to mention terrorists and sexual predators and hardened criminals. Close quote. I just want to remind the House that our current Premier was a member of the government that actually made those reductions.

I guess I just want to make sure that people in the House understand that there are a number of things that need to be done here. A complex response to the crisis is very important, and, you know, doing these anti-union busts, the dog whistles like were done under the government that our Premier was a part of, making comments about particular countries because the colour of the skin of those people is different than ours – whereas we know that these kinds of drugs are produced significantly in both Canada and the United States and need to be stopped.

So I guess I would like to return to the essence of the actual motion itself, which is that we need to actually take responsibility as a society to look at what the structural drivers are that have moved people toward drug use and have resulted in that drug use having such a devastating effect on them. When we do look at those kinds of drivers, we see that they are largely people who are disenfranchised from the successful aspects of life: people who have been struggling because of unemployment, people who have been victims of violence and other forms of trauma like residential schools, those kinds of things.

We know that if we really want to stop drug use, we have to address all of those kinds of things. That includes a complex array of responses that deal with them in primary and secondary and tertiary ways; that is, that prevent people from moving in that direction, that identify people who are involved in drug abuse and get them out of the system, and, finally, a system that looks at the ways in which we can ensure that anybody who has been involved in drug abuse is able to recover and return to society in a good way. That includes a number of responses. Of course, it includes things like mental health services, addiction services. It clearly, if anybody reads the research at all coming in from around the world, includes supervised consumption sites. It's one of the most studied mental health interventions that we've seen in the last 10 years, and the research is absolutely clear that they have an important role.

I'm always discouraged to hear members on the opposite side somehow reframe that as if what they're about is giving drugs to people who are using them illegally just in order to yet again blow another dog whistle when that is not at all what the research says and not at all what has ever been proposed in this House. We know that they're bringing up these items in order to mislead the public and put that kind of information in Hansard juxtaposed in such a way that would make people think that somehow that was proposed or that that's ever happened in the province of Alberta, and it has not. And if they suggest that it has happened, I can tell you that they are engaging in intentional misdirection of the people of the province of Alberta.

Now, what we do know is that supervised consumption sites are absolutely not enough to resolve this kind of a problem, and they never were proposed as such. What they intend to do is that they intend to keep people alive so that the other aspects of intervention can be brought into place.

Now, there are likely to have been some complications with the supervised injection sites that we have in this province because it is new, comparatively, only in the last 20 years. But that doesn't mean that we should get rid of them. That means that we should actually have a government that spends some time trying to understand what the complexities are, what the problems are, and to resolve those problems. It's very discouraging when we see the government, instead of taking a responsible position around trying to make things right, take this irresponsible position and say that we should get rid of them.

Anybody who took cancer treatment in the 1970s will tell you that often the treatment received for cancer was dramatically worse than the cancer itself in terms of its effect on your body and so on. But we didn't say: let's get rid of cancer treatment. We went on, and we said: we must be able to do these kinds of things better. This government has been taking the ridiculous position that somehow, because there are problems with something that has been demonstrated by research to be effective, we should throw out the baby with the bathwater, and I think it's because they just want to, you know, blow that dog whistle that works with people who have not had the opportunity to be informed about the information that comes out from the research. It's really unacceptable that we find ourselves in this place.

I certainly hope that they will support this amendment, because the racist undertones here are completely unnecessary.

Mr. Williams: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order has been called.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 23(h). For the third time in the speech the member opposite has now implied that either members generally or particularly, as his first reference, the Member for Cardston-Siksika, his, quote, mildly racist comments – I find this absolutely inappropriate. It is below the member opposite. He understands that this good debate ought to be continued without drawing into question and disrepute the member's credibility and his care for all people no matter who they are or where they come from. It is unparliamentary. It is causing disruption, and the member ought to apologize.

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has risen to respond on the point of order.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. It's certainly not a point of order. The member's words may have hurt members' feelings, but what the member said is that this motion has undertones which are racist. As a person of colour, as a person of Asian descent I understand when things were used such as Wuhan virus, China virus, how that has impacted communities, in particular Chinese communities and others from Asian countries. What the member said, that's factual. I understand that you don't experience it that way, but the member specifically referred to the motion having undertones which are racist, not to any member of the House.

The Acting Speaker: All right. Thank you very much for those arguments, hon. members.

At this stage I am going to err on the side of believing that this was a matter of debate. Now, with that stated, I think that it is clearly obvious that the words that the hon. member has been choosing during the course of this debate have, if anything, directed this Assembly towards perhaps a bit of disorder. I would use this opportunity to recommend that the hon. member choose perhaps some less controversial language for the last 30 seconds of his time allotted.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that.

Mr. Feehan: My point has been made, and that is that the inclusion of these two countries has caused disorder in this House, and therefore if you actually believe that we should not cause disorder in the House, you should vote for the amendment in order to be consistent.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has risen.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today to speak to Motion 501, opioid crisis, introduced by my colleague the Member for Cardston-Siksika – thank you – and address the amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Now, in regard to the amendment we as Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta can only speak to those things within our jurisdiction, which is why I believe the Member for Cardston-Siksika put forward the language that he did in his original motion to prevent the “export.” Those are within the realms of our government and our jurisdiction to do, and that's why I do support his motion.

When the opposition member changes that to “import,” that moves into a different jurisdiction. The government of Alberta does not have control over the national borders. That is a federal government jurisdiction and/or including international governments and their jurisdiction, which is why I will not be supporting this amendment, though I do understand what they are trying to do and would love to support the removal of that kind of trafficking of illegal drugs around the world. But we do have to stay within the jurisdiction that we have governance over. That’s why I fully support what the Member for Cardston-Siksika brought forward. Just to repeat it for my speech and to readdress the debate today:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to continue working to combat the impacts of drug abuse in Alberta and urge the government of Canada to make all efforts in conjunction with its allies to prevent the export of lethal and highly addictive opioids.

This addiction crisis continues to have a devastating effect on many communities within Alberta, particularly Lethbridge. That’s why I believe that this is such an important topic. It continues to affect individuals all across our province and throughout all of Canada. Last year, in July, I had the honour of touring recovery and support homes in and around Lethbridge with the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions. I wanted to take a moment to recognize these programs and organizations and talk about their remarkable impact on the community in Lethbridge. For one, counter to what may have been stated by the members opposite within the NDP caucus, Lethbridge’s mobile safe consumption site is a temporary and ongoing solution that is part of the continuum of care. We did indeed as a government close down the ARCHES-run supervised consumption site for many reasons, including a lot of inappropriate financial transactions, which I don’t think I’ll get into here, but I will acknowledge that . . .

Mr. Feehan: Because they were disproven.

Mr. Neudorf: No. They were absolutely proven, including many personal trips to Spain and Las Vegas and Denver and all kinds of things, raising their personal wages from $80,000 a year to $300,000 a year, all kinds of things that were proven even if not, quote, unquote, illegal.

An Hon. Member: It’s the NDP way.

Mr. Neudorf: Exactly.

It directly resulted in a huge increase in illegal trafficking of drugs, a huge increase in crime. And, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview said, one part of the solution isn’t everything. There are multiparts needed, but that government only did one part and left Lethbridge in a huge mess. So I’m very proud to be part of a government that brought additional funding for treatment, for recovery, to continue that care and not just abandon them to a life lost in addiction. Whether they can go somewhere inside or outside to consume those drugs is not the point. The point is that we didn’t abandon those people. Our government sought treatment to make sure that they could get out of that cycle of addiction, and I’m very proud of the investments that we have made to continue that, which is why I’m proud to stand with the Member for Cardston-Siksika in his motion so that we can continue urging the government to continue those kinds of treatments.

Back to my other comments. Southern Alcare Manor is a 25-bed residential recovery treatment facility for individuals who have a sincere desire to abstain from alcohol, drugs, gambling, or any other addiction and get the stable living environment that they need during their recovery. Streets Alive offers recovery-focused programs for men and women in separate housing, including emotional counselling and postaddiction support while being Christ centred. Lethbridge Housing Authority strives to provide safe, secure, and affordable housing for many people who need it in the community.

Fresh Start Recovery, originally named Napi Lodge and established in 1976: they are still operating, Mr. Speaker, and after a name change to South Country then in 2020 combined with Fresh Start Recovery Centre in Calgary. The friendly acquisition sought to combine Fresh Start’s programming and leadership with South Country’s history and facilities, making for a recipe for successful long-term addiction recovery in Lethbridge. Some of our government’s funding will increase that bed count up to 100, with an additional 75 beds within Lethbridge. Their treatment program follows the disease concept. We see addiction as a progressive illness and often fatal if untreated. This illness is a chronic brain disorder with many contributing factors. The good news is that with treatment and a recovery program you can live a healthy, happy, and productive life. Recovery is real, attainable, and sustainable.

The Blood Tribe spirit home detox centre. The director of Bringing the Spirit Home, Jacen Abrey, said: it was last year, which was 2018, in November when we began seeing a real spike in overdoses; it was a revolving door, and we need to change that. One of the elders explains that we need to put a stick in the spokes, which is to stop the wheel from turning. They have done an incredible job bringing their culture and their heritage into the treatment for individuals of First Nations, Métis, and other backgrounds as well, including sweats in their traditional sweat lodge.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to explain a little bit about one experience I had to go through, their cultural experience that they use to help those who are caught in addiction get back to their roots. I joined it with a number of First Nations individuals and did a sweat, and it was quite an incredible experience. They took the time to explain how they build their lodge. They took the time to talk about the significance of the wood that they used, the willow branches and other branches from other trees that are sacred to them, how they cover it with hides. Then you go inside. It’s completely dark inside, and they bring in rocks approximately the size of your head, a number of them in the middle of the pit, and those rocks are extremely hot.

They did a very mild sweat, but it was pretty hot to me, Mr. Speaker. They would put that in there. We would come in. Basically, you’re just in a swimsuit kind of idea because it gets pretty warm. Then they do a little bit of their knowledge sharing and their wisdom from their elders. They talk about their stories of creation. They talk about their stories of healing. They talk about being in touch with nature and their surroundings. They close the doorway, that’s hide covered, and it’s completely dark and completely silent. They add water, sprinkle water on top of those rocks, and you can actually hear the water sizzling. Sometimes you can hear the rocks expanding and contracting. But that’s it. Silence can last from 30 minutes to 90 minutes or something like that, and they take that time to meditate and contemplate what they’re there to do, what they’re there trying to achieve, and to connect to the spiritual source of their religion. It’s a very powerful time, Mr. Speaker. I was honoured to have taken the time to join with First Nations on that journey.

Each of these organizations and programs makes a tremendous impact on the lives of so many people who live in Lethbridge. These programs meet people who are often at the lowest points of their lives, and they help to provide hope and opportunities. I’m so proud of the work they continue to do to support the recovery of these individuals throughout the community of Lethbridge. I look forward to further conversations on improving our collaboration and efforts across the province and in partnership with other provinces in our fine country to support individuals suffering from addiction.

I also want to talk about our Alberta government's steps to support individuals who suffer from addictions. Alberta's government has committed to an investment of $140 million over four years to implement these new addiction and mental health strategies that will improve access, as I said before, to the continuum of health care services, including $40 million specifically committed to addressing the opioid crisis. [A timer sounded]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

That does mean that this motion has received 55 minutes of debate. Therefore, under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of the motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika to rise to close.

An Hon. Member: What about the amendment?

The Acting Speaker: Yeah. Just for clarity we've looked into that. The process is that there'll be a close of debate, and then we'll vote on the amendment, and then we'll vote on the motion other than a government motion after that.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will keep my comments brief. I will start by saying that I will not be supporting the amendment moved by the members opposite. I believe that they have failed to make a compelling argument as to why we should support it, and frankly I disagree very much with the arguments they have made and the way they've made them. Taking their level of decorum down to simply throwing insults across the aisle, like calling members on this side of the House, myself included, racist, is simply not an appropriate way to make an argument in favour of your amendment. While that member, specifically the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, is looking to use inflammatory language so he can clip that and put it on his Twitter for his 30 Twitter followers . . .

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

Mr. Schow: . . . we're in here actually taking concrete steps to . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. A point of order has been called by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall. The hon. member.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), and (j) I will explain what the member said. That's part of the Hansard. The member was clearly imputing false motives, that he wants to clip it or something. For many of us it's an important issue. [interjections] It's not a matter of laughing at all. Not at all. We are debating a serious issue: 1,000-plus Albertans have died because of drug overdose. I personally know people who have died of drug overdose. We do want to help this government. We do want to participate in this debate. Accusing other members, especially their intentions: that's false. That's offside these rules and should be ruled out of order.

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika has risen, I believe, in response on this point of order.

Mr. Schow: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. It's not a point of order. I'm not imputing false motives. It's a matter of debate. If that member takes offence to me suggesting that he's clipping something for 30 Twitter followers or more, then that's certainly his prerogative. But throwing insults across the aisle and calling us racist I would find to be far more offensive and creates significantly more disruption within this Chamber, yet that point of order was certainly ruled down by yourself and understandably so. So I would say: not a point of order, a matter of debate, and let me finish my closing arguments.

The Acting Speaker: I'm actually surprised at the turn that this point of order took. It was argued slightly differently than I anticipated. What I will say, though, just to wrap it up: I believe that this is not a point of order at this stage. What I would say, though, is that previously I had said a warning with regard to the language used. I would say that if that language – we all know what we're talking about right now – has the ability to create disorder, well, then that doesn't really lead us to effective debate. What I would do is that I would give the hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika the rest of his time, 4:13, and ask him, like I did with the previous member, Edmonton-Rutherford, to potentially choose some words that may not lead towards disorder in this House.

The hon. member to please continue.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like I said, I will be brief. In closing, I just want to say that things like fentanyl, carfentanil, and the chemicals used to make these kinds of drugs are not dangerous because they're illegal; they're illegal because they are dangerous. It is on us as members of this Legislature, those who are making laws on behalf of this province, to support any effort necessary to stop the import and distribution of these chemicals and these drugs.

I support this motion; I do not support the amendment. I believe that the spirit of this motion is to better the lives of all Albertans, and as someone who lives in the south in and near communities that are being devastated by opioid addiction, it is incumbent upon us to take action. I believe that this is one of many steps that we can do to take that action, and I encourage all members of this Chamber to vote against the amendment and in favour of the motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

That concludes the debate.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Williams moved, seconded by Ms Lovely, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LL.D, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 23: Ms Lovely]

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. Are there any members wishing to join on consideration? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has risen.

Ms Sweet: I guess I will. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise and speak to the Speech from the Throne, the speech that shared the vision that this government has for the province of Alberta. Now, I will say that it was definitely long on words but very short on details, full of rhetoric to speak to the government's base and ignoring the majority of the needs of Albertans. There was not a single program or offer to help Alberta families struggling to pay their monthly bills, put food on their tables, and fill their vehicles with gas so that they can go to work. The vision that this government has presented to the people of Alberta has not inspired confidence and is so far from the reality that Alberta families are facing.

The people of Edmonton-Manning expected more. The Premier may be celebrating that his latest budget is back on track, but Albertans are not because they're not seeing the benefits of this budget. My constituents are not running surpluses, their children aren't running surpluses, and in fact, based on the decisions made by this government, they're falling farther and farther behind.

Our health care heroes, who've been working throughout COVID to keep our communities safe, are not seeing their work conditions improving. They are not seeing more doctors or nurses entering into our health care system to help out with the overburdened workload. As more and more first responders are burning out, taking a leave of absence, or leaving the profession altogether, we are not seeing replacements to come and help those working around the clock.

Parents who have children attending schools that are over capacity and are not able to have space to learn are afraid that their children are falling behind. This Premier's throne speech and his budget do nothing to address any of those concerns. In fact, we will see over 1,000 fewer teachers compared to the previous government. While students and teachers have been facing huge uncertainty in K to 12 education, switching between in-person and online learning, growing class sizes, and reduced supports for students with disabilities, our schools need more teachers and more supports rather than less. This, of course, is on top of the increased school fees that just came out, increased educational property taxes, and asking schools to find revenue in other places.

These are real concerns that the government likes to label as divisive politics when, in fact, it is the direction that this government has taken that has created those very concerns. It's not politics to care about our neighbours and our children. It is not politics to want to take care of our communities and realize the responsibilities that communities have to take care of each other. The fact that the government does not recognize these concerns speaks to the disconnect that this government has to the people of this province.

My constituents still want to see a strong public health care system that is properly funded, with access to health care professionals that have the support that they need when they need it. The lack of doctors in rural Alberta, to the point where many Albertans do not have family doctors, should be concerning for this government. To know that ambulance services are not available to provide emergent care should be a concern to this government, yet we didn't see that discussed in the throne speech. Well, Mr. Speaker, if making sure that rural Albertans have access to doctors and to ambulance services is something that this government wants to continue to ignore, then I'm proud to be on this side of the House.

This government needs to take our public health care seriously. To ensure that Albertans have access to public health care should be this government's priority. However, we don't see it.

We see a government that likes to continue to go back to their old conservative talking points. They've forgotten about the needs to diversify the economy, to get off the royalty roller coaster, and to properly support our emerging industries. Albertans are tired of waiting for this government to wake up and realize that there is so much more economic opportunity. This could include properly funding our postsecondary institutions so that we know that they are the engine of our province's economic future and the economic lifeline of our communities. We may have seen seats increase in the recent budget, but we see none for our agriculture postsecondary, our technologies related to agriculture, and anything that would help support rural Albertans staying, learning in postsecondary institutions, and then continuing to live in their local communities.

There is no money to restore postsecondary for the first time, and in fact more than half of the funding for universities, colleges, and polytechs is coming out of tuition, so out of students' pockets, one more downloading of costs onto Albertans at a time when this government continues – I'm sure they're going to do it right now – to talk about the fact that they have a surplus. Edmonton-Manning constituents are tired of their tax dollars being wasted on useless war rooms, bogus inquiries, and on long-lost court cases instead of being used to help get well-paying jobs and to grow our economy. Alberta families are tired of dealing with the mountains of debt and record utility bills while this UCP government continues to ignore them.

The throne speech and this budget were a farce, Mr. Speaker. A balanced budget is not balanced when Albertans are paying more everywhere else. It is like asking Albertans to give money to a friend from their savings to pay their expenses while their friend puts that money into their own savings account and hopes that maybe their friend will come over and help them shovel their driveway, similar to hoping that we should trust this government that if they pay their taxes, they'll actually get the services that they deserve when, in fact, we know that they keep cutting them. It is a consistent theme with this government to download costs onto Albertans and continue to ignore the economic potential of this province.

It is time to acknowledge that talking about diversification and supporting all industries should be the priority. We know that our world is changing, that technology drives all economies, from oil and gas to agriculture to education. We need people who have the expertise to move forward in our changing economy. That is why it is important that we attract companies that are set up for the technological economy that is coming, and we also need to make sure we're educating our future leaders to take on those roles in diversifying our economy. This can only be done when there is a commitment to understand the needs of those technologies, encouraging companies to set up, be job creators, and promoting students to be educated and then stay and work in Alberta.

That is why we called for the reinstatement of the Alberta investor tax credit. That program was a huge success, and without it businesses have and continue to state that they're looking at moving elsewhere, meaning that the jobs and investments will leave with them. That's a disappointment. It should be a disappointment to this government, it should be a disappointment to Albertans, and I know it's a disappointment to an emerging and growing industry.

This industry will help increase office capacity in Calgary, but instead we see again this government leaving Calgary behind. Calgary has already hit a grim new high under this government of 33 per cent for office vacancies. Mr. Speaker, there is so much potential in Alberta to build a diverse and vibrant economy, an economy that Albertans want to be a part of. I was hoping that during this throne speech we would see that vision, yet once again we didn't.

In closing, I ask the government to stop increasing costs onto Albertans while inflation is at a record high, stop undermining our public service and protect our public health care, and stop ignoring our economic potential, our economic future. Not one of my constituents has brought up the fact that the UCP has balanced the budget, but countless have sent me their utility bills to show me how much more they're paying. Not one rural Albertan has pointed out to me that we have a surplus, but they have shared with me their experiences travelling hundreds of kilometres to get a routine treatment that is no longer offered in their community or the struggles they're having about getting a family doctor. Not one farmer has told me that not running a provincial deficit is good for their business, but I regularly hear them talk about the supply chain issues that haven't been addressed and the inflation that is driving up their operational costs.

Albertans are struggling, Mr. Speaker, and the throne speech and the budget that was tabled by this government fail to acknowledge any of it. Albertans want to see their communities invested in. They want to see support in growing new economies. They want to see real help with their utility bills and their insurance costs. They want to see solutions to the issues facing our health care system. We needed solutions today, but once again we are looking back and asking ourselves: why didn't this government do more?

The Speaker: Are there others? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in response to the throne speech. Let me begin by saying that last year has been very difficult for many Albertans. We have seen the fourth and fifth waves of COVID-19 hit Alberta and ongoing hardship because of its impacts on our economy. Many small businesses, including a few in my riding, were shut for good, and far too many families have lost their loved ones due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Tens of thousands of surgeries were cancelled or delayed, and far too many Albertans, losing their family physicians, were not getting the care they needed because of the pointless battle with doctors and health professionals started by this government.

Now we are seeing record inflation and a steep increase in the cost of living and the same inaction from this government. Albertans are facing rising costs on pretty much everything, from car insurance to energy bills to tuition, postsecondary fees. In fact, electricity and natural gas prices have doubled, and for so many Albertans they're becoming unaffordable.

Over the last few weeks I have heard from a number of Albertans, a number of my constituents about those rising costs. Many people in my riding are on fixed incomes, and their budgets are really hit hard. Just picking up groceries, even the basics, is more expensive. The cost of everything, from milk to rent, is at a record high. Certainly, we can agree that Albertans need help, and they deserve a government focused on making life affordable for them.

This government and the Premier could have used this as an opportunity to take tangible steps to help Albertans and Alberta families. They could have helped by reinstating the cap to insurance rates, reindexing income tax brackets so Albertans will have more money in their pockets on payday, and they could have reindexed the assured income for the severely handicapped, AISH, benefit. They could have reindexed seniors' benefits, and they could have taken meaningful steps to alleviate the pressures on Albertans' utility costs.

Mr. Speaker, we didn't see any of that. Instead, we saw a budget that increases park fees, increases school fees, increases property tax, increases income tax, and has a phony gas rebate that will never help a single Alberta family with their utility bills. Instead of helping Albertans who are coming out of this two-year-long pandemic, this government is forcing Alberta families and businesses to go further into debt.

I constantly hear that the changes to the fleet insurance and the removal of the insurance cap are affecting northeast Calgary really hard. Many cab drivers who have been hit hard from COVID are now paying thousands more in insurance because of changes the UCP government brought in.

If you go to northeast Calgary – Mr. Speaker, it's the most beautiful part of the city – you will see that there are still many homes that are waiting for repairs from that hailstorm that hit northeast Calgary. You will see people driving hail-damaged vehicles from that hailstorm. We didn't see anything to help those in northeast Calgary. At least they expected that there may be a school in the budget for the growing communities in northeast Calgary. We didn't see that in the last budget. We didn't see that in this budget.

People expected that the government would present a real plan to create jobs, diversify the economy, and set our province on a long-term and sustainable recovery path and not just double down on their failed economic policies. As we all know, our economy is tied to the price of oil, and the increase in revenue that we are seeing now is because of that increase in global oil prices. We are seeing prices north of $100, $112, $113, that were last seen in 2008 or '09, and on these prices a traffic cone could have balanced the budget. Instead of helping Albertans with their budgets, instead on building, hiring, and growing our local economies, most companies are now passing the money directly in dividends to the shareholders, many of whom live outside of this province.

When we talk to small-business owners and Alberta families, it is clear that they are not feeling the prosperity and the boom this government is claiming are in Alberta. The truth is that many families, many Albertans are telling me and telling my colleagues that they're falling further behind. Inflation is driving up the cost of everything, from ground beef to gasoline to their groceries, and the policies of this government are driving up many more costs, are adding costs to already struggling Albertans. We are paying more in income tax, the bracket creep thing, property tax, school fees, tuition, more interest on student loans, more camping fees, and vastly more for car insurance and utilities, all thanks to the UCP.

Meanwhile the cash boom is doing wonders for the provincial treasury. As expected, we see a significant surplus, which will grow with the price of oil. But let me say this again. Balancing the budget with 100-plus dollars a barrel of oil is easy, but it's tough to do when putting Albertan families' budgets first. The government fails when they put the province's budget in the black by making Albertans' household budgets go into the red, and that is exactly what this Premier is doing, what this government is doing.

Instead of reattaching the personal income tax bracket to inflation, the Premier chose to take more money out of Albertans' pockets, 800-plus million dollars. That's a significant sum of money. This Premier used to rage against the federal Liberals for their policy of bracket creep. The Premier called these policies enormous, insidious, vicious, and God knows what else. These are the ways to hike income tax in a sneaky way, but now it's a perfectly good policy when balancing his own budget.

Also, I mentioned earlier that there is a range of benefits that Albertans rely on that the UCP has made cuts to. The UCP has disconnected them from inflation, which means that for some Albertans, the most vulnerable ones, their real buying power will shrink with the rising cost of living. The child and family tax benefit, the seniors' benefit, income support benefit, assured income for the severely handicapped benefit: they are all deindexed by this government and devalued by inflation, again, thanks to this UCP government's policies.

So Albertans who receive AISH are surviving below the poverty line, and the UCP policy will take about $1,000 worth of yearly buying power away from them by 2023. Again, this could have been reversed, but instead the UCP chose to balance the budget and pat themselves on the back while they were balancing it on the backs of the most vulnerable in this province. I think that these are the kinds of policies, these are the reasons that Albertans can no longer trust this government to govern this province, to manage our health care, to manage our education system, or to manage the services that are so critically important and that Albertans rely on every single day.

They are making students fall further behind. COVID-19 was the largest disruption to our K to 12 education system ever seen, and we needed investments to make sure that students have safe schools to go to and that they have resources to catch up and are prepared for the future, and we are not seeing that from this government. We will instead see 1,000 fewer teachers now than under the previous NDP government. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the UCP is also driving up school fees, education property tax, and asking schools to find other sources of revenue. This means that $117 million more are being downloaded on Alberta families.

In short, this government's direction is not . . .

The Speaker: On consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's throne speech are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1

Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture on behalf of the Premier.

Mr. Orr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly my honour to rise and move second reading of Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act of 2022.

Mr. Speaker, Her Majesty has devoted the past 70 years to leading her people and the Commonwealth of nations. Her example has inspired countless Albertans and, quite frankly, people around the world to devote their time to building a better province and a better world. Their leadership, their volunteerism, community spirit has made Alberta the greatest place to live, work, invest, and raise a family in Canada, truly a unique and incredible place and people.

Twenty twenty-two marks Queen Elizabeth II's platinum jubilee, the 70th anniversary of Her Majesty's accession to the throne. What an achievement, to serve in a public role for 70 years. Now think about this. The average MLA serves eight years. Very, very few would make it past 20, and Her Majesty has served 70. Truly, we must congratulate her and hold her up with respect.

Her Majesty has said that she wants her platinum jubilee celebrations to inspire a sense of togetherness and to help us look to the future with confidence, so that is part of what we want to try to accomplish here. This milestone gives us the opportunity to celebrate all of the ways that Albertans have exemplified the leadership that Her Majesty has modelled. It gives us the opportunity to tell the stories of Albertans who are a part of that story. I'd like to share one of those stories with you now, a connection that an Albertan has had with Her Majesty and the Royal Family and part of the Commonwealth.

I tell you the story of one Bill Collins. He's actually been inducted into the Ponoka-based Canadian cowboy hall of fame. Bill Collins was inducted on May 9, 1996. He's played a major role in the preservation of western Canada's ranching history and the tradition as a cutting horse and rodeo judge, a trainer, and a prize-winning competitor. One of those naturals who are born to the saddle, he has been an unofficial ambassador for Canada, sharing his rodeo skills and enthusiasm with equestrians around the world, particularly young people. He demonstrated cutting horse practice to Prince Philip in 1962, and this encounter led to an ongoing relationship with Prince Philip and ultimately to a three-month royal cutting horse tour and demonstration across Great Britain in 1964 with Prince Philip as the event's patron. Alberta has many such connections. That's just one small story, part of our relationship as Albertans to Her Majesty and to her service and to the good that she's done in our province and our world.

Supporting young people is the key to building this province's future. It's some of what Bill Collins has done, some of what Her Majesty has contributed to, and by establishing awards and scholarships in honour of the Queen's platinum jubilee, we would celebrate students' contributions and help them pursue further education and other opportunities. These awards and scholarships will replace the awards and scholarships that were created in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee, 50 years. We're just updating those existing awards to reflect that it's now 70 years of Her Majesty's service. The monetary value of the medallion and scholarships will be increased to $7,000 in honour of Her Majesty's 70 years of service from the previous $5,000 at the 50-year celebration.

In addition to the new awards for students and young people, a one-time Queen's platinum jubilee medal will be awarded to 7,000 deserving Albertans in 2022. The medallion will recognize a broad range of achievements – I should say "medal," actually – from volunteerism to reconciliation efforts and other noteworthy contributions. We are expecting that the first set of medals will be presented to the Queen's platinum jubilee weekend on June 2 to 5, and the medals will continue to be awarded to nominees throughout the rest of this year.

Finally, this act would also designate all past, present, and future members of Alberta's Executive Council as honorary members upon their retirement. Generations of dedicated public servants have helped shape the course of this province's history. Allowing them to continue using the honorific of the position is just a small gesture in appreciation for their devotion to Alberta, and in the spirit of togetherness it's completely nonpartisan. It applies to all parties now and in the future and is something that I think is just a small recognition of the service that members of council do contribute. I should say that there is no monetary benefit to this, that there are no executive powers attributed to it; it's purely a recognition as we recognize all regular Albertans for their service.

Looking to the past 70 years of the Queen's reign and our province's history helps us to appreciate the progress we've made, how far we've come in 70 years as a people here in Alberta. It also helps us reflect on the future that we want to build. We need to do that by recognizing that the strength of this province has always and will in the future lie in the people who live here. This legislation will help inspire all of us and support the next generation in reaching new heights and creating a new future. So, Mr. Speaker, I am asking all members of this House for their support of Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act of 2022.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Assembly is second reading of Bill 1. Are there others wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the Member for Camrose should time allow.

Ms Goehring: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act. I would like to start by saying that I think it's wonderful any time we have the ability to honour young people in the province. Being able to give them credit and acknowledgement is so important.

I do have some concerns with this. I would start by saying that this bill is clearly – clearly – another example of how out of touch this UCP government is with Albertans. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when I'm talking to people in Edmonton-Castle Downs and all across the province, no one was asking for Bill 1 to be a piece of legislation that gave the honorary title to members of this Legislature. This does nothing to focus on jobs or our economy. It's just confusing why their number one priority is using this Assembly to honour their friends and their supporters leading up to the election and then giving themselves access to a fancy title.

I think that the fact that this piece of the legislation is included in something that is intended to honour Her Majesty and to honour children and youth in this province – why it's being coupled with this honorary title doesn't make sense. It absolutely does not make sense. It takes away from the young people of this province who should be receiving recognition, not your friends that need to have these letters after their name and the honorific title.

I find it pretty rich that the Premier believes that his scandal-ridden cabinet is deserving of being called honourable. In everything that's happening currently, that this was brought forward . . .

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Member for Cardston-Siksika and the Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Insulting Language

Mr. Schow: Thank you. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically: uses language which is abusive, insulting, creates disorder. The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs just suggested that the Premier's cabinet is not honourable at all and that, in fact, they are quote, unquote, scandal ridden. This is not language that in any way benefits Albertans and, frankly, causes disorder within this Chamber. To suggest that the Premier's cabinet is scandal ridden and not worthy of the title "honourable" is in itself dishonourable to say. This is language that creates disorder within this Chamber, and I would ask that member to apologize and retract.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, (h), (i), and (j) do not apply to this, as the Speaker can be in this room and see that it's the very opposite of anything resembling disorder. In fact, it's a matter of debate and definition in regard to language that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs chose to use.

The Speaker: Are there others?

I am prepared to rule. What I would say is that this isn't a point of order. It's a matter of debate. The only thing that moves close to a point of order is implying that a minister of cabinet is not honourable, because, of course, that is their title here inside the Assembly. But having some discussion around what cabinet is or isn't of course is a matter of debate. I don't know the exact words that the member used with respect to referring to members of cabinet as being not honourable. If she did that, then that is a point of order. However, the remaining portions of the comments are definitely a matter of debate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess this is a touchy subject when it comes to the title "honourable" for life. This piece of legislation is doing just that. It's providing a space to have the title for life alongside building up students and recognizing their contributions to the province. It just seems ridiculous that the two of these things are going together. I have some concerns about why this would be slipped into something that is clearly easy to support. When we want to acknowledge young people in this province doing some incredible things, that is something that I think Alberta should continue, and we should be able to acknowledge and hand out recognition in ways of scholarship, in ways of medals, in ways of medallions. But to link that portion of the Queen's jubilee in with the title "honourable" for life just doesn't make sense.

I think it takes away from the young people of our province, from the individuals that are doing great work in this province and deserve recognition. To lump former members of cabinet into this is confusing, and it doesn't make sense. I think there are quite a few questions that I have when we get into further debate, specifically around Committee of the Whole, regarding the medal specifically, some of the questions I have around that, but at this time I will take my seat and listen to the rest of the debate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose if she still would like to speak to the matter at present.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour as an MLA to serve the people of Alberta and to have taken my oath to the Queen. I find it quite astonishing that our Queen is the first British monarch to mark a 70th anniversary, 70 years of service, and Her Majesty is still determined to get up every day and serve. She makes one amazing role model for all Canadians.

This is a very welcome update to a similar bill, that was passed over 20 years ago, that recognized Her Majesty's 50 years of service. This update is also a great example as to why old bills or motions need to be amended or removed. Times change, and we need to stay committed to ensuring that we are reflecting what is current and reflects best what Albertans are experiencing in current or future life.

During the 70 years of tenure Queen Elizabeth has done a lot for Canada and the people of Alberta, and this bill is a perfect way to honour her loyalty and continued service to Alberta and the rest of the Commonwealth. During these years Her Majesty has been with us through it all as we have faced uncertain times and hardships like recessions, world threats, pandemics, and so much more. Just like many of us have had to manage and navigate the ever-changing landscapes of time with a bright and exciting future in store, I can't wait to be there to experience newer and more exciting milestones ahead. By recognizing this historic milestone as Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II celebrates her historic 70 years of reign, it's amazing to see that the government anticipates that $70,000 in funding will be provided through this program to recipients.

These recipients are normal, everyday Albertans going above and beyond the call to action. These Albertans are hard-working individuals who have helped change this province for the betterment of all current and future Albertans through volunteerism, public service, and community leadership. Every day I hear about young leaders making a difference within our various communities, and this bill is just another way we can pay them back and recognize all of their hard work that they have done for their communities. These awards and scholarships will go towards helping these young individuals further their goals, aspirations, and will give them a form of accomplishment they can be proud of and use as support to further their goals of making Canada and Alberta a better place for everyone.

I remember that when I was a girl at the age of six, I wrote a letter to Queen Elizabeth as I was enamoured with her at that tender age. The lady-in-waiting wrote me . . . [interjection]

Mr. Williams: I'm remiss to interrupt the hon. member. I have two purposes for the intervention. Number one, truth be told, I really just wanted to use the prop of Her Majesty behind me, and I'm positioned perfectly with the lens for the viewers at home to see her radiant beauty many years ago. Now, the second purpose and the question: as you were about to explain about when you were a young lady – perhaps this ties in well – could you talk a bit about some of the virtues that you see Her Majesty the Queen having that would be good as a role model for young Albertans today? Thank you to both of you.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Member. I do appreciate you pointing out the fact that this beautiful portrait is here of Her Majesty. It's one of my favourites. I mean, we have two, but they're both equally favourites, and we're very fortunate to have this portrait here. Some traits that Queen Elizabeth possesses: I mean, there are so many great things about her. She is steadfast; she is constantly steadfast under pressure. We can always count on the Queen because she has such a great sense of responsibility, as comes with her role as Queen. For me, I think that's the most important one, and I do look forward to a further dialogue with you because I know you, too, have great admiration for the Queen. Thank you, Member.

As I was saying, when I was a girl at the age of six, I wrote a letter to Queen Elizabeth as I was enamoured with her at that tender age, and the lady-in-waiting wrote me back. I'll never forget that moment when I opened the letter. I encourage those who have been hesitant to write letters to their leader to do so because you just may get the same excitement and surprise that I still hold dear to this day.

It is also encouraging to see that Bill 1 will designate all former, current, and future Alberta cabinet ministers as honorary members of the Executive Council. As ministers serve in a higher capacity, it's welcoming to know that their years of past, current, and future work for this great province and its people will be honoured.

As we continue to honour our future leaders, I hope and share the same sentiments as all my other colleagues when I say that it has been a great honour to serve under the Queen for what is now the 30th Legislature, and I will continue to show pride and honour as

Her great Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, continues to reign, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on Bill 1, are there others? I see the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has risen.

Mr. Yao: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I humbly recognize that I stand here today within the capacity of an elected leader. However, I couldn't be more ordinary than any other Albertan with the desire and hope to witness positive outcomes within their community. That's why I entered the world of politics in the first place, to effect meaningful, positive change.

Effective leaders are not as popular culture would have it: standing up on a pedestal, pointing fingers, and telling people what to do. Through my life's experiences I can tell you that the most effective leaders are not the ones who impose their will on people. This stems from an offshoot of entitlement, one which, unfortunately, we witness so often today. We certainly see that with our current Prime Minister here in Canada, someone who doesn't demonstrate the qualities of leadership that so many people truly want to see. He represents a level of populism, popularity, someone who just goes with the wind and supports whatever he thinks is popular. But as we go through life, we're going to understand that what's popular is not always right and that what's right is not always popular.

In the United States we saw that with their previous President, who was popular because he was a TV personality and because he had a lot of money and was very outrageous. It's unfortunate, because the Republican Party in the United States had a lot of good candidates out there, and it's disappointing that we didn't quite get that quality shining through. In this House we see across the way a group that attempts to get into government, a group that supports socialism, and a group that probably secretly idolizes what is going on in Europe right now and supports these atrocities that are happening . . .

The Speaker: I would just provide caution about implying members of the Assembly . . . [interjection] Order. If the hon. Member for Peace River wants to call a point of order, he can rise to his feet and do that, but if he wants to try to chastise the Speaker from his chair, there will be consequences.

I think that we should be cautious when implying that members of the Assembly may be sympathizers with those who are creating and committing massive atrocities in other parts of the world at present light.

The hon. member.

Mr. Schow: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Schow: I didn't call this while you were standing, of course, because I respect the Speaker standing.

Before you stood, a member opposite said, "Take your medication, man" while the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo was speaking. I believe it was the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had said that. That, of course, would be language that would create disorder, under 23(h), (i), and (j). I suspect you may have heard it, but if it is in fact true, I would think that that is a point of order.

The Speaker: Well, I would agree that if the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford did say “take your medicine,” that would be a point of order. I will be the first to admit that I didn’t hear that comment, and it’s impossible for the Speaker to rule on comments made off the record. If he did, he should withdraw and apologize. If he didn’t, we’ll proceed back to the member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. No. The Deputy Government House Leader is mistaken. It was not the Edmonton-Rutherford MLA; it was me, and I said “change your medication,” not “take your medication.” I do apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: I accept the apology, and we will consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I probably digress – I do probably mix up their support for regimes in Venezuela with the support for what is happening in Europe – but I guess my point is that real leaders listen. They spend most of their time engaging with the population that they represent. They foster a culture of openness, transparency. They allocate resources to areas where they are rightfully needed, and, mostly importantly, they serve. That is why I encourage members of this House to back Bill 1, because not only does this bill celebrate Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II’s platinum jubilee; it also seeks to put our money where our mouth is by supporting and recognizing the various upcoming leaders in this province effecting positive change, a quality that all members of this House know that I hold in high esteem.

Acts of community leadership, volunteerism, public service must not go unnoticed, and, quite honestly, Mr. Speaker, the Queen has been by far and wide the most successful leader of the modern day. She’s demonstrated for decades her quality in leading western democracies to the success that they hold today, and we see that fight continue on now in Europe. We need to recognize and acknowledge her for her success. The Queen’s platinum jubilee medal recognizes and awards up to 7,000 individuals that serve Alberta, making it a better place to live. Various scholarships such as the jubilee citizenship medallion and the Premier’s citizenship award reward younger generations of Albertans, encouraging and inspiring their continued service in our communities. So despite some of the members across the way saying that this does not impact or affect Albertans, I dare say that it does, because we are recognizing Albertans in her name.

Such recognition goes a long way in fostering an environment of individuals filled with appreciation, camaraderie, togetherness, and selflessness, qualities that are essential in forming top-tier leaders, qualities that we as current leaders of today hope to instill in our children, sculpting them to become the most ambitious, successful, and enduring leaders of tomorrow. On top of that enduring leadership, Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak for all in this House by saying that we can all draw inspiration from the resilience of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II; 70 years of selfless service to the United Kingdom, Canada, and the rest of the world is by no means a simple feat.

Her Majesty has been no stranger to challenging and adversarial times, serving the Auxiliary Territorial Service, back then a women’s branch of the British army. Her Majesty valiantly contributed to the efforts resulting in the Allies winning the Second World War. Not only that, but Her Majesty served through and witnessed several global events of gravity, from the Great Depression to the Cold War, from the United Kingdom joining the European Union to the disintegration of the Soviet Union, the devolution of the United Kingdom, various financial crises, to the European migrant crisis, Brexit, a global pandemic. Recently she’s dealt with the loss of her beloved husband, His Royal Highness Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, and now a Ukrainian refugee crisis.

Through it all our Queen has stood tall and mighty. Her Majesty has diligently led the Commonwealth of Nations, remained the head of state of some of the strongest global democracies, upholding tenets of free speech, equality, representative governance, and freedom of thought and expression.

Her Majesty has also demonstrated dedication beyond measure, service above self, and a commitment to upholding Canadian values. Before Her Majesty’s silver jubilee in ’77, in ’73 during a Canadian tour, Her Majesty nobly stated, “I want the Crown in Canada to represent everything that is best and most admired in the Canadian ideal. I will continue to do my best to make it so during my lifetime.” Her Majesty has lived up to these words, and we couldn’t be more honoured by Her Majesty’s service to our country.

I sure hope that my fellow House members can join me in supporting this bill and celebrating the platinum jubilee of Her Majesty’s reign. It is an achievement that is unparalleled by any other, and today we must honour Her Majesty’s service above self, unwavering dedication, and commitment to both Canadians and the people of the world. These depict a rare type of quality that we as a province aim to emulate in ourselves and instill in our children now and for generations to come. God save the Queen.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question.

The hon. Minister of Culture to close debate.

Mr. Orr: I’ll waive. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a second time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly be adjourned until 1:30 p.m., March 8, 2022.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(1.1) and the 2022-23 main estimates schedule the Assembly momentarily, after we vote, will stand adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30.

Legislative policy committees will convene this evening and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. Tonight the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Service Alberta in the Grassland Room, and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the main estimates for the Ministry of Municipal Affairs in the Rocky Mountain Room.

Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Children’s Services in the Grassland Room, and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Treasury Board and the Ministry of Finance in the Rocky Mountain Room.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:03 p.m.]

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 8, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

It sounded to me a lot like during the prayer there was a member that received a text message. Unless that was from God Himself, I'm sure you'll be paying a fine to the charity of your choice and owning up to it, like all hon. members would be.

Statements by the Speaker

International Women's Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, today marks International Women's Day, a global celebration of the social, economic, cultural, and political achievements of women. Given that we are here in this impressive Chamber, it is perhaps most suitable that we focus on the latter, the political achievements of women in Alberta. During the Assembly's first meeting here in the Chamber, in 1911, there were 41 members of this Assembly, and none of them were women. Today 25 women sitting in the Chamber make a difference every day while representing hundreds of thousands of people who trust them as their elected representative.

Irene Parlby, who became the first female cabinet minister in 1921, said:

If politics mean . . . the effort to secure through legislative action better conditions of life for the people, greater opportunities for our children and other people's children . . . then it most assuredly is a woman's job as much as it is a man's job.

International Women's Day serves as both a celebration and a reminder that it takes collective action and shared ownership to achieve full equality. Today we honour the achievements of those who came before us with the aim to inspire collective action to address the many challenges that women continue to face both here in Alberta and around the world. I'm sure all members will join me in celebrating International Women's Day.

50th Anniversary of Alberta Hansard

The Speaker: If the Assembly will permit, I would like to make a note of another special day, in particular for your Speaker. Hon. members, in 2020-2021 more than 6 million words were spoken here in the Assembly and/or its committees; 6,453,127 words, to be exact. I know this because that's how many words were transcribed by our amazing Hansard staff.

Today marks a very special anniversary for Hansard. It is today that marks the 50th anniversary since Hansard was first published, following a motion on March 8, 1972, to establish a printed record of the deliberations and proceedings of the sittings of the Assembly to be known as the "Alberta Hansard" which shall be compiled, edited, printed, distributed and administered under the direction and the authority of the Speaker, in accordance with this rule.

More than 30,000 words will be spoken on an average afternoon sitting like today. Hansard staff, including input editors, copy editors, proofreaders, and other professionals, work together to create a largely verbatim record of what is being discussed in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Prior to 1972 a collection of historical newspaper clippings, known as scrapbook Hansard, provides a glimpse of the proceedings between 1906 and 1971. The introduction of Hansard marked a new era of transparency in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. All transcripts from 1972 to now as well as the scrapbook Hansard collection are available on assembly.ab.ca, providing an in-depth resource of the discussions that have shaped this province since its inception.

A happy 50th anniversary to Hansard.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, joining us in the galleries today is Marisa Maslink, a guest of the Minister of Infrastructure.

Also joining us today, please welcome Aurore Ramsamy, a guest of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. Aurore is a social work student joining us in recognition of Social Work Week.

I ask you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

International Women's Day

Member Irwin: A government's budget says a lot about their priorities. Let me tell you that this government's priority is certainly not women. Last year the UCP didn't mention women once in their budget address. This year they threw in a few fleeting references just so they could check the women box. What an incredible opportunity this government was presented with. Skyrocketing oil prices meant that they could have taken visionary actions that would have had tangible positive impacts on the lives of women. Instead, they boasted about balancing a budget on the backs of Albertans, and at every opportunity when they've had the chance to invest in and support women, they've chosen not to.

On International Women's Day I can't help but reflect on just how much this UCP government has failed women. I talk to women a lot. I love talking to women. I ask them: what issues are top of mind? What keeps you up at night? Let me tell you what they say: paying their bills, securing good employment, well-funded schools, strong public health care, a healthy planet, to name just a few issues.

These aren't earth-shattering revelations. They're not radical ideas. International Women's Day should compel us to act, should compel us to do better as legislators. It's not good enough to sit back like this government is doing and dismiss the lived experiences of women. They've failed to act, and they've failed women. But enough about them.

There is hope. We can elect a government that makes women a priority; that acknowledges that women are key to a strong economy, that if women thrive, society thrives; that supports all workers, including low-wage women workers, who this government has repeatedly left behind; that invests in health and knows that mental health care is health care; that ensures child care is universal, accessible, and affordable for all; that tackles misogyny, racism, and gender-based violence; and that protects, not attacks, reproductive rights.

None of these things are out of reach, and with so many unapologetic, unrelenting, fierce-as-heck women in Alberta speaking out and stepping up, I'm more hopeful about what we can accomplish together.

Happy International Women's Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose has a statement.

International Women's Day

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 8 marks International Women's Day around the globe. Today is a time to celebrate the women in our lives and all they do to build our communities. Alberta women have always been rugged pioneers, committed to making life better for future generations.

Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Emily Murphy, and Irene Parlby, the Famous Five, fought for women's suffrage and for the right of women to run for the Canadian Senate and to sit on the Supreme Court of Canada. Violet King Henry was the first Black woman lawyer in Canada and the first Black person to be admitted to the Alberta Bar. She was also a champion for civil rights. Bertha Clark-Jones, a Cree-Métis woman, who joined the Royal Canadian Air Force in 1940, became a fierce advocate for Indigenous veterans in Canada.

Those are only a few of the women who have helped create a vibrant and diverse Alberta. Alberta's government continues to support women's economic recovery in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. Today we announced $1 million to support women pursuing postsecondary education in science, technology, engineering, and math. This is in addition to the STEM scholarship for women that is already in place.

Women in Alberta are second in the nation with a 60.6 per cent employment rate, while unemployment across the province has dropped to its lowest rate since before the pandemic. Alberta's government has also successfully negotiated a plan that will see licensed daycare fees drop by an average of 50 per cent for Alberta families.

There's more work to be done, but with so many driven and talented women in Alberta, I'm confident we'll reach our goals together. Happy International Women's Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Utility and Fuel Costs

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past couple of weeks gasoline prices have gone higher than ever in Alberta. At the same time, many of my constituents are reaching out to me about their unusually high utility bills. Both Joginder and Balraj have said that their natural gas and electricity bills are so high that they're struggling to afford them.

Our government has instituted a natural gas rebate program and offered a $150 electricity rebate. Not only that, but we also dropped the 13 cents per litre provincial tax on fuel. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Premier and all of the cabinet for putting forward a plan to help Albertans. Of course, I can't say the same for Justin Trudeau and his allies.

At the same time our government is dropping taxes, the left-wing Liberals have committed to hiking their carbon tax even higher come April 1, all with the support of the NDP. When the members opposite were in the government, they misled Albertans. They worked with Trudeau to tax Canadians for simply heating their homes and driving their cars. A deceitful plan to tax families at $20 per tonne of CO₂ is turning into $50 on April 1, and by 2030 Canadians will be paying $170 per tonne. That means 40 cents per litre just for the federal carbon tax.

As the UCP offered relief for the cost of utilities and fuel, Justin Trudeau increased the carbon tax. The NDP stays silent in defending Albertans from Justin Trudeau. In fact, they cheer for him. They defend his policies. They claim that carbon tax has little to do with our current situation, but, Mr. Speaker, every little bit helps. Thank you to the Premier for easing the burden for Albertans. With any sensitivity, Justin Trudeau and his allies should be trying to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Budget 2022 and Cost of Living

Ms Gray: This government is completely out of touch with Albertans. As I knock on doors and talk to my constituents in Edmonton-Mill Woods, I hear it loud and clear. A week after introducing their budget, this government is celebrating, completely unaware of the struggling Albertans they've left behind.

Utility bills are outrageous. We're hearing daily from Albertans who are facing bills in excess of $700 – some owe thousands – Albertans who feel they have to choose between paying their utility bills or buying food for their family. Instead of hearing these concerns and responding with compassion, this government offers them $50 for electricity in a fake natural gas rebate that will never support Albertans, because it's for next year and the rates that the government's own budget suggests will never be hit.

Property taxes are up and likely to keep going up because this government would rather download costs to towns and cities instead of invest in them. Insurance bills are up because the Premier's insurance lobby friends are more important to his team than the Alberta families who can no longer afford to drive their cars. Income taxes are up because this Premier says one thing but does another, and he has reintroduced the very bracket creep that he once railed against.

This budget uses increasing inflation as an opportunity for the government to pick the pockets of Albertans during a pandemic. Tuition is up because the government views students as cash cows rather than the future leaders of Alberta, and this government even anticipates making billions more in student debt, in part because they raised the interest rates on that debt.

This budget provides no relief for struggling Albertans. Instead, it takes advantage of them, raising fees wherever they can, secretly hiking taxes, lifting caps in place to protect Albertans, and then shrugging away the concerns that they hear from families. It's shameful, but it's what Albertans have come to expect from this UCP government.

Mr. Speaker, my message to those Albertans is: hang on; keep your eyes forward. Alberta's NDP is on your side. We care about you, and we will come to work every day fighting for your family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Ukrainian Refugees

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. As I stand here surrounded by safety on Treaty 6 territory, Métis region 4, women and children in Ukraine are being sent to other countries to protect them from attacks on their sovereign nation. The displacement of these peaceful people will most definitely see Canada and Alberta stepping up to support Ukrainians as they seek safety and perhaps permanency. Ukrainian pride is exemplary, and former Canadian journalist Nathan VanderKlippe of the Globe and Mail reported that as people in Odessa bagged sand to protect them from attack, opera singers sang an anthem, and it translates to: "Ukraine is not yet dead, nor its glory and freedom."

To those fleeing from war in hopes to return to their homes when it's safe: we can be your safe haven, and if you choose to stay, we would be all the richer to have you. Mr. Speaker, by Sunday morning more than 1.5 million Ukrainians had fled their sovereign nation, and we must be ready to find them homes, provide speedy integration into our communities, expedite resources of necessity, and surround them with compassion and support. This will be instrumental in welcoming and accommodating all those who've experienced trauma and loss and tremendous upheaval. Our government will have to prepare our health care system, expand our education system, and offer safe shelter to relatives who need to stay together.

Nonprofit and nongovernment organizations catch everything that public policy doesn't catch such as settlement needs, health and mental health supports, self-care, and accessibility. Nongovernment organizations in Alberta that are part of the NGO council, like the Red Cross, are getting constant updates on these needs, and this is the type of expert intel that we need as Alberta opens her arms wide to all those who need her. We must fund those NFPs and NGOs that go beyond the basics of food and shelter. Everyday Albertans are also ready to help. Alberta-based volunteerconnector.org is a nation-wide digital portal that matches volunteers and organizations.

Together, through our government working with these compassionate and experienced Albertans, Alberta will show the world once again what the power of community and kindness and generosity can accomplish, where Ukrainians can call this their home away from home.

United Conservative Party

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, yesterday Albertans got to witness the most confusing sight: UCP staff in the Premier's office were attacking the UCP's Fort McMurray by-election candidate for the extreme views of his supporters. Albertans aren't surprised to hear that the Premier's office is more focused on saving the Premier's job than addressing the many policy failures this government has delivered. His chief of staff, his most senior political adviser, has already taken a leave to go to Red Deer and organize against the UCP's own members.

While Albertans are not surprised to hear that a UCP candidate has extreme views or is supported by those with extreme views, they are surprised to hear that the UCP suddenly cares about this. The UCP didn't care when their MLA for Taber-Warner chose to visit an illegal blockade where present was a group plotting the murder of RCMP officers. The Premier even said that he was doing his job. The UCP didn't care when the Premier's speech writer was found to have written sexist, racist, and homophobic remarks. The Premier failed to care when the former Justice minister was found by a judge of attempting to interfere in the administration of justice, and it goes on and on.

All of what I've just gone through is why Albertans from far and wide no longer trust this Premier. They don't believe he genuinely cares about them, but I know that the Leader of Alberta's Official Opposition is ready. She will work to bring Albertans together, not drive them apart. She will hold her fellow caucus members accountable. She will call out hate and corruption. She will show that, yes, she truly cares about Alberta's families. Our leader is fighting off COVID right now, and I wish her well. I know that she's still working to serve Albertans from home, and, Mr. Speaker, I can't wait to serve in her government again come 2023 or sooner if it comes to that.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the first question.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by wishing the House a happy International Women's Day and to let you know that all of our questions today will be coming from the women in our caucus.

School Fees and Property Tax Education Levy

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, this budget is barely two weeks old, and the Premier is already rewriting it. Yesterday he said that if global oil prices stay high, Alberta may stumble upon billions of dollars in additional revenue, so today I'm asking the Premier and the UCP to sincerely help Alberta families. Budget 2022 raises school fees and education property taxes by $117 million. Will the Premier reverse those fee hikes today?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to talk a little bit about Budget 2022. In Budget 2022 effectively we report our fiscal progress for three years. We've managed to keep operating expenses flat during three years at a time when we inherited cost increases from the previous government of 4 per cent per year. What that would have meant to Albertans had we stayed on that trajectory was inevitable tax increases for Albertans today and future generations. We've been responsible. We've avoided that.

Ms Hoffman: To any of the parents watching, I just asked about education property tax hikes executed by the UCP government. I asked them to stop those tax increases and the school fee increases, and the Minister of Finance said no. Mr. Speaker, these fees come out of the pockets of parents who are trying to pay their bills. They're trying to buy food and clothing to make sure that their kids get a great education. The Premier thinks they should pay more in school fees, but what will they get in return? Not more teachers, because in this budget there are 1,000 fewer teachers than there were under the NDP. Will the Premier rewrite the budget and put more teachers back into the classroom?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite knows full well that it is school boards who charge school fees. In fact, they're doing it as they are putting more dollars into their reserves. We went from $363 million to $464 million as of August in operating reserves. The member opposite, when she was the board chair for the Edmonton public school division, raised school fees three years in a row: $28 million in 2011-2012; $29 million in school fees, 2012-2013; $31 million in 2013-2014; oh, and $37 million in 2014-15. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite knows full well that under Conservative budgets that failed to increase funding for education, many boards were put in a position where they felt they had to do that. The member opposite also knows that she repealed a bill that capped school fees and refused to increase them. The member opposite also knows that she is responsible for the legislation that's hiking up school fees. If the members opposite want to ask questions of the NDP, they can call the election.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I don't think everybody heard me earlier, so I will repeat what I said. The member opposite as board chair raised fees three years in a row for the Edmonton public school division: over $28 million in fees for 2011-2012, $29 million in 2012-2013, $31 million in 2013-14, and $37 million in 2014-

2015. These fees are for extracurricular activities, field trips, facility rentals, and so much more. These are absolutely the purview of school boards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for the second set of questions.

Budget 2022 and Cost of Living

Ms Hoffman: Oh, Mr. Speaker, let's take a look at what the UCP has done with the family budget. John and Jane make an average Alberta income. They have two kids. They get by, but times are getting tougher. This year, because the Premier increased their income tax and reduced their benefits, they're going to lose $400. That's $400 not going towards groceries or bills or activities for the family. To the Finance minister or the Premier: why won't they rewrite the budget to actually put this money back in the family budget?

The Speaker: The hon. the Finance minister.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely reject what the member opposite is asserting. We have not increased income taxes in this province. A person earning $50,000 this year will pay exactly what they did last year. But had we stayed on the trajectory that the previous government left us, we would have had no choice but to raise taxes. In fact, a future government would have had no choice but to raise taxes, like the members opposite did when they brought in the carbon tax.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, they did raise taxes. The Premier is making life harder on families, and he has no plan to stop. It's clear that he doesn't care. Martin and Mary are seniors. They live on a fixed income, but costs keep going up, and their seniors' benefit does not. This year they will lose $360 compared to what they would have received if the Premier simply recognized that inflation is hurting every Albertan in this province. Will the Premier rewrite the budget to support seniors living on a fixed income? Yes or no?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have the highest seniors' benefits of any province across the country. The top payment in this province is $285 a month. The average of similar-sized provinces is $60 a month. We have not reduced that amount. I reject the assertion in the member's question. But what we've done: we've brought in a utility rebate for January, February, March of this month, a $150 rebate for all Albertans paying an electricity bill.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the UCP wants to talk about running a rebate program. I don't think most Albertans would trust them to run a bath, let alone a rebate program. The question was about seniors' benefits, and if the government cared enough, they would pretend to answer it. Heather is living on AISH. She's severely disabled. She's been betrayed by a party that promised to inflation-proof her benefits, and then they shamefully broke that promise. If the UCP kept their promise, Heather would have $1,000 more this year to help her make ends meet. Will the Premier rewrite his budget for her, apologize to Albertans on AISH, and finally keep his word and do the right thing?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have maintained AISH benefits, which are $400 higher than the next-nearest province, and we've done it because we believe this government should support the most vulnerable. We believe Albertans have a priority of supporting the most vulnerable. Had we continued on the trajectory we inherited from the previous government, we would not have been able to deliver programs for future generations. We brought fiscal responsibility to the province, which will ensure delivery of efficient programs in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has the call.

Ms Phillips: Albertans are having a hard time paying their bills. I'm hearing it from my constituents, and I know the Finance minister is hearing it, too, because at a recent town hall a woman was trying to ask him for help with her electricity bill: $1,900, Mr. Speaker. The minister's response: he dismissed her concerns, claiming rebates only cause inflation and hurt the economy. Fast-forward to today, and it's quite the rewrite. Does the minister really think that $50 on a $1,900 bill is going to help that Albertan and that constituent of his?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I find it very rich coming from the members opposite when they talk about affordability. The members opposite, when they were in government, jacked taxes on personal income tax, increased corporate income taxes, introduced a carbon tax, which added costs for every Albertan. We're delivering efficient government, keeping taxes low. We've come out with a utility rebate, and effective April 1 we're eliminating the fuel tax for three months.

Ms Phillips: For the folks watching at home, some clear evidence that the minister doesn't want to talk about your electricity bills.

The minister then had the nerve to tell his constituents that he was in the same boat. He claimed that he couldn't pay his own power bill on his comfortable salary, but no one feels sorry for him. This morning he admitted that he's raising personal income taxes by a billion dollars without batting an eye. Why doesn't the minister reverse that change and actually help families with their bills?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we are not raising income taxes. I completely reject the member's assertion. The only folks in this House who raised taxes were the members opposite. They raised taxes on individuals. They raised taxes on corporations, sending tens of billions of dollars out of this province. They introduced a carbon tax, one they did not even campaign on. We're delivering efficient government. We're ensuring Alberta will be the lowest taxed jurisdiction in the nation.

Ms Gray: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 1:59.

Ms Phillips: For the folks watching at home, the minister also doesn't want to talk about the billion dollars he's pickpocketing in personal income tax.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Phillips: So let me give the minister some free advice. Inflation-proof personal income tax to protect the family budget. Put back the billion dollars he's taking. Stop the hikes to school fees, tuition, and property tax. Put the cap back on insurance premiums and electricity rates. If the minister is truly struggling to pay his own bills, why doesn't he pick one of his own bad policies and reverse it?

2:00

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, again I find it very rich that the members opposite would look to give this government advice on financial matters. The trajectory they were on: by raising taxes on everything that moved in this province, by creating additional regulatory burden, they chased out tens of billions of dollars of investment with the job opportunities. We're delivering efficient government so we can keep taxes low so we can make strategic reinvestments in health, in education, and to ensure that every Albertan has the ability to increase their skills.

Utility Rebate Program

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, the government promised Albertans relief from sky-high natural gas rates. Then they produced a fake program. Now they're only giving $50 back for electricity bills that have climbed into the hundreds. Robyn shared her bill with us and how it rose from $350 last month to $700 this month. What does the Premier have to say to Robyn? Does he really think that a $50 cheque is real help with her $700 bill?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only the NDP could be so unaware that they would actually be personally involved in driving up the electricity prices in the manner in which they did and then have the audacity to complain that the help that we're giving Albertans is not big enough. We're giving more support to Albertans than the NDP did, and we will continue to look at ways that we can modernize the electricity grid and also to NDP-proof the electricity grid so that we don't have to suffer these things in the future.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, real Albertans are choosing today between groceries and their electricity bill, and that minister thinks he deserves a pat on the back for a $50 rebate.

Robyn is not alone. Kelsie also wrote to us. Her bill has doubled to over $600. She is concerned about paying her other bills. All this government can offer is a rebate she likely won't qualify for and $50 off hundreds of dollars in new costs. Is this really the best that the Premier has to offer to Albertans like Kelsie who are struggling as a result of his government's decisions?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we do have high electricity costs in this province, and that's why we've offered a rebate for the months January through March. But again I find it very rich that the members opposite would raise this issue because it was their failed policies that put us in this situation. They spent 7 and a half billion dollars on transmission costs that consumers are now paying for. They overbuilt the system. They prematurely paid out power purchase agreements, costing Albertans $1.3 billion, that Albertans are paying today. And they introduced a carbon tax that cost every Albertan and Alberta senior higher costs in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Ganley: These are real people, Mr. Speaker, real people who can't afford their medication, and all that minister has for them is bluster.

Deborah also wrote to us saying that her bill has increased over the past few months, and the most recent one was nearly $1,000. She is worried about how she can continue to keep the lights on and keep her house warm. Is this Premier really satisfied with telling Albertans like Deborah that $50 in a fake rebate is the only thing they're willing to provide? If they can't do better, can they at least apologize to Albertans for lying to them?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, the NDP were grossly negligent. By the way, when I say grossly negligent, I don't mean when the NDP ethics critic was investigated by the RCMP cybercrimes unit; I mean when they overspent $7.5 billion in transmission and then they hung those costs on the ratepayer. They also brought in additional policies that drove electricity prices up. Yes, we gave a rebate to Albertans, and we're going to continue to look at ways that we can modernize the system and protect Albertans from further NDP hangovers. [interjection]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Women's Postsecondary Education Supports

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is International Women's Day. This is a special day to recognize the important role women play in the development and success of our province. Our government has taken a number of steps to improve the lives of women throughout the province. Can the Associate Minister of Status of Women tell the House what the government has done recently to help women thrive in our economic recovery?

The Speaker: The hon. the associate minister of women.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know the important role women play in the development and success of our province and focus on ways to support them in writing the next great chapter in our Alberta story. Just today Alberta's government is investing $1 million in bursary programs at Bow Valley College, NorQuest College, and Yellowhead Tribal College. We also recently invested $1.9 million to an Amazon Web Services pilot program that will assist up to 40 women with training and connections to the local IT and cloud-computing sectors because we know how important it is to support women in tech. Investment like this is making a real . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the response. Given that we know education is a valuable tool which helps foster economic growth in our province and given that we see more women and girls interested in careers in the fields of science, technology, engineering, and mathematics, STEM, to the associate minister: what is the government doing to help support women who want to study STEM?

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, as I just mentioned, we just announced today a million dollars in bursary programs that will ensure women have the opportunity to pursue postsecondary education in STEM at Bow Valley College, NorQuest College, and Yellowhead Tribal College here in Edmonton. Every little girl in Alberta today has the potential to do great things. That's also why we've offered scholarships for STEM of $150,000, and we will be doing more on this. You know, these funds help more women every day pursue fulfilling and in-demand careers that will help them support themselves and their families.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that women in Alberta work across many different sectors, including those who are looking at building rewarding careers in the skilled trades, and given that many tradeswomen are leading the way in everything from welding to hairstyling, to the associate minister: what is the government doing to help women build a rewarding career in the trades?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. Skilled trades offer a rewarding career, and our government is proud to support organizations like Women Building Futures, for which there was a $10 million investment, and we're proud to support these types of investments to help ensure women get the hands-on experience that they need to become seasoned professionals and hit the ground running. Skills work contributes so much to our economy. It is an investment in Alberta's future to support women entering these fields.

Support for Youth Transitioning out of Care

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, another day, another announcement from this UCP government to try to fix what they broke. This time it comes after causing years of anguish for young people aging out of government care, an age group where we've seen two and a half times the number of deaths since 10 years ago. Now, after announcing that she would cut young people age 22 off necessary emotional supports two years ago, the minister is saying that she will reinstate them. Will the minister finally admit that cutting these supports for these young people was wrong in the first place, and why is she still providing $10 million less in supports for them?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, as the member opposite knows, the changes that we announced in Budget 2019 are still included in the budget today. [interjections] At that time, when we made changes to the age of eligibility for support and financial assistance agreements, we made those changes, and then we made it clear that changes needed to be made to that program to better support young adults that were transitioning out of care and into adulthood, and that is exactly what we did. We took some of the best parts of the advancing futures program, which are the social and emotional supports that young people need to succeed, and we brought those into one transition to adulthood program.

The Speaker: I'll just provide some caution that unparliamentary comments made off the record are still unparliamentary.

Ms Pancholi: Given that the opposition has been raising concerns about these changes to the SFAA program since it was first announced two years ago and given that these same concerns have been raised by youth, the Child and Youth Advocate, including members of the advocate's youth council, and given that this new transition program essentially puts back in place the dedicated caseworker that these young people already had and that the only reason the UCP is reversing course is because one young, brave woman came forward to take them to court about it, my question is: what will it possibly take to get this minister to admit that she was wrong and apologize to the young people in her care?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, this program is exactly what we committed to. We had a program that basically was focused on monthly allowances, and we needed a program that really walked through the supports and skills that young people needed to transition out of care and successfully into adulthood, and that is exactly what we have now. We are taking the best of both programs, wrapping them together. We're increasing the monthly allowances that these young people will receive. We're focusing on positive transitions either into adult programming or adulthood. This is exactly what we committed to and exactly what we did.

Ms Pancholi: Well, given that today in budget estimates and again right now the minister is trying to pretend as though a dedicated caseworker for youth aging out of care is somehow new and given that the minister appears to be ill-informed about the supports these young people were receiving, which may explain why she had no problem cutting them in the first place, and given that people in the sector were e-mailing me today during estimates to fact-check the minister in real time, contradicting her, my question is: after all of this how does the minister expect Albertans, particularly the very young people she is responsible for, to trust her?

Mr. McIver: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:10.
The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do, in fact, very purposefully understand the changes that we made to this program, because they were exactly what we heard from caseworkers and young people who were transitioning into adulthood. They are changes that are being made in other provinces across this country, and they're exactly what we committed to. I'm happy to quote young people like Spencer, who said, quote: there's just so much to manage when you start out, like budgeting and taking care of yourself; I'm glad that young adults will have additional supports to help them through this challenging time. We've also had young people reach out to say: a program like this helped me out to become independent. That is the purpose of this program.

Budget 2022 and Vulnerable Albertans

Ms Renaud: While the UCP cheer on their hollow budget, those in the most vulnerable situations in this province see nothing to celebrate. The UCP will claim they're not making cuts, but a flat budget for those on income support and AISH is forcing them to stretch their limited income even more as the cost of living increases. The budget is most certainly not balanced for them. Can the Minister of Community and Social Services please explain: if the price of gas, utilities, the cost of groceries, rent, insurance, and the government's revenue are increasing from sky-high oil, why aren't supports for the most vulnerable going up, at least indexed...

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the opposition for raising a very good question. As the Minister of Finance has already addressed, we are having a rebate program. We are eliminating the fuel taxes as a way to mitigate the inflation issue. About the AISH program, let me tell you this. With Budget 2022 we have increased the AISH budget to $1.37 billion, again, the highest in Alberta's history.

Ms Renaud: Given the increasing amount of poverty and homelessness across the province and given that even before costs for everything shot up, communities were pleading for additional homeless supports and given that the province has kept the funding for homeless supports the same this year as they have for the last two years, I'm frustrated that the UCP has not learned anything from mistakes. They're not providing enough, and communities are tired of the patchwork. It's just reactive. With costs of living pushing more people into poverty and making it more expensive to deliver services, why is the UCP making the same mistake and underfunding supports for homeless people?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, we're not taking advice from a one-term failed NDP government. Homelessness is a complex issue. We shared in the House that we established a homeless task force that is aiming at taking a structurally different approach to address this issue. We're focusing on housing first. We're also looking at a recovery-oriented continuum of care so that we provide a comprehensive, co-ordinated response to homelessness. We have a better solution for Albertans.

Ms Renaud: Given that the mayor of Edmonton said that this budget was balanced on the backs of vulnerable Albertans and given that rural communities outside of the large cities are seeing drastic increases in homelessness and poverty but are receiving no increased supports from the UCP government or are not even getting a listening ear and given that this government received more revenue from high oil prices and they continue to completely ignore the most vulnerable in Alberta – on this side of the House we want to live in an Alberta where everyone is supported, where everyone is treated with dignity and respect. How can this minister sit by and do nothing? Explain to vulnerable Albertans why you don't give a damn.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member who just said that nobody talks to them, I can tell you that I spend largely many hours every day talking to municipal leaders and listening carefully to their concerns, passing them on to my colleagues, who react responsibly and in a timely way.

Mr. Speaker, we have our ear to the ground when it comes to municipalities, and we will continue to do so because they're a very important source of information for us, and we will continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Budget 2022 and Cost of Living (continued)

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has been unrelenting in our focus on investment attraction, economic growth and diversification, and job creation. Alberta's business-friendly recovery plan has positioned Alberta to lead all provinces in economic growth. We're also seeing a surge in net interprovincial migration, further evidence that word is spreading that Alberta is the best place to be, and the Alberta affordability advantage greets workers when they arrive here. To the Minister of Finance: what are some of the affordability advantages these families can look forward to when they arrive in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's true. Alberta does have an affordability advantage today, and part of that advantage is the lowest tax structure in the nation. We have the highest basic personal exemption of any province, allowing more Albertans to earn more before they pay a dollar in provincial income tax. In fact, 40 per cent of Albertans pay no provincial income tax at all. If you have a family of four living in Alberta and if we moved them to Ontario, they would pay $3,800 more in personal income tax with $75,000 worth of income.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that Albertans typically earn more, pay less in overall taxes, and generally enjoy lower food and transportation costs and given that Budget 2022 makes Alberta an even more affordable place to call home, to the same minister: how does Budget 2022 help grow the Alberta affordability advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we do have an Alberta affordability advantage. This budget, Budget 2022, adds over $600 million for child care to ensure that families can obtain accessible, affordable child care in this province. We're adding $15 million to low-income students to support their education endeavours, and we're investing $390 million over four years to ensure that everybody in rural Alberta has world-class digital connectivity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that global energy prices have increased significantly and given that Alberta families are now faced with rapidly increasing fuel and utility costs and given that Alberta consumers need reliable energy to survive the challenges of living in a northern climate, to the same minister: what is this government doing to help families reduce the financial pressures they are faced with due to these rising energy costs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We recognize that energy costs are creating affordability issues for Albertans even though we have an affordability advantage, and to that end we are halting the collection of the fuel tax. That's 13 cents a litre for Albertans. This program will be in place all year, re-evaluated every quarter. On top of that, we are rebating every Albertan who has an electricity bill by $150 for January through March of this year, and we have a natural gas consumer price protection measure in place as well.

Mr. Dang: Mr. Speaker, Alberta families are seeing their cost of living soar. Inflation is up, gas prices are up, utility bills are up, and even taxes are going up. Given that Albertans have been hit with an increase in insurance costs and inflation yet this government is doubling down on nickelling and diming Albertans through sneaky personal income tax hikes and increasing user fees, why is this government piling on instead of making life more affordable?

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is working very, very hard as we bring forward a balanced budget, lowering the cost of taxes for Albertans, and bringing in rebate programs for both electricity and gas.

Again, Mr. Speaker, to this hon. member: he needs to explain to this House what was taking place at his home when the RCMP raided it recently and what the Official Opposition knew about the investigation that is being undertaken into him and them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that it seems like this government is ignoring the cost to families and given that Alberta families are still recovering from the effects of the pandemic and given that rising energy prices and rising food prices are driving up the cost of living for Albertans and my constituents, why is the government continuing to raise property taxes through increases to the mill rate?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Again, Mr. Speaker, we are working very, very hard to bring in rebate programs that can help Albertans as we go through these tough times. But this hon. member must address this issue with the House: what did the Official Opposition leader know about his actions, why has the RCMP served search warrants on his personal home, and why has the Official Opposition completely abandoned him? He should stand up in this House and explain what's gone on. Albertans deserve to know what is taking place, and they deserve to know what the NDP knew about it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.
The hon. member.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems like this government is doing nothing about affordability. Given that Alberta's purchasing power has inarguably taken a hit and that this budget is balanced on the backs of hard-working Albertans, will they just admit that this is a terrible budget and that they have nothing good to say?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we brought Budget 2022 forward, a balanced budget. We brought fiscal sustainability and responsibility back to the province. That allows this government to make strategic reinvestments in health care, in education. The issues that the member opposite raises – the affordability issues, particularly in utilities – are a result of failed policies implemented by the members opposite. We're correcting the fundamentals that have led to those increased costs, and we're providing relief in the meantime.

Budget 2022 and Job Creation

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, Calgary's unemployment is the highest in the country. The cost of living is becoming unbearable for many, and this government has missed its job targets by 130,000. That's 130,000 Albertans who are making no money right now and are being faced with skyrocketing utility prices, gas prices, property taxes, school fees; you name it. My first question is simple: why would the minister of economic development stand in this House every day and celebrate when so many are struggling? Is he really that tone deaf?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, 130,000 jobs created last year; in the first month alone, 7,000 new jobs. When the rest of the country lost 200,000 jobs, Alberta gained jobs. The best thing that we can do to help people pay their bills is make sure they have employment. Under the former government, under the NDP, they told Albertans to leave this province to get employment. We're going to do everything we can to make sure Albertans have high-paying jobs.

Ms Goehring: Given that one bright spot for Alberta amid all of the incompetence from that side of the House is the film industry but given that this government promised stakeholders that it would reinstate the NDP's interactive digital media tax credit – that critical program was nowhere to be found in the budget – and given that that credit would create more jobs in the film industry in areas like animation and postproduction, can the minister explain why he once again failed stakeholders despite promising to do better in what turned out to be a bogus provincial budget?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we are so proud of the film and television industry. The NDP failed – failed – the film and television industry for four years. Right now we have the largest TV series in Canadian history right here in Alberta because of the steps this government took, and we have effectively zero per cent unemployment in the tech innovation space. We're more diversified than ever. We're winning for Albertans and diversifying our economy.

Ms Goehring: Given that we need to provide proper education to be ready for jobs in film and digital media – if we don't train them, the jobs will go elsewhere, and our future leaders will leave, too – but given that the UCP is putting 1,000 fewer teachers in our K to 12 schools, has cut postsecondary funding by more than $600 million, and is ramming in a curriculum that puts students out of step with film, digital, and tech industries, can the minister tell this House if he supports such devastating cuts to education and moving forward with a curriculum no one supports? If he does, how can he possibly claim to care about job creation . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, the budget that this government introduced includes $600 million to make sure we address labour shortages in Alberta. Yes, labour shortages in our province: who thought we would have had that challenge in the middle of this pandemic? But this province is bouncing back faster than anyone could have imagined. We have a long way still to go to help make sure we support people. But, on top of that, maybe the member opposite missed the fact that Bow Valley College just this week announced the fact that it's opening up its school in this exact area.

Electric Power Prices

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, my constituents have reached out to me upset and shocked at their high utility costs. As a power engineer who ran a power plant and a large industrial consumer of electricity, I'm very familiar with ideological decisions made by previous governments that have led us to this point. Most recently the NDP decision to rapidly transition from coal while subsidizing major corporations with hundreds of millions of dollars from taxpayers is one example of poor ideological decision-making. To the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity: could you explain what you're doing to help reduce the impacts of these poor policies? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, in 2015 Albertans elected an accidental government with paper candidates. Now, when they descended on the Legislature with nothing more than their hopes and dreams, they then proceeded to oversee the largest overbuild of the transmission system in our province's history. They broke the electricity system, and we're going to fix it. We are going to bring fiscal restraint and accountability to electricity in Alberta, something that the NDP is just not capable of doing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. Given that from 2015 to 2019 the rapid expansion of utilities came with a $7 billion price tag and a whopping $1.3 billion was lost on the Balancing Pool, a bill we all will be repaying until 2030, and given that I only have 35 seconds and it would take 35 years to tell of all the mistakes the NDP made with our electricity market, can the same minister explain what he is doing to address these failures? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, when the NDP asks about the high cost of electricity, it's ironic, not as ironic as the NDP ethics critic being investigated by the RCMP cybercrimes unit, but it is ironic nonetheless. Now, we are bringing forward some solutions that are going to help Albertans. That includes the $150 rebate. We're also bringing fiscal accountability to the transmission grid. They spent $7 billion in four years on transmission; in the last two years we've spent $100 million. That's fiscal accountability, and we will continue to look at ways that we can drive down prices and NDP-proof the electricity grid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. Given that the rate cap masks the true cost of energy by shifting the cost from the ratepayer to the taxpayer and given that many Albertans are worried about future and current costs, once again to the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity: how are we continuing to encourage a diversified grid without spending unnecessary taxpayer dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the path forward for lower electricity prices is increased competition and more choice, so we are creating long-term solutions and encouraging competition with our commitment to the energy-only market. This approach is working because we have 4,000 megawatts of generation that are going to be coming online shortly and are at different phases of approval in front of the AUC. We're going to do all of this without hanging increased costs on the ratepayer. They broke the electricity grid; we're going to fix it.

Women's Economic Equality

Member Irwin: On International Women's Day let's reflect on some important facts. Women are the key to every aspect of a healthy economy and a healthy community. Data shows that when women entrepreneurs are financed, they are extremely successful, which benefits the broader community. Research also shows that women-founded and -cofounded start-ups tend to perform better than all-male ones, and businesses founded by women in general are shown to be significantly better financial investments. Why has this government not prioritized the economic empowerment of women in Alberta? Do they not want to support some of the strongest drivers of our economy?

Ms Issik: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the members across want to talk about the economic empowerment of women. Let me tell you about how they empowered women. Tens of thousands lost their jobs while they were in government. Every single woman paid higher bills because of their carbon tax. Every one of them faced higher personal income taxes. Thousands and thousands of women entrepreneurs lost their businesses during their term. There was a mass exodus of women from this province. And you know what? This government, on this side, has done everything to reverse that.

Member Irwin: Given that advancing gender equality in economic and social spheres is not just the right thing to do but is also the smart thing to do and given that this is an evidence-based way to increase the prosperity of industry as a whole and that investing in women's economic empowerment sets a direct path towards gender equality, poverty reduction, community safety, and inclusive economic growth, why does this government ignore the data, ignore the clear indicators, ignore the very women of Alberta, and diminish what could be a major economic ministry into an associate role with barely a mandate or any capacity to enact change?

Ms Issik: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, we could talk about how governments should and can support women. I can tell you that this government – this government – has done more to support the equality of women by making sure that the women in this province have access to affordable daycare. The previous government across: you know what they did? They managed to put together a pilot program that didn't deliver daycare to even the most deserving and most needy of it. I've got to tell you that this government has done a way better job on that.

Member Irwin: Given that women make enormous contributions to economies, whether in businesses, on farms, as entrepreneurs or employees, workers doing unpaid care work at home, and given that women not only work but so often are expected to take on second, third shifts associated with household work and caregiving and given that women remain disproportionately impacted by poverty and are often limited in their ability to work due to the need for child care, where this government has let them down once again, why is this government so set on making it even harder for women by raising costs on absolutely everything and making life less affordable?

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, wow. You know, the members opposite, when they were in government, raised the cost of everything for women in this province by instituting the carbon tax. We on this side of the House eliminated the carbon tax. We reduced taxes. We're eliminating the fuel tax for three months. We're doing rebates on electricity. I'm sorry, but I think that this side of the House knows exactly how to help women.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, for two years front-line workers in hospitals, restaurants, schools, essential businesses, and more have gone to work in uncertainty. They feared getting COVID-19. Many did, and some are still recovering. Now, we all hope the pandemic is ending, but these workers are facing a new crisis: massive increases to their personal cost of living, many coming as a direct result of decisions from this UCP government. Can the minister of labour explain to these front-line heroes why his government won't provide real relief on utility bills and reverse the decisions that are driving up their costs after all that these workers have done for us during the pandemic?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. In response to COVID-19 Alberta's government has taken a number of actions to protect and support Albertans through these challenging times, including job-protected leave, deferring WCB premiums when businesses needed it most, and paid vaccination leave. We know that there is much to be done, and that is why Alberta's Budget 2022-23 will go further in delivering for Alberta workers.

Ms Gray: Given that I hear from many people in my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods who need their vehicles to get to and from the office – and for many of them their vehicle is the office: they drive cabs, delivery trucks, trades vehicles, and so much more – and given that this government pulled the 5 per cent cap on insurance rates after being lobbied by their insurance lobby friends, can the minister tell this House for the record how much the average Albertan's insurance has increased since this government took office, and can he tell them why he won't restore the cap and end these ridiculous increases that are hurting families in all of our constituencies?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can tell this House is that the reforms that we brought forward in Bill 41 last fall around automobile insurance seem to be working. These were reforms that dealt with the fundamental, systemic issues that were pushing up automobile insurance rates, issues that the members opposite simply didn't deal with. I can report to this House that automobile insurance premiums are flat to declining, and that's good news for Albertans.

Ms Gray: Given that answer and that Bill 41 hasn't helped my constituents and given that my colleague the Member for Lethbridge-West and Official Opposition Finance critic confirmed today that the UCP's sneaky bracket creep scheme is costing Albertans $1 billion in taxes and given that this UCP billion-dollar tax grab is going to hurt my constituents and all Albertans – it's frankly shameful – Minister, my last question is simple: how can you possibly stand there and pretend to care when you're taking another billion dollars from our constituents, all Albertans, a billion dollars they don't have, while everything is getting more expensive?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I want to talk for just 35 seconds about caring for Albertans. As we consider the next generation of Albertans, I believe it's critically important that we put this province on a sustainable fiscal trajectory by making disciplined financial decisions, by positioning the province for disproportionate investment attraction, economic recovery, and growth. That's what we're doing. That's what this budget does. This leaves the next generation for a prosperous Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Construction Industry Prompt Payment Framework

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, previously Alberta had no specific rules or regulations for payment timelines in the construction industry. If not directly addressed by a contract, these timelines were left ambiguous. Bill 37 amended the Builders' Lien Act and became the new Prompt Payment and Construction Lien Act in 2020. This act addresses these issues by introducing a clear timeline and regulations for payment and liens in the construction industry. Can the Minister of Service Alberta talk about the specific regulation changes individuals in the construction industry can expect to see upon implementation?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As our economy continues to recover, to grow, and to diversify, Alberta's government is protecting jobs by bringing its prompt payment legislation into force. Members in the construction industry had been advocating for this framework for many, many years. While the NDP sat on this for four years, we have taken action and worked with the industry at every level to create legislation and regulations that make sense. These regulations will solve so many problems, including dealing with the administration of an adjudication process for dispute resolution as well as dealing with lien holdback payment protocols and the transition . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that the construction industry is a multibillion-dollar sector of Alberta's economy that creates thousands of jobs for Albertans, employing approximately 1 in 10 Albertans, and given that this new legislation will act to protect contractors, subcontractors, labourers, and suppliers who have provided labour and materials for a construction project, to the same minister: can you identify the specifics of how this legislation will seek to protect labourers and suppliers?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great question, and I'm happy to tackle that. We know that over the last number of years the average time for payment in Alberta's construction industry has increased from within 45 days to well over 70 days. That's just the average; in many cases it's well over 100 days. That is why this prompt payment framework was so important and why I was so proud to work with the construction industry to develop it. The legislation will address, first and foremost, ensuring that when a proper invoice has been issued, payment will be issued within 28 days. That's going to move the needle in the construction . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you to the minister for that answer, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are numerous changes to the original Builders' Lien Act and given that there has been collaboration with construction industry representatives to create supporting regulations and to develop specific processes and further given that the Prompt Payment and Construction Lien Act, the builders' lien forms amendment regulation, and the prompt payment and construction lien regulation will come into force on August 29 of this year, 2022, to the same minister: what can workers expect to experience during this rollout transition?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Glubish: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is right. We have had so much collaboration on this issue over the last year and a half. We've been working so closely with members of the construction industry since 2019 to develop these new rules that will be in place this summer in Alberta. Over the next six months what they can continue to expect from us is that we will continue to work with industry very closely on education and on training and to establish the tools needed for this adjudication system to ensure a seamless transition when the act and regulations come into force on August 29.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine. If members are exiting the Chamber, I ask that they do so quickly and quietly.

Energy Industry Environmental, Social, and Governance Standards

Mr. Yao: Virtue signalling: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada is a master at this. But he can do so much better. He can demonstrate honest virtue by supporting Canada's energy industry, that ranks high in environmental, social, and governance measures. He can advocate on behalf of our industry to the international community and stop reliance on nations like Russia. Environmental measures weigh how a company performs as a steward of protecting nature. Social aspects examine how it manages its labour standards, its customers and their communities. Governance deals with a company's leadership and financial aspects.

Despite the negative reputation of Canada's oil sands, environmentally we retain a quality that virtually no other jurisdiction in the world can advertise. We reclaim used lands back to their original state. No other energy sector has financially invested in research and development to reduce carbon emissions as much as operators in Canada's oil sands. They have brought emissions levels initially witnessed with the first oil sands operations down to quantities currently seen around the world with conventional oil operations. Socially, employees of Canada's oil companies are well treated and support a society that is tolerant of all. Governance: we can rest assured that investors in Canada and her energy industry contribute back to pensions and other causes benefiting our lives.

Exxon is losing $4 billion, Shell $3 billion, and BP a whopping $25 billion by exiting a nation that has demonstrated hostility to a democratic nation. Admittedly, our Prime Minister created a regulatory environment that is difficult for these companies, but he can repair this. The world is witnessing the consequences of relying on energy from unethical regimes like that of Russia. Meanwhile western democracies are attempting to voice their disagreement by imposing economic sanctions, which ultimately serve as nothing but virtue signalling since the international community continues to purchase Russian oil and gas.

The left will say that now is the time to invest in windmills and solar panels, but we know these to be unreliable sources of energy. This Prime Minister and the world need to embrace Canada's energy industry, that has high environmental, social, and governance ratings, and quit their hypocritical virtue signalling.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Project

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, on February 18 Trudeau pulled a fast one, announcing a halt to public funding of Trans Mountain. That's right. The federal government's mismanagement of this project caused a $9 billion deal to turn into a $21.4 billion boondoggle, and the project is only half done.

Now, let me outline the details of this public disclosure because they are very intriguing. Trudeau, after invoking the Emergencies Act, announced TMX's demise amongst chaos. He did this while arresting peaceful protesters, freezing bank accounts, running over elders, and pepper-spraying citizens. He did this in the wake of a violent eco terrorist attack at the Coastal GasLink Pipeline site in B.C., where 20 assailants wielding axes terrorized employees and used explosives to destroy construction trailers, including an attempt to set fire to a vehicle with workers inside.

He did this while a madman amassed troops along Ukraine's border, beginning an onslaught to kill innocent people in a ruthless attack having the potential to start a world war. But Trudeau looks at this turmoil as an opportunity, an opportunity to divest of a pipeline he had no intentions of completing, to fulfill his misplaced vision of destroying Alberta's fossil fuel industry, an ethical industry that could replace Putin's tyrannical oil, paralyze his funding, and make Canada the world's preferred supplier of clean energy.

Mr. Speaker, the Emergencies Act authorizes the federal government to take extraordinary measures in responding to national emergencies. It replaced the War Measures Act, with war characterizing the severe nature of its invocation. Its use should not be taken lightly. If absolute power corrupts absolutely, with this megalomaniac in charge, Canada appears absolutely corrupt.

Thank you.

Addiction Treatment and Recovery

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, Judy came into my office a couple of years ago and shared a heartbreaking story. She showed me pictures of the drug paraphernalia laying in her granddaughter's room that she had received from injection sites. It was enough to last a month. Judy told me her granddaughter was going to die because no one cared. People were enabling her in her addiction. Judy wanted me to remember her granddaughter as we focused on trying to make sure that other people did not lose their loved ones. A few months later, sadly, Judy was right. Her granddaughter Judaine passed away.

This story is heartbreaking and is all too common in our province and our country. Mr. Speaker, people living with addiction are exactly that, people. They are sons, daughters, grandkids. They are siblings, parents, and grandparents.

Our government cares deeply about this issue and is committed to fostering a healing journey and removing barriers so individuals can access help. Recently we expanded the 4,000 new recovery spaces that were planned to 8,000 spaces dedicated to detox, treatment, and recovery. Alberta is also the first province to eliminate all user fees for publicly funded treatment. We've also launched the Digital Overdose Response System, a mobile app that can help prevent overdose deaths. If a user of the app becomes unresponsive to a timer, EMS is dispatched to save their life.

We recently announced that Alberta will be the first province to provide an injectable opioid treatment drug, Sublocade, at no cost. Sublocade provides the client with 30 days of protection from overdose and reduced cravings so they can pursue recovery. We also recently announced $1.4 million to expand and create a low-barrier division of the virtual opioid dependency program. Thanks to this program Albertans anywhere in the province can get same-day access to evidence-based opioid treatment medications.

Mr. Speaker, addiction ruins lives. It destroys communities, and it tears families apart. I'm proud that our government is providing the help necessary to help recover from addiction to improve lives, rebuild communities, and strengthen families here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice to Government Motion 12 to be put on the Order Paper in my name as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly (a) recognize that the current air travel restrictions imposed by the government of Canada have no measurable public health benefit and continue to impact hundreds of thousands of jobs in the air travel and tourism sectors and (b) call on the government of Canada to revoke (i) its proof of vaccination requirements for airline passengers and (ii) its predeparture COVID-19 testing requirements for international airline passengers entering Canada.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I wish to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Government Motion 7 there shall be no evening sitting tonight.

The Speaker: You can extend the Routine if you choose. The other thing, though, I just wanted to check with the Government House Leader: are you comfortable that the motion that you read is, in fact, the motion which you desire on the Order Paper?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, I'll read it one more time, Mr. Speaker, if you like.

The Speaker: No. If you have, it's fine. I just want to make sure that you have what you want.

Mr. Jason Nixon: No. I think we're good.

The Speaker: Okay. If you want to extend the Routine . . .

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah. I will extend the Routine, please, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Bill 2

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This bill consists of several legislative amendments which support government's commitment to responsible financial management and respect for Alberta taxpayer dollars. The bill also enacts several specific tax changes and supports red tape reduction by harmonizing federal and provincial tax legislation. If passed, these measures will help ensure efficient use of Albertans' tax dollars and protect valuable public services today and well into the future.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I move first reading of Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Bill 4

Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, being Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022.

The proposed changes, Mr. Speaker, to the MGA will ensure municipal bylaws align with the provincial approach to public health issues. Let me be perfectly clear. The changes proposed in this bill are extremely narrow and are strictly focused on public health requirements related to COVID-19. If passed, the legislation would require municipal bylaws relating to masks to prevent the spread of communicable diseases or COVID-19 vaccines be approved by the Minister of Municipal Affairs in consultation with the chief medical officer of health. That's it. This approach will limit the ability of municipalities to pass bylaws that contradict public health policies and rules enacted by the province, again, only specifically related to COVID-19 or similar communicable diseases.

For example, the proposed changes would prevent local governments from imposing mask bylaws on private-sector operators such as grocery stores and retail businesses. These changes otherwise would have no impact on the day-to-day operations of Alberta municipalities. Most municipalities, Mr. Speaker, already comply with public health requirements for COVID-19, so the proposed changes will have zero impact on the vast, vast, vast majority of Alberta municipalities. Local governments would continue to have the authority to implement masking bylaws for the operation of municipal facilities such as recreation centres, public transit, and other municipal buildings and places that they actually own. Individual Albertans and Alberta businesses should have the option of whether or not to wear masks or to require their customers to wear masks, and the proposed amendments to the MGA will ensure that they have that choice.

These changes will come into effect upon receiving royal assent. If passed, Mr. Speaker, this bill will ensure that Alberta has one clear public health policy as we move together on a path, we hope, towards normal. I say "we hope" because no one can predict what this virus will do next.

The Speaker: I had almost mistaken that for a second reading speech.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Bill 202

Public Health (Transparency and Accountability) Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce a bill, that being Bill 202, Public Health (Transparency and Accountability) Amendment Act, 2022.

Bill 202 will allow medical officers of health, cabinet, and the Minister of Health to make and issue health orders as needed but with the added transparency and accountability that can be provided by the MLAs in the Legislature so they can represent the views of their constituents, which, of course, is the role they were elected for.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At 1:59 the Opposition House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to a Member by Name

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rose because the Member for Lethbridge-West and our Official Opposition Finance critic – while asking her questions, the Government House Leader was heckling her by saying, "Shannon, hey, Shannon," and questioning how she was asking her question. It is a long-standing precedent in this House not to use first names, and heckling in that manner seemed to be a very deliberate attempt to throw her off her leader's question in this place. I call a point of order because using first names in this way seemed particularly malicious.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I confess I can't recall if I used the hon. member's first name. Certainly, it would be a point of order if I did, and as an abundance of caution I'd be happy to withdraw and apologize if I did use the hon. member's first name.

The Speaker: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded. I, too, did hear you use her first name, so I appreciate the apology.

At 2 o'clock the hon. Government House Leader rose on a point of order, and is someone from the government side wanting to argue this point of order? I'm not sure who – the Government House Leader himself.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

Mr. Jason Nixon: Yeah, absolutely, we will rise. At that time the hon. member, whose name evidently I did use, from Lethbridge . . .

Mr. Schow: West.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you very much.

. . . West heckled to the Minister of Finance that he – he, Mr. Speaker – was pickpocketing Albertans in her question. Actually, it was not a heckle. I have to rephrase. That is certainly an inappropriate thing – so I will rise on 23(h), (i), and (j) – and not something that an hon. member of this place should be accused of.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the benefit of the Blues. Certainly, if the hon. member had referred to him as an individual, then that would be unparliamentary, and if that was the case, I would apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: Well, I appreciate the apology and withdrawal because I do have the benefit of the Blues, and it says: "For the folks watching at home, the minister also doesn't want to talk about the billion dollars he's pickpocketing in personal income." In fact, that would have been a point of order. I consider the matter dealt with and concluded. The statement is withdrawn and apologized for.

At 2:10 the hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs rose on a point of order.

Point of Order
Oral Question Period Practices

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly hopeful this won't take long. It may not be the worst sin committed here, but it was fairly blatant. Under 23(l), "introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." At that point the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud stood up and said something very close to: I received a text right here in question period that said this. Now, I refer to you the comments you yourself have made in this House and, more specifically, to the memo that you sent at the start of the session in which you wrote, and I quote: "Members may use their mobile devices during Oral Question Period but only use them as reading devices and not for streaming, sending or receiving messages. All connectivity, including Wi-Fi and mobile data services, must be turned off during this time (i.e., airplane mode on and Wi-Fi turned off)." I just believe that if it was important enough to you to put it to us in a memo, it might be important enough for you to rule against us doing what you warned against in the memo that you took the trouble to send.

The Speaker: The hon. the Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister was very excited about calling this point of order, but he did not hear correctly. The member very clearly was talking about e-mail she received during estimates, when the minister was providing information that stakeholders patently disagreed with and were taking the time to watch the estimates and correct the government through e-mails to the Official Opposition, something that all ministers should be aware seems to be happening more and more often. I don't believe this is a point of order.

The Speaker: Why, thank you. I appreciate the submissions.

I do have the benefit of the Blues, and what the member did say is: "And given that people in the sector were e-mailing me today during estimates to fact-check the minister in real time . . ." Now, this isn't a point of order, but I might just add that I am very excited that someone did in fact read the procedural memo. So from the very bottom of my heart to you, sir, thank you. Thank you very much.

Hon. members, this concludes the daily Routine. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) and the 2022-23 main estimates schedule the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

Prior to rising, it is important to note that the Legislative Assembly policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Infrastructure in the Grassland Room and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance in the Rocky Mountain Room.

Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Education in the Rocky Mountain Room and the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the main estimates for the Ministry of Jobs, Economy and Innovation in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 3 p.m.]

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 9, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to introduce a group of trustees from southwestern Ontario who are visiting Alberta for the Rural Education Symposium. They are guests of the Minister of Municipal Affairs as they hail from the Thames Valley school district, where the minister grew up. I'm hoping they could perhaps provide me some tips on keeping the minister in line. Please welcome the school board trustees to the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Oil and Gas Pipeline Development

Mrs. Frey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The terrible situation in eastern Europe has shone a light on why we need to build energy infrastructure in Canada and increase our energy exports to the rest of the world. Alberta is a rights-respecting democracy with the third-largest energy reserves on the planet. We can be a major force for global stability by displacing conflict oil from Russia and other dictatorships. The world needs oil. The world needs Alberta oil.

Unfortunately, we have seen activists and misguided politicians standing in the way of us building the pipelines that we need to get our energy to market. Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. Alberta can cut off Vladimir Putin's war machine and others by building pipelines, building them fast, and building them right now. Alberta stands ready, willing, and able to supply the energy needed to displace Russia from global markets. But one thing, though: we need Ottawa and Washington to stop killing our pipelines.

On that note, the NDP members across the aisle should also stop standing in the way of pipelines. Let's not forget their record. They surrendered on Energy East, they opposed Northern Gateway, and they opposed Keystone XL. Then they appointed radical anti-oil activists like Tzeporah Berman to important positions overseeing our energy sector.

Albertans agree that this nonsense has to stop, but just recently we saw the NDP pass a resolution endorsing illegal protests along the Coastal GasLink pipeline in B.C., this despite the fact that all 20 elected chiefs and councils along the Coastal GasLink pipeline support the project. When the resolution passed, the NDP supported their radical members with one word, "solidarity," Mr. Speaker. Solidarity with whom, though? United Conservatives stand in solidarity with the elected Indigenous leaders along the Coastal GasLink pipeline and encourage Indigenous participation in the resource economy. The NDP, meanwhile, will continue to support radical activists who want to shut our pipelines down, who are now engaging in violence.

The world is waking up to the necessity of building pipelines and getting Alberta oil to market, and our government is getting the job done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Budget 2022 and Cost of Living

Mr. Schmidt: Albertans own the resources, and they should get more faster: that's the late Peter Lougheed in a 2006 interview expressing concerns that Albertans aren't sharing in the prosperity that comes from our vast resources. He went on to say about oil and gas royalties, "It is wrong in my judgment, a major wrong, and I keep trying to see who the beneficiaries are. Not the people in Red Deer, because everything they have got is costing more."

Fast-forward to 2022. We have oil at $120 a barrel. There are reports of heavy profits coming in from all over the province. CNRL reported nearly $3 billion in earnings in the fourth quarter of last year and raised its dividend by almost 30 per cent. Suncor netted almost $2 billion. TC Energy earned over $4 billion last year.

Billions in profits, Mr. Speaker, and what do everyday Alberta families get? They get record high gas prices. They get utility bills in excess of $700 a month. They get to hand over another billion dollars to this Premier as a result of his sneaky budget creep tax scheme. They're paying more for groceries, school fees, tuition. Heck, this government even raised the fees for families trying to go camping this summer. My constituents in Edmonton-Gold Bar can't make ends meet, and similar hardship is being felt right across the province. The Finance minister has a constituent whose utility bill was $1,900. And his response? A measly 50 bucks – 50 bucks, Mr. Speaker – while oil and gas companies earn billions on top of the billions in tax cuts that this UCP government gave to them. Tax handouts for corporations, massive tax hikes for Alberta families.

