Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. We are committed to building a hospital in south Edmonton. We've got $630 million in the budget to do just that. We're going back and doing all the work that the NDP failed to do. We're doing the planning. We're doing the functional plan. We're delivering what they failed to do in their years in office. We're committed to Edmonton. We're committed to building this hospital.

Member Loyola: Given that yesterday the minister started blaming a pipeline that he apparently had no idea existed four years into this government's mandate and given that there are pipelines criss-crossing the entire province and we build over them all the time and given that this pipeline has been there for decades, for as long as this hospital has been planned, how is it that this minister is only just now discovering this? Did he only look at the plans for the first time yesterday?

Mr. Neudorf: It's hilarious coming from the NDP, that they're the ones who picked a site to build a hospital on top of a pipeline. Anybody who knows anything about pipelines, which obviously the NDP don't, knows you can't build on top of that. You're required to do a right of way. You're required to do a negotiation, work that they failed to do. We are now doing that work. We're committed to building a hospital for Edmonton, and we're doing it right by going through all the steps, doing the plan, and delivering for Edmonton and all of Alberta.

Member Loyola: Given that the Minister of Infrastructure was unable to answer when construction would begin before the budget and given that weeks later he still is unable to provide a straight answer on what day construction will begin, dismissing concerns and making more excuses, and given that the site of the south Edmonton hospital is a completely bare, snow-covered field, with absolutely no visible movement on actual construction, will the minister admit to families in south Edmonton what they can see with their own eyes, that this government has failed to build the south Edmonton hospital?

Mr. Neudorf: Construction will begin as soon we're done fixing all the messes left behind by the NDP. Again, failure to plan, failure to do any design, failure to do any work . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The hon. member had his opportunity to ask the question. The hon. minister has an opportunity to answer it.

The Minister of . . . [interjections] Order. [interjections] No, no, no. It's not funny. I'm so tired of some members on this side of the House immediately after my direction responding in such a manner. You might not like me, but don't be disrespectful of the chair.

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, again, we will do the work that the NDP failed to do. We will build a plan, we will get a design, and we are committed to building this hospital for all the people of Edmonton and Alberta.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: I will provide additional comments as well because I understand that there are members who are upset when some members of the government side heckle. I have been keeping a tally today of the total amount of heckles from both sides, and I can assure you it is not on the side of the government that is providing the heckling.

An Hon. Member: What? No.

The Speaker: I cannot even begin to understand why you would provide your encouragement immediately following a reprimand of the members opposite.

We are staring down the pipe of a very long pre-election month. I hope that as members go home to their families, they will consider that later this week.

Arts and Culture Funding

Ms Goehring: Since taking office, this government has failed Alberta artists and cultural sectors. From day one there have been cuts, artists have been ignored and belittled, with the Premier's office even finding it laughable to consider having an artist's voice on a committee discussing the economic future of this province. It's clear that this attitude remains as the only metric that this minister has for artists in this budget is talking about connecting arts and philanthropy. Will the minister apologize for the UCP legacy of cuts and insults to the creative sector?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much for the question. I appreciate that. Budget 2023 invests in the arts, culture, and heritage, in nonprofit and sport sectors to ensure continued economic growth. Budget '23 provides $307 million to the Ministry of Culture. There is $136.3 million in capital grants and $170.8 million in general operating. This government continues to invest in the arts – we're proud of our arts programs here in Alberta – and we will continue to do so.

Ms Goehring: Given that when asked about supporting Alberta's cultural sectors, the minister and the UCP talk a big game but given a choice to step up and really support arts and culture in downtown Calgary, who were hoping this province would support their efforts to revitalize the downtown of our largest city – zero dollars, Mr. Speaker – and given that artists and workers in the sector can't live on the boastful words of the minister, especially when he continues to leave them out to dry, can the minister explain why he failed to stand up for artists in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. We had an overall increase in spending of $38.6 million; that's a 14 per cent increase from Budget 2022. We continue to invest in the arts. We are concerned about Calgary and our investments there. We have invested in downtown Calgary, and we will continue to. The members opposite, I think, need to remember the failures that they've had when it comes to what they've done to support the arts in Alberta.

Thank you.

Ms Goehring: Given that despite the boasts of the UCP, artists are still struggling and feeling unsupported by this government, who time and time again delivered cuts, insults, and neglect even through the most difficult periods of the pandemic, and given that an Alberta NDP government will recognize, celebrate, and support the creative industries in our province, can the minister explain why this government refuses to do so?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board has risen.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Look, the last few years have been hard on all small businesses, including those in the arts. That's why this government provided more business support and support for the arts than virtually any other province during that time. But let me explain what it takes to continue to provide support. Our government has positioned this economy for competitiveness, investment attraction, job creation, and opportunity. Ninety-two thousand new jobs in 2022, 25 per cent of all the jobs in Canada: that's progress.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, rural Albertans are facing issues in health care. Shortages of doctors and nurses have left communities unable to provide the health services that our cities generally take for granted. Expecting mothers in rural communities can face hours of travel to get to the obstetrical care they need. I have young children, and I understand the stress and anxiety families experience when their child or elderly relatives get seriously ill or injured and the local hospital is either closed or they have to wait hours upon hours just to consult a physician. Can the Minister of Health tell the Assembly how the government will address the shortage of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has the call.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We know there are challenges, particularly in rural Alberta, in regard to health care workers. This shortage is not only here in Alberta, but it's across the entire country. Even though we have more doctors, more nurses, more health care professionals than we've ever had before in this province, we still don't have enough and they're not all in the right places. That is one of the reasons why we formed MAPS – it's modernizing Alberta's primary care system – with a particular focus on: how do we provide services in rural Alberta? This, combined with our health worker action plan, will provide the services that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, given that many rural physicians, primarily due to burnout, are now only working part-time hours, leaving other physicians to work 70 to 80 hours per week to serve their communities, and given that most of the full-time rural physicians are not taking new patients into care and given that these circumstances are causing wait times hours long in the emergency rooms at the hospitals and outside walk-in clinics before they are even opening their doors, to the minister: what initiatives is the government taking to ensure our rural communities have the staff needed to meet the demand for patient care and enough physicians so people can get in to see . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government has already taken a number of steps in this regard. I was very pleased that we reached an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association with a focus on general practitioners, particularly family practitioners, and with a particular focus in rural areas. We are continuing to invest $120 million for rural, remote, and building recruitment and attraction of physicians outside of the major cities, and that's part of Budget 2023. Also, we're expanding our medical schools with a particular focus on rural areas, and I'll talk about that in a moment.

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, given that rural Alberta is experiencing a growing need for quality health care, especially specialized care, and given that for many rural residents a trip to the city to get specialized care will further exacerbate the condition and stress they are already dealing with and given that this situation causes additional strain on the doctors and nurses in city hospitals, who are not necessarily built to meet the needs of the neighbouring communities, can the minister tell the House what this government is doing to shorten wait times for critical procedures and to support patients in rural Alberta so they don't have to continue to leave our province or the country for medical care?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Once again, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his interest and his passion in representing his constituents on this item. You know, having health care workers is the first step, and part of the Alberta health care strategy is to be able to do that, and we're starting to have success in that. Also, I want to talk a little bit about the Alberta surgical initiative program. Part of that program is investing $237 million over three years in the capital initiative, which includes $120 million in new funding to support projects in 14 communities across the province. This means that we can provide the surgeries closer to people at home so people have to travel less.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has an introduction.

Bill 10 Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move first reading of Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings? The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Decore, followed by Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Speaker. I have tablings, two of them, documents I referenced in estimates yesterday, the first one being the case for an Alberta highway trust company. That is a document produced by the Alberta Roadbuilders & Heavy Construction Association to talk about creating a permanent procurement agency, that would require a realignment of roles within the ministry.

Secondly, a map from the 511 public bus service website, produced by the transportation ministry, showing bus routes in Alberta in 2018, five years out of date, many of which don't operate anymore.

The Speaker: My apologies and for the benefit of Hansard, I called Edmonton-Decore, but I meant Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Getson: Just one tabling here with the requisite copies. It's for post-SARS-CoV infection, so the SARS virus and how it has a systematic review and meta-analysis.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the Insurance Act the Automobile Insurance Rate Board annual report for the year ended December 31, 2022.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order, and I'm pleased to announce to the House that the point of order has been withdrawn.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Evening Sitings

22. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1), commencing on March 20, 2023, and for the duration of the 2023 spring sitting of the Fourth Session of the 30th Legislature, the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) Government Motion 22 is not debatable.

[Government Motion 22 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 8

Alberta Firearms Act

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Justice to move second reading of Bill 8, the Alberta Firearms Act.

If passed, this act would clarify the Alberta government's role in regulating firearms. We're doing this in a way that puts Albertans first. We're looking at regulatory powers to provide additional tools to stand up for Alberta and protect provincial jurisdiction when it comes to firearms.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of confusion from Albertans about how firearms are regulated in the province and indeed in the country. This is why Alberta needs its own firearms legislation. It needs to empower Alberta to advocate more strongly for the rights of law-abiding firearms owners. The act would define the Alberta Chief Firearms Officer's role in administering the federal Firearms Act. It would also make the Chief Firearms Officer responsible for engaging with and advocating on behalf of law-abiding firearms owners in the province.

I'm happy to say that Alberta's Chief Firearms Officer already has strong relationships with Alberta's lawful firearms community and has been a tireless advocate on their behalf. Defining this part of the role in the act will strengthen this relationship building even further, and it will give the Chief Firearms Officer an official mandate to advocate to the federal government.

With the chief firearms office still in relative infancy, this role can be further defined in regulations if needed. To increase the Alberta chief firearms office's visibility and accountability to the public, the act includes a requirement for the office to produce an annual report. This legislation is focused on defining and strengthening the role of the Alberta chief firearms office. It contains tools that would enable Alberta to leverage its jurisdiction over firearms, to enhance public safety, and preserve public confidence in firearms control. Specifically, Alberta could create regulations regarding who can be involved in the seizure and confiscation of firearms.

Also, through regulations, Mr. Speaker, Alberta could establish expectations that firearms owners are fairly compensated for seized firearms or that seized firearms undergo forensic and ballistic testing, when deemed necessary, to ensure evidence is not destroyed if it appears to have been used in a crime. Regulations could also be developed, if needed, to prevent municipalities and municipal police forces from entering into funding agreements with the federal government. I would like to emphasize that none of these measures are fully developed in the act. What I'm pointing out is that a provincial firearms act gives us the flexibility to quickly develop responses to federal government intrusion.

This legislation would allow Alberta to clarify and protect our role in regulating firearms and better advocating for lawful firearms owners. It would reduce confusion and increase accountability for the Chief Firearms Officer's role while providing the flexibility to further define the role if needed, and it would create tools that enable Alberta to protect its areas of jurisdiction over firearms.

Mr. Speaker, the activities of our law-abiding firearms communities are essential to the economic vibrancy and cultural heritage of the province. Firearms owners are hunters or those who lead a traditional way of life. They are sport shooters and collectors of items of Alberta and Canadian cultural significance. They are cowboy mounted shooters. They are ranchers. They are farmers. And there are more than 680 firearms-related businesses in Alberta and more than 127 approved shooting ranges. These individuals and businesses deserve clarity, accountability, and advocacy to protect their property rights, and this government is doing that. That is why this legislation is so important, and that is what this legislation aims to do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to speak to second reading? I see the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to rise yet again to help support lawful firearms owners not only in Alberta but in Canada. Bill 8 is the Alberta Firearms Act. I really appreciate the minister bringing this forward.

I'm just going to give the folks at home here a little bit of a preamble just to understand what's going on here. Here's literally the act that's going to define what we can do in the province with our chief firearms office and also give us the framework to allow for realistic regulations to take place to help protect firearms owners' rights.

Whereas the Government of Alberta is committed to advancing public safety while respecting the property and civil rights of law-abiding Albertans;

Whereas the Government of Alberta recognizes the need for an evidence-based firearms program in Alberta that respects the values of Alberta's lawful firearms owners;

Whereas the federal and provincial governments share jurisdiction over the regulation of firearms in Canada.

Let's sort that one out. It's similar to everything else in our Constitution. It's kind of like calling that pop fly in centre field when it goes up. We actually share the responsibility, so we are saying that again:

Whereas the federal and provincial governments share jurisdiction over the regulation of firearms in Canada;

Whereas federal jurisdiction over firearms is governed by the Firearms Act (Canada) and the Criminal Code (Canada), and the Government of Canada operates the Canadian Firearms Program to oversee its regulatory framework relating to firearms;

Whereas a province may opt in to administering the Canadian Firearms Program by designating a chief firearms officer;

Whereas the Firearms Act (Canada) gives a province that designates a chief firearms officer the flexibility to administer the Canadian Firearms Program in accordance with the specific needs and circumstances of [that] province.

So that's pretty key, Mr. Speaker, right there. Once we've established the CFO, the CFO then can manage the act.

Whereas in 2021, the Government of Alberta, following the recommendations of the Fair Deal Panel, designated a chief firearms officer for Alberta to administer the Canadian Firearms Program in Alberta in a manner that respects the values and priorities of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this is a key element here: understanding how Albertans use those firearms, respecting our culture, our rights, and our freedoms out here in the west, and how we deal with that out here.

Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, enacts as follows.

So that's where we get into the act itself.

Now, how did we get here? I'm not going to go through since 1960 and talk about all the other things that took place, but I do want to do a little bit of the wayback machine here simply in our time in this House.

Firearms have been – I've said it in here a number of times before – the canary in the coal mine when it comes to rights and freedoms and overreach by the federal government. When we first got here, we went and did the Fair Deal Panel. We engaged Albertans right across the province in all different areas, both rural and urban and everything in between. It was time and time again that folks said: the firearms rules aren't making sense; we've got a bunch of things that simply don't make sense. I had colleagues that didn't understand why some of us were pushing back on this until we took them to a firearms shop, a gun shop, and explained to them and had the owners of that firearms shop sit down with a bunch of different firearms and explain what was allowed, what wasn't allowed, and the rationale for it. It didn't make sense.

At that moment in time those individuals went out and got their PAL licence. They became lawfully administered firearms owners. There was an order in council that took place – well, actually, prior to that, there was this order in council that fired up after the Fair Deal Panel which overnight, all of a sudden, banned 1,500 firearms, including some coffee out there as well and airsoft rifles, which basically shoot pellets. Paintball guns: I think everyone has gone and done these things with these air markers or paint markers at some events. Those things all started becoming illegal. We really started paying attention to that.

With that, then we fired up a firearms task force. I was very honoured and privileged to be part of that as well. We engaged Albertans. I think we had over 70,000 engagements, people that were on calls. Seventy per cent of the participants there were firearms owners, 30 per cent not, and of those 30 per cent, more than 90 per cent wanted us to do something. They understood those values and beliefs.

Anecdotally, with this last pass on Bill C-21 when it came out, Bill C-21 in its title – it's a federally regulated item. The order in council was kind of the shot across the bow. It showed that, quite frankly, whoever was administering this was more concerned about getting votes in the greater Toronto area, wherever there were high crime locations, and that folks didn't understand the difference between the firearms and how they're used, not to mention our actually very fulsome process to be given the honour and the privilege simply to own firearms. Like, anyone in here who has a PAL licence in their pocket: you're getting screened by the RCMP every single day. That's a fact. When you go out and buy these, you have to have all of these licences, administration in place to start off with.

Bill C-21 – and here's the interesting part of this. Allegedly – I shouldn't say "allegedly." But, tongue-in-cheek, here's what their bill says. "A comprehensive strategy to address gun violence and strengthen gun laws in Canada: Bill C-21, An Act to amend certain Acts and to make certain consequential amendments (firearms)."

So the certain consequential firearms – and this is directly from their thing: a national freeze on handguns. That was it. All of a sudden they were verboten. New red and yellow flag laws: well, that's always interesting. Combating firearms smuggling and addressing trafficking, which none of their legislation really does, because again, if they were taking care of that, already they would have empowered Canadian borders and customs and flowed money over there. Prohibiting mid-velocity replica air guns. Mid-velocity air guns: these are the things that your kid would learn how to shoot. My nine-year-old daughter at the time in the backyard: all of a sudden she can't have her pellet gun, the things that you use for safety and training. So, yeah, coming into force.

Now here's the bait and switch that they did. This was an evergreening thing. They kept throwing on more and more firearms that no one could make sense of. And here was the best blunder of all recently. They go out and they put in an amendment just before it goes to the Senate and essentially said in such, Mr. Speaker – and I know you're writing down notes here, so you can take this home to your constituents as well – that they essentially banned every centrefire rifle out there.

3:00

The way that they did that – for folks that don't understand at home, it wasn't about the calibre at this point. It was literally anything that had a box magazine that was detachable. Any box magazine that was ever made that was detachable that could fit into the magazine well of a firearm that had anything more than five rounds: all of a sudden the entire rifle became illegal. Then they made an exception, because a lot of our Indigenous, First Nations people have rifles that have an attached magazine. Then they said, "Well, those are exempt except for," and then they specifically listed the most common rifles out there that people use for sustenance hunting. They tried to ban everything, getting past the House, went back to the Senate, and that's when everyone started really paying attention to this.

Now, interestingly enough, I met a Member of Parliament that was from the Bloc Québécois on a conference. We're casually talking about this, and I asked him: "Why in the heck are you guys propping up this Liberal government? Like, why are you guys doing this?" He said, "Well, it's only assault rifles." I asked him what that was. Well, he couldn't tell me what it was because, again, he keeps going back to a soldier's rifle, and that's not the case, so all of a sudden they have this construct.

I said, "You're a rural Member of Parliament that represents the Bloc Québécois." He goes: "Well, actually, I'm from Montreal. I ran an election out there and then, you know, a paratroop candidate." I said, "Well, let me help you out, partner," and I opened up my phone, showed him a picture of three different rifles. I said: "Tell me which one that you're not allowing my daughter to go shoot tin cans with in the backyard. Tell me which one I'm not allowed to go shoot predators that are coming onto my property that are coming after my livestock. Tell me which one I can't go out anymore and hunt my moose or my deer with in the fall." Well, obviously, he couldn't tell me.

I gave him some really salient advice, I think. I said: "Partner, you're representing rural Quebec. I know tons of folks from rural Quebec. We get along with Quebecers like peanut butter and jelly, believe it or not. Knock all the political conjecture away. We talk about rural things, and we talk about that environment. We get along like peanut butter and jelly. These folks are going to string you up by your toenails because you're going to be taking out of their gun cabinets things that they use for recreation, everyday usage, going out and doing their hunting, their way of life. So you'd better think about this, why you're propping up this guy to buy some votes in Montreal." It was sobering to him. He thanked me for that.

These were the folks that were going out and trying to support something because – well, bait and switch – they were fed a pile of BS that wasn't making sense at all, and that's where they went on the Firearms Act. With us putting this Bill 8 in place, it's kind of like that pop fly, Mr. Speaker. We're saying: hey, this is ours. It's written into the act already. We have the ability to do this. We're going to put our CFO in place, which we did, and then allow that CFO that framework. That CFO can do the reporting back to us on an annual basis. They can tell us what's happening in that area. They can help the safety, and moreover they can also advocate for proper firearms use.

When we talk about culture out in Alberta here, we're disproportionate in a number of things. We're disproportionate in how much we earn. We're disproportionate in how much we pay and we send down east. We're disproportionate in a number of things. Lo and behold, we are also disproportionate in the number of firearms that we use, that Albertans own from all walks of life, whether it's handguns or air rifles or shotguns or anything else.

We've been blessed with an amazing province where we can bounce back and forth, whether it's in Calgary, as an example, and your shooting community down there – and the firearms manufacturing industry: second to none. We have some amazing rifles here, some amazing builds that take place. People can literally go from Calgary and, within a few minutes outside their back door, be out in some beautiful, pristine country. They can go to a skeet range or go to a gun range, or they can go out in the fall and stumble around like most of us out there for an excuse to get out in the country, and maybe we don't even let off a round to shoot that duck to bring home, that, you know, we'll have. This is a way of life. We've been brought up with that.

Albertans own the second-highest number of firearms classified as restricted or prohibited by the federal government. Again, these things keep changing all the time. A lot of lawful firearms owners bought these, and they've been changed. The federal firearms ban targets an estimated 30,000 firearms for confiscation in Alberta. Those are the ones they know about, and therein lies the other challenge. If their own act itself is talking about public safety, instilling this act and these orders in council have quite the contrary effect. The national statistics show that these violent acts and gun crimes and everything else in the big cities are going up. They haven't gone down. Nothing has changed. In fact, if you're looking at stats, we'd be making it worse.

Over 341,988 who have possession and acquisition licences, holders in Alberta – there are a couple of million of us across this country. Again, Alberta hitting way above its weight class: 127 approved shooting ranges, more than 680 firearms-related businesses.

I had testimony in here a number of times and did some videos as well. People that are diversified, diversified economies, taking their different skill sets – Alberta Tactical is one of them. I remember the gentleman down there, speaking to him a couple of years ago. Very innovative designs, beautiful, beautiful stuff that they produce, high accuracy, beautiful rifles. I mean, if you're walking into the store there and you're leaving, you know, anything less than $3,000 or $4,000 on the table, you probably haven't picked up anything. It's beautiful, beautiful stuff. People work very hard to be able to take their hard-earned money and buy something that they can recreate with and enjoy.

They came up with some new designs to get around some of the silly, bonkers gun rules because people wanted to use these. This guy, his background: he was actually in law enforcement, and then he got into fabricating and machining, and he had issues with welding fumes, and he ended up having a gun shop and – I don't know – selling these things all over the world but all over the province, for sure, and employed a bunch of people.

I've got EM Precision Rifles. They're just right outside of Leduc and Nisku, and they also have another shop over in Spruce Grove, over there. Again, they're having to change what they're doing again. Some folks that bought their firearms: now they're having to resurface and reface and retool them to make them fit within these parameters. They're not just going after, again, anymore the black firearms. They're not going against the black rifles. They've taken everything with these last, sweeping changes.

I made a promise to some folks out in Cardiff when that incident took place, and I've spoken here about it before. When that incident took place down in Nova Scotia, when that individual went out and caused harm, I made a promise to the folks – and we were planting an oak tree in memory of her sister that passed away during that – that our government would actually do something to help promote safety, that we would do something to get to the root cause. She didn't want a ban on firearms; she wanted governments to actually do something for public safety. That's what we're trying to do here, address the real issues, not the window dressing for elections, not this BS of pulling on heartstrings on folks that don't understand.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I would just maybe caution you a little bit about parliamentary language in the House. I know we like acronyms and abbreviations in government, but maybe just choose your words a little more cautiously.

Mr. Getson: Oh, I apologize, Mr. Speaker. First day back on the job here getting up and talking again. I apologize. It was the one that started with "b"? Okay. Just to make sure I don't do it again.

Obviously, you can tell that I've been out in the constituency, out with the farmers again, too, and the truckers and all the fellows there. Actually, that's pretty toned down compared to some of the language we had. They were pretty concerned about what was taking place with the federal government and how this is going to work.

Over at the gun show in Spruce Grove or, actually, Stony Plain that took place this weekend – and I'm, I think, the only elected official that shows up there at these things. God bless the folks that go to gun shows: you've got everything from arts and crafts, you've got the memorabilia that takes place, and you've got the little granny there. There was one lady: she was showing me her scrollwork – and it was on a scroll saw – you know, whether it's a deer and using some antler horns, and then she had some flowers and other things. I'd asked her about some of the pieces at her booth, and she said: "Well, my husband did those. He's one of the scroll sawmen that worked on these." I said, "Well, where's he today?" She goes, "Well, he passed a couple of years ago, but I still have his artwork, and I still have his firearms."

That's part of the legacy that folks don't remember here again as well, and I spoke to that. You know, there's an old deer rifle that my grandpa used way back when. According to these new laws my grandfather's rifle will now have to be destroyed. It's no longer allowed. Some of the characters that I've met over the years, too – I have a few pistols that are the same thing. They've got a family legacy and a history.

It was a gentleman by the name of Wayne Huddleston: he passed. Some of the most fun times that we had together were going out in the backyard and sighting in our rifles and getting ready to go for that deer season. So his BAR rifle that he had, that .306: no longer. Folks making these decisions for simple political rhetoric somewhere else that are going under the auspices, rather than that b-word, of actually changing something: they're not. They're not doing a lick. I would break my promise to that lady about her sister if I didn't stand up here and support that.

Now, we had a couple of motions as well, and I'm hoping that members opposite support us on this today. I really do. I honestly, genuinely do. We had a couple of motions. It was prior to Bill C-21, and everyone stood up here and regaled with stories. I remember the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talking about his own experiences in going out and shooting as well, and everyone supported it. We were all unanimous. Once that bill came out from the feds, we had a second motion on it. The opposition members all voted against it. I'm hoping that we can drop it. Again to the Speaker's comments earlier today, we're going into an election cycle, and we all know that. We can drop the gloves and a bunch of things.

But I honestly, genuinely hope that you stand up for the constituents in your communities, the white-collar folks as well. Disproportionately, it's a number of doctors and lawyers that own those pistols. Disproportionately. Anyone that really wants to stand up for rural and talk about rural in here: stand up for the rural folks that have their firearms as well, those legacies, things that they remember from their families, these traditions.

It's a passing of the torch, as it were, that we go do that, that we continue to have and support our Chief Firearms Officer, who has done one heck of a job. When I'm the politician at the booth, the thing that comes up – and if Teri is not there herself, everybody comes up and says: "What a great job that CFO is doing. What a great job to see these folks out here talking about the rules and regulations and applying it and standing up for us. What a great thing to have such a vocal advocate for firearms rights and also education on it."

It was also interesting to see the kids, like, when you're at these firearms shows and you have stuff there, which little guys would come up. I had some inert firearms sitting at the table just for conversation pieces. It was really cute. There were, you know, the cousins coming up, and one cousin was from the city, and the other one is from the country. The city cousin wants to come up and immediately grab it. And the first thing that, you know, the two-year-old, by the height of the two fellows there, would show – his older cousin from the country goes: "Uh-uh-uh, don't touch it. You don't know if it's safe." Number one. Number two, he asked, "Can we look at this?" I said, "Yeah." And he goes and reaches out to his other cousin and goes: "Never touch the trigger. Always make sure it's safe. Always prove it's safe. And never put the muzzle anywhere that wouldn't be safe." This little fellow is all of about 11 years old.

Those are the things that take place when you have the lower calibre ones, the air rifles and those types of things. That's ingrained in the kids when they're bringing it up. It's kind of like Cinderella and that spinning wheel. If you take these away – that's the other part – then you're going to take away tons of history: you know, the grandpa's story of spending time with the grandson or the granddaughter because Dad is busy working or Mom is busy working, but the grandpa can go and do that, and they can spend time together. Some of the best memories of folks coming up: no different than that lady.

It was all day long like that, folks coming up and thanking us. They were asking what was in Bill 8. At that time I couldn't tell them, but I kind of said: here's conceptually what we're looking at. It was just accolades. I was at a church event last night. Some little old lady comes up – God bless her, just a little spark plug – and she says, "Are you that guy that was at that gun show?" "Yeah." She goes: "Well, my nephew was over there. He said to come and talk to you. I can't believe I'm running into you here." They're good folks. They're from Edmonton. I met them in Edmonton. I didn't meet them out in my backyard.

But these are the things that'll be taken away from us, Mr. Speaker, and why this bill is so important. I hope that what I can convey is that there are opportunities and chances for us to work together regardless of political backgrounds and everything else. I sure wish we can do the right thing for all of us.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has 15 minutes to speak to second reading.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 8. I also heard that the member opposite urged us to stand up for our constituents and issues facing them. Certainly, I will try to do that as well as I speak to Bill 8. If I talk to my constituents – I do meet them on a regular basis; I do go out door-knocking; I do go to many events; I'm there especially on weekends – what I do hear from them on a fairly regular basis: they are concerned about the crisis in health care. They're concerned about longer wait times in emergency rooms. They're concerned about rising, skyrocketing grocery prices, which are rising well above the inflation rate of 8 per cent. They're concerned about skyrocketing insurance costs. They're concerned about skyrocketing utility costs. They're concerned about new schools in northeast Calgary. They're concerned about guns and gang violence in their communities. They're concerned about drugs and overdose deaths in their community.

Instead of focusing on those priorities of my constituents, which are also shared by many Albertans across this province, this government and this Premier continue to pick fights with the federal government and are hell bent on pursuing costly and incompetent strategies such as dismantling the RCMP and replacing it with an Alberta police force, such as pulling Alberta out of the Canada pension plan.

Bill 8 does nothing to address the priorities of my constituents. It does nothing to address the challenges that Albertans are facing. It does nothing to address the challenges with gang-based violence, military-style assault weapons, gun violence in this province, in particular in Calgary and northeast Calgary. Last year alone there were 100-plus shootings in Calgary; 40 per cent of them were in the northeast quadrant of the city and involved illegal guns. People do want this government to focus on public safety, to address the rising gun violence. Instead, they're constantly being consumed in never-ending political games.

The government claims that this bill will establish the most comprehensive provincial firearm framework in the country, but we believe it may overstep since the government doesn't have all the details, all the information of the federal plan. This bill is intending to presuppose the outcome of federal changes we are yet to see.

Part 1 of the bill expands the mandate of the Chief Firearms Officer but leaves all the substantial details relating to this office – their duties, their powers, their mandate – to regulation so they can decide behind closed doors. If they really want this office to have a clear mandate, then all those substantial provisions should be included in this legislation so that we can debate the merits of those powers, the mandate of that office. But, clearly, the government didn't do the homework.

The bill also talks about licensing but again doesn't give any details for us to be able to compare how this regime will be better than the one that was in place or is in place. All the substantial details are left to regulation.

This section also talks about an annual report, and interestingly that section will not be proclaimed till April of 2025. That annual report will be due once the section is proclaimed, meaning that there won't be any report at least until April of 2026. So the UCP cannot be taken seriously when they talk about reporting and transparency, and their legislation also shows that.

Part 1 does talk about the Chief Firearms Officer, but it doesn't talk about public safety at all. As I mentioned, there were 100-plus shootings in Calgary alone last year, and we don't see anything in this piece of legislation that will address the proliferation of guns in our communities and the gun violence that comes with it in our communities.

Part 2 of the bill is also concerning. It gives this government, the responsible minister broad and sweeping powers to seize firearms beyond what federal legislation or what their regulations are suggesting now. Essentially, government is giving itself power to seize whatever property they like, and if they stand against seizure and overreach of Albertans' property rights, Indigenous hunting rights, why would they need such broad, sweeping powers? Again, there is no substantial provision here for us as the opposition or Albertans to know what that regime will look like. It will be all decided through regulations which we are yet to see. Speaking of Albertans' priorities, I think I would want to know what the other side is telling Albertans about this provision, this new regime, and what they are hearing from them. In short, every aspect of this bill is left to regulations.

Still, the government must know something because they are expanding the office of the Chief Firearms Officer from 30 to 70. They must know something, but they are again hiding their plans from Albertans. Again, someone on the other side needs to explain to us, needs to explain to Albertans why we need such a huge expansion, yet they're unable to share their plans with us and why they see this as a priority as opposed to addressing the crisis in health care, as opposed to addressing the cost-of-living crisis, as opposed to addressing the challenges Albertans are facing under this UCP government.

Also, we didn't hear whether any municipalities or any Indigenous groups were consulted, including those who have direct service agreements with the RCMP. There are 47 of them, municipalities, and 22 First Nations. None of them were consulted. That's what we heard from officials. In the last 18 months no municipality, no Indigenous groups were consulted. Then they are putting in provisions that will hamstring the municipalities from accessing any federal grants of funding for enforcement, including in this act. Still, they didn't consult any municipalities. That's disrespectful to those municipalities. That's disrespectful to those Indigenous communities.

One more thing is there; that is, a broad immunity clause that gives government, their employees, the minister, the firearms officer, anyone involved in seizure broad immunity. The question I must ask is this: if the UCP are so convinced that their bill is good and it has public backing, why do they have to protect themselves so thoroughly? Why? This clause goes against all the conventions and traditions of government accountability. This is government protecting itself from lawsuits that may follow this government's overreach and actions. They know that. This kind of clause is heavy handed and unjustified.

Again, there were a number of questions with respect to consultations, consultation with Indigenous communities, about any legal analysis, whether there was any legal analysis done. That was the question we asked officials as well. If government has done any legal analysis on that and they want to be transparent, they want to be trusted, they want to be taken seriously, they should share that analysis. If they have done any analysis on section 35 Indigenous rights, they should share that with Indigenous communities. They should share that with all Albertans.

For the reasons I outlined, the bill as it stands now: we cannot support this bill. It is less about firearms and public safety and more about the UCP fund raising off it for the coming election. There are no substantial provisions included in it so that we can analyze the merits of this bill. Every single detail is left to regulations. There are more than 68 provisions that give government reg-making authority. That's not good governance. That doesn't give Albertans any certainty. This is just governing by fiat, and you will do whatever you think is appropriate behind closed doors through regulations. There were no consultations, no legal analysis, no section 35 analysis, how it impacts Indigenous peoples' rights.

Again, this bill may help the UCP to fund raise, but it helps with nothing else. It's not focused on the priorities of my constituents and Albertans across this province who want this government to address the health care crisis, longer wait times, shortages of schools in their communities, drug and gang violence in our communities, and issues of cost of living. That is what we are hearing every single day from our constituents, from Albertans, across this province, and Albertans certainly deserve better than this.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to second reading? I see the hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my great pleasure to actually rise in support of Bill 8, the Alberta Firearms Act. I'd have to say that by engaging in the real property rights tour that went around the province and seeing the abolishment of adverse possession by the Minister of Justice and now this bill, he is definitely rising to be one of my favourite ministers when it comes to legislation being passed in recent months.

Now, this bill is something that should hopefully be of reassurance to all of Alberta's legal firearms owners, including a great many in my riding. I just want to speak to a couple of the comments by the previous member, Calgary-Bhullar-McCall. He talked about what's relatable, standing up for our constituents. He said that this not a priority and that it does nothing to support the priorities of the people within our ridings. Now, I would say that's not true at all. I think this really is about standing up for the rights of individuals within our ridings, and that's why it is so incredibly important.

I'm a proud Albertan who values the unique heritage and culture within Alberta, and I'm willing to speak first-hand of the importance and the tradition of responsible and legal firearm ownership within our province. I really believe, like many in my riding of Highwood and throughout the rest of Alberta, that this is a key component of one of our liberties, that we should be able to enjoy. I'm an avid hunter, and there is nothing, in my mind, that's more Canadian than getting out into the wilderness and being able to hunt and enjoy that. Now, for many I think this holds very true, including those within our Indigenous communities in Alberta. I know the previous Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall talked about that there was no consultation with Indigenous communities. Well, the recent moves from the federal government: not one Indigenous community that I've spoken to that were consulted on that as well either when they started going down this.

Moving on, there is a lot of support within my riding and for other folks, including several thousand members of the Alberta Federation of Shooting Sports. Ownership and responsible use of firearms also provides an opportunity for sport and recreation for many. I think it's important to point that out. Many of the firearms-based organizations also offer the opportunity for youth to learn and interact with firearms in a safe, educational, and engaging environment. I know that with my kids I've made a real focus to be able to take them and educate them on safe firearm use, and I think that's essential. I think a lot of the reasons people push for continued moves on firearms is a lack of knowledge and a fear around them, but this is not based on fact when it really comes to what's happening.

When you talk about, you know, the crime issue, the former member talked about wanting to be able to deal with the violence in their communities and the use of guns and gun-related violence. I think it's really important. This has been one of my positions, and the reason for the push-back against the federal government was that the guns being used in these illegal situations are not coming from legal firearm owners; these are coming across the border. This is misdirected. When you talk to our enforcement, law enforcement, border patrol, the guns are coming across the border, and that's where the focus should be. If we want to drive down gun violence and get guns out of the hands of criminals, we need to focus on exactly that.

Now, we have already extremely strict regulations related to obtaining a firearm, and the basis of the culture around this is responsible and safe use. Now, this is something that's always a core tenet of any form of firearms-based recreation. Just like other Canadians, Albertans are proud, law-abiding, and responsible firearm owners. I think there is a point at which we need to stand up for those responsible firearm owners. Right now there are 340,000 legal permit holders, and I do believe there were over 30,000 additional applying last year, that are qualified in Alberta. With that, they go through one of the most comprehensive mandatory firearms safety courses in order to be able to do that.

Additionally, as a part of pre-existing federal firearms legislation, Alberta firearm owners remain under strict stipulations regarding their criminal status. I know that when I went through my course for my PAL to be able to become a law-abiding firearms owner, there were extensive background checks. I actually am very proud, and I think most firearm owners are, and they support this.

Further yet, our province's strong culture and connection to firearms ownership is something reflected within our own economy. We have more than 127 approved ranges and 680 firearms-based businesses. Legal firearms ownership is clearly of an economic significance as much as it is of cultural significance to Albertans. Now, small-business owners and manufacturers in the firearms industry have identified Alberta as the place they want to come to set up and provide their services from, and that speaks to the new, renewed Alberta advantage that this government is creating, so I do believe this is an important bill to be able to put forward.

The previous member said that there are a lot of priorities. Yes, there are, but he makes it seem as though it's an either/or. We can work on the priorities. We have an excellent affordability package that has been put forward. The Minister of Health is working on an action plan to bring back strong health care and strengthen our health care here in the province. We have the ability to do more than one thing at a time, and I'm glad that this is going forward along with all the other excellent initiatives that this government is bringing forward.

However, you know, when you look at the last two years in relation to this bill and what the Trudeau government has done, it has put this industry under risk, and there are a lot of individuals that run these businesses that are very fearful of what's going on. This is really in relation to a lot of the fearmongering of the NDP-Liberal alliance. I know 2021 saw an order in council rush through that was punishing legal owners and users of handguns. This trend continued into last year, where we saw the real possibility that a large portion of the firearms used by Canadians to hunt would be banned. Now, thankfully, despite this attempt, as many things do with the Trudeau government, it quickly developed into an abysmal failure. That being said, the Trudeau government has made it known that they are going to continue to attempt to disarm and punish legal, law-abiding Canadian gun owners.

Now, this message is something that continues to be a cause of concern among those lawful firearms owners across Canada as well as many that reside here in Alberta. With more than a quarter of a million legal firearms owners in the province and with tens of thousands more licensed here every year, there's no doubt in my mind that Alberta is one of Ottawa's primary targets in its campaign of fearmongering and persecution around firearms. The previous member said that this government is picking a fight. We're not picking the fight. Ottawa picked the fight. We're trying to stand up for Albertans.

Now, misinformation, confusion, incompetence, and blatant ignorance of the Trudeau government surrounding firearms ownership has created a dangerous situation in which the average legal firearm owner finds themselves persecuted while illegal firearms continue to flood into the country and the criminals that use them are allowed to walk free. As I mentioned before, if you want to focus on crime and crime prevention or reducing gun-related violence, then Trudeau should be focused on putting that money towards protecting the borders and stopping the illegal flow of firearms across them. It would seem that the Trudeau government does not care that Alberta gun owners, like the rest of Canadian gun owners, are law abiding, responsible, and they're undeserving of this threat and punishment. Legal gun owners are not the issue in Canada, nor Alberta, and as such should be permitted to continue using and enjoying their firearms in the safe and responsible manner that they do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if passed, Bill 8 would ensure that protections are put in place, pushing back against Ottawa's irrational and misguided persecution of law-abiding gun owners. Under the Firearms Act this government would stand side by side with Alberta's legal gun owners, and we will be able to say to them that you're not alone in this fight, that we'll be there to support you. The Alberta Firearms Act would achieve this by expanding the role of our province's Chief Firearms Officer from not only administrating but advocating for and protecting gun owners within Alberta. Furthermore, Bill 8 would see Alberta's Chief Firearms Officer made accountable to this province's government through the requiring of a yearly report. In addition to improving the role and responsibilities of the CFO, Bill 8 would also enable this government to respond quickly to instances of overreach by the Trudeau government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I just want to be clear in saying that I am in strong support of this bill. I look forward to speaking to it again as we continue to push this bill through the House and just want to once again thank the Minister of Justice for putting this forward and finally standing up and standing with legal firearms owners in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Others wishing to speak to second reading? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great privilege today to rise and speak in support of Bill 8, the Alberta Firearms Act. The bill before us today is quite personal to me. When I was a child, myself along with my brother would often accompany our dad on hunting trips. Usually dad hunted for bird game, so we'd spend a fair amount of time in a duck line, dressed in bright-red jackets, oversized rubber boots, freezing as we would wait for the first ducks to land. The first group of ducks would land on the slough, and we would wait, hold our breath, careful not to make a sound lest we be discovered and scare off the birds. A few more ducks would trickle onto the slough, joining the group, and then a few more would land. My dad would then take aim, take his shot and then another, and then my brother would join in. I remember many times when I was watching my brother and I would get excited and anxious to take a shot, begging my dad: just let me fire once. But that wouldn't happen until I became a teenager, at which point I was able to demonstrate to my dad that I was responsible enough to fire my first shot.

In those many years before I shot a real gun, my dad taught me all about gun use and safety by showing me the ins and outs on a pellet gun. I shot the pellet gun at many targets, becoming more accurate and comfortable over time. I remember vividly the day my dad first led me to shoot my real firearms. After years of patience and learning he loaded up the gunny sacks, his guns, shells, our dog, and myself. We drove in his red Dodge truck to the slough at the southern quarter of my grandparents' farm. Before handing me the gun, my dad went over the dos and don'ts of gun use. We then walked into the blind, and I was on top of the world.

Every time my dad and I went hunting or target shooting, he always made me go through the drill for gun safety and proper use. My dad and I were never threats to society. We weren't criminals. We were simply two people who bonded over this great hobby. Though my father is gone, the memories we made together hunting I will always cherish.

Mr. Speaker, this hobby and this story aren't unique to only our family; we're just two of the many Albertans and Canadians, including many of my constituents in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who legally own a gun. Today there are over 340,000 licensed gun owners in Alberta with countless stories just like ours. On average 30,000 Albertans complete mandatory firearms safety course training each year as a first step to obtaining their firearms licence, and in 2021 that number jumped to 38,000.

Gun ownership in Alberta won't just go away despite what some might hope. In fact, Alberta is home to 147 approved shooting ranges and more than 680 firearms-related businesses. Gun ownership in Alberta isn't just about the ownership of the possessions; it's truly a way of life. That's why it's so disappointing to see that our federal Liberal government is so intent on scapegoating and punishing the many law-abiding, licensed gun owners in Canada and ultimately taking this hobby away from us.

Mr. Speaker, legal, licensed firearms owners, like my dad, are not the problem. Legal firearms owners contribute so much not just to Alberta's economy but to the cultural heritage of our province, and taking their guns isn't making Alberta any safer. It is time that we stand up for the interests of Alberta's legal gun owners and take a stand on behalf of all Albertans.

This is why I am so proud to be speaking on this bill today. If passed, Bill 8 will provide stronger support for the thousands of law-abiding firearms owners in Alberta. It would legally codify the role of the Alberta chief firearms office in administering the Firearms Act, and, importantly, this bill would expand the scope of the chief firearms office, including engaging with and advocating for Alberta firearms owners.

Additionally, this bill will require the chief firearms office to issue an annual report. Albertans deserve transparency and accountability, and this annual report will provide exactly that while also spreading awareness of the work of the chief firearms office. Of course, perhaps most significantly, Bill 8 will allow Alberta to defend our areas of jurisdiction over firearms.

When the federal government interferes in our province's jurisdiction, we need to have the flexibility to respond to the situation on behalf of Albertans. This bill gives the Alberta government the tools we need to do that. This includes the ability to prevent municipalities and municipal police services from directly entering into funding agreements with the federal government. This includes possibly the ability to regulate who can participate in the seizure and confiscation of firearms. This includes the ability to codify Alberta's expectations of fair treatment of firearms owners surrounding the confiscation of firearms. It also includes the ability to regulate safety and integrity of any program that involves the handling of a large number of firearms.

Albertans elected us to stand up for their interests. By passing Bill 8, we will have the tools that we need to do exactly that. That's why this is so important, to pass this bill. I encourage all members of the Assembly to support the hundreds of thousands of law-abiding firearms owners in Alberta and to vote in favour of Bill 8, the Alberta Firearms Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Others wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 8?

I'm prepared to call the question. The Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Schow: Waive.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly be adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, March 13, 2023.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:47 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 4th Session (2022-2023)

Activity to Thursday, March 9, 2023

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 13, 2023

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King, to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Madison Gramlich. I'd invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Commonwealth Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, today we celebrate Commonwealth Day along with the 10th anniversary of the Commonwealth Charter, a document signed by Queen Elizabeth II on March 11, 2013, that demonstrates the values and aspirations that unite the 56 member nations and the 180 parliaments and Legislatures of the Commonwealth. We are geographically and culturally diverse, yet we are unified in our shared commitment to democracy, peace, human rights, and equality.

For the first time in 70 years we recognize our significant union without the leadership and guidance of Queen Elizabeth II, who made considerable contributions to the Commonwealth during her reign. Her legacy lives on in our union and His Majesty King Charles III as he now presides over the Commonwealth.

While it is steeped in tradition and its roots stretch back generations, the Commonwealth's focus is on what lies ahead. This year's theme, Forging a Sustainable and Peaceful Common Future, is very relevant in an era where global issues and conflicts continue to persist. Please join me in acknowledging and celebrating Commonwealth Day 2023.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, seated in the Speaker's gallery today is an incredible young woman who I had the opportunity to meet just a little bit ago. She led us in the singing of our national anthem. Madison Gramlich is nine years old, lives in Slave Lake. Her passion for singing started at the age of five, and she has performed for many audiences, most notably opening Slave Lake's All-in concert. I would ask you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Hon. minister of community and social services, is your guest here yet? I don't believe so. Perhaps we will come back to that. I don't see her there.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Actually, I have two guests to introduce, so I'll do this one first if that's . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce two incredible human beings, Brad and Jennifer Bartko. In 2021 Brad started Disability – Accessible by Design with the mission to make public and private establishments barrier free. Please make yourself known and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice has a school group today.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly grade 6 students from Lycée international de Calgary. This is a bilingual school located in the constituency of Calgary-Elbow in the quiet neighbourhood of Altadore. They are visiting Edmonton this week to participate in the School at the Legislature program and to learn about the provincial government. Accompanying the class are three teachers: Julia Mills, Julien Battaglia, and Bilyana Raycheva. And a special shout-out to Elliott McKay. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Merci, M. le Président. Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you 55 students from Our Lady of the Prairies school, l'école Notre Dame des Prairies, in my constituency of Edmonton-McClung. They're joined today by teachers Ms Sydney Brunelle, Mme Alicia Bussière, professeures dans le programme d'immersion française, and teacher Wieke Steynen as well as Ms Mariah Allarie, a therapeutic assistant. I ask that we please rise and give them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a home-school association group from my constituency. I've had a very interesting discussion with them over lunch. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise today and introduce some of Stony Plain's finest young students joining us from the SML Christian Academy and their incredible teacher, Tricia Shane. I had the pleasure of meeting with this group earlier today and can tell you that the future of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain is in very good hands. Students, please rise and accept the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you, I'd like to introduce the parents of our anthem singer, Lacey and Shawn Gramlich, who is the interim mayor of Slave Lake, and their daughter Breeley along with their grandparents, Laurie and Danny Schmode, as well as their uncle Scott Sinclair, who is the UCP candidate for Lesser Slave Lake, and his daughter Sloan. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ashley Lundstrom, Camille MacRae, and Marta Szylo. They're working in my independent and constituency offices. They're also joined today by a good, long-standing friend of ours, Mariam Ahmed, who I actually officiated the wedding for last summer. These people have been solid for me and immensely supportive over my tenure as an MLA, and I'd ask them to please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce, through you, two close friends of mine, Ontario's brightest girl, Marisa Maslink, and well-known Albertan Hadyn Place, who is a proud Albertan. Alberta is calling is working, and as of yesterday they are engaged to be married. But let us remind them: "Love is patient, love is kind. It does not envy, it does not boast, it is not proud. It does not dishonor others." I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome and best greetings from all my colleagues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House Muslim community leaders from across the province who represent the National Council of Canadian Muslims. They came to meet with MLAs to discuss Islamophobia and all forms of discrimination and hate. Thank you so much for joining us today and for all the work that you do. Please rise and be recognized by this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the other members someone that is very close to me, my daughter Sahej, and my niece Simran. If I could ask Sahej and Simran to please stand up and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for introductions. My apologies to those who were unable to introduce their guests today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Alberta Is Calling In-migration Campaign

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have some great news for Canadians: Alberta is calling again. Last summer Toronto and Vancouver heard about the renewed Alberta advantage: no provincial sales taxes, highest average weekly earnings in Canada, the beauty of the province that we know and love, affordable housing, an economic powerhouse that's leading Canada in job creation and economic growth. And, wow, did they ever get the message. In the third quarter we saw almost 33,000 Canadians come to Alberta to find a better life. We remember the opposition telling people to move to B.C. for a better job. Well, in the third quarter so many people listened when Alberta was calling that B.C.'s net interprovincial migration was negative for the first time since 2013. And the best part? Most of them came to Alberta.

This time we're taking a different approach. We know the industries that are looking for additional skilled workers, and we know where the Canadians are that want those jobs. So we're reaching out to Atlantic Canada and inviting them to trade the ocean for the mountains, and we're reaching out to areas in Ontario where the unemployment is higher and offering them a chance to see a hockey team get out of the first round. While they were having lunch, the ads started to appear: come to a province where you earn more and keep more of what you make, come to a province where you don't have to leave town to enjoy river valleys and nature, and come to a province where you can afford a great lifestyle, not just a life.

Most banks are picking Alberta to lead Canada's economic growth this year, and with Budget 2023 we are ensuring that the necessary health care and social supports are there for Albertans. Yes, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is calling again, and we can't wait to meet the people that listen.

Hate-motivated Violence against Muslims

Mr. Sabir: Today our caucus met with members and leaders from the Muslim community, and I acknowledge that many of them are in the gallery this afternoon. We heard their concerns about the rise in horrific incidents of Islamophobic violence and the need for real action to address it. Over the past years we have seen a significant spike in hate crimes and attacks on Muslims in Alberta and across Canada. A man entered a mosque with a gun, killing six defenceless worshipers and injuring 19 in Quebec City, an entire Muslim family was run over by a vehicle and killed in London, Ontario, and recently several Muslim hijab-wearing women were assaulted right here in Alberta.

This rising violence has left many in our community feeling unsafe, yet this government has done nothing in response. The government's own Anti-Racism Advisory Council submitted its report almost exactly two years ago. Among its 48 recommendations were 11 reforms to the justice system, but this Premier and this government have chosen to do nothing. The UCP even refused to pass the Anti-Racism Act brought forward by the opposition, which would have mandated race-based data collection. Instead of working to protect law-abiding Albertans from hate-motivated violence, this Premier's priority is to meddle in the court system and try to help people charged with conspiracy to murder police officers. Instead of addressing the very real public safety concerns of people and preventing future hate-motivated incidents, this Premier is obsessed with spending hundreds of millions of dollars to create a UCP police force that nobody wants.

An Alberta NDP government will take on the important work of antiracism, including exploring strategies to address Islamophobia specifically. The Alberta NDP is proud to stand with the Muslim community and all faith and cultural groups to build a society that is safe for everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has a statement to make.

David Frank Friesen

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my privilege to recognize so many amazing Albertans this last year with the Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee medal. While I was able to meet most of those recognized, there was one individual that I was unable to know in person, so today I rise to recognize David Frank Friesen, a man who fought relentlessly for the truth. David Friesen made a significant contribution to the Canadian society at large, the Indigenous peoples, and the RCMP.

Mr. Friesen was an exceptional RCMP officer who dedicated his life to pursuing justice and righting the wrongs for the victims of abuse in residential schools at a time when many were content to ignore uncomfortable truths. In the late 1950s he was a trailblazer who started one of the first-known investigations into a residential school predator. In fact, he possibly was the only RCMP officer to initiate an investigation before the 1980s. Mr. Friesen understood that the Truth and Reconciliation Commission wanted to bring us to a place where the cycle could be broken and trust could be renewed. Mr. Friesen took the first steps to take us from where we were to where we stand today, and he will not be forgotten.

When serving at Watson Lake, Mr. Friesen had discovered that Lower Post residential school boys were being harassed. He fought relentlessly for those innocent, vulnerable boys until 2021, when the residential school abuses became public knowledge through the media. His perseverance led to justice and vindication for the survivors 67 years later. A full exposé of Mr. Friesen's story was published in the December 11, 2021, issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail, and pursuant to the truth being revealed, Deputy Chief Harlan Schilling had contacted Mr. Friesen with plans of meeting him to thank him personally for his heroism in seeking justice for residential schoolchildren from his band. Unfortunately, Mr. Friesen passed away on June 10, 2022, missing his opportunity for full disclosure.

We thank you, Mr. Friesen, for your impact that you have made on all Canadians for generations to come.

Capital Plan and Calgary

Mr. Toor: Mr. Speaker, our government is investing $23 billion over three years into public infrastructure through Budget 2023. We are seeing new school projects, modernized public buildings, new and updated health facilities, and maintenance and renewal of government-owned facilities. Budget 2023's capital plan is our government's commitment to Albertans to deliver on the much-needed projects in communities across the province. Rather, it's $1.6 billion for new schools, $2.8 billion for health facilities, $287 million for major government facilities, or $894 million for the maintenance and renewal projects.

Budget 2023's capital plan has something for everyone, especially in Calgary. Over the next three years Calgary is receiving almost $3 billion in capital planning, which is 13 per cent of the total capital plan for the whole province. As part of the school planning, there is the modernization of Annie Gale school in Whitehorn, northeast Calgary; preplanning funding for an addition at Bishop McNally high school in Falconridge, northeast; and a new high school in Cornerstone, northeast.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of kids are waiting to get into charter school in Calgary northeast. As part of Budget 2023 we announced $25 million in operating funding and $47 million in capital investment over the next three years to support public charter school expansion and project programs in the education system.

The NICU project is receiving $52 million over the next three years for the refurbishment and expansion for our most delicate and fragile patients. Along with this project, we have $77 million over three years for Rockyview general health hospital.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has question 1.

School Construction Capital Plan

Ms Hoffman: Eight thousand more students going to school in Calgary, and only one new school actually funded in the UCP's budget. Mr. Speaker, despite enrolment growth quadrupling, the UCP chose to put handouts for their friends over schools for children. This means more crowded classrooms in the biggest city in our province. The parents of those 8,000 children chose public and Catholic education for their kids, and they deserve schools. So why does the current Premier care more about handouts to her donors than about building classrooms in Calgary?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased that our government is investing $377 million for 58 projects, including – they must have missed the extra one – 11 projects in Calgary, including a new K to 9 school in Nolan Hill, modernization of John G. Diefenbaker high school, a new high school in Rangeview, modernization of Annie Gale school, a new high school in Cornerstone, modernization of A.E. Cross school, modernization of Sir John A. Macdonald school, a new Saddle Ridge middle school, a new elementary school in Redstone, addition to Bishop McNally high school, and a new west Calgary high school. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Hoffman: There is money for Preston Manning, but no schools in Cochrane. I guess school funding is one floor that the Premier just won't cross.

Mr. Speaker, there are zero construction dollars for Airdrie, Cochrane, Chestermere, and only one new school construction project funded in Calgary. George McDougall in Airdrie is so packed that the cafeteria has to double as a classroom. The board chair was incredibly frustrated and disappointed by this Premier's budget, saying that it's ignoring their space crisis. Will the current Premier admit that she can't be trusted to build schools and that a better plan is just to vote NDP?

Ms Smith: Fifty-eight projects, including 11 in Calgary, $377 million. Let me just quote from Laura Hack, board chair, Calgary board of education. "On behalf of CBE students... and [their] families, we thank the Government of Alberta for [the] capital [plan] announcement... These [extraordinary and timely] investments in infrastructure are vital to support student learning opportunities [within] our system." Same with Cathie Williams, board chair, Calgary Catholic school district: the Calgary Catholic board of trustees is grateful for the capital projects announced for the Calgary Catholic school district, which includes full funding for the K to 9 school in Nolan Hill to serve this rapidly growing community.

Ms Hoffman: Fabrication is for welders, not for Premiers.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, in this same story south of the city there's no money in the provincial budget for shovels in the ground in Okotoks. The high school is way over capacity, and the board chair said, quote: our students will continue to come to a high school that is overcrowded, which is negatively impacting their learning. Calgary, Cochrane, Chestermere, Okotoks: doesn't the Premier think that these kids deserve better? Under the Alberta NDP we absolutely do.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 1:52.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite again forgets to do her homework, over and over and over again. We have announced a school in Chestermere, one in Cochrane, two in Airdrie, also in Okotoks. I spoke with Rocky View school division and with the community and reinforced the fact that when we say there's planning, preplanning, design, and construction, it will happen. All 58 of those schools will be built, unlike the members opposite.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora has another set of questions.

Prescription Contraception Coverage Policy

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, last week we in the Alberta NDP proposed a better health care idea: providing universal coverage for prescription contraception at no cost to Albertans no matter which method they choose. This policy would remove barriers, improve health outcomes, and save Albertans a lot of money, mostly women. The Premier called our plan a subsidy for private insurance and then talked about choice, a shameful excuse. Will the Premier admit that her choice is to make women pay more for health care?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we are glad that the bulk of women are covered by public and private insurance plans. In fact, I'm glad to have the members opposite raise this, because it sparked a robust conversation in our caucus about the kinds of things we might want to fund. What I hear women wanting funded is in vitro fertilization and assistance in being able to have babies, and that's something that I think we should have a robust discussion about in the next election.

Ms Hoffman: Women across the province are over the moon about the idea of having universal contraception covered. Jenna says: this is amazing; my insurance doesn't cover the contraception my doctor has recommended, so this would be game changing. Shelby says: I attend university, and birth control is not covered by my health care provider. Joanne says: this great plan makes me very happy; we don't have equality without plans like this one. Why is the current Premier always offside with things like equality, health care, and doctors' advice?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the other thing that we hear from women and families that they want is support for adoption, and that's the other thing that we put into our budget. Not only are we supporting families so that they can have a grant to be able to give a home to a child, but we're also making sure that we're equalizing the level of tax credit so that more people can welcome children into their homes. Those are the kinds of things that we're going to continue to support.

Ms Hoffman: Well, these are Holly's words: "How can the Premier say that everyone has access to private insurance? This is an out-of-pocket cost for many people. Contraception is still only partially covered under most plans. The NDP plan to provide universal contraception is the only policy that will reach everyone. So thank you for advocating and standing up for women's health and rights. Contraception is a need for everyone, not just women." So how can the current Premier find $20 billion for her donors and not a penny for Holly's health care needs?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure what the member opposite is talking about. There's nothing in the budget that has that $20 billion figure. They're making things up, as they are accustomed to doing.

Look, if we want to have a conversation about the kinds of things that could be covered, the kinds of things that we hear should be covered are things like the diabetes pumps. Those are one of the things that we announced that we were going to be covering, and there's probably a whole range of issues that we need to have a broader discussion about that ought to be covered. So happy to have that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and Official Opposition House Leader.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, our caucus has been standing in this House for more than a year calling on the government to listen to the firefighters who fought to save Fort McMurray during the wildfire. We've been urging this government to make sure firefighters fighting cancer don't also have to fight the WCB for the support they need. Bill 9 appeared to finally take action, but the bill won't help firefighters who've been diagnosed during these past six years since the fire, and we know of several caught in this unfair situation. To the Premier: why don't these changes help all impacted firefighters like they've been calling for?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are so pleased to be making changes to WC coverage for firefighters. We know that the fire in Fort McMurray was a particularly unique experience with nonstop fighting for 30 days, and they didn't have the ability to do the contamination procedures they normally would, so it put far more of our firefighters at risk. We were pleased to be able to cover that. As I understand it, extending the coverage retroactively would impact one or two cases, and in these instances Workers' Compensation already has a process to ensure the claims are settled appropriately.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, the process that is already there is firefighters and their family fighting cancer, then having to fight the WCB and go through an extenuating appeals process. The right thing for this government to do is to make sure that the heroes who went on the ground and fought that wildfire, helped 80,000 people evacuate, and spent weeks in a toxic soup of chemicals, getting exposures to a career's level of toxins in just a short amount of time – they should have our support. It is common sense. Will the Premier change it?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I know it sounds like the members opposite and the government are not on the same page on this, but we are on the same page. In fact, Matt Osborne, president of the Alberta Professional Fire Fighters & Paramedics Association, said at the members' press conference this morning that Alberta is leading by establishing this kind of coverage for large, catastrophic events. I want to make it clear that this is a big step forward, and this is leading our nation. And he praised us for our openness to discuss. He also said that we greatly appreciate the work the provincial government has done so far to address the critical issue for Alberta firefighters. So we're very pleased to be able to offer this coverage.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased Matt Osborne is here in the gallery listening to question period, and this is a good start. But the Premier is ignoring that we are leaving firefighters behind who've already been diagnosed, we are not including cancers that should be covered, and they have completely ignored respiratory illnesses which we know these responders are now suffering from. Will the government accept the amendment from the opposition that I will be bringing forward? Will the government update the cancer site regulation, and will you include respiratory illnesses?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I will talk to our Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development because I know that he's been very close to this issue. He wanted to make sure that he was offering the appropriate level of coverage when he made this recommendation to our caucus and cabinet. If he believes that the amendment is worth supporting, I'm sure he will give us that advice. But I think it's important that we have now set the standard for the rest of the country, that when a catastrophic event like this occurs, this is going to be the presumption in our province, and we hope that other provinces follow suit.

Automobile Insurance Premiums

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the government lifted the Alberta NDP cap on auto insurance on the Friday before a long weekend, hoping that Albertans would not notice, but they did because their premiums jumped 30 per cent, and for almost three years the UCP did nothing but watch as costs hammered Albertans. Now, just weeks before the election, the UCP claim that no new rate increases would be approved for the rest of the year; that was not true. In fact, an increase of 16 per cent was approved for new policies effective March 1. Surprise. Can the Finance minister explain why new drivers will be facing increases of up to 16 per cent under his fake freeze?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to point out that the party who did nothing about automobile insurance were the members opposite during four years. All they did is bring a rate cap in, which was a Band-Aid and didn't deal with the systemic issues. Our government, through Bill 41, dealt with many of those systemic issues, and since the passing of Bill 41, insurance premiums have gone up 1.4 per cent per year. On top of that, we have asked the rate board to pause new approvals.

Ms Phillips: Well, when Albertans were struggling with up to 30 per cent increases, the Finance minister's only answer to them was telling them to, quote, shop around. End quote. But now as the government faces the judgment of Albertans, they're claiming to have put in the Alberta NDP rate cap, except it's a fake. In the real world drivers are watching their bills spike yet again. How can Albertans believe a word this minister says when he claims to freeze their car insurance, but their bills are skyrocketing?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, again, we've recognized that many families in Alberta are being pushed during this time of inflation, and that's why we've asked the rate board to pause rate increases effective January. The rate increases they're talking about were approved last fall; just implemented now. We've asked since early January for the rate board to pause those increases so we can work with insurance companies and other stakeholders to find further remedies to deal with the systemic issues that are driving up insurance costs.

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, just like when the UCP lifted the rate cap in the first place, the UCP are putting their friends and donors ahead of the people they were elected to serve. It's well within the power of the Finance minister to deny these 16 per cent increases. We could have had a real rate freeze; instead, we got a UCP fake. Why did the minister pick his insurance lobbyist pals over Albertans and approve such a punishing increase to Albertan drivers' car insurance? Sixteen per cent is not a freeze.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, this government took real action with Bill 41, and those changes are having a real effect. Rates going up by 1.4 per cent per year over the last two years, that's progress. The NDP call a rate cap progress. If we would have left them in charge, it would have ultimately driven the province to a nationalized insurance system, which is what the socialists across the aisle want. They want a nationalized, socialized system; we say no. We're making progress. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Alberta Is Calling In-migration Campaign

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, all eyes were on Alberta last summer when the Alberta Is Calling campaign caught the nation's attention. And, you know, I was up in Yukon last summer, and my Ontario counterpart let me know unhappily that he'd heard it on the radio while sitting in traffic on the 401. Today we just got news that Alberta is calling again, and I've got a question for the Premier. What made her decide to tell Canada that Alberta is calling again?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, let me answer on behalf of our Jobs, Economy and Northern Development minister. He's doing such a fantastic job on calling out to the rest of the country. When we looked at the success of the first round of Alberta Is Calling, the decision was easy. When we put out the call to Toronto and Vancouver, we saw a huge surge of people visiting and requesting e-mail notifications about Alberta. In Q3 we saw record interprovincial migration flowing into Alberta. Thirty-three thousand Canadians sure make a difference when you change government. We remember what happened when the other guys were in power: everybody was leaving. We saw the opportunity, and we're going to continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the Premier: given that the previous Alberta Is Calling campaign focused on attracting folks from Toronto and Vancouver and given that the previous campaign worked, with tens of thousands flocking to our beautiful province, could the Premier tell us how this is going to be different than the first round and build on the success of the first Alberta Is Calling campaign?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that Premier Doug Ford didn't like that campaign very much because it was so successful. So I said, "Don't worry; next time we do it, we'll make sure we're advertising into high unemployment areas," and that's what we're going to do this time around. We'll be going into Ontario, into Windsor, Hamilton, Sudbury, and other places. We're also going to be calling the people of the Atlantic Canadian provinces: Charlottetown, Saint John, St. John's, Halifax, and also more Canadian cities are going to be hearing from Alberta very soon.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you, again to the Premier: given there are so many benefits to living in Alberta – low taxes, jobs for skilled workers, and our beautiful mountains, just to name a few – and given that Alberta has the best value proposition ever, what messages will she be sharing with Ontarians and Maritimers to inspire them to join us here?

Ms Smith: Oh, there are so many great things about Alberta – aren't there? – highest average wages of any province; highest workforce participation rate of any province; lowest taxes in Canada; no provincial sales tax; almost 100,000 jobs waiting to be filled; Canada's fastest growing economy; Canada's strongest job creator. We're calling it the renewed Alberta advantage for a reason, and we'll be telling them the most beautiful province in Confederation – that's what we are – is a place that they can afford a great lifestyle. We look forward to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For four years this government has been making life more difficult for our students. They have hiked tuition; levelled devastating cuts onto postsecondary; hiked fees, interest payments, student loans, and so, so much more. This budget doesn't go anywhere near to addressing the damage done by the UCP to postsecondary. Their own budget projects that student debt will grow by nearly $2 billion over the next two years. Will the Minister of Advanced Education apologize to students now for making it so much harder for them to get an education?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, Budget 2023 invests $178.4 million over the next three years in major capital projects, in addition to three capital projects continuing from Budget 2022. It also invests in power engineering and instrumentation: lab development, $11.3 million, $2 million in '23-24, $9.3 million in '24-25; in the University of Lethbridge, another $3 million; in the University of Calgary, another $5 million. Budget 2023 also invests $73.9 million over this year to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that this minister's budget will take out $1.2 billion cumulatively from the postsecondary system and only increases postsecondary this year by .6 per cent, given that the minister is still allowing tuition fees to climb next year as well, meaning that it won't help a single student until the Alberta New Democrats get back in government, given the number of times that this minister defended his policies of making education unaffordable through sky-high tuition rates, how can the minister be so proud of his achievements when he has caused so much devastation?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the member opposite is not correct. In fact, we have targeted enrolment expansion: $171 million to create nearly 10,000 new postsecondary seats and $84.7 million to create over an additional 3,000 new seats; microcredentialling, $2 million to create new microcredentials in PSIs; capital for SAIT, $41 million; the U of C, $59 million; MRU, $88 million; work-integrated learning, apprenticeship expansion, SAIT expansion. I could go on.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite the boasts of this minister and this government, Albertans see the record of this government for postsecondary loud and clear. Given that tuition and institutions are struggling under the weight of $1.2 billion taken out of the system over the last four budgets and given that we know many students and institutions are worried about their ability to meet the needs of basic education, after four years of this minister making life tougher for students to seek an education, the message that I have for them is simple. Students, choose yourself a better government, an Alberta NDP government on May 29.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have world-class postsecondary institutions in this province, and we have a minister, the Minister of Advanced Education, that's working with those institutions to ensure that we're delivering a sustainable advanced education system. We took over a system, left by the members opposite, that simply wasn't sustainable. Our institutions were delivering the highest cost education, and it was costing Albertans an excessive amount. We have worked with the institutions to bring about efficiency, efficiencies that will ensure our system is world-class and sustainable.

Cancer Diagnosis and Treatment

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, this Premier wants Albertans to get used to paying for their health care out of pocket. We know this because she's said so repeatedly. On her weekend radio show the Premier again made this explicitly clear when she said that Albertans should pay out of pocket for regular MRIs to avoid things like stage 4 cancer. This follows the Premier's despicable comments where she suggested that those who have stage 4 cancer let it reach that point. Will the Premier finally apologize to Albertans with cancer that she's insulted, and will she commit to stop using cancer to push her plans to force Albertans to pay out of pocket for health care?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the member opposite is mischaracterizing our dispute with Ottawa over the funding of MRI and CT scans that are chosen on a voluntary basis by those who want to get a second opinion or have additional peace of mind. Any time a doctor will prescribe an MRI or CT scan, it is medically necessary. By definition "medically necessary" is 100 per cent covered by our system. We don't want to close an avenue, in the event that somebody else wants to get a second test or wants to be able to get a regular annual test, and that's what we're disputing with the federal government.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, given that under the UCP the wait times just to see an oncologist can stretch as long as 10 weeks, when the national recommendation is 10 working days, and given that Alberta is already short of and losing more oncologists, medical physicists, and radiation therapists and given the Premier chose to spend the weekend trying to scare Albertans that unless they pay for their own MRIs and CT scans, they're at higher risk for cancer, will the Premier take responsibility for the Albertans who are waiting and worrying on her watch because they can't even see an oncologist for more than two months, let alone begin treatment?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the member opposite is talking about. I think what I have said very clearly is that if somebody has something wrong with them and a doctor gives a recommendation for them to get an MRI or CT scan, it is medically necessary, it is 100 per cent covered, and we are going to continue covering that. The dispute with the federal government is over a small number of scans that people choose to get voluntarily. We aren't the only province having this dispute. There are eight provinces that disagree with the way the government at the federal level is interpreting this, and we'll continue to fight it.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, given the Premier is wrong – no Albertan should have to pay out of pocket to get access to the best cancer diagnosis and treatment – and given that after decades of Conservative neglect and game playing our Alberta NDP government got the Calgary cancer centre built and given that it takes more than a facility to provide care and this Premier's reckless, misinformed comments about cancer diagnosis undermine Albertans' trust in the doctors we've managed to keep and make it harder for us to recruit the ones we need to fill the gap, an Alberta NDP government will make sure the CCC is fully staffed. Why is this Premier so obsessed with making that harder to do?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're spending $166 million over the next three years to staff up the Calgary cancer centre, and we're looking forward to seeing the new services that are going to be delivered there. As for the surgical backlog, I can say that we're making great progress. We identified the number of people who are on the list longer than a medically recommended period of time. Look, the waiting list grew for nine different surgeries when they were in power. We're having them go in the opposite direction, and I'm hearing from Dr. John Cowell that he's expecting that we will have that waiting list, that surgical backlog, complete in 12 months. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.
The hon. Member for Highwood.

Biodigester Facility Proposal in Foothills County

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, the Rimrock-Tidewater biodigester is a project that was scheduled to begin development at the beginning of this year, with operations fully commencing in October. To the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas: what steps are being taken to ensure the Rimrock-Tidewater biodigester project is meeting or exceeding environmental regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, thank you for that. I want to thank the member for the question. Alberta Environment and Protected Areas has received an Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act approval application for this project. The application is currently under a robust regulatory review before it can be authorized to proceed. The review focuses on ensuring the protection and health of communities, residents, and the environment. It also ensures that appropriate pollution prevention and control technologies are in place.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this project will produce biogas and fertilizer and, as stated by its developers, reduce odours in the affected area, to the same minister: can you provide more details about the technology being used in the biodigester project and how it's expected to achieve its promise to reduce odours emitting from the feedlot?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to answer that one. The regulatory approval process includes evaluating the potential environmental impact, including emissions and odour. According to Emissions Reduction Alberta this project is designed to upgrade digestate from their on-farm feedlot to produce value-add fertilizer, peat, cattle bedding, and water recycle product. These products would be produced for Alberta-based greenhouses, mushroom farmers, organic farmers, conventional farmers, and cattle producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. Given that community engagement undertaken to seek input and feedback from the local area residents about the biodigester project, to the same minister: what actions have been taken in response to their concerns and potential issues raised at public town halls?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said, this project is currently going through our rigorous regulatory process, which includes evaluating the potential environmental impact, air emissions, and odour. In order to be approved, the project would need to demonstrate that appropriate pollution prevention and control technologies are in place. I want to be clear that land-use decisions are the responsibility of the local municipality. Any public concerns related to property value, traffic, noise, and light pollution fall outside of the provincial jurisdiction and should be raised with the municipality, in this case Foothills county.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South is next.

School Construction Contracts

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to hand public dollars to their corporate friends while failing to invest in public education. The Minister of Education has stated the capital plan is based on asks from school boards, but we see time and time again negligible investments in growing communities like Edmonton-South. We know P3s are this government's favourite solution, but why is the minister committing tens of millions of dollars to wealthy private corporations through atrocious P3 school builds when boards are actually saying they don't want P3s, that are actually making schools harder to run?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure and the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. In fact, in the last round of P3s that was brought forward by my department, I changed tactics and decided to break them into individual contracts because it made more sense to do that for the geographic coverage over the province. We are doing that because it's best value not only for the school divisions locally but for the province as a total. We're spending tax dollars wisely and finding the right project procurement method and the right contract for each school build according to the needs of that community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that school boards have told us publicly that no P3 contract is the right contract and that many young families continue to move into my riding in Edmonton-South, and that's expected to grow exponentially in the next five years, we know the current capital plan is not sustainable to keep up with projected growth. Can the minister explain to my constituents why paying millions of dollars to these private corporations through P3 partnerships is more important than just funding the schools and infrastructure we need?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure and the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: I hate to disagree with the member, but, again, we're going to pick the contract that best suits the needs of those individual builds. Now, what they often confuse is P3, which is public-private partnership; we do that all the time. It's the bundling of projects with school boards that they're opposed to. Having worked in this region for 26 years, when you bundle them together, you don't get the same decision-making because it goes to different sites, and the answers might differ. That is what takes time. That is what school boards disagree with. That's why we don't always do that, and we only do it where it makes sense. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister clearly is not listening to school boards and is not listening to parents and given that this government keeps announcing all this funding for planning into these P3s but they're falling short of actually building any new schools, to the minister: when will this government put an emphasis on actually funding our public school system or will actually create a system that's equitable for all Albertans and not just for their wealthy friends and donors?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again, the member opposite doesn't know what he's talking about. In fact, it wasn't the actual build; it was the contracts that school authorities had issues with. Our government worked really, really hard to ensure that those contracts were, in fact, good contracts. From 2019 to now we've built or are in the process of building 16 schools. NDP in Edmonton: eight. Us: 16. I won't take lessons from the members opposite when we are building more than they ever will. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Arts and Culture Funding and Performance Measures

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, the way we measure ourselves matters. Targets matter. Goals matter. Whether it's a musician determined to write a song a week, a theatre aiming for five sold-out shows a month, or a government setting targets in their budget, thoughtful goals show people what someone actually cares about. That's why it's so alarming that in the Premier's plan for the Ministry of Culture she has slashed the government's goals for the arts, culture, and live-event industries. To the minister: what exactly is it about the arts that his ministry doesn't think is important, and why doesn't he care about the well-being of the creative industry and its businesses?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I am proud to report that our Budget 2023 commits over $28 million in funding to support the arts, including stable funding of $25.6 million to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. That's in addition to the $1.25 million sponsorship of tonight's Juno awards. I would encourage the members opposite, if they haven't heard of the Junos, to come on out tonight. It's going to be a lot of fun.

Ms Goehring: Given that almost 78 per cent of Albertans attended an art activity or event in 2019 and 2020 and given that even during the pandemic, when that number dropped to 31 per cent, the government's targets were set to have 70 per cent of Albertans participating in live events and given that artists, venues, and businesses are telling me over and over again that they are still struggling to get people out to their events, why is this government so determined to tell the arts community that they are giving up, washing their hands of any previous goals to encourage Albertans to enjoy arts and culture events?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't disagree more with the member opposite. In fact, we're very supportive of the arts. That's reflected in our budget, which has over $27 million to support the arts. As I mentioned, that includes the $25 million that we allocated as well as the $1.25 million to support tonight's Juno awards. Like I said, I'd like to one more time invite the members opposite to come out tonight and enjoy the Junos. It's going to be a lot of fun.

Ms Goehring: Given that the infrastructure, investment, and innovation that artists bring is a critical part of helping to diversify and create resilience in Alberta's economy and given that the arts and entertainment ecosystem generates billions in tax revenue, employs more than 250,000 people from technicians, to builders, engineers, and more and given that only the Alberta NDP recognizes the vital economic and social contributions of this industry, Minister, if these communities feel hung out to dry by a government that insults them and a budget that wants to stagnate their growth, can you really blame them?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, again, I couldn't disagree more. The 2019 performance measures reflect prepandemic levels in the arts, and I'm happy to report that we're actually seeing attendance come back to the arts. That's why we're making such substantial investments that we are of over $27 million. We are proud of our arts community, and that is not going to change.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie has a question.

Grande Prairie Policing

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many in the House may be aware, Grande Prairie city council voted eight to one in favour of establishing a municipal police service last Monday. Many of my constituents have questions about this change. Some say that it was sudden when, in fact, the city has been actively examining policing options since 2018. Rural crime, police resources, and the reality of repeat offenders have all been identified as key issues in policing in our community for years. Can the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services explain the benefits of having a municipal police service in Grande Prairie and the expected outcomes for my constituents?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Unlike that side of the House, we actually respect the independence that was conducted by Grande Prairie and the independent report that they put out there to the people of Grande Prairie. What we're doing in Grande Prairie – that community is setting priorities for their community. They have increased oversight, they have accountability, they're meeting the needs of their community, and that is what is important when they are conducting independent reports like the one conducted in Grande Prairie. This will increase public safety, and I thank the member for that question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and through you to the minister. Given the different components to start up a police service such as physical location, IT support, attracting personnel, and training and, further, given that in order to ensure a smooth transition to a municipal police service, the city of Grande Prairie has proposed a phased-in approach over five years, can the same minister explain how Alberta's government is supporting Grande Prairie through this transition to ensure that public safety does not slip between the cracks throughout the phasing-in period?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of public safety.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'll be very clear; this is not something that is a transitional move that will occur overnight. This is going to take some time, and with that there are going to be start-up fees; there are going to be transitional fees. That's why this government is supporting the needs of the people of Grande Prairie by investing a $9.7 million grant that will assist them in those start-up fees and those transitional fees, because on this side of the House we are responsive to the needs of the community and are respectful to the needs and the independence of Grande Prairie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again through you to the minister. Given that the city of Grande Prairie had previously decided to undertake an independent study to review policing in the community and that this was not a decision about the RCMP but, rather, a decision on what service model would best serve the city going forward and further given that many other communities across Alberta are facing the same issues with effective policing in their communities as Grande Prairie has, can the same minister explain what our government is doing more broadly to help other communities across Alberta improve public safety and policing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question that she has provided here. You know, communities know their policing needs best. Unlike the members opposite, we're not interested in telling First Nations communities what to do. We respect their independence, and I can tell you there are five First Nations communities that want to have their own independence. I can tell you that on this side of the House we are going to respect First Nations communities, unlike the members opposite, and that's why in Budget 2023 we put aside $8.4

million, if that budget is to be passed, to make sure that we respect municipalities in Alberta.

Capital Plan

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing that this government won't say to explain their failure to build the schools and hospitals Albertans need. They blame doctors, they blame cities, they blame us, and they even blame pipelines; however, their own budget shows the truth. This UCP government simply can't get the job done. Over a billion dollars' worth of projects that they promised to get done last year didn't get done. Can the Infrastructure minister explain why he failed to advance so many projects, and will he apologize to those communities he failed?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We are delivering critical infrastructure for all of Albertans. We are doing the work behind the scenes that needs to be done that the NDP failed to do in their four years in office. There is a consistent, laid-out, legislated process for every build to make sure that we are setting the needs of the community at the right level, making sure that their clinical needs are meeting those demands, making sure we do a functional plan so we build the right infrastructure for the right dollars in the right time so we build it well and serve all needs of Albertans.

Mr. Deol: Given that Albertans in my riding are asking why there is still just a snow-covered field where there should be a south Edmonton hospital under construction and given that we have heard all kinds of excuses from this Infrastructure minister and given that the budget tells the story that he hasn't even spent a quarter of the money for the hospital in 2022 that he promised in last year's budget, can the minister explain to the people of south Edmonton why three-quarters of the work he promised to do at this time last year has simply not been done?

Mr. Neudorf: Given that I wasn't in the chair last year at budget time – but we have set aside $630 million in this budget to continue the work. We are committed to Edmontonians, to build them a hospital, to make sure it's rightsized, to make sure it provides the services that they need, and to make sure we do it right. We're going back and doing all the work the NDP failed to do, including getting rights-of-way and agreements with the pipeline operator who put it right under that lot. Good job.

Mr. Deol: Given that this year the UCP is funding the construction of only one new school in Edmonton, given that almost $200 million worth of schools he promised in the last budget didn't get built, and given that growing communities in south Edmonton are calling out for more schools to save their kids long bus rides to and from distant and overcrowded schools, how can anyone take this Infrastructure minister at his word for this year's promises when he has clearly broken last year's?

Member LaGrange: Well, the members opposite should take yes for an answer. We are building schools in Edmonton, in particular in south Edmonton. Let me see: a new senior high in Glenriding Heights, a new K to 9 school in Edgemont, a new K to 6 in Rosenthal, a new elementary in Glenriding Heights, and a new junior high school in Pilot Sound, McConachie, as well a . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.
The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you. I just keep going on because there are so many schools we're building in Edmonton: a solution for Rundle Heights, a new K to 9 school in Heritage Valley, Cavanagh . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for St. Albert.

Support for Vulnerable Albertans

Ms Renaud: Mr. Speaker, every member of the UCP government should be hanging their heads in shame following the shocking news of the devastating conditions at the Calgary Drop-In Centre. Described as an absolute war zone by someone who depends on the centre, that description of the facility is evident from the photos inside that show broken toilets, water fountains filled with debris, and living space littered with garbage. How can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services allow Albertans experiencing homelessness to endure these conditions?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for that question. First of all, I just want to start off by applauding and thanking the numerous people that work in our homeless shelters across this province as well as those who operate these shelters. Without them, there'd be so many people out in the cold today. This is incredibly difficult work, dealing with crisis on a daily basis, so I wanted to make sure that we acknowledge these beautiful people that work in our shelter system, including my own wife, who's here with us here today. Our government is very committed to making sure that we resource our homeless shelters so that they can provide a high-quality standard of care.

Ms Renaud: Given that four years of the UCP have caused so much harm for Albertans as the government casually cut monthly benefits of tens of thousands of severely disabled Albertans, saying that they wouldn't find it onerous, and given that the Finance minister meddled with the dates of benefits to make his books look better, then cut benefits for the poorest Albertans by slashing income supports, and given that the UCP wants to pat themselves on the back for throwing money at issues they caused in the first place but, again, failed to make up for the deep well of harm that they've inflicted on Albertans, will the minister apologize to vulnerable Albertans?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, thank you again to the member for the question. This government is deeply committed to caring for the most vulnerable in our community. That's why we recently increased shelter funding by 10 per cent to make sure that we address some of the wage challenges for employees there. We're talking about the Drop-In Centre specifically. We just gave them $3.9 million to address capital maintenance as well as building more housing, and we just put $4 million into the Drop-In Centre to build medical detox so that we can actually deliver real results for people. This government is not only committed to making sure we address people in the immediate crisis of homelessness, but we're also creating pathways out of homelessness through recovery, through housing, and through so many other options.

Ms Renaud: Given that this UCP government doesn't appear to understand what compassion means and given that someone less fortunate than any of us fears that speaking out about the inhumane conditions at the Calgary Drop-In Centre will jeopardize their access to supports they desperately need and given that staff at the centre say that a recent cold snap led to overcrowding concerns and impacted the services at the centre, will the minister admit that he and his caucus colleagues are more focused on their political futures than they are on Albertans who are experiencing harm and homelessness?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing to hear the tactic that's currently being taken by the opposition. Again, I commend the many workers that work in this sector and the incredible care and compassion that they deliver, including the operators there. This government is doing significant work to increase salaries . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: . . . for those who work in the sector, a 73 per cent increase in this budget to add that. Under that government: nothing. Nothing. There were no increases at all for this sector. This government is delivering to make sure that there is support for people who are vulnerable in our community.

Transportation Infrastructure in Lesser Slave Lake Constituency

Mr. Rehn: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of representing the great constituency of Lesser Slave Lake. We are one of the largest constituencies by area in the province, which means we need roads and bridges that connect everything together so my constituents can go to medical appointments, work, visit family, or go to the grocery store. I've heard loud and clear from the people of the High Prairie area that we must take action to improve our roadway network. On behalf of these people I ask the minister of transportation to please tell the House what my constituents can expect from the 2023 provincial construction program from your ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that very important question. I'm happy to say that he can tell his constituents that there are 15 projects in the constituency of Lesser Slave Lake that are included in the provincial construction program. The biggest one is 21 kilometres of repaving of highway 2A and highway 679. Also in the budget, rather than these record levels of investment, we're also seeing $14 billion of debt being paid off. That takes about one year of the NDP's four years off the books completely of their massive spending and debt. Not only are we investing; we're also paying off debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has the call.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. The people in the High Prairie area will be delighted to hear about the upcoming provincial construction program. Given that my constituents around the Slave Lake area also heavily rely on a road and bridge network to connect them to the rest of the province, I ask the same minister to please tell the House how the 2023 provincial construction program will address the road and bridge needs of people around the Slave Lake area such as highway 88.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Wilson Creek culvert replacement on highway 2A is another important project in this riding, roadwork on highway 2 east of Mitsue road, 14 kilometres of repaving between Slave Lake and highway 754 as well as a bridge rehabilitation at the Lily Creek bridge. Overall, we're investing 62 per cent more in capital maintenance and renewal above the greatest year that the NDP ever put into capital maintenance and renewal. I don't know if the NDP could find rural Alberta on the map, but we're investing in historic levels.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for his ongoing efforts to enhance Alberta's transportation infrastructure. Given that the Smith Bridge, which is a critical link for the town of Smith in the municipal district of Lesser Slave River, has a detour of nearly 100 kilometres, it is vital to ensure that the bridge is replaced before it becomes unusable. I ask the same minister to please provide this House with information on any actions to address this issue and prevent the people of Smith from losing this vital connection.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and to the member for that very important question. Budget 2023 actually does commit to the engineering work on Smith Bridge, something that the NDP didn't do in their time in government. Budget '23 also has $211 million for the Alberta waste-water and water program. That's a $120 million increase for rural municipalities. Again, when you contrast that to the NDP and the restrictive labour agreements that they want to bring into Alberta – the B.C. NDP have done that, something that the NDP leader had to pilot project here in Alberta – that's something we will never see here with a United Conservative government in Alberta.

The Speaker: Unfortunately, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. [interjections] I think that if there's a real challenge here, it's with the minister's answer, not the Speaker's ruling.

In 30 seconds or less we will continue with the remainder of the daily Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Red Deer-South.

Alberta

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My son and I listened to Dr. Jordan Peterson in a packed Calgary Jubilee Auditorium. It was good. Dr. Peterson is from Alberta. He has lectured at the universities of Toronto and Harvard. He is a clinical psychologist. Dr. Peterson has raised concerns that Trudeau is narcissistic. He is right. Narcissism is defined as a mental health condition where a person has an unreasonably high sense of his own importance. Trudeau's words and deeds speak for themselves. Alberta should not be compelled to protect ourselves from our own federal government, yet in spite of them Alberta succeeds.

Recently I attended a French immersion school assembly in Red Deer. I asked the packed gym how many had moved here from another country. Half the gym stood up, and all began applauding. We love them and their courage to seek a better life in a new land. Mr. Speaker, why are record numbers of families coming to Alberta from all over the world? Is it because Alberta is a woke NDP socialist paradise? No. But is it because Alberta is the best? Yes. Is it because Alberta leads Canada in economic growth? Yes. Is it because we have the highest incomes and lowest taxes? Yes. Is it because our government is not a fiscal train wreck with billions in surpluses and debt repayments? Yes.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a land of opportunity, of freedom and prosperity. We must be vigilant to keep it that way.

The Speaker: With apologies to the hon. the Member for Edmonton-City Centre, we are mildly out of order, but we will proceed to him immediately. The hon. the Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Publicly Funded Health Care

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, the Premier is obsessed with having Albertans pay out of pocket for health care. She just can't stop talking about it. Just this weekend she went on the radio to say that she'd like to see more Albertans pay out of pocket for an MRI or a CT scan. She said: it's a great preventative; if you pay for enough of them yourself – buy nine, get the 10th one free – maybe you'll identify an issue like stage 4 cancer.

But you know another great preventative, Mr. Speaker? A visit to your family doctor. Indeed, the Premier noted that these scans are covered when your doctor refers you. Unfortunately, thanks to this government's war on physicians, hundreds of thousands of Albertans don't have one. But let's not forget that this Premier is also on the record asking: "A regular checkup with your doctor. Is that really something that has to be covered 100 per cent by the government?" Well, for the record, yes, it is.

Then there are her comments from last summer: when you think about everything that built up before you got to stage 4, that's completely within your control, and there's something you can do about that that is different. Mr. Speaker, how cynical and out of touch can this Premier and the UCP possibly be? Whether it's a visit to your doctor, an MRI, prescription contraception, or a life-saving insulin pump, their go-to prescription for Albertans is for them to pay up. It's about as likely to work as the Premier's suggestion they take horse dewormer for COVID.

Mr. Speaker, we have a different plan, a real plan to strengthen and rebuild our health care system and ensure every Albertan can access the care they need, when they need it, close to home. Our plan for primary care will connect 1 million more Albertans with a family doctor and a family health team by supporting existing doctors and clinics and expanding their teams and funding 10 new clinics in communities of greatest need. We'll provide universal access to free prescription contraception, empowering women to take more control over their reproductive health and economic futures. An Alberta NDP government will provide more access and choice that doesn't require Albertans to reach for their wallet, and that's a promise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Retrospective by the Member for Edmonton-South

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Edmonton-South I rise today with mixed emotions. On one hand, I'm excited for what the future holds for both my constituents and for the entire province of Alberta. On the other hand, I'm looking forward at the great work that remains to be done even after serving almost eight years in this place. It's been one of the greatest honours and privileges of my life to serve the residents of Edmonton-South, and I'm proud of the work we have accomplished together.

We have built new high schools, we've announced a much-needed hospital, and we've made significant infrastructure investments on the ring road. We've also championed social justice issues like GSAs and the protection of our environment. But our work is far from over, Mr. Speaker. Our government must listen and care about the people we serve. We must ensure that every single Albertan has access to quality education, quality health care, and quality infrastructure. We must also protect our environment and stand up for social justice.

We all know that the current UCP government is failing in these areas. Instead of listening to the concerns of everyday Albertans, they're more focused on protecting the interests of corporations and their wealthy friends. They've chosen not to invest in our communities. They've chosen not to build new schools. They've chosen to attack doctors and nurses. They've neglected our environment and have been hostile to our marginalized communities.

But I am optimistic about the next election, Mr. Speaker. I'm confident that Albertans will choose a government that truly cares about their well-being, a government that will prioritize education, health care, and affordability, a government that will take action on climate change and cares about our communities.

As I see the end of this term as an MLA, I want to thank my constituents and all Albertans for their trust and support over the last eight years. It's been an honour to serve in this place, and I look forward to continuing to fight for a better Alberta in whatever capacity I can. I know Albertans will be making the same choice at the polls soon.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings? The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to table the Alberta Boilers Safety Association annual report 2022. Pursuant to section 38.1 of the Standing Orders I am tabling the required five copies of the report.

The Speaker: Opposition House Leader, do you have a tabling today? No? No tablings.

Are there other tablings?

I do have a tabling before me. I have an important memo that has been sent from the Speaker to the Deputy Premier, the Minister of Infrastructure. It is a birthday note saying happy birthday to the Deputy Premier.

Hon. members, just prior to you rising, I understand that there may be a desire for unanimous consent to revert to introductions. I received a note from the hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services for a brief introduction, so this will be a unanimous consent request to revert to introductions.

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce my wife, Anita Nixon, one of the most compassionate, caring individuals that I know. She has dedicated her life to service for others. She is my strength, my pillar, and my inspiration, so I ask her to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: We are at introductions. Are there others?

Seeing none, I see the hon. the Opposition House Leader is rising. I believe she has a unanimous consent request as well.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the spirit of co-operation which we just saw, I rise to seek unanimous consent, in this case to waive Standing Order 41(5.2). Later this afternoon we will be debating Motion Other than Government Motion 504. The Official Opposition would be pleased to introduce an amendment that has been shared with the government, and with unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 41(5.2), we would be able to do that. We seek the unanimous consent and the goodwill of the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, given that this is the first time we've had such a request, I will just read for the benefit of the Assembly Standing Order 41(5.2) as this is a request for unanimous consent to waive this standing order.

An amendment to a motion other than a Government motion, moved after the motion has been moved, must

- (a) be approved by Parliamentary Counsel no later than the Thursday preceding the day the motion is [to be] moved, and
- (b) be provided to the mover of the motion no later than 11 a.m. on the day the motion is moved.

I will ask only one question. Is there anyone opposed to providing unanimous consent? If so, please indicate now.

The Speaker: We are at Ordres du jour. Oh, correction. My apologies. Correction. I just get so excited for Orders of the Day every day that I missed my second favourite part, which is points of order. At 1:52 the hon. the Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j), particularly (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." At the time noted for the point of order, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora said, "Fabrication is for welders, not for Premiers." In this Chamber you can't do indirectly what you can't do directly. That'd be like me saying: being misleading is for bad tour guides, not for opposition leaders. That word is not acceptable; neither is "lying." To fabricate something, I suspect implying fabricating the truth, would be unparliamentary, and I argue that this is, in fact, a point of order and ask the member to apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 23(h) covers "allegations against another Member" specifically, and (i) also covers allegations against another member. What the Member for Edmonton-Glenora said was "fabrication is for welders, not for Premiers," so it was not directed at the Premier. It was a general statement that fabrication is left for welders; Premiers have a different kind of job. It's not directed at the Premier. It's not covered in 23(h) and (i), so it's not a point of order.

The Speaker: Are there others?

I am prepared to rule. While I appreciate the defence of the Opposition House Leader, there is only one Premier in the Assembly. It would be difficult to assume that it wasn't directed at anyone other than the Premier. As the Government House Leader has noted, it's not possible to do indirectly what you can't do directly, and as such I find this is a point of order. You can apologize and withdraw on behalf of the member.

Mr. Sabir: I apologize and withdraw on behalf of the member.

The Speaker: I consider the matter dealt with and concluded. Now we are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022

[Debate adjourned March 6: Mr. Nielsen speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to join in the debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the question.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and share my thoughts about Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. May I first extend my gratitude to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for bringing forward this private member's bill. I'm pleased to support the bill as it's written because I think that it serves an important function that will be in the public interest and will certainly protect a lot of senior citizens from potential harm.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Madam Speaker, as I understand the bill, this makes some changes to a previous bill, that was passed by our government in 2017, creating the silver alert system. The silver alert system will operate similar to the amber alert system but will apply in cases of missing adult citizens, generally senior citizens who are suffering from dementia. Some other changes that this bill makes: it specifically removes the definition of a mental disorder, and it's less prescriptive when it comes to identifying the circumstances under which the police may issue an alert, but it also limits a silver alert to an individual who is over the age of 55.

Now, in general, Madam Speaker, I think that, as I've said, these are positive changes that, if adopted, will improve the silver alert system, but I note that the silver alert legislation has never been proclaimed, and it is not currently in effect. Not only am I pleased to offer my support and vote in favour of this legislation, I urge the government to proclaim the bill, if it's amended as we see here today, as soon as possible because there are a lot of seniors whose lives and well-being could be protected if this bill were passed.

Now, Madam Speaker, it's, of course, no secret that our seniors population is growing. Certainly, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I have the privilege of representing a large number of senior citizens who live in my riding. Statistically speaking, Edmonton-Gold Bar is one of the oldest urban ridings in all of Alberta when it comes to considering the age of the population, so seniors' issues are something that I hear a great deal about.

I'm pleased to see that the government caucus is making some amendments that will actually make lives for seniors better after making so many decisions that have made lives for seniors harder over the last four years. I know that one of the first things that the government cut in its first budget was the seniors' drug benefit plan so that seniors' partners who were under the age of 65 were no longer eligible for coverage under the plan, and that created a great deal of hardship for the seniors living in my community. There were countless seniors who had partners under the age of 65 who were negatively affected by this and were scrambling to find drug coverage for their partners who were under the age of 65.

It's incredibly disappointing to me to see that this government hasn't restored that plan to its original form in spite of the fact that there is a considerable surplus. I can't think of anything better that the government could spend than to provide extended drug benefits to senior citizens and their partners regardless of their age, and I think that it's unconscionable that the government had decided so many years ago to eliminate those benefits.

One of the other decisions we see in this budget is that the government cut another additional $100 million in drug benefits. I don't know why the government continues to attack seniors' drug benefits, especially in light of our financial circumstances these days, but it seems that the government is ideologically opposed to government providing services to seniors and to providing public health care.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. Just a reminder that we've been off the topic of Bill 204 for quite some time. Perhaps we could get back on topic. Please proceed.

Mr. Schmidt: Madam Speaker, I mean, this is the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act. It deals with seniors and protecting them. My comments are related to protecting seniors. Some of the moves that this government has made I think are fully within the scope of debate here, and I would appreciate the opportunity to continue making the points that I'd like to make and that my constituents would like me to make on their behalf.

You know, one of the other things that this government has failed to address is the issue of continuing care. We see that the government has failed to adequately support the Good Samaritan and has allowed the Southgate centre to close down, which is shameful.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I have the same concern I had last time. I stood up to provide some caution to you and your remarks. We're on Bill 204, which is the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. Please speak to the bill. Please proceed.

Mr. Schmidt: Yes, Madam Speaker, I am speaking to the bill, and I'm also raising some issues that a number of senior citizens who live in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar have raised and insist that I discuss here in the Chamber.

The Deputy Speaker: Member, you are not here to debate the Speaker. I have asked you and provided caution on the remarks that you are making and the relevance to the topic that we are speaking on. You have one last chance to speak relevantly to Bill 204.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. If you insist on shutting down my voice and not allowing me to speak to senior citizens, I'd be happy to go back to the people of Edmonton-Gold Bar and let them know what happened here today.

On the issue of the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, as I said many times already in the few minutes that I've been up speaking, this is a significant advance in the protection of the health and well-being of senior citizens in this province. Unfortunately, it comes at the tail end of a government's term where we have seen a number of decisions that have made the lives of senior citizens harder. It's hard for me to accept that this government is genuinely concerned with the well-being and health of senior citizens when this government has made so many decisions that have been harmful to senior citizens. As I said, we've seen the government cut off drug benefits; we've seen that in multiple budgets. We've seen issues with continuing care that have affected a number of seniors.

The issue of seniors living with dementia is one that I hear about all the time in my constituency, and it's shameful, the lack of facilities that are provided to seniors who suffer from dementia. I know many people in my constituency have a great deal of difficulty finding adequate care for their partners or loved ones who are suffering from dementia and have to rely on friends and family and people who are not adequately equipped or trained to look after their partners or loved ones with dementia, and there is no government help available for them.

I hear continually concerns about the services that are provided through home-care providers, particularly when it comes to caring for people with dementia. I know that many seniors living with dementia are forced to live at home because there are no adequate facilities for them to live in. Unfortunately, their families just do not get adequate home care for their partners or loved ones who are suffering from dementia. And when they do get home care, the home-care services that they provide are often inadequate. I've heard countless stories from people who are living in my constituency who have in name home-care services but in practice don't receive the home-care services that that they are expecting or that they deserve.

I know many people have partners or loved ones who are receiving home care. Their home-care workers don't show up on time. Their home-care workers don't provide the services that they're expected to provide. They often change without notice.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to Bill 204? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to provide a few comments to Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. There is no question that the discussion that my hon. colleague began with on the topic of supports for people with Alzheimer's and dementia is an issue that I hear in my riding of Lethbridge-West as well given that we, too, have, I think, a slightly higher than average number of seniors living in Lethbridge-West and Lethbridge-East. I think it's just shy of 20 per cent. Certainly, I have had over the years many, many, many people come to me to talk to me about the need for more specialized Alzheimer's and dementia care, and ultimately that kind of care is what is at issue here.

Here we have an act, and a good one at that, to ensure at least a modicum of safety for adults who go missing. We also have a history with this particular bill. The hon. member had previously introduced this bill in 2017, noted it did not receive royal assent. It wasn't proclaimed due to the powers it could grant police in disclosing information not collected in accordance with the Missing Persons Act. So there's no question that we've had a few years to examine that. We should certainly find ways to answer those questions, and I hope that the hon. member has been able to receive those assurances in the intervening period, because ultimately I think this is a really good piece of legislation.

These silver alerts are for missing adult citizens, generally senior citizens with some form of Alzheimer's, dementia. You know, there's no question that we have an increasing number of folks, because we have an aging population, who certainly have been diagnosed these disorders.

We're getting better at early diagnosis, Madam Speaker. We're getting better at even brain research and understanding some of the pre-existing conditions or other aspects of brain development that show or that can begin to unlock some of the mysteries as to why dementia and Alzheimer's occur in some folks and what some of the precursors may be. Indeed, much of that research in the Canadian context is undertaken at the University of Lethbridge at the centre for neuroscience. Given the amount of interest in my local constituency I'm pleased to provide my support to this legislation.

Having said that, there is no question that appropriate care at every stage of diagnosis or early onset of dementia and Alzheimer's and appropriate support for both the patient and their families can certainly head off the need for such legislation. There is no question that investment in long-term care facilities with specialized Alzheimer's-dementia units with the appropriate number of staff, with the right kinds of supports for the patients – not only are they quite inaccessible; waits are long.

Sometimes families are put in a position where they have to purchase these services privately because there are no public facilities. There is no question that with home care, as my hon. colleague indicated, even when families are trying to support people at home before they make that transition into some form of supportive living facility, home-care budgets are strained, often families are paying out of pocket for these services, and they are not necessarily the level of care and support that families need.

I knocked on a door a couple of weeks ago now. It was quite a lovely day out, so I was able to get out onto Chippewa Crescent. Some folks came to the door and said: you know, we really appreciate your advocacy for health care in the riding. They have been supporting the woman's mother for some time and in that transition over to a continuing care facility where they knew that she was not getting exactly the level of care she needed for the level of dementia with which she had been diagnosed, but the family could not, with the assistance of home care, provide the kinds of supports that this woman needed so that she would remain safe, so that she would not need something like this legislation.

This human drama is playing itself out across the province, Madam Speaker, where families, essentially what we call the sandwich generation, are dealing with their aging parents, you know, and getting their children ready for university and what have you, and they find themselves looking for a public health care system that over the last three to four years has taken body blow after body blow with respect to availability of family doctors, of specialists, of continuing care spaces of various kinds.

Then they've seen the costs of those go up as well. Many, many people, as I said, are now paying privately for home care or because they need that additional piece of home care for their family members who have potentially early diagnoses of these diseases. Then once they do get into continuing care, the rental rates for that have gone up over the last three years. When the income tax bracket indexation did not happen, the amount of money given to residents in long-term care facilities was frozen as well, so they lost that pace of inflation. Their rental charges kept going up. The amount of money that was given to folks from the government, the government piece, remained constant. This also put a pressure on people's budgets.

Mr. Hanson: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Under 23(b)(i), which is a little bit different than we're used to, you know, basically it speaks to matters other than the question under discussion. You've pointed out to the previous member and – you know what? I've been in the House for about eight years, and I've witnessed some pretty shameless behaviour from the members opposite. I know the folks are in full campaign mode, and I get that, but politicizing a good bill like Bill 204 is pretty much a new low. I would appreciate if the folks would stop the politicizing of Bill 204 and get to the point. Talk about what this is actually doing. It's protecting seniors that happen to wander away from their home. It gives the families some kind of a facility to issue an alert. If the members could . . .

Mr. Schmidt: You have more hairs on your head than brains in your head.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, those are inappropriate comments in this Legislature, completely uncalled for, and I heard them. You have an opportunity now to stand up and apologize to the hon. member for your insults.

Mr. Schmidt: I apologize, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. There's a reason that I shave my head, because when I let it grow, it looks like his.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you now have the opportunity to apologize.

Mr. Hanson: I apologize and withdraw the comments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now that we are done with apologizing, I think at the second reading of a bill you can talk broadly about the principles of the bill. From what I've been hearing from my colleagues, they have kept the debate around the safety of seniors, issues facing seniors. They appreciated that it's a good step, but they are also highlighting the concerns relating to safety and issues facing seniors that they hear in their communities. I think it's well within what we do at the second stage of a bill. It's not a point of order, and certainly I can say this, that my colleagues will try to keep their comments more on the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I certainly can appreciate the last words that you added to this point of order.

I have given great latitude when it comes to relevancy on this topic for all members of this House during the course of this debate. However, I feel that members are starting to take advantage of the niceness of the Speaker in this regard. Hon. members, we're speaking about Bill 204. If you are going to talk about all sorts of aspects in all sorts of areas, please make it relevant to the state at hand. This will be a caution.

The hon. member has I thought 45 seconds, which made things a little bit more difficult, but it's two minutes and 45 seconds. I'm sure she will speak to the topic at hand as the caution has been provided by their own House leader.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Debate Continued

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to conclude my comments as I was discussing the specific challenges of my constituents as a result of knocking on doors, hearing from a specific family who were dealing with the safety and security of their family member who had dementia, and they were having to look for the appropriate amount of care. There's no question that that was difficult to come by, and that in itself was – they had to settle for a level of care that, over time I think, has become better. At least their family member is now safe from the very obvious thing that was about to happen without that care, which was potential harm to the family member themselves or others.

There is no question that, just as we have Amber Alert for children, this is obviously an important piece of infrastructure for public safety and public emergencies. There is no question that when we discuss Amber Alerts, we also need to discuss safety and security for children in all of the aspects of family and social life that surround children to keep them safe. In the context of the silver alert it is the same dynamic at play.

Now, I am quite certain that I will end up in many more of these conversations over the next couple months given that these sorts of issues are raised on the doorstep all the time. Given that my colleagues, as well, are out knocking on doors and people are raising their health and seniors' care concerns with them and that we will all be having these conversations, it would be good, I think, to be able to answer them with something, with a proclaimed silver alert amendment act that has grappled with some of the issues that were first raised in 2017. What would be even better is to be able to pair that with a commitment to expanded long-term care, particularly public long-term care, that is affordable for everyone and gives the right level of care for all seniors.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there are other members wishing to join the debate on Bill 204? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate this opportunity to speak to a bill which I think is very important. I must express some of my concern that while the government side is berating us for speaking to the issue, they themselves are not speaking to it at all. If they feel like it should be addressed and we should focus on it and that's what we should use our time to do, you would think they would have some value in actually speaking to it themselves, so I'm a bit concerned.

I am concerned about this because I certainly know a lot of people who are of a certain age, as am I, who are looking more and more at the concerns of aging and some of the outcomes that are possible for us as we get older. I know in my own family, now that we're all reaching our 60s and 70s, more and more of our family members are experiencing health issues. For some of them, unfortunately, those issues also encompass cognitive issues that make the rest of us very concerned and very worried about the well-being of our family members and their safety. Recently I had a family member who had to go to hospital emergency because of exactly that kind of situation. You know, we are all very concerned about it.

I remember one particular incident that sort of resonated with me for many years. That is that back in the 1990s, when I was working an NDP campaign in what is now called Edmonton-Riverview, a gentleman came in and sat in our campaign office. I noticed that although it was March, he didn't have a jacket on, and he was wearing slippers, so we kind of approached him and, you know, "Can we help you?" as you do when someone comes into a campaign office. It became apparent that he wasn't there for the campaigning purposes, so we said, “Well, would you like a ride home or something?” because I was concerned that he didn’t have a jacket on. He said, “Oh, sure; that would very nice,” so I said to him to hop into my car.

We got into my car. We were just by the university, and I said to him: so where is it that you live? Then he identified a World War II camp that used to exist near the university as his place of residence, at which point I realized this was an individual who was not cognitively aware and believed himself to be living in an era that was, at that point, 50 years old. It just so happened that I do know about the veterans centre near the university, just south of the university, and I suspected that someone wearing slippers and without a jacket had probably wandered away from that centre. Indeed, I drove the individual over to the veterans centre, and they had not even been aware that this individual had left the centre. This is the type of circumstance we’re talking about today, where people are clearly vulnerable, and they certainly need to be taken care of. You know, that’s the kind of thing I think that we should be doing.

I’m increasingly worried about these because of some of the context within which we are seeing this bill being brought forward, the context of the behaviours of this government over the last number of years. For example, the elimination of drug coverage for partners of seniors worries me a lot because if you can’t afford drugs for your partner and those drugs allow your partner to live a fulsome and safe life but your inability to pay for those drugs causes that partner to become increasingly vulnerable, then how much more likely is it that we’re going to find that someone whose services have been diminished by this UCP government is going to be in need of a service like the silver alarm? I am very discouraged to find the government, you know, wanting us to speak to supporting the silver alarm, which obviously I do – I’m very, very happy that there is an outlet for those circumstances where something negative happens, but I’m very concerned that the government is actually creating the circumstance under which the likelihood of needing that service is going to increase. I think the government has continued to do that in a variety of ways, and I think that’s an inconsistent philosophical place for the government to be taking.

For example, the government has eliminated the Seniors Advocate position in this government, a position that’s been around for a number of years, and they didn’t see right to follow that up. Now, how many of these vulnerable people could be well protected if there was somewhere in the government where concerns could be addressed, where phone calls could be made about, “I’m very concerned that this person is not receiving the services that they need in order to be safe,” to prevent the need for a silver alert, to get in front of it, to be proactive? We certainly could have used a Seniors Advocate who would ensure that all of our seniors are well taken care of in appropriate facilities with appropriate services and getting appropriate services in their home. Had all those things existed under this government, which they do not, how many times could we save ourselves from having to go to the end-resort activity of putting out a silver alert?

That’s the kind of concern I’m concerned about. That’s the context we have to understand when we look at this government wanting us to support silver alert but then not philosophically staying with the concern of the protection of seniors in the rest of their behaviour. I think that is a deep concern and therefore legitimizes the members on this side spending time talking about the context, legitimizes the members saying in this House what we all know, and that is: if you create the structures that increase vulnerability for seniors, you are going to increase the need for some kind of an after-the-fact intervention such as the silver alert.

We know that this government has done a variety of things to increase that vulnerability and that risk. I have within my constituency, for example, a seniors’ residence, southside care, that has recently had a reduction in the number of beds available. Given the increasing population that we have in the seniors area, that is a real serious concern. The concern is that if we reduce the number of beds in places like the southside care centre, that resides in Edmonton-Rutherford, then we are going to be in a situation where people do not have the ability to move into appropriate settings where they will receive appropriate care and therefore be in a place where their vulnerability has been increased and therefore are likely to be the type of people that we end up having to create a silver alert for.

That’s the kind of thing that we would like to see this government do: to prevent it before it actually becomes a problem in the first place, to reduce the vulnerability of our seniors, to reduce the threat to their safety and their well-being that we see when you do things like eliminate the Seniors Advocate, when you do things like eliminate the drug coverage for partners of seniors, when you do things like reduce the number of beds available in long-term protected care. Those are the things that are deeply concerning on this side of the House, and we think it’s philosophically consistent to say that if we care about seniors, we care about them not only when they are lost and we want to find them again through the use of a silver alert, but we are concerned about them when they are lost living in their own home, when they are lost in institutions that do not have sufficient resources, when they are lost because when things go wrong, they do not have an advocate that they can call to correct the vulnerabilities, to reduce the risks, and to bring them back into the place of well-being that we want our seniors to live in.

Now, some of us in this House are a little bit more worried about those seniors’ issues as we’re a little bit closer to it than others, but I think it’s really important that all of us in this House take the time to evaluate what our position is as a society with regard to our elders. Do we as a society have a responsibility to ensure the well-being of our elders?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. This is actually my first opportunity to speak to Bill 204, so I do have some questions in relation to how the bill was drafted and why some changes were made in relation to a pre-existing Bill 210, that was actually taken to a community and some consultation was done on that bill, because some concerns were raised respecting the Missing Persons Act, disclosure of information by police to public, and a couple of other topics that I haven’t seen addressed necessarily or heard being addressed through debate. Again, in fairness, this is my first time speaking to it, so if there are answers to my questions, I would be more than happy to hear from the member of the government being able to maybe clarify some of these questions.

One of the things that happened in Bill 210, that was passed in 2017, was that there was an opportunity and an ability for this not to just impact seniors but also to support individuals that may be dealing with some type of mental health concern and the police then being able to issue an alert because of that. It wasn’t necessarily just related to a 55-plus. It could be someone who may be known to a family member to have some mental health concerns that people would be relatively concerned about their safety and well-being and needing to be able to find them as soon as possible to ensure that their health was being addressed.

Now, my understanding is that the definition of a mental disorder has been removed from the bill and that it limits the silver alert to only being for those at the age of 55 and over. My concern is that I have had, actually, a few situations in my riding where adults, young adults in their 20s, have had some mental health disorders that they've been dealing with, diagnoses that they have, and unfortunately they have left the home and have gone missing. Of course, my riding has a little bit of an urban setting but mostly has lots of farmland and then, of course, the river valley along the North Saskatchewan. It's concerning because there's an ability to wander in my riding and get lost, and there's not a lot of population in certain areas of my riding for people to see if someone is wandering down the road without a coat on or any of that kind of stuff. So to see this removed – what ended up happening for this one particular family in my riding is they ended up having to put up billboards in the neighbourhoods with this person's picture on, a phone number that they had come up with asking for people to call, Facebook, using social media as much as they could. But, of course, had there been an ability for an alert to go out, the opportunity to maybe share that information would have been, well, more efficient and would've gotten out to a lot more people.

I think, you know, when we look at these alerts – and I think we can all acknowledge that we are very familiar with the alerts given last week or the week before, when we all got about eight or 10 alerts all within, like, 30 seconds of each other and nobody was quite sure what was going on. The test apparently worked, too efficiently, some would say probably, but we know it can work. I think, looking at a piece of legislation like this, this is really important, I would say, for our smaller communities, our rural communities, where the population is less and the opportunity for individuals to wander into bigger spaces and things like that and not necessarily be noticed as quickly as maybe if you were in downtown Edmonton or downtown Calgary. I think it's very important.

You know, I'm not saying I don't support the bill, because I do; I just wish the age group wasn't there. Maybe part of the reason for that is that there's a reason why the member chose the age of 55 and over. Maybe that was part of what came out of the consultation with the Missing Persons Act and whether or not they were able to disclose information and whether that has more to do with the fact that there are probably some guardianship components that are attached to this. I appreciate that, but I would be curious to know: if it was someone between the ages of 18 and 55 that's missing in this piece of legislation, if they also had guardians, would they be able to actually engage with this alert system? Can we do interventions in private members' business?

The Deputy Speaker: No.

Mr. Smith: We could do interventions at first, but we can't now.

Ms Sweet: No, we can't. Okay. Well, maybe somebody else can answer when I'm done. I appreciate the member who wrote the bill wanting to answer my questions.

I think that, you know, it's an important piece because it isn't always just seniors that I think we're talking about. In fact, I would say, again, going back to my riding, that I have one of the youngest ridings in the province, and many of the individuals that would benefit from something like this would probably be in that 18 to 55 age group who are needing additional supports. So I see that.

Again, recognizing and moving on into the rural components, I do think that this is very helpful. You know, I would hate to hear of a scenario where this wasn't being able to be used. My family is from Pincher Creek, and had my grandma still been around, if she had decided to go for a walk without anybody with her, I think we would all be pretty scared at that point although she was pretty well known; people would've noticed her pretty fast. Anyway, the idea behind that, though, is that I think it is a good idea.

The other piece that I'm looking into wanting to kind of understand from the member, which, again, I think goes back to what came out of the committee when this was debated before, was: what is the privacy for adults and the idea around self-determination and, you know, at what point do we consider someone missing? Obviously, that is clear in the Missing Persons Act, and we would know that.

Now, the other piece around this is, again, looking at the infrastructure. Going back to the fact that we obviously know the alert systems work, I would be wondering, from the government's perspective, what the financial commitment would need to be to be able to update this system. Would it be piggybacking on the back of the Amber Alert, or would it just be a line text change? So the system would be the exact same system, no different than if we use the Amber Alert and it's a different child, age, vehicle, things like that. If it's really just a turn in phrase or if there would have to be a whole other infrastructure component built to support this.

And then, on top of that, given our experience over the last couple of weeks with these alerts repeatedly going out into the universe on our phones, what is the measurability to make sure that people don't become desensitized to the alerts? I think even based on our experience a couple of weeks ago, when we were getting inundated with alerts, at some point people get a little bit frustrated with the system and how it works. I want to make sure even from a testing perspective as well as a use perspective that this is being used in those urgent moments and not being done to the point where people become desensitized to them and then they don't read them; they don't look at them. That would be the other question that I have around the bill.

You know, I would hope that we can use the Amber Alert system and that we're not trying to create another system that is going to have a financial component attached to it that couldn't be somehow figured out so that we're not spending money if we can use a system that already is being used and working.

Other than that – oh, the other piece, too – sorry – that I just wanted to flag is that we know that something similar exists in Ontario, B.C., and Manitoba, and I just want to make sure that it's no different than our Amber Alert, that the silver alert would then be compatible across the country and that we're not building systems in other provinces that don't necessarily work together. Again, it defeats the purpose, and then we're just creating redundancy after redundancy on these issues.

I think that is what I have in closing. I look forward to hearing from the member that introduced the bill, Drayton Valley-Devon, maybe when he has an opportunity to answer my questions.

The Deputy Speaker: Just in time.

Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. I have appreciated the debate so far from members on this side of the House. I think they've raised some important questions, some that I will likely highlight through my time in discussion.

You know, again, just looking at what this bill is proposing, at the end of the day, offering changes to Bill 210, that was passed back in 2017 – of course, we never saw that proclaimed as far as I can tell, Madam Speaker. Instead, we see some changes being proposed through this amendment act regarding some of the details within here, arguably making it less prescriptive than what was previously introduced. The previous member spoke to it but, specifically, removing the definition of a mental disorder and the circumstances under which the police may issue an alert and, finally, limiting the silver alert to an individual over the age of 55.

Again, I think, as the previous member stated, it would be important to hear from the mover and creator of this legislation to provide comments and details about exactly why these changes have been made, what further consultation took place that has made them arrive at a different place than what was originally proposed. I, you know, do not argue the changes that they've made. I think that likely there's good reason for it, but I think it's important that we hear why those decisions were made in terms of the changes that are being proposed in this amendment act.

You know, we see that – again, as the previous member spoke to, we've seen jurisdictions across the United States moving forward with similar legislation, specifically in 48 states, as well as Quebec recently introducing a pilot project in the fall of 2023, and Ontario, B.C., and Manitoba have also brought forward similar legislation. I would also ask the mover of this legislation if what we're seeing proposed in Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, is exactly what we see in other provinces, if there are some minor changes, if there are any larger changes that are important to provide and have our own distinct policies here in the province compared to what we've seen in other jurisdictions, whether across North America or across Canada.

You know, in my time as an MLA, like many other of the members who have spoken this afternoon, I have seen instances of what I would believe to be somebody in my community that would likely meet the criteria of a silver alert. Thinking back to those situations and how concerning it is for the family of a senior or a member of our community that has gone missing, for potentially the support staff who may or may not have been in charge of keeping them safe and ensuring that they were in a specific location and just in general the broader community and the concern there.

It's just about ensuring that the people that live in that community are protected and safe. In general I think those are all important things that we should aim for and things that we also need to measure, you know, before this legislation is introduced and following the implementation of this legislation and this amendment act if it is passed.

Some questions that I have – and hopefully this came up through the consultation process. I would be interested to find out if there is a breakdown of where the majority of these cases are happening, the majority of cases that would meet this criteria of a silver alert, if it's primarily happening in long-term care settings, if it's primarily happening in community, you know, home support being provided to a senior potentially, where we are most likely to see this. If there is a breakdown that the member or the government is able to provide – or even anecdotes, Madam Speaker, I suppose would suffice at this time – I'd be interested to find out if there is quite a difference between how, when this is happening, and where it's happening overall.

I think that question would lead back to some of the discussions that we've heard from members this afternoon and very likely through previous discussions about the need to ensure that no matter where a senior or any Albertan is getting supports, they are getting adequate supports.

Again, this goes back to the idea that I've heard again and again and concerns that have been raised throughout my last eight years representing many seniors in Edmonton-West Henday. We have a number of long-term care facilities as well as seniors receiving supports in their own home and in their own community. I think it's important to understand, again, past what we're seeing in this legislation and what could be argued as reactionary compared to what changes we could potentially be making on the prevention side if it is a need, which very likely is a need for increased supports in home care and increased supports in long-term care facilities in general, Madam Speaker.

That is something that I've heard again and again, that not only is there not enough space in our long-term care facilities, but if you are able to get a space in them, very often they unfortunately are just – you know, a lot of them do the best that they can with the funding that they're provided and the funding that they collect, but sometimes mistakes are made at the end of the day, and I guess that is why there is value in seeing something like what is proposed in Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act.

Beyond hoping and looking for a breakdown of where the majority of these situations are happening, you know, whether it's a senior who has stepped out of their home and is potentially lost, if it is a senior that has left their long-term care facility, I'm hoping that the member or the government is able to provide how many cases Alberta traditionally sees year to year that would likely meet the criteria of what is being proposed in Bill 204 and likely meet the criteria of having a silver alert put out to the public, if that number is growing year to year as decisions are made and, of course, through the pandemic, that has added a number of complexities to our long-term care facilities, to the ability to provide supports to seniors in our community. I'd be interested to find out if there is any sort of breakdown year to year and potentially looking back and, again, looking forward, what we might expect to see from those numbers.

As the previous member and many other members have brought forward, looking for a cost analysis of this legislation. Again, I am in full support of what we're seeing proposed in Bill 204, but I think that it's always important that we look at the effectiveness of a program based on the cost. Again, not arguing the effectiveness of this program. But we need to ensure, if we are putting forward legislation like Bill 204, that the money is best spent in a reactionary way, in this instance, compared to putting that money forward into prevention. Again, I wouldn't argue that, but I think it's valuable that we have an understanding of the cost breakdown, where those funds are going to come from, et cetera.

Madam Speaker, I want to be careful, because I do appreciate that you have put forward a number of I don't want to say warnings, but for lack of better terms I think we do have to look at the way that we support our seniors overall, in general, when we have considerations like Bill 204 in front of us. I won't push the point too much, but when we do look at changes that have been made over the last few years around the elimination of drug coverage for beneficiaries, I think there is very likely a case to be made that we could see ourselves having more seniors or Albertans meeting the criteria of a silver alert if they are no longer able to access the medication coverage that they need.

I think that it's just a part of the bigger conversation, that it needs to be discussed, that all changes that have been made, whether it be under this government, under previous governments, around the way that we support our seniors are very much relevant and that they do provide a better picture of what is being proposed. At the end of the day . . . [Mr. Carson's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. This is my first opportunity to speak to this, and I'm listening closely to the debate. You know, I think I can agree a hundred per cent that we need to do as much as we can to support seniors in this province, and I think that this is a good step towards doing that.

I know that here in Alberta we have the Amber Alert system, which is for children, and I've seen as a social worker a few instances where that has resulted in some incredible responses from the community, from the police, from those that are all alerted to this to make sure that a child is located safely. I've seen the success first-hand of that. The intent of this legislation, with Bill 204, I think is to make sure that when someone, I believe, aged 55 or older is missing, they meet certain criteria and then an alert can be issued.

Now, I think that when we're talking about this bill, there are a few questions that I have that I am hopeful will be addressed. I'm curious: why the age? Why 55? Where did that number come from? I know that there are individuals that are younger that have early-onset dementia and could benefit from this legislation if something unfortunate happened to them and they were missing and their loved ones determined that, you know, an alert needed to be issued. So I'm curious how the age, 55, was determined when it came to this legislation.

I'm also curious about why the definition of mental disorder was removed. I think that when police are looking at the criteria to issue an alert, the more detail and definitions that we can provide, the better. I've watched in court cases where people have come forward requesting from the courts a secure – regarding either a youth or an adult. Having a clear definition is definitely helpful for those that are making the decisions. We saw numerous requests coming forward to the courts to have some of these certificates issued, but they didn't meet the criteria. So when a definition is available, I would argue that that is a lot more user friendly for those that are making the decisions.

When an alert is issued, it is important, and it's something that we want to make sure Albertans are paying attention to when they get that alert on their phone. I know that it's a fine line between someone's privacy and someone's personal information and an individual's, an adult's, self-determination. There are many criteria that come into place. When someone is coming forward and arguing that a silver alert needs to be issued, it's beneficial to have a very clear, concise definition of what that could mean.

I know that I've spoken to many people that are in situations right now where they have their aging loved ones at a place where they need more supervision, where they need more assistance, and caregivers are really struggling with what to do. We've watched a system, from this government, of lack of support to seniors, and we're hearing from families that they're feeling overwhelmed, that they're feeling burned out when it comes to caring for seniors, and they have this awful circumstance that they've described as being not able to meet their loved one's needs in their home. There's a lack of resources and supports for home care but also really struggling with having their family member going to a longer term facility despite knowing that the level of care is needed, that they are at high risk of being someone that could require a silver alert.

When we're talking about ways to support seniors, I think the conversation needs to be bigger, Madam Speaker, and I think that having a silver alert amendment act is definitely a positive step. We want to make sure that seniors are safe. We want to make sure that the community is engaged in ensuring their safety. We know that when an Amber Alert comes out, everybody gets notification and a description, and people are paying attention. People do not want to see a child at risk or hurt, and I believe that the same is true for seniors.

When we're talking about the resources and supports to help diminish the need for a silver alert, we need to talk about the bigger picture and what sort of services and supports are being supported. Throughout this term of this government we've seen those supports be significantly decreased. We watched through the pandemic devastating impacts on seniors, with so many being exposed unnecessarily to COVID and to other heartbreaking scenarios where families are at a place where they're struggling with what to do with their loved ones.

I know as a social worker supporting caregivers in the community that these are tough decisions. When we're looking at ways to support seniors in Alberta, it needs to be a broader conversation. Why is there a lack of supports for seniors? Why is there no longer a Seniors Advocate? Those are the conversations that we're having at the doors. Those are conversations that I know are happening around kitchen tables all across the province.

I've heard a devastating story about a family friend's great-aunt. I believe she's in her early 80s, and she is struggling with some significant memory issues: dementia, Alzheimer's. The amount of care that is required is – when she's awake, she needs to be supervised, and she's a significant risk to herself, without intending to be, because she has no idea of where she is, who's around her, her loved ones, et cetera, and she's afraid, Madam Speaker. When trying to have conversations with her great-aunt, she said that it's heartbreaking, because if she was to leave the floor of the unit that she's on, they don't believe that she would ever find her way back, and without assistance of the community it could be a really devastating situation. They were quite worried about her when it was quite cold because she liked to be outside, but she needed constant supervision.

So there were family conversations about what that could look like, what that quality of life was for her. Was it better for the family to bring her into their home, where they were hopeful that there would be some form of normalcy, or should she stay in the facility that she was at? It was a very, very real fear that if she left the facility, she would be at risk of needing a silver alert. These are conversations that I know people are having when it comes to their loved ones and the seniors.

I'm just curious what the intention is around the age, like I said, in this piece of legislation and about making sure that it doesn't contravene the Missing Persons Act. I know that there are some conversations that we're having here in the Leg. talking about these things, but I would really hope that we can get some clarity around that, because this is a piece of legislation that I really want to support. I think that when we're talking about making steps to ensure that seniors are at a decreased risk if they go missing, we need to come together to support that. I'm not sure that all of the information has been clarified in this piece of legislation. Like I said, a definition of mental disorder I think would be incredibly important when it comes to those making the decision of whether or not to issue an alert. There are circumstances that I've seen when it comes to issuing alerts regarding children – it's a tough criteria to determine what is the best interest of that individual.

Thank you so much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to this Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, for second reading. I think, if I'm not mistaken, it is one of the very few times I have seen a private member's bill make it to second reading, because for the most part under the UCP the process was that the bill will get introduced and then handed over to a committee, where it will be decided without any input from members of this House, all members of this House, whether that bill should be debated or not. For the most part we missed out debating all those private members' bills, good ideas that private members have brought forward.

This is one such bill, which comes with a good idea on what we can do to make sure that for those who are at risk of going missing, there is some process in place that will make sure that they are safe. In all of our ridings, in our communities seniors are a vital part of our communities, and the constituency I represent has also a considerable number of seniors living in it. There are quite a few senior-serving organizations as well, and whenever I have the opportunity to engage with them at their events, engage with their loved ones, the conversation about seniors will start with their safety and their well-being because, as my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford said, when we grow older, which we all do, our needs change, and those changes do impact our safety needs as well.

As my colleague mentioned, when the pandemic hit, certainly it was a general health risk for Albertans of all ages, but we know from day one that medical professional advice was that seniors will be more vulnerable, that they will be more at risk. There's more that was advised of us all to do to protect seniors. Their safety is an important concern, and that's what this bill is trying to help with in at least one way, by creating a silver alert so that for those who are vulnerable or at risk of going missing, there is some process in place that will make sure that they have some help that will be available to them.

As I said, I'm speaking in support of this bill and in support of this proposal that will help make our communities safer, at least one step more safe, but we do have some questions about this legislation. We do know that the same or a similar bill was brought forward before, and it was not proclaimed. At that time I think one of the reasons that was noted for not proclaiming that piece of legislation was that there were concerns that it could give police information not collected in accordance with the Missing Persons Act. So we do want to know, need to know: what steps, if any, were taken to make sure that that concern was addressed? What assurances has the member received, can the member provide this House and Albertans that this bill will not be in contravention of the Missing Persons Act?

Another concern that was raised with respect to these amendments was that now this bill, the bill in its current form, removes the definition of mental disorder and the circumstances under which police may be able to issue an alert. I do understand that it's a difficult topic, and coming up with a definition which will cover a range of mental health concerns, issues is difficult, but as was mentioned by my colleague from Edmonton . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but according to Standing Order 8 the mover of the bill has five minutes to close us out.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Private member's Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, will enable police services across this province to be able to access a tool that will help the police to find seniors that have gone missing and are believed to be at risk. I'm grateful for the members of the Legislature that have stood and have spoken to this bill in second reading and have provided some insights and some questions that they may have as we move on to the next stage, which would be the Committee of the Whole. I look forward to resuming the debate and to perhaps answering some of those questions. I would encourage all to pay attention, to listen to the debate as it moves forward, and hopefully, at the end of the day, to support this in Committee of the Whole and to support this in third reading.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, before we proceed with debate, there has been a request to briefly revert to introductions, so I will seek unanimous consent.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose on introductions.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you members of the rodeo and chuckwagon associations. I have with me Geoff Turnquist; PBR event producer Angela Watson; Coy Robbins, professional bull rider; Shaun Morton, rodeo production manager; Denny Phipps, GM, Canadian Professional Rodeo Association; Patty Auger, Canadian Professional Rodeo Association; Celeste Chaytors with the Cowboy Channel Canada and also with Alberta High School Rodeo; Presley Chaytors is here with the rodeo as well; Pam Golden and her daughter Emma, also with Alberta High School Rodeo. Please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Chamber.

The Deputy Speaker: Welcome. Welcome.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Official Sport of Alberta Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to my private member's bill, Bill 205, regarding the recognition of rodeo and chuckwagon as the official sport of Alberta. You know, I wanted to pause and just tell you all why it is that this bill is so important to me. Rodeo and chuckwagon are events, sports that I grew up watching as a child, and the reason I had that opportunity is because my grandfather used to break horses. He would say to us every year, at least two or three times a year: come on, girls; get in the car; we're going to the rodeo. And off we would go, and we would spend the day together. Those bring back such great memories for me, and I hope that all Albertans have that opportunity to spend family time attending rodeos and chuckwagon races because it's made for very long-lasting, pleasurable memories for me and my family.

I'll just go on to tell you that sports are not just for competition but also a way of life that creates a cultural identity. Canadians have always and will always be identified by their love of hockey. Most Calgarians and Edmontonians have an identity built around their love of the Flames or the Oilers. The rivalry against each other and their close connections to their respective cities create culture identities for both Calgarians and Edmontonians.

A similar logic and view apply to the beloved sport of rodeo and chuckwagon racing here in our province. Without the rodeo and chuckwagon races there would be a missing piece in Alberta's proud western heritage. Rodeo and chuckwagon promote Alberta's strong cultural mindset of being a proud maverick. Alberta was founded by settlers who embodied the values of hard work, resilience against the untamed prairies, and communities built by people who believe in one another. Rodeos and chuckwagon racing display all these traits and characteristics. Rodeo and chuckwagon racing are sports that demonstrate a passion for improving oneself, both mentally and physically. They bring together the young and the old to rally around adversity and competition.

This also describes who Albertans are, what we stand for, and why we live in the most fantastic province in Canada. The cultural importance of rodeo and chuckwagon racing to Alberta cannot be overstated. When visitors come from across Alberta, the country, and the world to participate in rodeo and chuckwagon events, it gives Alberta a chance to welcome people from different backgrounds. It creates a sense of community, belonging, and friendship.

The sport of rodeo and chuckwagon racing is a vital part of Alberta's rich cultural fabric that highlights Alberta's agriculture sector. To give members of the House an idea of the impact that rodeo and chuckwagon racing and its agriculture events have on Alberta, I'd like to mention a few examples. There are 94 primary agriculture societies, seven regional agriculture societies, and one major agriculture society that hold a whopping 138-plus rodeo events spread across our great province. The first Canadian rodeo was held in Raymond, Alberta, in 1903, two years before our province came into being. The first Calgary Stampede quickly followed, in 1912, which has been popular with tourists from across the country and the world ever since. The Calgary Stampede draws around 1 million visitors annually and is now called the world's most significant outdoor attraction event.

The direct impact of the 10-day Calgary Stampede has an economic impact of $282.5 million, but imagine the indirect effect of the Stampede, from the hotels that are booked to the tourists visiting Calgary's small businesses, to buying souvenirs, to the indirect jobs created because of the Stampede. These indirect impacts are likely unaccountable. The beauty of all this comes because we embrace our western heritage culture, and rodeo and chuckwagon have no doubt helped in the creation of building Alberta's unique cultural identity.

Rodeo and chuckwagon racing: the economic tourism benefits are not just insulated to Calgary. In fact, hundreds of similar stampedes happen simultaneously across the province every year due to the long months of summer. For example, the Canadian Finals Rodeo, held at Westerner Park in Red Deer, is a six-day event with over 43,000 attendees and an economic impact of $37 million. Also, rodeos, like the Ponoka Stampede and Strathmore Stampede, contribute millions of dollars to our local economies. In my Camrose constituency we are enjoying the PBR in Camrose.

At its heart, Madam Speaker, rodeo is about community. They're not just about competition and the demonstration of skills but also about coming together to enjoy food, listening to local singers, shopping at trade shows, and visiting the rides at the fairgrounds. They bring people together from all walks of life and backgrounds, immigrants and new Albertans from all other parts of Canada, people who have been here for generations.

Making rodeo Alberta's official sport would help to illustrate the importance of rodeo and chuckwagon racing to our province and local communities, who work year-round preparing for the season. Families, agriculture associations, local businesses, community associations, and individuals rely on the income they make from the season. Our love for rodeos and chuckwagon racing is something we all share as Albertans, and I want that to be officially recognized in this Legislature.

Some of the most notable rodeos in the Camrose constituency include the Sodbuster Rodeo, the Cloverdale rodeo, the Hardisty Rodeo, the Killam Indoor Rodeo, and the Bruce Stampede. The Bruce Stampede is particularly noteworthy as it has produced some of the most talented and accomplished rodeo stars for nearly 100 years.

It's important to note that the Canadian Professional Rodeo Association regulates the sport. Rodeo judges are responsible for enforcing all CPRA rules, including a section that deals exclusively with the humane treatment of livestock. Rodeo and chuckwagon judges undergo constant training and evaluation to ensure they are knowledgeable and up to date on the rules. The association's rules and regulations include more than 60 rules dealing with the treatment of livestock. Committees ensure that the facilities are inspected before the animals and contestants arrive, to minimize the chance of injury to the animals and contestants. Professional judges check the livestock before each performance, and any animal suspected of being unable to compete to the best of their ability is pulled from the competition.

Alberta's love for rodeo and chuckwagon mirrors the values and character that Albertans represent today. Rodeo is not a sport but a way of life for Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to have this opportunity to introduce the bill and welcome the guests.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, can I just have you stand back up and say that you move second reading?

Ms Lovely: I move second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Perfect. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 205, the Official Sport of Alberta Act. I would like to also extend a warm welcome to all those that are joining us in the gallery today from the rodeo community. I think it's wonderful when individuals can come and experience the Legislature and hear about the debate that's happening.

I, too, have a strong connection with rodeo. I grew up in Whitecourt, Alberta, and my parents had many friends from childhood that participated in rodeo. They were athletes from bull riding to barrel racing and calf roping. I have very, very fond memories, as a little girl travelling all across the Alberta rodeo circuit, cheering on some of these athletes from Sangudo, Mayerthorpe, Boyle. It was just a great experience. I was very fortunate, Madam Speaker, to be able to sit as a board member at Northlands and participate in some of the behind-the-scenes stuff that was happening around the CFR specifically. I'm very grateful for rodeo and the contribution that it made in my life upbringing, so it's wonderful to have these conversations and talk about, you know, a key piece of Alberta's culture and history. I couldn't agree more that there are so many wonderful memories that come out of rodeo, and being able to talk about it is incredible.

I mean, when you travel, if you go down to Vegas for the rodeo there, there are lots of Albertans there, and they're well represented. I can say with pride that, you know, when you're around the community, the pride that comes from so many family and friends that have athletes involved in rodeo is spectacular.

On the other side, Madam Speaker, I am the Culture critic, and I represent all sport across this beautiful province, and I have some questions that I hope will be answered through debate in the House. I think that rodeo is absolutely an identity when it comes to Alberta's culture and history, but I question why it was chosen at the exclusion of so many others. Not to say that I don't support it, not at all. I just have heard from so many organizations in sport that questioned: who was consulted when this came to be? I know that there's a great hockey community in the province. There's lacrosse. There's soccer. There's basketball. There's baseball. I would like to know, you know: were these organizations consulted? We have Alberta representatives from soccer, from basketball, from hockey. I'm curious if they had a consult in terms of when the sport was being determined for the province. If they haven't been consulted with, are there plans to consult with them? I feel like when we're talking about an official sport for the province, we have to include some of those major players.

Part of my childhood was rodeo, absolutely, but I also spent a lot of time in arenas all across the province both as a figure skater myself and supporting my brother's hockey. We played in barns all over Alberta. It was part of our life, and I know that it's a part of many Albertans' lives, as is soccer. I know that soccer is huge in the province. We have so many that play, and to not have those sorts of organizations at the table is a bit concerning.

I've heard that some are feeling left out. They're not feeling like they've been included in the conversation about selecting a sport for the province, and I would like to hear from the hon. member that brought this forward what that consultation looked like, whose voices were at the table, and how it was determined that rodeo was selected. I think that Alberta is a very, very diverse province, and I think we have so much going for us when it comes to sport. I would hope that the hon. member took opportunity to speak to the many, many levels of sports that are represented all across the province.

When it comes to reporting activities in the province, as the Culture critic it's something that I look at, it's something that I see as being very important when we talk about targets and looking at ways to include activities, physical activity, to Albertans. I know it's broken up into two categories: we look at adults, and we look at children. When we look at participation, from a government report from 2018-2019, it states that the adults who participated in organized sport activities: 22.7 per cent played hockey, 16.3 per cent played soccer, 11.5 per cent played golf, 10.7 per cent played basketball, and 10.2 per cent were involved in curling. Now, the report did not identify rodeo as a common sport of interest and/or participation.

I'm hopeful, Madam Speaker, that government consulted with those adult activities that were reported in the report as they were the most identified participation from Alberta adults. I would hope that there was a robust conversation with those organizations.

When it comes to adults and children that participated in organization or sport activity, 33.3 per cent of children played soccer, 25.4 per cent played hockey, 19.9 per cent swam, 19.2 per cent played basketball, and 17.5 per cent played baseball.

Again, there's no mention of rodeo in the government report, so I just question: when it came to determining the designation of Alberta's official sport, who was at the table to have these conversations, and how was it determined? Was it determined on activity? Was it determined on access? Was it determined on longest sport in the province? I'm just not clear how it came to be named as the official sport. I know that a decision like this requires a great deal of consultation. I know that when we are standing up for what we believe the official sport should be, it's important to have rodeo at the table, but it's also important to have other organized sports at the table.

Just listening to the conversations that are happening within the sports community, that doesn't seem to be the case, Madam Speaker. There are many that have felt ignored by this government. They've felt a lack of support from this government, and they haven't been at the table for decisions about what their needs are, what supports they would like to see. I certainly haven't heard from them that they were at the table to be consulted with when considering the designation of Alberta's official sport. That concerns me because we have a government that has been making decisions without robust conversation. It's troublesome when I'm hearing from community that their sport wasn't consulted with. So I'm curious how it came to be that rodeo and chuckwagon was selected as the official sport.

Now, when it comes to the way that this government has been introducing legislation, the other piece is: why wasn't this included in the Alberta emblems act? We've seen this government take pieces of legislation and put through certain pieces and have opportunities to really combine the intention of legislation, and I would argue that the official sport could have been included in the Alberta emblem act. This was an act that was introduced in 2020, and I think that it would have been well fit under that piece of legislation.

We watched this government introduce a piece of legislation to support Her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth II's platinum jubilee, which we were one hundred per cent in support of. Yet they combined it with the same legislation that would allow all members who had . . . [Ms Goehring's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has risen.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'll rise to speak to private member's Bill 205, Official Sport of Alberta Act. Rodeo is an institution in Alberta. It's ubiquitous. It's spontaneous. It's history. It's culture. It's our Alberta identity. We celebrate our unique western heritage and culture by holding rodeos and chuckwagon races, where athletes can compete in their unique, exciting sport for the refinement of their skills and for the entertainment of spectators. Rodeo is intrinsic to the Alberta identity because of our history as an agricultural region, a ranching region of North America where wide open prairies welcomed farmers and ranchers who could settle the land, develop it into one of the most productive places on Earth. As hockey became Canada's national sport in large part thanks to the prevalence of ice in our country, so too did rodeo in Alberta because of the widespread agricultural and ranching economy that defines us to this very day.

Mr. Speaker, to make rodeo our provincial official sport will enshrine what we already know to be true. Our province hosts rodeos north to south, east to west. We draw competitors from across the continent to participate in those rodeos, including the world's largest outdoor show, the Calgary Stampede. Additionally, the Ponoka Stampede in my constituency is Canada's largest rodeo on the professional circuit, ranking in the top five for payouts to competitors in North America.

Beginning in 1971, high school students participate in official high school rodeos in May and June, and winners can then move on to the National High School Rodeo Association level of competitions in July and August.

But it's not just the large official rodeos that define this wonderful sport and our province. The real essence and significance of rodeo is anchored in the small communities across our province. Smaller community organizations and municipalities are responsible for hosting hundreds of rodeos every summer. Children, seniors, and their families attend these events in community life. It's a rite of passage for rural children as they ride calves or chase greased pigs, meet friends, and teenage romances bloom at these events. That happens a lot. As spectators, volunteers, and participants, families from across Alberta enjoy the volunteer, smaller rodeos hosted in their communities, the large ones drawing competitors from as far away as Australia, but it's the small ones where the life really happens. Rodeo is a central community event in rural Alberta, a family event for all ages and all backgrounds.

The growing and historical diversity of this sport is testament to Alberta's welcoming and open-hearted disposition. One of the founding fathers of not just Alberta's rodeo but the ranching industry in general was John Ware, an African American who immigrated to Alberta more than a century ago. But more recently I find it fascinating that, in fact, the very idea of recommending rodeo as Alberta's official sport came from the Calgary-North member in the last couple of years, who first raised this issue, an individual from Pakistan who came to western Canada. His first job was out in Rocky Mountain House, and as he travelled around on weekends throughout Alberta, he just was taken with rodeo, and everywhere he went was able to participate. So actually this very idea came from a recent immigrant, a Pakistani Canadian, who saw what the rest of us just all take for granted. So congratulations to him and thanks to him, the Member for Calgary-North, for bringing this forward.

Young women will train for years with their horses, their friends, and their companions to prepare for rodeo. In the small rural rodeos women are equal participants alongside men, as is also true with agricultural farm businesses. My own granddaughter competed along with her friends in the Mirror rodeo last summer in nothing less than a real, flat-out horse race. She learns responsibility in caring for her horse 365 a year. She learns animal anatomy, she learns medical science, dietary needs, all these different things.

Mr. Speaker, this bill: on one hand it will show how our government embraces the culture and heritage of our great province, but on the other hand it also supports economic prosperity that rodeo brings to Alberta. Events like the Calgary and the Ponoka stampedes and other rodeos that have been mentioned, that occur across our province in towns large and small, bring immense economic benefits to the areas where they are hosted. Businesses in these areas benefit from increased activity and the people that rodeos draw.

No rodeo is complete without adjacent amenities like food and games for children and adults alike as well as performing opportunities for Alberta musicians at many of them. These events give an opportunity for businesses that provide these services to prosper. I should also mention that a great draw of Alberta's tourist economy is to come and to be able to see western culture and western events, so this is a part of Alberta's tourism industry as well, not to mention the fact that there are immense benefits that rodeo brings to the agricultural industry, specifically in livestock, feed, equipment suppliers, western ware retailers, saddlemakers, farriers, and the list could go on.

Horses bred to race chuckwagons, bulls for bull riding, horse training and trainers for all manner of events from roping to barrel racine to all kinds of different things: the livestock industry in relation to rodeo is literally a world of its own, and until you've become part of it and begin to see it, you don't realize how great and important it is. It's a world that bolsters the grand Alberta heritage we should all be proud of.

Mr. Speaker, the social, the community, the economic benefits are absolutely crucial, but another aspect of rodeo is the display of competitive, frontier spirit, that built our province into one of the greatest places to live in the world. Exemplified at every rodeo is courage, physical prowess, precise animal handling, and an understanding of the relation between human beings and the animals that have been by our side for millennia. Rodeo shows us the camaraderie and the symbiotic relationship animals and humans share.

You know, I have to say that horses are extremely intelligent beings, and throughout our history horses have saved the lives of many, many people who got lost in a snowstorm, lost in the vastness of the country, and if they just give the animal its head, it will almost always just go home. They're smarter than we are sometimes.

As western Canadians rodeo represents a central aspect of our heritage and cultural identity. As human beings rodeo exemplifies the power, the beauty, the devotion of the animals we have been blessed to call our companions since the dawn of time. As Albertans we are privileged with the presence of these wonderful creatures. Some work with us, others provide us with devoted companionship, and others actually teach us a lot about life and how to live.

It's an honour and a blessing for our province to be the central hub of rodeo, a competition that portrays the unbreakable bond between us and the animals that have walked by our side for countless centuries. The community benefits of rodeo bring us closer together and strengthen the bonds between families and the culture they have inherited from their forefathers.

Economically rodeo bolsters our businesses that focus on festivity and has created an entire economy based around the animals that compete alongside the cowboys and the cowgirls in the many events we see every year in every corner of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support this bill. To the many Albertans who live and breathe rodeo: this bill is for you. We love and support rodeo for many reasons, and making it the official sport of our province is long overdue and only natural. Spring is coming soon, and with it we will get to enjoy the wonderful animals and amazing competitors who travel to this province from across the world to participate in what can only be described as the legendary rodeo industry. Personally, I can't wait.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has risen.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak to Bill 205, Official Sport of Alberta Act. I appreciate all the comments that all members of the House have been speaking to in regard to rodeo, and I believe that, you know, having rodeo acknowledged in Alberta is an important step in helping to build and even expand the rodeo networks that we have here in Alberta. I know that COVID was extremely hard on many of the smaller rodeos that were happening across the province, so that actually impacted the number of people that were able to go and see and be able to experience the sport.

In talking to some of my stakeholders, because I am, obviously, the ag critic, one of the things that has come up in regard to this piece of legislation is actually just: how do we encourage and expand access to rodeo so that more people are participating in the sport, so that more people have access to being an athlete in this area? What are some of the things that we could do?

I heard the hon. member in her opening comments around the bill, the Member for Camrose, speaking about the importance of the ag societies and how many of the ag societies are actually the ones that host many of these events and are the ones that understand the community and are able to be that liaison between introducing people that have never been introduced to rodeo as well as supporting those communities in having their own rodeos. I will say that I was pleased to see in this budget that there is infrastructure spending going towards ag societies to be able to upgrade and build on some of the infrastructure that exists, so that rodeos are able to build bigger grandstands and things like that are able to happen, and I think that's very important to see as a sign from this government that they are committed to supporting the sport.

Now, the downfall of that, Mr. Speaker, is that in the budget there was no money put in for ag societies to actually deliver any of these supports. The infrastructure will be there, but being able to fund and being able to deliver the services that ag societies do deliver in their local communities actually was not increased as requested. I find it a little bit disappointing, because I look at this piece of legislation and I look at what the government is saying in regard to wanting to support rodeo. Well, the smaller ag societies that put on these rodeos don't receive a lot of financial support from the government. The big 10 do – the big 10 ag societies do – but it's those smaller, local communities where we really want to be able to see the sport be supported and expanded. I've been to the Ponoka rodeo. It's a great event. It's very established, and it would be great to see some other communities around Alberta, that may not be as big, that may not be as established, be able to do that.

So I would hope that the government would reconsider in their budget making sure that ag societies actually have the assistance that they need to be able to provide those supports, because the infrastructure is not enough. They need the additional financial assistance to be able to put the event on. That would be one feedback that I would encourage the government to look back at and take back to their colleagues so that this can be a successful event across the province.

The other piece – I really agree, actually, with the hon. member that just spoke before me – was about the financial and the economic drive that many of these rodeos have for communities. I believe that being able to have these events go on brings people into smaller towns and communities and is able to help stimulate the economy in those areas. I'm a big believer in that, and I think that it's important that that continues to happen and that we're able to support those events and talk to the communities about what other opportunities there might be to be cohosting around those rodeos to bring in even more attraction and opportunity for that rural economic development.

I do believe that it's a good tool to start with. You have a rodeo, but then you look at: what else can we bring? Can we be supporting a local powwow, or could there be an opportunity to have a bigger, expanded farmers' market to support our local food and our producers in those neighbourhoods, in those areas? What other opportunities can we be doing to create – similar to what we see in some of the bigger and established rodeos, where they have the week-long events, are we able to support some other communities that are doing that, and what do they need to be able to make that happen? How do we expand the network, and how do we repeat or emulate the things that go on at the Ponoka Stampede? Obviously, we can't compete with Calgary's, but there are opportunities to be able to look at supporting other areas to be able to do the same thing.

Those would be some other things, I think, as consultation continues to go on. I don't think that, you know, introducing this bill and just saying, "Well, this is our provincial sport," if this bill were to pass, is sufficient. I think that if the government is serious about introducing a piece of legislation that makes rodeo the official sport, then we need to make sure that we are introducing and supporting that sport. It has to be able to be expanding the sport, making sure infrastructure is there, providing education to people that may not have been exposed to rodeo before so that they want to attend and that they understand the history of rodeo, that they learn about the fact that the whole reason rodeo started was so that we could see the expertise that was used when handling animals and things like that, so that people who are from the city understand what is going on and that then they want to attend.

Looking at our 4-H clubs and being able to ensure that they are also supported through many of these ag societies, that they are receiving the support they need to support our younger people in still being involved in rodeo, and being able to get the experience and the access to even have an animal I think is very important. So there are many things that are connected to Bill 205 that can't just be simply: the official sport is rodeo. As my other colleagues have mentioned, there are other sports in the province, and their ability to, I guess, promote their sport is more accessible. I think there has to be a move by the government to figure out how they're going to promote rodeo.

Like, the Calgary Stampede is amazing. I spent 10 days there last summer talking to investors, talking to the athletes, talking to the veterinarians that work there about how well they take care of our animals and about all of the good things that come out of that. But what needs to happen is that we need to be able to make sure that it's not just the Calgary Stampede, that it's all the smaller communities that are doing this. It's making sure it's no different than the movement that's happening right now around the agrifood industry and agritourism. Rodeo could be built into that conversation around the agritourism, but it needs to be supported by the government to be able to do that.

Again, I would encourage the government, if this bill were to pass, to make sure that they come up with a plan and that they are supporting the sport, as we say, because the last thing we want to do is have our official sport not grow and expand and be the economic driver in these communities that it can be and ensure that people understand the sport and that all of those things happen. So there is a responsibility on the government to make sure that that happens, and I'd be very interested to hear from the members opposite about what conversations have happened within the government, what plans they have to support the economic driver, how they're going to promote the industry and make sure that people feel that they can access it, and then wrap around that economic potential that rodeo provides and grow it in working in partnership with our local communities around the farmers' markets and things like that.

Again, I think this is a good bill. It's just that I have a lot of questions about how it's going to be supported if it were to pass. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Other members? I see the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul has risen.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start by congratulating the member for being chosen for this bill, Bill 205, and having an opportunity to put it forward. I'd just remind the folks opposite that it is a private member's bill, and it's open to that member to choose what topic they would like to see put forward.

I'd like to thank the folks up in the gallery. I haven't seen this many cowboy hats in here since the Bill 6 debates back in the NDP days. It's great to see you guys here in the crowd.

I'd just like to take a minute to talk about my area, Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, a big rodeo area. St. Paul on the long weekend in September: a shout-out to anybody that wants to come up and enjoy the Lakeland finals rodeo. It's a week-long event. There are pancake breakfasts. The community just gets onboard. Community businesses are all decorated in rodeo regalia. Like I say, there are pancake breakfasts. There's a beer garden on Saturday night that's – well, it's a bit of a riot; let's put it like that. One of the biggest parades that I attend as a rural MLA – and I probably hit eight or nine, sometimes 10 parades a year. At the one in St. Paul literally thousands and thousands of people line up there, and the rodeo folks get involved in it as well. It's a big thing. It's huge for our area.

The Bonnyville Ag Society as well: they have the rodeo and chuckwagon association that performs up there, and they put on a really good show as well.

Cold Lake and St. Paul both have bullaramas. Actually, you know, getting chosen for a private member's bill is kind of like pulling the right bull at the rodeo. I've been an MLA for eight years, and I've never made it to the top 10. It's really good. Again, congratulations on that.

Stony Lake Rodeo as well: these are really big things that have been in our communities for a very, very long time. I remember going as a kid. One of my fondest memories was going with my Uncle Ray to a rodeo in Spedden. I'll never forget it. They had a fellow there demonstrating. He had a bunch of sheep, and he came out there with two or three sheepdogs with little monkeys saddled and, obviously, tied on, because, boy, they could hang onto those sheepdogs when they were herding those sheep. It was the most entertaining thing I think I've ever seen. It should have been on film.

Ricky-Ticky Wanchuk, a rodeo clown from out in the St. Paul area: everybody knows him, and he's a highlight. He comes out to the rodeo there at least every year that I've been there, puts on a show. He's got his kids involved and family involved in it.

This is a big thing. Like I say, you know, for anybody in Alberta that doesn't think rodeo is a big sport and is something that should be recognized – and like I say, yes, hockey is big in my area, too. So is soccer, baseball. They're all huge. But this is a private member's bill, and I congratulate this private member, and I'll be supporting Bill 205.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Others wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 205? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 205. You probably don't want me to do it, and it might get me in trouble for unparliamentary language, but I was tempted to break out into The Rodeo Song here today, but I won't do that because I'm sure that you would be chastising me for some of the language in that particularly famous piece of musical work.

But what I did want to talk about a little bit was Cowboy Ethics. It's a book by James P. Owen, which is a great read, if anybody hasn't read it. It's a book, really, about principles and some issues that I'll address here. In fact, I know that this book is used by corporate Calgary in many cases to talk about how to conduct business in a way that, I think, you'll see reflected in what is known as the code of the west, that's embedded in that book and in many other things. There may be some lessons in there for us in this House as well: how we conduct ourselves. The code of the west says: live each day with courage; take pride in your work; always finish what you start; do what has to be done; be tough but fair; when you make a promise, keep it; ride for the brand; talk less and say more; remember that some things aren't for sale; know where to draw the line.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we'll all reflect on that. These are principles of life that come from the cowboy and the western heritage that we're so proud to have in this province. As a proud born-and-raised Albertan myself I embrace, respect, and celebrate our western heritage and the cowboy culture. Full disclosure: I'm an urban cowboy but one who has been blessed to grow up, spend my whole life in Alberta and spend much time on many ranches in the Calgary region for brandings, horseback riding adventures, and – more full disclosure – shooting the odd gopher in some of the vast prairies and beautiful foothills of our province. I'm proud to have the much-storied Bow Valley Ranche, of William Roper Hull and Pat Burns fame, right in the heart of my constituency, in Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to wear our much-coveted and iconic Calgary symbol, the white Smithbilt hat. I've been proud to wear it around the world, in fact, and delighted recipients from Hong Kong to Washington, DC, quite recently, from Sydney, Australia, to Halifax, and from Bali to Boise with a gift of the same. Now, I use a little bit of a mythical hook. I say, "Once you put that hat on, it is a must – in fact, good luck – and an expectation that you are then committed to come to the Calgary Stampede," so I guess I'm doing a little bit of tourism boosting while I'm at it. However, I do guarantee them that if they come, they'll have a great time and enjoy this incredible spirit that we have of our western culture, western heritage, and, of course, the greatest outdoor show on Earth.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge those who suggest that we should get rid of it. I think there was an article in the paper recently talking about the hat, the white hat, as a symbol. But I defy anyone the power of being proud owners of such an iconic, global brand that is highly recognized around the world, coveted by leaders and dignitaries around the world who wear it and look pretty darn good in it as well.

Mr. Hanson: As long as you don't put it on backwards.