Enough is enough. Albertans deserve a bigger slice of the pie. They're wondering why the rich get richer and they have to decide between buying groceries and putting gas in the car. They're left worrying that their utility bill will be sent to collections, that their kids will be forced to give up on their dreams of a postsecondary education. It is time for a change, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East has the call.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to share that for the first time since 2014-2015 Alberta's budget is balanced, with a projected surplus of $511 million. And it doesn't end there. Surpluses of $900 million and $700 million are targeted for 2023-24 and 2024-25, respectively. As a member of Treasury Board it has been an honour and privilege to work with the Minister of Finance and my Treasury Board and government colleagues to fulfill our government's commitment to balance the budget in our first term.

Favourable commodity prices certainly helped, but balancing the budget was also the result of growing the economy, financial discipline, and responsible government. To see this, consider that the previous NDP government raised spending an average of 4 per cent per year. At that rate of spending, even at projected commodity prices and assuming their policies hadn't harmed businesses or our energy sector further, Alberta would have a $6 billion deficit this year, a $7.5 billion deficit next year, and a $9 billion deficit in 2024.

The previous NDP government also significantly increased taxes and regulatory burden. This year Alberta will collect approximately $400 million more in annual corporate tax revenues at our 8 per cent rate than the previous NDP government did at 12 per cent. Our government also has cut over 21 per cent of red tape, saving Albertans and businesses an estimated $1.2 billion while making Alberta a more desirable place to invest.

In Budget 2022 Health and Education continue to be funded at the highest levels in Alberta's history. Advanced Education, Children's Services, and social services are also seeing increases to meet the needs of Albertans.

With a growing and diversifying economy, Alberta is the best place to start a family, find a job, or build a business. Albertans have every reason to be optimistic, and with continued responsible government and financial discipline, we can avoid burdening our children so they can share in that optimism.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Budget 2022 and Cost of Living

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, yesterday Albertans got to see exactly how out of touch this government is from their needs and concerns. The Finance minister, in responding to a question from his own caucus, decided to take the opportunity to boast about the Alberta affordability advantage that he claims all Albertans get to take part in. Seriously.

He said this as Albertans are facing skyrocketing utility bills. Some owe thousands in outstanding payments. He said this as Albertans are bracing for this government to take a billion dollars in higher income taxes because of the bracket creep. He said this as Albertans are facing higher school fees, higher property taxes, higher insurance bills, higher camping fees, and the list goes on. And guess what? All of these cost hikes come as a direct result of the policy decisions of this government.

Can the government be any more tone deaf? There is no affordability advantage for Albertans right now, not for my constituents being forced to choose between putting food on the kitchen table and keeping the lights on, not for those staring down bills for school fees that they'll never be able to afford, not for those who are being forced to park their vehicles because gas is more than $1.60 a litre and their car insurance has shot up by more than 30 per cent.

It is insulting for this government to talk about an affordability advantage when they have done everything in their power to make life unaffordable for Albertans. For Albertans to have a real affordability advantage, it will require a change in government. We need a government that actually cares about Alberta families and making life affordable for them. My message to my constituents in Edmonton-Manning and to all Albertans is that help is on the way. They just need to hang on a little bit longer because in 2023 the government is changing.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great time for Albertans and residents of my riding of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain. Last month MLAs returned to the Legislature. When they did, this government unveiled a budget that for the first time in eight years will be balanced. This budget will help Albertans look forward for the future of this province.

One of the key pillars is going to be health care. We all know the challenges faced during this pandemic, and our government is committing a total of $3.5 billion for health facilities, equipment, and IT systems to expand health care capacity for Albertans no matter where they live. This includes $133 million over three years to upgrade and expand hospital operating rooms and departments.

I'd also like to highlight that annual corporate tax revenue is expected to be $400 million higher than the previous government's with a rate that is 4 per cent lower. Had we kept tax rates where the NDP had them, we would have had much less revenue because these crucial businesses would have gone elsewhere. COVID did make the fiscal situation challenging, but I want to thank Minister Toews for making our province an ideal place to do business.

Furthermore, on top of this budget, we have shown fiscal restraint. In comparison, if we kept spending increases at the same rate as the previous NDP government, then Albertans would be facing a massive $6 billion deficit this year. This would take limited tax dollars to pay interest payments on debt compared to programs and services that Albertans require.

Another point that is important to my riding is our ongoing supports for youth and their journey towards a better education. We will be providing $600 million for the Alberta at work program. Now, this new initiative will help prepare the future generation of youth for the workforce through skills training and knowledge for K to 12 and postsecondary students.

This budget is great for Albertans and residents of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain. Thanks to the hard work of our government, we can all look forward to more great things to come in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member is aware that the use of proper names for any reason is unacceptable, and he'll govern himself accordingly in the future.

The Very Reverend Bill Phipps

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, in Calgary and across Alberta people are mourning the loss of the Very Reverend Bill Phipps. Bill was an extraordinary man who embodied so much of what is best in our province. He was a leader, he was a man of faith, and he was the prophet in a baseball cap. He was a fierce advocate for LGBTQ2S-plus rights and economic justice. He founded organizations such as Faith & the Common Good and Greening Sacred Spaces. He was so passionate about climate change that he went on a week-long hunger strike and what he described as, quote, a prayer of courage for political leaders.

Mr. Speaker, Bill was a relentless advocate for the marginalized and dispossessed. He also had a wicked sense of humour, and he knew how to enjoy life. He loved to camp and watch baseball. He threw out the very first pitch at the Blue Jays game in 2000.

He knew what was great about Canada, but he didn't shy away from harsh truths about our history. When he was the United Church of Canada's 36th moderator, he offered one of the first apologies to First Nation peoples on the role his church played in the residential school system. His words are worth reflecting on today.

We know that many within our church will . . . not understand why each of us must bear the scar, the blame for this horrendous period in Canadian history. But the truth is, we are the bearers of many blessings from our ancestors, and therefore, we must also bear their burdens.

Mr. Speaker, right up until the end of his life Bill Phipps was a passionate, thoughtful, unyielding force for positive change in Alberta, Canada, and the world. I admired him deeply. On behalf of everyone in Alberta's NDP caucus I want to offer my deepest condolences to his partner, Carolyn, his family and his friends, and the entire United Church community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Federal Emergencies Act

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shakespeare wrote his plays for everyone and often commented on the conditions facing ordinary citizens who were deemed by some to be the underclass, you know, the fringe minority of his time. When he wrote Hamlet, he said: there's something rotten in the state of Denmark. He was commenting on the lack of leadership in his own country, not in Denmark. Albertans and the vast majority of Canadians have been saying for some time that there is something rotten in Ottawa.

The PM of the present invoked the Emergencies Act against us, legislation that historically has been used to declare war. Under the guise of safety he gave his government powers, including the ability to seize private property and monies of everyday citizens that were protesting against him. Hard-working, law-abiding citizens' rights were trampled. They had to endure the onslaught of character assassinations by the PM and other elected officials, the media, that justified his draconian use of powers typically reserved for times of war. The overwhelming majority of the protesters of the freedom convoy were peaceful despite being painted quite the contrary by a number of other leaders and, like the NDP here, members at home.

Peaceful protest is a constitutional right in this country. Everyone must protect this, not crush that right with draconian use of this power, as we've recently seen. While we've seen legislation used during the pandemic at many levels of government limiting the rights and freedoms of Canadians, nothing compared to the gross overreach by the PM or his divisive language. His actions were condemned across the world, including by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. Here at home only the NDP supported him, their federal friends voting in the act to make it come into effect. At home the NDP said nothing while the whole country was crying foul as they sought to trample the constitutional rights of many Albertans taking place or participating in that convoy.

Leaders have pushed people too far. Everyday folks came together in a common cause, forcing changes to be made, freedoms to be restored, and made us all consider the quality of our leaders of the present day. There is indeed something "rotten in the state of Denmark."

Utility Costs

Mr. Dang: Life is getting more expensive for Albertans thanks to the short-sighted policies of this government. My constituents are reaching out to me directly with their worry and outrage over the lack of relief for consumers to their skyrocketing utility bills. People are asking why this government dropped the utility rate cap to pad the bottom line of already-profitable utility companies at the expense of everyday Albertans.

Albertans are doing their best to trim household expenses wherever they can, but, Mr. Speaker, they can only do so much. One constituent had to make the decision to pull their child from daycare to make ends meet and pay their nearly tripled utility bill. Another constituent shared with me, quote: I'm on fixed rates and have done everything in my power to be mindful of my consumption; I cannot afford to keep paying these ridiculous amounts and still afford food, my mortgage, and clothing for my children, you know, the basic necessities of life; I'm okay paying $200 of gas we use to heat our home, but the other $250 is carnage. End quote.

We're facing inflation of over 5 per cent. Albertans have seen a zero per cent increase in their wages. This means that Alberta families are dipping into their savings and going further into debt to just get by. People across the province cannot keep trying to pay more with so much less. Albertans and Alberta families should not have to choose between buying food and keeping their houses warm during the winter. The government has promised a nearly useless utility rebate. The rates needed to trigger this rebate are highly unlikely. Relief is not coming, so as it stands, Alberta households will not see a dime of relief from this government for their rising utility bills.

They say that actions speak louder than words, and this government's inaction when it comes to keeping life affordable for Albertans is loud and clear.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

United States Oil and Gas Imports

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the U.S. banned Russian oil. For those watching, right now, as I speak, Russia is killing civilians in Ukraine. Putin's unethical war machine is murdering children. If you buy Russian oil, you finance war crimes. By any reasonable standard Russian oil is unethical, and I applaud President Biden on his decision.

But how will they make up this loss of supply? The obvious choice is, of course, us. Canada is a global leader on ESG indexes, which include human rights, climate change action, and reconciliation. But who is Biden actually talking to? I'll tell you: Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, and Iran. Really?

Venezuela. In 2018 independent experts concluded that there were crimes against humanity happening: murders, extrajudicial executions, arbitrary detentions, and torture. And how do they treat Indigenous people? Two words: Kumarakapay massacre, Venezuelan troops shooting and torturing Indigenous people in just 2019.

Saudi Arabia. Did we all forget about Jamal Khashoggi? How is the media not upset about this? And, further, do you support LGBTQ2S-plus rights? In Saudi Arabia you can be stoned to death just because of who you love. It is terrible.

And Iran. Come on. In the streets they chant: death to America. In what upside-down world are we living where you would rather send money to, and thereby strengthen the military of, people who want to kill you? You can't make this stuff up.

Mr. Speaker, through you to President Biden, please, sir, do not jump out of the frying pan into the fire. You are a champion of human rights, of LGBTQ2S-plus rights. You support Indigenous reconciliation. The choice is clear. Put your money where your values are. You may even be surprised at just how fast we can ramp up production, and, hey, we also have a net zero pipeline pretty much built in Keystone XL.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has question 1.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's postsecondary institutions can be the engine of our economic recovery, preparing our future leaders for the world of tomorrow, but how about today? Those future leaders now are struggling because of this UCP government's tuition hikes. I have a document from the University of Alberta showing that the minister personally signed off on tuition hikes in engineering, medicine, business, and other areas, some as much as 104 per cent increases. A simple question: does the minister believe somehow that higher education also means sky-high tuition rates?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Postsecondary institutions are required to consult with students regarding acceptance of tuition increases. My assumption is that they have already done this consultation prior to coming to the Minister of Advanced Education. This is just more misinformation from the NDP without any reference to the actual facts. According to Stats Canada the average undergraduate tuition in Alberta is $6,567, and the national average is $6,693. Alberta remains below the national average in tuition cost, and we have added millions of dollars in financial supports to ensure all Albertans have the opportunity to attend postsecondary.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, this government is pushing our future leaders out of this province with these extraordinary hikes. According to StatsCan 2021 was the first year since 1988 that Alberta has a net negative migration of young people aged 18 to 24. The U of A Students' Union indicated that 61 per cent of students think that there is at least a 50-50 chance that they will leave the province, with 14 per cent already deciding to pack their bags. Why would the minister drive young people out of the province with these ridiculous tuition hikes, which are outrageous?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I believe the member opposite forgot that there was COVID and that that's probably why there wasn't migration to and from the province in postsecondary. Again, I want to reiterate the actual facts. According to Stats Canada the average undergraduate tuition in Alberta is $6,567. That is well below the national average of $6,693. Again, misinformation.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, for all the students out there watching this minister floundering around today, I want you to know that the NDP has your back. Let me explain how it works for you. You can stop these cuts, actually support your ambitions and desire to succeed to build a better economy. Our proposal strengthening postsecondary for a resilient future is online at albertasfuture.ca. Check it out. My question to the minister is that I can send around a copy to her office afterwards. I would be happy to do so.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Looked a lot like a prop from here. Tough to know for certain, but that's what it looked like from here.

The hon. the minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I failed to hear the question in there, but what I did want to share with everybody: you know what will keep Alberta students in Alberta or people coming to Alberta? Jobs. Jobs will keep them coming to postsecondary. They will keep them coming to Alberta. I know it's something that in K to 12 our students are looking forward to. They're looking forward to going to postsecondary. They're looking forward to going to in-person classes once again when they're able to graduate, but at the end of the day we need jobs here for Alberta students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has the call.

Budget 2022 and Cost of Living

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the UCP government why they refuse to give Albertans back more of their income when inflation rises, or as the Premier once called it, income tax bracket creep. The Finance minister, in response, went on a bit of a space-walk, refusing to acknowledge his billion-dollar pickpocketing of the family budget. This year alone UCP inflation creep will take $400 from families, $350 from the seniors' benefit, and more than $1,000 from Albertans living on AISH. I'll try again. Will the Premier reverse his inflation creep and help struggling Albertans? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government just announced the other day a 13-cent rebate on fuel taxes as well as rebates on people's electricity bills. That's a sharp contrast to that party across from me, the NDP, who brought in the job-killing carbon tax and continue to support Justin Trudeau's ridiculous carbon tax increases. Will that member stand up in this House and join the government to call on the federal government to get rid of the carbon tax once and for all and to stop punishing hard-working Albertans?

Ms Phillips: Well, for the folks at home, the UCP is recycling old talking points because they don't want to talk about how they're raising your costs, your taxes, taking money from your budget. That's my message to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier himself as an MP in Ottawa raged against these sneaky tax increases. I'll ask the same verbatim question the Premier asked the Chrétien government. When is the Premier going to "stop this destructive tax on inflation, or will they continue to be known by Canadians as the bracket creeps?"

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government is lowering taxes. The reason the hon. member is so upset is that she's upset about a balanced budget and the fact that we've been able to fix the tremendous damage that the NDP did when they were in power. That hon. member used to be the environment minister who oversaw a carbon tax coming in on Albertans that raised the costs on everything and continues to support the federal government bringing carbon taxes on the province of Alberta and the people that live here. Again, will that member finally stand up to Trudeau, or is she going continue to sit with him?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, we hear every day from Albertans who must choose between buying groceries and a tank of gas to drive to a medical appointment. No rebate off-sets the UCP's billion-dollar income tax bracket creep. None. But every day this week the minister and the government refuse to acknowledge their billion-dollar tax increase. I'll ask, again, the exact verbatim question the former MP for Calgary Southeast, now the Premier, asked. To the Premier: "Why is this government telling Canadians they will get tax relief when in fact they will end up with less money in their wallets at the end of the day?"

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House will never be lectured by the NDP when it comes to taxes, particularly that member, who brought in a carbon tax on this province that they never campaigned on, that they hid from Albertans, that raised the cost of everything inside our society. This government got rid of that carbon tax, got rid of the NDP carbon tax, and continues to stand up to the federal government when it comes to the carbon tax. When is the NDP going to do the right thing for Albertans and join this government, stand up to Justin Trudeau, and get rid of the carbon tax inside this country?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the next question.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, with revenues flowing into government coffers, all this government is willing to offer Albertans is a fake natural gas rebate and 50 bucks. Meanwhile TransAlta reported that 2021 was a, quote, record year. It earned $1.26 billion over 12 months. Shareholders and CEOs are making off with massive profits while people in Calgary and right across the province watch in horror as their utility bills skyrocket. As this government and utility corporations are earning billions in revenues, don't Alberta families deserve more than $50?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the NDP truly cared about the high cost of electricity, they would not have cancelled the cheapest form of electricity that our province had to offer. If they cared about the price of electricity, they wouldn't have allowed $7.5 billion worth of transmission, much of it not needed, to be built in their term. Enough with the manufactured outrage on the part of the NDP. They should apologize to Albertans for making everything more expensive.

Ms Ganley: That minister may be unwilling to talk about the pain Alberta families are facing, but it's real. Rural Municipalities of Alberta reported that delinquent oil and gas companies owed municipalities $253 million in unpaid taxes. The government claimed that it was bringing in a legislative hammer to force the companies to pay last year, but it hasn't worked. In fact, municipalities actually owe more this year. Can the minister explain why companies are netting billions of dollars in profit but Alberta municipalities aren't seeing any of that money, even dollars they've been owed for years?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We brought in legislation last year to help municipalities collect taxes from oil and gas companies. The oil and gas companies were happy. The municipalities were happy. Everybody was happy except the NDP. Now, they're not wrong in that we need to do more and to do something else, but when they fought us on what didn't work, gosh knows how hard they're going to fight us on what we have to do that's stronger. They didn't support the municipalities the first time around. They are not on the municipalities' side. They showed that when we brought in this legislation.

Ms Ganley: More bluster from a government that admits its own program doesn't work.

One of the first actions this government took after coming into office was to hand out $4.7 billion to already-profitable corporations. They claim that the massive giveaway was necessary to create jobs. It didn't create jobs. This government is still 130,000 jobs short of where it should be. Families are struggling, and this UCP government is nowhere to be found. All they have to offer are fake rebates and empty promises. To the government: why did corporations get billions and families got 50 bucks?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what a ridiculous question coming from the NDP. Again, this government will not be lectured, when it comes to taxes, by the NDP, who never saw a tax increase that they did not like. Again, that side of the House has brought in carbon taxes, supported the federal government on carbon taxes. Carbon taxes have raised gas prices by 40 cents to date, 40 cents a litre. Again, will that hon. member stand up and apologize to the people of Alberta for supporting those ridiculous taxes and join this side of the House in calling on the federal government to get rid of all carbon taxes inside this country?

The Speaker: I just want to provide a very brief caution to all members of the Assembly. This is a great time to do it because every individual who had the opportunity to ask a question or answer a question took that opportunity to really point at other members of the Assembly, and I'm just not convinced that that helps raise the level of decorum. I am more than happy for you to direct your pointing at me. I have no feelings and no heart, so please feel free to do so.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

COVID-19 Vaccines and Health Care Workforce

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the direction of the provincial government: those are the first words of Dr. Verna Yiu informing her medical colleagues that there is no longer a requirement for AHS staff to be vaccinated against COVID-19. It's a clear message that under the UCP clinical decisions are made by desperate politicians, not health care professionals, yet another reminder that Albertans can't trust the UCP with their health care. Why is the Premier pandering to an extremist fringe of his own caucus instead of protecting Albertans who are sick enough to be in hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to state for the record that I do believe that you actually have a heart.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank all health care workers for actually getting vaccinated. Just under 98 per cent of full-time and part-time health care workers working for AHS got vaccinated and 99.8 per cent of doctors, so I want to thank you. Our focus throughout the entire pandemic has been on ensuring that we can protect our health care system to provide health care services for Albertans. We are balancing the risk in doing that, the risk of measures being put in place with the risk of people getting infection. This calculation has changed with omicron. We've made some changes to go along with it, and I'll speak more on that in a second.

Mr. Shepherd: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this minister made the decision, not the health care experts.

Albertans recovering from surgeries who are struggling against a life-threatening disease have a right to expect that the people providing care to them have been vaccinated against a highly contagious disease that has killed almost 4,000 Albertans. Immunocompromised health care workers deserve protection, too, but the UCP isn't listening to them. They're listening to the people who blocked the border at the Coutts border crossing, caused almost a billion dollars in damage to our economy, and conspired to murder police officers while UCP members cheered them on. I'll ask the Premier again: why is he putting the safety of critically ill Albertans at risk to pander to a violent, extremist fringe group?

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted.

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I reject the entire premise of the question. Our entire government's focus is on protecting the health of Albertans. As I indicated before, the calculation of the risk has changed. As the hon. member knows and as this whole Chamber knows, there is a shortage of health care workers. We need all the health care workers that we can get to be able to deliver the services that Albertans need.

The highly transmissible nature of omicron, Mr. Speaker, and the fact that two doses aren't as effective as they were against delta have changed that calculation, as has the need for us to be able to provide services. We made this change, just like Manitoba did, just like Quebec did, because we're focused on providing health care to Albertans.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, the critical staffing shortage is in part because this government failed to protect the health care system and repeatedly pushed it to the limits because they put politics ahead of public health. Albertans know full well that this decision isn't about health care; it's about a weak and desperate Premier whose political career is on life support. Every single decision this government makes is an attempt to save his job on April 9 in Red Deer even if that means making hospitals less safe for Albertans battling cancer. Can the Premier tell this House how many votes he thinks he'll get in Red Deer thanks to his irresponsible meddling in Alberta's hospitals?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government is focused on providing health care and health care outcomes for Albertans. We made a choice yesterday, looking at all the evidence, and it's the same choice that was made in Quebec. It was the same choice that was made in Manitoba. We are focused on expanding the capacity for health care. In our budget we provided an additional $600 million this year, $1.8 billion over the next three years. We committed $3.5 billion into infrastructure to expand our health care. We are focused on providing the best health care for Albertans, and that is what we'll do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Rural High-speed Internet

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a great day for rural Alberta, with the government of Canada matching our government's historic investment in rural broadband expansion. The combined public investment now stands at an impressive $780 million, with more money likely coming from the private sector. The NDP committed not one red cent – or should I say “orange cent”? – to broadband expansion when they were in office, which made no sense. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why was it so important for the government to deliver where the previous government failed and bridge the digital divide for rural Albertans? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, thank you for that great question from my colleague. Yes, today I was so excited to be able to announce that Alberta's government has secured a matching agreement with the federal government for every single dollar of our $390 million commitment to rural broadband. That means $780 million of public-sector funding will be going to build much-needed, critical broadband infrastructure in rural Alberta. The NDP in their four years in government did absolutely nothing on this. We are taking action today. That is so important. We know how important it is. This is a priority. We have released a comprehensive and credible strategy on how to get there. And guess what? That is a funded plan.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. This is very welcome news for rural Alberta. Given that our government committed a historic $390 million over the next four years to bring high-speed Internet to rural, remote, and Indigenous communities across Alberta and given that the federal government has matched this commitment, again to the Minister of Service Alberta: what kind of support do you anticipate seeing from the private sector now that the government has stepped up to the plate on broadband funding?

Mr. Glubish: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a great question, and you know what? We've always said that we need to work with all levels of government as well as the private sector to solve the broadband problem, and that's exactly what we're doing. As I said, we've got $780 million between the Canadian government and the Alberta government that is going towards this important infrastructure. And guess what? It's going to be private-sector companies like telcos and Internet companies who will be building much of this infrastructure, and they are going to have to have skin in the game, too. Part of my job is to negotiate the maximum amount of dollars from them in exchange for the public-sector funding. I am confident that we will be able to push the total commitment north of a billion dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister again for that answer. Given that our government recently released our rural broadband strategy, a plan to close the digital divide for Albertans by 2026, and given that there is a tremendous economic need to ensure all Albertans have access to reliable high-speed Internet by this time, again to the Minister of Service Alberta: how do these recent funding announcements affect the timelines for connecting all Albertans to reliable Internet services?

Mr. Glubish: Well, Mr. Speaker, another great question from my colleague and one that is so important for rural Albertans. What I'm really pleased to say is that we have been working very closely with the federal government throughout all of our negotiations on the matching funding that we announced today, and we are very close to being able to announce the first tranche of co-investment into the first projects that will see shovels in the ground this year. That is going to bring immediate relief to Albertans this year. While the NDP love to talk, we're taking real action, committing real dollars, and working with all of the stakeholders, municipal leaders, the federal government, and the private sector to get the job done.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake, do you have one more? No?

Mr. Rehn: No.

Mr. Jason Nixon: He'll take one more.

The Speaker: Yeah. Missed his chance.

Utility Costs

Ms Renaud: Today I stood with Nora Yaghi, who runs a home-based floral business in my constituency of St. Albert. Nora, like too many Albertans, is being hit by sky-high utility bills and recently saw her bill climb over $140, more than the same time last year. Nora found the fake natural gas rebate and the $50 cheque offered by this government laughable. Will the minister explain to Albertans like Nora why they promised relief on skyrocketing utility bills in this budget but then delivered virtually nothing?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to say that we are as equally frustrated as Albertans are with the high cost of electricity. Our electricity market is an open and free market, and it's a product of supply and demand. Unfortunately, the previous administration had a series of policies that drove the cost of electricity up. I would encourage anyone that is struggling or at risk of having their utilities cut off to please contact the Utilities Consumer Advocate, where there are supports that can help them.

Ms Renaud: Given that the Finance minister promised Albertans like Nora there would be relief coming for Albertans to ease the soaring monthly cost and given that the only acknowledgement of the raging-high bills in this no-help budget was the so-called natural gas rebate, which turned out to be a fake, and given that this won't do a thing to support business owners like Nora coping with these sky-high costs, will the minister explain to Albertans when the real rebate is coming, and if he can't, I assume Albertans just aren't going to see a dime this year?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's so sad when the NDP finds someone who is struggling. Their first thought is to turn on the camera. If I could just encourage the members opposite to spend less time politicizing vulnerable Albertans and encourage them to contact the Utilities Consumer Advocate. There are real supports that can help people like Nora have lower electricity bills. I would encourage them to certainly let those constituents be aware of those supports that are available to them.

Ms Renaud: Given that real people have real concerns they want real answers to, not bluster, and given that these costs and lack of supports from this government mean that small-business owners, real business owners, real people like Nora, are forced to pass on costs and forced to re-evaluate their whole lives – this is serious; this isn't about politics – will the Finance minister apologize to Nora and her customers for their action, actually lack of action, and then more bluster today? Answer the question. They need help today.

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, this is going to come as a surprise to the hon. member, but facts are bipartisan. They can repeat these statements as often as they want – they can even put them on Twitter – but that doesn't make it true. Everything the NDP did for four years was to make life more expensive for Albertans. They did it to the electricity grid by raising prices, and then they brought in the biggest tax in our province's history, making everything more expensive, the carbon tax. The best thing that we can do to keep electricity prices low is to make sure that they never get close to the electricity grid ever again. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is the only one with the call.

Budget 2022 and Seniors' Expenses

Ms Sigurdson: The cost of living is having a significant impact on seniors. Utility costs are making some question if they can remain in their homes. Increases to groceries and property taxes are pushing seniors to the brink. I know the UCP claim their tax reduction on gasoline is the answer, but it means nothing for seniors who don't drive. For those who do drive, the UCP allowed insurance to skyrocket after removing the rate cap. They care more about their corporate friends than they do about seniors. When will the minister start making life more affordable for seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So untrue, all of the statements she makes. Let me be clear. I'm pleased to share with you my ministry budgets, that have received a 4.2 per cent increase over last year, to bring the grand total to over $701.2 million. With this funding we will continue to keep the seniors' benefit... [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. I'm trying to call the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall to order. The minister is making it a little bit difficult. The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall will come to order.

Ms Pon: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I just get so excited when I talk about seniors, so I'll just keep going. I just want to let you know that this is very important, to provide safe, stable housing for families, seniors, survivors of family violence and that those keep them healthy and safe.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that seniors with low incomes used to be able to turn to the seniors' benefit and special needs assistance for help and given that the UCP deindexed these benefits, meaning they won't keep up with skyrocketing costs, and given that we have called repeatedly for the UCP to reverse these cruel and heartless decisions, would the minister explain why she is willing to stand by and ignore Alberta seniors?

Ms Pon: Well, I don't know why the member says that I'm ignoring them. I just mentioned that this year we increased close to 4 per cent our budget and provided more service to our seniors. By the way, our seniors' benefit is one of the highest programs across Canada, and we have the lowest poverty rate for seniors. We have been looking after seniors. We will continue to do that. It's not like the opposition party. In the four years they did nothing for seniors. This government takes action and looks after our seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the UCP's budget does nothing to address affordability for seniors and given that seniors are not getting any new support – if the UCP had continued to have the seniors' benefit indexed to inflation and the cost of living, a couple would be receiving over $350 more; this is a significant amount of money for people struggling to meet their basic needs – and given that the minister's answers are vague and unhelpful, if the minister won't do anything to help seniors, should she continue to be the minister?

Ms Pon: Yes. I am. I should continue as the Minister of Seniors and Housing. Mr. Speaker, we did pause indexing seniors' benefits while we want to get our fiscal house in order. We are so proud to present our budget in the black. We have a surplus. The opposition party in four years just increased the deficit year after year. They hate to hear that. I just want to let you know that we balanced a budget this year. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has another question.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had the pleasure of going to High Prairie hospital a few weeks ago to commemorate the opening of the newly added dialysis facility. I've heard from many constituents these past couple of years about the need for dialysis treatment to be more available. I'm happy to see its completion. To the Minister of Health: what does this new dialysis facility mean for the hospital, the constituents, and the health care system of Lesser Slave Lake?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Alberta's government has invested $5.2 million to build the new dialysis unit at the High Prairie health centre. This six-station unit will treat up to 12 patients daily and will be open three days a week. It also means that High Prairie area residents like those from Whitefish First Nation won't have to travel hours to either Slave Lake or Peace River to receive this life-saving treatment. This investment directly improves the quality of life for the residents of High Prairie, the surrounding area, and all residents of Lesser Slave Lake.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. Given that there have been questions on the number of rural doctors and especially the availability of doctors in the Wabasca area and Lesser Slave Lake as a whole, people are worried that this will have an impact on the level of health care that they will receive in the area. To the same minister: are there any plans to increase the number of rural doctors available for rural Alberta, especially in the areas of Lesser Slave Lake like Wabasca? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.
The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The focus of Alberta's government is on ensuring equitable access to health care across the entire province. This is a challenge not only in Alberta but across the country. I've spoken directly with our counterparts in AHS to ensure that recruitment efforts are prioritized for Wabasca. AHS is currently assessing a few candidates in the area right now. Wabasca will also be one of the first communities in need to receive a new medical graduate under the rural education supplement and integrated doctor experience, or RESIDE, program. Albertans deserve quality health care no matter where they are in the province, and we're focused on delivering it.

2:20

Mr. Rehn: Thank you to the minister. I know many in the Wabasca area that will be pleased to hear that. Given that there has been an increase of services provided in the area, many have been asking for the increase of services to keep coming and given that rural Albertans can find it difficult to access the health care treatment they need in their communities, to the same minister: what is the ministry working on to continually improve the quality of health care available for rural Albertans like those who live in Lesser Slave Lake?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I want to thank the hon. member for the advocacy for his constituency. Ensuring the continuity of care in Alberta's health care system is a cornerstone commitment of our government. The Speech from the Throne affirmed this, as did the commitment that we made in Budget 2022. By focusing on our overall hospital capacity, lowering surgical wait times across the board, and addressing the issues facing our continuing care facilities and many other aspects of health care, Alberta's government is committed to improving the quality of service to rural Albertans and to all Albertans. We are here to build capacity and serve the health care needs of Albertans.

Women's Workforce Participation

Member Irwin: Two hundred and thirty-two pages in Budget 2022 and barely a mention of getting women back to work. Women have been hit hard during the pandemic, and the government's signature postbudget announcement for women was worth $1 million, a whopping .001 per cent of the government's projected spend this year. This UCP government ignores jobs for women, and they're determined to increase utility bills, car insurance, income taxes, tuition fees, camping fees, and more. Why were women left out of this government's jobs plan, and how can this province succeed when half the population is left behind?

Ms Issik: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you about how the members opposite, when they were in government, left women behind. Tens and tens of thousands of women became unemployed as they destroyed our entire Alberta economy. I'll tell you what we've done just in the last couple of days: $1 million in bursaries announced yesterday for women in STEM at NorQuest College, Bow Valley College, and Yellowhead Tribal College; a $3 million investment supporting women who are looking for career opportunities in the transportation industry just yesterday. I can tell you that we've taken action.

Member Irwin: Given that this government's job plan ignores women – it really does, Minister. Take a few minutes; read it. Given that this government is clearly unconcerned about women, with extensive commentary in the budget about the challenges men face in the labour market, and given that the employment rate for women is 7.7 per cent lower than it is for men in Alberta – and I'd argue that a competent government would care about ensuring that all Albertans can participate in the economy so that every Albertan can succeed and pay their bills – is this associate minister really comfortable with having fewer women employed than men? Does she care at all about doing her job?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I'm really glad that the member opposite has brought up how women are being treated because I'd like to talk to you about how the NDP treats the former CA president from Calgary-Bow. It's with misogyny. It's with racism. Let me quote some of the things from the member from the constituency of Calgary-Bow.

I was warned about speaking out – that I would be a pariah, that I would be “finished” . . . Recent events with the party have demonstrated to me an unwillingness by [my] party staffers to act in good faith, act respectfully, and act with decency.

This is how they treat their own members. God knows how they're going to treat other Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Member Irwin: Given that I'm hearing from women every single day who are struggling, struggling to re-enter the workforce – and this is how this government is responding. This government brags about labour force participation even though the rate is 69.9 per cent, far below the 76.5 per cent rate they inherited when they took office. This government goes on at length about how tough the labour market is for men when it is dramatically worse for women on every single metric. Minister, admit it. This government doesn't seem to care whether women will get back to work. Where is the jobs plan for women? Where is the action?

Ms Issik: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, it's amazing to me how the members opposite seem to play with numbers. We have a 60.6

per cent employment rate amongst women in this province. I'm going to tell you that that's pretty remarkable in this country. I'll tell you what else. You want to know what we're doing to make sure that women can re-enter the workforce? It's called $1 billion in child care, $1 billion. When they were in power, I can tell you what that government did, a $25-a-day pilot project that wasn't even accessible to most Albertans.

Rental Housing

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are struggling to pay their bills. Even this Finance minister, who receives over $250,000 in compensation, claims he can't afford his utility bill. For Albertans who make far less, it is even more severe. The spiking price of utilities, groceries, fuel, and insurance is making renters question if they can remain in their homes. To make matters worse, home prices and rent are skyrocketing, too. The Globe and Mail reported that the average price of a single-family home jumped 11 per cent between January and February. I'm wondering: what is the UCP doing to ensure that Alberta renters can remain in their homes?

Mr. Schweitzer: It is rich coming from the NDP when they want to talk about the economy, when they chased away thousands of jobs and billions of dollars of investment for this province. The number one thing that we can do for people to help them pay their bills: you want to know what that is, Mr. Speaker? Make sure they have a job. The NDP don't know anything about the economy or what it takes to attract investment. This government is leading the way. Alberta is going to lead the country in growth. We're diversifying our economy, leading the way in tech, film and television, agricultural value-add, manufacturing. The list goes on and on for Albertans.

Mr. Carson: Given that even with an increasing supply of homes in Calgary the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has noted that the affordable supply for the lowest fifth of income earners is decreasing – only 9 per cent of homes in the city are affordable for 20 per cent of the population – and given that the Calgary Real Estate Board has said that investors from other parts of the country are planning to buy property in the city this year, rent could spike even more. What will the UCP do in the wake of this to ensure that all renters can access homes that they can afford?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, the NDP has been accused of many things, but peddling in the truth is not one of them. That is the caucus that made everything more expensive for everyday Albertans. They did that by bringing in the carbon tax, the largest tax in our province's history. Then they did the exact same thing by cancelling cheap coal-fired electricity, and they never bothered to tell Albertans that their electricity bills were going up. They turned a blind eye as they overbuilt the electricity grid by $7 billion, again raising people's electricity bills.

Mr. Carson: Given that this UCP government has left the majority of struggling renters to fend for themselves through the pandemic and given that two years ago the residential tenancy dispute resolution service processed 91 per cent of urgent cases in 15 days but only processed 50 per cent of those cases in the same timeline last year and given that this is a drastic drop in ensuring that people with the most urgent needs and potentially living in dangerous situations can seek justice and resolution to rental disputes, the Minister of Service Alberta must tell Albertans why he is letting wait times get longer when renters need more support now.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, we know that at this point in time our turnaround times on RTDRS dispute resolutions are a little bit slower than normal. That's understandable given all of the challenges that Albertans have been through in the middle of COVID, but the good news is that we're coming out of that. The good news is that Service Alberta's budget in Budget 2022 continues to financially support the RTDRS. We have increased the RTDRS budget compared to when the NDP was in power, and we are making sure that we will be able to get back on track to ensure that everyone who needs a dispute will have it heard in a timely manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Red Tape Reduction

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government made a commitment to reduce red tape by a third because we knew that unnecessary and redundant red tape was bad for business. I'm just wondering if the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction can give this House an update on her success, our success, in removing red tape in this province. [interjection]

2:30

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. associate minister.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has cut more than 21 per cent of red tape, saving Albertans and Alberta businesses over $1.2 billion to date. Our efforts have been recognized by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, who recently awarded our government with the golden scissors award for Bill 49, the Labour Mobility Act, which makes it easier to recognize out-of-province certifications in regulated occupations, including optometrists, dental assistants, pharmacists, firefighters, veterinarians, social workers, accountants, engineers, and so much more. Incredible work is being done to save Albertans time and money and attract jobs and investment back to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for her efforts. Given that our energy sector is so important to our economy and getting Albertans back to work and given that the NDP, during their time, strangled our energy industry, can the minister outline relief red tape efforts for our energy sector and her success in that area?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Commingled well abandonments have been enabled, meaning that only one approval is needed to abandon multiple produced pools at the same time, saving industry $584 million and speeding up reclamation. Switching from CCIR to TIER has saved industry 450 workdays and over $330 million. We established a competitive royalty rate for helium, helping to attract investment and create jobs, and the Alberta Utilities Commission is able to approve certain natural gas fired power plants in as little as 12 days.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that red tape is not just limited to our economic sector and given that we're about keeping our promises in this government and given that other sectors have had their fair share of red tape through numerous forms, applications, and other requirements, can the minister detail any red tape reduction reforms to other sectors in Alberta that have helped make things better for everyday Albertans?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have set a 28-day timeline for project owners to pay invoices to general contractors and have set a seven-day timeline for contractors to pay subcontractors after receiving payment. We're improving AISH by streamlining and simplifying the steps for accepting and processing applications, including the automatic enrolment of people into seniors' financial assistance programs upon turning age 65. We're also allowing municipalities to establish entertainment districts, which will revitalize communities and support tourism.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While this government continues to brag about their budget and make laughable claims that they're creating an affordable advantage, the reality is that they're leaving Albertans behind, like my constituents in Edmonton-Manning. For months I've been getting messages from my constituents who are struggling to cope with these skyrocketing costs. Yuri wrote to me about his utility bill that doubled to more than $600 last month. What does the minister of economic development have to say to Yuri, whose life is unaffordable because of this terrible government?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, right now we have, around the world, a geopolitical crisis that's happening. The cost of living is going up because commodity prices are going up due to a conflict in Europe where Russia has invaded Ukraine. But the NDP continue to take advantage of crisis after crisis after crisis. When you take a look at how they handled the pandemic, there wasn't a day that went by when they didn't try and exploit an emergency. Right now we're dealing with a geopolitical situation. Alberta has the resources the world needs. We have to communicate effectively with the world about that situation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that only months ago the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity stood in this House and bragged about how the government wasn't going to do anything to help Albertans with their skyrocketing utility costs and given that Robert wrote to me about how his bills have climbed to over $600 each month for his family of three and that this government is only offering a measly $50, which means he will still owe $550 when it used to be $250, can the minister clarify if the plan is still to do nothing to support families? Is that really what the associate minister meant?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I can say that in our province's history there was once an NDP MLA that told the truth. Now, I don't know who it was, and I don't know when it was, but I know it wasn't anybody over there. I would encourage the members opposite that when they find Albertans struggling with the high cost of utilities, put the cameras down, refer them to the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Put Albertans first. That's what we're doing on this side of the House.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: I know that the associate minister likes to be as creative as possible, but I can tell him that that was beyond the point of creativity and into the point of unparliamentary language, for which he'll apologize and withdraw.

Mr. Nally: I retract and apologize.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that while this government is hammering families with their unaffordability agenda, they're also hurting local businesses and given that Janelle, who owns a farm in my riding of Edmonton-Manning, is not eligible for the agricultural rates, meaning that this government's do-nothing approach to utilities is actually putting her livelihood at risk, and given that even if she did qualify for the fake natural gas rebate and a cheque for $50, it's not going to help her farm, will someone, anyone on that side of the House stand up, apologize to my constituents, and promise to do better?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Economic Development has risen.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so glad to be talking about electricity. I'm so glad to be talking about rural Alberta. I've been taking phone calls on electricity in rural Alberta every day that I've been elected, and so did the person that sat here before me when they were in government. It is punitive, the carbon tax that they brought in, that their friend in Ottawa has put on us. It's punitive to agriculture. It's punitive to rural Alberta. If they want to do one thing good for rural Alberta, they should join us, ask to repeal the carbon tax. It makes everything more expensive. It accelerated the coal phase-out. It's wrecked our electricity system. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, it's another day and yet another reason why Albertans can't trust the Premier and his UCP government. Last year the Premier ducked responsibility for public health decisions and said, quote, these decisions are better taken locally. In fact, he encouraged municipalities to implement their own public health measures due to the diverse needs across the province. Now the UCP government is contradicting themselves and taking the decision-making power away from municipalities through their changes to the Municipal Government Act. To the minister: why the flip-flop?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, COVID has been going on for two years, and we just heard the NDP admit that they haven't learned a thing in the last year and a half. On this side of the House we have, and consequently new information leads to new ideas. The fact is that there wasn't 90 per cent of people vaccinated a year and a half ago, there wasn't 65 per cent of people with two vaccinations a year and a half ago. This is ending. The only people I know unhappy that COVID might be ending are the folks across the aisle. The rest of Alberta can't wait. Get onboard, folks.

Member Ceci: Given that these powers currently exist under municipal authority but the Premier is now saying that he will directly target them for his own political reasons in an attempt to save his own skin at his leadership review and given that this government claims it's a grassroots party and that this Premier even signed a grassroots guarantee but now he's launching a direct attack on local democracy and the wishes of Albertans and given that these decisions should be made at the local level between democratically elected leaders and their voters, why is this government imposing a top-down governance style and usurping local democracies?

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, there's so much to say to knock that down. We're all anxious to do it. It is so easy. The fact is that we are doing what Albertans want. Even in the city of Edmonton 68 per cent of the citizens of Edmonton don't want a mask bylaw. Council was told that. It's us that are onside with the people of Edmonton. We wish the NDP would get onside with them. They've elected NDP people, and they don't listen to the people of Edmonton. They should come over here because we do. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Member Ceci: Given that this government has repeatedly shown disdain for municipalities, their democratically elected leaders, the voters who elected them – and, in fact, the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland recently described municipalities as, quote, the children of the province and said that it's time for someone to get spanked – and given that this is the same government that constantly warns of federal government overreach but is now doing the exact same thing they accused Justin Trudeau of doing, why does this government constantly contradict itself at every step, providing further proof that Albertans just can't trust them?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the hon. member that in estimates couldn't come up with a Municipal Affairs question five times in a row, after formerly being the Finance minister. We do listen to municipalities. I'm going to blow my horn here, and I might regret this, but in fact, Mr. Speaker, I was the one called talented and lovely by the municipal leaders this morning. I was the one called their BFF several times in the bear-pit session. Now, I am far from perfect, but I can assure you that we listen to municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Capital Plan

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Schools are essential parts of our communities, and they're an influencing factor in attracting and retaining families and businesses. The Foothills composite high school has recently been modernized but unfortunately was not expanded and is facing capacity pressures. Alberta Education considers a good capacity for a school to be between 80 to 85 per cent. Okotoks composite high school is currently at 102 per cent. To the Minister of Education: what is the plan for building new schools and addressing pressures for smaller rural communities? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Member LaGrange: Thank you to the hon. member for that question. Mr. Speaker, under Budget 2022 we are investing $2 billion over the next three years to maintain and enhance existing schools, continuing work on the 51 previously announced projects, and to support building 15 new school projects. We understand that schools are community hubs in rural communities in particular and that they are facing growth pressures, which is why nine out of the 15 school projects were announced in rural Alberta, including Camrose, Raymond, Milk River, Evansburg, Acme, Bow River, Manning, Penhold, and Valleyview. We continue to recognize the need for new school projects.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you to the minister for that answer. Given that prior to Alberta Education approving a new school, Alberta school boards and municipalities invest substantial amounts of money to run services to a location to qualify for a new school and given that the Minister of Infrastructure released a 20-year capital plan outlining the importance of a high-performing education system and given that providing details within that plan could provide more predictability for planning, to the Minister of Infrastructure: can you provide details on how your capital plan will be utilized in decision-making for future projects?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just last week we announced 15 new school projects right across the province, and there are 66 schools in planning, design, tender, or construction, and 22 of these schools will be completed in 2022. As the member pointed out, continuing to build world-class schools is a major component of the 2022 strategic capital plan. We are looking at creating solutions to address the issues raised about allocating lands. I know that my hon. colleague will continue to advocate strongly . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Minister, for that answer. Given that my constituency, much like many others, continues to grow each year and given that an essential piece to economic recovery is improving capacity in our infrastructure such as schools, water pipelines, and roads and given that the Alberta government just announced the 2022-23 fiscal budget, which allocates $6.7 billion in capital spending over the next three years, to the Minister of Infrastructure: what assurances can you provide to communities like Highwood and constituents that investments will keep up with the community's rate of growth?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I am proud that Alberta Infrastructure will be spending $4.8 billion over the next three years to build vital public works projects. Calgary and Edmonton will receive about a billion dollars each, but $1.3 billion will go to other areas. Another billion and a half will go to capital maintenance and renewal all across the province. The Infrastructure Accountability Act provides the framework by which capital projects are evaluated. We're not making political decisions, but we are making sure that every region gets their fair share of funding, including NDP ridings.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to rise and advise the Assembly that pursuant to Government Motion 7 there shall be no evening sitting tonight.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Bill 3 Special Days Act

Mr. Orr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this very special day. I request leave to introduce Bill 3, the Special Days Act. I have the copy here.

Throughout the year Alberta's government recognizes many dates that hold significance for the people of this province, whether it's a celebration of heritage and history such as Black History Month or currently Francophonie Month or a call to take action on important social issues such as Sexual Violence Awareness Month. These dates all help us build a better province.

Mr. Speaker, there are several ways that Alberta's government currently acknowledges special days, weeks, and months. Most commonly, currently, we use proclamations or declarations to recognize their significance and share them with Albertans. However, neither of these methods have any legal protection, and also they're not easily tracked, leading to confusion and repeat requests and people not sure of what's going on. If passed, Bill 3, the Special Days Act, would be a housekeeping and good order and governance bill that would introduce a simple solution and help us more effectively recognize these special days. It would give ministers the authority to issue ministerial declarations through ministerial . . .

Speaker's Ruling First Reading of Bills

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member and the Minister of Culture as I know he hasn't had the opportunity to introduce many pieces of legislation, but first reading of a bill isn't a debatable reading. It seems to me like there's significant and perhaps very good content, but the purpose of first reading is to introduce the bill to the Assembly. The Assembly can then go on, and you can make as many additional comments as you like in further readings. So I just provide some caution. I know that we've seen this happening a little bit more in recent days, that ministers are using the opportunity to debate the bill at first reading. It's not the purpose, so I encourage the member to get to the presentation of it as quickly as possible.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not intending to debate, just give a brief summary so that members understand what the bill is being tabled.

Anyway, it would just give ministers the authority to issue ministerial declarations through ministerial orders. Using mechanisms to recognize special days in Alberta will reduce our red tape and standardize the future requests for approach. All ministerial declarations will be tracked on a central web page, helping to raise awareness and designating a place where people can find the details. It's a straightforward change that will not affect how Albertans submit requests; however, it will help draw greater attention to these causes, cultures, and milestones that these dates represent.

I look forward to discussing the bill in more detail in the Legislature. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this special moment.

The Speaker: My pleasure. I'm certain that a brief summary can be done in less than a minute.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has a tabling.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite copies of a postcard that was created by Moms Stop the Harm in response to the drug poisoning emergency in our province, advocating for safe supply, supervised consumption sites, and harm reduction.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'm pleased to rise and table the requisite number of copies of five separate documents that I mentioned in estimates this morning so that everyone can have a look at them. The first is a chart from the choice in education survey in 2020 outlining the income of respondents in the survey by educational choice.

The second is a chart that is available on the Alberta Education website outlining projected and funded head counts of school divisions. It shows that despite overprojections due to COVID, boards have continued to be funded based on a higher student number than actually attending.

The third is a chart outlining student enrolment growth from 2007 to 2022.

The fourth is a table from the fiscal plan, which shows the projected increase in educational staffing for the '22-23 school year.

The fifth I look forward to speaking more about this afternoon in estimates. It outlines project approval for the 2015 to 2018 time period. During this period the previous government approved between 17 and 18 projects per year.

I would suggest that all members have a viewing of these documents. Thank you so much.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. the Associate Minister of Status of Women has a tabling.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By your permission I wish to table the requisite copies of the 2019 Alberta Labour Force Profiles showing that, in fact, in 2019, when the NDP left government, the participation for women in the labour force in Alberta was 66 per cent and not 76 per cent.

The Speaker: Hon. members, points of order. At 2:04 the hon. the Deputy Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives Addressing Questions through the Chair

Mr. Schow: Indeed, I did, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and bring this point of order to the attention of the Chamber under Standing Order 23 (h), (i), and (j). At the time that you had mentioned, the Member for Edmonton-City Centre was speaking, asking a question to the Minister of Health. At that time he insinuated – I shouldn't say that. He outright said that members of the UCP were cheering on the blockaders down at the border that had cost money to the Alberta economy. Now, I find that comment, first, to be misleading, but, more importantly, he specifically pointed to the hon. Member for Taber-Warner, immediately to his right. While you cannot do things directly, you also can't do those things indirectly.

I would first say that that was a point of order because the language he used was certainly imputing false motives against another member, and it was language that was likely to create disorder. Second to this point is that you did mention to all members of the Chamber that pointing is not something that we should be doing going forward. I respect that direction. Clearly, the Member for Edmonton-City Centre does not. So I would ask that that member retract the comments suggesting that the Member for Taber-Warner was in fact cheering on when he was down there listening to his constituents, which is his job and duly elected to do so.

The Speaker: The opposition House leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is not a point of order but a matter of debate. Certainly, it is a matter of public record that members of the UCP did cheer on and support the blockade, the same blockade that caused almost a billion dollars of damage and included people conspiring to murder police officers. This government caucus loves to use similar language to accuse the NDP – they delight in it, actually – of supporting various groups. We hear it constantly in this Chamber. In this case I would suggest that we are hearing some well-deserved embarrassment rather than a point of order. I believe this is a matter of debate.

To the Deputy Government House Leader's secondary point, I would simply note that your caution around pointing was delivered well after the Member for Edmonton-City Centre spoke. I know all members of this House will be thinking and reflecting on your caution and trying not to point going forward.

I do think this is a matter of debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you for your interjections. I agree. This is a matter of debate and not a point of order.

With respect to the pointing, listen, I'm not making an outright ban on something. I'm just suggesting that it is generally less helpful than more helpful, and if members can keep it in mind, we'll all be better served.

I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) and the 2022-23 main estimates schedule the Assembly will stand adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Education in the Rocky Mountain Room, and the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Jobs, Economy and Innovation in the Grassland Room.

Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Labour and Immigration in the Grassland Room, and the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the main estimates for the Ministry of Community and Social Services in the Rocky Mountain Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:55 p.m.]

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 10, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of God Save the Queen by Ms Brooklyn Elhard. I would invite you to participate at your choosing.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the Queen!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my great pleasure to introduce a number of guests to you today. Seated in the members' gallery today is Elizabeth Delos Trinos, the constituency assistant for the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West. Today, I might add, is a very special day for her and her family as today they became Canadian citizens, and I couldn't be happier for them.

Since we're all celebrating happy days together, seated in the Speaker's gallery is Emma Hopper. Emma works for the United Conservative Party caucus, and it is her birthday today.

Equally as important, and I'm unsure if it's their birthday or any other wonderful day in their lives today other than being here, seated in the galleries are Darrick Graff, president of the Fort Saskatchewan firefighters association, and Glen Rae, president of the Spruce Grove firefighters. They are guests of the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Presumptive WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, we may not agree on much in this Chamber, but I know that all members of this Assembly can agree that incredible bravery is shown by the men and women across our province who choose to fight fires. While doing their job, firefighters are routinely exposed to burning chemicals and other toxins. In just a typical residential structure fire there can be over 265 known carcinogens. Because of these exposures, cancer is the number one cause of firefighter line-of-duty deaths.

I was proud to be part of the NDP government that updated the list of cancers that are presumed to be job related so that firefighters could be sure to get the support they need. With that update, Alberta had the most comprehensive coverage in Canada based on the science we had at the time. Since then several more cancers have been linked to the profession, and jurisdictions like Yukon and Manitoba have extended protections beyond what we have here in Alberta.

Representatives of the Spruce Grove and Fort Saskatchewan firefighters are here with us today as part of a new lobby by the Alberta Fire Fighters Association to see improvements and expansion of presumptive cancer coverage for firefighters in Alberta. I want to thank them for their work. One of my immediate family members is a firefighter, one with a young family, and I'm extremely grateful for the advocacy work happening today.

Those who've heard me talk in this place a time or two, both when I was the labour minister and now as the opposition critic for labour, know that a safe and healthy workplace is incredibly important to me. Every worker deserves to come home safely at the end of their day. When injuries happen or occupational diseases develop because of their job, workers should get the help they need to recover and the support of our workers' compensation system.

I urge the government to update the cancer supports for Alberta firefighters by adding thyroid, pancreatic, larynx, penile, mesothelioma, and soft-tissue sarcoma to the list of presumptive cancers and to work towards improving data collection for the firefighting occupation.

I hope all members will meet with the firefighters. On behalf of this Assembly, thank you to Alberta's firefighters.

Federal Carbon Pricing

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, we all know that Canada is facing a serious inflation problem of a kind we have not seen in decades. Thanks to the inflationary money-printing policies of the federal government, rising energy prices, and increased costs for housing, it's now tougher for Canadians to make ends meet. What's worse is that at a time when Canadians and Albertans actually need relief, the federal government is once again making life more expensive. Every Albertan who receives a paycheck should be aware that Ottawa is taking a bigger share of their earnings with the 2022 CPP payroll tax hike. The Trudeau government had the opportunity to take advice from Alberta and others to cancel this tax hike, but they chose otherwise.

Now with April 1 approaching, the Trudeau Liberals are about to spring another monumental tax hike on Albertans and all Canadians. This is no April Fool's joke. On April 1 the Trudeau carbon tax is set to go up again, raising the cost of home heating, gassing up, fuelling up, further driving up the cost of groceries and every product that is transported to store shelves. The cost of fuel and heating is already rising due to global instability and demand, but the Trudeau government is still intent on sticking their hands further into the pockets of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that Alberta's government is standing with everyday Albertans and calling on the Trudeau government to stop the carbon tax hike. I'm standing here wondering if the folks across the aisle might have the courage to do the same. Will the NDP finally stand and admit that their carbon tax was so wrong for Albertans? Will they apologize for driving up the cost of energy? Albertans are watching. Now is the time. Instead of the NDP pretending they care about inflation, they need to admit their hypocrisy, put the interests of Albertans first, and call on their close friend Trudeau to stop the tax hikes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ukraine

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ukrainian people know the meaning of turmoil. They've lived it for centuries. When Putin and his communist, socialist regime unleashed to attack Ukraine, he underestimated the sheer grit of the Ukrainian people. He has the bigger, more powerful military, but he is grossly miscalculating Ukraine and its will to protect its sovereignty and democracy. Ukrainians are tenacious underdogs, fighters, and survivors.

I am concerned about the humanitarian crisis unfolding before our eyes. Homes are being bombed, and hungry, desperate people are fleeing for their lives. Yesterday heavy fighting in Mariupol forced a humanitarian convoy to turn around. Putin's army attacked a maternity and children's hospital in Mariupol, killing innocent people. Sick children, women in labour were amongst the injured and killed. I have one question. How does the Putin regime see these women and children as a threat? I think about Ukrainian fathers and sons at war worrying about their families. Are they okay? Are they safe? Where are they? Do they have food? It sends chills down my spine.

Colleagues, we have a humanitarian crisis. The Ukrainian people have not only lost their homes; they've lost their cities. They've lost their families. People are breaking into stores in search of food, melting snow for water, and hiding in their basements without heat and electricity. Ukraine is living in survival mode.

Mr. Speaker, in the past two weeks 2.3 million people have left Ukraine. Many people, groups, and governments are stepping up, including ours. I'm proud that our Premier and government see the humanitarian need in Ukraine and are providing $11 million in humanitarian aid, $350,000 for local organizations involved in the aid programs. This will help provide much-needed initial aid for the people of Ukraine.

Mr. Speaker, Ukraine will continue to stand strong against the tyranny of Putin. Ukrainians are strong, resilient, and will continue to fight for freedom. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

1:40 Personal Income Tax Deindexation

Mr. Nielsen: This year the government will take $1 billion in higher income taxes from Alberta families. While the Premier and Finance minister try to tell Albertans that they are not, the facts are, sadly, not on their side. Using deindexation of the income tax bracket, this government has raised everyone's income taxes through a strategy known as bracket creep. Now, many of you watching at home may be asking: what is bracket creep? A very good question, for which I will quote an expert on the subject, an expert who for years railed against this sneaky, billion-dollar pickpocketing of taxpayers, who had strong words to describe bracket creep and the impact it has on Albertans, powerful words that I will read today.

Bracket creep is a hidden tax grab, an enormous, insidious tax grab, an insidious tax on inflation that will mean Albertans pay more. It is a destructive tax on inflation, a pernicious, invidious tax. It is the heartless and insidious bracket creep that taxes the poor and forces low-income people onto the tax rolls. It is a tax grab that taxes people without their knowing.

This once principled individual fought against bracket creep for nearly a decade. He accused those supporting it of possessing a twisted logic and called them bracket creeps. One only wonders what harsh words this individual would have for the Premier and Finance minister, who have become the biggest defenders of bracket creep and who lack the courage to even admit it. I have to imagine that the career opponent of bracket creep would be angry,

Mr. Speaker. He would be disappointed. He would be shocked, sickened, confused to see this. The individual I'm quoting today knows that what I'm saying about bracket creep is the truth. Each and every quote I said today came straight from the mouth of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Through you to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: what happened to you?

The Speaker: While I do provide the widest possible leniency inside a member's statement, I did provide some significant comments just yesterday or the day before around referring to an individual as pickpocketing. I'm pretty sure that's what happened in the member's statement, and I'm sure it won't happen again.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After eight long years Alberta's budget is balanced. With our balance sheet back in the black, the lowest taxes in Canada, and essentially all restrictions now lifted, Alberta is truly starting to feel like Alberta again. We have the fastest growing economy in the nation, and our people are going back to work, with more than 130,000 net new jobs created in the past year alone. We are also seeing major private-sector investment in every corner of the province that would not be possible without this economic turnaround.

Budget 2022 is just more great news for Alberta's economic recovery, with significant investments in health care capacity, education, infrastructure, diversification, continuing care, and more. Albertans are celebrating this well-earned good news across the province. "This is one incredible budget," said Calgary Herald columnist Don Braid. "Boom, not gloom," said Edmonton Journal columnist David Staples. Alberta's Good News Budget Shows UCP Policies Work and NDP's Were a Disaster, said Calgary Herald columnist Corbella.

It's true that the only Albertans who aren't happy about this budget are the members across the aisle. The NDP is downright furious and chalking our balanced budget up to just high oil prices, but – get this, Mr. Speaker – if oil prices were exactly where they were today, those reckless members would've posted a disastrous $6 billion deficit this year due to their out-of-control and reckless spending. We got here because our government established and followed a new set of fiscal anchors to get us back to balance. This included bringing our per capita spending in line with other provinces and keeping our net debt-to-GDP ratio low. And get this: we cut taxes, and we're bringing in more tax revenue than the previous government.

This makes the NDP mad, Mr. Speaker. They're mad that we balanced the budget through fiscal responsibility and restraint. They're mad that Albertans are going back to work and earning more money. Well, the NDP can just stay mad, because Alberta is moving forward. Our economic recovery is under way, and our greatest days are just ahead.

Thank you.

Police Services

Mr. Dach: Alberta municipal leaders have voted overwhelmingly that they do not trust the Premier and his UCP government to manage a provincial police force. Who is to blame them? Let's just look at their track record and see. The Premier made it clear what he thinks about independent investigations when he fired the Election Commissioner investigating members of the UCP caucus and the UCP leadership race, the same UCP leadership race that had been under a multiyear RCMP investigation for voter fraud, an investigation that saw multiple ministers, MLAs, and staff interviewed by the RCMP. Not a great start, Mr. Speaker.

The previous Justice minister felt that it was okay to directly call a police chief to discuss a $300 distracted driving ticket. This government's own report found that he tried to interfere with the administration of justice and, as a result, was no longer able to remain Justice minister and was shuffled to that labour portfolio. Instead of losing his ministerial position and being relegated to the backbenches, as one would expect in a parliamentary democracy, this minister still gets to sit in the front row and collect his $181,000 salary.

Another prime example of how poorly this government handles justice and enforcement issues was the Coutts blockade. Our province was losing over $44 million a day in economic revenue, crippling our supply lines and stopping our own products from getting to market, just so this government's MLAs could appease the far-right base of the UCP.

On top of the UCP's failures, the provincial police would cost hundreds of millions of dollars more annually to Albertans. This will be on top of the millions already downloaded onto municipalities in previous budgets, something this government has been refusing to acknowledge.

Albertans can't trust this plan, because they cannot trust this government, who have shown throughout their time in office that they are more focused on themselves than serving the people who elected them. Albertans need a government that respects the rule of law and will fight for justice. They will get it in 2023 from the NDP.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in this Assembly to highlight the importance of the balanced budget presented last month. Not only has this government's fiscal prudence set Alberta on a course for a bright future, but with this balanced budget the government has been able to fund the Alberta at work initiative, which is aimed at strengthening Alberta's workforce.

In Budget 2022 the Alberta government highlighted the need to create more opportunities to enter, participate, and thrive within the workforce to underrepresented groups such as women, Indigenous people, and individuals who belong to visible minority groups. Through the Alberta at work initiative this government will invest $600 million over a span of three years to assist people from all walks of life to enter and to succeed in our workforce.

Mr. Speaker, this new investment is particularly important to the people of Calgary-Cross as the communities encapsulated within this great constituency represent some of the most ethnically diverse communities in Alberta. The announcement of the Alberta at work initiative is welcome news and will ensure that Albertans are given the life opportunities they need to thrive and to prosper in our great province.

All Albertans should have the same opportunity to engage in the workforce no matter their race, religion, gender, or background. Creating more space for underrepresented members of our society to engage in the workforce is a key step in ensuring that Alberta is an economic workhorse that allows people from all over the world to come to this province and prosper. Alberta has always been a beacon of hope for so many people around the world looking for a better life. With this investment in the Alberta at work initiative, Albertans can rest assured that this government has their back.

Thank you.

Ms Rosin: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's finances are back in the black with a $500 million surplus. Now, for the past two years we had heard the NDP cry that our cuts were too deep and our tax policies too radical, that reduced taxes would leave a gaping hole in the budget that could never possibly be recovered, yet two years later, when our government – surprise – delivered a balanced budget with a surplus, what did the NDP have to say about it? That it happened by accident.

Well, Mr. Speaker, judging by the NDP's very own claims over the past two years, even they know that this budget wasn't balanced by accident. Yes, even through the toughest of economic times our government was careful to bring Alberta's spending trajectory down, to keep our debt-to-GDP ratio below 30 per cent. We even brought our per capita spending to rival that of other provinces, and we forecasted the budget safely upon $70-per-barrel WTI, despite prices now peaking above $120 per barrel, just to be safe and ensure we weren't hedging Alberta's money.

Despite lowering the corporate tax rate to one of the lowest in North America, which the NDP swore would forfeit $4.7 billion of revenue, we brought in $5.1 billion of revenue because business and jobs from all over the world have flooded to our province because of this government's pro-business policies.

Even the CBC recognize that Alberta's financial position was no accident. To quote them: the simple reality is that the Premier can say that his government's hard work to control spending is what balanced the budget. Mr. Speaker, had fiscal prudence not been exercised, even with today's high oil prices this government would have run a $6 billion deficit.

Albertans know the importance of fiscal responsibility. They know that every dollar a government spends beyond budget limitations will inevitably be paid back through high inflation, devalued currency, or crippling taxation, and that's why they elected this government on a promise to balance our budget after years of tax-and-spend policies. Now, one year ahead of schedule, we can say: promise made, promise kept.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Question 1 goes to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Content on Ukraine in Educational Curricula

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, this morning I wrote to the Minister of Education asking her to change course on her draft curriculum and to keep Ukraine – the country of Ukraine – in the elementary social studies curriculum. I am a Ukrainian Albertan, and I know full well that the choice to use the country of Ukraine in grade 3 social studies was deliberate. I strongly believe that we need to continue to educate young Albertans about Ukraine as an independent country with a rich, vibrant, and resolute history. To the Premier: will you please commit, right here and right now, to leaving the country of Ukraine in grade 3 social studies?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, of course there will be content on Ukraine throughout the school curriculum. The current draft is a high-level outline. It does not include every specific, every single point of information that would be presented to Alberta students. Ukraine is, of course, an important country to be taught about just in general terms, but it is of particular importance to Alberta, to the settlement of this province, and to its future. I hope we don't end up politicizing what I believe is a nonpartisan consensus in support of the people and the sovereignty of Ukraine.

Ms Hoffman: I appreciate the remarks that the Premier has made in the past about Ukraine and the importance that we make sure that we support Ukraine. One of the best ways the Premier could do that is to right here, right now, today, stand up in this House and say that he will leave the country – the country – of Ukraine in grade 3 social studies. It's been taken out of his draft curriculum that everyone has discredited. Just commit right here, right now. Will the Premier please undo this horrific mistake – I'm going to hope it was just a mistake – and put the country of Ukraine, which is taken out of the elementary school social studies curriculum, back in for grade 3? Yes or no?

Mr. Kenney: I already answered the question, Mr. Speaker. This is a scope and sequence document. It's high level. It doesn't mention all of the content. Of course there will be content on Ukraine, so please take yes for an answer.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has done more to demonstrate concrete solidarity with the people of Ukraine than any province in the country, perhaps any subnational jurisdiction in the world: $5 million to buy nonlethal military equipment, $6 million in emergency humanitarian support. I just met this morning with the president of the Canada-Ukraine Foundation. He said that the supplies that we are funding are already on their way to Kharkiv, to Kiev, and to Odessa.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm giving the Premier a third chance. Absolutely, I have to say as a Ukrainian Albertan that I appreciate his words. I think that one of the most powerful things we can do is make sure that kids have an opportunity to learn about the country Ukraine. Yesterday I had to have a teachable moment to explain why we don't say: the Ukraine. It is a country. It is a nation. That is not its official title. Premier, please help teach elementary children about the history, about the current role, about the country Ukraine, which you have taken out of your draft curriculum. It's wrong.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, nothing has been taken out.

My record on these issues could not be more clear. As the federal multiculturalism minister I provided a $10 million entitlement fund to their endowment – excuse me – to the Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko to teach about the reality of Ukrainian-Canadian history and the internment of Ukrainian Canadians. As Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker, I deployed the Canadian Armed Forces to Operation Unifier to help to train and to modernize the Ukrainian military, an operation that has been extraordinarily successful in preparing Ukrainians for this fight to defend the sovereignty of their country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Corporate Taxation and Investment Attraction

Mr. Bilous: In the last election the Premier promised that his corporate tax handout was the silver bullet for our economy. He said that all we had to do was cut the corporate tax rate, and investment would come flooding back to the province. But even before the pandemic investment fell, the economy shrank, and 50,000 jobs were lost. In other words, it failed. In estimates yesterday the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation said that the corporate tax cut wasn't enough to attract investment and that they had to provide additional incentives to attract them to Alberta. Will the Premier finally admit that his corporate tax handout and his economic plan are a complete failure?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, that's called leading with your chin, because that's the member who claimed that there was a, quote, $4.7 billion corporate tax giveaway. Here's what actually happened. When the NDP raised the business tax rate by 20 per cent, revenues plummeted because investment fled the province. When this government decreased the business tax rate by one-third, guess what's happened? Revenues have increased, $400 million more revenue from our eight-point corporate tax than the 12-point tax generated by the NDP. That's what growth does.

Mr. Bilous: Overall investment according to your own figures is lower than under the NDP government. Despite the UCP's corporate tax cut failing, the Premier doubled down on it and accelerated the cut. He said that companies would be, quote, irresponsible for not moving here. Since then, the number of head offices in Calgary has fallen from 117 to 102. Roughly one-third of office space continues to sit empty, and now capital investment is below levels seen under our government. Will the Premier, much like his jobs minister did yesterday, finally admit that his corporate tax cut has failed to attract the investment he promised Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, after the NDP's job-killing business tax hike, which was informed by their class warfare socialism, guess what happened? We saw a huge flight of businesses and investment and jobs from this province, and they were only bringing in $2.4 billion on the corporate tax. I am pleased to report that, based on the dynamic growth of this economy across all sectors and regions, we are now projecting $4.9 billion in corporate tax revenue.

Mr. Bilous: The fact is that our capital investment in 2018 was almost $6 billion higher than your projections for this year, Premier.

In the last election the Premier promised that his corporate tax handout would lead to tens of thousands of jobs for Albertans, but before the pandemic 50,000 full-time jobs were lost, and in every budget they've revised their job projections downward. They're now expecting 130,000 jobs less. Calgary has the highest unemployment rate among major cities in the country. His plan has failed to produce the results he promised. Does the Premier understand that no one trusts him anymore with our economic future?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, last year Alberta: second-fastest job growth in the country. A hundred and thirty thousand net new jobs created January of this year. Two hundred thousand jobs lost across Canada but 7,000 more jobs created in Alberta. In this budget: a projection of 4.5 per cent employment growth, which is the average of private-sector projections. Best year ever in tech, best year ever in ag, best year ever in film and television, best year ever in oil and gas, best year ever in forestry, best year ever in petrochemicals: this Alberta economy, under our policies, is taking off like a rocket. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West is next.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, under this UCP government costs are rising in every way possible. If there's a way that they can make life less affordable for Albertans, they seem to find a way to make it happen. The Minister of Advanced Education signed off on an unacceptable tuition increase at the University of Alberta. It's also been confirmed that he approved increases at the University of Calgary. Extreme tuition increases like a 32 per cent increase in engineering, 25 per cent for an MBA, 15.7 per cent for tuition for medical students. Why does this Premier – what does he have against students? Why is he allowing such outrageous tuition increases?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we want to ensure that future graduates from Alberta colleges and universities have a strong economy in the long run, and that won't be the case if we burden them with tens of billions of dollars of debt, which is exactly what would happen under the NDP's reckless spending plans. We had to bring control back to Alberta's spending, and, yes, that meant we challenged our universities to operate as efficiently as universities in B.C. and Ontario. They've done that. We congratulate them. But for the NDP to raise cost of living – they're cheering on their ally Justin Trudeau to increase the carbon tax on April 1.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, this Premier needs to know that actions have consequences, and certainly his government just doesn't seem to understand that. Skyrocketing tuition fees have long-term implications. Alberta already falls short of other provinces in offering financial aid. Higher upfront costs create barriers for our students. If students think that the increases are just not worth the money or if they can't afford it, they just won't go to school, or they'll move out of the province. Why would this Premier support extraordinary tuition increases, decreased competitiveness, risk the option of people leaving Alberta, and create long-term disastrous consequences?

Mr. Kenney: In fact, Mr. Speaker, according to StatsCan the average undergraduate tuition in Alberta is $6,500, and in Canada it's $6,700. Those students also pay lower taxes here. They don't pay a sales tax. They have much lower housing costs. Why would somebody pick up and move to Toronto or Vancouver and pay three times the housing costs and pay a sales tax and pay more to heat their homes while the NDP is cheering Justin Trudeau on to increase the cost of energy? When it comes to issues like the cost of living, taking a lesson from the NDP is like taking a lesson from an arsonist in putting out a fire.

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, this government's claim that the tuition in Alberta is lower than the national average simply isn't true. Universities, colleges, and polytechnics are scrambling to keep the lights on. Tuition increases are not the solution. Why would this Premier approve exceptional tuition agreements with our largest universities, download the costs onto the backs of students, who are already suffering as this UCP government makes life unaffordable for Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the reality is this. Had we continued with the NDP's reckless spending track of 4 or 5 per cent annual growth in spending, we would still have a $6 billion deficit and then in two years an $8 billion deficit. Those very same students would have to pay back that debt through their taxes plus interest. Getting our finances under control is essential for the long-term stability and growth prospects of this economy, that will benefit exactly those young Alberta students, who'll be graduating into the most dynamic economy this province has seen in many years.

Bill 4

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, today I spoke to the Alberta Municipalities spring leaders' caucus, and, boy, was there frustration in the room caused by a UCP government that is willing to use the legislative hammer to override the authority of local governments. This isn't about masks or who should be able to make health decisions. This is about a Premier picking yet another fight to shore up his failing leadership, and that's very sad. Why doesn't the Premier withdraw his offensive Bill 4, apologize, and pledge to restore trust with Alberta's elected municipal leaders?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, what he's talking about is the NDP's desire to force Edmontonians against their wishes to continue to wear masks, just like the NDP sent out the NDP labour federation to sue the government to force five-year-olds to wear masks indefinitely, just like their allies at the teachers' union, who threatened to sue us to force kids to wear masks. Then their NDP allies on Edmonton city council tried to force Edmontonians to wear masks. Guess what. Sixty-eight per cent of Edmontonians said no, and we support them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to an Ipsos poll only 20 per cent of Albertans think the Premier should even stay on as Premier. That's how badly he's damaged public trust in this province. Mayors and reeves across Alberta are telling me that they don't trust this government because of endless cost downloading, forced changes to police funding, a massive cut to MSI, and heavy-handed, top-down legislation. Why won't the Premier reverse his approach and start working with municipal leaders as partners?

Mr. Kenney: We have, and we do, Mr. Speaker. You know, I had a number of municipal mayors and councillors come up to me today and say: "You know what? Thank you for giving a positive speech to us without attacking the opposition." They said, "We wish the NDP had done the same." It's always divide and attack. Just like they want to divide Albertans on public health policy, they want their NDP allies on Edmonton city council, who have no competence in public health policy, no jurisdiction in that, to force the city to wear masks while the rest of the province is not. Why doesn't the NDP stand up for the citizens of Edmonton?

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, municipalities are our partners in improving the lives of Albertans and recovering our economy. They create jobs and provide essential public service, yet that's not how many in the UCP caucus see it. The Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland made that clear in an interview. Speaking to the media, he said that municipalities are, quote, children of the province, and sometimes children need to be spanked. That's incredibly disrespectful and wrong-headed. Does the Premier agree with his member, and if he doesn't, why does he keep that member around?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, as we move on, getting our lives back to normal, Albertans want this province to be united, and they want consistency when it comes to public health measures. What the NDP wants is continued division and complexity. They want the NDP hard-core members of Edmonton city council to improvise their own public health policy against the clear wishes of Edmontonians. We are providing a very limited limitation so we can have one clear, consistent, and united provincial approach to this question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Prenatal Benefit for Women Receiving AISH or Income Support

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The prenatal period is the most important period for a child. This time period influences child development through to their formative years. As the overall cost of living continually rises, expectant mothers on income support and AISH are desperately in need of support during this period. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: how will you provide support for vulnerable expectant mothers?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for this great question. Our government understands that women with limited resources often face a number of challenges during pregnancy. Therefore, today the Premier, myself, and the Associate Minister of Status of Women announced a new prenatal benefit for pregnant women on AISH and the income support program. Starting at their second trimester, they will receive $100 additional prenatal benefits until the baby is born. This demonstrates a tangible, common-sense way we're helping Albertans . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the reply. Given that prenatal support is critical for vulnerable women throughout their pregnancy and given that income supports and AISH provide a one-time natal benefit of $256, again to the minister: can you explain how this new prenatal benefit will add to the existing program?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently we have a one-time special diet program for prenatal mothers to use. That is $256. With this new addition of $600 on top of that, $856 will place Alberta as the highest jurisdiction in Canada to provide prenatal benefits for our vulnerable Albertans. We're very proud of this strong stand we're taking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the minister for the response. This benefit enables a mother to purchase the much-needed necessities for her baby. These necessities can be anything from car seats, cribs, strollers, blankets, and diapers. Again to the same minister: in what way will today's announcement of the new natal benefit improve lives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again for the great question here. As we know, when we have the added benefits for expectant mothers, they can use the money for nutritious food, vitamins, cribs and clothing, and safe and healthy infant care. Research has repeatedly shown that good nutrition and a low-stress home environment set the baby up for success. Can you imagine, with this added benefit to expectant mothers, when the baby is born healthy, when they go to school, when they get a job, what a fantastic future it will be?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has the call.

Utility Costs

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is for the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity, and it's quite simple. What is the average monthly rate Albertans are paying for natural gas and electricity right now, and how does it compare to the same time period last year?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, how embarrassing for the members opposite. This is pure NDP economics. The first thing they do is that they cancelled the cheapest form of electricity this province has. Then they ring up the transmission bill to the tune of $7.5 billion, which our economy could not support. They lose a further $1.2 billion on the Balancing Pool, and then they implement the carbon tax, the biggest tax in our province's history. Then they ask why electricity prices are going up. What a shame.

Ms Ganley: Given that the answer is that both electricity and natural gas have nearly doubled in that time period and given that the minister doesn't seem to have a clue and given that he really wants to blame his problems on everyone else – the truth is that the price for solar power is considerably lower than many other sources of generation – and given that the Official Opposition would bring in a real rebate program, can the minister tell families why he thinks it's just the system working when they're paying so much more? This minister has been in charge for three years. How about a little responsibility?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we are a leader in Canada in market-based renewable energy, and we're very proud to embrace that power source. Let me just say that the NDP actually got what they wanted. They brought in the first carbon tax, and everybody knows that the goal of the carbon tax is to increase the price of everything. Well, now they got their wish. It's more expensive to drive your car. It's more expensive to heat your home. Everything is more expensive because of the NDP, and they have the audacity to ask why.

Ms Ganley: Given that the minister should be embarrassed to be spewing that level of misinformation in response to a simple question and given that when I asked him in November whether he would do anything to help Albertans, he proudly rose in this House and said that he planned to do nothing and given that even now, after months of struggle, all he has provided is a fake natural gas rebate and 50 bucks, can this minister explain to families how $50 is going to make a difference when they're drowning in thousands of dollars in debt?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I will set the record straight so the member opposite can stop embarrassing herself. I was asked if I would be interested in bringing in a market price cap, and I said no because consumers can already have a rate cap. All they have to do is call the Utilities Consumer Advocate, and anybody who wants the benefit of a price cap can have one now. Again, you know, we are dealing with high . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The associate minister has a very verbose way of answering questions, and still it's difficult to hear him.

The hon. the associate minister.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm trying to get over my shyness and speak a little louder.

I will say this. We recognize that it was poor policies on behalf of the NDP government, and we are bringing in solutions that will help bring down costs long term, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, it would be laughable if it wasn't so serious, listening to this government talk about the respect they have for postsecondary education. Yesterday we learned that the Minister of Advanced Education was signing off on hikes of 16 to 184 per cent, which will add significant costs to students. These costs will add stress and could even push students to leave Alberta altogether. So rather than talking about how this government values students, would the minister explain why he thinks a student facing a 104 per cent tuition hike will be better off?

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite should know that answer because it was their government that wrote the regulation that permits exceptional tuition increases. Under the regulation – the regulation is very clear – exceptional increases are only allowed if they demonstrate improvements to the quality of the program. All of these programs will see significant quality improvements. The universities will be able to increase work-integrated learning opportunities, hire more faculty, and create a higher quality experience for the students.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that at a time when more mental health supports are needed, this government is doubling the cost to become a counselling therapist, from over $4,000 to over 8 and a half thousand dollars per year, and given that there is currently a massive unmet need for mental health supports and given that one of the biggest obstacles is access to mental health providers, how can the minister justify making it more difficult to become a counsellor, especially when there is so much need?

Mr. Nicolaides: Another one, Mr. Speaker, the member should know the answer to. The details are in the regulation as well, that stipulates that these increases must go directly to improving the quality of education. However, apart from that, in reviewing these increases, it was important for me to ensure that a portion of the revenue was being used to create additional student assistance. In fact, that is the case. All of these increases of revenue are being set aside to ensure that there is additional assistance for students in those programs.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this pandemic has been stressful for students, who have had to make multiple transitions from in-person to online learning amidst other stresses, and given that this government talks a big game about how they support mental health but is limiting access, with higher costs for students and doubling the cost to become a counselling therapist, can the minister explain how making it harder for students to enter the mental health field addresses the mental health crisis they claim to care about? Will he reverse the hike?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, Budget 2022 includes $171 million over three years to create 7,000 additional spaces in our postsecondary system, more spaces than they ever created in our postsecondary environment. As well, it also includes $12 million over three years to expand our existing scholarships. It also includes $15 million over three years in funding to create new bursaries to support low-income students to ensure every Albertan can access postsecondary education. I know the Member for Edmonton-North West thinks that StatsCan is lying, but tuition fees today are lower than the national average.

Tax Policies

Mr. Barnes: In 2018 UCP members voted for a policy to restore Alberta's flat tax, explicitly instructing the UCP not to wait until the budget was balanced, but, in an I-hold-the-pen move, the flat-tax policy was removed from the UCP's platform, saying that the government would further improve Alberta's tax competitiveness once the budget is balanced. Guess what? Energy prices balanced the budget. To the Minister of Finance: why can't you respect the democratically expressed wishes of your own members and make our flat tax government policy?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we're so proud of the budget that our Finance minister brought in, the first balanced budget in years, with a forecast for brighter days ahead for Alberta. This government is focused every single day on attracting jobs, attracting investment into this province. Our economy is more diversified than ever. It's a team approach, and our Finance minister is doing an amazing job at that.

Mr. Barnes: Given that not only has this government failed to make good on the flat-tax promise – it actually nailed Alberta families with a sneaky, backdoor income tax hike – given that deindexing tax brackets from inflation has cost Alberta families hundreds of millions of dollars and that the minister has refused to accept any firm plan to end this bracket creep tax hike, citing that economies need to improve, and given that the minister has hundreds of millions for unbudgeted announcements just two weeks before the leadership review, can the minister tell us when he will stop his sneaky, backdoor taxes on Alberta families?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, as that member knows – and he ran on the platform to make sure we restored balance to Alberta's books. Mission accomplished for Albertans. Our Finance minister has done an amazing job getting that done. On top of that, we have done everything possible to get Albertans back to work, 130,000 jobs created last year, and when the rest of the country lost 200,000 jobs in January, Alberta added 7,000 jobs. Just because that member is bitter that the economy is turning around, it doesn't mean that we're going to lose focus on making sure that we provide jobs for Albertans.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, in estimates this week the minister responded to a question from the opposition, asserting that bracket creep tax increases are a fiscally conservative policy. That must be news to the Premier, who once wrote a column in the Calgary Herald describing bracket creep as a "hidden and regressive tax grab." To the minister: can you please explain to Albertans how a hidden and regressive tax grab is United Conservative fiscal policy?

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:19.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has the lowest taxes in Canada, period. Our Finance minister has done an amazing job balancing the books of Alberta. It's a testament to the entrepreneurs of this province, the fact that Alberta's economy is rebounding more diversified than ever. Agriculture is seeing record years. We've got manufacturing, logistics investments, film and television that's happening in this province, record years, technology and innovation. Alberta's economy is stronger than it's been in a long time, and there are brighter days ahead.

2:20 Edmonton Federal Building Use by Premier's Office

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, there's perhaps no greater evidence of how entitled this government is than their use of the 11th floor of the Edmonton Federal Building, better known as the sky palace. You know the sky palace. It hosted the Premier's illegal white tablecloth budget whisky dinner last year while the rest of us did the responsible thing and just stayed home. I know the Premier has been using the sky palace while getting his office remodeled and renovated. Can the Infrastructure minister tell this House how much money went into moving in and out of the sky palace and whether any renovations were done at all?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, as you see outside of the Leg. Building, there are repairs going on. That's why, when the Premier's office was being impacted by those repairs, we moved them to the Federal Building and brought them back. We only spent less than $8,000 on that move.

Member Loyola: Given that Albertans are struggling with the cost of living and that this government just doesn't care and given that I would hope that everyone in this House would agree that a better use of money would be supporting struggling Alberta families rather than sprucing up this Premier's preferred dining establishment on the 11th floor of the Federal Building so he can host more secret gatherings with his closest allies, can the minister table in this House by the end of the week every single receipt from expenses related to renovations of the sky palace and hosting in the sky palace? If he won't produce them, what is he hiding?

Mr. Panda: I'm not hiding anything, Mr. Speaker. I look the same, with clothes or without clothes. I'm as transparent as possible. I already answered that question at budget estimates. I already shared that information. We haven't spent any extra money in that office to accommodate the Premier. We already said that many times. I'm repeating it again.

Member Loyola: Given the depths that past Conservative Premiers and Infrastructure ministers have gone to to conceal the construction of a luxury apartment in the sky palace and given that the last thing Albertans want to do is wake up and find that while this government won't lift a finger to help them pay their skyrocketing bills, they shoveled money into the sky palace, will the Minister of Infrastructure agree and commit that he will go before a committee reporting to this House to develop a clear set of rules for use of the sky palace moving forward? Mr. Speaker, no one trusts this Premier or anyone in that UCP.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I already answered. If that hon. member wants to tour that office with me, I'll give him a tour of that office, how that office is being used. This member is spreading misinformation. He can come and take a first-hand view of that office. There is nothing to hide about that office. It's available for use for government purposes. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Racism and Hate Crime Prevention

Mr. Deol: It's tragic that Albertans are seeing an increasing number of racist incidents and hate crimes being faced by racialized and minority communities in this province. We have seen racialized Albertans being harassed, subjected to racist and disgusting language, and even assaulted. Every Albertan has a right to live in a province free from racism, hatred, and intolerance, and they deserve a government that will take action to address it. It is concerning to see that not a single dollar in this budget is targeting the elimination of racism in Alberta. My question to the Minister of Justice: why is his budget silent on fighting racism?

Mr. Shandro: Well, first, let me, through you, thank the member for the question. This is a very serious issue that the government takes very seriously. But the premise of the question is false. We actually have. We're over doubling the funding for the Alberta security infrastructure program to $5 million per year to increase safety for Albertans served by facilities that are targeted by hateful violence and vandalism. Unfortunately, his question is incorrect. We have doubled this funding, and we will continue, through my hon. colleague the associate minister of multiculturalism, to work with communities to address their concerns.

Mr. Deol: Given that the UCP government has done nothing more than lip service when it comes to supporting the racialized communities of our province even as racialized communities and community members are calling for action and given that this government has delayed for too long the release of the Anti-Racism Advisory Council recommendations, leaving many Albertans concerned that addressing the growing number of hate crimes in Alberta is not a priority for this government, what message does this Justice minister have for the racialized communities of Alberta, who expected support in this budget and got nothing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Immigration and Multiculturalism.

Mr. Yaseen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the questions. Albertans from all backgrounds deserve the freedom and protection they need to live and worship safely and free from threats of violence and destruction. This government has done so much for newcomers that I'm so proud of, including from credential recognition to the fairness for newcomers office, to grants for funding for places of worship and multiculturalism, and we have $620,000 in our ministry, from the Ministry of Culture, to support our efforts.

Mr. Deol: Given that the growing number of hate crimes was acknowledged in the government's throne speech but then nothing was offered in the budget to help and given that this government has dragged its heels over and over and given that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-City Centre will bring forward legislation this session to establish a process for collecting race-based data, does the Minister of Justice support collecting race-based data, and if he doesn't, can he explain his reasoning for not supporting something critical to combatting racism that is being done in other provinces?

Mr. Shandro: First, let me supplement my hon. colleague's answer and confirm that we also have provided emergency grants of various amounts to be able to show the communities throughout the province that we take these issues very seriously. We support law enforcement and targeted groups to keep vulnerable Albertans safe, Mr. Speaker, and put criminals behind bars. It's important for vulnerable Albertans and those who would target them to see that the government will not tolerate these actions. We're proud to have the support of our compassionate and caring communities behind us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

17th Avenue S.E./Chestermere Boulevard Capacity

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Within my riding, the community of Chestermere, there is a very busy road that extends from Calgary at the east end of 17th Avenue and transitions to the west end of Chestermere Boulevard. In 2019 MacLean's reported that Chestermere was the third-fastest growing community in Canada, and with this population growth came an increase in traffic that now accommodates approximately three times the amount of traffic that the road is built for. To the Minister of Transportation: would the government consider expanding this road to two vehicle lanes in each direction to better accommodate thousands of commuters?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. Before answering the question, I'd like to take the opportunity to speak to all Albertans and everybody in this Chamber and wish them a happy belated International Women's Day. I was pleased to make an announcement a few days ago announcing a $3 million investment to help support women who are seeking job opportunities in the transportation sector.

Now, in answer to this question, Mr. Speaker, 17th Avenue and Chestermere Boulevard is a local road that is a responsibility of both the city of Calgary and the city of Chestermere. Alberta Transportation has not communicated directly with the city on the topic of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the city of Calgary completed their options evaluation input summary on the 17th Avenue S.E. corridor, receiving input from partners, including surrounding landowners, community associations, and government representatives, would the government, then, complete a similar consultation and evaluation with the process and the residents and stakeholders of Chestermere and surrounding area who are deeply affected by the capacity limitations of this road?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, my department is aware of the local road network in and around the city of Chestermere and is in contact with the city and county officials. While Alberta Transportation is responsible for the provincial highway network, local roads and streets are maintained by various counties, municipal districts, towns, and cities. I'm confident that the city of Chestermere will engage with residents on ways to improve Chestermere Boulevard if that's what the city council decides to do. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, if you'd like to have a private conversation, there are lots of places to do that. The Chamber isn't one of them.

The hon. the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I'll have to listen to you in Hansard later.

Given that the need for the increase in capacity of this road is apparent and if the consultation process between stakeholders and government agencies occurs to identify and determine with certainty that this road expansion will require this, would the government be able to give some potential help with the future of this project?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, as the member mentioned earlier, Chestermere is one of the fastest growing communities in Canada, which creates challenges in respect to their commuter networks.

There is no process in place for Alberta Transportation to fund roadwork on 17th Avenue, Chestermere Boulevard because it is a local road. However, the city is able to use its MSI or federal gas tax fund to address upgrades on this road or in any other community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the next question.

Residential School Gravesite Identification

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. "The grief we felt when discovering our stolen children has opened fresh wounds." Mr. Speaker, that's Chief Sydney Halcrow of the Kapawe'no First Nation, who last week announced the discovery of 169 graves at the former St. Bernard's residential school site. They did this on their own dime as they did not want to wait any longer for provincial support. To the minister: what funding is the government of Alberta providing to this First Nation to complete and accelerate their work to confirm and discover the graves of their children?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I know the member has a great heart for the Indigenous people, so I appreciate the question. Actually, we did come up with what we call the community research grant. It was an $8 million grant, and I'm happy to say that we went through all the numbers this morning, and everyone that applied for a grant did get one. Up in the Kapawe'no area they actually went together, four groups as a joint application, and we did give out that grant. They did receive the grant, and I'm so happy that they were able to utilize that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Given that the government announced the $8 million last June to support First Nations who want to lead this work in their communities, I was concerned to hear the chief say that they didn't want to wait for provincial funding and that they chose to proceed on their own. Can the minister explain what is happening? Why are there delays to funding promised to assist in finding the unmarked graves of children in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again for the question. As soon as we heard about the discovery in B.C., we got into action right away. I was so proud of the other ministries that stepped up and helped us put the grant together to aid the communities. The group went together. We put a group together in our ministry and started working on it right away, and I'm happy to say that they were able to meet the demands that all came in. There's also a federal grant process, that I've been in contact with the federal minister about, to aid if there's any additional monies that need to be spent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. Given that this is an extremely sensitive and painful process for Indigenous communities and it must be led by communities and given that the province's role is to ensure that resources are readily available to support the search for remains or the commemoration of the loss, will the minister accept responsibility for the unfortunate delay in releasing funds and commit to doing a better job in the future? There's no doubt we will find more of these burial sites, and the government promised to help. Where is the help?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. You know, our hearts do go out to the communities. I was actually on-site at Kapawe'no when they started the ground-penetrating radar, and I walked the grounds there, so I understand the intergenerational trauma that's happening out there. That's why I was also happy that mental health stepped up and provided a grant as well for mental health assistance with those communities. We were able to provide two grants, and those grants have gotten out the door. Like I say, there is other help available, and we'll walk that walk with those communities, because it is such a sensitive issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Calgary Cancer Centre

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After decades of Conservative announcements, cancelled announcements, and more delays, our government committed to and started the construction of the Calgary cancer centre. That was wonderful news for the people of Calgary to see that project, that had been used as a prop by past governments, finally get under way, but after watching this government fight with and undermine our front-line health care workers for years, now many are still concerned about this government's actual commitment to this critical project. Will the Health minister commit that the Calgary cancer centre will be fully staffed when it opens, and if so, why is it not funded in this budget?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Health budget here has 600 million more dollars this year than last year in terms of budget and another $1.8 billion over the next three years. We are also contributing $3.5 billion into capital, including completing the Calgary cancer centre. I can actually tell the hon. member across the way that our government is committed to be able to staff this, get it up and running, when my hon. colleague the Minister of Infrastructure will be able to turn over the keys to Alberta Health. Then we'll be able to get the staff in there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that I appreciate those words but I do not see in this budget where they are in fact planning for the staffing of the cancer centre and given that most people in health care would tell this government that getting the building ready is only half the battle and given that I know this government has had a troubled relationship with the Calgary centre, given that it possesses members, even ministers, who worked hard at cancelling, moving, or delaying that project in past governments, can the Health minister promise that every single bed will be open and ready to receive patients when the facility opens? Will Albertans have to wait until the NDP are back in government to see this project brought to life?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my previous answer, we are committing to be able to staff – you know, there'll be staff moving within the Foothills campus over to the new Calgary centre. This will be one of the top centres for dealing with cancer patients not only for Calgary but for southern Alberta and across western Canada. I am very much looking forward to the tremendous work being done by my colleague the Minister of Infrastructure in completing this and then turning the keys over to us so that we can actually start ensuring that we have the equipment ready on time, we can train up the staff, and we can get that fully staffed and be able to provide services to Albertans.

Mr. Shepherd: Given that I appreciate the minister's commitment that some existing staff will be moving over but that we're talking about all of the staff that will be needed and given the actions of the Premier, the Finance minister, and the former Minister of Health have meant that front-line health care workers have felt attacked by this government since day one and given that during the pandemic they tore up agreements with doctors, threatened to slash the pay of nurses, created a hostile atmosphere that drove health care workers out of Alberta for friendlier places and given that, again, we are not seeing in this budget specific allocations to fully staff the Calgary cancer centre, is that perhaps because this government has made it so difficult to attract and retain health care workers in our province?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to hiring and ensuring that we have the health care staff providing the health services that Albertans need. Not only have we committed an additional $1.8 billion on the expense line in our budget; we have hired additional staff over the last number of years. AHS has had over 1,700 more RNs compared to February 2020. We have the highest level of RNs that we've ever had in our history. In addition, we continue to attract doctors in the province. That number continues to go up, and we're going to continue to work to make sure we have the staff we need to deliver . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East has a question.

Emergency Medical Services

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A strong, steady, and dependable EMS system is crucial to the Alberta health care system. It's important that every community in Alberta can access emergency medical response in a reasonable time. Over the last couple of years Alberta's EMS system has been under great strain. It is not meeting the needs of Albertans, that they deserve. Given that our government has recognized this challenge and has taken big steps to improve Alberta's EMS system, can the Minister of Health please give us a progress report on improving Alberta's EMS system?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for the question. We've had multiple conversations on this particular issue, particularly in relation to Airdrie. Alberta's EMS workers provide life-saving services to so many people in the province. I want to thank them, through you, for all the tremendous work they've done, particularly through challenging times through COVID and the increase of the call volume. As a government we are acutely aware of the challenge, and that's why we're taking action in Budget 2022 by increasing EMS funding by 12.2 per cent. That's an additional $64 million, an increase that goes directly to adding more ambulances and crews and addressing issues that we have with recruiting and retention of paramedics throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. That's great news.

Given that the lack of ambulances in Airdrie caused one of my constituents, who suffered a pediatric cardiac arrest, to wait over 20 minutes before an ambulance arrived and given that another one of my constituents that had a blood clot move to their lungs, causing them to pass out, had to wait on the floor for 28 minutes before an ambulance arrived and given that these are not the only serious incidents in my constituency, can the minister tell us what they are doing to improve EMS in Airdrie?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker, for the question, and thank you to the member. I have some excellent news for the people of Airdrie. Budget '22 is moving forward with our plan to strengthen EMS. We'll be adding a new ambulance in Airdrie over the next month. We are also adding 10 new ambulances in Calgary in the next two years to ease the pressure on Airdrie's EMS. We also rolled out elements of the metro response plan on February 7, and that is having results. This plan has reduced more than 43 per cent EMS services going to neighbouring centres from Airdrie . . .

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, on behalf of Airdrie. We're very grateful.

Given that health care is the number one issue in Airdrie and that I've heard loud and clear from my constituents about their concern with the lack of treatment spaces, doctors, and standard treatment and given that Airdrie has a population of over 75,000 people and is the fastest growing city in Canada and, further, given that the people of Airdrie deserve to have the same quality of health care as other Albertans, can the minister please tell us what steps are being taken to improve health care at the urgent care facility in Airdrie?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget '22 is about building health capacity. This government is listening to Albertans about the pressures on our health care system, including the advocacy of the hon. member. We're moving forward with the Alberta surgical initiative. We're spending $133 million to build new surgical spaces. We're also spending $100 million to add up to 50 ICU spaces across the province. Alberta's government is moving forward to provide every patient with the surgery they need within the wait times medical experts recommend. We'll continue to look at new ways to expand health care capacity, including in Airdrie.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Federal and Provincial Energy Policies

Mr. Barnes: The war in Ukraine, just a couple of weeks old, is reshaping global economics and politics in real time. As an increasing number of countries around the world move to ban imports of Russian oil, global demand for energy products continues to rise, yet Alberta is set to miss out on what could have been the biggest boom in a generation. Instead, billions will flow to dictators and authoritarian regimes in the Middle East, Africa, and even Venezuela. The world's worst abusers of human rights will be richly rewarded while Alberta workers struggle with unemployment and empty office towers.

Let's face it. Canada's energy policy is an abject failure. Our province is home to some of the largest energy reserves in the world. Our labour force is young and well educated. We develop our resources in a way that meets with the highest safety and environmental standards. Yet even in a world begging for energy, we have very little capacity to increase production and meet this demand. Instead of being part of the solution, we are part of the problem. How did it come to this?

Ottawa's hostility to Alberta energy is well known. Policies like the carbon tax, the no-more-pipelines bill, and the tanker ban have made it impossible for private-sector investors to proceed with major projects. Even now, with the price of oil well over $100, TC Energy has stated again that they will not revive the Keystone XL pipeline. Yet if we're being honest with ourselves, we can't dump a hundred per cent of the blame on Ottawa. For the past three years Alberta's government has offered no consequences for Ottawa's encroachment on provincial jurisdiction. And like the NDP before it, this UCP government has wasted untold millions trying to buy social licence. But what good has it done us, and what good has it done the world around us?

Instead of virtue signalling on issues like net zero or the Paris accord, it's time to get back to what actually works for our province. Albertans don't succeed because of government; we succeed despite government. Alberta can and should be the freest and most prosperous place.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills I request leave to present, in accordance with Standing Order 98(2), two petitions that have been received for private bills: the petition of Shannon Doram, president and CEO of the Calgary Young Men's Christian Association, for the Calgary Young Men's Christian Association Amendment Act, 2022; and the petition of Janet McCready, board chair, and Josh Traptow, general manager of the Calgary Heritage Authority, for the Calgary Heritage Authority Amendment Act, 2022.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At 2:19 the hon. Deputy Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order

Preambles to Supplementary Questions

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief on this point of order. This point of order was called when the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat was speaking, delivering his second supplemental. It is common practice in this Chamber that the second supplemental be in the form of a question and not include a preamble. That member's second supplemental did the complete opposite. It was, in fact, a contravention of the procedures of this place. If we refer to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, if you'd like to, "In 1975, Speaker Jerome stated that a supplementary question arises from the Minister's response and should be put in precise and direct terms without any preamble, prior statement, or argument."

This is a member who has been in the Chamber for a number of years, once affectionately referred to as the dean of caucus. I expect a higher level of understanding of the procedures and practice and ask the member to improve the level of his questions going forward and apologize for contravening the procedure of this place.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not a point of order. Again, I'll end with the question: can you please explain to Albertans how a hidden and regressive tax grab is a fiscally conservative policy? Now, I appreciate why the member may have been confused, but my first sentence ends with "asserting that bracket creep tax increases are a fiscally conservative policy." It's the same statement just carried throughout the 20 seconds; that's all that this question took. Again, like the Premier, who some time ago was dead set against bracket creep and the regressiveness and the unfairness to families – and we had a change on that. In this case the first sentence is actually part of my question. This is a regressive tax on families, and both of my sentences include that statement. Thank you.