Mr. Gotfried: As long as you don't put it on backwards. Good point.

But it speaks volumes about who we are, where we came from, how we live, and the western, pioneering, agripreneurial spirit that we should all be proud of, not trying to distance ourselves from. These are things that we should be proud of. In fact, I talk about agripreneurial. We talk about being entrepreneurial in Alberta, but – let's be honest – it came from the agricultural sector, because when you couldn't fix something, you found the guy down the road who could, and next thing you know, he had a new business because he could fix your tractor and you could fix something else for him. That was the spirit of entrepreneurial. There was nowhere else to go than down the road to the neighbour who had that skill or developed that skill. That spirit is actually taken on into Alberta and into the culture that we have as entrepreneurs.

A little reminder for everyone. Everybody talks these days about certain brands and branding, talks about all that as if it's some highfalutin Wall Street kind of thing, but I would suggest that the makings of a global and societal obsession with the power of brand have maybe forgotten that it all started with a hot branding iron and the smell of burning cowhide. Brand: that's what we have here in Alberta, and we should be darn proud of it.

Mr. Speaker, I was honoured to take representatives of our world-renowned rodeo and exhibition the Calgary Stampede along with Premiers, mayors, and economic development representatives from across our province to Hong Kong for the Chinese New Year parade in 2000-2001, and I can tell you that we had a heck of a time there: western heritage, spirit, hospitality; Alberta beef on a bun for 38 people one year; stampede breakfast for 10,000 people the next year. I can tell you that the representatives of our Calgary Stampede, our western heritage, and our First Nations were there in celebration of that time-honoured culture and our western culture and spirit as well. I can tell you that it was a pretty neat experience walking down Nathan Road, called the Golden Mile, in Hong Kong with my cowboy boots on and with some of our First Nations friends in full regalia walking down the street. I felt like I was in some kind of a weird movie. Maybe it was just after Shanghai Noon came out, I think. We had some fun with that.

A reminder again to consider the highly exotic and huge draw for visitors from around the world as witnessed by our demand for farm, ranch, and Indigenous tourism-related experiences. What we think of as everyday life here across the prairies is highly exotic to people from Europe and Asia, and we should not forget that we are exotic in our own right.

Further, and for the record, I'm personally a big fan of Calgary's old brand, the Heart of the New West, because I think that we are the heart of the new west, not just the geographical heart but the emotional heart, which I think speaks volumes about who we are in western Canada, here in Alberta, and with the roots that we are so proud to have. Now, that decision – that's my personal opinion – is up to city council and the citizens of Calgary, but I'm a Heart of the New West guy all day long.

Mr. Speaker, you may have guessed by now that I'm a fervent and proud supporter of Bill 205, the Official Sport of Alberta Act. As a lifelong fan of the rodeo, from its anchor position at the greatest outdoor show on Earth, the Calgary Stampede, of course, to the rodeos across Alberta, referenced by some of my esteemed colleagues here, from Ponoka to Pincher Creek, Strathmore to Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie to Teepee Creek, all across this province, I'm also proud to share my own personal favourite event. I was talking to some of the members in the lounge earlier. I've been attending the chuckwagon races since I was knee high and kind of sneaking back there as I got older, and I still love going to the chuckwagons. You know what? I guess, you know, in the rangeland derby, as we – those of us that are fond of that. That's turned into a huge event. Of course, the chuckwagon auctions are coming up, I think, on April 15 or something like that. That's always a spectacle, in fact, the barometer of Calgary's economy in many ways.

Bull riding is a close second. I love all the sports, so thanks to our visitors today for representing that great sport.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Member for Camrose and also the Member for Calgary-North for bringing this forward in the past. I strongly encourage all members of this Assembly to support this private member's bill, to remember where our roots are in this great province, and to put on our hats and our boots and our blue jeans and head off to the rodeo.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to Bill 205? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity just to say a few words around Bill 205, the Official Sport of Alberta Act. I just want to thank all of the presenters here today around this bill.

Certainly, it brings back lots of fond memories for many of us, myself included, growing up here in Alberta and participating as a spectator in many rodeos and gymkhanas over the years. You know, that's just part of a culture to look forward to in the summer, especially when you're young. I certainly did do lots of that and still do today here, mostly with the Calgary Stampede, I guess, but that's the biggest one of all, as far as the people of Calgary say. I think it's true. Probably I would say that the world rodeo competitions in Las Vegas are certainly, you know, one of the big ones as well. I know about all of these things.

I had a close relative that worked for the Calgary Stampede for quite a few years. He certainly kept us abreast of what was going on in rodeo not just in Alberta but right around the world as well, and certainly when we were younger, he kept getting us the odd ticket to go to the stampede, which was nice, and we always appreciated being able to do that as a family.

Also, of course, I mean, there's not just straight-up rodeos, Mr. Speaker, here in the province of Alberta, but you also have some individual rodeo events that take place as part of the agriculture shows that take place around the province. Perhaps the best known one is, of course, the pony chuckwagon races that will tour not just rodeos across the province here in Alberta but agriculture shows as well. Certainly, that was another highlight for my own family, going to the Vermilion Fair every year and watching the pony chuckwagon races and cheering on our favourite teams.

You know, I picked up a habit there, Mr. Speaker, and I didn't know – you can always plead innocence somehow – that apparently it's against the law to gamble on pony chuckwagon races. But, sure enough, that's kind of how we made the afternoon a little more exciting and did make some small wagers on the pony chuckwagons. I did take that same habit to the Calgary Stampede when I've been going back there as an adult and was surprised to see that people are not gambling for money in the grandstand of the Calgary Stampede quite as much as we did along the rail at the Vermilion Fair for the pony chuckwagons, but so it goes.

You know, I think it's important for us to always look at ways by which we can support the proclamations of something like an official sport – right? – which is one thing, but as my colleague from Edmonton-Manning mentioned, it's important to support these things in a broader context. I mean, like I said before, you have individual rodeo events at agriculture shows across the province, and we need to make sure that we are supporting those agricultural societies properly so that they can continue to host the various fairs that take place across the province and have a circuit by which not just rodeo events can follow but other bits of commerce as well like midways and people selling things at fairs and so forth.

You know, I've noticed in the last number of years, Mr. Speaker, that some of the pieces that make up a circuit are starting to be in jeopardy, right? And it's important that if you're missing one piece – for example, you're going from the Vegreville fair to the Vermilion Fair and something is missing in between or what have you – then you put all of the string of those events in jeopardy because you're missing one or two pieces along the way. I think it's incumbent upon us, if we are supporting an official sport like this in rodeo, that we're also putting something behind it, which is, of course, to ensure that these events have a venue and that those events are sponsored and supported and that you have a circuit that can function together as a whole, not just singularly, with rodeos and agriculture fairs in general.

Yeah. I mean, we have had a number of tries at an official sport for rodeo here in the province, in this Legislature, and, you know, I'm glad that the hon. Member for Camrose has brought this back to our attention. I definitely am supportive of this concept. I mean, we can do lots of ways by which to have different elements of a unique culture and sport sponsored and endorsed and promoted here in the province of Alberta, and it's sometimes good to reach back and see – something like rodeo has a combination of a cultural significance with rural roots but with lots of urban connections as well.

Of course, we had the rodeo here in Edmonton for quite a number of years. I was sad to see that, you know, it did get lost, but lo and behold it has popped back up in Red Deer now, so it lives well and will live on well for now and for the future. We still have the Farmfair here in Edmonton. Again, you know, it's good to remind ourselves what the agricultural roots are of some of these larger urban celebrations that we have in Edmonton and Calgary. I'm always pleased to note that the Calgary Stampede, which is at the heart a rodeo, is also an agricultural fair, and they've managed to maintain the agricultural element . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West, but the time for consideration of this item has been concluded.

If the members could just indulge me, we've had a request to return to introductions, so I'm going to look for unanimous consent.

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek with introductions.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you some special guests today in the Chamber from Edmonton's and Alberta's Jewish community. I would like to read all the names, and after that if I could ask you to rise, that would be wonderful. We have representing broadly the Jewish Federation of Edmonton: Stacey Leavitt-Wright, Jacqueline Medalye, Doug Wolch, David Aaron, Abe Silverman, Benaron Gliberman, Liran Levin, Gillian Horwitz, Adam Zepp, Josie Coutain-Segall, Orkhan Shirinov, and Daniella Asbell. If I could ask you to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Chamber.

Thank you.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek on behalf of the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Condemning Anti-Semitism

504. Mr. Gotfried moved on behalf of Mr. Yao:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly condemn anti-Semitism as defined by the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance plenary on May 26, 2016, with the Lieutenant Governor in Council adopting that definition on September 23, 2022, through its making of Order in Council 317/2022, to mean a certain perception of Jews which may be expressed as hatred toward Jews along with rhetorical and physical manifestations of anti-Semitism directed towards Jewish or non-Jewish individuals or their property or toward Jewish community institutions and religious facilities; and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to provide clear direction that the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance plenary's definition of anti-Semitism, along with its illustrative examples, be adopted by all ministries, publicly funded school boards and postsecondary institutions, public agencies, boards, and commissions, and other publicly funded, legislated, or regulated entities under the authority of the province so that these entities may better recognize and act against any instances of anti-Semitism as defined; and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the minister responsible

- (a) to prepare a report on an annual basis following each calendar year that sets out the level and extent of anti-Semitic acts that have been publicly reported to have occurred in the province during that year, and
- (b) to table in the Legislative Assembly, at that minister's first opportunity, the report referred to in paragraph (a).

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to move on behalf of and with gratitude for the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo Alberta's commitment to fighting anti-Semitism.

Mr. Speaker, hon. colleagues, as an Albertan raised as an Irish Presbyterian but of proud Jewish heritage, I am perhaps well placed to be a champion for this motion. Indeed, in Nazi Germany, where the most heinous example of anti-Semitism reared its ugly head, resulting in the hateful murder of over 6 million men, women, and children, both I and my children would have been Jewish enough for a deadly one-way trip to the gas chambers, which was indeed the tragic fate of all my known relatives in German-occupied Poland. A cryptic knock or an SS boot on the door tore families apart and cruelly ended entire bloodlines forever, a reminder that fully 75 per cent of Holocaust survivors were the only members of their families that survived. Never again.

This reminds us that it is the responsibility of us all to combat a concerning surge into anti-Semitism and indeed other forms of racism. Hence, we must begin by clearly defining it. Because anti-Semitism knows no borders, it is important that Canadian institutions at all levels embrace the same definition to facilitate collective efforts to combat it. Significantly, over the past year Canadian governments and institutions continue to embrace the most authoritative, comprehensive, and representative definition of anti-Semitism that exists today, the IHRA, or International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance, working definition of anti-Semitism, specifically to enhance education and awareness about the Holocaust. Mr. Speaker, to ensure the heinous crimes against humanity, perpetrated now almost 80 years ago by the hateful actions of cold-blooded murderers and, sadly, by the inaction of silence of so many who remained silently complicit, will never be forgotten now and by future generations for eternity because of the adherence to this definition.

Mr. Speaker, the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba all officially adopted the definition in 2022 while the government of British Columbia has expressed support for the use of the definition in B.C. These governments join Ontario, Quebec, and New Brunswick as well as the government of Canada, which all previously adopted the definition.

Today is our opportunity to add the voice and democratic will of this Chamber and the people we represent to this all-important initiative and to be sure we empower, enable, and encourage our government to ensure that the adoption of the IHRA definition carries the weight it deserves across our province, with particular focus across all government departments and publicly funded legislated or regulated entities, as noted.

Mr. Speaker, 2021 saw a large spike in anti-Semitic incidents across Canada. The Statistics Canada 2021 report on police-reported crimes noted there were 884 hate crimes targeting religious minorities in the country, a jump of a shocking 67 per cent over 2020. Of that number, 487, or 56 per cent, of all police-reported hate crimes were aimed at Jews, who comprised slightly more than 1 per cent of the Canadian population. Anti-Semitism is on the rise in Canada, and new tools are needed to aid decision-makers, civil servants, and law enforcement officials to allow them to better recognize and react to acts of anti-Semitism. In fact, B'nai Brith Canada recorded 2,799 incidents nationally in 2021, the highest number since they began auditing anti-Semitic activity in 1982. Unfortunately, Alberta contributed significantly to the increase in anti-Semitic incidents in 2021 with the number of recorded incidents in the province rising from 95 in 2020 to 148 in 2021, a 55.8 per cent increase. Mr. Speaker, hon. colleagues, this is deeply concerning.

I'm grateful for the early outreach and initiatives of Michael Mostyn, chief executive officer of B'nai Brith Canada; Marvin Rotrand, national director, League for Human Rights, B'nai Brith Canada; and, locally here, Abe Silverman, manager of public affairs for B'nai Brith in Alberta; and the support received from Adam Silver, chief executive officer of Calgary Jewish Community Campus Corporation and co-president of the Calgary Jewish Federation; Jared Shore, president of the Calgary Jewish Federation; of course, our own Stacey Leavitt-Wright, CEO of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton; Steven Shafir, director and past president of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton; and Rabbi Menachem Matusof of Chabad Lubavitch of Alberta.

And, of course, a list of supportive individuals and organizations too long to mention, but I will: Alberta Jewish program Edmonton; Alberta Jewish Pipeline; Aviv Israeli Folk Dance Association; Beth Israel synagogue; B'nai Brith Canada, Edmonton chapter; B'nai Brith Youth Organization; Camp BB Riback; Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University; Edmonton chapter, Canadian friends of Hadassah-WIZO; Chabad of Edmonton; congregation of Beth Shalom; Edmonton Jewish Community Charitable Foundation; Jewish Free Loan Association Edmonton; Edmonton Jewish Baseball League; Edmonton Jewish Hockey League; Edmonton Jewish seniors' centre; Edmonton Talmud Torah Society; Emunah women of Edmonton; Hillel of University of Alberta; Jewish Archives and Historical Society of Edmonton and Northern Alberta; community centre of Edmonton Jewish Family Services; Jewish Federation of Edmonton; Jewish National Fund, Edmonton chapter; Maccabi Edmonton; National Council of Jewish Women; ORT Edmonton, and I'm sure there are more.

On September 23, 2022, Order in Council 317/22, with thanks to then Premier Kenney and our Minister of Justice, the current Member for Calgary-Acadia, we enforced that Alberta is committed to defending human dignity and opposing racial, religious, and ethnic hatred in all its forms and recognized anti-Semitism as the most durable and pernicious form of hatred in human history. Therefore, the government of Alberta then endorsed and adopted the IHRA working definition of anti-Semitism and noted that remembering the Holocaust is a moral obligation and that anti-Semitism, like all forms of racism and prejudice, has no place in Alberta.

In endorsing this internationally recognized definition, Alberta is doing its part to make sure we continue to learn from the painful history and promise never to repeat it. Our Minister of Justice reminded us at that time that Alberta's government is endorsing this definition of anti-Semitism to let the Jewish community know that we stand with them against discrimination and will not tolerate hate in our communities. Further, the minister invited all Albertans to speak out against this hatred and help foster a more accepting province.

Rabbi Menachem Matusof reminded us that naming the hate we experience and standing together against it will make Alberta an even better, more welcoming place to live and worship.

Mr. Speaker, Adam Silver, the CEO of the Calgary Jewish Federation, noted that "with antisemitic hate crimes on the rise across the country, fighting antisemitism [should be] a priority – not just for the Jewish community, but for all Albertans and for all Canadians." We must be able to clearly define anti-Semitism and Jew hate in order to fight it, and the IHRA definition underpinned by its examples is a highly effective and well-respected tool that equips policy-makers, organizations, and those working to combat discrimination and racism against Jews with a usable, gold standard definition to guide their efforts.

Stacey Leavitt-Wright, CEO of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton, states that Alberta's order in council sends "a strong message that antisemitism has no place in society."

Hon. members, today is the day that we add each and every one of your voices and the 4.3 million voices of those we represent with encouragement for broad application across government and the public sector through your support of this motion to add to the weight of the strength of the IHRA definition.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members, I would like to conclude my opening remarks on behalf of the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo by thanking him for his commitment to the importance of this motion, by thanking all of the many members of Alberta's Jewish community and B'nai Brith Canada that both supported this motion and encouraged our efforts and patience to bring it forward for debate and hopeful passage, and by thanking all members of this Chamber in advance for their earnest and heartfelt support in our shared, nonpartisan fight against anti-Semitism, hatred, harassment, discrimination, and gratuitous violence in all its forms on behalf of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Others wishing to speak to Motion 504? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has risen.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Anti-Semitism has no place in Alberta. In 2018 there was a string of swastikas painted across my riding in Edmonton-McClung, including one spray-painted at the Talmud Torah school. The swastikas spray-painted across west Edmonton inflicted fear and insecurity throughout the Jewish community. I heard from community members that they feared for their safety within their community and their children's safety at Talmud Torah school. Just a few days later I joined over a hundred community members with various religious beliefs who stood in opposition to this abhorrent, hateful act. This rally showed everyone in Alberta that we do not stand for the anti-Semitic hate held by a small number of people.

Unfortunately, acts of hate are only increasing and have become more brazen. The latest data shows a 47 per cent increase in police-reported hate crimes against Jewish people. This includes an incident of two Nazi flags flying on private property just outside of Boyle. We must do better to tackle anti-Semitism and hate, including calling out hateful rhetoric and radical conspiracies perpetuating hateful stereotypes of the Jewish people and making them targets of violent attacks.

Those who fly a Nazi flag or spray-paint a swastika at an elementary school do not choose to do this overnight, but it is from being indoctrinated slowly through radical ideology. This hateful path may start by engaging with a Facebook post that contains dangerous rhetoric or a YouTube video shared by a friend. As people slowly consume more content focused on radical, anti-Semitic ideology, it empowers some to act out violently.

The non legally binding International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance's working definition of anti-Semitism is a good tool to help identify many forms of anti-Semitism. However, we need to use it appropriately. We should not impede or condemn comments against the actions of the state of Israel or an individual's belief in a two-state solution. I believe in a two-state solution, and the Alberta NDP supports a two-state solution.

We also need to make sure that if this definition is adopted across all ministries and publicly funded bodies, there is a prior consultation to ensure a broad understanding of what is and what isn't anti-Semitism. The IHRA definition is a non legally binding tool, and we must consult to make sure the tool is effective.

That is why we asked for unanimous consent for the ability to amend this motion. It's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that consent was not granted by the Assembly. Had it been granted, the amendment would have ensured that prior to implementing this non legally binding tool across public bodies, this Assembly's recommendation would call for a comprehensive process of open discussion and consultation. This consultation would have provided opportunity for the public at large to feel confident that the IHRA definition was being properly implemented. While the motion will continue without that recommendation, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government takes heed of the need to consult prior to a broad implementation, as urged in this motion.

We all agree that no longer anyone, anywhere wants to see Nazi flags and swastikas, and we need to work with the Jewish community so they feel safe in every corner of the province. As we affirm Alberta's support for the IHRA definition, we need to make sure it doesn't silence legitimate concerned voices while tackling hate speech, nor should it silence those who criticize a foreign government as they would criticize any other. We must allow people to speak out, but we cannot support those who turn that criticism into hate speech that can lead to violence. This will be a tough balance to maintain, but, Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe Albertans can make it work.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly humbled today to stand and speak in support of my colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo's private member's Motion 504, Alberta's commitment to fighting anti-Semitism. I'm also grateful for the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek in bringing this forward to the Chamber, and I'm grateful for Premier Kenney, whose inspiration brought this forward last fall as Order in Council 317/2022. I am proud to stand with the Jewish people across our province and with my friends and neighbours in Calgary-Glenmore against Jew hate.

The adoption of the IHRA definition of anti-Semitism: Alberta joined three other provinces – Ontario, Quebec, and New Brunswick – that have also done this. Just as a reminder for the Chamber, the working definition of anti-Semitism is: a certain perception of Jews which may be expressed as hatred towards Jews; rhetorical and physical manifestations of anti-Semitism are directed towards Jewish or non-Jewish individuals and/or their property, toward Jewish community institutions and religious facilities.

But I also want to look at the word “anti-Semitism” and how many or most people understand it. The word “anti” – it's pretty obvious – means against. “Semitic” means relating to a family of languages that includes Hebrew and Aramaic and certain ancient languages such as Phoenician. Mr. Speaker, we can understand that when we speak of anti-Semitism, we are speaking about so much more than just language. That is one of the reasons why this working definition is so important. This definition speaks to a certain perception of Jews which may be expressed as hatred towards Jews.

Now, when one goes to the website of the IHRA, the first thing at the top of the page is the name of the organization, the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance. What is this organization? IHRA, formerly the task force for international co-operation on Holocaust education, remembrance, and research, or ITF, was initiated in 1998 by former Swedish Prime Minister Göran Persson. Today the IHRA membership consists of 35 member countries, each of whom recognizes that international political co-ordination is imperative to strengthen the moral commitment of societies and to combat growing Holocaust denial and anti-Semitism.

The IHRA's network of trusted experts shares their knowledge on early warning signs of present-day genocide and education on the Holocaust. This knowledge supports policy-makers and educational multipliers in their efforts to develop curricula and inform government officials and NGOs active in global initiatives for genocide prevention. So we see, Mr. Speaker, from the name of this organization that worked so hard to create this definition and its adoption across so many governments that it's very much rooted in the horror of the Holocaust, or the Shoah, and also the phrase: never again. You see, this definition is really about identifying anti-Semitism in an effort to assist individuals, citizens, and others in recognizing hateful behaviour and acts today that were the drivers for the Shoah 78 years ago and that act as warning signs for present-day genocide.

One might wonder, Mr. Speaker: why in today's day and age is this so important? Have we learned nothing? Well, I'm sad to tell this Chamber that in 2019 a survey conducted by the Azrieli Foundation reported that 1 in 5 youth in Canada had not heard of the Holocaust or did not know what happened in the Holocaust. One in 5. Further, B'nai Brith Canada, in its 2021 annual audit of anti-Semitic incidents, reported record numbers of anti-Semitic hate incidents in Canada, including beatings, vandalism of synagogues, and swastikas in school: 2,799 incidents – 2,799 incidents – an increase of 7.2 per cent from 2020.

How does this definition help to combat this? First, let's look at examples that accompany the definition. I think this is really important to understand, that this definition comes with examples to really illustrate what this actually means. Manifestations might include the targeting of the state of Israel conceived as a Jewish collectivity; however, criticism of Israel similar to that levelled against any other country cannot be regarded as anti-Semitic. Anti-Semitism frequently charges Jews with conspiring to harm humanity, and it is often used to blame Jews for why things go wrong. It is expressed in speech, writing, visual forms, and action and employs sinister stereotypes and negative character traits.

Contemporary examples of anti-Semitism in public life, the media, schools, the workplace, and in the religious sphere could, taking into account the overall context, include but are not limited to calling for, aiding, or justifying the killing or harming of Jews in the name of a radical ideology or an extremist view of religion; making mendacious, dehumanizing, demonizing, or stereotypical allegations about Jews as such or the power of Jews as a collective, such as especially but not exclusively the myth about a world Jewish conspiracy, or of Jews controlling the media, economy, government, or other societal institutions; accusing Jews as a people of being responsible for real or imagined wrongdoing committed by a single Jewish person or group or even for acts committed by non-Jews; denying the fact, scope, mechanisms – for example, the gas chambers – or intentionality of the genocide of the Jewish people at the hands of National Socialist Germany and its supporters and accomplices during World War II, also known as the Holocaust; accusing the Jews as a people or Israel as a state of inventing or exaggerating the Holocaust; accusing Jewish citizens of being more loyal to Israel or to the alleged priorities of Jews world-wide than to the interests of their own nations; denying the Jewish people their right to self-determination, for example by claiming that the existence of the state of Israel is a racist endeavour, applying double standards by requiring of it a behaviour not expected or demanded by any other democratic nation; using the symbols and images associated with classic anti-Semitism – example: claims of Jews killing Jesus or blood libel – to characterize Israel or Israelis; drawing comparisons of contemporary Israeli policy to that of the Nazis or holding Jews collectively responsible for the actions of the state of Israel.

Anti-Semitic acts are criminal when they are so defined by law; for example, denial of the Holocaust or distribution of anti-Semitic materials in some countries is criminal. Criminal acts are anti-Semitic when the targets of the attacks, whether they are people or property such as buildings, schools, places of worship, and cemeteries, are selected because they are or are perceived to be Jewish or linked to Jews. Anti-Semitic discrimination is the denial to Jews of opportunities or services available to others and is illegal in many countries.

When we adopt the IHRA definition and work across all Alberta public institutions, we are ensuring education and awareness around anti-Semitism, Jew hate, and the Holocaust. We are standing with the Jewish people of Alberta and everywhere, and we are setting an example and encouraging other jurisdictions to undertake the same. The unanimous support of this important definition will send a clear message that hate and anti-Semitism have no place in this or any society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Others wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today we gather to discuss this important motion that reinforces the Alberta government's commitment to supporting the Jewish community and fighting against anti-Semitic hatred, harassment, and incitement of violence. This is a crucial moment in our history as we are witnessing a rise in anti-Semitic incidents across the globe, including here in Alberta.

Last September Alberta's government endorsed the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance's definition of anti-Semitism, which describes anti-Semitism as a certain perception of Jews which may be expressed as hatred toward Jews; rhetorical and physical manifestations of anti-Semitism are directed toward Jewish or non-Jewish individuals and/or their property, toward Jewish community institutions or religious facilities. This endorsement is a significant step in raising awareness on this issue and promoting a broader understanding of what constitutes anti-Semitism.

The motion we are discussing today is designed to further increase awareness of anti-Semitism and support the province's

Jewish community. It also aims to promote robust bipartisan debate on the issue while supporting broad dissemination of the definition amongst all publicly funded entities. Some of this work has already begun, for example, via Advanced Education to postsecondary institutions. It is important to note that this motion sends a clear signal to Albertans that anti-Semitism will not be tolerated.

All forms of racism are unacceptable, and Alberta's government and its agencies more broadly need to be committed to combatting racism, supporting racialized communities, and promoting a safe and welcoming province for everyone. As a society we have a responsibility to ensure that our communities are inclusive and safe for all. No one should be subjected to harassment or discrimination based upon their religion, ethnicity, or any other factor. We must stand united against hatred and bigotry in all of its forms.

The Jewish community has been subjected to persecution and violence throughout history, and it is unacceptable that this is still happening today. We must work together to combat anti-Semitism and create a more tolerant and inclusive society. The motion we are discussing today is an important step towards achieving that goal. It is a further signal of our government's commitment to providing understanding and tolerance to communities and to supporting those who have been affected by racism and discrimination.

According to a recent report by the Anti-Defamation League incidents of anti-Semitic harassment and violence in the United States have surged to unprecedented levels. The report states that there were a record number of incidents of anti-Semitism reported in the U.S. in 2020, the highest annual total on record since the ADL began tracking the data in 1979. The incidents included physical assaults, harassment, vandalism, and online attacks. Also, in Canada the number of anti-Semitic incidents reported in 2020 reached a record high according to a report by B'nai Brith Canada. The report found that there were 2,610 reported incidents of anti-Semitism in Canada in 2020, which is an 18.3 per cent increase from the previous year. The incidents included vandalism, harassment, and physical assaults as well.

Now, these alarming statistics highlight the urgent need for action to combat anti-Semitism. The endorsement of the IHRA definition of anti-Semitism for all of Alberta's government agencies is a positive step in the right direction. It will help to raise awareness on the issue and promote a greater understanding of what constitutes anti-Semitism. Moreover, the motion to increase awareness of anti-Semitism and support the province's Jewish community is also an important initiative. It will help to ensure that the issue is taken seriously and that appropriate action is taken to address it.

According to the ADL report social media platforms were responsible for a significant proportion of the anti-Semitic incidents in the U.S. The report found that there were more than 900 incidents of harassment and vandalism that were attributed to social media platforms. This highlights the importance of ensuring that social media platforms are held accountable for hate speech and other forms of online abuse.

The motion to support broad dissemination of the IHRA definition amongst all publicly funded entities is also crucial. It will help to ensure that public institutions are equipped with the necessary knowledge and tools to identify and address anti-Semitism.

In addition to these initiatives, there are other steps that can be taken to combat this issue. For example, education plays a key role in promoting understanding and tolerance. Educational institutions can play an important role in promoting awareness of the issue and fostering a culture of inclusion and respect.

Furthermore, there is a need for greater collaboration between governments, civil society organizations, and the private sector to address anti-Semitism. This can also involve initiatives such as joint advocacy campaigns, public awareness campaigns, and community engagement programs.

Now, in conclusion, the motion to support the Jewish community in fighting against this anti-Semitic hatred, harassment, and incitement of violence is an important initiative that is urgently needed in the current climate. By working together to combat anti-Semitism, we can create a more tolerant, inclusive, and safe society for everyone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to speak to Motion 504?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo to close debate.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise before the House to give my final comments in support of Motion 504, Alberta's commitment to fighting anti-Semitism. I am proud to say that this motion reinforces our government's already strong commitment to fighting hatred and harassment in this province. Anti-Semitism, irrespective of however minor it is purported to be, hints to a sentiment that has led to countless acts of violence and discrimination against Jewish people and their communities and is something that has no place in our province or any society. Alberta's Jewish community should have no reason to be subjected to treatment that is at its core inexcusably reprehensible and dangerous.

The United Nations General Assembly designates January 27, the anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz-Birkenau, as international remembrance day, but we must do more than honour those that lost their lives to hatred for one day. We must always remember those 6 million Jewish victims of the Holocaust. We need to remember; otherwise, we risk reliving those horrors another day. Too often history repeats itself.

We currently live in an era where history is being erased by those that think they know better, erased by people who are of privilege, who stifle debate and discussion and, ultimately, understanding. A culture of wokeness exists that would deny the lessons of history, who attempts to erase the harsh realities where man has demonstrated traits that we do not wish to reinvigorate in the population. We need to be vigilant of those that would erase these hard memories. These deniers need to be stopped so that we can remember the horrors, so that we can assure that these atrocities never ever happen again.

This motion increases awareness of anti-Semitism to support the province's Jewish community and allow for robust, bipartisan debate on the issue while supporting broad dissemination of the definition amongst all publicly funded entities. This awareness will create a more inclusive and welcoming province for everyone, where all individuals are treated with dignity and respect. By endorsing the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance's definition of anti-Semitism, we are taking a critical step towards identifying and combating anti-Semitism in all its forms. Mr. Speaker, our government's endorsement of this definition sends a clear message to Albertans that anti-Semitism will not be tolerated. We must work together to eradicate it from our society. By recognizing and confronting anti-Semitism, we can create a province where everyone can feel safe and welcome.

I want to emphasize that this motion is not only about the Jewish community. It is also about all forms of racism. We need to stand up against all forms of racism, whether it be against the Jewish people, Muslims, Indigenous, Black, or any other racialized group. All forms of racism are unacceptable and have no place in our province or our society.

As someone of Asian descent growing up in communities where there were not many of said ancestry, it was at times difficult. Being on the receiving end of name-calling, bullying, prejudice, and, ultimately, discrimination is not a pleasant experience. It does impact a person's life; that much I can guarantee you. It is for reasons of my own personal experience that I can easily stand up for the Jewish community and denounce the racial hate that they endure.

As elected representatives of this province and our communities we have a responsibility to ensure that all feel safe and supported. It is our job to create policies and laws that promote Canadian and fundamentally Albertan values of acceptance and decency. We must do everything in our power to combat anti-Semitism and discrimination to create a more inclusive and just society for everyone.

I should also note that our good friend the Minister of Advanced Education, the MLA for Calgary-Bow, also encouraged our postsecondary institutions to embrace this policy. And I do wish to thank my good friend and colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his devotion to this House and for all of his fine work in this Legislature. This piece, Motion 504, Alberta's commitment to fighting anti-Semitism, is his final statement and mine to the Alberta Legislature, a statement that demands that prejudice, racism, and discrimination have no place here in Alberta, no place here in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate that this government and all its members are committed to combatting anti-Semitism, supporting our Jewish communities, and promoting a safe and welcoming Alberta for everyone. We will continue to work together to fight all forms of hate, including anti-Semitism, and to build a province where everyone feels valued and included.

With that, I would like to formally end this discussion on Alberta's commitment to fighting anti-Semitism and look forward to a strong, positive future in this province where Alberta's Jewish population can live in peace. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 14, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Decore has an introduction.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 63 of some of the brightest minds in this province of Alberta, located right in the grade 6 class of Kildare elementary school. So happy to see them here today; looking forward to seeing what they will bring in the future. I would ask that they all now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly students from Steinhauer school in the glorious area of Edmonton-Rutherford. They're accompanied today with their teacher Danelle Hancock. I'd ask them to all rise and receive the warm – my voice today – greetings of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you not only one but two classes from the Viking school with their teachers Mrs. Josephson and Mrs. Culbert. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Chamber.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you my better half, the love of my life, my greatest supporter, and my greatest champion, my husband of almost 39 years, Darren LaGrange. I'm blessed to have him in the gallery today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a number of individuals who have been very involved in helping Ukrainian newcomers settle in life in Alberta. We have with us today Heather Cournoy from the Ukrainians in Sherwood Park Facebook page, Claire and Neil Hayes from Sleep in Heavenly Peace Canada, as well as Mike Thomas and Cherilyn Michaels from the Edmonton Hosts Ukrainians Facebook page. I ask that they please rise and that the members of this Assembly join me in giving them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Horner: Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce some friends of mine: Cam Baker from Nutrien; with Sherritt International I'd like to introduce Alyssa Carson and Greg Pohlka; I'd also like to introduce Darcie Park from CF Industries; and joining us from Fertilizer Canada, Dan Demers and Dustin Pike. Thank you for being here today. Please stand and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: Are there others? The Deputy Premier has an introduction.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and welcome members of the Calgary Construction Association and the Edmonton Construction Association. Both organizations play a big part in communication between the government and our industry partners, helping us ensure that we get the job finished safely, on time, on budget, and at the best value for Albertans. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Automobile Insurance Premiums

Ms Phillips: Shortly after forming government, the UCP removed the rate cap on auto insurance after being lobbied by their insurance industry friends and insiders. Almost immediately car insurance skyrocketed, with some increases as high as 30 per cent. Worst of all, these increases happened in the middle of the pandemic, when Albertans were driving less.

Now – fast-forward three years – Albertans pay the highest auto insurance rates in the country. We have heard from many Albertans about these increases and how they're worried about keeping their vehicle on the road. Albertans asked government to get insurance rates under control, but the UCP refused. We introduced a bill to freeze auto insurance rates, but the UCP wouldn't even debate it.

Then in January the government finally brought in a rate freeze, or so they said. But on March 1 several companies were approved for double-digit increases to auto insurance rates despite the freeze supposedly coming into effect on January 26. Let's be real. This rate freeze is a fake, just like the natural gas rebate, which has not provided one dollar of support to Albertans, and the so-called electricity rate cap, that actually piled $200 million of debt onto Albertans' bills.

Here's what's not fake: UCP plans to take away your CPP retirement savings and hand it over to an untrustworthy Premier to finance separatist dreams. Here's what's also far too real, after the election, though: a politicized UCP provincial police force that no one wants and a $20 billion giveaway to the Premier's small group of friends who want the people of Alberta to pay for them to clean up their wells so they can turn around and spend bunch of money on unseemly, dishonest, American-stye attack ads on the NDP.

Here's the basic reality, Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The sad consequence of this is that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West gets to start again.

Here's the basic reality, Alberta. Any promise this UCP government makes, especially one that purports to make life more affordable, is dishonest nonsense. Feel free to ignore anything they say, Alberta. They don't mean a word of it. One more reason to elect an Alberta NDP government on May 29. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Camrose.

Physician and Nurse Education and Training

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the best health care workers in the world. Alberta's government will work to make sure Albertans can get the care they need when and where they need it. Simply put, we need more doctors and nurses and health care staff.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have heard from my constituents that their children aren't being accepted into medical school in Alberta even though they have mid-90 averages. In fact, on average our institutions turn away 2,800 qualified nursing applicants each year due to limited capacity, and on average our medical schools turn away 2,300 qualified applicants each year.

But, Mr. Speaker, this government is taking action. Budget 2023 invests nearly $200 million to help train the health care staff we need and ensure young Albertans can get into the programs they want right here at home; $72 million will go towards creating nearly 3,400 new seats in health care programs, with over 1,800 new seats for programs like nursing, 1,500 new bridging seats for internationally educated nurses, and 120 new physicians; and $113 million will help add 100 new medical residency positions and support physician training in regional centres and rural communities.

To quote the U of A dean of medical school, today we are investing in the future of every citizen in the province and moving towards making our vision of equitable access to health care a reality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:40 Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, the communities I represent in Lacombe-Ponoka are home to farmers who work hard all year to put food on our plates, Albertans who wake up early and don't stop until the job is done. Through freezing winters and long, hot summers they feed the world and make Alberta proud.

Today I speak to the importance of safety and well-being for our farmers and agricultural workers. This is Canadian Agricultural Safety Week; hence, the safe ag pin. Canadian Ag Safety Week is an initiative that aims to promote safe and healthy practices across the industry. Agriculture is an important sector in our economy, and it's crucial that we ensure the safety of those who work in it. Farmers and ag workers face many risks every day from heavy machinery, dangerous animals, and hazardous climates. It's important that we raise awareness about these risks and provide resources to help prevent accidents and injuries.

This year's theme for Canadian Agricultural Safety Week is Be an Agsafe Family. The theme focuses on the importance of making safety a priority for everyone in agriculture: families, employers, and employees. It's important that we work together to maintain a culture of ag safety where everyone feels informed and empowered to speak up about safety and take steps to prevent accidents.

During Canadian Ag Safety Week there are many events and activities – workshops, webinars, social media campaigns – all aimed at promoting safe practices and raising awareness about risks in agriculture. These events are an opportunity for us to learn from each other and share best practices for keeping our families safe on the farm. I encourage all Canadians to participate in Canadian Ag Safety Week. Whether you're a farmer, a farm kid, a farm worker, or an Albertan who cares about the safety of our farm families, there are resources and tools available to help you think and be safe. Let's work together to enhance a culture of safety in agriculture.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and may this year's Canadian Ag Safety Week be a success.

Industrial Development in St. Albert

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, there can be no greater investment than investing in Albertans and Alberta. This has been something that I've always believed: give Albertans the chance and the opportunity, and they will succeed.

While I thought this would be a universal sentiment shared in this House, the recent actions of the government have shown me and my colleagues loudly and clearly that this government actually opposes investing in Alberta. The minister of jobs actually attacked our proposal to support the Lakeview business district in St. Albert, a critical project that will create 7,000 jobs and, importantly, grow the economy of St. Albert, the surrounding region, and even the province of Alberta. It's the first time ever that I've heard a minister of jobs attacking a proposal to create jobs, but that's the UCP.

The members opposite are quite happy to spend Albertans' money on the Premier's donors. They're scheming to hand out $20 billion to a small number of bad companies to clean up the messes they are already legally obligated to clean. The difference in this Chamber could not be clearer. That side of the House wants to shovel Albertans' tax dollars to the Premier's friends, and on this side of the House we believe that investing in Albertans and investing in job creation are the smartest investments you can make.

Albertans can choose a government focused on them in just a few short weeks.

Support for Ukrainian Newcomers

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, last year Russia began an unlawful invasion of Ukraine, forcing millions of people to flee their country in an emergency. Alberta has long-standing ties to Ukraine, with hundreds of thousands of Albertans being of Ukrainian descent. Alberta sympathizes with Ukrainians and has welcomed thousands of evacuees who are looking for safety from the war in their homeland.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a place that is filled with people who seek to help others in need. Therefore, Albertans have formed grassroots networks of volunteers that are providing support to thousands of Ukrainian evacuees here. These groups provide information and resources to Ukrainian newcomers in the Edmonton area. They also pick up the newcomers at the airport, host them in their houses, help them get necessary documentation done, and mentor the newcomer families.

Special shout-out to Cherylyn Michaels, who founded the Edmonton Hosts Ukrainians Facebook page, Mike Thomas, and former MLA David Dorward, who provide support, too. This is a group of about 21,000 people who are residing in the Edmonton area and Ukrainians intending to move here. Another shout-out goes to Laurie Kardynal, Heather Cournoyor, and members of the Ukrainians of Sherwood Park Facebook group, which was created to connect Ukrainians in Strathcona county.

Hearty gratitude goes to Neil Hayes, Claire Hayes, and the Sherwood Park branch of Sleep in Heavenly Peace Canada. SHP partnered with Canadian social services Edmonton and has provided many beds to Ukrainian children. Thanks to other organizations in Strathcona county that have helped support Ukrainian newcomers such as St. Nicholas school, St. Sophia parish, St. Theresa school, Our Lady of Perpetual Help parish, and the Bilingual Ukrainian Catholic Parent Society.

Mr. Speaker, to all the volunteers we say thank you. With these supports, displaced Ukrainians can live to their fullest while we await an end to the war.

Thank you.

South Edmonton Hospital Construction Project

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, for over three years my constituents have been living through a UCP-created health care crisis. They drove family doctors out of Alberta, threatened the pay of nurses and paramedics, drove our EMS system to the breaking point, all while failing to properly fund the system. They also failed to deliver the necessary infrastructure that we will need to ensure that we can properly recover and rebuild the system.

In 2017 the NDP government announced the south Edmonton hospital, the first new Edmonton hospital since 1988. The UCP delayed this hospital time and time again. Now we have a Premier who claims it's her top priority but also an Infrastructure minister who blames everything and everyone for his failure to do his job. What should be a hospital under construction is still just a snow-covered field. My constituents have been harmed by this failure. Edmonton is short hundreds of hospital beds, and that number is going to climb to 1,500 in a few years.

A government that cares about the people of Edmonton and their health care needs would focus on getting this hospital built. The UCP doesn't care about the families in south Edmonton. An Alberta NDP government will end this UCP crisis in health care, end the excuses, and actually get the south Edmonton hospital built.

Federal Energy Transition Plan

Mr. Rowswell: Mr. Speaker, Ottawa under the Trudeau Liberals has recently discussed the possibility of pushing for a so-called just transition. However, their policy for phasing out our ethical oil and gas sector and putting a cap on oil production is nothing more than an illegal and immoral effort to make hard-working Albertans unemployed and to devastate the towns and cities dependent on our energy sector.

Clearly, the Trudeau Liberals in Ottawa do not understand the importance of oil and gas workers to our province, nor do they understand the power that this province has to fill global energy needs, nor the fact that our energy sector provides the money that sustains the economic lifeblood of this country. It is obvious that the Justin Trudeau government, dependent on support from the federal NDP, has decided to push for a policy based on radical and dangerous ideas that will destroy the main economic engine of this country.

The track record of this federal government since the Liberals were elected in 2015 has been horrible for this province. Under their leadership Bill C-69, the oil pipeline ban, has heavily and unfairly regulated our oil and gas industry. We don't need to look hard for examples of how this legislation negatively affected our oil and gas industry. The Energy East pipeline and Northern Gateway were both cancelled as a result of this legislation. The Ottawa carbon tax has also hurt middle-class Albertans since its implementation. With the federal Liberal and NDP coalition in power, I cannot see Trudeau nor his biggest supporter, Jagmeet Singh, backing down on passing this radical legislation.

Nevertheless, Alberta, since the days of Premier Lougheed, has always fought back against Ottawa's attempts to destroy our way of life. Therefore, our government will take up this mantle and continue to stand up for Albertans. We know that the only way to preserve our political, economic, and societal interests is to fight back and never surrender to Ottawa's demands and interests that attempt to hurt and go against the well-being of Albertans.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has question 1.

Physician Supply

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, every Albertan should have access to a family doctor where and when they need one, but today more Albertans are watching as their family doctors pack up their bags for B.C. Now, the UCP ripped up doctors' contracts, undermined their profession, ignored their concerns, all in the middle of a pandemic. Yesterday the UCP Health minister finally acknowledged the serious doctor shortage in this province after years of ignoring it. To the Premier. The UCP created this problem. Does she understand why absolutely no one trusts them to fix it?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know a lot of people trust our Health minister to fix it because we're already making great progress on the three areas that we identified that we want to make progress on. The next big piece, of course, is establishing a medical home, as the Health minister likes to call it, a joint practice with doctors, nurses, and other health practitioners. That's the reason why we have $2 billion that has been dedicated towards that. The goal is exactly that, that every single Albertan should have access to a primary care practitioner so that it becomes the first line of defence if something goes wrong. We're investing in it, and we're going to do it.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, their record doesn't make people confident. There are fewer rural doctors working today than there were under our NDP government, and right now Alberta is also short anaesthesiologists. These professionals are critical to getting surgeries done all across the province. Yesterday the Health minister admitted there are fewer of those professionals working today than even last year. Can the Premier explain how exactly Alberta is going to perform more surgeries when the number of these anaesthesiologists is actually down, not up?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the nice thing about having an official administrator in place in the form of Dr. John Cowell, because part of the thing that he's discovered is that anaesthesiologists are doing different scope of practice in different regions and that, in point of fact, in certain regions we would be able to use respiratory therapists so that we can make sure the anaesthesiologists are available for the highest priority surgeries. What we will see over the next little while is that there is going to be some reallocation. We've done that already on nurses, we've done it already on paramedics, and we're going to be able to solve that problem, too.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, those strategies have already been acknowledged as being exceptionally unlikely to work and, actually, unsafe. Today health care is in jeopardy, and the biggest threat, now and always, is this UCP government. The UCP have damaged the system, and this Premier's favourite solution is to offer Albertans the choice to pay more.

Now, the Alberta NDP will go a different way. We'll ensure another million Albertans have access to family health teams at no cost to them. Albertans know it's true; the Premier probably knows it, too. Why won't she admit that a better plan for Albertans who need health care is simply to just vote NDP?

Ms Smith: I was so excited to see the Health minister's announcement yesterday that we'll be investing $200 million to expand postsecondary health programs and train 3,400 additional health care professionals. We have 3,400 new seats in postsecondary health programs across the province. We're investing $113 million to add 100 residency spaces for newly graduated doctors, particularly in, yeah, rural areas and, yeah, specialist fields. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the members opposite should be congratulating our Health minister on acting on the things that they think . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition for a second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll congratulate him on admitting that it's actually a day late and many, many, many dollars short.

Wage Growth and Job Creation

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's wage growth is the slowest in Canada, meaning Albertans are actively losing ground when inflation is at a 40-year high. Meanwhile families are paying more for utilities, for tuition, for fees, for car insurance. The Premier's so-called affordability measures all expire immediately after the election, and they can't even properly freeze car insurance even when they're trying. After four years the UCP record is Albertans paying more, earning less. Why are the only Albertans getting the break her donors?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are actually earning more than any other Canadian. We have the highest average weekly earnings. The next-closest province is $4,000 per year behind us, and then on top of that, as the Finance minister likes to note, if we had the kind of tax system that the members opposite want to have, the next-closest tax system would generate $20 billion more. That means that we are giving, essentially, a $20 billion tax break to Albertans. So not only are they earning more; they get to keep more, and that helps to defray the cost of the NDP.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that working people will be happy to know that the Premier thinks they're earning enough money.

Nonetheless, earlier this week we learned that Calgary has the highest unemployment rate of any city in Canada. Meanwhile we're hearing from job creators that they can't build in Alberta because we simply don't have the workforce they need. This UCP government then went about and cut almost a billion dollars from postsecondary education. After four years of the UCP Albertans can't afford to invest in new skills, and job creators can't invest in diversifying the economy. Why is diversifying the economy still a luxury for this UCP?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, when the UCP came to office, the unemployment rate in Calgary, after the way they left it, was 6.9 per cent, so actually the unemployment rate in Calgary is lower than it was during that period of time. We also have the highest workforce participation rate. We've got a 66 per cent workforce participation rate, which is also the highest in the country. Part of the reason that we have a higher unemployment rate – unemployment is those who are looking for work. There are a lot of people looking for work because Alberta is calling, and people are heeding the call. We've got people coming from all over the country, and they're going to find those jobs.

Ms Notley: Well, they're not finding them in Calgary, Mr. Speaker.

Now, this government cut economic diversification programs that were working even as the Premier claimed that she understood the value, for instance, of the digital media tax credit, but then she failed on that, too. Now, while the Premier goes off and plans to give $20 billion of taxpayers' money to donors, the Alberta NDP has a plan to attract $20 billion in private investment, creating tens of thousands of new jobs, Mr. Speaker. The best party to increase wages, create jobs, and grow the economy is Alberta's NDP. No question.

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I seem to recall that under the NDP the most venture capital dollars flowing into this province was about $30 million per year. Last year we brought in $729 million in venture capital investments, 12 per cent of all of the deals and 7 per cent of all the venture capital investment invested in the entire country. Our venture capital has gone up 30 per cent whereas it's gone down in the rest of the country. The digital media tax credit is something that is in the minister's mandate letter. He has already indicated that he is consulting on it, needs to do a little bit more work. Stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and Opposition House Leader.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, this UCP government is refusing to listen to the heroes of the 2016 Fort McMurray wildfire. Bill 9 will be of no help to firefighters who have been diagnosed with cancer before the bill passes, only after. We thought this was a mistake, and I offered an amendment to make sure that all of those Alberta heroes and their families are covered. I'm shocked to learn that, no, the UCP is intentionally denying coverage to these firefighters. Will the minister of red tape reduction reconsider his statement that no amendments will be accepted and agree to support all of them? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering why the NDP and that particular member didn't get it done when she was the minister. Now, what I will tell you is that we've checked with the WCB, and there's no need for retroactivity since there's only one, maybe two Fort McMurray firefighter claims that would be impacted by retroactivity. In those cases the WCB has the fairness process review, and we're being assured by the WCB that if that fairness process kicks in, those firefighters have nothing to worry about. There will not be any firefighters from Fort McMurray that will be left behind. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, that is not what the firefighters say. We know of at least one firefighter who fought the Beast in 2016 and has died from cancer after exposure to an incredible number of toxins produced by that fire. The family has been fighting a protracted . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: The family has been fighting a protracted battle with the WCB. The bill does not protect them, but it's a simple matter of passing our NDP amendment to make sure all are covered. There may be other firefighters who have not even started the claim, and the minister wants them to do a fairness process review? Just fix the bill.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the bill is fine as it is, but let's be clear. Retroactivity was an option for that government and that member when they were minister to change, and they did not change it. They didn't change it because that would be the wrong thing to do. There is a fairness process in place. They take it very seriously. If there's an issue after that fairness process goes through, have the member come and see me. We're going to make sure that no firefighter, no Fort McMurray firefighter, is left behind.

Ms Gray: That member represents Fort McMurray, they've been in government for four years, and they are consigning firefighters to a fairness review process rather than just making this retroactive and covering all firefighters. Consigning firefighters to fight with the WCB is the wrong answer. We need to support the firefighters who are on the ground. Will they pass our amendment? Will they do the right thing, stand on the side of the heroes in Fort McMurray and accept the amendment?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, fight WCB? WCB is there for the workers. That is the wrong attitude and the wrong approach by this member. No wonder the people of Alberta threw them out; they didn't get the job done when they were there, and they won't do a good job if they ever get a chance to come back.

Prescription Contraception Coverage Policy

Member Irwin: I am being inundated by stories from Albertans about how our commitment to provide free prescription contraceptives will change their lives. Lisa wrote to me saying that our policy would save her $400, a huge saving. Heather said that she's been putting off replacing her IUD because she just can't afford it. Amy says that she's been rationing meds for years, and this would mean safe, reliable treatment. How can the Premier hear from all of these Albertans and still say that they should pay more out of pocket for their health care?

Ms Smith: You know, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I understand where the NDP opposite is coming from. They don't believe in a public and private mixed system for pharmaceuticals. We do. We believe in the kind of choice that allows for maximum amount of coverage. From what I can see, the vast majority of people are covered by the plan. Our private-sector plans cover this as one of their priority items; our Alberta Blue Cross covers it as a priority item for anybody on our benefits. I don't see the need.

Member Irwin: This Premier just doesn't get it, and she's clearly not listening to people like Chantelle, who wrote that her prescription costs her $300 every three years despite it being treatment for a medical issue. Michelle told me that this policy alone would save her $400. The Premier must be getting some of these same messages from people explaining how this would change their lives for the better. We know – she just said it – the Premier wants Albertans to get used to paying out of pocket for health care. So is that why she's refusing to listen to the thousands upon thousands of Albertans for whom this policy would be truly life changing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, Alberta Blue Cross has the ability for anyone who does not have employer-based benefits to be able to sign up so that they can get the coverage for all of the needs that they have. Everybody has different medical needs, and that's why we allow for insurance companies to take the lead on identifying the right mix of plans and the right mix of pharmaceuticals to cover. It has served us very well. The fact that we have both private and public operating in this environment means that we have far more drugs that are covered so that more people get the coverage that they need for the very specific needs that they have. I don't want to prejudice what other drugs might need to be covered.

Member Irwin: Let me introduce the Premier to people like Jess, who wrote me to explain that her birth control is not covered by any nongroup private insurance plans despite what this Premier continues to say. Meghan really summed it up when she wrote to me saying that this policy actually doesn't help her, but she just thinks everyone deserves good health care. Me too, Meghan, and all of us as well. On this side of the House we're focused on getting Albertans the good health care that they deserve. So will the Premier tell, I don't know, Lisa, Heather, Amy, Chantelle, Michelle, Jess – the list goes on – and so many other Albertans why she wants them to pay up to get the health care they need and earn?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, Alberta Blue Cross is the provider of choice for government, for our over age 65, for all of our programs. There is a nongroup coverage that is available for those who need it, and I would encourage anybody who wants to get pharmaceutical coverage to go and look at that. We want to make sure that everybody has access to the health care they need. If they don't have it through private insurance, through their company, then they're able to get it through Alberta Blue Cross, and we think that that's the right balance. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Health Care Workforce Education and Training

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As members of this House will know, there is a nation-wide shortage of health care workers. Just like other provinces, Alberta is looking to attract and hire more health care workers. Unfortunately, there are thousands of qualified students here in Alberta who don't get admitted into college and university health programs like medicine and nursing because of a lack of capacity. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what is the government doing to ensure students can get into the health programs they want right here at home?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was an honour to join the Minister of Health yesterday to make an announcement of a $200 million investment over three years to dramatically expand health care training capacity at our incredible universities and colleges. In particular, Advanced Education is investing $72 million to create 3,400 new spaces in health care programs. That's in nursing and paramedicine, in health care aides. In addition, $20 million is going to create 120 new spaces to train physicians. That's a 34 per cent increase.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. I'm so glad to hear about all these new seats. Given that it takes at least four years to train a student just beginning their health care training and given that there is already a shortage of health care workers, to the Minister of Advanced Education: what is the government doing to ensure that we train more health care workers to join our workforce in the short and medium term?

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we've done – we started the work going back last year and even earlier – is that Budget 2022 invested $26 million to create 2,500 seats in health care related programs. Many of those seats were opened that September, and those students are already in place. In addition, we're expanding programs and supports for internationally educated nurses. These individuals are already here. They're educated as nurses, but they need to participate in additional bridging programs, and we're creating additional spaces in those programs so they can meet the Canadian standards.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the minister for that answer. Given that rural Alberta is disproportionately affected by the shortage of health care workers and given that an increase in physician seats means we need more residency positions to graduate doctors, to the Minister of Health: what is the government doing to expand residency positions and support greater rural physician training in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Thank you also for his advocacy on improving access to health care, particularly in rural areas.

I'm very pleased to stand with my colleague the Minister of Advanced Education announcing the expansion to med schools. Now, one of the key areas of focus for that expansion is for rural family physicians. I'm very pleased that part of that programming is to expand the training and where that happens. Initially we're going to start off with the University of Lethbridge and also in Grande Prairie, because when you train people locally, they stay local, and that's our objective.

Energy Company Liability

Mr. Schmidt: Even before the Premier won her party's leadership, she was a registered lobbyist for a $20 billion giveaway to a small number of bad companies to clean up messes they are already legally obligated to clean up. As Premier she continues to push the program, but she's now given it a new name and claims that it's only a $100 million pilot program. But I'm hearing from Albertans who say that it doesn't matter what the Premier calls it or the size of the down payment on the $20 billion; it's still a scam. Does the Energy minister agree with Albertans?

The Speaker: I provided caution on the use of the word "scam" yesterday. I am certain that in the subsequent questions the member will govern himself accordingly.

Mr. Guthrie: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's a sad state of affairs with the Alberta NDP. These anti oil and gas activists must be tortured watching industry come back to life after they did everything in their power over their four years to destroy the resource sector. Desperate, as they fall in the polls, they fabricate a crisis, misleading Albertans, which is exactly why nobody trusts them. This UCP government will always stand by energy workers to protect their jobs from the NDP and their ENGO friends who are hell bent on shutting down fossil fuel production in this province.

The Speaker: I'll provide some caution to the hon. the Minister of Energy. I provided caution with the use of the word "fabrication" yesterday, and I believe an apology was accepted.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that that member stood in this House and promoted the R-star program in a private member's statement just a year ago and given that the UCP has already caused damage to our energy industry's reputation through their do-nothing war room and their failed inquiry and given that Scotiabank concluded that the program goes against the core capitalist principle that private companies should take full responsibility for the liabilities they willingly accept and that the program has a potential to generate negative public sentiment toward the sector, why is the government pushing ahead with the $20 billion giveaway that will cause further damage to our energy industry?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, let's take a trip down woke memory lane to expose the NDP's just transition plan. They were the creator of Canada's first carbon tax. They oppose any and all pipelines. They support the west coast tanker ban, taking a position against our own province, and they're full steam ahead on an emissions cap. They also support the feds' clean electricity regulations. With Trudeau and Singh behind them, the NDP will continue to sabotage industry. Albertans cannot trust and cannot afford to make that mistake again.

Mr. Schmidt: What Albertans can't afford is a $20 billion giveaway to the industry that it doesn't deserve.

Given that the environment minister rejected the $20 billion giveaway that the Premier is pushing, saying that it does not align with the province's royalty regime or our approach to liability management in Alberta and the polluter-pay principle, and given that the president of the Rural Municipalities association said that the program is exactly how a fox would design a henhouse, why is this government refusing to listen to Albertans, economists, and even their own minister on this issue? Is it because she promised her leadership donors $20 billion if she got her way?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hypocrisy of the NDP has no bounds. Not only did they create the C-star incentive program, but in May 2017 their leader announced a $235 million program to accelerate abandonment and reclamation. She stated, "This is about creating jobs and fixing a long-standing problem." So it was okay then but not now. What a joke. Remember that the goal of these activists is to end fossil-fuel production and to do it at any cost. The NDP cannot be trusted, full stop.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Anaesthesia Care

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In estimates last week we learned that the UCP government has made no progress in increasing the number of anaesthesiologists in Alberta. In fact, it appears we have slightly fewer than we did at this time last year. This is one of the critical bottlenecks in surgical capacity: no anaesthesiologist, no surgery. There are operating rooms and surgeons at our major hospitals sitting idle because of a shortage of these specialists. Can the Minister of Health tell Albertans how many surgeries have been delayed so far this year due to his failure to attract or train more anaesthesiologists?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We are actually increasing the number of surgeries that are being done. We appreciate that there's a challenge in terms of attracting and retaining anaesthesiologists. This is a challenge not only faced here in Alberta but, quite frankly, faced around the country and the western world. But we have a solution to this. We are expanding the use of an anaesthesia care team model in Alberta. This model actually is used in other provinces. What that enables us to do, in certain surgeries, is allow one anaesthesiologist to oversee other team members to be able to provide the surgeries. We're going to continue to invest in surgeries and get them done for Albertans.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that we're aware that these shortages pushed the government towards potential experiments with asking respiratory therapists to take on the responsibility of anaesthesiologists with full sedation but given that we've seen no evidence that any other jurisdiction is even considering such a potentially risky initiative and given that Albertans should not be put at risk because of this government's failures to retain and attract anaesthesiologists after actively driving them out of the province, will the minister guarantee that Albertans' safety will come before his government's need to hide their failures before the next election?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I have to stop for a minute and take umbrage with some of the statements being made by the members opposite. We have more doctors than we've ever had in this province. When we compare last year over the year before that: 254 more doctors. Now, I appreciate we have shortages in certain areas, and I appreciate we have shortages in certain specialties, but we have more coming in. I was very pleased to go and stand with my colleague to announce an expansion of our med school program, which, by the way, takes seven years for a family physician. You know, we wouldn't be in this position if the previous government actually had done it beforehand.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that we wouldn't be in this position if this minister and his predecessor hadn't chased doctors out of this province, if they hadn't torn up their master agreement and continued to pursue those damaging policies in the midst of a global pandemic and given that we would not be in this position if this government had not continued to raise tuition, if they had not eliminated – the fact that costs made it harder for students to actually want to stay and take residency positions, which, in fact, went unfilled last year due to the toxic environment this government has created. An Alberta NDP government will make this a province where doctors want to stay.

Mr. Copping: Okay. Mr. Speaker, I'm going to answer some issues substantively. Number one, on the previous question, we will ensure the safety of Albertans will be ensured when we actually apply a model in terms of – like, a broader model. That's rule number one, and we'll make sure to do that.

In regard to the residencies being filled, the hon. member is quite right. They typically haven't been filled over the years, including that under the previous government they weren't filled. We understand that this is an issue, Mr. Speaker, so we're actually looking at changing the process to ensure that if it isn't filled in terms of the original CaRMS process, we could actually get IMGs. Plus, some of these new spots: we're going to do a flow through without using CaRMS.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has a question.

Capital Plan

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's two largest cities, Calgary and Edmonton, are home to many vital public facilities not just for locals but the broader north and south regions of the province. As a result, there is construction, maintenance, and planning work that goes into existing facilities and future ones. Given that the province's biggest city, Calgary, will benefit from over a billion dollars in the Infrastructure 2023 capital plan, to the Minister of Infrastructure: what major projects can Calgaryans expect to actually see as a result of Budget 2023?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, through you, to the member for the question. One billion dollars of Infrastructure's $5.4 billion three-year capital plan is going to Calgary projects such as the Foothills medical centre neonatal intensive care unit; the Peter Lougheed Centre emergency department, mental health intensive care unit, and laboratory redevelopment; the Calgary Court of Appeal; and the Calgary cyclotron and radiopharmaceutical facility project. There are eight active health facility projects, three government facility projects, and six school projects in Calgary. There is an increase in funding for the Alberta surgical initiative capital program, recovery communities, and much more.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister knows his stuff and given that Edmonton is not only our capital but also a major hub for northern Alberta in terms of services, health care, and more . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: . . . and further given that Budget 2023 outlines $1.2 billion for Edmonton in Infrastructure's capital plan, to the same minister . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. You know what the difference is? Earlier today the Member for Calgary-Hays was interrupted by the Speaker for his heckling. Immediately following, he refrained from doing such. Perhaps other members would do the same.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, $1.2 billion for Edmonton in the Infrastructure capital plan. To the same minister: what are some major projects that Edmontonians will see thanks to Budget 2023?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you again to the member. Yes, $1.2 billion, or 22 per cent, of Infrastructure's $5.4 billion three-year capital plan is going to Edmonton projects such as the Edmonton hospital in the southwest, the Gene Zwozdesky centre at Norwood, the Misericordia community hospital modernization, the U of A hospital brain centre-neurosciences intensive care unit, the Yellowhead Youth Centre. There are seven active health care facility projects, one government facility project, and six school projects in Edmonton. There is increased funding for the Alberta surgical initiative program, recovery communities, medical device processing, and, again . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is on fire and given that building our vital infrastructure requires constant communication with our construction partners in major cities across the province and given that Edmonton and Calgary construction associations work closely with the industry to ensure projects are completed on time and that Albertans have access to the work on the projects, to the minister: how many construction and construction-related jobs do we currently have, and how many more will be created as a result of Budget 2023?

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you once again to the member for all his fine work. As I do like to say, infrastructure is the work that puts people to work. I'm happy to report that currently the active capital projects support approximately 37,000 construction jobs and construction-related jobs. The Budget 2023 capital plan is supporting an average of 20,000 direct and 12,000 indirect jobs per year through to '25-26. I'd also like to take an extra opportunity to thank the ECA, the CCA, and the ACA for all the work they do and the members that they represent, hard-working people all across Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Industrial Development in St. Albert

Ms Renaud: Last week the Leader of the Official Opposition committed to funding the Lakeview business district in partnership with the city of St. Albert. We're a party invested in growing jobs, supporting the economy, and working with municipalities to support growth and development. I can't say the same for the UCP, who ignored this need despite it being a top priority for the region. The jobs minister said that there's no way the UCP will support this project to create 7,000 jobs. To the minister: why does the UCP refuse to invest in projects that support economic growth in St. Albert, Morinville, and right across the region?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, what the member said is not correct. This is a great project. We will help them with the regulations. We will help them with the regulatory burden that that party wants to put in place. We will help them with any funding initiatives. What's odd about this is that they might not recognize that this business industrial park services the oil sands, and that means that it's a great project because it's great for the future of Alberta. How can they possibly live with themselves? On one side they say, "Kill the oil sands," and on the other side they say, "Support corporate welfare to this . . ."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Given that just last week the minister of jobs openly sneered at this important project despite the fact that this business park will bring 7,000 jobs for my constituents and given that the minister can't point to a line in this budget that says that this government is going to support this important project – and comments like his completely undermine the good work of the city and the people of St. Albert, the good economic projects that deserve support – will the jobs minister stand here today and admit that his comments about the Lakeview business district were crass, inaccurate and apologize to the people of St. Albert?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I think the member misunderstood. I was actually sneering at what she was doing when they suck and blow at the same time. Sucking and blowing: let me get to that. What that means is that, on one side, if it's in their constituency, they say that it's a strategic investment, but if it's an investment in corporate Alberta that creates thousands and thousands of jobs, good-paying jobs for Albertans, they say: no, that's corporate welfare. Which is it? Are they just prepared to support their own ridings if they need an investment in corporate, or is it not? Are they standing up for Albertans, or are they not?

Ms Renaud: Given that St. Albert is a fast-growing and diverse city and given that that is the most ridiculous answer I've ever heard and given that the Lakeview business district is a crucial step in creating jobs that will support the community and grow this economy and given that the minister of service Alberta has failed for years to deliver this project despite repeatedly promising to get it done, will the service Alberta minister apologize to the people of St. Albert and Morinville for his colleague's rude and misinformed comments and just commit to work with the NDP and get that Lakeview business district done?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize for that member. If the people of St. Albert want to make a good choice, they should elect a UCP member. Now, let's be clear. That member, the minister of red tape reduction, has saved Albertans over $2 billion by reducing all of that red tape that that government brought in when they were in government. I don't see that happening again. I think Albertans know better than to hire somebody that sucks and blows at the same time. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Gray: Point of order.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I learned that . . .

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:24.

You can start again. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Seniors' Housing, Benefits, and Pensions

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I learned that Revera River Ridge in St. Albert was increasing its monthly rental rates by 10 per cent. This is very concerning. A 10 per cent increase during a cost-of-living crisis could mean families are left trying to find new places for their loved ones to live or are cutting back on other supports. This is increasing stress on seniors and their families, who often stretch their pocketbooks to get the right care. Will the minister please explain why the UCP is forcing more costs onto Alberta seniors and their families?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This government is actually working towards reducing costs for seniors, reducing costs for Albertans while working towards making things more affordable across the board. We indexed seniors' benefits as well as supplementary programs. We're investing significantly in building out more affordable housing across the province so that more seniors have a place to call home in the communities that they've raised their families in, that they've built their lives in. That's a huge priority for this government, and we're going to continue to commit to making sure that we're increasing the affordability supply for Albertans.

Thank you.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the UCP got rid of the Seniors Advocate, a position I wish existed right now because seniors need support, and given that the UCP kicked seniors' dependents off their drug plans, forcing them to pay more for the medication they need, and given that the government deindexed seniors' benefits for three years, meaning they lost thousands of dollars that are essential to ensuring seniors can live and age in dignity, will the minister stand and apologize for the government's legacy of making life harder and more expensive for Alberta seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. I'm proud to live in a province in Canada that has the most generous supports for seniors in this country. I realize that it's still a challenge. I've been hitting a lot of doors in my community, talking to seniors on a daily basis, and understanding the challenge, the challenge that has come with this inflation crisis, that's created affordability challenges for seniors. That's why we've added our seniors to our affordability payments to make sure that they get that additional hundred dollars a month for six months – talking to seniors at the door, that's having a huge impact for them – as well as trying to address heating bills and other affordability challenges for our seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that on top of everything else, the UCP wants to gamble with Alberta seniors' pensions so the Premier can fund an Alberta revenue agency and a UCP police force, both things Albertans have made abundantly clear they do not want, and given that seniors will get the chance to protect their pensions from the UCP in just a few weeks by electing an Alberta NDP government, why is the minister gambling with seniors' hard-earned savings, all while making them pay more to live in the province they call home?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was so pleased to make seniors a focus point of our affordability action plan with our government. A couple of seniors in Alberta are eligible for up to $1,200 together in affordability payments. They're eligible for up to $500 of electricity rebates, and we've fully suspended the fuel tax. Two seniors in Alberta could be receiving up to $2,000 in benefit, in support through this inflationary crisis from our government, and we're going to continue to be there for seniors.

Budget 2023 and Calgary

Mr. Panda: It is ironic that the MLA for downtown Calgary is criticizing that Budget 2023 is not doing enough for downtown Calgary. Mr. Speaker, when he was the Finance minister, he probably did the most to drive out offices from Calgary, chase them out of Alberta. In stark contrast, those of us on this side of the House have seen an increase in employment and greater occupancy in our downtown office buildings. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs tell this Assembly what more is in the budget for Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. My colleague is well aware of many of the projects going on in downtown Calgary, right across Calgary right now, thanks to his time and dedication on the file of Infrastructure. He's right to recognize that we saw a decline in office vacancy in Calgary, the rate now dropping for a second straight quarter as the province recovers from four years under the NDP. As the member will well know from his time as Minister of Infrastructure, the government knows the importance of Calgary, and he will know many of the projects in Budget 2023, with $541 million over three years for Calgary LRT . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Edgemont.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Minister. Given the critical importance of Calgary being our commercial capital and given that there is a need for schools, hospitals, roads, bridges, and social services in Calgary, can the Minister of Municipal Affairs tell this House about the supports provided by the province for Calgary to build infrastructure that the city deems important?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, Budget 2023 includes great news for the city of Calgary, including the widening of Deerfoot Trail and the new Calgary cancer centre, which I know my colleague is very passionate about. That's above and beyond the other dedicated projects for Calgary, that are too many, of course, to list in this short time, but it spans roads, postsecondary, health care, education, arts, and recreation, with almost $3 billion in the budget, because Calgary matters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Edmonton.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. Given that many Calgarians are concerned about crime and safety, particularly when they ride the C-Train or go downtown, and given that often those committing crimes are suffering from mental health and addiction challenges, can the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction tell this Assembly how programs and projects in Calgary around mental health and addiction will help create safer streets in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues are impacting every community in Alberta. Edmonton and Calgary especially have, I would say, borne an unfair brunt of that. That is why we are taking real actions. The Calgary and Edmonton public safety and community response task forces are responsible for implementing $187 million worth of life-saving initiatives in our two largest cities. We are increasing addiction treatment capacity in both of our urban centres, more sheriffs. We're doing this because big cities matter, and we're taking care of them.

Automobile Insurance Premiums

Mr. Sabir: So many of my constituents rely on their vehicles to get to and from work. In fact, for many their cars are their livelihood. They deliver goods, they shuttle passengers, they drive long-haul trucks and do many other critical jobs. They all need to insure their vehicles, and despite the UCP's promise to freeze the insurance rates, drivers will soon pay a lot more to keep vehicles on the roads, up to 16 per cent in some cases. How does the minister explain to my constituents that under his so-called rate freeze the insurance rates are still going up?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve an automobile insurance system that is fair, affordable, and accessible. This pause is a temporary measure to give Albertans some breathing room while the government explores longer term solutions, which the members opposite completely ignored. The goal is to steady auto insurance rates in the province and ultimately lower those rates for Albertans. This government has heard concerns from Albertans about auto insurance rates throughout the inflation crisis, so we're working to provide relief. That includes pausing rate increases to private passenger vehicle insurance through to the end of 2023.

Mr. Sabir: Given that this government has once again abandoned my constituents – and now they are running misleading ads on Red FM about their fake insurance freeze – and given that they have taken the side of the insurance industry, just like they did after the northeast hailstorm in 2020, and given that the Alberta NDP has always been there for northeast Calgary while the UCP only listens to their friends and former campaign managers who are now lobbyists for the insurance industry, can the minister at least admit to Albertans that his government's first priority has always been their buddies in big insurance?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The rate increases that the members opposite are referring to are from October to December of 2022, well before the rate pause came into effect. We confirmed with the auto insurance review board that no new rate increases have been approved since the rate pause. Just like what we saw with the members opposite and making up information about crop insurance, for example . . .

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

Ms Schulz: . . . we don't need the members opposite purposely causing confusion where it's unwarranted. When the pause took effect, some insurers had already been approved for rate increases, so some Alberta drivers may see those reflected, but rate changes are also because of things like driving records.

Mr. Sabir: Given that Albertans actually caught a break on their insurance rates when the Alberta NDP government put a cap on insurance rates and given that as soon as they formed the government, the UCP removed the cap and the insurance costs shot up by 30 per cent in some cases and given that last year when I brought forward a solution for my constituents' concerns and proposed a bill to reinstate an auto insurance freeze, this government refused to even debate that, how can the minister even explain his fake auto insurance freeze as anything other than a misleading stunt right before an election?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, the regulated rate cap under the members opposite resulted in insurance providers pulling back products, including rate plans. We don't want to see that. Ours is a temporary pause to give us time to review and explore real, long-term solutions for Albertans. The arbitrary rate cap implemented by the members opposite hurt Albertans, Alberta businesses, and insurance doing business here. The rate cap implemented by the NDP government was hard on Alberta drivers. Many drivers had to pay for the full year's premium up front rather than monthly, were denied collision in comprehensive coverage. We've seen rates decline thanks to our Bill 41. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

During the second supplemental the Deputy Opposition House Leader raised a point of order at 2:34.

Kananaskis Conservation Pass

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, the UCP government turned K Country into Pay Country, and they'll pocket about $11 million in revenue from their $90 K pass. Despite taking this big pile of money from Albertans, the MLA for Banff-Kananaskis admitted that this government doesn't know where the funds will go. Will the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism finally tell Albertans why they're collecting money from them when they don't even know what they're doing with it?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. All aspects of the K pass are under review. All options are being considered. It's important for me as Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism to ensure our review reflects a diversity of options while prioritizing affordability and promoting outdoor recreation and tourism. Rushing our review would do a disservice to those who love Kananaskis Country.

Ms Goehring: Given that Albertans, who are passionate about our beautiful parks in the wilderness paradise that is a provincial treasure, have called for the K pass to be axed, pointing out that it betrays the legacy of Peter Lougheed – as Shaun Peter with Bragg Creek & Kananaskis Outdoor Recreation said, quote: we're paying now to use our backyard – and given that Shaun and so many other Albertans would rather see funding added to the parks budget through voluntary methods such as the parks licence plate program, that we have been advocating for, will the minister agree that the K pass is a bad idea, scrap it, and commit to adopting the Alberta NDP voluntary . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again for the question. Of course, I agree that Albertans love Kananaskis Country. There are more than 4 million people exploring that area annually. We want to make sure we have the right solutions. We want to make sure that we support outdoor recreation, public safety, and conservation. We want to make sure that we do what's right for the people of Alberta and make sure that they can enjoy the great country of Kananaskis when they have a chance to visit there.

Ms Goehring: Given that in November, a month after being sworn in as Premier, the Premier was asked on a radio show what she thought of the K pass and responded, quote, I don't love it because I think it puts a burden on families, and given that in December she said that she'd ask the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism for a review of the K pass but that three months later all we have are crickets on this issue and given that the Premier's budget shows that she's decided to break her promise and keep the K pass, how can Albertans believe a word anyone in this government says when they keep policies they know are bad and which impose new costs on to Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again for the question. We have increased funding on parks in Alberta and in Kananaskis particularly. We've put in $1.2 million to maintain over 1,600 kilometres of trail, $500,000 in grants to support trail organizations, and $1.5 million to support public safety and dispatch programs. We are focused on making sure Kananaskis is safe, making sure that people have something to do when they get there and that we protect and conserve the environment there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has a question to ask.

Calgary Ring Road and Deerfoot Trail Construction

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southwest Calgary ring road is a huge win for Calgary and Alberta. The truth is that we can no longer run our north-south trade route through the middle of our city. It has benefits for those in my constituency, who are no longer limited to one way in or out of our neighbourhoods. Today a trip to West Hills takes seven minutes, compared to the previous 25 minutes. We're now looking forward to the west leg being completed, which will allow us to get to WinSport in 15 minutes. To the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors: can we see the entirety of the southwest Calgary ring road completed soon, including the west leg? When will it open for traffic?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary ring road is a huge win for all of Calgary. Construction is anticipated to be complete next year. That will help Calgarians spend more time at home with their families versus being stuck in traffic. Budget 2023 actually commits nine kilometres of new road on the ring road, a five-kilometre upgrade to the Trans-Canada highway, six new intersections, and 29 new bridges. When this project is complete, it'll do 101 kilometres of free-flowing traffic around the city of Calgary, and it's just great news for all of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for that answer. Given that while there are many benefits of the ring road, there are also annoyances such as increased road noise, particularly noticeable where previously there wasn't even a road before, and given that road noise will likely increase as usage grows after the west section of Stoney is completed and given that the road noise affects my constituents' quality of life, can the minister please share what he is doing to prevent and mitigate the spillover of noise from the ring road in Cedarbrae and Woodbine neighbourhoods in southwest Calgary in particular?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In all of Calgary they're going to get about $2.2 billion over three years in capital projects. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore has been a fierce champion when it comes to advocating for her constituents for the need of sound attenuation along the ring road, and I'm happy to say that in Budget 2023 we have that project committed into it. She can rest assured to know that her constituents can get a better night's sleep.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Issik: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, that is fabulous news. Thanks to the minister for that. Given that the ring road is not the only vital roadway for Calgary's local economy and given that our government is committed to improving Deerfoot Trail, the busiest roadway in Alberta, and given that the UCP government is committed to driving our province forward, unlike the NDP, who want to just force a transition on Albertans and put thousands of Albertans out of jobs, can the minister please share the economic benefits of improving Deerfoot Trail and how that will affect our province?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2023 has $430 million for Deerfoot Trail upgrades within the city of Calgary. That means about 900,000 hours a year, with an economic benefit of $23 million for Calgary and the region. That means these Deerfoot upgrades will actually be 15 per cent faster for Calgarians to get to work and also 22 per cent faster time for Calgarians to get home from work and, overall, just help families spend more time together versus staring at tail lights at the end of the day.

The Speaker: Hon. members, my apologies. The question period timer did not sound, but I can assure you that the 50 minutes allotted for question period have expired.

Hon. members, we will proceed immediately to the remainder of the daily Routine given the close approximation of estimates to follow. If you are leaving the Chamber, I encourage you to do so quickly, quietly as we will continue with the remainder of the Routine.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Bill 207, Jobs and Investment Act,* a bill to help grow and diversify our economy here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that brings us to points of order. At 2:24 the hon. Opposition House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order

Language Creating Disorder

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I suspect you know why I'm rising on this point of order, 23(j), uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. Essentially, I rise on a point of order that there was language being used that offends the dignity of the Assembly. The Minister for Jobs, Economy and Northern Development repeatedly used the phrase "suck and blow," and it's very visual language, bordering on profane. I think the fact that the minister was so delighted with himself that he repeated it over and over again makes my point for me. If it is language that the grade 6 classes in the gallery would titter at, I think it offends the dignity of this place.

I rise on this point of order. I realize unparliamentary language is a difficult thing to rule on. It's often the Speaker's judgment that will make this call, but I think in this case having all members yelling at each other about sucking and blowing is something we should not have in this House. I hope you will rule this a point of order and we can avoid this language in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schow: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I don't really need them. I did hear the hon. minister say the term "suck and blow" a number of times, but in this Chamber you cannot fabricate outrage, okay? The language used – if the member opposite is going to suggest that there was a sexual connotation, she should have a conversation with the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who on a number of occasions has referred to bills in a phallic nature, saying that it's not the size of the bill but how you use it. End quote. That has never been ruled a point of order though I have called it a number of times.

Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that saying "suck and blow" in this context is necessarily a point of order. I can assure you that the member on our side of the House was not referring to it in any inappropriate manner so much as to say that you can't inhale and exhale at the same time, when the members opposite are saying one thing but doing the other. So I don't find that this is a point of order, and I would hope that if it's used again, it's also not called a point of order because we know that in some instances when phrases and words are used repeatedly, then they become disruptive to the Chamber. This I don't believe is one of them, and I'd hope that we would not fabricate a point of order out of something like this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I hope the Government House Leader wasn't implying that the Speaker would fabricate a point of order in any parameters.

Mr. Schow: Never, sir.

The Speaker: I do have the benefit of the Blues, and I do have the benefit of this exact situation. In fact, it took place immediately prior to an estimates meeting on March 20, 2013, on page 1671 of Hansard on that particular occasion, when a member used the language around sucking and blowing. On that occasion a point of order was not found, but a caution was provided with respect to language that is likely to create disorder. I will concur with the Speaker in the strongest possible way. As we saw today, this language certainly didn't lend itself to creating order; as such, a case could be made that it created disorder.

Having said that, I will provide a caution to the hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development with respect to the use of such language, but it is not a point of order. I consider that matter dealt with and concluded.

At 2:34 the Official Opposition Deputy House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to 23(i), and I think it's always good to have (h) and (j) with it. I don't have the benefit of Blues, but in response to my question the Minister of Municipal Affairs did comment, did say something along the lines that the member opposite is making it up. She specifically used "making up" and directed it at myself personally. That is clearly offside 23(i), and it's a point of order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you'll indulge me for a very quick moment, referring to the last point of order, I would never suggest the Speaker is fabricating a point of order. Just a point of clarification. Second off, I will provide clarification and caution to our member on that term.

With regard to this point of order I believe it's a matter of interpretation. What I heard from the member, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, was: the members opposite. Certainly, saying "the member opposite" would be a point of order, but without referring to one member in particular, it'd be difficult to call this a point of order, so I would disagree: not a point of order but, rather, a matter of debate.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, I do have the benefit of the Blues, and I am prepared to rule. On this occasion the Blues report the statements of the hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs as, "Just like what we saw with the members opposite," being plural, "and making up information about crop insurance, for example." The point of order was called, and she proceeded.

While I have provided caution around the use of "making things up," "making information up" as well, I concur with the Government House Leader. If, in fact, she had said "the member opposite," it certainly would have been a point of order, but today it will be caution with making accusations that large groups of people make information up or otherwise. This is not a point of order. I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

I see the Official Opposition House Leader rising for some reason.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to return to Notices of Motions.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the entire House. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-North West and for clarity of Hansard I just want to make sure that we all know that he rose to give oral notice for Bill 207, Jobs and Investment Incentives Proposal Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Out of an abundance of caution and for clarity's sake, will you please just read the name of the bill which you intend to place on the Order Paper? The exact verbiage, please. Just the bill.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Jobs and Investment Incentives Proposal Act.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at Orders of the Day, Ordres du jour.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30. The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon, this evening, and tomorrow morning for the consideration of the main estimates.

This afternoon the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Affordability and Utilities in the Grassland Room, and the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Executive Council in the Rocky Mountain Room. This evening the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will continue the consideration of the main estimates on Affordability and Utilities in the Rocky Mountain Room, and the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism in the Grassland Room.

Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance in the Rocky Mountain Room, and the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Seniors, Community and Social Services in the Grassland Room.

Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:54 p.m.]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, this morning I had the absolute privilege to meet a very special guest to Alberta who's now joining us in the Speaker's gallery, His Excellency Kakha Imnadze, the ambassador of Georgia, on his and on the country of Georgia's very first official visit to the province of Alberta. We had a wonderful opportunity to discuss the future of Alberta-Georgia relations and know there is much work we can do together in our shared values of democracy and freedom. I invite the ambassador and his assistant minister-counsellor to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you my mom, Josie Fir. She regularly watches question period, so much so that when we argue, she'll end the argument by saying: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded. After the Speaker and the Member for Grande Prairie, I'm honoured to be my mom's third-favourite MLA. Mom, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has a school group.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to introduce through you and to all members of the Assembly the fantastic grade 6 class from Earl Buxton school and their teacher, Ms Kristine O'Driscoll. I had the honour of meeting this class when they came through the Legislature a couple of weeks ago, but, even better, I got to celebrate Carnival at their school just a few weeks ago, where they had taffy pulling, potato sack races, and tug-of-war. They're fantastic students, if I dare say, some of the best in the province. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has a school group.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you. It's a thrill to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 41 of some of the brightest minds in the province of Alberta, the grade 6 class, from my home constituency and home neighbourhood, of Evansdale school. I ask you all now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to rise today to introduce to you and through you the young men and women participating in the United Conservative caucus internship program. They've come to serve our caucus, learn about our province's great tradition and institutions and rich heritage, and invest in our democracy, that we share. It's an immense pleasure to work with these young men and women. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you some great folks from Scleroderma Canada. Please welcome Erin Stanhope, Scott Munnoch, and my good friend executive director John Malcolmson. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House two special guests from the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council, Alyssa Stoddard, also known as Miss Alyssa to my kids and many of the other Shumka kids out there, and Orysia Boychuk, president of the organization. With their concern and advocacy for landing Ukrainian newcomers in Alberta, it's an honour and a privilege. Thank you so much for what you do, and we look forward to helping you more.

School Transportation Funding

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, through Budget 2023 our government is providing school authorities with an additional $414 million over the next three years to support school transportation and ensure affordability and accessibility for all Alberta families. This will be a 32 per cent increase for the 2023-24 school year.

To help relieve inflation pressures, we have made significant investments in school transportation to ensure more students can take the bus, rural students have shorter rides, and families can save money. With these new changes 80,000 more students will be eligible for provincially funded school transportation. We will be saving parents over $20 million by expanding provincial supports for bus services to 47,000 more students. We're also increasing eligibility for busing by 30,000 students through a reduction of the minimum distance they must live from their school to be eligible.

Budget 2023 student transportation funding will also continue to address costs and inflationary pressures faced by school authorities and bus contractors by providing funding for an additional 100 bus routes serving rural students. Rural ride times are expected to decrease significantly. Increased funding for driver training will support 1,250 drivers, including 350 new drivers, and increase the driver workforce by 6 per cent. Alberta's government is also continuing the fuel price contingency program for the 2023-24 school year. To date this program has saved school authorities $16.5 million in the current school year, '22-23, and is projected to save them a total of $23.5 million in the upcoming school year.

Mr. Speaker, more than 300,000 Alberta students and their families rely on transportation services to and from school every day. The investments we are making now will benefit Alberta families today, tomorrow, and for many years to come.

Budget 2023

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, this budget does not inspire confidence in accountability, transparency, or common sense, and I must admit that I'm a little surprised. While the Premier and I don't agree on much, I do remember her last time in this Chamber, where she was very concerned with these principles that are seemingly being thrown aside in this budget. Would as a member that Premier of 2012 or 2014 have stood by while an out-of-touch PC government created a potentially multibillion-dollar slush fund right before an election, or would she have agreed that a Premier should give herself the ability, right before an election, to spend potentially billions? The answer to that is: I don't think so.

But that is exactly what is happening in this budget. The government's slush fund, which, if enacted, gives the government the ability to spend money that they are projected to have on, scare quotes, one-time projects – and these are scary quotes – or, quote, emerging priorities: that is a polite way of saying “electioneering.” The budget has $3 million to advertise itself. It has $30 million for the embarrassing war room. This is undemocratic, unaccountable, in short, the UCP in its truest form.

But Albertans have come to expect these sorts of tricks from the government. They know they will promise one thing and do the exact opposite after the election. Albertans know that this budget is not about supporting them. It is for a government that is increasingly desperate in its attempt to win back the trust of Albertans after violating it time and time and time and time again. Albertans do not trust this government or this Premier, and they know that if they want a government they can trust, they can elect an Alberta NDP government on May 29.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

UCP and NDP Government Records

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This United Conservative government is in tune to the needs of Albertans, and we strive to bring opportunities to all parts of our stunning province. We are focused on growth and targeted funding. We are motivated to assist Albertans through extraordinary periods of high inflation. We are determined to bring forward better health care deliveries and outcomes and expand supports for mental health and addictions.

Albertans elected us in 2019 to fix the problems that the NDP let slide. Albertans trusted us to be the guiding light to new potential. They trusted us to be their representatives for Alberta but also for Canada. Albertans are confident that we have their best interests in mind.

The same cannot be said for the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker. The NDP has vigorously promoted the carbon tax from day one, and at a time of real financial difficulties they are one hundred per cent in support of the federal government further raising the carbon tax in April. This increase will add an additional 14 cents per litre for Albertans at the pumps.

As our United Conservative government applied for the affordability action plan to help alleviate stress and financial concerns for Albertans, the NDP still wants to make life more unaffordable for everyone. The NDP brought in the largest tax increase in Alberta's history when they were in government, and they would surely do it again, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy was struggling when the NDP was elected, but what was their solution to a struggling economy and high unemployment? They chose to hit employers with a 20 per cent tax increase. They introduced a provincial carbon tax that raised the costs of all goods and services, and they drove away important businesses and investors.

The NDP's mismanagement greatly affected our province, Mr. Speaker, but I am proud to say that this UCP government has brought Alberta back on track, and we're just getting started.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Royal Canadian Legion

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a crossparty homage to the Royal Canadian Legion. I know that many members of this Chamber are also members of the Royal Canadian Legion, and so am I. Very happily, I was given this gift today of a tie, a Legion tie, from Legion 62, the one of which I'm a member. I am a member because my father was a member. My grandfather was a serviceman. You can be a member of the Canadian Legion if you are a service member or not, if your family is a service member or not. It's welcome to all, and there are thousands upon thousands of Albertans that are.

The history of the Legion as an institution runs deep. In fact, it's crosspartisan, Mr. Speaker, because the CCF, on July 31, 1932, the precursor to the NDP, was founded at the Legion 1 hall in Calgary, a great part of prairie populism as a tradition that we hold here in Canada and Alberta and the prairies.

You can host your Christmas supper at the Legion, your perogy dinners at the Legion. You can do every single community event you can imagine. Mr. Speaker, I know my constituency office and my family book every single year as often as we can.

A thank you to all the servicemen and -women for all the work that they have done protecting our country, keeping us strong and free.

Thank you to everyone who is a Legion member for the work that they have done making sure that that institution is still a place where you can have your turkey and perogy dinners, where you can go to meat draws, which was my childhood with my father and grandfather coming up together. The meat draw is every single Saturday afternoon, something I still participate in at the Peace River Legion all the time.

To everyone: thank you very much for your service if you're military members. Thank you to everyone who is a Legion member. Cheers to you, Mr. Speaker.

To the Canadian Legion: God bless.

The Speaker: While I share your support for the Legion, I don't share your commitment to a prop inside the Assembly.

Affordability Plan

Mr. Feehan: Mr. Speaker, for weeks Albertans have had to listen to the UCP wax poetic about their so-called affordability plan. They spent a lot of taxpayer dollars advertising it online and in the mail, but there's an irony here. The UCP plan is just the UCP reversing some of their own bad decisions, decisions that raised the costs on each and every Albertan and made them pay more. Four years and four big mistakes: let me tell you about them.

The UCP slashed AISH and seniors' benefits, saying that the cuts were, quote, not onerous, but these cuts were onerous. They hurt Albertans. Now the same team that caused the pain wants credit for reindexing them. I don't think so. By deindexing personal income taxes, the government cost Albertans over $600 million, money that should have stayed in Albertans' pockets. Ironically, the government that took that money away wants credit for giving it back.

Here's another. The UCP took the cap off car insurance premiums at the behest of their lobbyist friends, and you know what, Mr. Speaker? Albertans were side-swiped, driven into the ditch by double-digit premium hikes of, in some cases, more than 30 per cent. Now this government wants credit for a fake freeze even as insurance premiums are spiking by 16 per cent now. The hypocrisy is astounding.

Here's another example. Our Alberta NDP government put a cap on utilities. One of the first things the UCP did was remove that price protection. Now the RRO price is triple the protected price, and the UCP wants credit for offering payday loans that come due after the election.

Mr. Speaker, on all these matters – benefits, income tax, insurance, utilities – the UCP is the cause of the problem, not the solution. Albertans will have the chance to rectify this on May 29.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North has risen.

UCP and NDP Government Records

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Looking back at the 2019 budget address, our government and Albertans had three main priorities: getting back to work, making life better, and standing up for our province. Our government took those priorities seriously. Here is a quick high-level comparison of Alberta then and Alberta now.

In 2019 the unemployment rate was 7.3 per cent, the corporate tax rate was 12 per cent, the budget deficit was over $12 billion, and the provincial carbon tax was in effect. When the NDP left office, we were coming out of a four-year period with multiple credit downgrades, a shrinking private sector, 97 tax and fee increases, and $64 billion in debt. In 2019 Albertans were worrying for their future and for their province.

Four years later, Mr. Speaker, and despite two years of a global pandemic, Alberta's unemployment rate now is at 5.8 per cent, with over 200,000 jobs created. The corporate tax rate is the lowest in the country, at 8 per cent, bringing $400 million more in revenue than at 12 per cent. Last year's venture capital broke records at $729 million, with more expected in 2023. We don't have a provincial tax. We have a balanced budget with a $2.5 billion surplus. We are providing an increase of $100 million over the next three years for the film and television tax credit. Under our government more than 119,000 private-sector jobs have been created. We have the lowest tax of any province, and our Finance minister just paid off all the debt that matured in 2022.

Banks are forecasting that Alberta's economy will lead Canada over the next two years, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is pulling through to become stronger and better than when we first came into office. We are leading the nation with economic growth and endless potential. Thousands of people are moving into Alberta every month from across the country, around the world, including many newcomers. That's why Alberta's best days are ahead under another UCP government. [interjections]

Budget 2023

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I was honoured to work with this Finance minister to develop the largest capital plan in Alberta's history. Together we invested about $30 billion over four years to stimulate and diversify Alberta's economy. This year's budget is a testament to the strong fiscal management the UCP has brought to our great province. Budget '23 is investing over half a billion dollars in Calgary LRT projects, nearly half a billion dollars to upgrade Deerfoot Trail, over a quarter billion dollars to protect communities on the Elbow River, and $166 million towards the cancer centre.

Additionally, the Alberta government is increasing health care spending by nearly $3 billion, the Education budget by nearly half a billion, and the Advanced Education budget by nearly $200 million compared to last year. Hundreds of millions of dollars in new investment will create 3,400 more health care training spots in postsecondaries, 100 new residency spots for doctors, and 120 new spots for physician training at Alberta universities, a 34 per cent increase.

Budget 2023 represents a monumental investment in Alberta's future and only exists because of the strong fiscal management this UCP government has produced over these past years despite COVID-19. This budget will continue to provide affordability relief to all Albertans. Mr. Speaker, facts matter. Numbers don't lie. I would encourage all Albertans to look at all the good investments in this new Budget 2023. Don't fall for fearmongering. The NDP would have borrowed and spent and mortgaged our children's future while the UCP has created wealth, prosperity, and jobs for future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Canada Pension Plan

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans deserve a secure retirement with strong pensions they can count on, but repeatedly the UCP has meddled in pensions, and now this Premier is threatening their CPP. Last year she said, and I quote: when you look at the CPP alone, that is clearly going to pay for a new Alberta provincial police force or collecting our personal income tax. On this side we know that Albertans' retirements should never be used to fund this Premier's bad ideas. Will the Premier stand today and commit to never withdrawing Alberta from the Canada pension plan?

Ms Smith: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that a hundred per cent of the premiums that are collected for pension will always, one hundred per cent go to support pensions. What we are looking at on this side is something that we heard from the Fair Deal Panel discussions all over Alberta. Albertans wanted us to look at what would happen if we had our own Alberta pension plan. We have done a report, but it's a couple of years old. The company, LifeWorks, that did the report wanted to update it with new information, so we're awaiting that information. When it's available, it will be released.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, Albertans didn't ask for this at all. Here's Leah from Edmonton: the Premier's plan is reckless and ill advised; it puts seniors who rely on their CPP in jeopardy. Here's Karen from Calgary: the pension I paid into for 40 years is not something that belongs to the UCP. And Alex from Devon says: this is a ruse for the UCP to get their hands on the personal savings of Albertans; CPP is not being mismanaged; if you want to know what Albertans believe, then have a referendum. I agree with Alex. If the Premier agrees, too, will she agree to hold a referendum during this spring election?

Ms Smith: I agree with Alex, too. There should be a referendum if there is going to be any change to the pension, and we have committed that there would be. But it's a little premature to be talking about that since we don't have the report and we haven't done the public consultation and we haven't heard from Albertans whether they want us to proceed to a referendum. I don't know why the members opposite didn't participate in the province-wide hearings that took place with the Fair Deal Panel, because we did hear from Albertans that we should look into it, and that's what we're doing.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we actually know that the UCP has already received part 1 of the report on gambling with Alberta's CPP, and the real thing is that they're just scared to release it before the election. It's a deeply unpopular idea. They know it, so they're hiding it. In contrast, Alberta's NDP will release our own report tomorrow, a real commitment that we will stay in CPP and other good ideas as well. Now, while we want Albertans to see our proposals, this Premier can't say the same. If she believes in her plan, why is she so scared to show it to Albertans before the election?

Ms Smith: You know, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, the initial report looks very promising. It looks like not only would we be able to substantially decrease the premiums that Albertans pay, but we would also be able to substantially increase the amount that we give to each senior in benefits. We want to just make sure that we've got the right information based on updated figures because things have changed on the rates and the contributions and the overcontribution of Albertans. That report, we've been told, by LifeWorks won't be available till May, so as soon as it's available, we'll release it and have a discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Prescription Contraception Coverage Policy

Ms Notley: Now, on a different issue, quote: I don't see the need; I won't prejudge what drugs need to be covered. And another quote: we let private insurance take the lead. For a week now this Premier has been asked repeatedly about a good health care policy that would help tens of thousands of Alberta women, universal contraceptive coverage at no cost. Instead of supporting women's health care, this Premier has come up with every excuse in the book. I can't wait to hear today's. Once again, why won't this Premier help Alberta women afford the cost of birth control?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we just have a different approach. We know that there is coverage that is available in private insurance plans as well as public insurance plans. Alberta Blue Cross is available not only for low-income individuals through the various programs that we offer; our seniors also have access to these programs. We have a nongroup program that's available for anybody to be able to sign up so that they can get the full range of pharmaceuticals that they might need as opposed to just singling out this one particular one. So anybody who lacks coverage should call Alberta Blue Cross.

Ms Notley: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, the Premier continues her full-throated defence of the idea that people should pay for their health care out of pocket. We did look at what Blue Cross costs and what the coverage costs. A 28-year-old woman with no health conditions and no dependants will pay $60 a month, and even then she will only get 70 per cent coverage. On what planet does the Premier think the choice to pay more is one that any Alberta woman is remotely interested in accepting?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we've got support in our system to have both private insurance and public insurance when it comes to pharmaceuticals. The reason we do that, quite frankly, is so that we can get a broader range of drugs covered, because the private formularies often accept the new drugs faster than public formularies when you look at places where they don't have private insurance. We want to make sure that the full range of coverage for all pharmaceuticals is available in Alberta, and that's the reason why we want to continue to support choice.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the Premier's answers have even been more ridiculous. On Monday the Premier said, "The . . . things that we hear should be covered are things like the diabetes pumps." Now, while I'm glad the UCP finally figured out that diabetes pumps should be covered, those pumps do not prevent pregnancies. The Premier says that she's going to let private insurance take the lead, the total opposite of leadership. Why should Albertans elect a Premier who lets private insurance companies, who have a profit motive, decide the kind of health care that people will have universal access to? Why?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we support women's health in a number of different ways. We provide grant funding to community-based organizations in Grande Prairie, Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary, Medicine Hat to support vulnerable women, including those who are pregnant, postpartum, and want contraception. We also have a funding commitment for current projects under $2 million annually to support 350 women and infants that are supported each year. We've got a number of programs offering culturally sensitive maternity care, including Indigenous Births of Alberta and Juniper Midwives, which provide services that support Indigenous women and families. We support women's health.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Public Safety and 2SLGBTQQIA-plus Rights

Member Irwin: Calgary public library has partnered with Calgary Pride for the past five years to host reading with royalty. These are family-friendly events that celebrate diversity, promote inclusion, and spark the imagination by telling stories and singing songs. But this year the library was forced to postpone reading with royalty because a small number of people chose to harass children and families and spew hate against fabulous Alberta drag queens. My question is a simple one: will the Premier join me in condemning these acts of bigotry?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is committed to the protection of children, diversity, parental choice, and the right to peaceful protest. Any event where children are present should be age appropriate. My understanding of the reading time events, like the one in Calgary, is that they are kept age appropriate and minors attending them have the consent of their parents. We respect parental choice being exercised by minors that are in attendance. We also believe in the right to peaceful protest as long as people are doing it within the bounds of the law.

Member Irwin: While this Premier and this UCP did nothing, the city of Calgary took action. Yesterday council passed a bylaw aimed at preventing harassment of people entering or leaving public libraries or recreation centres by setting up a bubble zone of 100 metres. It's so sad that they even needed to do this, but here we are. The last time we talked about bubble zones in this building, that time in relation to abortion clinics, the UCP actually went and hid in the bathrooms. Does the Premier support the new city of Calgary bylaws?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we are just hearing about the new bylaw in the city of Calgary, and we know that municipalities are responsible for creating bylaws. I would encourage anyone who is concerned about this to reach out to their councillor and to the mayor's office to express their view.

In the meantime I do want to tell the members opposite what we have done to support the city of Calgary, because what we hear from the city of Calgary is that citizens are worried about public safety. It's why we have our sheriffs embedded with Calgary police officers, addressing the issue of public disorder and making sure that the streets are safe.

Member Irwin: When someone shows you who they are, believe them. This is the same UCP government that's the first and only government in Canada to remove protections for the 2SLGBTQ-plus community. That's right. This is the first provincial government in Canada to actually roll back rights, when they removed legal privacy protections and they limited the right for Alberta students to form GSAs in schools. This was a clear demonstration that the UCP is willing to put 2SLGBTQ-plus youth in danger. Does the Premier regret her predecessor's attack on young Albertans, and if so, what tangible steps is she going to take to fix that terrible relationship she has with the . . .

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I really object to the way the members opposite try to divide people when we are united on the issue of protecting our students and protecting members of the LGBTQ-plus community. Our government has the most comprehensive . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Smith: Our government has the most comprehensive statutory protections for LGBTQ-plus students in Canada. Membership in any student organization, including GSAs, is protected under Alberta's robust privacy legislation. I would ask for an apology from the members opposite for suggesting otherwise. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Publicly Funded Health Care

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current Premier wants Albertans to pay out of pocket for the health care they need. We know this because she keeps saying so. She's on the record saying she wants Albertans to get used to paying for health care, even for taking their kids to the family doctor. Why, as recently as yesterday she told this House that she wants insurance companies to take the lead on what prescriptions and treatments are covered. That sounds like American-style health care. Why does the Premier want to hand over Albertans' health care to her friends in big insurance?

Ms Smith: I don't know, Mr. Speaker. They had four years to institute a public insurance plan like the one they're asking us to do. Why didn't they do it? There's a reason they didn't do it; it's because we end up with better coverage when you have a mix of public and private. Well, again, I mean, the members had the opportunity to do it. They chose not to, so I don't know why anybody would believe, now that they're campaigning, that they would do something different than what they did in government. They're trying to make that point on a number of different cases. Any time I have spoken about people paying out of pocket, what I have said is health spending accounts, which is what every member in this Legislature enjoys.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, what the Premier said was: seeing a family doctor; is that something government really has to pay for? That's on the record. Alberta New Democrats believe that Albertans should take the lead on their health care in consultation with their family doctor. That's why an Alberta NDP government will provide universal coverage for prescription contraception, so that every single Albertan who needs that medication can get it. Now, the Premier has heard story after story from Albertans telling her how life changing that policy would be. Each time she says that Albertans should pay out of pocket instead, which means many people simply cannot get the care they need. Why is this Premier working for big insurance instead of Albertans?

Ms Smith: I just don't know how the members opposite can sit here, having taxpayers pay $950 every year, year after year, for their health spending account to cover the things that are not covered by insurance and then deny that to taxpayers. Why do they think that taxpayers should pay for their benefit and for us not to extend that benefit to all taxpayers? That's what the health spending account is all about. That's part of the reason why I've asked our Minister of Technology and Innovation to scope it out, so that we can create a little bit of parity. I personally think that taxpayers deserve to have the same benefits as the politicians they're paying for.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how this Premier can sit here and say that she should give $20 billion dollars away to her friends and donors in profitable oil and gas companies when Albertans are having to pay out of pocket for contraception.

I'm so proud that Alberta NDP plan to connect a million Albertans with a family doctor and a family health team. After the UCP chased family doctors out of the province, we will welcome them back in. We will get Albertans the care they need when they need it, where they need it: close to home. We will take the pressure off our ambulances and hospitals and end the UCP's chaos in health care because that's what happens when Albertans lead and not the Premier's friends in insurance.

Ms Smith: I didn't hear a question in that, Mr. Speaker.

Agrifood Industry in Southern Alberta

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, two years ago our UCP government embarked on an ambitious project to build a supercluster of agrifood processors in the corridor between Lethbridge and Medicine Hat. We recognize the need for our government to invest in the infrastructure to make this happen, so we announced the twinning of highway 3. This will open more farmland to feed these agrifood companies as they grow. To the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors: how valuable will these investments be to Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and all the communities in between?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that very important question and all the work that he's done to advocate for southern Alberta, whether it be irrigation or the twinning of highway 3. Budget '23 actually has $94 million in it committed to twin highway 3 between Taber and Burdett. In addition to that, in southern Alberta there are 65 projects totalling over $200 million that's going to not only help families in southern Alberta get home and get to work safely but also unleash economic development in southern Alberta, whether that's food manufacturing or oil and gas and so many more industries.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday McCain Foods announced that they would be making the largest investment in their 65 years of operation, and given that this investment will amount to $600 million and create 260 new jobs in my riding, can the minister let the Assembly know if McCain's decision had anything to do with the government's business-friendly approach and our ability to renew the Alberta advantage?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I have to say, too: thank you to that member for his advocacy. This is an important file to that member. Work well done.

From McCain Foods' president and CEO: "The development in Alberta marks our largest global investment in our 65-year history," creating 260 jobs, two new production lines, one for french fries, one for potato specialty products. What I can assure you is that this investment, in conversations with McCain over the last year, would not have been possible without our investment in the irrigation system in the south. They needed the land. They needed the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that Alberta boasts 70 per cent of Canada's irrigated land, making southern Alberta internationally recognized as a leader in the production of high-quality food, and given that under this government the quarter between Lethbridge and Medicine Hat will see an increase of another 230,000 irrigated acres and given that growing our agrifood processing sector creates more opportunities for primary producers while supporting job creation in rural communities, again to the same minister: what else is this government doing to keep Alberta feeding our families, Canada, and the world?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is diversification of the economy, folks. This is playing to our strengths. AIDA, Alberta Irrigation Districts Association, studies show that $3.56 comes back to the province for every dollar invested in irrigation. This is just a piece of that. Many of you are familiar now with our agriprocessing tax credit, which hopefully will be passed by the House here very shortly. We brought in $1.4 billion in investment and 2,000 jobs last term; next term, 9,000 jobs and $5 billion.

Morinville Clinic X-ray Machine

Ms Renaud: Mr. Speaker, All Albertans should have access to health care where and when they need it, but the Morinville clinic has been without a functional X-ray machine since February of 2020, when it broke down. Instead of doing the right thing and replacing it, AHS announced last January that X-ray services in Morinville would be permanently closed. Alberta's NDP is now promising to restore this important service if elected. To the Health minister: why did he let the health care needs of thousands of Albertans fall through the cracks because of one broken X-ray machine?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The health and well-being of all Albertans and Albertans outside of our big cities is important to us. In fact, that's why we are investing record numbers of dollars in terms of the budget and record amounts in terms of the capital. We recognize that in being able to provide the services, not only do you need the equipment, but you need all of the supports, including the people, to do that. We are continuing to assess the viability of maintaining that service and making sure that we have all the wraparound resources to be able to do that before we actually make the decision to spend the capital.

Ms Renaud: Mr. Speaker, given that when this X-ray machine broke down, the mayors of Morinville and Bon Accord wrote to the Minister of Health and given that they wrote how the machine was, and I quote, a valuable asset for residents in Morinville, Sturgeon county as well as members of Alexander First Nation and given that the Health minister's totally inadequate response was that the machine had reached the end of its life and that's that, will the Minister of Health admit that it's his government at the end of its life and also needs to be replaced ASAP?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before, we are investing record amounts of capital infrastructure as part of Budget 2023 on top of the record amounts that we actually invested last year. This includes not only infrastructure for new buildings, but this includes infrastructure for new equipment across the entire province, in rural areas. We understand that we need the technology, but it's not just about the technology; it's about also ensuring that all the supports around that technology show we can continue to provide the service. We are continuing to do our analysis on this, and I look forward to sharing more soon.

Ms Renaud: Given that Morinville-St. Albert is represented by a UCP MLA who clearly can't get the job done and given that the minister ignored the mayors, ignored the health needs of Albertans and given the minister goes on TV every day and claims the health care crisis is over and we're making great progress, how does the minister expect Albertans to believe the government can fix all of health care if he can't fix one broken X-ray machine?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. members across the way know, there are challenges in our health care system. This is not only affecting Alberta, but it's affecting the entire country, all of the First World. We are taking action and responsible action to invest to expand the capacity in our health care system, not only investing in people, in terms of hiring more people, but investing more money on the expense side and on the capital side. We know that when you actually invest in a piece of equipment, you need to have all of the support services around that to be able to provide the services. We continue to provide the services for people in Edmonton and the Morinville area, and we'll keep doing that.

Child Care Cost-control Framework

Ms Pancholi: The UCP's new plan for child care means parents won't ever be paying only $10 a day for child care; they'll have to pay extra fees for things that should be part of all quality child care programs, and the parents who can't afford those extra fees will see their children left out. The for-profit and nonprofit operators that I've spoken to are worried that the UCP will keep underfunding them so they won't be able to provide the things that this government doesn't think are essential for quality child care, like food or activities. Does the minister really think that denying children food and activities in their child care program will actually enhance the quality of child care in Alberta?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, it's astonishing that the member opposite continues with this narrative, but on this side of the House we prefer to reject the notions of distraction and misinformation. We are engaging in a province-wide engagement session with all operators in this province to ensure that we receive their input on the implementation details of the cost-control framework. We're engaging with parents as well and will continue to do so so that we get the information to get this right.

Ms Pancholi: Given that to date the minister hasn't made any effort to tell parents about his plans to make them pay more and they're excluded from consultations impacting their own children's care and early learning opportunities and given that the minister is probably desperate not to let parents know that they will be paying way more for child care than he promised, especially during an affordability crisis and right before an election, does the minister want to use this opportunity now to come clean to parents about his plans to increase their fees for child care and tell them how much more he expects they'll be paying?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, unlike the members opposite, we are listening to our operators in this province, and we are listening to parents in this province. While the NDP prefers to fearmonger about child care in this province, we are working diligently to engage with all of the relevant stakeholders to receive their input. We will implement a system that is affordable and accessible and safe for all parents and all children in this province.

Ms Pancholi: Given that the UCP is talking about expanding school nutrition programs but at the same time they want to force child care operators to charge extra fees to feed their children in their care and given that for too many families a nutritious meal at their daycare or their day home may be the only healthy meal they get in a day and given that the minister could commit right now that operators will receive the funding they need to avoid charging fees for essentials, like meals and snacks, will the minister stand up right now and tell parents that they won't have to pay more for food and that the UCP will fund operators to provide it at no extra cost to parents? The Alberta NDP understands that nutrition is a part of quality child care.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it absolutely clear to the members opposite but more importantly to all Albertans in this province that we will develop a framework that is equitable. It will assist and it will provide affordable and equal child care to all of the children in this province. I want to make it absolutely clear that we reject the idea of a tiered system, and the only tiered system that we know about is the failed NDP pilot project, the $25-a-day program that failed children and parents all across this province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain is next.

Federal-provincial Relations

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has always been and continues to be a proud member of the Canadian Confederation. As the leader in entrepreneurship, technology, energy, and so much more, our province has a strong and prosperous future within Canada. Now, despite Alberta's role as a major economic driver, job creator, and innovator, our strong resource sectors, energy sectors, and entrepreneurs have been under attack by the federal government. Given that many Albertans are eager to remain a part of Canada while growing and promoting our leading industries, to the Premier: how can Alberta continue to assert its own interests while remaining a proud member of Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has risen.

Ms Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things, I think, about drawing boundaries with the federal government is that it allowed for us to have collaboration in other areas. There are some things we're going to fight – that's for sure – but we were able to get a health care deal with the federal government that brings $518 million more to be able to support primary care and to be able to support mental health and addiction and be able to support some more reporting to the Canadian Institute for Health Information. I noticed that the minister of seniors, community, and social supports scored a bit of a victory as well in getting – I'm going to have to answer that on the next one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the Premier for her answer and strong defence of Alberta's interests. Given that the federal government, supported by the NDP, aims to introduce the just transition bill by the summer of 2023 and given that there's a growing concern regarding continued investment attraction and support for entrepreneurship in Alberta and given that there will be strong demand for Alberta energy for decades to come, to the Premier: what exactly is our government fighting for when it comes to defending and supporting Alberta's energy sector within a united Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know the members opposite supported the just transition, which just transitioned our coal workers completely out of jobs, and they were supportive of the just transition for oil and natural gas workers, too, until we raised a fuss and said: absolutely no way. The federal government has backed down on that, which I think is good, but we still have to fight them on a couple of other things. Number one, we have to make sure that clean electricity regs do not come through that would prevent us from adding natural gas to our power grid. We also have to make sure that the emissions reduction plan does not end up phasing out our energy sector. They want to bring through an emissions cap of 42 per cent on oil and gas by 2030, and that's not on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the Premier for her answer. Given that there are many areas in which we are productively working with the federal government and given that Alberta plans on continuing to be a leader under Confederation and given that our government has committed to standing up for Albertan workers and industries, to the Premier: how are you planning to work and negotiate successfully with the federal government to ensure we can support Alberta's interests and industries?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things I was happy to see in their newly named sustainable jobs plan is the recognition that Alberta is going to be a leader in hydrogen, that Alberta is going to be a leader in carbon capture, and I was pleased to see that our neighbour on the coast, B.C. Premier David Eby, just signed a new deal on LNG development with the Haisla Nation for the expansion of the Cedar LNG export proposal. These are the kinds of things that we can work on collaboratively with our partner in British Columbia. We just have to get the federal government onboard and understanding that the more LNG we export to the world, the more it will reduce global emissions, and that will achieve both of our targets.

Premier's Office Staff

Ms Ganley: Before being elected, the Premier was pushing for a $20 billion giveaway to a small number of delinquent companies to clean up their wells, something they're already obligated to do. The Premier said that she loved the idea after having a lobbyist named Kris Kinnear on her podcast. Now Mr. Kinnear works in the Premier's office implementing the $20 billion handout while being listed as a corporate director and lobbyist of the group pushing for the giveaway. Does the Premier fail to understand the appearance of conflict in a lobbyist shovelling Albertans' money to his clients?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier said during estimates yesterday when the member asked these questions, Mr. Kinnear resigned his position before accepting his role in the Premier's office. Mr. Kinnear has no personal or financial gain of any kind under any program that is under discussion or engagement. There is nothing to see here.

Ms Ganley: Given that the Premier also claimed that Mr. Kinnear had resigned as a director of the organization SAEN – but the corporate records indicate otherwise – and given that yesterday in estimates the Premier claimed that this was just a paperwork issue and given that we are talking about $20 billion of Albertans' money, does the Energy minister agree this conflict of interest is okay, or is he just going to plead the just incompetence defence as well?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, I'll reiterate again since the members across are having difficulty comprehending the facts. Mr. Kinnear had resigned from his previous positions before accepting any role within the Premier's office. There is no conflict of interest.

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, given that filing that paperwork is pretty easy and given that Mr. Kinnear also worked on the Premier's campaign team and given that the other director of SAEN is now running a third-party attack machine and is fund raising off companies who stand to benefit from this $20 billion handout and given that the Premier refuses to scrap this terrible program despite opposition from across Alberta, will the Energy minister admit this is nothing but a scheme to give a fat payday to a small number of bad actors and insiders at the expense of hard-working Albertans?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, the Premier was clear yesterday about Mr. Kinnear and his position, and he was vetted by the Ethics Commissioner to work inside the Premier's office. This NDP critic herself, who claims to stand for the energy sector, is publicly known as an anti oil and gas activist, one who protested against oil sands producers, protested against pipelines, protested and campaigned in favour of a tanker ban, which stranded oil and gas assets, to block market access. It's hard to take an opposition like this seriously.

Ms Gray: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:22.

The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning and Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Beef Prices

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The price of beef has almost doubled at the grocery store over the last two years, but Alberta ranchers aren't seeing the benefit. Last summer I asked the minister why, and he said that he didn't know, but there was going to be a report. Well, it's nine months later, and the beef competitiveness report is in, but the answers aren't. To the minister of agriculture. Albertans are paying almost twice as much for beef. Why aren't Alberta ranchers seeing the benefit? Where is the money?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's funny that she asked me a question about beef and I said that I didn't know. I think that is kind of humorous.

I would just say that it is very timely. The beef industry competitiveness study just went live yesterday, a joint study that we helped fund – and the federal government – with Alberta Beef Producers, with the Canadian Cattle Association, with the Alberta Cattle Feeders' Association. Check it out on the Alberta Beef Producers' website. I've already called the meeting for April, which I said I would do, with the industry to talk about next steps.

Ms Sweet: Given that, clearly, the minister doesn't know and given that one of the findings in the report was that – and I quote – extension supports for small processors from the government have declined, which acts as a barrier to new entrants into the industry, but given that when I asked the minister about reduced extension services during estimates, he advised that our system was “the most robust . . . in the country” and given that these can't both be true, is the minister wrong, or is the beef report wrong?

Mr. Horner: What I said during estimates was that we had bolstered our extension services through new funding to both the agricultural research associations and our ag service boards, a pretty positive story if you talk to people within the agriculture sector.

I would also point to our processing possibilities in this province, and I would point to the fact that the reason we did that announcement at Harmony Beef is because meat processors will definitely be able to use the agriprocessing tax credit. We know we want more hook space, more processing potential in this province, and this is one way we can get it. This is why Saskatchewan will also be attending that meeting.

Ms Sweet: Well, given, then, that I guess the minister is saying that the report is wrong and given that I'm talking about Alberta beef in the Alberta Legislature with the Alberta minister of agriculture and given that I am hearing concerns both from Alberta ranchers and beef producers about why they aren't seeing a benefit from the higher costs and from Alberta families who can't afford to buy beef, why can't the minister give Albertans a real answer on why they won't be able to afford to have their friends over for a barbecue this summer?

Mr. Horner: Well, I think the carbon tax would be a great place to start, and maybe you could ask your whole team to support Bill C-234, which is currently on third reading. You know, maybe that would be a good place to start, adding extra taxes when there isn't an alternative on the landscape for ag producers. I think that would be great. I would also point to the fact that beef prices currently are at a historic high and trending higher. It's great news. It is great news for ranchers, that have been through such a terrible time. This is how it usually works. It's a 10-year cycle; three years of those definitely benefit the producers and the feeders.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Federal Rent Supplement and AISH Recipients

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few months ago the federal government announced a plan that would provide $500 to millions of Canadian households on top of their rent, helping them with today's inflationary crisis. Unfortunately, the plan is leaving out nearly 73,000 Albertans living with disabilities because of the provincial funding provided to these incredible Albertans each month through AISH. To the minister: can you please explain to us what you've done to try and help fix this situation, especially the discriminatory actions from the federal government?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her question as well as her strong advocacy for the disability community here in Alberta. I share her great disappointment for this gross overlook of Albertans with disabilities. Actually, Albertans with disabilities are the only Canadians that were left out of this. Albertans were left out, once again, because of the federal government's failure to consult Albertans, at the end of the day. When I heard about this, I immediately sent a letter to the minister and organized meetings with several federal cabinet ministers to advocate on behalf of Albertans with disabilities, and I'm hoping that they will overturn this gross oversight.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has advocated for change of this policy since December of last year and given that the federal program is disproportionately impacting those in the disability community – and I was so grateful that the government reindexed AISH to inflation and increased payments to AISH clients – and given that this federal policy is failing tens of thousands of Albertans who are most in need, can the minister tell the House what he's heard from our partners, from families, the opposition, and those directly impacted by this discriminatory oversight?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. You know, I've talked to lots of people within the disability community and the broader community who share our great disappointment with this oversight of Albertans. The fact that Alberta was left out once again and that again the federal government failed to consult: I'm going to hope that that's what it was, that it was a failure to consult and just a gross oversight that left 70,000-plus Albertans out of this. We will continue to push back on the federal government to make sure that we are heard, at the end of the day. Again, I've had some productive meetings with federal ministers, who I hope will join me in advocating for the disability community here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal government has refused to support Alberta's disability community – and this is 73,000 individuals in Alberta without supports that they deserve – and given our government's new budget commitments to those living with disabilities, can the minister please explain to the House why the federal government didn't consult to align along with our programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's a question I don't know the answer to. I will continue to press the federal ministers to figure out why Albertans weren't included in this, at the end of the day, and to push to make sure that Albertans get a fair share.

But there's an important question to be asked here as well about the members opposite and why they have failed to stand up on this issue, especially when the leader, Jagmeet Singh, is spiking the ball right now, claiming to be the architect for this program. Did he know that Albertans were going to be left out, and why has he not advocated and why have they not made a stronger voice, a louder voice for Albertans with disability on this file?

Innisfail Hospital Ambulance Bay

Mr. Dach: Last October the Innisfail health centre auxiliary celebrated its 50th anniversary. The auxiliary's president and vice-president appeared before the town council to appeal for help to widen an undersized ambulance bay door that forces patients to be off-loaded outside in all weather conditions. It costs $45,000 to widen the door, and the auxiliary has already raised $25,000, including, of all things, $10,000 from a 50/50 raffle. Why is the Minister of Infrastructure forcing the people of Innisfail to fund raise to address basic safety issues at their hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As I already noted, we are investing significant dollars in terms of the improvement of capital. Now, in terms of many of these capital projects, you know, first it was identified in terms of highest needs within a particular region. That actually flows out to the region, they identify the areas up close with AHS, and then it actually comes to our office. We have over $4 billion as part of Budget 2023 for a variety of projects. In regard to this Innisfail project I'm happy to get back to the hon. member in terms of the . . .

Mr. Dach: Given that the people of Innisfail have done the majority of work for the minister, raising $25,000 of the $45,000 needed to replace this undersized door, and given that even though the Premier was sent a letter on this by council, the UCP are now trying to pass the buck to AHS, further delaying the process, and given that while the Premier may support the idea of people fund raising for their health care, this side of the House will never support that, can the minister say today that the people of Innisfail will get the money to fix the door, to widen the door for ambulances to fit in, or does he expect them to do the job themselves?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, we are very thankful for the work that local communities do in terms of raising funds for additional items at their local hospitals, and this happens across the entire province. There is for a number of hospitals – and this is not a new issue – where the bays are actually too small for the ambulances. That said, sometimes the cost associated with it is not as simple in terms of replacing the door. They actually look at other renovations at the same time, and/or they actually have to rip down that particular building and build a new one. So I'm happy to get back to the hon. member on this particular project.

Mr. Dach: Given that the local UCP MLA has had four years to fix this issue and failed and given that the UCP government has had four years to fix this problem and failed and given that the only people working to fix this problem are the people of Innisfail and they deserve some support, can the minister explain how he can call himself the Minister of Infrastructure when the volunteers of the Innisfail health centre auxiliary have done more work to get their infrastructure fixed in their own community than this government? Cut the cheque for $45,000, and fix this serious problem so ambulances will actually fit in the ambulance bay door.

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I already indicated, I'm thankful for all the work that is being done by communities to be able to support infrastructure and support health care within their communities. Quite frankly, cutting a cheque may not be the answer here because it may be actually far more expensive than that particular item. We ask all of the local charities to work with AHS on identifying not only what the highest priorities are but also how best to be able to participate in those. We are investing, as I said, over $4 billion this year to be able to improve our infrastructure, and we'll keep doing that.

Kearl Oil Sands Project Tailings Leak

Mr. Feehan: I'd like to begin by acknowledging the people of the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation, the Mikisew Cree First Nation, and the Fort Chip Métis as they are dealing with the serious impacts of the spill from the Kearl Lake tailings pond. Recent scientific reports show that the leak is harmful to fish, confirming the fears of the ACFN and directly contradicting the claims of the Premier, who rushed to declare that there was no evidence of impact to wildlife or drinking water. Why did the Premier jump to conclusions without consulting First Nations who are living with the impact of this and experiencing it first-hand? Will she apologize to them today?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To date there's been no evidence whatsoever that drinking water has been impacted nor wildlife. There are multiple layers of monitoring and testing of water up there, including on top of the AER. There are officials from my department up there, officials from fisheries Canada, officials from the oil sands monitoring. We have monitoring stations downstream. There's been no evidence whatsoever that the seepage has entered the waterways.

Mr. Feehan: Given that after the leak was discovered, the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation asked that all fish and wildlife caught since May 2022 be thrown out but given that the Premier dismissed all claims of impact from the leak, even coming from the First Nations who are dealing with this situation first-hand, and given that these communities rely on the Athabasca to fish and to hunt and knowing the high price of food, especially in northern Alberta, can the Premier please explain what she is doing to support this region with food during this crisis, or does she still think there is no issue?

Mrs. Savage: Mr. Speaker, there's been a lot of disinformation out there. Every information I have suggests that no seepage has entered the waterway. In fact, yesterday I had a very productive conversation with the federal minister of environment to share information, and we have reached an agreement to share and mutually share information that their inspectors have, that our inspectors have. We have three monitoring stations downstream from the Kearl site that have been continuously monitoring since May, and there's no indication whatsoever that seepage has reached the waterways.

Mr. Feehan: Given that the Premier said, in her own words, on March 6, "There were no leaks that went into our tributaries, it did not go into our river system, and people need to know that [our] drinking water is safe" but given that the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo is not using the water from the Athabasca to fill their reservoirs, meaning that they will soon be short of drinking water without a plan to address the shortage of fresh drinking water, why did the Premier make the claim with no evidence to back this up? Does she acknowledge that she's wrong, and will she explain what she is doing to address the concerns about drinking water in First Nations?

Mrs. Savage: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do agree that people need to understand and know that their drinking water is safe. That's why we have enhanced enforcement and water testing. The enforcement and water testing includes the AER, environmental officials, federal fisheries officials, officials from Wood Buffalo region, the oil sands monitoring committee. It includes continuously downstream monitoring. There is no evidence whatsoever to date that anything from the tailings pond, the seepage, has reached any tributaries, water bodies, or waterways. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Federal Energy Transition Plan

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 1980s the then Liberal government of Pierre Elliott Trudeau passed the national energy program. This program devastated Alberta's economy along with its energy industry. Not only that, but it also transferred billions of dollars to central Canada. This was Trudeau's vision of a just transition. Today our current Prime Minister is determined to repeat his father's mistakes with an ideological plan to eliminate the energy industry. Can the Minister of Energy explain to this Legislature how devastating the federal Trudeau Liberal government's policies will be for the Alberta economy?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, we saw how devastating these policies were in the '80s, and we are seeing similar devastating policies from another federal Trudeau government. On this side of the House we will not allow Ottawa to work around our constitutional right to develop our resource economy. They say that those who ignore history are doomed to repeat it, but we know the story. This province stood up and fought Pierre Trudeau's brutal policies, and we will do the same again against his son's agenda.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal NDP-Liberal coalition have Alberta's energy industry in its crosshairs and given that in 2015 the provincial NDP government of Alberta released a climate leadership report that supported a just transition of workers in the wake of their radical changes towards our energy industry and given that in my constituency the Alberta NDP eliminated coal jobs and devastated the Parkland county taxation base by 25 per cent, do the Minister of Energy and this government support the Alberta NDP's vision of a just transition?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, any plan that will remove workers from jobs that they are experts in is not only a terrible plan, but it is completely unjust. There is no such thing as a just transition. The data is clear, and I would challenge the opposition to accept and understand reality. Oil and gas are going to be in the global marketplace for decades to come. We should be increasing the amount of ethical Alberta energy to world markets, not eliminating it.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the NDP supported the just transition in its 2015 climate leadership report and implemented a carbon tax on middle-class Albertans and given that the opposition leader recently stated, "I believe that there is a path available to us Albertans and as Canadians to significantly reduce our emissions, to even ultimately find a cap which is practical," to the Minister of Energy: how does the NDP vision of lost jobs, relocation, just transition, and caps on energy production differ from the UCP's vision of high-paying jobs in our oil and gas industry?

Mr. Guthrie: While the talking heads in eastern Canada can bleat all they want about the elimination of fossil fuels, our government has a plan to ensure we continue to supply the most responsible, reliable, and sustainable barrel to meet world demand. If opponents of our fossil fuels, including Alberta's NDP, were as progressive and justice seeking as they claim, they would be supporting Alberta oil and gas over dictatorships as we lead the world in environmental metrics, governance, and human and civil rights, things the NDP profess to defend. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

That concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Bill 207

Jobs and Investment Incentives Proposal Act

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and request leave to introduce Bill 207, the Jobs and Investment Incentives Proposal Act.

If passed, this bill would require the responsible minister to introduce a legislative proposal to develop an incentive for companies for making capital investments in clean tech, carbon materials, critical mineral processing, and advanced manufacturing. It's targeted towards the fastest growing emerging sectors, where Alberta has the opportunity to compete on a global scale and bring opportunities right here in Alberta. If passed, it would create good-paying jobs, support innovation, and provide training so Albertans can have the necessary skills to work in these new sectors and to ensure that we are competitive with jurisdictions around the world, including the U.S. and the Inflation Reduction Act of 2022, which they have brought forward.

I hope all members in the Assembly do support this bill. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table for the Assembly today a corporate nonprofit search pulled yesterday, March 14, on Sustaining Alberta's Energy Network Ltd. listing Kris Kinnear as a director.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on my list. Is there anyone tabling on their behalf, or is it not necessary?

I see the hon. Member for Peace River, and I'm dead set serious that that best not be a prop on your desk.

Mr. Williams: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. This is the requisite number of copies of a petition I wish to table with thousands upon thousands of signatures. As Mackenzie*, a young woman who inspired the petition, said, quote: I wish there had been someone, anyone, standing in the gap who could have asked what we needed and helped me and my baby get on our feet instead of sending us the message that we weren't worth fighting for. In this petition petitioners are seeking to expand Alberta adoption services in the province to help work with pregnant mothers who feel they're unable or not yet ready to be mothers, to promote counselling for unplanned pregnancies, and to consider increasing emergency allowance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, pursuant to the provincial judges and masters in Chambers registered and unregistered pension plans regulation the provincial judges and masters in Chambers registered and unregistered pension plans 2020-21 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At 2:22 the Opposition House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Accepting a Member's Word

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At 2:22 I called a point of order under 23(h), "makes allegations against another Member;" (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member;" and (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I do not have the benefit of the Blues, but in response to a question from the Member for Calgary-Mountain

*This spelling could not be verified at the time of publication.

View I heard the Minister of Energy specifically accuse that member of being an anti-oil activist protesting against pipelines, protesting against tankers, very specific accusations in telling the Assembly that this member had done those things.

Mr. Speaker, the only protest that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has attended is protests against tuition hikes. She was part of a government that got the first pipeline to tidewater in decades, and as you would know from Beauchesne's paragraph 494, "statements by Members respecting themselves . . . must be accepted." The member has said her support for Alberta's energy sector and has done that throughout her role as critic for Energy.

I think that the minister's comments were out of order. If he had perhaps accused the caucus or the group of us within this House – we've been very clear on the differences between talking to a group of people versus a specific member. Certainly, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View did not deserve those aspersions. They're incorrect, false, and I ask you to rule them out of order.

Mr. Schow: Mr. Speaker, I think this is clearly a matter of debate. There is a case to be made that the members opposite have in their constitution anti-oil sentiments, including not liking the oil and gas sector, supporting the Leap Manifesto. I think that there is really no real point of order here. I'm not really sure how much more I can say on this besides that I disagree with the Opposition House Leader's assertion that this is a point of order, and I suggest we move on.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to add to the point of order?

I am prepared to rule, and I do have the benefit of the Blues. At approximately 2:21 the hon. the Minister of Energy said the following.

This NDP critic herself, who claims to stand for the energy sector, is publicly known as an anti oil and gas activist, one who protested against oil sands producers, protested against pipelines, protested and campaigned in favour of a tanker ban, which stranded oil . . . assets.

I would like to highlight a paragraph in Beauchesne's as a reminder, which the Opposition House Leader did reference. Paragraph 494 says:

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted. It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

I will also point you to a ruling made by the Speaker on March 22, 2022, where I also referenced House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 619, that states, "Remarks which question a Member's integrity, honesty or character are not in order." I would suggest that these types of direct statements directed at the hon. member may in fact call into question the member's integrity, honesty, or character. With that said, it is also not unparliamentary to temperately criticize the statements. I'd provide caution to the Minister of Energy when he makes such suggestions directed immediately to a member of the Assembly.

This is not a point of order. I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Prior to proceeding, let me speak directly to the hon. Member for Peace River. He is a learned and knowledgeable member of this Assembly, and the use of such a prop is absolutely unacceptable, and the Speaker is displeased. He will take the most aggressive approach in the future directed to that member should he choose to use a prop in this Assembly again. I consider that matter dealt with and concluded.

We are at Orders of the Day. Ordres du jour.

Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 p.m. The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon, this evening, and tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates.

This afternoon the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will continue its consideration of the main estimates for the Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance in the Rocky Mountain Room, and the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Forestry, Parks and Tourism in the Grassland Room.

This evening the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Public Safety and Emergency Services in the Grassland Room, and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Energy in the Rocky Mountain Room.

Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Children's Services in the Rocky Mountain Room, and Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Infrastructure in the Grassland Room.

Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:51 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 16, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King, to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Statement by the Speaker

Deaths of Constables Travis Jordan and Brett Ryan

The Speaker: Hon. members, I ask you to remain standing as we take a moment to pay our respects. Constable Travis Jordan, 35, Constable Brett Ryan, 30, were tragically taken from us this morning while they were murdered in the line of duty. Both men made the ultimate sacrifice for the safety of our communities, for our people, and we are all forever in their debt. Our thoughts, our prayers, and our support is with their families as well as the greater policing community, including the sheriffs and the Legislative Assembly security service. I ask that you join me now in a moment of silence as we remember the lives of these two courageous young officers. Rest eternal grant unto them, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon them.

Members, we will now be led in the singing of God Save the King by Ms Nicole Williams.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King!
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the King!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, I do have a number of guests to introduce today, and for the benefit and knowledge of all members, the introductions clock doesn't begin until the conclusion of the Speaker's introductions.

Members, seated in the Speaker's gallery is one of the most incredible, most outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills; she is my constituency assistant, Alana Gibson. She's accompanied by her husband, Alastair Gibson, and their three wonderful daughters: Charlotte, Elizabeth, and Amelia. I invite the Gibsons to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also seated in the Speaker's gallery today are very, very close, good friends of mine: Lauren Casamayor, Jack Casamayor, and Eli Casamayor. They are constituents who live in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills; they are here as part of the home-schooling association of NorthStar Academy in Didsbury. Also my favourite sister, much to the chagrin of my other sister, Naomi Pulliam, and my nephew Isaac Pulliam. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Today we are very, very pleased to have joining us the grandfather of our head page, Ayla Sevigny. Her grandfather Mr. Doug Tupper is the former executive director of the Police Commission, so it is on a particularly difficult day for him, but I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Finally, hon. members, I'd also like to introduce to you and through me six staff of the Alberta Ombudsman's office seated in the galleries. These hard-working staff are here today to watch the proceedings, and the Ombudsman is appreciative of their work. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has a school group.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very happy to introduce the classes from l'école Lacombe upper elementary school. I'd like to recognize their teachers Derek Rankin and Heather Mackay-Hawkins – both have been with the school for more than 20 years – also educational assistants Angela Richter and Eden Cade. Included in this class is the granddaughter of my constituency assistant Cheryl Christie. To all the students and teachers from l'école Lacombe upper elementary school: please rise today and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park has a school group.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you the grades 5 and 6 classes from Woodbridge Farms elementary school and their teacher, Antonia Triska. Thank you, all, so much for being here. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you I'd like to welcome the grade 6 students from Menno Simons Christian school, accompanied by their teacher, Erin Folkerts. If we can give them the warm welcome of this Assembly and have them rise, please.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I might take a brief Speaker liberty, that my childhood babysitter has joined this school group; Mr. George Graffunder, please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you a terrific friend of mine, a community builder, a council member for the town of Peace River, a cancer survivor, and, more importantly, a deeply good person, Shelly Shannon. Please rise and receive the very warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has an introduction.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you my friend Nick de Gier. Nick is a lifelong central Albertan and a civil engineering student at the University of Alberta. Admitted at only the age of 17, he is also a member of the United Conservatives club at the university and is excited to learn about the work we do here. Please rise and receive a warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce Doug Tupper. As was mentioned, he was on the Police Commission. He's also a former assistant deputy minister with Alberta environment and was a trustee and board chair with Edmonton public schools, but most importantly he's a grandfather to Ayla Sevigny. He's here to watch her today in action, so please join me in welcoming him as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you my very good friend Dr. Bhavini Gohel. Bhavini is the director and cofounder of Grassroots Global Health, an acute-care physician, site chief of a hospitalist program in South Health Campus in Calgary, and a clinical assistant professor at the University of Calgary. Thank you so much to the minister of Indigenous affairs and to Maya Echtay today for meeting with us, and thank you so much to you, Dr. Gohel, for all the work that you do here at home and across the globe. If you would please rise to receive the warm welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Deaths of Constables Travis Jordan and Brett Ryan

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with a very heavy heart. Last night Constable Travis Jordan and Constable Brett Ryan of the Edmonton Police Service were tragically killed in the line of duty while responding to a call.

Constable Brett Ryan was 30 years old, had five and a half years of service. Constable Travis Jordan was 35, and he had about eight and a half years of service. Today the province mourns the loss of these two heroes. We send our deepest sympathies and condolences to the families and friends.

Mr. Speaker, every day police officers across Alberta put their uniforms on. They step up and protect and serve our communities. These courageous men and women bravely rise to any challenge that comes their way to protect the public. Police officers are more than just the uniform that they wear; they are an integral part of the communities that they serve.

Their moms, their dads, their brothers or sisters, their daughters or sons: like any other job, family members send their loved ones off to work. Unlike any other job, these family members hope and they pray and they worry that their loved ones may not return home safely at the end of their shift. For the Ryan and Jordan families this did not happen today. The sudden and tragic deaths of these officers remind us again of the dangers that police officers face – constantly face – when they serve the people of Alberta. Alberta would not be the great province that it is today without the service and sacrifice of constables Jordan and Ryan, and Alberta's government is here to support the Edmonton Police Service, their members, their families during this tragedy. To honour the service and dedication of these officers lost, the flags of the Legislature will be lowered to half-mast.

Mr. Speaker, there are no words that I can say to make up for the loss of life that occurred today. As a former police officer myself, to all my brothers and sisters out there that are on the front lines, I mourn with you. Everybody here mourns with you. And to the members of EPS and all of our front-line law enforcement: we all here have your back.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and of course thank you to the minister for his words today. It is with great sadness that I rise to deliver this statement to the House marking the loss of two Edmonton police officers killed in the line of duty earlier this morning: Constable Travis Jordan, 35 years old, a member for eight and a half years; Constable Brett Ryan, 30 years old, a member of five years. I know that there are no words that can truly capture the scale of heartbreak experienced by Albertans today, so I rise only to offer the sincerest and deepest condolences on behalf of His Majesty's Official Opposition.

I first want to speak to the members of the Edmonton Police Service and, by extension, all Albertans who serve their communities on police forces across this province. Alberta stands with you. Today's tragedy reminds us of your sacrifice and of your bravery. You put yourselves in danger for the sake of our loved ones, our children, our parents, and our grandparents, people who mean the world to someone but are total strangers to you. You work in one of the most dangerous professions in the world and the consequences of your courage can sometimes be devastating. Today all of Alberta grieves with you.

I want to speak to the families of these officers. It takes an enormous amount of strength to see your loved ones go to work every day, knowing that they will face these kinds of dangerous situations, and to receive this news is devastating. But do know that you are not alone and that all Albertans mourn with you.

Mr. Speaker, we also know there's another woman involved in this event. This was a domestic dispute, and there's now a woman fighting for her life in hospital, so we extend our condolences and support to her and to her family as well.

Finally, I wish to speak to all of us in this Assembly no matter what side of the aisle we sit on. Across this country we have lost seven officers in the last six months. We know that front-line responders are facing increased risks doing their job, keeping citizens safe. After three years of greater and greater stress on our communities all across this country, I believe that we can say that these incidents are not isolated, and neither are the solutions. It's on all of us to do everything we can to keep our communities safe and, through that, to keep our officers safe, and we can do that in our roles here by working to build more secure communities. We owe it to the memory of Constable Jordan and Constable Ryan to come together to find solutions and to provide greater support and greater strength to Albertans throughout our province. We owe it to all first responders, their families, and all Albertans to do everything we can to keep officers safe as they set out each day to do the same for us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has a statement to make.

Automobile Insurance Premiums

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Families across this province are feeling the pressure of the increased cost of living. It costs more to put food on a table because grocery prices have increased, utilities are more expensive, and it's harder for Albertans to pay for their homes as both mortgages and rent are increasing right now.

Today I'm going to speak to the need to support Alberta drivers by making insurance more affordable. It's harder for families to drive to work, drop kids off at school and their sports games and music lessons when insurance premiums increase, and they have increased a lot over the past few years. Many families saw their premium go up as high as 30 per cent during the pandemic. This is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, and it is avoidable.

I was proud to be part of a government that successfully froze insurance premiums. We did this even though the province faced many economic challenges. We prioritized this because supporting families to pay their bills is most important during tough economic times. Under the UCP insurance premiums skyrocketed. Albertans paid more even though they drove less during the pandemic. We continually called for the UCP to support drivers and stop allowing insurance premiums to increase.

I was glad to see the UCP announce that they would freeze insurance rates in January until the end of 2023; however, Mr. Speaker, that good news was short-lived because two insurance companies announced the rate increases in March for 13 and 16 per cent, which were approved by the Automobile Insurance Rate Board. Unfortunately, the announced insurance freeze is no freeze at all. Albertans pay more for the most expensive car insurance in Canada, and it's still getting more expensive. Albertans deserve real relief to bring down the costs of keeping their cars on the road.

Deaths of Constables Travis Jordan and Brett Ryan

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about an unthinkable and unimaginable tragedy that happened last night. The lives of two dedicated EPS officers were tragically taken. This is a tragedy that will be felt around the halls of the Legislature, around the city of Edmonton, our province, our country, and indeed around the world.

Firstly, I want to acknowledge the families and friends of the fallen officers who were involved in this heartbreaking event. Our thoughts and prayers are with you as you navigate the days and the weeks ahead.

I also want to acknowledge the security guards here today, most who are retired EPS officers themselves, many who are connected with last night's tragic event in some way, shape, or form. Yet they are here today showing the true heart of EPS members both past and present. It's a heart that exemplifies courage, integrity, and service to community. Our thoughts are with you.

I want to thank all the men and women in uniform that put their lives at risk every single day to keep our communities safe. Alberta's law enforcement agencies are world-class and part of the reason Alberta is the best place to live, work, and raise a family. Rest assured our thoughts and our prayers are with you today. We stand with you. Thank you for your service.

Youth Transition to Adulthood Program

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's children are the future of this great province, and securing their future should be our top priority. Children in care have survived difficult circumstances. They have lived through trauma and face barriers in work and their education when they transition out of care. The transition to adulthood program, or TAP, exists to remove that barrier. The TAP program provides children in care the supports they need to transition into adulthood. Just as the program's namesake suggests, it acts as a bridge for children in care as they age into adulthood and proceed on their journey to fulfill their full potential.

We need to remove barriers to education, employment for Alberta's youth and young adults transitioning out of care so that they can have access to the same opportunities as their peers. This is precisely the reason why I'm thrilled that Alberta's government has made the decision to change the eligibility of age to 24 while simultaneously injecting $28 million into the program to ensure that young adults have more options once they age out of care. This will help bridge the gaps when children in care need to access postsecondary education, employment and skills training and placement, and help prepare them for everyday life once they have moved on from the foster care system.

Everyone, no matter their background, should have equal opportunities to succeed in this great province. Programs like TAP are doing just that to ensure that no child in Alberta is left behind. Securing Alberta's future also means protecting our most vulnerable, especially Alberta's youth and young adults. Thank you for making sure that youth aging out of care are fully empowered to succeed as adults.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has question 1.

Deaths of Constables Travis Jordan and Brett Ryan

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I know all of us in this Assembly were heartbroken, as we've already discussed, to learn of the deaths of the two Edmonton police officers this morning, Constable Travis Jordan and Constable Brett Ryan. These officers were killed in the line of duty, doing their jobs, serving their communities. Our opposition joins the government in offering our deepest condolences to their families and their friends and their colleagues in this devastating loss. We all share in that grief and that sadness. To the minister of public safety: can he tell us what supports are being provided to families and loved ones of these officers?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, and I'd like to thank the Leader of the Opposition for the question. Alberta's government, of course, extends our deepest sympathies and condolences to the friends and families and loved ones of the fallen officers as a result of the tragic events that occurred today. Alberta's government established the heroes' fund in 2020 for first responders who die in the line of duty. This fund provides a one-time, tax-free payment of a hundred thousand dollars for eligible family members. First responders eligible for the payment would include police officers, firefighters, paramedics, sheriffs, and provincial corrections officers who die as a result of their duties.

Again, I'd like to thank the member of the opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much to the minister for that answer. This tragedy is a sombre reminder of the dangers that police officers face each and every day in their service to Albertans. We know that police members are family and that these events have an impact on every single member of the service. We want to make sure that those members, those officers, are supported in this difficult time as well. Can the minister tell this Assembly what supports or services are being provided to fellow Edmonton police officers grieving this unimaginable loss?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, and I couldn't agree more with the Leader of the Opposition. We are united on this. The government of Alberta is going to continue to support the Edmonton Police Service through this incredibly difficult time. To these fantastic men and women who patrol our streets every day to keep our communities safe: we're here to help and offer any resources that we have available. We're, of course, in direct contact with the Edmonton Police Service and there to let them know that we are here for them, and to all the courageous officers on the front lines, let them know as well: we are all here for you.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the minister. These tragedies, of course, also carry a deep impact on the community and on our city and on our province. I know that all of Edmonton and all of Alberta stand in solidarity with our officers today, and the people of this city and this province will be looking for ways to express their condolences. In fact, I know for a certainty that the people of this city and this province will do everything they can to show their support for these officers and their families. Will the province be planning a memorial or another way for the public to pay their respects and share their grief?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much. Of course, the overwhelming support across this country has been amazing. Our government is going to continue to work with EPS to pay our respects to Constable Travis Jordan and Constable Brett Ryan in the appropriate manner. We're going to support EPS on memorial and remembrance opportunities. The officers' names will be included in the Pillar of Strength monument on the south grounds of the Legislature, and their names are going to be part of the honour roll read out at Police and Peace Officers' Memorial Day. The families are also presented with copies of the dove-shaped plaques inscribed with the officers' names and placed on the monument. I can tell you that there are lots of ways we're going to support and remember these two officers, but right now we're going to support these families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has a question to ask.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are all shocked by the death of two Edmonton police officers earlier today. As critic for Justice and public safety I join my colleagues on both sides of this House to extend my deepest condolences to the loved ones of Constable Travis Jordan and Constable Brett Ryan and to their fellow officers at Edmonton Police Service and across this province. Can the Premier update this House on what supports are available to those grieving this loss?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much. I think we're very fortunate that the Edmonton Police Service along with the Edmonton Police Association have been extremely supportive. I have seen them. They are there for those families, who have been grief stricken over the deaths of these officers, not to mention the police officers that I saw earlier today, who also have been extremely grief stricken. I can tell you that we are working very closely with the Edmonton Police Service and the Edmonton Police Association to ensure whatever supports they need are available to them.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Minister, for that answer. The second sudden loss of two officers will reopen painful memories for many Albertans. Alberta has lost many brave officers and first responders in the line of duty. Many people in my community are reminded of the death of Calgary police Sergeant Andrew Harnett on New Year's Eve in 2020. Can the minister talk about mental health supports that are available to first responders, former first responders, and their families, who will certainly be impacted by this tragedy?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I'll let the minister speak. Let me just say this. Sergeant Andrew Harnett was a constable when I was a sergeant with the Calgary Police Service, and I want to thank you for bringing that up. It was a very tragic event for the officers that I worked with. Obviously, the death of that officer is horrific; any death – any death – is horrific. I will just say this. Every one of us here has to learn lessons from these tragic events to make sure that they don't happen again. I will say on behalf of the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction there are enormous supports that are available to help these families, to help these police services.

Thank you.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Minister, for that answer. I do know that you have served on the front lines.

I realize that only a few hours have passed, but many Albertans are looking for ways to express their support for Edmonton Police Service, their colleagues, and loved ones of those fallen officers. Before the details of memorial services are available, can you share with Albertans how they can express support for Edmonton Police Service, for those who have lost their loved ones?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you. I think that at this time if people want to express their condolences, I would recommend that they reach out to the Edmonton Police Service. You know, let me just say this, and this was brought up today at the press conference. If you see a police officer, thank them. Thank them for their service. Thank them for what they do. I would say that that is a first step in the right direction, but certainly if you would like to express your condolences, then reach out to the Edmonton Police Service. I know that they have a big heart, and they would probably really appreciate it.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a question.

Ms Hoffman: I, too, want to express my condolences for everyone impacted by the brutal killings this morning, including the families and colleagues of constables Jordan and Ryan.

Affordability Plan Cash Payments

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents have contacted me to ask about why they're not eligible for the government's affordability payments despite financial hardship that they are going through. Less than a quarter of Albertans have received payment so far. Will the Premier consider expanding eligibility to help low-income folks who don't have children?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors has risen.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to provide condolences to the families on the senseless violence that happened last night.

In response to the question, though, in the first 24 hours of the affordability portal, when it did open, 140,000 applications came through; that's 140,000 Albertans that were receiving this payment. It is something that – it's $100 a month going towards those who need supports the most. It is something that we've worked very hard to make sure that everybody is receiving this payment that can get the payment, and it is something that we on this side of the aisle obviously know. When it comes to inflation and the cost of living, it's something that we try as a government very hard to reduce. That's why we have low taxes, we fought the carbon tax and other measures that have increased the cost of living in Alberta, and are continuing to find ways to make life more affordable in Alberta.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, when these payments were first announced, the government said that it would cost approximately $900 million in payments to Albertans. However, last month they confirmed that only $96 million had actually been paid out to Albertans. We know that there are hundreds of thousands of Albertans who are eligible under the already-limited criteria who could really use the help, so to the government: why have so few Albertans received affordability payments?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to remind the opposition and tell all Albertans that when it comes to the fuel tax being removed permanently here in Alberta, that goes a long way to helping Alberta families get to work, drive to work, and drive their kids to soccer or hockey practice. Also, the electricity rebate is also going to all Albertans. There's a suite of measures that our government put in place to try to help with this inflation crisis that's hitting every single Alberta family, and those are two examples that help every single Albertan.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we know that the application process for these payments isn't easy for some Albertans. While many have applied, many applications require edits to make them eligible. Registry agents have told us that there isn't an edit button so that people can make changes to their applications, and on Monday in estimates the minister for service Alberta acknowledged this issue. We are already halfway through the eligibility period, and this edit button can make a difference for people struggling to pay their bills this month. Will the Premier commit that an edit button will be added by the end of the month and that everyone eligible will get compensation for the months that have already passed?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for the team that is building out the functionality of this portal, I'm happy to respond. It's a thoughtful question. I want to highlight that an edit button has been added already for individual applicants so that if there's an individual Albertan who had an issue with getting their banking information signed up for direct deposit, they can correct that already on the portal, and I encourage them to visit the portal to do that. In terms of now developing and extending that edit function to registries who then support folks face to face, that is in the works. It will be done very soon, and we'll be happy to update this House when that's the case. I do also just want to highlight that over 1.1 million Albertans have successfully signed up . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Mr. Nielsen: Firefighters endure great risks to serve our communities. Some of those risks are immediate, but others develop over time, which is why presumptive coverage and retroactive coverage are vital to ensure that those who protect us are protected, too. Other provinces know this, and in fact Ontario has recently provided presumptive coverage retroactive to January 1960. Is the Premier aware of this retroactive presumptive coverage that Ontario has provided to their firefighters?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears the NDP are claiming that our government doesn't care about first responders. This is a retroactivity issue. It's an issue that their government never addressed. Our government has done a thorough review. The WCB has done a thorough review. There is exactly one case that might be impacted by retroactivity. That individual passed while the NDP were in government, and the NDP did not alter the law. While our hearts go out to that family, the specific case is so complicated, that the NDP knows as well, that it remains clear that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: As Ontario's decision demonstrates, we have the power to help Alberta firefighters diagnosed with cancer and their families, including those already locked into disputes with WCB. In fact, the Ontario government has provided this coverage retroactive all the way back to 1960. It's an easy decision to make, one that provides vital protection and thanks to first responders. Does the Premier agree that if Ontario can provide this level of protection to all firefighters, surely Alberta can do as much for the heroes of the 2016 Fort McMurray fire?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We find that it remains unclear whether retroactivity would have helped in these circumstances. The WCB has a fairness office that is handling this complex case. That's how it's been handled in the past. It's how it's been handled with other governments, and that's the way it needs to be handled.

Mr. Nielsen: Firefighters who fought the Fort McMurray wildfires are heroes who deserve our unequivocal support, and not a single one should be left out of coverage for cancers they face as a result of heroism during that fire. Making sure this bill has retroactive coverage is the least we can do, and Ontario has now shown that it can be done. To the Premier: can we agree that these firefighters deserve our thanks and our support, and can we agree to amend Bill 9, as the opposition has proposed?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no question that the firefighters deserve our thanks and our help. That's why we've done a thorough review. There's one case that might – and I say "might" – be impacted by retroactivity, and that individual has already passed. Alberta is, again, the leader on protecting firefighters. We'll soon be making changes to expand our leadership on this issue. Again, the policy is complex, and retroactivity risks creating more unfairness than it solves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River has a question.

Youth Transition to Adulthood Program

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As children in government care become adults, they often are left wondering how they will be able to fend for themselves as they prepare to start their life on their own. The transition to adulthood program, or TAP, within Children's Services provides the supports they need to succeed now and into the future. To my colleague the Minister of Children's Services: could you please rise and let the House know about the supports available for TAP in Budget 2023 to help young Albertans in care and those leaving it in building an independent, healthy life?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and if you would so indulge me, I too would like to express my sincerest condolences to the families and indeed all Albertans impacted by the tragedy we heard today.

Budget 2023 is an investment in our future. By investing in the future of youth and young adults transitioning out of care, we are investing in future prosperity for this province, and that's exactly why I was proud to announce that we are investing an additional $25.6 million to the transition to adulthood program as part of the Children's Services ministry in the next three years to support young adults transitioning out of government care and into adulthood.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that youth leaving from care often lack the network needed to find good employers to sponsor them for entry into apprenticeship education programs and given that these young adults experience training and employment barriers compared to their peers, to the same minister: could you please let us know what additional funding is available in the budget to help them find jobs with in-demand trades?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. In addition to the $25.6 million that we've allocated, I was pleased to announce, along with my colleague and Deputy Premier and Minister of Skilled Trades and Professions, an additional $2.5 million, which will be allocated to support youths in transition to further develop their skills and careers in the trades as well. This will benefit approximately 500 youths transitioning out of government care and into their future educational pursuits.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that youth in care have been looking forward to this kind of support to help them succeed and further given that that aligns perfectly with the views of the child advocate of this Legislature, to the minister: what is this government's plan to make sure that these children and kids continue to access supports they need as they age out of care?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, we recognize the value that this tremendously important and incredibly well-received program has been providing, and the hon. member is indeed correct; it does align with many of the views of the advocate. It is because of these reasons that we have committed funding increases for the next three years, with $5.5 million allocated in this year's 2023-2024 Budget; 8 and a half million dollars for '24-25; and, finally, $11.6 million for the '25-26 years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has a question to ask.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you. As an Edmontonian I'm very grateful for the brave service of the Edmonton Police Service and their women and men who are officers. I send my deepest condolences to the family and friends and colleagues of Constable Jordan and Constable Ryan.

Deaths of Children in Care and Youth Transitioning out of Care

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, one of the hardest parts of my role as the critic for Children's Services but, even more, as a mother is to every month see the growing list of children and young people who have died while receiving child intervention services. Last year was the worst year on record in Alberta: 49 children and young people died. We all hoped we wouldn't see another year like it, but this year is no better. To date 45 children and young people have died. To the Minister of Children's Services: what is being done differently, truly differently, to make a change?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, once again, as a father of three young children there is no greater tragedy than hearing about the death of any child, and, once again, my heart and my condolences go out to the families that are impacted by this. As the hon. member is indeed aware, any child receiving intervention services and who dies or is seriously injured is reported publicly, and we conduct a rigorous and thorough examination of exactly what happened. Alberta is a leader in public reporting, and that includes posting online when a child or youth has passed away in care or is receiving services and publicly posting online Children's Services . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Given that of the 45 deaths this year to date 19 of them were actually children under the age of 12 and given that 18 of these children were actually in the care of Children's Services – the government is their legal guardian – and given that any loss of life is a tragedy and that as members of this Chamber we all owe a responsibility to ensure that every child in care has the support, services, and resources they need to thrive and given that there have been reviews and reports and promises for two years, can the minister explain what specifically this budget does differently for children in care to ensure that they are supported and, most importantly, safe?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, an increasing number of youth have died as a result of drug poisoning, leading to the Child and Youth Advocate recommendation that the government establish a specific youth opioid strategy, and that's exactly what we've done. Recently the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction announced a number of initiatives, including a 4 and a half million dollar investment into the virtual opioid dependency program as well as a $92 million investment in CASA for kids, which is certainly helping to address these troubling concerns.