The Speaker: I appreciate the submissions. As many members will know, the preamble rule here inside the Assembly is one of the most difficult rules to create clear guidelines on. I know that the Deputy Government House Leader, while I appreciate the reference from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, also knows that the House of Commons has essentially completely departed from such a rule as the preamble rule, and there are fewer and fewer Legislatures who continue to use such a rule although we do here. Perhaps House of Commons Procedure and Practice isn't the best reference to use because they no longer have the rule apply at all.

I would say and I have said that for independent members, who get one question a week and have no other forum, we have applied this rule quite liberally. Perhaps a poor choice of words. We have applied this rule very broadly, and as the member has pointed out, there is clear tying from the first portion of the question to the end of the question. I don't think that this is a point of order. I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Williams moved, seconded by Ms Lovely, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 7: Mr. Neudorf]

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure and honour to serve the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie over the last six, going on now seven years. I grew up in this part of the city, and I feel a special connection to it. I remember as a child having moved into the area, having so many beautiful memories that I continue to carry with me to this day, memories about the people and activities we used to do as children. For example, my friends and I would jump on our bikes and go and explore new areas of Mill Woods that were still under construction. It was like we were going on our own little adventure to unknown lands.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Edmonton-Ellerslie is home to so many different ethnic and community cultural groups. In fact, 50 per cent of the population of Edmonton-Ellerslie is from an ethnically diverse community. Having come to this country, as many of them have, I have so much in common with the people of these communities. Growing up in Edmonton-Ellerslie was an opportunity to learn from people of so many different backgrounds. As I often say in this House, we have a lot more in common than we have different. We all care about our families, putting food on the table, taking care of the ones that we love. Every day the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie get up, go to work, and do what they have to do in order to support their families.

It very much is a working-class neighbourhood. Of course, there are many small-business owners that call Edmonton-Ellerslie home as well, who are working hard to provide for their families. They're doing their very best to not only make sure to put food on their own table but to leave a legacy for their loved ones and especially their children.

I think about all the people that I've interacted with and come to know over the last six years because of the role that I've played. For example, I recall the wonderful volunteers of the Millhurst, Southwood, Horizon, and Ellerslie community leagues. I'll give you the example of Lianne. Lianne lives in Southwood, but she's also a volunteer for the Millhurst Community League. I remember meeting Lianne for the very first time. She had a smile on her face but also that look like: we don't talk politics around here. Because, of course, for the community league it's about building unity through service to community. I guaranteed her that I'm a person that she could trust and that ultimately, no matter what my role or affiliation, I was there to work with her and the rest of the volunteers to build a strong community. What was at first a skeptical look over six years ago has become a kind embrace every time we see each other.

Regularly attending community events over the years has given me that opportunity to be able to connect with the everyday Albertans that are my constituents, to understand the real-life issues, concerns, and problems that they're going through. Many a time has been spent at a community league event, sitting and chatting with a constituent about a problem that they are experiencing in their life. Sometimes it's something very simple, and other times it's something as serious as a death in their family. It's through these conversations that I gain insight into doing my job as the MLA for Edmonton-Ellerslie. To me, making sure that life is affordable is one of the most important aspects when it comes to representing people inside of this Legislature. As I've mentioned so many times, these people are the salt of the earth, hard-working people. They don't earn exorbitant salaries, but they're happy to be contributing to their community and to this province that we all love.

I mentioned the ethnic diversity of Edmonton-Ellerslie, and I can tell you that the many community cultural groups indeed keep me busy with all the events they plan. Even during COVID I had many Zoom community events to attend, celebrating important festivals and days of religious observance, of course, for many different religions. These are also an opportunity to learn.

I remember – and I'm thankful – that very early on someone in my life told me that other people's rules and customs are different. As children you often hear children say: oh, that's weird. But I learned to recognize that these customs are just simply different. Although they weren't my own, I could still understand the meaning and significance, both cultural and religious, behind certain customs, and although they weren't my own, they were just as important and valid for the people who observed them. Again, even though we have a diversity of philosophy, religion, and perspective, we have much more in common than we have different.

These aren't the only opportunities to connect with my constituents. Right next to my office is a charming little neighbourhood pub which is actually called The Pub, and most days, especially during the spring and summer, there's always a group of people outside just hanging out. It provides for me the opportunity to actually connect with them, hear their concerns, field their complaints about certain provincial matters, on which they are very, very informed. Many a summer day I've been leaving my office, closing up for the day, and as I exit the office, one of these constituents will strike up a conversation with me sometimes that will last for hours. I really don't mind because I've always enjoyed listening to people and learning from their perspectives and gaining insight from experiences that they've had in their own lives.

As I said, Madam Speaker, I'm very honoured and privileged to serve the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie, because I get a lot out of it. My father used to tell me that there's a big difference between getting an education and going to school. Now, of course, he and my mother pushed me to go to university but at the same time taught me that getting an education is not just something that happens inside of a classroom. It happens by actually sharing experiences with one another. Early on I learned that we are all students and teachers at the same time. Through all of these conversations that I've had with my constituents on a regular basis, I know that, at the end of the day, what's important for the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie, like most in Alberta, are their families and the ones that they love, making sure that we have a society and an economy that serves the people.

Yes, many of the families that I represent actually work in the petroleum industry. Many are subcontractors, skilled labourers, and some engineers. In conversations with them we can all agree that Alberta needs to diversify if we are to move forward as a province. No matter which door I knock on, everybody agrees that this should be the priority of the government of Alberta. I often hear statements like, "It's a no-brainer" or "I've been saying that for years," and they can't help but wonder why this hasn't been the plan all along, Conservative government after Conservative government.

Now, when we were in government, we created tax credit programs in order to provide an incentive to actually diversify and move Alberta forward. Many of those decisions were reversed when the UCP government came into power, Madam Speaker, and only a year or two later they reimplemented some of them as if they were a creation of their own. Of course, the fact that they would reimplement an Alberta NDP policy decision makes me happy, it makes the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie happy, but what this government is doing is not enough.

A lot of the families in Edmonton-Ellerslie have children going to postsecondary. They're all feeling the crunch of the higher tuition fees. Students in several programs at the University of Alberta, for example, will be facing staggering tuition fee increases this fall after the UCP Minister of Advanced Education signed off on hikes of 16 to 104 per cent higher, as the Member for Edmonton-North West expressed just yesterday in this House. I hear from many of my constituents about how postsecondary is becoming unaffordable. It's absolutely essential that postsecondary education in this province be affordable and accessible to all. I know that my colleagues and I on this side of the House will continue to fight for that, especially for all Alberta families.

Of course, Madam Speaker, this isn't the only increased cost to Albertans. When the UCP government decided to take the cap off insurance, I heard from so many constituents about how their insurance rate was going up, for some as high as 30 per cent. Even during this devastating time of the COVID pandemic, I remember early on hearing from a couple of teachers saying that because of the pandemic they're staying home. Their cars are in their garage. They're not driving that much, maybe to go to the grocery store and back, yet their insurance is skyrocketing. To date this government has done absolutely nothing to alleviate the pain of such a high cost of insurance for the people of Alberta.

Of course, as we heard in the last few weeks, utility bills are just completely out of control. It is the talk of the constituency. I can't tell you the number of e-mails and messages that I've received from constituents because of their utility bill. One lady, a single mom, told me that all of her income goes to pay for rent and electricity and that she has to be very selective when going to the supermarket because life has become unaffordable for her and her daughter. This is completely unacceptable.

I had another lady contact my office just the other day telling me that she's on income support and that she can't pay her bills. She has a child, she has a chronic illness, and she received a notice from EPCOR that her power is going to be shut off in just three days. Now, of course, I'm doing everything in my power along with my staff to make sure that that doesn't happen, but I want you to imagine the stress that this lady is going through when she gets a notice from EPCOR that her power is going to be shut off in three days.

Why does that even have to happen? This is a sign of the failure after failure of this government to provide a strong economy that includes everybody here in Alberta. These are both some of the examples of how life has become so unaffordable for so many. I would argue that the economic disparity here in Alberta continues to grow, and this is an absolute shame. I know for a fact that the Alberta which my constituents want to be a part of is one where everybody has the opportunity and everyone is treated with the dignity and respect that they deserve, where they are the focus of an economy that makes sure that no one is left behind. Unfortunately for the people of Edmonton-Ellerslie and all the people of Alberta, this government is failing to deliver on exactly that.

I want to take an opportunity to address the calls to action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the work that we all need to do in order to create spaces to have a meaningful and genuine dialogue regarding the social injustices of the past and how Indigenous people have been treated. This is something that we cannot continue to ignore, and the government of Alberta should be front and centre in recognizing these injustices and making sure that they don't happen again. But, unfortunately, we have a system that has more Indigenous children in care now than there ever were children in residential schools or picked up by the '60s scoop.

With a group of Edmonton-Ellerslie constituents that actually care about this matter, we're addressing the calls to action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. Last year for Canada Day a group of my constituents decided to do a solidarity walk for all the children whose bodies were being found in mass graves at residential schools across Canada. It started because someone decided to put Canada flags on people's lawns without their consent. Now, as many of you know, southeast Edmonton used to be known as Indian reserve No. 136 of the Papaschase band. Many of the descendants of Papaschase continue to live in the ridings of Edmonton-Ellerslie, Edmonton-Mill Woods, and Edmonton-

Meadows, and it was some of these constituents, these descendants of Papaschase, that organized with other non-Indigenous constituents that same solidarity walk that I was speaking of earlier.

After the event I decided to reach out to the organizers, and what they really wanted to do, both Indigenous and non-Indigenous, was to hold regular opportunities to bring Indigenous ceremony into Edmonton's southwest. We have been meeting for a few months now, and we've had one really successful event to celebrate the winter solstice. Now, when I was helping the group organize the event, one of the objectives was that it was going to be an opportunity for non-Indigenous people to learn about Indigenous ceremonies, but when the actual event was implemented, we found that Indigenous descendants, especially youth, were the ones that ended up coming to the event. They expressed that they didn't have many opportunities to engage in ceremonies and that they were so grateful that they could come to a ceremony that was actually in their area of the city. This is but just one small step.

Many of you may know of the community of Frog Lake and what happened there so many years ago. It is said that one of the warriors, Wandering Spirit, who was hung because of what happened, when asked for his final words decided to sing a love song to his wife. Now, I don't want to be misunderstood. I would never condone hurting, injuring, or killing anyone. What I am trying to point out is that what we have in common is a deep love for the people that surround us, our families and our friends.

Now, that was a very frustrating time for Indigenous people. Some would argue that it continues to be a frustrating time, but all the more reason that we need to work together to make sure that Alberta has an economy that serves everybody so that people don't get to the point of frustration when they feel like they have no hope left.

I want to thank Denise, Camille, Meera, and Alana, who are the main . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that and the words from Edmonton-Ellerslie. I would just like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1

Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act

The Chair: I would like to recognize the hon. Minister of Culture.

Mr. Orr: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, I do have more to say about this. You know what? It is incredible. For most Albertans – I would venture to say everyone in this room – Queen Elizabeth II is the only monarch we have ever known. My goodness, she's been on the throne 70 years. During her reign our province and our country have grown up. We've experienced incredible change and growth. Alberta is a place where tradition is respected and progress is embraced – one of the great things about Alberta – where anyone from anywhere, literally, can succeed with hard work and determination. Alberta's greatness is demonstrated every day by its people who work hard, who capture the beauty and soul of the province through their many creative endeavours, and especially by people who have helped lead this province through hard times and good times, and we've experienced both.

The Queen's platinum jubilee gives us the opportunity to celebrate everything we have achieved together in the past 70 years and to tell the stories that connect everyday Albertans, like Lorna Smith from the village of Alix, to the Royal Family. When I knew her, she was retired there with her husband, but here's the interesting story: Lorna's mother served as the personal secretary to Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother. As a girl Lorna and her mother both had HRH pins, Her Royal Highness pins, that granted them access to actually enter the palace at any time.

When she was about 13 or 14 years old, she tells us, she was invited with her mother to have tea with the Queen Mother in the palace ballroom. I think it was one of those kind of employee recognition kind of moments. One of Lorna's memories about that day was that the Queen Mother came in in a mauve dress and actually served them the tea. Oh. I forgot one piece: they were actually picked up by one of the palace limousines. Very challenging for a 13-year-old girl to be picked up and go to the ballroom. She didn't actually want to go at first, but her mother made her go, and she said later: I'm glad she did.

What I'm getting at here is that the jubilee is grand and many of the events and the pageantry that come along with it, and the people of Alberta are intimately connected with that. It's a part of our life and part of our history in different ways. That's part of the reason we feel we should celebrate this. Across the province you will find that some everyday Albertans have an interesting connection or memory to the Royal Family. I encourage people to share their stories of that.

Most importantly, the Queen's jubilee gives us the chance to thank the Albertans who have made it all possible here in Alberta. The Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act is Alberta's way of honouring Her Majesty's legacy and the Albertans who have embodied her commitment to community service and, indeed, world service.

Under this legislation a series of awards and scholarships will be established to help recognize people who have changed this province for the better. There are two levels of awards. There's the Premier's award. The awardees are selected, one from every high school in Alberta, and they will be recognized for their citizenship and their contribution to the province. The process then would be: out of that pool of recipients – let me get this right here – a review panel will select the recipients of the Queen's platinum jubilee award, which will also have with it a series of financial awards or scholarships. There are two of those. There's the citizenship one, and then there are also two awards and scholarships that will be for the visual and performing arts, which reward youth who have demonstrated outstanding ability in the visual and performing arts. These awards will be $7,000 each, increased from the $5,000 of the previous ones. It's an increase fitting, really, to the recognition of Her Majesty's 70 years of service, but it will also help students pursue their goals and do what they need to do in their education.

These awards will replace the Queen's golden jubilee awards, which were created in 2002. For the past 20 years recipients of the Queen's golden jubilee award have moved on in life. They have become business leaders, talented artists, community builders, contributed immensely to our province and to the building of Alberta. The Alberta Foundation for the Arts will continue to be responsible for selecting the recipients of the Queen's jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts. The others will be, as I mentioned, by a review panel. These Albertans have all represented Alberta well, made their communities proud. The new iterations of the Queen's awards will carry on the tradition of celebrating young people who have a future in this province.

Although it's important to invest in young people, there are so many other Albertans who deserve recognition and achievement and contributions. That is why Bill 1 includes the creation of a medallion, a new one-time Queen's platinum jubilee medallion. The medallion will be awarded to 7,000 Albertans over the course of 2022. The eligibility criteria for this award will be broad so that the medal can recognize a wide range of accomplishments in many areas. For example, this could include people who have been heroes through the pandemic response or who have worked towards reconciliation in their province or who have just been community builders in amazing ways. To streamline the process, nominations will be accepted from nonprofit organizations, elected officials, and representatives from provincial organizations. This will ensure that recipients can be selected and recognized during the jubilee year, and we hope that the first medals will go out on the weekend of June 2 to 5, when we celebrate the platinum jubilee.

The final piece of this legislation is intended to recognize the efforts and impact of members of Alberta's Executive Council. All of us here know how much effort and time and hard work Executive Council members on both sides of the House over the years have put in to serving the people of Alberta. Their contributions since the creation of Alberta have helped build a vibrant and dynamic province for us. Bill 1 would designate all past, present, and future members of Executive Council as honorary members of Executive Council upon their retirement. This is a small gesture when compared to the monumental contributions they have made throughout Alberta's history, and it's a call to them to actually continue with a lifetime of service. Serving on Executive Council is a step, but it calls for a lifetime of service.

In conclusion, Madam Chair, I just want to say that the platinum jubilee recognition act will help celebrate the reign of Her Majesty in the spirit that she has expressed; a spirit of unity, the spirit of working together. More importantly, it will show Albertans how much their contributions and leadership have been valued in this province.

I would like to end, Madam Chair, with a small quote from Chris – oh; I have it here – Chris Robertson. Twenty years ago he wrote of Canada – I think it's most appropriate for this particular time. Chris Robertson wrote that: we have to develop a spirit of pride where we celebrate everything Canadian; let's pay tribute to every great Canadian, glorious Canadian deeds, and Canadian trailblazers, whatever their accomplishments; we need to put humility for our nation in the back seat; we need to shout for joy, celebrating Canada at every turn in life; we need pride that will allow us to steer our ship of Canada safely through the toughest crises of nationhood; I want to live in a country where Canadians get goosebumps every time they see the maple leaf. That's the kind of spirit for Alberta that this act seeks to encourage, and I encourage every member of the House to continue to support it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for outlining some more of the details in regard to Bill 1 here in Committee of the Whole. Yeah, I think that the Official Opposition has generally a positive view of this bill. I think there are places within it by which we can sharpen the focus, I believe, where it needs to be, which is with young people. The 7,000 potential nominees for a platinum jubilee medal: we should think with first consideration to young people because, of course, it's a reflection of what we hope to do, which is invest in the future. People who are going to live longer and serve longer as Albertans, in all ways possible, could of course carry that honour with them for the rest of their lives.

The other element of this, which is the scholarships: again, that's a good reflection of a focus on young people. I think that we just have to make sure we can use the medal part as a recognition for young people first and foremost as well.

Another element of it. I remember, having been in the Legislature longer, that there was a centennial medal during our 100th anniversary of the province, and one element of the government of the day for distributing those centennial medals was to try to make sure we have both a geographic spread of the honours throughout the province and a specific focus on local recognition, people who know those places in each corner of the province and can reach in and give a high-quality, perhaps, nomination and so forth for someone to get that kind of recognition. What the government of the day did with the centennial medals is that they did a lot, a certain amount of those centennial medals, to each of the 87 constituencies in the province for distribution and for nomination.

I mean, a constructive suggestion to the minister and to the government is that if we can have a way to use the natural geographic reach that we have here in the Legislature, with each of us representing 87 areas in the province, we could use that as a template for distribution and, of course, MLAs making nominations to citizens that they know that are doing a great job in each of our constituencies. I know I gave a number of medals out in my constituency, and it was really great. I still see those people today, right? It certainly makes a big impact.

The only other element of this bill, before I just wanted to make a few brief comments, is just, you know, around it being Bill 1. Traditionally, what we see: Bill 1 for each term or each session is sort of a signature piece of legislation that's driving the agenda of the government forward. I mean, while this is all great and certainly it's a worthwhile thing, the issue that I was really hoping was that Bill 1 could talk about affordability, because, of course, Madam Chair, we all know that inflation is almost unprecedented here in the province of Alberta, and it's affecting all of us in the broadest possible way. Certainly, it stems from energy prices, but it was happening even before that as well, with supply issues and things that – I don't know – some people just were not even understanding, that we're still just learning about.

So I think it's incumbent upon all of us to look to address this affordability issue head-on for all of our constituents and for the whole population of Alberta, because, you know, it's hitting hard, and it's hitting fast, and we need to be pre-emptive and not reactive to help people out. The price of gasoline, for example, is going up every single day, right? I was informed by my wife at about 8 o'clock in the morning that she had taken the bus, which I hadn't heard about for an awful long time. She said: "You know what? I wanted to fill up the car, and it was, like, $1.70 a litre, and I just took the bus." I mean, there are ways by which we can deal with that, but lots of people in Alberta can't even take a bus because they live in places that are not served by buses and so forth.

You know, the price of food is really going up fast as well and then all of those other sundry things that people need, essentials for living: electricity, natural gas, the cost of renting an apartment, and so forth. Just everything is going up, so, yeah, I mean, while I do welcome the spirit of this bill and working through to recognize Albertans and young people especially who are making extraordinary contributions to our society, I just wanted to express that as well. Let's not forget what the central purpose of our session is here and how we need to address, first and foremost, number one, the whole affordability issue.

With that, Madam Chair, I will take my seat. Thank you very much.

3:20

The Chair: Wonderful.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to express my support for this significant legislation, Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act. I would like to firstly express my appreciation to the Lieutenant Governor for recommending the same to the Assembly. I applaud the Premier for sponsoring this bill, that will recognize the amazing contribution Albertans have made to this beautiful province.

Madam Chair, before I express my support to this bill, I would like to recognize all the hard efforts and contributions that have been made to ensure that Albertans were protected and supported during the pandemic.

As we mark the 70th year of Her Majesty's sovereignty, the proposed law will honour Albertans who have contributed to the betterment of the province through exceptional volunteerism, public service, and community leadership. Madam Chair, everyone who wants to make a difference would pursue a job in public service. It entails prioritizing the public good over personal gain. Many public employees claim that they choose public service to give back to their communities because they love doing so, making a profession out of meaningful pursuit. Money, status, and power aren't the only factors. Working as a public servant entails putting in long hours for a great cause and being committed to your everyday duties of serving the public.

I as well commemorate Her Majesty for taking time out from her busy schedule to visit, tour our beautiful province back in 1951, 1959, 1990, 1973, and 2005. In 2002 the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act was passed by the Alberta government, commemorating the 50th anniversary of Her Majesty's accession to the throne by establishing special awards and scholarships to recognize Alberta youth who demonstrate excellence in citizenship through leadership, community service, and volunteerism as well, Madam Chair, as exceptional ability in the visual and performing arts.

Her Majesty has governed for longer than any other monarch in British history, and she has earned world-wide love and respect. Her exceptional reign has seen Her Majesty tour the world more than any previous queen. Making several significant trips, the Queen has been an important figurehead for the U.K. and the Commonwealth through times of enormous social change. Known for her sense of duty and devotion to a life of service, Madam Chair, one of the most significant aspects of the Queen's job is public and voluntary service. Her Majesty has ties with approximately 600 charities, military groups, professional bodies, public service organizations as royal patron or president, her outstanding contribution in World War II. These range from well-known world-wide charities to tiny organizations focused on a specific issue or operating solely on a local level. Her Majesty continues to engage in a busy schedule of engagements, including visits to charities and schools, entertaining foreign heads of state, and leading the country in remembrance and joyous events, all of which are supported by other members of the Royal Family.

Madam Chair, Her Majesty has always been supporting and encouraging achievement from all walks of life through an annual program of investitures, in which she bestows honours on members of the public, garden parties, receptions, and other awards given in her name, which allow her to express her gratitude to all those who have contributed to the nation's well-being.

Madam Chair, in recognition of the efforts, Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act, will contain awards, a scholarship, plaque, and a $7,000 award, which is a $2,000 increase over the Queen's golden jubilee awards. It is intended that 10 Albertans will receive this prize or a scholarship each year for a total of $70,000 to commemorate Queen Elizabeth II's reign of 70 years.

The Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act would also make all previous, present, and future Alberta cabinet ministers honorary members of Alberta's Executive Council. This award celebrates the numerous accomplishments made by Alberta Premiers and ministers to our province.

Madam Chair, in Alberta there have been many initiatives and awards awarded to Albertans for their significant contributions in the province such as the Albertan citizenship awards, Alberta northern lights volunteer recognition program, Great Kids award, heritage awards, minister's seniors service award recognition, volunteer recognition awards, and Stars of Alberta volunteer awards. Many of these outstanding awards pay tribute to the unsung heroes that make a difference in communities around the province, from deserving youngsters to adults who have done amazing things while facing adversity, to a person, group, company, or municipality for their work to conserve, preserve, and promote Alberta's history. As well, Alberta recognizes individuals, corporations, and charitable organizations who have a positive impact on the lives of seniors, and the communities should be honoured. These awards honour Alberta volunteers who contribute to the development of recreation in our province and community.

Our government is commemorating the numerous people who have contributed to the well-being of this province. Bill 1 would also assist the next generation in reaching new heights of leadership and instilling a feeling of responsibility and service. Giving back is also an excellent way to get to know your surroundings. Working with others who are likewise concerned about the environment can help expand networking as well as assist you in better understanding the conditions of other community members. Being an effective, empathic citizen requires having a broad, open-minded perspective of the various walks of life that surround you. You will never regret giving your time to help a cause that you are passionate about. It will enhance your life, introduce you to your community, introduce you to people and ideas that will have a good influence on your outlook for the rest of your life. Volunteering in your community allows you to grow as a person and gain a deeper understanding of how you fit in the world.

Madam Chair, volunteerism, public service, and community leadership have all contributed to making Alberta one of the greatest places to live and work. I encourage all members to support this Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act, which will promote and recognize the many people who have given back to this amazing and beautiful province we call our home through awards and scholarship. Again I thank the Lieutenant Governor and Premier for recognizing the amazing contributions made here in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

3:30

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act.

This nation is a young nation as far as its sovereignty is concerned. As a nation we don't have a huge amount of history in comparison to a lot of other nations around the world. But, in fact, our attachment to the monarchy is actually much longer and much deeper than the roots of our Canadian sovereignty. It imbues the whole depth of our Canadian fabric as it predates the creation of this great nation by many centuries.

Canadians, I believe, understand the importance of the monarchy and the role that it has played in the history of our country. The monarchy has united us, and historically it has provided a haven for those who wanted to live under a parliamentary system of democracy. In the 1700s the United Empire Loyalists, some of whom were members of my family, joined with the other colonists that were in British North America to create the colonies of British North America. It was our respect for the monarchy and our support for the parliamentary form of government that spurred the British North American colonies to unite against the Americans in the War of 1812 and even against the Fenian raids prior to 1867.

The monarchy and our parliamentary form of government have provided its people with a strong and a stable and a productive government capable of meeting the needs of its people. Indeed, in 1867, with the passage of the British North America Act, the British colonies of North America peacefully transitioned into what we would call a self-governing colony under the monarchy when we became the Dominion of Canada.

Canada, like a young person who grows into adulthood, slowly evolved into a sovereign state. World War I served as a pivotal moment as our service in World War I proved to both Canadians and to the monarch and to the British Parliament and to the rest of the world that the citizens of Canada were capable and prepared to control not only their domestic affairs but also their foreign affairs.

By 1931, with the passage of the Statute of Westminster, Canada was prepared to make decisions regarding its foreign affairs, so in 1939, when Europe and Britain and indeed the rest of the world was threatened by the expansion of fascism, Canada was prepared to defend its democracy, its monarch, and its historical mother country and indeed the rest of Europe. My grandfather and several great-uncles fought in World War II. One of them died in defence of this nation. Indeed, on VE day in the VE day parade in my mom and dad's small hometown of Shaunavon, Saskatchewan, my mother led the Victory in Europe Day parade, carrying the Union Jack, and the people proudly sang God Save the King.

Canada has continued to evolve, and while we have distanced ourselves from some of the symbols of our colonial past, we have maintained our close alignment with the monarchy. Our present monarch, Queen Elizabeth II, was born in 1926, the first-born child of King George VI. Her Majesty was crowned in Westminster Abbey on June 2, 1953, upon the death of her father, King George VI. In 1953 the Canadian Parliament passed the Royal Style and Titles Act, which formally made Elizabeth the Queen of Canada. It's one of the things that I had to remind my students of when I was a teacher. When we talk about the Queen, we are not talking about the Queen of Great Britain; we're talking about the Queen of Canada.

Like most Canadians, I've never known another monarch. Canada has changed a great deal over my lifetime, and many of the symbols of the monarchy have disappeared. We now have our own flag, and most Canadians today have not learned to sing the words of God Save the Queen in school. The royal insignia is no longer seen on every mailbox across this nation. But the one constant that has remained throughout my life is that of Queen Elizabeth II. She still reigns.

It has in recent years become progressive to question the need for having a monarchy. I will start by saying that I have to admit that I am a monarchist. I'm a monarchist for many reasons. Our entire parliamentary system of democracy is dependent on a monarch. Technically, the power of government is derived from the monarch. The monarchy is above the ebb and the flow of everyday politics. The monarch is the head of state and is, in the sense of party politics, apolitical. The monarch serves the people as the head of state. She is not the head of government. Governments come and governments go. Political parties and issues come and go. The monarch, especially this monarch, has remained: remained as a stabilizing influence, remained above politics, remained to guide and provide advice, remained to remind us of our past and of our history and of who we are, remained to provide us with a symbol of government that can speak to all of us, above the waves and things that will divide us.

It doesn't matter whether you're a Conservative or whether you're a Liberal or whether you're a member of the NDP; Queen Elizabeth, the Queen of Canada, and her representatives, the Governor General or the Lieutenant Governors at a provincial level, are apolitical. They are symbols of unity that help to transcend our differences as Canadians.

Bill 1 not only recognizes the importance of the monarchy in our nation but, significantly, the reign of Queen Elizabeth II. This bill recognizes the truly remarkable reign, the 70-year reign, of Queen Elizabeth II. Her service began long before becoming our monarch. She helped to fight fascism. She helped to guide us and transition us from the end of the British Empire into the vibrant community we are part of called the British Commonwealth of Nations. She has dedicated herself to a life of service. She is a part of over 600 charities, 36 of which are in Canada. For all of my years I have looked forward to the Queen's Christmas message. I, like many Albertans, remember her visit to Edmonton during the Commonwealth Games.

Bill 1 recognizes this long reign, this life of service, the longest reign of any British monarch and of any Canadian monarch. This platinum jubilee recognition bill is going to create several ways of recognizing and celebrating the service of this monarch. The platinum jubilee is a chance to celebrate her legacy and the service that she has given to her people.

Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee awards and scholarships will recognize young Albertans who are leaders in their communities and in the arts. The Queen's platinum jubilee citizenship award and scholarships would include a medallion and a $7,000 prize in appreciation for the contributions of those individuals. The Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act would also designate all former, current, and future Alberta cabinet ministers as honorary members of Alberta's Executive Council. This is to honour and recognize the many contributions that Alberta's premiers and ministers have made to the province. A one-time Queen's platinum jubilee medal has been created to recognize 7,000 worthy and dedicated Albertans throughout 2022. The act establishes three awards and scholarships: the Queen's platinum jubilee citizenship medal, the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of the Queen's platinum jubilee, and the Queen's platinum jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts.

Members of the Legislative Assembly, I would conclude by saying this: the platinum jubilee recognition act is a good bill to bring before this Assembly and to pass. In light of the 70 years of service of Her Majesty, it appears to me to be an appropriate way of recognizing a truly great and memorable monarch and a monarch that is worth recognizing and celebrating. God save the Queen.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 14, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Brooklyn Elhard. I would invite you to join in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Members, please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Commonwealth Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to note that today is the second Monday in March, which means it is Commonwealth Day. Commonwealth Day is a special occasion as it is on this day that we join parliaments from 54 countries comprising 2.5 billion citizens from around the world in celebration of the great institution of the Commonwealth. Commonwealth Day 2022 is especially significant in that it coincides with the platinum jubilee of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II.

Today the Queen of Canada has provided the Commonwealth Day message, 2022, which I have taken the liberty of having placed on members' desks. In it Her Majesty renews her long-standing promise of dedication to service of her people, which, of course, includes Canadians and tens of millions of other Commonwealth residents. The Queen of Canada writes about family of nations continuing to be a point of connection, co-operation, and friendship, a place where citizens can come together to pursue common goals and common good, providing everyone the opportunity to serve and benefit and to draw strength and inspiration from what we share. Her Majesty's words are a timely appeal for unity and co-operation during these difficult times plagued by division and strife. Let us all thank Her Majesty for her inspiring words.

God save our most noble and gracious Queen.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, seated in the Speaker's gallery today is a very dear friend to all here in the Assembly, the hon. Laila Goodridge, MP for Fort McMurray-Cold Lake, accompanied by her husband, Niall, and perhaps more importantly their son Eoghan. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Members, joining us in the galleries this afternoon, I'm pleased to introduce Tina Petrow, a councillor from the city of Airdrie, as a guest of the Member for Airdrie-East.

I'm also very pleased and honoured to have a number of Canadian Armed Forces veterans joining us today. On behalf of all members of the Assembly we thank you for your dedicated service to our country: veterans Shaun Arntsen, Mike Rude, Dave Bona, Bruce Given, along with Dene clan mother Noeline Villebrun. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Grande Prairie has risen.

Prenatal Benefit for Women Receiving AISH or Income Support

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and share some good news. Alberta's government is now enhancing its supports for vulnerable pregnant women on AISH and income support with additional monthly support to promote healthy outcomes for both mother and child. The new prenatal benefit, which pregnant women on AISH and income support can access at the beginning of their second trimester, will provide eligible clients with $100 per month until the baby is born, for a total of $600. This is in addition to the current one-time prenatal benefit of $256 for these expectant mothers at 36 weeks. These benefits will continue and are intended to support new parents with the cost of preparing for their child.

At $856 we now have one of the highest prenatal benefits in the country. As a mother of three myself I wholly support this. Women with limited resources and income often face several additional challenges during pregnancy. This new benefit will provide these mothers with more funds to put towards their health and wellness. Research shows providing early support in a woman's pregnancy can result in healthier pregnancies and better long-term outcomes for both mother and baby. The province's children and young people are Alberta's most valuable resource, Mr. Speaker. When they thrive, this province thrives.

Alberta's government continues to support women's social and economic recovery in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. Women in Alberta are second in the nation with a 60.6 per cent employment rate while unemployment across the province has dropped to its lowest rate since before the pandemic. What does this mean, Mr. Speaker? It means we're well on our way to leading the nation. Alberta's government also successfully negotiated a plan that will see licensed daycare fees drop by an average of 50 per cent for Alberta families. I'm proud to be part of a government, this government, that not only recognizes the importance of supporting Alberta families but is acting on our promises to the province's women and children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Utility Costs

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, did anything stand out in your utility bills this month? For far too many Albertans there was a nasty shock in the mail when they opened their bills: price of car insurance, up; electricity bill, up; gas bill, up. I've been hearing from Albertans around the clock who are faced with these skyrocketing rates and who don't know how they'll pay their bills as well as buy their groceries. The silence of the UCP government members speaks worlds about their position on this crisis they're allowing to grow. While the government members are silent, other Albertans are far from surprised. They are angry. They are scared. They are frustrated. All Albertans are raising their concerns about these increasing prices. Business owners, families, students, single parents: all of them were abandoned, left with little to no answer by their government.

What does the UCP government do to attend to rising utility bills? They blame others for their mistakes. They introduced a rebate program that won't start until next fall and which is triggered at such a high price that no Albertan will qualify, and for those facing a $700 or more utility bill, the UCP is offering a $50 cheque. These Albertans will not pay their bills with 50 bucks and empty promises, Mr. Speaker. These Albertans are facing massive debts if they do not get the support needed to pay these cost increases. Albertan businesses might be forced to shut their doors due to these overwhelming bills. That includes small bus lines serving rural Alberta. The UCP is not providing the solutions that people need. They offer only excuses and half measures. They won't even put a Band-Aid on a gaping wound they've inflicted on Albertan families.

To anyone facing these outrageous bills, the NDP caucus is hearing your concerns. Albertans are looking for leadership they can trust. They are tired of constantly being let down and betrayed by this government, who refuses to help those in need, and while 2023 is still far away, it's coming fast. For those members opposite who want to keep their jobs, they need to start offering solutions instead of silence. Trust takes years to build, a moment to break, and forever to repair.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East is next.

1:40 United States Oil Imports

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering the attacks and invasions that Russia has been imposing on Ukraine, no country in good conscience should be supporting oil from them. As our Premier has stated, "Every barrel of Russian oil sold in the world today is filled with Ukrainian blood."

Mr. Speaker, by putting a stop to the Keystone pipeline, Joe Biden has shown unfair criticism to Canada's natural resources and therefore increased his country's reliance on Russian oil. Not only did this decision backfire and put America in an energy crisis, but it helped fund Russia's invasion and attacks on Ukraine. Now that U.S. President Joe Biden has finally banned all oil imports from Russia, America is in need of more oil supply while Alberta, being the third-largest oil reserve on the planet as well as being right next door to the United States – naturally, we should be the solution to this energy crisis. The U.S. needs to stop trying to import oil from other dictatorships such as Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, and Iran. These countries are not the solution.

After what has just happened, you would think that our national leaders would want to change direction on importing oil from unstable dictator regimes and turn toward more stable and secure options such as Alberta. [A baby cried in the gallery] Alberta oil is reliable and responsibly produced. These other countries – Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, and Iran – are not the safest, certainly not the most reliable resources to be importing oil from. The real question is: why isn't Justin Trudeau calling up U.S. President Joe Biden and making a deal to increase oil production and strengthen energy security in North America? As long as these two leaders keep putting billions of dollars into importing oil from insecure dictatorships, North America is going to continue to struggle with their energy policy.

It is time to stop taking away energy investment from Canada and putting it in the hands of some of the world's worst administrations. Alberta oil is safe. Alberta oil is ethically sourced. Alberta oil, Mr. Speaker, is a solution.

The Speaker: Don't worry, Eoghan. Sometimes the members make me cry, too.

Broadband Strategy

Mr. Carson: Following the last election, the UCP promised to deliver Albertans a broadband strategy. After years of promises they failed to deliver anything of the sort, so we in the NDP released our own broadband strategy last November. Our report was the result of consultations with Albertans, organizations, and Internet providers on how we can connect every single Albertan to high-speed, affordable Internet and build a more resilient and diversified economy. We know how important this is to rural, remote, and Indigenous communities, so we were happy to see the UCP finally release their own broadband strategy earlier this month.

While the UCP's plan borrows a lot of the same ideas from our proposal, it also falls short in several areas. First of all, it relies on the federal government to deliver funding through an application-based system that, by definition, picks winners and losers. In contrast, our plan would deliver funding through a competitive market-based system that guarantees we are getting the most value for taxpayer dollars. Despite hearing throughout consultations that easier and quicker access to infrastructure will be needed to build broadband, there's no mention of that in the UCP's so-called plan.

With the UCP's plan lacking details and ceding control to the federal government, this could lead to even more delays under this government. In fact, the government has made four broadband announcements since last summer but have not yet connected a single house in the process. As a result, we are already seeing delays. Just a few months ago the Service Alberta minister said that Albertans would be connected by '23-24. Now they've already pushed that back to '26-27, Mr. Speaker.

It's time for this government to stop with the self-congratulatory press releases, stop the delays, and finally deliver high-speed Internet to all Albertans. If they're looking for ideas on how to achieve this, I would be happy to share a copy of our plan with them, or they can visit albertasfuture.ca.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Front-line Health Care Workers

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the past two months I have been observing first-hand the incredible job our front-line health care workers do day after day as they cared for my dad. I cannot express it in enough words, my gratitude for our valiant medical staff working in Livingstone-Macleod and throughout Alberta. The steadfast dedication and unwavering courage that our fantastic paramedics, nurses, doctors, and support staff have shown over the past two years have been nothing short of remarkable.

It's not like their jobs were easy before the pandemic. They work in one of the most demanding and stressful industries imaginable, and even the minor decisions they make could mean life or death. This stress can be harmful to mental health, so I hope our health care workers take some time to care for themselves and utilize the resources available to help them. I am hopeful that this will improve with the supporting health in first responders grant program, for one instance.

Despite the stresses that you face on a regular basis, the pandemic has added many more difficulties. Extra processes were put into place to keep you and your patients safe. These consumed more of your time out of a busy health care worker's day already. Labour shortages and sick co-workers also added to the strain and the stress. These extra processes and staffing difficulties are important to recognize because they disrupt the essential routines, but these folks continue to push through. You've seen the impacts of the virus each and every day affecting those in your community, and still you come into work determined to do your part to make the situation better. This is truly heroic.

One of the things that my dad taught me is that it's better to give than to receive, but when you do receive, always say thank you. So to my dad's nurses, his LPNs, his physiotherapists, his physicians, the food service and janitorial folks, and all who serve in these roles and many others in our health care system: from the bottom of my heart, thank you, thank you, thank you. You have all been incredible on the front lines, bringing care to our families and to our communities. From everyone here in Alberta's Legislative Assembly: we say thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–City Centre.

Front-line Health Care Workers

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "When someone shows you who they are, believe them the first time." That's Maya Angelou. This government tried for so long to pretend that they actually supported our front-line health heroes, the people who administered the life-saving vaccines, who did the swabs, ran the tests, did the contact tracing, supported those who were sick or who lost loved ones, and so much more. These people did so much to get us through multiple waves of this pandemic. They are heroes. They deserve respect and our gratitude. On this side of the House we offer our deep and unequalled thanks to each and every front-line worker who stepped up and worked themselves to exhaustion for their neighbours, families, communities. On behalf of the Official Opposition, thank you. The province owes you a debt we can never possibly repay.

Their thanks from this government, this Premier, and this Health minister? Immediate wage cuts: for pharmacists, a 5 per cent cut in pay; for pharmacy technicians, nearly 11 per cent; respiratory therapists, 8 per cent; health information management professionals, 7 per cent; social workers, 11 per cent; and speech language pathologists, an 8.7 per cent cut. A significant number of these workers, Mr. Speaker, are women. A slap in the face to these dedicated public servants.

But it shows us once again what the true colours are of the UCP. We all remember, on the eve of the UCP's best summer ever, how the Premier immediately launched a plan to slash the pay of nurses, the same nurses who then went back into hospitals under pressure, facing harassment and threats, saved countless lives, and prevented the total collapse of our health care system. And now, just like then, the UCP is turning on health care workers again. This Premier claims to support these workers. He claims to respect them and be thankful to them, but those are hollow words. It astonishes me that he can say it with a straight face. Health care workers know that they can't trust this government, who uses one hand to pat them on the back while the other reaches into their wallets. These heroes deserve better, Mr. Speaker. Shame on this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Emergency Medical Services

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today and in the recent past there is and has been a historic increase in calls being placed to emergency services in Alberta. In turn, there has been a significant amount of pressure placed on emergency services and their abilities to dispatch first responders such as EMS to Albertans.

Therefore, the Alberta government has engaged in meaningful dialogue with Alberta Health Services and has now dedicated $64 million to increase access to emergency medical services to all communities across Alberta. This new funding will aid in the increase of ground and air EMS services, extend ground ambulance contracts to assist in interfacility operations and transfers, and an increase in funding to address the hours of work initiative that aims to address EMS crew fatigue. This new funding for emergency medical services will assist in creating the necessary infrastructure needed to ensure effective emergency response across our province. It is an honour to mention and thank the tireless efforts put in day to day by our provincial heroes that work in the emergency medical services, Mr. Speaker.

Every day, come wind, rain, or snow, Albertans can depend on EMS to come to their aid in their most desperate hour. The tasking work of emergency services has a large toll on mental health and strains the personal life of emergency response staff, and their work cannot go unrecognized. Mr. Speaker, through you to all emergency services personnel across Alberta who have previously served Albertans or currently serve in emergency response teams, sincerest thanks.

Thank you so very much.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition has question 1.

Health Care and Social Service Worker Wages

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, throughout this pandemic we have all relied on front-line caregiving Albertans like social workers, pharmacy techs, and respiratory therapists. But what's the UCP's thank you to those workers? Wage cuts and rollbacks. This as the Finance minister secretly signs off on raises for AIMCo executives of 20 to 40 per cent. Why does this Premier believe executives earning healthy six-figure salaries deserve a raise but respiratory therapists helping folks breathe deserve a rollback?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. First, I want to start off by thanking all health care workers for the tremendous work that they've been doing, particularly over the last two years and managing through the pandemic. As the members opposite know, AHS and HSAA are in the stages of bargaining. The current agreement expired on March 31, 2020, and they began bargaining last October after a mutually agreed upon suspension. The two sides tabled opening positions recently. The employer has tabled a set of specific offers based on their analysis, on the conditions, and so has the union. This is bargaining.

Ms Notley: Well, where were those bargainers when they sat down with the executives at AIMCo, Mr. Speaker? Let's take a closer look: speech language pathologists, 9 per cent cut; AIMCo executives, 29 per cent raise; pharmacy techs, 11 per cent cut; AIMCo managers, 27 per cent raise; social workers, 11 per cent cut;

AIMCo directors, 20 per cent raise. Why is this Premier giving AIMCo executives cushy double-digit raises while respiratory therapists keeping people alive have to give back 8 per cent? What is wrong with you?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, these are initial positions in bargaining. As the hon. member knows, bargaining positions are put on the table, and as the hon. member also knows, through this exact same process AHS was able to reach an agreement with UNA, which was ratified at a significant percentage rate. For example, the HSAA has put a request on the table for a 15 per cent increase over four years. Again, these are opening positions. I am hopeful that the parties will be able to negotiate through this and reach a fair agreement, just like was done with UNA.

Ms Notley: Alberta nurses got nothing close to the 20 per cent that these folks gave to AIMCo executives. Now, to all the Albertans watching at home, this is exactly why you can't trust the UCP government. At a time when so many people are struggling, this Premier takes the opportunity to give big raises to executive money managers while cutting the wages of essential front-line workers in health care and social services. The people who administer our medication when we're sick, who help us breathe when our lungs are full, who coax speech out of autistic children: those are the people they want to cut. Why doesn't this Premier start dealing with all Albertans fairly?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to be clear. Our government is investing in health care. We added $600 million to the budget this year. There's another $600 million the year after, the year after that. A total of $1.8 billion we're investing in health care on the expense side, $3.5 billion on the capital side, and we are hiring. The numbers in AHS are going up. AHS staff are targeted to increase by more than 3 per cent in '22-23, from 81,600 to 84,400. We have more doctors. We have more nurses. We have more paramedics. We are focused on increasing our staff. We are focusing on increasing our investment in health care, and we'll deliver.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: And AIMCo executives have 30 per cent more money.

Utility and Insurance Costs

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the UCP raised the cost of living with their bracket creep policies and their steep hikes to school fees, to car insurance, tuition, and more. Meanwhile Corrina is a single mom. Her Enmax bill was $800 in one month. She begged for relief, and all she was offered was the chance to make installation payments going forward. That means another $100 to $200 on a bill she still can't pay. Why doesn't the Premier realize that for Albertans like Corrina his $50 rebate just doesn't cut it?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, the NDP got exactly what they wanted. They were successful in making everything more expensive for all Albertans, because that's the goal of the carbon tax. Drive up the cost of heating so you can't afford to heat your home. Drive up the cost of gas so people can't afford to drive their cars. We actually are perplexed on this side of the House why they would bring in a carbon tax and then drive up the price of everything only to then throw up their hands and say: why are the prices going up?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that last week that member was perplexed about the cost of energy at the time.

But I also heard from people like Liz in Calgary. She said that she was appalled at the increase in her bill in insurance, but she was even more concerned about her 73-year-old neighbour who was forced to cancel her car insurance and her home insurance because she couldn't afford them. If hail strikes her home, she can't make a claim. Why is the Premier allowing massive insurance premiums at a time when Albertans are struggling? Why doesn't he start actually standing up for Albertans instead of big insurance companies?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this side of the House will not be lectured by that member, who, when she was Premier, told Albertans to take the bus when they started to complain about the drastic increases to the costs of their daily lives from her job-killing carbon tax. She stood side by side with Justin Trudeau and continues to to this day. Will that member finally stand up and apologize to Albertans for the devastation that she's caused this province?

Ms Notley: The member wants me to answer questions, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to trade places. I'm sure many people would like to see that happen, too.

Meanwhile Angela wrote to me, and she said, quote: it was already difficult to pay for necessities, but now I'm solely dependent on the food bank. That's hard to hear. Experts have said that the UCP's paltry rebate programs won't do enough to help Albertans like Angela. Why doesn't the Premier go back to the drawing board and put some thought into consequential relief for low- and middle-income families? If he's really here for families, why won't he just walk the talk finally?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, the NDP chased $100 billion out of this province when they were in office. They brought in the biggest job-killing, investment-scaring-away tax in this province's history, the carbon tax, and they succeeded in making everything more expensive. Well, we are bringing in short-term programs to provide relief to Albertans, things like the natural gas rebate, that would prevent a European-style energy crisis. We're bringing in an electricity rebate, and don't forget the 13-cent-a-litre gas tax that we are going to get rid of. We will protect Albertans from the NDP.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has a question.

Utility Costs

Member Ceci: Over the weekend I joined Pat MacIntyre, owner of the Ironwood Stage & Grill in my beautiful constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, to raise concerns about skyrocketing utility prices. Pat thinks the UCP's fake natural gas rebate and the $50 electricity rebate are a joke. He said that that tiny amount of money would barely cover a case of beer and does nothing for utility costs that are now over $3,000 a month. Pat said, quote: at the end of the day, we're struggling to make ends meet, keep payroll going, and keep everyone employed. Why is this Premier failing Alberta businesses so badly with his phony utility rebate?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, we are equally frustrated by the higher cost of electricity, but you know what's not helpful? It's not helpful when the Member for Calgary-Mountain View stands outside of a restaurant this weekend and proceeds to give everybody the wrong price of electricity. That's right. The hon. member told Albertans it was 50 to 100 per cent higher than the true cost. She was quoted as saying 15 cents. In fact, it's 10 and a half unless you have a contract. Then it's 7 and a half. I have to ask the question: do they truly not know the cost of electricity?

Member Ceci: We capped it at 6.8. I remember that.

Businesses like the Ironwood have also suffered greatly during the COVID-19 pandemic. They've endured through repeated shutdowns with little or no warning from this Premier. COVID support funding from this government was often too little, came far too late. Businesses that are actually staying open and serving patrons are drowning in thousands of dollars of debt from skyrocketing utility bills. Will the Premier admit that he has failed small businesses repeatedly over the past two years, will he admit he is failing them now again, and will he apologize and step up to the plate and do something today?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, isn't it a good thing the NDP weren't in office for the last three years? It would have devastated businesses across Alberta, but instead right now in Alberta we're forecasted to lead the country again in growth: in the last year 130,000 jobs created, in the first two months this year 15,000 jobs created. The NDP plan would have been simply just to grow the size of government, hire more people in the government in an unsustainable way. We balanced the budget, and businesses are coming back.

Member Ceci: There may be job growth now, but this government has put so many people out of work, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Official Opposition and the Energy critic from Calgary-Mountain View asked the associate minister of energy if he could tell the House what the current rate of electricity is and how it's compared to the rate under the NDP – 6.8 cents, remember? – and the minister stood up, shrugged, and didn't have an answer. He didn't have a clue last week. Let's see if the Premier knows exactly. What is the rate of energy for families in Alberta now, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I have said in this Chamber many times that the NDP refuse to be encumbered by the truth, and this is one more example. First, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View tells Albertans that the price of electricity is 50 to 100 per cent higher than it really is. Well, when the hon. member is not embarrassing herself misquoting the true price of electricity, they're also telling Albertans that they're only getting a $50 rebate on their electricity bill when the hon. member knows it's $150. It's just one more example of the NDP not being encumbered by the truth.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Member Irwin: While this Premier boasts about this province having its swagger back, Albertans are struggling with skyrocketing bills, and nearly 10,000 full-time jobs were lost last month. This is the second month in a row that Alberta has lost full-time jobs, and not a single word of acknowledgement or sympathy from this government or this Premier. Will the Premier put down his celebratory champagne – maybe his whisky, too – and show some real empathy for Albertans by apologizing to those who lost their jobs or saw their pay cut while he partied?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, it is a testament to the entrepreneurial spirit of this province, the rebound that this province has seen, going from an $18 billion forecasted deficit to balancing the books this year. That's not because of government. The NDP would have grown government. It's because of entrepreneurs: 130,000 jobs created last year and also 15,000 new jobs created this year alone, close to 150,000 jobs since the beginning of 2021. That's a record we'll stand behind.

Member Irwin: At the same time that this Premier is allowing nearly 10,000 full-time jobs to vanish, he's also doing absolutely nothing to address the very real concerns of the people we represent. Eliza is one of my constituents. She works hard in the construction industry, but, like so many Albertans, she can't get ahead. She just got a rent increase. The reason given: skyrocketing utility rates. This Premier is hammering Albertans at a time when they can least afford it, thanks to his failure to take meaningful action on utility rates. Why isn't this government listening to people like Eliza? Why, at every opportunity, do they put profits before people?

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is taking utility rates very, very seriously, working towards rebates to be able to help Albertans. But the number one thing that we can do to help with utility rates and the cost-of-living increase in our province is to call on Justin Trudeau and the NDP's close allies in Ottawa, the federal Liberal government, to scrap their carbon tax once and for all. So, again, Mr. Speaker, through you, to them: will the NDP finally stand up for Albertans and tell the federal government to get rid of their ridiculous job-killing carbon tax?

Member Irwin: Well, if this minister wants to ask those questions, I suggest he call an election, because this government clearly doesn't care about the loss of nearly 10,000 full-time jobs in February, just like this Premier clearly doesn't care about the impact of the pernicious inflation tax that he is using to take a billion dollars more in income taxes. This comes at the exact same time that this government is doubling down on their policies of higher utility bills, insurance bills, school fees, park fees, higher tuition. The list goes on. Can this Premier please tell me how he can boast about his bad-news budget for working Albertans? Is making struggling Albertans pay more to get less really a fair . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation.

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, this side of the aisle is proud of the fact that Alberta's budget is balanced. We're proud of that fact, and you know why our budget is balanced? It's the entrepreneurial spirit of this province. Alberta is more diversified than ever when you look at manufacturing, when you look at logistics, when you look at the technology and innovation space, film and television. Oh, and I haven't even gotten to the industry the NDP don't even like, the oil and gas industry. Big rebounds are coming. Alberta is back. We're proud of that record.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Security Infrastructure Program

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend we learned that the government is more than doubling its commitment to protecting places of worship from hate crimes and vandalism through the Alberta security infrastructure program. This is good news for groups at risk, who only want to live, raise their families, and worship in peace. To the Minister of Justice: how much funding has already been given out by Alberta under this program, and when can we expect the next round of applications to be submitted?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. And, through you, to the hon. member, thank you to him for his advocacy on this issue, for speaking with me about this as well as the previous Minister of Justice about this issue. Thank you for that tireless advocacy.

While we don't want to be too specific on the number of organizations so that we can protect the information of vulnerable Albertans and vulnerable applicants, more than 110 applicants were approved for funding so far. That's over $1.2 million in grants that have already been approved through the Alberta security infrastructure program. We look forward to opening up the next set of applications this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for that answer. Given that many places of worship know the pain of being targeted by hate-motivated violence and given that many of the victims of these attacks are new Canadians who speak English as a second language, can the Minister of Justice please explain what kind of organizations are eligible to apply for funding?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a great question. It was one that was asked a few times on the weekend, when both I and the Associate Minister of Immigration and Multiculturalism and the Premier announced this at a church, actually, that was firebombed this summer. The grant applications are open to registered nonprofit agencies who operate a facility that belongs to or is primarily used by communities at risk of hate-motivated crimes or incidents. That could include facilities like places of worship, temples, mosques, synagogues, gurdwaras, churches, or private educational institutions if they have a diverse student body, or other facilities that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for that answer. Given that more faith-based groups and organizations will now be able to qualify for the Alberta security infrastructure program and given that there are specific criteria for the kinds of improvements the government is seeking to assist with, again to the Minister of Justice: what infrastructure upgrades would qualify for the improvements under this program?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. So far, through the emergency Alberta security infrastructure program, to just use those as an example, those have been used for security measures such as hiring security guards, security system installations, surveillance cameras, motion detectors, window guards, tempered glass windows, and fencing. Those are some of the examples through the emergency program that have already been approved. Our commitment is to stand up to intolerance, to keep all Albertans safe, and to forcefully prosecute hate crimes, and that remains as strong a commitment as ever.

Coal Development Policies

Mr. Schmidt: Albertans don't want to see coal mining in the Rocky Mountains. Indigenous leaders, municipal leaders, ranchers, environmentalists, country music stars, and thousands of Albertans with signs on their lawns and stickers on their bumpers have been very clear that they are not happy that this government rescinded protections for these distinctly Albertan landscapes. To ensure that they're protected, our leader will be introducing a bill to ensure their viability for generations to come. The UCP claim they want to protect our mountains, but we can't trust them to keep their word.

Will the minister put her money where her mouth is and vote to pass this bill?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's what we've done; we've protected the eastern slopes. We've fixed the NDP loophole so that they can't do a workaround on the 1976 coal policy. We've fully reinstated the 1976 coal policy, we've extended it to include categories 1 to 4, we've hard-wired those restrictions into the AER, and that's where it will remain. Land-use planning will be done, and those restrictions will be incorporated into land-use planning.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that the coal policy was rescinded by this government quietly on the Friday before a long weekend and given that a ministerial order, which for some reason the government has decided is adequate in this scenario, can also be removed just as easily and given that this government has given Albertans no indication that they're against open-pit coal mining in the Rockies and no indication that they're serious about putting our drinking water ahead of coal exploration, will the minister get serious for a moment and vote to enshrine these protections in legislation, not these half measures that she's put in place, that can be removed with the stroke of a pen?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's already done, and in fact we've hard-wired those rules into the AER, and they will be incorporated into land-use planning, which is legislation. We did exactly what Albertans asked us to do. We are protecting the eastern slopes. We have removed the NDP loophole. The NDP did a complete workaround on the 1976 coal policy when they told a proponent to go ahead and develop a mine and ignore the '76 coal policy. We're protecting . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that the Coal Policy Committee's report clearly shows that Albertans overwhelmingly oppose coal mining in the eastern slopes and given that their justified and loud opposition started because this government tried to remove these protections when they didn't think Albertans were paying attention and given that it's clear that Albertans can't trust this government to not try and pull the same move again, will the minister promise today that there will not be a single piece of additional coal mined in the Rockies while she's minister, and if she won't, will she urge the Premier to call an election so that we can finish the job?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, we have fully protected the eastern slopes, and we've hard-wired those restrictions into the AER. Nobody is going to touch those. Nobody is going to remove them. Nobody is going to remove that ministerial order. The '76 coal policy has not only been fully reinstated; it's been extended, and nobody is going to touch that. Land-use planning will be completed. That's the appropriate process, it's the appropriate legislation, it's the framework, and we're protecting it in legislation under appropriate land-use framing.

School Construction Capital Plan and Edmonton

Ms Hoffman: Our space crunch has heightened; it means larger class sizes, it means long bus ride times, it means more schools having to go through a lottery process, and it means greater uncertainty: those are the words of the Edmonton public chair, Trisha Estabrooks. The UCP abandoned Edmonton families in this budget. Students for years to come will be impacted by the decisions that this government has made rather than stepping up and the Education minister doing her job. Rather than looking at her notes and telling everyone how many schools the NDP built in Edmonton, will the minister at least look in the camera and apologize to the families that she failed in this budget?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to address the question by the member opposite. The member opposite knows full well that school authorities put forward their capital plan each and every year, and they prioritize what is important to them. In Edmonton public they actually prioritized the top two schools, that didn't need to be replaced, where they had 69 per cent utilization, and they also didn't have any health and safety issues. We have about 400 asks a year. These didn't rise to the top of the list.

Ms Hoffman: Given that there were five projects in the year 1 needs assessment and given that the minister has refused, to date, to come and tour those schools that she says are in just great shape, will the minister come to tour Delton, to tour Spruce Avenue? Will she ride the bus that the kids in south Edmonton have to take to get to the closest high school? Will she ride the bus that the kids in northeast Edmonton have to take to get to the closest middle school? Mr. Speaker, will the minister at least apologize to the families that she's clearly ignoring here in Edmonton public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the record I just want to share that Edmonton public has received many schools over the last little while: 2016, five schools completed; 2017, 10 schools completed; 2018, three schools completed; 2019, two schools completed; 2020, three schools completed; and as of August 2021 there are currently six projects under way right now; 131,746 spaces when their projected enrolment for Edmonton public is 107,000 students, 20,000-plus student spaces more.

Ms Hoffman: Given that both the Premier and the Education minister have claimed to support school choice and given that if that were true, they would have funded construction or modernization, anything for public students going to school right here in Edmonton, the fastest growing school division in the country – but instead the budget does nothing to address the shortages for Edmonton public or put even a dollar into francophone school construction anywhere in the province either – and given that many Edmonton students are in overcrowded classrooms with long bus rides, will the UCP do the right thing and fund public and francophone school construction here in Edmonton, or will they admit that this is one of the reasons why Albertans just can't trust them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The francophone school community has had six projects given over the last couple of years that they are working through right now and that are coming online. Edmonton public, as I said, has 131,746 student spaces. That doesn't even include the 23 modulars that we allocated to them when, in fact, their projected enrolment for '22-23 is 107,000 students. We continue to follow the prioritizations of school authorities. When they prioritize those projects, they get to the top of the list. Unfortunately, they didn't prioritize in high enrolment areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Northern Development

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to community and northern development, one of the top priorities for folks in Central Peace is seniors' housing. It is vital that local seniors be able to remain in the communities they helped build. Communities greatly benefit when seniors remain engaged and active. We need them volunteering, we need their knowledge, we need their perspective, and we need them to share the benefit of their experiences. We need families connected. My understanding is that along with the seniors' project in Spirit River, DeBolt and Fox Creek are also in the approval process. To the minister: can you confirm for us that these other projects are upcoming and share your perspective on why these projects are important?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for asking some very important questions. As seniors helped us to build this great province as it is today, it is critical that they can remain in the community of their choice. Aging well in the community is very important. We will continue to support seniors to do that. This is why I'm so pleased to share with the House that these projects are approved and that we are working with the community on these projects and their announcement.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Minister. Given that to enhance northern development, Grande Prairie Regional College has been seeking to become a true polytechnic for many years and given that that approval was announced last week – and this is good news because it means new spaces, new programs, and new opportunities for students of all ages in the Peace Country – and given that I attended the convocation last week in my constituency at the Fairview campus and that I can't say enough positive things about the good people who work and study there, to the minister: can you tell us how the creation of Northwestern Polytechnic will benefit community and northern development in Fairview and all across northern Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The transition of Grande Prairie Regional College to Northwestern Polytechnic, of course, just finalized last week, and I had the honour and privilege of being there in person for that with students, staff, and faculty, which was great to see. The move to a polytechnic will allow the institution to continue to maintain trades programming and apprenticeship education, which is vital to the local community. It'll also give them a greater ability to offer more applied degrees to help ensure that students in the community can get access to the programs that they need right in their own communities and, as well, help to strengthen a focus on technology.

Mr. Loewen: Given that when it comes to community and northern development, there is some bad news as well – and that is that the community of McLennan recently learned that ATB is closing its local branch, leaving residents with no bank – and given that this community is the hub for the local region and is home to the local hospital and businesses that provide important services and given that services like ATB help attract people to communities and that closing it can have the opposite effect, to the Finance minister: does your government understand the realities faced on a daily basis by rural Albertans and that northern development means not reducing important services?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank that member for the thoughtful series of questions that he's asked here today. When it comes to ATB Financial, obviously it's a Crown corporation with a presence across our province. Its history actually goes back to the Peace Country, way back into the 1930s, and the need for banking across Alberta. We'll continue to work with them on the quality services that they provide, but it also highlights our investment in rural broadband. More and more banking services are going online, and we have to make sure as well that every single Albertan has access to broadband. That's why our historic partnership, that should attract over a billion dollars in investment in rural broadband, is important.

South Edmonton Hospital Construction Funding

Member Loyola: P3s have been a disaster in Alberta, but this UCP government appears committed to repeating mistakes. A market-sounding package for the $2 billion south Edmonton hospital is literally begging for a P3 option. Alberta taxpayers: they'll be paying the price. The government is openly admitting that price isn't the key consideration. Instead, they'll score a winning bid in whatever fashion best doles out billions to UCP insiders. To the Minister of Infrastructure. Albertans don't trust this government. Is he really asking taxpayers to blindly trust this government with another P3 gamble, this time with health care?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Albertans trusted the UCP campaign platform, which mentioned about building capital projects utilizing alternate financing, including P3s, and that's what we are going to look at. During that process we assess value for money for taxpayer investment. If there is a case for a P3 delivery option, we'll proceed, including the Edmonton hospital.

Member Loyola: Given that the last time Alberta went down the P3 road to building schools, the Auditor General gave them an F and given that the Auditor General warned Albertans that these P3 projects lacked transparency – good news for UCP insiders, bad news for Alberta taxpayers – and given that in the past the private-sector P3 model nickelled and dimed the taxpayer, to the minister: did this government learn nothing from the 2013 P3 disaster, and why is this government so committed to making another disaster, this time out of the south Edmonton hospital?

Mr. Panda: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite knows well that in the past P3 delivery methods, in fact, Albertan taxpayers saved millions of dollars. The Auditor General, in fact, validated the process of assessing value for taxpayers. We are going to continue that. Whether it is schools or hospitals, whatever is a taxpayer-funded project, we're going to look at P3 options.

Member Loyola: Heaven help us.

Given that the last time Alberta went down the P3 path for major government projects, it turned into a tire fire for taxpayers and given that the government of Alberta commissioned a Deloitte study that literally called the P3 model a mess and given that we are talking about $2 billion of taxpayer money and that the only key message of this UCP government is, "Trust us; we're great and competent managers," to the minister. The government must realize that Albertans don't trust them and that they don't trust P3s. One more: why go down this failed path again and leave taxpayers holding the bag?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Albertans trusted our policy. That's why they elected us to the office on that platform. The only people that don't like it are the NDP, because of their ideology. Attracting private investments into Alberta's economy is a good thing. P3s are attracting private investments. That will provide more taxpayer dollars for more infrastructure, vital infrastructure, hundreds of projects in construction right now, including 66 schools.

Poverty Reduction Strategy

Ms Renaud: Mr. Speaker, my first question to the Minister of Community and Social Services today is a simple one: how many Albertans are living in poverty today?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, our government is continually committed to supporting our most vulnerable Albertans. As we released in Budget 2022, an additional $12 million has been added to the AISH program. Last Thursday the Premier and I announced additional benefits for pregnant women who are on income support and AISH. We're on top of that.

Ms Renaud: Given that the number of Albertans living in poverty is 400,000 and given that that number has increased significantly under this UCP government and given that the cost of everything is going up under these guys, from property taxes, to utilities, car insurance, school fees, tuition, and on and on and on, and given that this minister doesn't seem to have a clue and doesn't even know basic facts about the poverty problem, is the problem that he just doesn't care?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, what the opposition doesn't have a clue on is that you have to create wealth first before you have money to take care of people. I'm proud that with this government we've got investment coming in. We maintained our core social safety net programs, and we increased the AISH budget. That speaks louder than political cheap shots. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Renaud: Given that Alberta's NDP called for AISH to be restored, given that we called for the seniors' benefit to be brought back, given that the mayors of countless cities and towns are seeking more funding to stem growing homelessness, and given that not one of these critical calls was addressed by this UCP budget, my question is this: what exactly was the minister doing during budget deliberations? Sleeping? Why won't he wake up and realize that children are going to school hungry and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Community and Social Services.

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, we spent three hours answering every question from the opposition. I still don't know what question she's raising today. What we're doing is that not only do we provide the social safety net for Albertans by maintaining our core services; on top of that, we provide an additional $34 million for employment support services. We've taken every first opportunity to empower Albertans who are vulnerable and get them to work so that they can reach their full potential.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has a question.

Energy Industry Update

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Energy security matters, but receiving that energy from ethical sources should defy often rampant hypocrisy. Thankfully, Alberta is a global leader in environmental, social, and governance initiatives amongst energy producers. Unfortunately, it seems that many jurisdictions and even political leaders in our own country prefer to source their oil and gas from despotic regimes infamously renowned for authoritarian leadership and human rights abuses. To the Minister of Energy: what is our government doing to encourage our neighbours, friends, fellow Canadians, and U.S. allies to look for more ethical sources for their energy needs?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I just recently returned from a trip to Houston, Texas, to attend the CERA conference, where that was exactly the discussion in all the sessions and in the corridors, a discussion and a conversation about energy security, a conversation that's been missing in energy policy for a very long time. I was able to convey the clear message that Alberta can be the solution. We can be the solution in the short term and the long term. In the short term we can provide an additional 200,000 to 400,000 barrels a day of oil to the United States. In the longer term, with building more infrastructure, we can be the supplier of choice.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Minister, through the Speaker, for your response. Given that energy revenues should go towards powering people's homes and lives, not funding wars and destroying them, and given that revenue generated through purchasing foreign oil supports numerous countries engaged in domestic human rights abuses and despicable military aggression against sovereign nations, to the minister: what is our government doing today to encourage domestic oil and gas production and consumption, directly creating jobs, generating wealth, and supporting social programs for all Canadians?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is focused steadfastly on increasing cross-border trade with the United States. That includes getting more conventional oil, more heavy oil, and more synthetic crude across the border to each and every market in the Midwest, on the west coast, on the Gulf coast. The Gulf coast: that takes a heavier blend; they're looking for Alberta oil. The only replacement for that is Venezuelan oil, Mexican oil. We have the supply in Alberta. We just have to be able to get it across the border, and that's what we're doing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Given the unfortunate impact of geopolitical strife and supply chain disruption on North American energy supplies and global pricing and given the impact on economic stability and consumer affordability, particularly in fuels and utilities, once again to the Minister of Energy: as per your recent CERAWEEK conference attendance and what I'm sure were conversations with government and industry leaders, do you see a renewed focus and conversation on North American energy security and sustainability now and into the future?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, energy security has entered clearly into the North American energy dialogue. The other message that we heard very clearly at CERAWEEK is that governments need to start treating our oil and gas reserves as a strategic asset – a strategic asset – not a liability. Our energy production is something we should be proud of and support and not demonize, and that has gone on for too long in western democracies. As a result, it's shifted production and wealth and emissions over to places like Russia.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Agriculture in 2022

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, producers and ranchers have overcome a lot of challenges in the past year. The recent drought was one of the worst on record. The COVID-19 pandemic has sprung much uncertainty through the entire supply chain, which was also disrupted by the floods in B.C. and now the invasion of Ukraine. Farmers are recovering from the losses of the last year and are paying skyrocketing prices in fertilizer and feed. There is no need to put more cost pressures on producers right now; however, the UCP are increasing crop, hail, and livestock premiums by $37 million. How can the UCP justify taking $37 million away from farmers after they've done so much?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of agriculture and forestry.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say that the member opposite is not wrong. It's been a heck of a year for our ag community. The drought has been terribly difficult for both farmers and cattle producers. What she doesn't know is that the changes to our insurance program reflect the need to replace the fund, and they also reflect the change in commodity prices. The compensation levels have increased greatly. This may be the most expensive crop ever put in the ground in the prairie provinces, but it'll also have the most upside for Canadian farmers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I'm very aware of the commodity prices and given that the UCP has refused to do the work necessary to obtain the tens of millions of dollars available from the federal government through signing on to the interim deal for AgriStability even though producers overwhelmingly agreed on the need to sign it and given that some farmers don't have the upfront capital to purchase seed, fertilizer for this upcoming season, why in the world is the UCP jacking up premiums for farmers by tens of millions of dollars while leaving available federal money untouched? Why is the budget being balanced on the backs of farmers?

Mr. Horner: That's certainly not the case. We're very proud of the business risk management suite that's offered through the Canadian agricultural partnership, part of which is the AgriStability program. The AgriStability program has a very low uptake. Around 20 per cent of producers are enrolled in the program, and an even smaller amount are able to trigger the program. The consensus we have from the prairie provinces is that we need to make the program work better for more people before we throw more money at it, and if we did throw more money at it, the money would come from another part of the suite. It would be taken from a program that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that fertilizer prices have already skyrocketed and that they could go up even more due to the sanctions towards Russia – many producers have already paid more than they were expecting for fertilizer, and some simply can't afford it – and given that Ukraine is the fifth-largest exporter of wheat in the world and there is uncertainty of what will happen to the wheat market and given that I recognize that those changes from the global conflict are out of control for the UCP but that jacking up premiums for the people who feed our province and our communities around the world isn't, will anyone on that side of the House who believes that farmers and ranchers deserve to be paid more . . .

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture and forestry.

Mr. Horner: These insurance programs follow actuarial principles. That's how insurance programs work. We can't just bust out our crayons and make it what we want to make it. The fertilizer prices: we're lucky in western Canada. Two-thirds of the nitrogen-based fertilizers are made right here in Alberta. It's globally priced at the New Orleans port. It's a huge advantage to us. The fertilizer companies would come here and build more if it wasn't for the carbon tax that you and the federal NDP are propping up with the federal government. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Child Care Funding

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, over $3.8 billion in federal child care funding should mean that low-income Alberta families are seeing the greatest reduction in their child care fees – after all, the minister herself has said that these are the families most in need – yet a study by the Edmonton Council for Early Learning and Care shows that low-income families are seeing the least benefit from the UCP's funding model. In Calgary fees for families making $40,000 per year are only going down 13 per cent, far from the 50 per cent reduction that the UCP promised. Can the Minister of Children's Services answer why low-income families are such a low priority for her?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I just want to remind this House that that $3.8 billion investment in child care over the next five years, fighting hard for a made-in-Alberta plan, is excellent news for parents right across this province. I do want to point out that one of the tenets of that plan, as put forward by the federal government, is to reduce child care fees for all families. Instead of picking and choosing certain centres or parents who got to be part of that plan, unlike the members opposite, we aimed to not only reduce fees for all parents by 50 per cent but then add additional subsidy for low- and middle-income families.

Ms Pancholi: Given that low-income families paid zero dollars per month under our plan and given that, in fact, child care operators and parents are reporting to the ministry that some low-income families are actually paying more for child care fees than they were before, like the parent in Bonnyville paying $30 more per month and the parents in Jasper and Edmonton paying $150 more per month than they were before, and given that during estimates the minister said that these claims were “misinformation” and accused the opposition of playing politics for asking about it, yet during that same meeting several child care providers e-mailed me to say that they've raised these very concerns with the ministry and received no response, perhaps the minister would like to respond to these parents now to explain why they're paying more for child care.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I did encourage the member opposite to put politics aside and raise issues when they come to her office because we are happy to help. My officials did confirm that we have not yet found an example where a family is paying more. Sometimes that's because when you roll out a new program, there are some things to work out on the back end, and we happily help operators to make sure that this works with parents.

Mr. Speaker, let's talk about this rollout. Please let me quote from one parent named Jacqueline, which I'm going to have to do in my next response.

Ms Pancholi: Sounds like the minister has some e-mails to check.

Given that Albertans across the province are deeply concerned about the rising costs of living, their ability to make ends meet, and given that low-income Albertans are feeling the impacts of increasing utility costs, insurance costs, and so much more under the UCP and given that it's clear that the UCP is not prioritizing affordability for Albertans, particularly not low-income Albertans, since the minister doesn't seem to even believe these families or child care operators, can she provide advice to them on what they should cut to afford their increase in child care fees? Groceries, heat, transportation to and from work: which is it, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the member opposite, I did ask her to pass on the names of those parents and those operators so that we could look into it – we've reached out to the ministry to ask them to look and make sure that we have contacted at least all of these operators who have reached out to us – but she hasn't reached out to me yet. I do encourage her to do that. We are reducing fees, on average, by half for parents right across this province, with many low-income families already paying far lower than $10 a day and, in fact, many vulnerable teen parents also accessing child care for zero dollars a day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie has a question.

Utility and Fuel Costs

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have endured a tough couple of years. COVID-19 and the war in Ukraine have taken a toll on our daily lives. Putin's invasion of Ukraine has caused fuel prices to soar in recent weeks. The rising costs of necessities like food and fuel have put economic pressure on individuals and families across the province. I hear about gas prices in Calgary-Currie all the time now. To the Minister of Energy: what measures are being implemented to reduce the price Albertans are paying at the pump?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Last week the Minister of Finance announced that as of April 1 we will stop collecting the provincial fuel tax, and that will drop the price of gasoline and diesel by 13.6

cents per litre. Stopping the collection of that provincial fuel tax keeps more money in the pockets of Albertans. This is especially important at a time when costs for everyday goods are going up. The one thing that could be added to that, that would improve the affordability of fuel, is reducing the federal carbon tax that's going up to 50 bucks and then $170. That's got to be . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the cost of electricity has continued to rise in recent months, mainly due to the failed policies of previous provincial governments, and given that our UCP government is taking action to provide relief on electricity prices, to the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity: what measures are being implemented to help Albertans who have faced and continue to face high utility bills?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question. The number one issue on Albertans' minds right now is the cost of living. Despite that, the NDP Energy critic can't even tell us the cost of energy in this province. You know, the NDP brought this same attention to detail with them when they came to government in 2015. It's why they spent $7.5 billion on infrastructure when our economy couldn't support it. It's the same reason they cost Albertans a billion dollars, because they forgot to read the fine print on the PPAs. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. member.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the provincial UCP relief measures, like help at the gas pumps and the electricity rebate, are helping Albertans through a tough time when almost everything seems to be getting more expensive and further given that the factors driving up prices are external or baked in by past governments and, of course, the Trudeau Liberals and their job-killing carbon tax, to the same associate minister: to the best of your knowledge, how long can Albertans expect the UCP relief measures to be in place?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. You know, we're frustrated, obviously, by the higher cost of electricity, which is why we are providing all Albertans, small businesses, farms with a $150 rebate to provide relief on their electricity. We've put in a similar program for natural gas to prevent Albertans from having to suffer through a European-style energy crisis. We will continue to do everything that we can to keep the NDP away from the electricity grid because that is the number one thing that we can do to keep prices down. We will modernize the grid, and we will NDP-proof the grid. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Members' Statements (continued)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bufferlo has a statement to make.

Calgary Beltline Area Protests

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have the right to protest. They also have the right to live free from intimidation. They have the right to be able to get to and from their home safely. They have the right to run their businesses and for their customers to access those businesses. They have the right to drive on streets and walk on sidewalks. Over the past several months – months – thousands of my constituents have lost those rights. The protests in Calgary's Beltline area have gotten out of hand. They are being conducted without permits and, seemingly, without a cause. We need real leadership to resolve this matter.

The UCP Minister of Justice brushed off questions about these protests over the weekend. He deferred the matter back to the city of Calgary. That's really cute – isn't it? – coming from this government, the same government that is actively stripping away powers from municipalities when it suits their political need. Now they dump the responsibility back on to municipalities when they don't have the backbone to stand up and do what's right. This is shameful leadership. It's incompetent, and it's indicative of a government that only cares about themselves, a government being led by a Premier that only makes decisions these days to appease those attending his April 9 leadership vote.

The vast majority of my constituents clearly don't support this Premier, but that doesn't mean their concerns aren't equally valid. Mr. Speaker, 17th Avenue S.W. is the boundary between Calgary-Bufferlo and Calgary-Elbow. I'm here today calling on this government to get involved in restoring some law and order to Calgary's Beltline, and for the MLA for Calgary-Elbow to also get involved. The situation is out of control. This UCP absentee government is part of the problem. They need to step up, do their jobs, and be part of the solution.

Thank you.

Federal Emergencies Act

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, the invasion and war on Ukraine is highly despotic. Nations around the globe are condemning the actions taken by Russia and are standing in solidarity with Ukraine. I am proud of our nation and province for supporting and standing with Ukraine. Our Prime Minister has specifically spoken against the antidemocratic actions of Russia. He's quoted in Global News saying, "Democracy is always stronger than authoritarianism." I would agree, but it is the Prime Minister's own actions, with the invocation of the Emergencies Act on peaceful protesters just four weeks ago, that highlight the hypocrisy in his claim.

The authoritarian way Prime Minister Trudeau acted to deal with a parking problem in our nation's capital shows how out of touch he is with the statements he claims to believe. If our Prime Minister is going to speak of democracy, he must practise what he preaches on all levels in every circumstance. Democracy must be unwavering. We must be consistent in our support of individual rights and freedoms. Ideals and principles of democracy should remain strong no matter the gravity of the situation.

The parking problem in Ottawa did not require the extreme powers granted through the Emergencies Act and sets a bad precedent going forward. Justin Trudeau exercised extreme authoritarian powers and overreach through enforcing the Emergencies Act onto the citizens of Canada. Instead of working with Canadians, ensuring that they were heard, the Prime Minister verbally attacked protesters with name-calling and doubled down by invoking the Emergencies Act. These are not actions of a leader who supports democracy.

Mr. Speaker, for Justin Trudeau to defend democracy around the globe, he must be upholding democracy in our own nation without hypocrisy. I will always stand in defence of democracy and believe leaders must be firm in their stance and in their actions to support individual rights and freedoms within the countries they lead and around the globe.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Government Motion 7 there shall be no evening sitting tonight.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Bill 201 Eastern Slopes Protection Act

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and request leave to introduce the bill, the Eastern Slopes Protection Act.

Albertans are overwhelmingly opposed to coal mining in the eastern slopes. The government's own coal committee, coal report, and public consultation concluded what Albertans knew already. An unprecedented number of Indigenous leaders, municipal leaders, ranchers, environmentalists, country music stars, and just a vast majority of Albertans overall have said: do not mine the eastern slopes. Don't lop off their tops, don't strip-mine them, don't threaten our sensitive and increasingly scarce waters with selenium and other contaminants.

Albertans said this when the UCP first rescinded the 1976 coal policy and again last spring when I first introduced this act, and they've been consistent. Now, the Minister of Energy will say that she's listened to Albertans and put an order in place, but this order can be rescinded without notice to Albertans and without consultation. It also allows several new mining projects to advance. Albertans want more than this minister saying, "Trust me," Mr. Speaker; they want a guarantee of transparent legislative oversight. This bill will protect sensitive lands. It will uphold Indigenous treaty rights, it will cancel all coal exploration, it will ban coal mining in categories 1 and 2, and it will prohibit in 3 and 4. It is my sincere hope . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt. However, as I did on two occasions last week for the government and reminded them that first reading of an introduction of a bill is not debatable, I would suggest that the hon. Leader of the Opposition is making lots of statements of opinion, not describing what the bill may or may not do. I encourage her to expediate this introduction as I like to play it fair for both sides of the Assembly.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will simply conclude by saying that it is my sincere hope that if the Minister of Energy and the UCP are truly listening, if their plans really are to protect our Rocky Mountains, then they should embrace the chance to say so through legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition has risen.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that Bill 201, Eastern Slopes Protection Act, is identical to Bill 214 from the previous session and has already been through the committee process and approved, I ask for the unanimous consent of this Assembly to waive Standing Order 74.11 and for Bill 201 therefore to proceed immediately to second reading. May I speak briefly to this request? Oh.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has a tabling.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite five copies of an article I referenced in debate, which highlights that on top of the high utility bills, the bracket creep, the insurance taxes, the COVID ridership drop, and no support from the province, now high fuel prices in Alberta are forcing reduction in intercity bus service and increasing ticket prices and threatening the survival of rural bus lines.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Shandro, Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, the Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report 2020-21; pursuant to the Statutes Repeal Act the 2022 list of legislation.

On behalf of hon. Mr. Copping, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act the College & Association of Respiratory Therapists of Alberta annual report 2020-21 and the Alberta College of Paramedics annual report 2020-21.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Standing Order 8(1.1) provides for the Assembly to proceed to Motions Other than Government Motions earlier than 5 p.m. if no other items of private members' business remain on the Order Paper for that day. If the motion is called early, the Assembly proceeds to government business after the vote on the motion unless the Assembly agrees to proceed to the next motion in accordance with Standing Order 8(1.2).

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie – I'm sorry. Were you rising?

Mr. Schow: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

Antimalarial Treatments

502. Mr. Guthrie moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to:

- (a) support research into the adverse effects of the antimalarial drug mefloquine, sold under the brand name Lariam;
- (b) work with the federal government and other provincial governments to encourage the adoption of safe antimalarial treatments; and
- (c) express support for Canadian veterans suffering with the effects of posttraumatic stress disorder resulting from the use of mefloquine.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, because it's important that we use accurate terminology, I've worked with a colleague to put forward an amendment to this motion to make a correction. I'm hoping for a little bit of patience here from my fellow members to establish this change, and then I'll save my speech until after that member has introduced the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane for bringing forward this important motion today, and I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to it in urging our government to press the federal government to stop administering the use of the antimalarial drug mefloquine, also known as Lariam, to the Canadian Armed Forces.

Mr. Speaker, quinolines are neurotoxic drugs, including mefloquine, and mefloquine first started being prescribed to the Canadian Armed Forces in 1992. Service members did not have a choice in taking this drug as they did not know the side effects that it would cause, and at the time it did not seem that anyone did. Mefloquine seemed more efficient at the time and cheaper to its counterparts since it only had to be taken once a week compared to every day.

Mr. Speaker, soldiers were being deployed to areas that were high risk for malaria, and of course malaria is a serious parasite-caused disease. The parasite spreads between humans via mosquitoes, and of course it's simple when a mosquito can move the parasite from one person to another quite easily. Malaria symptoms usually take anywhere between seven to 30 days to appear, but in some cases it can take up to an entire year for someone to start showing signs. Symptoms are a flu-like illness, high fever, shaking, chills. Those who contract malaria usually become very, very sick, and it can even be fatal.

Mr. Speaker, we can see the need for an antimalaria drug to keep our soldiers as safe as possible and prevent them from contracting malaria. However, with the benefit of time we now know that mefloquine has proven not to be the answer, that it can cause a debilitating neurological disease known as quinism.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to propose the following amendment. Do you want me to read it now?

The Speaker: If you can just help us by passing it through to the page, then they can deliver it, and then after I get a copy, if you'll proceed. I've paused the timer for you.

Hon. members, this amendment will be referred to as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, you have eight minutes remaining.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Motion Other than Government Motion 502 be amended in clause (c) by striking out "posttraumatic stress disorder" and substituting "quinism."

I'll continue on. Neuropsychiatric quinism, or just quinism, is a lasting disorder that results from chronic encephalopathy and brain stem dysfunction caused by quinoline toxicity of the central nervous system. This is caused by quinoline drugs, including quinacrine, chloroquine, and mefloquine. Some of the quinism side effects include dizziness, vertigo, visual disorders, lasting tinnitus. Additional side effects include hallucinations and nightmares, aggressive behaviour, anxiety, paranoia, insomnia, psychotic behaviour, debilitating cognitive dysfunction, and thoughts of suicide.

Among military veterans, many of whom were prescribed quinoline antimalarials during combat deployments, the lasting symptoms of neuropsychiatric quinism are often mistaken for those of posttraumatic stress disorder. Many of these veterans are being diagnosed with posttraumatic stress disorder when, in fact, it is quinism, which could have been avoided had they not been prescribed mefloquine.

Mr. Speaker, our soldiers and our veterans have put their lives on the line and have done so much to serve our country. The last thing we want is for them to suffer the horrifying side effects of a drug that we are prescribing them. Since malaria is a very serious, potentially life-threatening disease, the use of a medication to prevent it is critical, and our government needs to work with the federal government as well as other provincial governments to encourage the adoption of safe antimalarial treatments. We need to stop giving our soldiers this drug.

While many may think that the chances of having serious side effects from the prescribed drugs are rare, Mr. Speaker, and that there are many other drugs that also have side effects on the label that most consumers don't experience, we need to recognize that the military, the Armed Forces, is a unique population in a unique situation. They are put into vulnerable environments that could increase their risk factor, predisposing them to the side effects of mefloquine. In fact, more recent research confirms that nearly 1 in 7 of those who have been exposed to mefloquine experience nightmares or other abnormal dreams, and further more than 1 in 5 of those who complain of nightmares report that the symptom has lasted more than three years.

Mr. Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I'd like to share the devastating story of a former Canadian soldier who had suffered immensely from the effects of quinism. Richard Schumann said that ever since he was a little boy, it was his dream to join the military. While learning more about mefloquine, I came across Richard's story. In 2005 Schumann was on a mission in Afghanistan and was ordered to take mefloquine. Almost as soon as he began, side effects from the drug caused him to have terrifyingly vivid dreams. In one of these instances Schumann was dreaming that he was attempting suicide. Well, little did he know, he was acting out his dream in real life. Thankfully, Schumann's fire team partner, who was close by, had heard the sound of Schumann cocking his firearm in time to wake him up and stop him. There he was with a round chambered and on the edge of his bed with his gun, potentially ready to take his own life, all while dreaming. Richard Schumann goes on to say that it wasn't the Taliban that was going to kill him. Rather, he almost killed himself, and he attributes this to the drug that the government forced him to take.

This is not right. This is unfair and wrong. These veterans did not choose to have these side effects. They did not choose to have to deal with the consequences for the rest of their life of being forced to take an antimalaria drug. Mr. Speaker, not only does the federal government need to put an end to the administering of mefloquine and find a better solution to protect our soldiers against malaria; they need to provide support to our veterans who have health issues, who have been dealing with these serious side effects relating to mefloquine.

In the United States Veterans Affairs accepts the link between quinism and mefloquine. Veterans in the United States are being treated on a case-by-case basis. In Canada Veterans Affairs has not even accepted that quinism is caused by mefloquine. Mr. Speaker, our veterans deserve better.

Just last week we debated Motion 501. We heard the devastating stories of consequences that dangerous and illegal drugs can cause.

Just as we need to keep in mind the possible dangerous outcomes that other such drugs, even prescribed, can cause as well, we need to keep in mind the serious side effects that these drugs can cause, especially in the case of mefloquine. These consequences and side effects prevent the victim from being able to live a normal life.

Mr. Speaker, I hope, with the support of this House, to see action taken from our government to pursue and pressure the federal government to stop giving mefloquine to our soldiers, to provide support for those suffering from quinism, and do all we can to keep our Canadian Armed Forces safe. They deserve it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as the member moved an amendment, it's reasonable to allow the mover of the motion to reply. I will go to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane, followed by a member of the opposition should they choose to provide some additional comment.

The hon. member.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for the opportunity to speak to the amendment on Motion 502. We wanted to be precise with the wording, so thank you for the procedural understanding. I'd like to also thank members of the House and all Canadian Forces members who have served Canada in the line of duty.

Mr. Speaker, in 1994, at the age of 17, a young man named Shaun Arntsen joined the Canadian military, ready to do whatever it took to protect our country. It's incredibly admirable for anyone to join the forces and to do it knowing full well that one day they may pay the ultimate price. Shaun and many other soldiers did this for love, honour, and respect of Canada. In February 2002, after eight years of service, Shaun was deployed to Afghanistan, where, upon arrival, he and his fellow soldiers were directed to take a weekly dose of an antimalarial drug called mefloquine.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There were no warnings about the drug or its side effects. He was ordered to take it, and he did. There was no option. It was mandatory, but like many he served with, they trusted that the drug was safe, and as he would tell you, they had much more urgent and fierce things to worry about serving in a war zone with an enemy trying to kill you. An antimalarial drug was the last of his worries.

That said, the effects of the drug were immediate. It began with insomnia. If you did sleep: vivid night terrors, anxiety, and mood swings. But, for Shaun, were these the effects of mefloquine or the intense conditions in which he was living? From his perspective at the time, it was hard to know what to attribute these symptoms to. Other soldiers were experiencing similar things, some much worse, including paranoia, hallucinations, panic attacks, and suicidal thoughts.

Shaun left the Canadian Forces after serving 10 years. He took 33 doses of mefloquine, and his life, and many others before and after him, was changed forever. You see, Mr. Speaker, Canadian soldiers were used as part of a clinical trial. Mefloquine's first use by CAF, Canadian Armed Forces, was by troops deployed in Somalia in 1992, where industrial quantities of the drug mefloquine were supplied. Unfortunately, CAF did not participate in the safe monitoring study since guidelines were not compatible with operational requirements, the benefit for the east African and future operations being that the drug was prescribed once per week, which was preferred to the daily dose treatment available at the time.

Canadian Forces members were compelled to take the prescription to protect against malaria, but it was administered without documenting the informed consent of their soldiers and without systematic monitoring of the side effects. It was clear to many that the behaviour of some military personnel was suspicious, and questions about its relationship to mefloquine were raised. That said, in 1993, under the brand name Lariam, the product was approved by Health Canada for general public use. Since then various medical practitioners have warned of the side effects, and research began into the consequences of its consumption.

In June of 2019 Chair Neil Ellis released a report from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs entitled Effects of Mefloquine Use among Canadian Veterans. In that report renowned expert Dr. Remington Nevin provided a diagnosis of mefloquine toxicity syndrome, renamed quinism, to establish a term for the adverse effects of the drug. His work is the first to recognize the long-term detrimental impact of mefloquine, but many others have since followed in this field of research.

Dr. Nevin has raised concerns about outcomes such as depression, tinnitus, dizziness, and vertigo, and these may continue for months, years, and even permanent damage as a result of mefloquine's use. He states that a patient must discontinue use if signs of anxiety, depression, or confusion occur and that Lariam's continued use could potentially lead to more serious events such as the development of psychiatric and neurologic symptoms leading to potential long-term disability.

In 2013 the U.S. army banned mefloquine for use by its special forces. In autumn of 2016 the U.K. military followed suit, as did Australia after a parliamentary inquiry revealed that mefloquine can cause permanent side effects and brain damage. From that Australian inquiry, recommendations were made, with 14 ailments outlined to have a connection to soldiers and their medical conditions, including cataracts, anxiety, bipolar disorder, depression, seizures, heart block, hearing loss, schizophrenia, suicide, and many other severe responses. Still, the side effects are downplayed, but fortunately the drug's use has decreased significantly because of its reputation.

In 2017 the Canadian Armed Forces stated that mefloquine will now only be recommended for use if a CAF member requests it. Now, the reduction of this prescription is a very good development, but it doesn't deal with 25 years of mefloquine's ordered use by Canadian troops. In the United States personnel are treated and compensated on a case-by-case basis, but in Canada the government has not directly addressed issues associated with mefloquine. In fact, they avoid mentioning the drug by name. The chief medical officer at Veterans Affairs Canada stated that compensation is not based on cause but based on a diagnosed medical condition. It was stated that to receive a disability award, all veterans require is a record of having been deployed and a confirmed diagnosis by their treating physician. The problem is that damages are not well studied nor well known to physicians.

Additionally, those that suffer may suffer alone, and if they are diagnosed, they are typically misdiagnosed with PTSD and receive treatment that has no benefit to them since quinism affects the brain in a completely different fashion. To be effective, sufferers require appropriate supports that are designed specifically to deal with their symptoms. The purpose of this motion is to increase awareness but also for government to recognize mefloquine toxicity, or quinism, as a valid injury and to support research into its adverse effects and to find suitable treatments. As recommended in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs report, a systematic screening program for military personnel and veterans who may be experiencing the long-term effects of mefloquine toxicity should be conducted and, in my opinion, done so by these established experts.

Unfortunately, Canadian veterans are not feeling the love. In 2018 a class action suit was dismissed for delay. Since then a mass tort was initiated by CAF members and veterans so that veterans could claim damages against the Canadian government to get the required help that they need. Since then I understand that the federal government launched proceedings against the mefloquine manufacturer yet at the same time, wishing to absolve themselves of their responsibility, brought forward a motion to stay this mass tort. Madam Speaker, if veterans are not going to get the support from the Trudeau government, then Alberta should begin an advocacy campaign to show our dedication to those who served and still serve and to recognize quinism as a neurological disorder requiring our aid for treatment research.

Right here in Alberta, Madam Speaker, we have expertise. We have a renowned physician at the University of Alberta working with this very issue. Dr. Keith Zukiwski has 20 years of experience in quantitative EEG brain mapping, and he is currently accepting veterans of the Canadian Armed Forces to help determine the cause of their symptoms. With various types of brain-focused treatments such as neurofeedback Dr. Zukiwski and others look to target areas of the brain to improve and normalize function with the goal of reducing or eliminating debilitating symptoms. It would be wonderful if our government could support this research.

Madam Speaker, I want to thank the House for the opportunity to bring forward this important motion, and I look forward to hearing from my colleagues to advance this debate with the ultimate goal of helping our constituents and all Canadian veterans who gave so much to us in the line of duty.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to also begin by expressing my appreciation to the members of the Armed Forces who are here today as well as everyone who serves our country so nobly. Also, I want to thank the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane as well as the Member for Leduc-Beaumont for bringing forward both the motion as well as the amendment for our consideration here today. I really love days where we can give each other advanced notice and come together. This is something that our side of the House is very excited to come together, working with the government private members who brought this work forward today.

I want to say that any time we have an opportunity to stand in support of the folks who support us each and every day as Canadians, I think, is a good day. I regularly reflect upon the service of two of my grandparents many years prior to my birth and how when people enlist and they are part of serving their country, they need to be able to trust that those who are in positions to make decisions on their behalf are taking the best information into consideration. They need to be able to trust, whether that's somebody who's sending them into a battle or somebody who's prescribing medication for them. I can't state enough how grateful I am to the members of our Armed Forces who've made and continue to make significant sacrifices for our country to protect the lives of people throughout the world. We are grateful, and we know that for many these acts of service can frequently have long-term, lasting impacts, including quinism and PTSD.

On this side of the House we believe it's important to support and address mental health issues. I'm sure that the members who brought this forward today do as well. We've consistently called for increased access to mental health supports for all Albertans, and we want those to be made available cost free. In 2016 a member of our caucus, my colleague from Edmonton-Castle Downs, introduced and we passed the Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) Awareness Day bill, which I think was a step in the right direction.

I think today is a further step in the right direction. The Canadian Forces' rates of PTSD have doubled in just the course of 10 years, and I think it's important that we talk about the causes of these impacts, including causes that many researchers have shown can be correlated to medications that have been prescribed to those who've enlisted. Doing so will assist in developing treatment for those who've been negatively impacted and who are living with quinism, I believe, and conversations like the debate we're having today, I think, are one very small piece.

I really appreciate that the motion sort of has three parts. The first one, of course, is supporting research into the adverse effects; the second one is calling on partners to do something about it; and the third one is specifically, as amended, the naming of quinism. Thank you to my colleagues for doing that and for parceling it in sort of three very clear ways. When we talk about neurological diseases and disorders and mental health issues, we normalize these discussions and it works to remove stigma for all, a stigma that through the work of advocates and survivors and so many who are living with these illnesses, I think, gives us a better understanding as a society. So this motion, I believe, will assist with that as well as members in the Armed Forces who've been personally impacted by quinism, of course, to see themselves reflected in this Chamber.

The loved ones will know that we as representatives of Albertans, we as members of this Assembly are listening, that it is a big part of our job to be able to reach across the aisle and find opportunities for common ground to hear the concerns and to find ways as elected representatives to work to represent all. Again, my gratitude to the individuals who are present here today, those who are enlisting at home and abroad, of course, and to the member for using this time. It's not every private member who gets an opportunity to bring forward a motion or a bill. There's literally a lottery, and only a few of us ever have an opportunity to do it. I want to thank the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane for choosing an issue that I think we can all get onside with and be able to do something to make a difference for Albertans who've enlisted.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers on the motion on the amendment?

Seeing none, let's vote on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to thank my friend the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane for introducing this important motion and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont for proposing the amendment we just voted on. Malaria is a potentially life-threatening and parasitic disease present in many tropical and subtropical areas of the world, and it's a real risk to individuals that travel to endemic areas. Preventing malaria relies on a number of tactics, including utilizing repellent and nets to avoid being bitten by infected mosquitoes and taking malaria medication to eliminate parasites that enter the body through bites.

Mefloquine was first created in the early 1970s by researchers affiliated with the United States military's Walter Reed Army Institute of Research and was popularly marketed under the brand Lariam. Members of the Canadian Armed Forces that were deployed to regions with high malaria infections between 1992 and 2002 were given mefloquine. This controversial medication has now been shown to potentially cause serious side effects, including anxiety, depression, hallucinations, paranoia as well as nervous system issues like vertigo, seizures, tinnitus, and insomnia. Also known as neuropsychiatric quinism, mefloquine-related chronic symptoms may mimic several psychiatric and neurological disorders, including PTSD.

Decades ago early prelicensed studies on mefloquine were conducted predominantly among male prisoners, military personnel, and in third-world country populations. Although vertigo and nausea were commonly reported in these early trials, at the time the drug was presented as free of severe psychiatric side effects. Since mefloquine was viewed as a miracle drug at its discovery, initial reports of severe psychiatric symptoms, including amnesia, confusion, and psychosis, were frequently dismissed as coincidental. Later on these symptoms would be blamed on the stresses of overseas travel, recreational drug use, or pre-existing mental illness.

Despite continued reports of severe psychiatric side effects, it was only in 2001 that mefloquine's psychotropic effects became more widely known. In addition, later trials showed that specific neuropsychiatric symptoms such as nightmares, anxiety, and psychosis during use are at least 100 times more common than previously reported. More recently reports of suicide, suicide ideation, and acts of violence tied to the drug's use have heightened concerns.

In October 2016 many veterans made complaints to the Canadian government, stating that they believed they were suffering from health problems related to mefloquine, that they were required to take during missions. Despite these complaints and concerns, the Canadian Forces continued to offer mefloquine as the first option for specific deployments until a Surgeon General Task Force report was released in 2017. It is worth noting that mefloquine was not pulled from the Armed Forces' malaria prevention; instead, it is viewed as a less preferred agent.

Madam Speaker, learning about the risk factors of medications years after initial usage is unfortunately not a novel phenomenon, but since the task force's report many studies have examined the long-term effects of mefloquine in veterans who took the drug. Even though the studies have had mixed results, most of them have highlighted the need for additional research. Aside from further research into mefloquine, now more than ever before, there was a need for supporting Canadian veterans suffering from the effects of quinism.

Additionally, there is a considerable need to explore whether mefloquine-induced quinism has contributed to veterans' PTSD diagnoses. Misdiagnosis of mefloquine toxicity as PTSD without considering the potential confounding effects could result in long-term treatment mismanagement of affected individuals, potentially worsening their symptoms rather than relieving them. We owe it to our veterans to provide them with answers and appropriate additional supports. As their mental health continues to suffer, so does every other part of their lives, and so many of them have lost so much after sacrificing so much for us and our country.

Madam Speaker, the men and women who enlist to serve our country do receive excellent training, but veterans continue to face considerable challenges transitioning back to life at home, including financial, vocational, emotional, physical, and psychological hardships. Failure to adequately recognize these challenges, including the potential for quinism to cause or exacerbate them, is a disservice to those that served. Many veterans who took mefloquine as part of their mandatory deployment medication feel as though they have been abused, ignored, and abandoned. Unfortunately, their concerns about the drug's long-lasting effects have often been dismissed as trauma-caused issues. In cases where neurological symptoms are present and mefloquine exposure can be confirmed, a correct diagnosis of mefloquine toxicity, or quinism, is critical to determining the most appropriate and effective treatment. In addition, it is possible to identify symptoms associated with mefloquine toxicity that are not usually present in other common psychological or neurological syndromes experienced by military personnel.

This is why we must work with the federal government and other provincial governments to encourage the adoption of safe antimalarial treatments. This joint effort needs to ensure that any medications offered are genuinely well tolerated by healthy people and further must determine tolerability under actual conditions of use. Mefloquine was created and approved by the FDA at a time when there was an urgent and immediate need for new antimalarial drugs. Now decades have passed, and this drug, that can cause issues with as little as one dose, continues to be on the market. Medications should help, not harm, so developing and adopting truly safe antimalarial treatments is necessary.

Madam Speaker, in my view, how the situation has been handled and how our veterans have been treated is unacceptable. I would like to again thank the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane for raising this important issue and for putting forward this motion and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont for proposing the amendment we just voted on. I hope that all members of this House will support the amendment and the motion's three important calls to action: to support research into the adverse effects of the antimalarial drug mefloquine, for the federal government and other provincial governments to encourage the adoption of safe antimalarial treatments, and to collectively express our support for Canadian veterans suffering from the effects of quinism resulting from the use of mefloquine.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members to speak to Motion 502 as amended? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane for the motion and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont for the amendment. As citizens of Canada we are lucky to live in a place where climatic factors, including rainfall, temperature, and humidity patterns, do not support the anopheles mosquito, which spreads malaria. In Canada, where the average year-round temperature is below 20 degrees, the Plasmodium falciparum parasite causing severe malaria is unable to survive.

We have also been lucky to develop different medications, thanks to innovations in the pharmaceutical sector, to combat this horrible sickness globally, one of them being mefloquine. Just like we trusted science to create this medication, we must follow science in understanding each aspect of mefloquine, both good and bad. Mefloquine is a synthetic derivative of quinoline, which science has proven to be a highly effective drug against the malaria parasite. For that, we are grateful.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, there is more to this story. Mefloquine is a pharmacological name of an ingredient in a medication pharmaceutically known as Lariam. This medication was trialed in 1975 as the need became apparent that a new malarial drug would be needed in the aftermath of the antimalarial therapy chloroquine becoming less effective against the parasite in such areas as sub-Saharan Africa and Southeast Asia. With the waning effectiveness of chloroquine, Lariam stepped up to the plate and was used both within prophylactic capacity and treatment during infection.

However, while this drug proved effective in many senses, it had some serious side effects. One of these detrimental effects, widely noted since the mid-1990s, was its ability to cause neurotoxicity, highlighted by several observed neuropsychiatric events postuse. Such events have been identified by prominent health institutions, one being the WHO's Uppsala Monitoring Centre, an independent drug safety monitoring organization. In addition to this, well-known health institutions such as the FDA and the previously known Committee on Safety of Medicines, now better known as the Commission on Human Medicines, have issued warnings to their doctors to caution their patients about such neuropsychiatric events. But that is not where the buck stops, Madam Speaker. Several studies indicate that mefloquine toxicity, or what's commonly known as quinism, results in a flurry of additional side effects ranging from insomnia, anxiety, depression, vertigo, visual impairment, among a long list.

However, the big question is: why are we relaying all this information here today? Well, first and foremost, the FDA has acknowledged symptoms of vertigo, dizziness, to be directly caused by mefloquine. The FDA also requires documentation of medication, including mefloquine, to state that such symptoms may continue for several years and may be permanent. In addition, symptoms like anxiety, hallucinations, paranoia, or depression may render long-term psychotic behaviour continuing for months and years.

Secondly but most importantly, Madam Speaker, our brethren in the uniform, our veterans, have reported suffering from such side effects from mefloquine, which they were ordered to take during their deployment to malaria-affected states. In an article titled Treated Like Lab Rats: Malaria Drug's Dark Side Effects Haunt Canadian Vets, the CBC documents that several of our soldiers, including one veteran named Greg Janes, stated that they were not told the side effects of the medication. Janes even referred to the weekly dosage of mefloquine on Tuesdays as psycho Tuesday due to the sheer severity of the side effects. The Canadian Auditor General condemned Lariam's prescription containing mefloquine at the time as an abuse of protocol. Our soldiers were forced to take this medication for Somalia in 1992 and 1993 and did so with Lariam, still unlicensed in Canada.

Madam Speaker, this speech is more than just standing with our medically affected vets who put their lives on the line to defend our country; it's a call to action for the Canadian government and the Canadian Armed Forces to partake in a thorough vetting of this medication. The Surgeon General Task Force inquiry report on mefloquine stunningly falls short of evidence-based analysis. In that report it is concluded that no evidence was found to support a causal link of the neurological impacts of mefloquine on long-term medical health. However, the same report also identifies applying strict exclusion criteria to the studies it considers. In fact, the report states that the studies from which they derive their analysis and conclusions are of "low to very low quality." How is anybody expected to take the conclusions drawn from such a report as an objective standard with which key decisions regarding the health of our soldiers are to be made? We can do better, and we must do better.

This is all to say, Madam Speaker, that I cannot sit by silently on the sidelines when I know full well that some of our brethren in uniform are in pain and torment. Greg Janes, who I had earlier referred to, indicated that even more than 23 years later some of his fellow soldiers, including himself, still suffer from nightmares, irritability, and insomnia. Military soldiers are already at the forefront of facing all types of horrific scenarios, placing them at a higher risk of experiencing posttraumatic stress disorder and quinism. Several of Greg Janes' colleagues, himself included, have reported suffering from quinism. Several veterans subject to mefloquine treatment deployed in other areas of the world such as Rwanda and Afghanistan are undergoing the same unfortunate predicament.

Over the recent years more details of the damaging effects of mefloquine have started to emerge. Now the CDC acknowledges that mefloquine can confound the management and diagnosis of posttraumatic stress disorder. Health Canada even goes as far as to advise people with schizophrenia, general anxiety, psychosis, and depression to avoid mefloquine.

3:30

As an elected leader I want to take this moment to speak directly to the veterans. Dear veterans, I acknowledge your pain and express my heartfelt sympathy to all you brave men and women. I stand here today and call for both the federal and provincial governments to issue a more in-depth inquiry in the meantime, substituting mefloquine as an antimalarial and providing suitable alternatives.

To all the members of the House, I urge you to support this amendment and motion. We need transparency, informed consent, and extensive drug testing to better protect our soldiers and veterans, who protect our freedoms in this great country.

I yield the floor back to you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thanks to members on both sides speaking to this wonderful motion put forward today. It's with a heavy heart, I know, that the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane brought this forward. Again, as one of the other members mentioned, as a private member to get a motion is kind of a big deal. You know, some folks hunt. It's like getting that moose draw that you've had to wait around for a while. The fact that the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane brought this forward is quite admirable. He's a man of his word, a man who made a commitment a while ago, when we first went to this thing – it actually was the first event.

It was the first event that came across my desk when I was newly elected, to attend an event called Walk for Veterans. It was Chance Burles that was at the top of the letterhead. It was the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont and myself and one of the parliamentary members. Dane Lloyd is his name. I think I can say that in here. We were the only ones that attended this event. It was kind of neat to go there and talk to folks. A gentleman by the name of Mr. Kennedy was one of my constituents. It was at that point that myself and I believe my colleagues really heard about the mefloquine injuries, the things that had taken place, quite frankly, the sheer horror stories that this caused.

You know, they put so much on the line, our members that join to serve. They give up rights and freedoms that most citizens don't realize that they have. Quite frankly, to be treated like this is reprehensible. The fact that they go through – they walk through hell in a number of circumstances to do the right thing so that we can enjoy the rights and freedoms we have. It was something. I really appreciate the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane getting his one shot as a motion. It took us three years to get here. Hats off to you, sir, for doing that.

I'm going to read the motion just to make sure that everyone at home knows that I can read, number one, and, number two, so that I'm not rambling too much. I am getting to that age where I need to have my reading spectacles on, Madam Speaker, so please don't laugh, because I feel awkward enough as it is most days.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to:

- (a) support research into the adverse effects of the antimalarial drug mefloquine, sold under the brand name Lariam;

- (b) work with the federal government and other provincial governments to encourage the adoption of safe antimalarial treatments; and
- (c) express support for Canadian veterans suffering with the effects of [quinism] resulting from the use of mefloquine.

With that, let's talk about some of the things that these poor folks had to undergo. Again, it was issued. They didn't really have a choice in this. A bunch of other countries now have pulled it off the shelves. They don't issue it to their soldiers anymore. They've recognized the issues and the damages. Our country has yet to do this, hence the reason why we need to encourage that and, as Alberta, to step forward once again to lead the charge on that.

Here from W5 – and I'm not going to get into all the technical data, because other folks have done that way more eloquently than I have, but let's just talk about real people and real things – are some of the feelings that were expressed by some of the soldiers: that they had been poisoned, that the government had poisoned a generation of their own soldiers. They believed that it led to extreme rage, left their lives in shambles. There are 900 Canadian vets who have signed up for legal action on this for a drug that nearly killed them. They felt like guinea pigs.

Soldiers had nicknames for the days of the week when they were administered this. We were told by some of the folks at that Walk for Veterans that typically they weren't deployed on the same day. They were given a couple of days after they had had their treatment. When you have days that are called, like, Manic Monday, Terror Tuesday, Wacky Wednesday, and Fearful Friday, it's not laughable. These folks were experiencing dreams so violent and haunting that it caused troops to lash out, night terrors, rage, paranoia, psychosis, searing stomach pains. They were never told by their superiors of the side effects. They didn't know that these could have long-lasting harms that would follow them around.

This came out in 1984, and it's been issued to our troops since '91. Dr. Remington Nevin is a world expert on mefloquine toxicity from Johns Hopkins University. He calls it the horror movie pill. Let's let that sink in. A medical professional with that type of background is literally talking about the effects that it has on people as a horror movie pill.

Roméo Dallaire is the highest ranking soldier to sign on to this with legal action. He felt memory loss, stomach cramps. It impacted and affected his operational ability. Our government so far – our Canadian government, that is – isn't stepping up, quite frankly, Madam Speaker; hence the reason for this motion, to compel them.

If there's something that we can do in Alberta – the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane had stated that we have a U of A doc. He's in this area. He's willing to do it, work on brain mapping. At that event and a subsequent one that the MLA for Airdrie-Cochrane and I also attended in downtown Edmonton – it was the year after, I believe – I heard some of the stories and about some of the comrades that had been lost, not from direct combat action but afterwards, when these folks are reaching out to each other to check up on each other, folks that are suffering from these long-lasting ramifications, to make sure that your buddy is okay. I'd overheard that a couple of times. They had grave concerns – they hadn't heard from a member down in southern Alberta – and were trying to be there, and I've seen that comradery.

These guys and members of the community step up for each other. There was one member from my community who was knitting blankets and quilts to give to these soldiers to let them know that people still care about them, that when they were in tight spots and they were suffering and they couldn't reach out to fellow comrades, this blanket was wrapping around them to make sure that they knew that they weren't forgotten about and that they had some support there. It kind of tugs at the heartstrings.

Australia pulled it. They don't even use it for second-line defence anymore. The U.S. has used it as a drug of last resort since 2013. It's only to be used if there are no contraindications. Ireland has taken it completely off the market. In Canada: well, it's still available for the general public. If you go under the brand name Lariam and you happen to be going travelling and you go to one of those jurisdictions or those regions, you just might be taking the same thing that, in that one doctor's statement, is the horror movie pill. It's not only just our soldiers – not to say "just." They were the ones that had no choice. People at home: how often do they go and read the back of the labels?

The labels, Madam Speaker, on some of these drugs – let's see. Here you go: depression, generalized anxiety disorder, psychosis, schizophrenia, major psychiatric disorders, convulsions. How close do you read the fine print? If you're going over for a nice vacation, maybe you give this to your kids. Maybe you take it a little longer than you should. That's not quite the vacation I'd be signing up for or having anybody else sign up for, especially with these long-lasting effects.

It was first used over in Somalia. I'm not going to go into the events there out of respect for our soldiers who served, but talking to the guys at that walk leads me a lot to believe that maybe things would have been different if our soldiers weren't receiving those medications. Maybe things would have turned out differently. It really hearkens to the question: maybe our government had something to do with that.

With that, I'm not going to take up much more time on this. Looking at the number of reports that have taken place, you know, there was a Surgeon General Task Force report on mefloquine saying that military personnel [are] a unique population with specific risk factors that might predispose them to adverse effects potentially associated with mefloquine, e.g., neuropsychiatric harms.

So if you and I happen to be – I'm not saying that you and I are going, but if you and I, Madam Speaker, as an example, were going on a trip and were heading somewhere for a good time, it's a heck of a lot different than being deployed and put into stressful circumstances and to have this additional stuff added to you, especially with the frequency and the time that they're in field and that it's not supposed to be taken any more than eight days and that these folks are deployed for a heck of a lot longer than that, eight months at least, depending on the circumstance, maybe even longer.

It hearkens to the question that when all these experts are doing these things, speaking out against it, when we have witnesses and testimonies right here in your face – and if you want to, watch that W5. There were two episodes on it. If it doesn't bring a tear to your eye or it doesn't make you think, then you haven't watched it. I don't think there's anybody in this Chamber or out in the general public that can't put themselves in that circumstance or doesn't know someone in their area or their family that may have been exposed to that. Maybe it will help you understand a little bit more what's happening to these folks.

In 1998, as part of a series of Parliamentary questions regarding mefloquine use in the [Canadian Forces], the following question, labelled as Q-138, was asked:

Of those members of the Canadian Forces who were administered mefloquine since 1992, how many have attempted suicide or committed suicide; in what year; in Canada or abroad; and if abroad, name the country.

The question was never answered.

The methodology consisted of a crude listing of the attempted and completed suicides reported to the military police.

Again, we can administer these things, but we don't track them in the proper way, and we don't even know the cause or effect or harm.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to join the debate on Motion 502 as amended?

Seeing none, I will ask the hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane to close out debate.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Over the course of this afternoon's debate we heard about the detrimental effects of mefloquine toxicity, or quinism, as it relates to Canadian Armed Forces members and veterans. One of those veterans, whose story was discussed earlier, Shaun Arntsen, wanted me to make clear that quinism is not something that is exclusive to the military. In Canada Lariam became available for public use in 1993. Citizens here as well as around the world used it for the intended purpose, but they may have no idea about the impact that this drug has played in their lives.

Madam Speaker, in 2002 on a camping trip to central America my wife, two friends, and I were prescribed Lariam to prevent malaria. All four of us developed insomnia and during intermittent periods of sleep experienced very vivid dreams. When awake, it felt as though you were in a high state of anxiety, like you had just drank an entire pot of coffee, and you felt that way all the time. Now, as we all know, our body requires sleep, so when deprived of it, of this necessity, it begins to take its toll on our body and on our mind. For us, something didn't feel right. Something was off. So after only a few weeks of taking mefloquine, my wife and I decided to discontinue its use, and we did not finish the prescription.

For myself, in a matter of a few weeks I felt back to normal, but that was not the case for my wife, Tracy. She felt jittery, high strung, and anxious for months after. Within two weeks of arriving home, she went to our family physician to learn that she had suddenly developed an arrhythmia. This was obviously shocking for a healthy woman in her 30s with no history of heart problems. Now, fortunately, as the effect of the drug dissipated, the arrhythmia went away, but for years she had periods of sleep apnea, unexplained dizziness, and bouts of vertigo that created a lot of stress for her. As a byproduct of this anxiety, my wife developed thyroid disease, for which she takes daily medication and will for the rest of her life. Now, can all of this be attributed to the use of mefloquine? Well, quite frankly, I'm not certain, but that's the very reason we require government support to conduct the necessary research to help veterans and constituents who are suffering.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to thank all my colleagues for their efforts here today, and I'd like to thank all veterans, those currently serving in the forces today, and all those who lost their lives in service to our country. Thank you in advance for your support of Motion 502.

Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 as amended carried unanimously]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 4

Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Minister of Municipal Affairs to move second reading of Bill 4, the Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022.

These amendments to the Municipal Government Act, or MGA, are needed in order to achieve clarity of public health policy for Albertans across the province. As we're all aware, Alberta's government removed many restrictions related to the COVID-19 pandemic over the last several weeks. Alberta Health has been taking a thoughtful, methodical approach to both the implementation of public health restrictions and to the removal.

As Albertans have grappled with COVID-19, the Premier and Minister of Health have spoken at great length and with informed expertise about what it means for Alberta to move beyond the COVID-19 pandemic, and I'll try not to emulate their words today. What I will say is that I believe it is clearly in the best interests of all Albertans and all Alberta municipalities to have a clear and consistent set of public health requirements in place as we continue to manage COVID-19 and move past the pandemic. With this objective in mind, we are proposing to amend the MGA to ensure that municipal bylaws align with a provincial approach to public health issues. The overall approach will be to grant the Minister of Municipal Affairs with appropriate oversight and approval of municipal bylaws related to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The changes to the MGA are extremely narrow and strictly focused on management of a public health crisis that is properly within the government of Alberta's jurisdiction. If the amendments pass, municipal bylaws requiring masks to prevent the spread of communicable diseases or relating to COVID-19 vaccines will need to be approved by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The proposed changes would also require the Minister of Municipal Affairs to consult with Alberta's chief medical officer of health to approve the bylaw. For example, the proposed changes would prevent local governments from imposing masking bylaws on private-sector operators such as grocery stores or retail businesses. Local governments would continue to have the authority to implement masking bylaws for the operation of municipal buildings such as recreation centres, public transit, and municipal buildings. These changes would have no impact on the day-to-day operation of Alberta municipalities. Since most municipalities already comply with public health requirements for COVID-19, these changes will have zero effect on them.

Specifically, a new section, section 7.1, will be added to the MGA that will accomplish several things. First, section 7.1 will specify that a municipality cannot pass a bylaw about masking to prevent communicable disease or proof of vaccination requirements unless the bylaw has been approved by the Minister of Municipal Affairs after consultation with the chief medical officer of health. Upon the coming into force, the new section will also repeal any of these types of bylaws that are currently in place. It's also important to know that the section states that enforcement efforts made while the masking or vaccination bylaw was in effect are still valid. This means that prior enforcement activities will continue to be valid even though the bylaw will be repealed when this legislation comes into force. Finally, the new section specifies that this exception does not apply to bylaws that focus on property owned or leased and operated by a municipality.

Our government is well aware that there are some Albertans who have some concerns with these proposed amendments. I would like to take a moment to address some of them. First, some people will say that the proposed government is overreaching its jurisdiction and that the proposed amendments create a precedent whereby the government can impose its judgment on any municipal bylaw. To that point, I would note the narrow scope of the amendments, which are clearly designed and limited to address public health measures related to COVID-19. The government is not interested in infringing on municipal jurisdictions any more than is absolutely necessary to ensure consistent public health policy, which is most certainly within the province's jurisdiction.

As for precedent, I would note that there are many other instances in Alberta law where ministerial approval of a municipal bylaw is required. For example, the Municipal Government Act does not allow municipalities to pass bylaws to close roads within their jurisdiction without approval from the Minister of Transportation. All we are doing here is ensuring proper provincial oversight of public health policy, which is clearly the responsibility of the provincial government.

Second, some people will say that the government previously allowed or required municipalities to create their own bylaws in order to manage the COVID-19 pandemic. It's true that Alberta's government has allowed flexibility for municipalities to develop and implement their own public health measures when appropriate in response to COVID-19, but that was during the middle of the pandemic, when Alberta did not have such a robust vaccination rate and it made sense for local governments to take local measures under certain circumstances. Those circumstances have changed. As the Premier and Minister of Health have said, Alberta has a high rate of vaccination among adults, and there is no public health rationale for continuing certain restrictions such as masking requirements in indoor public spaces.

Of course, Albertans may continue to wear masks for personal health risks at any time that they wish, and this choice must be respected. But there are no longer sufficient grounds for the provincial government to require masking as public health policy; therefore, there are no grounds for municipal governments to do so either. The proposed amendments will create consistency for Albertans on this point.

Finally, some people will say that Alberta's government has not consulted with Alberta municipalities about the proposed amendments. Well, Alberta's government engages with municipalities a great deal on a great number of policy initiatives. It was just not necessary for the lifting of COVID-19 restrictions. As soon as the public health data allowed for the easing of restrictions, Alberta's government acted in the interests of Albertans because that's what we were elected to do.

Individual Albertans and Alberta businesses should have their option of whether or not to wear masks or to require their customers to wear masks, and the proposed amendments to the MGA will ensure that they have that choice. The approach we are recommending will restrict the ability of municipalities to pass bylaws that contradict public health policies and rules enacted by the province. Our goal is to ensure Alberta has one clear policy as we move together toward a path towards normal. Albertans and Alberta municipalities deserve a clear, consistent, and unified approach that the proposed amendments to the Municipal Government Act will provide.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Member Ceci: Thank you to the associate minister for the second reading introduction. I appreciate that. I did have some concerns, though, with some of the things that I heard the associate minister speak to. For clarification's sake, every municipality in Alberta is now following what is in Bill 4. The city of Edmonton rescinded their mask and vaccine passport bylaw last week. So it's not that most are following it; everyone is following it. I guess the first question I would have is: if everyone is doing what Bill 4 identifies, why are we even spending time here today going forward with this bill? Why isn't this bill removed from the Order Paper, and why don't we spend time on other things that are important for this province?

The other thing that was mentioned by the associate minister, before I get into talking about the bill itself, was the narrow scope and how the province was surgical in its efforts to get into the MGA and, you know, to amend it with this Bill 4. I guess I would wonder: if it was clear, if it was narrow, why didn't they take time to talk about it with municipalities through their organizations like RMA and AM? If it's that clear and if it's that necessary, why not take the opportunity to discuss it? It doesn't prohibit them from talking about negotiating and being involved with representatives of municipalities, but they chose not to do that.

Further, the associate minister said, you know, that consultations weren't necessary. Well, that perhaps depends on whose ox is being gored, because municipalities believe it was necessary for consultations. It's all fine for the associate minister to stand up in defence of the government and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and say: we thought it over; we're going to do a little thing; it's not going to be a problem. That's not what we're hearing from municipalities. For instance, the president of the Alberta Municipalities says: I believe in a collaborative approach to government, and I believe this is the exact opposite. She goes on to say: it sets a precedent for future legislation changes when all of a sudden a municipality and the government of Alberta disagree, and that's a precedent we don't appreciate. Again, it's depending on your point of view, and the point of view, obviously, of the government is, "No biggie; we're doing what we were elected to do or we're doing to make things clear for all municipalities" when they're hearing back from municipalities, through their representatives, that what they're doing is frankly not appreciated.

[Mrs. Aheer in the chair]

Another quote from President Heron: Alberta's principal piece of legislation governing municipalities, without prior consultation, was changed. End quote. I just want to put those things on the table first to say that the point of view from the associate minister and others that I've heard, particularly the minister, is that it's not a big deal. "We did something that we're able to do; we're sticking to our lane; municipalities have to stick to their lane" even though when you look at the bill, it speaks to the kinds of responsibilities municipalities have. "A council may pass bylaws for municipal purposes respecting the following matters," and letter (a) is: "the safety, health and welfare of people and the protection of people and property." So municipalities were within their rights to do what they were doing. That was Edmonton, for instance, and Calgary and others that had masking bylaws and vaccine passports required or checking vaccines for people going into establishments both city and private. They were within their rights to do those things.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This government, this Premier, asked municipalities, back several months ago, over a year ago, to do these things. You know, "You have the power to do it," and they did. Now the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the associate minister are changing that power, and they're doing so without the involvement. That's another day and another reason why Albertans really can't trust this Premier and his government to act in their best interest. Municipalities are finding that out, Madam Speaker. As I said, last year the Premier abdicated responsibility for public health decisions, and he said that those decisions – and this is a direct quote – are best taken locally. And we know that municipalities did that. He encouraged municipalities to implement their own health measures due to the diverse needs across this province, and we saw that take place. Now this government is directly contradicting what they originally asked municipalities to do, and they're contradicting themselves by taking decision-making power away from municipalities in Bill 4 and the locally elected leaders that were exercising those powers.

As I mentioned, with section 8 – no, not section 8; section 7 in the MGA, those powers currently exist under municipal authority, but the Premier is directly targeting them for his own political reasons, we believe on this side, attempting to save his own skin from the leadership review that is coming up in Red Deer on April 9.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The actions of the Premier – and I put this in my speech that I did on behalf of the hon. Leader of the Opposition to Alberta Municipalities last week. I believe that the Premier believes another fight with another group will improve his leadership odds, make him look like, you know, a tough leader who can get his way, whether it's with municipalities, whether it's fighting with doctors and nurses and teachers and unions. I could go on, apparently. We have seen this repeated over and over and over again, unfortunately.

The repetition provides Albertans with an opportunity to see through this for what it is: a cynical ploy to, again, improve leadership possibilities. We've seen this since the election of the UCP in May 2019. This was a government that claimed, Mr. Speaker, to be a grassroots government, to listen to the grassroots and to do the things that the grassroots were asking. The Premier even signed a grassroots guarantee, but the locally elected leaders now, not only in the city of Edmonton but all locally elected leaders, are being minimized and put off to the side with regard to something they hold very dearly, and that's the Municipal Government Act. It's an enabling piece of legislation that we should rightly be proud of in this province. It's a significant piece of legislation, and as some of the people I talked to at last week's Alberta Municipalities conference mentioned, you know, it's not something to be trifled with; if you're going to open it up, for goodness' sake, involve us.

The interference with local decision-making, imposing a top-down governance style is something that's very, very problematic. On this side of the House we respect local democracy. They are legitimate local governments across this province. Counties, summer villages, cities, towns: they are a legitimate, democratically elected order of government. They are not a lesser order of government. They are an order of government, Mr. Speaker.

What they get from the other side is not respect for who they are. They get told – and the Member for Lac Ste. Anne- . . .

Member Irwin: Parkland.

Member Ceci: Parkland. Thank you very much.

The Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has said that, you know, local governments are children of the province. I can tell you that that phrase, that idea went over like a lead balloon at Alberta Municipalities, and it's going to go over the same way at RMA. They are not children of the province. That Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland went on to say that, you know – and I think he was directing this at one municipality in particular – if they don't get in line, like children, they deserve to be spanked to put them in line. Again, Mr. Speaker, that's not respectful, not appropriate, not the kinds of words one expects from a member in this House. We don't believe that local leaders and our communities are simply children of the province. We don't believe that they need a spanking if they set up bylaws that they have the power to do under the MGA.

If we're going to succeed as a province, we need to work in partnership with each other. That's how we'll get over the huge challenges in this province. Picking fights with fellow Albertans who are democratically elected is not the way to do this. This legislation is nothing less and nothing more than a deeply cynical ploy to divide Albertans and to crush local democracy, starting with the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a few minutes to go over some of the things I heard the minister say to the Alberta Municipalities conference when he made a speech. He talked about how this bill and its actions were, quote, a slight diminishment of local power.

It goes back to what the associate minister was saying, you know, that they feel like they were narrow in scope, and they're just making things consistent around the province, that they have the flexibility to do this, that there is nothing prohibiting them from doing it. So when the minister says that this is a slight diminishment of local powers, I just know that he's talking from his perspective, not from the perspective of democratically elected local governments around the province. They don't believe it's a slight diminishment when you change the MGA without involving them.

In fact, it's been raised by people at local government, you know: if they can change this, is this the thin edge of the wedge? Will they not involve us in talks about future changes? Will they change the MGA without our involvement in the future? I have to say to that: probably. They did it this time. What's to stop them from doing it in the future?

If you believe in a collaborative approach, Mr. Speaker, then that means talking to the stakeholders that you have empowered, that are involved, said that the work they do is important. It means engaging with them and coming up with a solution, not keeping it quiet, not saying nothing about something you're planning to introduce and then essentially they have to eat it because they don't have the power like we do here, like the government does when they have a majority, to push through bills that they want to push through.

I don't know if I read this statement. I'll do it now. Perhaps I have. I don't think I have. It is again from the president of Alberta Municipalities. We'll see what the president of RMA thinks about all of this in the next day or two, Mr. Speaker, because that's when their conference is taking place. The president of AM said to the media last week: we are concerned that the government of Alberta is setting a troubling precedent by amending the MGA – I did say this last part – Alberta's principal piece of legislation governing municipalities, without prior consultation.

You have to wonder: why didn't the government consult? I mean, they had time. Somebody could have picked up the phone. There's lots of staff, hundreds of staff in Municipal Affairs. They could have picked up the phone, but instead they're acting unilaterally and picking fights with municipalities. You have to wonder what other measures this government is considering with municipalities, to change the MGA. I don't know. We'll have to see. Those obviously are some of the concerns this side has with this bill and the actions of this government.

We heard from the associate minister with regard to some of the aspects or changes to the MGA that'll take place. Ministerial approval is necessary for any alteration of the MGA once this is passed. The minister has to be involved and, he says, with the backup of the CMOH at that time. This repeals existing bylaws. There are no existing bylaws in the province at this point in time.

We know that Edmonton was the only city with bylaws in place, and those were repealed last Tuesday.

Private properties can still require vaccine checks and proof and masking. That's not going to be changed by this. If a venue, for instance, like a theatre wants to continue with masks in place, like the one I went to a couple of Saturdays ago in Calgary – there were masks in place, and people had to show their proof of vaccine. There was 50 per cent occupancy by that theatre's desires. They can still do that with this bylaw. That's a good thing, that the government isn't railroading private properties in that case. Local governments can still, on their own property, in their own facilities, require masking bylaws.

Mr. Speaker, this is another day, as I said, yet another reason why Albertans can't trust this Premier or his UCP government. Last year the Premier abdicated responsibility; now he is taking responsibility away from municipalities without their consent. I think that's wrong, and Bill 4 should be dropped.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, second reading of Bill 4. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I consider it a privilege to be in this House every time we're in session and every time we have a sitting. I count it a privilege to be able to speak to Bill 4 today, the Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022. I think I can speak for probably everybody in the province, at least in this Legislature and probably in every level of government across the country, when I say that the last two and a half years have been difficult on everybody as we've tried to deal with this pandemic, this COVID. You know, it has been an issue of discussion, I think, probably at every kitchen table and in every Legislature, whether it's municipal or provincial or federal.

It has not always been easy. It's not been easy because in a lot of ways we're dealing with some really important principles in how we try to live our lives and how governments address our lives. We're dealing with principles that go down to some really basic freedoms. How can we best protect our society? We're trying to balance freedom to be able to make our own choices and to be able to make our own decisions, especially those on health issues, versus the control that we need to try and protect those in our society that are vulnerable, those that could be severely affected by the COVID pandemic and by the virus.

I think all of us have had to grow and to consider this attempt to balance the ideas of freedom and control.

For myself, I don't know how other people have sort of arrived at trying to figure out when we should and when we shouldn't, but I know that in my own life as the MLA and in listening to my constituents and dealing with the phone calls and dealing with the conversations in the grocery store or on the street or dealing with the e-mails, I've come down to two or three things that have sort of guided my way of thinking, principles that I've used to guide myself when we try to balance this issue of freedom versus control.

The first is that I think we have a duty as citizens and as legislators to ensure that the vulnerable are protected. That's a given, and I don't think I've met anybody in my constituency, when I've had a conversation with them, that would disagree with me on the need for our society to organize ourselves in such a way and to have legislation and regulation that would allow us to protect the citizens of this province.

The second one is that I think that in almost every case, when we talk about it, we need to live in a society where we also protect the livelihoods of the citizens of this province.

The third one, that has grown over the last two and a half years, has been that we really do need to protect the liberties of the citizens of this province. As we've been dealing with COVID, we've tried to bring forward legislation that has protected the vulnerable, protected the livelihoods of our citizens, and protected the liberties of our citizens. I know that there's been disagreement on that at times, and I think that we're now at the point, after two and a half years, where we need to chart a course towards a post-COVID world, a world where we now are moving beyond the need for restrictions. It's now time for individual Albertans to be able to decide for themselves how best to address COVID and their health issues surrounding that virus. I believe the emphasis now needs to switch from the need for societal control more towards one that allows for individual freedom of choice as they make their decisions about how best to protect themselves and to live in a world where there's going to be COVID.

Bill 4, the Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022, addresses this issue of moving the province from a focus on the need to protect the vulnerable and to have control to the need to transition to a post-COVID Alberta where our traditional freedoms are restored. It does so by addressing masking and vaccination mandates and clarifying the roles of the province and the municipalities.

As we have addressed COVID over the last two and a half years, Albertans and all levels of government have struggled to figure out just how best to safeguard the vulnerable while protecting our freedoms and our capacity to make choices in this society. Masking was one policy direction that was pursued, and proof of vaccination was another. We've had to deal with these and try to figure out where that balance lies.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that a mandatory masking policy restricted individual choice and that a proof of vaccination policy, you know, did impact people's individual and personal liberty. When trying to make a decision about these kinds of issues where there's individual choice or societal control, often the best decisions are decisions that provide and put forward the least amount of personal restrictions and provide the most amount of personal freedom and where the decision is made at the most local level. Often people most affected by a public policy are the people that should probably be deciding on the implementation of that policy. If it's going to be affecting them most importantly, then they should be the ones and probably are the ones that are making those decisions about whether they're going to have that placed upon them.

Now, during COVID that was often best done at the municipal level as they could monitor the local conditions and the need for restrictions to protect the local population that was vulnerable. By allowing local municipal decision-making, the vulnerable could be protected where and when necessary while those parts of the province not yet affected by an increased case level of COVID could remain free of masking restrictions or free to be able to make more personal choices.

But when it became clear that COVID had spread across the province to the point where the province needed to step in with provincial mask mandates or with other restrictions, you know, it became obvious that we needed to do something in order to protect the vulnerable at a provincial level, so the government took on that responsibility.

Today the province can and has started to remove those restrictions because it's safe to do so, and that's what the science is telling us. Bill 4 addresses this reality by reinforcing and by clarifying the need for each level of government to remain within their lanes and to remain within the capacity to develop policy that is going to be best for the province and allow us to move forward together as a province.

Mr. Speaker, Canada – I'm going to use this example – is a federal union where the power to govern is divided between different levels of government. The Constitution Act outlines in section 91 and in section 92 the powers of the federal government and the powers of the provincial government. The federal government can, within our Constitution, make a law in areas where the provinces are restricted from being able to make and pass law. We do this for a number of reasons. We're the second-largest country in the world; we have a relatively small population of about 35 million, 37 million people. We want to be able to have a federal system of government because it allows provinces to be able to make decisions about more local issues at the provincial level, and in the federal government we have a national government that can now make decisions on law that are going to be best for the nation as a whole.

The federal government makes laws in areas like defence, our borders, foreign treaties, monetary and fiscal policy, the environment because these are areas in which the nation as a whole is going to be impacted and where we need a national government making those kinds of decisions. Section 92 outlines the provincial powers, things like health care, education, natural resources, et cetera. We set our country up this way because we recognize that the local decisions need to be dealt with at the local level and that national issues need to be dealt with at the national level. This principle is called subsidiarity. It is valuable, and it's important, and it has ensured that this nation functions relatively smoothly and in the interests of the people.

Our country functions best when the federal government drives in its lane and the provincial governments pass legislation that stays in their lane. Now, we would not function nearly as well if a province had the capacity to declare war or to print money or set interest rates. Now, our national prosperity and our national freedom are best addressed when each level of government makes laws that constitutionally it has the right to pass and enforce.

Bill 4 speaks to this issue provincially. The municipal level of government is founded upon a provincial piece of legislation called the Municipal Government Act. [interjection] No. Thank you. The province is responsible for public health, and they can, in addressing a public health issue, decide if subsidiarity needs to be followed or if a province-wide piece of legislation is necessary. Bill 4 simply clarifies that on this issue of masking and proof of vaccination, it is best addressed today, at this time, at the provincial level with oversight by the minister. Bill 4 recognizes that it is now time to move forward towards individual freedom, with fewer COVID restrictions, while still protecting the health of Albertans.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, many, many of the people in my constituency have e-mailed my office, they've phoned me, and they've talked to me on the street clearly saying that it is time now – in many cases, they believe, long past time – for this province to have removed restrictions. My constituents don't want a patchwork of restrictions on their freedom to make individual COVID restriction choices depending on where they happen to be in the province at any given moment in time. They are fine if someone wants to wear a mask as an individual choice, and they are supportive of an Albertan who wants to be vaccinated, but they are clear that it is time to move past COVID as a province, and if that means that we need to have provincial legislation that will move us together as one province towards that freedom, they're supportive of it.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 4 brings clarity, I believe, for Albertans across this province as we move towards a post-COVID society, and it will therefore have my support. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, second reading of Bill 4. Are there others? The hon. Member for St. Albert has risen. [some applause]

Ms Renaud: Feeling love this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

It's my pleasure to rise and speak at second reading of Bill 4, which is the municipal government amendment act, 2022, which is really about face masks and proof of COVID-19 vaccination bylaws. You know, this is another day, another reason why Albertans can't trust this Premier and this government. It was really alarming to me, and I'd like to go back to talk about some of the things that happened last week and some of the public reporting that all of us, I think, in this House were able to see about what happened at the Alberta Municipalities meeting last week. Unfortunately, we had budget estimates preparation and then estimates themselves, so I was unable to be there to hear the comments live and to see what was happening, but it was incredibly disturbing and alarming to read what happened after the fact.

Now, one of the things that struck me, after some comments were made by the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, was seeing some of the comments of the mayor of St. Albert, who is also the president of Alberta Municipalities, on social media. I could see, just in the language that she was using, the incredible amount of frustration at the disrespect that was being shown to her as a leader, as a municipal leader, but also to all municipal leaders across the province, not just mayors and reeves and councils. It was actually sort of sad to see that, Mr. Speaker.

I've been very fortunate to work with Mayor Heron and now President Heron for over six years. What I can tell you about this particular mayor is that she is very even. I think she works very hard every day, and I've watched her do it. She works very hard every day to listen, to listen to her constituents, to listen to her councillors, to listen to her colleagues, and she's incredibly measured. I have seen issues in front of her that were very heated, that people clearly had a lot of passion about, one side or the other. This is a leader that maintains focus and that is very even keeled. This is a person that has said repeatedly that she is willing to work with anybody. It doesn't matter sort of what position they have staked out. She's willing to listen, and she's willing to work with people. That doesn't mean she's always going to agree or not, but it means she's willing to listen. Those aren't just empty words, Mr. Speaker, because I've seen her do that. I have seen her do that very thing over the many years that I've been an MLA watching her in public service.

So it was incredibly frustrating to know that one of our colleagues here in this Chamber decided once again to make a statement that was just so inflammatory that it almost begs the question, Mr. Speaker: is that the purpose of the statement? Is it just to make himself feel better or to maybe, you know, create a bit of an audience? I'm not sure what the reasoning was, but the end result was that it was incredibly disrespectful. It sends a disrespectful message to that level of government from all of us in this place. Although we didn't say it – hopefully, most of us don't support it; I know I certainly don't – it's incredibly disrespectful that a Member of the Legislative Assembly would choose to use that language.

Now, for those of you at home that are paying attention to this bill debate, what I would like to say is that I would like to repeat some of the words that the member chose to use. The MLA for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland said that he's glad the UCP is stripping local government powers because municipalities are the children of the province and it is time for someone to get spanked. Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm pretty sure that most of us in this place understand how important it is to choose the words that we use carefully. I know that we're repeatedly admonished in here for unparliamentary language, so we learn that language and the words that we use are important. I know in the sector that I used to work in, where people with disabilities are regularly called words that I won't repeat and language is used about them that I won't repeat – I understand the damaging impact or the harm that words and language can cause, so to hear a Member of the Legislative Assembly refer to municipalities as children is disrespectful.

But to take it even a step further and to talk about corporal punishment is just shocking to me. It's absolutely shocking to me that this member would choose to talk about corporal punishment in that way, that it is something that is legitimate and should be used by the provincial government. I thought we were past that, Mr. Speaker. I really thought that in 2022 this was not language that we would use and that this was not even something we would consider. [interjection]

Ms Pancholi: Yeah. Thank you to the member. I just wanted to take a moment to intervene on a couple of points. First of all, I'm really glad you brought up the issue of language because that is so incredibly important, and we're seeing the use, I believe, of incredibly inflammatory language and dismissive language towards not just our fellow representatives, right? That's really what municipal elected officials are. They work in partnership with provincial, with their school boards, you know, with the federal elected representatives. It is a partnership to work together, so that language is incredibly dismissive.

I wanted to actually go back because you were speaking about the tone, really, of the mayor of St. Albert, who's somebody that I have not had the opportunity to meet in person, but I have also followed her work. Given the member's role as being the, you know, elected official for St. Albert and having worked with Mayor Heron for as long as you have, I believe that you probably know her in some ways... [Ms Pancholi's speaking time expired] I didn't get to my point.

An Hon. Member: One minute is not long enough.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. No, one minute is not long enough. I think I understood where the member was going with the question. The point is that Mayor Heron, like so many other municipal leaders, absolutely is the closest to the people. I think back to debate that we've had about different levels of government in this Chamber. I thought we could all agree that municipal governments were so important because they truly were the closest to the people. They had a sense of what was going on in the community far faster, far sooner than we did at a provincial level and then far sooner, far faster than federal politicians did because they're right there on the ground. They're dealing with the potholes and the speed limits and service delivery on a very basic level. These are politicians, these are elected leaders that know more from individual constituents, sadly, I think, than any of us will because that is the function of their role. For this government to just summarily dismiss them, to say that they know better – they know better – than municipal governments is truly insulting.

When I saw the angry response – you know, it was really a passionate response from Mayor Heron, who is someone who is so incredibly even keeled and so focused on listening to as many sides as she can in a debate. To see that anger told me that this was a pervasive problem. I'm quite sure that most municipal leaders right across this province feel the same way that she does. It's so disrespectful. The fact that none of these members, Mr. Speaker – none of them: not the Premier, nobody on the front bench, none of the backbenchers, not one person – has stood up and said that they condemn the comments made by the MLA for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland is very, very telling.

Let's talk about the danger of dehumanizing language. This is what we're hearing from this government. Because we've not heard any other members stand up and say that they disagree or they condemn, this leads me to believe that everybody is okay with it on this side, that they're okay with comments made that municipal governments, duly elected Albertans, are like children and deserve to be spanked. Like, come on. We know the dangers of dehumanizing language. It is often justification to treat people differently, and by differently I often mean badly. We have seen this government and their staff go after people on social media, and then we've seen the fallout after. People are threatened. People are harmed. We have seen that language. We have seen what that language does. [interjection]

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the member. I wanted to follow up on that because I note that at the Alberta Municipalities we had the Minister of Municipal Affairs stand up and speak and seem to struggle to get any support for his statements. He certainly had that opportunity at that point to condemn the language used by the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland right there in front of municipal leaders from across the province. Of course, the Minister of Municipal Affairs did not take that opportunity, which, I agree, tends to imply that he agrees with it.

You know, I wonder what you think that means for relationship building, because we also know that under this government we have seen multiple Municipal Affairs ministers who have struggled to develop that key relationship, and when we have members from the government caucus making statements like that, that have not been condemned by ministers, what does the member believe the impact will be on that ongoing relationship with municipalities and the provincial government? I actually think that's a pretty key part, that relationship building between municipalities and the provincial government. I'd love your thoughts on that.

Ms Renaud: Good. Okay. Thank you. Absolutely, I think that it is incredibly important to build solid relationships with municipalities. You know, what is a little bit shocking in all of this is that I guess I believed that this government, this leader of this government would figure out that the vast majority of Albertans and municipal leaders have zero trust in them. Like, none. Zero trust, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] No. Thank you. What leads me to believe that they would actually...

Mr. Orr: Interjection?

Ms Renaud: No. N-o. No.
What, again...

Ms Pancholi: No means no.

Ms Renaud: No always means no.

Mr. Speaker, going back to this, I want to talk about the fact that I actually believed – and maybe that's just delusional thinking on my part – that this is a government that would recognize that Albertans don't trust them – do not trust them – don't trust what they say, don't trust what they do, don't trust what they say they're going to do, all of it. I actually thought that this would be a government that would start to focus some energy on rebuilding that trust, and the first opportunity that they had to do that, it seems to me, would be at a gathering like Alberta Municipalities to talk about the way forward, recovery from COVID. That would be: let's work together; let's build a stronger community; let's work together to get to where we want to be. No. Instead, we're right back to insults from backbenchers like the MLA for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

I want to go back to the comments that I was making. You know, I can hear some of the chatter across the way when I talk about the dangers of dehumanizing language. I do think it's really important that we talk about this because hateful rhetoric causes problems all over the world. We know this. We know that divisive politics leads to things like violence. We know that language is the seed that starts all of that. We understand that, yet here we are with a government that is unwilling to even say one word about one of their colleagues who has summarily decided that duly elected municipal leaders are like children and deserve to be spanked. That is just incredibly vile. It is so incredibly vile.

You know, I hear members opposite regularly stand up and talk about the dangers of domestic violence, the dangers about harm for children and families and how COVID has caused so much stress, has caused so much damage to our collective mental health and to individual mental health and how important it is that as we recover, we recognize all of these things that have happened over the last two years, that have escalated, that have caused all kinds of trouble. Instead, we have a government that is willing to look the other way when one of the backbenchers throws a little fuel on the fire. Just when we don't need a division between different levels of government, what this UCP government seems really intent on doing is creating as much division as possible.

Now, am I surprised, Mr. Speaker? Absolutely not, because I know what's coming up in April. I know exactly what's coming up in April.

An Hon. Member: What's coming up in April?

Ms Renaud: Let me tell you what's coming up in April. There is a review of this Premier's leadership, so whatever is going on with their shenanigans or going on behind the scenes – I think we've seen their behaviour in leadership races before. I think that we can safely assume that there's some stuff going on. But I think what we see on the front is that we see division, and we see a government intent on pointing fingers over there: "Oh, look over here. There's a problem over here. Look over here." Like, that's what they do, Mr. Speaker. We've seen just ineptness. We've seen bills that really don't need to be debated in this place because they're essentially useless at this point. We have seen rhetoric, divisive language again, again, and again. Why is that? This isn't about good governance. This isn't about good leadership. This isn't about building a stronger Alberta. This is about saving some political bacon. That's what this is about. [interjection]

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the member. I'm not sure how much time we have left, but I'd like to just build on that if I may, ask the member to share her comments about what this is really about and the breaking of trust, because we've certainly heard from this Premier – at times, when it suits the Premier, it appears that he's willing to lean on and, in fact, download responsibilities onto municipalities, school boards, locally elected bodies and then, when it serves his purpose, rein them in to look tough, perhaps for an upcoming leadership review in April. Then, of course, we get a totally different side of the Premier. It seems to me that we've seen this flip-flopping back and forth a number of times during COVID in particular but on a number of issues, which I think leads to some Albertans' mistrust of any decisions that this Premier makes because it's always about serving political interests. I'd like to hear the member's thoughts as to how this current flip-flopping – and we know this is an about-face from two months ago – leads to that mistrust.

Ms Renaud: Thank you for that. That's a great question, and it has been political flip-flopping. We've seen so many examples of it over the last couple of years. We've seen this UCP government push the decisions, difficult political decisions sometimes, onto groups that are not themselves, whether that is school boards, whether that is municipalities, and they'll say: "Well, it's not us. It is not us. We are not responsible for this. It is the municipality. It is the school board." Yet when it suits them for whatever reason, whether it's to save their political bacon or not, they're quite happy to impose rules on other people, in this case municipalities. This is all about self-serving governance.

You know, I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but when I think about the kind of governance that I want for Alberta, I want honesty, transparency. I want a government focused on Albertans. I want a government that can work with other levels of government as opposed to trying to throw bombs at them. That's the kind of Alberta I want. That's the kind of governance I want. That's the future that I'm working for, and that is not what we see here today. We have not seen examples of it. I keep hoping that something is going to get better, and it just keeps getting worse.

Today the fact that we are spending precious time – we have very little time to debate bills in this place, particularly to deal with private members' business. Anyways, this isn't that. What is incredibly frustrating is that we are now forced to do this when it is essentially useless. It is useless. We know that all municipalities – there are no longer any bylaws that are going to be taken care of, but that doesn't seem to matter. I find it incredibly sad, a government so willing to pass the buck to municipalities when it suits them and then inflict all kinds of harm by reducing the revenue they receive, increasing the costs that they download – it just goes on and on and on – and then literally treat them horribly and allow members to say really derogatory things about them and then nobody says anything to correct the record. Nobody.

So you let it stand. You're complicit. To say that somebody needs to be spanked is just gross. It is truly gross, and it would be lovely if somebody would stand up and condemn those comments and then put on the record that municipal leaders should be respected. We should work with them, not call them names and inflict harm.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Culture.

Mr. Orr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. You know, I find it entirely one sided, what I've been listening to from the other side here. All through the COVID pandemic many, many, many rural municipalities requested that the province would adopt a regional process, would allow them to have a different policy than the major cities. Throughout that process the province continually said no to them. So if we want to be fair, if we want to treat municipalities with equality and work for unity, let's not forget that part of the process. They were told the same thing that the city of Edmonton was told here: it's a provincial jurisdiction; it's a provincial authority. [interjection] No. Thank you.

I would like to include that, you know, I think the NDP need to quit trying to make conflict out of something that isn't conflicted. I notice that even the city of Edmonton has moved on. I was at the Alberta Municipalities. The mayor of Edmonton – and I respect him for it – sitting at the table with the Premier, was not wearing a mask. He's accepted it. He's moved on.

I would also say that, quite frankly, they should also know that there's more than one side to this story. I had one of the mayors from my riding phone me explicitly to tell me thank you for putting the city in its place.

While the NDP want to make a big deal out of this, there needs to be fairness and equality to all municipalities and respect for all municipalities within the limits of the legislation.

There are two sides to this story. Very clearly, the NDP don't want to accept that. I think it's just time that they need to accept it. We should move on. There are people in Alberta who just simply don't agree with them.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to our colleagues, for the opportunity to engage in debate on what the government has deemed their number 4 top priority this session. Number 1 was, of course, around giving recognition to local folks and honouring the Queen, and there are a couple of others. But this is, like, the first few days of legislation. The government comes in here to try to bring in a bill – you know, they have a massive majority; they will probably be able to ram this through – to take away powers from municipal partners.

I really appreciate the revisionist history that we keep hearing from folks on the other side. For the longest time the government refused to show any kind of leadership on public health, which is, of course, a provincial responsibility – public health is – and downloaded local decisions around how to respond to the public health crisis that we were facing onto individual municipalities, including county councils as well as cities and towns. The same government that's here today with this bill felt just fine delegating or being derelict in their responsibility and counting on local leaders from a variety of different communities, including school boards as another order of government.

I want to be very intentional. When I say, "Order of government," I do that because I know that some people, particularly on the other side, talk about levels, saying that there's one level and then another level and another level, which implies – which was actually articulated by the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland – that this government believes there is a hierarchy. They do. They believe they are the subjects of Justin Trudeau and the federal Liberals, by inflection upon what they have just said, to draw that continuing connection.

I have to say that it continues to be the height of hypocrisy for the government to change the argument at a whim at any point in time because they happen to read a poll that they agree with at that moment in time. You know, leadership is about stepping up when times are tough as well as taking credit when times are less tough, but it seems to be that this government has no interest in being there and that Albertans very clearly can't trust them to be there when times are tough. And when times are good, they continue to make times tougher on ordinary families.

So while we could be here debating a bill that actually returned a rate cap for electricity, that found ways to make power bills more affordable, the government seems very keen to try to blame today's bills on decisions that prior governments made instead of the government today and the minister today stepping up and bringing a bill into this House to actually do something to make electricity costs more affordable for ordinary families. And then they seem so intent in question period to try to play word salad, to try to say: oh, well, you say that it's $50, but it's $150. You know, like, that does not pass the nod test for any ordinary person who's struggling to pay a bill that has doubled over the last few months. Many constituents in Edmonton-Glenora and in all parts of this province are raising significant concerns about the lack of affordability, and one of those areas is around power prices.

For the minister responsible to come into this House and say, "Well, people have individual responsibility; they could sign up for a fixed-rate plan" is kind of like last year, when the government said, "Well, individual mayors and reeves and county councillors and municipal councillors can make their own decisions about how to protect their citizens." [interjection] I'm very happy to give way to my colleague.

Mr. Deol: Thank you for the chance to actually make the intervention on this. It's not surprising to see the government start in this House by bringing in Motion 10 and condemning the federal government in a passion. Their views weren't really different not long ago, three weeks ago. Now they have brought this bill in to take the capacity and the powers away from the elected municipal governments. I just wanted to raise a question. If the member can really expand on why this government is showing the hypocrisy and flip-flopping on this issue. Are they trying to divert attention from people's anger? As I see in communities, people are so angry on the rising cost of utility bills.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to my colleague for highlighting yet again the lack of trust between what this government is choosing to prioritize and what ordinary families are facing in terms of their immediate pressures. Of course, yes, as was mentioned, utility bills, specifically power bills, are a very big one. Another very big one for a lot of families is the cost at the grocery store. I know many families who say to me: you know, we used to be able to spend . . .

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is called. The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to call a point of order under 23(b)(i). I think there's been a lot of discussion so far today that has gone well beyond the scope of this bill, and I would like to see the member actually get focused on the bill and not relitigating question period or electricity prices.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just because we are at second reading, because we are talking about a bill that has really raised a lot of issues of trust in government – I've certainly heard that quite a bit in the responses so far – I don't think this is a point of order. I think that the member is trying to connect these related thoughts at second reading. I look forward to your ruling.

The Speaker: This is not a point of order. I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the Member for Calgary-Klein doesn't want me to talk about electricity prices, but that is a significant issue for a lot of Albertans. There, of course, is a relationship to the Municipal Government Act here. We have a government that's choosing to bring forward amendments to this because they want to, you know, swing a big hammer and claim that they are in the best position to be able to make decisions around individual municipalities' behaviours around bylaws.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

But they refuse to do anything to protect individual consumers from the significant price gouging that they are facing as a result of the current government lifting the rate cap and really only caring about profit margins for corporations, not about bank balances for ordinary families that are struggling to make ends meet.

Absolutely, Bill 4, which is an amendment to the Municipal Government Act, could have been prioritized on focusing on finding ways to make life more affordable for ordinary families. Instead, what the government has done is try to create an opportunity for them to force a massive wedge and to create a greater sense of frustration for municipalities and other orders of government. Instead of coming to this place and working to make life better, working to make life more affordable, working to make sure that we are providing quality public health care, something that should be an objective for multiple governments – obviously, there's a federal role under the Canada Health Act but also the provincial government, being responsible for the delivery of health care – and then, of course, working with local partners on the actual administration of that, the government tries to come in here and swing a big hammer and talk about scolding children and spanking them. That is the underlying tone of this legislation as opposed to one of finding common ground and one of finding ways to address the most pressing issues facing Alberta families right now.

Of course, one of those significant issues is around affordability and, specifically, power bills. That is one of the reasons why, instead of bringing in this municipal government amendment act, an act to essentially do what's already been done and try to create a political wedge... [interjection] Happy to cede way to my colleague and give way for his comments.

Thank you.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Member, for the opportunity once again. You talked about the member for Lac Ste. Anne. Is that how we say it?

Ms Hoffman: Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Deol: Parkland. Yes. Thank you.

With the way he described his level of understanding of democracy and the level of institutions and their contributions in a democratic society, I would ask the member to expand on: how concerning is it that none of the government members really differentiated from that statement from the member, not in the House, not publicly, not in the media, and not even during the debate? I would ask the member if she can just really expand on this, how this is really concerning for democracy in this province.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you to my colleague from Edmonton-Meadows. If I'm to think back on my educational training, specifically on opportunities where we were focusing on how to prevent bullying and how to create safe and inclusive school environments, one of the biggest lessons that I remember aspiring teachers being taught was that your silence signals your consent. If you see somebody doing something wrong, if you see somebody behaving in a wrong fashion, whether it's in school, whether it's in the community, whether it's in the Legislature, and you sit back and you say nothing, you are implying that you consent to that behaviour, that you think that that behaviour is okay.

It really doubles down when somebody uses threatening language towards another elected official – threatening, physical language towards another elected official – and says that they deserve to be spanked. Madam Speaker, it is the height of disrespect, of arrogance, of bullying, and of consenting to the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland's language and therefore his intent behind that language. This UCP government is implying and saying, by saying nothing, that they are absolutely fine with the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland threatening physical violence towards other orders of government and, therefore, elected officials. It is...

An Hon. Member: Shameful.

Ms Hoffman: It is shameful, and it is disrespectful. It does not belong among adult discourse, let alone among the discourse of elected officials. Adults shouldn't speak that way about or to one another. They just shouldn't.

I remember when I was a young child going to school and my dad was my principal. I remember snooping through his desk after school one day, when he was trying to keep me busy while he was working, and finding in the back of one of his drawers the strap. I remember having a conversation with him – we certainly didn't have corporal punishment in our household, and there was a symbol of it in the desk at the school – about why it was that that was there. Because the government hadn't acted yet to end corporal punishment, it was left to individual school divisions. It was. It was really left to individual school divisions to step up, one after another after another, and say that that behaviour – it is not positive role modelling, when a child is acting up, to hit them. It is not telling them that that's the way that you behave in a civilized society. I will say that the behaviour and the language from the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland is not positive role modelling. If he wants to say...

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm just going to take the opportunity to maybe refocus your remarks back on the bill instead of members of this Assembly. There's certainly been an adequate amount of time given in that regard. I would just ask that you focus your remarks so that you can stay on this bill and keep order and decorum in this House.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Madam Speaker. So when members are speaking to legislation and they say things that are highly offensive and disrespectful and threaten violence towards one another, I think that as members of the Assembly, as it relates directly to legislation and the opportunity we have to model good behaviour – and I appreciate your guidance. It should be followed.

I also want to say that other orders of government include school divisions, and while this is specifically about municipal governments, I want to talk about the way that the government has been treating other orders of government, whether it be the federal government, whether it be municipal governments, or whether it be school boards. There is definitely – and I get it. The Premier was very successful in the last election campaign in fighting against the federal government as his primary message to voters – right? – and creating conflict between the provincial and the federal government. I totally get it. He was absolutely given a mandate at that time to fight the federal government on some issues.

He did not say that he was going to fight with municipalities. In fact, the UCP said that they were going to respect the big-city charters, the charters that had been reached with the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, and then very quickly after the election broke that promise and rescinded that legislation. That was probably the first example where we could have anticipated that we would see further behaviours along this path.

Then the current government decided, again in relationship to municipalities, to not pay their taxes fully – right? – the grants in place of taxes. They just said: “Well, we’ll just cut those grants in half. So be it.” Could you imagine if a regular ratepayer decided that they wanted to cut how much they were paying in tax unilaterally, with just: “I’m only going to pay half my property tax this year. I know the government is jacking up my educational property taxes, but I’m only going to pay half of what it was last year. I’m not going to actually pay what the assessment is for this year.” That simply wouldn’t pass, and that’s because, through you, Madam Speaker, through the Municipal Government Act we have a delineation of authority and powers, and it should be up to every order of government to respect the orders and powers of other orders of government.

When I think about the complete lack of respect shown to democratically elected school boards in the province of Alberta when they are given the task of creating, for example, their capital plans and submitting their needs assessment for what they believe is necessary to provide a quality education to the students registered in that school district – it flows from legislation very much modelled on the Municipal Government Act. It flows from the School Act – right? – and the Education Act to be able to guide the local, elected, closest to the ground on those specific issues politicians in working with administration to create a nonbiased, evidence-based submission. Of course, what we’ve seen under the current government is a complete refusal to fund the vast majority of those projects that were submitted based on a needs assessment and criteria that the government helps work to set and establish when they’re communicating to their partners, what should be their partners, local school authorities.

For example, again in the city of Edmonton we’ve seen a refusal to fund any public school projects at all. I am relieved that there are at least two for the Catholic school board, but that certainly isn’t anywhere near enough projects for a city growing at our rate. With the Edmonton public school board seeing their enrolment grow at the highest rate right now in the country, for the province that says that they honour choice to refuse to actually give that same level of appreciation, respect, and capacity to a board seeing such growth pressures I think again speaks to this current provincial UCP government’s complete lack of respect for local government.

Again, here through the municipal government amendment act we have yet another piece of legislation that speaks exactly to how the UCP can’t be trusted to keep their word, full stop. [interjection] To my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie, please. Or Edmonton-Meadows, rather. My apologies.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Member, once again for the opportunity to raise my concern. In the last year the Premier basically abdicated his responsibility. He was looking at the municipalities and said that public health decisions – and I’ll quote: these decisions are best taken locally. That was the Premier’s view. The Premier encouraged municipalities to implement their own health measures due to diverse needs across the province. But a year later, when the Premier is taking a 180-degree turn, it seems to be more to do with UCP politics instead of really serving Albertans or for the sake of the safety of everyday Albertans. I would appreciate it if the member can expand on this, taking a U-turn from what the Premier believed in last year and what he is doing now.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the question. Certainly, one of the things that I look at regularly – and I’m sure many Albertans do – is modelling and data and tracking trends, and I think that we were all hopeful a few weeks ago that we would see a significant decline in the rate of infections and spread. We have seen a bit of a decline, but I will say that the rate isn’t anywhere near as rapid a pace as the increase was that led to the current rates.

Thank you to the member for highlighting the discrepancy between the Premier’s words and actions during this public health crisis over time. Some people have said that they are concerned – and I would love to have clarification from the government if that’s not the case – that one of the reasons why the provincial government has decided to push a one-size-fits-all model is because they don’t want there to be regional differences between the data to show that the government could have done more to protect citizens if there are huge spikes in some parts of the province and not in others, because, of course, if you uniform behaviour, then you can’t have local analysis based on intermunicipal jurisdictional behaviours and how that impacts the data.

I know that the government has made a number of decisions to try to make it more and more difficult for people to have the information; for example, how difficult it is right now to actually get a PCR test when at the very beginning, when cases were a fraction of what they are today, we were all able to get PCR tests if we had any concerns, whether we were a close contact or not, whether we were symptomatic or not. The government at that time, about 20 months ago, decided that they wanted to have Albertans have as much individual information as possible with their own personal health, and at that time one of the arguments was that individual Albertans can make decisions about how to support themselves, support their families, support their communities, and protect one another.

This government has worked so aggressively to try to reduce the amount of information that individuals have and therefore their ability to make informed individual decisions, right? You hear it from comments like the one just given from the Minister of Culture, where he doesn’t hear what municipal leaders are saying generally; he notices whether or not they’re wearing masks, right? That’s the comment, that because the mayor of Edmonton took off his mask when he sat down with him, he respects him. Like, the language and the duality of saying, “It’s about individual choice and individual responsibility” but then saying, “I respect somebody because of their behaviour and how they interacted with me given the fact that we said that it’s individual choice and responsibility, and therefore he chose to follow my lead” just isn’t respectful of the role of individuals. Again, it’s individuals who comprise local municipal governments.

We are debating Bill 4, the municipal government amendment act. I have to say that the fact that the government continues to try to stay on a path of division . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other members wishing to join the debate on Bill 4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Happy to rise this afternoon to join debate and talk about legislation that’s been brought forward to the House. Always excited to talk about what the legislation says, what the legislation doesn’t say but, more importantly, what is being said about that legislation that’s tabled before us and how it governs debate. As you can imagine, throughout the debate this afternoon I’ve been taking notes and listening very, very carefully to what everybody is saying, and I hate to say this. As usual, what I’m finding is that what’s being said about the legislation isn't quite lining up, which – I hate to say it – tends to be not only a consistent but a persistent problem by the government.

I think that what I will start my comments with on Bill 4, the Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022 – it appears to me that this piece of legislation is a solution that is frantically looking for a problem to try to solve. Now, you're probably wondering why I'm saying that, Madam Speaker. One of the comments that I heard just a little bit earlier from the Minister of Culture was talking about how it seems that the municipalities have moved on. Well, if that is indeed true, if the municipalities have moved on, why hasn't the government? Why hasn't the government moved on? That means: why are we busy with Bill 4 if the municipalities have moved on? That part of it isn't quite lining up.

Some of the other things that I heard – and I appreciate the minister of gas bringing forward the comments from the Minister of Municipal Affairs to open up a debate. One of the things that concerned me on that was, you know, hearing that – and I'm paraphrasing here; I'm sure it's not exactly accurate – the government is not interested in infringing on municipalities unless absolutely necessary. I always love these little catch-all phrases that get put in all over the place and things because it allows for that one little moment in time where, if you really do want to infringe on them, then all you have to do is come up with a reason for it to be necessary. I'm curious, you know: who decides what's necessary in terms of infringing upon those? [interjection] I see my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud, and I'm happy to let her intervene for a moment.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the member. I want to follow up on what I believe you were just about to comment on, which was, you know: what really is the precedent that this is setting, right? I think that's what we were hearing very much from the president of the Alberta Municipalities and from many other local councillors. The provincial government has decided that when it sees fit, without consulting with municipalities, without actually speaking to the diversity of people around the province who may have different views on this but particularly the local councillors who are on the ground and understand what's happening in their communities – does this not now open up the potential that any time they want to, the provincial government or this provincial government, let's be clear, will intervene and amend the act and that even when it's no longer necessary, for example like right now, they're flexing their power to sort of show, "We will always impose our views upon your local constituents"? That is a precedent that I think is deeply concerning to all of us. I'd love to hear the member's comments on that.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a quick intervention that even interventions are to be directed through the chair.

The hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'll make sure to direct the answer through the chair as well. No. Thank you for that, and, yeah, you did. You kind of read my mind as to where I was going around that because, you know, I'm sure, just like the government caucus members who attended the Alberta Municipalities and were chatting with the municipal leaders – I, of course, did so as well, and that was one of the things that came up in conversation. I mean, their president, the one that municipalities have duly elected, had said: we are concerned that the government of Alberta is setting a troubling precedent by amending the MGA, Alberta's principal piece of legislation governing municipalities, without prior consultation. Again, things aren't adding up. I'm hearing: well, we're consulting with municipalities. The president just said that you weren't on this. So which is it? Are you consulting, or aren't you consulting? Are you making it up, or what's going on here?

When I had the opportunity to speak with municipal leaders, that was one of the things they kind of pointed out: "Okay; we understand you're maybe doing it for this, but then what's next? Are you willing to take it further, or is this just, really, kind of the end of it?" Like I said, going back to the opening comments of second reading in this debate, when we heard that the government is not interested in infringing on municipalities unless it becomes necessary, again I'll reiterate: who decides what is necessary, and how far are you willing to go? Again, it's that little bit of troubling piece of information.

When I think of that, also one of the comments brought up in the opening part was around how this bill is very limited in scope. Of course, I'm always one to go through the language and see, again, what it's saying, what it isn't saying, things like that. When I hear about this, limited in scope, I can't help but have to direct people to page 2 of Bill 4, right at the top. Of course, it starts over here on page 1, "an individual to wear a face mask," but it goes on to say, you know, "the spread of COVID-19." Now, here's the catch-all phrase that everybody just loves to throw in there as their little rip cord, their chance to hit the ejection seat and get out of what they're saying, "... or any other communicable disease, as defined in the Public Health Act."

So really what you're saying is that this isn't just about COVID-19. This is about whatever else that shows up in the Public Health Act as a communicable disease, and if you decide that it's necessary, you will overrule municipalities. Again, it's that standard, catch-all phrase that just allows you the chance to get out of things. I hate to say it. When you say that it's very limited in scope, the language in the legislation says otherwise. Again, it's always that head-butting of things. I think the concern that we're hearing from municipal leaders – and I'm sure we're probably going to hear the same from the rural Alberta municipalities as well, from their leaders – is: what's next? What else could come up?

My colleagues have certainly gone on at length about some comments that were made about municipalities. I'm just going to leave it at: that is unprofessional. These are duly elected leaders by the people of Alberta, the same ones that elect all of us. To come up with comments like that is simply unprofessional, and you need to do better, not to mention any of the other stuff.

You know, my good friend from Calgary-Buffalo, who is also the critic for Municipal Affairs, when he was talking a little bit about how this was supposedly a government that was built by the grassroots, run by the grassroots, things like that – I couldn't help but catch that comment a little bit earlier. I hate to say it, but your actions over the past couple of years clearly have said otherwise. It sounds like the grassroots just got – you know when you're mowing your lawn, Madam Speaker, and you catch a dip in the lawn, and the lawn mower falls down and just shaves that grass, like, right off down to the dirt? It seems like that's kind of what's happened with your grassroots. You've kind of shaved it right off, and it's right down to the dirt. These heavy-handed approaches, like we're seeing here in Bill 4, speak something different than what you're saying is actually going on.

You know, when it comes to trying to build the province of Alberta, when you're trying to create a strong team, fighting with your partners does not make that job any easier, and if anything, for every step that you try to take forward, you end up taking two steps back. Again, kind of going back to the unprofessional comments that I was talking about a little bit earlier, if you want to be able to build that relationship with municipal leaders so that they trust you, you have to be involved with them as partners, not just seeing them as some lower level of government. [interjection] I see my friend from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

5:20

Member Irwin: Thank you, Member. You've touched on so many things, and one of the things that just spurred me to jump up there was your comment about lack of trust. It seems to me – maybe it's the former social studies and English teacher in me – that we can see a theme arising of lack of trust in this government, and I think you and I and any of our colleagues on this side of the House who've been talking to Albertans are hearing that a lot as well, right? While Albertans are struggling with so many things – paying their bills is an example – they've got a government that they simply can't trust to do the right thing to address these issues. I would love for the Member for Edmonton-Decore to just talk a little bit more about this and expand a little bit on the lack of trust that Albertans are expressing in this government. This bill, Bill 4, is just one of countless examples, in fact, that we're seeing from this government. If I had more time – well, it's true that I'll be able to speak to this bill shortly to just talk about some of these grave examples of mistrust in this government.

Thank you.

Mr. Nielsen: Yeah. Thank you for that question. Again, it's funny how it always comes back to legislation presented: what does it say, what doesn't it say, and what are you saying about that? You know, I always see the government standing up and saying how they're trying to make the lives of Albertans better, trying to make it more affordable. If you're trying to make it better, then why would you bring forward, say, for instance, legislation that would change who's controlling their pensions, just as one example? Or perhaps you start to bring forward red tape legislation that reduces an Albertan's ability to be as safe as possible in the workplace. I'm referring to changes around health and safety committees. We've certainly had this argument before, how, like I said, the worker at the ice cream plant can't tell the worker how to work safely at the milk plant.

You see these examples of, you know, things being said to make their lives more affordable, yet it's becoming more expensive. I mean, a quick example of that, Madam Speaker, would be all of a sudden charging them to go to a park that they've never had to be charged before to attend. To more directly answer that question from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, it's those kinds of things that people see, and it doesn't add up to them. So you start to see this distrust.

I mean, for that matter, Madam Speaker, I could go all the way back to the very beginning of the 30th Legislature, you know, even before that, when the Premier promised Albertans that he would disclose his donor list from the leadership. That hasn't happened. That shakes trust in people. You've promised to do that. You said, "I will disclose this," and then you don't, and then you wonder why people distrust you.

Here you have a bill that is interfering with municipal leaders' abilities to make local decisions in their area. You're starting to interfere with that. I should point out something that I know this government has been very vocal and disdainful about, what they feel has been an infringement from the federal government on their ability to be able to do things. Yet all of a sudden now it's rolling downhill, and you have the province doing that to municipalities. Again, I will point out that it's that case of trust where you have these elected representatives, as I mentioned, who said: well, it's funny; I didn't hear anything until the bill hit the table. That shakes trust. Then you have a situation where it's very, very hard to work with these democratically elected individuals in order to move the lives of Albertans forward in a positive and growing way.

I guess, as I was saying a little bit earlier, in order to do that, the last thing you want to be doing is starting to pick fights. We've seen this throughout the last several years, where the government seems content on picking fights with, well, quite frankly, just about everybody. It's getting hard-pressed to be able to find somebody that they're not picking a fight with. You know, we saw the government picking fights with doctors, and we saw them picking fights with nurses, and then we saw them picking fights with chiropractors and physiotherapists around removing their ability to order diagnostic imaging so that their patients could get timely and effective care. So it's not surprising that even when I'm in my chiropractor's office, I hear from residents that are saying: this wasn't what I signed up for. These are your supporters telling me: this isn't what I signed up for.

Now they have something like Bill 4, that's interfering with the ability of these municipal leaders, voted for by these individuals, all of our individuals, saying: well, we don't like that decision. We're surprised, as we've heard in some of the comments during opening and a couple of other times, you know: how far else will this end up going? What's the next thing that's going to come up? Yet there seems to be almost some surprise as to why that thinking is there. I mean, this isn't original thinking on my part; this is just what I've heard from people and from leaders. [interjection] I see my friend from Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the member. I'm curious. I find it kind of interesting, because I know the member referenced the fact, you know, of hearing from local municipal leaders. I'm certain every member in this – well, I know that every member in this Assembly, of course, represents areas that also have local representation, and therefore they must also be hearing from local councillors on these issues. I'm wondering, through you, Madam Speaker, whether or not the member could speak to perhaps his surprise that none of the government members are standing up and speaking out against what is clearly a limit on local authority. I seem to recall that that seems to be a primary tenet of much of traditional conservative ideology – it certainly has been abandoned wholeheartedly by this government, this idea of support for the grassroots and the local representatives – yet we're hearing no members of the government caucus stand up and speak for the rights of local representatives.

Mr. Nielsen: Yeah. Thanks for that question. I mean, I guess I'm sounding like a broken record here a little bit, Madam Speaker, but again referencing just one example that we all know – it's public; it's out there – the president of Alberta Municipalities: we are concerned that the government of Alberta is setting a troubling precedent by amending the MGA, Alberta's principal piece of legislation governing municipalities, without prior consultation. So what is it? Is she accurate, or did you not hear it, or something else? There's at least one example out there. I know there are more. I was in the room. I heard it for myself. It's kind of like when our offices, our e-mails get bombarded from, you know, all kinds of different areas of the province and we're all CCed on things. I find it very, very difficult to believe that not one single member of the government or government caucus has heard from a municipal leader that Bill 4 is not a great idea. If indeed they're all happy go lucky and heading off into the future, why aren't you guys, then?

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other members wishing to join the debate on Bill 4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House to speak to this bill on behalf of my constituents, Bill 4, Municipal Government (Face Mask and Proof of COVID-19 Vaccination Bylaws) Amendment Act, 2022. I will say at the beginning of my comments that I do strongly oppose this bill.

This is another day and yet another reason why Albertans can't trust this Premier and they cannot trust this UCP government. The reasons are obvious. It was not long ago, just last year, when Albertans were expecting leadership from this Premier on very similar issues that the Premier and the UCP government are claiming to address under this bill, the safety of our constituents and the safety of Albertans. That was then. The Premier said that public health decisions are best taken locally, the Premier encouraging municipalities to step up to implement their own health measures due to the diverse needs across the province. Those were the Premier's exact words and the reasoning the Premier was giving behind his statement. A year after, the government is totally and directly contradicting themselves from that exact view by taking decision-making powers away from municipalities and locally elected leaders.

Local municipal leaders are, similarly, elected by their constituents, as we are in the provincial Legislature, for their mandates. It was more disturbing to see the way the government House member tried to express his feelings or tried to support the bill, the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland constituency, saying that municipalities are children, not elected governments but children, of the provincial government and that they deserve to be spanked.

Many read this statement – and I was looking for the information where I would encourage the member to really go back and look at this. He really needs to develop his understanding on what he was proposing. An article published in the Atlantic: How Spanking Affects Later Relationships by James Hamblin. I'll just read a small excerpt of the article.

For years, the American Academy of Pediatrics has been warning against spanking, and many countries have laws against it. A 2007 UN convention has said corporal punishment violates the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which protects children from “all forms of physical or mental violence,” and should be banned in all contexts. Psychologist Alan Kazdin, the director of the Yale Parenting Center and former president of the American Psychological Association, has admonished that spanking is “a horrible thing that does not work.” It predicts later academic and health problems: Adults who were spanked as children “regularly die at a younger age of cancer, heart disease, and respiratory illnesses.”

This is the article. It goes on and on. They do also study around this issue, how it contributes to family violence and child human rights.

I'm so surprised the member did not only jump to explain his view and explain this very piece of legislation we are discussing in this House, but none of the government House members just, you know, differed from that member's view even through second reading of this bill as well. [interjection] Oh, thank you. I'll give way in the intervention to the hon. member for the north Edmonton constituency.

Member Irwin: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Deol: Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Thank you.

Member Irwin: Thank you. It is a long riding name.

Yeah. You know, I just wanted to jump up on the Member for Edmonton-Meadows' concerns about, which many of us have raised today, the incredibly disrespectful – “disrespectful” doesn't even seem like a strong enough word – comments from Lac Ste.

Anne-Parkland. While we've heard a bit of heckling from the other side, we've not, as that member said, had any of them stand up and either defend or apologize for those remarks. Always the optimist, I'm hopeful that someone from that side will stand up and join debate. They're so passionate about this bill; it's strange that they're oddly silent about it. I would just love the member to speak a little bit more about the just absolute lack of respect from that member and what message comments like those send to Albertans. Yeah, as he was . . . [Member Irwin's speaking time expired]

Yeah. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll take this opportunity for my own intervention before this debate starts to become about a member in this House and not the bill at hand. I can appreciate and I hope that every member in this House appreciates the wide latitude which has been given in that regard, but those are the cautions that I have for you while you continue your debate.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for giving me the opportunity to expand on some of the information as I was already actually focusing on these very disturbing views. It's very, you know, sad, I would say, to see, when we are discussing a very important piece of legislation, how that is going to affect the democratic powers of the elected governments, the members of this House, the government members, tried to explain it to very – I don't know. I'm struggling to find a reasonable word for that.

I know Madam Speaker has warned us to stick to the purview of this bill, but I respectfully, through Madam Speaker, wanted to say that we absolutely do not have intentions to bring, you know, how to say – to divert from the intentions and the proposals of this bill that we are discussing in the House, but those comments are seriously troubling. I've seen that the government House members participated in the debate on this bill – we are debating this bill in second reading – but it's very troubling to see that I'm not seeing any member coming up with the improved level of understanding of what this bill exactly is proposing, how this bill is going to affect the governing of the local governments and the relationship between the provincial government and the local governments. Instead, the member stood in public and made comments in public. As of today it still seems like the government House members support those views if they do not deflect, if they do not differentiate from that member's view, and that is very, very troubling for me.

You know, I never claim, myself, to be a hundred per cent; it's a learning curve. We all learn something new every day. The views that were expressed by this House member are very sad for not only government members but all House members if we do not really, you know, come, stand up, and condemn those views and ask the members to go back and please help yourself and get some better understanding of the views he proposed when he was supporting this bill.

I will try to stay on the bill, what exactly this bill is proposing. These powers this bill is trying to weigh currently exist under municipal authorities, but now the Premier is directly targeting them first. That is obvious. This is happening due to a clear political reason. We all know that April 9 was not the date; April 9 was really decided under pressure and what's happening within the governing party, and this bill specifically is introduced in this House to continue to help gain support for the Premier's coming meeting. We have seen the pattern. We have seen the information for the past many months that is continued on the decline, that every single information keeps coming; the Premier is struggling to get Albertans' trust, the way he dealt with the COVID-19 pandemic for the past two years, and the way he's still dealing the Alberta Health orders and the way . . . [interjection] I will give it to my hon. member for – I will say the constituency this time.

The Deputy Speaker: Just really quickly, hon. member, there is no need for you to remember the other member's riding name. You can just simply make way.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just remembered. I was going to say – thank you for your help, anyway.

The Deputy Speaker: It will be easier.

Member Irwin: Well, it is Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and I will say it proudly every time until he masters it. [interjection] Again, I'm hopeful that Cardston-Siksika will stand up and join debate if he's so very passionate over there heckling me. Again, it's very odd to hear such silence from this government when they claim to be passionate about this bill, apparently, so hopefully they will stand up and join debate.

What was I even talking about now? Yes. The member mentioned trust. As I shared with the Member for Edmonton-Decore, there seems to be a theme emerging here with this government, and it's about lack of trust. We're hearing that. We are all, believe it or not, out on the doors and talking to folks across Alberta, not just in our own ridings. I've been in a few of your ridings, in fact, and people are talking about the lack of trust in this incompetent government. I would love for the Member for Edmonton-Meadows to talk a little bit more about just how the actions outlined here in Bill 4 lead to further mistrust in this government.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Member, once again, and thank you, Madam Speaker, for your help. You know, I know it's not mandatory to remember your colleague's riding, but I think this is good practice, to remember your fellow colleague's riding if you can. I will just keep working on it.

I just wanted to read this statement, views coming from Alberta Municipalities' president Cathy Heron, what she said to the media: we're concerned that the government of Alberta is setting a troubling precedent by amending the MGA, Alberta's principal piece of legislation governing municipalities, without prior consultation. This is a key word; I will repeat it again: Alberta's principal piece of legislation governing municipalities, without prior consultation. Why didn't the government consult, pick up the phone instead of picking fights? What other measures is this government considering in their war with the municipalities?

We have seen this pattern since the UCP government took office in 2019. I wanted to reframe to say why government could learn from their own things, why this government even ended up having three different municipal ministers in three years. There is miscommunication. There is a disconnect. What the Premier said during the election – this is the Premier who signed the grassroots guarantee. He may be the only political leader – I don't know of any political leader in the history of, you know, provincial elections or the province's political history that has signed the grassroots guarantee in their campaign by promising Albertans how he will always respect their fundamental rights, and now under this very Premier and the UCP government municipalities actually witnessed attack after attack, attack after attack.

When it comes to taxes, you know, they forced municipalities to raise property taxes in many ways to even keep their services ongoing, and a number of municipalities stood up and said, like, that it's not even possible for themselves. The way this provincial government has been dealing and treating those municipalities, to keep the municipal status, the municipalities are forced to increase taxes in billions of dollars, and the students in municipalities are facing skyrocketing tuition fees and increased interest rates. The student debt in this province is going to be historic under this UCP government.

We have seen in this budget, that is still under discussion, that's still going to be voted on, that government did not even deliver near, not even close to, not even 5 per cent of what the municipalities were asking this government to support in order to have their projects going, in order to have those municipal governments able to serve their own constituents under the mandate they were elected on. We have seen the municipalities lose 33 per cent on MSI, and we have seen the municipalities come in with added telephone user fees, and that was the government that promised they will – actually, I think they are doing it. They said that they will treat municipalities differently, but hopefully that didn't mean that government is treating differently – I'm sure that it didn't mean, but now truly the actions speak louder than . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The bell is not working, but your time is up, hon. member. A glitch.

The hon. Member – this is why I get you guys not to remember the names – for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues who have taken the time to speak at second reading of Bill 4, municipal government amendment act. I'd also like to note the quiet response and lack of advocacy for this bill from the government members.

In fact, that's actually what I'd like to target my comments to today because I think that when I look at Bill 4, which is designed to basically revoke the powers of municipalities to make decisions on public health for their own constituents, what's remarkable about this action at this time in particular is that once again, I believe, not only are the Premier but also his caucus members hoping that the hypocrisy and flip-flopping that they have taken will not be noticed. They're hoping perhaps that Albertans will have forgotten – in fact, I'm going to bet that they're counting on Albertans forgetting – about the way they've handled COVID from the very beginning when it comes to the next election. I think that's the only way that they can hope for re-election, that Albertans will completely have amnesia and forget how they've conducted themselves, but many Albertans, most Albertans, especially those who have had, unfortunately, the tragedy of having lost a member of their family to COVID or someone in their community or a colleague, certainly won't forget.

One of the things that I remember and many Albertans will remember is that during the second wave of the pandemic, in late 2020, this Premier was the last Premier of any province of Canada to bring in a provincial mask mandate despite the fact that every other province was doing it and that public health officials were calling for it and doctors were calling for it. This Premier stood his ground and dug in his heels and refused to bring in a provincial mask mandate well past the time when everybody knew that it was absolutely required to get those numbers under control, and the basis for that argument was because of the local interests of local communities. He said: municipalities across the province were affected differently, and they should be allowed to make those decisions. He was very clear on abdicating his responsibility to lead during a public health crisis by putting that down onto local municipalities. In fact, he said: this is a very, very big and diverse province, and every local municipality should be making that decision on their own. That was his rationale for doing that.

Now here we are, two years later, and all of a sudden the Premier – we're not surprised at this point that the Premier changes his mind depending on the way the political winds are blowing – doesn't care about local municipalities.

But what I am surprised about, Madam Speaker, is that there were a number of MLAs in the government caucus who signed letters, who spoke to the importance of: "Let's not have province-wide health requirements because certain regions were affected differently. My constituency was affected differently. Make sure those rules don't apply to me because it's different out here in rural Alberta. It's different out here in my community." They resisted. They signed letters. They spoke out. There was all the knifing each other that was happening – it's still happening to this day in this caucus – from government members who were insisting upon defending the rights of their local municipalities and regions to make their own decisions.

But now all of a sudden those same MLAs are quiet. Now all of a sudden they don't seem to have an issue with the Premier imposing his views on their local constituents. What's remarkably clear is that principles do not guide the decision-making of this government. They do not only not decide the decision-making; they don't even guide the day-to-day actions of the caucus members on that side. They seem to be guided just by their own political interest at the time. When it suits their purpose, local decision-making is the number one issue that drove them into politics. I seem to remember the Member for Peace River saying that local decision-making was so important, yet silence from the government caucus in defending local decision-making right now. In fact, they seem to be very happily throwing their local municipal councillors, their city councillors under the bus and saying: you're children.

Now, let me be clear. I don't know why the members on that side can't seem to do it, but I completely renounce the statements made by the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland. I don't actually even think that needs to be discussed anymore. It's so abhorrent a statement that we should all be able to say that. We on this side of the House have no problem saying that. It seems to be a problem for the government members.

When I think about this government's position now, that apparently we need all this consistency, the Premier says – I had to take phone calls and conversations. I know many of my colleagues had to do that with school board officials, for example, who were left hung out to dry during successive waves of this pandemic by this government, who refused to provide any clear direction on how they should handle things. They were left on their own – how many school years? At least two school years began with almost no supports from this government.

I remember school board trustees saying to me that they were having to field questions from parents about: "Should we wear masks? Should we not wear masks?" And they were saying: "I'm a school board trustee. I was elected to implement local education programs that meet the needs of my constituents, and I can't get an answer from this government." They did, though. They did their best. They managed the interests of their students, of their teachers, of their parents, and they tried to guide a way for the community that they served through the pandemic. Now this government is saying: oh, well, we don't trust local decision-making.

This is very clear, Madam Speaker, that this bill is only about politics. It's only about the leadership review of the Premier. Once again, just like every other decision that has been made by this government through this pandemic, it has not been driven by evidence. It has not been driven by data. It hasn't been driven by consultation with those who are most affected and those who are most knowledgeable. It's been driven by politics, which is why the trust is broken, which is why when this Premier stood up and said he was going to be listening to . . . [interjection] No, thank you.

Mr. Schow: I'm trying to participate.

Ms Pancholi: No means no. I know that's a difficult concept for the male members of that caucus to understand. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Language Creating Disorder

The Deputy Speaker: You have to withdraw.

Ms Pancholi: I withdraw, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: And apologize.

Ms Pancholi: No. I withdraw, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, perhaps we're maybe halfway there. We could make it all the way there and continue on with debate, or we will debate a point of order.

Ms Pancholi: I apologize and withdraw for the sentiments of the members across the way. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: So concluded. Hon. member, please proceed with your remarks.

Ms Pancholi: As I was saying . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, only the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has the floor. That should be the voice that I hear in the debate. If you have something to say about the rules and the debate in this House, you may stand on your feet and call a point of order, and we can have . . . [interjections] Order. If members wish to have conversations with one another, perhaps this Assembly is not the place to do it. The member has apologized and withdrawn her remarks, and it has been accepted. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has the floor and a very short time left.

Please proceed.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I was saying, I sincerely hope that the members of the government caucus will stand up for what I believe they claimed are principles that they have and stand up for local decision-making. If that were the case, these government members should have no problem standing up and saying that they reject this government bill. Instead, we can't even hear them actually defend this bill. Instead, they're willing to throw local decision-makers under the bus to make public health decisions in the abdication of responsibility that they've shown throughout successive waves of this pandemic. They've downloaded that onto school boards. They've downloaded onto municipalities.

Now they stand up and they say that those members of local government cannot be trusted. That is insulting not only to those officials, who have been managing through a very difficult pandemic, but it's insulting to Albertans to think that once again this government cannot be trusted. They cannot be trusted. They don't mean what they say, and they don't say what they mean. They only say what they need to say to win leadership reviews, local nomination races maybe, the things that they need to do, that they think they need to say to get re-elected, but they don't run on principle. That is what we have all been suffering through over the last few months of this pandemic, Madam Speaker. I look forward to an opportunity where Albertans are treated with the respect that they deserve by a government that actually runs on principles.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the clock strikes 6. The House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 15, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we are joined in the galleries by seven social work students from MacEwan University. They are guests of the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

I also see a friend of the Legislature, Mr. Doug Brinkman.

Please all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Ukraine

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, for weeks now the world has been forced to witness heartbreaking scenes coming out of Ukraine: families fleeing, bombs hitting Ukrainian cities, homes, even hospitals as Vladimir Putin continues his illegal, unjustifiable, and evil invasion of peaceful, democratic Ukraine, with millions of refugees fleeing violence being wrought solely on the whim of a tyrant with no respect for human rights or care for the suffering he's inflicting on a sovereign people. It's tragic, it's wrong, and history will record it as such. Today I watched as Ukrainian President Zelensky addressed the national Parliament in Ottawa. He spoke about how 97 children have lost their lives in the invasion, a devastating statistic.

I speak today as a proud Ukrainian Canadian, one of hundreds of thousands of Albertans who are members of the Ukrainian diaspora. Alberta is home to the largest Ukrainian diaspora and the largest Ukrainian population outside of Ukraine and Russia. The contributions of the Ukrainian community can be seen in every corner of this province.

This province has come together to support Ukraine. Albertans, whether of Ukrainian descent or not, have risen to give what they can to offer support to the Ukrainian community. The universities are offering financial support to Ukrainian students impacted by the violence. But there's more that we must do. We need to ensure that Alberta is a welcoming place for Ukrainians fleeing this unfathomable violence. We need to ensure that this province gives all the support it can to support the Ukrainian people now and into the future. We need to be there to support Ukraine's people now, during this brutal, senseless attack on a democratic country and the very pillars of democracy. We must be there for them now and when Ukraine recovers from the atrocities of this invasion. I know that Albertans will continue to be there for the Ukrainian people.
[Remarks in Ukrainian]

Canmore Nordic Centre

Ms Rosin: Mr. Speaker, when most people think about Alberta's primary industries, they tend to think of oil, gas, agriculture, and forestry. Seldom is tourism or sport thought of as a primary economic driver for our province despite the pride that most Albertans take in having the most incredibly majestic Rocky Mountains just outside their back door. As our province emerges from the COVID-19 pandemic and looks to our future, it's critical that the government not simply make routine capital investments but that we strategically make capital investments into projects that will grow and diversify Alberta's economy.

That's why last week our government announced a $17.5 million investment for upgrades to the Canmore Nordic Centre. This announcement signalled to the people of our province and literally the entire world that our government recognizes the important role that Alberta's tourism industry plays in Alberta's greater economy and that we recognize the important role that tourism will continue to play in Alberta's economic future.

These $17.5 million upgrades will solidify Canmore as a top international destination for sport and recreational tourism, and they will make Canmore, Alberta the single, only Biathlon World Cup host destination in all of North America. Major international events, including the 2024 International Biathlon Union World Cup and the FIS Ski World Cup, are already planned in town. This upgrade will help us to attract even more.

World Cup weekends help support our local tourism and hospitality businesses while also lending free air time to Travel Alberta in key European markets. The economic impact of these kinds of major events is huge and can be $5 million to $7 million for a single weekend, seen through hotel stays, restaurant sales, retail purchases, and experiences. These events also typically garner international viewership of over 30 million people.

This major capital investment, funded in full by the funds generated from the Kananaskis conservation pass, is an investment in Alberta's sport-tourism industry, an investment in our province's economic diversification, and an investment in Canmore. Our town is already home to more Olympians per capita, and soon we'll be welcoming even more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Minister's Senior Service Award Recipient

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Benita Galandy, a recipient of the minister's senior service award, from my constituency of Grande Prairie, for her work and dedication at the Elders Caring Shelter. Since the beginning of the pandemic Benita has dedicated almost 8,200 hours to the Elders Caring Shelter in Grande Prairie, where she developed a framework to ensure that seniors in her community had access to the supports they needed and had stability and safe shelter. Moreover, before the shelter was well established, Benita went so far as to live in a camper on the property so she could dedicate as much time as possible to the seniors she served.

I, personally, first became aware of the shelter years ago as a small-business owner in Grande Prairie. My team was so inspired by the leadership and dedication of Benita that we began sponsoring a Christmas celebration for the shelter's residents. The shelter was originally built in 2003 and focuses on Indigenous cultural programming. While there are other seniors' homes in Grande Prairie, Métis local 1990 wanted to ensure that the lifestyle, nutritional, and cultural needs of Métis seniors would be served. Although the Elders Caring Shelter is geared towards those of Aboriginal descent, they take all applications of men and women over the age of 55. The shelter has been so well received that a second shelter is being built by the Métis local. It will have 34 beds and assist in housing additional seniors.

Mr. Speaker, the compassion demonstrated by Benita is one that should be celebrated. She is highly regarded within the Grande Prairie Indigenous community and has become a role model for many. I am proud to be wearing handcrafted jewellery today that was made by a resident at the shelter. This resident shared his work with me and explained how Benita encouraged him to pursue it. He donates the proceeds from sales of his crafts and jewellery to support the shelter and says that it's one way he's learned to give back.

Benita Galandy restored hope in those who had none and demonstrated outstanding service to Alberta seniors while also fostering a sense of community among those seniors at the shelter. To Benita I say: thank you, and congratulations on this well-deserved recognition. It is people like you that make our world a better place.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Social Workers

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the gallery today I have invited some dear friends of mine. They're social work students from the social work program at MacEwan University. They are the next generation of Alberta social workers. I congratulate you on all of your hard work in the program, and I thank you for your sense of duty and answering the call of supporting our community.

Last week was Social Work Week, a time to show appreciation to those who carry the emotional labour of the province when Albertans are in need. This UCP government chose to acknowledge social workers during Social Work Week with an announcement of wage rollbacks of almost 11 per cent for the profession. Eleven per cent. This is how this UCP government shows their appreciation for the sacrifices so many social workers and other health care professionals have made to help Albertans get through one of the darkest times in Alberta history.

Social workers are known for working in the most complex of situations and oftentimes need to be creative and resourceful, a task that can go unseen and most often forgotten as a tangible aspect to the crisis. This UCP government clearly does not value the social work profession. This UCP government may not value the gravity and stresses felt by those as we slowly look to climb out of this devastating pandemic, that has cost so many so much. This UCP government may not value the true plight of Albertans at this time.

Our team does value the social work profession. We do understand the severe impact that this pandemic has had and continues to have. We stand with Albertans as we continue to navigate out of these stressful times for Alberta. We are in this together.

Thank you to all social workers wherever you are. Though this government doesn't respect you or value the work you do in protecting lives and making this province a better place, you are making a difference. Our NDP caucus is committed to ensuring that you get the respect that you deserve.

Thank you.

Agriculture in Southern Alberta

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, there are exciting things happening in my riding that will benefit the whole region of southern Alberta. Southern Alberta is blessed with warm days and cool nights, which makes for the best sweet corn in the world, but we grow many high-yield, high-margin specialty crops such as sugar beets and potatoes. We have some of the best water in the world, which flows out of the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains. Consumers today are demanding to know where their food comes from and what is being put into it. Here in southern Alberta we have the best ingredients in the world. Seventy per cent of all of Canada's irrigation system is located in southern Alberta. It is a testament to the forward-thinking farmers of years past.

Almost two years ago we announced the long-awaited twinning of highway 3 between Taber and Burdett. This $150 million project is part of a broader strategy our government is implementing to develop between Lethbridge and Medicine Hat into Canada's agrifood corridor. Our government will be adding over 260,000 irrigated acres. Last July we announced the first of the irrigation expansion projects, 60,000 irrigated acres with the Chin reservoir expansion. We will be making sure that there is potable water and proper utilities along this corridor to facilitate expansion of new and existing agrifood processing companies. We will be making that corridor a preapproved agrifood processing zone. This means that we will be doing much of the environmental, transportation, and municipal affairs work that needs to be done beforehand. That way, when businesses express interest in setting up or expanding their businesses, government can move at the speed of business rather than at the speed of government.

Due to our government's work, southern Alberta is on the verge of one of the greatest and largest growth expansions in generations, Mr. Speaker. The south will no longer be called the forgotten south; instead, it will be called the fantastic south.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Ms Renaud: Far too many Albertans are struggling today, dealing with skyrocketing utility costs, insurance rates, school fees, property taxes, and so much more. This government enacted a sneaky plan to take a billion dollars in income taxes from the pockets of Canadians using a backdoor inflation tax, a policy that the Premier used to oppose; now embraces. They are cutting supports for the most vulnerable, taking money from the disabled and claiming that it wouldn't be onerous, ignoring the consequences of their actions, and relying on talking points to avoid addressing the suffering they're causing. Simply put, the UCP doesn't care. They don't even know how many Albertans are currently living in poverty: 1 in 10, Mr. Speaker.

As we watch this Premier more focused on keeping his job past April while too many Albertans are forced to choose between buying groceries or turning the lights on, it's clear who the real priorities for this government are. It's not the people struggling under the financial burdens this government keeps piling on them. It's not the people who are coping with the reduced government supports that mean that their lives are getting harder while the UCP celebrate their no-help budget. It's deeply insulting to these people to have their concerns about the 10,000 full-time jobs lost last month shouted down by the jobs minister or to watch the associate minister of natural gas ignore the requests for help from those dealing with skyrocketing utility bills.

This government's true priorities have always been on their wealthy friends and insiders, the ones who convinced them to lift the insurance cap even though the UCP knew that it meant that families would get hit with hikes of 30 per cent or more, the ones who convinced them that Donald Trump was worth a billion-dollar investment, that those Albertans who are facing utility bills of nearly a thousand dollars are only worth 50 bucks.

Albertans need a government focused on their jobs, not on the Premier's job, and in 2023 Albertans will get a government that finally puts them first.

Lethbridge Update

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, we recently concluded the 2022 brier in Lethbridge. After two long years of the pandemic, being able to enjoy curling live and in person was fantastic. To host teams, supporters, and families from all across Canada in my hometown right here in Alberta was awesome. Curling, country music, and beer: let's get this party started. Canada is truly the best country in the world. The only hardship was Alberta not claiming the title at the very end, losing to team Newfoundland; however, I guess it depends on where you're from. But no matter whom you cheered for, the curling was sensational.

This kind of event and the economic benefits of attracting thousands to our province were also key pillars in our recent budget. Additional investments into health care, the attraction and retention of doctors, and EMS are critical. Alberta's government is investing $1.8 billion for the redevelopment and expansion of the Red Deer regional hospital. Additions include a new cardiac catheterization lab.

As the MLA for Lethbridge-East I hope Lethbridge is next on the list for these same services so that we can also continue to support the growth of nearly every sector in Alberta's third-largest city. This growth, especially in agriculture and agrifood, also makes the planning, engineering, and feasibility of the third bridge in Lethbridge even more critical. While we were excited about the infrastructure investment in our Exhibition Park, our airport, a new school in west Lethbridge, new boilers at the U of L, research at the college, and more to come, we still have plans to make so that we can continue to manage the growth and service area of Lethbridge and southern Alberta. Lethbridge is a vibrant city with one of the most diversified economies in the province. We have affordable living and are the hub for everything from health care to tourism, trucking to advanced education, and we're Canada's premier agricultural gateway. It's no wonder we're Alberta's third-largest city and growing. We need the investment to match.

United States Oil Imports

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, we're all watching a humanitarian crisis unfold in front of our eyes, and what this crisis has made obvious is that we must stop indirectly funding unethical dictatorship countries. Until just recently the United States imported an average of 709,000 barrels per day of petroleum products from Russia. That is extremely ironic considering that Biden cancelled Keystone XL, a pipeline that would have carried 830,000 barrels of Alberta oil per day to the U.S. This project could have prevented their reliance on Russian oil to begin with.

Let us not forget that the NDP has formerly supported eco radicals protesting pipelines. They also sat back and did nothing while Trudeau cancelled Energy East, all of which cripple Canada's ability to support our allies to boycott Russian oil. The NDP, Trudeau, and Biden continue to hinder Alberta's ability to provide ethical energy stability in the world. To be clear, Alberta is the solution to stability, and, Mr. Speaker, we all could use some stability right now.

Alberta oil represents human rights. It represents responsible environmentalism. It represents Indigenous opportunities. The lack of support from the NDP opposite, Trudeau, and Biden on supporting Alberta energy is nothing more than irresponsible complacency that provides strength to Russia. They obviously are aware that a continued global reliance and buying of oil from some of the world's most unstable regimes directly helps fund unjust wars. They also cannot think that Canadians will accept that Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, or Iran is an acceptable alternative to Russian oil. It's time for everyone to recognize the critical need for Alberta to gain more access to world markets so that we can prevent the indirect funding of unstable world leaders.

While the NDP opposite, Trudeau, and Biden feel that it's more important to stand in support of their eco radicals, this government and I stand with Ukraine and everyone opposed to Russia.

Pacific NorthWest Economic Region

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, as president of the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region, or PNWER, I rise to share with my learned colleagues some background and some exciting news. Formed with leadership from the government of Alberta in 1991, PNWER is a nonpartisan, binational, public-private partnership focused on strengthening cross-border relationships, finding solutions to common challenges, and joint advocacy around common regional interests. PNWER includes Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Northwest Territories, and Yukon, and the U.S. states of Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington: our closest neighbours, friends, and allies, indeed, particularly important during these times of geopolitical unrest.

PNWER seeks to build trust and enduring relationships amongst stakeholders around regional collaboration, competitiveness, and reduction of trade and regulatory barriers, making the region one of the most diverse, resource rich, and innovative in the world, with a combined GDP of over $1.5 trillion. Within PNWER's active cross-sectoral working groups we address issues and opportunities in such diverse disciplines as agriculture, forestry, water policy and invasive species, economic development, workforce innovation, trade, transportation and tourism, energy, environmental leadership, mining, and disaster resilience. PNWER also manages several high-level regional and national programs, including the Legislative Energy Horizon Institute, of vital importance to Alberta as the largest energy producer in the region.