Thank you.

Ms Pancholi: Given that yesterday the government announced a $5.5 million increase in funding for youth aging out of government care into the transition to adulthood program but this doesn't make up for the $14 million per year that was cut three years ago and given that today we heard that only 120 young people aged 22 to 24 are receiving supports under TAP and this is a big decrease from the 500 young people of the same age who received financial supports under the SFAA program and given that this means that far fewer young people transitioning out of care into adulthood are actually being supported by this government, can the minister please explain what he's doing to increase the number of young people accessing the TAP program?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member failed to mention was that she heard that 120 children were receiving soft supports but that many others had already been transitioned into the TAP program, so certainly that is a good-news story regardless of how the member wishes to spin it. We are working diligently to expand and increase the TAP program as a holistic and comprehensive approach to addressing youths aging out of care and into adulthood, and we'll continue to do that through the supports that we have just elaborated on through the various members' statements and the questions prior.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has a question.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to start by offering my condolences to the families, friends, and colleagues of the two Edmonton police officers who lost their lives today.

Emergency Alert System

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, Albertans rely on our emergency alert system to keep them safe, but they need to know it will be there when tragedy strikes. This requires regular testing so Albertans and our government know it will work. On March 1 the system was tested, but Albertans didn't get just one alert; they received a total of nine alerts. This left Albertans with a lot of questions about what happened. To the minister: can you explain what happened with the emergency alert system that day?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction has risen.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I would also take this opportunity to extend my deepest sympathies to the families, friends, and colleagues of constables Travis Jordan and Brett Ryan.

With regard to the exacts on the nine versus however many certain people received, I'll undertake to make sure that I get those for the hon. member.

I do want to just take an opportunity for the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall and mention that the mental health helpline 1.877.303.2642, and 211 is also available 24 hours a day for anyone.

Thank you.

Mr. Dach: Given that the Premier suggested the issues came from other government agencies but we know that's not accurate and given that media now reports that it was "old code" that caused the problem on the provincial side and given that the alert is critical in ensuring the health and safety of Albertans in the event of an emergency, what steps have been taken to fix this problem?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I want to just say again thank you for this line of questioning. I, like many Albertans, was surprised when I saw the numerous alerts back to back on the day in question. I want to assure all Albertans that when I saw that happen, I immediately reached out to my colleague the minister of public safety to offer the support of my department, Technology and Innovation, to look at ways that we can apply more modern tools and technology to ensure that this kind of situation does not happen again. The fact is that Albertans need to know that they can rely on this alert system, and we are going to take all of the steps needed to make sure that our systems can deliver that exact result.

Mr. Dach: Given that Albertans need to know that the system will be there when they need it and given that there was a glitch in a previous test and given that the minister says that it has been fixed, what lessons did the government learn from this test, and will there be another test of the system in the near future, after these problems are resolved, to ensure that it's actually working the way it's supposed to?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, we always look to learn from all of our experiences, good and bad, so we are certainly taking a look into this situation to make sure that our public alert system will be as strong as it possibly can be. As I mentioned before, my Department of Technology and Innovation will be supporting the minister of public safety and his team to make sure that we take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the system is strong, robust, capable, and secure so that we can meet the needs of Albertans today and into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has a question to ask.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, my condolences to the families and friends of Constable Jordan and Constable Ryan, the entire Edmonton Police Service, and my thanks to everyone involved in public safety and policing to safely protect us all.

Physician Recruitment and Retention

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, it has also come to my attention that there is presently a sizable group of freedom-minded Ontario physicians willing to relocate to Alberta. Given that our communities are crying out for doctors, particularly in the south zone, and given that on March 3 in Medicine Hat we're 18 available physicians short, including five in family medicine and three in emergency medicine, to the Health minister: please share with us what you're willing to do to cut through the red tape to accommodate a group of dedicated medical professionals who . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance has risen.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know the Minister of Health is actively looking at every option, every solution to ensure that we have an adequate number of physicians working and serving Albertans. That's one reason why we increased the Health budget by almost a billion dollars this year. There will be funding for additional seats for every health care occupation, including 120 new seats over the three-year fiscal plan, in our schools of medicine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Attracting doctors is about more than spending money, however. Given that physician shortages in Alberta have become a systemic issue and given that on February 6 the city of Lethbridge had 49 doctor position vacancies, including nine in family medicine and eight in emergency, and given the fact that physician compensation and development now accounts for nearly 25 per cent of our total Health budget, is the minister really in a position to turn away any qualified, experienced, out-of-province doctors who want to practise in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the minister, again, is looking at every solution to ensure that we can onboard health care professionals, foreign-trained health care professionals, health care professionals from other provinces and other countries. On top of that, we are creating more spaces here in the province so Albertans who want to pursue a career in health care can in fact do so. We are focused as a government on expanding capacity in health care.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, more money is not buying results. Given all the taxpayer money that this government has dumped into rural physician recruitment and retention and given that physician compensation now accounts for nearly 10 per cent of this government's total operational spending and given the fact that over the past two years numerous, numerous emergency rooms across Alberta have been temporarily closed due to physician shortages, is this minister finally willing to consider options for physician recruitment that don't involve the failed strategy of just throwing more hard-earned taxpayers' money at it?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we do need to pay our doctors, and I'm pleased to say that the Minister of Health has struck an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association on a new remuneration agreement with our incredible physicians, those physicians that serve Albertans every day. I know the minister is again looking at every solution to ensure that we can provide more physicians across the province in rural Alberta and urban Alberta. In fact, there are 250 more doctors working at the end of 2022 than at the beginning, but our work is not done.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for St. Albert has a question.

Ms Renaud: I'd also like to add my condolences to constables Jordan and Ryan, their families, friends, and the first responder community.

Nonprofit-sector Supports

Ms Renaud: Nonprofits fill critical needs, employ nearly 300,000 Albertans, contribute $5.5 billion to the economy and another $5 billion in volunteer hours. They're struggling right now. The essential workers putting the needs of the communities first are suffering. An analysis by the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations shows instability. Will the minister rise in this House and tell us what this government is doing to support nonprofits and the critical work that they do?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking with a heavy heart. I also want to acknowledge my condolences for the families and for the fallen officers before I answer this question.

Mr. Speaker, the question of helping nonprofits to do more is a real one. Just for your information, I had the honour of working as a social worker in the field for over 28 years. I worked with CCVO in my past. The advocacy they are advancing for the sector: we wholeheartedly support that. It is because of that reason that we increased $11 million in support for CFEP in this Budget 2023.

Ms Renaud: Given that many organizations are facing higher demand, 74 per cent reporting an increase in need, and lack supports for programs with complex needs and that 41 per cent identified significant reduction in capacity and given that the current affordability crisis has major impacts in this sector, with 88 per cent citing inflation as a massive concern, with insurance going as high as 150 per cent, forcing downsizing and layoffs, while funding agreements are not keeping pace with population growth and inflation, why does this budget not do more to ensure a better future for the 30,000 nonprofits in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her advocacy for not-for-profits. I'm so proud of budget 2023-2024 because there are significant funds available for not-for-profits within this budget. Specifically, within my ministry we increased funding for the PDD sector. We increased significant funding for homeless shelters and homeless outreach programs. We increased money for seniors and seniors' groups as well as increased funds with FCSS. All of these groups do significant work. I've been spending a lot of my time meeting with not-for-profits across the province. We want to continue to work with them and improve supports as we go forward.

Ms Renaud: Given that Karen Ball, president and CEO of the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations, stated – and I quote – that when nonprofits fail, so does our society and given that I urge this government to listen to their needs and make a definite commitment to work alongside them and provide more fiscal assistance than the small amounts we see in Budget 2023, will the minister commit to working with groups like the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations to ensure nonprofits get the resources they need to continue the vital and essential work in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the answer to that question is yes. Karen Ball is actually a constituent and a friend of mine. We do talk. Actually, I'm scheduled to give her a call later this afternoon. We, of course, want to continue to partner with our not-for-profits. We've seen significant work within 2023 not just in my ministry but in Children's Services, in Culture, in Health, in Justice, in Education. There's increased funding right across the board for not-for-profits in our community. We're going to continue to make sure that we're funding these great organizations, that we're getting resources deployed.

I also want to mention the – I'll answer more later, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to offer my condolences to the family and friends of constables Jordan and Ryan and all first responders being affected by what's going on.

School Construction in Edmonton

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton public schools expects a 2.7 per cent increase in enrolment for this upcoming year. By 2027 there will not be enough space for all high school students in the city. We all know schools take time to build, and we have all known about forecasted enrolment growth in Edmonton schools. To the minister: why has this government only provided full construction funding for one new school in Edmonton this year?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education has risen.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I want to offer my condolences and prayers as well to the family and friends and all those that are impacted by the deaths. As a mother of a police officer myself it's my worst nightmare that I can think of. It's the worst thing I can possibly think of, to lose one of my children in such a way, so my heart goes out to all of them.

On the question that was asked, in fact, the member opposite is incorrect. We have allocated and announced five new schools for Edmonton public school division: the new junior-senior high in Glenridding Heights; a new K to 9 school in Edgemont; a new K to 6 in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Given that I was speaking about high schools and that it takes time to build a school and that modernization of existing schools only leads to a slight increase in capacity and given that the government has made it clear in their capital plan that they do not think Edmonton deserves more schools for a growing student population and given the critical need for more student spaces, with thousands of new students expected to start attending school in Edmonton, will the minister please explain how they plan to address the growing need for more space in Edmonton schools with only one new school planned in this budget?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess the member opposite did not know that Edmonton public schools actually had two new high schools, one that is opening in May 2024, the southeast high school, and the Joey Moss school as well actually just opened here, I believe, in September 2022, in addition to the other schools that have been allocated in the future. We can say that over the last number of years we have announced 18 projects for Edmonton that will address these needs.

Member Loyola: Given that the government should be investing in and maintaining top-quality education in the province and given that, to this end, students must have the space they need to learn, which means that building new schools is an absolute necessity, and given that only one new school received construction funding, leaving many in my constituency to ride the bus out of their communities, will the minister commit to restarting public reporting of class sizes as student numbers rise much faster than the number of classrooms in Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the member opposite is incorrect. We have allocated 18 projects overall to Edmonton while the NDP, during their four years, only allocated eight projects. I would say that our record as a whole over the last four years is 106 schools across this province, new infrastructure, 58 alone this year; the members opposite during their time period, only 47. In fact, they failed rural Alberta. When we allocated 37 schools, they only allocated 14.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to offer my deepest condolences to the friends, family, and colleagues of constables Jordan and Ryan in the terrible tragedy that they're going through right now.

Deerfoot Trail Capital Plan

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, our government recognizes and supports the important role transportation infrastructure plays in building our province's economic corridors and communities. In acknowledging that role, we must include one road that my constituents of Calgary-Peigan know far too well, Deerfoot Trail. Deerfoot Trail is currently the busiest road in Alberta, and both daily commuters and businesses are feeling the pains of this. Can the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors inform the House of the important contributions that our government is taking to improve Deerfoot Trail?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is tragic events like we all heard about today that really do put things into perspective.

Regarding the question, Calgary did receive $2.2 billion in Budget 2023; $430 million actually went towards upgrades to Deerfoot Trail. Just last November we actually announced significant improvements on the south side of Deerfoot Trail, improving the Bow Bottom Trail and Anderson Road, Southland Drive, and Glenmore Trail interchanges. Seven new bridge structures, Mr. Speaker, are going to be built on the Deerfoot, and construction will begin this spring.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone in Alberta who's driven on Deerfoot Trail can agree that this is a welcomed investment to improve our province's busiest road. Given that these improvements to Deerfoot Trail would further develop Alberta's economy, can the minister tell the House about how these investments into Deerfoot Trail will drive our economy forward?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of jobs indirectly will be created by the improvements to this, the construction work on Deerfoot. Deerfoot is obviously a major trade route through the province of Alberta, shipping goods not just from the airport but up and down highway 2, throughout the province. The economic benefits of improving the Deerfoot from Bow Bottom Trail to Glenmore Trail will provide about a $23 million economic boost to the province but also allow Calgarians to be able to get home sooner to spend more time with their families.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that those who use Deerfoot Trail daily are not limited to the semi-trucks that keep our grocery shelves stocked and help our local businesses take goods to market and given that there are many thousands of people that use Deerfoot Trail daily, whether it's to go to school or going to and from work, can the same minister tell the House about how the Deerfoot Trail upgrades will benefit Albertans who commute daily on this road?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, obviously, Mr. Speaker, we are committed to making lives better here in the province of Alberta. Calgary commuters will actually see a 15 per cent improvement in their morning rush-hour commute and also a 22 per cent improvement in their evening rush-hour commute once this construction is done. In total, that means about 900,000 hours a year will be saved with the completion of these Deerfoot Trail improvements. At the end of the day, that just means Calgarians will be able to spend more time with their families and less time staring at tail lights.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is next.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Along with my colleagues in this House, I'd like to give my condolences to the families of constables Jordan and Ryan and, of course, also acknowledge their friends and colleagues.

Seniors' Support

Ms Sigurdson: Alberta seniors deserve a dedicated Seniors Advocate. This role was created to ensure that the voices and concerns of Alberta seniors would be heard by the government. I was disappointed that the UCP terminated the position of the Seniors Advocate. The recent report of the Auditor General shows the negative impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on seniors and that there is a need for seniors to have a dedicated, independent voice. Will the minister support the re-establishment of an independent Seniors Advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for her question and her advocacy for seniors. Of course, this government cares about our seniors. We want to make sure that our seniors are supported and that they do have an advocate. The good news is that seniors do have an advocate within the Health Advocate office who is speaking on behalf of seniors' issues and concerns. Part of the reason why we merged these two offices is because over a third of the concerns that were coming in to the Seniors Advocate were health related, so by merging these two offices together, we're actually able to better serve seniors to make sure that their concerns are being addressed. As we go forward, there's going to need to be a strong relationship between the minister of seniors and the Minister of Health to address these issues.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this budget proposes a 2.4 per cent increase in accommodation rates for seniors in continuing care and given that this increase comes during a cost-of-living crisis, which could mean that families face difficult choices between paying their bills while ensuring that their family member is being cared for, and given that as we deal with this affordability crisis, ensuring that the seniors who built this province have the support they need is critical, will the minister reverse this proposed increase in accommodation rates?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for her question and her advocacy. This government is taking action in regard to addressing affordability challenges for seniors. Indexing seniors' benefits as well as supplementary benefits was a big part of that but also bringing in the affordability payments to help seniors get through this affordability crisis. We're also working towards expanding out affordable housing for seniors right across this province in the communities that seniors have raised their families and built their lives in. We know how important this is, and we're going to continue to work with the community and our not-for-profit partners and housing providers to improve affordability for our seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that Albertans are in the debt of the seniors who built this province and that we in this House need to provide them with the support that they need and given that seniors' voices should be heard by their elected representatives, Minister, please explain what steps are being taken to ensure that no seniors fall through the cracks during this affordability crisis. When will the minister reinstate the office of the Seniors Advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Of course, we are making sure that seniors' voices are heard through the Health Advocate's office, through the Seniors Advocate within the Health Advocate's office, to make sure that the concerns that seniors have – that they're able to present that to the Health Advocate office, of course, compiling that data to help inform government on how best we move forward and to make sure that seniors' concerns are being addressed in this community. We are committed to improving the lives of our seniors, and Budget 2023-2024 has significant investments in addressing affordability and providing additional supports for our seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to begin by offering my condolences to the family, friends, and colleagues of the fallen officers who passed away today.

Jobs and Investment Incentives Proposal Act

Mr. Eggen: Yesterday I had the honour of introducing Bill 207, the Jobs and Investment Incentives Proposal Act. If passed, the bill would direct the ministry to develop a tax credit that would provide investment incentives to companies making capital investments in clean tech, carbon materials, critical minerals processing, and advanced manufacturing. The bill is targeted towards the fastest growing emerging sectors, where Alberta has the opportunity to compete on a global scale and bring these opportunities right here to Alberta. For all of these reasons, I would ask: would the government consider supporting Bill 207?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member opposite putting forward a bill that he believes will further Alberta's economic growth and diversification. That goal, that objective, has been the objective of this government since day one, in 2019. That's why we worked hard to create the most competitive business environment of any province in the nation. We started out by reducing our business tax rate from 12 to 8 per cent. We've been focused on reducing red tape, and our plan is working. Our business environment is competitive, and investing is coming.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the competition for investment in new, emerging sectors is increasing after the United States passed the Inflation Reduction Act of 2022 and given that Alberta has some of the lowest capital investment growth in the country – our proposed tax credit is estimated to leverage a projected $10 billion in incremental investments and will create an estimated 20,000 jobs – I would ask: why would the government continue with their tax cuts when we know that, in fact, tax credits allow growth and compel growth in the province for Albertans and for our economy?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we believe that broadly creating a competitive business environment is really government's role and responsibility. Now, we also believe that where we have sectors where we're naturally competitive and we're competing with other jurisdictions, at times specific incentives and tax credits are worthy. That's why we brought in the Alberta petrochemical incentive program. That's a targeted tax incentive grant program that is attracting interest from investors around the world. We have tens of billions of dollars of investment lined up to come into the sector in Alberta.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Bill 207's incentives are also designed in a way that allows for good-paying jobs, supports innovation, and provides training so that Albertans get the necessary skills to work in these sectors and given that Alberta currently has the slowest wage growth in the country, will the government, then, support Bill 207 as a means of accelerating wage growth for Albertans, using tax credits rather than tax cuts?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I know the members opposite dislike tax cuts. That's abundantly apparent. But in Budget 2022 we allocated $600 million for skills and jobs. We've added to that in Budget '23 with over $300 million, again, to ensure that Albertans can step into training opportunities, to ensure that all Albertans can be skilled to flourish in the economy of the future. Every Albertan needs to participate in the Alberta advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: My deepest condolences to the family, friends, and co-workers of the fallen officers.

Federal Energy Transition Plan

Ms Lovely: The just transition plan to phase out oil and gas will harm not only my constituents but oil and gas workers across our province. An important dividing line between the provinces and the federal government is that natural resources and their development fall under provincial jurisdiction. Gibson Energy, that claims 1 of 4 barrels exported from western Canada, runs through Hardisty. To the Minister of Energy: will the provincial government be prepared to defend and protect our constitutional rights and maintain and develop our own oil and gas industry?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is not the first time that we've seen devastating policies from Ottawa for our energy industry. The key phrase here is "constitutional rights." Alberta has a long history of protecting those constitutional rights. Let's take a walk down memory lane. Whether that's Peter Lougheed fighting against Justin Trudeau's father and his national energy program or the drama teacher Justin Trudeau's terrible just transition plan, I assure you we are doing and will continue to do everything to guarantee that our rights remain our rights.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that Ottawa's just transition plan is clearly to hinder Alberta's production of oil and gas and further given that there is an ongoing energy crisis where energy is a necessary part of life, from heating our homes to fuelling our cars, to the Minister of Energy: is the government of Alberta prepared to export our morally and responsibly sourced energy to the world struggling with energy security?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, here in Alberta we produce the most reliable, responsible, and secure energy of anywhere in the world. Recent events have made it clear that energy security is a huge priority for jurisdictions like Germany, Japan, and South Korea. Last year the German chancellor came to Canada looking for Canadian LNG, and Justin Trudeau turned him down. I recently visited Germany and Norway to advocate for Alberta because Ottawa clearly doesn't have the compassion or the best interests of Albertans or Canadians, for that matter, in mind. The world needs more Alberta energy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that Justin Trudeau has gone down the path of just transition and given that others support this misdirected notion, to the Minister of Energy: how has Alberta contributed to the welfare and well-being of the rest of the country?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 2,500 coal plants operating globally right now, with 189 under construction, many of which are located in China. Our responsible, reliable, and ESG-leading energy, especially our natural gas, can off-set increasing global emissions if we can move those coal plants to Alberta LNG. We contribute leadership, technological innovation, and the highest standard of ESG throughout the world. We should be and are the standard that every other country tries to live up to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Edmonton

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to be a representative in this Chamber in Alberta's great capital city of Edmonton. As MLA for Edmonton-North West I have seen Edmonton grow and develop into the great Canadian city that it is today, with endless potential for the future.

However, this is certainly not by accident. Through partnerships in all levels of government down to the community level, Edmonton has been able to build a welcoming home for the thousands of people who move here every year. It is critical that we do not let up in this effort. We need to ensure it by investing in Edmonton, by building schools and hospitals and also supporting nonprofits who serve this city. We need to continue to invest to ensure that our city's most vulnerable are supported in every way.

Importantly, the city needs a partner in the Legislature to ensure that these needs are acted on. I was proud to be part of a government that was such a partner to the city and the people of Edmonton, and I will never stop advocating for Edmonton and the people who call it home, because when Edmonton succeeds, Alberta succeeds, too.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington has a statement to make.

Deaths of Constables Travis Jordan and Brett Ryan

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our men and women in uniform are heroes. It hit me very hard to learn that just after midnight this morning Edmonton Police Service responded to a family dispute in northwest Edmonton, and two police officers were killed in the line of duty. Two young EPS veterans, 35-year-old Constable Travis Jordan and 30-year-old Brett Ryan, did not come home to their families after the night shift this morning. Though all of the details of this horrifying act are not yet known, we know that the officers' colleagues rushed these heroes to the hospital and worked bravely to save these members, but sadly they were declared dead in the hospital.

I can tell you without any hesitation, Mr. Speaker, that I stand with the Premier, the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services, a former police officer himself, and all of my colleagues in this Chamber in full unity with these heroes in uniform as well as the family and friends that have lost their loved ones this morning. The first priority after this tragedy for all of us should be to support these two heroes' mourning friends, family, and colleagues in EPS in any way that we can, and the next one should be to do whatever we need to keep a tragedy like this from happening again.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government always will stand proudly with our men and women in uniform, a career that all too often, I'm sure, feels thankless. I'm going to say right now with no reservations on behalf of my colleagues in the Alberta Legislature: thank you.

Federal Energy Transition Plan

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, in the last few months Ottawa has once again misunderstood Alberta with their paternalistic just transition. It's not surprising, but it is frustrating and disappointing. At a time when our international allies are suffering due to lack of access to essential oil and gas energy, with people in Europe burdened by astronomically high prices, the NDP-Liberal government not only refuses to send them what they need but simultaneously seeks to dismantle Alberta's industry and jobs.

Just transition is a proposal that could not be more ill timed or falsely named. The colonial Ottawa Liberals are blinded by an agenda that has little bearing on reality and, in its pursuit, are happy to afflict Albertans with joblessness by way of a government crusade against the industry that literally fuels our nation's economy. It's one thing to promote the positive benefits of green energy technology, a sector Alberta has embraced as a leader; it's another thing entirely for an NDP-Liberal coalition to institute top-down bans and restrictions on an industry that constitutes the lifeblood of modern civilization.

As Alberta moves diligently towards a low-carbon future, it is undeniable that oil and gas produced here is among the most ethically sourced in the entire world, but the woke would sooner import oil from dictatorships produced with zero environmental standards. As we continue to innovate and diversify our economy here, it would be foolish and short sighted for Ottawa to abandon or, rather, eliminate Alberta's fuel industry with the stroke of a pen. Our allies are in desperate need of these resources, and developing nations will continue to source energy somewhere as they grow their economies and improve their people's quality of life. Not only would just transition destroy hundreds of thousands of jobs and set Alberta and Canada's economy back for a generation, but it would also be clearly unjust to continue refusing our allies and developing nations the basic energy supplies that they so desperately need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Mr. Nielsen: Firefighters are our heroes. They keep our communities, our cities, and our province safe from fires as well as many other hazards. They protect our families, friends, and loved ones from danger, and they risk their lives in the process. I thank them for their continued service, but I know that words are simply not enough, not when the realities of their job can lead them to develop cancer.

The Fort McMurray wildfire shook our province. It was devastating, but I'm proud of the way Albertans rallied around each other to offer support during this time. Albertans did everything they could, from fundraising to donating needed items to opening their homes, all while Alberta firefighters did everything they could to stop the fire as quickly as possible. So it is hard now to see the ways in which the spirit of community care, friendship, and support seem to have fallen away, and in its place has been an unnecessary fight: when coverage should be provided and to whom.

We have the power here and now to end these disputes and do the right thing, to make sure Bill 9 includes retroactive coverage for cancer that firefighters develop as a result of their job, as the province of Ontario did earlier this month. I want to remind the UCP that this support is possible, that we have the amendment at the ready to correct this wrong and align Alberta's policy with provinces like Ontario.

Our firefighters have given us so much. Let's work together and provide them with retroactive coverage. It's just the right thing to do.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River has a petition.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I request leave to present, in accordance with Standing Order 98(2), one petition that has been received for private bills, the petition of Dr. Shawn Flynn, president of St. Joseph's College, for the St. Joseph's College amendment act, 2023.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I've received a message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2023, and recommends the same to the Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. the Treasury Board president and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now wish to table the 2022-23 supplementary supply estimates along with an update to the '22-23 fiscal plan as required by the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act. This 2022-23 fiscal plan update contains no changes from the information provided in the '23-26 fiscal plan tabled for Budget 2023.

The documents I'm tabling today reflect the realities we've faced and the needs we've addressed since I tabled Budget 2022 in February of last year. The numbers in these documents reflect this government's commitment to save for the future, increase the capacity of our health care and education systems, and adapt to the changing global economy. These funding requests will also provide for the planned spending to enable electricity rebates and other affordability supports that have provided relief to Albertans struggling with our current affordability crisis. The unique and challenging circumstances of this last year called on the government to act fast and to make life more affordable, and we responded.

Mr. Speaker, in total the supplementary supply estimates will allow additional spending by 19 government departments. When passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $2.7 billion in expense funding, $500,000 in capital investment funding for the government, and $292 million in financial transactions. Of this funding the four highest expenses are $753 million for Treasury Board and Finance for investment in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund; $636 million for Energy, primarily for the cost of selling oil and the site rehabilitation plan; $553 million for Health, primarily for physician payments and the new Alberta Medical Association agreement; $355 million for Affordability and Utilities for rebates and grants under the affordability action plan.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board.

23. Mr. Toews moved:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2022-23 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the creativity in my title today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 23 is debatable pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(i). Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate.

[Government Motion 23 carried]

24. Mr. Toews moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2022-23 supplementary supply estimates for three hours on Monday, March 20, 2023.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) this is a nondebatable motion.

[Government Motion 24 carried]

The Speaker: Just one second. It appears to me like the hon. the Government House Leader is rising or wanted to rise prior to calling the Committee of Supply. Does he have a question? The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do rise to request unanimous consent to allow for one-minute bells in Committee of Supply, including the first division.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a request for unanimous consent. It would shorten the bells in Committee of Supply, including the first division. It's a relatively uncommon request, so I want to ensure that everyone understands what we are agreeing to. I will ask only one question: is there anyone opposed to providing unanimous consent for one-minute bells upon the entry into Committee of Supply, including the first division?

Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to now call the committee to order. Prior to beginning, the chair will outline the process for this afternoon. The Committee of Supply will first call on the chairs of the legislative policy committees to report on their meetings with the various ministries under their mandate. No vote is required when these reports are presented.

The committee will then proceed to the vote on the estimates of the offices of the Legislative Assembly. The vote on the main estimates will then take place.

Finally, the chair would like to remind all hon. members of Standing Order 32(3), which we have decided is not relevant anymore given the previous unanimous motion.

3:00

Committee Reports

The Chair: I would like to now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future to present the committee's report.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. As the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2023-2024 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Executive Council; Ministry of Advanced Education; Ministry of Culture; Ministry of Forestry, Parks and Tourism; Ministry of Infrastructure; Ministry of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development; Ministry of Skilled Trades and Professions; Ministry of Technology and Innovation; Ministry of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'd like to now call on the chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities to present the committee's report.

Ms Lovely: As chair of the Standing Committee on Families and Communities pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I'm pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2023-24 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Ministry of Children's Services; Ministry of Education; Ministry of Health; Ministry of Justice; Ministry of Mental Health and Addiction; Ministry of Public Safety and Emergency Services; Ministry of Seniors, Community and Social Services; Ministry of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Now the chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Chair. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(10) I am pleased to report that the committee has reviewed the 2023-2024 proposed estimates and business plans for the following ministries: Ministry of Affordability and Utilities; Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation; Ministry of Energy; Ministry of Environment and Protected Areas; Ministry of Indigenous Relations; Ministry of Municipal Affairs; Ministry of Transportation and Economic Corridors; and Ministry of Treasury Board and Finance.

I'd like to thank all of my committee members for their participation. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

We shall now proceed to the vote on the 2023-24 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates general revenue fund. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.03(5), which requires that these estimates be decided without debate or amendment prior to the vote on the main estimates, I must now put the following question on all matters relating to the 2023-24 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2024: $180,409,000.

Agreed to:

Offices of the Legislative Assembly $180,409,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? That is carried.

Vote on Main Estimates 2023-24

The Chair: We shall now proceed to the final vote on the main estimates.

[The voice vote did not indicate agreement]

Expense for Technology and Innovation is $948,075,000.

Mr. Speaker, are we squared up?

The Acting Speaker: You're square. Thank you very much, hon. member. I'll say that I'm really glad I'm in this chair and not your chair today.

Hon. members, does the Assembly concur on the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

I would also like to alert the hon. members that pursuant to Standing Order 59.03(7) following the Committee of Supply's report on the main estimates, the Assembly immediately reverts to Introduction of Bills for the introduction of the appropriation bill.

Introduction of Bills

Appropriation Act, 2023

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 11, the Appropriation Act, 2023. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

This bill requests a total of $57.4 billion from the general revenue fund, consistent with Budget 2023 presented in the House, this House, on February 28. I ask my all of my colleagues in this Assembly on both sides of the aisle for their support in this bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has caught my eye.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a wonderful week of work here in the Legislature, but the time has come to head on to our respective directions. You don't have to go home – I encourage that you do – but you have to get out of here. With that said, I do move that the Assembly be adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, March 20, 2023.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:19 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 4th Session (2022-2023)

Activity to Thursday, March 16, 2023

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 20, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Members we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Joemy Joseph. I invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Francophonie in Alberta

The Speaker: Hon. members, this year marks the 25th anniversary of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, a nation-wide celebration of French-Canadian language and culture. Today, on International Francophonie Day, we recognize Alberta's vibrant Francophonie community.

The French language was integral to the development of our province, and it remains one of the most important and prolific languages in Alberta today. French is the first language of an estimated 88,000 Albertans, and more than 380,000 Albertans are of French descent.

I had the honour of hosting an event earlier this afternoon to celebrate the Francophonie culture. I am sure the members who were able to attend or watch online agree that each performance illustrates that music is the international, universal language that speaks to us all; truly beautiful performances on this important day, including our national anthem today.

Please proceed to your seats.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, this morning I also had the privilege of meeting a very special guest, who is now joining us in the Speaker's gallery. Please welcome the high commissioner for New Zealand, His Excellency Martin Harvey. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Speaker has a number of introductions today, as do many members of the Assembly. I will remind members that introductions are to be no longer than 20 seconds until one of you becomes the Speaker, at which point you have some leniency to take some additional time.

Seated in the Speaker's gallery today is our very talented singer, who led us in the singing of the national anthem earlier. Mr. Joemy Joseph lives in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud but was born and raised in Haiti, came to Canada in 2014 with his wife, Laura Westfall, who also joins us. He has been passionate about singing since he was a young child, having recorded several religious albums in English, French, Spanish, and Haitian. He's currently a software engineer, musician, and full-time father of two young daughters. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also seated in the Speaker's gallery, it's my pleasure to introduce perhaps my very best friend on the face of the planet. He is one of the few people that I can call at 3 a.m. when I need to get out of a jam. He is a resident of the constituency of Highwood, my good friend Mr. Stephen John Schaufele. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise to introduce the five most important people in my life. I ask that they stand when their names are called: my parents, Andreas and Maria Nicolaidis; as well, my amazing wife, Michelle; and my two beautiful daughters, Eleftheria and Christina. I ask that they rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture has an introduction.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly very special guests here: Pierre Asselin, president of ACFA, Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta; and Amy Vachon-Chabot; with Rheal Poirier, the executive director of the Francophone Secretariat. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome from this House.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you one of my constituents from Edmonton-South West, who is a recipient of the Queen's platinum jubilee medal, Don Patterson, as well as my younger brother, who is visiting from Nigeria, Henry Madu. Please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has a school to introduce.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my pleasure to introduce the students of St. Augustine school in Ponoka. With them today is their teacher Sharon Hackett and one of her colleagues. To the students and the staff of St. Augustine school: please rise as I welcome you to the Legislative Assembly today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Decore has an introduction.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 32 more of some of the brightest young minds in the province, in the constituency of Edmonton-Decore, from St. John Bosco elementary school. I look forward to meeting them later on this week at School at the Legislature. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly 24 students from, in their words, the most awesome and bestest school in the entire province, Waverley elementary school. They are accompanied by their teacher Don Douglas. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my good friend Cara Burtis, who has recently relocated from Calgary to Calmar, Alberta – go, Oilers – her daughter Julia Burtis, and her niece Chloe Weslowski. Unfortunately, Katie Burtis couldn't join us today. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you a real mensch, Jeremy Prete, and his amazing wife, Sarah, and their boys Jake and Tyler. Together the Pretes run Epic, which is a youth centre in Cardston that runs after school programs, everything from basic etiquette to mental health awareness. I invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce you to some of the members of the Edmonton Raging Grannies, who are here in attendance. Please rise as I say your names: Anna Novikov, Cassie Aziz-Few, Marilyn Gaa, Edda Loomes, Audrey Brooks, and Louise Swift. They're here to gather and protest in solidarity with other women from across the province and to stand up for Alberta families. Thank you so much for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to introduce to you and through you two constituents from the great riding of Leduc-Beaumont, Anna and Krystle Linic. If you could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Member Irwin: On behalf of our fabulous MLA for Lethbridge-West I am so very happy to introduce the feisty five from the Lethbridge Raging Grannies. Please join me in welcoming Barb Phillips, Maria Fitzpatrick, Karen Gay, Judy Millard, and Gerry Dyck.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you councillor Sonny Rajoo from Two Hills; councillor Elroy Yakemchuk from the county of Two Hills; as well as Ruven Rajoo, former school board trustee; Jan Rajoo, St. Paul education trustee; and their girls: Xylia, Xaraya, and Xianna. I'd also like to note that Sonny, Elroy, and Ruven are all Queen's platinum jubilee medal recipients. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North has a statement to make.

Premier's Summit on Fairness for Newcomers

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I had the honour of attending the Premier's Summit on Fairness for Newcomers. After the first launch last year the summit now provides an annual opportunity to connect, learn, and initiate positive action. Alberta has a rich and diverse cultural landscape, and we are proud to be leading the way in the important work of creating a more open, inclusive, and educated province. The government of Alberta is committed to ensuring that every newcomer can reach their highest potential and has access to the supports they need to help them integrate into this province that they now call home.

This includes the ability to build rewarding careers to support themselves, their families, and communities. This journey for newcomers comes with numerous struggles, many of which still affect many newcomers to this day. Eliminating barriers such as unemployment, underemployment, education recognition, and settlements is crucial to support newcomers' success and drive economic growth. Newcomers deserve reassurance that they are embraced and valued in the workplace and the community.

A key focus for this year's summit was listening. Throughout the program there were numerous opportunities to listen to each other. It is through listening, Mr. Speaker, that we better understand the perspectives of others. Every newcomer, regardless of their role, has something unique and worthwhile to contribute. Each one of us has the opportunity to listen and to learn. My hope is that we will enrich ourselves in knowledge and in awareness and be ready to act.

I would like to extend my most sincere gratitude to the panelists, presenters, and participants for this year's summit as well as to the many staff and volunteers who brought this event to life. Your contributions are valued and help us to build a better ...

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

New Democratic Party Policies

Ms Sigurdson: On December 14, 2022, something wonderful happened. I became a grandmother for the very first time. My grandson, Henry, was born to my eldest son, Maxwell, and his wife, Emily. As all grandparents know, a grandchild brings much joy to families. There are, of course, the jokes about just being around for the fun part of helping Henry grow. The parents are responsible for soothing him when he cries and getting up at night to care for him; grandmothers get to cuddle and play when he's in a good mood. Seriously, though, beyond the intimate connection I have with him, I want our society to be vibrant and caring so that Henry is supported to fulfill his dreams.

As a grandmother and a member of the Alberta Legislature I know the kind of province in which I want Henry to grow. In fact, I've worked my entire life to ensure all Albertans have opportunities to achieve their dreams. Creating a fair, inclusive, and equal society has been my life's work. Before being elected, I did this work through my profession as a social worker. For more than 30 years I worked to support vulnerable Albertans. However, there came a point in my career when I knew I needed to address the difficulties before me and my clients at a higher level. That's when I decided to seek public office.

I'm so proud to be part of the Alberta New Democrat caucus, a caucus that shares these values of fairness and justice. An Alberta NDP government will ensure that all Albertans have equal opportunities. We will protect and improve public health care so that Henry and all Albertans have a family doctor and never have to pay out of pocket to see a doctor. An Alberta NDP government will help families manage the cost of living by getting their utility, insurance, and tuition costs under control. An Alberta NDP government will work with business and the energy sector to grow our economy with good jobs, more training, and more innovation. This spring election is an opportunity for Albertans to choose a government that will create a vibrant and caring society. Vote Alberta NDP for Henry and all Alberta's grandchildren.

Women's and Girls' Participation in Sport

Ms Fir: Mr. Speaker, I am by no means a great runner, but on March 8 I was given an inspiring reminder of how I do have that right and ability. In many parts of the world women and girls are not able to go for a run outside. When Zainab Hussaini tried to go for a run in Afghanistan, people threw rocks at her, insulted her, and threatened her. They believed that because she was a woman, she should not be allowed to run outside. But Zainab had a goal to become the first Afghan woman to complete a marathon in Afghanistan. When she ran, she felt free, and she wanted every woman in Afghanistan to have that experience. So despite the challenges she faced, she trained for the marathon in secret in a small, enclosed courtyard not much larger than the average one-bedroom apartment, running in loops over and over so she could make a difference. Against all odds and facing threats to her life, in 2015 she became the first Afghan woman to run a marathon in Afghanistan and, in doing so, was an inspiration to so many.

Zainab and women like her are why the 93rd Girl Guide unit with Girl Guides of Canada chose to participate in the Secret 3K run, a Canadian organization promoting girls' participation in sport. By exercising their right and ability to walk and run freely within Canada, these girls honour those who do not have that freedom. I was happy to personally sponsor my constituency manager's daughter and her amazing Girl Guide group for the run. The event is an opportunity to reflect on the courage and determination of women and girls world-wide. Nations thrive when women are allowed to fulfill their true potential.

In Alberta our government is committed to uplifting female athletes. We support women in sport through the podium fund, through recreation grants, and by providing funding to organizations like the InMotion Network. To Zainab, to our Girl Guides, and to all female athletes who are paving the way for all girls around the world to participate in sport: Alberta stands with you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Government Record

Mr. van Dijken: Good. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP opposition is at it again, this time claiming that crop insurance premiums will be increasing by 60 per cent. This type of fearmongering and misrepresentation of the facts is just one of many reasons why the NDP will never be able to provide stability or security to Alberta. But I'm not here to indulge in the NDP and their alarmist rhetoric. As a lifelong farmer and the parliamentary secretary for agrifood development I'm here to set the record straight about what our government is really doing for the agriculture industry.

Our government has spoken out against the federal carbon tax and federal fertilizer reduction targets. We've provided MELT exemptions to farms amidst driver shortages. We've negotiated millions in agriculture funding through a five-year sustainable Canadian agricultural partnership. We've increased the feeder association loan guarantee program from $100 million to $150 million. We've invested $3.2 million into solution-seeking projects through Alberta Innovates, $4 million into agrifood recovery support due to supply chain disruptions, $3.7 million into agrifood education expansion, a projected $150 million into the twinning of highway 3, $933 million, Mr. Speaker, towards irrigation expansion and modernization, just to name a few.

As a result, we've seen major producers like McCain choose to double the size of their Alberta facilities. Alberta has attracted $1.5 billion in new agrifood investment. We have created 3,000 agriculture jobs for Albertans. Mr. Speaker, we've proudly hit every expansion target that this administration set for the agriculture industry and then some. Building on this momentum, our government has projected the creation of 9,000 jobs and $5 billion in agrifood investment. The agriprocessing investment tax credit will be instrumental in helping us achieve that goal.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Misericordia Community Hospital CT Scanner

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's a sad day in Alberta when ER doctors are forced to beg this UCP government just to get one imaging machine fixed. Doctors at the Mis say that the CT scanner is so broken and unreliable, it means that hundreds of patients are being transferred every month it's down, causing both serious delays in treatment and more EMS transport calls that should be avoidable. ER doctor Jarrod Anderson says, quote: that in and of itself is completely asinine. End quote. UCP spokespeople say that the Premier won't fix it. A simple question to the Premier: why not?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that I learned when Dr. John Cowell was appointed the official administrator is, in point of fact, that there were a lot of things that we needed to fix in the health care system, and through the direction of the doctor, the Minister of Health, and our newly appointed CEO, Mauro Chies, we've begun addressing these issues one at a time. Part of the issue that we face, I think, is that there's sometimes miscommunication between the front line and the decision-makers, and I'm confident that we're going to be able to solve these issues as we go forward.

Ms Notley: Well, the solve would just be to say: sorry; it's going to get fixed.

Over the past year multiple staff at the Mis counted almost two months that the machine was not functional. Dr. Anderson says that even after the emergency room upgrades, without fixing this machine, quote: you're immediately going to hamstringing us from being able to do our job properly. End quote. So to the Premier: why is Alberta spending $65 million to update the Mis emergency room and still not fixing the broken scanner? How does this make any sense at all?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're working through the problems one at a time, and in point of fact we discovered that there were 55 operating rooms within our public hospitals that were not in operation, including one that was out of operation in Camrose simply because the HVAC needed to be fixed. These are the kinds of things that we're discovering now that we have got Dr. John Cowell in place as our official administrator. I work very closely with him as well as the Health minister and the new CEO, Mauro Chies, and we'll be able to address these issues as we find them.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, these folks have been in charge for the last three and a half years, regardless of when Dr. Cowell showed up.

Now, Dr. Anderson said that it is difficult to get some patients the necessary CT scans within the recommended four-hour window for proper stroke care. This includes delaying treatments that would otherwise reverse the effects of strokes. Now, Mr. Speaker, if even one Albertan avoids lifelong disability, quite frankly, the investment is worth it. This is for a whole hospital. Will the Premier today reverse her decision and commit that this machine will be replaced?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, proper governance is that we let the CEO make decisions overseen by an official administrator, and the nice part about having an official administrator in place is that I and the Health minister are able to raise these issues. So I'll be raising the issue with Dr. Cowell. I'll be happy to get back to her.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Hundreds of doctors have been raising the issue, Mr. Speaker.

Prescription Contraception Coverage Policy

Ms Notley: Now, meanwhile the Alberta NDP has recently proposed a life-changing policy for women's health care, universal access to contraception at no cost, yet for more than a week now this Premier has refused the idea, arguing that somehow it's about choice. Last week she said, quote: we want to make sure there's a full range of coverage, and that's the reason we continue to support choice. Mr. Speaker, if the choice is between free-coverage NDP and the pay-more UCP, why won't the Premier just admit that the best choice for Alberta women is to vote NDP?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said many times before, Alberta's government supports protecting choice for women, accessing reproductive health care services and products in Alberta. We have coverage for many contraceptive drug and health products. It's provided to Albertans who are enrolled in government-sponsored drug and supplemental health benefits plans. It includes oral contraceptives. It includes injectable contraceptives. It includes intrauterine devices and other support for women in their reproductive health care choices. We're quite happy to provide this level of support.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this goes to the heart of who this Premier is. She doesn't understand the conceptual difference between universal free health care and health care people pay for out of pocket. That's why she can't answer this question.

Now, Cathy* says: I have a great plan, but it doesn't cover IUDs. Diane* says: relying on private insurance will again leave out some of our most vulnerable women. And Joanne* says: someone should inform our Premier that very few young women have their own private health plan coverage. Why is the Premier ignoring these women?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite well knows that the Canada Health Act ensures that no hospital services and that no doctor services are paid for out of pocket. We do know also because she has a health spending account, along with all the other politicians who are in this Chamber, that covers all the variety of things that are not covered by health care. This is the reason why we support having lots of options. That includes both public as well as private so that women are covered in the full range of choices that they make, and we're going to continue to support that choice.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, for so many women the choice to pay is no choice at all. J.J.* says: money should never be a barrier to accessing birth control. Rhiannon* says: if it was free, I'd have saved enough to pay my student loans or put a down payment on a house. And Rebecca* says: including contraception in health benefits is what true equity looks like; I can't wait for May 29. Me neither because that's when Albertans will get better universal public health care, no question.

Ms Smith: I didn't hear a question there, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and the Official Opposition House Leader.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago the Ontario labour minister announced that they were expanding WCB coverage of firefighters impacted by two specific types of cancer. What's more, Ontario made the coverage retroactive all the way back to January 1, 1960. This government now for weeks has been claiming that it is impossible to provide retroactive coverage specific to the heroes of the Fort McMurray wildfire. Now, this government has had a few weeks to look at what Ontario is doing. Will they follow their lead and support our amendment so that not a single hero from the Fort McMurray wildfire has to fear not being covered?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I'm tired of the member opposite playing politics with this issue. You know who was in power when the one member died in the Fort McMurray fire? That minister. That government was in power. That member was the minister. She had the opportunity then to make it retroactive. She did nothing. This government is actually doing the right thing. We're not going to follow Ontario and do the wrong thing; we're going to do the right thing. That's what this government is all about, being smart and caring.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, that minister has been part of this government for four years, and they have done nothing to support these workers.

The UCP seems to think that it's a small number of firefighters who will not benefit from Bill 9 and that they've done enough. On this side of the House we believe that every firefighter who went to fight the Beast should be covered. The UCP talks about a fairness process, but real fairness would be to pass our amendment and ensure that not a single firefighter or their family is forced to fight a bureaucracy to have their claim covered. Is the Premier truly interested in fairness for firefighters, and if so, will she overrule this minister and make sure they get coverage?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the member knows that the WCB in Alberta follows the principle that today's employers must pay for today's claims. Now, the issue is retroactivity, but the truth is that the solution is the fairness process in the WCB. The WCB there is for employers. This member is playing politics, and she knows that there is only one possible member that might have been covered by the retroactivity, and that member knows that that member died on her watch. Why didn't she come forward then and deal with retroactivity? She knew it was the right thing to do not to deal with it that way.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario labour minister said when announcing retroactive coverage that it was important that front-line workers get the care they need, and we agree. The Conservative government of Ontario has provided retroactive coverage going back 62 years, but this UCP government can't bring themselves to provide retroactive coverage for seven for a unique, catastrophic event. It's not too late to do the right thing. We can pass this amendment together. Will the Premier support our amendment to provide coverage for all of these brave Albertans, or does she think it's their fault for developing cancer?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we are a smart and caring government. That's why we're here on this side of the House. The people of Alberta rejected them because they had chances to make serious amendments to different pieces of legislation and they didn't. What they want to do instead is play politics with firefighters' lives. I'm not going to do that. We're going to make sure the fairness process is there. We're sending a clear message to WCB that they better cover these firefighters. They know it. We know it. Why won't they get onboard and cover it and support our firefighters?

2:00 Energy Company Liability

Mr. Schmidt: I've heard loud and clear from Albertans that they don't want this Premier handing over $20 billion to bad actors to clean up messes that they are already legally responsible to clean up. I know the Premier and every member of the UCP cabinet and caucus have been hearing this feedback from Albertans as well. I have a motion before the House later today, an opportunity for all MLAs to uphold the principle of polluter pay and to condemn any use of public revenue to pay off companies to do something that they're already legally required to do. Will the Premier support this motion?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I do support the concept of polluter pay. It's part of the reason why this government, starting this year, has required all energy companies to spend 3 per cent of their liability cleaning up their existing well sites, $740 million, and it's going to be increasing year after year by 9 per cent per year. They're going to be spending their own money cleaning up their own liability. We know that we have a $30 billion liability, and we've got to get started.

They had the opportunity to come through with a similar type of program when they were in power; they chose not to. We're going to make sure that we have the investment there so that we can clear the liability.

Mr. Schmidt: I'm quite proud of the fact that we didn't start a $20 billion giveaway to oil and gas companies to clean up their messes.

The UCP has a nasty habit of refusing to debate issues that highlight how totally out of touch they are with regular Albertans. When my colleague brought forward a motion opposing separatism, the UCP used procedural tricks to make sure that MLAs never got a chance to speak to it. It's deeply antidemocratic and disrespectful to private members and the Albertans who sent us to the Legislature. Will the Premier instruct her House leader that there will be no procedural tricks this afternoon and that all MLAs will be able to vote on this $20 billion giveaway to oil and gas?

The Speaker: I know that the hon. member knows that question period is the time to ask about government policy. This seems to be a question specifically addressing private members' business, which isn't the purview of the government, but if the Premier wants to answer it, she's welcome to do so.

Ms Smith: I think debating the issue of the outstanding liability on our inactive well sites is important. I've been thinking it's important since I first started talking about it, all the way back in the 1990s. As a result, as a landowner lobbyist, you bet. As a landowner advocate, I think landowners deserve to have these well sites cleaned up. Landowners deserve to know that they're going to be investing year after year in making sure these inactive sites are finally taken care of once and for all. It's unfortunate that too often they've just been pushed forward decade after decade. We're not going to let that happen anymore.

Mr. Schmidt: It's unfortunate that this Premier wants landowners to pay oil companies $20 billion to clean up the problem. On this side of the House we oppose the giveaway of $20 billion of Albertans' money to a small group of the Premier's friends. But Albertans want to know where their UCP MLAs stand. They want to know which MLAs are in favour of handing over $20 billion to a small number of bad companies who have failed to clean up their own messes. Will the Premier allow a free vote of all of her MLAs, including cabinet ministers, on this motion this afternoon?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, if you do the math on what it is that we're requiring energy companies to pay out of their own pocket year after year, $740 million this year, increasing 9 per cent year after year, within 20 years, maybe 25, we should be able to address the $30 billion inactive well site liability. The approach that we've taken as a government has been to make sure that we're holding these energy companies to account, and that's what we're going to continue to do. I think this is a very important issue to debate. I just wish they'd take yes for an answer. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge has a question.

Support for Newcomers

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Immigrants are key to continuing Alberta's economic success. They come to our province and bring skills that help labour shortages in key sectors and help local economies. Last week Alberta's government held the Premier's Summit on Fairness for Newcomers. At this conference immigrant-serving organizations and nonprofits gathered to discuss how we can better serve newcomers in our province. To the Premier: can you tell Albertans, especially new immigrants, what the government learned at this conference and how the government is moving forward to support newcomers?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that great question. The member is correct to say that newcomers are paramount to Alberta's success. I heard from newcomers and immigrant-serving agencies how we can better support them when they arrive in Alberta and how the programs we already have in place are working to help these newcomers settle in our province. We are working hard to attract and retain newcomers in the province, and I have good news: it is working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Deputy Premier. Given that Alberta's government has made it a clear priority to increase immigration into the province through the Alberta advantage immigration program and given that Alberta has received a substantial increase to the number of nominations through AAIP and given that newcomers are the key to Alberta's continued success, to the Deputy Premier: can you please inform Albertans what this government is doing to ensure that these newcomers have the tools and resources for Albertans?

Mr. Madu: Mr. Speaker, we are laser focused on helping newcomers settle in our great province. With the increase to AAIP nominations, we will need to continue to support newcomers as more of them make their way to Alberta. At the summit our government announced that Budget 2023 will provide $23.8 million for vital settlement and language support. In addition, Budget '23 is providing $27.3 million for displaced Ukrainians fleeing Putin's war machine, and for them, we have changed the AAIP program to prioritize newcomers with close family connections in the province to ensure that when newcomers come to Alberta, they have the support they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Deputy Premier for the answer. Given that Alberta is a province where many people of all nationalities, cultures, and religions come together to create a province that truly embodies multiculturalism, once again to the Deputy Premier: can you please inform Albertans what is being done to tackle racism and hate in the province and what this government is doing to ensure that everyone, from all walks of life, feels welcome and safe in Alberta?

Mr. Madu: Mr. Speaker, we condemn all forms of racism, hate, and prejudice. We have done a lot to tackle racism. Let me list some of the things that we have done. We are working closely with the Alberta Anti-Racism Advisory Council to help shape policy and learn from lived experiences. At the summit we announced $8 million over three years for the new and groundbreaking ethnocultural grant, $1.5 million over three years to fund the continuation of the multiculturalism and antiracism grant program. We are establishing the Premier's council on multiculturalism, and much more to be done.

Anaesthesia Care

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, surgeries are being cancelled and delayed across the province due to a shortage of health care workers. This is a crisis that's a direct result of the UCP's war on health care. The biggest bottleneck in the system is the ongoing shortage of anaesthesiologists, indispensable members of surgical teams that the UCP have made it harder to recruit and retain. Now, recently I've heard concerning reports that anaesthesiologists are being sent out of public hospitals to go work in privately run clinics. To the Health minister: is he aware of any plans whatsoever by the government or AHS to pull anaesthesiologists out of our hospitals to work in private surgical clinics?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We have one public health system. Alberta Health Services has contracted with a number of chartered surgical facilities to continue to be able to provide surgeries. The most recent example is in regard to hip and knee surgeries in Calgary. AHS assigns the doctors to do them – so they may be at the Rocky – as well as the anaesthesiologists. Anaesthesiologists are being assigned to chartered surgical facilities, but this is part of our overall approach to get caught up on surgeries.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, given, Mr. Speaker, that I'm hearing these plans to pull doctors out of Alberta hospitals are driven by contracts that guarantee a certain number of cases and the staff to perform them if needed and given that that type of contract would provide all the reward to private clinic owners and pile all the risk and delay onto our hospitals and Albertans waiting for surgeries, can the Health minister tell Albertans if he has approved such contracts, contracts like that, that would result in private operators getting rich at the expense of Albertans left to wait longer for their surgeries?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, the assumptions that the hon. member is making are simply incorrect. This is one public system. It is publicly funded and publicly administered. We have made agreements with chartered surgical facilities to expand the capacity to be able to do surgeries. We've had success in doing this with ophthalmology. We are having success in driving down the times in waiting for hips and knees. We are assigning the same doctors, whether they're at the Rockyview, the Foothills, or a chartered surgical facility in Calgary, for example. It's the same doctors, the same anaesthesiologists, and we're getting success for . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that I didn't hear a no and given that contracts like that would be designed purely for private clinics to profit from and not to promote the health of Albertans and given that one of the ways that's done is by sending only the simplest, lowest risk surgeries to private clinics, leaving the most complicated and hazardous procedures for the public system, and given that Albertans have a right to know how their health dollars are being spent, a simple question for the Health minister: will he commit to releasing all of the contracts signed with these private surgical clinics? Yes or no?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, sadly, that question demonstrates a lack of understanding by those on the other side in terms of how our surgical system works. This is a single public system. It's publicly paid for, publicly administered. Even though we're using chartered surgical facilities, that's to expand capacity to get surgeries done, because, quite frankly, Albertans are waiting far too long, but we're making progress. In fact, by using chartered surgical facilities, not only are we reducing the wait times, but we're actually reducing the costs. But it's the same doctors, the same anaesthesiologists in our entire system. We're making progress, and we're going to continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Content on Somalia in Educational Curricula

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few hours ago we announced that, if elected, Alberta's NDP government will create a Somali curriculum for Alberta schools. The Somali community is growing significantly in Alberta, and we want to make sure Somali students have an opportunity to learn their language and culture in Alberta classrooms. I am so proud to be an MLA with a party that acknowledges and values creating and championing diverse curriculums and cultures for Alberta students. To the current minister: why didn't the UCP?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to announce to all of the Assembly here that that's what our school authorities do each and every day. They have the ability to react and to promote the languages that are within their schools. In fact, in my former school division we had over 53 different languages being spoken, and the school authorities themselves, when there's a large community, will actually introduce language instruction, language culture. They're announcing nothing, really.

Ms Hoffman: Given that that's false and given that creating a Somali curriculum is about celebrating the vibrant language and culture of Somalia while ensuring that youth are supported in their learning in Alberta schools and given that we in the NDP are committed to making sure that all students in Alberta schools have the tools they need to be supported and given that that clearly hasn't been a priority under the UCP, we are committed to offering a Somali curriculum. Why didn't the current Education minister or anyone in the UCP make this a priority? They've had four years.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, school authorities have the flexibility to develop or acquire locally developed courses to address particular student and/or community needs, including language and culture courses. We do that on an ongoing basis in education each and every day. We celebrate every community: the Somali community, the Filipino community. The member opposite made an announcement a week or so ago on the Filipino community, but you know what? I had an opportunity to speak to the consul general of the Philippines. We had a great conversation about what we can do.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the UCP's curriculum set off alarm bells for students, staff, and families due to its Eurocentric approach to history and its lack of cultural diversity and given that Alberta's diversity is our greatest strength and should be reflected in our curriculum and given that we are honoured to work with educators, parents, and community leaders to ensure that Somali customs, traditions, language, and song are taught in Alberta schools, can the current minister explain why she would rather spend time defending Chris Champion and his backwards curriculum instead of offering students a chance to learn about the many cultures and languages and histories that make Alberta such a great place?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll defend our curriculum any day of the week, because it is knowledge rich. It allows for students to learn. They want students learning from decades-old curriculum. The science curriculum: 1996, for heaven's sake. That's what they want. Our curriculum, in fact, had more to address antiracism. The previous draft from the previous government: zero on antiracism. We actually have more to celebrate communities. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.
The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Rural Mental Health Services

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every young person in Alberta deserves the opportunity to access mental health supports, access treatment, pursue recovery, and live a healthy life. Since being elected as the MLA for Livingstone-Macleod, I frequently hear of the struggles that rural Albertans, especially students, are facing when trying to access mental health supports. To the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction: how will Budget 2023 increase accessibility to mental health supports for rural Albertans and ensure that more families will get the help that they need and deserve?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Supporting all Albertans in their pursuit of recovery from mental health challenges is a priority of my ministry. We're supporting funding to Counselling Alberta to expand mental health services so Albertans, especially in rural areas, can get accessible and affordable counselling services. We've also increased funding to 211 to better connect callers to locally relevant supports, including in rural communities. We will continue to expand services to support more Albertans in their pursuit of recovery.

I want to thank the hon. member for the timely question given the fact that we have the Rural Municipalities of Alberta spring convention on . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker and through you to the minister for his answer. Given that the government will invest $92 million over three years to provide critical mental health supports for children and youth across Alberta in partnership with CASA Mental Health and given that the Livingstone Range school division in my riding recently received a grant to provide students in southern Alberta with a new and innovative mental health pilot program, what other approaches is the government taking to address the mental health needs of young rural Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2023 contains record-level investments for my ministry, $275 million in total. Contrast that with – in 2019, when we came in, that was only $87 million according to the line item under them, so huge gains to fix problems that were left behind courtesy of the NDP. However, I do want to mention, as spoken by the hon. member, that, yes, just recently we announced $92 million in funding for CASA Mental Health to expand youth mental health supports to ensure youth across Alberta can receive treatment closer to home.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that students in rural communities have a hard time accessing mental health supports in their communities and given that our teachers often bear the burden of trying to provide mental health supports in our schools, to the same minister: how will pilot projects like the one in Livingstone Range school division be evaluated and implemented in other schools across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Over the next two years Alberta Education is supporting close to 60 mental health pilots across the entire province to improve K to 12 student well-being. Each of these community-based projects is unique and will bring school authorities, mental health service providers, and other local organizations together to directly address the underpinning issues. I look forward to reviewing the outcomes of these pilots along with the Minister of Education, and I just want to say that this is a perfect example to underscore just how important youth mental health services are to this government.

Small-business Support and Employment Training

Mr. Dang: Mr. Speaker, this government claims that they are investing in the economy and boosting job growth. While we see millions and millions in corporate handouts to big businesses, the UCP budget shows that their actions don't match their words. We all know that the backbone of Alberta's economy is actually small business, and the lack of support this government is providing to support Alberta small businesses is appalling. To the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development: why are you leaving small-business owners behind?

Mr. Jean: Interesting question coming from this particular member, Mr. Speaker, and his creativity with small-business enterprises.

But, Mr. Speaker, 97 tax increases in four years from the NDP, a carbon tax – a surprise – on everything: I don't think this member or the party that he used to belong to until he was removed have anything to talk about on small businesses at all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister clearly has nothing to say about the issue with any substance and given that small-business owners continue to say that there isn't enough support, that costs such as inflation continue to threaten their livelihoods and families, to the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development again: can you explain to small-business owners why more funding and resources aren't being invested into expanding programs like the Alberta jobs now program, which is actually aimed at creating jobs?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the member may not be aware. If he came to the House more often . . .

Mr. Dang: Point of order.

Mr. Jean: . . . he would recognize that the parliamentary secretary of small business is actually doing a tour across Alberta to find out exactly what small businesses need right now, Mr. Speaker. What they don't need more of is the NDP. Let's be clear; 97 tax increases along with that special surprise called the carbon tax on everything did not help at all. What is helping is a government that is laser focused on making sure that there is enough labour here in Alberta to fill the jobs, and there's just not. We need more people. Come on out to Alberta; there's a job waiting for you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister is a learned member of this Assembly, and he'll know that referring to the presence or absence of any member is wildly unparliamentary, and I think it may be possible that an apology will be coming later.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has his third question.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government seems more focused on spending millions of dollars buying advertising space and injecting jobs into downtown Toronto than Alberta – we know that Albertans who are already here want real opportunities for skills training. Can the minister explain to this House why there isn't a plan in place for skills training, upgrading, and support for a larger workforce?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we do have a plan. We have the lowest corporate tax in Canada. We have received the highest grade from the CFIB on red tape reduction. We have no PST. We have the lowest personal taxes. We have some of Canada's lowest urban housing prices. We have so much to offer here in Alberta. We need more people. We need more people to fill the jobs. There are 100,000 jobs right now in Alberta waiting to be filled, and that includes in the small-business sector. That's what we're trying to do. That's why we invested over $600 million in creating jobs and training people here in Alberta. We're getting the job done.

Delton Elementary School in Edmonton

Member Irwin: Delton elementary in my riding is a fabulous school with great teachers and students, but it's currently bursting at the seams. Due to three previous school closures in the area, Delton now takes in students from all over central Edmonton. The library has been cut in half, and the daycare has been displaced to make room for all the kids. Delton has also been slated as the catchment school for the new Blatchford development, which is expected to bring hundreds of new students into the community in coming years. It needs to be replaced, so I just ask: will the Education minister please do the right thing and prioritize a new school for the Delton community?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. The member opposite should know, if she doesn't know, that, in fact, it's school authorities that prioritize the schools that are needed. In fact, Edmonton public school did get all five of their top priorities in the capital plan. As Edmonton public continues to put forward their school authorities, of course, they do look at all the metrics. There is a very, very detailed gated process that it has to go through.

Member Irwin: That's a no for Delton. Not only is Delton dealing with space issues; the school is also inaccessible, with access to most of the nearly 80-year-old building not possible for those with mobility challenges, and the school is aging, no longer meeting modern health or safety standards. In the past year they've experienced basement flooding, rodent concerns, and challenges with temperature control. The conclusion from all assessments is clear: a full replacement of the building is the most cost-effective approach for Delton. Given these serious concerns, a replacement is absolutely needed, but the Education minister, as you just heard, won't commit. So will the Infrastructure minister please do the right thing and step up for the Delton community?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, just to detail the gated process, it is a 10-step process. School authorities gave us their top asks. It goes through the process. It is determined whether it is a health and safety issue, whether it is an enrolment growth issue, whether it is a legal issue, whether there are additional measures that need to be looked at. It is the school authority that has the ability to put forward its top asks, and this has not risen at this time.

Member Irwin: A whole lot of mental gymnastics from that Education minister, because we know the cost of a replacement school for the communities that I represent is but a fraction of this government's budget surplus and but a fraction of the $20 billion that this Premier plans to give away to already profitable oil and gas companies. Albertans know that an Alberta NDP government will prioritize good schools, good schools for kids in all neighbourhoods, mature or otherwise. Can the Premier just explain for all of us why she's forcing kids to learn in overcrowded classrooms in old schools so she can just help her Premier's friends get a handout to clean up their messes? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. member certainly knows the stretching of boundaries when it comes to a preamble. For future reference we will use that question as a perfect example of what is not allowed.

The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that in the past the Edmonton school district had put that as one of their asks, but when it was evaluated, it was not a health and safety issue, it was not in a high-growth area, so it did not rise to the top. In fact, Edmonton public school has prioritized its high-growth areas, and they did receive their top five asks.

Some Hon. Members: No, they didn't.

Member LaGrange: Yes, they did.

Whether they tend to say it or not, they did receive them. Mr. Speaker, under the NDP, only four schools in Edmonton; under us, 16. Sorry; eight schools . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Crop Insurance Premiums

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, over the past few weeks the opposition has fuelled much confusion and misinformation about crop insurance premiums, and farmers in my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville are worried by rumours of a 60 per cent increase in premiums. Since I know this number is incorrect, can the minister of agriculture please set the record straight and inform the Assembly of the actual change to crop insurance premiums?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'm happy to continue to debunk these myths that are out there. The budgeted change from last year's actual will be about 22 per cent. It will align closely with the year-over-year changes in the crop values – for example, hard red spring wheat, 17 per cent increase; canola, 12 per cent; barley, 9 per cent; yellow field peas, 2 to 3 per cent – as it always does.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, given that crop insurance premiums are meant to reflect the value of crops and given that the average 22 per cent increase in premiums this year seems like a much more reasonable number than the 60 per cent that some opposition members have been pushing, can the minister please explain how crop insurance premiums, including the 22 per cent average increase this year, are determined?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. The formula is set. It includes your area risk rating, which does change year to year over time; your own individual historical yield data; the premium rate; your elected coverage – you can choose between 50 and 80 per cent coverage – and the crop price. I just would like to say for the House that coverage has increased from $4.8 billion to almost $10 billion over the last two years, and $4.1 billion has been paid out by this program over the last two years to Alberta farmers.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, given that our farmers are the backbone of not only Alberta's economy but our very sustenance and given that Alberta's government stands with our farmers and our agricultural sector, can the minister of agriculture please share with this House some of the many steps this government has taken to support our farmers?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. If you ate today, thank a farmer.

We've done many things for the agriculture industry. One thing we're all very proud of is the ag processing investment tax credit, which hopefully over the next two weeks will be passed by this House. I think it'll do some great things to level the playing field with some of the jurisdictions next to us. I should point out another $49.9 million to continue the expansion and modernization of our irrigation network; $58.5 million for the first year of our new five-year partnership with the feds, the sustainable Canadian agricultural partnership. The list is long.

Digital Media Tax Credit Policy

Ms Goehring: In the UCP's most recent and, hopefully, last budget they completely failed the digital media sector in this province despite promising to restore the digital media tax credit after cancelling it in their first budget. The sector was left empty-handed. On the very same day the UCP's budget was tabled, B.C. extended their tax credit for another five years. Why is this government risking our competitiveness by not restoring the digital media tax credit?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, what does risk our competitiveness as a province is an NDP government. We had four years of their leadership showing us exactly how detrimental that would be to our entire economy. We saw 183,000 jobs lost under their leadership, and it comes as no surprise given their attachment to the federal carbon tax. If they really cared about business and investment in this province, they would stand up to Justin Trudeau and Jagmeet Singh and demand that they rescind the carbon tax and put Alberta back into the most competitive position it could possibly be in.

Ms Goehring: Given that a report from the Entertainment Software Association of Canada showed Alberta only received 4 per cent of national investment into the industry while Quebec captured 43 per cent of investment and British Columbia received 27 per cent and given that Quebec and B.C. have their own digital media tax credit and given that the report also showed Alberta is missing out on investment by not implementing a digital media tax credit, why is this minister so determined to send job-creating investment to other provinces?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, if there's anyone who has a track record of sending investment out of Alberta to other provinces, it's the NDP. Look at what they did in their four years in power, chasing tens of billions of dollars away from Alberta. When we were knocking on doors talking to Albertans, you know what we heard? We heard grown men crying because they had lost their jobs and lost their ability to provide for their families. That is what the recipe of the NDP will bring back to Alberta. We won't stand for it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Goehring: Given that a digital media tax credit could also support a wide variety of other work for talented Albertans in the film industry and given that Alberta has seen major movies and TV shows such as Brokeback Mountain, Ghostbusters, and The Last of Us filmed here and given that many people who have jobs in the interactive digital media space also work in film and television – so these talented Albertans may be losing other opportunities – I will ask the minister again: why hasn't he gotten the job done, and why is the UCP sending these jobs out of province?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the member opposite highlighting our success in Alberta under our leadership. We've gone from a hundred million dollars a year in film and television investment to almost a billion dollars this year in film and television investment. The choice for Albertans in May is clear. Do they want another NDP government that will make everything more expensive through the carbon tax and through their partnership and cozy relationship with Justin Trudeau and shutting down our energy industry and chasing investment away, or do they want responsible, fiscally prudent management from a Conservative government that is compassionate and will deliver jobs for the future? I know which way I'm voting, and I know which way the majority of Albertans are most likely to vote. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Government Adviser Contracts

Mr. Bilous: David Knight Legg is notorious for his lavish expenses while working in the Premier's office. He billed taxpayers tens of thousands of dollars to stay in the finest hotels that included marble bathrooms, vitamin showers, and an art nouveau champagne bar. He is a symbol of all the waste and entitlement of the Jason Kenney government. In estimates we found out that Mr. Knight Legg is still being paid almost $10,000 per month by Albertans. Mr. Knight Legg no longer works for the government nor Invest Alberta, so can the minister please explain why Alberta taxpayers are paying him this generous salary?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, in a globally competitive environment it's important to get the Alberta brand out there to generate leads and build the relationships and, ultimately, close deals. That is the work Alberta was created to do. Mr. Knight Legg has been helpful in his advisory role during the evolution of Invest Alberta, and he's also been working on investment leads, including the EV battery manufacturing, family office investments, and energy companies and private equity firms, just as examples.

Mr. Bilous: Given that Mr. Knight Legg was earning almost $200,000 as a principal adviser to the Premier while expensing tens of thousands of dollars to Albertans and given that all we know is that he stayed in a boutique hotel which promises a one-of-a-kind luxury hotel experience at a home to aristocrats since 1867 and invites guests to release your inner bon vivant and given that it's not clear what Mr. Knight Legg accomplished in his role besides racking up points on his credit cards, what exactly has Mr. Knight Legg delivered for Albertans for the hundreds of thousands of taxpayer dollars he's received?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that our sponsorship with Alpine Canada was a three-year agreement, and it started in 2021, and it's in its last year now. This agreement provides advertising, branding opportunities for Invest Alberta at key Nordic events. These opportunities are aimed at attracting attention from European businesses and audiences overseas watching the events. They're also opportunities to host events, with some citing Alpine events as their catalyst for finally deciding to come to Alberta.

Mr. Bilous: A $750,000 boondoggle is what Alpine Canada investment is.

Given that Mr. Knight Legg left the Premier's office to become CEO of Invest Alberta, where he got a pay bump to $250,000, and given that he left that role after less than a year but stuck around as an adviser to the board and given that he's still being paid by Albertans while living in Singapore even though Alberta already has a trade office in Singapore, why is the UCP still shovelling cash at someone with such a terrible record of abusing taxpayer dollars?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I find it really rich coming from the members opposite concerned about . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Whoa. Whoa. Whoa.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, it's ridiculous hearing from the members opposite about their concern for taxpayers' dollars. When they were in office, they didn't respect Alberta taxpayers for one minute. They raised taxes. They brought in regulatory burden. They chased tens of billions of dollars of investment out, with it 183,000 jobs, and perpetual deficits. We've done better. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East has a question.

Homeless Supports

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy is thriving, with more families working better jobs and more revenue into our province. This has allowed Alberta's government to support the most vulnerable populations, which includes those experiencing homelessness. In Calgary a recent decline in homelessness is showing that our government's efforts are working. To the hon. Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services: what has our government done to support Albertans experiencing homelessness?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Unfortunately, homelessness is a devastating reality that too many Albertans are facing in our communities. It's a complex issue, and it's an issue that this government has taken seriously. It's why we've significantly increased funding in this most recent budget but also over the last three years to help make sure that we have more resources and supports for our homeless-serving agencies and those who help people overcome the experience of homelessness. It's why we've also significantly increased funding for building and expanding more affordable housing as well as put more funding into our rapid rehousing programs. It's working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that there are thousands of Albertans living with addiction who are also experiencing homelessness and given that this has significantly increased the need for recovery supports across the entire province, what supports are being provided to those experiencing addiction in Calgary, and how is this government's approach different from the previous government's?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Addiction and homelessness have affected every community in Alberta, and Calgary is no exception. In Calgary, as part of the $187 million commitment to address addiction and homelessness, there will be a series of initiatives, including further increasing addiction treatment capacity, expanding medical detox services, and, of course, services that reduce harm. Albertans experiencing addiction or mental health challenges can contact 211 for information on services within their community. Again, if passed, Budget 2023 will add $275 million to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. minister. Given that here in Alberta our winters bring an immense amount of danger to those experiencing homelessness and given that the challenges being faced are extremely complex and require significant supports, including emergency shelter, can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services tell the House: what have you done and what are you going to do to provide warmth and safety to those experiencing homelessness in Alberta?

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. Of course, as I've already mentioned, we're investing in increasing affordable housing as well as our rapid rehousing program to make sure that people experiencing homelessness have a home as well as what the Mental Health and Addiction minister just talked about, filling out that continuum of care so people with addictions and mental health concerns are able to find the appropriate supports within their community. We're also working at expanding out services in communities outside of Calgary and Edmonton so that people can get the support that they need in their hometowns. We're also working to partner with Indigenous communities to make sure that we have culturally appropriate supports as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue with the remainder of the daily Routine.

Journée internationale de la Francophonie

Ms Renaud: C'est avec grand plaisir que je prends la parole devant vous en cette journée spéciale pour célébrer la Journée internationale de la Francophonie en Alberta. Comme nous le savons, la Francophonie n'est pas seulement la langue française mais plutôt une communauté de personnes qui partagent un lien, des valeurs et des traditions communes qui ont été transmis de génération en génération.

De la France à l'Afrique en passant par l'Asie et l'Alberta, la Francophonie a enrichi le monde de la littérature, de la musique, de l'art et de la cuisine. Ici en Alberta nous avons le privilège d'avoir une communauté francophone florissante qui incarne l'esprit de la Francophonie.

Ici en Alberta aussi l'éducation en langue française est devenue une partie de plus en plus importante de notre système d'éducation. Que vous soyez étudiant dans une école d'immersion française ou quelqu'un qui a suivi des cours de français jusqu'à l'âge adulte, la langue française a ouvert de nouvelles possibilités et expériences pour beaucoup d'Albertains. Nous savons qu'il faut que l'éducation de la maternelle jusqu'à la 12e année et l'éducation postsecondaire soient accessibles en français à tous les Albertains.

Souvenons-nous aussi des personnes qui ont travaillé si fort pour préserver la langue française et la culture francophone en Alberta. Des enseignants et éducateurs qui inspirent nos jeunes aux leaders communautaires qui organisent des événements et des activités culturelles, nous avons une dette de gratitude envers ceux et celles qui ont contribué à soutenir notre communauté francophone.

En terminant, je tiens à féliciter tous les francophones de l'Alberta et du monde entier en cette journée spéciale.

Merci beaucoup, et joyeuse Journée internationale de la Francophonie!

Mental Health and Addiction Strategy

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, did you know that I went from the most trusted profession to the least trusted profession? Before the glamour of all this – that being a legislator – I was a paramedic firefighter. My job was to help people. The emergency calls that I hated the most, though, were the calls for the homeless and the drug addicted. Over the years responding to so many, I found those incidents to be the most frustrating. I was cursed at, and I was spat at. I'd pick them up soaked in urine and covered in feces. I've had these customers take swings at me, threaten me, beg me for drugs, fake an injury for a shot of morphine, and I'd lost all sympathy for them. I was bitter, and I was jaded.

Interestingly enough, it was this job working as an MLA where I learned a different perspective. I still remember walking into the Ministry of Mental Health and Addiction, where I was surprised by the ex-addicts working in there. They took the time to tell me their stories. Then I was visiting my local shelters, meeting the staff and, more importantly, their clients. I was introduced to a whole different world, where people are trying to break free from a terrible cycle.

I realized with pride what our government was doing, and it was doing good. From thoroughly investigating the concept of safe supply to creating recovery communities to provide long-term treatment to addiction, I can say that it's all been honest and noble. The fact that our government has been focusing on recovery and treatment, doing things like creating 8,000-plus treatment spaces, removing user fees for addiction treatment, developing drug courts as an alternative to simply jailing addicts for their petty crimes, and so much more, demonstrates the real desire demonstrated by government to truly help the most vulnerable.

Though politicians might be perceived as the least trusted profession, I can say that being an elected official taught me the most about having compassion for the most vulnerable. I hope that people respect their elected representatives just a little bit more, because the work they often do goes unheralded and does truly impact so many.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

NDP and UCP Policies

Ms Ganley: An election is a conversation about the future. Albertans have a choice between two starkly different visions of that future. One vision is the UCP vision, where we seek the future in the past; where our curriculum teaches children all the skills they need to survive in the 1920s; where we deny science, whether it's vaccines or climate change; where we scorn or hide our differences rather than celebrating them; where we pit the economy and the environment against each other and fail at both; a future where we survive by being at one another's throats; where a child's potential is determined not by her ideas or her effort but by her parents' bank balance; a UCP future where seniors can't be sure if the pensions they paid into will be there; where we give $20 billion away to insiders while people struggle and their government muses about making them pay for a doctor and tells them to get a better job. It seems pretty bleak.

But there's another way, a better way, a better future, a future where we move forward together; where we invest in the technologies that we need to grow our economy and protect our environment; where we invest in people and in their skills through postsecondary; a future where each and every child gets a world-class education; where cancer is something we treat you for, not blame you for. The Alberta NDP has a plan, a better plan to create a resilient economy and good-paying jobs, to create a better medical system, where Albertans can see their family doctor within 48 hours.

In just 70 days Albertans will have a choice. We will pick a vision of the future: one where we look to the past, where insiders get rewarded while everyone else gets left behind, or one where we look with hope to the future, where we invest in each other and build a better future together. I think we all deserve a better future, and I believe that on May 29 that's exactly what Alberta will get.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At 2:22 the hon. Member for Edmonton-South rose on a point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of a Member

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the benefit of the House, I'll try to keep my comments brief. I do not have the benefit of the Blues, but the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development made a statement during question period similar to: if he spent more time in this House.

Now, I would draw your attention to chapter 13 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, where it's referenced: "Allusions to the presence or absence of a Member or Minister in the Chamber are unacceptable." I'd also further refer you to a ruling that was made on December 3, 2020, which is in Hansard, page 3783, where the former Deputy Government House Leader argued that it was well established these allusions were prohibited by clear precedent. Mr. Speaker, in that case you ruled that it was indeed a member from the opposition caucus who had made a comment alluding to the presence or absence of a member and that they had to withdraw and apologize.

I'd also further refer you to Hansard, page 2049, on July 15, 2020, where you rejected comments from the former Government House Leader where he argued that referring to someone "while he was away" was still unacceptable. You ruled in that case that despite not including the words "while he was away from the Chamber," this allusion was still inappropriate and demanded a withdrawal.

In this case I believe it is clear the minister referred specifically to the presence or absence of a member in the Chamber without even the allusion that it could have been at other times. I'd ask that you find this to be a point of order and the minister be asked to withdraw and apologize.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Those sound like good rulings.

The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say how pleased I am that the member is following rules and pointing out rules that this House should follow.

As a member I want to withdraw and apologize for that comment. Thank you.

The Speaker: I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 203

Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022

The Chair: Are there members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Madam Chair, every day Canadians across the country tragically lose their lives as the consequence of unsafe driving. Oftentimes those who perish as a result of their own unsafe driving are our youngest drivers, testing the limits of their vehicles in an attempt to impress their friends. We had an excellent exchange in the House regarding this bill, and in light of the concerns raised, I'm proposing an amendment.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge, just wait till I have a copy of the amendment, and then we'll have you read it into the record.

Hon. members, this will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge, please read it into the record.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move that Bill 203, Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022, be amended in section 5 in the proposed section 88.21 as follows: (a) in subsection (1) by striking out "If a peace officer has reasonable grounds" and substituting "Subject to subsection (2.1), if a peace officer has reasonable grounds"; (b) by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) A peace officer may not take the actions referred to in subsection (1) in respect of a contravention referred to in subsection 2(b) if

(a) the contravention occurs on a portion of a highway immediately following a decrease in the maximum speed limit on that highway, and

b) the driver of the vehicle did not have a reasonable opportunity to decelerate in consideration of the amount of the decrease in the maximum speed limit.

(c) in subsection (3) by striking out “in accordance with the subsection (1)” and substituting “in accordance with subsection (1) in respect of the provision referred to in subsection 2(b).”

This does two things. It ensures that people in transition zones aren't considered to be stunting because they are 40 kilometres per hour over. The other thing it does is that it ensures that the stiffer penalties apply to excessive speeding and not to the things that are stunting but not less safe.

This heartbreaking reality is something that we as elected officials should do more to prevent. Vehicle stunting is a criminal act that does not only endanger the drivers themselves but all other Albertans who use the roadways where the crimes are being committed. In order to protect the people of this province from needless, preventable traffic accidents, we must act. Therefore, I am pleased to introduce private member's Bill 203. This proposed bill would strengthen the penalties in place for stunting in Alberta so that would-be reckless drivers are more thoroughly deterred from endangering themselves and others while those who still violate the law are punished more severely.

Alberta, quite frankly, is lagging behind other provinces. When it comes to pursuing more severe penalties for vehicle stunting, other provinces have rightfully strengthened their laws surrounding these crimes, and it is time for us to follow suit to help prevent any more needless injuries or deaths. If passed, Bill 203 would make going 40 kilometres per hour over the speed limit in urban areas stunting and increase the fine for stunting to $5,000 and introduce an automatic seven-day licence suspension for anybody caught stunting. Additionally, there would be the option of a seven-day discretionary impound, to be decided by law enforcement on a case-by-case basis.

The time to implement these more severe penalties is now. In the past few months alone there have been high-profile incidents in both Calgary and Edmonton. The two cities are plagued the most by stunting and street racing that involve avoidable situations or collisions. At the beginning of September an Albertan was killed in a single-vehicle crash that authorities believe to have been the result of a street race. Even more recently, in October, two vehicles crashed right next to us on the High Level Bridge here, both of which were involved in street racing. The saddest thing about crashes like these is that they are entirely avoidable. They're caused by reckless bravado, specifically amongst our youngest drivers. My top priority as an elected official is ensuring the safety of Albertans, and it is my conviction that passing this bill would greatly improve road safety in our province.

I'm proud to say that despite incidents like I previously mentioned, Alberta has the lowest road fatality rate of any province in Canada. Most Albertans are committed to road safety as they know that acting responsibly on the road keeps us all safe. A notable exception to this rule involves those who stunt, race, and otherwise drive recklessly. It is important that these people receive the punishment they deserve when they commit these crimes. Through mandatory licence suspensions and discretionary vehicle impounding, drivers who commit these needlessly dangerous acts will be prevented from doing so again in the immediate future. Their friends will hear about their fine and suspension and will think twice before going 40 kilometres over the city speed limit.

Deterrence is extremely important, Madam Chair. It is much better to prevent drivers from doing this in the first place than it is to give them serious penalties. On top of this, the increased fines will further contribute to deterrence so that these drivers will not act so dangerously again after their licences and vehicles are returned to them.

As stated earlier, this bill would bring Albertans' penalties for stunting more into alignment with other provinces. Ontario's stunting penalties are similar to these changes proposed by this bill. Additionally, these penalties have been requested by the police chief association. Those who have committed their lives to protecting Albertans in all areas of life, not just on the road, believe that increasing the severity of these penalties will improve road safety. When organizations like the police chiefs' association make requests like this, I as an elected official do not take it lightly. According to research done by this association, a large portion of speeding drivers, 40 per cent to be exact, is between the ages of 16 and 24. Evidently, this same age group also has the highest traffic casualty rate of any age group.

This same age demographic is most likely to engage in vehicle stunting. When these young people engage in stunting, they endanger themselves and others. In their silly attempts to impress their friends or show off, Albertans can be severely injured or even killed. These drivers need to learn to respect the power they have when they get behind the wheel. Without more severe penalties for acts as dangerous as stunting and street racing, these people may continue to take these unnecessary risks. Parents would agree that oftentimes it is important to be strict with your children.

The Chair: Are there members wishing to join debate on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Pleased today to rise to speak to the amendment brought forward by the hon. member regarding a transition between highway speed and a speed that one is required to slow down to after leaving a highway, presumably at an interchange, for another roadway where the speed limit may be increased.

But during these periods of transition between one highway to another, precisely an example that I brought forward, Madam Chair, in previous debate about the shortcomings of the bill – and I referred to my experience driving in Australia, where indeed I did suffer more than one speeding ticket while driving in exactly this situation, where immediately upon exiting the main highway onto a ramp to interchange to another directional highway, I was recorded going highway speed in that transition zone and, of course, not having had time to slow down, ended up with a ticket upon my return back to Canada. I brought this example forward, and I thank the member for recognizing it as something that should be addressed in amending the act. I plan to support the act because I think it's a reasonable amendment. We always want to make sure that people are driving safely, but we also want to avoid unfair or unjust speeding tickets while we're doing so.

But the amendment that was brought forward, Madam Chair, doesn't go anywhere near far enough to address some of the other things that this bill has. There are many sins of omission in the main bill which I think could have been addressed by this member's amendment, not just simply looking at the unfairness of issuing tickets in a transition zone. A glaring example of what could have been done and, we think, should have been done on this side of the House to embellish the bill, improve the bill would have been a coexisting amendment to define stunting, to give a more clear definition of stunting, with better examples of what that offence would entail such as those found in the B.C. legislation.

Unfortunately, the member has decided to limit his amendment to a very narrow scope, which albeit is an important and, I believe, necessary and useful amendment that does improve – the legislation could have at this point in time, while the legislation is open and before the House, been improved even more had the member decided to take suggestions that have been raised also during the debate on this legislation, Bill 203, had they taken the opportunity to look at giving enforcement officers better direction by properly defining the term “stunting” or what a stunt might be.

I said previously that the legislation in B.C. precisely took pains to do this, and it ended up with, I think, a much better piece of legislation and was a better tool for enforcement officers in the field who were not making discretionary judgments on what a particular activity might be defined as, stunting or not, but they had clearly defined examples, that could be used in the field by an enforcement officer – police officer, peace officer – who was enforcing traffic regulations, to specifically point to and charge an individual with a specific stunting offence that was defined in the legislation.

While indeed, Madam Chair, I stand in support of the amendment that the member has brought forward to make sure that speeding in transition zones is not something that is commonly catching people who are innocently not slowing down as quickly as one would hope but not doing so unsafely – those people are not going to be captured by speeding tickets that really are not deserved or truly are not fair. I speak from personal experience about the fact that this can happen and is a surprise, I’m sure, to drivers who are receiving tickets in these transition zones from one highway to another in an interchange, that they sense the same injustice that I felt when receiving such a ticket.

The number one problem that I have with the amendment, Madam Chair, is that the opportunity was missed to go even further to, as I say, define the term “stunting” and provide specific examples of what a stunt might be so that an enforcement officer in the field would have a better, a more clear direction on what exactly stunting was and to point to a specific behaviour that was taking place in front of them and then charge accordingly in the information contained in the stunting charge. If indeed that would have been included as part of the amendment, a charge might be more easily prosecuted in the courts.

So an opportunity missed, and it’s an omission that I’m sorry exists with this amendment that was brought forward by the member. It would have been nice to see that. I would have loved the opportunity to perhaps bring forward such an amendment myself, but I don’t think that that would be permitted given that the member has brought forward an amendment of his own under the same area of the piece of legislation. Not sure if that was the member’s intent, but certainly it was an opportunity that was missed in bringing forward this particular amendment.

I think all Albertans who’ve had the experience of listening to somebody performing a pretty disturbing act, whether it be squealing tires or doing U-turns in the middle of the roadway or any number of types of stunting behaviours that we’ve witnessed on our highways, unfortunately won’t see them stop. I think that rural Albertans particularly – and some intersections in the city but primarily rural Albertans – just after school is out, after graduation, will find doughnut marks on their highways outside the local intersections on many rural Alberta highways because it’s considered to be a rite of passage for, I would say particularly, young males driving their vehicles. And they’ll spin their tires and do doughnuts and smoke their tires and create a circle on the highway in a stunt that is potentially very dangerous.

There are incidents that could be described pretty clearly and would have been nice to see in this legislation had the member seen fit to go beyond what he’s doing simply by coming forward with an amendment that talked about eliminating tickets and giving greater discretion to enforcement officers when they’re talking about speeding in transition zones. I hope that it was not a calculated effort on the member’s part to thwart any effort on our part on this side of the House to bring forward more detailed amendments on stunting, but it certainly feels like that.

When you are in a position, whether you’re in a motorhome or a passenger vehicle, at night or wintertime, no matter what the conditions are, I think it’s incumbent upon the department of transportation to take into account some perhaps testing data that will show whether or not there’s enough time, from the time you exit the highway itself into the transition period, to actually slow down safely until there’s an enforcement zone that is capturing people who are going above the speed limit.

While I support the effort by the member to bring forward this piece of legislation, I think there’s also some study that needs to be done to make sure that the individuals who might actually be breaking the law and creating a safety hazard in a transition zone are not lost from enforcement by this amendment, because there are differences in our exit ramps and our entrance ramps on our highways in their transition zones. Some are extremely long; some are pretty short. There may be ample opportunity for an enforcement officer to legitimately charge somebody with speeding even in one of these transition zones, but it depends upon how long it is, whether it’s a circular, short cloverleaf or whether it’s a long, median-style runway or exit ramp. I’m not sure if this amendment takes that into consideration. It might actually hamstring an officer from making a decision to actually charge somebody in a transition zone. We’ll see.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill in Committee of the Whole, Bill 203. Are there members wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate to stand and speak to the main bill, Bill 203. As mentioned in previous debate, the intent, of course, of the amendment act, Bill 203, Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022, is, one, to improve public safety on our Alberta roadways, and it’s, of course, something that on this side of the House we definitely support. We’re always looking to improve our roadways’ safety.

We always should be taking into account, though, when we’re drafting legislation, Madam Chair, that affects our traffic laws and regulations, that proper input is had from all those who are affected, whether they be the police, who have to enforce the laws, whether they be our traffic department and experts, who would speak to the relative safety of different measures that might be proposed, and, of course, the public. I think that on some matters we’ve heard loud and clear from the public about what they think speeding enforcement laws should be.

There seems to be a little bit of confusion on the other side of the House about whether they are on the side of caution and ensuring public safety. When we look at this particular piece of legislation, Bill 203, of course, is looking to provide a bit of relief by the amendment, but the main bill looks to properly enforce those who break the law and speed. But there was another measure that another member from the government party brought forward, and it looked to actually increase the speed limit on two-lane highways in the province in certain areas to 120 kilometres an hour versus 110.

There seems to be a bit of a Dr. Dolittle approach on the other side of the House, a pushmi-pullyu kind of a situation, where in one case they're looking at increasing highway speeds because of some pressure from members of the public on the government to do this, and in this particular case, with the Bill 203 we're talking about, the other side of the coin is to actually ensure public safety and err on that side and make sure that the excessive speeders are prosecuted and, hopefully, deterred from speeding. I kind of wish the government would decide which direction it wanted to go in. Hopefully, in the future we won't be seeing efforts to increase speeding limits in the province, whether it be on two-lane roadways or smaller Alberta highways. They always should be erring on the side of public safety and consulting properly with all the stakeholders involved.

The public certainly doesn't want to see excessive speeding. We've all experienced a situation where somebody has just completely blown by us on the highway. It's a pretty scary thing to happen, and that's something that we hope and expect to be stopped by our enforcement agencies, and that's not always the case. There are means of perhaps taking a look at enforcement that are not contemplated by Bill 203, which, of course, looks to provide tools to enforcement officers to deter excessive speed and to penalize those who do speed excessively.

I'd posit, Madam Chair, that one way of doing it might be with a timed device, particularly on roadways such as the Calgary-Edmonton corridor. For example, once again, driving in Australia, I experienced a situation where it had a certain speed limit – it was a reasonable one – and if you went from point A to point B, though, you weren't necessarily having photoradar regularly. What it did was that it actually timed the distance from point A to point B, and if you got there faster than you should have according to the speed maximum that you were allowed to go, you actually got a ticket based on that time frame. Of course, it would be doing a photoradar photograph of your licence plate at point A and then again at point B and calculating the time.

Believe me, Madam Chair, something that was very startling while driving in Australia on roadways that had this timed photoradar: nobody speeded because there was no point. I mean, you knew you were going to get caught, and there was no escaping it. It was pretty safe, and it was certainly most impressive when you would see a group of people on large motorcycles happily motoring along at the speed limit and not daring to blast over it because they knew for sure that if they got to point B before they should have, because they were driving faster than the speed limit, they were going to get a ticket. There was no escaping it.

There are other enforcement measures that this bill could have contemplated in an amendment or in the main bill if indeed the members had done their homework and would have perhaps consulted more widely on it. I'm sure Albertans would have brought forward more suggestions. I can tell you that I'd be surprised if law enforcement wouldn't have had some more suggestions as well that would have improved the legislation and done a bit more of a comprehensive job while the piece of legislation is open.

I think it's incumbent upon us, Madam Chair. When we do bring forward changes to legislation, whether it be a traffic safety amendment act or whether it be on any type of issue, it's important to have a wider lens and to look at what things could be done to improve the legislation and improve the health and safety of Albertans when a piece of legislation is open. Unfortunately, that opportunity was missed by the government member on that side in this private member's Bill 203. It really was a narrowly scoped piece of legislation, and even though it is a private member's piece of legislation, it is something that could have been much more comprehensive.

I hope that the member feels that he has solved the issue that he wanted to solve with respect to excessive speeding, but when one gets the opportunity to move forward with a private member's bill, one would hope to do as much as possible to benefit Albertans when you have that opportunity, which is pretty special. We all know that many members have served a career in this House of three, four, or more terms and have never had the opportunity for a private member's bill to be given to them by way of a draw. I suggest to the House that much more could have been done by this member to take advantage of that very special opportunity to bring forward a piece of legislation by way of a private member's bill, and it was, unfortunately, an opportunity missed.

I don't plan to oppose the legislation because, of course, the small changes that were brought forward by the member certainly are going to, I believe, improve safety on our roadways. You know, it's just law enforcement, but they don't go anywhere near as far as they could have, and it's not anywhere near as comprehensive a piece of legislation as one would hope a private member would bring forward when dealing with something as important as safety on our roadways.

It affects every age group in our population, from young drivers to our seniors. Everybody is concerned about safety on the roadways, and the opportunity that we had here to really take a more comprehensive look at how indeed we could improve safety on our roadways in a more comprehensive way, even by way of a private member's bill, Madam Chair, is something that I think was unfortunate. I won't belabour the point, but I'll suggest that this private member and other private members, even those on our side of the House, when given an opportunity to bring forward a piece of private member's legislation, really look more broadly at how wide a benefit they could have for everybody in the province by increasing the scope of the legislation that they bring forward.

With that, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate on Bill 203 as amended in Committee of the Whole? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this bill. Of course, I think one of the things we often hear about as members in our community, from different folks in the community is people speeding, particularly in playground zones, where, you know, children are present, or really on any road where children are present. I think this is a fairly major concern, so I'm glad to see this bill brought forward to address it, because I think a lot of people are worried about this.

Honestly, you know, when you talk about dangerous activities, actually getting behind the wheel of your car is one of the most dangerous activities in which most people regularly engage in their daily lives. In my former role when we were in government, I had the opportunity to speak to a number of parents who had lost children, whether to impaired driving or excessive speeding or a number of other things. I mean, it's heartbreaking. It doesn't have to happen, it's easily prevented by simply not doing those things, and it's very troublesome.

You know, in terms of increased penalties for these sorts of activities I think that this is definitely the right call. I do think that there are concerns potentially with this bill, in part because what we're doing here is sort of increasing the penalty and also adding on the ability to do certain other things like seize vehicles and operators' licences. It's a pretty heavy hammer. Generally when we use heavier hammers, we want to make sure we have the necessary administrative protections in place. Sometimes that's in a courtroom. Sometimes that's an administrative tribunal. It just sort of depends on the situation, but I think the more harsh the penalty is, the more important it is to have in place clear abilities to deal with it.

I think the concern is that in the act there isn't a definition of stunting, so the result is – what this does is that it changes the penalty, and in this case it's for section 115(2)(f) and 115(2)(p) under the Traffic Safety Act, and (2)(p) specifically is if it's at least 40 kilometres per hour over the maximum speed limit that is 80 kilometres per hour or less. Essentially, excessive speeding is (2)(p), and then (2)(f) is stunting. The challenge is that it's not totally clear what will or won't be caught, so that's sort of actually problematic on both ends in terms of ensuring that we're preventing the behaviours we want to prevent and ensuring that we're providing the appropriate procedural safeguards. That's a bit problematic, and it's unfortunate because I think that's an amendment we would have liked to have seen.

This is not a weird procedural thing, but for the tens of people watching at home, one of the procedural things we have going on in the House is that once a section has been opened to be amended in a bill, another member can't reopen the same section. Because we have this amendment, that has now been passed, having to do with speed change zones, we would have to open the same section, potentially, in terms of making other changes, so that sort of becomes out of order, if you will. I think it's unfortunate to see that that amendment isn't able to go in because I think, again, it's important both to make sure that we're preventing the behaviours we want to prevent and to make sure that we're not catching things we maybe didn't intend to catch, which are both important things in the law.

I think, though, generally I remain supportive of this bill because I think it is a good bill. It does do a really important thing, and it is something that is, in my opinion, very much on the minds of Albertans and particularly Alberta parents. I think, you know, people stunting or driving too quickly is extremely problematic, and it has impacts not just on, like, people being worried about what will happen but on the lives of people in Alberta. Those traffic accidents can be some of the most horrific things to respond to. They can be incredibly tragic. They can be life changing for folks. I happened to once, long ago, volunteer at a hospital, and, yeah, some of the people had – it was a neurorehabilitation ward – their lives sort of permanently altered by the poor driving behaviours of others. It's not intentional, but it only takes a second to destroy other people's lives.

So I think that this is very good. I think that there is an enormous amount of evidence that this is the sort of penalty that sort of impacts on people's brains. It's like people don't – yeah. I don't really know what the psychological mechanism behind it is. People don't think that a tragedy will happen to them. They don't think that they'll wind up in a position where they have injured someone and they're facing criminal charges and jail time and that sort of – like, people just don't seem to think that's going to happen to them.

For some reason these sorts of penalties – and we have a lot of evidence of this from across the country – seem to have a greater impact on people's behaviour. They can more easily see, I guess, maybe more easily envision the scenario in which they are caught by the police and they receive this penalty, so this alters their behaviour in a way that perhaps the potential of injury to themselves, to their loved ones, or to others doesn't. Again, I don't really understand the psychology fully behind that. It's actually a little bit counterintuitive although, as it turns out, most things about human psychology are a bit counterintuitive.

Yeah. I think it's a good bill. I think it will have a positive impact. I do wish that it was a little bit better in this way, but I think that as far as it goes, I am supportive of it, and I think it's something that will impact the lives of Albertans, which is something very, very positive.

I imagine the member, like all members of this House, has heard from constituents about this. I know that probably one of the most well-attended town halls I've been to in my role as an MLA was specifically about people speeding too much. It included law enforcement and the community association and members of the community. People are really concerned. They want their children to be able to play outside, and rightly so. They want their children to be able to walk down the street. We have had a number of very public, very tragic instances in Calgary, you know, where someone's car went through the window of a restaurant, people driving into houses, all sorts of things. There's often alcohol involved in those incidents, but sometimes it just is excessive speed and excessive silliness, and no one should ever lose their life that way. No one should ever be permanently injured that way. It's entirely preventable and easily so.

I guess over here we don't often say, "Good job," but for, again, the tens of folks watching at home, we can occasionally agree on things, and in this instance I think we absolutely do agree that this is a step in the right direction. Good job to the member for bringing this forward. I know private members' bills can be a difficult thing, to sort of come up with a concept and translate the concept into actuality and that sort of thing.

I haven't actually personally had conversations, but I assume there have been some conversations with law enforcement across the province. My recollection from, admittedly, three and a half, almost four years ago now is that generally a lot of services were looking for this sort of thing, the ability to hold people more accountable for speeding, because officers see this every day, the sort of tragic results of what really is an act that doesn't intend to injure but has the serious potential to injure others.

Yeah. I guess that sort of covers the points I want to make with respect to this bill. I would say that I will be supporting. I would urge all members to support it. I imagine that most folks will.

With that, I think I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 203 as amended?

Seeing none, I shall call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 203 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? That is carried.

Mr. Schow: Madam Chair, I rise to request unanimous consent to waive standing orders 8(7)(c) and 9(1). I'm looking to revert to Committee of the Whole on Bill 204.

The Chair: We will need to rise out of committee.

Mr. Schow: Yes. I understand.

The Chair: Okay. Go ahead. Please proceed.

Mr. Schow: Madam Chair, I move that we rise and report Bill 203.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Long: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 203. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So carried.

Mr. Schow: I rise to request unanimous comment to waive standing orders 8(7)(c) and 9(1) in order to proceed immediately to Committee of the Whole on Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 204
Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022

The Chair: Are there members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. Private member's Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, was originally the idea of a former legislative co-ordinator I had by the name of Maureen Gough. In 2016 Maureen was one of the primary caregivers for her elderly mother, and she approached me with the idea of creating an Amber Alert for seniors. It was under her guidance and hard work by the two us that the private member's Bill 210, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2017, was put before this House and passed.

As one of the members stated in second reading, private members' bills do not have the underlying infrastructure of researchers and legal advice that a government bill would have, so after private member's Bill 210 was passed, it was discovered that there was a conflict between the Missing Persons Act and private member's Bill 210 regarding how information would be released to the public and would be handled during a silver alert. This explains why private member's Bill 210 had been passed by the Legislature, but it was never proclaimed and therefore could not benefit a senior that had gone missing.

It also explains why this private member's Bill 204 is necessary, as private member's Bill 204 is designed to make amendments that address the shortcomings in private member's Bill 210 and to provide police and Albertans with another tool to use in order to help find and protect a senior that has gone missing and is deemed to be at risk.

During second reading of Bill 204 a member had asked the question: why have these amendments not been brought back into the Legislature before this year? It's a good question. The answer to that question is that I had to find out exactly what the conflicts were that had created the problems between private member's Bill 210 and the Missing Persons Act. Then a solution had to be found. Finally, since this was a private member's bill, I either had to wait until I was drawn again for a private member's bill or see if I could find a private member willing to pick up this idea and propose the amendments. As luck would have it, I was once again drawn for a private member's bill in my last sitting in this Legislature before I retire as an MLA.

3:40

As this House considers the amendments brought forward in private member's Bill 204, it must be understood that a great deal of effort by the Ministry of Justice and all of the stakeholders that were interviewed has gone into addressing the shortcomings in private member's Bill 210. The amendments in private member's Bill 204 were designed to both address the privacy concerns as information was released to the public but also to address some of the other insights brought forward by stakeholders. Some have been concerned that introducing a silver alert may create alert fatigue, so several elements were built into private member's Bill 204. Firstly, private member's Bill 204 follows the same pattern of thresholds as an Amber Alert before it can be activated.

A police service may activate a silver alert when an individual is reported missing to the police service [and only] if the police service determines that the following requirements are met:

- (a) the individual is [indeed] a missing person,
- (b) the individual is a represented adult under the Adult Guardianship and Trusteeship Act or an adult with a cognitive impairment, mental disorder or medical condition that may render the person vulnerable,
- (c) the individual's safety and welfare are feared for given the individual's cognitive impairment, mental disorder or medical condition, and
- (d) there is information available that, if disseminated to the public, could assist in the individual's safe recovery.

Madam Chair, as you can see, not every senior that goes missing will result in a silver alert. They must be a represented adult or cognitively impaired or have a medical condition that would make them vulnerable enough to fear for their safety. Any information put out in a silver alert must be capable of assisting in a safe recovery.

Finally, the police are the ones that determine if the issue of a silver alert will be of benefit in helping to return a missing senior that is at risk. When discussing this with stakeholders like the Calgary and Edmonton police services, it was determined that if the police remained in control of when to call or when not to call a silver alert and if we built into the legislation a geospatial element where police would determine the geographical extent of a silver alert, this would reduce the chance of alert fatigue.

It is also the case that private member's Bill 204 allows the police to decide the extent and the means of the distribution of the information. The police service could decide to limit the alert to a posting on the Internet or to Twitter. They could decide that the circumstances of the missing person – for instance, if the individual did not have access to a vehicle or public transportation, they would then limit the alert to a particular geographical area. All of this will combine to reduce or eliminate alert fatigue as a silver alert is actually implemented.

During second reading the question was asked: will private member's Bill 204 allow for sufficient collaboration with other local agencies on the ground? I believe that private member's Bill 204 will do exactly that. Firstly, it will allow police to collaborate with the families, institutions, TV, radio, Internet, and agencies in the dissemination of the necessary information that could help save a missing senior's life. Secondly, it has already helped to connect some of the local police services with other seniors' organizations.

In meeting with stakeholders for this bill, I met with the Calgary Missing Older Adult Resource Network, and they have produced a resource for families with vulnerable seniors called the Resource Guide for Older Adults at Risk of Going Missing. This is an excellent resource that helps families prepare ahead of time should their loved ones go missing.

Part of that is called the Herbert protocol. The Herbert protocol is a form that details the important information that could be used by police should they believe it is necessary to have a silver alert. The Herbert protocol helps families gather the information police will need, like photographs, personal details, contact information, personal circumstances, general health information, et cetera. The use of the Herbert protocol would be an example of how local agencies like the Missing Older Adult Resource Network could help both police and families when their loved ones go missing. I would highly recommend that all families concerned about a senior's potential of going missing should access the Resource Guide for Older Adults at Risk of Going Missing. Reading through and filling out this resource before your loved one may go missing will be of great use as you begin to contact police and your local community networks.

One of the questions that has been brought forward revolves around the cost of the silver alert. When I talk with stakeholders, especially the police services, costs were not thought to be a concern. I've asked the Ministry of Public Safety and Emergency Services whether or not the cost of implementing a silver alert would be prohibitive. After much digging and further conversations with the Alberta Emergency Management Agency it was determined that at present there would be no additional cost because AEMA co-ordinates with the national agency that oversees national alerts, and the app that the provinces and the national alert system interface with is free. So if there are any costs, they will presently be picked up by the federal agency. However, even if that were to change in the future, it was felt that the cost would be minimal. Last week at budget estimates I was able to ask the minister a question on this, and the head of AEMA outlined that the entire alert system costs Albertans about $180,000 a year. To add in a silver alert, it was his belief, would not be a burdensome cost as the individuals and the systems are already there.

Lastly, it must be remembered that before any silver alert can be implemented, it must meet the criteria outlined in private member's Bill 204.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there others wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It gives me great pleasure to stand up and support this bill. I think that when we are concerned about individuals that fit the criteria that the previous speaker was talking about, they need help, and that's what the silver alert intends to do. It intends to disseminate information – and the previous speaker kind of talked about things like geographic activations and where the postings might occur – to ensure that a targeted approach is being undertaken to find that person as quickly as possible.

Maybe I should back up a little bit. Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022: we're seeing this for the second time in this Legislature, and the mover was talking about why we're seeing it here for the second time. It's totally understandable, I think, that members, particularly members who don't have a lot of research support, who do not have the background that researchers, that drafters of legislation can give them, that the government does have, are working with a bit of one hand tied behind their back. They're trying to do the best job they can, but there may be things missed. From listening to the mover talk about the previous bill that was before this House and the challenges it had and why it wasn't proclaimed, it's understandable, as I was saying, that it wasn't proclaimed, and we're back here today to try to address that in this Bill 204. For instance, if you're a member that doesn't have a party, if you're sitting as an independent, you have some resources but not the full resources that opposition does, perhaps, or the government. I think that this bill in that respect addresses those shortcomings as we understood them, told to us just a few minutes ago.

I want to say that I think the intent behind this is to focus attention and try to get resources marshalled so that people who do go missing – and the bill talks about the kind of criteria those persons have to fit before a silver alert is triggered. If a person does go missing and they have those kinds of challenges – they're missing, they're a represented adult being looked after by other individuals, they're vulnerable in some way or in some medical condition – then we know that their safety and welfare are potentially at risk if they are not identified, found, and brought back to where they can be safely cared for. That is something that I think this bill tries to address and does.

It's a good thing, because we have in Canada, Alberta times of the year where inclement weather can put a person's life at risk. We see far too often people who go missing – young people, older people – found in dire situations and sometimes even to the point where their life has ended because of exposure to cold, or in many parts of this province we have significant wilderness areas or geographic parts of the landscape where a person can get injured. If that person is represented in the kind of criteria that's identified here, then they will not be looking out for their own best interests, and they need to be identified and found, as I say, as quickly as possible.

It's good to know that there is a trigger in the sense that police will be the ultimate decision-makers on when to issue an alert, how broadly to issue the alert, how much effort to put into the alert, all based on an understanding of the situation of the person who has gone missing. I believe, too, that there'll be sufficient collaboration by a number of stakeholders, agencies on the ground once an alert has been triggered so that that person can be found, hopefully, as quickly as possible and returned.

I, too, was in the estimates for Public Safety and Emergency Services last week and heard the discussions about the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and understand that, you know, there wouldn't be a significant incremental cost on issuing these kinds of alerts on – we don't know on how regular a basis, but we do know that when it is necessary, the Alberta Emergency Management Agency can be a partner in making that judgment call about police personnel issuing the alert.

There, of course, is a history of these sorts of alerts being put into place across the United States since 2005. It's been legislated in almost all states in the U.S., and there's some experience with Canadian provinces, not territories yet, doing the same thing and having legislation in place.

Things that improve the quality of life that older persons can continue to have if they're found, if they leave their places of care without the knowledge of caregivers, is a good step to take, because it's been pretty challenging for seniors in this province over the last three, almost four years. We know that many are not doing as well as they could in the sense that they don't have the support brought on by having more money at their disposal as a result of some of the decisions of this government. Bill 204 will go some way to assisting those seniors most in need who have left their safe place to be, and organizing a way to let the public know that there are missing persons who need to be returned to their loved ones, often, is a really good thing.

The number of people who are experiencing cognitive difficulties, we know, is increasing. We probably would do well as a government to participate with other governments to spend more time and energy on research around how to address those cognitive impairments so that there'd be fewer people who might get into difficulties, as is proposed in this Bill 204. I think adult citizens who need our support – we should not feel like the effort to . . . [Member Ceci's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: I just thought I would rise and make a few comments with regard to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Thank you for standing up and supporting this bill. You know, you were talking a little about who some of these seniors could be and where they could come from. I think probably every one of us in this Chamber has somebody that we've loved that has fallen into this category and could've gone missing. I know that in my life it was my mother-in-law, just how much concern my father-in-law had as she battled with Alzheimer's, trying to make sure that he was awake literally 24/7 so that she wouldn't go wandering and leave. This would've been something that very well could've been used in our family as we moved forward, and they lived in the city.

I can remember meeting with a constituent a few years ago who was talking about driving down a country road and seeing a car being driven at slow speed rather erratically. He followed this vehicle for many miles because he was worried about the old gentleman that he saw in the car. Didn't know him; wasn't a neighbour. Eventually, he got on his phone, phoned the police. The RCMP came, pulled the car over, and they find out that the gentleman had come from Red Deer. He'd gotten lost, and he didn't know where he was. This can happen to anybody, whether you're rural or whether you're urban.

Private member's Bill 204 had to be flexible enough to allow the police to be able to make judgment calls as to how wide a scope they would spread a silver alert or how narrow they would keep it and look at the situations and look at the cognitive impairments that may be there and address them. So I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing forward the whole issue of, you know: well, who are we talking about, and where are we going with this silver alert?

The member brought forward the idea of being able to compare provinces and that there are other provinces in this country that are moving forward with silver alert legislation. We know that right now in Quebec there is a pilot project going through – I believe it started in January – so, you know, there are other provinces that are moving forward on this. I think this piece of legislation will move us forward, and I think it's a good piece of legislation that deserves the support of this House as we move forward.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to begin by thanking the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for bringing this private member's bill forward not once but twice, actually. It shows a true commitment to this issue, and it's very clear from the member's comments that he is quite passionate about this. I do very much appreciate that he has, you know, seen an opportunity to make some change that would make a difference in people's lives, and he has pursued this with this private member's bill both in a previous Legislature and again in this Legislature.

I know how it's by chance, really, that any of us as private members get an opportunity to bring forward motions and bills. I have not had the opportunity, and it doesn't look likely that I will have the opportunity in this Legislature to bring either a motion or a private member's bill forward. I do think it is, you know, incumbent upon us as a Legislative Assembly to treat the private members' bills that are brought forward, particularly over and over again, as, really, somebody's truly trying to make a difference and trying to make an impact.

I do have to say that I am disappointed, as we draw close to a close on this Legislature soon, that we have not had the opportunity for any private members' bills from the opposition side to have been brought forward and to have been passed in this Chamber throughout this entire Legislature. I don't mean to bring that up to take away at all from what the member here has brought forward, but it does speak to many members on all sides of the House that come to this Chamber with issues that they are quite passionate about, and we do all enter into this public service with the goal of making some change.

It's disappointing when, I believe, politics – as we know, we all engage in politics in this place and outside of this place as well – prevent private members from bringing forward changes that they are quite passionate about, either because they were affected by it personally or they've seen people close to them affected or they've had some constituents who brought forward something that is very meaningful to them. I do hope that in the future, whichever members of us are here again in the next Legislature, we are more cognizant and respectful of the importance of private members' work, because it can be really important things that may not make the light of day in other cases, so we should treat it with respect.

When it comes to Bill 204, I'm proud, like my colleagues, to offer my support for this bill. I did not have the opportunity to sit in this Legislature when it was first brought forward by the member but certainly have listened to the thoughtful discussion and debate and the reasons as to why this was perhaps not proclaimed the first time around and why it was brought back again, and it is a testament to the persistence and the commitment of the member that he did make the changes and seek out with the ministry what changes were required in order to make it a private member's bill that would hopefully be passed and proclaimed by this Legislature.

I also take to heart the member's comments about that we all know somebody, a senior, who this could apply to. I'll begin by saying, of course, I know how valuable Amber Alerts are. As all Albertans know, that's critically important, and we've come to a consensus around the importance of coming together when there is a child at risk, and I believe it is right that we do the same for when there is a situation where a senior is at risk as well. It is part of those moments where we remember that we are a community, that we are collaborative, that we do work together for common good. Certainly, protecting the health and safety of somebody who is vulnerable should be something we can all get behind, and I'm sure we have and we do.

When I saw this private member's bill, I actually thought of a story that happened in my neck of the woods in south Edmonton, which was just last summer. I want to give my respects to the family of Hongsang (Howard) Rho, who was a 64-year-old gentleman from south Edmonton, lived in the Twin Brooks area, which is not part of my riding but is very close to where I am. It's in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. Mr. Rho was a retired transit worker and an avid outdoorsperson. He went missing in August of 2022, and I believe it was well over a week before the information of his absence and that he was lost came to get any sort of media attention. I remember seeing the pictures. It was suspected that he might have been hiking in Blackmud Creek ravine, which is an area that I know well and a lot of, you know, families that I know know very well. There was also concern, because he was a retired transit worker, that he might have gotten on to transit, so he might have actually been quite far out from where his home was.

I'm very sad to report that he was found over a month after he went missing, and he had passed away. Of course, we'll never know with retrospect whether or not a silver alert would have made a difference, but certainly his family was really beseeching people to keep an eye out for him and to report, and I know people were doing that. It is very possible, one could hope, that had a silver alert system existed at that time – who knows if the outcome would have been different? But, certainly, it doesn't take much for most of us to think of an instance like that, even if it's in the news.

Also, I am a daughter of an aging parent, and I know very well that – they call it the sandwich generation, right? We're caring for children; we're caring for parents. You know, my mother is experiencing health issues as well, and I certainly know what it's like to worry about a senior. I think we all have that experience of knowing somebody in our lives that we would worry about, so I think this is certainly something that all of us have some personal contact with and some personal affiliation with and can certainly see that.

One of the things I have to say, Madam Chair, is that I think about the community that I live in. When we first moved into the community many years ago, we were the only family with young kids. There were a lot of, actually, seniors in our little cul-de-sac that we live in. At first, I was like: oh, who are my kids going to be friends with? There were a lot of seniors who didn't answer their doors on Halloween. I was like: come on; they need some candy on Halloween, and nobody is answering the doors. But it's quite remarkable how that community of seniors has become part of our community and part of our family that we care for very much.

There are lots of young families that have now moved into the cul-de-sac but still a lot of seniors, and it's actually – you know, I see them walking around in our neighbourhoods. One of my neighbours down the street was struggling to find a knee replacement for quite some time; another was struggling with a hip replacement. We just kind of collaborate and come together. When I think about the purpose and intention behind a silver alert, it's really about being a community, and it's really about keeping an eye out for each other and looking out for each other and reminding ourselves that we all are kind of responsible for each other. We are responsible for ensuring that we're safe and protected.

I listened carefully to the member's comments about the requirements of, you know, what standards would have to be met, and I do believe that it is appropriate for the police to have the discretion about when to use this kind of silver alert. We want to make sure that it is – yeah; that people do not become immune to it. We want people to take it seriously, just as we want people to take Amber Alert seriously. I just want to say that there aren't as many opportunities as we would like in this Chamber for us to agree on certain things, but I do think this is something we have been clear in this House that we do have consensus around.

We always want to make the legislation as good as possible, as precise as possible. We want it to work the way it's intended to work. We want it to have the benefit for the highest number of people as possible. I can appreciate and I believe the member has worked very hard to do that and that we can have some consensus around here to come together and make that happen. I do hope that this private member's bill has the opportunity to get to third reading, as it may not.

I know that the esteemed member – we will not be seeing him in the Legislature again because of his decision not to run again, so I do hope that if by some chance this is not – and I would never presume the outcome of the Legislature, but if it were to not pass this Legislature, that perhaps that work can continue on and somebody will make sure that it is done in the next Legislature, because I think, as we've heard from the comments from the members of the Assembly, there is pretty much consensus that this is a good thing to do, and we want to do it well.

With that, Madam Chair, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased today to rise and speak in support of this bill. I think, I mean, we're seeing fairly wide-ranging support with respect to this, as my hon. colleague just mentioned. You know, I think it has a lot to do with the fact that we all have in our lives some experience with this, a person that we would be worried about under these circumstances. I think this definitely fixes a piece of the problem.

I do think we've seen a number of tragic circumstances. Certainly, I know that down in Calgary we've had a few high-profile instances, and I have talked to a few folks who have been, unfortunately, in the position of having a missing loved one, and that is – yeah; it's really hard for them. It's hard not knowing what's going on, it's hard not being able to do anything about it, and I think this would help in a lot of circumstances, so that's good.

I think, you know, it's worth discussing the fact that as demographics change, as populations age, and as we expect to see a bit of a shift here, or we're seeing a trend in demographics here, this becomes, potentially, a bigger issue. A lot of folks in health care or in seniors' care will refer to the possibility of sort of a dementia crisis – right? – more and more people coming forward with these challenges. It creates challenges for the whole system, and this is definitely one of them, so I'm really glad to see this come forward.

I would congratulate the member on that because I think as private members it's rare; it's rare to get a bill, it's rare to get the opportunity to bring something like this forward. It is, of course, somewhat rarer now that we have a committee that will prevent these bills from coming forward to the floor, which I think is problematic. But yeah. I mean, in terms of this bill, it's a real opportunity, and I think it's something that we can support on all sides.

Obviously, the member wouldn't be able to do this, but I think that going forward as legislators, governments are really going to need to be investing in this problem. I think, you know, as we see more and more people with dementia – and it can be extremely challenging to care for someone with dementia.

I think most families would have a preference to care for a person at home, but that can be extremely challenging. I think most members of this Chamber probably have experience with this. You know, especially as dementia progresses, it becomes extremely challenging because it can bring with it not only sort of confusion and a failure to remember but also a level of anxiety and fear that can prompt violent behaviour, that people aren't always able to cope with. Having a loved one – whether they're a parent or a grandparent, an aunt or an uncle, a spouse, even – with these sorts of challenges can be very, very difficult for the family, and it can be increasingly difficult for the family to care for the person, depending on the circumstances.

I think we will need to see more and more dementia-care beds coming on stream, and I think that requires investment. It requires investment in the public system. The reason I say that is because, you know, we do hear a lot about private systems, but they do tend to be those lower level of care beds, and there is a big difference – a big, big difference – between levels of care. In fact, this bill itself, I would say, addresses an issue that can arise both at home and in a care setting.

Usually in care facilities they do a pretty good job of streaming people and making sure they get to the right level of care, but sometimes, you know, someone can start in one facility, and then they will need a higher level of care as that progresses. It can be challenging to move the individual, so sometimes you'll have people sort of trying to manage individuals that require a higher level of care, that require – I keep saying “a higher level of care”; a higher level of care is essentially more staff. The staffing ratio changes. When you have your basic-level-of-care bed, you could have a staffing ratio of even, like, 1 care provider to 10 or 20 people, and by the time you get up to a dementia-care situation, you're talking about maybe 1 or even 2 people to 1 individual being cared for, depending on what their behaviours are.

I do think that this is a very important thing. I think it will help families a lot. But I do think that the government as a whole and we as legislators do need to concern ourselves with this challenge, that it is coming.

Returning somewhat to what is before us, this is a good piece of the puzzle, and potentially, you know, for those situations where – and, again, as I was discussing, people will need a higher level of care over time. It doesn't take much to find yourself in a situation. If you are trying to find care at home, it doesn't take much in terms of turning around for a minute or forgetting to lock something for this sort of thing to happen, or people can be in a position where they're fine to go out for a walk by themselves and they just get confused, right? Dementia sort of has a tendency to come and go. People are not always at the same level of ability. It tends to sort of vary, sometimes over the course of a day, sometimes over the course – but it can change quite quickly, so this will provide families with sort of a level of assistance they need.

I do think it is right to leave some discretion with the authorities to determine what exactly is going on because we don't, obviously, want too many of these going out, not just because the public sort of becomes desensitized to them but also because it's very important to bear in mind that these are still people, and they have privacy interests. You know, obviously, a safety interest would trump a privacy interest, but there can be circumstances in which it's very scary for the family members, but the person was fine and they don't necessarily want their name and their information to sort of be spread across the province. I think that that's a very, very good feature of this bill. I think the member has done a lot of work on this over a number of years, and I think that's important.

A lot of people who watch politics sort of watch it at this very high level, the fightiness of it, I guess, for lack of a better term. I'm not necessarily even against that. You know, politics at the end of the day is a conversation about values, and sometimes values are pretty fundamental, and people have very strong opinions about it. But something like this can sort of bring people together, and this is something that politics does, too. That's the thing people ask me a lot of the time, especially as a woman, why on earth it is that I would do this thing. This is one of the reasons, because you can have an impact on the lives of the people around you in a way that you never otherwise could.

You know, when I moved from being a lawyer to this job, as a lawyer, at best, you're advancing the cause of an individual case or a group of people. You can win some big victories. I think of the Vriend decision, for instance. You can, like, move the world forward. But in this job you can have the ability to affect the lives of people that you will never even know that you've touched. This bill could save a life, and the member won't know whose life, might not even get thanked, but it is very important, that . . .

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this bill. This particular bill on silver alerts is, I would say, an essential step towards improving the way that we care for Alberta's seniors and vulnerable adults. Amber Alberts, as I think most if not all of us are aware, can be a really effective way of finding young people during periods of time when they need to be found, they need to be cared for. In the rhythm and full circle of life sometimes older people get to the point where they could use a similar service.

I don't think I'm quite there yet, but I will be a senior this year, and for everybody else that's smug right now because you're so much younger, remember that there are only two kinds of people in the world: seniors and those that hope to be. I know no one was unpleasant with me, but that's what I try to remind people. There're only two kinds of people in the world: seniors and those that hope to be. And when our turn comes, we want to look after ourselves for as long as we can, perhaps for the whole distance, but sometimes, again, life is such that some of us will need more care along the way than perhaps we anticipated and perhaps than we hoped.

Sometimes one of the most important measures that you measure society by, of course, is how we treat the most vulnerable. It's our government's commitment to ensure that Alberta is a place where everybody can rely on each other for protection and help in situations when it's needed. I would compliment our Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for his commitment to caring for other people, as reflected in the bill before us right now. Thank you.

Now, silver alerts, of course, will work towards shoring up the protections we provide our seniors and vulnerable adults and the families of at-risk individuals, and the emergency services that we all rely on in one form or another are made just that little bit stronger. Of course, it could happen to anybody, that they could need this service.

Madam Chair, I've had some experience with this. My own father, who is no longer with us, actually made it pretty far. He made it to 93, and about the time – part of the reason I don't remember exactly when the dementia in some form started to affect him is because I lived about 2,500 miles away from where I grew up. But, fortunately for me, I have four amazing sisters back there that helped look after mom and dad when they were around, but I will say that it was – it's pretty hard on the senior when they go through the part of their life where they might need a silver alert.

I remember a few years ago my son and I went back to where I grew up, and we spent three days with dad, and it was three completely different events. The one day it was like old times, just like everything was great. One of the other days he drifted in and out of lucidity: you seem like a nice young man, but why are you buying me a hot chocolate, and who are you? Then on another day he had no idea who my son or I were, and it wasn't because he didn't want to know, and that is the hard part about it. Now, there were a few – I'm certainly not making fun, but there were a few fun events that cropped up as a result.

I know a friend of mine whose father was going through the early stages of where he actually could've used a silver alert, because he was just at the point where he would drift in and out. He still had a driver's licence, and the reason that – I'm not sure he got his driver's licence taken away, but one day, miraculously, the vehicle didn't work anymore and just nobody got around to getting it fixed. In other words, somebody had taken the cable off the battery because it was time.

He, the friend of mine, lived in south Calgary. His father was missing for six or eight hours until he phoned from his cellphone somewhere on the side of the road on the other side of Cochrane. He had no idea where he was, and he finally had to admit defeat in terms of, you know – to find his way home. It was a little bit sad, but that was one of those situations where if a silver alert was available, even having the person's licence plate number might have helped to stop him. I guess none of us will ever know, at this point, whether he drove perfectly or some way other than perfectly, but just to prevent injury or death or damage from happening, the ability to have a silver alert system would have been very valuable back then.

Should the House see fit to pass this before the election is called, then I think we can all feel good about putting that service in place for seniors now. And, as it goes, it could be some of us that need the service; I would say that almost for sure somebody in this room will need that service at some point in their life. Won't it be nice if it's actually there because of the good work that we're able to do in this place?

Madam Chair, silver alerts help every Albertan with a cellphone to become a watchful protector who is given a little more power to look after our fellow human being. So many situations and examples, some of which we've heard in wonderful debate from other members on this bill, seniors – and you know what? I'm sure we've all heard it. I have heard it. I guess it's not a silver alert, but sometimes you'll hear it on the radio where somebody's family member is missing. It always concerns me because, of course, while there are a lot of happy endings where somebody was found, there are other endings, too, where somebody was walking between places when the temperature was cold and they just froze to death or drowned or fell and hurt themselves or some other thing. All those people are loved by somebody, and those that love them will be very, very relieved if a silver alert was in place to bring them home safely to where they belong. And in some cases it's people that – as we get older, more of us need medication on a regular basis, and it could be somebody not back in time for their medication, and that could have a detrimental effect on their lives.

I guess I could go on for hours, and you'll all be glad to know I won't, but the fact is that I think that we're doing something good here if we pass this. I think the bill is intended to be structured in such a way that the private and personal information of people that are subject to an alert is largely protected, at least to the extent that it can be after allowing the public to identify them to bring them back to where they're safe. I think it's also intended to avoid an excessive number of alerts over a larger area; in other words, I think, hopefully, to have the ability to be targeted to the area that an individual may well be capable of travelling to, and of course part of that would be whether they're driving, whether they're walking, whatever it happens to be. So I really think that there was some good thought put into it.

I know that there's legislation in some American states as well as the province of Manitoba, and in all those places a silver alert type system has saved lives before, and I have no doubt – in fact, I'm very sure – that it will save lives here in Alberta.

Madam Chair, I'm grateful for the opportunity to talk about something so positive and something that it sounds like all sides of the House can perhaps get behind and something that, since there's no guarantee any of us will be back after May 29, if we get this done, we'll all be able to look back at, I think with some pride and satisfaction, saying: there's definitely one good thing. There are lots of good things that happen in here, but this will be one more good thing that happened during this term of office. I certainly support the bill as before us. I hope and expect that other members will. I think that might well be the case. Let's get one more good thing done before we're finished.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to rise to speak to Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, and commend the member for bringing it forward. I know that, as has been mentioned in this House before, most of us have some connection, either direct or indirect, with seniors, elderly individuals in Alberta who may be at risk of actually requiring a silver alert to be called if they go missing. Most individuals in this province wish to continue living at home as long as possible, but of course many of us will need to be in a long-term care facility of one kind or another, and our seniors will go missing from either a home location or potentially from a long-term care, private or public, facility.

This piece of legislation will allow authorities to alert the public to engage in a search that will help find the missing person as quickly as possible and give every opportunity for that individual to be found safe and healthy and returned to either home or the facility from which they went missing. Of course, Madam Chair, it's all of our hope and wish that every senior doesn't have to see the protection of this silver alert and that they are able to live at home as long as possible, but indeed if somebody does go missing as a result of their confusion or their dementia, this legislation is something that will assist authorities to find them and, hopefully, have a good result in returning them to their home or the facility that they went missing from.

The one thing that I wanted to mention, of course, was that all of our seniors deserve to be supported no matter whether you're in a long-term care facility or living at home. As had been mentioned briefly by the Member for Calgary-Hays, who talked about Alberta seniors who have drivers' licences and may actually go missing while driving their vehicle and perhaps, as a result of this, end up losing that driver's licence, well, Madam Chair, what happens in that situation and others is that the remaining spouse, should there be a remaining spouse, is the one who has the driver's licence and becomes the caregiver who is responsible for getting that individual with dementia to their appointments, to doctors' appointments, and even just to go out on outings to enrich their quality of life.

One of the things that this government has done, Madam Chair, is make it more expensive for that remaining senior to keep their driver's licence, to renew their driver's licence, and it behooves me to wonder why indeed they did take the measure to force Alberta doctors to charge seniors for required, mandatory, drivers' medical examinations to keep their licence, $85 to $150 in many cases, so that they can maintain their driver's licence, in many cases in a situation where they're struggling with extra costs already of a family member who has dementia.

There are many, many costs associated with that, whether that be bringing in respite care to a home or whether it be other pseudomedical needs, whether it be incontinence issues or whether it be bringing bars and walkers and so forth into the home to help. There are a lot of costs that add up to thousands of dollars a year, Mr. Chair, for a family member looking to keep a spouse or an elderly family member in-home under their care. That responsibility is a big, big burden, and almost everyone in this Chamber will know somebody, if not themselves, who is undertaking to look after an elderly loved one in-home or even during a stay in long-term care, because there are costs involved, and there's a huge time commitment.

The difficulty is that, you know, the government, on this hand, looks to pat themselves on the back for looking after seniors and providing an opportunity for seniors at risk who may be even going missing to be found more quickly using a silver alert – that's certainly commendable – but on the other hand they neglect to really look at the harm they're doing by causing a senior to have to pay 85 to 150 bucks to renew their driver's medical exam when, in fact, they may be caring for a senior who they want to remain in their own home or visiting a senior in a long-term care centre that may or may not be close to their own house. That extra burden on a regular basis of $85 to $150 is something that this government could easily have dispensed with, but they neglected to do so and ignored the pleas of seniors to have this cost eliminated.

That's another reason, Mr. Chair, why a Seniors Advocate is a good idea in this province, so that individuals' voices, the seniors' voices would be listened to so that a cost like that, an expense like 85 to 150 bucks for a driver's medical, would be avoided if indeed they had their voice listened to. A Seniors Advocate would help do that so that a senior who is looking after a spouse or partner who's living in long-term care or at home, who actually might end up being at risk of drifting away or wandering away from their home or long-term care facility, would actually have the benefit of a caregiver with a driver's licence who could actually afford to keep it.

You know, it may seem like a small burden, but if you look at $85 to $100 on a regular basis, it could take a chunk out of an individual's income. I mean, many seniors are operating under pretty low incomes already, and you're looking at $2,000 to $3,000 a month. By the time you deduct utilities and heating costs and maintenance and groceries, especially now, that $85 to $150 that they have to fork out for a driver's medical so that they can keep their driver's licence and actually look after their loved one, who may be a senior in long-term care or living at home, is an unnecessary burden. It was a bit of a slap in the face, Madam Chair, for the government not to recognize that and to eliminate that driver's medical exam fee for our Alberta seniors.

I think that I can safely say that it's something that we would look at doing promptly should we form government after the next election. I think Alberta seniors can look forward to that small measure to improve affordability in their lives in the province.

Certainly, the legislation before us, Madam Chair, is a very worthwhile expenditure of this Legislature's time and, of course, of the member's effort to bring it forward as one of his last acts in this Legislature before he retires from this career. It's commendable that he spent the time that he has on it, but I'm saying to this House and to Albertans that it's incumbent upon the government to have a consistent approach to seniors' care and that everything they do has to be able to be reflected in that approach. The matter of the charging for a driver's medical for our seniors isn't indicative of that. Whereby, on one hand, the member will claim that this is a measure that's going to assist our seniors – and that's something he can rightfully claim – the government's approach is not reflected in this private member's bill when one looks at the cost of maintaining a driver's licence. Requiring doctors to charge $85 to $150 for a driver's medical is inconsistent with this private member's bill's approach to seniors and caring for seniors.

If you add it up, it's certainly something that anyone on a fixed income, any seniors on a fixed income, without, you know, benefits beyond the regular ones you might receive through Alberta health care, would find a burden on a biannual basis or however often they need to go ahead and renew their driver's licence.

That's just one example, Madam Chair, of the extra costs that seniors have had to pay that this government has neglected to cushion them from, especially during a time when we're seeing the cost of living so high, when everything has gone up, including the cost of groceries, the cost of fuel to keep that car operating, the cost of caregiving materials, that every family is kind of shocked to learn that they might have to pay. Wheelchairs, for example, are not something that are provided to seniors free of charge.

The Chair: Are there others wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise in the House and add some comments to Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. I see this is very similar to an Amber Alert but for missing adult citizens, generally focusing around senior citizens with dementia. As many of my colleagues already mentioned and the member who moved the bill also acknowledged, this bill makes changes to Bill 210, that was passed in 2017. It was not proclaimed due to some issues.

Looking at this, first of all, I just wanted to congratulate the member for bringing this kind of piece of legislation to the House. I think this is a privilege, whenever we as legislators or public representatives get a chance to do something to help people, specifically, particularly those in dire need, you know. That needs to be appreciated, and I do.

Looking at the bill, a few questions that are in my mind – a lot of feedback and many personal experiences I had in my mind. I don't know how much time I will have to share those, as my dear colleagues also have a lot to say on this. As I read the bill, it says Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, when it was initiated. The scope of the bill seems a bit narrower. It's basically limited to senior citizens, as it says, the age of over 55. I think, from my personal experience – I don't know what kind of feedback the member had before bringing the bill into the House. There was scope to expand, actually. There was an option to expand the scope of this bill. I see many, many individuals struggling and suffering from mental disorders or mental health issues dealing with similar issues as well. Those people are under the age of 55. Sometimes they're very young; they're youth.

I lived in a complex. I witnessed those issues. I have my own special-needs son. I've heard many stories, and I experience this issue myself. These people, the patients with dementia and mental health and many different types of disabilities, are very lovely people. They need extra care, more than an ordinary patient will probably need. Many times that is 24-hour supervision. You cannot even, you know, just ignore them for a second sometimes. They don't do anything intentionally. They don't know what they're doing. They're lovely people. Sometimes they think they're trying to do something best, but they don't know, like: what is the risk in this? The risks are, like, huge.

There was a time – I think it was two years ago – when I was in the house of a constituent to pay condolences to the family member that he lost. He was pretty healthy, I think in the range of 60, 70 years of age. Two months later I heard that he got a severe dementia condition. They could not believe it. How could it trigger like this? More unfortunately, three or four months later than that, we found out that he was missing. It took a few days. It was good that he was recovered safely, but he didn't live very long, unfortunately. You know, he passed away. It got very severe.

I heard from back home, experience in my country, and I still think, when I'm looking at this bill, that if there could be a system or options and reasons to help or support like this, then young individuals could have been saved. By seeing many members and my colleagues, including yourself, I think you do understand issues with people supported by home care and many other things. Particularly when I represent many of those communities – they speak different languages. Not only do constituents come to my office; also, those Albertans feel they can easily communicate with me in their language on their issues. The biggest problem is that, you know, we do not have culturally delivered home-care support services at all. It doesn't exist. There are a huge, huge number of communities and people and citizens that need it.

The language barrier. I don't know how much you can do without language communication, how much you can help that individual that is in critical condition, who can't do much for him- or herself, and how much home support can help if they do not know their cultural backgrounds and they don't know their cultural food and the other stuff. Those kinds of problems: it's beyond explaining how critical it is.

Unfortunately, I was not one of those members, you know, that had the opportunity where I could bring forward this kind of motion. I still appreciate that you are doing something and that we have something to discuss, but there is a lot to do. A lot to do. I often talk to the home-care service providers. You know, they're lovely people. They try to do their best, whatever they can. The majority of the time in critical, critical health they are allotted the maximum of, like, a half-hour. Their people come in to help for 10 minutes, 15 minutes. Sometimes, if there is some time, giving a bath or doing the extended duties, they're allotted, like, a half-hour time. Out of those half-hours, they are given just 10 minutes for travel time, only 20 minutes to spend on the individuals.

They're also not, you know, paid enough, almost minimum wage, $18. There's huge talent in the province that exists. I speak of all those professionals and skilled individuals that are moving into our province from abroad with professional degrees in health care and all that. You know, they are not being used. They're not being used. They're being wasted.

There is a lot to say. I appreciate and I support your bill, but I had hoped it would have been, like, a bit expanded, you know, in scope. That's all I wanted to see. I hope I have the opportunity, once again, maybe sometime in this government session or maybe the next – definitely, those are very serious concerns, and we need to take a look at them as legislators collectively.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Being cognizant of the time here, I will keep my comments brief. This is an important piece of legislation that I do thank the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for bringing forward. I also appreciate his tenacity for making sure that we keep this bill in front of us.

As was mentioned, Bill 210, unfortunately, tripped literally at the finish line, so, you know, if I could take an opportunity, Madam Chair, to make a shameless plug towards private members' bills, perhaps the Legislature in the future could look at some kinds of resources for private members, sort of on the back end, in terms of looking over legislation, any potential conflicts which, hopefully, might have then prevented Bill 210 not being proclaimed.

I wish the government had been able to identify that, maybe taken it under their wing as a government bill. Then, you know, we could have gotten this through a lot sooner. But it is what it is. Hopefully, now that we've gotten all our ducks in a row, we will be able to get this through. As the Member for Calgary-Hays had mentioned, maybe we can even get it through before the end of this session, because I'd hate to see it again almost trip at the finish line now that, fingers crossed, we've got it right and all the language lines up.

I'd just reconfirm my commitment here today to Bill 204, as I did for Bill 210. I do appreciate that the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon did manage to answer some of my questions, too, that I had originally had in second reading around any potential costs. My hope is that should there be any additional costs, we won't see Bill 204 perhaps fall to nickel and diming. We have seen a few instances where that has occurred by the government. Hopefully, that's not the case with Bill 204. They'll just simply look at it, and it will just be the right thing to do.

As I had mentioned in second reading, I too have seen a couple of cases where seniors in north Edmonton had gone missing. One of the things I forgot to mention was that I even went driving for half an hour or 45 minutes around Edmonton-Decore to see if perhaps I noticed something. The good news was that in those cases it was a happy ending, and those family members were able to get their way back home. But in the case when it's not, this system, I believe, could be the difference between life and death. There's no doubt about that.

From the speakers that I've heard today and throughout debate, I suspect that we will see this bill pass Committee of the Whole and on its way to third, and hopefully maybe we can get this over the finish line.

With that, just on the off chance, I'll make that plug to every single member. As I will be supporting this piece of legislation, I certainly urge you to support this piece of legislation. Let's do what's right for our seniors, make sure they're protected, make sure they get home safe when maybe they are, you know, unfortunate and find themselves somewhere else.

The Chair: Are there other members wishing to join the debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. I, too, wanted to just get on the record today. It has been really nice to see the unanimous support – well, so far – in the House on Bill 204. Of course, I must note that I, too, am disappointed that we haven't had an opportunity to debate private members' business from members on this side of the House. That is certainly a shame. But, like I said, I want to get on the record just to thank the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for his work on Bill 204. From some of the really moving stories that we've heard today and in previous debate on this, you know, I think the Chamber can agree for once on one thing: we can agree that we're doing the right thing.

With that, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the House for the wonderful debate.

The Chair: Are there other members wishing to join the debate?

Seeing none, I will call the question on Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022.

[The clauses of Bill 204 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 204.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 204. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. That is carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I ask for unanimous consent from the Chamber to recognize the time as 5 o'clock and move immediately to Motions Other than Government Motions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

Abandoned Oil and Gas Well Cleanup

505. Mr. Schmidt moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) endorse the principle of polluter pays; and
- (b) oppose the use of government revenue to incentivize the cleanup of abandoned oil and gas infrastructure by companies that are legally responsible for that cleanup.

Mr. Schmidt: If you make a mess, you clean it up: it's a rule that all of us were taught to live by by our mothers, a rule that our spouses or significant others reinforce every time we leave a pair of dirty socks on the floor or dirty dishes in the sink, and a rule we remind our children to follow every time they walk through the house with their dirty shoes on or leave garbage lying around on the floor in their rooms. When the rule is followed, people generally live pretty happily together, and when it's not, conflict arises.

Taking responsibility to clean up your own messes is an obligation that we all believe we should take on, and we've enshrined this obligation as the polluter-pay principle in federal and provincial environmental legislation. The Supreme Court said that it's a well-recognized tenet of environmental law. For the oil and gas industry polluter pay means that oil and gas companies must pay for the environmental costs of their activities. That's been part of the social contract between the oil and gas industry and the Alberta public since the start of that industry in our province.

The sad truth of the matter, though, is that those responsible for enforcing the contract, this UCP Premier and her government, want to rip it up and write a new one, a contract that will make Albertans pay $20 billion to oil and gas companies to clean up oil and gas wells that they are already legally obligated to pay for. It's a bad deal for the people of Alberta, and by voting in favour of this motion, members of this House can show the public that we are standing up for them.

When we raise this issue in the House, the Premier and her government deny it. "It's nowhere in the budget," they say. But the evidence that the UCP is intent on fulfilling its commitment to developing this massive corporate welfare scheme couldn't be more clear. The Premier herself was a paid lobbyist for the program. Kris Kinnear, also a paid lobbyist for the program, now works in the Premier's office to develop the program and is still, at least on paper, a director of the organization who lobbied for the program.

The Energy minister shilled for the program when he was a private member of the government caucus, and I have no doubt that it was his enthusiasm for the program that was a key factor in his appointment to that post. His mandate letter specifically mentions the creation of an incentive program as a key responsibility the Premier expects him to fulfill. To that end, he's held invitation-only meetings with supportive stakeholders and made comments to the press committing to a $100 million pilot program.

The Premier herself has defended the program on her own radio show. Currently, if the UCP were to deny they were doing the thing that they were doing, I'd accuse them of having a hidden agenda, but their agenda to pay $20 billion to oil and gas companies to clean up messes that they're legally required to pay for is out there in the open for all to see. The only place it's hidden is in the budget, and I think that should give all Albertans reason to be skeptical about what the UCP has put forward in the budget documents.

It's also plain for all to see that this $20 billion giveaway is a rip-off for the Alberta taxpayer. You don't have to take my word for it. That's what Scotiabank had to say about the program. They said that "the program goes against the core capitalist principle that private companies should take full responsibility for the liabilities that they willingly accept."

Paul McLaughlin of the Rural Municipalities of Alberta has said that the program is exactly how a fox would design a henhouse. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said that he's a hundred per cent against R-star because it's corporate welfare. Political scientist Duane Bratt says: it's a disgrace on so many levels; you've got the corporate welfare element, but you also have the corruption element. Even the now environment minister rejected the idea when the Premier was lobbying for it, saying that it went against the polluter-pay principle and didn't align with Alberta's royalty framework. It seems she's now changed her tune, just to add to the list of the Premier's bad ideas that she was vocally opposed to back in September but proudly supports now that she's back in cabinet. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I hadn't heard a single Albertan speak out in favour of this program unless they personally stood to gain financially from it.

Mr. Speaker, in recent years the people of Alberta have already picked up the tab for billions of dollars' worth of the oil and gas sector's environmental liabilities. In 2020-2021 we paid over a billion dollars in grants to companies to clean up their wells. The bulk of that money went to companies that were already massively profitable. This government spent $1.5 billion on trans-Canada's pipeline to nowhere. We've loaned the Orphan Well Association hundreds of millions of dollars and are still waiting for those loans to be paid back. There are hundreds of millions of dollars in unpaid municipal taxes that have to be covered by residential property owners. The government has paid out more than $60 million in surface lease payments that were owed to landowners, and they've recovered less than 1 per cent of that money from the companies that should have been on the hook. When I asked the environment minister about this in estimates, she just shrugged her shoulders and basically said: what are you going to do?

At a time when the cost of living is going through the roof and oil and gas companies are raking in record profits, regular Albertans look at what they've already given to the oil and gas industry and are asking how much more they have to pay. The Premier's answer: $20 billion more. It's clear that the Premier is out of touch with regular Albertans, who don't want $20 billion of their money spent to clean up someone else's mess. We here in the Alberta NDP stand firmly and proudly with those regular Albertans against this $20 billion giveaway. This is money that belongs to the people of Alberta, and it should be spent on their priorities.

We've been listening to their priorities and are committing to getting the job done. What would we do with that money, Mr. Speaker? We'd build the south Edmonton hospital. We'd build the Red Deer hospital. We'd reopen the X-ray clinic in Morinville. We'd widen the ambulance bay doors in Innisfail. We'd put a CT scanner in the Misericordia hospital. We'd make sure that a million Albertans could finally see a family doctor with the creation of family health teams, and as an added bonus Albertans would never have to pay out of pocket to see that family doctor, unlike what the Premier has in store for them. We'd build way more than one school in Calgary, and we might even build some schools in Cochrane and Airdrie, too. We'd bring down the cost of living for Albertans, reducing the cost of their energy bills, their car insurance bills, tuition. We'd tackle the high price of groceries. We'd invest real money in the revitalization of downtown Calgary. Those are the priorities that Albertans tell me they have every day, and those are the priorities of Alberta's NDP.

Mr. Speaker, the difference between the government and the opposition on this issue could not be more clear. The UCP wants to pay $20 billion to their friends and donors to do the thing that they should already do. We in the Alberta NDP say no. We know that money should be spent on the things that matter to Albertans: better public health care, making life more affordable, and good jobs for working people. I encourage all members to show that they stand with regular Albertans and show that they stand with their priorities as well and vote in favour of this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Motion Other than Government Motion 505 is before the Assembly. Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak to this motion, and I thank the member very much for bringing forward this incredibly important motion. This motion essentially calls on us to endorse the principle of polluter pay, which I think all members should be willing to do, and to oppose the use of government revenue, in specific royalties, that are meant to belong to all of us and to all Albertans, to incentivize the cleanup of abandoned oil and gas infrastructure, particularly because companies are already legally obligated to clean up that mess.

What, Mr. Speaker, is the problem with the UCP's $20 billion handout? Well, the first problem is that, I mean, they're giving away royalty money, money that belongs to all Albertans, money that ought to go to support all Albertans, to private companies who already have those obligations. The contract that those companies signed to get a drilling licence obligates them to clean up their mess after they are done. It's part of the cost of doing business. This is essentially the government paying people to not break the law. It's as if the government were to begin paying private citizens not to speed. It makes no sense because if you could get paid not to speed, who's going to do it just of their own volition?

That's exactly the problem with this program. It creates what lawyers and philosophers would probably call a moral hazard, but essentially it creates a problem wherein: why would anyone fulfill their obligations just because they're obligated when they could instead choose not to fulfill their obligations in the hope of getting a giant taxpayer handout? That's a huge problem. It's a waste of money, it's not fiscally responsible, and there's no guarantee that it will actually sort of result in additional cleanup. That's the thing.

You know, we saw the Premier stand up today and say: well, we're obligating these companies to do $740 million in cleanup. Okay. Well, I mean, $740 million sounds like a lot of money, doesn't it? Not compared to $20 billion, it isn't. We're talking about kind of far, far more money, more than twice as much money, being used to incentivize this – “incentivize,” scare quotes – relative to what's being required. That's extremely problematic, and I think Albertans object. I think they object because it violates their basic sense of fairness. We all are expected to fulfill our contracts. We all are expected to uphold our obligations, especially those obligations we have voluntarily taken on, you know, without being paid to do so. Albertans don't like things that aren't fair, and this is not fair. So that is highly problematic to begin with.

I think the other problem with this is that it doesn't really pass the sniff test. The Premier lobbied for this program before she became the Premier. Suddenly it's getting pushed through with very little consultation. The head lobbyist for this, one who has, according to them and no one else, resigned from his position, now works in the Premier's office. That person is still listed, incidentally, as a director on the corporate registry, and here's the thing. It's not that hard to amend a corporate registry, and it doesn't take that long. You file the paperwork, and then it gets amended. We pulled a search on that corporate registry just recently, and there's his name in black and white, Kris Kinnear, still listed as a lobbyist there. That's wildly problematic in terms of actual conflicts of interest. You know, on things like this even the appearance of a conflict like that is highly problematic.

Albertans deserve to be able to know transparently, without going to a great deal of depth, that their government is acting in their interests, not in private interests. We should be able to know that without having to pull registry searches, so this is incredibly problematic. The refusal to address it publicly is incredibly problematic. Add to that the fact that the other head of this same organization – one head is now in the Premier's office, still listed as corporate director – runs an anti-NDP PAC. That is extremely problematic, right? It's extremely problematic to see these sort of interties between groups that are ostensibly unassociated groups, that are ostensibly, you know, not affiliated, running these advertisements, lobbying for a thing, a thing which the public hates, which is not in their interests, and which is being rammed through the government. Is it a smoking gun? Maybe not, but it sure doesn't pass the smell test. I don't think anyone would look at that and be like: that set of facts seems fine to me. I think anyone who looks at it would be troubled, deeply troubled.

Now, if there were some sort of argument that this was in the public benefit – sorry. If there were some sort of credible argument that this was in the public benefit, perhaps that sort of weird interaction between people and lobbying and government wouldn't seem quite so problematic, but there isn't. There really, really isn't. The Premier talks about the worst of the wells that haven't been reclaimed, but the thing is that to get a royalty credit, there's still an owner. These aren't orphaned wells. These aren't wells that have moved to the Orphan Well Association, because those have no owner. The company has gone bankrupt; it's defunct. Honestly, without making allegations, it feels a lot like the government is really taking some big steps not to clarify that distinction, not to clarify the distinction between wells that don't have an owner and wells that do have an owner, because only wells that do have an owner, that have a company that is still solvent, that is probably generating an enormous amount of profit, who is legally obligated to clean them up, can generate royalty credits, because you have to be getting royalties. So I think that that is wildly problematic.

I think that the people of Alberta are strongly against it, and I think when you see politicians pushing ahead with something this wildly unpopular, it raises some questions. I think that when you add those questions to the ties between these lobbying firms and the Premier and other members of the government, that all becomes super problematic.

What I think is fantastic about this motion is, because we know that there are members of the government who have stood for the polluter-pay principle – we had an Energy minister who was replaced by this Premier, a UCP Energy minister, who publicly said: I don't support this program; it violates the polluter-pay principle. I would be very, very interested to see if we can see some members of the government standing up against this because I think it is the wrong thing to do and I think that their constituents are watching and will hold them accountable for this. Yeah. I think that this program is incredibly problematic. It is problematic ethically. It is problematic in terms of responsible governance, and I'm not the only one who thinks that. The RMA thinks that. Scotiabank thinks that. They called it a violation of basic capitalist principles.

I think the government can do better. I hope to see government members stand up against this because I think that there's a far better use for $20 billion. It's almost the entire health care budget. I think there are a lot of things that a government should be able to do with this money that aren't this. I believe that the government – well, I believe that Albertans can do better, and they have the opportunity with a new government.

The Speaker: Are there others? Motion Other than Government Motion 505.

Mr. Dach: Well, I'll speak happily, Mr. Speaker, to this Motion 505, which is a pretty shocking motion to most Albertans, who believe that historically we would expect companies to be cleaning up their own messes, and that's what one would have thought would be the so-called Alberta way. I've worked in the oil patch and spun my share of wrenches on service rigs and moved service rigs. If indeed there was a spill of some kind that was caused by the company I was working with, we cleaned it up, and we admitted responsibility and took efforts to make sure that the damage that we did was taken care of.

It wasn't any effort; even back then, in the '80s, it was a matter of respect for our small business that I worked with to admit fault and pay for it. That's a principle that's enshrined not only in the ethics of individuals and small businesses in the province but large corporations the size of – the Bank of Nova Scotia has seen fit to come forward, Mr. Speaker, to reinforce the principle that if you make a mess, you clean it up and you pay for it, that you undertake to claim responsibility for the obligations you have that you've willingly undertaken. It shocked the business community that the government would be seemingly willing to shirk this responsibility by somehow circumventing this principle and allowing, by way of a royalty rebate program, handing over $20 billion of the Alberta treasury's money to companies so that they could be compensated for cleaning up the messes that they were already legally obligated to pay for.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker; when I mentioned this at the door – it may be shocking to you, but when you say the word "R-star," it gets people's dander up. They recognize what it is, and the issue was on the table and on the doorstep in this province. It is something that people are keenly aware of, and when they sense an injustice, when they sense that there's an irresponsibility undertaken by corporations with the complicity of the government, they are not happy about it. Albertans are very much aware of this issue. They're seized with it. We're bringing it forward in the House not because it's some minuscule issue that deserves to be brought to the public light; it is already under the spotlight in this province, and Albertans are keenly aware of it.

We are rightly proud of our oil and gas industry in this province, and one of the things that we expect of that industry as well as any others is that if there are environmental concerns or issues that are the responsibility of an oil company, they will undertake to clean up the messes that they've made. You know, the now Premier, who previous to her undertaking that role was the lobbyist who promoted this R-star scheme so that energy companies could be compensated by receiving a royalty holiday in exchange for cleaning up messes that they already were obligated to undertake – now, having assumed the Premier's role, it appears as though the current Energy minister is wildly in approval of it. It seems to be a team effort to double down on this scheme to have oil companies compensated from the provincial treasury to do what they're already obligated to do from their own pockets, and Albertans are not amused. They're actually shocked and they're angry about what this government is trying to do.

I think the only disbelief, Mr. Speaker, comes from the fact that many people at the doorstep just can't believe that the government is trying to pull this off. Like, what Albertan would have expected this to have taken place in 2023, where you have a Premier who had lobbied loud and strong for this type of a measure to satisfy the oil companies' interests, to relieve them of obligations to the tune of $20 billion they already have – who would have believed that, indeed, if that lobbyist actually assumed the premiership would continue to double down on that and think it was a winning proposition for her government? It's a pretty interesting tale, and it's reminiscent of sort of Wild West days.

You know, when I worked in the oil patch for small businesses that benefited from the production of oil and gas in this province, many of which still continue to do so, there was a respect, a dignity amongst those, at least the small businesses, to ensure that they took their responsibility seriously, and they actually paid if indeed they screwed up, if there was a spill, if there was some damage done to land. That's why we have tribunals, to ensure that this happens. The Surface Rights Board, for example, Mr. Speaker, looks at disputes between landowners and oil companies.

It's very, very disappointing, shocking, and certainly unacceptable that we have a government led by a Premier who lobbied on behalf of oil companies to receive up to $20 billion in compensation for doing what they're already responsible to do by law. It's very disappointing that we now have a Premier and a government who seem intent on following through on this when, in fact, Albertans are gathering their voices loudly and clearly to say: "Uh-uh. This is not right. It offends our sense of justice. It's just plain offensive, and we're not going to stand for it."

I urge the government, Mr. Speaker, to reconsider what they're doing and endorse the policy, the principle of polluter pays. You know, this motion opposes the use of government revenue to incent the cleanup of abandoned oil and gas infrastructure by companies that are legally required to pay for that cleanup. It's astounding that indeed the government seems intent to move forward on this. In many respects I know that some pundits are feeling that the government is running towards a cliff by supporting and sticking with this policy of handing over up to $20 billion to oil companies, yet the government seems intent.

I remember times when we were in government ourselves and the opposition was saying, like, you know: just take our advice on this one; it's going to hurt you. There were a couple of times when it probably would've been a good idea. This is a time, Mr. Speaker, when the shoe is on the other foot, and we're telling the government very plainly, "Back up on this, think it through again, and don't cause yourself the trouble that you're getting yourself into with the Alberta taxpayer," who is definitely smelling something rotten. They're not comfortable at all with what this government is trying to pull off here. It's almost as if in the light of day they think they can get away with something that indeed under the cloak of secrecy might have been more difficult and they might've been accused of hiding something. Here they're right in the open. They're asking Alberta taxpayers to come up with $20 billion to compensate oil companies to do what they're already required to do, clean up their own mess. I can't understand why indeed the government is so intent on it.

I mean, if that's what they are intent on doing, they will suffer the penalty and the wrath of Albertans and Alberta taxpayers because indeed it's on the radar of the Alberta taxpayer and the public, in my riding and right across the province, whether you're in Fort McMurray, southern Alberta. Wherever you find oil patch exploration going on, you'll find people are concerned about this, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. the Member for Airdrie-Cochrane and Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must say that I'm a little bit surprised that the NDP want to continue down the path of taking a position against the energy sector heading into an election. You know, even when it comes to good environmental stewardship and the acceleration of well closure, the NDP refuse to lend support.