Mr. Speaker, it's now time to mark your calendars as Alberta proudly hosts PNWER's 31st Annual Summit in Calgary, July 24 to 28, bringing over 500 legislators from across the province, policy-makers, industry, and thought leaders from across Canada and the U.S. It will be an opportunity to showcase all that we are proud of, from ESG to energy security and so much more, as we engage with regional and national decision-makers right here in Alberta. Don't delay, and register today as we proudly share our great province, our great future, and renewal of the Alberta advantage with the Pacific Northwest region and the world.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has question 1.

Utility Costs

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, a recent Angus Reid survey found that 60 per cent of Albertans can't keep up with the cost of living. That rate is the highest in the country. A recent Edmonton Journal project found that 86 per cent of respondents cited skyrocketing utility prices as the most common major cost pressure. I have two questions for the Premier. Is he really proud of the job he's doing when 6 in 10 Albertans can't make ends meet, and does he really think that his measly $50 electricity rebate is going to make a difference for those families?

Mr. Kenney: Well, first of all, it's $150, not $50. She got it wrong by a factor of three. On top of that is the elimination of the fuel tax.

The real question for the NDP is: why are they cheering on their friend and ally Justin Trudeau to raise the cost of living by increasing the cost of home heating, electricity, and fuel on April 1? Why does the NDP support the Liberal April Fool's Day joke that will make life even more expensive because of their ever higher carbon taxes?

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is in charge. He's done nothing to help these families, and he knows it.

It gets worse. According to Angus Reid half of Albertans surveyed said that they're now unable to handle an emergency expense of $1,000 or more, and about half said that they can't afford their car insurance payment either, because the government pulled the cap. Is this really what the Premier thinks recovery looks like, families living paycheque to paycheque, one emergency away from going under?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are struggling with the cost of living, which is exactly why they gave this government marching orders to scrap the carbon tax. I regret that the NDP opposed that. I regret that the NDP backed up Justin Trudeau all the way to the Supreme Court. I regret that the NDP wants to further increase carbon taxes on April 1. Albertans also regret their power purchasing agreement fiasco that passed $1.3 billion of additional costs on to electricity consumers, their rushed shutdown of coal that has forced up higher power prices. When it comes to high power costs, the NDP is the arsonist, not the fireman.

Ms Ganley: Forty-six per cent of Albertans report having too much debt. Many can't afford to keep vehicles on the road, are putting necessary expenses on two or three credit cards, and owe thousands in back pay to utility companies. Some fear they will have their utilities shut off altogether. As of April 15 it will be legal for utility companies to do just that. Today I have drafted legislation to extend the ban on utility shut-offs for six months to provide Albertans some relief. Will the Premier support this move to protect Albertans? He sure isn't doing anything else.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this is the only government in Canada that is acting to reduce the cost of living, the only government out of the federal government and nine other provinces that is not just reducing fuel taxes but eliminating them. This is the only government providing a rebate for high electricity prices. This is the only government acting. This government will be putting forward a motion calling on Justin Trudeau not to proceed with his scheduled April 1 increase in carbon taxes. Will the NDP stand with Trudeau or with Albertans in opposing that hike?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Health Care Worker Wages

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The UCP continue to tear down and undermine the public health care system that we all rely on. For two years front-line health care professionals put their own physical and mental health on the line to protect the lives of others. They saved lives during a global pandemic. How does the UCP say thanks? By pushing to slash their wages. It's unconscionable. How can this Premier look these health care heroes in the eye and tell them that they're overpaid?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let me introduce the member opposite to the concept of collective bargaining negotiations. That's exactly what's happening. We certainly intend to proceed with that in good faith, while that particular union is asking for a 15 per cent increase.

There will be a good-faith negotiation. The NDP froze nurses and all health care workers with zero increases for four long years. This government came to an agreement with the nurses' union with a significant increase in their compensation for the first time in nearly a decade, because, unlike the NDP, we respect our front-line health care workers.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, let me introduce this Premier to the raises of up to 40 per cent that he is handing to executives at AIMCo at the same time as he is demanding cuts from workers like Holly, a respiratory therapist in Red Deer. She works at the bedside, inserting breathing tubes, managing ventilators, literally keeping dying people alive. The UCP wants to slash her wage by 8 per cent. Today she said:

Behind the proposed wage rollbacks are humans. We worked tirelessly through the most demanding and stressful moments in our careers. It's not just the eight per cent, this negotiation feels like [the Premier] has devalued our worth to society.

Will this Premier apologize to Holly . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, these are opening positions in collective bargaining negotiations. The opening position of one of these unions is an increase of 15 per cent, which we don't believe can be afforded by taxpayers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, workers like the one just referenced were put on a wage freeze for four years under the NDP. This government came forward with an adequate settlement with our nurses that both protects the need for fiscal responsibility for taxpayers but also recognizes the very hard work of our nurses. We're proud to have achieved that agreement. We'll continue to negotiate in good faith.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, after two years of attacks and mismanagement I invite this Premier to ask those workers their opinion of our government compared to his.

Holly goes on to say:

The moral injury repeatedly caused by this government is real and I feel it. The healthcare system will not go unharmed by the way the UCP government has treated healthcare workers. It will take strong leadership to repair and return dignity to our broken systems.

Mr. Speaker, this Premier refuses to answer my questions legitimately, so I'll just say this. On this side of the House the record is that we provide support for health care workers. We're ready to provide strong leadership, repair the damage done by this government, and treat workers . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, the former member of a government that froze nurses for four years just said that we should go and ask the nurses what they think about the collective bargaining agreement. They were asked. They ratified it overwhelmingly, because, unlike the NDP, we didn't continue the NDP's four-year-long freeze.

Mr. Speaker, how dare they stand up and pretend to be the party of the working person when all they were was the party of unemployment and economic devastation of this province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

School Construction Capital Plan

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The UCP is deliberately withholding funding from one of the largest and fastest growing school divisions in the country. Edmonton public needs replacement schools for Spruce Avenue and Delton, and they also need a high school for Glenriding Heights and a new junior high in McConachie. To the Premier: will you please walk the halls of Spruce Avenue and Delton? Will you ride the bus with the kids in the northeast who need a junior high? Will you ride the bus with the kids in the southwest who are travelling long distances to overcrowded schools? Or will you at least acknowledge that your budget is ignoring the needs of Edmonton families?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this government's $2 billion capital plan to modernize our schools means that there are 66 new schools being built or refurbished, more than the NDP. That's over three years. They did 60 over four. We're doing 66 over three years, and 24 of those schools are in the Edmonton area. Six of them are Edmonton public schools. Just today we announced capital funding for a new charter high school here in Edmonton, for the Aurora Charter School, about academic excellence, responding to parental choice and diversity in our education system.

Ms Hoffman: The NDP built over 240 schools in four years, so that's about 60 per year, Premier, and what you are saying here makes no sense.

Alberta families know that what you're doing isn't true, that if you were actually a believer in school choice, you would support construction for public schools in Edmonton or francophone schools, really, anywhere in the province of Alberta. Will you finally admit to francophone families across Alberta who have been shut out of this budget that it's a no-help budget? Will the Premier or the Education minister admit that they're failing francophone families across Alberta? This budget proves it.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton public schools has six new schools under construction right now, as we speak. This government is building 66 new schools or substantial refurbishment of others with a $2 billion capital investment, more than the NDP put forward.

But more than that, I know that the NDP oppose school choice. They hate the idea of parental responsibility in the education system. That's one of the reasons they were thrown out of office. It is also one of the reasons this government brought forward today a historic $47 million capital investment in new charter schools, to amplify our tradition of school choice.

Ms Hoffman: So the Premier clearly doesn't care about franco- phone families anywhere in Alberta given that answer.

We also know that he doesn't care about the families in Edmonton public because he's refusing to fund a single project for kids in desperate need in the city of Edmonton. In Calgary over three years: only one new public school and only one new Catholic school. Is the Premier honestly going to try to convince Albertans that what he's doing is actually putting kids first or building for the future? Clearly, his budget puts in black and white that the Premier doesn't care about families in Edmonton or Calgary or anywhere in Alberta.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, only the NDP could characterize a $2 billion investment in new and refurbished schools as nothing. In Edmonton the board didn't bring forward a priority project with more than 69 per cent utilization. Now, the minister is going to sit down and work that out with them.

M. le Président, quand on parle des écoles francophones, nous sommes en train de construire six écoles francophones en Alberta depuis – parce que nous sommes dédiés à l'éducation francophone ici en Alberta.

Fuel Prices

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, Albertans were very interested to hear this government announce that they would stop charging the 13-cent gas tax on fuel in response to the sky-high prices in Alberta. At the time of this announcement the Premier was asked how the government would ensure this relief actually makes it down to Albertans and isn't just pocketed by retailers. The Premier did not have a very good answer, so I'll ask him again today. What specific guarantees will the government give that Albertans will actually see lower prices for gas?

Mr. Kenney: Well, once again Team Colonel Sanders is concerned about the welfare of the chickens, Mr. Speaker. The NDP doesn't just want to keep the 13-cent gas tax in place; they want it to go higher with an ever higher carbon tax. But this Conservative government is eliminating the 13-cent Alberta fuel tax on April 1. Will he stand in his place next week and vote with us to call on the NDP's ally Justin Trudeau to abandon his higher carbon tax planned for the same day?

Mr. Dach: I was just trying to ask a serious question, Mr. Speaker, on policy issues that Albertans are watching closely. How will this gas tax reduction work? Albertans are looking for an actual guarantee that the prices will go down 13 cents and not just be absorbed by retailers. That's all. It should be pretty simple, but it sounds like there really isn't any guarantee. Go figure. Now, as the Premier pointed out at the time, many retailers had already purchased their fuel orders before the announcement. Presumably, this means any price relief might be delayed. Can the Premier guarantee that prices will drop 13 cents on April 1, or is it just an April Fool's joke? Will he stake his job on it?

Mr. Kenney: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. While we would have preferred to have the 13-cent cut implemented last week, the truth is that we needed to give the retailers time to run through their current inventory, where the fuel tax has already been assessed, and to give Treasury Board and Finance time to reimburse them for any current inventory they have as of April 1 so that they can then pass on the full 13-cent savings to all Albertans. But here's the weird thing. It's only the Conservatives who actually want to cut those taxes, and the NDP want to increase them.

Mr. Dach: Well, Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the government doesn't know when or even if Albertans will see that drop in gas prices.

Now, the Premier at the time was asked why he didn't just do a rebate instead. He told the media to go talk to people at the pumps, and CTV did just that. They found more Albertans were in favour of cash in their pockets. Why didn't the Premier just provide blanket relief to families instead of these paltry one-off programs, or, better yet, why doesn't the Premier stop raising their costs in the first place? Will the Premier plainly say yes to all Albertans, that they will see the Alberta price drop by 13 cents on April 1?

Mr. Kenney: Well, yes. On April 1 their Alberta fuel tax will go down by 13 cents. But, regrettably, the NDP is supporting Justin Trudeau's tax increase. [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier has the call.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Justin Trudeau will raise his carbon tax by 3 cents on the same day. If the NDP actually wants to see 13 cents of relief on April 1, will they join us to call on Justin Trudeau to stop his job-killing carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood has a question.

Charter Schools

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a successful history of providing parents choice in regard to their children's education. Charter schools offer unique programming that focuses on a learning style, teaching style, or an approach that isn't already offered in a school division. This is a great option for students whose needs differ from what traditional public schools can offer, but many parents in my riding are confused, and they feel that there may be expensive tuition fees or maybe not an option. To the Minister of Education: can you please explain the difference between an independent and a public charter school?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Public charter schools are autonomous, nonprofit public schools that receive the same base instruction funding as traditional public, separate, and francophone school authorities. A public charter school cannot deny enrolment to any student if they have enough space, and they cannot charge tuition fees. That said, they may charge fees and costs in alignment with the Education Act, just as any other public school authority. They also are accountable to the public taxpayer for the dollars that they do receive, and just like any other public school, they are providing accountability for what they get.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you to the minister for that answer. Given that public charter schools cannot deny access to any student if their school has sufficient space and resources available and given that parents wanting to enrol their children at a public charter school face a long wait-list and further given that the single biggest issue charter schools face is finding the space they need to accept more students, to the Minister of Education: would you please explain what you're doing to address the lack of student spaces available in public charter schools?

Member LaGrange: Thank you to the member for the great question. Yes, you're right. There are thousands of students waiting for a charter school space. Mr. Speaker, under Budget 2022 we're investing $25 million in operating funding and $47 million in capital investment over the next three years to support charter school expansions and new charter schools and collegiate programs in Alberta's education system. This funding will support leases and facility improvements so that existing public charters can grow, new public charters can expand and have the spaces they need to deliver educational services to the students who want them. [interjections]

The Speaker: I just might remind members of the opposition that they have more time to ask questions than any other group in the Assembly. Perhaps they might ask their questions when it's their turn, not when it isn't.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the minister for that answer. Given that students who are engaged in their education are more likely to succeed in the long term and given that public charter schools offer unique programs for students with more specialized interests, and further given that leased facilities only provide a short-term solution for lack of spaces in public charter schools, to the minister again: will you please explain what a charter campus model is and how this concept could be used to strengthen the public charter school system in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to strengthening choice in education, and that means finding long-term solutions to the lack of space that public charter schools are facing. A charter campus model would allow several public charters to be housed in a single facility. This concept would support the shared use of specialized spaces such as CTS spaces, career and technology studies, science labs, or gym spaces. This would offer a more permanent and cost-effective solution for public charter schools than leased spaces can offer. We're happy to do this for charter schools.

Social Worker Wages

Ms Sigurdson: The UCP have continually left the most vulnerable behind. They are not providing the funding necessary to affordable housing to address growing problems of poverty and homelessness. They are neglecting scientific evidence on the importance of harm reduction policies to address the deadly drug poisoning crisis. Workers on the front line, including social workers, have filled in the gaps of the UCP's neglect, but now the Minister of Health wants to cut the wages of social workers by 11 per cent. He should be ashamed. How does he justify such a cruel cut for Alberta's heroes?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As already said in this House, this is a set of negotiations. We respect the work that all of our health care workers have done over the last two years. Negotiations have been ongoing with HSAA. Last week both parties were able to put their first offers on the table. The HSAA put a 15 per cent increase, and AHS is looking to address certain overmarket positions, but this is a set of negotiations. They will proceed, and we were very pleased to be able to, through this process, reach an agreement with the United Nurses of Alberta, which was ratified by a healthy margin. I'm sure that these negotiations will proceed in a similar manner.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that social workers are vital to helping Albertans living in poverty and given that the Minister of Community and Social Services, who also used to be in charge of the mental health and addictions file, proudly talks about his career as a social worker and given that while the UCP are cutting wages of social workers, they are planning to increase the wages of staff at the province's investment company, AIMCo, by 39 per cent, what is the minister of community services doing at the cabinet table? Does he truly think part of the answer to addressing widespread poverty and mental health challenges is to cut the pay of workers on the front lines of the crisis?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, you're hearing comments from the other side, and they're talking about that the government is mandating these cuts. I want to be perfectly clear. There are issues that AHS has brought to the table, and there are issues that HSAA has brought to the table. This is a set of negotiations. We respect the tremendous work that all health care workers, including social workers working in the AHS system, have done over the last two years. This is a set of negotiations. It goes through a process. We are hopeful that they will be able to reach an agreement, just like the UNA did, that was ratified by a resounding amount. I'll look forward to seeing those results.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that as a registered social worker for 30 years I've had the opportunity to work with many incredible women – in fact, the majority of social workers are women, as are most of the allied professionals that the UCP wants to pick the pockets of – and given that there is already a significant disparity between the wages of men and women in this province, what does the minister of status of women have to say to all the women in social work regarding why they deserve to make less while the cost of living is skyrocketing? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to stand in this House as a former social worker and the Minister of Community and Social Services. We support social workers across the province. Not only do we support our female social workers, but we support male workers like myself, too. Budget 2022 not only balances our books but will increase our investment in housing, social services, including investment for women. I am proud to be the minister of this government. I'm proud to support women social workers across the province.

Support for Small Business

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, Alberta small businesses have moved from one hurdle to another and are still fighting for survival. They went from a roller coaster of public health restrictions that limited their ability to operate to record inflation and runaway costs on essential supplies needed to operate. To the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation: why is there not one dollar in the new budget to help small businesses recover from the pandemic and deal with record inflation? Did he really need to build a surplus on the backs of Alberta's small businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation.

Mr. Schweitzer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through the pandemic we provided billions of dollars of support to small businesses throughout this. Right now those entrepreneurs across this province have created hundreds of thousands of jobs for Albertans getting back on their feet, leading the province forward. Now, the NDP's plan, when they were in office, was to grow a bloated government, to literally hire people to screw in light bulbs in your home, to then tell people, for job advice, to move to British Columbia, and, on top of that, to chase away billions of dollars of investment. That's not our approach. We want those entrepreneurs in Alberta to be successful.

Mr. Bilous: Given that the NDP cut the small-business tax by a third and given that far too many businesses were disqualified from accessing the small and medium-sized relaunch grant or waited six months to receive a dime from this government and given that Tracey, owner of a nail boutique in Edmonton, was unfairly disqualified from SMERG because she used the wrong browser or Ciara, a sole proprietor, waited over seven months for a pittance that didn't even cover the cost of interest from the debt she accrued or even of half of one month's rent, to the minister: why didn't he at least help businesses he left behind with his faulty program with additional support in this budget?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, we helped thousands upon thousands of small businesses in real time through multiple ways. We had numerous opportunities. We followed up with every single applicant numerous times. Thank goodness it was the UCP government that was in office during that pandemic. The opposition would have shut down businesses for months and months and months. When will they be with us to start moving forward and start cheering on those entrepreneurs instead of cheering against Alberta, which is what they do every day?

Mr. Bilous: Given that small-business owners are facing utility costs three to four times higher than in previous years – the additional costs for many are in the thousands every month – given that a number of small businesses view this government's fake natural gas rebate and $50 electricity rebate as a joke and given that earlier today we proposed a piece of legislation that would prevent businesses' utilities from being shut off so that they can operate throughout the summer to pay down their debt, why won't the minister stand in this House and do something to support small businesses?

Mr. Schweitzer: Mr. Speaker, I think it's time for a little trip down legacy lane. When it comes to the NDP's legacy on supporting businesses in Alberta, their strategy for jobs: grow government. Their strategy for people that want to work in the private sector: move out of Alberta. That was their plan. Unless you wanted to go to somebody's house to screw in a light bulb; then the NDP had a job for you. That was their jobs plan. Not our government. We believe in the private sector: the film industry, the tech sector, when it comes to manufacturing, the oil and gas industry. Yes, the oil and gas industry. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Child and Youth Well-being Review Recommendations

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Child and Youth Well-being Review Panel made 10 recommendations to the government in December 2021. The fourth recommendation from their report is to "recognize and enhance the essential role of schools in interdisciplinary wraparound services and supports for mental health and well-being of students." To the Minister of Education: what initiatives are under way, including through Budget 2022, to support students' mental health and well-being?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government funds school boards directly through the specialized learning supports grant, which accounted for $596 million this school year. This includes $48 million towards student wellness programs, which allow for psychological and social-emotional supports, access to mental health workers and other wellness supports as needed. As well, we all know that the COVID-19 pandemic has disproportionately impacted the mental health and well-being of our students. To further help, Alberta's government is providing $110 million in targeted funding over the next three years to address pandemic-related mental health issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for her answer. Given that the eighth recommendation of the Child and Youth Well-being Review is to "explore and activate ways to better track, measure, and understand the learning impacts of the pandemic and inform decisions to strengthen school capacity to respond," to the Minister of Education: what initiatives are under way, including through Budget 2022, to address this important recommendation?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are confident that school authorities have the supports they need to provide a safe, world-class education to their students. Last spring we implemented a new literacy program for kindergarten to grade 3 students to help measure how classroom disruptions caused by the COVID pandemic are affecting student learning. In the fall of 2021 we announced we would be further expanding that program and investing $45 million for learning disruption interventions.

Mr. Speaker, it doesn't end there. We know that early intervention is key, and we will continue to ensure that students who are struggling receive the supports they need. I look forward to sharing more details on this in the very near future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the minister for her answer. Given that food security issues for families directly impact children and youths' health, well-being, and development and given that the sixth recommendation from the Child and Youth Well-being Review is to "support existing and implement new province-wide efforts where necessary to support food security for children, youth, and their families," to the Minister of Education: what initiatives are under way, including through Budget '22, to address food insecurity?

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question. We recognize that good nutrition positively impacts student learning. We are maintaining funding for the school nutrition program and will provide school authorities with over $15 million for the program in the '22-23 school year. Funding for school nutrition is provided directly to school authorities, who have the flexibility on how to address local needs. Often they partner with nonprofit organizations or community organizations. This funding provides daily nutritious meals to more than 58,000 students in a school year. We're happy to continue doing and providing what we need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Park Fees and Coal Development Policies

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The cost of everything is going up these days, and nearly all of the increases are a direct result of the UCP's policies. What seemed like one of the last affordable activities in our province has come under attack from the UCP. After they already found a way to tax inflation and increase camping fees last year, they've now found a way to get Albertans coming and going from our parks by doubling the fees to change or cancel a camping reservation. Why is this government so intent on increasing the cost of living for Alberta's families?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is confused yet again or not encumbering himself with the truth.

Anyway, park fees . . .

Ms Gray: Point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: . . . have not been doubled in this year's budget. There have been some changes to reservation fees associated with cancellations to be able to make sure that people, actually, who are reserving sites actually use them and people don't arrive on the long weekend and see the best sites sitting empty. But other than that, we continue to move forward with the award-winning Kananaskis conservation pass and the largest investment in our provincial parks system in the history of the province.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that I'm happy to compare my track record of speaking the truth to that minister's any time of day and given that income taxes, property taxes, tuition, interest on student debt, utilities, and car insurance have all increased under this government and given that camping fees haven't been spared either – they've increased camping fees across the board and also introduced a $90 fee just to set foot in Kananaskis Country, an area that belongs to all Albertans and has been free for all of us to enjoy for decades – and given that this government has already tried to sell off parks, why is this government relentlessly . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to stand in this Assembly each and every day and brag about the award-winning Kananaskis conservation pass. Last week I was in Kananaskis with the MLA for the area and the Premier announcing a record investment in the Canmore Nordic Centre inside Kananaskis, just one of many investments that are coming forward inside Alberta's largest park. But that member is the environmental critic for the NDP, and he wants to talk about the cost of living, and he continues to support Justin Trudeau and his job-killing carbon tax. Shame on him.

Mr. Schmidt: I'm sure the Member for Banff-Kananaskis enjoyed visiting the riding for once.

Given that this government rescinded Lougheed's 1976 coal policy with the stroke of a pen on the Friday afternoon of a long weekend after being lobbied by the coal industry and given that this move would have destroyed the amazing scenery in our parks, that attracts people from across the world – let's face it; nobody wants a front-row seat to an open-pit coal mine – and given that this would have cost Albertans jobs in the tourism industry, why is the government so intent on giving our parks away to corporate interests while increasing costs for Albertans to access them?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the real question is: why is that member content to continue to make things up each and every day?

Ms Gray: Point of order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: First of all, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member from Canmore, thank you for all of your tireless work advocating for Kananaskis. We are proud to continue to deliver for Kananaskis, and we're fixing the mess that the NDP made when they were in government, where they never invested in our parks system. They never made sure there were proper conservation officers. They never made sure there were proper parking lots. They never provided adequate services for Kananaskis. Shame on them, but we're getting it fixed.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order is noted at both 2:20 and 2:22.

I owe the hon. Member for Edmonton-South an apology as we missed his question, but now the hon. Member for Edmonton-South has a question.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we learned that the Minister of Advanced Education has approved exceptional tuition hikes for over a dozen programs at the province's biggest universities. We know that an educated workforce is critical to Alberta's prosperity, yet despite this, Albertans are paying more every day for everything from utilities to income taxes to property taxes because of this government. Will the minister admit that approving these hikes is a short-sighted, job-killing decision?

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, Mr. Speaker, good. Another opportunity to inform the House that tuition in Alberta is below the national average. I know that the Member for Edmonton-North West the other day said that that was inaccurate. I'd encourage him to visit a website called Stats Canada. It's usually pretty reliable, and the information there is pretty objective and independent. You know, the information is very clear there for him to take a look.

But, you know, again, Mr. Speaker, what's concerning: April 1 we have a carbon tax increase from the federal Liberal government. The members opposite are supporting the Trudeau Liberals to jack up the carbon tax on April 1. We're trying to make life more affordable; they're making it more expensive.

Mr. Dang: Given that students who are mid-program have less than six months to contend with huge tuition increases, in some cases double-digit percentages, and given that Alberta lags behind other provinces when it comes to providing student aid and given that after-degree earnings for school counsellors have not doubled recently, does the minister even care that he is approving outrageous tuition hikes that students cannot afford and that may chase them out of their programs and out of this province?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, a lot of what the member opposite just said is inaccurate. All students that are in programs that have been approved for exceptional increases are grandfathered in at their current rates. They won't see any increases in those programs where there have been exceptional increases.

When it comes to student aid, we provide $167 million in just this budget alone for student services. That's student aid and scholarships. Budget 2022 includes $12 million for new scholarships and $15 million in new funding for new bursaries as well.

Mr. Dang: Given that this minister has overseen drastic cuts to postsecondary education and given that this government's strategy for postsecondary appears to be downloading costs onto students without regard for the quality of the programs, will the minister just stop and finally admit that these hikes have nothing to do with enhancing the quality of the postsecondary education system he's responsible for and that, instead, he is trying to balance this government's budget on the backs of students and families?

Mr. Nicolaides: Again, Mr. Speaker, the information the member is providing is inaccurate. Again, I'd just like to remind the House that the NDP wrote the regulation that allows for exceptional tuition increases, so they should know the regulation full well. The regulation is clear, and it stipulates that increases can only be approved if the increase will improve the quality of the program. Under those parameters the increases were approved. As well, in those increases I also sought to ensure that new revenue is going to enhance student aid in those particular programs as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Child and Youth Well-being Review Recommendations

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the second recommendation of the Child and Youth Well-being Review is for the government to "review effectiveness and alignment of existing child and youth mental health and well-being programs and services to inform enhanced resource allocation" and given that the third recommendation calls for the creation of "streamlined and universally accessible pathways to connect children, youth, and families with mental health services and supports," to the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions: what initiatives are under way, including through Budget 2022, to address this recommendation?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Of course, the well-being of children is a top priority for this government. I'd like to thank the member for his service on that panel and the Minister of Children's Services for her work on this as well. We're focused on a recovery-oriented system of care for children. Just an example of some of the things that we're doing for children: we're expanding youth and mental health hubs, expanding phone and virtual support, and, of course, expanding access to services in school across a continuum for the youth of Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for his answer. The fifth recommendation of the Child and Youth Well-being Review is to "create more opportunities for children and youth to have improved access to cultural, sports, arts, and recreational activities." To the Minister of Culture: what initiatives are under way, including through Budget 2022, to address this recommendation? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, it is important to keep kids active and truly get them back into sport and culture for their mental and physical health. Alberta has incredible youth organizations like the Alberta Schools' Athletic Association, KidSport, Free Play for Kids, and we're working in partnership with them to create an agenda for kids to return to play. We also have a number of capital projects that are our response to the fifth recommendation, supporting the Active Communities Alberta Society, Repsol Sport Centre, Telus World of Science, McMurray Métis Cultural Center, and others. There are more initiatives on the way, and I look forward to being able to announce them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to that minister for his answer. Given that Internet access is not yet universal across Alberta and that children and youth without adequate Internet access can have difficulty learning, maintaining relationships, and accessing supports and given that the ninth recommendation of the Child and Youth Well-being Review is to "improve broadband internet service and access to devices to address difficulties related to remote education and virtual mental health supports," to the Minister of Service Alberta: what initiatives are under way, including through Budget 2022, to improve broadband Internet service?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for the question. I'm so glad that the youth and well-being review had this recommendation, because you know what? They're right. We need to work towards universal connectivity. And here's the good news: Alberta's government has committed $390 million over the next four years to get us to universal connectivity. And not just that. We successfully negotiated with the federal government to get dollar-for-dollar matching for 100 per cent of our commitment, bringing the total public-sector funding up to $780 million compared to the NDP's track record of zero dollars. Not just that, but by the time we're done, we will have hundreds of millions in private-sector funding to go . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is next.

2:30 Municipal Loan Interest Rates

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, life is getting more expensive thanks to this UCP government. Utility bills are skyrocketing, insurance bills are rising, income taxes, school fees are all rising. This government doesn't seem to care. When faced with the increasing cost of living, the Finance minister is standing by a plan to further hike the cost on Albertans by secretly making it more expensive for municipalities to operate. The minister is hiking borrowing rates for municipalities, which will result in higher property taxes and reduced services. I know that this minister loves to download costs to municipalities, but when will he realize that this is a mistake and cancel the interest rate hikes on municipalities immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services has risen.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government has made a commitment to bring spending in line with other comparable provinces as per the MacKinnon report. Fair municipal funding is part of that commitment. It's important to remember that MSI was not designed to be a long-term program and was initially scheduled to end after 10 years. Municipalities have long asked for a funding formula that is predictable and consistent, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs is working on that.

Member Ceci: Considering that I was asking about borrowing and given that the Finance minister deindexed income taxes, meaning that Albertans will pay higher income taxes, and given that he deindexed benefits for seniors and the disabled, meaning that they will get less as costs go up, and given that now the minister is making it more expensive for municipalities to borrow money for capital projects at the same time as this UCP government has slashed a billion dollars from the MSI and given that this will only result in Albertans paying higher property taxes, will the minister explain why he's so focused on making Albertans pay higher and higher costs while he delivers less?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services has risen.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government delivered exactly what we said we would do. We committed to implementing a predictable funding formula which will allow municipalities to effectively plan for the future. That is why in '24-25 the local government fiscal framework will replace the municipal sustainability initiative, with municipalities receiving $722 million. Funding in future years will rise or fall based on changes in provincial revenues, ensuring that municipalities share in provincial revenue changes.

Member Ceci: The questions are about borrowing, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has stood silently by while his colleague has hiked borrowing costs on municipalities and given that this isn't the first time that this government's selfishness has resulted in higher property taxes for Albertans and given that all Albertans have come to expect from this Finance minister is increasing costs and many are waiting for the other shoe to fall, since the Minister of Finance won't undo his latest secret tax hike on Albertans, will he at least promise that this will be the last time he picks the pockets of Albertans this year?

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would say that the members opposite obviously want to ask about borrowing. That's something they know an awful lot about. What they don't know a lot about is how to balance a budget and how to live within our means. The new funding levels and ties to provincial revenue changes ensure funding is sustainable for the province given our current economic circumstances and the economic circumstances at the time. Our government is engaging with municipal stakeholders to gather input on the design of this funding formula and detailed program design of this framework, which the minister and our colleagues are doing all week, obviously, as we meet with municipalities from across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Justice System Delays

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are over 3,000 cases in Provincial Court alone that are at risk of being passed over for unreasonable delay. Those are the facts from the Alberta Crown prosecution service. Strangely, though, the Justice minister doesn't agree, telling the mayor of Edson last week that no court cases are at risk of being thrown out because of his incompetent management. Can the minister please inform this House how he was so badly briefed on this and what the actual number of court cases at risk are?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, through you to the member, for allowing me the opportunity to clarify my comments. The Alberta Crown prosecution service tracks all criminal cases, well, both in Provincial Court as well as in QB to ensure that matters proceed to trial within the time limits that are specified in the Jordan case. Indeed, there are Jordan cases that are in courts across the country, and that includes here in Alberta. The issue of Jordan applications, though, is complex and has – my comments related to the overall situation here in Alberta were on the basis that the current number of successful applications is less than .1 per cent of all . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the previous Minister of Justice showed a deeply concerning lack of respect for the administration of justice and given that the Alberta Crown Attorneys' Association described the minister's comment to the mayor of Edson as inaccurate and stated that there are 1,281 cases involving a serious and violent nature that are beyond the 18-month threshold as of December 31, 2021, and they could be thrown out, will the minister apologize and commit to regular public reporting of these numbers so that Albertans can trust the information that he provides?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, as of February of this year there are more than 47 more trial prosecutors that are working for the Alberta Crown prosecution service than in 2019 under the NDP, and work is actively under way to fill any outstanding vacancies. Now, for matters regarding exceeding the time limits, the delay is not necessarily attributable in whole or in part to the Crown. Our government has made good on its commitment to add the 50 new prosecution positions in '22-23, and we have ongoing job competitions as well, and we've increased the size of our articling program to ultimately grow the ranks . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sabir: Given that defence lawyer Andrea Urquhart spoke to the media about the Justice minister, saying, and I quote, he really is on an island of his own in terms of what is going on day to day inside courts, end quote, and given that Alberta deserves a Justice minister who faces facts and then works to solve problems, will the minister get off his own island and get back in touch with the people of Alberta, who are concerned with the situation in our courts that this UCP minister is desperately trying to hide?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's also remember that the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic and the adjournment of cases has been considered by a number of courts in Alberta and across Canada. Although the final ruling in each case has been dependent on the specific facts that are arising, generally speaking, courts have interpreted the COVID-19 pandemic to fit squarely within the exceptional circumstances provided for in the Jordan case. We also will be bringing forward legislation as well, because the member has asked about legislation and public reporting, and we look forward to having the right to know act . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Rural Crime Prevention and Law Enforcement

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural crime has been a rising issue for my constituents and across the province. Albertans are looking for direction on how they can legally protect their property. Rural residents continue to grow frustrated with the catch-and-release system of these criminals. In some cases constituents have been victimized by the same criminals who were previously caught on their property. To the Minister of Justice: what can be done to support those who have fallen victim to rural crime?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the Member for Camrose, Alberta's government brought forward Bill 18 to set up Alberta's very own provincial parole board, and as a member of the national parole board I can say that having an Alberta Parole Board means a fair, faster, and more responsive justice system that helps to end the revolving door concern that the hon. member has brought up, because all Albertans deserve a justice system which protects them, protects their loved ones, and protects their property.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Budget 2022 includes funding for 50 more Crown prosecutors who will help reduce the strain on our justice system and given that this will lead to more timely court proceedings, reducing the number of those who are caught and released, to the same minister: how soon will we see this increase, and how will these additional prosecutors be utilized?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To bolster the justice system, our government remains committed to recruiting prosecutors. As you know, as of February of this year, as I said to the previous question, we have 47 more trial prosecutors working in the Crown prosecution service than in 2019 under the NDP, and work is actively under way to fill any outstanding vacancies, as I said. We've increased the number of articling students from eight to 20 to help recruit lawyers who will ultimately work as Crown prosecutors, and as a government we will continue to prioritize placing new articling students in locations other than in just Edmonton and Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there has been a greater pressure put on officers who are responding in rural areas from both concerned residents and bolder criminals and given that there is a growing concern for organized crime and safety in rural communities, to the same minister: are there plans to assist with the challenges that officers face in these rural areas as well?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government introduced a program that's called RAPID response. RAPID stands for rural Alberta provincial integrated defence, and this is a program that's meant to help tackle rural crime by giving provincial peace officers the authority to respond to a wider range of calls. This involves over 400 officers from the sheriffs and fish and wildlife, many of whom work in rural areas, and this helps to assist and free up RCMP officers to respond to and investigate serious matters. Let me say that during the first five months of RAPID response, sheriffs took nearly 1,000 impaired drivers off our highways.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period.

In light of the remainder of the daily Routine we will continue immediately to the Routine.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Government Motion 7 there will be no evening sitting this evening.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At approximately 2:20 the Opposition House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you have no objection, I'll just combine the points of order called at 2:20 and 2:22 because they are essentially the same thing. You had given this House a great deal of guidance around the language “deliberately misleading the House” as well as the clarity that you cannot do indirectly what you cannot do directly. In this case the Government House Leader accused the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and said that the member is “not encumbering himself with the truth” and then again at 2:22 said that the member continues “to make things up each and every day.”

Mr. Speaker, you’ve ruled very specifically on the Government House Leader continuing to accuse the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar of deliberately misleading the House. I call your attention to June 11, 2020, November 16, 2021, and I suspect that with more time with the Speakers’ rulings database I could find other examples. I believe this is a point of order.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Nope. A matter of debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I’m not sure that I agree, and I think that there are additional cases, including April 12 and November 2, but I will just provide some additional caution to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. In his supplemental question he made comments that reflected: I’ll put my track record of speaking the truth against your track record of speaking the truth. Unfortunately, I don’t have the benefit of the Blues. It’s reasonable to assume that he has done the same thing that the Government House Leader has done.

Mr. van Dijken: Shame.

The Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock will come to order.

But I think that in this case an apology and withdrawal is acceptable as we have had lengthy discussion on this issue over periods of time.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I withdraw and apologize for the demeanour of the members opposite.

The Speaker: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

Point of order 3, which was called at approximately 2:33. The Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j). At the time the Member for Calgary-Buffalo was speaking, referring to the Minister of Finance, but I believe the hon. Minister of Children’s Services was taking the questions at the time. He said, “Promise that this will be the last time he picks the pockets of Albertans.” Of this, of course, you have made many mentions in this Chamber, about picking pockets, specifically referring to a member, not the government as a whole. I think it’s a bit of a gutless comment to make, and I’d ask that the member apologize and withdraw.

Ms Gray: On behalf of the member I apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

Hon. members, we are at Ordres du jour. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) and the 2022-23 main estimates schedule the Assembly will stand adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30.

The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. This afternoon the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Health in the Rocky Mountain Room, and the Standing Committee on Alberta’s Economic Future will consider the estimates for the ministries of Culture and Status of Women in the Grassland Room.

Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Alberta’s Economic Future will consider the estimates for Advanced Education in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Indigenous Relations in the Grassland Room.

Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:45 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 16, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, joining us in the galleries today are several guests who are in Edmonton for the Rural Municipalities of Alberta spring convention.

First of all, seated in the Speaker's gallery are family friends of mine, councillors for Cypress county Robin Kurpjuweit and Keith Ritz.

Also in the gallery today is the reeve of Lethbridge county, Tory Campbell. He is a guest of the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Federal Fiscal Policies and Inflation

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, this morning Statistics Canada released the latest data on the inflation rate in Canada as of February 2022. Unfortunately for Canadian families, the inflation rate continues to increase, moving from 5.1 per cent in January to 5.7 per cent last month. The inflation rate for Alberta is also concerning although thankfully it remains below the national average.

Mr. Speaker, inflation isn't just an issue for academics and economists. It's an issue that impacts ordinary Albertans and families right across our country. It means it costs more to fill up your tank of gas and more to fill your grocery cart at the store. While some will write this issue off, claiming that it's all due to rising global energy prices and supply chain challenges resulting from COVID, it is important to recognize that government policies have an enormous impact on rising prices, and in Canada's case the inflation rate is being driven up by a host of bad policies set by the Liberal government.

For one, they need to get their spending problem under control. Over the last two years the federal government has racked up hundreds of billions of dollars of debt with no regard for the consequences. How does this relate to inflation, you ask? It is the way in which the federal government is paying for this debt. In order to finance hundreds of billions in Liberal spending, the Bank of Canada has printed an enormous amount of money out of thin air and then is using this money to buy the feds' debt. Mr. Speaker, it's a pretty simple economic principle. When you rapidly increase the supply of something, the value goes down. In this case, it is the value of Canadians' money that is going down, meaning that the price of basic goods and services goes up. This is inflation or currency devaluation.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is more than that. On April 1 the Trudeau government is raising the carbon tax, hiking the already high prices of energy even more. Every day the Liberals are deliberately making life more expensive. It is high time that they stop and bring their fiscal house in order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand in this House every day as the representative of Calgary-Bhullar-McCall. I want to inform this House that I intend to run again to keep serving the people of my beautiful constituency. There has never been a more important time for good people to come forward and serve in Calgary and right across this province.

Families are struggling. I hear from them every day. The cost of living is unbearable for so many; 6 in 10 Albertans report being unable to keep up with their utility bills. Most have massive debt and little financial flexibility should an emergency occur. This government knows all of this, and still they have moved to hike property taxes, school fees, tuition costs, camping fees, even car insurance. Many in my constituency drive for a living. They drive trucks; they drive cabs. Insurance increases spurred by decisions of this government are crippling.

What's more is that they are hiking costs while also failing to deliver on the jobs they promised. Calgary has the highest unemployment rate among all major cities in Canada. They have cut funding for education, and they have ignored public health during the greatest public health challenge we have ever faced. We still have nothing to help with the cost of natural gas and a measly $50 for electricity bills, that are soaring over $700 per month. And northeast Calgary still doesn't have a new school, a needed school. To those on that side of the House, there's a reason why you have lost the trust and confidence of Albertans. It's because you have failed them over and over and over.

Come 2023, or much sooner given how this Premier's job prospects look, Albertans, I pledge to you this. We stand here in this House ready to serve you. We stand ready to support your families, create good and sustainable jobs for you, and we will never waver in our support for public education and public health care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose has a statement to make.

Rural Veterinarians and Budget 2022

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few years as an MLA I've had the distinct pleasure of being able to work alongside educators and practitioners of veterinary medicine. Our collective aim is to bring awareness to the lack of rural veterinarians and the dire need our communities face. This shortage affects not only our province but the entire world. This need was officially recognized by Alberta's Legislature by unanimously passing my Motion 524, which states:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to recognize the important work of rural veterinarians and explore ways to increase the number of veterinarians serving rural communities.

After drawing attention to this shortage, I was ecstatic to learn that Budget 2022 includes $59 million to expand the University of Calgary's Faculty of Veterinarian Medicine. This is an example of the steps we are taking in Budget 2022, the first balanced budget since 2014, to make life better for Albertans.

Since my motion has passed, I've heard from the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association as well as the University of Calgary veterinary medical college. They are ecstatic, to say the least, and they have a plan to move our province out of the peril we are in with the veterinary shortage. This plan includes students from our rural communities. Advocating for our Alberta youth is something that I'm extremely passionate about. Ensuring our youth have a bright future was one of the main reasons why I campaigned to be an MLA. We also have a place for those who wish to immigrate to Alberta to start their practice and raise their families in rural Alberta.

As we proceed on our path to normal, we will continue to expand health care capacity, get rural broadband to 400,000 Albertans in 200,000 households to bridge the digital divide, and get even more Albertans working. These are among the reasons why I'm proud to serve as the Camrose constituency MLA.

Kindergarten to Grade 6 Draft Curriculum

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, there's not a day that goes by that I don't hear concerns about this government's curriculum. Parents, teachers, students, principals, superintendents, territorial governments have expressed deep concern with the draft proposed. Rather than listening, the Premier and the Education minister reject the premise of concern and push on ahead. It took nearly a year of pressure to get them to drop the fundamentally flawed and racist social studies curriculum. Even though it was rejected by Indigenous groups, francophones, school boards, and virtually every teacher in this province, the Premier was defending and insisting that it would be imposed on Alberta's students. Even now I just don't trust this Premier not to try to sneak it past Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear to everyone that this curriculum is beyond saving. The Premier and the Education minister have zero credibility on this issue. A real government, a government interested in listening to Albertans, would accept failure and start over. Instead, Albertans are being subjected to sham consultation, a consultation that doesn't mean anything because if this government was actually interested in what Albertans think, they would have listened to them when they rejected the draft the first time. A prime example of this was the six prerecorded videos instead of the e-tutoring hub that the government promised. Shameful.

It's beyond clear that this UCP just doesn't care about what Albertans think. It's obvious that they are only working to ensure that one voice seems included in this curriculum, and that is the Premier's, the Premier who puts his friends in charge of writing the drafts that ended Alberta's decades-long curriculum partnership with the Northwest Territories.

We need to get this right. That's why our leader has promised that, should we form the next government, within 100 days we would start over with a real consultation and build a curriculum that Albertans would be proud of, a curriculum that reflects Alberta and its people, communities, and history, not a curriculum that reflects the whims of this Premier. We deserve much better.

Ranching

Ms Rosin: Mr. Speaker, it's bull sale season. My riding may be known for its mountains and charming towns but also consists of beautiful rolling hills and prairie fields, where some of Alberta's oldest cattle ranches are nestled into the foothills. Alberta's ranching heritage dates back generations, and our province is now home to 47 per cent of Canada's national cattle herd, and that has accounted for 2.2 per cent of Alberta's overall GDP.

Today our ranching community represents so much more than just dollars, cents, and statistics. The western ranching ideals that took root in Alberta generations ago now manifest themselves in every area of our modern-day culture, not just in cowboy hats and boots and big belt buckles but in a much deeper and more meaningful sense. The Albertan spirit is one of resiliency and adaptability. No matter what comes our way, whether it be drought or rain, sunny days or early winters, an eternal optimism shines through. When times get tough, solutions are found even if they're a little bit muddy, and there is no conflict or business deal that a strong handshake can't settle. Whether through young graduates working 12 hours a day in their office towers, new mothers welcoming community children into their day homes, or neighbours running fresh baking next door, the traditional western values of hard work, self-determination, and compassion for those around us are a part of who we are.

The past two years have brought unimaginable hurdles. The cattle industry swung from financial strain caused by packing plant backlogs to soaring meat prices and from a strong calving season to severe drought conditions, causing a shortage in feed supply. Yet through it all our ranchers pushed on to ensure the world can continue to bring food home to their tables.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's small farms and independent cattle ranchers play such an important role in our homegrown food supply chain, but their history and heritage play an even more important role in defining who and what our province and our people continue to be. Through even the toughest of times the western ideals instill in us an unwavering belief in better days ahead and a belief that strength is always found amongst each other.

Agricultural Concerns

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, those who work in the agriculture and agrifood sector feed the world and deserve to be celebrated. They have continuously overcome the challenges that have been thrown at them for the past few years. However, for agriculture to thrive through these uncertain times, the provincial government must start listening to the needs of agriculture. With the ongoing invasion of Ukraine, who is the fifth-highest exporter of wheat, there is further uncertainty in the wheat market. This comes after the challenges of severe drought and poor growing seasons. The shortage of Alberta crops led producers to be more reliant on international feed this year, and the problems with rail capacity and blockaded borders made it challenging for producers to secure feed for their livestock. Farmers are trying to make up for the loss of last season and are facing cost pressures like they've never seen before such as fertilizer and utilities.

A global conflict, devastating drought, and a pandemic are out of the control of the UCP. However, the UCP's absence of leadership is making the situation worse. Due to the UCP's delay in getting drought payments out, ranchers are left wondering how they're going to pay their bills. Unfortunately, I've seen nothing in the budget to learn from last year's mistakes or the last drought and to prepare for the emergencies of the future.

The province could be better prepared to ensure economic stability year over year if they maximize the amount of available federal money by signing on to the AgriStability proposal. Even though producer groups have aligned on this, the UCP still refuses. Instead of securing tens of millions of dollars from the federal government for insurance, the UCP are jacking the price of premiums. The rise of the premiums of crop and livestock insurance by 10 per cent will obtain nearly $40 million off the backs of farmers. There is no need to do this while the government rakes in royalties on sky-high oil prices. Agriculture has had enough challenges. Instead of creating more, the UCP should start addressing them.

Thank you.

Oil Sands Development and Fort McMurray

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, $10.3 billion – $10.3 billion – in resource revenue from bitumen deposits. While Budget 2022 is great, I think it's fair to say that it wouldn't be balanced without the endowment from Alberta's northeastern region and, quite specifically, Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, the home of the biggest players in Alberta's oil sands. In 2020 our provincial revenue from bitumen royalties was just $2 billion. Now we are forecast to produce a whopping $10.3 billion, a major contribution to Alberta's nonrenewable resource revenue from Fort McMurray as well as the Cold Lake region.

These revenues go a long way in financing the province's key development projects such as revitalizing the Calgary and Edmonton downtown cores to attract corporate investment, constructing educational institutions to invest in our youth, and redeveloping and expanding our health care infrastructure, as witnessed in Red Deer.

The actions of Russia have highlighted the need for Canada's hydrocarbon sector. With real solutions needed for energy demands and windmills and solar panels being exposed as unreliable, it's time our government starts investing in northeastern Alberta.

Ordinarily we'd see communities form around industries in remote locations. Instead, we witness approximately 10,000 workers commuting from across the country to work in the oil sands. These workers commute using jet airplanes, which are extremely carbon intensive. They also work shift schedules that interfere with their circadian cycles and are away from their families for extended periods.

The current situation dictates that people leave Fort McMurray to attend universities and colleges that provide more options than our local community college. The state of the local hospital dictates that citizens will travel about 46,000 times a year to Edmonton and other areas to visit health care specialists and professionals.

With strategic investments in institutions in Fort McMurray like additional funding and support for Keyano College and the Northern Lights health centre along with releasing Crown lands for future growth and affordable housing, not to mention finishing the twinning of the highway, Fort McMurray could grow to attract these 10,000 workers and build a prosperous community that contributes even more to Alberta.

Deaths of Children in Care and Youth Transitioning out of Care

Ms Pancholi: Last fall I stood in this Assembly and asked for this government to take action on a very serious crisis facing our province: an alarming rise in the deaths of children and youth in the child intervention system. At that time the heartbreaking number was 30, and the largest increase was in youth transitioning out of government care. Mr. Speaker, that number, a few months later, is now 45; 45 children and young people have died since last April. Forty-five: 20 young people transitioning out of care, 18 under the age of 12, 80 per cent of them Indigenous, two and a half times the number who died 10 years ago.

Last fall the Minister of Children's Services claimed she had reached out to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate and advised her ministry staff to do a review of policies, but three separate FOIP requests show there are no records, zero, that the minister spoke with the advocate or even her own deputy minister about the support and financial assistance agreement program last year, the very program that 20 of these young people were on.

Efforts to follow the Child and Youth Advocate's recommendations for greater accountability by government ministries in their responses to his recommendations to improve outcomes for children and youth in care have been shot down at every opportunity by the UCP, as recently as in estimates last week by the Minister of Children's Services.

The child intervention budget shows no increase in funding, no increase in front-line staff, and, shockingly, $10 million less for youth transitioning out of care. Insultingly, the Minister of Children's Services has claimed that reinstating a dedicated caseworker, the only consistent support in these young people's lives, two and a half years after she cut those supports was somehow the plan all along.

Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss. I don't know what it will take to make the UCP understand the gravity of this situation and how deeply they are failing their responsibility for the very children in their care. In the words of Cindy Blackstock: when governments know better and they don't do better for children, that amounts to negligence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Alberta's Sister Relationship with Hokkaido, Japan

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take some time this afternoon to talk about the relationship between this province and a region in Japan. Hokkaido and Alberta will celebrate their 42nd anniversary of being sister provinces this year. For those who don't know, Hokkaido is an island province located on the northern part of Japan. Its capital, Sapporo, is the home of the alcoholic beverage with the same name. Hokkaido shares much of the same economy as Alberta as its focus is on agriculture, forestry, and food processing.

In 1980 these two regions became sisters, and along with it came many great cultural and educational opportunities. For over a decade Alberta and Hokkaido have partnered in high school exchange programs, where students from Alberta and Japan develop their international language skills by spending eight weeks in each other's homes and schools. The Hokkaido Sports Association and the Alberta Sport Connection have also regularly signed an agreement for a friendship sport exchange between the two provinces, and Alberta has played a key role in helping Hokkaido develop into the curling capital of Japan.

In 1985 Stony Plain and Shikaoi were also named sister towns. This year the two communities will celebrate 37 years of friendship, which is the second longest lasting relationship between Alberta communities and those in Hokkaido. This mutual understanding and respect is key to showcasing the culture and lifestyles of our respective communities. In Stony Plain students have been able to take part in the Shikaoi exchange program. It gives kids from both regions a chance to take in the unique perspectives each community has to offer. Another great example of this relationship can be found in the heart of Stony Plain, which hosts a beautiful Japanese garden filled with ponds and flowers named after Shikaoi.

These types of relationships are essential to not only international relations with Japan and the province of Hokkaido, but it also serves the quality of life of residents and kids living in Stony Plain, who get to learn, live, and breathe Japanese culture. [Remarks in Japanese] As translated: Japan and Alberta will always be friends.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition has question 1.

Premier's Leadership

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's priorities these days are, shall we say, askew. The Premier thinks the best way to recover from COVID is by cutting the wages of health workers. His response to Albertans struggling to pay their bills was a budget that raised their income tax. His efforts at utility relief are in shambles. Meanwhile the person who should be giving him advice in all this is out campaigning against many of his colleagues to save his struggling leadership. Why is the Premier's top priority fighting with his own party instead of fighting for Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, let me just say that it's nice to see the hon. the Leader of the Opposition back, and I'm glad to see she's in good health.

Mr. Speaker, this government: every day our priority is fighting for Albertans. In fact, we have fought our way to the strongest economy in Canada, the strongest job creation in Canada, and we are fighting for Albertans dealing with the rising cost of living with $1.7 billion of consumer relief on an annual basis. That's even more than the NDP was taking out of their pockets with the carbon tax. This is the government that has brought in the strongest economic renewal that this province has seen in many years, and the future is looking bright.

Ms Notley: That's money that didn't find its way into the budget because, of course, it was something they came up with about three days ago.

Meanwhile instead of working for Albertans, this UCP government is collapsing into its own infighting, melodrama, and power struggles. The whole government's focus on this Premier's leadership comes at the expense of Albertans. In fact, I have a note that's been sent to all political staff calling on them to start phoning for their boss at 4 o'clock. Mr. Speaker, staff leaving at 4 p.m. is not a sign of a government firing on all cylinders. Why is the Premier's leadership campaign the top priority of this government? Why do Albertans rank so low on the UCP list?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, while the NDP is always talking down Alberta, this government continues to build investor confidence, to create jobs and growth, to keep our election commitments. We have now implemented 88 per cent of the 372 commitments on which we were elected. The Minister of Finance just came back from selling Alberta's amazing turnaround story to investors in New York and financial institutions in Toronto. Just last week the Minister of Energy and I were in Houston fighting for increased exports of Alberta energy, because we are the solution to global energy supply and security issues. Every day on the job fighting for Alberta's economy.

Ms Notley: Now, Mr. Speaker, to all the Albertans watching at home: this is exactly why you can't trust this UCP government. Now, our NDP team is united, strong, and putting forward actual policies to help your family make ends meet and come out ahead. Meanwhile in UCP land the Premier's top adviser is campaigning for him. The Premier's staff are campaigning for him. The Premier's newest MLA is campaigning for, well, himself. Premier, is there anyone over there who's actually campaigning for Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP has never stopped campaigning for themselves since the day after they were kicked out of office by Albertans. While this government has passed more legislation than any in Canada through the COVID crisis, we never downed tools. In fact, this was the only government in Canada to come out with a comprehensive economic recovery plan in the first three months of COVID, and the benefits are now clear as we lead Canada in economic growth, in job growth, in diversification, the best year ever in tech, in film and television, in manufacturing, in exports, and, yes, in oil and gas.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for question 2.

Utility Costs

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, if there's one team effort over there, it's the UCP raising costs with their bracket creep, hikes to school fees, car insurance, taxes, more, all this as utility bills are through the roof. Now, I've heard from Alberta families who say that the Premier's rebate crumbs are not enough. These families may face losing their heat in a month, but we can't let that happen in this building. Speaking of legislation, our caucus has drafted a bill that would prevent shut-offs from April until October. Will the Premier work with us to get that passed, to finally do something real to help Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this government is putting forward $300 million of relief for electricity consumers through a $150 rebate to deal with the mess left by the NDP. They increased transmission costs by $7.3 billion. They had to pay out $1.3 billion to coal generators. They brought in their carbon tax, and they're cheering on Justin Trudeau's increase of that on April 1. People's power prices are higher today because of mistakes made by the NDP. We're trying to help people out with $300 million of relief.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, people's power prices are up because these guys took the cap off.

Now, we're hearing from Albertans. Monty wants that price cap back. Hamdi is stretched beyond capacity. Karrie is overdue every month. Stephanie has to choose between power and groceries. Niki is so tired of the Premier's excuses. Safia worries that she and her son will be in the dark because they can't pay their bills. These are real Albertans. We're offering a solution. We could work today to make it happen. Why won't the Premier do that?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's take on this canard about this so-called NDP rate cap. It applied only to a minority of electricity consumers and then only a minority of their costs for generation, not transmission. Altogether it represented $108 million of notional relief for taxpayers. The rebate that this government is delivering is three times that. It's $300 million of relief. On top of that: $1.4 billion of relief by eliminating the fuel tax, where the NDP brought in their carbon tax. All of these costs were made worse by their shutting down coal and imposing their carbon tax.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it's really simple. Justine is on maternity leave. She wrote to us. Her last energy bill was more than $500. She says: we have to resort to credit cards and a line of credit to cover our utilities; I fear for how we're going to be able to get out of this debt. No one should have to put the gas bill on their credit card to avoid getting their utilities cut off. Why won't this Premier work with us to pass a bill to bar people from being cut off their utilities while these prices are so sky-high?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if the NDP was concerned about folks like Justine and their ability to pay for their power costs, then why did the NDP rush to shut down the cheapest and most reliable form of electricity production in Alberta with our coal plants, putting thousands of people out of work? Why did they impose over a billion and a half dollars in costs on people like Justine through their carbon tax? Why are they cheering on Justin Trudeau's plan to raise that carbon tax on April 1? Why did they build $7 billion of additional transmission, that people like Justine are having to pay for? Why did they push so many Albertans into energy poverty? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the UCP is spreading mistruths about the education budget. Yesterday the minister claimed that funding was exceeding student population growth over the last 15 years. Well, this is wrong. When enrolment increases by 24 per cent and inflation increases by 26 per cent, you have to add them together to come up with the real cost that Alberta schools are facing. To the Premier: is it that your UCP Education minister doesn't want to tell the truth, or is it that she doesn't understand inflation and basic addition?

Mr. Kenney: Well, as we expect from that member, of course, being unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans know that we have to operate more efficiently, which is exactly what we've done, while investing more in education. Under the budget tabled last week, Mr. Speaker, the total Education budget is going up to $8.54 billion from the 2020 budget of under $8 billion. If you look over the past decade, the increases in investment in the Education budget have consistently outstripped enrolment growth, population growth, and inflation growth. We are right to invest in education but also to challenge our partners there to do it more efficiently.

Ms Hoffman: The Premier is wrong. You have to add population growth plus inflation. The incompetence gets much worse. The UCP claims that it doesn't even know how many students are enrolled in school this year. That's right. We're more than halfway through the school year, and the UCP minister can't tell us how many kids are going to school. It's either the most secretive government in Canada, because they won't share the enrolment numbers, or the most incompetent, because they don't even know. Does the Premier really think Albertans will trust the UCP with K to 12 education when his minister doesn't even know how many kids are going to school? If I'm wrong, if she actually does know, will the Premier stand up and tell us right now?

Mr. Kenney: Well, in fact, we're funding 730,000 kids in the education system, Mr. Speaker, in this year versus 716,000 last year. Those are fully funded positions. Yesterday we announced equal funding for charter schools that the NDP underfunded with respect to special-needs kids. We're letting them finally grow and expand, so the Aurora charter here in Edmonton will be able to build a high school. Since 2007 we have seen a 48 per cent increase in educational operational funding versus a 26 per cent increase in inflation and a 24 per cent increase in enrolment. Spending has outstripped inflation and enrolment.

Ms Hoffman: Those numbers the Premier just said are still estimates. They're on the website as estimates.

What we do have is big money going to construction and funding of charter schools. The NDP government offered stability for charters, but our priority has always been public schools, where the vast majority of students learn. The UCP shows disdain for public education when they refuse to fund a single project for kids in Edmonton public or Lethbridge public or St. Albert public or many other public districts right across Alberta, so the Premier bangs his drum for charter schools but snubs public school families. Premier, why do charter schools get more teachers, better career path funding . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, none of that is true. In fact, right now 66 schools across Alberta are being built or substantially refurbished, including six with the Edmonton public school board, but more broadly, in the Edmonton region there are 24 of those 66 projects. Yesterday we announced another one, allowing Aurora charter to build a new high school. Here's the great thing. We're making these record investments in education and in building schools, building hospitals, building infrastructure while doing it with a balanced budget.

Deaths of Children in Care and Youth Transitioning out of Care

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, once again I must rise in this House to bring to this government's attention the absolute tragedy occurring in our child intervention system. As I first raised last November: more children and youth in the system have died this year than any year on record, and the year isn't even over yet. The numbers today now exceed the worst year on record by more than 30 per cent, 45 children and youth. These are children, sons and daughters, brothers and sisters. Their lives matter. Can the Premier please tell this Assembly, in light of knowing about this trend for almost half a year, what concrete new actions his government is taking to address this devastating issue.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for raising such a profoundly important and serious question and for her evident concern for children in care, particularly as we see those terrible fatalities experienced last year. Undoubtedly, much of this has been connected to the dislocation, disruption of COVID, that has seen an increase in domestic violence as well. I can say that Children's Services reviews all deaths to determine what happened and if it could have been prevented. Rigorous follow-up is required and happens in every single instance, and several mandatory reviews must happen whenever there is a case involving the death of a child . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: That's a deeply unsatisfactory answer, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Children's Services assured us that action was being taken. Since that time deaths have increased by 50 per cent; 15 more young people have died, five more children under the age of five, six more young people transitioning out of care. In 2017 two youth transitioning out of care died, and the NDP established the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention. This year that number is 20, yet the UCP refuses to convene an all-party panel, and they refuse to allow government ministries to report to this Assembly on how they're implementing recommendations from the advocate. Will the Premier call an all-party panel immediately to address . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it is truly regrettable to see efforts to politicize such an issue as this, such a tragic issue. Last fall, I can report, Children's Services commissioned a report to investigate the rise in deaths, and from that report we will use the data to inform how best to improve the system. We're continuously improving that system to support the safety and well-being of children. We're also investing additionally in youth mental health recovery programs, including $7 million in the expansion of youth mental health hubs, $1.25 million for the youth recovery program at Hull Services, and many other important investments to support kids facing crises.

Ms Pancholi: This is not about politics, Mr. Speaker. This is about keeping children and youth safe.

For three years the UCP government has refused to take responsibility on this file, and Albertans no longer trust them. The Minister of Children's Services didn't consider the consequences of removing access to caseworkers for youth transitioning out of care. There was no new funding for child intervention or to hire new front-line caseworkers. Funding for youth transitioning out of care has actually decreased. The government refuses any accountability or transparency. What will it take for any member of this cabinet – any member – to stand up and to take action to protect the children that are in your care?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do hope the hon. minister will be able to deliver this or respond to further questions on this critically important issue. As I said, action is being taken. A report has been commissioned as of last fall on exactly this issue. Additional investments are being made. We're also launching a new suicide prevention grant program that will provide $3 million over the next two years to organizations supporting youth mental health and suicide prevention. But I think all of this underscores the need for us, together as a society, to move on beyond the dislocation and often the mental and emotional stress imposed by the COVID era.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has a question.

Capital Plan

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today at the RMA spring convention I was pleased to hear that the Premier committed a historic $20.2 billion towards building the infrastructure of Alberta: the roads, the bridges, the schools, the health care facilities, and more; the things that Albertans need. As a rural MLA for Livingstone-Macleod I was particularly proud to know that rural and remote Alberta communities will be sharing in significant portions of this landmark capital investment. Through you to the Minister of Infrastructure: why was it so important to ensure that both urban and rural communities shared in this historic public investment?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the member for his strong advocacy for rural Alberta. Alberta Infrastructure alone will spend $4.8 billion over the next three years, with about a billion dollars each for Calgary, Edmonton, and municipalities outside the major urban centres. I know that the one-third, one-third, one-third principle isn't just the case for Infrastructure but right across the government. This government recognized the importance of rural Alberta. That's why we are investing billions of dollars in irrigation, rural broadband, and maintenance projects.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for his answer. Given that this historic capital investment includes 66 school projects in every corner of the province, in communities like

Camrose, Calgary, Valleyview, Penhold, Edmonton, Cochrane, Slave Lake, and more and given that building this educational infrastructure is critical to Alberta's recovery plan and our economic future, again to the same minister: how were these school projects chosen, and what steps has our government taken to take the politics out of building new schools?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, we passed the Infrastructure Accountability Act to ensure that we are evaluating every project based on objective criteria. The member listed a number of individual school projects, but let me update this House. As of January 31 there are 47 school projects under way in rural Alberta, including new projects in this year's budget. Of the 47, there are 14 new and expanded schools and 33 modernizations and replacements, and 126 rural school projects have been completed over the last seven years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that following the pandemic our capital plan makes historic investments in expanding health care capacity for our province and given that Budget 2022 commits a total of $3.5 billion for health care facilities, equipment, and IT systems to quickly expand health care capacity for all Albertans, no matter where they live, again to the Minister of Infrastructure: how will this historic $20.2 billion capital plan ensure that all Albertans have access to the quality medical care and facilities that they need when they need them?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, there are eight health care projects within rural municipalities out of the 24 currently under way, and we completed four health projects in rural municipalities just last year. Obviously, major facilities in the cities, like the new Calgary centre, will also serve patients from rural municipalities. COVID exposed the limitations of our current health infrastructure. That's why this budget expands the health care infrastructure budget in a big way, including the Red Deer hospital, which will serve rural Albertans.

2:10 Child and Youth Advocate Recommendations

Mr. Feehan: Mr. Speaker, this government, particularly the Minister of Children's Services, keeps asking Albertans to trust them, but the problem is that the facts tell a different story. Again the Child and Youth Advocate has renewed his calls for accountability and transparency in addressing issues prevalent in the child intervention system, calls that the minister keeps denying all the while the percentage of Indigenous children in care grows. These youth now account for 68 per cent of cases and 80 per cent of deaths. Will the Minister of Children's Services commit today to a public forum to report on the progress of the recommendations of the Child and Youth Advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the questions about this very important topic. What I would say is that the process that is in place right now in terms of how we respond to the office of the Child and Youth Advocate's recommendations when it comes to child intervention services and support services for youth actually came out of the last all-party panel on child intervention. Those changes were made just a couple of years ago. That is the process that we follow. There is absolutely a transparency report on every single recommendation that is made. In addition to that, I asked for another report to detail what we need to do when it comes to policy and practice to better support . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Given that we are in the midst of the worst year on record for deaths of current or former youth receiving services under the Ministry of Children’s Services and given that we have raised this issue multiple times on this side of the House and the Minister of Children’s Services refuses to do anything other than again ask us to trust that actions are being taken, to the Minister of Indigenous Relations. Indigenous youth are dying under this government’s watch. How many more lives will be tragically lost before this government admits that they are failing Indigenous youth?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, I do just want to remind the members opposite that they left child intervention underfunded when they were in government. We came in, and in our first budget we not only paid for funds that they encumbered, that they hadn’t budgeted for, in child intervention; following an all-party panel we fully funded child intervention. We are committed to making changes where they need to be made. We are working with Indigenous communities on transitioning the responsibility of child intervention to their care, out of provincial government care. I think that that is an opportunity to greatly improve outcomes for kids and youth. We know we need to do better in this area, and we are doing exactly that.

Mr. Feehan: Given that over the last three years both the Child and Youth Advocate and the NDP have called for ministers to appear in committee to report on progress of recommendations only to be consistently denied by the UCP government and the minister and given that each time the excuse is due to a lack of scope – reviewing the annual report is out of scope, the standing committee is out of scope, and last week the minister said that estimates was out of scope – can the minister of either Indigenous Relations or Children’s Services tell this Assembly what venue is in scope for public accountability on actions to reverse these troubling trends?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, this is a great concern for our government, and this is something that we have committed not only to take action on but to be transparent about. Again, the process by which we respond to recommendations that come from the advocate are posted online. I’m happy to speak about our action on those items, but I also asked for an additional report to be done to outline exactly what we need to do, whether there are changes that need to be made to policy, to practice, to legislation, to regulations. I’ve also committed to be transparent about it, something those members opposite did not do when they were in government.

Health Care Worker Wages

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, it feels like déjà vu in the worst possible way. This government throughout the pandemic paid lip service to thank health care workers and then turned around to undercut and disrespect them. We’ve seen the government privatizing health care jobs during a pandemic and insultingly deride, quote, union-run hospitals instead of respecting the people who run them. Now the government is looking to slash the pay of a number of different health care workers, including respiratory therapists, who saved countless lives. Will the Minister of Health apologize to respiratory therapists for the insulting proposal and commit to pulling it today? If not, will he admit his recent words of thanks to health care workers ring hollow?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we’ve spoken over the last couple of days in regard to the bargaining that is going on between the HSAA and AHS, this is just that, bargaining. Negotiations have been going on for some time. Last week both parties put their first positions on the table in regard to the monetary items. AHS put a position in regard to concerns in regard to certain professions and being at market, and HSAA put a 15 per cent increase over four years on the table. This is part of the process, where parties put positions on the table. They negotiate, and we are hopeful they’ll reach an agreement, just like UNA did.

Ms Gray: Given that respiratory therapists, paramedics, pharmacists, and many more did so much to save lives during this pandemic and rather than offer them support and thanks for their Herculean efforts to protect Albertans from COVID-19, this government is moving to slash wages, given Holly Champney, a Red Deer respiratory therapist, stated that it “feels demoralizing to be offered a wage rollback” after all she and her colleagues have done, does the minister understand the harm these wage proposals cause, why these proposals appear to punish Alberta’s health care heroes?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I want to thank all of the health care workers for the tremendous efforts that they have done throughout the pandemic and they continue to deliver for Albertans. As we indicated, this is part of a normal bargaining process. It’s the same process that was used with UNA, and an agreement was reached through that process, which was ratified at a very high level. I am very hopeful that the same process will reach agreement between AHS and HSAA, and then we can begin to move forward.

Thank you.

Ms Gray: Given that during the second wave of COVID-19 the UCP asked people to cancel their Christmas plans while the UCP flew off to Hawaii and Vegas, given that during the fifth wave the UCP threw a Christmas party for their members hours after telling Albertans to cancel their own plans, given that these are just some of the hypocritical actions that have absolutely shattered Albertans’ ability to trust this government, will the minister rise in this House and explain why any Albertan should believe him when his government claims that these cruel wage cuts are appropriate? Why are you trying to cut the pay of those who did dangerous work through the pandemic while your Premier wined and dined on the sky palace?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I already indicated, this is part of the bargaining process. I am very optimistic that the parties, using the same process, will reach an agreement just like was done with UNA, which had increases in their agreement. Our government respects the work of all health care workers, and we’ve recognized that through payments, you know, that the Minister of Labour and Immigration made last year in recognition of their tremendous work.

Mr. Speaker, we are investing in our health care capacity. We are investing $600 million this year and for the next two years an additional $600 million. We’re investing $3.5 billion in infrastructure. We are investing in health care for Albertans and for health care workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks–Medicine Hat.

Agricultural Concerns

Mrs. Frey: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta experienced a record-breaking heat wave last summer that saw temperatures climb to over 35 degrees Celsius. Many municipalities, including in the south, faced extreme agricultural drought. Recovery is a slow and difficult process, especially when the land has suffered previous droughts, and we all know that. Between not being able to produce enough crop and not being able to support sustainable pastures for livestock, Alberta's agricultural producers were faced with immense financial burdens. Can the minister of agriculture please explain what aid is available for farmers and livestock producers that are dealing with climate and drought complications in Alberta? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. minister of agriculture and forestry.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree. Last summer was a difficult one for our farmers and ranchers, and they're still feeling the devastating impacts. Fortunately, we acted quickly with the help of the federal government, created the Canada-Alberta livestock feed initiative AgriRecovery program, which made up to $400 million in much-needed relief available to drought-stricken livestock producers and beekeepers. The first phase alone saw 14,000 applications on over 2.1 million animals, totalling $180 million in payments. The second phase so far: 11,000 applications . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat.

Mrs. Frey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his answer. Given that CP Rail is essential to the farming industry, in which grain is its largest transport and given that CP Rail is vital to the global cattle feed market and further given that livestock producers are expecting feed deliveries very soon, to the same minister: what is Alberta's government doing to prevent CP Rail from striking, and how are we handling arising concerns from agricultural producers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture and forestry.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I just took this question at RMA this morning. It's front of mind for the entire livestock sector. Currently we're heavily reliant on feed grains, namely U.S. corn. We're seeing about six unit trains of corn coming into the province a week, another one of DDGS, distillers grain. There simply isn't the grain supply in the south country, where most of these cattle are fed. I've been doing daily phone calls with the ag ministers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba and working closely with our counterparts to make sure the feds know that this is critical.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Frey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that rural veterinarian care is scarce and a number of people in my riding have to travel an hour or two in order to find a clinic to find proper and adequate care for their animals and given that Alberta is still in need of hundreds of qualified veterinarians and that rural Alberta faces serious challenges when it comes to attracting new vets, can the minister confirm steps that we are taking to resolve this shortage and what is being done to encourage growth in the veterinarian sector in Alberta?

2:20

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Horner: Yes. Thank you, and thank you to the member for the question. The vet crisis in rural Alberta, especially on the large-animal side, has snuck up on no one. This has been an issue for a long time. I am very excited to see in Budget '22 the addition of $59 million going towards U of C to expand the seats from 50 to 100, and that is just the first step. More things will need to be done. It's about a four-to-six strategy approach from the dean at the U of C around recruitment, retention, changing the admission requirements, and making sure that we have vets in rural Alberta.

The Speaker: I just might remind members that interacting with those who are observing in the gallery is largely frowned upon. I encourage folks to not be doing that.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Calgary Beltline Area Protests

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each weekend it's chaos in Calgary Beltline communities. I represent them, but due to the ongoing Saturday protests, that have no end in sight, I've heard directly from businesses reporting revenue losses of 20 to 36 per cent. Residents can't get to and from their homes without being harassed, shoved, or worse. This isn't right. I'm not going to get into the purpose or cause of these protests because something needs to change. What I want to know is why the UCP government hasn't lifted a finger to bring order to this chaos.

Mr. Shandro: As the member knows since he ostensibly lives in Calgary, we have a municipal police service in Calgary, the Calgary Police Service. I understand that they are working with the community to bring order and to police. We do not have a provincial police force that the UCP would be directing, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to if the Calgary Police Service has any questions for us or the Calgary Police Commission. If there are any resources or any help that we could provide as government, I look forward to receiving those requests from the Calgary Police Service.

Member Ceci: Given that that answer is woefully inadequate and that the police are not doing anything in Calgary, given that the city councillors in Calgary are expressing a feeling of helplessness as the protest seems to be intensifying, and given that this UCP government has no problem running over municipalities when it suits them politically, why is this government now doing absolutely nothing and providing no support to find a compromise or properly enforce laws in Calgary's Beltline communities?

Mr. Shandro: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, everybody in Alberta has the right to participate in a democratic and peaceful protest, and we're respectful of that. The Calgary Police Service, like all police services in Alberta, makes operational decisions about deployment and enforcement tactics. I know that the NDP have the impression that governments and politicians should be directing law enforcement in certain situations. That's not the case. We look forward to making sure that if we get any requests from the Calgary Police Service or the Calgary Police Commission – I'd also point out that those councillors are also members of the Calgary Police Commission.

Member Ceci: Given that the UCP government also did nothing to resolve the illegal blockade at the Coutts border crossing for weeks and given that members of the UCP caucus actually cheered on those with the illegal blockade even after it surfaced that some involved were stockpiling weapons and plotting to kill RCMP members and given that we're lucky that no one was seriously hurt or worse at Coutts but again we find the government sitting on its hands, is it really going to take someone getting seriously hurt in the Beltline protest for the Justice minister to do his job?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's focus on the Coutts situation and the response from the acting minister at the time, who used prudence and deference to law enforcement to ensure that every single member of law enforcement made it home to their families safe every night, as opposed to the NDP . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.
The minister.

Mr. Shandro: . . . who are advocating imprudence. Putting those lives at risk is shameful behaviour. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung is next.

Coutts Border Crossing Blockade

Mr. Dach: Hard-working Albertans have been hurt by high prices and shipping delays, and in estimates yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transportation defended her inaction and could not even provide an accurate figure for the taxpayer cost of the 18-day Coutts border blockade. The Canadian manufacturers and exporters put the cost at $44 million a day to the Canadian economy; the federal government at $48 million a day. The minister claims that these are just, quote, numbers that have been highly thrown about and that the costs weren't as high as projected. Unquote. Is the minister really telling Albertans that she has no clue what the illegal Coutts blockade cost, or will she finally provide a real figure?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, the reality is that those numbers were based on assumptions, and, in fact, in Transportation with JSG we did significant work in diverting traffic to the Del Bonita border entry, and that resulted in a lot of traffic actually getting through across to the border. The numbers that were thrown about were just based on assumptions. They haven't been quality checked, and we will do that estimation within Jobs, Economy and Innovation.

Mr. Dach: Given that alongside these missing costs, Mr. Speaker, we're also trying to understand the lack of action from the Minister of Transportation and given that while truckers were left stranded at the border and the cost of the blockade hit Albertans' wallets, Albertans called on the minister to take real action to reopen the border and given that the minister claims that she didn't have the time or the ability to suspend commercial licences or really to take any action and that instead her most innovative solution was to create a WhatsApp chat to talk to truckers, does the minister recognize that she had resources at her disposal to end the blockade, or was a group chat the best she could offer Albertans?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member clearly mischaracterized my statements, and, in fact, the tools that were at our disposal like suspending commercial licences would not have withstood a constitutional challenge, so that was something that we couldn't do. Any other changes that we were looking at required changes to the Traffic Safety Act. In fact, we did significant work, working with CBSA and the U.S. border services, to divert traffic, which actually mitigated the economic impact, so we are proud of that work. Most of that response was within the purview of the RCMP.

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, a WhatsApp group. It may surprise you to hear this, but it makes me think of Meryl Streep's famous line in that scene from the movie The Devil Wears Prada: "Florals, for spring? Groundbreaking." That is to say, a chat group app was not innovative and certainly not sufficient. Let's try one more time. What were the costs of the blockade, and if presented with similar disruptions of key trade corridors in the future, what actions will the Minister of Transportation take to protect Alberta pocketbooks and businesses?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I didn't even understand . . .

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: I was very, very curious to see how the member was going to tie a The Devil Wears Prada quote into a question that didn't include a preamble. Unfortunately, he was unable to do that. That is a very clear example of a preamble, and I encourage him to govern himself accordingly in the future.

The hon. minister.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, as I was mentioning, I didn't quite understand some of what was mentioned by the member opposite. We took significant efforts to communicate with commercial truck drivers. In fact, I have received nothing but positive feedback. We alerted them to border crossings and timings and days that they were open and days that they were closed, and we have received much positive feedback from that communication. That was the entire intent, to make sure that commercial truck drivers had the information that they needed so that they could cross the border, and it was well done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Alberta Energy Regulator

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Energy Regulator is a hugely important part of the production of energy in the province of Alberta. It's an integral piece of the puzzle working with energy companies to ensure that we have one of the most efficient, profitable, and environmentally responsible energy industries in the world. As part of its mandate the AER oversees pipeline development, reclamation, drilling, well approvals, et cetera. To the Minister of Energy: how much of the provincial GDP is being overseen and regulated by the AER? [interjection]

The Speaker: Order.
The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for his question. The AER regulates oil, oil sands, natural gas, critical minerals, geothermal, and I can tell this House that that industry produces $78 billion to Alberta's GDP. It's great to hear the NDP excited about the AER for once. When they were in government, there were four independent investigations because they weren't watching it. It's great to see they're interested in it now.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the AER oversees a huge portion of the GDP of the Alberta economy and given that it is very important that the oversight of this industry is built upon a system that is allowing for a constant flow of information between the government, the AER, and industry stakeholders and given that it is in the best interests of all Albertans to have an efficient, profitable, and environmentally responsible energy industry with appropriate oversight by the AER, to the Minister of Energy: what metrics has the Minister of Energy set up to ensure that the AER is fulfilling its mandate in the interests of the people of Alberta and the industry stakeholders?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The business plan in the Department of Energy includes metrics for all of our agencies for effective management of our resources. The metrics for the AER include targets, targets related to timelines, and these timelines are being met. It also includes red tape reduction, and those targets are being met. [interjections] I can hear the NDP heckling over there, and, again, it's so great that they're finally taking an interest in the AER, because they didn't when they were in government, and the AER went outside of its mandate and ended up with four independent investigations. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.
The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are thousands of wells in my constituency alone that are at the end of life and need to have downhole abandonment and reclamation work done and given that oil and gas companies are coming out of the worst recession in Alberta history, where many feared for their very existence, and given that a new directive overseen by the AER is setting mandated spending by energy companies on end-of-life well cleanup and given that this could have a huge impact on practitioners, landowners, and industry, to the Minister of Energy: what kind of feedback loop is going to be set up to encourage industry to provide timely and effective feedback to the AER and the government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to liaise with the AER and the industry and other stakeholders across the province to better understand the regulatory concerns impacting the whole industry, and we've made substantial progress on addressing those concerns. Take directive 088, which is part of the liability management framework announced in the summer of 2020. Under that framework there are mandatory minimum spends for cleanup of inactive oil and gas wells. We're taking a problem that's been developing for decades and fixing it. We're cleaning up inactive wells.

Automobile and Trucking Industry Insurance Costs

Mr. Sabir: Alberta truckers kept our supply chains open throughout this pandemic, working long hours under tough conditions. They deserve our thanks, but they are getting none from this government. Insurance costs are skyrocketing, and many owner-operators can't make ends meet. They are unable to pay for all the cost increases forced upon them by this UCP government. To the Minister of Finance: where is insurance relief for the trucking industry, and why won't this government do anything to help Albertans struggling to pay your skyrocketing insurance costs?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do have a hard insurance market in Alberta. We actually have one right across the country and on the continent. That's resulting in increased upward pressure on insurance premiums. But we have taken real action in Bill 41, that we introduced and passed last fall. Bill 41 dealt with the systemic issues that were pushing up costs, resulting in higher automobile insurance premiums. While the members opposite simply put in a cap, a cap that resulted in lower products, we brought in a real solution that's dropping premiums.

Mr. Sabir: Given that insurance costs have skyrocketed for all drivers because of your Bill 41 and the sellout by this UCP government to the insurance industry and given that this insurance crisis has made insurance out of reach for Albertans, including the tens of thousands of truck owners and operators, and given that it's essential we keep truckers in the industry and our supply chains open, to the minister again: how can this government possibly justify double-digit increases in insurance costs on these hard-working Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's concern over the great trucking industry, transportation industry in this province, but while the members opposite put a cap on insurance rates in a competitive market and did not deal with the systemic cost issues that were driving premiums, premiums went up by 5 per cent per year under their watch. At the same time, products were being pulled back. Consumers were having less choice and fewer options. We brought in fundamental reforms that deal with these cost pressures. Insurance premiums, in fact, have flattened and are coming down. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Sabir: Given that insurance costs are out of reach for Albertans and Alberta businesses and that instead of taking action to address their concerns, this government is talking them down and given that this government appears more focused on the Premier fighting to keep his livelihood rather than the livelihoods of Albertans and their businesses and given that my constituents are feeling left behind and ignored by this government, can the minister point to a single insurance relief program in Budget 2022 that will help lower insurance costs for my constituents and the trucking industry?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the members opposite simply focused on caps and did not have the courage to deal with the real systemic issues that were driving up premiums, we dealt with those issues in Bill 41. That has resulted in a reduction of cost pressures. Insurance premiums for the automobile industry have flattened. In fact, we've seen a number of companies offering premiums in decline. We've seen reductions between 2 and 7 per cent by a number of insurance providers. Our policies are working. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Kananaskis Conservation Pass Revenue

Mr. Schmidt: Kananaskis Country is an area that belongs to all Albertans and was free to access for decades. But it isn't just Albertans who enjoy K Country. It attracted people from around the world and supported jobs in our tourism industry. The UCP has never seen a user fee that they didn't like, so they put one on nature and brought in a $90 fee for Albertans to access Kananaskis Country. The UCP promised that this would bring in revenue to support maintenance in the area, but Albertans haven't seen it. I'm still hearing from people about the poor state of trails and facilities. Where is the UCP's K Country fee going? Albertans sure aren't seeing it.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm always happy to rise in this place and talk about the award-winning Kananaskis conservation fee, which has been in place for half of a season, going into its first full season. Just the other day I was there with the member from Canmore announcing the new Nordic Centre, a significant investment in that community. We're going to continue to invest millions of dollars in Kananaskis going forward. Yes, sadly, it's going to take years to fix that hon. member's mess when he was in government.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that the cost of everything is already going up under the UCP – income taxes, property taxes, tuition, interest on student debt, car insurance, utilities, and, of course, park fees – and given that Albertans aren't seeing any of the promised improvements to the area and that, instead, they're using the money to backfill previous cuts or fund previous announcements and given that the fee has only raised $11 million after the UCP promised $15 million, why are Albertans paying more but getting less from this government, and how many more cuts or cost increases will Albertans continue to see due to this shortfall?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the Kananaskis conservation pass last year was not for a full year. Yes, it came in at $11 million. We anticipate that for a full year it will come in at $15 million.

In addition to the $70 million investment the other day in the Canmore Nordic Centre, I have another announcement I can make today, Mr. Speaker. On Friday I'll be at the graduation for 20 new conservation officers, armed conservation officers that will be on the landscape. Another promise fulfilled to Albertans and going out of our way yet again to clean up that hon. member's mess when he was in government when it comes to Kananaskis.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that Albertans aren't seeing any of the promised improvements from the UCP in K Country – it's just another broken promise and another reason that Albertans can't trust them to manage our parks – and given that nobody seems to know where the money from the K Country pass is going and given that we proposed an amendment that would ensure that all the revenue actually went back into K Country but this government voted it down, will the government now bring in an amendment to protect Albertans' money from the UCP, or will they continue to operate their slush fund without any accountability?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's already the law for that money to be spent in Kananaskis, which is being fulfilled. I've already announced just in this question period alone more than the entire Kananaskis conservation fee, which is just part of the investment that we're making in our parks system across the province. In capital alone this year: $70 million going into our parks system. We're dedicated to fixing the mess that the NDP left us in Kananaskis and making sure that we not only protect Kananaskis but that we invest money in our parks system from north to south, east to west so that Albertans can enjoy their backyard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Canada Pension Plan

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of us are concerned about out-of-control inflation. This year CPP for businesses and workers increased to as high as $3,500 each. In only one year CPP went up more than 10 per cent. Higher payroll taxes punish businesses for each and every employee, and Alberta workers take less take-home pay for their families. To the minister: how can we reduce the damage of huge CPP increases on Alberta businesses and workers?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Red Deer-South is right to raise that issue of competitiveness. We know that when we provide a very competitive business environment, it results in increased investment attraction, job opportunities, and expanded fiscal capacity. That's why we immediately brought in the job-creation tax cut. That's why we focused on red tape reduction, regulatory modernization, and we're seeing the response, with billions of dollars of investment returning to this province, resulting in job opportunities, opportunities for small businesses, and economic growth.

Mr. Stephan: Given that the NDP likes to tax anything that moves and breathes and given that under an Alberta pension plan rates for Alberta businesses and workers would be much lower while maintaining the same benefits and given that with lower payroll taxes this could produce a new, competitive advantage, with Alberta businesses hiring more employees, with Alberta workers taking home more of their paycheques to their families, to the minister: what is the delay in pursuing this game-changing competitive advantage to benefit Alberta businesses and workers?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. An Alberta pension plan is a very complex issue. We are continuing with econometric work, actuarial work so that we can be fully informed and so that Albertans can be fully informed in making future decisions around an APP. We remain laser focused on ensuring we have the most competitive business environment in this province. That's resulting in billions of dollars of investment flooding in, thousands of job-creation opportunities, which is putting Albertans back to work.

Mr. Stephan: Given that five years ago it was estimated that CPP contributions by Alberta businesses and workers were about $3 billion more than benefits paid to Alberta retirees and given that since that time Trudeau has been jacking up CPP so that this subsidy from Alberta is bigger, in excess of $4 billion each year, to the minister: why are we leaving this on the table and not getting out of the CPP, which would save billions for Alberta businesses and workers each year?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the member is right to raise this question as we focus on competitiveness in Alberta. Again, this issue is complex. The issue of an Alberta pension plan has much complexity. We're doing the econometric work, actuarial work to ensure that we're well informed and so that Albertans can be well informed to make future decisions. In the meantime we continue to do all we can to attract investment, create job opportunities, and we're seeing a tremendous response. We're seeing Albertans go back to work. We're seeing Alberta small businesses experience additional opportunities. Our plan is working. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period.

Given the estimates schedule only 45 minutes away, I ask that members exit the Chamber as quickly and as quietly as possible as we will be continuing immediately with the daily Routine.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills and Private Members' Public Bills has reviewed the following petitions that were presented to the Assembly on March 10, 2022: the petition of the Calgary Young Men's Christian Association for the Calgary Young Men's Christian Association Amendment Act, 2022, and the petition of the Calgary Heritage Authority for the Calgary Heritage Authority Amendment Act, 2022. I can advise the Assembly that both petitions comply with standing orders 90 to 94.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that at the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur that (a) residential farm and small commercial electricity and gas utility consumers in Alberta are experiencing record-high utility costs, (b) the government of Alberta's proposed $150 rebate over three months is likely not sufficient to prevent Albertans from being unable to afford these costs, which will result in disconnection of these customers' service, (c) the current rules under the distribution tariff regulation and rules established by the Alberta Utilities Commission will allow for service providers to disconnect these customers' utility services starting on April 15, 2022, and (d) the legislated protection for residential farms and small businesses in Alberta is necessary to prevent these Albertans from being forced into undue hardship and further turmoil through the loss of their utilities due to unaffordable utility costs.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation.

Bill 5 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2022

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 5, Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2022.

This bill will improve safety on our roads and highways for roadside workers and enhance existing safety rules for first responders. People who work on or near roads have a higher risk of being injured or killed as a result of passing vehicles. These new requirements will apply to any stopped commercial vehicle that is permitted to have flashing lights such as emergency vehicles, roadside workers, snowplows, and others. Albertans who work along our roads deserve better protection so that they can return safely home at the end of each shift. Bill 5 proposes the necessary changes to the Traffic Safety Act to improve protections for these workers and make Alberta's roads and highways safer.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the appropriate time the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View rose and gave oral notice of a Standing Order 42. The hon. member now has up to five minutes to explain the urgency of such a motion.

Utility Costs

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do think this matter is extremely urgent. The cost of everything has gone up under the UCP. Income taxes, property taxes, tuition, camping fees, park fees, car insurance, and utilities have all gone up. These are a direct result of UCP policies, and right now the soaring cost of utilities is making it increasingly difficult for Albertans to make ends meet.

This matter is urgent, Mr. Speaker, because people are suffering right now. I've heard from Albertans whose utility bills have gone up hundreds of dollars, and with the extra costs the UCP has piled on in other areas, Albertans are struggling to pay their bills. Many report that they owe thousands to utility companies.

Over the winter Albertans are spared from any disconnection due to a regulation that prevents utilities from being cut off between October 15 and April 15. However, April 15 is fast approaching. It's less than one month away today, and I know many Albertans are looking at that date with fear after the UCP failed to provide them real relief for utility costs. The UCP natural gas rebate turned out to be a fake. Their electricity rebate amounted to only $50 a month for three months, and it's inconsequential for those facing bills of more than $700 in any single month.

Today I rise to call on the government to extend the ban on utility disconnections over the spring and summer until it comes back into effect in the fall. Albertans are struggling. They've had a tough two years. They have had difficulties, and now costs are rising. They deserve to know that the fridge won't be cut off over the summer while they struggle to get their feet back under them. This will effectively give Albertans another year knowing their utilities can't be disconnected, and it will give them a real chance to catch up on their bills.

The government has passed similar legislation before. The draft bill that I proposed yesterday was partially designed from the legislation passed in this House during the first wave of COVID-19. We worked together and passed that legislation, protecting Albertans from undue hardship and stress and preventing the suspension of services from March 18 to June 18, 2020. We need to come together to get this done again. The Legislative Assembly can set aside the work this afternoon that it would normally be doing, because this matter is extremely urgent, and it is impacting Albertans all over the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a member of Executive Council has up to five minutes to respond to the Standing Order 42. Is there anyone wishing to do so? The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity has risen.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there's one thing that I do agree on with the other member, and that's that the cost of everything has gone up. There's no doubt. We find ourselves perplexed on this side when they complain about the cost of everything going up, because that's exactly what they asked for. The whole purpose of a carbon tax is to make it more expensive to heat your home. The purpose of a carbon tax is to make it more expensive to drive your car. So they're getting what they asked for. They brought in the first carbon tax. And guess what? Things are more expensive.

Yes, we are equally frustrated by some of the actions that the previous administration has taken, Mr. Speaker. I will say that we are concerned, and we're frustrated when we see the price of utilities going up. Transmission fees on people's utility bills are going up substantially as well, and it's directly from the previous administration's poor policies. They spent $7.5 billion. That's right; I said "billion," not "million." They spent $7.5 billion on transmission – much of it was not needed – at a time when our economy just couldn't support it, and then they throw up their hands and say: why are utility bills so expensive?

Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to put that $7.5 billion into a little context. In 2020 we spent $100 million on transmission – $100 million – in one year compared to their $7.5 billion over four. In 2021 we didn't spend any money on transmission. It's called fiscal restraint, responsibility. We are extremely frustrated on this side when we see Albertans struggling with the high cost of utilities that are inflated for one reason and one reason only, and that is the Alberta NDP.

Now, here's the good news, Mr. Speaker. The good news is that we have demonstrated that we will have the backs of Albertans, and we will take care of Albertans that are struggling. We demonstrated that on day one when COVID first hit, and we came out with the utility deferral program that was designed to help Albertans that were struggling, because we did not want Albertans to have to choose between groceries or paying the utility bill. I can tell you that the Energy department moved heaven and earth to get that program implemented in place so that we could have Albertans' backs, and I can say that that has not stopped, nor will it.

For a number of weeks now I have been trying to bring to the attention of the opposition some programs that are out there to help Albertans. Now, as everyone in this House knows, when I begin to speak about these programs, they start lighting their hair on fire. They're hysterical, they're heckling, and nobody can hear. Mr.

Speaker, I'm going to share with you why this legislation that the NDP wants to do is not necessary. We don't need to write legislation for something that already has the programs in place.

For example, we have very strict rules about disconnections in this province, and there can be no disconnects over the winter months. If we have anyone that has a disconnect that has occurred, then we have programs in place to reconnect before it gets cold. Mr. Speaker, do you know what else we have? Supports for Albertans that are struggling. Low-income seniors that are suffering from utility insecurity: we have programs that will pay their bill and help them. We have the exact same program for low-income Albertans as well.

I have also been having ongoing conversations with the presidents and the CEOs of these utility companies, Mr. Speaker. Let me just tell you that I could not be prouder to be an Albertan with companies like this that are helping us manage the electricity grid, because they were wonderful in demonstrating restraint with Albertans. The one thing that we asked of them is to show restraint, and they absolutely have.

Mr. Speaker, the last thing that I would leave with Albertans is that if anybody is struggling with utility insecurity, please speak to your utility. The utilities have made it clear to me that if Albertans are working with them, they will then, in return, work back with them, and they will come out with reasonable programs that will allow them to continue to pay their bills and to keep their lights and their power on. All they have to do is reach out to the utility.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for the responses to the Standing Order 42. This is a request for unanimous consent to set aside the business of this afternoon, which would include the committee meetings that are scheduled to sit.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the daily Routine.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) and the 2022-2023 main estimates schedule the Assembly will stand adjourned until this evening at 7:30. The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon for the consideration of the main estimates. The Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship shall consider the main estimates for the Ministry of Energy in the Grassland Room, and the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the main estimates for Executive Council in the Rocky Mountain Room.

Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 16, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health on behalf of the Government House Leader.

COVID-19 Air Travel Restrictions

12. Mr. Copping moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly
- (a) recognize that the current air travel restrictions imposed by the government of Canada have no measurable public health benefit and continue to impact hundreds of thousands of jobs in the air travel and tourism sectors and
 - (b) call on the government of Canada to revoke
 - (i) its proof of vaccination requirement for airline passengers and
 - (ii) its predeparture COVID-19 testing requirement for international airline passengers entering Canada.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, we're in transition to living with COVID as opposed to responding to it as a pandemic emergency. All provinces recognize this. Medical and scientific experts in Canada and other countries recognize it. The Council of Chief Medical Officers of Health of Canada recognized it a month ago. They said in their statement that public health measures need to reflect the risk at a point in time. They need to change as the risk changes. As we've said from the start, restrictions need to be a last and limited resort, balancing the risk from the virus with the very real harm caused by the restrictions themselves. Restrictions should be imposed only when necessary, and they should be removed as soon as possible when the situation warrants.

In the case of the travel industry the harm from restrictions is obvious. These travel requirements are continuing to throttle a whole industry for no valid public health reason at this point in time. The Canadian public recognizes this, with polls showing overwhelming support for lifting restrictions right across the country. The question is: why is it taking so long for the government of Canada to recognize this?

Here's one of Canada's most prominent COVID experts, Dr. Zain Chagla, infectious disease physician and associate professor at McMaster University.

COVID-19 testing at the border does not make any sense; travel is no more risky than [any] other activities and there is no scientific reason to single it out... When first put in place, Canada's travel rules were designed to keep COVID-19 out of the country. Now that the virus is here and community spread is responsible for approximately 99 per cent of all infections, the rules governing travel are obsolete.

Another quote, from Dr. Dominik Mertz, division director of infectious diseases at McMaster: "There are higher risk, domestic settings that vaccinated people can access without testing than travelling internationally. The travel barriers... [simply do not] make sense."

Here's another. Dr. Irfan Dhalla, co-chair of the federal advisory panel on COVID-19 testing and screening:

I'm not sure I understand the rationale for testing travellers who are going to the U.S. for a very short trip... Even if we were going to require tests from these travellers, a test taken in Canada, before the trip even starts, would not be helpful.

Mr. Speaker, the federal requirements reflect a situation that has passed, when the COVID virus posed a different threat and our ability to manage it and respond to it was different. The reality now is that the omicron variant has spread widely enough to make our previous test, trace, and isolate regimen simply obsolete. More importantly, we're in a different situation in terms of our ability to live with the risk posed by the virus, at least in its current form, because of our very high vaccination rate in addition to the growing availability of new treatments. We now have more than 90 per cent of Albertans aged 12 and over with one dose of the vaccine, nearly 87 per cent with two doses.

Given the level of risk we currently have, Albertans are able to live their lives more or less normally. We've been able to enjoy life in a different way than we have over the past two years, with the reduction in restrictions as we moved into phase 2. Now, with the majority of these restrictions lifted, Mr. Speaker, we've gathered with loved ones, we've visited restaurants, we've played sports and made our own decisions about masking outside of settings like health care facilities, where they're still required.

As I reported this afternoon, it does not appear that easing measures has caused an uptick in numbers since we entered step 1 on February 8. We continue to see a decline or plateau in both our lagging and our leading indicators. There's been some variation in the positivity rate for PCR tests, but overall since step 1 began, it has dropped by 7 per cent. There is also a continuing and steady decline in our most important lagging indicator, hospitalizations. Today hospitalizations are down to 989, including 70 in ICU. Both those figures are down by approximately 40 per cent from when we began easing measures. It will take time for hospitalizations to get down to the level before the fifth wave, but that's where we're headed.

Now consider how discordant it is for Albertans when they encounter the current federal restrictions on travel. Those restrictions reflect a completely different assessment of the current risk and a completely different response to it. They reflect a virus that is a critical risk to the average traveller when the average Albertan today knows that the risk assessment is no longer accurate. They reflect an approach that puts a critical importance on identifying and isolating every case based on the goal of minimizing spread. Again, the average Albertan understands that those are no longer valid assumptions for public health policy. Mr. Speaker, we're living our lives more or less normally and, again, with the confidence that that's appropriate based on the evidence of the risk posed by the omicron variant today and our high levels of vaccination. Living our lives normally should include travelling normally. The requirements for travel should reflect the same risk and the same public health response that the average Albertan encounters in the rest of their lives.

It is time for the federal government to catch up with the evidence, with the views of infectious disease experts, with the views of our chief MOHs, and with the views of Albertans and other Canadians. I urge everyone in the House to support this government motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 12 is before the Assembly this evening. Is there anyone wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know and many of my colleagues know, I used to be a WestJet. In fact, I truly believe that once you're a WestJet, you're always a WestJet. I share this with you because tonight I want to speak to Government Motion 12 because I understand how important air travel is for Alberta's economy and Albertans in general, for business, for recreation, to reconnect with family and friends after two long years of isolation.

Our airlines move people and goods to places they want and need to go. To do this day after day requires thousands of people, thousands of people that have been laid off, put on leave, or terminated altogether in the last two years. Many of them are friends of mine. The current federal imposition of pretesting and vaccination proof prevents these very same people from returning to work, feeding their families, and contributing to the recovery of our province and our country. At a time when we are seeing every province and almost every jurisdiction in the world eliminate restrictions related to the pandemic, the federal Liberals continue to be painfully disconnected and are failing to put forth policy that will allow us to effectively recover from the COVID pandemic. These restrictions limit the movement of goods.

Prepandemic, the visitor economy here in Alberta contributed $8.2 billion. These restrictions are a barrier to those who wish to visit our amazing province before they even arrive here. The time and expense for a family looking to visit Alberta become prohibitive, and they no longer want to choose Alberta as their destination of choice. These individuals that fly to work camps across the north are also prevented from earning their livings. Those looking to travel internationally here to Alberta to invest and create jobs face a blockade. How do we expect to welcome these international travellers if we are putting up a roadblock before they even step foot on Canadian soil? Now is not the time we want to be pushing people away. Right now we want as many travellers as possible to keep coming and keep our economy growing as we navigate out of COVID-19.