Before I get into those details, I'd like to talk about some of the great work going on in industry because it exemplifies responsible development. As of January 1 there were approximately 464,000 wells in Alberta, including 133,500 reclaimed to date, of which over 15,000 were reclaimed in the last year alone. Contributions for this cleanup came through direct industry initiatives; the Orphan Well Association, which is a levy paid by the oil and gas sector; and through closure efforts from the site rehabilitation program.

Alberta's energy sector are setting the pace when it comes to methane reductions, having achieved 44 per cent thus far, meaning we will easily exceed the 45 per cent goal set out for 2025. At a flaring and methane reductions panel that I participated in at CERAWEEK in Houston, many were happy to see the tremendous success within Alberta and expressed displeasure at the lack of action elsewhere in the world.

Alberta oil sands producers are also showing leadership, having brought down emissions by over 35 per cent in the last 20 years, 22 per cent in the last decade. The Pathways Alliance, made up of the six largest oil sands players, have committed to reaching the goal of net zero, or net neutrality, by 2050 and are actively working to implement carbon capture technology into their operations.

Mr. Speaker, our producers are technological innovators and have the highest level of environmental metrics, a deep concern for civil and human rights, not to mention strong governance policies. This doesn't even take into consideration the human and social factors from the energy sector's contributions to local communities, Indigenous partnerships, and their outsized contribution to public services through royalties and tax dollars.

The implication from this motion brought forth by Alberta's NDP is that the industry is not living up to their obligations, and that is completely false. It's that ideology that keeps tripping up this opposition. Mr. Speaker, we all know that both the federal and the provincial NDP are one and the same. They are one party, which means that Jagmeet Singh is the leader, with provincial parties being subordinate. So let's take a look at some of their platform policies. From the NDP's website:

Putting a price on carbon has been an important tool in efforts to drive emissions reductions. We will continue with carbon pricing while . . . rolling back loopholes . . . [to give] to big polluters. But we also recognize that carbon pricing won't be enough . . . Further action is needed.

. . . We will support Canada's net-zero target by reviewing financial legislation . . . [to] ensure that strict rules are in place to prevent big companies from using . . . offsets.

And they go on and on. They say that they will put in place legislation to ban any future oil, gas and pipeline [incentives].

Mr. Speaker, the anti oil and gas position is a fundamental, ideological NDP belief, with no incentives of any kind to be allowed to fossil fuel producers ever. That is the real message behind their motion. Naturally, this causes strife and division within the NDP ranks because we live in Alberta. Adhering to an anti oil and gas platform, at least outwardly, is an election killer, so the NDP try to gaslight the regular citizen into thinking that they support but use incrementalism to destroy resource development. They do this in a number of ways such as increasing the cost of doing business until companies are no longer viable, and then they go bankrupt. As an example, the NDP will increase corporate taxes and personal taxes while they're at it; support the clean fuel standard, which is just another carbon tax; they'll increase levies; and they're talking about another hike in the minimum wage, all things designed to increase the cost of living and make life miserable for business.

Now, we all know, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP introduced Canada's first retail carbon tax, and the purpose was to increase the cost of living so high that one would have to stop using fossil fuels such as gasoline or natural gas for heating your home. In Alberta this is virtually impossible because of the cold climate and the vast distances we have to travel, so all this does is increase inflationary pressures on families and make companies less competitive. By design the NDP set out to damage the pocketbooks of Albertans with their carbon tax, which, by the way, is a tax that they are credited for introducing to Justin Trudeau. So they've got that going for them.

The NDP have a tax-and-spend mentality, and their fundamental, core belief against fossil fuels means they believe that resource companies should pay their fair share. What's really meant by this is to shut them down, so they increase the cost of doing business, which chases investment out of the province, thus driving people to the unemployment line. Mission accomplished for the NDP.

But, Mr. Speaker, they are placing themselves in a corner with these internal struggles inside of their party around energy. Let's look at this. Previously the NDP supported the $235 million loan to the OWA. They also created C-star, which allows companies to write off their well cost against future royalties. Does that sound familiar? It should.

Last week the Member for Edmonton-North West introduced Bill 207, that calls for incentives to a variety of areas, including critical minerals, but this creates a problem. As many NDP supporters don't realize, critical mineral development will require expertise, expertise that we find in the oil and gas sector, and hence they will play a big part in future resource development.

How does the NDP handle this direct conflict to their founding principle against any resource development? Well, this again is where the incrementalism principle comes into play, Mr. Speaker. To satisfy the turmoil within, they introduce stuff like emissions caps, windfall taxes, and they support the federal Liberals on items like Bill C-69, the No More Resource Development Act.

I'd like to add that the Supreme Court started hearings on C-69, I think, actually, earlier today, Mr. Speaker. The NDP were very upset that Alberta courts supported our government's case against C-69 and its creator, close friend and ally to Alberta's NDP, Justin Trudeau.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the NDP drone on with misinformation about a nonexistent program, one that would accelerate site closure, which is a good thing, but I can tell you that no such program exists, nor is it contained in the budget. Many programs get considered, and for a multitude of reasons they end up on the cutting-room floor. Processwise a program must go through consultation, vetting within the department. Then it has to go to committee, cabinet, caucus, and Treasury Board, and the program that this NDP is alluding to hasn't completed even a single stage of what I just mentioned. They are desperate, and it is "create a crisis" for the NDP.

Our resource sectors are the driving force behind Alberta's economy. They invest billions into our communities and are good stewards of the environment, and to imply otherwise is categorically false. Industry has mandatory spend limits on closure that increased 66 per cent this year, to $700 million. But as I described earlier, they do so much more to preserve and conserve for future generations. Mr. Speaker, we should be thinking pragmatically and working with industry, not against them. After all, they are the technological innovators. They complete the R and D we use to meet environmental goals.

It's in everyone's best interest to have a healthy resource sector, and that requires balance. As we have seen with the pandemic and geopolitical events, ideological positions against the energy sector such as those held by the NDP are traps, traps that lead countries like Russia to weaponize their resources against us. Again, we require balance, balance between energy security, reliability, affordability, and sound environmental stewardship. That is what this UCP government provides.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows has risen.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House and add my comments on behalf of my constituents to Motion 505. I also commend and congratulate my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for bringing forward this motion in the House, because I think, kind of based on the feedback I get in my office, these are very concerning issues not only in my riding but also among Albertans.

It is a very general principle. You don't need to do a lot of education around this. If you make a mess, you clean it yourself. You break it; you fix it. More importantly, if you're running a professional organization, a big company, then it is expected that you better understand those principles. More than that, if they're running a multimillion-, multibillion-dollar corporation or multinational corporation that is earning billions and trillions of dollars and have so many professionals and talented and skilled people onboard, then they'd better understand the content of the agreement they have signed with the government, and in this case it seems everyone understands but this government.

Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister, you know, I appreciate he stood up to provide comments to this motion in response to my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, but it was disturbing to see that he has nothing to back up his argument, basically no information. I don't know; we need to see probably how many times he used "Justin Trudeau" and "Jagmeet Singh" and whoever. This motion was all about what he's doing with public funds, Albertans' money, to hand over to multibillion-dollar companies to do a job they're already legally – legally – obligated to do. You're doing it at a time when Albertans are going through a tough time, and you're doing it at a time when the Alberta government told them that you cannot help them enough because you can't afford to do it.

You came up with this plan. Those companies: you know, they're still walking away with hundreds of millions of dollars, tax dollars that are due to the municipalities. Instead of helping those municipalities to get those tax dollars back so they can help the municipalities and communities grow and build the economy, the UCP government came up with this plan. They say that this is a wise enough decision, to come up with public funds at a time when they could be spent on people where they are lacking a lot of support in health care, in education, an affordability crisis. They came up with a plan to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows is the only one with the floor.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I was looking at this bill, you know, it reminded me of something that happened in the mid-90s in the B.C. government. The then NDP Premier Glen Clark came into the news by his government signing about an $800 contract. It turned out that the individual who worked on that contract was Premier Glen Clark's neighbour. Somebody complained. He had a really good relationship as a neighbour with the Premier, and he was often seen helping and working and mingling with the Premier's household. The Premier immediately took responsibility, saving the reputation of himself and his party. He resigned even though after that he was cleared from all those processes from the Ethics Commissioner. From the legal point of view there was nothing done wrong. He had no role to play with that $850 contract.

On the other side we see the conflict-of-interest issue, the ethics being broken by this party. If the UCP believes in ethics, anything like that, they would have a better answer today. I was expecting that the minister, when he rose to respond to my colleague, would have had a better argument than this.

The hon. minister probably is, you know, surprised that I'm talking about the ethics issue. So that we all know how those connections work in our current Premier's office and R-star, I would just like to, for the sake of the record – I don't know how much time I do have – go over the information.

A staff member in [the Premier's] office [broke] ethics rules due to his ongoing role in an organization lobbying for a massive royalty giveaway to a small number of oil and gas companies.

According to corporate search records, Kris Kinnear is registered as a corporate director of Sustaining Alberta's Energy Network . . . The organization developed the RStar program that proposes granting up to $20 billion in royalty credits to incentive the cleanup of wells – something companies are already obligated to do.

Kinnear also works in [the Premier's] office as a Manager of Special Projects and is currently working on implementing RStar.

Section 23.2 of the Conflicts of Interest Act (Page 33-34) reads "A member of the Premier's and Ministers' staff breaches this Part if he or she takes part in a decision in the course of carrying out his or her office or powers knowing that the decision might further a private interest of the member, a person directly associated with the member or the member's minor or adult child."

"This is corruption,"

said my colleague the critic for democracy and ethics in his public statement.

"[The Premier] and her office are using their power to help themselves and enrich their [close] friends. This is [truly] unacceptable."

In the budget estimates, when the Opposition Leader asked, the Premier claimed Kinnear resigned from [Sustaining Alberta's Energy Network].

Corporate records indicate that that is not true.

[The Premier] was also a registered lobbyist for RStar before becoming premier.

The other director listed for [the corporation] is Mackenzie Lee who also runs the Alberta First Initiative – a third party political advertiser that is largely funded by companies that would benefit from the program.

"It's clear that [the Premier] has every intention of moving ahead with this $20 billion giveaway to her friends and donors."

Mr. Rutherford: Point of order.

Mr. Deol: "She lobbied . . ."

The Speaker: A point of order is noted.

The hon. the government whip.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 23 (h), (i), and (j), I think, to impute a false motive to the Premier. To say that she has every intention of going ahead with this program, when the Minister of Energy has clearly spelled out that there is no program, and doing so to the benefit of friends and donors is making an allegation against another member, specifically talking about another member, and telling the public that there's a program that exists that, in fact, does not should be an apology and a withdrawal, please.

The Speaker: The deputy opposition whip.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is clearly not a point of order. We've heard similar lines of debate in this Chamber, and they were found not to be a point of order, so I would love if the Member for Edmonton-Meadows can continue with his well-thought-out points.

The Speaker: I do concur that this is a matter of debate. It's what we do here.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Debate Continued

Mr. Deol: Thank you. What I was saying, Mr. Premier – Mr. Speaker; sorry about that.

An Hon. Member: That's okay.

Mr. Deol: That's okay. The Premier belongs to the House and . . .

The Speaker: Motion Other than Government Motion 505. Is there anyone else wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Oh, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening to debate, as you so eloquently put it as what we do here today. We've got Motion 505 on the floor from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I'm just going to read it into the record here yet again for the folks at home so they understand what's taking place.

- (a) endorse the principle [that] polluter pays; and
- (b) oppose the use of government revenue to incentivize the cleanup of abandoned oil and gas infrastructure by companies that are legally responsible for that cleanup.

On the surface, Mr. Speaker, this seems to be pretty innocuous, pretty innocuous like having a coyote on the edge of your farmyard when they keep sniffing around the chickens, but they want to keep grabbing one at a time. It's the same type of thing. Firstly, the polluter does pay. That is a principle written everywhere. We have so many laws in place to do that for the environmental protection of the province. That's number one. The second one is: to oppose any use of government revenue to clean up abandoned wells. There was a comment made in here earlier today, and it was pretty wild. You know, there's an old adage out there that to catch a thief, you have to think like a thief. Well, to see what a plan is to shut down our energy sector, you have to think like a socialist. This mandate that they've been doing has been nonstop. They like to say in here, you know: the just transition plan. No? Well, let's talk about that after the election. We don't want to talk about literally the alliance that we signed with Jagmeet Singh and Justin Trudeau. They hate to recognize that their party is one big party that's right across the country. These are the same things that are insidiously creeping here again.

The same folks that are standing up here, claiming that they don't want to use tax dollars, say: free money. Free money. They actually said that. The leader of the opposition said "free money" in here today, talking about other health programs. The free money is taxpayer dollars. For a program that doesn't exist, they're pulling some feathers out of wherever they pull things from to make up things in fairy tale and pixie dust land again to have this pontification about saving the planet, saving the environment – oh, yeah – and saving taxpayer dollars. They're making – I can't say certain unparliamentary language. I'm trying – very comfortable here – but calling an L-word something and trying to think of a different one right now is frustrating the heck out of me. Misleading, misstepped, misguided, or just the simple just transition language about our energy sector and what we're trying to do here. They don't want to have a made-up program in concept, that they still keep reaching for – they don't want to use taxpayer dollars or incentivize dollars to be able to fix something.

The Orphan Well Association: that's what it does. It literally takes wells that couldn't be cleaned up, thrown into a pot, that is then managed by the government basically to clean these things up. [interjection] Oh, Mr. Speaker, I've just been called an idiot by the member opposite, but that's okay because he's been kicked out more times than not. That's okay. I've been called a heck of a lot worse by socialists. Every time I point these things out, this is the same guy that sits there and jumps up and down and says things against the Premier or Prime Minister Thatcher. He says a ton of things that got him kicked out more than once, but that's okay. He's really used to jumping up and down with a protest sign.

The Speaker: Okay. Okay. The hon. member will speak to the motion. Better things will happen.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah. I shouldn't be listening to him; you're absolutely right of what he's saying over there.

Alberta has a long-standing relationship between the oil and gas companies. This is a known fact. This happens to be one of our major sectors. The members opposite support organizations like Extinction Rebellion. In fact, one of them wanted it to be put in the schools, in the classrooms, and still does, still loves to have that. This was an organization recognized on a terrorist watch list over in the U.K., and this is the type of ideological thing that we should be teaching, which goes right along with this. This is just bonkers.

Again, we're talking about a program that they're trying to stop, that hasn't even started. Here's a really novel approach. In concept, when you incentivize a group – I don't know – like lowering taxes, we've seen tons and tons of investment come in. You have to make sure that this industry can clean up the assets. You have to make sure that they're solvent.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadows was talking about how we have to make sure that these companies pay their taxes. You absolutely do. And to do that, to generate that revenue, you have to make sure that they're viable. But you can't chop off your foot and then win a hundred-metre dash.

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Getson: This is logic. I'm trying to give him some socialist logic. I don't speak freaky-deaky socialist. I'm trying to do it as much as I can so they can understand it, but their motion is still the same point. You can't use revenue dollars that you don't have to clean up something that doesn't need to be cleaned up. We want to clean it up, but we don't want to clean it up because we don't want to use taxpayer dollars to do it because that's what's safe.

They had four years to take care of this. We've got a bunch of wells that need to be cleaned up. We've got a large inventory of inactive and abandoned wells across the province because we've had lots of activity. The current way we've been doing it for years isn't quite working. The minister spoke about some program they're talking about that the opposition is jumping up and down about – that isn't in place – is going to be the death knell for all of us. What I would like to hear is: is the minister working on programs behind the scenes, working on items that would be novel – no different than how we worked on the economy – to clean up these wells, to make sure that we get these things cleaned up that are sitting out there? The government introduced the liability management framework to help decrease the number of inactive well sites, to support and to speed up the targets for Albertans to nominate sites for cleanup. This is a good thing.

So, again, what's taking place on this file is similar to what was said earlier on crop insurance files. The opposition loves to go out, make up a news story, get their little tweets, their little twits, whatever the things are on social media that are out there that follow and do that, so then they can jump up and down and cause disinformation. That's what this motion is, where we want to make sure that we can . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt but pursuant to Standing Order 8(3), which allows the mover of the motion up to five minutes to close debate, I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to do just that . . .

Mr. Nielsen: It'd be another 10 minutes for you if I got up.

The Speaker: I might remind all members of the Assembly that unparliamentary language on or off the record is still unparliamentary. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for what was probably the most merciful interruption of the entire day. I appreciate that, and I appreciate the opportunity to close debate on Motion 505.

You know, it was interesting to hear the Energy minister stand up and talk about the motion. It was interesting because he didn't say whether or not he's going to support the motion or whether he's against it. So I guess we'll have to see, when members are called to vote, exactly how the government members are going to vote, because in neither of the statements that I listened to did either speaker from the government side indicate whether or not they support the idea of polluter pay and oppose the idea of government using taxpayer dollars to clean up oil and gas wells or whether they'd vote in favour of the proposed $20 billion giveaway that the Energy minister has been tasked to create.

Now, the other thing that was interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that for about a minute of the Energy minister's speech he did reference the R-star program, and in the same sentence he said that the program didn't exist, but if it did exist, it would work wonderfully to clean up all of these oil and gas wells that need to be cleaned up. Well, what is it? Does the program exist or not? We know that the program has been given as a responsibility to the Energy minister to develop. It's clearly written out in his mandate letter, published on the Alberta government website, for the entire public to see.

The minister himself has said that, in his opinion, we need to incentivize oil and gas companies to do the thing that they're already required to do. Like my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View said, this is like incentivizing speeders to slow down by paying them money to stop speeding. This is the creation of a moral hazard, and it beggars belief that the government thinks it would improve the condition of the regular Albertan by spending $20 billion on oil and gas companies' environmental liabilities rather than the priorities of Albertans, as I've outlined before.

The government has refused to entertain any meaningful action on this. The government knows that the solution to the problem exists in just making sure that the industry pays for its bills, but it refuses at every turn to take the necessary steps to make the bad actors in the oil and gas industry pay their bills. They refuse to step in and require them to pay their municipal taxes. They refuse to step in and recover the money from the Surface Rights Board that's paid out to the oil and gas industry. The minister claims that the oil and gas industry is doing an excellent job of reducing methane reductions, and that's true, but the taxpayer has been on the hook for over $30 million in that effort.

Mr. Speaker, enough is enough. The taxpayers of Alberta are tired of paying bills that properly should be paid by the oil and gas industry, and I think it's rich that the Energy minister will portray this as socialists refusing to provide any incentive to the oil and gas industry. I think the difference here between our party and his party is that we want to create incentives so that companies do the things that they normally wouldn't do here in Alberta. That's the idea behind the PDP program that we implemented. That's the idea behind a bunch of the tax credits that we implemented. That was designed to encourage industry to carry out activities here in Alberta that they wouldn't normally do.

That's not the case with the R-star program. This $20 billion that the Energy minister is intent on giving away is actually going to disincentivize the cleanup of oil and gas liabilities, because, as my friend from Calgary-Mountain View pointed out, who's going to spend their own money to clean up their own oil and gas liabilities when they can wait for a government handout? We saw that with the site rehabilitation program. Once the government announced the site rehabilitation program, all that activity stopped until everybody knew who was going to get the money. That's exactly what's going to happen.

I encourage all members to stand up for their constituents and vote for this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 505 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:57 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, March 20, 2023

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening, hon. members. Please be seated.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to seek unanimous consent of the House for members to be able to speak from seats other than their usual seat for the period of Committee of Supply.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Committee of Supply

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Okay. Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Before we commence consideration of supplementary supply, I would like to briefly review the standing orders governing the speaking rotation as provided for in Standing Order 59.01(6), which is as follows.

- (a) The Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak . . .
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 24, approved by the Assembly on March 16, 2023, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2022-23 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move the 2022-23 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund. When passed, these estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $2.7 billion in voted expense funding, $500,000 in voted capital investment, and $292 million in financial transactions.

The estimates include additional funding to the following offices and government departments: Advanced Education; Affordability and Utilities; Agriculture and Irrigation; Children's Services; Culture; Education; Energy; Environment and Protected Areas; Executive Council; Health; Indigenous Relations; Infrastructure; Justice; Mental Health and Addiction; Public Safety and Emergency Services; Seniors, Community and Social Services; Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction; Technology and Innovation; and Treasury Board and Finance.

Among various other programs, services, and obligations, the funding in Bill 12 will help provide for additional investment in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. It will provide for the cost of selling oil and the site rehabilitation program. It will account for physician payments in the new Alberta Medical Association agreement and rebates and grants under the affordability action plan along with advertising to inform Albertans about the government's affordability relief measures. The supplementary estimates report the additional funding needed for the government's fiscal plan in 2022-23.

While we do see additional spending in this bill, it's important to highlight the work this government has done to get Alberta's finances back in order since we formed government. Madam Chair, in 2019 the MacKinnon panel found that Alberta spent significantly more than Canada's three largest provinces on a per capita basis but without achieving better outcomes. Since then this government has worked diligently and responsibly to bring spending in line with comparator provinces, and Budget 2023 shows that Alberta is at the range of those provinces on a per capita basis. We are no longer an expensive outlier. That's good news for our province and for the sustainable delivery of the programs and services Albertans rely on.

Furthermore, Budget 2023 keeps our net debt-to-GDP ratio well below our targeted maximum of 30 per cent. In fact, at the end of '22-23 we're at 10.2 per cent. Simply put, our commitment to our fiscal anchors is paying off and paving the way for a more prosperous future.

Going forward, new fiscal rules will make sure that governments continue to make responsible spending decisions. The new fiscal framework would require all future Alberta governments to balance their annual budgets, with certain exceptions, and use any surpluses to prioritize debt repayment. The framework would provide the government appropriate room to invest in areas and services important to Albertans while adding more rigour around expense increases. Setting limits would challenge the government to focus on improving programs and services while continuing to use hard-earned tax dollars wisely.

Looking at the numbers in front of us, we see that same sentiment reflected today. The largest supplementary amount in the estimates belongs to Treasury Board and Finance, where we see $753 million provided for investment in the heritage savings trust fund. We've also brought forth, in separate legislation, changes that will enable the fund to retain 100 per cent of its annual net earnings. Right now any net income other than the amount needed for inflation-proofing is transferred to the general revenue fund. This change would result in significant annual growth in the heritage fund and mark another step, an important step, in securing Alberta's future. A compelling data point that's worth noting again, Madam Chair: if we had kept all of the previous earnings in the fund from day one without adding any additional deposits other than the ones that were made, instead of an $18 billion fund at the end of '22-23 we would have a fund approaching $300 billion.

The next-largest expense in the estimates comes from the Department of Energy. An amount of $636 million is requested, which includes $338 million for the cost of selling oil, primarily due to high oil prices, and $279 million for the site rehabilitation program as a result of revised federal program timelines. It also includes $10.8 million for the Alberta petrochemical incentive program for an additional project approval.

An amount of $553 million is requested for the Department of Health, including $332 million for our physician payments, $184 million for the new Alberta Medical Association agreement, and $37 million for payments to allied health providers.

On the matter of health, it must be noted that Budget 2023 will provide funding beyond that which we see in this bill to continue to build a stronger health care system for Albertans. In fact, we're once again setting a record for health spending in this province this year by committing an additional $965 million in operating expense in '23-24 for the Ministry of Health. This funding will ensure the government can take the urgent action needed to improve ambulance response times, decrease emergency room wait times, reduce wait times for surgeries, and attract more front-line health care workers to deliver the care patients expect and deserve.

A total of $355 million is requested under Affordability and Utilities. This includes $349 million for utility rebate and grant programs primarily related to electricity rebates as part of the affordability action plan. The unique and challenging circumstances of the last year called on the government to act fast to make life more affordable for Albertans. Budget '23 builds on our efforts in this area with $2.3 billion in affordability measures in '23-24, $1.5 billion in '24-25, and another $1.8 billion in '25-26. Madam Chair, we're keeping more money in the pockets of Albertans, and we're continuing to provide a helping hand to those in need.

Other funding is requested across departments to provide for various services and initiatives that enhance Albertans' well-being and support opportunities for them to learn, develop skills, and enter well-paying careers, because, Madam Chair, we want every Albertan to participate in the Alberta advantage. This includes $32 million for public security, $31 million for court and justice services, $28 million for homelessness and outreach support services, $20 million for learning support funding, $4 million for advertising to raise awareness of available mental health and addiction resources, and $1.5 million for rural economic development, among the other program services and initiatives detailed before us today.

Overall, the amounts in these supplementary estimates are needed to help the government address Albertans' current priorities. Madam Chair, with that, my colleagues and I will now be pleased to answer questions from the members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, we'll now ask the Official Opposition to start off the questions. Would you like to combine your first 60 minutes?

Mr. Eggen: No.

The Chair: No? You just want the first 10? It's all yours. The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to all of the ministers and assistants that are here this evening. It's nice to see some of your familiar faces and gainfully employed still. That's great.

I'd just like to make some general comments about supplementary supply. What's clear from this request for supplementary supply is that this UCP government is campaigning on the public dime: a whopping $6.6 million for advertising alone to promote the government. As we heard in the Budget 2023 estimates, another $3.5 million is on the way to keep on promoting the government. This, in our view and in the view of many Albertans, is an abuse of public dollars.

Over $10 million of public money is being spent to promote the new Premier's government right before the election. That's $10 million that's not even being spent to hire family doctors, for example, or $10 million that could be spent on teachers in the classroom. Most importantly, that's $10 million that could be spent to further the electoral interests of the UCP government. That's $10 million of pre-election, taxpayer-funded political advertising. It's four times more than what a party can spend in a campaign. Absolutely outrageous. The House simply, on this side, doesn't stand for it.

Madam Chair, certainly, supply is a matter of course. I know as government, as minister that it's necessary to do so, but is it necessary to spend four times the amount that it is even legally able for any political party to spend during an electoral period in a pre-election spend out of the supplementary supply? There seem to be no boundaries around this; there seems to be no regulation. Certainly, the Finance minister said some words about: oh, no; well, we wouldn't do that. But there's absolutely nothing legally that would compel the government to do anything but what this was originally intended to do, which is to create a fund to promote the government's interests before an electoral period.

You know, Albertans are smart. From the barrage of telephone calls, of which I've gotten many from several of you – I didn't answer – and the pamphlets that are in everybody's mailbox all of the time, a lot of people just know that the government is campaigning on your money, on the money that comes out of taxpayer money, campaigning on that same dime. People just don't like it; it leaves a bad taste in their mouth. Quite frankly, it goes against the spirit of the difference between a budget and campaigning. It's as simple as that.

Those, Madam Chair, are my general comments around supplementary supply. I think that my colleagues will add some supplement to that, supplement to the supplementary supply comments. The bottom line is this – right? – that people need to know that this government has cut themselves a cheque that is four times greater than what they're allowed to spend during an electoral period, in the pre-electoral period, in supplementary supply. And, quite frankly, this is unacceptable.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to respond to a few of the assertions that the member opposite made here over the last few minutes. Firstly, the assertion that we are simply using these funds for campaigning is completely ridiculous. The biggest expenditure is to the heritage savings trust fund, a fund that is owned by all Albertans, $753 million to make $2 billion transfer in this year. Secondly, the second-largest expenditure is made for Health. I don't call that campaigning; I call that delivering first-world health care. The Health minister is ensuring that EMS wait times are shortened, that times in emergency room departments are shortened, that our surgical wait times are shortened, and this funding will ensure that he can accomplish those goals.

Madam Chair, I don't know if anyone in this House will argue that we're facing a time of inflation. Three hundred and fifty-five million dollars are going to electricity rebates, electricity rebates that are covering virtually every household in this province, and that is critically important during this time of inflation. And $338 million are going to off-set the cost of selling oil. We are in a time of higher energy prices. We're all thankful for that in this House, but with that come some additional costs related to selling the oil that we receive as a royalty in kind.

Madam Chair, this supplementary supply, this additional appropriations bill was put in place to ensure that we could fund the priorities of Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the supplementary supply.

The Chair: Sorry, hon. member. Would you like to share the 10-minute back and forth or just take the 10 minutes?

Mr. Sabir: No.

The Chair: Take the 10 minutes? Go ahead.

Mr. Sabir: While we were in estimates, I really wanted to share time with the Minister of Justice, and I was not afforded that opportunity. The minister of public safety also initially didn't share, but midway through the minister graciously agreed to share the time, so at least that was good.

We are talking about budget supplementary supply, one of the main instruments of government's fiscal policy, and that certainly needs to be focused on Albertans' needs, issues facing them, and how we spend the government's money. The minister talked about responsible spending and also talked about that if previous Conservative governments had spent responsibly, there would be $300 billion in the heritage savings trust fund. However, if these figures – when we look at supplementary supply, certainly if you're spending in health, if you're spending in education, that's a good use of public money. Certainly, our health care system is in crisis. Our education system is in crisis. We are facing inflation. In fact, we are facing a fairly significant cost-of-living crisis. What's clear from this request for supplementary estimates is that the government is giving itself a whopping $6.6 million for advertising alone to promote not just the government budget but to campaign for the next election.

Madam Chair, I heard a couple of ads on a local radio station in my area, and the government has the audacity to say in that ad: we listened to you; we are capping insurance. There are two or three problems with that, and government money is going on it. Northeast Calgary was struck by the fourth-largest natural disaster in Canadian history – fourth-largest natural disaster – and not one dollar came from this government to help northeast Calgary. Not just one dollar. The then Premier was saying – I guess he visited far too late, but I will leave that. Here we are seeing almost $6.6 million to promote, I guess, government and another $3.5 million, again, to promote government.

But back to that ad. Not only did we not get anything during that natural disaster; they talk about capping insurance for three years and seven months, three and a half years, but we heard from this government that capping destroyed the insurance industry. They were leaving. They were taking all the products away, and soon we will be out of the product. There will be no insurance in Alberta, so we need to remove the cap and hand the pen to insurance companies so they can raise it to whatever they think is reasonable. Now they are running a government ad, and after that, when they said that they will finally cap it, they have given huge increases to two different companies, one of them being Aviva, who holds a significant market share in Alberta. That's the kind of thing this $10 million is going for.

This $10 million can help us with so many things. While the minister of affordability is here, I can tell you that we cannot afford that kind of spending to promote government spending during an election year. People are struggling to put food on the table. People are struggling to pay for insurance. People are struggling to pay for utilities. And here the same people are asked to chip in $10 million so the government can campaign on the public dime. This is an abuse of taxpayer money. If they think their spending is that great, they wouldn't need $10 million to tell Albertans: "Look, finally, we are spending on health care after cutting it for three and a half years. Look, we didn't build a single school in northeast Calgary, but now we have $10 million to promote something that we are spending on education. Look, we removed the cap from insurance and let it go up by, in some cases, 300 per cent, and now we are spending $10 million to tell you that we have a temporary cap on it."

That's not a responsible use of this money. Ten million dollars can help us with so many things. It can at least put 100-plus educational assistants, out of those 25,000 that the minister fired, back in our classrooms. It can help us with some of the PUF funding that was cut by this Education minister. That's a lot of money that can go to help people with disabilities. It can help us hire additional health care staff. And talk about responsible spending: 70 days before an election the government came before this House asking us to approve $10 million so they can run a campaign. That is not acceptable, and I don't think there is a reasonable explanation that any of the members can provide even with the help of the public service. There is no explanation for that kind of spending, campaigning on the public dime. Certainly, that's not what Albertans expect from us. That's not what's acceptable to our constituents. That's not acceptable use of taxpayer dollars, and I don't think that there is any explanation for that.

With that, I will cede my time to my colleagues.

The Chair: The hon. minister of affordability.

Mr. Jones: Thank you. The member opposite touched on a number of topics, and there are experts in the room, so I'll just give high-level comments on some of them. In terms of schools I'm pleased to report that I was in my constituency of Calgary-South East on Thursday, Friday, and earlier today for three separate public school openings, two elementaries and a middle school. Three school openings, three public schools in a Calgary constituency in three days. Three. I mean, I read on Twitter that no Calgary schools were being built, yet I'm cutting cake, celebrating school – I don't know what's going on, but rest assured there are schools popping up in Calgary-South East. Families are delighted. Number one capital ask by my constituents, and they've got it. It gets better because what my constituents also asked for was playground funding to be included in elementary schools. Our Education minister here got it done: $250,000 so elementary schools will have playgrounds when they're built. It's just wonderful.

On insurance, yeah, the member rightly pointed out that we have prevented further rate increases until January of next year. That was in response to Albertans' rightful concern about the potential price increases on yet another category that they need to spend money on. But the core of the question was the $6.6 million, which includes $5 million in advertising related to the affordability measures, and this I do want to talk about in more detail.

Our advertising campaign, of course, plays a key role in raising the awareness of our relief measures under the affordability action plan. Advertising is also critical to ensure that eligible families and seniors understand the steps that they'll need to take to apply for and receive the affordability payments. So an awareness campaign has been under way to ensure that all Albertans are aware so they can take advantage of the relief measures that are available to them.

Albertans have been hearing about the affordability programs on the radio. I'm pleased to hear that the members opposite remember them. It means it's working. It means it's driving more people, more Albertans, to the affordability supports that they need. They're seeing our ads on TV and online, and the member opposite highlighted the wonderful flyer that's been sharing information on affordability to every Alberta household across the province. Again, it's tremendous. I'm going to talk about the recognition numbers because they're very impressive, but the member opposite is a testament that it is working.

It's also important that we advertise this because we want Albertans to avoid scams and safely access these supports. Without an advertising campaign Albertans most in need may miss the opportunity to access some of these benefits, especially with all the misinformation floating out there. Again, one day you hear no schools are opening, and the next I'm in my constituency opening three schools over three days, so I think it is important that we do advertise to break through the noise and to get truth to Albertans from time to time.

That campaign, which is in this $6.6 million, runs from January 11 to April 30. It has a budget of $5 million, and the campaign has been remarkably effective, showing excellent performance metrics to date. Just to give you some stats: our digital ads have generated about a million clicks, five times the benchmark rate for comparable ads. Our online videos have a high view rate of over 90 per cent. The benchmark: 75 per cent. Our Facebook ads have seven times the average click rate. Seven times. Our ads on YouTube, they've got a view rate of over 92 per cent. The benchmark is 50 to 55 per cent. On this side of the House, as with economy and jobs and energy, we like to excel. Our metrics on this advertising campaign are off the charts.

I'm glad, because there is an affordability crisis, there are inflationary pressures, and Albertans need the support. I'll remind you that we've provided affordability supports to virtually all seniors 65 and up in this province, $600 over six months to help off-set significant inflationary pressures. We've also provided those affordability supports to Albertans on our core support programs. That would, of course, include AISH and people receiving services under PDD, income support recipients, and also everybody who's on the Alberta seniors' benefit. Families, because of the number of dependants, groceries, everything is hitting them very hard. We also made sure that the vast majority of families with dependent children would get $100 per month per child for the next six months. I can tell you that back in my constituency they need it. I've been hearing every day about how much of an impact that's made in the lives of seniors and children, for my colleagues, especially the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services, talking about how much it's helped our seniors and Albertans on core support programs. It couldn't come at a better time.

It's also a reminder that we do need to share this news because Albertans don't just need the supports; they need some hope and optimism in what is a very challenging time. Sometimes they hear that there isn't anything available for them, and I think that's unfortunate because there's no need to fearmonger in a crisis. There's no need to spread misinformation. It doesn't help anyone.

Again, I just want to go over our affordability program. We also touched on the electricity rebates. That's a billion dollars of support, providing 2 million homes, small businesses, and farms relief on high electricity prices for 10 months, an average of $50 directly off their bill at a time of extreme, you know, rates in electricity and volatility and a pretty cold winter.

The member also touched on disasters, the most recent disaster being, of course, them in government. On May 29 I'm looking forward to a brighter future for Albertans. With that, I'll cede my time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. Would you like to combine your 10 minutes?

Mr. Feehan: No.

The Chair: It's all you. Go ahead.

Mr. Feehan: No point. No good answers.

I appreciate the opportunity, Madam Chair, to speak to this supplementary supply because it gives me a chance to, you know, point out the cynical nature of the government that has spent years cutting. Literally we just listened to the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board talk about all the opportunities they took earlier in their time here in the House to cut, cut, cut. Then suddenly they want to be rewarded for giving back small, little pieces here.

You know, when somebody comes and takes things away from you and then says, "Well, we'll give you a little bit back of what used to be yours anyways," it's not generosity; it's cynicism. I find it very discouraging to see this government has suddenly seen the light at the end of their term. Now here we see them actually using taxpayer dollars to pretend that they didn't take all this away from the citizens of this province and that somehow they're being kind and generous in return.

But it's not what's really happening. You know, the minister stood up and said that we were spending more on government services than other provinces, but he never stops to say why that might have been, that we were spending more. Perhaps if he'd done some analysis on this, he'd realize that we really are an oil-based economy, which means that wages in this province are significantly higher than in most places in the country because oil and gas tends to pay higher wages.

When that happens, that also then pushes up the wage demands across the board. It's not that we were spending more. We happened to be a fortunate province that could give people more, and we were recognizing that the nurses who went and spent four years at university to get a degree should at least be paid as much as somebody who just got out of grade 12 and was driving a truck in an oil field. That's why wages were high. When he says, "We brought that down," what he's really saying is, "We found a way to suppress the wages of Albertans." That's what he's saying. "We found a way to take money away from you without looking like we're taking money away from you," which is essentially the consequence of his behaviour.

They only tell you part of the truth, and the same is true about what's happening with this budget. They're telling you, "Oh, we put in all these kinds of things." The minister just stood up and talked about opening schools in his riding, but what he doesn't tell you is how many schools he didn't do for three years and 10 months. All of a sudden they're opening schools, and they're doing other things in every ministry. They can all talk about the things that they're doing now, but they started by cutting and cutting and cutting. They cut health care, they cut education, they cut all of our public services, and now suddenly they want a pat on the back because they're giving just small, little increments back, and that's really not acceptable.

Not only that; they're using your dollars as a citizen to try to buy your vote by putting out advertisements just before an election using government funds, using about $6.6 million to convince you of only partial truths. Those partial truths are that we're giving you back a small, little segment of that which we took away from you for three years and 10 months, and now at the last minute we're going to slide a little back to you and hope that you forget that the whole intention of this government, their raison d'être, has been to take money away from the citizens of this province, just like they did when they deindexed AISH, just like they did when they deindexed our income taxes, just like they did when they took the cap off utility rates, just like they did when they took the cap off insurance rates, and all the other things they did to increase costs, so you can't even go for a walk in Kananaskis now without paying them.

That's what they did for their whole term, take money away from the citizens, make life more expensive. And then, suddenly – oh, my goodness – they see the light, they've been found, and now here they are, bragging to the citizens that: after having attacked you for almost our whole term, we're going to turn that around, and we're going to use your money to convince you that that's what we've done. You know, if you want to create cynicism in the populace, you have found the perfect formula for doing that. You do that very well. You create cynics all the time, and I want to congratulate you; I've never seen a government that did a better job at that.

You know, I find it very discouraging that here we are, yet again, seeing the government actually use the resources of the province of Alberta against the people of Alberta by creating an advertising campaign that is really about them trying to convince the population to ignore 90 per cent of their time in government and pretend that somehow they are concerned about you after increasing your rates, taking your drug coverage away, after causing everything to be more expensive, after suppressing wages.

Suddenly, now: "We really care about you," they say. Well, I can tell you that, you know, if that plays in the public, that's a very sad commentary on what they believe about Albertans. It's a sad thing to stand up and to act in this kind of way and expect to be rewarded for it, expect somehow to pull out of this a victory that is really about your own self-interest as a government and not about the well-being of the citizens of this province. It's very discouraging to see a government do this kind of thing and do it repeatedly, over and over again.

If we have a problem with affordability in this government, it is on the hands of this government that this has happened. The fact that they are trying to rectify that just tells us that even they recognize what they did was wrong, that the problems that they created with their policy are shameful. Apparently they do have a bit of shame. They know they can't go out and face the electorate at this particular time without somehow changing what they actually did, without actually reversing their policies because their policies were, really, repugnant policies.

I'd really like this government to stop using government funds, to stop using $6.6 million of the money of the citizens of this province, who could use that money for other kinds of things. This follows in line with lots of other ways in which they've used government monies for their own individual purposes. I mean, here we are almost four years later, and none of us still know what the war room does. None of us have ever seen anything positive or useful come out of that. Not only that; they set it up so that we couldn't even ask questions about it. We couldn't be here in the House to say, "What has this war room done?" because whatever it is they have done is something that this government knows they will be ashamed to tell the public. Of course, they should be ashamed. It's a horrible use of public money to shuffle it off quietly to their friends and not tell the public where it's going and not even allow the people of this province to ask the government where that's going. Why would you act in any kind of behaviour that you had to keep hidden? That's a deceitful kind of approach to governance.

I really find it unacceptable that this government has chosen to go in that direction, that they've chosen to hide the truth from the citizens of this province because they see personal gain in the direction that they're going here and hoping that people just won't be informed enough about this to know that their own monies are being used against them and that the troubles that they're experiencing now with affordability have often been exacerbated by this particular government.

I'm coming close to the end of my time in this House, and I leave this House very discouraged that government has gotten to this place, that we see a government that is not seriously concerned about the well-being of people in this province and is only concerned about maintaining their own position and their own status. You know, for three and a half years I appeared in estimates and asked the Minister of Indigenous Relations about the cutbacks . . .

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have to respond to a number of the, again, assertions the member opposite has made not only around the supplementary estimates but fiscal management, because I have to say that back in 2019 we inherited a fiscal train wreck. We've used that phrase here before in the last few years, but it was true. We were spending $10 billion more according to Dr. Janice MacKinnon, a previous NDP Finance minister in the great province of Saskatchewan. According to Dr. Janice MacKinnon and her committee we were spending $10 billion more and not getting better results. We embarked on a three-, really, four-year effort to thoughtfully and carefully, surgically, compassionately bring our spending in line, because you know what's not compassionate? When governments have no fiscal responsibility whatsoever. That means they're spending funds today at the expense of the next generation, and that's unacceptable to Albertans. We knew that. We were elected on that, to bring fiscal responsibility back to this province, and that's what we've done.

I have to say that the member opposite made the assertion that we had cut health care and education. Nothing could be further from the truth, Madam Chair. We made a commitment in 2019 to all Albertans that while we would bring this province back to fiscal responsibility, we would not cut health care and we would not cut education. Promise made, promise kept. We increased health care's budget every year. Every year. This year: nearly $1 billion. We have maintained health care's funding. We have an Education minister who delivered in an exemplary way. She brought forward a new funding formula that put more resources in the classroom. It resulted in more efficiency in our education system, and now, last year, we increased the Education budget by over 2 per cent. This year it's an increase of over 5 per cent.

Madam Chair, we heard the assertion from the other side of the aisle that now, this year, in an election year, we can increase spending. Well, you know why we can do this? It's because we brought fiscal responsibility to the province. We've done the heavy lifting together, and now we can increase funding to programs, to ministries in keeping with population growth and inflation. Why? Because we brought this province to sustainable spending.

You know, Madam Chair, we hear the members opposite talk about the price of oil. Tell me what the price of oil has to do with bringing expenditures in line. It does not impact, short of a few dollars for the Minister of Energy to cover the cost of selling oil. What we're doing is ensuring our spending is sustainable, because Alberta can no longer afford to be an outlier. That was the principle that we used. That principle governed our fiscal decisions for three years, and now we as Albertans broadly can benefit from that heavy lifting, and we can ensure that we're building additional schools, twice the number of schools that the NDP built or upgraded during their term. Why? Because we brought this province to fiscal responsibility.

Madam Chair, I have to point out one other piece, and it's important. Again, certainly Albertans in Grande Prairie-Wapiti but Albertans broadly wherever I travel across this great province are concerned about fiscal responsibility because they know this, that in order to ensure that we have sustainable programming into the future, a world-class health care system for our children and our grandchildren, a world-class education system for the next generation, it means that we have to have sustainable spending in our programming. It's vitally important.

I asked our officials in the Department of Treasury Board and Finance about if we had continued on the spending trajectory of the members opposite when they were in government, considering population growth and inflation. The response was this: we would be spending $6.5 billion more per year, with a $4 billion deficit instead of a 2 and a half billion dollar surplus. And here's the thing, Madam Chair, the members opposite were spending all that money and not getting any better results.

I have to commend my colleagues on this side of the aisle for reforming program delivery. That's what they've been doing to ensure that we're respecting taxpayer dollars, to ensure that the next generation can have a world-class health care system, that the next generation can have a world-class education system.

Madam Chair, I'm going to look forward to my colleagues rising – the ministers of Health, Energy, Education, Justice – and talking about what they're doing in their ministries as it relates to this supplementary appropriations bill, because we're delivering on behalf of Albertans to ensure that our spending is sustainable.

Madam Chair, we heard the assertion that somehow we have dealt unfairly with our union partners, and that is simply not the case. We have a principle on this side of the House that we cannot afford to be a spending outlier. We worked hard, we worked co-operatively, constructively with our union partners, and we got to a collective bargaining agreement with all of our major union tables. We did that without one day of work stoppage, without one strike. We did that with union members, in most cases, ratifying those agreements with the vast majority of members. While our RN remuneration is broadly in line with other provinces, Alberta still pays the highest. That's where we should be because we're working to attract our health care professionals into this province.

Madam Chair, I have to also say that, you know, part of the equation here is not only ensuring that we're delivering responsible fiscal management on the bottom half of that income statement, the expenditure side; the other half relates to positioning the province for competitiveness, for investment attraction, for economic growth, diversification, which leads to expanded fiscal capacity and increased government revenues. That's happening in this province today.

Alberta is leading the nation in real GDP economic growth. Our economy is diversifying at rates I've not seen in my lifetime. All of that is leading to a more stable revenue structure for Albertans. All of that is leading to increased revenues, Madam Chair. All of that is ensuring the next generation has a future in this province.

Madam Chair, there were, again, some comments around insurance in this province. I will absolutely concede that insurance premiums are high across the nation, across the western world, but this government is taking action. The members across the way had one move and one move only, a rate cap. That constitutes all of the innovative, creative . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Order, hon. members.

Mr. Toews: . . . thinking that is on the other side of the House, a rate cap.

Madam Chair, a rate cap of any kind, for any length of time, results in a lack of product offerings. [interjections]

The Chair: Order.

Mr. Toews: Madam Chair, we have temporarily requested the rate board to pause increases in insurance premium requests by insurers so that we can work with the industry to find additional solutions, and we're doing that, like we did in Bill 41. We dealt with some of the systemic issues that were adding costs to our automobile insurance system. We clarified the definition of a minor injury. We worked on additional measures that resulted in more care for injured Albertans. All of this has resulted in lower premiums than what they would have otherwise been.

In fact, in the last two years, since Bill 41 was implemented, automobile insurance rates have gone up, on average, 1.4 per cent per year. That's not bad, considering we've been in a time of high inflation, Madam Chair. But we're not done yet. We continue to work with the industry on finding additional solutions.

Madam Chair, our tenure in government around fiscal management is about sustainability. It's about putting this province on a trajectory where we're not robbing from the next generation, and mission accomplished with Budget '23.

The Chair: Just a reminder to all members of this House, particularly Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, and Edmonton-North West, that there are ample amounts of speaking time for all members to have their opportunity at the floor, just as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview is rising to do right now for his 10-minute block.

Would you like to share your time or take it all?

Mr. Bilous: No. I'm going to follow in the footsteps of the majority of the ministers on the other side, and I'll take block time.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Bilous: Well, Madam Chair, as was clearly just evidenced by my colleague on the opposite side, one can say whatever they want in this House regardless of how close to the truth or far from it it may be. Now, I'll talk about the fact that the whopper in the room is that this UCP government, under my respectable colleague on the other side, introduced the largest deficit budget in their first year, approximately $12 billion, larger than any NDP deficit budget.

When the minister talks about fiscal responsibility, I'd like to remind my hon. colleague of their first budget. What we're talking about here – I will clarify. [interjections] I will welcome all of the heckles from the other side. The balanced budget was reliant on the global price of oil, which was over $100 per barrel. A hundred dollars per barrel. Well, between 2015 and 2019 the global price of oil dropped below $27 per barrel, Madam Chair. My friends on the opposite side can spin as much as they want. The reality is that the reason the government has a balanced budget is because of the global price of oil and the war in Ukraine. It has nothing to do with the management of Alberta's finances.

Now, what's interesting, Madam Chair, is that for years under this government they followed suit from many previous governments, which was to slash and burn for the first three years, and in the fourth year you throw some money back at a few ministries and claim: “Look how good we are. We’ll just do this. We’ll just pat ourselves on the back because we’ve restored a fraction of the dollars that we’ve cut.” [interjections] You know, I’d appreciate it if the members opposite would allow me the opportunity to speak.

The other irony, Madam Chair, that I hope all conservatives, not only in Alberta but across this country, pay attention to is that this is the largest government that Alberta has seen, with almost 30 cabinet ministers and about 35, in total, parliamentary secretaries. For a government that claims to be in favour of small government, the irony is that this is the largest government that the province has ever seen. [interjections] I appreciate that one of the ministers is chirping. It’s okay, sir. Soon enough you’ll be out of a job.

The point is that for a government that claims to be in favour of small government, they’ve done the complete opposite, because in 2015 there were the fewest cabinet ministers and the smallest government that Alberta has seen, under the NDP. [interjections] Chirp away, my friends. Chirp away.

This budget – and I appreciate that the hon. Finance minister is getting up to respond. Madam Chair, I will say, through you, to the Finance minister that I do respect him, and I do respect the work that he’s done. What I will say is that $6.6 million has been allocated to advertising. I want to remind Albertans that that’s in addition to, in Budget 2023, so outside of sup supply, another $3.5 million. So now we’re at $10 million for advertising. The election laws in this province limit provincial political parties to a $2 million budget during a 28-day campaign. This government has just given themselves five times that amount to advertise in the next 40 days.

If the shoe was on the other foot, the members on this side of the House would be screaming “hypocrisy.” Screaming. How do I know, Madam Chair? I’ve been in this House longer than any member who’s currently sitting in this House, the third-longest sitting member. I appreciate when members use the argument . . .

Mr. Williams: Point of order.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River on a point of order.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Williams: It’s concerning members opposite highlighting who is and isn’t in the Chamber. As the member knows, it’s inappropriate to be drawing attention to that, and we ask that he withdraw the comment and apologize.

The Chair: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. I didn’t hear the standing order that he raised the point of order under, but what the member said was just a matter of fact, that he’s the longest standing member in this Legislature. If there is anybody who has served more years, sure, they can share that and correct the member. But it’s a fact that the member is the longest serving member in this Legislature at this time. So it’s not a point of order.

The Chair: I’m not sure creativity is what we’re aiming for in defending these points of order. The hon. member knows what to do.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, I’ll retract that comment.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: I’m the third-longest serving member in this Chamber.

The Chair: Please proceed.

8:30

Debate Continued

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I believe I only have a couple of minutes left.

The issue that I have with supplementary supply is the dollars that are allocated to advertising on the eve of an election. If I recall correctly, ahead of the 2015 election members of the opposition were screaming at the government for spending dollars and making announcements leading up to the election, calling for a ban on it, yet what I hear from the government currently is crickets, that suddenly because the shoe is on the other foot, it’s okay. I’ll be the first member in this House to say that no government should be able to make spending announcements within a period leading up to the election. Let’s put all parties on equal footing. But what we have here is a sup supply budget that is giving the government an opportunity and the ability to spend five times what a political party, either side, can spend in the 28-day campaign.

I appreciate that government members will stand up and talk about the affordability measures. I will say for the record, Madam Chair, that adults without kids and parents with kids over 18 receive zero dollars, zero support. They’re also experiencing the high prices of inflation, yet they get no supports. I’d love to hear how the government and the Finance minister came up with this threshold and this criterion. How did the government cut out families without kids?

Everyone is suffering from inflation. I don’t care if you earn $100 million or $1 million a year – pardon me – or $10,000 a year. Everybody is feeling the effects of inflation. We recognize that the low-income earners feel it the most, but in this, adults without kids receive no support. Parents with kids over 18: we all know, and I am sure if I asked members on the other side to raise their hands, how many of them have kids who are still living with them who are over 18, the majority would. We know, Madam Chair, that kids are living with their parents for longer and longer than they used to because they simply can’t afford to move out on their own. The supports that this government claims to give to all Albertans: in fact, it doesn’t give to all Albertans.

Honestly, Madam Chair, the issue that I have with this sup supply bill is primarily the fact that this government is spending $10 million on advertising. The members opposite can chirp all they want. If the shoe was on the other foot, they’d be losing their mind about how this is buying votes, how this is undemocratic. Yet what’s disappointing is that I would expect that members would have a higher level of integrity than what’s currently being presented in this budget, because I’ve been through several terms as an opposition member, listening to the opposition talk about the government abusing its ability to spend taxpayer dollars to buy votes. Members, I appreciate a response from the minister, but that’s exactly what this $10 million on advertising ahead of a general election looks like.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’ve said it before – and I really believe it – that the members opposite are in unfamiliar territory, and it’s called a surplus. Unfortunately, it makes them desperate and incoherent. On one side the members opposite say that the only reason Alberta is in surplus, the only reason we can pay for health care and education is our world-class energy sector, but on the other side they want to shut it down. I mean, what an awkward place to be socialists and antienergy. Alberta: what an awkward place to hold those ideologies.

They've also said that the only reason we've balanced the budget is because of revenues, but for three years they've been saying that we've been making adjustments to budgets and bringing things in line, and they've disagreed with those necessary fiscal adjustments. Again, you can't have it both ways.

Now, to the only question that was in that 10 minutes, the $6.6 million advertising campaign. I forgot to mention that that's resulted in 1.2 million Albertans enrolling in the affordability payment program. Well, that tells me a few things. It tells me that affordability is a real crisis and that Albertans expect their government to act. When we put forward an assistance program, they jumped on it, and the more we advertised it, the more they jumped on it.

Now, let's compare that to the members opposite. In December 2016 they announced they were putting 4 and a half million more towards advertising their deeply unpopular climate strategy, bringing the total to $9 million, advertising something that nobody wanted. They did get a million Albertans to show up, though. They got a million Albertans to show up to show them the door. So maybe in the grand scheme of things: well, money well spent. I'm not sure. I wish that that was the end of their bad advertising spends, but they also spent hundreds of thousands campaigning on their farm safety legislation and on power purchase agreements. I'm sorry, but why are you highlighting all of the areas where members opposite made significant errors on behalf of Albertans?

I just wanted to highlight that the $5 million in advertising was to advertise the affordability suite, including the affordability payments. We've had just about 1.2 million Albertans enrol in that program, close to a million in three weeks. I think that's remarkable. I think Technology and Innovation and all the departments and ministries involved: my hat is off to them because they pulled it together very quickly. A great program.

I'll invite my colleagues to take the rest of my time, but I just wanted to highlight what the members opposite spent advertising on: you know, climate carbon tax, farm safety legislation that nobody wanted, and power purchase agreements that cost Albertans billions. Albertans responded to those advertisements by voting them out. This $5 million is to address a very real cost-of-living and inflationary crisis, and Albertans have responded by onboarding on the programs to get support. I think that's wonderful for our seniors, our most vulnerable, and our families with dependent children.

The Chair: Sorry. Unfortunately, it's up to 10 minutes for a member of the government.

It will go to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. You have about four minutes.

Ms Goehring: Thank you. I'm honoured to rise tonight to talk about the supplementary supply 2023 estimates. I have to tell you that I've been sitting here listening to the Minister of Affordability and Utilities attempt to justify blowing $10 million on pre-election advertising, including over $6 million in his ministry, and I have to tell you that he is not selling it, Madam Chair.

On Friday I was at a military-business lunch with military and business leaders from across the province. There were a few things that were being discussed at this luncheon, but one of the things that kept coming up was the advertising spend. You know, Albertans are paying attention to what this government is doing, and this government seems to think that Albertans are just simply unaware that an election is coming up and that this is a last-ditch effort for this government to spend taxpayer dollars to advertise to the public. There were so many upset individuals on Friday talking about how gross a use of funding this is, 10 million taxpayer dollars to simply promote what this government is saying is advertising for affordability. Albertans aren't buying it, Madam Chair.

You know, I listened to him talk about their affordability plan, and one of the things that's been brought up on our side of the House is the incredible number of Albertans that are being left out of this affordability plan – students, adults without kids, adults with children over the age of 18 still living at home – and I can tell you that he's not answering those questions. The money that they're spending on advertising pre-election should be spent on things that Albertans are talking about, things that are impacting Albertans. Health care: it seems that this government is saying that the health care crisis is over, yet we're hearing heartbreaking stories from all across the province of Albertans that are in health care crisis. They can't access family physicians. They're waiting incredible amounts of time to receive diagnostic imaging. There are things that this money should have been spent on, not on advertising right before an election.

Listening to the minister attempt to justify it, Albertans don't buy it, Madam Chair. He said: they don't have to. The proof in that will be on May 29, when Albertans get to really decide what is happening. Just listening to the conversations that are happening around kitchen tables all across the province, Albertans are very aware that this money that's being spent on advertising is a last-ditch effort to try and get Albertans to buy the messaging that they're selling. We watched them for four years attack doctors, nurses, teachers, and now they're coming out saying that, you know, they have all of these great ideas right before an election. Unfortunately, the attempt from this minister to justify the spending just isn't landing.

What's very clear is that this government is campaigning on the public dime. They're using taxpayer money to campaign. It's laid out right here in the supplementary supply estimates, $6.6 million.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, we are now on our next round of questions. We will go to the government caucus for the next 20-minute block. We'll start with a private member of the government to ask questions of the government and go from there. Hon. Member for Sherwood Park, would you like to share your 10-minute block with the minister or take it all?

Mr. Walker: I think I would like to share time with the minister. It would be a great honour if the minister would oblige.

The Chair: The minister is very happy to do that. Please proceed.

Mr. Walker: Great. Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise tonight to speak in supplementary supply, the estimates for 2023. It was a great honour as well to be a member of Treasury Board this past cycle.

I would say, too, that I'm really excited now to speak, through you, to the Energy minister on his own estimates here in supplementary supply. Just such a good story we're telling. It's my understanding that we've surpassed 2014 oil production levels. We are producing and exporting more energy, more Alberta oil to the world than ever before. What an amazing turnaround and a contrast just even from 2015 to 2019, when the former government devastated our energy sector. I would also say, as someone who represents the great constituency of Sherwood Park, Madam Chair, where the energy sector is foundational to my local economy and, of course, Alberta's economy, with three refineries and the Industrial Heartland, shared here with some other members – my community produces 75 per cent of all petrochemicals in Canada, and my community produces two-thirds of all oil refined in western Canada. So this is very important to my community and all Alberta's prosperity.

I think I would begin with my question to the minister, Madam Chair. We all know that this past year has been very interesting for our energy sector given the sudden rise in global energy prices that occurred. Therefore, I am not very shocked to see that your ministry in particular has listed a decent amount of supplementary budget estimates in this document; however, a few do stand out for me.

Line item 3 on page 39 of the 2022-23 supplementary supply estimates shows that the cost of selling oil was $337.6 million higher than the initial $80.1 million estimate. As I previously stated, our oil sector was booming this past year. We've turned it around. It's just absolutely a great-news story. Investment has come back, and this government has been a big part of that: lowering the tax burden; making a light, predictable, regulatory environment; reducing red tape; et cetera. But I do want some clarity on this, Minister.

Question 1: can you provide a breakdown of the costs borne by this government that are associated with selling oil? Question 2 on this line of questioning: is it relatively common to see such a massive increase in these costs when oil prices are up, or did the suddenness of the price change account for some of these extra costs?

I think I'll start there as we go back and forth, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Wonderful.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Yeah. Thank you for that, Member. You had mentioned off the top about production, and, yeah, I think right now we're around 4 million barrels a day in production. Our pipeline capacity is probably sitting around 4.5 million with TMX. As we heard, with the recent news coming online, that'll add another 590,000 to our capacity. With some optimization, that I think we're hearing from the industry, there could be another 350,000-plus that could come online, increasing our capacity to maybe somewhere around 5 and a half million barrels. So I think we've got a little bit of runway ahead of us there, maybe looking at, certainly, 10 to 15 years where that's concerned.

Now, as far as the cost of selling oil is concerned, it should be known that we made some changes over the last couple of years in the cost of selling oil. It used to be that we'd take oil in kind on the conventional side. We were only marketing about 10 per cent of that ourselves, and we were hiring out the other 90 per cent. Now, some of the costs that were borne there were going to be similar, but there also was a cost to paying for that service. One of the things that we did, through the use of APMC, was to start to market it in its entirety ourselves. That has provided us with some benefits, but as far as the balance sheet is concerned, it increases the cost of selling oil.

Now, this cost of selling oil reflects the high energy prices that we've seen and the benefits that it provides for Albertans. The cost of selling oil is relatively proportional to oil prices and production, both of which increased substantially since the budget was established. As you know, we've seen huge variability in prices over these last few years, which can make it difficult when trying to establish a firm price for the cost of oil. As prices increase, typically the volumes that are being off-loaded increase, and when those volumes increase, the total cost associated with marketing those barrels also goes up. The variable costs associated with that are pipeline tolls, crude oil and condensate purchases, trucking expenses, and marketing fees. All Crown barrels move from the wellhead to market by truck or pipeline.

One of the things here that is important to know is that as the cost of selling oil is going up, that also means that we're receiving more revenue. That's a line item that we don't see here. Hence, we've had to have these adjustments. These what look like large adjustments in the cost actually mean that the differential for us on the revenue side is increasing, which is a good thing for us.

Now to your second question. The cost of selling oil reflects the high energy prices that we've been seeing, as mentioned, and the forecast increases in crude oil prices are driving up the forecasted producer royalty volumes. Per the mid-year fiscal update, producer royalty volumes were forecasted to increase at approximately 69,700 barrels per day from budgeted volumes of approximately 14,300. Obviously, along with that, you're going to get a significant increase in the cost of selling oil when you establish a volume increase like that. So the increased royalty volumes just give rise to the increase in crude oil pricing.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Walker: Well, thank you to the Minister of Energy, I would say through you, Madam Chair, for those informative answers.

What I'm hearing and what is so great and my constituents are so happy to hear is that through supporting our energy sector – and we're experiencing great, prosperous times in part because we're also supporting our wonderful energy sector – we were able to put forward and table, as we're seeing here tonight, a fiscally responsible budget that helps Albertans on affordability, on health care and education while also balancing the budget. I'm so proud, and it's so great to learn – I would also say that I'm so happy that we're now producing record levels of energy, including oil, here in Alberta. This is a great story, and in this moment we're in, in the current world order, Alberta needs to continue to be the energy arsenal of democracy across the world, to be the supplier of preference for places such as Europe, Japan, east Asia, especially in light of the unlawful invasion of Ukraine by Vladimir Putin. So I call on every member of this House to support that position.

We need pipeline capacity to British Columbia, through Canada, across the North American grid to supply our allies and partners around the world, east Asia, and Europe, which also, through LNG and hydrogen – I would say through you, Madam Chair, to the minister – lowers carbon emissions. It's a win-win all the way around. Let's support Northern Gateway. Let's support Energy East.

On-site rehabilitation, Minister: this is another interesting topic. Now, this can be found on line 4.1 on page 39 of the same document. The supplementary estimates for this program are $278.6 million higher than the initial estimate of $297.2 million. I understand, from looking back now to page 38, that some of these extra expenses were the result of revised federal program time frames. A couple of questions here. Could you expand on these revised time frames and why the federal government felt them to be necessary, and could you also expand on how many of these extra costs were caused by revised time frames and how many were the result of other factors? I'll go from there. Yeah.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Guthrie: Yeah. Thank you for that. This program was a huge success and actually came in a time when Alberta really needed it. The site rehabilitation program has been a big success, with approximately a billion dollars of federal oil and gas relief funding. We don't usually get too much from the federal government, but we were certainly happy to get this, and this helped to put Albertans back to work by speeding up well, pipeline, facility, and site closure efforts in the energy sector. We saw this afternoon with I think it was Motion 505, that the opposition had put forward – it was about having no incentives ever in a sector, and that would have included this SRP, which was a big success. We had negative oil pricing at that time. We needed to put Albertans back to work and to try to keep companies afloat, and that's what this program did.

Alberta Energy, though – back to your question – had requested an extension for work to be completed in the program given that there were several issues of delay, the main one being weather and a late winter freeze-up as well as labour availability. It all impacted the amount of closure work that was available to be completed. So their request was granted, and an extension of 45 days from the original timeline for the work to be completed came through in '22 and early '23, including additional abandonment work after that freeze-up. This resulted in additional sites having closure work take place, continued support for oil services companies, and continued work with Indigenous communities and companies participating within the program.

To your second point and the success of this program, you know, we had some federal government extensions that were required over the original work. The completion deadline, I believe, was supposed to be December 31, 2022. We had to extend that out slightly, and while it was not possible to exactly pinpoint the impacts of these actions separately, there was combined impact that led to an increase in the number of applications in the fourth quarter, but in doing so, it did allow us to fill the full $1 billion allocation. Due to the increase in these applications and approval for grants, the program closure date we ended with was February 14 of this year, where the additional funds are allocated.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Walker: Thank you so much, I would say through you, Madam Chair, to the minister for those questions. I have a better understanding of the site rehabilitation topic here as it relates to the questions I asked.

I now want to move to petchem, again, another big Alberta success story in my neck of the woods with the Industrial Heartland. I've been so happy to see the great relationship we've had with the Industrial Heartland Association – a big shout-out to its executive director, Mark Plamondon – and just working with them to really bring about continued, sustained prosperity for the Industrial Heartland. It's one of our many economic gems that drives prosperity right across our province. You're talking roughly around 40 companies with $40 billion of investment already existing there since it was established in 1997, an amazing story.

I would just say that over the term of our government, through APIP, through the DIZ designation as well as the special municipal property taxes, we have made sure that the Industrial Heartland and our petchem industry in general remains globally competitive as we compete for capital across the world, particularly with the Gulf coast.

Speaking specifically to the petrochemical initiative here, as per the supplementary supply estimates, it's another very interesting program, Minister. We can see it detailed on line 4 on page 39 of the supplementary supply estimates, and I noticed that an additional $10.8 million was allocated to this program despite there being no initial estimate. So two questions, Minister. Could you expand on this program and what it entails in general . . .

The Chair: Through the chair.

Mr. Walker: Through the chair, of course.

And, secondly, why was this program not included in the 2022-2023 budget, and why did it become important to fund later on, through the chair?

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Guthrie: Yeah. Thanks. The Alberta petrochemicals incentive program, or APIP, you know, makes us very competitive in bringing in, too, long-term investments and thousands of jobs to the province. APIP stands ready to invest 12 per cent of capital cost for any petrochemical facility that's going to use natural gas as a feedstock.

I can tell you that in travels that I've had recently, going to Norway and Germany and down to the States, and talking about this particular program, it has generated a lot of interest. People sit up and take note when you're looking at a program that's going to be covering 10 to 12 per cent of capital cost.

And then we start talking about carbon capture and the availability of pore space and the great work that we've done here and the fact that we have two functioning carbon capture facilities. One is Shell Quest, that started in 2015, and then the Alberta carbon trunk line in 2019, both of which have, I think, together sequestered over 10 million tonnes of carbon dioxide, and they're doing about 2 and three-quarter million tonnes a year going forward. When we start talking about all of these things that are going on here in Alberta and how far we are talking about emissions reductions and methane reductions, it really has perked the interest of not only companies wishing to come here but also financial institutions.

Projects must meet several criteria, to answer your question. The project must be physically located in Alberta, of course. The capital cost must be at least $50 million. The facility must use natural gas, natural gas liquids, or petrochemical intermediates such as ethylene, propylene, benzene, et cetera, in the manufacturing of its own products. The project must create permanent jobs in Alberta. An eligible project with a capital investment greater than $150 million must complete construction and declare to be in service within the 10-year time frame from the launch of the program. For these types of programs the full amount of the earned grant will be paid over the expiry of the program in three equal instalments over a 36-month period. So the company that's investing is coming here, they're putting in all of their costs, they are employing all those construction workers, they get the facility up and running, and then Alberta puts in its money a year after the fact and then three equal instalments thereafter. That investment is made. They're not going anywhere. They're right here in Alberta, and they're taxpayers by the time we start putting our money in, so it's well worth it.

Our dedicated production facilities are eligible, so that means, too, that the midstream refining, storage, transportation, and ongoing maintenance costs are not covered under the program. New facilities that are brownfield, debottlenecking, and expansions to existing facilities will be eligible, so costs eligible for reimbursement under APIP are related to manufacturing and processing capital expenditures.

To your second point, through the chair, Madam Chair, APIP is already proving successful. You know, as a result, actually, of the first funding payment, that's what we're seeing here for Dow Chemical's capital project. That's what we're seeing reflected here. In the future we are going to see some others, like Inter Pipeline's heartland complex, Air Products. I think you will recall that announcement. Through the chair, you will recall the $1.6 billion project that they announced to supply hydrogen to Imperial and Dow Canada in Fort Saskatchewan. These ones are going to come through . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, that concludes the government caucus time.

We will now move on to the 10-minute blocks combining time or going back and forth between the Official Opposition, independent members, and private government members. Just a reminder to direct your comments through the chair, not directly towards each other, and that we are debating supplementary supply estimates. It's the green book. If anyone needs a copy, I'm happy to get a page to bring you one. I look forward to the debate for the rest of this evening. We'll now look to members of the Official Opposition to kick us off in the next 10-minute block, with speaking time of up to five minutes.

Seeing none, any members of the government caucus?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

Vote on Supplementary Supply Estimates 2023-24 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: We shall now proceed to the final vote on supplementary supply estimates. Those members in favour of the resolutions for the 2022-23 supplementary supply estimates, general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2023, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Chair: Any opposed? That is carried.

Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

Mr. Williams: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report the 2022-2023 supplementary supply estimates, general revenue fund.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again. The following resolutions relating to the 2022-23 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2023, have been approved.

Advanced Education: financial transactions, $11,626,000.

Affordability and Utilities: expense, $354,932,000; financial transactions, $254,236,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. That is carried.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 12, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Bill 12 will provide authority for government to pay from the general revenue fund for additional costs that are not already covered or otherwise provided for during the current fiscal year. I ask all my colleagues in this Legislative Assembly to support the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

Mr. Williams: Happily, Madam Speaker, I move that the Assembly adjourn until 1:30 on Tuesday, March 21.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:13 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 21, 2023

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of this Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Members may be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to rise to introduce two good friends of the Speaker that are joining us in the Speaker's gallery today, Christie Bergman and her son Nate Bergman. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Taber-Warner has a school group.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly the junior high class of Sun Country Christian School from my riding. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you 14 students from the U of A's English language school, who are accompanied today by Ms Vicky Chang from the Student Engagement Centre. They're here to learn more about our Legislature and democracy here in Alberta. I invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you 105 students seated in both the public and members' galleries from Monsignor Fee Otterson school, which is located in the constituency of Edmonton-South. They're joined today by their teacher, Ms Susan André. I ask that we please give them the warm welcome of the House.

Mr. Walker: I am pleased to introduce to you and through you, Mr. Speaker, three Stollery families. The Smashnuk family from Grande Prairie: hello to Stollery kid Arabella, her parents, Alicia and Greg, and her sister Ava. From Red Deer the Adolphe family: hello to Stollery kid Amélie and her parents, Leslie and Astrel. And from Edmonton the Hlewka family: a warm welcome to Stollery kid Samantha and her mom, Kim. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly Sara Wood, Martina Frost, and Maria Vicente from the KARA Family Resource Centre. Each day these amazing people provide supports that help create positive outcomes for children and families in this province. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you my constituent from the beautiful community of Edmonton-South West, Debbie Filipchuk. Debbie is a recipient of the Queen's platinum jubilee medal. She is also a Canadian air force officer. With her also is her nephew Leo Christensen, also a Canadian air force mechanic. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Please join me in welcoming Laura Penner. Laura is an advocate for the trans community, the disability community, and for those living in poverty. She's an active community volunteer, and she's passionate about improving systems through listening to those with lived experiences. Welcome, Laura.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so happy to rise to introduce several incredible human beings today. Tamara Jones and her mother, Pat Monilaws, are with us, both Alberta-appointed marriage commissioners and advocates for human rights. Thank you so much to the minister of red tape reduction for taking a meeting with them.

I'd also like to welcome Lanre Ajayi and his marketing manager, Tim Meduna. Lanre is the founder and director of Ethnik Festivals, an association that was recently recognized for the top 25 Canadian immigrants award.

Finally, we have Mina Jama and Candice Janzen with the Jama Foundation.

Thank you so much to all of you for your incredible work. If you could please rise and accept the warm applause from this group.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you, from the International Union of Operating Engineers local 955, president Declan Regan, business manager Chris Flett, and executive director Tyler Bedford. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

International Union of Operating Engineers Local 955

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, as labour critic and as previous labour minister, over the last eight years much of my time has been spent talking to, listening to, and advocating for the workers of this province, including hard-working members of local unions like the International Union of Operating Engineers local 955, for whom 2023 is a very important year. Seventy-five years ago right here in Edmonton local 955 signed their constitution. Earlier I introduced members that have joined us in the gallery.

Today local 955 proudly represents a growing membership of 12,000 hard-working Albertans that leave their mark on almost every facet of our lives. Chances are that at some point today you or a member of your family will either interact with a member of local 955 or go by a project a member worked on. These workers are in everything, from construction, pipelines, and crane operating to fabrication, health care, school divisions, municipalities, and much more.

Not only are the members of local 955 marking their 75th anniversary; they are also celebrating 50 years with their pension plan. Mr. Speaker, that is half a century of ensuring working Albertans have retirement security and dignity, that they deserve after so many years of hard work.

Local 955 and their members are celebrating their 75th anniversary with a golf tournament, family events in Edmonton, Calgary, and Fort McMurray, and a gala this fall. I hope that all members of this Assembly are able to get out and join in the celebrations taking place throughout the year and across the province, and I ask all members to join me in congratulating the International Union of Operating Engineers local 955 on achieving these milestones and thank them for the contributions that their members have made to Alberta over the last 75 years.

Support for Ukrainian Newcomers

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, as the parliamentary secretary for Ukrainian settlement and a descendant of one of the first Ukrainian settlers in Alberta I'm incredibly proud of the many measures our government has taken to help Ukrainian newcomers to Alberta.

Recently I've had the privilege of attending a number of announcements that I know will be of great help to displaced Ukrainians. Our government has committed $7 million over three years for settlement and language supports, $9.9 million for social housing and rent supplement programs, and $3.6 million to support emergency and ongoing income support. We are providing a further $1.5 million through a new Ukrainian student benefit to assist displaced postsecondary students, $12,000 in funding for the Red Deer public library to provide EAL classes, and $12 million in additional funding to school boards for supporting newly enrolled students from Ukraine. Today the Premier, Minister Sawhney, and I announced the establishment of a Ukrainian helpline to assist Ukrainian evacuees with settlement.

What makes me even more proud is that all of these come as a direct result of the work and recommendations of the Premier's task force on Ukraine, which I'm honoured to have chaired. I want to thank Albertans for welcoming evacuees with open arms and making their adjustments to life in Alberta easier despite tragic circumstances. I continue to be overwhelmed by the generosity of Albertans daily.

Mr. Speaker, the national flower of Ukraine is a sunflower. The sunflower grows fast, it stands tall in all weather conditions, it sways with the wind, but it does not break. It's happily sharing its soil with others, allowing other flowers and even weeds to co-exist with it. It's bright, strong, and positive. The strength, perseverance, and brightness of the sunflower is matched by the glorious spirit of the Ukrainian people, so in the face of Putin's genocidal invasion, Ukrainians will continue to fight and triumph, and while they fight, Albertans will stand with them. [Remarks in Ukrainian]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Stollery Children's Hospital

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health of our province begins with the health of its children. Therefore, we are proud to host Stollery day today. As the second-largest children's hospital in Canada the Stollery sees more than 300,000 patients each year, with nearly half of those kids coming from outside the Edmonton region. The Stollery is one of the busiest hospitals in Canada and offers the highest degree of acute care in western Canada. The foundation is the primary funder of pediatric research, $40 million over 10 years, through the Women and Children's Health Research Institute at the University of Alberta. The foundation is giving kids the best chance anywhere in the world to live a long and healthy life.

But the Stollery is squeezed into an adult hospital and desperately needs a space of its own. Sick kids need a space that is built for them and modern health care. We are proud to have funded $3 million in planning funds towards a new Stollery children's hospital, and I am personally hopeful that they will soon become building dollars because our kids can't wait for another second for this to happen. The Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation is proud to partner with the Alberta government in support of a new hospital. When the commitment from government comes, the foundation will raise up to $250 million towards the cost of building it, the largest charitable campaign in Alberta's history, Mr. Speaker.

Stollery day is a chance to reflect on the tremendous impact this hospital has on the quality of health care in our province. I encourage my fellow members to think about the vital importance children's health plays in the future of our province and consider innovative opportunities to invest in and improve pediatric care for kids in communities across Alberta, including a new Stollery children's hospital.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, today is the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This day was proclaimed in 1966 following the Sharpeville massacre, where people peacefully protesting against racist laws in apartheid South Africa were fired upon, leaving hundreds killed and injured.

While much progress has been made, for many Black, Indigenous, and racialized people in Alberta racism and discrimination is far too often a daily reality and a maze of deeply ingrained systemic barriers. Additionally, in recent years Alberta, along with the rest of Canada, has seen a rise in hate crimes along with a rising tide of Islamophobia, anti-Semitism, and racism. Today serves as a call to action for individuals, organizations, and all levels of government to actively work to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination, injustice, systemic racism, and hate.

For years the current government has failed to take concrete, ongoing action to address the concerns of racialized Albertans. We must recommit our efforts to ensure all people are respected and have equal access and opportunity to be safe and to succeed. Albertans deserve a government that will take proactive steps not only to address the instances of racist violence but to actively combat the root causes of racial intolerance in Alberta and eliminate them once and for all.

Albertans can count on the Alberta NDP to do just that. We will start by implementing the recommendations brought forward by the Anti-Racism Advisory Council, and we will pass the Anti-Racism Act, that the UCP voted down. I'm proud to say that when elected, we will establish an antiracism office to ensure that we will live in a province that works tirelessly towards being free from all forms of racism, discrimination, and intolerance. Albertans deserve a government that takes concerns of racialized Albertans seriously, and we are ready.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has a member's statement.

Federal Impact Assessment Act

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are aware of the many ways that Ottawa has trampled our provincial rights and constitutional authority. Our government will stand up to Ottawa every day, all day long, every day of the week to ensure that Albertans have a prosperous future, with certainty that they can keep the lights on and food on the table for their families. Our province has been leading the way in fighting the federal intrusion into our constitutional authority, and other provinces have taken notice.

Tomorrow is another step in defending Alberta's rights to develop our own resources and get them to market. The Supreme Court of Canada is currently hearing arguments about the federal Impact Assessment Act, better known as the no-more-pipelines law. On March 22 Alberta will present its arguments to the Supreme Court of Canada on the many ways that this federal legislation has impeded our provincial rights.

This matter has been brought to the Supreme Court following the May 2022 ruling in the Alberta Court of Appeal which struck down the no-more-pipelines act and declared it unconstitutional. This act will not only hurt Albertans; it harms our partners in the Confederation. The economic interests of our country as a whole are at stake. Eight provinces are intervenors before the Supreme Court in this matter, underscoring the unprecedented constitutional threat the Trudeau Liberals have so callously forced upon the provinces through this law. As we have said many times, this act doesn't just harm the economy, and it isn't just Alberta's fight. It's a battle for the integrity of our role in the Confederation and our provincial partners. It's a violation of the exclusive constitutional jurisdiction of the provinces and territories to control and develop their natural resources.