Mr. Speaker, these restrictions were put in place to limit the amount of people who are unvaccinated from potentially spreading the virus to others, but here in Alberta and across the country the overwhelming majority of people have already been vaccinated, so why do we continue to impose unnecessary restrictions on people who already have immunity? These restrictions now have no logical benefit to health. We don't need to motivate people to get vaccinated, and we don't need to limit those going to events or restaurants or to bars or to sporting events, so why do we continue to do this for air travel? The science shows that once an individual receives two doses of vaccine, just two weeks later they are considered to have full immunity. Just two weeks. Yet the federal Liberals want to keep infringing on the rights of Canadians. By having proof that they are vaccinated, we are creating an unnecessary and unneeded barrier that has been long overdue to be removed.

Other jurisdictions around the world, including our southern neighbours, are lifting restrictions and learning to live with COVID. I'm curious why it feels like we are still steps behind from where we should be. We have seen restrictions lifted here in Alberta with the removal of mask mandates, the removal of the vaccine passports for restaurants, events, and other venues. This same mindset needs to be applied to air travel. Restrictions imposed by the government of Canada must be removed. This Assembly needs to come together and recognize that these restrictions have no practical health benefit anymore and continue to impact hundreds of thousands of jobs in the air travel and tourism sector. I ask my colleagues here this evening to join me in supporting Government Motion 12.

Thank you.

7:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, on Government Motion 12 are there others? The hon. Member for Central Peace-Notley.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I would like to speak to Government Motion 12.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) recognize that the current air travel restrictions imposed by the government of Canada have no measurable public health benefit and continue to impact hundreds of thousands of jobs in the air travel and tourism sectors and
- (b) call on the government of Canada to revoke
 - (i) its proof of vaccination requirement for airline passengers and
 - (ii) its predeparture COVID-19 testing requirement for international airline passengers entering Canada.

Mr. Speaker, most of the provinces have moved past the vaccine mandates. Alberta has limited mandates left. Other provinces have removed most of theirs, too. Just recently here, probably in the last few weeks, I heard a federal Liberal politician talking on TV about the lack of tourism: what have we got to do to get tourism back into Canada? At that time, that was about the time that the Emergencies Act came into effect. Obviously, things like that don't help, when people around the world get to watch the spectacle of Canada with the Emergencies Act invoked by the Prime Minister.

These restrictions on travel obviously are a barrier for tourism also. First, we have viruses on both sides of the border here between Canada and the U.S. We have COVID across Canada. There's no reason why we shouldn't be able to travel without these mandates. Many scientists now have spoken that this is not accomplishing any health benefits or any health protection. Our economy needs to move on. The benefits of tourism, which has been suffering greatly through this whole pandemic – we need to get back on track and get that tourism back to Canada so that our tourism operators can feel the benefits of an opening of airline travel. Again, there are business opportunities that are being lost because of this, too. Any type of restrictions obviously causes an opportunity for business to be lost.

Most of the world has moved on, and it's time for us to move on here in Canada, too. Let's get back to normal. Let's drop these restrictions and get the movement of air traffic, people going across borders so people can do multiple things like travel for business, travel for holidays, travel here for tourism. Let's get these businesses back to normal and move on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise to speak to Government Motion 12. I know that you often say that we shouldn't have props in the House here today, so I've brought jet engines instead on my cufflinks here, no turboprops, no props, but some jet engines to just have this aviation discussion.

Mr. Speaker, with all levity aside on that, this is a very serious issue for us in Canada and particularly in Alberta. Like my hon. colleague from Livingstone-Macleod, I also served for almost two decades in the airline industry. Not only is it near and dear to my heart in terms of being an industry, but in Alberta we are so blessed that we have always punched above our weight here, with a proud history of our bush pilots back in the day of the pioneering of aviation to the time that we spent with the British Commonwealth air training program here. Again, a proud history for Alberta. The fact that we are now continuing to have many major airlines –

WestJet is the largest, and Flair and Swoop and Lynx Air and others – operating out of Alberta is highly important to the Alberta economy and to Albertans in terms of both inbound and outbound travel.

We all know that through this pandemic there has been no industry harder hit than the aviation and tourism sectors and those related industries in tourism and hospitality, so this is a time for us to step forward. This call for us to move ahead and beyond these restrictions, which we've done with the best of intentions to try and control this pandemic – but, Mr. Speaker, now is a time for us to really look forward, to start the healing and to start the movement to get our economy rolling, to get people back in the air, to literally spread our wings not only within this country but around the world.

Mr. Speaker, I reflect back on the fact that we are blessed to have international air services from our province from carriers like WestJet, Air Canada, KLM, Eurowings, and Edelweiss Air. Domestic carriers and those operating out of Calgary: WestJet, Air Canada, Flair, Swoop, and Lynx Air. Probably missing a few as well, some of the smaller: Central Mountain Air and Pacific Coastal Airlines. International and U.S. airlines like Alaska, American, Delta, United, which really create an opportunity for us to thrive, to be able to fly around the world, to be able to have those air services.

Mr. Speaker, that's why this motion is so important, the removal of the restrictions. Dr. Zain Chagla, who is an infectious disease specialist, said that he's "glad that we're aligning with many of our partner countries and dropping this [kind] of testing in order to really make sure that travellers feel secure in their travel and aren't necessarily subject to more expense or inconvenience," more expense and inconvenience in a very difficult time. We're trying to create a resurgence, a relaunch, of our airline industry, that has been so challenged and is facing other challenges, which I'll reference. What Dr. Chagla said was: "All it did was create inconvenience, all it did was discomfort the traveller . . . It really put an excess burden on the traveller without any significant yield locally." That is really something that we have to focus on here.

The Canadian Travel and Tourism Roundtable met in Calgary on February 28, an industry group in tourism, hospitality, aviation. It called the testing requirement a "non-science-based" obstacle undermining the sector and a "significant deterrent, discouraging international companies from resuming travel into Canada." To try and relaunch and restart this industry, that has been so damaged by this pandemic, Mr. Speaker, we need to move ahead with that.

As I look at the clauses of this motion, I'm going to actually speak to clause (b)(ii): "its predeparture COVID-19 testing requirement for international airline passengers entering Canada" is being removed. Now, we heard on the news today that that will be removed on April 1. We'll wait and see. We've seen some flip-flops before, in the past, from our federal government, but we're hearing that that announcement should be made on Thursday for that to be removed from requirements at the end of the month. So April 1 will be the day. Let's hope that that's not an April Fool's joke, Mr. Speaker.

The federal government will, however, continue to randomly test travellers upon arrival, but we've heard that the random testing has really not achieved a whole lot. In fact, Dr. Chagla said, "Once the Omicron wave hit Canada, the disease was so widespread that testing at the border became essentially useless." So we're moving getting rid of a useless requirement here, Mr. Speaker.

You know, it's also interesting, and I want to touch base here with some other industries within our province, the travel agency community, Mr. Speaker. Many of us have dealt with travel agencies in our own communities. They are small businesses or small-business people who have bricks and mortar operations, and they're at great risk.

I'm just going to mention Lesley Keyter. They call her the Travel Lady. She happens to be one of my constituents and is on the board of ACTA, the Association of Travel Agencies. She's referenced this as a big challenge for their industry. Of course, when people are not travelling, they don't need travel agents. It's very sad to see that that is happening. She was quoted as saying that she hopes the federal government will not only remove testing requirements but also continue financial support programs for those in the travel industry beyond March. Mr. Speaker, the travel agents in our community are an embedded part of our community in the urban areas but even more so sometimes in the rural areas, where those people often will run a travel agency, and maybe next door will be an insurance or registry business. Those people are very, very much a core of our communities across this great province. I think it's time that we listen to those people and move forward.

The first clause is calling on the government of Canada to revoke its proof of vaccination requirements for airline passengers. Mr. Speaker, it's time. The government's mandate for domestic and international flights departing will remain in effect at this time, and I think it's something that we need to continue to advocate for. I just wanted to point out that in Europe on March 11 the Airports Council International, based in Brussels, and the International Air Transport Association, based in Geneva, called for all remaining COVID restrictions applying to intra-EU and Schengen area travel to be dropped, including all testing requirements, the need to present proof of vaccination or to complete a passenger locator form. This includes dropping mask wearing for travel within or between the EU states, where it is no longer required in other indoor environments. It's the same as what we have now here in Alberta, for the most part, as well. It's time for us to align, for us to move ahead and to heal the difficult times we've had in this province individually and specifically for our businesses and industries.

It's time. We're seeing this movement around the world, in the EU, who have been leaders not only in the front end of this, possibly in terms of putting in some of the requirements and the vaccination passports and restrictions, but they're now moving beyond that, as I believe we should here as well.

Mr. Speaker, the National Airlines Council represents Air Canada, Air Transat, Jazz Aviation, and WestJet. They represent over 60,000 people and carried over 80 million passengers just between those airlines. They support over 630,000 jobs in the transport and tourism sectors. They are also calling for us to move ahead through these restrictions.

I'm just going to close, Mr. Speaker, by referencing a comment that was put to us here from our new WestJet CEO, Mr. Alexis von Hoensbroech. He is brand new – I think he's only been in Canada now about two or three weeks – but he is going to set the path forward for WestJet and make sure that it continues to be a Calgary-based company that is going to grow and spread its wings globally. He said: emerging from the pandemic, our summer schedule marks a significant milestone in WestJet's recovery as we restore service to 94 per cent of our prepandemic routes; we are making significant investments network-wide, getting close to prepandemic capacity, to best serve our guests; as our industry rebuilds from the pandemic, Canadians and visitors to Canada will have endless options for summer travel with WestJet service to 43 domestic, 23 transport, 16 Caribbean, and 18 trans-Atlantic destinations, with 600 daily departures; we look forward to seeing you back in the skies.

Mr. Speaker, we look forward to seeing Albertans back in the skies, Canadians back in the skies with the removal of these restrictions. We need to support our tourism sector here. We need to tell people to come to Alberta. We need to tell Albertans to get on planes and fly to other places. We need to support an industry that deserves to be supported, that is a huge part of our economy, our economic engine, our global connectivity. I'll be supporting this motion, and I encourage everybody in this House and all Albertans to speak out in favour of this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education, followed by the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to speak to Government Motion 12. I think, as all members know, Government Motion 12 is an important one before the Assembly. Unfortunately, I don't think I've heard too many members from the opposition speak tonight, but hopefully they will, because I think we can be on the same page when it comes to useless restrictions, and I think this is a clear example of useless restrictions. [interjection] To the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall: I'm happy to take interjections at any point, so if he wants to jump in, I'd welcome that.

Just getting back on topic here, Motion 12, as we all know, just to highlight it again, says:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) recognize that the current air travel restrictions imposed by the government of Canada have no measurable public health benefit and continue to impact hundreds of thousands of jobs in the air travel and tourism sectors and
- (b) call on the government of Canada to revoke
 - (i) its proof of vaccination requirement for airline passengers and
 - (ii) its predeparture COVID-19 testing requirement for international airline passengers entering Canada.

And I think the latter has just happened recently. I think that speaks volumes to the effectiveness of the government motion as we're debating it and putting pressure on Ottawa to remove unnecessary restrictions. Maybe they're listening – I mean, I don't have a lot of belief that they are, but hopefully they are – and not just, of course, to the incredible people here in the Alberta Legislature but to many of the other experts in the domain of public health.

I know the hon. the Minister of Health spoke earlier and provided great insight into what national leaders are saying as it relates to COVID-19 policy and the need to move forward in removing unnecessary measures. I want to thank as well the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his strong comments with respect to the airline industry. [interjection] I think the member wants to interject. If he does, happy to take an interjection.

Mr. Long: Thank you for giving way. I just heard your words about no measurable impact. I was wondering if you would like to take a brief moment to compare the cost of the restrictions for airline travel on the economy and the lack of measurable impact with the NDP-instituted carbon tax. I know that we've had that conversation a number of times about lack of measurables, about the cost on the economy. I was just wondering if you'd like to make comment on that.

Mr. Nicolaides: Yeah. I think that's a great example of something that's pretty useless, (a) the NDP carbon tax and (b) the travel restrictions that are in place currently. Of course, there's some belief, I believe, from the federal government – and we know there was from the NDP – that their carbon tax and the federal rules regarding travel would have an impact, but we knew that that was not the case with the NDP carbon tax, and that's also the same case here as it relates to these travel restrictions.

Mr. Speaker, I don't want to go on for too long, so I'm going to try to be really succinct, and I'm just going to try and summarize my thoughts on the federal travel restrictions in as simple a way as I possibly can. When I think about the travel rules that are in place, one word, actually, comes to mind: pointless. I think that that's where we're ultimately at with these travel restrictions. I think they're ultimately pointless. We've seen data from around the world that the worst of COVID is behind us, so let's look objectively at the data.

Let's look at what's happening with respect to case numbers. I know the Minister of Health earlier provided the House an update. If I remember correctly, he said about 989 people in hospital and 70 people in ICU. I think that as we look at those numbers and we look at case numbers not just here in Alberta but around the world, we can see objectively that indeed the worst is behind us, and it's time to focus on getting our lives back to normal. [interjection] I'm happy to give way to the member.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you. To the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, as the member also holds the title of Minister of Advanced Education, I wonder if he could speak to the impact of these ongoing restrictions in the realm that he oversees, advanced education, how that has had quite a significant detrimental effect on enrolment for our universities and colleges, our postsecondaries in general. I wonder if he could speak to their requests for stability so that they can begin to plan, hopefully, a much better year next year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing this intervention.

Mr. Nicolaides: Indeed, and thank you to the member. I think it is perhaps a good opportunity to provide some more information to the House. Many if not all of our postsecondary institutions – I don't have all the information in front of me at the moment; the member will have to forgive me. Most of our postsecondary institutions have taken similar steps as the government of Alberta has taken and as other jurisdictions have taken internationally in removing their restrictions. We've seen many of our postsecondary institutions remove their vaccine passport requirements, remove mask requirements because they understand and they see as well that it is indeed time to get back to normal.

As the member noted, I think it has been a challenging time for many students in our postsecondary system who have not been able to continue their studies or have faced disruption in their studies as a result of vaccination policies and rules. I know those individuals are eager to re-engage back into their academic learning and into their programs and get back on track. But, as well, many students are also interested in ensuring that we have a safe environment on campus, and that is indeed important.

I know of self-reported data from both the U of A and the U of C as examples. They did surveys and collected thousands of responses from their students and their faculty. In those surveys they noted incredibly high vaccination rates – 97, 98 per cent vaccination rates – so I think we can be very confident that we'll see safe and healthy campuses while at the same time not limiting others in progressing in their careers, in their lives, and in their academic journeys.

Again, to summarize, Mr. Speaker: pointless. These restrictions that the federal government has in place are nothing more than that. It is indeed time that we move forward. It's very clear that these measures have no measurable public health benefit for Albertans or for Canadians. You know, there are a number of other experts who have attested to this, as the Minister of Health mentioned.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if you know, but do you know who Dominik Mertz is? I suppose it's a little bit of a rhetorical question. Perhaps the member from Lethbridge knows. Anyway, he is the division director of infectious diseases at McMaster University. In fact, I think that the Minister of Health mentioned him a little bit earlier. He's pointed out that PCR tests often deliver positive results for weeks after a COVID-19 diagnosis. Of course, when we're talking about prearrival COVID testing, you can see that there can be some challenges there. Again, I'm happy to see that the federal government has removed that element. We're down one, with one to go, and that's the removal of vaccination requirements for airline travel.

As well, that position that I just mentioned was reinforced by Irfan Dhalla, co-chair of the federal government's COVID-19 Testing and Screening Expert Advisory Panel. He noted that it simply doesn't make, quote, scientific sense to keep widescale omicron testing at the border.

Mr. Speaker, I always like to defer to the experts. I always like to look at the objective information. It seems as though everywhere we look, the experts are saying that these rules don't have any measurable impact, that they don't make sense, that we don't need them anymore. I'm always happy to defer to people who are smarter than me. These people certainly are. I have very little knowledge as it relates to infectious diseases. I know the members opposite will probably have a fun time with that statement. But I have very little knowledge when it comes to infectious diseases, so I'll listen to the experts, and I'll take their advice when it comes to putting COVID-19 policies in place or removing them, as many experts around the country are suggesting that we do.

However, the federal government seems to not want to listen to these experts. Why? I don't know. Maybe one of my colleagues or even members of the opposition, if they want to engage in debate this evening, can provide an answer to that question. I'm still searching for an answer to that. Why, in the face of this mounting evidence and this overwhelming consensus within the scientific community, does the federal government continue to have these rules in place? The only thing, regrettably, that comes to mind is politics and that the Trudeau Liberals want to try to use COVID-19 and travel restrictions and other measures for political purposes, which I think, if that's the case, is incredibly troubling.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if you know who Perrin Beatty is either. Perhaps not, but I'm happy to give you that detail: the Canadian Chamber of Commerce president, who called on the federal government to offer a clear timeline for removing travel restrictions for fully vaccinated travellers and their children, including test isolation requirements and blanket travel advisories. In fact, in an interview he was on record saying, "Blanket warnings about travel at this point are unjustified." That's, again, the president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, someone who I think understands full well the impact of COVID restrictions on Canadian businesses.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can have a quick time check. I'm not sure how much time I have left.

The Speaker: Seven minutes and 30 seconds.

Mr. Nicolaides: All right. Well, with seven minutes to go, I think I've made my point, so I don't know if I'll continue on, unless the member opposite – I see some members opposite I think want me to continue on, so perhaps I will. I still have some notes here that I haven't fully gone over, but I think I have made my point broadly.

Again, this comes back to the main point here, which is the real challenge. Why do we continue to have these measures in place? Why do we continue to see the federal government continue to impose these measures when so many provinces in Canada and other jurisdictions around the world are removing their COVID-19 measures and moving towards getting life back to normal? Unfortunately, we see the federal government continuing to enforce these measures.

As I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, I keep searching for an answer. I keep searching for the rationale as to why these measures are still in place. Maybe the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has the answer to that. [interjection] I see the Member for Calgary-Klein wants to interject. Maybe he has the answer. I'm happy to give way.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: I don't know if I do have the answer, but in the spirit of the minister's comments earlier about ceding to somebody that might know more than him, I'm glad that he ceded to me for a few moments.

I guess just my thoughts were that this really isn't the first time that we've seen the federal government, this Prime Minister, go too far and kind of exceed his limits there. You know, I think maybe if we could go down kind of the path of where the Prime Minister has gone too far in the past, especially in the past couple of years, maybe if we went down that path, kind of exploring that in a little bit more detail, we might start to come to the idea of what his motivation might be and how offside he truly is.

Anyway, I'll give it back to the minister at this point. I do appreciate his comments so far.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, I appreciate that. That's a really helpful and interesting perspective. You know, it really helps to reframe things, and when you think about so many of those other pieces that we've seen come out of the federal government, perhaps the puzzle pieces start to fall into place.

Of course, we saw, as it relates to the federal government and their use of the Emergencies Act in an environment that was completely unnecessary and unjustified, that it was, I think, very concerning. I know that for many members on this side of the House it was a very concerning use of power and authority. I'm not sure about the members opposite. I know they're really close friends and allies, so I'm sure they would have been onboard, which is concerning, as I know the members opposite are on onboard with many of the other things that the federal government is doing currently, again, not listening to the experts and not listening to individuals, which comes with a carbon tax. As we all know, the federal government is slated to jack up the carbon tax on April 1, making life more expensive indeed.

Mrs. Allard: Jacking up fees.

Mr. Nicolaides: As the Member for Grande Prairie is stating, they never see a fee that they don't want to jack up, Mr. Speaker, and this is a clear example of it, especially with the carbon tax. I mean, if there's one thing that they can do, jack up the carbon tax, they'll do it. It's a top priority for the federal Liberal government.

We'll see that increase coming on April 1. I haven't heard a lot from the opposition when it comes to speaking out against that. It's really interesting because I do hear the members opposite talk at length about the cost of living and increases to bills and increases to costs of fuel and gasoline and many other things, but they never once have said that they will lobby the federal government to stop the carbon tax hike that is slated to take effect on April 1. I mean, I'd love to see some consistency. If they're really concerned about the cost of living, one of the things that they can do is to work with us to call on Trudeau and the federal government to stop the carbon tax increase on April 1. It's pretty simple, it's pretty straightforward, but I haven't heard any of that from the members opposite, which is unfortunate.

To help address some of these things and to help address the issue of affordability, of course, we're removing the provincial tax, which will equate to 13 cents in savings per litre, as well as providing a rebate of $50 per month for three months to households to help off-set some of the increasing costs of utility bills.

Mr. Speaker, I think I've highlighted the key points that I wanted to address this evening, so I'll end my comments there. Again, I just want to summarize overall my views on the matter and what I think about the restrictions and the measures that the federal government has in place: quite pointless. It's time to move on. It's time to look at the evidence, look at the signs. It's clear that we can move forward. It seems indeed that the worst of COVID is behind us. Let's get back to living life normally.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sure that the hon. Minister of Advanced Education would be aware of chapter 7 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, that specifically speaks about the Speaker and other presiding officers of the House. They ought not be brought into the debate about what they may or may not know, who they may or may not know, certain experts or otherwise. I'm sure that the member knows and is very familiar with the chapter of House of Commons Procedure and Practice that would imply that doing such things wouldn't be as appropriate as it may or may not be.

Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore has risen.

Mrs. Aheer: Sorry. I was going to give it over to my lovely friend in the pink jacket across the way there, but I'll go first.

I just wanted to say thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to this motion. It's wonderful to be amongst my colleagues in here, to be able to breathe and to be together. It's been a long haul for people, especially those who have not been able to travel and see their families. I know that my colleague the Minister of Infrastructure and I both go to India every year to visit our families. We've missed funerals and weddings, moments of being able to mourn with our families and celebrate, see babies come into the world. It's a huge part of who we are. I don't mean to speak for the minister, but we're very, very connected that way, especially to our families overseas.

The ability to be able to do that and, you know, as we've come back together in our lives and in caucus and out in the world – I'm a musician, and I had my very, very first live concert in front of people two and a half weeks ago.

About a week before that, I was at another concert, of brass and strings, and it moved me to tears, Mr. Speaker, because that venue was full. It was full of people, just like how we sit beside our colleagues in here, shoulder to shoulder again now. I forgot what that felt like, and I hope that none of us ever have to go through that again.

As it relates to what's happening with respect to how we fly even within our country, we have to always think about the fact that right now we have large venues. We have hockey games that are sold out in our NHL. We're able to see our families play sports again and go to ballet. I have tickets to La Traviata, that's coming up here, to the opera and whatever else I can get my hands on. The Rocky Mountain Symphony Orchestra is having their series coming up. If you like Star Wars, they're going to be playing Star Wars at their Balzac spot at the Polaris Centre. All of these things that I took for granted, that literally bring me to tears – and we are shoulder to shoulder, elbow to elbow in venues with singing, with horns playing, all sorts of things that have lots and lots of mist in the air from our breath, and we are so grateful to do that. We're so grateful to sit beside our colleagues.

We've been travelling for a long time in airplanes. If you think about how big Canada is relative to other countries, the distance that it takes to fly across our country and that our families have been separated for such a long time and about the mobility and the ability to have that mobility and the things that are stopping families from being able to see each other right now, we really have to consider what it is that we're doing.

I'd have to agree with my colleague the Minister of Advanced Education about what the experts are actually telling us now and also about something that we talk about and that is absolutely imperative and something that our associate minister of mental health and addictions has done this week, too, within the budget, which is funding mental health. The mental health shadow pandemic is something that we're going to be dealing with for years and year and years, more years than the pandemic ever cost us, and we have to take all of those things into consideration when we're making these rules and when we're making legislation.

What my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek was talking about, when I came into this debate, was that fear itself is the biggest deterrent to our ability to see our best days ahead of us, and the economic needs of our province are one piece of it. But the reason why people come to Alberta, aside from our beautiful places and the people, is because our tourism is beyond imaginable. If you've ever had – and I've mentioned this before in the House, Mr. Speaker. I've had family come from India, and we've taken them to the hoodoos, and we've taken them to Banff. But we've also taken them to B.C., and we've taken them to see Saskatchewan. We've been blessed to be able to go out east and be able to visit that. We've never been able to take them out to the east coast, but that's definitely on my bucket list of things to do.

It's really, really time, Mr. Speaker, for us to be able to reconcile the great work that Canadians have done, what is necessary for our country to be able to see us see not only economic growth but growth as human beings and to find our humanity again. If it's fear that is going to stop us from seeing that success, then we really have to question our reasons for doing it.

When we look right now at what is happening in other parts of the world – and, again, I think we have to look at the fact that so many of our spaces are wide open. How is it that we define that COVID is going to be in one place and not in another? That's always been a very interesting question for me, because it doesn't really know any boundaries, as far as I know. If you look at the airline industry, for example – and, again, my colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek can speak to this much better than I can – the sector has done absolutely everything physically possible to keep their people safe, their clients safe. They're not even clients; they're family. If you talk about organizations like WestJet, many of the people who actually fly are also owners. There's so much that goes into that.

But consider this, Mr. Speaker. The airline industry, the travel industry, our tourism industry: they have been disproportionately impacted, obviously, by what has happened to us. But consider this: whose best interest is it in to keep us grounded, and whose best interest is it in to stop our economy from bouncing back? If you think about it from that perspective, the airline industry and the sectors that are being most impacted have the most to lose. Why would we do more to impact them when they've done absolutely everything that they possibly can to keep us safe?

If there's more that needs to be done, I'm quite certain that the folks that are trying to keep us all safe, similarly to our restaurants, similarly to other sectors that were deeply impacted by restrictions to people's freedoms – why are we not having discussions about what they can do to open up as opposed to discussions as to why to keep them closed? It's a simple flip of the discussion and having a really, really honest discussion about how it is that we move forward. Really, that's what it's about. If we continue to live in fear and if we continue to use that as our justification for spreading that fear, the ones that will actually and truly be impacted by that are the people and particularly the people of Alberta.

I know I am – I can't speak for anybody else – extremely grateful for what we've all been through and how we have navigated this together. I've said this many times. For all of the frustration and rhetoric that we hear and what we go through, one of the most compelling things that I experienced throughout this entire pandemic was the grace, kindness, compassion, and understanding of the people of Alberta.

I have never seen – we created something called the Alberta VolunteerConnector, and that connector, when we lost our volunteers that were in our seniors' groups, because obviously they're a vulnerable population, especially through the initial waves, saw an influx of over 75,000 people come to the table to volunteer. This was before we had a vaccine. This was when we were just figuring things out. They put themselves into spaces in order to be able to help each other out. That is a spirit that you cannot create. That is one that has been grown here, that comes from generations of people, from those who've been here since time immemorial to those who just got off the airplane yesterday. [interjection] Oh, I'm so sorry. Thank you. He was waving at me, and I . . .

Mr. Neudorf: That's right. Thank you, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the member opposite. The member is obviously very compassionate. She speaks very highly of volunteers, as is right. I would ask that she share a little bit more of her experience and how that ties into the very nature of Albertans, the Alberta spirit, so to speak, that when things get difficult, we often see them rally together and come out in incredible numbers, donate incredible value both in physical goods and financial means. She's very connected, that member, to that community. I believe she was starting to share about that. I would just ask if it would be all right for her to share a little bit further on those experiences and how that helps everyone in this Chamber feel incredibly proud to be Albertan because of the very nature of the people that live and work here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much for that intervention. I appreciate that so much. If we think about what the benefit is of our contributions to community, there is so much about what we do personally, how we give back, but the people who are impacted – I remember when we were just in the first and second waves. We were in Edmonton, and we'd gotten a call from the mosques here in Edmonton who were putting together baskets and organizing around their communities because Ramadan was coming up. We had declared the emergency, and then we were shortly into Ramadan after that. And we were doing – I can't even say we because it wasn't us here in the Legislature; it was regular, severely normal Albertans out there that were seeing their elders feeling isolated. They had families that were being impacted by COVID. There was a tremendous amount of fear, and all of us, I think, in this House really felt that move towards wanting to be able to help out.

I'm just using the mosques as an example; there were churches and temples and gurdwaras and everything. It just kind of exacerbated, in the best way possible, where people were actively posting when somebody needed something from the store – I don't know if you remember this – and they would put Post-its out on their doorsteps. Somebody would come from one of these organizations, pick up the money from their little envelopes – the faith-based organizations are the ones that are coming to mind to me at first – and then go to the grocery store, grab their milk and whatever, and then come back home and leave it on the doorstep for the person to come out and get. Or do you remember when the grocery stores would open an hour early for seniors and then open an hour later? Then some of us were being engaged by our community members to go to Costco on behalf of – do you remember that fellow who was doing calisthenics outside of the Costco when there were those huge lineups going around the Costco?

I know that we've suffered so much, but those are the beautiful memories that I take with me. The reason I bring it up and why it's relevant to what we're talking about today is because to dampen that spirit and who we are as human beings and our humanity because of fear will do nothing other than continue a downward slide of mental health and will do nothing to help our economy, which by virtue ends up helping all of us to be able to do what we're supposed to do, whether that is protecting our vulnerable, whether that is people who are in isolation.

I remember in early July – I think it was Canada Day – when I was allowed to go into a seniors' home and visit. We were sitting all together when we had reached, I think it was, 70 per cent vaccination in the province. I remember all of those seniors sitting there. This was in Strathmore at Sagewood. They were all sitting there thinking: oh, my gosh; our families are going to be able to come visit us. It was a very telling moment because I'd been very lucky. I get to live and work here. I get to see my people. I was still out and about, but the people that we were protecting had been so isolated. The smiles on their faces that they were going to be able to see their grandbabies not through a window and then stopping us from being able to do that within Canada, not being able to see our nieces, our nephews, our grandbabies, our friends' children because of fear – lookit, Mr. Speaker, we all know what we've all been through.

I would hope by now that we understand the process. I have to have faith in the organizations and the corporations that are taking care of all of us that they're going to follow whatever protocols and necessary interventions that have to happen in order to keep the public safe. We've learned that. I think it's time for us to put faith in what we've learned, in the people who have been impacted, in the organizations and the corporations that are tasked with keeping us safe, whether we're up in the air or we're sitting in a restaurant with people. There is a deep learning and a deep respect and deep humility that comes from that kind of isolation that we've all experienced over the last little while. I think that taking that for granted and assuming that people are not going to take care of each other – the assumption has to always be that our first inclination would be to take care of each other.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, thank you. What you said is just so resonating with me, to the member, to hear your stories about the seniors' facilities and being able to get together with people. I know that you're also very engaged with the ethnic communities certainly in your community but across Alberta. You know, for myself, having been in the airline industry, having worked with communities, with the South Asian community, the Filipino, Vietnamese, you know, Chinese communities, the ability for them to travel back to the countries – this is their home country now – of origin for many of them is something that is, I think, if you've come from somewhere, made a new home, but you still have roots back where you came from, important for people. I talk to people in those communities all the time that have not been able to see their family. Maybe they go every year or every two years or every three years. But maybe they were just ready to go for that third-year trip, and now it's five years.

Thank you. Maybe just a few comments on that.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I will respond. Well, it's interesting that you mentioned that. This is where the confusion comes in. We all know how confusing the protocols are. I have a friend who just travelled back. I saw them two days ago, and they were wearing masks in an event. I thought maybe they were nervous or, you know, they were sick. So I wasn't actually asking them about their masks, but they came up to me and they said: we have to wear masks because when we came in from overseas, we were told at the airport that we had to quarantine or we had to wear masks for 14 days. I remember thinking to myself, "Well, I thought that stuff had been lifted," but nobody knows the rules. There's so much fear, and there's so much concern.

I said to them, because I was obviously concerned that they weren't feeling well or that they were worried about the crowd of people that we were – I wasn't sure. Everybody has a right to wear a mask. Obviously, that's just fine. But when they told me that they were wearing masks because the rules had been stated to them literally two days ago as they entered into Canada, which is now their country of origin, that they had to wear masks and were potentially threatened with quarantine – this is why this is so important. I think motions like this are really, really imperative because it reinforces for all of us where we're standing and what needs to happen.

Lookit, all of us in this House understand how fuzzy the rules can be. We've all been caught up in various pieces of it. All of us have had questions at one point or another as to why the rules were the way they were. We have to be at a point now where we can provide some clarity to the people of Canada, especially, to my colleague's point, those who have been separated from their families for years now. None of us are getting any younger, and the children that are being born into our families and around the world, around the country, even, and all of those of us who sit in here – time is so precious. I say this with tremendous compassion. I have a friend who died three days ago from a pulmonary embolism, 61 years old, absolutely just out of the blue. Time is precious, folks.

I appreciate very much the difficult choices that all of us have had to make, and I'm especially grateful to the medical experts that have led us and have been guiding us along the way. But I just want to add that there is a fine balance, and at this point in our lives, where we are right now, nobody knows what their days are or where we're going to be tomorrow. I just personally – I must speak from my heart that it is imperative for me, my neighbours, my friends, my family, our province, across the country, the people that we love that we start putting our communities and ourselves back together, because it's going to take every single one of us to do that.

We can get lost in politics and rhetoric and language and who said what to who and what's going on – all of that is very reasonable at times – but at the end of the day that's not what we're going to remember. I certainly don't want to be defined by two years of what has happened and the absolute pain that people have gone through at that time. I would love for all of us to be able to be defined by seeing the light at the end of the tunnel and being able to see that and trusting the institutions and the organizations that we have tasked with keeping us safe up to this point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on Government Motion 12, are there others? The Member for Grande Prairie has risen.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening and join in the conversation around Motion 12. I'm just going to remind the Assembly what the motion says, that we

- (a) recognize that the current air travel restrictions imposed by the government of Canada have no measurable public health benefit and continue to impact hundreds of thousands of jobs . . .

I'm going to say that again: and continue to impact hundreds of thousands of jobs.

- . . . in the air travel and tourism sectors and
- (b) [that we] call on the government of Canada to revoke
 - (i) its proof of vaccination requirement for airline passengers and
 - (ii) its predeparture COVID-19 testing requirement for international airline passengers entering Canada.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have heard it in my constituency. I have talked to Albertans right across the province about some of the decisions that they've made. I think of seniors in my constituency that want to go and see a new grandbaby that's born. It's a barrier for them. It's a financial barrier for them to have to have a COVID test to go see their new grandson in Montana. It's stressful. It's the unknown. Some of these people don't travel very often, and I think it just adds another layer of complexity to an already stressful time.

I think that if the advice from officials was different, we would be in a different conversation right now, but there's large agreement, for the first time maybe in two years, that we need to learn to live with this and we need to move into the endemic phase of COVID. I'm grateful for that. I hope that we are able to collectively do that in a collaborative frame, but I think it's really important to recognize and to underscore not just the impact to industry and to those working in the sector, which is critically important, but also to the families that are affected.

I'm thinking of a family, actually, that I know. I won't name names, but I've talked to this family several times as an MLA in my constituency, and they're labelled as antivaxxers. I don't want to get into the whole debate about that. That's not really what I want to talk about. But one of the things that's heartbreaking is to hear the story behind some of those stories. This particular family: the husband had a vaccine a few years ago – I think he had a flu shot – and he came down with Guillain-Barré syndrome.

I don't know if anybody in this House knows what that is. I was unaware of what that was until my constituent educated me, but Guillain-Barré syndrome is a very critical illness that often occurs after a vaccine. There's more that they're studying to understand it. Guillain-Barré is no joke. There are people that die from it every year. It's incredibly debilitating. Within hours his lungs were filling with fluid. It can be very challenging for the doctors to diagnose.

Anyway, all of that to say, that long story – his doctor has told him that he cannot get the COVID vaccine because of his health history. He's told the children of this family – they have three teenage children – that they also cannot get the COVID vaccine. Now, this family, who has no choice, can't fly in their own country. They cannot get on a plane from Grande Prairie and go to Calgary. That doesn't make any sense. It's my understanding that there's no exemption. We've looked into it. We've tried to work with this family. To me, that doesn't make any sense, particularly now, when we know that there is large protection from vaccination right across our country and certainly right across our province.

I would like to thank the health care workers for their great work throughout the pandemic and working to help people make that decision in the best interest of their own individual health histories. But I think of families like that, who are caught in the crosshairs of policy like this, that is no longer defensible. We've heard the Minister of Health, we've heard the Minister of Advanced Education and multiple other members in this House tonight stand up and speak about where we're at and that there's no measurable reason or rationale to continue with this. Now, I never thought I'd say this in this House, but I will give the Trudeau government credit that today they did lift – or it's reported that they are about to lift the restriction to have a test before you enter back into Canada, and I think that's a step in the right direction. I think, as the Minister of Advanced Education pointed out, that's hopeful, that maybe they're listening to us tonight. I'm hoping that that's the case.

I wanted to quote Perrin Beatty. He's the president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and he's the co-chair of the Canadian Travel and Tourism Roundtable. He says:

We've seen the collapse of our international tourism and convention business over the course of the last two years . . .

The utter collapse.

. . . and were on the cusp of losing the summer tourist season [again] as well.

He's so thankful that these changes are happening. I don't think, if we had him here tonight, he'd be wanting to do anything but support this motion not only for the sector but for all those families that are affected as well. [interjection] Oh. I see the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to interject, I wonder if the member would – going back to some of the seniors and families that she knows, I know I've had some of these seniors in my constituency. When they go to travel, they don't have smart phones. They don't have apps. They don't have that ability to download the ArriveCAN app. Then they're really stuck because they're penalized by just not having that level of technology, not having the financial capability to buy a brand new smart phone and understand how to download these apps or codes or even upload their vaccination status. They're willing to comply. They want to comply, but it's a real hardship. I wonder if the member has members of her community that she could speak about that also have these kinds of challenges going forward with the restrictions put on by the federal government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you. Thank you to the member for the interjection. I think it's a really good point. I mean, I spoke about one barrier, a family that really had no choice.

But I have witnessed actually first-hand, so I'll tell a little story about that. I was travelling for my role as an MLA. I was travelling actually to advocate for Alberta's energy back in the fall of 2021. There was a kerfuffle at the airport. I don't know what exactly was going on, but there were a number of people in the lineup trying to get on this flight that were visibly stressed. One lady was in tears: I'm going to miss my flight. She didn't know what to do. She had a smart phone. But the ArriveCAN app, as it turns out, was glitching that day. By hook and by crook we figured it out, but this whole lineup of people was not going to be allowed to board the plane. I felt for the airline employee, who was dealing with an elevated level of stress already, dealing with restrictions that she did not impose, trying to help people be compliant and be COVID responsible and then having people screaming at her that they were not going to be able to board their flight and they were going to miss their connection or whatever else.

In some cases, to the member's point, to the member's question, you've got people who don't travel often. Maybe they've saved up to go see their new grandbaby, and maybe they've gone on their first trip in many years, and the technology and the demands and the shifting COVID restrictions and the lack of clarity – I think, to the point from the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore, that sometimes people just don't know what the rules are. It was very confusing and very stressful, and I witnessed it first-hand in that airport, people just at the brink. I think about all that stress and all that we've been through collectively as a society over the last two years, which I'm not blaming anybody for – it's a pandemic – but now that we're coming out the other side, I think that we can be compassionate, and I think we can move more quickly.

I wanted to talk a little bit about the impact of tourism as a sector on our economy. You know, we've talked a lot in this government . . . [interjection] Oh. I apologize. I see another intervention, Mr. Speaker. I'm so popular tonight.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for giving way. Actually, I hoped that you were actually going to share a little bit. I know that Grande Prairie Regional Tourism recently rebranded. They had a new kickoff, and I know they have some exciting events planned, including an air race upcoming. I hope that I didn't interrupt what you were about to say, but I was hoping that you would discuss a little bit about how the thinning of the border is very important for your region in particular and the great work that is being done with Grande Prairie regional tourism.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you. Thank you, Mr. Speaker and through you to the member for that great intervention. I wasn't going to speak about that specifically, but I'm happy to. I'm happy to speak about their rebranding and to thank the good folks in Grande Prairie Regional Tourism Association for their hard work and their resilience in the face of the challenges over the last two years and how difficult it's been, yet just like the good people of Grande Prairie do, they have risen to the occasion. I'd like to thank the member who intervened as well for joining me at the unveiling of their new strategic plan and their new logo. It's a very exciting time for them as they feel hopeful. You know, they feel hopeful for the first time, probably, in two years. They feel hopeful about the future. They feel hopeful about the possibilities and that they can actually make a difference in the economic reality of tourism in our province.

That said, back to tourism as a key sector to our economy. You know, in May 2020 the unemployment rate in the tourism sector in Alberta hit just shy of 30 per cent, which is a shocking, shocking statistic. Thankfully, to the member's point, it's only due to the hard work and ingenuity and resilience of those in the sector that it wasn't higher, quite frankly. They've seen some slow, slow gains, but it's not enough. I mean, they're still bleeding out. The reality is that with these restrictions the sector will continue to suffer and for no gain on the public health side. I think that's the point of the motion. If there were tangible, measurable gains in public health, it would be defensible, but we are past the point where this is defensible.

You know, as we talk as a government about Alberta's recovery plan and, I would argue, by extension, Canada's recovery plan – I mean, if Alberta's got a sniffle, Canada's got a cold. I really believe that it's incumbent upon Alberta – as we recover, we're going to help Canada out of this challenging, challenging time of these last two years. It's incumbent that we fight for these jobs in this sector as well, not just for Alberta jobs but for Canadian jobs.

I mean, I would be remiss, especially given the last intervention, if I didn't talk about some of the beautiful places in Alberta that we would love to highlight to the world. We believe that the federal government needs to support the opportunity for others to partake in the beauty of Alberta and Canada. People from all over the world would love to fly here to see the beautiful views of the Rocky Mountains, to ski at Sunshine Village, my personal favourite, although I think that if you say that I'm skiing, you're being very generous. I fall down a mountain rather ungraciously, but I get there.

You know, there are people who could get married at the Fairmont hotel in Jasper, in the member's constituency, or go visit the biggest mall in North America. It actually isn't the biggest mall in North America anymore. If you go to Minnesota, they will tell you that. But we were the first biggest mall in North America, and that's what matters. We're still historic.

Mr. Speaker, I understand why these measures were originally implemented. I understand that COVID has been a fluid reality. I understand that it has been a challenge for every government, including this government, to manage because it has been fluid and dynamic and challenging. I understand that there still could be challenges ahead. I understand that. I also believe that we have to weigh that, as I believe this government has tried to do, with the viability for citizens. We have to be compassionate in the measures we impose, and they have to be defensible. I would argue that we are no longer in a place where they're defensible.

I would like to quote, actually, the federal Health minister, Jean-Yves Duclos. He says that Canada is looking to adjust restrictions, which is also, I think, good news. But why? Well, he says, "these tools," because they have more tools to deal with the pandemic now, as all governments do, after two years of managing this. We have more understanding. We have more scientific data. We have more research. We have more institutional knowledge about what works and what doesn't, what is the most effective in terms of treatment and intervention. He talks about these tools. He says:

These tools include the strong surveillance system, a highly vaccinated population . . .

Which we also have here in Alberta. Thank you to Albertans who've participated, who've been able to participate.

. . . continued access to vaccines, access to therapeutics both in and outside our hospital system and increasing access to rapid tests.

All of these things paint context around this motion. All of these things are part of the reality as . . . [interjection] Oh. I see the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you to the member for allowing an intervention. You talked about some of the businesses in your area, and I was just reading an article here from the IATA, the International Air Transport Association. They're predicting that the world's airlines will lose $200 billion over the duration of this pandemic, wiping out nine years of profit. The IATA director general, Willie Walsh, told a gathering of chief executives from the airlines: "People have not lost their desire to travel as we see in solid domestic market resilience. But they are being held back from international travel by restrictions, uncertainty, and complexity." When we secure that number, that $200 billion, nine years of profits – maybe you could just reflect. You were talking about Grande Prairie tourism and some of your local tourism operators – I'm expecting that they're seeing that same thing, wiping out of nine years of profits and now having to get back on their feet – and how important these economies are to us. I'd like to hear your comments on that.

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you again for the intervention. Mr. Speaker, I don't think I've ever been this popular, but I appreciate all of the interest in what I have to say this evening. I take the member's point. I really do. I'm a small-business person myself for the last 30 years. We know – right? – that when times are tough, as small businesses you eat that, and you hope to compensate that with the times that aren't so tough. But it's been hard, as an elected member governing through this challenging time, to watch businesses grapple. You know, I've had business owners in my constituency office really grappling with having to lay off employees. Like, that's devastating when they become your friends and they become people that you take a personal responsibility for, to think about how you're going to impact their families. That's just the personal level.

But at the macro level, which the member was talking about, billions of dollars on the table – I mean, I fundamentally believe that government's job is to create predictability and stability, to be as small as possible, and then to get out of the way. Unfortunately, with COVID-19 we haven't really had the luxury of predictable or stable. As I said earlier, it's been very, very fluid. We haven't had the luxury of being as small as we would like because there's been so much going on in terms of protecting our health care capacity.

You know, I actually hope and believe that we collectively, all 87 members of this Legislature, will come together in the name of learning from this pandemic. I believe the members opposite are interested in that and I believe that we are, too. I hold hope, Mr. Speaker, that we can work together to come up with what we learned and what we could do better going forward to leave a bit of a template for future administrations.

Further to that, I believe that it's incumbent upon us, as I was speaking earlier about Alberta's recovery plan, to fight for this sector as well. This sector in Alberta, tourism, is an important industry. In 2019 we generated around 6 and a half billion dollars, but from 2019 to '21 we've seen occupancy rates decline by 25 per cent and employment in the tourism sector decline by 14 per cent, and in one year, one statistic I gave, it was over 30 per cent. In Edmonton alone there was the generation of almost $2 billion in 2019 for tourism. By 2021 this figure dropped by about 70 per cent. That's an astounding number. As a businessperson I cannot imagine facing a 70 per cent reduction in my revenue in a year. Canada's tourism sector was hit even harder.

I'll go back to the motion, Mr. Speaker. There's so much more that I could say. I'm shocked at how much I could talk about this because I really didn't think I could stand up here and talk this long, to be honest with you, but I really believe that I'm grateful for the strides and for the changes that the federal government has started to make. I just believe that this motion – it's incumbent upon us here in Alberta to call on the government to be more responsive and to be more expedient. There are jobs on the line. There's a whole industry and sector on the line.

I am proud to stand here as an elected member of Alberta's Legislature and support this motion and support the good men and women that work in the tourism sector. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On Government Motion 12 are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 17, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of God Save the Queen by the Minister of Children's Services. I know that she's asked especially for us to join in with her today.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen!
Send her victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the Queen!

The Speaker: With a voice like that, she's going to get put on full-time.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to bring your attention to the media gallery. It seems that they're all here today. I'm not sure what's happening.

Hon. members, it's my great pleasure to introduce a familiar face around this place. He's the former Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin and the current Member-elect for Fort McMurray-Lac La Biche. I would like him to rise. Welcome, Brian Jean, to the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would also like . . . [interjections] Order. Order. Order. I would also like to give a very special welcome to 115 grade 6 students along with their teachers – Ms Wilson, Ms Burke, Ms Dollimount, Mr. Saïpe, and the most fantastic, as I've been told, Mr. Jackson – who are joining us online today at C.W. Perry school in Airdrie. Please welcome the students joining us online.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Government Policies and Economic Recovery

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. COVID has caused a couple of tough years in our province. The pandemic, the restrictions, the economic challenges, the collapse in oil prices: all of these things have challenged our people and our government, but now things are looking up. Spring is just around the corner, and Alberta's recovery is well under way. We are past the worst of COVID. Almost all restrictions are gone, and our province is returning to normal.

Our economic prospects are better than they have been in many years. It's not just our traditional industries that are surging, but Alberta is also seeing remarkable progress on diversification and emerging industries. In recent months we've seen thousands of jobs, billions of dollars of investment announced in Alberta's tech sector. In fact, Alberta's tech boom has been so remarkable that some people have commented on the prospect that Alberta has the opportunity to become home of Silicon Valley north. From film and television to agrifood processing to petrochemicals, everything is on the rise. Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that it is the policies of this government that have made much of this economic good news possible.

Speaking of good news, just a few short weeks ago this government tabled the first balanced budget in eight years. The government is delivering for Albertans. We are delivering on our promises.

Colleagues, Albertans are noticing. If you take a moment to remove yourself from this building, the media circus, the petty political nonsense, you will hear Albertans sending messages of approval of the direction of this government. Albertans approve of moving beyond COVID. They approve of our pro-growth, pro-enterprise economic agenda. They approve of our fiscal prudence. The opposition won't want to hear this, but if an election were held today, the United Conservative Party would be re-elected with a majority. Friends, if we stay the course, if we remain united and we continue to focus on the priorities of Albertans, this momentum will continue through to 2023, and Albertans will reward this government with a renewed mandate to continue to build this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Executive Council Main Estimates Consideration

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, real leaders aren't afraid to debate, and there is no one in this House more up for a debate than the Leader of the Official Opposition. She owned every decision she made as Premier and was willing to debate policy decisions and choices made by the government she led because that is what a leader does. A leader is unafraid to stand up and debate the issues facing Alberta and the solutions for them.

But there are exceptions, Mr. Speaker. Last night the Premier figured that since he is unable to defend his budget and policy decisions, he avoided debating them with her directly. He wasn't willing to take questions on the chaos in his office, which has seen massive turnover. He even claimed that he didn't know how many of his own staff were on leave campaigning for him. He wasn't willing to debate his fake natural gas rebate or explain why he thought 50 bucks would address a $700 utility bill. He wasn't willing to take questions on why he abandoned his decades-long opposition to bracket creep, the inflation policy being used by him to take a billion dollars from Alberta families. He refused to debate the tragic news of deaths of children in care, which have reached record levels in recent years.

He couldn't tell me why he failed to support my constituents who were devastated by the 2020 hailstorm. He couldn't tell me why my constituents of northeast Calgary, who were blamed by this Premier for spreading COVID-19, were denied the school and infrastructure they need. In a rare instance of forthrightness, this Premier actually admitted that he was unaware that his government was hiking borrowing costs for municipalities. The Premier's no-help budget leaves many Albertans behind, and he wasn't brave enough to debate his budget. Albertans deserve better.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Energy Security and Affordability

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without fail I have constantly emphasized that it is vital to produce affordable energy for all. I have also repeatedly stated that pretending to care about the poorest in society while enacting policies that drive up energy costs and destabilize secure energy sources is disingenuous. I say all this because it is becoming increasingly evident that the true cost of the green agenda is not so sustainable concerning energy affordability and security.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Case in point: the cancellation of the Keystone XL pipeline permit based on an idea of preventing climate change, a virtue signalling notion resulting in reduced oil transportation, efficiency, and safety. Time and time again the pipeline cancellation trend applauded by the carbon dioxide alarmists has resulted in less investment and slowed our growth in energy production. In a time when energy security and affordability should be our top priority, the federal government continuously enacts policies undermining such. Despite soaring inflation, another hike in the federal carbon tax, to $50 per tonne of carbon, is due on April 1.

Energy reliability, abundance, affordability are not qualities that green technologies are well known for. As the unfortunate energy crisis in Europe unfolds, it has never been clearer how such traits, which amount to establishing a reliable energy distribution system, are of utmost importance.

Alberta holds the ability to provide Canada with energy independence and sovereignty. However, the incessant campaign to shut down our fossil fuel industry while importing oil from despotic nations around the world such as Venezuela, Iran, and Russia does not only reek of cognitive dissonance, but it is unfortunately making it more expensive for regular folk. This could be our chance to step up and expand our energy market penetration, serve the needs of individuals both at home and abroad securely and affordably.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

1:40 Deaths of Children in Care and Youth Transitioning out of Care

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This year started with tragic news. Yesterday it was revealed that a record number of children in government care have died. We also learned that the fatalities were almost entirely young Indigenous people. This is devastating news, and I want to take a moment to express the unbelievable grief of our caucus for this senseless loss of life and potential. This is not a political issue. This is a devastating human issue that should command the immediate attention of this government. These kids are not numbers. They are not statistics. They are not budget line items. There's no talking point or budget line that can justify the simple fact that we as a province are failing these most vulnerable youth.

Yesterday the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud and I asked questions to the Premier and the Minister of Children's Services to work with us to solve this issue and present a plan of action. In response, this call for action and leadership was called politicizing the crisis by the Premier and only received vague promises for a report to come in the future from the Minister of Children's Services.

I beg this government to try leading with compassion and empathy. Be open, honest, and transparent with the people of this province, who are stunned at the unfolding tragedy. This government is doing its best to prevent this topic from being discussed in an attempt to avoid the hard discussions that need to happen if we're going to do right by these youth.

This is not about the budget. This is not a contest about what line item increased or decreased. It's about saving lives. It's about whether or not this government has the political will and strength and courage to work with us and every other stakeholder to ensure that this tragic year is the last one. The people of Alberta care about this. They feel the pain of these losses, and they want action taken. They won't forgive a government that obstructs, hides, or ignores the crisis.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Bishop Desmond Tutu and Ted Byfield

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Recently two men passed away, one of whom was internationally famous and the other an influential Albertan that I once had the opportunity to meet. Both men shared a faith in God. One was a bishop in the Anglican church and the other had Anglican roots. Both believed that their faith in a loving God had to make a difference, and both of them, by the content of their character and support of democracy, helped to change their nations.

Bishop Desmond Tutu was the moral conscience of South Africa as he spoke against the apartheid regime. His job was not done when the system of apartheid collapsed. Through his work on the Truth and Reconciliation Commission both victims and the oppressors had the opportunity to meet, listen, and, most importantly, to ask and grant forgiveness. It was his faith, compassion, and sense of humour that helped his nation to peacefully transition to democracy.

I heard him speak in Edmonton, and it was electric. He started by imitating a hug as he said to the Canadians in the crowd: thank you, thank you, thank you. It was heartfelt and moving as he recognized the contributions Canadians had made in pressuring South Africa towards rejecting the evils of apartheid and to become a democracy.

The second man, Ted Byfield, helped to articulate for my generation how we could better our democratic institutions by instituting a triple-E Senate, citizen-initiated referenda, and the right of recall. He helped to create the Reform Party and to clarify that what the west really wanted was to be an equal partner in Confederation. His magazine editorials, his compendiums of western Canadian history and the history of the Christian faith helped to set some of the foundation stones in my life.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Respect is not built upon the foundation of perfection but upon the character of a person and the impact of their lives on us. I am glad that I had the opportunity to ever so briefly rub shoulders with these men, and I will always be grateful for what I learned from their principled lives.

Premier's Leadership

Mr. Loewen: The past two years have been incredibly difficult, and there hasn't been a single life left untouched by this Premier's mismanagement. Tens of thousands of Albertans have lost jobs, and multigenerational businesses have closed. This government has seized churches and businesses, dragging Albertans through the courts for violating the very same health restrictions that this Premier and members of his cabinet personally violated. Then, ignoring this hypocrisy, the Premier has repeatedly demeaned and vilified Albertans, pushing mistruths and half-cocked facts. In true Alberta style, though, Albertans didn't give up on their principles, and they darn sure didn't stop fighting for a better tomorrow. Their out-of-touch Premier, however, in a bid to cling to power, continues to fatally divide Albertans and his own party.

Here are the facts. The Premier has trailed in the polls for 15 months. He's being out fund raised by the NDP 2 to 1. He is one of the least popular Premiers in Canada, and the majority of people who voted UCP in 2019 want to see him gone. Under this Premier we are divided, we are split, and it's not because of the people but because this Premier has gone back to the old ways of the PCs.

With an election set for 2023, the former base Kenney has so callously dismissed is fed up and is not buying this Premier's fake 180-degree turn just weeks before a leadership review. This Premier keeps claiming that anyone who opposes him is not a mainstream Conservative, yet the vast majority of Conservatives oppose him.

We need to reset the Albert agenda with an inclusive conservative vision that unites our movement and our province. Change is coming one way or another. The people are ready for leadership options, and there will be good ones. I am calling on all Albertans who have suffered under this hypocrisy, I'm calling on all Albertans who want to prevent a return of the NDP, and I'm calling on all Albertans who want to give this province the fresh start we all deserve: buy a UCP membership today, register for the SGM, come to Red Deer on April 9, and vote this Premier out of office once and for all. It's time for a little spring cleaning, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm sure the hon. member will know that the use of proper names for any reason is unparliamentary, and he'll govern himself accordingly in the future.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Political Labels

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some politicians label those who agree with them as mainstream and those who disagree with them as fringe minorities, extremists, or threats undermining stability. Some politicians say: of course, we can have unity if only you would agree with me. That is not unity; that is ridiculous. We are governed by laws, not by individuals, and our paramount loyalties are to principles, not to office holders. Some politicians say that those who disagree with them have unacceptable values or beliefs. That is for God, not them, to judge.

Dividing and labelling others only produces contention and destroys trust. That is not leadership. Great leaders lead in love and inspire the best in those they serve. Conflict is inevitable. Contention is a choice. Good leaders understand the difference.

Large groups should not be condemned and labelled by the actions of a few. Some seek to destroy a person's reputation by interpreting and sometimes twisting a person's words in the worst possible ways, calling them names such as racist and extremist. That is unfair to them, their spouses, and their children.

There is a better way. A loving God views all of us, His children, by our eternal possibilities and in our best possible ways. Our shared heritage as children of God transcends all other labels and is a label that produces peace. Let us be loyal to the truth and speak the truth in love. We will be happier and better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Holi

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Holi is a wonderful custom and celebration that symbolizes the flowering of love at the end of the winter and the beginning of the spring season. It's a day for meeting new people, laughing, playing, and enjoying the great celebration of colours. Holi is a joyful and rich celebration that fills the entire atmosphere with vibrant colours and creates a positive environment where everyone is soaked in the colours but more in the spirit of Holi.

Holi is celebrated all around the world for its vibrant colours, which educate people to rise above, forgive, and greet others with a positive attitude and great affection. As well, Holi is a great time to enjoy the delicious traditional sweets and food with one another. The happy occasion is also incomplete without the breathtaking traditional folk music that creates a positive environment for everyone to enjoy. It is the world's most exciting and joyful celebration.

This celebration commemorates the triumph of good over evil. The festival's core theme is love and compassion for one another. On this special day we should put aside any grudges towards one another and promote joy. It is celebrated by people all around the country on the basis of many myths and tales; however, regardless of one's views, the spirit stays the same. It announces the start of spring, the season of hope and happiness. Nature is bursting at the seams with fresh leaves and blossoms. As a result, there is a lot of happiness all around.

I'm really delighted to be able to name this lovely province my home as a devoted Hindu. My desire for many of you throughout the world is that you have a happy and joyful Holi. Happy Holi, everyone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition has question 1.

Deaths of Children in Care and Youth Transitioning out of Care

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, when we asked the Premier about the historic jump in deaths of children in government care, he tried to suggest that it was entirely about COVID and not his own government's heinous abdication of responsibility. In the middle of last year the UCP cut $40 million from child intervention. In addition, the so-called review remains hidden, unfinished, and it's been five months. Once again, what exactly is this Premier going to do to change course and do better preventing the deaths of Alberta's most vulnerable children?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services has risen.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I do appreciate the question. As I have said, the death of any child who is or has been in care is a tragedy, and it is a call to action. We are absolutely looking into each and every case to determine if there are changes needed to policy and practice. However, in the meantime we are still making changes as recommendations come forward. We respond to the recommendations that come from the OCYA, and we have committed to be very transparent and accountable and make changes where they're needed, as I said. Our transition to adulthood program is one example of how we're working to address what we're seeing in this data.

Ms Notley: Well, speaking of that, Mr. Speaker, 20 of those we lost were young people over the age of 18. Now, the UCP went to court to defend their decision to scale back eligibility for benefits from age 22 to 24, arguing that they had a right to save $10 million. Meanwhile in B.C. we see an NDP government battle the same kind of crisis by expanding benefits for these youth from the age of 24 up to 27. Will the Premier admit that these folks got it wrong, and will he reverse this cruel decision and start focusing on supporting these young people?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, as I said in this House in 2019, after these changes were made, we identified that there were gaps in transitions for young people who were transitioning into adulthood. We had a program that was in place. While there were caseworkers dedicated, we needed to do a better job of transitioning young people into adulthood, making sure that they had the natural supports in place so that they could be successful in their futures. We now have that. It was announced two weeks ago. We wanted to take the best pieces from advancing futures and make sure we support a successful . . .

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, that answer is a clear example of why we can't have an honest discussion about the deaths of these 45 children in a 35-second exchange.

Now, when we were in government, we put together an all-party committee to have real discussions, and, yes, some good came out of us working together. Today it's clear that circumstances have changed, like, for instance, throwing a whole bunch of people off benefits, and there are new challenges. Will the Premier take this crisis seriously and re-establish that committee?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the members opposite back to the last term. The all-party panel was created because there wasn't, in fact, a lot of transparency or any accountability from the members opposite when things went wrong in child intervention. We are now working under those new processes. We have, I have committed to be completely transparent, to make sure that these reports are available to the public because we take this seriously, and so, too, should the public. We are going to take action. I know, obviously, the transition to adulthood program, which I've spoken about already, is one step, and I anticipate more changes will be coming soon.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for question 2.

Ms Notley: You kicked a whole bunch of kids off benefits, and you cut $40 million last year, and you didn't put it back this year.

Government Policies and Cost of Living

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are struggling. Yesterday the inflation rate hit 5.7 per cent, the highest since 1991. Now, the Premier might remember because it was back when he became the head of the CTF and started railing against government bracket creep. For the folks at home, bracket creep is when the government keeps more and more of your income even as inflation drives costs up. I want the Premier to remember 1991 and explain: why is he taking . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

You certainly can have private conversations, but doing private conversations across the bar never works out for anyone.

The Leader of the Opposition, from about 10 seconds ago if you would like.

Ms Notley: I'd like the Premier to remember 1991 and explain: why is he now taking a billion dollars from Alberta families through his bracket creep budget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to be clear. The only members in this House that have raised taxes during their term in government are the members across the aisle. They raised taxes on everything that moved, on individuals, on corporations, driving billions of dollars out of this province, leaving tens of thousands of Albertans looking for jobs, looking for work. We have brought fiscal responsibility back to the province of Alberta. We presented a balanced budget. Shame on them for raising these issues.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this government has taken the tax burden off high-paid corporate CEOs and moved it to regular Alberta families. That's what they've done. The point is that the Premier's decision to ignore sky-high inflation has now gone from an annoyance to a billion-dollar tax grab. Families lose $400 in a year. A vulnerable person on AISH: well, they lose $1,000. The Premier once claimed that that loss of income wouldn't be onerous. Well, it is onerous. Why doesn't he recognize that inflation is a problem? Albertans need them to act now.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we are acting. We're bringing in relief measures for Albertans. We're reducing and, in fact, eliminating fuel taxes as energy prices go up. That's what this government is doing in contrast to the members opposite, who increased taxes on everything that moved, brought in a carbon tax that added costs to every Albertan, every senior, every family.

Ms Notley: As the minister knows, Mr. Speaker, that gets rebated. What doesn't get rebated is a 100 per cent increase in tuition, a 30 per cent increase in auto insurance, a 50 per cent increase in utility bills, increases in school fees, increases in property taxes, and a billion-dollar tax grab through bracket creep. Why won't this minister stand up and fix the mistakes that he is making towards the people of this province? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, when the members opposite were in government, they increased taxes on every Albertan, on every business, on every senior, on every family. They put this province on an unsustainable fiscal trajectory, leaving our books $10 billion out of balance relative to similar provinces. We brought fiscal stability back to the province of Alberta. That means a future for future generations. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The Leader of the Opposition for her third set of questions.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what this government did was stumble into a windfall, and that's it.

Premier's Office Staff

Ms Notley: Now, yesterday I had the chance to ask the Premier some questions about his office also stumbling, an office that appears to have some very serious problems. Stakeholders we talk to say that turnover is so high in the Premier's office that they never know who to talk to. It's a miracle anything gets done when no one sticks around. More than a 50 per cent turnover in one single year. A simple question: can the Premier explain why so many of his staff don't want to work with him?

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, what a ridiculous question coming from Alberta's worst Premier. Here's a question I'd like to ask the former Premier of Alberta: how has she still not apologized to Albertans for bringing in the largest job loss in the history of the province? Let's start there. How about for not campaigning on her carbon tax, that caused economic devastation across this province? When is she going to apologize, though, for telling Albertans to take the bus?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier claimed that it's all actually about burnout and natural turnover in his office, but if that's true, we wouldn't be seeing so many of those former staffers actually taking the time to torpedo the Premier. One has to wonder if it has anything to do with the extracurriculars his staff have been assigned: his top adviser is off the job, serving Albertans in order to – and staff are being told to take off work at 4 o'clock, all to save his failed leadership. My question is: should I be even asking him questions anymore, or maybe should I be talking to the guy who's sitting right up there?

2:00

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, that's a ridiculous question. It's a distraction. We will not be distracted. We are focused on Albertans' business, and . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. You asked a question; you can hear the answer.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, that business is about positioning this province for increased investment attraction. That business is about increasing job opportunities and opportunities for every small business in every region of this province, and our plan is working.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, look up the word "distracted" in the dictionary, and you'll see a picture of that whole group over there.

Now, half the Premier's Calgary office left last year, too. The scarcity of life rafts really tells us something about the state of the ship, Mr. Speaker. We actually do have big issues to manage in Alberta, but this Premier's number one priority is saving his own job, saving himself from his party, from his MLAs, from the guy up there. Why doesn't the Premier realize that even though it's called the Premier's office, it's actually there to serve Albertans, not his political future?

Speaker's Ruling Referring to Party Matters Referring to the Galleries

The Speaker: I know that the Leader of the Opposition knows that this period of time is to ask questions about government business, not about external party matters. I also know that the hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that she ought not be engaging, as I reminded members of the opposition yesterday, with members in the gallery or otherwise.

The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One bad poll and that's all it takes for that leader to jump the shark. Her close, personal alliance with Mr. Jean seems to be quite obvious. I noticed the other day that he suggested to put her into cabinet, a Leader of the Official Opposition who has said she will go door to door to force vaccinations on Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Besides the plan to go door to door to every Albertan that the Leader of the Official Opposition has put forward to force vaccinations, I guess the question becomes: does Mr. Jean want to go door to door and force vaccinations as well?

Health Care Worker Wages and Cost of Living

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, Albertans work so, so hard, and so many have stepped up, gone to work every day to perform essential services even as we faced an unprecedented public health threat and most of us were told to stay home. They cared for the sick. They stocked grocery store shelves. They taught in classrooms. Put bluntly, they were there for us, and now we need the government to be there for them. Why is the government cutting wages for front-line workers, any front-line workers, even as we see the highest rate of inflation in 30 years?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. As the hon. member knows – we've actually talked about this issue for the last four days in question period. I assume that the hon. member is talking about the bargaining between AHS and HSAA. You know, as indicated previously, these were opening positions. That's how bargaining works. Both parties put positions on the table. AHS put positions on the table, raising concerns about payment of certain professions. HSAA put a position on the table of a 15 per cent increase over four years. I am hopeful that they'll be able to reach an agreement, just like we did with UNA.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, because of this government the cost of everything is rising. Car insurance is costing hundreds more per month. Tuition is doubling for some students. School fees are up. The government is even hiking camping fees. Do they hate summer fun over there? On top of all that, they're hitting families with a $1 billion tax grab, and this government and this Premier know that as inflation goes up, so does the UCP tax grab. Families that already can't make ends meet are paying for that. Premier, right here and right now put an end to this. Will he commit to ending the insidious tax grab on the backs of families?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to reiterate that this government is not raising taxes. It was the members across the aisle, when they were in government, that raised taxes on everything and everybody. What we are doing: we're providing a utility rebate to Albertans to off-set the horrible utility policy brought in by the members opposite that pushed up utility rates for everybody. We're also coming forward with a holiday on the fuel tax, which will make Alberta fuel the cheapest across the nation.

Ms Gray: Alberta families are struggling. Many are facing utility bills verging on $1,000 per month, and there's no end in sight. They owe thousands to utility companies already, and they are now being threatened to have their heat and their electricity turned off. Yesterday my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View brought forward legislation to ban utility shut-offs, and the government ignored it. The UCP continues to ignore Alberta families. Will the Premier commit that not a single Albertan will lose heat or power in their home while they're dealing with a cost-of-living crisis not seen in 30 years? Will he have any real solutions for families?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have brought real solutions: a utility rebate, a fuel tax holiday. I want to speak to the underlying reasons why utility costs are high. It was the members opposite, when they were in government, that added 7 and a half billion dollars to our transmission system. The members opposite, when they were in government, hastily went to gas from coal, creating a $1.4 billion liability for who? Alberta consumers. Moreover, they brought in a carbon tax that added costs to every Alberta family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has a question.

COVID-19 Related Travel Restrictions

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's so disappointing that the NDP is desperately trying to keep the COVID issues alive. Last night in this very Chamber they even voted against a motion calling on the federal government to drop pointless COVID travel restrictions, including screening requirements and proof of vaccination for air travel. Once again they voted with their friend and ally Justin Trudeau against the majority of common-sense Albertans. To the Minister of Health: can you explain to those across the aisle and those in Ottawa why it is safe to drop these pointless travel restrictions?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As the member and this House know, we removed the vast majority of our restrictions over a month ago because it was safe to do so. In fact, total hospitalizations have dropped by over 600 since we lifted the restrictions exemption program on February 9. Federal predeparture screening requirements don't limit the spread or reduce severe outcomes. Dr. Zain Chagla, an infectious disease physician and associate professor at McMaster University, says that for PCR tests "the yield for this type of testing is very, very low for a significant amount of cost and anxiety to the traveller."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his answer. Given that United Conservative MLAs voted to drop these pointless travel restrictions that only make life harder and more expensive for Albertans and Canadians and given that despite leaving them in place for far too long, even the federal government is starting to lift restrictions for travel, again to the Minister of Health: how will the government push back against the NDP's campaign of fear and misinformation about COVID and travel when the virus is clearly no longer the threat that it once was?

Mr. Copping: Thanks once again to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. Our transition to an endemic phase means learning to live with COVID and lifting the unnecessary barriers that harm both Albertans and our economy. It also means listening to partners like the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, whose president, Perrin Beatty, said that "blanket warnings about travel at this point are unjustified." Of course, we'll continue to watch COVID-19 trends closely, but we're continuing with our return-to-normal plan because it is working, because omicron is different, and because Albertans shouldn't have to put up with restrictions that no longer make sense, restrictions that are supported by the other side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has been clear that it's time to drop these pointless COVID travel restrictions, a view shared by the majority of Albertans and given that the NDP believes these travel restrictions should remain in place indefinitely, again to the Minister of Health: when do you expect all of these travel restrictions to be fully removed, allowing Albertans to get back to their normal lives?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, the federal government this morning announced that they will remove the pretesting requirement for fully vaccinated travellers as of April 1; however, it's tough to say when this federal government will realize that it needs to do the right thing and remove travel restrictions entirely for all Canadians. They should follow what interim president of the National Airlines Council of Canada, Suzanne Acton-Gervais, has stated: "Other countries have moved to eliminate pre-departure testing requirements entirely, and the latest scientific evidence suggests now is the time for Canada to consider doing the same."

2:10 AISH and Income Support Payments

Ms Renaud: The decision to deindex AISH will leave recipients with $1,000 less to buy essential items. That's groceries, clothing, that's transportation, that's medical supplies. We are seeing inflation that we haven't seen since 1991. Some of the vulnerable Albertans that I'm hearing from weren't even born the last time things were so tough. They've never experienced this kind of hardship. Why is this government doing nothing to make life better for these Albertans?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, Budget 2022 continues to maintain the core funding for social services. In addition, we increased funding for AISH. We increased $36 million for employment support services. We not only function as a social safety net for those vulnerable Albertans, but we also help them to get jobs.

Ms Renaud: Given that the minister claimed earlier this week that he couldn't act until he generated wealth but given that this government has already shoveled money to their friends in the form of a multibillion-dollar handout and can't be bothered to even keep funding for those on income support at pace with the skyrocketing cost of living and given that no one from these communities can get time with the minister or the Premier or anyone even willing to listen about the devastating impact of these horrible, cruel, UCP government policies, will the government admit that they only care about their rich friends?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, with our commitment we're not only working with our nonprofit sectors here; we added another $6 million under the civil society grant. We're working hand in hand with our community partners to make sure Albertans' lives are getting better through our support to them.

Ms Renaud: Given that I'm here begging – actually begging – for this government to listen, given I devoted my life to fighting for Albertans who are vulnerable and struggling to make ends meet, I am actually heartbroken that there is no compassion and support from this sitting government. I want the voices of vulnerable Albertans to be heard. Will the minister and the Premier come to a town hall with me to listen to these vulnerable Albertans who are struggling and hurting right now because of your policies?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, we're listening to Albertans. I'm travelling around the province, and when I have the time, I talk to families, I talk to parents. Through our support thousands of vulnerable Albertans have been getting the support they need from us. We're committed to providing the safety net for vulnerable Albertans, but more than that, we're an empowering mechanism that will give people support so they can have a hand up.

Technology Industry Development

Mr. Bilous: Later today I'll be tabling a bill that will establish a venture fund that'll invite Albertans to invest in Alberta's future. The fund will directly invest in the growth of Alberta's tech and AI sectors and exclusively support early-stage companies, start-ups, and scale-ups. Investing in the fund would provide Albertans the opportunity to earn returns themselves and support economic growth, diversification, and the creation of good jobs and the long-term economic well-being of the province. The Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation has said in the past that this issue should be nonpartisan, so will he join me in supporting this bill, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member opposite's interest in creating the most competitive business environment and an environment where we see the tech sector thrive in this province. That is certainly our goal, and we've been very pleased to see venture capital rush into this province, setting records year after year. In order to continue that momentum, we've included $90 million in Budget 2022 in an Alberta technology and innovation strategy. There will be key components of that strategy rolled out in upcoming weeks. I know that the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation will be pleased to be transparent with Albertans on the great opportunity of that plan.

Mr. Bilous: Given that our economy is in the midst of a generational shift brought on by the COVID-19 pandemic, a crash in oil prices, and an energy transformation that's changing how we power our economy and given that these challenges have highlighted the need to build a more resilient and diversified economy – we need to set the right conditions in order to compete in this highly competitive market – given that this government has cut several programs designed to support our tech sector, causing us to lose ground to other provinces, if this government won't support the bill, will they at least reverse their decision to cancel the investor tax credit and the digital media tax credit?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I appreciate the member's efforts and interest in positioning the province for growth in the tech sector. We talk about energy in this province, the importance of energy, and there is an energy transition taking place, but I need to underline today the importance of Alberta's traditional oil and gas industry. It's never been more important as we consider North American energy security. It's never been more important as we consider what we can do to get LNG into Europe to our geopolitical allies.

Mr. Bilous: Given that technology underpins every sector, including oil and gas, and given that the bill will also create an advisory council to provide advice and research to the minister on innovation and technology as well as support crossgovernment initiatives related to innovation and given that this idea, just like the venture fund, the investor tax credit, and the digital media tax credit, came from industry and has support from venture capitalists to private-sector organizations like the Council of Canadian Innovators, will the government finally listen to the tech sector and support the idea of an advisory council?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're working hard to ensure that we have a very attractive business environment for venture capital, for growth in the tech sector. Something that we did early days: we brought in the innovation employment grant, which is a grant that ultimately rewards incremental research and development activity. There has been a great response to that grant, but we're not done yet. As I noted, we've announced $90 million in this budget, Budget 2022, for additional initiatives. These initiatives will be targeted at AI, machine learning, and quantum computing. The tech sector is important to this province, and we're acting.

Election Recall, Citizen Initiative, and Labour Relations Legislation

Mr. Barnes: The Premier campaigned on strengthening grassroots democracy. One of this government's key initiatives was MLA recall. The Premier even stated, and I quote: Albertans should be able to hold their officials accountable throughout their term. This bill received royal assent 273 days ago, yet the bill has still not been proclaimed into law. To the Premier: why has your government chosen to disregard the will of this Assembly by refusing to enact Bill 52, the Recall Act?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As everyone in this House knows, we passed the Recall Act to ensure Albertans could hold officials accountable throughout their term, not just at election time. It will allow voters to petition to remove elected officials from office, including MLAs, mayors, municipal councillors, and school board trustees. We are committed to strengthening democracy in Alberta and making sure Albertans have an even more powerful voice when it comes to matters that impact their lives. We've made a commitment that we would pass this legislation and will put it in place, and we are doing so. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Barnes: Given that I can think of two UCP nomination candidates, Jodie Gateman and Tim Hoven, who might dispute the idea that this government cares about grassroots democracy and given that Bill 51, the Citizen Initiative Act, received royal assent exactly eight months ago, can the Premier explain why his government has ignored the will of this Assembly again and failed to enact into law the Citizen Initiative Act?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We make no apology for vetting candidates through the nomination process. We believe it's important that candidates are able to uphold a certain acceptable bar and hold views that are consistent with the views of Albertans. Again, we make no apology. We will continue to vet nomination candidates.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that this government wants to campaign on grassroots democracy but not provide it, given that there's a third example of grassroots manipulation, the Restoring Balance in Alberta's Workplaces Act, 2020, with its raved-about provision to opt union members out of political spending, and given that this bill received royal assent 626 days ago yet union dues won't be opt-in until July 31, 2022, again to the Premier: if you won't respect the wishes of grassroots Albertans, UCP members, or even this Assembly, why should we trust you?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Labour and Immigration.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I am proud... [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

2:20

Mr. Madu: Mr. Speaker, I am proud of Bill 32. It will actually restore balance in Alberta's labour legislation. I can assure that hon. member that there's a time frame legislated for that particular bill to take its course, and I am confident that before the end of the year that would happen.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Agricultural Concerns

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very concerned about the pending decision from CP Rail to lock out 3,000 conductors and locomotive engineers. The impact for the agricultural industry could be catastrophic, so I sincerely hope there is a resolution. Farmers have had to navigate through a global pandemic, a scorching drought, floods in B.C., illegal blockades on Alberta's only 24/7 border crossing, skyrocketing inflation, and now the uncertainty of the invasion of Ukraine. Why aren't the UCP doing anything to support the agriculture sector through our supply chain disruption?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I honestly don't know what that member is talking about. Our government, like every other prairie province government, has done everything that they can to help their farmers and ranchers through the current drought, whether it's through our robust business risk management strategies, the AgriRecovery program, or us advocating for the CP lockout to end quickly, whether that's with binding arbitration or back-to-work legislation. Where does that member stand on that?

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the cost of fertilizer was skyrocketing before the invasion of Ukraine and continues to increase and that many producers do not have the upfront capital to afford to buy fertilizer early and given that livestock producers have become reliant on American feed due to the shortage in Alberta and given that in the midst of these cost pressures and uncertainty the UCP wants to balance their no-help budget on the backs of farmers and increase crop and livestock insurance by 10 per cent, why is the minister still going through with this?

Mr. Horner: Two-thirds of all nitrogen-based fertilizers made in Canada are made in Alberta. When I meet with the fertilizer companies, they say: "We would love to come here. We love your APiP program, we love the cheap natural gas feedstock availability, but we can't because of the carbon tax, so we're going to build the plants in the U.S., and we're going to freight them across the border." We're lucky we have enough fertilizer in Alberta for the spring plant.

Ms Sweet: No, we don't.

Mr. Horner: Yes, we do. The price will rise. We'll get it in the ground.

The Speaker: I might remind the minister that perhaps if he was answering through the Speaker, it would make for a much smoother transition.

The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the pandemic, a global conflict, and a national labour dispute are out of the control of the provincial government but given that the UCP are, however, in control of how much they charge farmers to access insurance and that it is going up under this government and given that the UCP are also ignoring the request of producer groups to access tens of millions of dollars available through the federal government – again, no surprise that the UCP are ignoring the sector – and given that farmers are facing so much pressure right now and they want to plant seed and they have enough issues with trying to access feed, why is the UCP so committed to making life harder for farmers by jacking up the premiums?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the formula that sets the premiums for our great insurance program is based on your regional risk, your farming history risk, the value of the commodity, and the premium rate. The premium rate is increasing. It's capped at a 10 per cent increase to rebuild the fund because we paid out $2.8 billion from the fund. The fund did its job. [interjections]

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I couldn't hear the last 10 seconds of your answer. Please feel free to deliver it to me.

Mr. Horner: I just said that if there are any crayons left over there, I'll take it offline and show them how the formula works. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Premier's Office Renovations

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, this government has had two separate occasions to report to this House on how much the work done for the Premier's office cost Alberta taxpayers. At the Infrastructure budget debate the minister said that he did not have the cost handy, and the Premier was also unable to give the total cost at the Executive Council budget debate. Since so many Albertans are asking and since he's had over a week to get that number, will the Infrastructure minister share the total cost that went into renovating and upgrading the Premier's office at the Legislature, and if he can't, could he explain what he's trying to hide?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, not only on the floor of this House but also during budget estimates I told him I'm not hiding anything. In fact, I showed him everything and would like to show him everything. On Twitter my office has posted how much it cost to move the Premier's office due to the work being done at the Legislature office. I'm sure the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction can vouch for it. Right now there is work going on at her office, and she has been asking me the last few days: how long will it take? She's looking for, actually, a temporary move.

Member Loyola: Given that Albertans are living through an affordability crisis right now – and that is the sole fault of this government, that piled on costs and removed protections for families – and given that while I appreciate the need to maintain and protect Alberta’s history, including the people’s Legislature, Albertans should be assured that while they are being told to pay more, this government isn’t attempting any luxurious upgrades or improvements, as were seen under the former PCs, will the minister table today a full list of all improvements or alterations done to the Premier’s office in addition to the full cost?

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, this member opposite is trying to create a story that doesn’t exist. It was clarified time and again. We would rather focus on issues that matter for economic recovery and growth, but these socialists will never get that. Like the minister of social services said the other day, we have to create wealth to spend on things. This guy is looking for stories that don’t exist, unfortunately.

Member Loyola: Given that sitting on the government benches is a minister who served in a cabinet trying to build a luxury penthouse on top of the Edmonton Federal Building and given that Albertans lost trust with that government after this revelation and given that in order to build trust with Albertans, this government should be up front with taxpayers about how their money is being spent, will the minister agree that any money spent on upgrading, improving the offices of highly paid government officials, including the Premier and his staff, should be publicly disclosed and approved by a committee of this Legislature? Surely, this minister . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, since the member opposite will try to twist things anyway, I would ask you to accompany me on a tour of that place the government is using.

To be specific about the expenditure: electrical expenses were $1,968; plumbing was $565; electronics, $807; movers, $4,106; painting, $800; carpentry, $250. If the member can’t add, the total is $8,946, which is in the public domain. It’s posted on Twitter.

United States Oil Imports

Ms Rosin: Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent of the Russian government’s budget is funded by oil, making them a true petrostate. As Putin continues his war on Ukraine, any continued reliance by NATO allies on Russian oil and gas is directly financing his invasion. I’m grateful that North America has banned imports, but the world needs to do more. I also understand that our Premier and the Energy minister went to Houston last week to represent Alberta’s energy industry on the international stage. To the Minister of Energy: in Texas what was your message to the global energy and political leaders?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, there were a number of us that were representing Alberta and Alberta energy on the global stage last week. Our Finance minister was in New York talking with major investors and fund managers to tell Alberta’s story and to talk about the importance of our energy sector. The Premier and I were in Houston to talk about the importance of our energy sector to North American energy security. We have to weed out Russian barrels from not only North America but from global supply. It’s conflict oil. It’s unconscionable to be buying it, and that’s what we were talking about. We were talking about Alberta as the solution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that the United States and European countries seem to recognize the importance of ending their reliance on Russian oil and gas imports but they’re struggling to permanently do so given that previous attempts to secure energy security in North America have failed at the hands of short-sighted political decisions, to the same minister: what progress was made in Texas, and how was Alberta’s message received?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Throughout my trip to Texas I heard from leaders and energy leaders and CEOs from around the world who want to see Alberta continue to be a key player to answering global energy issues. We’ve now run headfirst into the fact that, over the last several years, Canada’s and the United States’ federal governments have put energy security on the back burner. What that’s allowed is for Russia, places like Russia to ramp up their production while we have been unable to build ours. It’s a reminder of the importance . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that President Biden is so desperately on the hunt to secure gaps in his oil imports that Russia once filled that he is now conversing with and considering travelling to countries like Saudi Arabia and Venezuela, with whom his country originally imposed oil sanctions on years ago because of their poor human rights standards, yet the same President rejected Alberta’s own Keystone XL pipeline on his very first day in office, which would have enabled their trusted Canadian ally to meet United States’ demand, to the same minister: what do you think that this says about the priorities of President Biden at this time, and what needs to change?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s terribly frustrating to see the U.S. government now scrambling to increase supply from some of the world’s worst regimes, places like Iran, Venezuela, Saudi Arabia, when we’re right next door and we’re already the largest supplier of energy to the United States. We sit on top of the third-largest reserves in oil, and we are proud of it. It’s time that we start treating our oil reserves as a strategic asset to be proud of, not a liability to demonize, and that requires a rebalancing of an energy security discussion, and that’s what we’re doing.

Culture and Status of Women Budget 2022-2023

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, during estimates with the Culture and Status of Women ministry the minister was asked about the lack of increase in his budget to meet the targets set out by this ministry. It was clear when the budget was released that what was allocated was insufficient to meet those goals. In fact, the minister indicated that he asked for more money, advocated for more money, and was denied by his own government, so my question is for the Finance minister. Why doesn’t he feel that supporting women or Alberta’s Culture ministry are important?

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, I did advocate for more money, and I got it, $268 million. They like to string a story that isn't true. I got substantially more money. I look forward to the days when I'll be able to increase the grants to nonprofits and civil societies, the ones who actually do real work and aren't involved in identity politics and trying to create trouble.

Thank you.

Ms Goehring: Given that the minister clearly cannot get adequate funding from this government to meet the needs of Albertans he represents and given this budget comes after a time when those represented by this ministry were hit the hardest – the arts and culture industry saw the biggest reduction in revenue due to the pandemic – and we know that women were disproportionately affected by job loss and economic downturn and given that this minister claims he advocated to the government to support these areas properly, my question is simple: where exactly do women and culture fall on the Finance minister's priority list? We're talking about half of the population.

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Status of Women.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm not going to take any advice from the members across about how much they care about women because I'll tell you about another industry that's dominated by women. That's the tourism industry. Those members opposite stood up last night and voted no to the government motion to remove federal restrictions on travel, which are keeping that industry down and keeping women unemployed. If they care about women, they've got to care about them in every industry. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Goehring: Given that this government has failed to get Albertans back to work at the rate they promised – they're 130,000 jobs short, Mr. Speaker – and given they're now moving to slash the wages of front-line health care workers in fields with far more women than men and given those health care heroes were on the front lines of the pandemic every day while UCP ministers and caucus members flew off to Hawaii, hosted drunken white tablecloth dinners, and held Christmas parties literally hours after telling all Albertans to cancel theirs, is anyone in this government really going to claim they've checked into reality and that they understand the many challenges facing women?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was a lot in that question, but we're positioning this province for opportunity for every Albertan, including all Alberta women and Alberta families. That's why we supported businesses, businesses in the service sector disproportionately, at levels not supported by any other government across the country. That's why we're positioning this province for disproportionate investment attraction, job creation, and economic growth. All Albertans are important, including women.

Education Concerns in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood

Member Irwin: Delton school is in my riding. It's a lovely school, but it needs replacing, and the students in our community would be better served with a new school. It was at the top of Edmonton public's priority list, but the Minister of Education, who thinks she knows better than community members, refuses to fund it or any public school in Edmonton. Minister, good news: it's not too late to do the right thing and support Edmonton public schools like Delton. Will she join me and our Education critic for a tour of Delton school to see just how short-sighted her decision is not to replace it? And, please, just say yes.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a process, a very defensible data-based process when we approve capital projects in this province. With respect to education, we actually take priorities that school boards deliver through the Ministry of Education, and then after that the ministry writes those requests and provides a priority. With respect to the Delton school, it has a utilization rate of only 69 per cent, with no health and safety concerns.

Member Irwin: Given that I hope that was a yes and that the minister will join us to hear the concerns of my constituents who've been left behind by this no-help budget and given that my constituents also feel ignored by this government when it comes to the discredited, the disgraced, the inappropriate, the racist curriculum, and if the minister is actually interested in what Albertans think, she'll go back to the drawing board and she'll consult with my constituents, Indigenous groups, francophone communities, and more, and she'll make a curriculum that we can be proud of, not one that she has to force onto teachers and students. Will the minister take this feedback from me, or does she think that she still knows better than the people I represent?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, every member of the government caucus, every cabinet minister, and certainly the Minister of Education is taking feedback on the curriculum. We're listening to the feedback of all Albertans, including education stakeholders, francophone groups, and Indigenous communities. We've given out a million dollars in grants to education and community partners so they can provide their detailed feedback. We are listening.

Member Irwin: Given that if the minister was actually interested in listening to the people of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, she would be investing in public education, not trying to undercut it as this budget does and given that she and others are using technicalities to deny my constituents, in the fastest growing school division, the school that they deserve, it's clear that the minister or all of the ministers have been spending too much time in their offices and not enough time with the people of our province. I've got some constituents who have some thoughts on how this minister and government are faring. I would love to set up a meeting with them. Will she attend, or is the only voice that she serves . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I outright reject the assertion that we, in fact, have cut Education. That is simply not the truth. We've maintained Education funding throughout the plan, this year increasing it by 1.7 per cent, at the same time bringing forward a more efficient formula that brings resources right into the classroom. We are delivering world-class education, with more bang for our buck, and, in fact, this year increased the budget by 1.7 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Highway 28 and 881 Capital Plan

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are concerned about the condition of roads that connect us to neighbouring communities and to the capital region. They rely on these roads on a daily basis to go to work, school, or even to access emergency services, not to mention the huge benefit to the economy this corridor provides. In 2018 the previous government recognized the need to assess these roads and conducted a highway corridor study from Edmonton to Cold Lake for highway 28. To the Minister of Transportation: what did this report indicate, and how are we acting on these results?

2:40

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, a safe and reliable highway network across the province is critically important to Alberta's economic recovery, which is why in Budget 2022 we are investing $7.29 billion over three years in Transportation's capital plan. The report the member is referencing recommended several improvements to the highway, including intersection upgrades, curve reconstruction, and passing lanes. Many of those factors are taken into consideration when assessing all Alberta roads.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Highway 28 is a core route in Alberta's northeast. It connects Edmonton, Gibbons, Smoky Lake, Bonnyville, and ends at Cold Lake. My constituents are constantly travelling on this highway. Some travel this road to Edmonton to deliver babies since we do not have that service available in our area. Highway 28 connecting Edmonton to Gibbons recently saw $43 million of upgrades, but the Smoky Lake to Cold Lake section has not seen upgrades in many years. To the Minister of Transportation: can you let us know what work is currently being done on highway 28 between Smoky Lake and Cold Lake?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, Alberta Transportation is currently monitoring and assessing traffic volumes and the condition of highway 28. My department will use the data collected to determine if any passing or climbing lanes need to be built. At the moment there are no projects planned for highway 28 in the department's three-year provincial construction plan; however, ongoing maintenance like pothole repair is taking place. In fact, we have an additional $30 million for highway maintenance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the minister. Given that the northern section of highway 881 is another extremely key route in the northeast and given that this highway is filled with potholes and frost heaves – and I thank the minister for coming for a ride with me when she came out to visit our area – and given that the Ministry of Transportation just released the 2022 capital construction program, which indicates major capital projects, and given that in this program the Minister of Transportation recognizes that 881 needs significant work to improve safety, to the Minister of Transportation: what is the future plan for 881?

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the member for that question. Mr. Speaker, the condition of all Alberta highways, including highway 881, is constantly monitored by maintenance contractors and department staff to ensure safety-related issues such as potholes and pavement repairs are addressed in a timely manner. Highway 881 is an important route for those Albertans who rely on it to get to work and to school, and many have told us that they want the road widened. Currently highway 881 is not in the department's three-year construction program, but the road will continue to receive ongoing maintenance, and we'll continue to have conversations.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period.

In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine.

School Construction Capital Plan and St. Albert

Ms Renaud: I value the importance of education. My constituents in the beautiful constituency of St. Albert value the importance of education. A strong education system that invests in students, in communities will yield untold returns for the future of this province. The fact is as simple as: one plus one equals two. Apparently, this is a fact the government just cannot seem to grasp as they failed to make the needed investments for the students of St. Albert.

St. Albert public needs the creation of a high school in St. Albert. St. Albert Catholic requested the modernization or replacement of Legal school and the replacement of l'école Father Jan, a K to 9 school. And which of these critically needed projects for St. Albert did this government deliver on? Not a single one. Just like Edmonton, Lethbridge, and more, my constituents were told that their education priorities are not this government's priorities. Disappointing but not surprising for a government that has never ever considered education a priority.

This Premier and Education minister, who cruelly fired tens of thousands of educational assistants in the first wave of the pandemic, hurting students with special needs; who underspent the Education budget rather than investing to make sure schools would remain safe and open; who, rather than listening to teachers, parents, students, and experts, is still driving a curriculum that will set our students backwards. This government, no friend of education, clearly has its own priorities, which include gambling a billion dollars on Donald Trump, a war room that has done nothing but embarrass Albertans, taking a billion dollars from Alberta families through bracket creep, and making life harder and more expensive for Albertans with disabilities. Albertans have had three long years to get a glimpse of the UCP priorities. They see precisely that this government is not focused on them, their children, or their communities. It's disgraceful. But, thankfully, Albertans will get to elect a government that actually shares their values; 2023 is coming. Change is coming.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Jason Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do rise to put a motion on the Order Paper in my name as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport an essential service and implement back-to-work legislation to prevent any disruption or CP work stoppage to ensure Canada's economy remains uninterrupted.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that at the appropriate time I intend to move the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge that (a) Statistics Canada announced yesterday that the national consumer price index for February 2022 had increased to 5.7 per cent, year over year, being the highest rate of inflation within the last three decades, due to current price pressures on consumer goods and services, and (b) the government's proposed Budget 2022-23 is based on an expectation that the consumer price index for 2022 will increase by only 3.2 per cent, a full percentage point below the Bank of Canada's latest monetary policy report issued in January of 2022.

Be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly call on the government to revise and amend its expectations in respect of the rate of inflation set out in its proposed Budget 2022-23.

Be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly call on the government to implement strategies within its jurisdiction to reverse anticipated inflationary price increases for goods and services.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Bill 6

Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 6, the Emblems of Alberta Amendment Act, 2022.

Ammolite is a beautiful gemstone as unique as Alberta is. The iridescent gemstone comes from ammonite, the fossilized shell of mollusks that lived in an inland sea that is now southern Alberta. Plains First Nations have collected ammonite shell for millennia and continue to do so today. Ammolite is also part of Alberta's economy, mined and used in jewellery for more than a century. Currently there is no official provincial gemstone. Bill 6 will designate ammolite as an official emblem alongside 11 others.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Bill 203

Technology Innovation and Alberta Venture Fund Act

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and request leave to introduce a bill, the Technology Innovation and Alberta Venture Fund Act.

This bill is an idea that comes from entrepreneurs and would help Alberta build a world-class innovation environment. Bill 203 would invite all Albertans to invest in Alberta's future and in companies in our own backyard. It would provide Albertans the opportunity to earn returns themselves and support economic growth, diversification, the creation of jobs, and the long-term economic well-being of the province.

History tells us that when Albertans are given the opportunity to bet on themselves, great things are possible; in fact, this venture fund is inspired by examples in Alberta's history that helped build our oil sands into the economic driver they are today. Based on Alberta's long history of entrepreneurship and innovation, I'm confident that Alberta can grow an environment for technology and AI that will attract and grow our innovative companies and make Alberta a leader in the new innovation and knowledge economy. I hope that all members of the House will support this major diversification effort and the growth of our technology and innovation across Alberta by supporting Bill 203.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: At the appropriate time the Opposition House Leader rose and moved a Standing Order 42.

Budget 2022 and Inflation

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've already read the motion, I will not reread it, but I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the urgency of this debate within the Assembly today. I am asking, pursuant to Standing Order 42, that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to debate this motion because of its urgent and pressing nature. It has been distributed to the members, and while Standing Order 42 requires no notice, my office did provide advance notice to the Speaker of my intention to introduce this motion under the appropriate standing orders. As well, we sent advance copies of the language of this motion to the Speaker, the government, and the independent members of this Assembly. As my colleagues have frequently pointed out, Standing Order 42 is an important opportunity for all members of this Assembly, specifically private members, to ensure that matters that are important to our constituents and of an urgent nature are debated in this House. I'll briefly outline this motion and its urgency today.

We have reached generational levels of inflation. Statistics Canada reported yesterday that inflation is running at 5.7 per cent, the highest in 30 years. This is deeply concerning for Albertans. Buying power is being eroded as we speak. Specifically, everything is getting more expensive, and that is what inflation is doing to Alberta families, families who are already struggling to make ends meet with soaring costs left, right, and centre. This becomes a matter of urgency because understanding and correctly forecasting inflation is an essential part of provincial budgeting. Expectations of inflation affect every program, every service, every benefit, every capital project, and every decision the government makes.

Today is meant to be the final day of the estimates process. What we've learned so far is that the government has deeply miscalculated. In January the Bank of Canada released its Monetary Policy Report indicating that inflation was expected to be 4.4 per cent for 2022. In late February the government tabled its budget and lowballed the expectations for inflation, putting them at only 3.2 per cent and coming in a full point below that bank. Yesterday with the release of Statistics Canada data we learned that the inflation is even worse than even the Bank of Canada projected, and we learned that the government was out by nearly a factor of two.

This motion, if adopted by the Assembly, would send a clear signal to the government that they need to adjust. They need to take inflation seriously, and I would call on the government to revise and amend its inflation expectations and budget and, accordingly, implement strategies to help deal with that lived reality. Without accurately projecting inflation, government fails to account for so many factors.

Now, to further speak to the urgency, Mr. Speaker, two quick scenarios or examples. First, based on Budget 2022 assumptions, a person living on AISH will lose over $1,000 of purchasing power this year because the government deindexed benefits from inflation. With inflation running much higher, AISH recipients, the most vulnerable in our society, will be pushed further into poverty. It's clear the government has not accounted for this because the inflation is so much higher than estimated in Budget 2022.

The second example, Mr. Speaker, is that Statistics Canada has told us that food costs increased by 7.4 per cent. Now, one may ask: how does that affect Budget 2022? Well, in the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General they have a budget specifically to feed prisoners. There are basic caloric and nutritional requirements the government must meet, so with rising food inflation, that is an unavoidable and rising cost for this ministry that hasn't been accounted for.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other examples. I only wanted to raise a few to speak to the urgency and why we believe this is worthy of debate in the Assembly right now. Certainly, there are a number of articles being written. Constituents are reaching out to me about this inflation increase, about the rising cost of food and services. Certainly, it is urgent in nature to those Albertans. I won't provide any further examples, but I will say that the budget is deeply miscalculated. The timing right now for us to adjust the budget is perfect, making this Standing Order 42 really urgent at this point. Albertans will pay the price if we do not course correct.

As we come to the close of estimates, it's clear, in our view, that generational levels of inflation have not been accounted for in the budget. That makes this an urgent and pressing concern that should be addressed. I hope all members of this Assembly will support this motion so that we can ensure to Albertans that all Members of this Legislative Assembly understand the impact inflation is having, how expensive things are getting, and that we are taking it seriously and debating that here in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 42 a member of Executive Council has up to five minutes to respond to the request for unanimous consent. I see the hon. Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to speak in opposition to this motion. I certainly acknowledge that we are in a time of inflation, as the member opposite rightly points out, but I do want to note that Budget 2022 does consider the specific cost pressures that we're going to be experiencing in the upcoming year. We do that within each ministry.

I do want to point out as well that while there is, no doubt, some uncertainty around where inflation will truly land, inflation rates in Alberta have been below the national average throughout this last year. Last year, in 2021, inflation came in at 3.2 per cent. That was back-loaded, Mr. Speaker, so inflation rates were higher in the latter months than in the former, and we're expecting at this point that inflation will be higher in the earlier months of 2022, declining into the later months.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to point out that we've identified and in fact have included in our appropriation bill contingencies of $750 million for Health to deal with any COVID pandemic pressures as well as $1 billion in disaster contingencies that can be used for unexpected eventualities, so we do have contingencies in this budget.

I do want to also point out that we inherited a government that spent $10 billion more than comparator provinces on a per capita basis. Mr. Speaker, that spend trajectory was going up 4 per cent per year. It was simply unsustainable. If left on that trajectory, we would simply be robbing future generations of their prosperity, and that is completely unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, over the last three years, beginning in Budget 2019, we have done the heavy lifting, Albertans have done the heavy lifting, to bring our spending back to sustainable levels. We simply have to remain fiscally disciplined. We have to continue to bring discipline to every spending decision. That will mean that ministries will have to continue to be innovative and creative when they experience cost pressures throughout the year that perhaps were unanticipated.

I do want to talk a little bit as well about the fiscal anchors that really informed our fiscal decisions over the course of the last three years. We identified the importance, in fact the anchor, of keeping our net debt to GDP below 30 per cent – very critical – to ensure that we would maintain a strong balance sheet relative to the size of our economy. Mr. Speaker, that's really a picture of our ability to service debt and ultimately recover fiscally after the pandemic. I believe the most important fiscal anchor that we identified was in fact to bring our spending to sustainable levels, to bring our spending in line with similar provinces, and I'm very pleased to again report today that in the upcoming budget year, in '22-23, we will have arrived. To continue on a sustainable trajectory, we will need to exercise fiscal discipline. That is a must for all members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, to that end, I encourage all members to vote against this motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42 is a request for unanimous consent to put aside the regular, ordinary business of the afternoon and proceed immediately to the motion as proposed by the Opposition House Leader.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I've received a message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2022, and recommends the same to the Assembly.

Hon. members, please be seated.

The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the 2021-22 supplementary supply estimates along with an update to the 2021-22 fiscal plan, as required by the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act.

Russia's war of aggression started the very day I tabled the 2022 budget. Alberta's government is contributing $11.4 million in support of Ukraine, $10.4 million of which will be supported by this bill. This is now captured in the supplementary estimates and the fiscal plan update that I'm tabling today. The documents I'm tabling today also show a spending increase under Alberta Energy to provide electricity rebates and offer real relief to Albertans struggling with high utility costs.

Mr. Speaker, in total the supplementary supply estimates will allow additional spending by five government departments as well as the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. When passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $1.2 billion in expense funding and $1 million in capital investment funding for the government. Of this funding, the two highest expenses are $726 million for health, primarily for the pandemic response, and $231 million in federal funding for the Canada community-building fund, which Municipal Affairs will redistribute to municipalities.

Thank you.

Government Motions

13. Mr. Toews moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2021-22 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 13 is a debatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(i). Are there any members wishing to speak? The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to debate Government Motion 13. This motion is asking us to expedite estimates on supplementary supply to committee. The Official Opposition would like to ensure that the estimates reflect the priorities of Albertans through this process, so we have asked the government to provide six hours of debate on these estimates, which we believe is more appropriate for the expenditure of such a substantial amount of public money. As the Minister of Finance has just outlined, it is $1.2 billion of expense funding as well as $1 million of capital funding going to five government departments as well as the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner.

We have seen, time and time again, government budgets that do not match Albertans' expectations. Albertans have asked the government to listen to them at this point, specifically around relief to make ends meet right now. This year particularly, while bills are unmanageable – in fact, we were just speaking in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, about the rising cost of inflation, rising costs of food, rising costs on all Alberta families. It is the Official Opposition's position that the Legislature deserves the time to scrutinize government spending to see if it reflects the priority of Albertans right now. There are a lot of actions that we believe the UCP could be taking in supplementary supply to help Albertans, but there's certainly a deficit of trust at this point, and that's where the Official Opposition believes more time is necessary.

Certainly, the Finance minister has referred to some of the supplementary estimates reflecting rising utility costs. It is the Official Opposition's strong position that immediate utility relief is necessary and has not been adequately included within this estimates process as well as considerations like capping auto insurance increases, reindexing AISH and seniors' benefits to reflect the current fiscal situation here in the province. We believe that the estimates should be evaluated against these priorities.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

As well, given the concern that we have with the amount of time that will be allocated for the debate of this, given that deficit of trust that I have referred to, I believe that it's prudent on behalf of all members of the Official Opposition that we will not be supporting rushing through inadequate measures with inadequate oversight. We would be happy to work with the government to get this work right and to continue to support Albertans. I appreciate the opportunity to enter into debate on Government Motion 13 at this time.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Are there any members wishing to join debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to ask the question. However, I will give the opportunity, should they so choose, to the hon. Minister of Finance on behalf of the Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Toews: Waived.

[Government Motion 13 carried]

14. Mr. Toews moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2021-22 supplementary supply estimates for three hours on Monday, March 21, 2022.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to – this is actually under, I believe, Standing Order 61(2). This is actually not debatable.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 1

Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act

The Acting Speaker: Are there any – I see the hon. Minister of Culture has risen.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and move third reading of Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act.

Over the past few years and through the COVID-19 pandemic we have seen Albertans step up by volunteering and giving back to their communities in so many ways. From grocery deliveries to those in isolation, virtual events to keep the loneliness at bay, and the dedication of front-line workers, countless everyday heroes have gone above and beyond to help out. I continue to be inspired by the community spirit and leadership that Albertans show every day.

On the occasion of Queen Elizabeth II's platinum jubilee we have the opportunity to celebrate her legacy and the efforts of Albertans across this province. Mr. Speaker, I am again asking all members of this House for their support of Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act. The platinum jubilee is a celebration of all the extraordinary progress we have experienced during the 70 years of Queen Elizabeth II's reign. From technological advancement to social development and cultural growth, Albertans have led the way into the future.

This legislation's greatest impact would be on the young leaders who are making a difference across Alberta. Increasing the monetary value of the Queen's jubilee awards and scholarships from $5,000 to $7,000 will help students who are demonstrating excellence in leadership, community spirit, and the arts pursue those opportunities. This legislation will also help recognize the efforts and achievements of Albertans more broadly through the brand new Queen's platinum jubilee medal, of which 7,000 will be minted and awarded.

In addition, the Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act will recognize the great public service of past, present, and future cabinet ministers. Allowing them to continue to use the honorific "The Honourable" is but a small gesture of recognition for the role they have played in shaping Alberta, no matter which party they have served under. It comes with no financial benefit or authority; it is simply an honour of recognition. However, it does align with the spirit of celebrating public service and community spirit in the recognition of the Queen's platinum jubilee. Her Majesty the Queen has served as an incredible example of steadfast leadership in the face of challenge and change for over 70 years.

If I might digress just a little bit, it's just like our province's namesake. The province is named after the ancestor of the Queen Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, who was, in fact, an artist, a professional sculptor. She made her own jewellery. She was not somebody who thought that she should be treated differently just because she was the daughter of a queen. In fact, her father made a point of training his children in farming and practical skills. Quite frankly, here in Alberta we often say: it doesn't matter where you come from or who your father is; it matters how hard you work. She had a reputation of being unconventional and determined, in many ways the perfect namesake for a province like Alberta.

Returning to Queen Elizabeth II, this legislation will acknowledge how she has inspired generations of Albertans to become leaders in their own right, just like our namesake and her aunt, while giving the many people who have helped shape this province the recognition that they deserve.

Thank you to all members of the Assembly for the debate on Bill 1 up to this point. I encourage all members once again to support this legislation so that we are able to fully recognize the incredible achievements and efforts of so many Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to join? I see the hon. member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for introducing this bill in third reading. This is my first opportunity and will be my last opportunity to speak to Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act. As I believe has been said by my colleagues in the House, we do support this bill. We understand that it establishes, of course, the Queen's platinum jubilee medal being awarded to 7,000 worthy Albertans as well as the establishment of a number of awards and scholarships: the Queen's platinum jubilee citizenship medallion; the Queen's platinum jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts, which I believe is a scholarship up to the amount of $7,000; as well as the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of the Queen's platinum jubilee.

In my time, Mr. Speaker, as an MLA I've had an opportunity in the past to meet with constituents who have received similar recognition through the Queen's jubilee awards, and it's been an honour to learn about the work that they have done and that they are being recognized for. I certainly welcome the opportunity to recognize the great Albertans in our communities who are doing this remarkable work and to recognize, of course, the Queen as well for her long service as the Queen for us. I do appreciate that, and I'm certain that members of this side of the House will be supporting this bill.

However, I do feel it's important for me to note that there is one provision of the bill that, you know, I'm a little bit troubled by – that this is identified in Bill 1 seems a little bit out of place with respect to the rest of the bill – and that is, of course, the granting of the honorary honorific to any present or past member of Executive Council. While that sounds, I guess, pretty generic, it really sounds like the government caucus is more interested in sort of pumping their own tires and giving themselves pats on the back, which is not really the mood of a lot of Albertans right now.

Certainly, when I look at Bill 1, we've had the first throne speech, last month, in a while from this government, and to see as their priority Bill 1, which usually is the bill that establishes what the government's top priority is for the months and session ahead – I'm quite shocked to see that this is the government's priority, granting themselves the honorary term to the members of their Executive Council for life, when that's certainly not what I'm hearing is the top priority from Albertans in my constituency but across the province. When they think of what their top priority is for this year coming ahead, right now it's really just making ends meet. It's really being able to afford the costs of their insurance and their property taxes and their rising utility costs and school fees and tuition and all the various things that have become more expensive for them.

Getting through the pandemic and getting on to the next stages of our growth certainly is – diversifying our economy is certainly the top priority for our government. It's about making sure that all Albertans are elevated and have an opportunity to succeed, not a race to the bottom but elevating all Albertans. That's certainly our caucus's position and priority for this year ahead.

Certainly, rebuilding our education system and the reputation that we had for so many years, that has been undermined by this government with respect to our public education system, and the curriculum that used to be world renowned and is now being shunned and is an embarrassment and unfortunately is going to be partially imposed on students come this fall: that's certainly a priority when I talk to the constituents in my riding. They're certainly concerned about the fact that they have no school space. South Edmonton is certainly an area of the city that has been growing exponentially for quite some time. We will be completely out of high school space in Edmonton public schools in 2027. That's five years from now. I have constituents who are concerned that they can't send their children to the high school across the street because they're going to a lottery because they're at capacity.

These are the concerns that I'm hearing from my constituents, and it's not reflected in Bill 1. I certainly don't hear my constituents saying: I really hope that the current members of this cabinet get to call themselves honorary for some time going forward, forever going forward. That's certainly not something that anybody has raised to me as their top priority. I certainly think it's coming at an interesting time, considering that there are a number of members of the current cabinet who are having their qualifications and their expertise and their temperament questioned, certainly their judgment. Certainly, the minister of labour has recently been found to have attempted to interfere in the administration of justice, and now we know that this government's priority is to make sure that that minister gets to be called honorary from this time going forward. I think that's at odds with what most Albertans believe in terms of what honorary means, and it's an interesting timing on this government's part.

I certainly do support the idea of recognizing the Queen's platinum jubilee with these medals – I certainly take no issue with that – but certainly the timing and the priorities of this government seem to be grossly at odds with the priorities and concerns of Albertans at this time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to join debate on this? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has risen.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise today in support of Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Platinum Jubilee Recognition Act. You know, some of us in this room probably are old enough to remember singing God Save the Queen in our schools, and I'm so glad to see that practice and that habit back here in the Chamber, because it does remind us of the honour and the service that the Queen has given to us as our monarch.

The Queen's reign has been truly historic. She is the first British monarch and, I suspect, one of the first in history to celebrate 70 years on the throne. For many Albertans, she is the only monarch we have known – in fact, I would say for most in this room – in our adult lives most certainly, and during her reign she's been a constant in service, grace, decorum, and humility in an ever-changing world.

In her 70 years on the throne she has seen wars, recessions, and pandemics while also celebrating personal joy and suffering personal loss. Commercial television was first broadcast in the U.K., humans landed on the moon, the Berlin Wall came down, the computer was invented, the European Union was created and, in some cases, pulled apart, and social media, which has changed the world for anyone in the public eye, has certainly emerged during this latter part of her reign as well. She has reigned through 13 Canadian Prime Ministers and has visited our great province five times, and I remember many of them myself as both a child and as an adult.

On her 21st birthday she addressed the Commonwealth and dedicated her life, whether it be long or short, to the service of others. Ever since she has been steadfast in keeping her promise, a promise valued by Canada as a constitutional monarchy and the entire Commonwealth in an ever-changing and evolving world. Her Majesty is a patron of more than 600 charities and organizations world-wide – thirty-six of these are in Canada – and we see that service also in her offspring. On top of this, the Queen continues to champion public and voluntary service with grace and global leadership in the farthest reaches and most rural and remote regions of the planet.

In 2002 the government of Alberta passed the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act, recognizing the 50th anniversary of Her Majesty's accession to the throne. We mark the occasion by designating special awards and scholarships that honour Alberta youth who demonstrate excellence in citizenship through leadership, community service, and volunteerism and who demonstrate outstanding ability in the visual and performing arts.

That act, back in the 50th jubilee, established three awards and scholarships: the Queen's jubilee citizenship medal, which was rebranded as an award in 2021; the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee; and the Queen's golden jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts. Currently the government provides $50,000 – fifty years – through this program, which consists of eight citizenship awards and two scholarships valued at $5,000 each.

Mr. Speaker, under the proposed legislation the government will increase the amount and provide $70,000 through this program for eight citizenship awards and two scholarships valued at $7,000 each, with their longevity now also being reflected in addressing the associated inflation that keeps these financial awards both meaningful in their impact and in supporting the awardees' academic pursuits. What better way for Alberta to celebrate her remarkable 70-year reign than to honour this historic milestone by recognizing Albertans who have helped change their province for the better through volunteerism, public service, and community leadership.

This is what Bill 1 achieves, Mr. Speaker. Bill 1 will establish the Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee awards and scholarships, which will recognize young Albertans who are leaders in their communities and in the arts. The Queen's platinum jubilee citizenship awards and scholarships would include a medallion and $7,000 in appreciation of their contributions, an increase of $2,000 from the jubilee awards. It is expected that 10 Albertans would receive these awards or scholarships each year, for a total of $70,000, in recognition of 70 remarkable years of Queen Elizabeth's reign.

Bill 1 will also create a one-time Queen's platinum jubilee medal, which will recognize 7,000 worthy and dedicated Albertans who have given back to our province throughout 2022. The recipients of these awards and scholarships are everyday Albertans, hard-working individuals who go above and beyond to make our province a better place through their service.

Mr. Speaker, all of us in this House have heard many good-news stories of young people in our ridings who have worked hard to make our communities a better place. These young people exemplify the spirit of Her Majesty, and these scholarships and awards will reward their initiatives and will help these young individuals achieve their goals and inspire them on to bigger and better things and inspire those around them.

For these reasons, I will be voting in favour of Bill 1 in honour of the Queen's platinum jubilee and to recognize and reward hard-working Albertans who go above and beyond each and every day. Mr. Speaker, I would further encourage all members of this House to do the same in recognition of a most incredible reign and longevity, and as the song and Albertans' wishes go, long live our noble Queen.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members looking to join in? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has risen.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak in support of Bill 1. Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II is the Commonwealth's longest serving monarch, and as Albertans and Canadians so many of us have a strong respect for the Crown. I'd like to just take a few minutes and thank the member opposite for what he recognized during the Queen's reign, the changes that we've seen over the 70 years since she ascended the throne.

I'm very pleased to say that I have really enjoyed the current series out there called The Crown, where it articles and describes much of the Queen's life and what she's had to bear over these 70 years. I think it speaks very directly to the character, the role, the responsibility, and the weight put on her shoulders as a young woman of only 25, when she received that responsibility after the passing of her father. I think it is amazing to me that around the world she is as dearly loved today, after 70 years, as she was when she first ascended the throne.

Her Majesty's platinum jubilee is a perfect opportunity to recognize Albertans who contribute so much to their communities as they emulate the service that she has done for so much of the globe. I think it's only fitting that we recognize those accomplishments. The Queen's platinum jubilee citizenship medallion creates a great opportunity for recognizing outstanding community service. I can think of several people in my constituency of Lethbridge-East who would be great candidates for this prestigious honour. Mr. Speaker, I feel confident when I say that all my colleagues in this Chamber, regardless of what side of the floor we are on, can think of deserving individuals who are pillars in our various communities.

Something that excites me is that a student who receives the Queen's platinum jubilee citizenship medallion would be awarded $7,000. I think that this money would go a long way in allowing them to continue their education, and I appreciate how the opportunity for this type of recognition would encourage students to get more involved in their communities. Leaders are not born. They are made through their experiences and their selfless contribution to their communities. I, for one, think it is great to offer this kind of opportunity to recognize those that go above and beyond to make their communities better, to reward those that seek to serve their community and to give them the benefit of their efforts to further those, and to set them above others as an example to many others for the work that they could do and achieve as they give back.

Mr. Speaker, I also support the creation of the Queen's platinum jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts. The recipients would also be awarded $7,000. This government has shown its support for the arts. Through this legislation we are training the next generation of great artists right here in Alberta. I also strongly believe that this will encourage more young Albertans to get involved in the blossoming visual and performing arts industry throughout our province.

Under this act the Premier's citizenship award will be granted each year to one high school student. Mr. Speaker, I know I sound like a broken record, but like the other points I've made before, this will continue to encourage more students to get involved in their communities. Our communities are as strong as the people who live in them, and this will inspire the leaders of tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that these awards are in recognition of Her Majesty's platinum jubilee. In her 20s, following the tragic passing of King George VI, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth rose to the challenge, that would be difficult at any age, let alone the tender age of 25. Seventy years later here we are recognizing the longest serving monarch in the Commonwealth. I feel it is very appropriate to tie youth accomplishments to Her Majesty's platinum jubilee.

The Queen has also taught us that when it comes to public service, age is only a number. Her Majesty will turn 96 in a little over a month and continues her service to the Commonwealth with an infinite amount of wisdom and grace. She continues to live a life of service each and every one in this Chamber can look up to. Given the age that we live in now of social media and other scrutinies of those who are in positions of influence and authority, especially the Royal Family, to have looked over those 70 years and hardly a speck or a blemish on her character or her record is uncommon, and I think it should be highly regarded and seriously respected by everyone in this Chamber and in every Chamber across our fine country.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, my message of support for Bill 1 is that it recognizes the importance of selfless service to one's community. From when the Queen ascended the throne all the way to today, I think we can all agree that the world has changed significantly. Again I thank the member opposite for his comments earlier noting many of those changes. She has met every challenge with civility and with humility, and we can all admire and call her our Queen. I also believe that the link between the recognition of the platinum jubilee and the recognizing of the service and community achievements of Albertans is a great way to recognize this momentous occasion. I encourage all of my colleagues to support Bill 1. May God save the Queen.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Next I see the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand and speak in support of Bill 1. All of us have been inspired to be better by unselfish, good men and women. With growing challenges, we all benefit from seeing good examples. All of us need that. This bill recognizes those who have rendered great service: outstanding young men and young women, our sons and our daughters, and other Albertans who have made significant contributions to society. I support that.

When I think about the spirit of this bill, I reflect upon a scripture that I was taught as a young person. It says, "The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." Now, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that not everyone in this Chamber and this Legislature is a person of faith, but I hope that we can all appreciate the principle that this scripture expresses much better than I can. All of us are better as we seek to remember that principle, that the value of a person or their contribution is not a function of their position or title; it is a function of their heart and their conduct. Often politics or the world does look on the outward appearance, but the Lord's way is different. A person's conduct in public and in private is a manifestation of their heart.

3:30

Mr. Speaker, think for a moment about your own life. Who is it that has made the most significant contribution to you? Where did it start? Your mother was first. The vast majority of mothers will never be recognized with a Queen's platinum medal, but they do not care. They serve out of love. When I think of significant contributions to society, I think of mothers, many of them, including and often especially single mothers, who are also heroes. While I appreciate those men and women who receive the Queen's platinum jubilee medal, I wish to close with a short statement honouring mothers for their significant contribution to society, that the Lord both sees and honours.

Mr. Speaker, families are a fundamental unit of society, and it is our mothers who are on the front line for families, unselfishly loving and serving their spouses and their children, that hold families and communities together. Too often mothers love and serve their children alone, without fathers. What makes a hero? Does one's position or job confer hero status? No. In a final analysis, it is less important what a person's work is and more important how a person does their work. Mothers are not paid for their work, often receiving little or no formal recognition for it, but mothers serve for a higher and better purpose. The motivating force of a mother's work is love. What is more noble, more heroic than the selfless love a devoted mother has for her child? Some women are not mothers. Nevertheless, many of these women demonstrate innate strengths and gifts as they unselfishly serve and love others and our communities.

Mr. Speaker, I began with a scripture, and I will end with one.

And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury: For all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

The unselfish sacrifice of our mothers humbles me. We love our mothers, and we revere them. Without mothers there is no society. I want to thank all Albertans who make great contributions to our society, including our mothers. Thank you for your unselfish, significant contributions.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to join debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to offer the Minister of Culture the opportunity to close debate on behalf of the Premier.

Mr. Orr: I will take that – thank you, Mr. Speaker – briefly. I'd just like to, in final conclusion here, point out what is the priority of this bill and why this bill expresses the priority of our government. It's so that we will recognize the great work of the Queen and the Commonwealth heritage that we share with 160-some nations around the world. It's so that we will be positive and move forward in a celebration of who we are and what we have become and what we can be. It's so that we will celebrate all good work and inspire the next generation to a life of the same thing. It's so that we will be proud Albertans not ashamed of good service.

I ask everyone in this House to join this government and start a tidal wave of goodwill so that we shall be united, free, and strong to carry us through the next 70 years. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Williams moved, seconded by Ms Lovely, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LL.D, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 10: Mr. Rutherford]

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has risen.

Mr. Feehan: It threw me, too.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to have this opportunity to speak to the recently presented Speech from the Throne. The last few years have been particularly stressful for many Albertans, and many of us will be living with the consequences for years into the future. Alberta has experienced some of the worst unemployment levels in the country, and significant numbers among us who have maintained their jobs have experienced disruption in their employment and career paths. Students have lost the experience of gathering to learn with the support of peers and the personal touch of face-to-face instruction. Families have missed important milestones such as celebrating a birth or mourning the death of a loved one. Thousands of surgeries have been delayed, resulting in extended suffering, and the sense of general dis-ease weighs heavy on us all.

Yet Albertans have demonstrated qualities of strength and compassion. The vast majority of us have participated in a great social demonstration of our commitment to each other. We have, most of us, taken to wearing masks, washing our hands, standing at a social distance, and taking a vaccine to keep ourselves and our neighbours safe from a devastating pandemic. No one welcomes the intrusion in our lives, but we reach for a greater good. We understand that citizenship is like adulthood. You don't get to do everything you want to do. You don't get to have your way and ignore the needs of others. You cannot twist the expectations placed on you as unreasonable just because it gives you difficult feelings. The world has invited from us the best that we can offer, and it calls upon governments to lead us with a vision of how we as a community can survive that which has been thrust upon us with thoughtfulness, proficiency, and empathy. Unfortunately, we have not had a government that was willing or capable of rising to the challenge.

Right from the beginning this UCP government has acted last and acted least to protect the citizens of this province. When calls were put out to protect the children in our schools, this government did nothing. Worse than nothing; they fired thousands of teachers' aides in an effort to profit off the pandemic and to this day have failed to ensure appropriate protections such as air filtration systems in the schools. Rather than work closely with teachers to build a wall of security around our school-aged children, they continued a legacy of vilifying the very public servants who are most knowledgeable and most engaged in providing our children the tools for a successful life. This government attacked teachers through their pensions, through their professional association, and through the media.

Indeed, the government has been employing countless strategies to undermine the very nature of public education, shifting dollars from the public system to private schools, introducing a destructive, politicized curriculum that has been rejected by over 95 per cent of the school boards, and reducing the rate of school construction by 75 per cent from the pace of the last government. To this day we see a stressed and demoralized school system beleaguered by an ideological and uninformed government.

What we have seen in the education system has been repeated and magnified in the health system. At a time when we have been most dependent on the highly skilled and hard-working medical experts and staff of our universal health care system to keep us safe from a virus that has killed over 4,000 Albertans and has left thousands more with lifelong health complications, we see this government repeatedly attack the very people we should be honouring as heroes in this time of need. Just as with education, this government has pursued an agenda of undermining our public system at exactly the time we need it most. This government fought the wages of nurses and had to be forced to arbitration to recognize their worth. This government single-handedly cancelled the contract with doctors and has led an abusive public campaign against them, which has led to hundreds of doctors making plans to leave the province. This government has begun the slow process of shifting medical care away from our public institutions to the beginning of an American-style, pay-as-you-go medical model that will leave thousands of Albertans subject to a less accessible and less resourced secondary health system.

At the same time as this government has undermined our schools and our health care, so too have they undermined our postsecondary institutions with deep cuts, politically motivated attacks on university independence, and the reckless disregard for the role of our advanced education system as a driver of our future, both socially and economically. Under this government we have lost hundreds of the best researchers and instructors, who were devoted to enhance the knowledge we need to create a better world. With tuition increases up to 100 per cent and significant increases in class sizes, Alberta students face a reality of paying more and receiving less.

It is clear that what this government is doing is undermining the very structures of our society that have over the last 100 years raised millions of Canadians out of daily misery to one of the best places in the world to live, but not only are they destroying the legacy of our past; they are limiting our future. At a time when we should be reading the trends and setting ourselves to be in the right place at the right time in industry and civil society, this government is doing all it can to resist the global movement toward a cleaner environment, a compassionate economic system, and a society built on fairness and opportunity for all.

From their first bill the UCP have sought to slow down investment in clean energy and have been determined to remove incentives for diversification, which was motivating record-setting growth. In failing to legislatively protect our eastern slopes, they have failed to protect the headwaters of the rivers from which we drink. In the tech industry this government killed the very programs, such as the digital tax credit and the investor tax credit, that would have enabled our province to get in front of the most significant economic driver of the future.

At the same time, the UCP have been making life hard for everyday Albertans, who saw their insurance rates double and triple when the cap on insurance was removed. Tuition rates and school fees rise with the UCP's systematic defunding, and the cost of enjoying our parks and natural areas increase. When the UCP killed the cap on electricity prices, many people suddenly found themselves in significant debt that could take years to repay. At the same time, the government has deindexed personal income tax, resulting in a billion dollars of increased taxes on Albertans, and people depending on AISH have been pushed farther into poverty. In many areas of the province citizens will also see dramatic increases in property taxes because of downloading fees and reducing grants from the provincial government.

Life under this Conservative government is harder, more expensive, and less hopeful. Albertans simply cannot trust this government to keep their best interests at heart. Time and time again we have seen the polls that reveal a deep dissatisfaction with the action of the UCP. While record profits are flowing to major international corporations, everyday people are falling behind. Windfall profits are accumulating in the hands of the few while most of us have had little progress in our personal wages and wealth over many years.

We do not and cannot trust this government. They continually seek to destroy the public good that we and our ancestors have created because of a right-wing ideological model that has repeatedly been shown to fail the average citizen. Under this government we live precarious economic lives in a culture of disrespect and disregard for the lives of the majority of us and our children. I look forward to a day when we have a new government in place that will prioritize people over elitist wealth accumulation, a government that ensures our health system and our education system are focused on the goals of enhancing the well-being of all citizens, a government led by a leader who is passionate, thoughtful, dedicated, and empathetic, a government led by Rachel Notley.

Speaker's Ruling

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I will ask you to withdraw and apologize for the use of a proper name.

Mr. Feehan: I withdraw.

The Acting Speaker: I do consider the matter to be closed.

Debate Continued

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to join? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I have quite a bit I'd like to say today, so I'll just let my colleagues know in advance that I will not be taking interventions so that I have the opportunity to see my thoughts through.

You know, a Speech from the Throne is a grand narrative, a story that a government gets to tell about its vision for the province. Indeed, it reveals much about how a particular government sees the province and its people. A Speech from the Throne delivered towards the end of a government's mandate in particular is often used to present how a government views how things have gone and the decisions they've made, and we certainly see both here. In this speech we see the UCP government acknowledging these significant challenges that our province has faced but also working very hard, I think, to avoid any discussion of the quality of their response to those challenges and to claim that those challenges are largely behind us. I'm not sure that a majority of Albertans would agree.

You know, the speech begins. They talk about our lives having been disrupted in ways large and small, how the people of the province have risen to the challenge time and again, proving what it means to be Alberta strong, and talk about how, as restrictions ease, there are signs of economic renewal and hope for a sense of the beginning of an Alberta spring, and talk about how Albertans deserve a province that's just as resilient as they are.

The speech pivots then to the most significant challenge of the last few years, the COVID-19 pandemic and its impacts on our health care system. It talks about how during that pandemic our health care system was under great stress and speaks of our brilliant front-line health care workers, who've gone above and beyond the call of duty over the past two years, and how we owe them a debt of gratitude. Now, certainly, I agree, Mr. Speaker, that our front-line health care workers deserve our thanks. They've shown incredible commitment and sacrifice. They went above and beyond. They risked their own health and lives. They sacrificed time with their families.

But let's not forget that so much of what they endured, so much extra strain, stress, chaos, anxiety, was a result of this UCP government, that repeatedly chose to push those workers to their limits and beyond for the sake of ideology and politics. Let's not forget the multiple UCP MLAs who called to end all public health measures even as the third wave was rising in our province, a wave that cost hundreds of Albertans their lives. Let's not forget that that was followed by this Premier's best summer ever, an attempt to end even the most basic measures – testing, tracing, and isolation – even as the fourth wave was beginning to rise, or that as it did, this government went radio silent, politically paralyzed, and refused to act as they fought amongst themselves behind closed doors.

In the words of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, they "clearly had 30 days notice that a crisis was looming . . . [and] nothing was done while we lacked any leadership at the helm." He warned that it would cost lives and said that he was gutted by the lack of responsiveness to unequivocal advocacy and clear warning signals, advocacy and warning signals that came from the same health care workers this government purports to thank, who they ignored and who were then left to deal with the resulting crisis: hospitals and ICUs that were overwhelmed; over 20,000 surgeries cancelled; over a thousand lives lost.

Let's not forget that going into that fourth wave, they demanded a wage rollback for nurses, about 5 per cent, and only backed down in the face of public outrage. But somehow they failed to learn their lesson as now, as the fifth wave fades, the UCP is trying to push for rollbacks as high as 11 per cent from other health care workers.

The speech goes on to talk about how despite having one of the best funded health care systems in the world, COVID revealed shortcomings that must be addressed. They talk about building greater capacity while getting more value for our immense health care spending. Mr. Speaker, if Albertans got anywhere near the value from the work of this government as they had from those public health care workers in our public health care system, we'd be in a much better place. But as I've just abundantly made clear, our health care didn't fail Albertans; this government did. Albertans have good reason to question whether a government who has so badly abused our health care system can be trusted to improve it, let alone repair the incredible damage they've done to it.

Now, as the speech noted, Albertans are incredibly resilient, and certainly no one has demonstrated that as vividly as our front-line health care workers. But, Mr. Speaker, they are tired and exhausted after repeated waves where this government pushed them to their limits by acting last, acting least, and putting politics ahead of public health. Sadly, the message this government chooses to send as they race to attempt to put that abominable record behind them is one of disrespect for the value of the work these Albertans do, by calling for many of them to take such a significant wage rollback even as these health care workers don't get to go back to normal or celebrate better days because they're left to deal with the fallout of the pandemic, a massive wave of deferred care, the new chronic illness of long COVID, a significant backlog of surgeries, all of which have been made worse by this government's decisions.

While we do see that this government is using the good fortune that they've stumbled into in resource revenues to make some investments in health care capacity, it's mainly focused on areas like orthopaedic surgery, EMS, and ICU capacity, that have rightfully, in many cases, been areas of very public criticism and indeed are worthy of investment. But we see next to no additional investment in crucial areas of support like acute care or family physicians, this despite the fact that many hospitals continue to face serious pressure. Talking to doctors at the Royal Alexandra hospital about how acute care has been at 130 per cent capacity for the past week, or the fact that tens if not hundreds of thousands of Albertans have no family doctor, Albertans have good reason to question whether this UCP government is using the damage they've caused as grounds to accelerate their drive to force more private profit into our public health care system.

Ultimately, this Speech from the Throne seems to have a clear intent to declare its view of what it means to be Albertan. They talk about end-of-life decisions, and they talk about how patients must know that there are life-affirming options to physician-assisted suicide and talk about investments being made in palliative care. You know, Mr. Speaker, it is disappointing to hear this government, particularly one that so frequently claims to be an ardent supporter of personal choice, to use condescending, moralistic language like this. I've had a number of Albertans who've heard it write to me to express the same. Medical assistance in dying is no less life-affirming a choice than any other. Many have chosen to affirm the worth and value of their life by choosing to end it on their own terms, with dignity and with their loved ones by their side.

I support and I applaud investment in palliative care, and I manage to do so without denigrating anyone else's choice. But I would note that when this government first launched its war on Alberta doctors, in 2020, I heard from a number of physicians who provide palliative care, largely in rural areas, about how the changes this government intended to force through would have hurt their ability to do so. Indeed, this use of language by the government flies in the face of its own statement in the speech that "Alberta is a pluralistic society, united in its diversity." But I do believe that is largely the case. There's work to do.

But on that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak to some of the speech's commitments regarding the statement "All Albertans deserve to live free of fear and prejudice" and acknowledging that too often we see people from minority communities targeted by acts of hatred. Now, I certainly welcome any support for groups that are facing acts of hatred. I recognize that there is much more work for us to do, and improving security for buildings is a valuable but single step.

This speech declares a renewed commitment to tell Alberta's story to the world, highlighting the many reasons why there is simply no better place on Earth to pursue a dream, raise a family, build a life. It contends that this is a space for big dreams where opportunities are limitless and everyone's full potential can be achieved. Well, Mr. Speaker, we need to take every step that we can to ensure that's true for every Albertan, and that means we need to address the inequities we know exist and that have been acknowledged by members on both sides of this House.

There are many opportunities to take additional substantive action to support Albertans from racialized communities and address both the roots and the impacts of racism in all its forms, whether it's that which flows from overt and intentional words and actions of individuals or that which is baked into policies and processes in our systems and institutions. Now, many of those steps are laid out in the recommendations from the Anti-Racism Advisory Council, which remain available on all of the government ministers' desks, and it's my hope that we will eventually see some action. Indeed, it's those recommendations that inform my own private member's bill, the antiracism act, that I'm looking forward to introducing next week.

The speech goes on to say that this government intends to embark on a renewed effort to tell Alberta's story to the world, highlighting the many reasons why there is simply no better place on Earth to pursue a dream, raise a family, and build a life. But, Mr. Speaker, there are so many Albertans whose stories this government continues and chooses to ignore, like those struggling to get by as so many essential costs rise with inflation. Here in my constituency I continue to hear from seniors, folks who depend on social supports like AISH and income supports about the challenges they face with the rising costs of food, utilities, other essentials while this government refuses to reindex those supports to the cost of living, leaving those Albertans, many already living in poverty, with as much as $1,000 less buying power every year. Those struggling with substance use and those who love them, the communities around them as members of this government continue to use toxic rhetoric about harm reduction supports that help those struggling stay alive until they're ready and able to seek help even as this government undermines supports that were already in place.

But nowhere is this government's ideological drive to impose their vision of what it means to be Albertan clearer than in their highly ideological curriculum, that a vast majority of Albertans have clearly stated does not include or represent them or what they want to see for their children. First Nations and Métis groups, francophones, members of Black communities and LGBTQ2S communities, and many others have made it clear this curriculum does not tell their stories or represent them as Albertans.

But much as with the majority of Albertans who oppose this government's plans and efforts to allow coal mining in the eastern slopes or impose an Alberta provincial police force or continue considering forcing them out of the CPP into an Alberta pension plan, their voices are simply ignored and, in fact, not only ignored but openly mocked and attacked, even by the Premier himself on the floor of the Legislature, on social media, by other ministers of government, by UCP MLAs, and endlessly by staff in the Premier's office and employed by the government caucus. Indeed, I don't think our province has ever seen a government that has gone so far out of its way to attack, demean, and insult Albertans that they were elected to represent or being so aggressive at attempting to impose its will, to demoralize its critics, or intimidate them into silence. This from a Premier who repeatedly claimed as recently as in estimates yesterday that he wants to improve the decorum and the quality of debate in our province.

Well, Mr. Speaker, despite all this, I do see some hope for our province, for the many, many Albertans who do not feel represented or heard by this government, and it flows from the quote that's provided at the end of the Speech from the Throne, where it says, "Winston Churchill once said, 'Never, never, never, never – in nothing, great or small, large or petty – never give in.'" Now, that's only a partial quote. The full quote was, in fact:

Never give in. Never give in. Never, never, never, never – in nothing, great or small, large or petty – never give in, except to convictions of honour and good sense. Never yield to force.

Never yield to the apparently overwhelming might of the enemy.

Now, to be clear, while I absolutely believe that in so many areas of policy this government is not acting in the best interests of Albertans, I don't view them as an enemy of myself or the people of Alberta. I certainly don't encourage anyone else to do so either, but the essence of that quote rings true. I truly believe the majority of Albertans are people of honourable conviction and good sense and that that is what lies behind their frustrations with and opposition to so many of the policies, decisions, and behaviours of this government, and to them I echo the heart of Churchill's words. Never yield to the political forces brought to bear to make you feel small and unheard, to feel your voice doesn't matter, to feel that you are alone. Never yield to the feeling of hopelessness they try to make you feel, that there's no hope for change or for a government that truly represents your values and your voice.

To every one of those Albertans, Mr. Speaker, I say: you deserve better, much better, and you can have it despite what this government and some of its supporters may want you to believe. We're here to help you fight for it. We're here to bring that back in 2023.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 21, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our Queen and to her government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Brooklyn Elhard. I invite you to join in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this afternoon we have our very first in-person, post-COVID School at the Legislature group joining us. They are from the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford, Rideau Park elementary school. Also joining us in the gallery today are two guests of the hon. Member for Highwood, Pat and Kim McCarthy. Would you all please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore is first.

Walmart Fulfillment Centre in Rocky View County

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta, thank you so much for your resilience and optimism. Today Walmart Canada announced a new 430,000 square-foot fulfillment centre in beautiful Rocky View county. This landmark $120 million project will create hundreds of goods, construction, and engineering jobs through the course of the building phase and will support 325 full-time positions once it opens. This modern facility is capable of shipping up to 20 million items to Canadians every single year and will be powered by cutting-edge logistics and robotics technology, diversification at its finest.

This is good news for Alberta workers and Alberta producers. Walmart produces more than $1.3 billion worth of products from suppliers based in western Canada every year, including approximately $200 million worth of products from 47 Alberta-based suppliers. Walmart is also growing its focus on local goods, as they should. In 2021 Walmart added more than 100 new Canadian suppliers, including a 9 per cent increase in Alberta-based suppliers. This will get more Alberta-made products into the homes of Albertans and Canadians in the years to come, and that's great news for everyone.

In their announcement this morning, I was so proud to hear Walmart cite the competitive advantages of doing business in Alberta. This landmark investment follows similar major investments from companies like Amazon, HBO, Dow Chemical, Air Products, and Northern Petrochemical. With our budget balanced and the lowest taxes in Canada, Albertans are our advantage and our most beautiful resource, and investors are taking notice. We should feel so optimistic. Thanks to you, our province continues to be a top destination for private-sector investment. Alberta is the heartbeat of diversification, and Walmart's investment and others show that our province now wears many hats and will continue to compete in the economies of the future.

Thank you so much to all Albertans. Happy International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, and happy Nowruz. Thank you to all Albertans. Our best days are ahead.

Racism and Hate Crime Prevention

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, today marks the 55th anniversary of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This day was proclaimed in 1966, following the Sharpeville massacre, where peaceful protesters protesting against racist laws in apartheid South Africa were fired upon, leaving hundreds killed and injured. Every year on this tragic anniversary we must commit ourselves to taking action to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination in our society.

Tragically, we have seen growing instances of hate crimes here in Alberta: racist language being thrown at racialized Albertans, people being assaulted in the streets in broad daylight, religious communities being threatened. In a racist society it is not enough to be nonracist; we must be antiracist. In order to ensure that we fulfill our mission to eliminate racial discrimination, we need proactive action, not words.

My colleagues and I have heard loudly and clearly the concerns of racialized Albertans, who are worried that this critical priority is being missed by this government. Even though the throne speech acknowledged this increased trend of hate crimes in Alberta, the budget fails to invest in tackling the cause of racism. Our caucus is hard at work proposing policies and actually consulting with the communities to hear what they are feeling and what they need. I'm proud that our caucus will table important legislation later this week that will take real action to combat racism. We will still have a long way to go to ensure that we live in a province and a country that is totally free from all forms of racism, discrimination, and intolerance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Country Music Alberta Awards

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just this very weekend I was invited to the 11th annual Country Music Alberta awards to support some of the incredible musical talent we have from Lesser Slave Lake. It was wonderful to see so many folks living their passion and expressing it through music gather to recognize the distinction of their peers across Alberta. The show was amazing, with musicians performing multiple genres of country and even yodelling. Musical romantics certainly would have found their niche last night with the performance of the song Looking For A Lockdown With You.

I would like to congratulate Berlyn Broadhead. She is a young woman from Slave Lake that has had a passion for singing since she was nine years old. She was nominated for the youth horizon award and the fans' choice award at the 11th annual Country Music Alberta awards and is a fantastic and refined vocalist. I hope that she keeps up the awesome work. I wish her well and good luck in her bright future ahead.

I would also like to congratulate Mat Cardinal from Wabasca. He has an amazing voice and is the lead singer for the band The Prairie States, who ended up winning the group of the year and also album of the year. Without a doubt, despite being a sparsely populated constituency, Lesser Slave Lake packs a big punch in the Alberta musical scene. I'm truly honoured to represent such a strong constituency, that loves to support local talent with amazing turnouts at every local event.

The Alberta Country Music awards continues to support Alberta and its musicians. I would like to encourage all of my colleagues here and also all fellow Albertans to get a membership to support such a great organization. Then, hopefully, next year I can give them a warning that all of my rowdy friends are coming over tonight.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Utility Costs

Member Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is working around the clock to convince Albertans that they are taking action on the cost-of-living crisis facing them, but Albertans see this government's words and claims for exactly what they are: empty, hollow, and meaningless. I along with my colleagues have been hearing the concerns of those who are finding life unaffordable for weeks and months: Calgarians who are now forced to choose between groceries and turning the lights on, between medical treatments and keeping the heat on; small businesses who, after two years of the pandemic, are finding that these bills are driving them further into debt and forcing them to lay off employees.

This government's solution to these skyrocketing bills? A fake natural gas rebate – it won't even come into effect till next fall and comes in at a level that means that most Albertans won't qualify – and a $50 cheque to off-set electricity bills in the hundreds of dollars. This isn't support; it's an insult to those who are struggling to feed their families and pay their bills, and that's it.

Alberta's NDP has been raising these concerns with the government, only to be dismissed at every turn. Instead, Alberta's out-of-touch Premier is touring this province bragging about the historic support to Albertan families. The Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity proudly boasted to this House that their plan to deal with the huge increase in utilities was to do nothing. My constituents, my fellow Calgarians need real support and a government that understands their needs.

That's why I was proud to join our leader and my Calgary colleagues on Friday to commit that we will put money back into the pockets of Albertans. An NDP government would undo the UCP's billion-dollar tax grab, and we would ensure that critical programs like AISH and seniors' benefits keep pace with inflation. Mr. Speaker, it's simple. This side of the House doesn't look at the rising cost of living as an opportunity to take more from Albertans; we see it as an opportunity to help. Friends, colleagues, and fellow Albertans, help is on the way. A government in waiting is on this side. We're going to be here for you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Alberta Voters and Government Policies

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Who's the boss? Some political leaders think that they're the boss. Many think that the Prime Minister or the Premiers are the boss. Some leaders and Premiers in the past were convinced of that. The last PC Premier – may he rest in peace – and his party thought he was the boss. In May 2015 we found out that that was not the case. In May 2015 the NDP leader and her party thought she was the boss. In April 2019 we again found out otherwise.

So who really is the boss here in Alberta? Mr. Speaker, it's Alberta voters. The voters were angry at the PCs in 2015, and, believe me, I heard it loud and clear at the doors. On May 5 their voices were heard. On April 16, 2019, the real boss spoke again, giving the new UCP a resounding victory. The boss passed out pink slips to some and bonuses to others.

Unfortunately, our boss, the voters, is angry again, as angry or more than I remember them in 2015 and 2019. They are angry about access to health care, and they don't want it blamed on COVID; it's been an issue for decades. In 2016 my own mom spent five days in an ER waiting for a bed to open up. They are very angry over ever-increasing utility costs, that are forcing seniors from their homes because they can no longer afford to live there on fixed incomes. Tenants are angry because rent keeps increasing to keep up with the rising cost of utilities.

I've suggested using our fantastic royalty surplus, that belongs to Albertans, to pay for mistakes of previous governments that have resulted in these increases. Let's reduce the burden on all of our consumers, stop making them pay for the mistakes of others. I would suggest that the leaders in the province on all sides better pay attention to the real boss, the voters in this province, or prepare to follow the exit signs.

Supply Chain Capacity

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, the past two years have been extremely hard on Alberta producers and industry, from the supply chain disruptions that came as a result of COVID-19 to massive heat waves, prolonged cold fronts, the ongoing conflict in Ukraine, and the illegal Coutts border blockade. Barely a week goes by when producers aren't grappling with challenges caused by issues well beyond their control, and now there is much uncertainty with the CP Rail labour dispute. These disruptions have been global, and I will not blame the UCP for them.

However, in the last two years there have been challenges. I've never seen the UCP proactively plan for addressing future problems and increasing supply chain capacity and making the economy more resilient. In fact, I've seen the opposite. When Alberta's only 24/7 border crossing was being illegally blockaded, the UCP actually cheered them on. When agriculture industry groups were stating their concerns on the devastating impact of the Coutts blockade, the UCP did nothing.

Now, today, the CP Rail dispute: we see them demanding federal back-to-work legislation despite knowing clearly that one of the sources of contention is the amount of rest time for CP Rail employees. We need to keep Canadian rail lines open – there's no doubt – but we also need them to be safe. These workers have served Albertans and Canadians throughout the pandemic and helped fill our grocery stores with food, gotten fuel to businesses, and taken our grain and feed to market.

Let's work on solutions, let's push for a fast settlement, and let's go back beyond that to look at bigger challenges that we face. I stand in this House today calling on the UCP government to strike a bipartisan committee to study the way that Alberta can increase supply chain capacity and hear directly from Albertans on what they want to see. There's no reason not to do this. This isn't a political stunt; this is a real proposal to develop best practices and provide real supports. If the UCP won't accept it, it'll be clear that they don't actually care about Alberta workers who rely on our supply chain to make a living. It'll be clear that this is all about politics for them and about saving their own jobs. I'm here today to try to save the jobs of Albertans. The government needs to get onboard with this, because there's no excuse not to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Winston Churchill High School Girls' Basketball Team

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am thrilled to rise today and tell the House about an extraordinary accomplishment in Lethbridge. For the first time since 2012, the Winston Churchill high school girls' basketball team made it all the way to the 3A provincial tournament in Red Deer, finishing in third place. The Griffins showed championship spirit this entire season. These young women stepped up with a 13 and 6 record in the 3A deep south division.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the pandemic created extremely challenging circumstances for everyone, but our students and young athletes were directly impacted, with less practice time and the cancellation of games. These young women showed something I like to refer to as the Alberta spirit. I define the Alberta spirit as using our skills that we develop and learn over time combined with the grit and passion to accomplish something great. The Winston Churchill Griffins and the coaching staff are prime examples of the Alberta spirit. They faced challenges both on and off the court, but they never wavered in their dedication to winning a championship and going to the provincials.

I want to recognize the coaching staff – Omar Kadir, Aaron Becking, and Kacie Bosch – and the parents and volunteers who helped put the games together. I also want to congratulate the athletes: Nataeya Black Water, Rylen Bowes, Phoenix Clarke, Abigail Crown, Tamara Joseph, Dawson Lashley, Brooklyn Lesko, Morgan McLaren, Jayda Morrison, Olivia Needham, Jenna Nilsson, and Didi Zuidema. Teamwork, hard work, and a never-say-die attitude led them this far, and I believe it will serve them well in their future endeavours, whether they be athletic, academic, or whatever possibilities and opportunities they decide to pursue in their bright futures.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I feel confident when I say that all of us in Lethbridge are Griffins fans. Go, Griffins, go.

Utility Costs

Mr. Nielsen: Yesterday the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction bragged on social media about how this government is handling the utility crisis, and for a moment I thought she was joking. This government has done less than the bare minimum to address the cost-of-living crisis they've created. Ask the families who expected the natural gas rebate that the Premier promised, only to get a fake program. Ask the businesses who are seeing their bills climb in the thousands and are being told that $50 is all the help that they're going to get. They'd think this was a joke if it wasn't their livelihoods on the line.

Albertans deserve better than this government. My constituents, all Albertans are being hammered with the outrageous cost-of-living increases. These are real people with real stories dealing with real consequences of a government that simply does not care about what they are going through. Mr. Speaker, in my entire life I've never ever seen a government so unwilling to step up and support Albertans during a crisis. I've never seen a government so proud of doing nothing while families are slowly being costed out of basic necessities like heat and power.

This government has tried constantly to shut down our calls to support these struggling Alberta families and businesses, so I have a message for the members opposite and the Associate Minister of Red Tape Reduction, who claim to be fiscal masterminds while Albertans pile on debt just to heat their houses. Helping people is not red tape. Supporting families during an affordability crisis is not a red tape burden. Doing the right thing for the constituents you claim to represent is not red tape. It's actually your job.

We are in this Chamber to listen and to address the concerns of Albertans, not come up with excuses to ignore them, as this government is so willing to do. That's why Albertans are looking for a change, and in 2023 they'll have an opportunity to vote out this self-centred government that does not care about making life easier for any of them.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition has question 1.

Personal Income Tax and Benefit Deindexation

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans are seeing their costs rising while their paycheques stay the same. Last week StatsCan reported that inflation will be even higher than predicted, 5.7 per cent, the highest since 1991. This means that the Premier's billion-dollar tax on inflation, his bracket creep, will get even worse. Now, we reran the numbers, and by 2025 families will be losing $500 every year. Why doesn't the Premier fix his bracket-creep budget to put more money back in the pockets of Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, this government is acting with much greater ambition than any in Canada to address the cost of living, particularly fuel inflation. That's why on April 1 we are eliminating Alberta's fuel tax. It's why we're providing a $150 rebate for electricity prices this winter. It's why we've capped gas taxes at $6.50, with a rebate if it exceeds that level. But at the same time, the NDP is cheering on their ally Justin Trudeau to raise the carbon tax on April 1 and then to triple it from $50 to $170 a tonne to drive hundreds of thousands of Albertans into energy poverty.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, 50 bucks for power and a fake gas rebate is not a plan. It's a pittance. It's a disappointment.

Let's talk about the gas tax. The Premier claims it will cost $1.3 billion, but that means that he expects WTI to stay above $90 all year long, and that's billions and billions of dollars of extra revenue. So the Premier is actually making the case for me: he doesn't need to keep taxing inflation; at this point it appears that he's doing it just for fun. Will the Premier give this House time to debate and change that plan?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the NDP came in with their hidden agenda to impose the biggest tax hike in Alberta history, the job-killing carbon tax. In its first year they were taking $1.3 billion of revenue. In one fell swoop this government, to address cost-of-living issues, has eliminated the gas tax. If gas prices stay high, that would be an annualized savings of $1.4 billion. How can the NDP possibly stand up here and talk about the cost of living when they want to increase it further by more than tripling the carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is and the Premier knows that that particular program comes with a real rebate, unlike the false one in his budget.

Now, while the Premier is taking $500 more from Alberta families, he's also giving many of them less in benefits. For Albertans on fixed incomes, it adds up fast. By 2025, in real terms a senior couple will lose $750 per year while Albertans living on AISH will lose nearly $3,000. Why doesn't the Premier take action today to fight the growing cost of living by reindexing these important benefits?

Mr. Kenney: Another opportunity to talk about the NDP's phony fiscal policy, Mr. Speaker. They talk about indexing AISH, but they were elected in 2015: no indexation of AISH; 2016, no indexation of AISH; 2017, no indexation of AISH; 2019, no indexation of AISH. They didn't do it until they were leaving office. What a phony fiscal policy from the same government that raised income taxes, raised business taxes, and imposed the job-killing carbon tax on Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Everything the Premier just said is absolutely wrong.

Premier's Office Staff Political Activity

Ms Notley: Now, meanwhile not only does he have more important priorities than getting the facts right; he also has more important priorities than the rising costs facing Albertans, like, say, what they are instead: surviving his leadership review. Let's talk about who in this House is working for Albertans. Last week we presented draft legislation to prevent utility shut-offs for Albertans who are struggling to pay their bills. The UCP? Their staff are punching out at 4 o'clock so they can campaign for the boss. Why is the Premier more concerned with saving his own job than standing up for Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, she just denied the facts. I just looked it up. Their so-called indexation of AISH started on January 1, 2019, after they had been in office for three and a half years. And now they're shedding crocodile tears about the cost of fuel when the NDP's desired outcome is to make fuel unaffordable. That's why they want to triple the carbon tax. Will she stand in her place this week to vote with us on a forthcoming motion calling on Justin Trudeau not to raise the carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Now, Mr. Speaker, in fact, when we reindexed, we reindexed retroactively to 2015. Do your homework.

Now, last week, more recent history, what we did was that we presented an Alberta venture fund that would allow Albertans to invest in themselves and their neighbours. It would exclusively support Alberta early-stage companies, start-ups, and scale-ups. Last week what did they do? Well, at the end of the day, they took Friday off, the entire Premier's office staff, to campaign for their boss. Why does the Premier have his staff working for him instead of Albertans?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, it was such a priority for them to index AISH that they didn't get around to it until the dying days of their government. Once again, why won't the NDP just fess up that their entire desired policy is to make gas more expensive, to make home heating more expensive, to make electricity more expensive, to make the transportation of goods and therefore food more expensive? Why won't they admit that that is exactly why they want to get back into power, to cheer on Justin Trudeau in more than tripling the punishing carbon tax at the worst possible time?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, there is a reason right there why Albertans do not trust a word coming out of the mouth of that Premier. There could not be a clearer difference in priorities between that side and this side. We put forward ideas to help people with their bills, to protect their mountains, to lower tuition, to grow our economy, to protect them from inflation. All these things would make life better. Meanwhile the Premier's chief of staff is out campaigning. His director of communications is out campaigning. His staff clock out early so they can go campaigning for the Premier. Why does the Premier think Albertans deserve part-time government?

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, when I go to Washington, DC, to fight to lift the trucker vax mandate, to fight for Alberta fuel energy exports, what is the NDP leader doing? Campaigning for the NDP. When I go to Texas with the Minister of Energy to fight for North American energy security, what is the NDP leader doing? Campaigning for the NDP. She's right about the difference in priorities. This government eliminated the carbon tax, and that party wants to more than triple it because they want to punish people for filling up their gas tanks, heating their homes, and driving to work. Shame on the NDP. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Personal Income Tax and Benefit Deindexation (continued)

Ms Phillips: Insidious, pernicious: those are the words this Premier used to describe deindexation. One of the first acts of this UCP government was to introduce a new tax on inflation. That plan sucked more than a billion dollars out of the pockets of hard-working Alberta taxpayers even as they struggled to make ends meet. Today this House will vote on a motion calling on the government to end this insidious and pernicious policy, so to the Premier. Let me quote the Premier when he asked verbatim in the 1990s: "When will [this government] stop this destructive tax on inflation, or [are they going to] continue to be known . . . as the bracket creeps?"

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, here's the reality. The NDP created an economic and jobs crisis in this province unlike any we've seen in our modern history. The NDP created a fiscal crisis that this government inherited, an $8 billion structural deficit. Thanks to difficult but necessary decisions made by this government and, yes, some modest sacrifices by Albertans, we now have brought order back to Alberta's finances . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West asked a question. I think it's reasonable for the House to hear the answer.

The hon. the Premier has 10 seconds remaining.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we have now brought Alberta's finances back under control with the first balanced budget tabled in 14 years, and that means we can further cut taxes as Alberta's economy takes off, leading Canada and Europe.

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, we just heard that a billion dollars in new personal income taxes and $2,000 a year in real buying power for AISH recipients is just a modest sacrifice, according to this Premier. Now, that is what I call a pernicious and insidious policy agenda, so to this Premier: why did this government bring in such a regressive and repulsive plan that targets the most vulnerable in society?

Mr. Kenney: You know, Mr. Speaker, the most important social program is a job. Last year 130,000 net new jobs were created in this province, and just this morning in Calgary I was happy to announce 325 new permanent jobs being created by Walmart, on top of 15,000 jobs created in Alberta already this year, and do you know why? Because this province is open for business. They raised business taxes. We cut business taxes. They raised fuel taxes. We cut fuel taxes. They created a huge deficit, and we balanced the budget.

Ms Phillips: Inflation is at a 30-year high. Albertans are feeling the pain, but trust in this Premier and his popularity: never so low. Now, under this government's pernicious and insidious attacks on inflation, the average two-income family will lose $500 a year just because our taxes aren't rising with inflation on top of skyrocketing utility costs, insurance costs, tuition fees. Those continue to hit the family budget hard. This Premier doesn't care. No wonder Albertans don't trust him. Simple question: will the Premier end his bracket creep?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, subtle as always, coming from that member. You know something? Forty per cent of Albertans, thankfully, do not pay any provincial income tax, but for the 60 per cent that do, they ended up having to pay more under the NDP when they increased income taxes. Now, you know what? The balanced budget offers us the opportunity. If the economy continues to grow ... [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have terrible news for the NDP. If the economy continues to grow, we may be in the position – I don't know; no decision is made yet – to reverse the NDP's income tax increases and let Albertans keep more of their own money. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, I was proud to stand with my colleagues in Red Deer this morning in support of Alberta families. We've seen the UCP's harmful policy decisions hammer household budgets. We know the devastating impact that this has on families and children, record-high inflation and UCP policy decisions that make matters much, much worse. Brown Bagging for Calgary's Kids says that it's anticipating much greater need among students looking for a nutritious meal in the months ahead. Food bank use is already rising. Can the Premier tell this House why Alberta families and children have to literally pay for his bad choices?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm afraid I couldn't hear the question. If the member is talking about children, for example, I can advise her that the budget for the Department of Children's Services has increased by 18 per cent since 2018. Particularly, for children in care has had a funding increase well above both inflation and population growth. This government has prioritized the vulnerable while at the same time bringing overall government costs under control to balance the budget so that programs like that are sustainable in our long-term future.

Ms Pancholi: I think Albertans would appreciate if the Premier actually listened to the questions that they're asking rather than just spouting out answers without doing that.

Mr. Speaker, this Premier hopes that Albertans will blame somebody else other than him for all of the costs that they are now facing. Let me run down some of the figures for him. Because of the UCP's decisions families will pay $500 more on their taxes alone. Due to deindexation a low-income senior will lose out on $750 per year. A vulnerable Albertan relying on AISH could be out $3,000 per year. It gets worse from there. With this government the cost of school fees has shot up, car insurance has gone up, the cost of tuition will more than double. I could go on. Will the Premier stand in this House for Alberta families ...

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Again, there's so much there, Mr. Speaker. I don't know what to unpack from that waterfall of words except this, that the NDP made life more expensive for parents with kids. [interjections] The NDP made it more expensive for parents to drive their kids to hockey practice.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Mr. Kenney: The NDP made it more expensive to buy groceries for families with kids. The NDP made it more expensive to heat homes for families with kids. The NDP made everything more expensive with their carbon tax, but they're not satisfied with that. They want to more than triple the carbon tax on families with kids. We won't let them, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:03.

Ms Pancholi: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the Premier, this morning our side of the House committed to real support for Albertans. We were joined by Red Deer resident Joanne Buehler. She was injured severely in a workplace accident six years ago and relies on AISH. The huge increase in the cost of living and the UCP's decision to deindex AISH have forced her back to work while in excruciating pain. Even then, she can't make ends meet. Joanne said this morning, quote: I feel like I'm damned if I do and damned if I don't; put simply, I need more help from my provincial government. Why won't this Premier stand in this House right now and actually help Albertans like Joanne?

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, if she's asking about AISH, that benefit is 40 per cent higher than the average of other provinces, $400 a month higher than in other provinces, and in Alberta our cost of living is substantially lower. For example, cost of housing. [interjections] Many of those other provinces that provide less generous benefits in the same respect ...

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's becoming increasingly difficult to hear the Premier. He has the right to the floor.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we also have the most generous tax treatment for low-income families. Forty per cent of Alberta families pay no income tax. We have the most generous social benefits broadly, and we're delivering all of that in the context of a balanced budget and a growing economy.

CP Rail Work Stoppage

Mr. Sigurdson: At the worst time possible a CP Rail labour dispute has turned into a back-and-forth blaming game with the company and union pointing fingers at each other for causing the strike and subsequent lockout. CP Rail is an essential service. Albertans, Canadians, and our entire economy will suffer if CP trains continue to sit idle. The pressure is on the federal government to find a solution. To the Minister of Transportation: what is the Alberta government doing to urge the federal government to immediately get the trains back on track?

Mrs. Sawhney: The CP Rail labour unrest is deeply concerning and will have a major impact on the movement of goods in and out of Alberta. On the weekend I sent a letter to the federal ministers of Transport and Labour with support from my government colleagues. We are calling on Ottawa to immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport as an essential service in hopes that any damage to our economy is minimal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. Given that we cannot allow our province's economic recovery to be interrupted by union politics and given that we've already dealt with everything from supply chain disruptions, B.C. floods, illegal blockades, port congestion delays, and now the Russian invasion of Ukraine, to the minister: can you update the House on the importance of Alberta rail transport and what the possible impact of this strike will be on our economy? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. the Minister of Transportation is the only one with the call.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, rail transport is critically important infrastructure that supports Alberta's economic recovery. Many industries rely on CP railcars to ship their goods to market, including oil, petrochemicals, plastics, and wood. Agricultural products, machinery parts, iron, and steel are also imported by rail. This work stoppage is undermining Alberta and Canada's economic competitiveness. I fear that the impacts will be devastating.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and once again thank you to the minister for that answer. Given that Alberta farmers and producers should be focused on getting ready for spring seeding and given that, unfortunately, many of them are fearful of what might happen since farming heavily relies on CP Rail for essentials like fertilizer and feed shipments, to the Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Economic Development: what impact can we expect this labour dispute to have on agriculture?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of agriculture.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Transportation clearly outlined, this is impacting many sectors and industries across the province. It's having a profound potential impact on the ag sector. Central southern Alberta relies on CP Rail for movement of goods both in and out in a very severe way. For example, our cattle feeding industry right now is heavily reliant on U.S. corn. After the drought, you know, the bins are empty. There isn't an alternative right now in the south. We're doing everything we can to make sure it's addressed.

COVID-19 Pandemic Response

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the response of so many Albertans who stood up to support their friends, neighbours, and even strangers during the COVID-19 pandemic crisis that sadly took the lives of over 4,000 Albertans. Their compassion, however, contrasts with the Premier's indifference when asked this weekend if he took any responsibility for his catastrophic response during the fourth wave. He said, and I quote: I don't feel responsibility for the fact that COVID has been circulating around the world. End quote. Today would the Premier perhaps like to try again, show some sign of actual compassion and humility, or does he really believe he has no responsibility for his failure?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Our government has reacted throughout the entire pandemic to be able to put measures in place to be able to protect Albertans to the greatest extent possible. We spoke before in this House that we didn't get it perfectly right. We moved to the endemic phase too early during the summer, but we reacted, we put measures in place during the fourth wave, and then we saw the numbers coming down. We reacted again for dealing with the fifth wave, and we're seeing the numbers coming down. I'm pleased we're moving to the endemic phase. We're continuing to protect Albertans and provide services . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

2:10

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, given that during the fourth wave the Premier and this minister and all the other members of the government vanished, refused to communicate with Albertans as case numbers rose, our ICUs filled beyond capacity, and hundreds lost their lives and given that even the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was apologetic to Albertans, admitting that Alberta lacked leadership from this government, and given that when given the same opportunity to make an admission on his radio show, the Premier chose an indifferent response, deflecting any responsibility for his catastrophic failure, why doesn't the Premier have the same respect for Albertans that some of his members do? Will he take this chance to apologize . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has reacted to the pandemic. We moved quickly in September to be able to put in measures, and I want to thank all of our health care professionals for stepping up. We were able during the fourth wave to significantly increase our ICU capacity, and we met the demands, not having to send anyone out of province, and again during the fifth wave, when non-ICU was being hit hard, our AHS responded and all of our front-line health care workers. I want to thank them for the tremendous work that they're doing. I'm pleased we're now moving into the endemic phase.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that those very health care workers were pushed to their limits because of the lack of leadership from that minister and this government and given that there are Albertans who lost family members or friends due to COVID and given that there are countless others suffering from long COVID and given that there are tens of thousands whose life-saving surgeries were cancelled and postponed, many who still haven't gotten the care they need, is this Premier, this minister really going to stand in this House for a third time and refuse to apologize to Albertans for their marked failure, the worst pandemic response in Canada?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, my heart goes out to all Albertans who have been impacted by COVID or got COVID, long COVID, who had their surgeries postponed, but our government is focused on responding to COVID and the pandemic. We are focused on building capacity within our health care system, and I am personally focused on ensuring that we can get caught up on surgeries. Albertans deserve the best health care in the world, and we are investing to be able to deliver that.

Opioid-related Deaths

Ms Sigurdson: One thousand seven hundred and fifty-eight Albertans died due to drug poisoning in 2021. It's the deadliest year on record. On average five Albertans were taken from their family and their community every single day. Each one of those deaths was preventable, but instead of working to keep people safe, the UCP has reduced access to life-saving health care for Albertans who use substances. Will the Associate Minister of Mental Health and Addictions take responsibility for the appalling loss of life that is happening under his watch?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, each life lost to addiction is one too many. My heart goes out to all families who have lost loved ones or have been impacted by this disease. As the hon. member knows across the way, our government is taking this seriously. We are investing in additional resources for mental health. We're making significant investment over the last two years, $140 million. Over this year, in this Budget 2022, we are investing an additional $20 million, over 8,000 new annual spaces, the removal of user fees, the expansion of the virtual opioid dependency program, that allows any Albertan anywhere in the province to get the same-day access to medication-based treatment . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that we all know people with substance use may continue to use before they're ready or willing to enter treatment and given that relapse is an extremely common occurrence to people who use substances and given that there are numerous health care interventions that are proven to keep people alive until they are ready to go for treatment, why is the government intent on making substance use a death sentence for so many by denying them these life-saving services?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government is focused on addressing this opioid crisis. I've already indicated that we've already invested $140 million over the last two years. We're investing another $20 million this year. We are focused. We are increasing access to treatment while removing barriers such as user fees. Alberta is the first province to completely eliminate user fees for all funded treatment spaces. Addiction costs all families, and we are focusing on supporting Albertans to be able to recover from this terrible disease.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the number of lives lost in the drug poisoning crisis has more than doubled since 2019 and given that the crisis in Alberta is getting worse and that each of the last four months we have data for has set a new record for the loss of life, I ask the associate minister again: will he stop his self-congratulatory talking points, confront the sheer number of Albertans who have died on his watch, and admit his approach is a catastrophic failure?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our $53 million COVID mental health action plan is actually helping to address people who have been impacted. We know that the opioid crisis has been made worse due to COVID, and that's why we're investing and we continue to invest additional dollars to support the mental health of Albertans, $140 million over the last two years, an additional $20 million. We are actually putting in a range of supports to be able to support

Albertans throughout their entire process to try to deal with this serious issue and help Albertans recover.

Premier's Leadership

Mr. Loewen: Influence peddling is a Criminal Code violation. I published my letter to the RCMP to make it clear that activities of the Premier's office in advance of the UCP's fall AGM warranted investigation. The Premier's office didn't get the memo. Leaks this weekend make it clear that Secure Energy, who is allegedly seeking $1 billion in government favour, is pressuring their employees to come out for the Premier at the SGM. There is a line between communicating with government officials, as permitted by the Lobbyists Act, versus selling influence by government officials, prohibited by the Criminal Code. To the Premier: is influence peddling becoming government policy?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that it's government policy that somebody is taking a position in a public electoral process. There's no surprise there. There's a public electoral process. Some people are on one side; some are on the other; some won't participate. The member is treating this like news. People taking a position in an electoral contest: it's interesting; it's important. I'm not sure it's shocking.

Mr. Loewen: Given that I hope the RCMP will find the facts, because it might be tough to find them here, and given that this weekend a spreadsheet was exposed by journalist Janet French tracking senior staff's weekday volunteer commitments to the Premier's leadership review and given that this spreadsheet is owned by an employee of the lobbying firm Wellington Advocacy and given that this lobbying firm boasts of close connections to the Premier's office and given that it appears that the spreadsheet being used to track how committed senior ministry staff are to the Premier's success in the leadership review was filled out during government office hours, to the Premier: is it government policy for lobbyists to run this province or just current practice?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think you would agree with me, if I was to remind the member, that the question wasn't about government policy, as it's required to be.

But, Mr. Speaker, no one should be surprised that in a political contest people take a position: some for, some against; some are indifferent; some will stay home. Now, if the hon. member really thinks that something is wrong, he should call the RCMP. He's mentioned them twice. It's not government policy. There's a political contest, and people are participating.

Mr. Loewen: Given that I can't seem to get a straight answer today, I'll try it one more time. Given that the only pipeline this government is focused on is the pipeline between jobs in the Premier's office and jobs at the Premier's favoured lobbying firms and that Albertans are left wondering who runs this government, the Premier or his favourite lobbyists, and given the huge number of staff taking leave from ministries, as made evident by the lobbyist's own spreadsheet, all to save the Premier's failed job, to the Premier: is focusing this government's energy on the leadership review government policy or just current practice?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to set the record straight. This government is solely focused on jobs for the benefit of Albertans. We look back at the last year. There have been over 130,000 jobs created. We have thousands more jobs available for Albertans today than we did pre-COVID. We're seeing billions of dollars of investment come into this province, creating opportunities for Alberta entrepreneurs, opportunities for Albertans needing a job, expanding our fiscal capacity, leading to a balanced budget.

Education Policies

Ms Hoffman: Alberta had a reputation as one of the best public education systems in the world, but this UCP government is determined to sabotage public education in Alberta by refusing to fund desperately needed schools in Edmonton and Calgary. When we were in government, we didn't ignore the fastest growing districts in the province. We built and modernized about 60 schools a year. This year under the UCP: only 11. Will the Education minister tell Albertans why her government is ignoring families in Edmonton and Calgary? There are students in south Edmonton – some are sitting in the gallery – who desperately need a high school on the south side. Why won't you fund it, Minister?

2:20

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to answer that question. I had a very good meeting with the board chair and the superintendent of the Edmonton public school division, reinforced the gated process that the Auditor General themselves approved. It's a 10-step process, and when those school authorities put those priorities at the top of the list, they rise higher. We get just about 400 requests a year for new schools and major modernizations, and Edmonton public now understands how they go through that proper list.

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the minister is taking no responsibility for her failure to meet the needs of Calgary and Edmonton families and given that the heartless UCP government displayed its disrespect for disabled children when they cut PUF funding and given that the government's no-help budget, with record revenues, ignores the needs of these children and refuses to reverse the cruel cuts brought in under the UCP, will the Minister of Education explain to the parents of three-, four-, and five-year-olds who have disabilities why she continues to cut funding for kids when they rightfully need it?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again I want to draw to your attention that Edmonton public schools has, actually, six new projects on the go right now to address concerns. They have so many more spaces than actual students, and I'm really confident that, having had that meeting with them last week, they are actually going to prioritize their list and make sure that growing areas are at the top of their list.

In terms of PUF funding we have addressed PUF funding. We have modified that program. We've tiered it, and in fact we added a new code.

Ms Hoffman: Given that when we were in government, there were a thousand more teachers in Alberta schools than there are today and given that the UCP's mission to sabotage public education has a third of Alberta teachers planning on either leaving the province or the profession and given that this government's lack of respect for teachers and the work that they do is clearly reflected in the wide rejection of the curriculum that the UCP is trying to force on Alberta schools, will the minister admit that the biggest problem facing education is the UCP government? It's clear you can't trust the UCP with public education.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, there's a reason that the voters of Alberta fired the members opposite, and it's because they knew we needed responsible government. In fact, we are going to have 160 more teachers and staff next year in the classroom as per the statistic. I don't know why it's so difficult that they can't actually look up the numbers. They're online. They're there. They can look at them. In fact, they would have me go against an Auditor General's request and advice in terms of putting forward capital. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The only one with the call is the hon. the Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Utility Costs

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, last month callers phoned in and jammed lines during a radio talk show I was on about the rising cost of utilities in Alberta. A caller told me that after calling for help, a service provider told him that perhaps instead of using heat, he could wear a hoodie. This government's policies have made costs unaffordable, and their fake rebate is not helping Albertans under stress. Will the associate minister stop bragging about doing nothing and commit to helping my constituents who are being told their only solution is to turn their heat off and put on more clothing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Associate Minister of Natural Gas and Electricity.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After four years of NDP malaise on the electricity system, all Albertans are paying more for their electricity. Now, the historical revisionists on the other side of the House would have us believe that they're not to blame, but those are the members that got rid of the cheapest form of electricity, spent $7.5 billion on transmission at a time when we could barely afford it. We are bringing immediate relief to Albertans at a time when they need it while we look for longer term solutions to get rid of the NDP hangover.

Mr. Deol: Given that this government is to blame for this affordability crisis and given that last week the associate minister blocked debate on a motion to ensure that people suffering from these high utility prices did not have their power cut off and given that an Albertan who was told to wear a hoodie instead of using heat stated that his bills were so high that he couldn't pay and that even his credit cards were full, why is this government okay with these constituents and so many other Albertans drowning in credit card debt while they sit on their hands doing nothing?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, the NDP experience on the electricity grid is littered with unintended consequences. They got rid of the cheapest form of electricity, and the prices went up. They brought their ideological agenda to the Balancing Pool . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Mr. Nally: . . . and prices went up. They implemented the carbon tax, and prices went up on everything. Now, this is just one more example of unintended consequences, because the Energy critic, who, by the way, doesn't understand the price of electricity, actually would raise the price . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Given that this government's so-called relief is a sham and that it won't help anyone and given that they are refusing to act during this crisis, which is harming the physical, mental, and financial health of the people they are pretending to represent, and given that no one in this province should be in a situation where they can't afford to heat their homes, will the associate minister commit to sitting down with my constituents, listening to their concerns, and then taking emergency action to prevent utility shut-offs and provide real rebates to help with skyrocketing costs?

Mr. Nally: Again, Mr. Speaker, it's a case of unintended consequences by a caucus that doesn't even know what the price of electricity is in this province. If we would have accepted the NDP solution, all that bad debt would get put back into rate, and they would raise the price of electricity for every single ratepayer in this province. Now, my question is: why would we come out with a government solution when industry has already resolved the issue? Industry has told me that they will work with any ratepayer that works with them. They will come out with flexible payment plans for all ratepayers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Seniors' Supports in Spruce Grove-Stony Plain

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our seniors have contributed so much to our society and economy throughout the decades. They deserve a restful and fulfilling retirement, but with rising costs caused by inflation and other pressures, this is becoming more difficult. We have incredible seniors' housing in my riding, with the Meridian foundation, St. Michael's, Copper Sky, and others. Despite this, more spaces are needed and long overdue. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what are you doing to support future housing initiatives and funding in Spruce Grove-Stony Plain? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. In Budget 2022 we committed $118 million over three years to fund various projects across the province. Our communities' needs assessments identified communities' individual needs for developing seniors' affordable housing. I thank the member for his advocacy, and I look forward to working with him to bring the necessary housing for seniors.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Meridian foundation is actively looking for a new location to build a larger facility and given that St. Michael's is also planning to expand their facility to address this growing need and given that my riding is identified as a high-priority area for seniors' housing, with demands only increasing, and given that population growth in Spruce Grove, Stony Plain, and Parkland county remains high and that additional units will be needed in the future, can the same minister please let us know: what is being done to encourage more nonprofits to invest in seniors' housing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the wonderful questions. The stronger foundations strategy depends significantly on partnerships with major organizations like nonprofit organizations. We are working on a comprehensive partnership framework that will attract more partners by enabling innovative funding and delivery models. We will increase the supply of affordable housing, and this 10-year framework will achieve that target.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for her answer. Given that many seniors in my riding are dealing with mental health and social struggles and given that many require assistance when it comes to accessing mental health supports and programs and given that we want to provide support for our seniors who have called this area home for many years, if not decades, to the Minister of Health: can you please let my constituents know what programs and services they can access if they require additional assistance?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We are always striving to improve access to resources that help seniors improve their mental wellness in the community. One of the initiatives that our government is working on and being led by my colleague the minister of mental health and addictions is a province-wide, home-based support program for seniors that will deliver a range of mental health supports to seniors when and where they need them. This is one of the initiatives we're moving forward with to improve access to care for seniors in Alberta. We're investing in the mental health of Albertans: $140 million over the last two years, another $20 million this year for all Albertans, including seniors.

Calgary Beltline Area Protests

Member Ceci: For over a year there has been chaos caused by illegal protests in Calgary's Beltline. Every Saturday protesters have disrupted the lives of residents and businesses in the area. In the past few weeks the protests have grown in intensity. It's gotten so bad that Calgarians were afraid to leave their houses out of fear of being verbally harassed by so-called freedom protesters, yet this UCP government has said and done nothing. The former and current Justice ministers are silent. The local MLA to the south of 17th Avenue, who is a minister, is silent. Why is this government nowhere to be seen and heard from when Calgarians and businesses . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, the Calgary Police Service, like all police services in Alberta, makes operational decisions about deployment and about enforcement tactics. They make those decisions independently of governments. They are responsible and are accountable to the Calgary Police Commission in Calgary, who, in turn, are accountable to the Calgary city council. I encourage the member to speak to the Calgary Police Commission and Calgary city council.

Member Ceci: Given that this government has gone into hiding, refused to take a stand or offer support to the Beltline protests, just like they did with the illegal Coultts blockade, and given that, just like Coultts, the Beltline protests have hurt the local economy and that many businesses in the Beltline have reported being 50 per cent down in their revenues on that day and given that, just like Coultts, this government has done nothing to help impacted businesses – once again they point the fingers instead of lifting a finger – will this government provide support to the city, to businesses, and to residents impacted by these protests?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, none of that is true at all. We trust our law enforcement agencies throughout the province to exercise their authority lawfully and to take action when they have evidence and reasonable grounds to do so. We trust them to be able to do that. We know that they can do that. I understand, from previous questions as well as today, that the hon. member has advocated for imprudent actions to politically intervene at the Coutts border crossing instead of the prudent support and deference to our law enforcement that the acting minister provided to our law enforcement agencies at that time.

Member Ceci: Given that this government has done nothing to support the residents and businesses in the Beltline and given that members of their caucus likely support the protesters, who are disrupting the lives of Calgarians and hurting local businesses – after all, they had members in their caucus join the illegal Coutts blockade with zero repercussions – and given that this government has been silent about these protests, if they won't stand up and help those who are impacted, will they at least stand up and denounce these protests, or does the Premier need the people involved in these illegal acts to vote for him in his leadership review?

Mr. Shandro: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Premier has said himself, everybody in Alberta has the right to participate in a democratic and peaceful protest. We are respectful of that. As the Premier has said, when somebody is doing that illegally, though, then that is a concern. I understand that arrests were made this past weekend and that this matter is a priority for the police service in Calgary. I encourage them to continue to do their work.

Francophone Education

Ms Renaud: Yesterday was Journée internationale de la Francophonie. With that in mind, all my questions today relate to our Charter responsibilities as clarified by a recent Supreme Court decision on the right to a francophone education. There are students in the Edmonton catchment area who have to travel two and a half hours per day to their designated French public school, which is overcrowded. The UCP capital plan failed to address this significant need, and as a result families are forced to make decisions that force assimilation. Is that the plan?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 2019 our government has invested in six new capital school projects for the francophone school authorities right across this province. We continue to recognize the need for a new school project across Alberta, and the projects that were not approved for funding in Budget 2022 will be considered again in subsequent years. We get roughly 400 asks a year, and we can only do so many with the dollars that we have.

Ms Renaud: Given that what francophone families need are schools but the only thing this UCP government has announced for Gabrielle-Roy and Michaëlle-Jean students is a delayed plan for a plan, given that the Premier left these families, who have a Charter right to equal access to education in a minority language, to fight in court instead of sit in a classroom, M. le Président, est-ce que le gouvernement pense que c'est normal de non financer ni les plans ni les écoles? Les étudiants et les familles ont besoin des écoles dans leurs communautés, pas à deux heures de chez eux. Expliquez-ça, s'il vous plaît.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We take our section 23 obligations very, very seriously. Last year I announced three new schools across Alberta for francophone communities, six in total since 2019, 20 in the last decade. We always take this very seriously, and we will make sure that those students have good new spaces to learn in.

Ms Renaud: Given that the funding formula for education in Alberta is broken, le Conseil scolaire Centre-nord is growing and opening new programs, but because the UCP insists on using weighted moving averages, they're projecting a million-dollar deficit. C'est pas durable, M. le Président. Cette formule ne marche pas pour les écoles francophones. Given that it is starting to look like the true goal of the UCP government is to force assimilation on francophone families, please explain how this disastrous Education budget does anything but force assimilation?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is just absurd. I've never heard anything so absurd in my whole, entire life. In fact, we have added an additional $700 million over three years to increase funding for education . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. You had your opportunity to ask a question. If you want another opportunity, perhaps that will come later, but for now the Minister of Education has the call.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seven hundred million dollars over three years to add to all of education right across the province. We were the ones that introduced the Choice in Education Act so that parents can choose the type of education that they want for their children, including francophone education. The fastest growing francophone community in all of Canada. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Energy Industry Opposition

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, the tool identified in the Allan inquiry involves activist groups litigating organizations to tie up their assets. This tactic is called lawfare. The Minister of Energy knows all too well how lawfare works, facing it a multitude of times when fighting for the Gateway pipeline, a pipeline that, if operational today, would help displace Russian oil that is currently being used to fund Putin's war on Ukraine. To the Minister of Energy: are we seeing lawfare play out against the energy sector in an effort to distract companies from their core business by tying up their assets?

Mrs. Savage: Well, Mr. Speaker, what these types of activist campaigns have done is to make it difficult to grow energy production here, and it made it almost impossible to build infrastructure to get our resources to market. Their goal is to lock our resources in the ground, which allows places like Russia to get more out of the ground there. Energy resources account for approximately 43 per cent of the Russians' economy, and it's being used to fund their war while places like Canada have been unfairly targeted by environmental activism. Does anybody think even for one minute that Russian state-owned companies like Gazprom and Rosneft . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that lawfare is becoming commonplace amongst activists and given that these frivolous anti-Alberta pursuits will continue from far-left organizations like Greenpeace and Extinction Rebellion and given that this damages the livelihoods of hard-working Alberta families and entrepreneurs, to the Minister of Energy: is there any regulation or legislation that your department could consider to discourage activists and support companies who find themselves a victim of this tactic?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you. As I was noting before, does anybody here think for even one minute that Russian state-owned companies like Rosneft and Gazprom have to contend for a single minute with the type of environmental litigation, fossil fuel divestment, clogged regulatory processes, and environmental activism that we contend with here? Mr. Speaker, we sit on top of the third-largest reserves of oil in the world, 166 billion barrels, and it accounts for 25 per cent of the free-world, non state-controlled production. This is a large part of why Alberta is targeted, so, yes, we are taking steps to counter these activists' campaigns.

2:40

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you again, Minister. Given that Albertans are tired of ideological groups like Extinction Rebellion trying to destroy our resource sectors and given that this government is committed to the fight against nefarious activists and their shameful attacks such as what took place at Coastal GasLink Pipeline and given that last October in this House the minister and I discussed the possibility of forming a special committee to subpoena and question those named in the Allan report, to the minister: will you commit today to an investigative committee of the Legislature to continue the work that Steve Allan began?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we now know is that what happens when we can't get our resources to market – it means that other jurisdictions like Russia are able to leverage this dysfunction in Canada. Every barrel of oil left in the ground here is taken out of the ground in some place like Russia. I can hear the NDP cheering on Russian energy production right now. That's shameful because that's not only a transfer of production to places like Russia; it's a transfer of wealth and it's a transfer of GHG emissions. We will always continue ways to fight this, and, yes, there is merit in another . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period.

In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross has a statement to make.

Métis Jigging Dance Event in Calgary-Cross

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to highlight an amazing event that took place in my constituency last week. Last Friday the Marlborough community association held a Métis jig dance session. This session was put on by the Métis community leaders looking to highlight and share the beautiful and rich culture of Métis people in Alberta with their neighbours. Métis jigging originated in Red River, Manitoba, where the influence of Indigenous, Scottish, and French-Canadian cultures helped shape this festive dance, which is done at nearly all Métis events. Jigging is a key cultural pillar within the Métis community, and I was both honoured and excited to see this traditional dance being celebrated within my constituency of Calgary-Cross.

Mr. Speaker, this event not only showcased Métis culture, but it was also meant to draw attention to the serious and tragic discovery of increasing numbers of unmarked graves of residential school victims. It is important to recognize the atrocities of the past so that we can learn and we can heal together as a community. The residential school system continues to be one of the blackest marks in Canadian history, and its impacts are still obvious to this day. I would like to thank the Marlborough community association for helping organize this event. It is key for community associations to ensure that various cultures have the space and the resources to celebrate and engage with the community at large.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues in this House and all Albertans to learn about Métis culture as it is a rich and vibrant one and should be celebrated every day, not only in my constituency but across Alberta.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of a bill to be introduced, which I will sponsor, that being Bill 204, the Anti-Racism Act.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Central Peace-Notley has a tabling.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings to do. The first tabling is the article from Janet French expressing the pressure put on government staff to take leave to save the Premier.

The second one is the volunteer – or I should say volun-told – spreadsheet for the leadership review owned by a Wellington employee, with proof it was filled out during office hours.

Number 3, a list of lobby firm Wellington Advocacy employees, including Brittany Baltimore, owner of the spreadsheet used by staff.

And, number 4, the post exposing Secure Energy putting pressure on staff to attend the SGM to support the Premier.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that brings us to points of order. The point of order at 2:03 has been withdrawn.

Ms Gray: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order is called by the hon. the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Rules and Practices of the Assembly

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I called this point of order because I was so looking forward to debating the point of order that was called earlier, and it was withdrawn. I think that's unparliamentary, and I was quite disappointed that I didn't have that opportunity. I had excellent arguments prepared, and I would appreciate you ruling on this.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: I've got to give credit where credit is due, Mr. Speaker. That was a smooth move. But I don't find that this is a point of order, and I'd like to move on to the daily Routine. I'm very anxious to hear the Member for Lethbridge-West's speech on Motion 503. You're lucky.

The Speaker: I think I've provided lots of commentary around extending debate through the use of points of order. I think that's a very clear example of what ought not be done. It's not a point of order. I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Lethbridge-West.

Indexing Taxes and Benefits

503. Ms Phillips moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) acknowledge that the government's decision to stop indexing the provincial personal income tax system to account for inflation may result in Albertans collectively paying approximately $1 billion more in additional income tax between 2019 and 2025 than they would have paid if this decision had not been made,
- (b) acknowledge that the government's decision to stop indexing the Alberta seniors' benefit, benefits provided under the assured income for the severely handicapped program, and other benefits and income support programs to account for inflation significantly reduced their purchasing power, and
- (c) urge the government to immediately reverse these decisions by
 - (i) re-establishing the indexing of the provincial personal income tax system to account for inflation and
 - (ii) re-establishing the indexing of benefits and income support programs to account for inflation.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this opportunity to join the House from some long driving this morning. I am here to propose that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge that the government's decision to stop indexing the provincial personal income tax system to account for inflation may result in Albertans collectively paying more than a billion dollars over the course of the government's fiscal plan, between 2019 and 2025, than they would have paid if this decision had not been made.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

The motion goes on, Mr. Speaker, to call for the government to reindex the seniors' benefit and the assured income for the severely handicapped program, ensuring that those benefits account for inflation, and re-establish those benefits' ability to keep pace with the cost-of-living increases and re-establish their purchasing power with those benefits.

The fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that we proposed this motion because indeed the cost of living is the number one issue on Albertans' minds right now. The number one issue on Albertans' minds is not the internal palace intrigue of the UCP leadership. The number one issue on people's minds is not whether the leadership is going to be moved from the Cambridge Hotel to the Westerner and not about in-person voting. People are worried about their bills. People were significantly challenged by their January and February electricity and natural gas bills – there were significant increases, particularly on the electricity side, given that the pool price spiked considerably for people after the removal of the cap – because they came on top of a number of other challenges to people's cost of living.

Now, there is no question that anyone who has darkened the door of a grocery store recently has seen that the price of everything has gone up, and there's no question that we are seeing these inflationary pressures across the industrialized world and pretty much everywhere as the world exits from the pandemic and supply chain challenges, particularly in auto parts and other raw materials, that are experienced everywhere. However, the fact of the matter is that for every single spot where this government could use the levers of public policy to make life more affordable for Albertans, they have chosen not to do so and, in fact, done the opposite.

There are a significant number of things that they could do to make life more affordable for people. The fact that they haven't I think speaks volumes about why Albertans do not trust this government to be able to look out for them. They do not trust them to put people first. They certainly cannot trust them to rebuild the health care system after the pandemic, and they do not trust them on the cost-of-living increases either.

Now, one of the first acts of this government after the 2019 election was to deindex our income tax system and benefits from inflation. That means that every year people are paying more income tax and seeing their benefits reduced. The UCP is taxing inflation, plain and simple. Now, this had been described in the House of Commons throughout the 1990s as bracket creep, a "pernicious [and insidious] tax grab." Those are quotes, and they are quotes from the Premier, who in the 1990s objected strenuously to this tax increase, but one of the first things he did in his first budget was to deindex those brackets.

With inflation hitting a 30-year high, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are seeing their hard-earned income not going as far as it used to as people struggle to make ends meet. It is not just electricity bills and natural gas heating bills that have spiked through January and February. Albertans are also seeing a number of changes as a result of the rising cost of insurance, because this government chose to listen to lobbyists rather than ordinary people trying to pay the bills, and people's insurance has gone up for their vehicles by about 20 and 30 per cent. A clean driving record: no changes there, yet their policies are going up considerably. People are also getting larger bills for school fees for the simple act of sending their children into the public school system. Student loan interest and tuition are also going up.

But the destructive impact of inflation on the tax system and benefits cannot go unremarked, and that is why it is important for this Legislature to signal to the people of Alberta that they either care and are going to reverse this considerable challenge to our cost of living or that they are going to continue to thumb their noses at Albertans' number one priority and indeed continue to tax inflation and, effectively, ensure that more and more of our income goes towards personal income taxes because of the sneaky, pernicious, and insidious bracket creep that this government has brought in.

Now, what does that mean, actually, for people? Well, the basic personal exemption in 2019 was $19,369. That's the amount of money that we don't pay taxes on. Then we pay taxes in brackets according to our income at certain percentages after that. Now, the basic personal exemption in 2025 under the UCP government is $19,369. That's what you get in terms of your nontaxable income: $19,000, the same in 2025 as 2019. Now, if that amount was indexed to inflation, it would be $22,219 of tax-free income. So every single one of us, regardless of how much money we make, is paying more money in taxes than we would have otherwise. We are paying taxes on $3,000 more a year in income.

You know, it's complicated, and that's why this government did it, because they expect that people won't notice. But here's the thing. No one trusts this government to stand up for their cost of living, so it does not come as any surprise to any ordinary Albertan when there's a sneaky and complicated way that this government has also put their hand in people's pockets. No one doubts that this is the case.

I just spent eight or nine hours on the doorstep over the weekend, Mr. Speaker. I can reliably report to this Chamber that people are very, very worried about their rising cost of living. They are very, very worried, from the hours of canvassing I did on Saturday and Sunday afternoons, about how they are going to make ends meet after those massive bills that they received for January's and February's utilities, after the increases in insurance, after the increases in school fees, in tuition, and so on.

Layer on top of that the fact that it does not matter: on the left, on the right, in the exhausted middle no one trusts this government to do the right thing. People are exhausted with the chaos, with the uncaring, with the disconnection, with the idea that this government would just focus on themselves and their own problems to the detriment of leading this province for a post-COVID recovery, towards economic diversification, towards rebuilding our health care system after the massive challenges and chipping away at the public education system and chipping away at the respect for our public-sector workers over the last two years. No one actually expects this government to reverse some of these decisions that they have made, particularly around reindexing the personal income tax system, but the government should. If they understood what was actually happening out there, they would take this action as a good-faith indication that they're thinking about someone other than themselves.

Now, they can start that by passing this motion, Mr. Speaker, and it will be instructive, to coin a phrase, when and if this government does not support this motion. They should. It should be obvious that we're putting money back in people's pockets. It should be obvious that we are not scooping thousands of dollars a year out of AISH incomes. That should be a very clear public policy position of this government, particularly after the UCP caucus supported the 2018 legislation that actually indexed these benefits in a retroactive fashion, just to, you know, provide a little fact-checked footnote on what happened in question period today. It should be obvious to just, you know, go back and do what the stated intent was and actually do something for a change that is on the level in this Chamber and that actually helps people for a change. They could do that by supporting this motion, and it'll be really interesting to see if the government actually takes this as a priority.

There is no question that people have suffered a lot over the last couple of years, there is no question that people have seen the chaos in the pandemic response, the chaos that has been created in the education system in particular. That was considerable. And there's no question that people want to see action. This government could take that action today.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The next member who caught my eye is the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in opposition to Motion 503. I think what Albertans need to understand is that our government inherited a fiscal train wreck. Had we not taken action on a whole number of fronts, we would have robbed subsequent generations of the prosperity that we enjoy today.

I want to digress just a little bit. I want to talk a bit about what we inherited. Mr. Speaker, we inherited a government that was spending $10 billion more per year than comparable or similar governments on a per capita basis, and that trajectory was going up by 4 per cent per year. Had we continued on that trajectory, we would not be projecting a $500 million surplus, but we would be projecting a $6 billion deficit. Let me tell you why that matters. This matters to the next generation of Albertans. This matters to our children and our grandchildren. We simply cannot place irresponsible fiscal decisions today and burden the next generation with the results of those decisions.

So, yes, Mr. Speaker, we as a government had to take some serious action. As we in Treasury Board considered in 2019 our approach to a four-year fiscal plan that would bring responsibility back to the province's finances, we were guided by this principle, that Alberta can no longer afford to be an outlier, because we had been a high-spending province brought on by high revenues in the past. But decisions taken during those years of surplus revenues resulted in the province's finances being wholly unsustainable going forward.

Mr. Speaker, as we considered the principle of ensuring that we were no longer an outlier, ensuring that we could live within our means, we made a series of decisions. One thing I can say is that while the personal income tax exemption is deindexed at this point in time, Albertans will not pay any more personal income tax this year than they would have last year. I need to set the record straight. We have not raised taxes.

Another important fact, Mr. Speaker, is that Alberta has by far and away the largest personal exemption with respect to our personal tax system. Alberta's exemption is $19,369, meaning that 40 per cent of Albertans pay no income tax at all. When we were considering our options that first year, in 2019, we chose not to reduce that personal exemption. We chose to maintain it even though we were an outlier, ensuring that low-income Albertans would continue to not pay any tax at all. The next-closest province with respect to their personal exemption is Saskatchewan, and they're over $3,000 lower than Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to talk a little bit about affordability because it's very important that this House, all members of this House, and all Albertans know some of the background, some of the systemic issues that are creating very high utility costs. Utility costs are going up and have been going up. While we hear from the members opposite their concern about affordability, I would suggest that the most significant reason for increased utility costs, electricity costs today is bad policy when the members opposite were in government. They overbuilt our distribution system, our transmission system to the tune of $8 billion. Who pays for that? Consumers today.

Mr. Speaker, they hastily – hastily – moved from coal to gas, a transition that we were going to make, but they did it hastily. Who pays? Alberta consumers, Alberta households, Alberta seniors. That irresponsible move cost Alberta consumers $1.4 billion. Moreover, they added a carbon tax that increased electricity charges, increased utility costs, increased food costs, the cost to heat their homes, the cost to drive their cars. Who did that? The members opposite.

Mr. Speaker, ultimately, we've been focused on ensuring that Albertans have more opportunities. We've been focusing on the economy, ensuring that we have a very competitive business environment, an environment that will result in increased investment attraction, increased job opportunities, and that is happening today. That is happening today. Tens of thousands of Albertans have been able to find a good job. Tens of thousands of Albertans, Mr. Speaker, who were underemployed are able to find a new job in perhaps an occupation that didn't even exist 10 years ago.

All the while we're focused on affordability. That's why on April 1, as energy prices are high, we will be eliminating our fuel tax – that's 13 cents a litre on every litre of gasoline and diesel fuel purchased by Albertans, purchased by Alberta businesses – because, Mr. Speaker, I'm convinced that the best thing governments can do during times of inflation is spend responsibly, borrow less, and tax less, and we're following through with that measure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say that in 2019, when we paused indexing, we were clear and explicit that when we improved our fiscal house, when we ensured that responsible decisions have led to a stronger, healthy balance sheet and a sustainable fiscal trajectory, we will begin reindexing. I can commit to this House, as I have committed to Albertans, that as we see our economic and commodity price assumptions that we identified in Budget 2022 realized, we will reconsider whether it's time to reindex. I make that commitment to members of this House; I make this commitment to Albertans.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude with this, where I began: this government inherited a fiscal train wreck. This government inherited a fiscal scenario that was completely unsustainable, a scenario that would have burdened future generations with billions and billions of dollars of debt for services that they did not appreciate, that did not benefit them. I find that wholly unacceptable.

We've made hard decisions to bring our fiscal house in order. The good news is that we're reporting a balanced budget this year and for the following two fiscal years, and that gives us options. That gives us options to make strategic reinvestments in our health care system to expand capacity. That gives us options to ensure that future generations of Albertans can reskill, pursue an education in occupations that matter, in professions where there's great demand. Mr. Speaker, that's why we're adding $600 million to the fiscal plan over the next three years to reskill Albertans, to provide additional opportunities for Albertans to move from poverty to self-sufficiency.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to oppose this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The next member I see is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this very important motion because, as we all know, life under this Conservative government has become harder, more expensive, and less hopeful because of these types of strategies. I'm very interested to hear the Minister of Finance actually publicly admit that he understands that the deindexing is a hit on the people, so much so that he has just promised, minutes ago in this House, to re-examine it when he feels like doing it. But he is promising to re-examine this reindexing in the future. That means that he understands that it indeed is a tax increase, no matter what else he says. He has just stood up in this House and made our point for us.

This is an over $1 billion hit on the people in this province who can least afford it. The people that are being affected by this are the people who are receiving AISH, the people who are on the seniors' benefit, and, of course, all the people in this province who pay personal income taxes. If this government had not made this choice, all of these people would see a minor increase in their disposable income.

Now, you ask: why should they get an increase in disposable income? I can tell you that part of the reason why is that there is money available in the system in many other ways, in many other places. We know, for example, that government revenues are significantly up. This government got lucky. The international price of oil, over which they have no control, has increased significantly the revenues in this province, and they pretend that somehow that's allowed them to balance the budget, because they were somehow magic. Well, it turns out that the revenues are increasing in every other state, not just this state.

They didn't plan for it. We know they didn't plan for it because the amount of money that they were predicting to come in in their past budget was not the same as the amount of money that actually did come in, so we know that it was a lucky windfall. This government, if they had the integrity to tie those things together, would be able to say that no matter which government was in, they would have gotten that same lucky windfall. Of course, what they do is that they constantly repeat that somehow if the NDP government had been in, we would have a greater deficit. The only way they can do that is that they can ignore the truth of what they just said. They say one thing; then they ignore it and say the opposite thing, because they have no internal consistency in their planning. They got lucky, and they're using it as a chance to kind of pull the wool over the eyes of the people in this country.

We know that government revenue is up. We also know that corporate profits are dramatically up over the last little while, and we know that CEO compensation is up. All we're asking is that somehow the rest of Albertans be able to gain some of the benefits from all of this largesse that we are experiencing in this province. Again, this government doesn't really care for the average person in the province. They have a very small, narrow group of people who they are very concerned about, and we know that because of the fact that we do see that government revenues are up; we do see that corporate profits are up; we do see that CEO compensation is up.

In fact, this government, at the same time that they're asking for up to 10 per cent back in terms of wages from some of the people who took care of us during the pandemic, like respiratory therapists and social workers and so on, is agreeing to give up to 39 per cent increases to people in AIMCo who, in fact, lost significant amounts of money for us. It's not based on integrity. It's not based on performance. It's based on who this government likes and who this government doesn't like, and I can tell you that they do not like you if you are not rich in this province. That's the underlying truth here.

What we have is a situation where people who rely on government understanding their circumstances and taking care of them are not experiencing anything from this government that would come close to empathy or an understanding of the nature of economics for people who are not wealthy. It's really disconcerting to hear that, and we know that the minister has just admitted that he understands that, that he is making a hit on average people, because he just said: maybe later, when more rich people have gotten even richer, we'll consider the possibility of taking this hit back. He just admitted that in the House, that they're going to reconsider that.

So here we are. We have a government that got lucky and therefore is strutting around the barnyard like a rooster, pretending that somehow they've done something big when, in fact, it was just sheer chance that they happened to be in government at the time that the international price of oil went up so extremely high compared to what was predicted even by them in their own budget. They can't pretend that they knew the future, because they didn't put it in their budget. We have the numbers.

What we have is a government that has made life more difficult for every single person in this province. They have put in policies that have resulted in the increase in school fees. They put in policies that have resulted in dramatic increases to utilities, some people paying two or three times as much as they would have if the rate cap was on. They've put in policies that increased our insurance rates for our houses and our cars, people often seeing double or triple the rate that they were seeing when there was a rate cap on.

We see that this is a government that has started to increase postsecondary tuition costs, in some cases up over 100 per cent of the actual cost. I mean, this is a minister who just moments ago said that they would really like to see people retrain to get back into the economy – “reskill” I believe is the word he was using – yet he's actually making it more expensive, in some cases 100 per cent more expensive, than it was before this minister got in.

We have a minister who is taking advantage of extreme luck and the fact that there are some people that are doing really well and pretending that all Albertans are doing really well when, in fact, the evidence is that that is not true. This side of the House brought in a bill to try to protect people who were going to lose their benefits or lose their houses because of their inability to pay for the utility bills and to stop them from having the utilities shut off, and what did this government do? They said that, no, we can't even do that simple thing of just allowing them to continue to live in their own homes. This is a government that has really made absolutely no decision to act on behalf of average Albertans. As long as, you know, the group of oligarchs who are making lots of money at this time continues to make money and make more money, they say that Alberta is doing well. But Albertans are not doing well. A very small segment of the province is doing well.

We've seen what happens when this government engages in these types of policies. We saw it, for example, when they gave away $4.7 billion to international corporations, some of whom actually used the money to move their headquarters, their head offices, out of Alberta into foreign countries. We see this kind of thing happen all the time, that the government makes a decision and all it benefits are these large corporations who are already profitable. It wasn't like they were even helping companies to make decisions to stay. In the example of the $4.7 billion they did absolutely nothing to ensure that that would derive a benefit for the province of Alberta. They didn't say: would you please make sure that you hire people in the province of Alberta? In fact, they didn't. We saw job losses after they did that, 50,000 job losses in the province of Alberta, and we're still behind in terms of full-time jobs three years later in this province. Now they put in a gas rebate, which they say is going to help Albertans, with absolutely no guarantee that that gas rebate will be passed on to the consumers. They've done nothing but make sure that the profitable corporations can take that extra 13 cents and tack it onto their profits, because there's nothing to actually require them to pass it on to citizens in this province. Again, what we have is this government who are constantly looking for ways to make the rich richer and to ignore the fact that the poor, by nature, are becoming poorer. That's what we see happening all the time.

A responsible, proper government would have a preferential option for the poor, always looking for ways they can shore them up and try to bring them back into the economy to make sure that they're doing well, but they have shut down the ways for people to get out of poverty and to move into a middle-class lifestyle by increasing tuition, by increasing other costs, and making it almost impossible for people. We see people who are on AISH, people who are reliant on the seniors' benefits and, of course, all Albertans, through their personal income tax, losing their money and losing their purchasing power.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members? The next member who caught my eye is the hon. Member for Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good to be able to speak to this motion. I'd like to thank the member for proposing it; however, I am interested in understanding the rationale. That member was the environment minister when the carbon tax was introduced into this province. I remember. I was sitting as an opposition member at the time, thinking about the cost that will be bringing forward to every Albertan, whether it be through heating, through their gas, through their food prices. I guess it's a little rich coming from the member that actually brought in the largest tax increase in Alberta's history to be now talking about this issue. The hypocrisy in this House sometimes astounds me.

But I want to talk to you about: the last member that just spoke from the NDP talked about how this government is – basically, in my words, he said that this government is heartless, that we don't care. I want to remind the member of the history of conservatives in this province. I want to remind him that it was a Conservative government that made sure that AISH recipients received the highest in Canada out of all the provinces, in fact, to the point where we actually pay over $400 more than the closest jurisdiction in Canada. Mr. Speaker, that was not an NDP government. If the member's assertion is that conservatives are heartless, it was not the NDP government that did that; it was a Conservative government that did that in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to remind the member that in this province almost 40 per cent of those who could pay taxes don't pay provincial taxes in this province. Who did that? Was that an NDP government that actually did that, or was that heartless conservatives who did that? No, it was conservatives that did that. Conservatives actually recognized that this should be a place where people can come, work hard, get out of poverty, get themselves in a position where they can provide for their family, start a business, work hard for their future.

In this province Conservative governments of the past have done a great job of being able to provide for opportunities for Albertans, have done a great job of recognizing that people come here from other countries in abject poverty, come here with just an opportunity. They're just looking for an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, and this is the place where they provided it. Past Conservative governments did that, not the NDP; not a past socialist government but a Conservative government. So when the member stands up and says that we're heartless, conservatives are heartless, let's remember what history has shown us, that conservatives have actually done a fantastic job.

Now, remember, Mr. Speaker: how could we do this? Was it only because we had oil and gas? Well, there's actually oil and gas in Saskatchewan. There's oil and gas in other provinces as well. So why is it that Alberta did so well? It was because of the Alberta advantage. The Alberta advantage was low marginal tax rate, lower regulatory burden than other jurisdictions, and this is really how we were able to get to the point we're at right now, because we recognized that the best social program is a great job. The hon. Minister of Finance said that. I think that's absolutely true and sometimes lost on the NDP, that really there's no way that someone on a fixed income, someone on AISH is going to survive very well. Even in rich Alberta, in a place where we are giving the most that we can give, it's very, very difficult for them to be able to make ends meet. I get that.

But let's talk about another issue, the other issue of inflation. Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest drivers of inflation is the cost of goods going up. That cost of goods going up obviously is carbon tax. The NDP and their close ally Justin Trudeau want to take our carbon tax from $50 a tonne to $170 a tonne, a threefold increase. Do you think that that's not going to create inflation, that that's not going to create a burden on our vulnerable in our societies? Do you not think that the cost of that is going to be borne by the poorest of our societies? If the NDP took a look at their arguments and recognized that a tax is a tax wherever you are but that it's worse borne out on the poor, and a consumption tax, which is basically the carbon tax because it affects everything – let's be clear. You can't live anywhere in this province without having things trucked to you. It has to be trucked if it's going to be – your food or whatever you have, whatever you bought, it was trucked here, and that carbon tax is a price on that.

So when we add that cost to those who are poor in our society, that is not compassionate. How can the hon. members really believe that that is a compassionate approach? In our approach of past Conservative governments here we recognized that someone should not be taxed until just under $20,000. Now, our federal counterparts, the Liberals, don't believe that. They're taxed at, I think, $9,000. That's when they start being taxed. Mr. Speaker, I think that their close friends and allies the Liberals in Ottawa should recognize, if they're really compassionate, that they should choose to start taxing at just under $20,000, but they don't.

This is why the hypocrisy of their argument is difficult to be able to swallow, and that's why most people in the province don't buy into this concept they have that they're the compassionate ones. They recognize that – you know what? – when it comes to government programs, there's always, always a scarcity, Mr. Speaker, and that scarcity is very difficult to be able to find a way to be able to get to everybody who needs it. We recognize it. That's why societies in the past that have thrived have recognized that that is not the solution. The solution is to be able to help businesses to prosper, to be successful so that they can actually pay their employees more, and we've done that. In fact, that is the reason why we have that Alberta advantage, because people can come to this province and get paid more.

Mr. Speaker, we give $20 billion to Ottawa that doesn't come back every year. Where does most of that money come from? Not transfer payments. That comes from income tax. We are able to pay our people more in this province because we did something right here historically. The NDP want to discount that, but it is because of that, because of that approach that we took in Conservative governments of the past, that we're in a position now.

Do you know that before the NDP got in, Mr. Speaker, we had no debt? We had no debt. We had the ability to provide so much more for our people. What was their strategy? Spend more; tax more. Then we got into a situation where it was $60 billion, $70 billion, $80 billion of debt. They put us in a precarious situation. This is why we had to make the difficult decisions that we did. But the hon. member the Minister of Finance has said that this is a temporary fix. This is something that we need to be able to work through, and as we get ourselves in a better situation, we will work through it.

But, Mr. Speaker, this motion is virtue signalling. When the members opposite had the opportunity for four years to be able to get rid of deindexing, they didn't. That's the reality. Yes, they've said that it was retroactive, but what about those three years that it wasn't retroactive? What about those three years, three and a half years, where they didn't do it? The reality is that they had to live those three and a half years. If they were concerned so much about the issue of affordability, they would have done it on day one, wouldn't they have? But they didn't. They did it three and a half years later, and you can make that retroactive, but for those three and a half years they had no ability to be able to virtue signal that they were actually helping those people who are suffering, those who are poor and struggling in this province. They didn't do it until they were close to the election. This is the reason why people do not buy into the arguments that they've brought forward.

I want to just finish with this, Mr. Speaker. The real reality that the NDP are looking for is that they're looking for a universal income. They want to make sure that they actually bring forward as much as they can for everybody, and actually this is what they're really looking for, a universal income.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The next member who has caught my eye is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Lethbridge-West for bringing the motion to the House and before us so that we could debate it. I have to say that it's displeasing to hear the members from the other side speak when it comes to actually working for Albertans. You know, day after day coming here into this House, into this Legislature during question period we see a Premier and his cabinet continuously just spin – spin – just full of rhetoric. We have absolutely no substance in terms of what this government is doing to actually work for Albertans and actually protect Albertans, right?

They continue to fail Albertans. They continue to fail Albertans, and a prime example of that, Mr. Speaker, is the $1.3 billion gamble on the Keystone XL. Waste of money, just a complete waste of taxpayer dollars when it comes to – and that's what this government does. It's like gamble after gamble after gamble. Anything that they can do in order to pass the buck when it comes to actually protecting Albertans and making life more affordable for Albertans, this government just decides to pass the buck. The Premier continuously does that during question period, just passes the buck.

Now, you know, the members on the other side like to complain about the carbon tax. But you know what, Mr. Speaker? The carbon tax had a real rebate in it, not like what this government has decided to provide Albertans, which is a completely fake program that doesn't even come into effect until next year. Now, that is incredulous right there in terms of, like, the rhetoric that comes out of this government. They like to say that they're doing something, that they're investing in Albertans, but the reality is that nothing could be farther from the truth.

Through the budget that we see before us, Mr. Speaker, we see nothing but cuts and more cuts and more cuts, but they have no problem giving $4.7 billion to corporations in the province of Alberta. Some of these corporations actually just – you know, it's this whole outdated and antiquated economic approach known as trickle-down theory. Albertans are getting sick and tired of Conservatives in power presenting austerity budgets time and time again, austerity budget after austerity budget, which cut more and more programming that actually benefits Albertans, yet they provide large tax breaks to big corporations.

3:30

I find it absolutely shameful that the Premier would actually come into this House and boast about jobs at Walmart as his major accomplishment. Now, don't get me wrong, Walmart is fine, Mr. Speaker – Walmart is fine – but that's not full-time, mortgage-paying jobs that Albertans deserve. The Premier should be ashamed that that's all he can refer to when it comes to actually creating jobs here in the province of Alberta. Part-time jobs: that's what Albertans get out of this government and this austerity budget, yet another austerity budget for Albertans.

You know, the members on the other side of the House continue to chirp over there as I'm speaking, Mr. Speaker, because they can't take it. They can't take that I'm actually speaking the truth in this House when it comes to the type of government that they are and that they're not actually putting Albertans first.

Now, the other big gamble that this Premier and cabinet decided to take was the fact that they were going to take the whole concept of the carbon tax to the Supreme Court, and they lost, Mr. Speaker. You know, we took the approach that this carbon levy is going to come into effect whether we like it or not because we do need to address the whole issue of climate change. Unlike on that side of the House, where there are members who refuse to believe that climate change is real, we on this side of the House know it's real, know that we've got to do something about it and that we're actually protecting the lives of Albertans when we do so.

The members on the other side of the House: Mr. Speaker, you see, they fail to recognize that when it comes to economic decision-making, there are such things called externalities. And the thing is that down the road those things are going to impact and actually have a negative effect on the economy if they're not addressed right now. If we do not address climate change, the economic impact, we're going to feel it later, and that's what this government fails to realize. We're going to have to pay for it later.

Now, what did we decide to do, Mr. Speaker? We decided – you know what? – if the federal government is going to impose a carbon tax on Canadians, then we might as well implement a program that's going to benefit Albertans and put Albertans first. The federal government was going to do it anyways. So we created a program that actually had a real rebate in it. So, yeah, people were going to have to be paying a little bit more, but for those that were at a certain threshold, they were going to get a rebate. And that was over 65 per cent of Albertans that were actually getting a real rebate, unlike the fake program that this government is actually presenting to Albertans right now.

Now, on top of that, the gamble that this Premier and this here cabinet took, Mr. Speaker, was that they crushed the Alberta plan, and now we've got to pay that same carbon tax, but we've got to pay it over to the federal government whereas our program was actually reinvesting in Albertans. We were actually investing it, diversifying Alberta's economy, moving forward, because Albertans were asking for that. [interjections] Chirp all you want. Chirp all you want. Go ahead. I'm actually speaking the truth here.

Now, they claim that everything is going up for Albertans. Well, everything was going up because of the carbon tax, but 65 per cent of Albertans were getting a rebate. Unlike with this government, Mr. Speaker, they decided to take the cap off insurance. A 30 per cent increase on insurance on Albertans. Utility fees: it was unbelievable. There are constituents that I have heard from, and when their utility bills came in, they're paying over $800 when they were used to paying $200. This is the reality that Albertans are experiencing under the poor and bad management of this here government.

They're failing Albertans, and here we are bringing a motion into this House that will at least try to rectify some of that, Mr. Speaker, especially when it comes to those who are most marginalized in our society. And, yes, I'm talking about seniors. I'm talking about people on AISH. That's the sad thing about all of this, that this government is actively debating in this House, where here we are being propositional, trying to bring in a positive piece of legislation, trying to bring positive debate into this House here so that we can actually stand up for Albertans, and the members on the other side are kiboshing the whole plan. They want to continue to make life less affordable for Albertans and especially those most marginalized.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The next individual that I see is the hon. Minister of Community and Social Services, with in and around five minutes remaining in the allotted time.

Mr. Luan: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for allowing me to chip into the debate here. As the Minister of Community and Social Services the AISH program is directly under my ministry. I'd like to share some facts so that they can be contributing to the debate here. The Alberta government continues to help Albertans with permanent disabilities meet their daily needs and live independently and find employment at their first ability. The assured income for the severely handicapped program, AISH, that we often talk about, provides financial and health benefits to eligible adult Albertans with permanent medical conditions that prevent them from earning a living. AISH coverage may include a monthly living allowance, health benefits, personal benefits for the clients and spouses and partners and dependent children.

Let me share some facts here so that we can be on the same page. Mr. Speaker, with Budget 2022, we increased $12 million into AISH to the point of $1.4 billion. That is the highest in Alberta's history for AISH benefits. That's fact number 1.

Fact number 2 is that $1,685 per month for the AISH benefit today remains the highest among the provinces in Canada. That's a fact.

Fact number 3, Mr. Speaker: just this month, as part of Alberta's recovery plan, the Premier and I announced an additional income support program for prenatal families where people are receiving AISH and income support. With an additional $600 added to that, the total of $856, that, again, is the highest prenatal benefit in the country.

Mr. Speaker, we work day in, day out with tangible actions and provide support services to Albertans, for those who are under my ministry. Oftentimes we call them the most vulnerable Albertans. We have actions followed with actions for tangible changes made to their lives. That is a fact. You know, I'm proud that my ministry provides the social safety net for our most vulnerable Albertans, as I stated in all those facts.

Not only for that part; in Budget 2022 we also added $34 million to help people who can get a job to get the job. Those of you know that when you have the ability to reach your full potential to get a job, it's more than just finance. Your mental health, everything else, your condition increases significantly.

Those are the facts on the table that I want to contribute to the debate in the House. You know, the NDP can be good at playing all the political cheap shots, but it remains a fact that when they were in government, they didn't accomplish what we did. That is the reason that I want to urge all members in this House to vote against this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The next individual who caught my eye was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, with a very short amount of time.

Ms Sigurdson: A very short time. Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Well, I'd like to speak, obviously, in favour of this motion. Certainly, you know, this Conservative government likes to say that the best social program is a job. But guess what? What if you're retired, if you're a senior living in this province on a fixed income? That program is not available to you, and that program is not for all Albertans either.

There are a few things government does, and I'll just help the members understand one aspect of that. One aspect of that is actually lifting the floor, that you support people who are vulnerable through public programs, and – guess what? – that redistributes the wealth, and that helps people who are pretty vulnerable. It seems like this UCP government doesn't get that. It doesn't understand what social programs are all about.

We know that there are so many things that they have cut. This $1 billion that they're getting extra by not indexing the income tax system is just one of the many, many, many things that this UCP government has done. I want to talk about the Alberta seniors' benefit. The fact that that is not indexed – they wilfully stepped in and pulled that back. We know that there's a 5.7 per cent increase in the cost of living, I mean, that's extraordinary, and it's very difficult for seniors to be able to manage that. But guess what else they've done? They cut grants in the seniors ministry. We used to have $2 million going out to community agencies to support seniors in their community.

They say that they want seniors to stay in their communities, but they're stripping those community supports. Now it's only $900,000, and – guess what? – they have $118 million in the capital housing plan, which is like a drop in the bucket. Our government had $1.2 billion. It's appalling how much the UCP has cut back so many programs. They cut the Seniors Advocate completely. That's $1 million. They said that it's all in the Health Advocate, but – guess what? – I asked in estimates, and there's no report.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview; however, under Standing Order 8(3), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of the motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would like to invite the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West to do just that.

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have heard that the government's stated intention is to move forward with an extra $500 a year in personal income tax for an average family. We have heard this government say that they are going to move forward with taking $500 a year out of people's child benefit. We have heard this government commit just now that it is A-okay by them that Alberta seniors' benefits will be reduced by $800 a year over the life of their fiscal plan. They have just committed that they are fine with taking $3,000 a year away from people who are on AISH benefits.

Now, that is their commitment, to continue to far more than nickel and dime average taxpayers, to take money away from folks who are getting child benefits or seniors' benefits. That's their position, and that's their commitment to the people of Alberta, but – you know what, Mr. Speaker? – we have also made a commitment to the people of Alberta. We will stop this pernicious and insidious – and any other big word that the Premier might want to use to make himself sound smart – attempt to take money out of people's pockets and raise their taxes. We will stop this tax on inflation. We will reindex the tax system. We will make sure that all benefits keep pace with inflation because it is the right thing to do. That's our commitment.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. We've also committed to making sure that we've got action on electricity rates, on car insurance, on school fees, on student loan interest, on tuition, on property taxes, by ensuring that we've got the right balance that puts people first. Here's the thing. Albertans trust this side of the House to do those things, to put them first.

This vote this afternoon on this motion, when this government rejects our offer to make sure that we are not raising people's personal income tax by 500 bucks a year, taking $500 a year out of their child benefit, when they reject our offer to take simple, concrete actions to defend people's pocketbooks and to ensure that we are taking action on cost of living, will just be another indicator that people cannot trust this UCP government. They cannot trust them to take action on affordability. They cannot trust them to manage the health care system. They cannot trust them to put in place a reasonable curriculum for K to 12 education. They cannot trust them to ensure that we are attracting new investment and diversification and keeping pace with a 21st-century economy.

They cannot trust them to even tell the truth about what they might do in their budget given that these budget documents that we have before the House don't even accurately represent inflation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is called. The hon. the Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You have asked us to exercise a lot of caution in the ways that we use the words "truth" and "lying" or getting around the truth or misrepresenting the truth. The Member for Lethbridge-West clearly just said that these members can't be trusted – you know, I don't have the benefit of the Blues – certainly was insinuating that we cannot tell the truth, that we were lying on this side of the House. I know that's unparliamentary, and I ask that member – I know she was on a roll with whatever that was, but certainly it's unparliamentary, and I ask her to apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that nothing could be further from a point of order, what the Deputy Government House Leader suggested. The Member for Lethbridge-West was saying that Albertans can't trust this government, and she listed a number of things. We have said that before. It's not a point of order at all.

The Speaker: Well, I'm prepared to rule. You're correct in your assertion that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West did provide a number of reasons why you can't trust this government, but the problem here is that she also made specific reference to them not being able to tell the truth, which, if attributed directly to an individual inside the Assembly, is definitely unparliamentary. A case could be made that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West did use unparliamentary language when referring to them as members, so I would caution her so. I've provided much commentary on this particular language inside the Assembly, and I expect that she will govern herself accordingly.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that guidance. I mean, where I was getting to is that the fact of the matter is that these budget documents that we have before the House currently do not accurately represent the inflationary expectations of the Bank of Canada, and certainly that inflation has reached a 30-year high at 5.7 per cent on an annualized basis. Nowhere do we find that accurately represented in these budget documents, showing again that this government would prefer not to talk about the cost of living and inflationary pressures on ordinary people.

I think that what we can expect them to do is continue to oppose efforts to make life more affordable for Albertans. No one is surprised by this anymore, that they are singularly focused on their own internal drama and not on the drama of the kitchen table, of trying to pay bills and get ahead. That, Mr. Speaker, is what the government of Alberta should be focused on, and that is our commitment on this side of the House going forward.

Thank you.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation on behalf of the Government House Leader.

Canadian Pacific Railway Service

16. Mrs. Sawhney moved on behalf of Mr. Jason Nixon:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport an essential service and implement back-to-work legislation to prevent any disruption or CP work stoppage to ensure Canada's economy remains uninterrupted.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good afternoon. As you are aware, on March 16, 2022, CP issued a lockout notice to those employees represented by the Teamsters Canada Rail Conference while TCRC provided a strike notice to CP. This weekend a work stoppage began, and CP moved to complete a safe and structured shutdown of its train operations. Alberta businesses rely on rail transportation, including services offered by CP, to ship their goods throughout the province, to the United States, and through gateways such as the port of Vancouver. This could not come at a worse time. Supply chains have already been disrupted by the pandemic, floods in British Columbia, cold weather, rail service issues, illegal blockades, and port congestion.

As Minister of Transportation one of my duties is to serve as the current chair of the Western Transportation Advisory Council, or WESTAC. WESTAC members represent the private sector, government, and labour and work collectively to resolve the constraints and inefficiencies that undermine the performance of western Canada's supply chain and transportation sector. At our recent conference in December the discussions reflected a range of dynamic factors that are influencing the transportation and logistics sector. We discussed the wide recognition that the goods movement sector must rethink how things are done from the planning stages, which need to be bold and reflect a range of pressing implications around emerging technologies as well as a focus on resilience and risk management. Resilience requires planning for extreme weather events, multifaceted cyberattacks, and the security of goods or means of conveyance. To quote from the meeting report: "factoring shifts in global trade and the flow of goods, the complexity facing transportation today is unparalleled."

Another duty of mine was to recently co-chair a meeting of the Council of Ministers Responsible for Transportation and Highway Safety. To quote from my remarks delivered at that council meeting, like other jurisdictions, the efficient movement of exports to other markets is a priority of the government of Alberta. As a landlocked province Alberta depends on well-functioning infrastructure, carriers, and logistics both inside and outside the province to move its exports and bring products to Albertans. A common theme is the resilience of Canada's transportation infrastructure to events such as severe weather. Recent flood and wildfire events in British Columbia have shown how vulnerable our supply chain can really be.

Now our Alberta businesses are faced with a labour disruption at CP, which will disrupt the movement of a broad range of goods and likely lead to increased costs for many Alberta businesses. I have already heard concerns from several sectors such as grain, livestock, forestry, fertilizer, and oil and gas regarding a work stoppage at CP. Here are just a few samples of what we have heard from our stakeholders on this situation.

From the Western Canadian Shippers' Coalition: we have ascertained that collectively, revenue losses would be in the range of $498M in the first week of a work stoppage or lock-out, $1.05B for 2 weeks, and by week three, $1.56B. It is also worth pointing out that for every one week of strike or lock-out action, there is a four-week recovery period.

The effects of a work stoppage or lock-out will reach beyond CP's network to other railways, because it will preclude the normal interchange of traffic between CP and other railways that is essential to the operation of the national transportation system.

From Purolator:

Should a work stoppage of any kind occur, the fundamental supply chain driving the Canadian economy will suffer adverse effects that will significantly impact all Canadians and international partners who rely on our vital transportation systems.

From the Food, Health & Consumer Products of Canada, who copied me on their letter to the federal government:

We want to underline the need for a solution to this situation to avert the serious consequences that this strike could have.

We respectfully ask that you pursue all avenues within your authority to help bring the talks between Teamsters Canada Rail Conference and CP to a rapid successful conclusion. This includes strongly encouraging the two parties to enter into voluntary binding arbitration.

And from the Alberta Cattle Feeders' Association: last year's drought resulted in a significant lack of feed grain in western Canada. As such, cattle feeders are relying heavily this winter on feed supplies from the U.S. Multiple supply chain issues with transportation have reduced feed availability, and farmers have been managing their animals' needs on a day-to-day, train-by-train basis. There's no buffer in the system. If strike action occurs, feed supplies will run out in one or two weeks, causing a serious animal welfare issue.

The labour disruption at CP could result in the shutdown of production facilities, which would impact workers, the economy, and the supply and demand for Canadian products. From an export perspective for Alberta, a rail stoppage means disruption to the movement of oil by rail to refineries in the United States. Producers of oil, natural gas, and petrochemicals may have to curtail some production if they cannot ship by rail and do not have sufficient capacity to store products on-site. The CP Rail movement stoppage, if it continues, will cause significant port backlogs, with additional costs for the manufacturing and food sectors.

As much of Alberta's southern agricultural production is exclusively served by CP, this shutdown in service will negatively affect our agricultural producers. It would impact spring crop and fertilizer planning and have immediate adverse impacts on Alberta's cattle-feeding industry. Alberta's cattle-feeding industry is currently reliant on imported feed corn and dried distiller grains from the United States to provide daily rations to over 1 million head of cattle in Alberta's Feedlot Alley. CP is the sole rail transporter of U.S. feed corn and dried distiller grains into southern Alberta, and any disruption to delivery would have serious consequences for Alberta's cattle feeders. This would adversely affect western Canada animal feed supplies, which are severely limited following drought during the 2021 crop growing season.

The effects of a work stoppage will reach beyond CP's network to other railways due to the normal interchange of traffic between CP and other railways. In the Vancouver area only CP can perform the final delivery of traffic originating on CN's network to many of the terminals on the south shore of Burrard Inlet while only CN can perform the final delivery of traffic originating on CP's network to terminals located on the north shore.

We know that CP is a federally regulated railway, and the government of Canada has exclusive purview over federal labour relations between class 1 railroads, like CP, and railway workers. My ministry monitors any developments regarding our transportation network, including railways, to assess the severity of the situation and impacts on Alberta's businesses. In light of recent supply chain challenges and the impacts that a CP work stoppage will have on Alberta businesses, our government is advocating to the federal government to take action to minimize the impacts of this labour disruption at CP. The federal government can implement back-to-work legislation, as they have in the past. In 2021 a strike at the port of Montreal was stopped when the federal government passed back-to-work legislation days after the strike began.

It is my view that given a disruption of this magnitude stacked on an already stressed system, it is imperative that the CP work stoppage end quickly. That is why we are calling on Ottawa to intervene. To avoid further aggravating an already suffering supply chain, we ask that the federal government take immediate and effective measures to ensure that service on CP's critical rail network resumes as quickly as possible.

The government of Canada should immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport an essential service to ensure that Canada's economy remains uninterrupted. The government of Canada should also consider implementing back-to-work legislation to bring an immediate end to this work stoppage. Inaction will lead to negative economic consequences for Alberta and Canada while damaging Alberta and Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier to international customers.

I have sent a letter to my federal counterpart, Transport Minister Alghabra, and to Labour Minister O'Regan outlining our concerns. I know my colleague at agriculture, forestry and rural development has also sent a letter to Ottawa. Allow me to quote from my letter, Mr. Speaker.

Dear Ministers Alghabra and O'Regan:

I am writing to raise concerns about the potential labour disruption at Canadian Pacific Railway (CP). On March 16, 2022, CP issued a lock-out notice to those employees represented by the Teamsters Canada Rail Conference (TCRC), while TCRC provided a strike notice to CP. A labour disruption could take place at 12:01 a.m. ET on March 20, 2022 if CP and TCRC cannot come to a negotiated agreement or agree to binding arbitration.

Alberta businesses rely on rail transportation, including services offered by CP, to ship their goods throughout the province, to the United States (US), and through gateways such as the Port of Vancouver. Supply chains have been disrupted by the pandemic, floods in British Columbia, cold weather, rail service issues, illegal blockades, and port congestion. Alberta is now faced with the potential labour disruption at CP, which could shut down CP's network and disrupt the movement of a broad range of goods, while leading to increased costs for many Alberta businesses.

Alberta has already heard concerns from several sectors such as grain, livestock, forestry, fertilizer, and oil and gas regarding the potential impact of a strike or lock-out at CP. A disruption of this magnitude, as I had mentioned earlier and will emphasize once again, stacked on an already stressed system, would be severe.

This is also a critical time of the year for crop producers and fertilizer shortages resulting from a strike or lock-out would jeopardize primary production. A rail disruption would also further stress livestock producers who are relying on imported feed from the US, as a result of the drought conditions experienced this past summer. Any of these additional adverse impacts on feed supplies would, in a matter of days, result in significant animal welfare issues, affecting millions of heads of cattle across western Canada. Crop and livestock production and the associated value-added processing is critical to Alberta and other provinces.

To avoid further aggravating an already suffering supply chain, we ask that the federal government take immediate and effective measures to ensure that service on CP's critical rail network resumes as quickly as possible, if a lock-out or strike were to occur. The Government of Canada should immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport an essential service to prevent any disruption or CP work stoppage to ensure Canada's economy remains uninterrupted. Inaction will lead to negative economic consequences for Alberta and Canada while damaging Alberta's and Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier to international customers.

That is an excerpt from the letter that I had sent.

Our Premier, along with his provincial colleagues Premier Moe from Saskatchewan and Premier Stefanson from Manitoba, has also shared concerns on this matter with the Prime Minister.

Let me assure you and all Alberta producers and businesses that we will continue to pressure Ottawa and urge that they take the appropriate action to ensure that goods continue to move. This is too important for all those involved to let it just play out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, on Government Motion 16 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has the call.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise this afternoon to add some comments around Government Motion 16 and what it's proposing that we advocate for as a province. You know, I guess I'll start with that I would like to really, sincerely believe that this motion is about protecting the supply chain. The problem is – and I guess I should even add that I'd like to even think that it's about protecting the workers, the unionized workers, that are there, but I have a hard time believing that. The reason is that members of the UCP have made very, very clear their views about unionized workers and unions, so I doubt this is about potentially protecting the workers.

The reason I call into question whether they're looking to protect the supply chains: I would like to remind members of the House that, quite honestly, there really hasn't been anything done by this government in terms of supply chains and securing those supply chains. I would bring attention to the failed response to keep goods and services and cattle and things like that moving across the border for 18 days over at Coutts this winter. As a matter of fact, we've even had members of the UCP cheering them on not only in this House but on location as well. So if there is such a concern about the supply chain, why then those actions, those words which would be counterproductive to that?

There have been other causes for concern around protecting the supply chains here. I would certainly bring forward the example of the meat-packing plant. During, you know, one of the heights of one of the waves of COVID we had a meat-packing plant shut down because appropriate steps weren't taken to protect those workers in that plant, which thus protected the supply chain. Again, just one example. Obviously, we saw that meat wasn't able to be produced, which rolls down to the farmers, their cattle, and whatnot.

Fair enough. I mean, we've seen some very, very unpredictable situations that have disrupted things during the pandemic: for farmers, you know, severe drought in Alberta – I think that was even mentioned by the minister in the opening comments – the floods in B.C. wiping out key transportation, not only rail but roads as well, thus making it even harder. But, again, you know, we didn't see any real, concrete actions by the government to try to mitigate those situations, which is why I'm standing up here saying that I'm doubting the intentions of this motion and what they're saying they're trying to achieve here.

If you're truly wanting to protect the supply chains, you also need to protect the workers as well, hence why we're seeing some head-butting here going on between the two. But I will point out, though, Mr. Speaker, that we are in a position of a lockout, okay? The company has locked out the workers. I noticed in the comments from the minister very carefully dancing around using the words "work stoppage" or "lock-out." At the heart of this motion it's about bringing in or advocating to be brought in back-to-work legislation. When you look historically at what back-to-work legislation is, it's about forcing the worker back despite any concerns they have. I've never actually seen one back-to-work legislation forcing the company back to the table to relook at things.

I find this motion to be quite counterproductive. You know, we hear the words from the minister about how they want to see an amicable agreement between the two parties, but amicable for who? I think there's a better way that we could be wording this motion to try to encourage both sides to come to an agreement that not only is in the best interests of all of the producers and businesses in Alberta to be able to get their goods and services moved across the country, bring in supplies so they can continue to do their business, but at the same time we need to protect the workers. When you have workers that are injured on the job, that ultimately affects the supply chain. When you have workers that are tired, that ultimately will lead to supply chain issues because they're not getting the job done. It's like asking a person to run a mile and then right after that mile you ask them to run that mile again, but you're not giving them any extra time because they're tired.

Mr. Speaker, I think there's a better way to do that. I think we can improve the language that's in the motion. Therefore, I do have an amendment to present to you. I will pass that up and await your instructions.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this will be referred to as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Government Motion 16 be amended as follows: (a) by striking out "urge the government of Canada to immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport an essential service and implement back-to-work legislation" and substituting "call on Canadian Pacific Railway and the Teamsters Canada Rail Conference to reach a negotiated settlement urgently to resolve the contract dispute" and then (b) by striking out "any disruption or CP work stoppage" and substituting "further work stoppage."

Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is about trying to encourage both sides. Again, just levelling back-to-work legislation: historically this is always about forcing the worker back despite any of the concerns they might have. Everybody might remember that we recently had a CN strike that was going on. The number one concern that I kept hearing every single time from those workers was safety. I know the track record for the government has been, shall we say, a little spotty with regard to treating Alberta workers' safety with a higher level of concern.

Honestly, I have no idea what it would be like to try to work around some of those trains and the things that are involved, but certainly some of the things that I heard are very big causes for concern. The number one, I think, thing that I heard was the number of hours sometimes workers are having to put in. Again, as you get tired, you start to make potentially mistakes. It's not like you woke up in the morning and looked in the mirror and said: well, let's see how many mistakes I can make on the job and make CP or CN's life miserable. I doubt that that conversation takes place. The reality is that as you get tired, the decisions you make maybe aren't quite as good as if you were fresh. What we're hearing around some of the concerns that members of the teamsters are saying about their work site is safety. We all know, at the end of the day, that when you have too many workers off that are injured or just simply burned out, that will affect our supply chain. If you are truly trying to advocate to protect the supply chain, the first easy place you can start is with the workers and protecting their safety and their ability to perform their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I would certainly advocate to all members of this House that they accept this amendment, and hopefully we will see the supply chain protected. We do want to see Alberta businesses get access to their supplies, the materials they need to move their business, to move their materials across the country, providing services to not only Albertans but all of Canada. Just simply dropping legislation to force them back I don't think is the best way to go, but I'm certainly, you know, waiting to hear some of the debate that will occur. Again, I hope that members will accept this amendment in good faith. This is about protecting the supply chains. This is about protecting the workers, and they will both help each other in complement with that happening.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Decore has moved amendment A1. Is there anyone that would like to speak to the amendment? I see the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Economic Development has risen.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. Honoured to rise and give a little clarity to the House regarding this amendment. I think it's important to know that some of what the member opposite just said is untrue, unfortunately. We are looking at strike action that was taken. This was not a lockout.

For a bit more colour, the TCRC took strike action unilaterally and prematurely in advance of the deadline, 1 p.m. after midnight Sunday, March 20, as per their strike notice. To be clear, CP did not initiate a lockout of its employees, as stated in the newly released issue by the TCRC. In fact, CP was still at the negotiating table in Calgary with the federally appointed mediators, where we have been since March 11, 2022 – these are their words – awaiting TCRC's response to CP's last offer presented at 8:45.

I think that with that being known by this House, I would just like us to vote against this and get back on Motion 16. Thanks.

The Speaker: Are there others who would like to speak to the amendment? I see the hon. the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of this very important amendment. I want to start by saying that supply chains are important. It's important to have those supply chains open and moving efficiently. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. If members would like to have private conversations – or perhaps I think it would be valuable for them to join in the debate following the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall. That's the great thing about the Chamber; everyone has equal opportunity to bring their points to the Assembly. I just ask that they do it when they're on their feet and not seated in their chair.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has the call.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this important caution. How much time do I now have left?

The Speaker: Well, I didn't take any of your time, because the clock stopped. You have 13 minutes and 40 seconds.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. I was talking about the importance of supply chains and how it's important to keep them moving in an efficient way. I think what we have seen from this government is that they tend to pick and choose what suits their political needs, and that becomes the issue of the day, and for what doesn't, then they don't do anything. They don't care about supply chains.

The case in point is that the Coutts border was blockaded for 21 days. There were many things within the purview of this government. There were many things they could have done to disperse those blockaders, who were illegally blockading Alberta's only 24/7 border point, yet I didn't see the Minister of Transportation write a letter advocating anything on that one. I didn't see the minister of agriculture writing a letter that that's our only border that is used by the agriculture industry for livestock and all those things. I didn't see any letter. Instead, what they were doing was cheering on those blockaders, and some of them participated in that blockade, went there three times. That's what they were doing with that important supply chain corridor when that was illegally blockaded by this government's supporters and friends. That was squarely within the jurisdiction of this government to handle.

Earlier the Member for Calgary-Buffalo told the Minister of Justice that there are protesters who are disrupting lives and businesses in the Beltline and that they've been doing it for a while now. The answer from this government is that, no, they can't do anything; it's within the jurisdiction of the city and city police and all that. Again, businesses are getting disrupted, lives are getting disrupted, but the government so far has chosen to do nothing. Absolutely nothing.

Now that they see this as an opportunity to play politics and please their base, they come out swinging that the federal government needs to start with the most heavy-handed tool and most unconstitutional tool to end this dispute. Just as a reminder, the Supreme Court of Canada, in the Health Services and Support – Facilities Subsector Bargaining Assn. versus British Columbia, 2007, decision, Supreme Court of Canada number 27, recognized that collective bargaining is a constitutionally protected right under section 2(d) of the Charter. Any suggestion that the government should start with violating that Charter right with back-to-work legislation is prima facie unconstitutional unless it can be protected under section 1 of the Charter. The government suggesting to another level of government to, I guess, intervene by breaching the Constitution, the highest law of this land, is not helpful.

This amendment recognizes that there are two parties, important parties, to this dispute. One is Canadian Pacific Railway, and I do recognize the importance of Canadian Pacific Railway, the role it plays in our economy, the role it plays in the Canadian economy. That's one of the key players in this dispute, and the second one is Teamsters Canada. They are exercising their right as the bargaining unit, their constitutionally protected right. What this amendment is doing is essentially calling on both the parties, who should be working together, to make sure that there are no disruptions in the supply chain. They should be bargaining in good faith. They should be talking to each other, getting back to the table to make sure that this dispute can be resolved without resorting to unconstitutional back-to-work legislation and all those things.

I don't think that we can support this government in advocating to the federal government to use unconstitutional means to resolve this dispute. We need to stay in the Constitution, we need to protect our rights under the Constitution, and both parties at the table need to understand that they need to work together in the interest of all involved to urgently resolve this dispute. We need these rail lines open. We need them safe. We need them staffed with skilled workers who are well trained and who have a decent amount of sleep so that they can keep them safe. All they're asking for are safe working conditions.

I know that rail lines have served the Canadian economy. I know that rail workers have served Albertans and Canadians throughout this pandemic and helped fill our groceries, get fuel to our businesses, and take our grain and crops to market. During this time . . . [interjection] I think I will utter the word "no" so that they may understand. During this time we also know that CP made significant profits, and those profits represent the collective hard work of those workers who keep these trains running, and all that those workers are asking for are stable jobs, adequate rest time, decent pensions so that they work long term at these jobs and keep taking goods to market and keep things going.

I will urge all members of this House to first urge their government to take things seriously which are in their jurisdiction. For instance, if I still ask them to do anything about the Beltline protest, they will read me the entire Charter about how protest is listed in the Charter, and then they will read me another section from the MGA about how municipalities are a separate creation who have separate jurisdiction and how the municipalities have acted and created the Police Commission and how the Police Commission hires police and how far removed this provincial government is from anything to do with the Beltline even though there are many things that they can do.

When it suits them, Mr. Speaker, they might even pick up the phone and call the police chief to discuss their own tickets. That's how far they can go. But when it comes to issues facing Albertans, whether it's in Beltline, whether it's at the Coutts border, you won't see any action. You will see just dithering, and even in the letter they will write later on, they will try to kind of wash that away: no, no, that was something different we were writing. They'll even try to hide that letter. In this case now they're playing politics and asking the federal government to do something completely unconstitutional.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, largely because if the member was speaking to the main motion, I would be happy to provide as much leniency as possible; however, over the last 10 minutes or so he hasn't made very many references or even tied his remarks back into the fact that we're speaking to amendment A1, which was moved by his colleague from Edmonton-Decore, that speaks more specifically to a number of issues that are contained within the motion. I might encourage him. He may have other opportunities to speak to the main motion, but if he wants to speak to the amendment now, that would be much more appropriate.

Mr. Sabir: Good. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just trying to bring back my remarks. Why I think this amendment is important is, one, that it is in line with what's needed to be done, that there are two parties that need to be at the table. They need to take this issue seriously, and they need to bargain in good faith. And it takes out any suggestion that this motion was initially making, that the federal government should engage in any unconstitutional activity or behaviour like back-to-work legislation. It takes that out. That's why it's important.

It respects collective bargaining rights as recognized by the Constitution of Canada. I think playing politics doesn't help, but if we call on these parties who actually can do something about it, that would be more helpful. That's why I'm urging all members of this House to support this amendment. This amendment, I guess, is the right call for the parties who are involved to get back to the bargaining table and settle this dispute so that our rail line can keep going and so that workers can have stable jobs, safe working conditions, adequate rest time, better pensions so they can keep those trains running.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that members will vote in favour of this amendment and not in favour of any unconstitutional, heavy-handed action from the federal government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on amendment A1 to Government Motion 16 is there anyone else wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I welcome an opportunity to speak to amendment A1 of Government Motion 16. I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore for bringing forward this amendment. I think it's useful in a couple of ways. You know, I think it speaks to not just a change in wording but back to the first principle of why and how important it is for us to maintain the integrity of our rail system generally in Canada and CP Rail's system specifically.

We all know how important it is to move goods and services. We've seen different versions of disruptions in supply chains, really, all around the world. I think it should be a way by which we can learn lessons to improve the efficiency and the integrity of those transportation systems that support our supply chains not just in Canada but around the world.

Looking at CP specifically – and some knowledge I have of the CN line as well, which runs through my constituency and has its western Canada headquarters just right in my constituency as well, is that for quite a number of years now these rail lines have been running very hot. There's a lot of demand on those rail systems, and the companies, Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Rail lines, have just been continuing to expand and build their capacity, which is fine, but not if you're doing it without supporting the workers who actually run the system and the infrastructure that you are relying on.

From time to time when you see a labour dispute like this one – right? – I think it is a point in time to learn lessons about: what is the state of function of CP right now? They're doing very well. You can see that they're making record profits and so forth, but are they making sure that they are maintaining the integrity of that system? Key to the integrity of that system are the workers and the conditions in which they run and work from day to day.

Clearly, there's something wrong – right? – at this moment with CP and their relationship with those workers, who are integral to the functioning of the rail system, so I would suggest that the amendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore brought forward here is very key to make sure that the collective bargaining process that is being engaged right now between the management of CP and the 3,000 or more workers at CP that are being affected here is taken very seriously.

Different issues at the table: I'm not privy to all of what they are debating and negotiating for, but key elements of it are around safety and capacity. I know – it's probably similar to CP – that at CN they certainly have a shortage of workers in the field. They're constantly being called for more work and overtime and whatnot, and sometimes, as the workers will point out, that comes at the expense of safety and so forth. To have something like that being negotiated is absolutely essential to make sure that the trains are running, that the trains are running on time and they're running safely.

You know, I think we all can agree here that we want those things to happen and that we all depend on those things to happen for moving goods and services that we produce here in the province of Alberta to their markets and to make sure that we're getting the goods and services delivered that we depend on from elsewhere in the country and indeed elsewhere in the world. At the heart of that right now are two parties that need to negotiate in good faith and negotiate very aggressively to come to a resolution.

Mr. Speaker, this isn't the first time that we've seen this kind of thing while in the Assembly with a rail line, a rail company. You know, indeed, we can see it happening from time to time across this country. What we do not need to play into is the notion that our rail companies in Canada are building as part of their business plan the expectation that they will be ordering their workers back to work through legislation. We don't want that to be their de facto business plan for dealing with labour issues in their company. If we allow that to happen, then, of course, those other issues that I talked about before – the safety, the integrity of the system, ensuring that you have adequate workers, that you're attracting workers and that they're being fairly compensated and being given a safe circumstance in which to work – all of those things can be compromised if there is somehow an expectation by one or the other party that there will be back-to-work legislation any time there's a labour problem in the company, right?

That is, I think, pretty useful and specific to this amendment, but I think it's useful and specific to the spirit of at least part of what I heard from the other side in regard to making sure that the trains are running as part of a way to maintain and to help to build our economy and recover. I think the amendment serves a very useful function, right? I believe that it definitely is something that we can all agree on, that we want the trains there, we want the system to be working, we want our goods and services to be brought and sold in markets and things that we purchase as well, and we want that to be safe and sustainable in the broadest possible way.

I find it interesting. As the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall had just pointed out, you know, it's interesting to see this provincial government making comment on a national issue, which is fine. You can urge the national government to do this and that. I mean, it's perfectly fine. But the absence of any action in a similar disruption of transportation and systems in our Coutts border crossing, which resulted in millions of dollars of lost goods and services trading – right? – caused lots of disruption and indeed lots of confusion around the integrity of our road transportation system: that was something that this UCP government could have acted on. You know, I just want to point that out because, of course, we're dealing with something that we're urging another level of government to do, and in fact when we did have something that was within our purview, there was a failure to act by this same government. I mean, just pointing that out.

Maybe that will help the members on the government side to endorse and support this amendment to Government Motion 16. I would strongly urge them to do so. I think we've convinced most or all of our members of the Official Opposition, and maybe we can get the government to see the light as well.

Based on those comments, Mr. Speaker, I cede the floor and look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Speaker: On amendment A1 are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address this amendment, which I think is a great contribution to a very thoughtful and concerning situation that we have here in the House. I welcome the introduction of it by the Member for Edmonton-Decore. I appreciate some of the comments of the minister when they made the introduction of the initial motion as well in that we are in a very serious time where our economy has been significantly affected by a number of larger issues. Clearly, we've been through two years of a pandemic, which has caused disruption in supply chains and as well in business progress and planning and so on. As a result, many businesses in the province of Alberta have been under a great deal of stress over the last number of years. That would include, you know, almost every business that relies on the transportation of goods, and I would think the vast majority do.

Certainly, for those that are involved in important fields to our economy such as agriculture, where the transportation of agricultural goods is absolutely critical not only to this year's success but for future years' success for farmers who need to sell this year's crop in order to get next year's in and so on, a disruption now, we know, in this field tends to have an effect that's not just simply about the immediate but can actually have a consequence over a period of time. Of course, manufacturing has a very similar kind of experience of disruption through the COVID time. That has been very problematic.

We also know that we've had disruptions because of protests, particularly at the Coutts border crossing in the province of Alberta. It was very unfortunate that at that time there was, you know, some decision being made by this government not to take action, and indeed it did not do so for weeks while we saw the supply chains significantly affected in this province. Unfortunately, of course, we also saw some members of this House actually actively participate in supportive activities around these kinds of disruptions to business in this province. The whole thing around the Coutts border crossing was very problematic, of course, because some of the explicit intention behind the border crossing could be simply described as seditious in the sense that they were actually asking for the Prime Minister of the country to be set aside outside of the democratic processes of this country. Unfortunately, there's at least a segment of that group that was willing to do so in an armed way, apparently gathering significant amounts of arms, ammunition with what I understand was an intention to actually assault members of the RCMP and other police forces. So it was very concerning that we saw any kind of level of support for something that had those edges to it.

5:00

Mr. Hunter: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Member for Cardston-Warner – Taber-Warner.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hunter: Taber-Warner, Mr. Speaker. I raise a point of order under 23(h) and (g). The hon. member basically made allegations against myself as a member. Now, that would be considered as a point of order.

- But, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to you that 23(g) says:
- refers to any matter pending in a court or before a judge for judicial determination
 - (i) of a criminal nature from the time charges have been laid until passing of sentence . . .

If the member is correct about what he just said, then this would be before a court, but it isn't correct. I've never been approached by the RCMP in this matter, and the member knows full well, as I've stated in this House and many times before, that I never took part in any illegal blockade. As the member knows, I was never there when the border was closed. I made it very clear in my press releases that I would not be there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the two parts that I've just stated here – 23(h), makes allegations against another member. If he's doing that, it's a point of order. However, if he is stating that there should be criminal charges involved, then it's 23(g). Either way, the hon. member should withdraw and apologize for these comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, I don't think that this is relevant. Certainly, the member was pointing out, you know, comparing and contrasting the rail stoppage and the stoppage of flow of commercial traffic on the road to the Coutts border crossing. He made no other allegations besides making, I think, quite an apt comparison between the two and contrast as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to rule unless there are other submissions.

You know, members, as I provided caution earlier to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall with respect to amendment A1, I think it's important that I provide some additional context on debate inside the Assembly. If we were debating a piece of legislation, a bill inside the Assembly, the Speaker is much more inclined to provide the widest swath possible, particularly at second reading, with respect to comments towards the bill. This is why, largely speaking, the Speaker is not interventionist in any nature with respect to relevance.

Already, earlier, I provided caution about speaking to the amendment, which seems to be a significant language change to the original government motion and nothing to do with what the hon. member was speaking about. Given that this is a government motion, in the strongest terms possible I will remind the member that his comments should be specifically relevant to the amendment.

In addition to the comments made by the Member for Taber-Warner, I would say this: with respect to the principle of sub judice – and sub judice is a very complex principle because it is when charges have been laid or the matter has been set down before a court. While I don't know specifics on this case, I think it's unlikely that the rule that the Member for Taber-Warner has risen on would apply in this case. So it is unlikely that sub judice would apply here. As such, that would not be a point of order with respect to the point of it being before the courts.

Having said that, I would provide some caution to the member and all members, in fact, when speaking about potential charges being laid or other matters of a criminal nature, that we all have a certain responsibility with respect to the judicial system and ways our comments inside the Chamber may or may not prejudice a judicial proceeding. We all have an incredible amount of privilege that comes with being a member, but that privilege doesn't mean it comes without responsibility. I would encourage the member to be cautious when referring to matters of a criminal nature that may or may not be before the court, and as such I'm sure he wouldn't want to prejudice a proceeding of the court.

Now, lastly, and perhaps my ruling is more robust than it needs to be, but with respect to making allegations of another member, your Speaker has provided a lot of comments on this issue just a couple of weeks ago, when the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall was speaking. This is a very complex matter that is very difficult to rule as a point of order or not because the member didn't specifically refer to any particular member inside the Assembly and more broadly made statements about the government.

Now, while I appreciate that there are not that many members of the government who may have attended, so it's possible to narrow that down and make that feel as though the member is making a specific allegation, we need to provide lots of latitude with respect to the freedom of speech inside the Assembly. I know that members of the government also like to make allegations about people who have attended protests or otherwise in the past, be they oil and gas pipeline protests or otherwise, so there is a natural tit-for-tat that sometimes happens in the Assembly. I think that it's important that, very clearly, the language did cause disorder today. While I'm not going to rule it as a point of order, I want to provide some additional caution to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford with respect to potentially making allegations about members of the Assembly.

I will find a point of order on relevance because the member hasn't been speaking to the amendment. We're not at second reading of a bill. He needs to remain focused on the amendment that's before the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Debate Continued

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your advice and direction; it was very complete today. I will move back, if I have perhaps wandered off a little, to the amendment itself and to the request in the amendment to take the concerns that have been expressed in this House by myself and others about the seriousness of this situation, particularly in the context that I was providing of other situations here in this province of a threat to supply chain issues and how important it is that we actually reach out to try and ensure that the well-being of all Alberta citizens, whether they be employers or workers or people who are just in one way or another taking in the advantages of having a good supply chain in order to create good work opportunities and the chances for people to earn good income in this province.

[Mr. Milliken in the chair]

Because of the importance of all of this, I think that we should be asking exactly what it is that it says in this amendment, that we should be immediately asking for, in this case, the workers and the employer to get together and to resolve these issues and to resolve them in a way that actually deals with the underlying concerns that have been brought forward by the workers and the need for the businesses to maintain their business. At the same time the two things are not incompatible at all. Simply, it's a matter of the businesses ensuring that the work that the workers are doing is within scope, is done in a safe way, and that they are adequately compensated. Pretty simple, straightforward requests.

I believe that this employer certainly has demonstrated they have the ability to raise the funds in their work in order to be able to meet those needs quite adequately given the profits that they have brought in over the last number of years. As a result, we would certainly like to encourage that they sit down at the table with the resources that they clearly have and resolve this issue so as to not negatively affect other Albertans who are depending on that work to be done in order for them to be able to maintain their own work or their own business and so on.

The second part of the amendment speaks particularly to the fact that there already is a work stoppage that has been instituted, and we know that that work stoppage was instituted by the employer, that it isn't a strike at this point; it is a lockout, and therefore the only action that's been taken to actually interfere with our supply chain has been taken by the employer at this particular time. So I think it would be very important for the government to work with that employer to make a new decision to stop locking out the workers so that they can get back to the table, so that they can make an early resolution. I certainly hope, whatever happens in this case, that it is done quickly and is done peaceably, and I think that the role of the government is to ensure that or to request that and to facilitate that appropriate resolution.

You know, I think that the wording changes that are suggested in this amendment are very clear, and that is to call on Canadian Pacific Railway and the Teamsters Canada Rail Conference to reach a negotiated settlement urgently to resolve the contract dispute. That seems like a very good thing for a government to do, something that would benefit all of us, that would address the needs that were outlined by the minister initially, when the initial bill was introduced and as such would lead to a satisfactory resolution.

I'm concerned, on the other hand, that if we get into an antagonistic dispute where workers' rights are subverted through some kind of process of forcing them back to work against their constitutional right to assembly and to strike, which has been upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada on numerous occasions, that would actually lead to an elongation of the problems in this contractual situation such that the workers, while being forced back to the work site, simply do not do the things that they would do to make things run quickly and, instead, would do things to make sure that the contract negotiations had to come back to the table by acting in a way that is slower, for example, than they might do otherwise or not engaging in necessary activities that are outside of their legal scope or things of that nature.

You actually might be exacerbating the problem by actually forcing the workers back in because you take away their right to govern their own work integrity. The only way that they can then respond is by changing the nature of the work that they actually engage in. There's nothing left to them. They can't negotiate in any other way. So what you find is that you have workers engaging in work slowdowns or refusing to do things they would normally naturally do even if it really wasn't part of the job because it facilitated the good functioning of the business. They would do it anyways because workers often tend to do more than they're actually paid for and more than they're asked to do just because they're part of a system and they know how to make it work and function well because they're there every day, but they can choose to stop doing all of that.

What we might have is an elongated conflict between employer and employee rather than an abbreviated one if the bill were allowed to pass without this amendment. So I think it's really important that we as a government seek to bring this to closure as quickly as we possibly can, that we should act with good integrity, respecting the laws of the land about the right to collective association and collective bargaining and the right to strike, and instead seek to become a partner with all of the people involved in this dispute, that we're absolving this in a good way with the resources that are clearly available in this situation, already inherent in the company and the union services, and bring all of those good-working, successful people together to come to a resolution that will bring us to a better place more quickly and with more long-term positive benefits. If we force people back into a work situation, the consequences could be years in the making, because they would be going back to work upset, angry, and having had none of their concerns addressed. If we instead have them come back to the negotiating table and have those concerns addressed, then we know that the work will move forward in a positive way, and that's, of course, what I think everyone on both sides of the House would like to see in this particular situation.

In fact, in all labour situations that should be our ultimate goal, not, you know, to use the strong arm of the law to shove people back into a place they do not wish to be but to entice them back into that place by ensuring that their livelihood and the livelihood of all of their fellow citizens will be improved if they sit at the table, if they have good, open conversations with their employer and come to a satisfactory mutual resolution. Clearly, I can't see that we would seek any other kind of outcome beyond that.

I'm afraid the original motion, without this amendment, was actually moving in that direction, moving to twisting the arm, pushing people in a direction that is not going to be perceived by them as in their best interests and therefore would create the factors for underlying mistrust of both government and of the employer for a significant length of time. If we live in a culture where workers continually find they have to mistrust government, where they continually find they have to mistrust their employer, we certainly are going to find more disruptions or other mechanisms to lead to exactly the opposite outcome than the one that we desire.

I guess, in conclusion, I would like to commend the Member for Edmonton-Decore for bringing forward this resolution and suggest that the government actually be consistent and not interfere in this case beyond being a positive contribution. We certainly know that in the past they have not jumped in to protect the supply chain readily, and, as such, it would seem somewhat ironic if they chose to do it in this particular case. We really should try to be a bit more consistent as government in order to ensure that the citizens of this province, you know, understand what the rules are, feel that the rules will be applied appropriately, and are happy to be part of a process in which their concerns, their rights are recognized, are responded to, and it leads to a better outcome for all citizens in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Thank you. We are on amendment A1. Are there any members wishing to join debate? Seeing none.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are on the main motion. Are there any – I see the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Economic Development has risen.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to be back on the original motion. I'm standing in support of Government Motion 16, very similar to what our industry is standing in front of the House of Commons right now asking for, back-to-work legislation to save their industry at a critical time. It's imperative that this House declare rail transport an essential service and that the back-to-work legislation is implemented to maintain the integrity of our supply chain. This isn't something that we jumped to, folks. We've been doing this for weeks. The Transportation minister, the Premier, we've been asking for binding arbitration. We've been asking anyone that'll listen, right up to the Prime Minister's office. This isn't something that was jumped at.

This is specifically important to the agriculture industry. The strike action – and it is strike action – by the Teamsters Canada Rail Conference presents the most recent in a series of challenges faced by the sector, and, simply put, it's one that we cannot afford. In the lead-up to the strike decision our ministry was in constant conversation with industry and our provincial and federal counterparts to determine the impacts of a strike action and to determine how to mitigate what we could. Our strategy has been to keep the channels of communication open, particularly across the prairie provinces, and to provide a unified response that best serves western producers, because we're feeling this here. We have the processing capacity, we have the feeding capacity on behalf of Saskatchewan, on behalf of Manitoba, but we feel it here intimately.

Mr. Speaker, let me begin by stating that the industry that will be hardest hit by the suspension of rail transport will be the fed cattle sector. This industry is currently reliant on imported feed corn from the United States to provide daily rations to over a million head of cattle in Alberta's Feedlot Alley. Alberta imports an average of 57,000 tonnes of U.S. corn and almost 11,000 tonnes of U.S. dried distiller grains each week. However, there's a projected 400 per cent increase in corn imports to Alberta and Saskatchewan in 2021-2022. This is the highest on record since '02-03 – it should be no surprise – the last substantial drought that the province saw. This massive reliance on U.S. imports is a consequence of the prolonged dry conditions and the extreme heat experienced in 2021, and that's why this isn't a business-as-usual situation; this is a critical, timely situation.

We know the drought severely depleted available feedstock in our province, crop yields fell far below historical averages, and of the limited quantities produced, the majority of product was graded moderate to good and therefore shipped out of our borders for mailing and export. This left Alberta producers with severely limited access to domestic feed-grade product, and in many cases international markets became the sole source to secure feed. To compound this issue, CP is the only rail transporter of U.S. feed corn into southern Alberta. This means that many feeders are not only reliant on feed imports but on CP Rail imports more specifically. Mr. Speaker, for many feeders the suspension of CP Rail transport means the elimination of their sole source of feed. This places many producers in dire straits, and it's why we must pass this motion, hopefully unanimously, as one body, to show our support for this industry.

For the benefit of the House, to give a little context on the immediacy of the situation, you know, an animal consumes an average of 24 pounds of grain each day along with silage and supplements. You can play with those numbers a little bit when you take into account corn instead of barley, but it's close. One railcar feeds an estimated 8,000 head for a single day. That's one day. This means that our province requires 900 to 1,000 trains per week to sustain current cattle populations. I rise today to make it abundantly clear that feed supplies will run out in an estimated one to two weeks as a result of a CP Rail suspension. Simply put, in the not-so-distant future we will not be able to feed livestock and will be faced with an animal welfare crisis as a result of the strike.

I was in Picture Butte two weeks ago speaking to feeders about this very thing, and a gentleman grabbed me by the collar and said: you gotta let 'em know this leads to bullets and backhoes; they have to understand that. So I hope that when we're talking about this in this House, no one is playing politics with this, no one wants an unfair deal for anybody. We need this to move ahead because it's critical. The emergent nature of this situation cannot be overstated, and it requires the immediate attention of all members in this Chamber. Given the immediacy of this issue our government, along with our counterparts in other prairie provinces, has been investigating potential solutions to make up for lost imports. As I mentioned previously, we need about 900 to 1,000 trains per week of feed to sustain current feeder populations.

Although freighting supplies in by road seems like an obvious alternative, we know that this is not a viable solution. It's estimated that 1,000 to 1,500 super-B trucks would be needed per week to replace the volume of feed grain currently being brought in by CP trains; however, we simply do not have anywhere near this capacity with respect to both vehicles and drivers to meet the demand for Alberta feedstock. There is a current and increasing trucker shortage, not lost on anyone in this House, not only in Alberta but across Canada. Trucking HR Canada estimates that 18,000 truck driver jobs will be vacant by this month, so we know that trucking commodities across the border does not provide an alternate solution to lost rail capacity.

Culling is the last resort in a feed crisis; however, in the event that the sector is driven to this outcome, current processing capacity presents a challenge. Meat processors are at or near capacity, and product deliveries are nearly one month behind schedule. Packer utilization rates were around 95 per cent in 2021 compared to 2015. The western Canadian slaughter reached 2 and a half million head in 2021, which represents an 8 per cent increase over 2020. The year-to-date 2022 federally inspected western Canadian cattle slaughter is running about 2 per cent higher in 2021, with 49,000 head slaughtered per week.

I'm telling you this because we have still not worked through the glut in the supply that came from the first COVID shutdowns in 2020. We're getting close, we're working through it, but we haven't. There's no more capacity to be taken up. We can't meet the capacity of a potential surge in processing demand as a result of culling procedures. Alberta does have a small advantage with over three-quarters of Canadian beef processing occurring in western Canada and the vast majority concentrated in Alberta, but because products cannot be exported through rail, we may face a major bottleneck at the processing site resulting in a backlog of fed cattle like we saw as a result of the pandemic.

While this strike threatens the cattle sector most significantly, it also impacts Alberta's crop producers. Grain shipments have been challenged this winter with British Columbia mainland disruptions, cold weather events, and illegal blockades. CP order fulfillment versus hopper car demand in Alberta remains poor, and service has not recovered following the B.C. mainland disruptions in November '21. As a result, crop producers were already facing rail issues prior to the strike. However, the demand for rail capacity in the crop sector is much smaller compared to the import needs of the cattle industry.

The 2021 drought decreased crop yields, and many producers held moderate to low carry-over crop inventory. For instance, yields of the major crops of spring wheat, canola, and barley were 37 per cent below the five-year average. Midway through the 2021-2022 crop year, producer deliveries of crop to licensed elevators and processors were down 30 per cent from a year ago and Canadian crop exports down by 40 per cent. As a result, the CP Rail strike has a smaller impact on crop exports and elevator stocks. The demand for rail capacity is lessened by reduced crop export quantities, but concerns remain around the import of necessary seeding inputs like chemical and fertilizer.

Mr. Speaker, our government has worked hard to stem the impacts of this strike. On March 4, 2022, I sent a letter to the Hon. Seamus O'Regan, federal Minister of Labour, raising concerns with the CP labour dispute. To be clear, Minister O'Regan is still held up in Calgary. He's saying all the right things and working hard, and we are honestly very hopeful that they can come to some kind of amicable solution quickly with his help. The letter highlighted the immediate adverse impacts a strike would have on Alberta, specifically on the cattle feeding sector. It also requested that Minister O'Regan take immediate steps to ensure that a solution can be reached between CP and the Teamsters Canada Rail Conference, namely, at the time, to push both parties into binding arbitration, as was asked by industry. This would keep the trains rolling while bargaining continued.

The Minister of Transportation and I sent a joint letter to the federal Minister of Transportation regarding the CP labour dispute, and my deputy minister has raised these concerns at all the FPT deputy minister calls. We've met with our provincial counterparts in Saskatchewan and Manitoba to discuss the impacts of the strike and outline potential supports, and of course we've maintained constant communication with industry groups throughout the process to keep track of their concerns and to forecast emerging issues.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of feeding the world. This is a matter of protecting a very important industry. We must ensure that the agricultural supply chains remain intact in order to keep food on the shelves and on our tables. The ongoing geopolitical crisis in Ukraine points to the fragility of the global food system. Ukraine has about 18 million metric tons of wheat stocks available for export, but with Black Sea ports closed, these stocks won't reach the market.

The CP strike and rail movement stoppage will likely increase port backlogs, creating additional costs for manufacturing and food sectors, impact spring crop planning, and have immediate adverse impacts on Alberta's cattle feeding industry. More generally, it can mean empty shelves and tables in the near future. It could also mean devastation to our fed cattle sector, immediate animal welfare considerations, and it has the potential to delay much-needed relief for livestock producers by continuing to back up the system.

Mr. Speaker, I support the motion to urge the government of Canada to declare rail transport an essential service. This is not an unconstitutional ask, as the opposition are claiming. Declare them an essential service, and implement back-to-work legislation to ensure Canada's economy remains uninterrupted. Or put them in binding arbitration. Just get it done. Much like the industry, we just need to see this happen.

To the members of this House, I urge you to do the same and to support Alberta's agriculture industry. You know, I had hoped that this would be a positive thing that the whole House could get behind, especially in lieu of the fact that our industry is in front of the House of Commons right now. I do not know if it's abstract when 95 per cent of your caucus lives within the Anthony Henday and you can't understand the seriousness of this, but when I listen to what I've heard for the last hour, I cannot believe what I've heard.

We need to support the industry. Of course, the union and the company are going to get through this and represent the needs of the workers. Nobody is saying that that shouldn't happen, but this needs to stop. It's too big, and it needs to stop. This isn't about a union or a company; this is about Alberta. I hope we can all support this.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has risen.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to, you know, ignore maybe some of the comments that the minister just made. I appreciate that he's frustrated. Generally speaking, though, I would like to think that both sides of this House work together quite well when it comes to the industry and that we're able to have a discussion that actually gets us to a place of mutual respect.

My concerns – and I hope I get as much latitude as the minister did when it comes to speaking to this motion, because I do have some thoughts and some concerns. Part of it is that I have serious concerns about the supply chain in this province. I have serious concerns about the supply chain across the whole nation and the impact that it's had on our economy since COVID, since the floods of B.C., since the droughts, all of those things. I've had serious concerns. I've had concerns to the point where even during estimates I asked the Minister of Transportation what the plan was going to be, because we knew this was coming. I asked the minister what the plan was going to be, because we knew this was coming. I asked the Minister of Finance the very same question, "What was the plan?" because we knew this was coming.

In January the freight car shortage that was occurring across the nation was the lowest since 2014. We were having issues in January getting product to market, and when this was brought up, when this was discussed with the government, the response I got was silence. There was no plan being created, being discussed to address these very issues that we're talking about today.

The fact is that the government is talking about this today only because of the fact that it will be something that will have a serious impact on the industry, but the reality of it is that we've had serious impacts on our supply chain for the industry for months that this government has refused to address.

The Coultts blockade would be an example of that. We had trucks that were stopped at the border with beef products, with feed that couldn't get across the border. The government didn't react to the extent that they are reacting right now to address those very stoppages. We have honey sitting in the Vancouver harbour right now that can't be exported because we can't seem to get our supply chain working internationally.

There is a serious issue with our supply chain in this province, and there is a serious issue with the supply chain across the whole country – I don't disagree – but when I asked the government to come up with a plan to look at how we're going to address these issues, why is today all of a sudden the day where it becomes the problem when we've seen the problem growing over months and months and months and yet silence?

So, again, I'll be clear what I asked the government for earlier. I sent a letter to the Minister of Transportation, to the Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Rural Economic Development, to the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Innovation, as well as to the chair of our rural stewardship committee asking for us to come together and have a conversation about what is going on with our supply chain. Let's look at our strengths, let's look at our weaknesses, and let's look at how we get our product to market. That is collaboration. That is trying to work across the aisle. That is not about trying to abandon an industry, like the minister just likes to say.

What it is is that we should have been having this conversation a long time ago, and the problem is that our economy is taking a hit because of the lack of action that has been taken in regard to this. This is not a new issue. Rail capacity is not a new issue. But what it is becoming is the government trying to turn it into a labour issue, and it's not a labour issue. It is the fact that we can't get our product to market. It's the fact that we can't import and export the way that we should because we're a landlocked province that relies on these supply chains, and when they don't work, we're in trouble. Maybe let's focus on that. Let's create a solution to our supply chain. Let's be proactive, create a plan, and look at doing it. Let's work together on that. I have no problem with that.

I have a problem with this motion because of the fact that this is about federal jurisdiction. The province has a responsibility to fix some things in the province, and they've been silent on fixing anything in the province. That's the fundamental issue with this. If the government wanted to put something forward today that read something along the lines of, "We have a supply chain issue in Alberta; as the government we should take some action because we're concerned about what's going on in the agriculture industry; we're concerned about what's going on in our pulp industry because they can't get their product to market," absolutely, let's have that conversation. But that's not what this is about. This is about injecting into a labour dispute.

Let's do something proactive, government. Let's do something proactive, ministers, and come up with a plan on how to actually get our imports and our exports happening, something that was identified months and months and months ago. I've been talking about feed shortages for months. I've been talking about rail access issues for months. I've been talking about the Coutts blockade and the long-term impacts it was going to have on our economy for months. Why is today the day? Today is the day because the government all of a sudden wants to make it not about their responsibility but about someone else's. Well, here's the reality. It is the government's responsibility to get our product to market in Alberta. Government, do your job. That's all I have left to say.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I enjoyed the exposé that the member across the way put forward, we also have to recognize that today is the day because today is the day that there is a lockout and strike action happening on our rail which is stopping the line at this time. We have to recognize that a lot of these other elements that the member is speaking towards are being worked on on a continual basis, but today is the day that we are discussing a work stoppage on a critical piece of infrastructure, on rail line. We have a limited amount of rail capacity to begin with, and now we have a work stoppage. We've just come out of a COVID pandemic, where we talked about essential workers and essential service workers. Whether they're health workers, whether they're farmers and transport agencies, whether they're in manufacturing, these are all essential services.

But the difference with this situation is that we have limited capacity to begin with. We have limited opportunity to actually continue with the movement of goods within this country when one out of the two line companies has essentially stopped working, and when that happens, we need to take action and try and find a solution that will be able to get the products moving and find the ability to actually have those conversations on how to rectify the work-stoppage issues.

Mr. Speaker, I stand in support of this motion. Motion 16 states:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport an essential service and implement back-to-work legislation to prevent any disruption or CP work stoppage to ensure Canada's economy remains uninterrupted.

Now, if we have a work stoppage, a labour dispute, a strike, a lockout in an area of our economy where people that are in need, where stakeholders that are in need will be able to find the service elsewhere, then I would suggest we're not needing to – even though it is an essential service item, if they're able to find their service elsewhere, then we need to allow that to play itself out. In this instance we have an industry that is 10 days, two weeks away from essentially not being able to feed their animals. I have constituents that have contacted me that have 10 days' worth of storage of feed in their bins. We just finished a drought season on the prairies, the first one since 2003. In 2003 we brought in 2.9 billion tonnes of corn to try and keep our livestock fed and keep that industry alive and going well.

But here we are. We're currently bringing in 10, 11 train car units, 100 cars every week. We are in critical need here, and if we don't get this resolved, we have an animal welfare situation. It's incumbent on legislators, in this case federal legislators, who oversee the rail networks, to recognize that this is an essential service. Without this service, animals on the prairies here are going to go without. We need to get on top of that.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we are not proposing something that would be unconstitutional to the point where we're inhibiting or putting in place unsafe work conditions. The Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall says: well, it's all about safety; that's all they're asking, just safe workplaces. Well, that's not all of what they're asking, and I don't believe that this motion is putting these workers into an unsafe condition. We need to recognize that without the federal government stepping up to the plate and identifying this as a critical situation, we are going to be having a very difficult time trying to, as an agricultural industry, keep the livestock in good condition and keep that industry healthy and strong going forward.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I know there are other members that would like to speak. I will close my comments and essentially say that I am in full support of Motion 16. I do believe it's necessary to act on this quickly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The next member who has caught my eye is the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll try to keep this really brief. Again, the minister did a great job of it. My colleague from Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock pointed out the criticality of why this motion is important, of getting the two parties together. It's not about crushing a labour negotiation or anything else. We're really critical in the supply chain. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Manning also for her comments and words and concerns on the supply chain. I'm just going to quickly read the motion into the record here.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Canada to immediately invoke provisions to declare rail transport an essential service and implement back-to-work legislation to prevent any disruption or CP work stoppage to ensure Canada's economy remains uninterrupted.

The Member for Edmonton-Manning is one of the folks across the aisle that I have a ton of respect for. She researches her items. She's very passionate about what she does. We may not always be in alignment, but on the criticality of the supply chain, absolutely. What I've been sitting on here, Member – through you, Mr. Speaker, to the member – is that about two years ago, two and a half, three years ago, I was talking about Motion 501, which was economic corridors tying into our supply chains. Subsequent to that, I received a mandate letter from the Premier, and it was also part of the Fair Deal Panel item. I was named in that document as well to lead a task force to look at just this. The mandate letter stated to look at all of the rail infrastructure within the province of Alberta, see what we have to build out, talk about the interconnectivity, and then look at economic corridors, supply chains specifically.

My task force has completed that action. I'm looking very forward to that becoming public. I'm looking very forward to working with the ministers and the member opposite for Edmonton-Manning. Once it's out officially, I'd love to have a coffee with you and go over the items because what you're hitting is spot on. We have congestion in supply chains coming into the port of Los Angeles, Long Beach, which then cascades into the effect in the Vancouver port, which cascades then into the Prince Rupert port, of how we can't get materials out.

The across-the-border disputes. Yeah, the border crossings for the trucking are critical, but we've got options on the trucking. Again, when we're looking at supply with the Coutts border specifically, that is a pinprick compared to what we're talking about with CP Rail, the volumes that they can move. The minister of agriculture is stating something that's very direct from the ag industry: you've got two weeks, and then it's bullets and backhoes. You literally are going to be starving animals. With the drought conditions and everything else – I know the member agrees with the criticality of this – that's what we're talking about.

I would propose that our supply chain is so darn fragile. That was why we put in the critical infrastructure act, you know, in pre-COVID days, because we already saw that things were getting backed up. With the perfect storm of the logistics issues that I've just spoken about of the supply chain in the west coast, of not only our country but down in the States, with the drought conditions going back and forth, with our feed supplies being bought up on this side of the border, that have already moved south of the border to feed their stock, we're at a critical stage. It's no longer nice just to have an oligarchy or two groups, two rail companies, that have this. We need to really expand our rail infrastructure and our logistics and our supply chain or the wheels come off this wagon. The reason why everyone is now in violent agreement on this is because the perfect storm that we've been predicting for three years has come to roost. This is the issue.

Members opposite, we can debate this back and forth, but I think we're in the same place. The wording and the nuances on it: this isn't about crushing labour. We want to make sure they're there. The one that jumps off the page for me most is declaring that it is critical infrastructure and it is essential service. Mr. Speaker, through you to the other members, I encourage you to vote in favour of this motion. We really need to get things back on the wagon here because it's all fallen apart. Two weeks: tickety-tock, clock's ticking.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [An electronic device sounded] I think we've got a little interruption of music there.

Hon. members, we are on the main motion, Motion 16. Are there any members looking to join debate? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to preface my position on this motion by stating to the House that I have several Canadian Pacific employees living in my constituency of Lethbridge-East, and the CP Kipp yard is a major hub just outside of my riding. I need to assure the House that I'm not taking a negotiated side here. A work stoppage seems inevitable as multiple reports state that if the employees did not strike, they would have been locked out. I would like to think that we are all united in this Chamber, and if what I've heard over the past few minutes is true, when I say I'm hopeful to see a speedy and satisfactory resolution to this dispute, we would all be in agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I am on the side of Albertan consumers. Our supply chain, as has been fully stated here this afternoon, has been negatively impacted for the better part of two years because of the pandemic and other international issues. We are already experiencing inflation that our country has not seen in over three decades. We saw some empty shelves in grocery stores following the massive flooding in B.C. late last year. We all know that Alberta is landlocked, so without our economic corridors, how else will people be able to get their food? R and R, roads and rail, are the main ways we get goods to and from our province.

I want to also discuss my concerns on how this affects the agricultural industry. The minister of agriculture and forestry has very clearly shared many of these points already. Seeding season is almost here. Most fertilizers ship by rail, and about 75 per cent of fertilizer and livestock feed is transported mostly by train. Given that we saw one of the worst droughts in our province last year and given that having a strong growing season is essential in our long-term economic survival, for many of our farmers this year we need to get this addressed. Grain is mostly moved by rail, which could lead to an increase in prices of items like bread and flour. As you know, CP also operates in the United States, and this work stoppage is starting to affect shipments to and from our largest trading partner. I am concerned about how this will affect Alberta as a reliable business partner at this time.

According to the Retail Council of Canada 89 per cent of small businesses are feeling the effects of supply chain challenges. The council cites retail, manufacturing, and construction as the hardest hit industries due to these disruptions. I think everyone in this House knows several people who are employed in these sectors if not more. The council says that approximately 30 per cent of businesses have already seen their costs increased by 20 per cent due to supply chain issues. I think we all need to take a moment to think about who inevitably pays for those increases, the final consumer.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned at the beginning of my speech on Government Motion 16, I won't take a side in terms of the CP management or the Teamsters Canada Rail Conference union. However, I do agree that rail is an essential service for many of the reasons I stated earlier in my remarks and of those of other members on both sides of the aisle in this Chamber.

Many of the CP employees call my constituency or Lethbridge city or southern Alberta home, and I fully respect the right to collectively bargain and, hopefully, come up with a new agreement that satisfies both sides. I value the critical role that CP conductors, engineers, yard workers, and others play in keeping our supply chain moving and so many Albertans and Canadians safe in the process. I can't comment on the issues that have led CP and the union to this point because I'm not at the bargaining table. Again, what I do support is a quick resolution to this dispute.

In all reality, Mr. Speaker, when there's a strike or lockout, neither side wins. CP loses freight revenue and employees lose wages. However, the ones that stand to lose the most are Albertans and Canadians who are already dealing with increased fuel costs, the staggering effects of inflation, among other things, that are currently stressing household budgets, many directly related to policies of the federal Liberal government and their decisions, including the coming increase of the carbon tax this April 1. I'm glad to hear that sides are still talking, and I pray for a speedy resolution to this unfortunate situation and hope that everyone will put their best foot forward to make sure that we can come to a resolution that doesn't further negatively impact any constituencies in my riding or across Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Next I see the hon. Member for Taber-Warner has risen.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for acknowledging me here today. I'll be quick in my comments. I do want to set the record straight for one of the things that was said by the MLA for Edmonton-Manning. She said that because she hadn't heard about what was being done, nothing was being done. Now, that hon. member knows full well, as she has been on the government side and on the opposition side, that just because the opposition doesn't know what's going on, it doesn't mean that things aren't going on.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler has addressed this issue. The Transportation minister has also addressed this issue, letting the Chamber know and also all Albertans know that this has been top of mind for a long time. The Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has also stated that, you know, he has been doing some really good work in terms of corridors and the importance of supply chains for three years now. That goes to show that this has not gone unheeded and that the members have been working at this diligently.

I will say that – I'm very much in favour of this motion, just to say that on the record, Mr. Speaker – I'm very much concerned that CP and CN have monopolies within their areas, which makes it extremely important to make sure that they're running. They are an essential service to so many of our products in this province. For us to say that it's not an essential service, I don't understand that kind of reasoning.

The other point that I wanted to make is that the approach that we are taking to this is going to have a devastating effect if we don't get this right, Mr. Speaker, on so many Albertans that have done so much to keep Alberta going. Our ranchers, feedlots: they need to have this work. We hope that the hon. members from the NDP caucus will support us in asking our federal colleagues to make sure that we get this right.

The federal government has a responsibility for interprovincial and international transportation. For the hon. members to say that we should have been doing something about that – I heard them argue earlier on in the day, saying that it's not our jurisdiction to go into what the federal government is doing. Mr. Speaker, you can't have it both ways. The reality is that it is their responsibility. All we can do is ask them, beg them on bended knee to please make sure that they get this right because there is no way – if we don't get this right, then our ranchers and our feedlot operators aren't going to survive this. This is a five-alarm fire. There's certainly the importance of getting it done now versus in the future. We can't overstate that.

The other point that I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker, is that there have been allegations made by the hon. members about the Coutts border. I will remind them that, once again, I do not believe in the approach of doing something illegally. I'm a lawmaker, not a lawbreaker. I think that it's extremely important to make sure that the members know that at no time did I engage in any illegal activity at the Coutts border. That is very important. This was in my riding, and it was important for me to be able to go down and to meet with the people there to make sure that they were safe, make sure that they were not breaking the law, and if they were breaking the law, to tell them not to break the law, which is what I did. I stated that in my media statement as well. I met with the council down there. I did go down three times, as the members have stated, but those three times I didn't go down there to do anything illegal. I went down there to be able to try to be able to resolve the situation as best we could.

It's important to be able to get our product back and forth through that border. That is the only 24/7 border crossing that we have. That is the only place where we can actually send live cattle and live swine through. In order for us to be able to actually get that border going – 14 days without having it open or intermittently throughout that was very disruptive to my constituents. I dealt with that in speaking with many of the people in my riding and the Member for Cardston-Siksika's riding to the north part of Lethbridge there. It is an area that is well known for feedlots. They call it Feedlot Alley. To state that we didn't care about that: absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. We did care about it, we do care about it, and we want to make sure that that commerce is flowing adequately.

Now, I do want to state also that in terms of our approach here all we can do is make a government motion. We cannot tell the federal government what to do, nor could we tell the federal RCMP what to do at the border. They have their jurisdictions, and as frustrating as it was down there to be able to see this play out the way that it did – every day was gut wrenching for myself and many of the colleagues that I spoke with.

Mr. Speaker, this goal of ours, in order to be able to implore the federal government to do what they need to do to be able to get that CP Rail going again, is absolutely critical, and I hope that all members of this House will make sure that they support this important motion to be clear to our federal counterparts, the federal Liberals, that this has to happen, that this has to happen now. We cannot equivocate on this, and we cannot be slow on our movement on this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to join debate? I see the hon. government deputy whip has risen.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hearing both sides of the argument today and the wide range of discussion, I think we just need to remember that our agricultural industry is in dire need, including our ranchers. In listening to the president of the Cattlemen's Association just on CHED the other day, he was talking about the fact that they're getting corn out of Iowa and that that is the feed they're depending on. It can't come by truck. The volumes that they need have to come by rail. We're going to have a very serious problem in a very short amount of time with the ability to be able to feed cattle and to keep them safe, keep them going. They can't just go and be processed. You can only do so many head of cattle every day, so that is not an option that you can just turn to. Euthanizing them would be the humane thing to do if you can't feed them. I think we need to look at this in the broader situation that we have.

Mr. Schow: It's an animal welfare crisis.

Mr. Rutherford: It's an animal welfare crisis. Very well put, Cardston-Siksika.

I think that we need to understand that the amount of stress people have been under in the last few years, the supply chain issues, the world conflict that we have . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont. However, the time is 6 o'clock, and we are now adjourned until 7:30 tonight.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 7

Appropriation Act, 2022

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 7, the Appropriation Act, 2022. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

The bill requests a total of $45 billion from the general revenue fund so that the government may meet its funding commitments as laid out in the 2022-23 government estimates.

Additionally, the bill requests a total of $173 million to cover the Legislative Assembly's expense for the year as detailed in the offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates. The bill also includes $3.7 billion for capital investment, $1.4 billion for financial transactions, and $1.75 billion for contingencies.

I ask all my colleagues in the Assembly to support this bill to move Alberta forward to a brighter and more prosperous future. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Before we commence consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to briefly review the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) applies, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 14, approved by the Assembly on March 17, 2022, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

The Committee of Supply has under consideration the 2021-22 supplementary supply estimates. I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move the 2021-22 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund. When passed, these estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $1.2 billion in voted expense funding and $1 million in voted capital investment.

These estimates include additional funding to the following offices and government departments: the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, Children's Services, Culture and Status of Women, Energy, Health, and Municipal Affairs. The funding in Bill 8 will help cover the health care costs of the pandemic, provide aid and equipment to Ukraine, give rebates to Albertans struggling with electricity costs, support child care workers and parents of young children, and build municipal infrastructure.

The supplementary estimates report the additional funding needed for the government's fiscal plan in 2021-22. Some of the items in this bill are funded by the federal government or are offset by savings in other areas, meaning that the overall increase to the deficit forecast for 2021-22 will be limited to just over $200 million. While these supplementary estimates reflect a modest increase in spending, it's important to note that the government has taken significant steps to get the province's finances back in order.

Our government was elected on a platform committed to responsible fiscal management, and to that end we established three fiscal anchors to inform policy and guide decision-making. The first anchor was getting our per capita spending in line with comparator provinces, and I'd like to take this opportunity to highlight that we've made considerable progress in that regard. In 2019, when we took office, as per the MacKinnon report, we inherited a government that on a per capita basis spent $10 billion more per year than similar provinces. Moreover, the previous government's operating spending was increasing by 4 per cent per year. Had we stayed on this trajectory, many of the programs and services essential to Albertans would simply have become unsustainable and out of reach.

Over the last three years we've brought that 4 per cent annual operating expense increase down to less than half a per cent per year, and if we exclude health spending increases of nearly 2 per cent, our operating spending has essentially remained flat over the term. As a result, beginning in the next fiscal year our costs to deliver government services will be within the range of comparator provinces. We will no longer be an expensive outlier, and that is tremendous news for our province and the sustainability of the programs and services we provide for all Albertans.

The government also established an anchor, committing to keep Alberta's net debt to GDP ratio below 30 per cent. Abiding by this principle preserves our net financial position or, in other words, ensures a strong balance sheet. Our projections for the net debt to GDP ratio have continually improved over the course of this fiscal year. In Budget 2021 the ratio was estimated to be 24.5 per cent, but with an improving fiscal picture, it's now forecast to be 18.3 per cent at the end of this fiscal year. Alberta has one of the lowest net debt to GDP ratios in the nation, and our responsible fiscal management will maintain that strong position. With increased economic and fiscal capacity and by maintaining fiscal discipline in our spending decisions, our fiscal future as a province is vastly improved, the positive effect of which is significant and tangible for Albertans today and is of exponential value for the Alberta of tomorrow.

The largest supplementary amount in the estimates belongs to Health. An additional $726 million will help cover the health care costs of the pandemic. This funding will go towards lab testing, contact tracing, rapid test kits, continuing care, acute care, vaccine deployment, and personal protective equipment. While the costs of the pandemic have been greater than anticipated, the government has spared no expense in keeping Albertans safe. I'd like to note that Budget 2022 will provide further funding above and beyond what's in this bill to build the health care system Albertans need by expanding capacity, adding ICU beds, and addressing surgical backlogs. These are important steps to improve Albertans' health outcomes and make our province and economy more resilient to system-wide challenges.

The next largest expense in the estimates comes from the Department of Municipal Affairs. The amount of $231.2 million is related to federal funding under the Canada community-building fund and will be distributed to municipalities.

The supplementary amount for Children's Services is also related to funding from the federal government. The bill includes a total of $134.7 million for child care subsidies and worker supports under the Canada-Alberta early learning and child care agreement. The bill also includes a capital investment of $1 million to provide information technology for child care initiatives, and this is also federally funded.

Aside from helping the province administer federal funding for child care and municipal infrastructure, the bill will also help the provincial government provide $150 in electricity rebates to over 1 million homes, farms, and businesses. We've heard the concerns of many Albertans facing high electricity bills due to the carbon tax and other factors, and this bill will help the government provide real, tangible relief. The bill includes a supplementary amount of $96.3 million for the Department of Energy, which will go towards a total of $300 million for the utility consumer support electricity rebate program.

While Alberta is not immune to the rising cost of living, the government is striving to ensure that this province is a more affordable place to live than virtually any other Canadian jurisdiction. Due in no small part to our competitive business environment, Albertans earn more than Canadians in any other province, and this is true in both the energy and nonenergy sectors. Albertans also have some of the lowest home prices and rents among Canadian urban centres. Our gasoline and diesel prices are the lowest in Canada, owing in part to low fuel tax rates and no provincial sales tax. In fact, we recently announced that starting April 1, we will not collect any fuel tax while overall energy prices remain elevated, which is another measure we're implementing to provide real, tangible relief to Albertans.

Our tax policy continues to ensure that Albertans pay less in overall taxes than any province, with low personal income tax and no provincial sales tax, payroll tax, or health care premiums. We also have the highest basic personal exemption amongst provinces, allowing individuals to earn more before they have to pay any provincial income tax. In fact, Madam Chair, 40 per cent of Albertans do not pay any provincial income tax at all. That, combined with our status as the highest earners, means that the after-tax incomes of Albertans are the highest in Canada.

The last ministry that will receive a supplementary amount is Culture and the Status of Women, and this is another important item as it will allow Alberta to support Ukrainians who are struggling with Russia's invasion of their country. Alberta's government is contributing $11.4 million in support for Ukraine, $10.35 million of which will come from the funding in this bill. This includes $5 million to the Ukrainian World Congress to equip 5,000 members of the Ukrainian territorial defence force with defensive equipment, $5 million to the Canada-Ukraine Foundation for humanitarian aid, and $350,000 to the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council for co-ordinating the shipment of first aid and defensive equipment to Ukraine.

In addition to the supplementary amounts for the five ministries I mentioned, the last item in the bill is a supplementary amount of $55,000 for the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. This amount will cover reasonable increases in staff compensation to account for the lifting of the salary restraint for non-union employees.

Overall, the amounts in these supplementary estimates are needed to help the government address Albertans' current priorities. As I mentioned, the child care and municipal infrastructure funding in this bill is supported by federal government funding. Also, much of the additional funding in this bill is off-set by savings in other areas, meaning that the overall increase to the deficit forecast for 2021-22 will be limited to just over $200 million.

Responsible fiscal management, a growing economy, and strong energy prices have helped the government successfully shrink this year's deficit by about 81 per cent since Budget 2021 was first tabled. The government has acted swiftly to adjust the fiscal plan and help address emerging issues like the rising cost of living and the war in Ukraine, and we've done so without losing sight of our commitment to long-term fiscal responsibility.

The Chair: Hon. members, we'll now move to the first 60-minute block with members of the Official Opposition. Would you like to break up your time into 20-minute blocks? Would you like a reminder at 20 minutes? A reminder at 20 minutes? Okay.

The first 20-minute block will go to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Would you like to share your time with the minister?

Ms Pancholi: Yes, I would.

The Chair: Okay. Minister, is that amenable?

Mr. Toews: Sure.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to take a look at the supplementary supply bill, specifically with respect to the provisions around Children's Services. There appears to be a discrepancy between the supplementary supply estimates and the 2022-23 estimates document. According to both the original 2021 budget estimates and the supplementary supply estimates on page 18, the original amounts for child intervention and early intervention were $879.8 million and $96 million respectively. However, in the current Budget 2022 budget documents that were provided at estimates, it actually showed that those line items, line items 2 and 4, were actually $841.5 million and $131.8 million respectively.

Can the Minister of Finance confirm that this actually represents a transfer of spending of approximately $38 million from line 2 to line 4 of the Children's Services budget? Please provide an explanation of what this transfer is for and how it will impact support provided.

The Chair: The Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Schulz: Sure. To answer the questions, first I'll provide some context just in terms of what our dollars are about in this supplementary supply vote. What we're looking at, obviously, is $135.4 million in the Canada-Alberta early learning and child care agreement. We know, Madam Chair, that we have talked a lot about this historic child care agreement, which will provide $3.8 billion over five years for a made-in-Alberta plan to reduce fees, create at least 42,000 spaces right across the province, and help parents get back to work.

The ministry's forecast includes as well $15 million in reallocated funding to help child care providers with COVID-19 costs and an additional $134 million in funding for the Canada-

Alberta early learning and child care agreement. This also, Madam Chair, as the Minister of Finance mentioned in his opening remarks, allocated a million dollars for capital IT expenses to begin enhancements and system modernizations to allow us to roll out this plan.

We needed that for a couple of reasons, Madam Chair, but really, when we look at our IT system, we had to accommodate the new affordability grants, that didn't exist before, as well as increased subsidy levels and then the sheer volume of applications we had when it came to our new subsidy model. We also had $56 million in one-time bilateral workforce funding, again from the federal government. There was no transfer from line 2 to line 4. That's the transfer of supports and financial assistance dollars from program 2 to program 4, early intervention.

I think the member opposite has another question, so I'll allow her to jump in.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Minister. Yeah, I think the minister was just answering that question. It reflects the transfer of funding from the supports and financial assistance agreement program, so the dedicated caseworkers, I'm guessing, moving from child intervention to line 4, youth in transition. I appreciate that clarification. So it's not actually a change in the amount of resources but simply allocating which budget line it's coming from.

I want to move on to the funding that the minister highlighted around additional appropriations to account for the increased child care subsidy and supports and worker supports related to the provision of additional funds under the Canada-Alberta early learning and child care agreement – I'll refer to it as the ELCC going forward – and the early learning and child care bilateral agreements.

On page 16 of the supplementary supply estimates there's additional funding of $134.4 million from the Canada-Alberta ELCC agreement and $56.4 million from the ELCC bilateral agreement. I'd like the minister to just confirm that that means there was a total of $198 million that is being sought under the supply estimates specifically for federal funding. Can the minister confirm that?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. We do have $135.4 million in the early learning and child care agreement with the federal government. We will continue to refer to that as the Canada-Alberta ELCC grant because, as the member opposite may know, there are a number of different grants that we have with the federal government. It's important to articulate which one we're discussing. So we do have that. That also, as I said, includes $1 million for capital. It's split between a number of line items as well. We have $131.1 million in 3.1, child care subsidy and support; $3.3 million in 3.2, child care worker supports; and $1 million in capital IT expenses.

We had $56 million in one-time early learning and child care. That was ELCC workforce funding, Madam Chair; $25.8 million of that would be found in line item 3.1, child care subsidy and supports, and $30.3 million in 3.2, child care worker supports.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the minister. Just to clarify, I believe that that is a confirmation that there was $198 million that is being sought under the supplementary supply from federal funding from the Canada-Alberta ELCC and the bilateral agreements.

At the March 8 estimates of the consideration of Budget 2022, the Minister of Children's Services and I discussed, of course, those estimates. I asked the minister: how much of the expenditures for child care in 2021 were provincial dollars? At that time the minister indicated it was $350 million in 2021, the same as the previous year, and that it would continue at that level for years going forward, as part of the Canada-Alberta ELCC agreement is that federal dollars cannot replace provincial dollars. In other words, provincial funding cannot reduce for child care as a result of increased federal funding under these agreements.

If we look at the original estimates on page 17 of the supplementary supply estimates, we see that the original expenditures for child care were, in fact, $393 million for 2021. Taking into account that $45 million, which comes in every year under the bilateral agreement, that does mean, as the minister indicated in estimates, that $350 million of these 2021 dollars were spent from the provincial funding, not federal funding. However, with these new supplementary supply estimates, total expenditures in child care are now $529 million. If we take away the $190 million in federal funding under the Canada-Alberta ELCC funding as well as the $45 million from the bilateral agreement, we're actually left with a provincial spend of $286 million, not $350 million. This is what it indicates in the supplementary supply. It says that in 2021 the government of Alberta spent $286 million of provincial funds on child care, not the $350 million which was dedicated in this budget for child care. This is about $60 million below what the minister had indicated in estimates.

Can the Minister of Children's Services please tell this Assembly: in the supplementary supply estimates how much provincial spending has in fact been replaced by federal dollars? It looks like this government is spending approximately $60 million less in provincial funding than the original stated $350 million. If that's the case, where is that $60 million being spent as it's not being spent on child care?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The member opposite is correct in her math around the $191 million when we're looking at our agreements with the federal government. Now, as the member opposite knows, we do know that child care providers and programs have faced many challenges throughout this pandemic. They've done an amazing job keeping their programs open and making sure that they can continue to support parents. In Budget 2021 the ministry planned for enrolment rates to turn a bit closer to where they were in previous years. We did expect enrolment to go back up to the 80 per cent average, especially once we signed the agreement with the federal government. That is not necessarily what we saw. We are still at about 70 per cent enrolment, which is about 10 per cent less than we had anticipated in December.

I would also point out that we reinvested $31 million. That was a split between federal and provincial dollars; $15 million in provincial dollars to help assist with COVID-related costs.

I would point out that while that number is $55 million lower, it's largely because, again, we had lower than anticipated enrolment. Again, we did anticipate that enrolment to go back up in December-January. I would point out, Madam Chair, that no dollars have been replaced by federal funding. Our ongoing budgets remain at previous years' budgets of $350 million. This is an agreement that we have with the federal government, and that's a requirement within that agreement.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just going to ask for clarification, then. Based on the lower enrolments, as the minister indicated, the number I reached was $60 million. The minister indicated $55 million less was spent from provincial funding for child care due to lower enrolments. I guess my question to the minister is: where is that $55 million? What's being done with it? Where is it being invested? How is it being invested in child care? If it wasn't used to address subsidies because there was lower enrolment or lower child care worker wage top-ups, where is that $55 million being spent?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Again, we have very specific line items within our budget and areas in which we redirect dollars. The majority of our dollars go to support subsidies for families under the subsidy program. We also do invest in wage top-ups. Again, as we saw lower than anticipated enrolment, specifically in December, January, February, March, that is where those dollars go, but we're very limited in terms of where we invest those dollars. However, we did redirect provincial dollars. We do have $295 million in provincial spending. I didn't quite catch the number that the member opposite used, but I do just want to correct that number as well.

Again, we did communicate to programs to make sure that they were aware of all of the benefits and supports that existed. We continued to support the child care sector with $165 million throughout COVID. Again, the $31 million in December partially was to help with the transition to the new program. We knew that some programs were finding the transition a little bit challenging and thought that a certain amount per licensed space would help them not only with their administrative costs but to backfill while they were waiting for the federal dollars to roll out. Then, also, we wanted to make sure that they had flexibility in those COVID supports to invest in recruitment and retention. Madam Chair, many operators did invest that in their workforce, whether it was through additional wage top-ups, bonuses, recruitment and retention bonuses, but those are decisions that operators make as well.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm a little puzzled because all of the items that the minister just described are actually federally funded, all of those pieces. In fact, $15 million of federal funding was directed to COVID supports, we know, as well as that workforce funding, the transitional funding for those programs that were participating in the Canada-Alberta ELCC agreement. Those were all federally funded. My question, specifically, for the minister is: where is the $55 million less that the minister has acknowledged was spent on child care from the provincial budget? Where specifically was that $55 million invested in child care? If she can break down that $55 million, that would be appreciated.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm going to just mostly reiterate what I just shared with the member. Again, you know, it is difficult as we did expect child care enrolment to go up, especially once the agreement with the federal government was made. We did see a slight bump in January, but certainly those numbers are going up all the time. We've also, I think, seen a very positive increase in the number of early childhood educators who are working in this field, and these dollars that are provincially allocated are released specifically within these program areas, earmarked for supporting wage top-ups and subsidy dollars for parents who really need it.

Madam Chair, again, even now I would have anticipated that we would be back up, you know, certainly past 80 per cent, especially given the exceptional feedback we're hearing about the early learning and child care program. Parents are very happy to see their fees low. They're happy to be taking part in the workforce. We also were very happy to redirect $15 million, even in December, of provincial funds with that $31 million in December to support child care. That is part of the $165 million that were invested in this area throughout the pandemic. This was important. We listened to operators throughout the pandemic. They identified the need for additional supports, and we stepped up to the plate.

Then, Madam Chair, they identified the need for flexibility in those supports, that they could use them whether that was to support parent fees or to support benefits to educators. So we stepped up and we gave them that flexibility, and now we have an agreement with the federal government that's going to see a billion dollars invested in child care this year. That is very positive. In that budget there is, like I said, a billion dollars. It includes $350 million of provincial investment, as is our commitment, in the out-years, and that's going to support our child care sector and parents moving forward. I think that, once again, this is very positive. We're hearing lots of great news about it. You know, we did reinvest dollars where they were needed, when they were needed.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. For the record it sounds like there is no accounting for the $55 million less in provincial spending on child care by the minister. Two very long answers without any explanation as to where $55 million went. I think that the Assembly and Albertans should be concerned, because the last time that enrolment – the year before, when enrolment was lower and there were lower subsidy rates being used by parents, this minister took $108 million and handed it out in a one-time payment to parents that did nothing to actually increase child care affordability the following month or to improve quality for child care. It sounds like once again, perhaps – I don't even know if Albertans are going to get a nice paycheque like they did last year from this minister from the surplus budget, but it certainly does not sound like it's being invested in child care, and there's no accountability for it.

With respect to the $49.3 million reduction due to lower expected enrolment, which is indicated on page 16 of supplementary supply, it seems reasonable, of course, that a 20 per cent reduction in funding could correlate to a 20 per cent reduction in enrolment, which would lead to a decreasing number of workers. If there are fewer children enrolled, of course you need fewer educators. Yet the minister has claimed that the number of workers and educators is actually increasing drastically. She's claimed it's reached up to prepandemic levels. So can the minister explain how the sector can be experiencing at the same time a decrease in the number of children in the system and an increase in the number of staff working in the system? Did the minister make any changes to ratios? Did any of that information get released publicly? And why is there a shortfall and lower than expected participation in the critical worker benefit if educator levels are back up to prepandemic levels?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I think that that's actually a good question, because as we see a new program, I think like any new program, it takes a little bit of time to roll that out. Even though we weren't one of the first to sign the agreements with the federal government, we were one of the first two provinces to roll out affordability dollars to parents. Why? Because every one of us in this room was elected to represent people of Alberta, and certainly what I was hearing from working parents right across this province was that affordability was a concern, especially with uncertainty throughout the pandemic.

Also, however, I would point out that there is lots of hope and optimism. We're seeing more jobs created in Alberta every day. I think it is, too – we're hearing from operators that it takes time to adjust as their programs are going. We're seeing wait-lists in some areas that didn't exist before. I think that's positive. Part of it is also making sure that we have child care spaces in the actual communities where they're needed, Madam Chair, not necessarily – you know, not that I have specific insight, but I think that there were patterns around certain constituencies that the former government created a number of child care spaces in. We need to make sure that we're not overbuilding in certain areas and then leaving some child care deserts behind. You know, we really are accounting for this in the supplementary estimates; the $49.3 million and the $5.4 million are in there.

Also, the critical worker benefit ended in September. Early childhood educators didn't reach pre-pandemic numbers until around December, Madam Chair. We did see, and I think we discussed this in estimates as well, another I think it was growth of 500 educators in that one month. That was positive.