Over the past 25 years Alberta has contributed $400 billion to the federal government's revenues, more than it's ever received back from the feds. Harming the Alberta economy with the no-more-pipelines act: that'll be felt right across the country. We need to get our country working as it was intended. Striking down the no-more-pipelines act will go a long way to making our country whole again and to making our reputation to become Can-adians again, where things can get done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Energy Company Liability

Ms Ganley: Every time Albertans think this UCP government has hit bottom, the members opposite manage to sink a little lower. Yesterday the UCP MLAs voted against the polluter-pay principle, the long-standing principle that if you make a mess, you clean it up. It's basic fairness. It's what we teach our kids. It's what we've expected of industry for generations, with their support. It's an important signal to global investors that Alberta is a mature and responsible energy producer. Yesterday the UCP threw that away.

According to the UCP, if you make a mess on someone else's property, not only can you refuse to clean it up, but you can stick your hand out for taxpayer money. The members opposite are now on the record in support of the Premier's scheme to give away $20 billion to a small group of bad companies who don't clean up after themselves. This scheme is not only an unforgivable abuse of Alberta taxpayers, but it's going to make the problem of inactive wells worse. Why would anyone pay to clean up their liabilities when they could refuse and get a handout?

The UCP wants to reward bad behaviour. Guess what. All that does is lead to more bad behaviour. R-star is not about cleaning up wells, and it never has been. It's about funnelling Alberta taxpayer money to a small number of bad actors at the behest of the Premier's friends. Albertans will remember this when it comes to casting their vote in May. They will remember that the UCP refused to build a school in their growing neighbourhood, to get construction started on a badly needed hospital, to revitalize their downtown, to create good-paying jobs, but the UCP did find $20 billion to reward bad behaviour from the Premier's friends.

Luckily, Albertans have a choice. They can elect a government that will end the gravy train, one that will be focused on them and their priorities. They can elect an NDP government.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Alberta

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a message from Albertans to Trudeau and his NDP puppets. Alberta is a land of freedom and prosperity. Woke, socialist ways do not belong here. Go away and leave us alone. Albertans did not want the secret NDP carbon tax. Albertans do not like surprise NDP taxes. Albertans fired the NDP.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans do not like Trudeau's carbon tax either, supported by his puppets. Next month they are jacking up the carbon tax by 30 per cent. Their actions speak louder than their words. They do not care about affordability, yet the NDP says nothing, sitting in a thoughtless stupor, comprehending nothing. Yet in spite of them, Alberta succeeds and prospers.

There is something extraordinary occurring in Alberta. We are seeing record numbers of families coming to Alberta from across Canada and all over the world. Mr. Speaker, is this because Alberta is a woke, socialist paradise? No. Alberta has the highest incomes and lowest taxes. It is the most competitive jurisdiction to start and grow a business, leading Canada in economic growth. Parents want a better future for their children, and they are coming to Alberta, this land of freedom and prosperity.

While the NDP and the CBC may wish it otherwise, Albertans do not want a freedom-sucking, woke, socialist government. Alberta is a land of opportunity, of freedom and prosperity. We must be vigilant to keep it that way.

Oral Question Period

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Leader of His Majesty's Official Opposition for her first set of questions.

Chartered Surgical Facility Contracts

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today more Albertans are waiting in pain for their surgery, but instead of reinvesting in our hospitals, the UCP plan to shovel taxpayers' dollars at private surgical centres that are doing much lower risk procedures. But the staff to perform those surgeries still have to come from somewhere. So did the government of Alberta or AHS sign contracts with private surgical providers that guaranteed them access to a minimum number of public surgical staff, including anaesthesiologists? Yes or no?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite well knows that chartered surgical centres are integrated into our system. They are a single system, and it's just a matter of scheduling to get one in a public hospital or one in a chartered surgical centre. There is no queue-jumping; no one pays out of pocket. The personnel work seamlessly across the two different systems to make sure that we get the maximum number of surgeries performed.

And I'll just correct the record. We don't have more people waiting; we have fewer people waiting. We've reduced the number of people who are on the waiting list down to 35,000, and we're going to continue.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of scheduling, there's only so many staff which means that if they're at the private clinics, they're not at the hospital.

Now, we are told that last week medical staff were presented with a revised assignment priority list directing that limited anaesthesiologist resources would be assigned to chartered surgical facilities ahead of high-risk patients in the hospitals. Behind the scenes surgeons and anaesthesiologists are calling these priorities unethical. Why is the Premier allowing her ideology to undermine care for high-risk patients in Alberta's hospitals?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's simply not true. We have a system that prioritizes the most urgent cases. I know the member opposite has a socialist theory of how everything should operate, meaning everything should be done in government-owned facilities. We have a different view. We believe we can partner with the private sector so that we can get more surgeries provided, and the system is working. When we began, we had 39,000 people on the waiting list, waiting longer than was medically recommended. It's down to 35,000 people on that list. We're reducing it by 3,000 patients per month, and by this time next year that list is going to be completely eliminated. That is a system that works.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the Premier did not answer my question. Not only are they jeopardizing the health of some of Alberta's sickest patients; they are pursuing a model where taxpayers ultimately pay more and wait longer. Recent CIHI data shows that knee replacements in B.C.'s private system cost $18,000 more than in the public setting. In Ontario 73 per cent of patients receive public knee surgery within six months while in Alberta's private centres, only 53 per cent. Why is the Premier insisting on hiding the contracts? Why won't she release those contracts so Albertans can decide for themselves if they want to pay more and wait longer under the UCP?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we can't argue with success. This was a number one priority that Dr. John Cowell had when he came into the system, looking at the surgical backlog and making sure that we were prioritizing patients and ensuring that no one was going to end up waiting longer than medically recommended. Under the NDP nine different surgeries ended up having wait-lists that increased. We've got them all going down in the right direction, and it's because of the partnership we have with the chartered surgical centres. They want to shut them down. That's the socialist ideology, and that would cut 60,000 surgeries a year out of our system, and we won't do that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: We want surgeries on the basis of medical need, not on the basis of private-sector contracts, Mr. Speaker.

Government Advertising

Ms Notley: Now, on May 29 Albertans will have the opportunity to choose a better government, an NDP government. Clearly, the Premier is very scared of this outcome because last night while Albertans were watching the hockey game, this group approved $9.4 million in pre-election taxpayer-funded advertising. With all the services currently underfunded, the Premier, who is one of the most unpopular in Canada, is racing to put her own electioneering first. To the Premier: why should Alberta taxpayers be funding the UCP's re-election campaign advertising?

Ms Smith: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, I'm not fortunate enough to have my husband work for CUPE and do all of my election advertising on my behalf, like the member opposite.

I would tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the affordability advertising that we are doing is one hundred per cent necessary, because I can tell you it is working. We have 1.2 million Albertans that have signed up for affordability payments. We're directing them to those with children, we're directing them to those who have seniors in the household, and we're directing them as well to those who are the most vulnerable. We know that certainly the members opposite wouldn't get this message out for us, and that's why we're doing it.

Ms Notley: The reason they're doing it, Mr. Speaker, is because this Premier is shameless when it comes to using public money for her own partisan gain.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the UCP approved $9 million to buy UCP ads that continue all throughout April. That's a big chunk of change. In fact, it's about four times what political parties are allowed to spend during the writ period, and it's double her final offer to women's shelters. Why doesn't the Premier just get it over with and register the government of Alberta as her political action committee?

The Acting Speaker: A point of order was noted at 1:55.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, our affordability plan is such good news. We have 1.2 million people who are now enrolled, and they're getting $600 in benefits. We have affordability payments. We also have electricity rebates. We have natural gas rebates, and we have fuel tax relief. In fact, maybe I should take this opportunity to let people know if they haven't heard about it. Go to alberta.ca/affordability. There's still an opportunity to sign up, and we're hoping that every person who is eligible for it takes the opportunity.

Ms Notley: Well, well, well, Mr. Speaker, how time changes a person. Back in 2012 when the then PC Premier, Alison Redford, approved a comparatively modest $1.3 million in advertising, the then Wildrose leader wouldn't stand for the blatant electioneering. The current Premier said, and I quote: you should not be able to use taxpayer dollars for blatant partisan advertising in advance of an election. We are now at nine times the level she previously criticized. If the Premier is willing to sell out her beliefs in just five months of holding office, why should anyone trust her with four more years?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, when we got elected, the members opposite said: what are you going to do about affordability? They kept asking about affordability. They said that affordability was the number one issue. We addressed it. We addressed it through the means that I had mentioned, and it's working. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: It's working. Trevor Tombe posted today, looking at an analysis of inflation across the country. We are the lowest in the country because of the affordability payments we have put in place, because we have reduced the cost of energy, and we want to tell people about it. That's why we're advertising.

Prescription Contraception Coverage Policy

Member Irwin: I am inundated with messages from Albertans in support of our Alberta NDP commitment to provide universal coverage for prescription contraception and from Albertans outraged at this Premier's dismissive comments. Darby wrote to me to say how much her prescription birth control costs, something that she will likely have to take for the next 25 years, following radiation treatment for cervical cancer. She says: I'm 31 years old, and this Premier is telling me that I should have to pay for private insurance rather than having this basic human right. Is this really the Premier's message for Darby?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the reason why we are proposing and looking at the issue of health spending accounts. We know that there is a whole range of services that are not covered by public insurance. The members opposite all have $950 in health spending accounts to pay for all of their needs, and everybody's need is different. That's why we are looking at a program that would allow for us to support all Albertans in being able to get the same kind of accounts so that they can make the decisions and have the priorities themselves. We also know that we've got a number of programs that are available through our Alberta Blue Cross to be able to support those who don't have private insurance.

Member Irwin: Health spending accounts aren't the answer. They're not the answer for people like Nikki, who wrote to me saying that she's paying $189 a month for her private health insurance plan, and she still has to come up with another $1,000 a month for prescriptions that aren't covered. For this Premier, who thinks Albertans should pay out of pocket for their basic health care, should rely on health spending accounts, pay for a trip to their family doctor, I guess this is a system working just how she wants. Can the Premier again please try to explain, to Nikki this time, why she shouldn't have universal coverage for prescription contraception?

The Acting Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Comprehensiveness is one of the foundational principles of the Canada Health Act, and that's part of the reason why we are looking at establishing health spending accounts, to be able to make the system more comprehensive. The reason that I know about health spending accounts is because politicians have them. I find it remarkable that the folks across the aisle won't give up their own health spending account. Maybe they should if they object to them so much. I have a different view. I believe that if taxpayers are paying for this kind of approach for us, we should make the same kind of program available for everyone.

2:00

Member Irwin: This Premier is not listening. She's not listening to Albertans like Jenny, who writes: as a self-employed, single mother who pays for private coverage, I can tell you it's not cheap, and it's certainly not fair. Darlene says: does the Premier not know that Blue Cross isn't free; it's just not affordable when you're barely scraping by; this is clearly a person who's never struggled to make ends meet. I need the Premier to tell Darby, Nikki, Jenny, Darlene, countless other Albertans, why she thinks they should be forced to pay out of pocket for prescription contraception.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to tell every single Albertan that we know that they have unique health needs, which is why we are trying to find a way to give comprehensive coverage to what they identify as their highest need. Health spending accounts allow for us to be able to cover all the things that are not currently covered by public insurance. That, to me, is the approach that we need to take. Rather than identifying one thing versus another, let's make sure that we're providing comprehensiveness so that every single Albertan is able to be supported.

Energy Company Liability

Ms Ganley: The polluter-pay principle: if you make a mess, you clean it up. It's basic fairness. We teach it to our kids. Albertans support it; Albertans, that is, except this UCP government. Yesterday every single UCP member in this Chamber voted against our motion to endorse the polluter-pay principle, including the Energy minister. Can the Premier please explain to Albertans why she thinks companies shouldn't be responsible for cleaning up their own messes? [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Just a reminder, hon. members, that it is my first day on the job, so I'd like to be able to hear both the questions and the answers.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We absolutely believe in the principle of polluter pay, which is the reason why we put in a program that requires our companies to spend 3 per cent of their liability each year. It's $740 million, and it's going to increase year after year. I find it interesting that the members opposite supported the federal government when they gave a billion-dollar grant to help accelerate some of these changes. There is still $200 million, as I understand it, that we need to allocate on that. We're going to make sure that we support them.

Ms Ganley: The Premier just loves to point to the loan we gave to the Orphan Well Association as justification for her $20 billion handout, but there's a critical difference. Orphan wells don't have an owner. There is no one but the association to clean them up. What the Premier is proposing is to have a massive giveaway of Albertans' money to companies who are still operating and are responsible for cleaning up those wells, making it just a handout. That's what our motion opposed. Why does the Premier think that Albertans should be on the hook for cleaning up someone else's mess?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite knows that we've got two problems. We've got a problem of inactive wells, and we've got a problem of orphan wells. If we don't address the problem of inactive wells, if a company goes under, what it means is that those end up in the Orphan Well Association. We've got to accelerate the cleanup of all of these wells. Last time I looked, it had a $30 billion liability, and it's part of the reason why we have a menu of options and a menu of supports, including one of the requirements that they have to clean up, $740 million per year of their own money and their own liability. I'm not sure why the members keep . . .

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Ganley: The problem we have, Mr. Speaker, is a lobbyist Premier who lobbied for this $20 billion giveaway before getting elected. She hired another lobbyist for the handout into her office to orchestrate its execution. Another lobbyist runs a pro-UCP attack machine that's funded by the people who stand to benefit from the $20 billion handout. She even replaced the former UCP Energy minister over it. Why is the Premier so focused on rewarding a few bad actors while Albertans struggle to find a doctor and put food on the table?

Ms Smith: You know, Mr. Speaker, when I was in estimates, I know that the Leader of the Opposition had the correct number. She asked me about the hundred million dollars that the Energy minister was advocating on and consulting on to see what kind of feedback we would get. Yet every time we're in this Chamber, they keep throwing a number out of $20 billion. They know that they're being untruthful. They know that they're giving misinformation. They know that we have put forward a program that requires companies to spend a certain percentage of their own money to clean up year after year, and what we're looking at are the hardest wells to clean up, the ones that have been there the longest, the ones that they weren't able to clean up when they were in government. That's what we're looking at.

Support for Ukrainian Newcomers

Mr. Turton: Mr. Speaker, Putin continues to commit genocidal tactics on the people of Ukraine. He's attacking their schools, hospitals, and key infrastructure. Accompanying this senseless violence, Putin is committing egregious war crimes against the proud people of Ukraine. In turn, Ukrainians are being forced out of their homeland and are coming to Canada. To date more than 25,000 Ukrainians have come in and settled in Alberta, and we need to continue to support these evacuees. To the Premier: can you tell Albertans what this government has done to support these evacuees and set them up for success in our province?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's over 25,000. It is 26,572 Ukrainian evacuees that have come to our province. We have supported them with $28 million worth of supports: $7 million over three years for settlement and language supports to help agencies and immigrant-serving organizations meet the need from increased demand; $9.9 million in social and rent supplement programs. That's on top of $6.8 million made available in 2022-2023.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Premier for her answer. Given that many of these Ukrainians are coming to Alberta and do not know the language and given that many of these evacuees have little in supports to help them navigate the many services the Alberta government is providing and given that many of these evacuees do not have family or friends in Alberta when they arrive here, to the Premier: can you please tell the members of this Chamber and Ukrainians who have arrived in Alberta if there will be prearrival services for evacuees to assist in their arrival and settlement in Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we made an announcement, with the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism as well as our parliamentary secretary for Ukrainian refugee settlement, about a helpline that will allow for new arrivals in Alberta to very easily access the services that they need. We have a great network of private individual agencies, but sometimes, when you're newly arriving, it's not easy to find them. We're going to make it easy to find them, in the language that they're familiar with, and we're going to make sure that we support everyone who arrives.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Premier for her answer. Given that there are multiple ministries working on helping Ukrainian evacuees come and settle in Alberta after leaving a literal war zone and given that the Premier's office has set up a specialized task force with the assistance of the parliamentary secretary for Ukrainian refugee settlement and given that many of the recommendations from this task force turned into budget funding in Budget 2023, to the Premier once again: can you tell Albertans what else the task force will be doing to assist these evacuees settle in our beautiful province?

Ms Smith: We're going to have to do a lot more. As I mentioned, we have over 25,000 evacuees who have arrived here. When you think about that and put that into context, in all of Canada 40,000 evacuees arrived from Syria, 35,000 arrived from Afghanistan. That's 25,000 alone that have come here. Almost a quarter of the evacuees decide to make Alberta their home. We know that this tragedy is going to continue for much longer. There could potentially be hundreds of thousands of more Ukrainians who seek refuge in Canada. We've got to be prepared that at least a quarter of them are going to come here.

Government Advertising and Affordability Plan

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the UCP is going to spend more than 9 million taxpayer dollars trying to convince voters that their pre-election budget isn't that bad. This includes a massive ad campaign that runs until the day before the election is called. But this budget has zero dollars for university students or a couple making minimum wage without children because the UCP chose to cut half of Albertans from their affordability payment schemes. Can the current minister who's supposed to be making life more affordable for Albertans tell this House why he thinks it's more important to spend taxpayer dollars to save his own job than to help minimum wage people pay their rent?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January our government launched a dynamic and highly successful advertising campaign to inform seniors, parents, and other Albertans about the billions of dollars in relief available to them through our affordability action plan. That includes electricity rebates, fuel tax relief, affordability payments, and more. The campaign runs until April. Without an advertising campaign seniors or others who are most in need may miss the opportunity to access benefits during this period of high inflation. The campaign also informs vulnerable Albertans on core support programs – no application is necessary – to help protect them from scams and misinformation.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the government said that they would spend over $900 million in affordability payments to Albertans but given that in estimates the minister revealed that only $96 million had actually been spent and given that the UCP is spending 9 million taxpayer dollars trying to save their own jobs when Albertans are struggling to pay their own bills and only a quarter of Albertans have actually received any money from this government, is the minister surprised that so few Albertans support this budget? Is that why he's spending taxpayer dollars for blatant partisan advertising in advance of an election, quoting his own Premier?

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, the affordability advertising campaign has been remarkably effective, with nearly 1.2 million Albertans now enrolled to receive up to $600 over six months. That's about as many people as came out to vote last time to remove the previous socialist government. The advertising campaign is helping to reduce fraud and protecting consumers through social, digital, and video materials educating the public on ways to avoid scams and safely access affordability supports. Translated information is also available on ethnocultural channels to ensure newcomers benefit from the programs. Our affordability action plan is working.

Ms Hoffman: Given that we know the application process isn't easy for some Albertans – and that's why the government actually asked registry agents to support applications in-house – and given that there isn't an edit button for people who have applied, made a mistake, and need to be able to have that corrected by registry agents, there are thousands of people waiting on payments that this government has been holding up. Will they admit that they've messed it up, and will they fix it before the end of the month so that people can actually pay their rent? An edit button for registry agents, Minister.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that in three weeks about a million Albertans were enrolled on our affordability payment portal, and in February we did launch edit functionality for the small number, about 1 per cent or less, that entered incorrect banking information. That patch went live in February. We have another patch upcoming to ensure that registry agents can also assist the small number of Albertans who have incorrect information in their application. Again, 99 per cent of the 1.2 million Albertans have been successfully enrolled and are receiving up to $600 over six months. It's working to keep Alberta affordable.

Energy Company Municipal Tax Payment

Mr. Schmidt: Under the UCP the amount of unpaid municipal taxes from delinquent oil and gas companies grew every year. At first they did nothing. Then they brought in legislation everyone knew would fail, and it did. Now, on the eve of an election, they say that they're taking action by withholding licences from companies that don't pay their taxes, something that rural municipalities have been calling for for years. To the minister: why did it take you this long, and why did you ignore rural Albertans for four years?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, our government understands why municipalities and landowners are frustrated by overdue and unpaid property taxes. Yesterday I signed an order to allow the Alberta Energy Regulator tools to prevent the transfer of or issuance of a well licence if a company has outstanding taxes. If it involves the sale of assets, the payment of debts must be made a condition of sale. We believe these initiatives will provide municipalities with the necessary leverage required to collect on those bad debts.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that everyone knows that withholding licences is a necessary step to get these companies to pay their taxes – municipal leaders have been calling for it, as has our caucus – and given that despite yesterday's announcement there are still very few details about how this directive will actually work, with the minister saying that there will be a threshold for unpaid taxes but not saying what the threshold is, is this another fake program from the UCP that does nothing for Albertans, just like their fake electricity cap, their fake natural gas rebate, and their fake auto insurance freeze? What's the threshold?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, I want to be clear: the vast majority of companies in Alberta are good operators and do not fit this narrative.

This order to the AER, with updates to section 67 of the Responsible Energy Development Act, along with legislation regarding liens, the encouraging letters that we are also sending out, and the previous liability management framework updates significantly strengthen a municipality's ability to collect on delinquent debt. We look forward to settling these tax obligations.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, given that if the threshold was meaningful, the minister would have just told us what it was right now and given that rural municipal leaders are also calling for licences to be withheld from oil and gas companies that don't clean up their wells and given that rather than listening to Albertans, the UCP is pushing ahead with a program that rewards these companies' bad behaviour with a $20 billion handout, will the minister withhold licences for unpaid taxes but not unreclaimed wells because of this Premier's close connections to the lobbyists pushing for this $20 billion giveaway?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, our government strengthened the liability management framework, empowered the AER's ability to intervene, and passed legislation to help support municipalities in the collection of unpaid taxes from companies that are not living up to their obligations. Additionally, in order to persuade compliance, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and I sent out joint letters to every functioning company in Alberta that is under default. We can't do anything about companies that are no longer solvent, but for those healthy companies doing business in Alberta, we want to send a clear message that debts must be paid.

Federal Carbon Pricing

Mr. Rowswell: Mr. Speaker, inflation and high taxes are hitting families across Canada, and the federal government is moving forward with an increase to their job-killing carbon tax on April 1. My question to the Premier: what is the government's reaction to the federal government kicking families while they're down, placing a higher burden on the kitchen budgets across the province by increasing the federal carbon tax on Albertans?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I was amused when the Red Deer-South MLA talked about the secret NDP carbon tax, and it was brought in in secret. Now the federal government won't let us get rid of it, and now the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa is voting to increase it by 300 per cent. We keep fighting a battle here on the issue of affordability and against inflation, and we're winning it, but it's no help to the folks in Ottawa. I wish that the members opposite would stand with us and say: do not increase these taxes on April 1.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and, through you, thank you to the Premier for that answer. Given that the increase in carbon tax will mean a direct negative impact to Albertans at the pump, which means costs permeating all aspects of everyday life for Albertans, again to the Premier: what is the government expecting as a result of this harmful increase to the cost of living for Alberta families?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, to give you an idea of how successful our measures have been – and this comes from Trevor Tombe. The key reason is because of the tax reductions we focused on utilities and gas. This is essential to reducing the cost of everything. The rest of the country is seeing a 5.2 per cent inflation rate; in Alberta it's 3.6 per cent. Yet we're going to have to fight the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa because they are increasing the carbon tax. The Canadian Taxpayers Federation says that it's a whopping 14 cents per litre of gas just for the carbon tax. Fourteen cents per litre: that's the amount of our carbon tax relief here. It's almost going to be completely off-set by what's happening in Ottawa.

The Acting Speaker: The member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the Premier for that. Given that the federal government is forcing these carbon tax increases despite Alberta having a world-leading, ethical, environmentally responsible approach to energy development and given that in the meantime the federal government is soft on regimes that destroy our environment and interfere with our elections, to the Premier: what is the government doing to take a stand against these cruel increases in the cost of living and protect Albertans in the face of these tax increases?

The Acting Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You would think with the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa that the members opposite would have some influence, that they'd actually stand up for Albertans and they'd stand with us on saying: do not increase these taxes. Three hundred per cent by 2030, and we're going to see a 14-cent-per-litre increase as we get to April 1. We are working to reduce emissions a different way, a better way through technology and innovation. We're talking about carbon capture, utilization, and storage. We're supporting our innovation through our TIER funding, and we're going to continue to take leadership on hydrogen and other clean technology. We won't be taxing hockey moms and soccer dads.

Primary Health Care in Medicine Hat

Member Loyola: There's a lack of medicine in Medicine Hat. Many Hatters have been without a family doctor for years as doctors chose to retire early or move away because of the UCP's war on doctors. This puts additional stress on the ER and walk-in clinics as Hatters now have to rely on these for routine health care, prescription refills, and minor medical issues. It also puts stress on the residents, like Kinsey, whose family has been without a doctor for over three years. She regularly checks the Internet and phones clinics in a fruitless search for a doctor. Why has the UCP failed to help Hatters like Kinsey find a family doctor?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As we've chatted about many times in this House, there are challenges in regard to the ongoing recruitment and retention of health care workers not only in Alberta but across the entire country, but I'm very pleased that we are making progress. If we compare last year, the end of Q4 last calendar year, to 2021: 254 more doctors in Alberta than previously. I'm looking forward to talking more about what we're doing to ensure that we not only train more doctors but attract more doctors here in Alberta.

Member Loyola: Given that our health care system continues to be deep in crisis despite the Premier's claims and given that for Hatters, like Vera, a breast cancer survivor, having a family doctor is vitally necessary and given that this Premier muses about Albertans paying out of pocket for visits to the doctor while residents of her riding are unable to even find a doctor, does the Minister of Health support the Premier's misguided scheme to force Hatters like Vera to pay out of pocket just to monitor their health after surviving cancer?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I just want to set the record straight and make the comment that the Premier has already made. No one will have to pay out of pocket to go and visit their family doctor.

To be clear, we know that we need more family doctors, and that's why I was very pleased to make an announcement with the Minister of Advanced Education to expand the medical programs at both the U of C and U of A. Mr. Speaker, not only are we expanding the seats there; we are also ensuring that we can actually train more doctors in areas outside of the big cities – clerkships, residencies outside of the big cities – by working with organizations like the University of Lethbridge to make that happen.

Member Loyola: Given that the Alberta NDP caucus has a plan to connect a million more Albertans with a family doctor and a family health team and given that our family health team plans will directly meet the needs of Kinsey and Vera and thousands more people in Medicine Hat and given that we are ready to start the work to build family health teams on day one, does the Health minister regret his legacy of failure to provide basic primary care to Albertans in Medicine Hat and across this province?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased that the members opposite endorse our approach for team-based family care. This is something we already started in our agreement that we reached with the AMA, to move to a different model of care, a team-based model of care, and we have the support structures in place from a funding standpoint to be able to make that happen. We are making progress.

I'm also very pleased that we are also making progress in bringing in more doctors, internationally trained doctors. We are streamlining the processes for certification to be able to make this happen. Mr. Speaker, for example, in Lethbridge: 17 more doctors over the last nine months, and they'll all be working very soon. We're going to continue until everyone has access to a family doctor.

Misericordia Community Hospital CT Scanner

Mr. Dach: Yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the Premier a single question: would she fix the malfunctioning CT scanner at the Misericordia hospital, that has forced hundreds of patients to be shipped to other facilities? The Premier chose instead to pass the buck to John Cowell and refused to answer. That's not good enough when you're dealing with a broken piece of essential equipment that doctors rely upon to save lives every day at a major Alberta hospital. Since the Premier is so indifferent to the health of Albertans, will the Health minister commit to getting this scanner replaced now?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the scanner actually is fixed and has been fixed since March 17. It was unfortunate that it was having some issues, but, you know, Covenant Health worked to actually get that fixed. In the interim diagnostic imaging had to be done at other locations, but, again, I'm pleased that it's fixed.

Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to invest in our health care system, including at the Misericordia, and I'm looking forward to when Infrastructure is going to pass the new $85 million emergency department over to Covenant Health so they can actually start to get it up and running by next September.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister will know, of course, that this CT scanner has a history of breaking down and being out of service for weeks and weeks at a time, and who knows how long it's going to last this time. Thank goodness it's fixed right now, but will the minister agree that it needs to be replaced rather than being fixed? I had just this morning an individual who told me that she would not go to the Misericordia to see if she had kidney stones for fear of that CT scanner not being in commission. Will the minister commit to actually getting that replaced so we have one there?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government is committing to make sure that Alberta Health and all of the hospitals, including Covenant and AHS, have the equipment that they need to actually deliver the service. We are actually, you know, putting money where our mouth is, with over $4 billion this year in capital alone. Now, as the hon. member knows, if there's a need for increased capital, that gets put into the plan. I look forward to working with Covenant and AHS on the needs that the Misericordia has.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The CT scanner that regularly goes out of service at the Misericordia is a long historical situation that needs to be addressed by having that CT scanner replaced by a brand new piece of equipment not only for the existing emergency ward but for the new emergency ward that's being built with the $65 million that we got going when we were in government. Now, there is no CT scanner dedicated to that emergency department, and the hospital relies upon a CT scanner to serve the regional area, not just the hospital patients for the Misericordia. We need two scanners; a new one for both sides of the hospital.

The Acting Speaker: Perhaps I'll invite the hon. member to read Hansard from yesterday for another example of a question with a preamble. I encourage you to read the Hansard from yesterday, because, yes, you said the example.

The minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've stated before, our government is making significant investments in health care, an additional $1 billion on the expense side, over $4 billion on the capital side. I can tell the hon. member and all Albertans here in the Edmonton area and those who use the Misericordia hospital that we will continue to invest. We're investing $85 million in a new emergency department. Should a new CT scanner be needed, we will continue to work with Covenant and AHS to make sure that they have the tools they need to deliver services to Albertans when and where they need them.

Federal Impact Assessment Act

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, the appeal of the federal Impact Assessment Act, C-69, better known as the no-more-pipelines law, is under way at the Supreme Court. Given that this act has made it impossible for companies to build pipelines and given the current opportunity for Alberta to be a solution to help the world transition away from dictator oil and, more specifically, Russian oil and gas, can the Premier remind this House and Albertans what this law does and how it puts jobs and investment at risk here in Alberta?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I found it interesting that the NDP-Liberal coalition in Ottawa, rather than make it a condition of their continued coalition to repeal this bill, made a condition of their coalition the just transition, which would have phased out oil and natural gas workers. This bill is one that is going to pose an existential threat to our ability to continue developing our energy sector. It not only puts in jeopardy billions of dollars that are generated for Albertans and all Canadians, but it's also a violation of the exclusive constitutional jurisdiction of our provinces to control the ability to develop our own resources. We need to win this in the court.

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, through you to the Premier, thank you for that answer. Given that the Alberta Court of Appeal has rendered its decision regarding C-69 and given the nature of the findings in this court of law, can the Premier provide this House and Albertans what the Alberta Court of Appeal determined regarding C-69, the no-more-pipelines law?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have read the decision; maybe the members opposite should, too, because they'll see how much worse it is than just no more interprovincial pipelines. They want to stop all of the development in this province. They want to put every single project under the scope of the federal environmental regulation. Here is the quote from the decision, which was a 4-1 decision in our favour. The Alberta Court of Appeal says this:

[It] constitutes a profound invasion into provincial legislative jurisdiction and provincial proprietary rights. Parliament's claimed power to regulate all environmental and other effects of intraprovincial designated projects improperly intrudes into [our] activity.

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, given the immediate need for energy security in North America and world-wide and given that Alberta has an abundance of environmentally and ethically produced energy and further given that Alberta's ability to be a solution hinges on the ability to build more pipelines, can the Premier tell this House when we can expect a decision from the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of C-69?

The Acting Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a shame that we weren't able to see the members opposite lobby their federal leader to end this legislation at the federal level. They could have done that so we didn't have to go through the process of the courts. We are going to see a two-day hearing over the next couple of days. We'll get a decision within the next six to 12 months. We're also backed by 10 other organizations, including the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, the Indian Resource Council, the Business Council of Alberta, and many others, and together, with Alberta leading the way, we are going to argue that this bill risks disrupting the constitutional balance of our federation and undermines the right for us to govern our affairs.

Child Protective Services and Transition to Adulthood Program

Ms Pancholi: One hundred and sixty-four: that's the number of children and youth receiving child intervention services who have died in the past four years, 98 in the last two years alone. Since last Thursday another three deaths were reported. This is the UCP's record: children and struggling parents abandoned; young people treated like pawns; supports cut, then paused, cut again, then renamed. Why? To save a buck. All these young people needed were adults they could trust, and the UCP broke that, too. Spare us the line that every death is a tragedy; the tragedy is the UCP's indifference. Will the Premier admit that the UCP has failed children in care?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I will continue to reiterate, each and every time that member asks a question about children's deaths, that our hearts do go out to the families and those impacted. The work that we continue to do in this area is difficult and challenging, but we will continue to address every single one of these deaths by investigating it thoroughly, by assessing, by reassessing, and by implementing all the recommendations of the advocates.

Ms Pancholi: Given that the outcomes for children and families who survive the system are also heartbreaking and that in the past two years the number of families that have stayed together without a child being apprehended has dropped 56 per cent, the number of children that were reunited with their parents dropped 34 per cent, and the number of children who were adopted dropped 39 per cent and given that that means that under the UCP more children are permanently separated from their parents and spend their whole lives in care and an unbelievable 74 per cent of those children are Indigenous, how is this a record of anything other than total failure?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, the reduction in the statistics that the hon. member mentioned is evidence that the system is working, and it's working well. We have an absolute commitment to ensuring that the cultural components of every single one of our interventions is paramount in all the decisions that the caseworkers make, and that's what we'll continue to do, especially as it relates to Indigenous families as well.

Ms Pancholi: Given that the UCP should listen to the voices of young people like Shay, who is 22 and described losing her caseworker and being moved to the TAP program as "revisiting abandonment . . . financial loss . . . the risk of being homeless again, pressure, instability and stress," or Christian, aged 22, who says that "When you decide to become our parents . . . then you should be in it for life like good parents are – not . . . turning your back on us whenever you decide we have 'aged out,'" and given the deaths, the trauma, the broken trust, my question to all UCP MLAs but especially the three who served as Children's Services ministers is: was it worth it?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of announcing just last week a monumental investment in our transition to adulthood program, which dedicated an additional $25.6 million to supporting exactly what that member just mentioned. The youth in this program will continue to receive financial supports, but in addition to that, they'll receive counselling, they'll receive mentoring, they'll receive workplace-related training, and they'll receive careers in the trades funding as well.

Industrial Development in St. Albert

Ms Renaud: During her speech to the St. Albert and District Chamber of Commerce the Leader of the Opposition committed to investing in the Lakeview business district if elected. This project will support local business development, create 7,000 new jobs, and support advanced manufacturing, agribusiness, clean tech, the health sciences sector, and more. Yet the UCP have been vehemently opposed to this project. I don't really understand why. Question: why is the UCP so opposed to investment and job creation in St. Albert?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. members continue to peddle in fear and personal destruction because, quite frankly, they're not encumbered by the truth.

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

Mr. Nally: Now, Mr. Speaker, back in the final days of that administration's government in 2018 they made a campaign promise to expand Ray Gibbon Drive, because this was important and strategic for the growth of St. Albert. They had four years to fund it, and the best that they could do was come up with a campaign commitment in 2019. They're doing the same thing with the Lakeview business district. They promised it. We're going to deliver it.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:34.

Ms Renaud: Given that the mayor of St. Albert said that the Lakeview business district is the city's number one priority and they get calls all the time from businesses that want to set up in St. Albert but there's no more land and given that if funding was to come through soon, shovels could be in the ground as early as next year, why is this government refusing to listen to the people of St. Albert and their priorities that they've clearly identified and standing in the way of economic development? They'd rather stand up and fling insults at people instead of working with the city to get things done, create jobs.

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, do you know what the members of St. Albert really want? An MLA that lives in their riding. In addition, since they know that they're not going to get that for a few more weeks . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Nally: Now, Mr. Speaker, the Lakeview business district is strategically . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Order. You've been doing so well up until now.

Mr. Nally: Honestly, Mr. Speaker, it's like high school without the teachers.

Now, Lakeview business district is strategically important to the growth of St. Albert. Quite frankly, we're out of land for the city to grow the business investment and tax base in that city. We're committed to delivering on the Lakeview . . .

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is what desperation looks like.

Given that the mayor also said that investment in the Lakeview business district will maintain momentum of economic growth along Ray Gibbon Drive . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: I'd like to hear the question, please.

Ms Renaud: . . . and given that the Lakeview business district has been described as the city's main pillar of the city's future and given that on this side of the House we believe in building Alberta's future and we will get the Lakeview business district built, why is this government so opposed to progress, creating economic opportunities, and good-paying jobs for Albertans? They'd rather stand up and heckle and fling insults than actually get to work and create projects, build jobs.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. Unlike the members opposite when they governed, our government has been laser focused on creating a very competitive business environment. Alberta is leading the nation in economic growth. We're diversifying our economy at record rates. There are 100,000 unfilled jobs in Alberta, and we have a balanced budget. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Order. Order. Order. [interjections]

Mr. Stephan: They can't handle the truth.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Energy Company Municipal Tax Payment (continued)

Ms Lovely: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we are extremely fortunate to be the economic engine for Canada through our natural resources like oil and gas. However, there are a few delinquent companies that have yet to pay their municipally owed taxes. To quote our Minister of Municipal Affairs, "In Alberta, we pay what we owe, and it's time to pay up." To the Premier: what were the key findings from the unpaid oil and gas property tax survey in 2022?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. When we did the survey, $220 million in unpaid taxes had been reported by municipalities, with $130 million in tax arrears, including penalties and interest, and the remaining $90 million in cancellations. I want to commend the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Energy working together to find a solution to this. Some of the taxes are going to be unrecoverable because they've been previously written off, but already because of the work that the two ministers did – they reached out to the companies. There's $48 million in unpaid taxes that are already under repayment plans. There's about $76 million that is still potentially recoverable, and we'll make sure that those get recovered.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and, through you, to the Premier. Given that I have heard from my constituent landowners and local municipalities about the challenge of unpaid municipal taxes and given that the Minister of Municipal Affairs has been focused on finding a solution to help support municipalities across the province and further given that this does not seem to be a new issue, to the Premier: what are you doing to ensure the unpaid taxes from noncompliant oil and gas companies are paid?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The measure that the Minister of Energy took in the last couple of days was a ministerial order under the Responsible Energy Development Act to the Alberta Energy Regulator. What we will do is provide a new condition where companies will not be able to transfer well licences or get new well licences unless they have satisfied the regulator that the taxes have been paid. We think that this is going to provide just enough stick so that they'll be able to pay their taxes and make sure that the municipalities are made whole, and we can get on with continuing to operate.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many of my constituents tell me how grateful they are that this government is taking action to address these challenges and listen to our municipal partners, unlike the NDP during their disastrous term, and given that this government is serious about addressing the problem of unpaid municipal taxes, to the Premier: what else has our government done to support municipalities trying to collect what they are legally owed?

2:40

The Acting Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our liability management framework is designed to make sure that licences do not get transferred to companies that are not going to be able to meet their liability needs. It's part of the reason why we have a new program in place, where companies are going to also have to clear up previous years' liability in order to improve their balance sheets. Municipal Affairs restored a special lien in legislation to give municipalities priority over creditors, and Municipal Affairs as well continues to deliver our provincial education requisition credit, which gives municipalities a break on their education property taxes by giving them credit for uncollectable taxes.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue with the daily Routine. Please leave quietly.

We are at points of order. At 1:55 the Government House Leader called a point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As it is your first day in the chair ruling on points of order, I wish you the best of luck, and may the force be with you and the table.

I rise on a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically at the time noted by yourself that the Leader of the Opposition said, when asking a question to the Premier – I don't have the benefit of the Blues; I'm trying to find a delicate way to describe my handwriting: less than legible – that the Premier is shameless using public dollars for campaigning. Now, I understand that this may be something that the opposition likes to call out often, saying that we're shameless or other kinds of insults, but I think that kind of language certainly would cause disorder in this Chamber. Suggesting that the government is using public funds to campaign for an election would also be, I think, making a false accusation against a member in particular, and in this instance the Premier. So, Mr. Speaker, I do contend this is a point of order, but I leave it in your more than capable hands.

The Acting Speaker: The opposition deputy House leader.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also don't have the benefit of the Blues, but in the context the question was about government spending of $9.6 million on government advertising just before an election. In that context, it's a question well put to the Premier about that spending, and as head of the government it was directed to the Premier. I think they are talking about disorder in the House. I also note that the Premier, in her answer prior to this one, also said: I'm not lucky enough to have Lou Arab as my husband, who works for CUPE and runs ads. Like, she also directed an attack personally to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. So if they want to keep order in the House, I think they should watch their language as well. It's not a point of order; it's just a matter of debate. Whether they're spending money wisely or not, we disagree with that spin, so that's what it was about.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone else wishing to add anything additional?

I do have the benefit of the Blues, and at 1:55 the statement was made: "The reason they're doing it, Mr. Speaker, is because this Premier is shameless when it comes to using public money for her own partisan gain." I appreciate the arguments from both sides of the House regarding whether it is a point of order or simply a matter of debate. I do want to strongly caution all members of this House to act with decorum and respect for one another. I believe probably my mother is watching today, and I would love for her to see how well you all behave. While this is getting to be uncomfortable language, I do not find it a point of order, but I do strongly caution all the members to choose your words wisely. I consider this matter concluded and dealt with.

At 2:34 the Deputy Opposition House Leader called a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At 2:34, in response to a question from my colleague from St. Albert, the minister rose to answer and said something to the effect that the hon. member is peddling fearmongering and that they are not encumbered by the truth. I know that the minister used "they" when he said "not encumbered by the truth," but all allegations were directed personally at the member and, prior to that, also where the member lives and those kinds of things. I think that kind of language is personally directed at the member, and it's also not helpful to the decorum in the House, and that should be ruled out of order.

The Acting Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe we've travelled down this road not that long ago, where a comment was made by a member on this side of the House about members, plural, on the opposite side. Had the comment been made about a specific member – and in this case, without the benefit of the Blues I do recall the member who was speaking saying "unencumbered by the truth," which would be an indirect way of saying something unparliamentary in the event it was about a specific member. In this instance that member – and quoting the Deputy Opposition House Leader – said "members." So this is not a point of order. This has been ruled on as recently as last week, and it was a point of order called by that specific member. I'd hope that lessons are learned, that we're not wasting the Chamber's time calling points of order that are in fact not points of order, and he knows it. So I would contend it is not a point of order, but again I leave it in your capable hands.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone else have anything additional?

I do have the benefit of the Blues, and I am prepared to rule. At 2:34 a statement was made: "Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. members continue to peddle in fear and personal destruction because, quite frankly, they're not encumbered by the truth." So to the Government House Leader's point, the comment was made about members in general and not a specific member. However, I do once again want to strongly caution members that you cannot do indirectly what you can't do directly. With that, I rule that this is not a point of order. I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Orders of the Day Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 11 Appropriation Act, 2023

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move second reading of Bill 11, the Appropriation Act, 2023.

This act will provide funding authority to the offices of the Legislative Assembly and the government of Alberta for the 2023-24 fiscal year. This includes the following amounts from the general revenue fund: $180 million for the Legislative Assembly; $50 billion for the public service, including the government's various ministries and departments; $3.9 billion for capital investments; $1.5 billion for financial transactions; and $1.5 billion in contingency funding, which will ensure the government is well equipped to respond to disasters and emergencies as well as any future pandemic-related cost pressures. This funding will ensure the government has the resources it needs to continue providing the programs and services Albertans will rely on in the coming fiscal year, as laid out in Budget 2023.

Budget '23 secures Alberta's future by growing and diversifying the economy, strengthening health care and education, improving the safety of our communities across the province, and establishing a new fiscal framework. It continues our positive fiscal trajectory with another balanced budget and forecasted surplus of $2.4 billion in '23-24 and projected surpluses of $2 billion the next year and $1.4 billion in the out-year.

Over the last four years our relentless focus on investment attraction, job creation, and diversification has secured our position once again as the economic engine of the nation. Building on the $600 million committed over three years to the Alberta at work initiative, Budget '23 includes an additional $370 million to help Albertans build their skills and fill thousands of new jobs as businesses grow and more corporations and businesses move to our province.

Budget '23 also includes a new health workforce strategy that provides $158 million to support multiple initiatives to recruit and retain health care workers, including the targeted recruitment of internationally trained workers. We're providing funding to increase the number of seats available in health care professions, including 1,800 new seats for health care aides, licensed practical nurses, and registered nurses over the next three years and an additional 120 seats to train more physicians at our schools of medicine, Mr. Speaker, a 40 per cent increase in physician training capacity. Another $35 million over three years will expand enrolment in our nontrade construction programs and training in the energy, technology, business, and aviation sectors.

Now, while economic growth is strong, times remain tough for many families and households. New relief measures are helping postsecondary students. We're providing more grants and bursaries to low-income Albertans who are looking to upgrade their skills to fill jobs in high-demand sectors. These measures will keep $178 million more in the pockets of our students each year. This adds to our comprehensive affordability measures, including the suspension of the fuel tax, providing electricity rebates, the indexation of personal income taxes, and targeted supports to our seniors, families, and most vulnerable.

We're also making record investments in kindergarten through grade 12 education to secure the future for our youth. In total, Budget '23 provides an additional $1.8 billion over three years to fund enrolment growth, reduce class size, meet the specialized learning needs of students, and improve transportation. The '23 capital plan supports 58 school projects – yes, Mr. Speaker, 58 school projects – including new schools that will provide more spaces for students, create jobs, and revitalize Alberta's communities.

Public safety and a fair and efficient justice system are key deliverables for government, Mr. Speaker. Budget '23 increases funding by 12 per cent to the ministries of Justice and public safety: $655 million for Justice will increase the number of Crown prosecutors and add support staff to address backlogs, increase capacity, and modernize our courts; $1.2 billion for public safety and emergency means more boots on the ground to better fight crime in our communities.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Alberta's strong balance sheet wouldn't have been possible without our commitment to responsible fiscal management. We're securing Alberta's future with a new fiscal framework that will require balanced budgets, control operating spending, and provide a framework for surplus cash. A balanced budget requirement and limiting spending increases to population growth and inflation would ensure appropriate and sustainable spending. The spending ceiling would challenge government to focus on how we can transform the way we do things, to improve the way we deliver programs and services while making sure Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars are respected and used efficiently. The fiscal framework would ensure that the government continues to prioritize saving for the future and paying down debt. Balanced budgets would become the norm instead of the exception, Mr. Speaker, and that's good news for Albertans today and Albertans tomorrow.

Budget '23 is a budget that secures Alberta's future. We're driving economic growth and Alberta's prosperity with fiscal responsibility, investment attraction, and diversification. This is how we fund programs and services that support Albertans. We're securing the health and education of Albertans by increasing access to family doctors, surgeries, and emergency services and making sure our children and grandchildren have the education system they need to reach their full potential. We're securing our future with a new fiscal framework, a framework that will require appropriate and sustainable spending, prioritize debt repayment and savings, and ensure the next generation is not encumbered with a debt they did not incur.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this House to support this bill today and help us as a government deliver on Albertans' priorities.

I move to adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 11, the Appropriation Act, 2023.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's again my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 12, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023.

The funding in Bill 12 will cover costs reflecting the government's commitment to save for the future, strengthen our health care system, and adapt to the changing global economy. It would also provide for a number of actions we've taken to help Albertans struggling with high costs due to inflation. If passed, Bill 12 will authorize an approximate increase of $2.7 billion in voted expense funding, $500,000 in voted capital investment, and $292 million in financial transactions.

The largest supplementary amount belongs to Treasury Board and Finance, where we see $753 million provided for investment in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Mr. Speaker, financial strength is critical to any government here in Alberta, and it's critical that we prioritize savings and debt repayment. This additional $753 million investment in the heritage savings trust fund will add to the $1.257 billion already there from the previous fiscal year, which will make $2 billion in a net transfer to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also supports other priorities and pressures that we as a government have faced in the current fiscal year: $636 million is earmarked for the Department of Energy – that includes $338 million for the cost of selling oil, and this is primarily due to higher energy prices and increased activity in the sector – $279 million is earmarked for the site rehabilitation program as a result of revised federal program timelines; and $10.8 million will be earmarked for the Alberta petrochemical incentive program for an additional project approval, which is again good news for the Alberta economy.

Five hundred and fifty-three million dollars, Mr. Speaker, is requested for the Department of Health. Included in that amount is $332 million for physician payments, $184 million for the new Alberta Medical Association agreement. I would like to thank our Minister of Health for successfully concluding that agreement on behalf of all Albertans. Thirty-seven million dollars is earmarked for payments to allied health professionals. On the matter of health it must be noted that Budget '23 will provide funding, beyond that which we see in this bill, to continue to support a stronger health care system for Albertans. In fact, we're setting a new record again for spending in health care this year by committing an additional $965 million in operating expense for '23-24 for the Ministry of Health.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a hard year for many families meeting the end of the month as bills have piled up due to inflation pressure that Canadians are experiencing right across the country, that, in fact, citizens are experiencing, really, right across the developed world. Six hundred and nine million dollars is requested under the Affordability and Utilities ministry; $349 million for utility rebates and grant programs, primarily for electricity rebates, as part of the affordability action plan; $6.6 million for developing the affordability action plan communications effort. It's important Albertans know where they can find relief, and we're committed to ensuring that they have the information required to participate in this programming.

3:00

Mr. Speaker, other funding is requested across departments to provide for various services and initiatives. This includes $32 million for public security, $31 million for court and justice services, $28 million for homeless and outreach support services, $20 million for learning support funding, and $1.5 million for rural economic development, among other programs, services, and initiatives detailed before us today.

Mr. Speaker, Budget '23 keeps our net debt to GDP ratio well below our targeted maximum of 30 per cent. In fact, at the end of this fiscal year our net debt to GDP ratio will be 10.2 per cent, giving Alberta the strongest balance sheet of any province in the country by far. Simply put, our commitment to fiscal anchors is paying off and paving the way for a more prosperous future.

Going forward, new fiscal rules will make sure that governments continue to make responsible spending decisions, and our new fiscal rules will require a balanced budget. Balanced budgets will become the norm instead of the exception.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, actions by this government have secured Alberta's future. This bill reflects that future, and I respectfully urge my colleagues, on both sides of the House, today to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 9

Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Bill 9 continues to build on the significant progress this government has made in reducing red tape for Albertans and Alberta businesses. Now I would like to quote the greatest Finance minister in our province's history, when he said that we inherited a fiscal train wreck when we got elected. In fact, we didn't just inherit a fiscal train wreck, Madam Speaker; we inherited a province overrun with socialist rot, and nowhere was that rot more evident than the 97 tax increases that Albertans were subject to. Of those 97 tax increases imposed on Albertans in the previous four years, one of them was the greatest tax in our province's history, the 4 and a half billion dollar, investment-crushing, job-killing carbon tax.

Madam Speaker, I'm happy to say that we campaigned on a platform of fiscal restraint, and we did what we said we were going to do, which is that we cut taxes, and we reduced red tape. We have the lowest corporate taxes in Canada. We are cheaper than 44 U.S. states. Our taxes put us in line with Louisiana and Texas.

But, in addition to that, we've made ourselves into a business-friendly environment. We cut red tape. Let me give you one example. If you're building a billion-dollar project, you can come to the Industrial Heartland, which has a pilot right now for a designated industrial zone where they have things like preapproved water licences so that if you're coming to the province for the first time, you don't need to spend 18 months getting a water licence, Madam Speaker, because we've already done that. Those are the kinds of things that we're doing to attract investment.

Madam Speaker, let me tell you that the world is noticing. They're watching, and our plan is working. Business is embracing what we're doing. A couple of examples, of course, are that Alberta has 12 per cent of Canada's population, yet we've created a quarter of the jobs in the last 12 months. We have the Alberta petrochemical incentive program, which was referenced by the Finance minister. We have received $40 billion in applications: not $40 million, $40 billion worth of applications.

We are putting ourselves on the map as the global leader in clean hydrogen. Six facilities have been announced for Alberta, four of them coming to the Industrial Heartland, 30 minutes from where we stand right now, and they will be employing many people in the area. Many of those are my constituents, Madam Speaker. The first one, Air Products, broke ground about two months ago. These are exciting projects. That's in addition to the Dow Chemical project, the world's first net-zero ethane cracker.

A couple more examples of how business is responding to our cutting taxes and reducing red tape are film and television. We have grown the film and television industry from $100 million to a billion dollars. In addition to that, De Havilland airplane manufacturing – Madam Speaker, if I said to you three years ago that Alberta was going to be a destination for building airplanes, most people would have laughed, yet that's what's happening. We're building airplanes in Alberta because the investment community is taking notice and they're responding. They're responding with further investments, and the good news is that they're creating jobs for Albertans.

Now, our approach to red tape has been so successful that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business gave us the highest score in the country last year, and they also gave us the only A, an A-minus, for red tape reduction. This makes us a leader in Canada. We have reduced 36 per cent of the red tape that we inherited from the NDP. We also brought in some new programs as well, so we have a net red tape reduction of 30 per cent, and we will be at one-third by the end of 2023, Madam Speaker. We've also saved Albertans and job creators $2.1 billion on unnecessary regulatory burden. Now, Bill 9 moves forward under that same premise, that we're going to make life better, we're going to make life easier for Albertans. If passed, this amendment and this bill and the previous six bills alone will have led to the elimination of at least 4,000 unnecessary requirements since the beginning of our mandate.

Let me now provide an overview of the key amendments included in this bill. Madam Speaker, Bill 9 helps agricultural workers in a number of ways. With our proposed amendments to the Irrigation Districts Act we would cut red tape for the irrigation industry, a crucial part of Alberta's agricultural sector and our economy. Several of the amendments would modernize the legislation, giving irrigation districts more options for public notification while updating accounting standards. We would also expand the ability of irrigation districts to stop water delivery to those using water in harmful or unauthorized ways while allowing them to remove unused land from their districts. Meanwhile an expanded Irrigation Council would respond to the needs of districts and water users while adding more diverse representation and expertise. These amendments are well overdue and address a number of recommendations that stakeholders have been asking for.

Bill 9 also helps another important agricultural sector in Alberta, namely the beekeeping industry. Proposed amendments would modernize the Bee Act and its regulation to help protect Alberta's bee industry. This includes adding emerging pests and diseases to the legislation to allow industry and government to respond more quickly in the event of an outbreak, saving producers time, money, and stress. Alberta has the largest beekeeping industry in Canada, and these changes will help support its continued growth and safety.

Speaking of safety, Bill 9 also recognizes the great risks that firefighters take to protect Albertans, their lives, and their property. That's why we're proposing to amend the Workers' Compensation Act to grant presumptive cancer coverage to all firefighters who served during the 2016 Fort McMurray fires. With this change, affected firefighters and their families would receive the benefits and supports they need with fewer delays as they would no longer need to provide evidence that the disease is work related. Madam Speaker, we are proud to include this amendment as part of this bill, and we thank firefighters for their continued service and sacrifice. I know my colleague the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development shares this view.

As I said earlier, we seek to help all Albertans with this bill wherever they live. We're watching out for Albertans who live in the cities, our towns as well as our rural areas. That's why we're proposing important amendments to the Public Transit and Green Infrastructure Project Act. These changes would remove the province's ability to terminate LRT funding agreements with Calgary or Edmonton without cause, reducing the risk to the cities and their contractors that the projects may not be able to proceed due to withdrawal of provincial support. Both cities have expressed concerns about this risk, Madam Speaker.

This change would also encourage more businesses to bid on the LRT contracts and potentially reduce project costs by removing the need for contractors to build in a premium to protect themselves in case provincial funding is terminated without cause. To be clear, the grant agreements will continue to provide the province with appropriate recourse should the cities not satisfy the terms of the agreement. We are happy to bring these amendments forward to eliminate oversight that is no longer needed, helping both cities to expand their respective LRT services.

Madam Speaker, last year my predecessor the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park brought forward important changes to ensure prompt payment of contractors in the construction industry. Changes we're proposing for the Public Works Act would allow the government to support the planned extension of prompt payment rules to public work projects as well.

Madam Speaker, Albertans are proud Canadians, and we want to ensure that Albertans' voice remains strong in our province's priorities, interests, and concerns. This includes ensuring that the property rights of all Albertans are protected and respected by the federal government. In support of that, Bill 9 would amend two pieces of legislation that cover trespassing on private land, namely the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act. With the changes we're proposing, we're ensuring legislative clarity around the fact that federal government officials are bound by the same rules in Alberta's trespass legislation that apply to Albertans, including potential penalties for unlawful entry onto an Albertan's property. I should also note that in any trespassing situations property owners can still be held responsible for their actions, should call law enforcement to deal with any trespassers. However, this change aligns with similar legislation brought forward in Saskatchewan last fall and would send a strong signal to the federal government that we are committed to protecting Albertans' property rights.

Madam Speaker, Bill 9 also promotes and protects public safety in all areas of the province. The changes we're proposing to the Income and Employment Supports Act would suspend government income support benefits to people with outstanding warrants until the warrant is executed or cancelled. With this, we would ensure that taxpayers' funds are not being used to potentially enable a violent offender to avoid arrest and therefore pose a safety risk to the general public. This will also save Alberta police the time and resources in executing arrest warrants as many offenders who rely on support could be more willing to turn themselves in for arrest. To be clear, we would maintain the flexibility to continue to provide these supports to the families or dependants of these offenders. These amendments would also align Alberta's legislation with British Columbia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan, all of which have introduced similar amendments to address benefit suspension due to outstanding warrants.

Last but not least, Madam Speaker, I would be remiss if I didn't also make note of some important changes we're proposing for legislation that belongs to my ministry. Our land titles office has experienced pressure due to significant real estate market activity across Alberta. Since April 2021 there has been an 86 per cent increase in registration documents coming into the land titles office. To address the increase in volume and the resulting backlog, the land titles office has hired more staff to increase our document processing capacity, but the changes we're proposing in Bill 9 would also help relieve the pressure.

Our proposed amendment to the Land Titles Act would allow Albertans to sign and submit certain documents electronically to the land titles office; in other words, no more wet-ink signatures for certain documents. This change would be an important first step towards the future digitization of the entire land title registration process in Alberta, contributing to the modernization of government service delivery. I should also mention, Madam Speaker, that this change would also align nicely with recent changes we have made. That means Albertans are no longer required to provide wet-ink signatures for vehicle registration.

Madam Speaker, we remain committed to these and other solutions that continue to reduce red tape and modernize our approval process for Albertans and Alberta businesses. The amendments we are proposing will continue to make life easier for Albertans. In this spirit, I invite the support of the House to give second reading to Bill 9.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, just to clarify – I may have not heard it – did you move second reading at the beginning of your speech? Okay. Thank you very much.

I'm looking for those that wish to join debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Happy to join discussion here on Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. I appreciate the little history lesson, I guess, from the minister of red tape, talking about, to begin with, the fiscal train wreck that he made mention of. Of course, he left out such details as things like a bet placed at the cost of $1.3 billion on a U.S. election, might have left out the $30 million a year being spent to chase a cartoon bigfoot and a couple of different attempts to get a logo right, and then as of recently, you know, kind of forgot to mention about the $9 million ad slush fund the government has just given itself.

But I digress. Let's get back to Bill 9 and some of the things that are going on here. When we're talking about Bill 9 – obviously, a ministry that's now on its third minister has proposed over the course of this 30th Legislature to bill taxpayers somewhere in the neighbourhood of between $10 million and $15 million and possibly even more, as I was not able to get a clear answer in estimates around investigations and audits. There's almost an additional $8 million there. It would have been helpful, especially, you know, as the minister was talking about these different percentages of red tape that's been reduced throughout 36 per cent and 30 per cent, yet in the estimates documents it was above 29 per cent. I'm not really sure exactly what that was, whether it's 29.1, 29.5, 29.9. We seem to be getting all kinds of different numbers here.

I guess the good news is that at least we're not looking at things like reducing the fee to go cut Christmas trees, but people still have to fill out the paperwork. I'm glad we don't have to discuss that in Bill 9 or something to that effect or at least not give out plaques to his colleagues. I'm appreciative of that.

The minister also made reference to some significant dollars that have been saved due to the efforts of red tape reduction. I would of course submit to the House that a very large portion of that dollar amount would come from the TIER program, so I think the number is a little bit inflated there. I just thought I'd point that out.

Some of the things that I do want to focus on in Bill 9 – and when I got the technical briefing, I didn't really get some clear answers with regard to this. The first one I'll start off with is some of the changes on the Income and Employment Supports Act. I didn't seem to get a clear answer around: was there any kind of consultation with the Privacy Commissioner? Were there any kind of red flags brought up or any questions brought up to that effect? I'd like to know – obviously, you know, when we get, probably, into Committee of the Whole, we'll get a chance to be able to hear about some of those answers, of course. Is it in line completely with the privacy legislation?

I'm also wondering if there's been any research that's been done on the impact of withdrawing the benefits and how that will decrease crime rates. You know, certainly, I think that if we can show that this kind of a change does have an impact, I do agree that that is something that we can talk about and be able to bring to the forefront and show Albertans that that is indeed happening.

Just on the consultation I know we could hear about, you know, what we heard during those consultations, and perhaps maybe the government will have the ability to table those documents so we can see what was said during some of the consultations around changes there.

Now, I do have to bring this up, because I'd be remiss by not doing that. I know it's possible for individuals to get multiple parking tickets, not address those, and actually have a warrant brought out for their arrest. What kind of, you know, protections do we have for that? The legislation isn't absolutely clear on that. I know that during briefing I got the usual: well, it'll be in the regulations. It'd be nice just to hear some of the protections around that. Obviously, some of the protections will be for families that, unfortunately, do not know that perhaps a family member is engaged in criminal activity, but they do rely on that individual for support. Again, I just want to make sure that that's covered and addressed here.

Now, I also want to focus in a little bit here on changes to the Petty Trespass Act. There have been a couple of situations that have been brought forward to my attention which I'm very concerned that this legislation will have an impact on. Now, the first one is census workers, federal census workers. Sometimes they have to go back to a property multiple times in order to try to get the information that they're requesting via the census. I do know of situations where people really don't like census workers coming onto their property. What kind of impact is that going to have on those workers? You know, are we going to get a situation where police are called simply because of a census worker? Hopefully, we can get some clarity around that.

The other situation that's come to my attention here just a couple of weeks ago: there was a case where many postal workers had been suspended. They were trying to address some safety issues within the workplace and what entails with their job. Long story short, they were essentially told they were being suspended because they were interfering with the delivery of mail. Now, I'm wondering, just a natural question – again, I'm just hoping for some clarity on this – if federal mail workers are unable to deliver their mail for whatever reason, will they be protected from getting suspended from their job? Hopefully, there has been some consultation by the minister of red tape, through Bill 9, in terms of how that will be addressed.

Now, the other one I want to quickly jump on is, of course, the changes to the Public Transit and Green Infrastructure Project Act. Let's be honest here. This is not red tape reduction; this is simply correcting a really big mistake that this government made. By putting in this kind of uncertain language, it has been difficult to get people to bid on projects. This seems a little bit like, you know, hand-me-down legislation like I've seen in previous iterations of red tape reduction acts, where it tried to fix a situation that was made. Perhaps maybe the Minister of Health could have brought forward some changes around ripping up doctors' contracts and could've let the red tape reduction minister handle it in that sense.

You know, this is good. I'm not saying it's a bad thing. I think the change is a good thing. It's just: why did it take so long for something like this? I'm sure that there must've been consultations with the cities of Edmonton and Calgary on this. Why has it taken literally until just about the end of this Legislature to address that? That was just simply not a very good policy that was brought forward. I am curious, though, if the cities did share with the minister how much business was potentially lost because of this. Hopefully, maybe through some of those consultations we could hear a little bit about that.

Now I want to touch on the changes to the Workers' Compensation Act. There have been a lot of very heated statements around this, and I will continue to take the position that I'm very, very disappointed. I appreciate the changes being proposed here. What I don't appreciate, Madam Speaker, is that it doesn't go far enough. Now, what I'm going to do here is that I'm going to hopefully touch the hearts of members opposite who have said they have roots in labour, just as I do. When you have a situation where language is going to fail a member, you need to do something about it to change it. In this case the failure with the proposed language here in Bill 9 around the changes to WCB is that it's only going to be on a go-forward basis.

I know that the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development has said that it's only one, but that's all we needed: one example, one failure where this family is going to have to continue to try to fight to get coverage for the loved one that they lost. It would just be simple enough to retroactively change this language.

Now, unfortunately, we have heard the red tape minister say in a news conference that that was impossible right up until Ontario dated changes to WCB to make these retroactive changes. They did it all the way back to 1960, Madam Speaker. I'd like to say that I don't even think I was a twinkle in my dad's eye at that time yet. So for us to simply make a change back to the beginning of the Fort McMurray fire: it's doable. We can change it.

I know that my good friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods and critic for labour has an amendment ready for that, so here's where I will ask: for those that have roots in labour, you know that this change is the right thing to do. We're not asking for the moon. We're not trying to create any kind of uncertainty. We're simply saying: date it back to the start. This will cover that one individual. They won't have to fight anymore. It's just the right thing to do. Hopefully, my pleas haven't fallen on deaf ears, Madam Speaker, with regard to a potential amendment that we can bring forward, probably likely during Committee of the Whole, to make some slight changes to good language. I'm not saying that what's proposed in here under WCB changes is bad. It's good language. Please don't trip at the finish line. It's that important.

Now, some other things we could look at. It's just simply housekeeping; the minister himself said that. You know, we could be bringing these things forward in a statutes amendment act just like we've seen in other red tape reduction bills. It kind of feels like we're just trying to fill up the list here, fill up the roster, look like something's being done on a legislative level to justify, as I've mentioned earlier in my comments, a ministry that's spending $10 million to $15 million, maybe even significantly more, on red tape besides, like I said, going and cutting red tape ribbons and giving out plaques, like we've seen in the past. Hopefully, there are no plans by the current red tape minister to do these sorts of similar things.

I think at this point in time it's not necessarily a bad piece of legislation, touting, I think, all the significant accomplishments. I appreciate that everybody is very, very proud of the A-minus rating, but I have to ask, then: why is it, which I discovered during the estimates of red tape, scanning through every single ministry, that only a handful barely mentioned red tape? It used to be prolific throughout all of it. There used to be measurements included. There were none. Even in the ones that, like I said, just barely mentioned the words "red tape," there was nothing. If it's still such a focus, why was there nothing mentioned by all the ministries about their efforts? Is it simply a case that every ministry has been able to accomplish their own red tape reduction targets and, again, here we have just hand-me-down legislation to keep the red tape minister busy?

I will make a comment around some of the changes to land titles. I'm glad to see these. You know, I don't want to be completely critical of that. I think these changes will hopefully speed up the process, will make things a little bit easier for Albertans to get that kind of documentation done. I certainly don't have any concerns with that.

Again, hopefully, as we get further into debate, we'll get some answers to some of the questions that I've posed, you know, find out some clarifying facts. I think it'll make it a little bit easier to be able to go to Albertans and tell them that some of their concerns are not a problem. As I said, changes to the trespass act have raised some red flags here. Rather than just simply going with the narrative, "Well, it'll all be taken care of in regulations," I think Albertans want to see, you know, some clarity on this so that when the regulations do come out, they'll be able to read what they're expecting with those changes.

Again, I'm looking forward to my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods bringing forward that amendment. Again – and I'm sorry to come back to this – please, please don't trip at the finish line here, literally at the finish line. Our firefighters are our heroes of this province. The work that they did was unimaginable in Fort McMurray. The stories that I've heard – I can't even begin to try to fathom and relate to it, but they have said clearly that they want their sisters and brothers covered, including the ones that we've already lost. This is fundamentally important. Again, this is not about trying to make the government look bad; it's just a simple change to cover it all the way from the start.

I will be listening to the rest of debate. I will be making notes along the way. I will likely be back up in other sections of the debate to provide further comment, but hopefully I can get some answers later on down the road here.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak today to Bill 9. This is another in a series of acts that have come forward from this government. You know, I think we all have an interest in ensuring that our regulations work better, that they protect the things they need to protect while being improved.

I'm not saying that none of these bills have ever done it at all but to a very, very limited degree. The vast majority of this is just lip service. My personal favourite was the time that the UCP literally repealed and transcribed an entire act into another one so that they could claim to have removed a regulation. I mean, the degree to which – just, like, literally deleting an entire act and rewriting it in another act so that now you have one act instead of two acts isn't actually changing anything in the real world that affects the people out there. It's kind of bananas. I really have to say that it shocks me. Yes.

This series of bills has been problematic, I would say, to say the least. In this particular bill one of the things that the government actually gets right – and I say that a little tongue in cheek because they broke it in the first place. One of the things they actually get right is that they remove the ability, like a sort of legislative revision, in contracts that would give the government the ability to withdraw on 90 days' notice. This is from big projects. In Calgary it's the green line; that's the project in question. This was – I don't know – political grandstanding on the part of the UCP. They put in this ability to revoke a contract on 90 days. Now, anyone who's ever operated in any kind of a business environment, really, anywhere for any length of time can tell you that putting in a clause like that for a huge project, that allows one party to just walk away from the contract in 90 days for no reason, drives up the price massively.

This is public infrastructure. It's necessary public infrastructure. It's infrastructure that is incredibly important to the people of Calgary, and this clause, which the UCP put in in the first place, in order to show how antitransit they are, I guess – I don't really know what the point of that was. I mean, who's against transit? Like, that just seems crazy. But the UCP managed to put this in so that they could please their antitransit folks, I guess, and it had a huge impact.

I'm glad it's coming out, but once again this is this government asking for people to congratulate them for fixing things they broke. They did it with deindexing tax brackets, something that the former UCP Premier used to rail against and then did as soon as he was in government. I mean, this is fairly typical of the UCP. You know, they deindexed that. They cost Albertans money. They raised their taxes. And then they turned around and fixed the thing that they had broken and asked to be congratulated for it.

It's the same way with benefits. This government voted for it. These members, UCP members, voted for it when we were in government, for the indexing of benefits to ensure that the most vulnerable among us are not losing to inflation, and then they turned around and deindexed them as soon as they got in, and then they reindexed them, and now they run around the province, saying, "Look at us; aren't we glorious? We've indexed benefits," as though, again, they weren't fixing something that they just broke.

Yes, it is a good thing that this provision has been removed. It's a very good thing, but it should never have been in there. It was really transparently obvious to anyone who's ever operated in any sort of a business environment that it should never have been in there. I guess thank you for repealing your own bad decision.

The next part of this that I want to talk about is the portion dealing with WCB. This is a good change. It is a change that will cover something that needs covering. I think the challenge is that – and we have raised this multiple times in this House, and the government has responded multiple times – it doesn't cover people who were diagnosed in the interim period with these cancers. You know, the government is saying, "This isn't a problem; it doesn't exist," and the firefighters are saying: "This is a problem. It does exist, and it needs to be addressed."

In my opinion, when you have a dispute as to the facts, the best thing you can do is to look to what the most credible source is. Madam Speaker, when I examine it, the UCP government versus firefighters, I think it's pretty clear who the most credible source is. I think it's extremely clear that the firefighters are a more credible source of information in this case, that their story is probably the correct story because this government has a long history of being deeply mistaken – I’m trying to avoid unparliamentary language here – as to the facts, with no imputation of what the intention of spreading those deeply mistaken facts was.

You know, this conversation has occurred in the House. We have seen the minister stand up over and over again and claim that it’s absolutely impossible to have this legislation operate retroactively. It might actually be retrospectively because it just changes the current outcome of – anyway, it doesn’t really matter. The point is that Ontario has done it, and in fact it can be done.

Courts tend to not read things as having retroactive or retrospective operations unless the Legislature is really clear. I mean, that is true; courts will not assume that a Legislature intended to operate retroactively, but you can do it with really clear language. This rule has been around for a while. It’s not a new thing. I guarantee you the legislative drafters have informed the government of the existence of this rule. So it’s not impossible. Ontario has done it.

I think this government should do it. We will obviously be introducing an amendment to that effect, and I think all members of this House are going to have the opportunity to vote on that. This is, I mean, just a really easy question: should we cover the cancers of all firefighters who fought to protect Albertans and then became ill as a result of their bravery? I think the answer is clearly yes. I don’t understand why the government would obfuscate or deny that or attempt to argue against it. Like, what could be a clearer answer to a question than: should we presumptively cover illnesses that firefighters got protecting Albertans? Yes. Yes, we clearly should. I really hope that the government members change their mind with respect to this.

Honestly, I have to say, Madam Speaker, I have very rarely – I mean, I find this government disappointing in every possible way – been so disappointed as to see, you know, the minister who represents the area in question stand up and say: “The WCB is working just fine. There’s nothing wrong with it. WCB is only there for employees; it’s not there for the employees.” Like, the degree to which that just represents a complete misunderstanding of WCB and the rights of employees and just everything is incredibly intense.

Yeah. That conversation has been very problematic. I sincerely hope that the government takes what may be its last opportunity to correct one of its own very egregious errors and allows that to apply to everyone.

Okay. Another section of the bill that I wanted to talk about has to do with income supports. One of the changes that is being made in here is that – and this is mostly because it’s worth discussing what these words mean because sometimes words we use in legislation aren’t super obvious to the public. Okay. This is section 15.1 in section 5:

The Director must, subject to the regulations, refuse to provide income support . . .

The use of the word “must” here is important.

. . . and benefits to an applicant or recipient under Part 2, Division 1 when notified that

- (a) a warrant for the arrest of the applicant or recipient has been issued in respect of a prescribed offence, and
- (b) the warrant has not been executed.

Warrant sounds serious, but I think it’s worth discussing because when we were in government, I had a bill that made changes to warrants because at the time – if you get a ticket for riding the C-Train without paying your fare, for your dog pooping in the wrong place, for having your dog off a leash in the wrong area, and you don’t pay that ticket, a warrant issues. Those are things that are included in warrant when the government uses the word “warrant” here.

Now, the changes we made in government – so it used to be the case that if you had such a warrant and you came to the attention of police – I mean, they don’t generally go out looking for you on these sorts of warrants, but it was essentially what’s called a pay-or-stay ticket. Either you had to come up with the money for the fine immediately or you were jailed, basically like a debtors’ prison. You owed because you didn’t pay your C-Train, and you were then put in jail. They had sort of like – there’s a table that cross-references how many days in default you get based on the size of the fine.

This was obviously problematic. It bogged up the system significantly. It put people in jail who didn’t need to be there. There was an incredibly tragic case of someone going to jail and dying as a result of the actions of their cellmate, not of the state, who really ought not to have been there in the first place. This was incredibly serious. In fact, law enforcement was in favour of this. They stood with me, the Edmonton Police Service, when this bill was introduced. This wasn’t, like, letting people get away with things; it was just not putting people in jail because they didn’t pay for their C-Train ticket. That was the change we made.

The change this government is making is that warrants – and I know what they’re going to say. They’re going to say: a prescribed offence; don’t worry; we’ll prescribe only certain things. But, I mean, this is the problem with a government that has lost the trust of the public this fundamentally. Why would we trust them? Why would we trust them to do that? That is incredibly problematic.

I think it’s just worth highlighting what a warrant in this instance actually is, because what they’re saying is essentially that if you have a warrant, you know, you’ll be denied benefits. And those benefits, like, they don’t just – sure, they go to the individual, but that individual may use them to pay for shelter or buy food for their children. Those are important things. These are people that have not been convicted and are potentially dealing with an extremely low-level offence, again, because that’s what “warrant” means in this instance. So I think it’s incredibly problematic.

I would love to hear an explanation from the government as to why this is necessary, because I would be surprised to discover that this will have an overall effect on public safety. Like, I would be really surprised to discover that the government has solid evidence that this is going to have an impact on public safety, because it seems pretty counterintuitive.

Okay. So those are the amendments to the employment benefits, public transit. Oh, yes. The Trespass to Premises Act. That’s also potentially problematic. I would love to hear from the government. Essentially, they’re adding that the act binds the government of Canada, so government of Canada employees in the execution of their official duty. The minister has admitted that this has never actually happened here in the province of Alberta, and this has the real potential to impair, like, a census taker or something like that. So I think that that is incredibly problematic, and I would love to hear what the government has considered, what consultation they’ve done, what research they’ve done.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise and speak at second reading to Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. I’d like to echo some of the points that my colleague just made, and she made some excellent points around the last topic that she was talking about. One of the last ones was around income support, and I'll sort of circle to those.

You know, it's not surprising that this government, this UCP government, sort of started in 2019 with a huge piece of legislation that amended a number of other pieces of legislation, and in it they hid, I think, a lot of changes or cuts, that, well, they would describe as not cuts but changes, that actually went on to make life extremely difficult for Albertans over the next few years.

Sadly, just like their other red tape reduction – I mean, there are some things that have been changed, whether it's languages, updating, some really small changes to make things read better. You know, fixing some things is fine, but what they also put in are some damaging or some potentially damaging pieces, that my colleagues have talked about.

As you'll recall, Madam Speaker, in 2019 an omnibus bill, again, did all kinds of damage to income supports, so those will be the income support products. There are two different streams of income support. The first one is barriers for employment, and the second one is expected to work. What the UCP government did in 2019 was deindex both of those benefits. That caused over the next three and a half, almost four years those benefits to be worth less because they were not tied or coupled to inflation, so instead of getting that extra money every year, people were getting less.

Now, as if that wasn't bad enough, Madam Speaker, this government did not stop there when it comes to income support. They took it a little bit further. What they decided to do – there's a base, a core for income support. It doesn't really talk about it in this piece of legislation, but there's a core benefit for income support. There are also supplemental pieces. There are supplemental pieces to address things like medical transportation, unique child care, things like nutrition, people with special diets. There's also a benefit – it's actually one of the larger ones – for people that have, I would say, pretty severe disabilities but are in the process of applying for AISH. As you know, Madam Speaker, that is not an easy process, and it's not a quick process. There's actually that supplemental benefit for people sitting on income support.

But those have been systematically removed over this government's tenure. They started by deindexing the benefits. They continued by removing supplementals and making it – not only that; if there was a decision to remove something or claw something back, then, you know, an Albertan had the ability to appeal that decision. Then this UCP government went a little bit further and changed the rules around appeal. There are some things that appellants are not able to share with the panels anymore that they used to, that used to actually help and move things a little bit in their favour.

Just to give you a taste of some of the changes that have happened over the last almost four years, you know, when we saw this first change – and I just want to remind this Chamber that we're almost four years into this. We saw the cuts in 2019, and the song that we heard from the other side was: this isn't a cut; this isn't a cut; this isn't a cut. Well, we know it was a cut. I mean, that was just the line they were all using. It was a cut, and we saw their earning power or the amount they got from income support steadily decline, steadily go down. What we heard from this government was: it's not that onerous, not a big deal. But what we did see in the years between that decision and now are symptoms of what that decision caused.

Now, I admit we also had a pandemic in there, and there was certainly some impact because of the pandemic. But what we saw was just an explosion of food bank usage right across the province – just an explosion – so much so that for the first time a government really had to step in and provide some cash. Now, we can talk about how that was distributed another day, but there was a requirement for government to do that because they just could not keep up with demand. Demand on food banks exploded right across the province.

We also know that the number of people without homes also exploded. I think I heard that in Edmonton that population just about doubled. Small communities that don't typically have large issues or big problems with people without homes, like St. Albert, are experiencing more problems. Right across the province this has happened. This is not a coincidence. We knew this would happen. When you cut people's income, poverty gets worse, gets deeper.

The reason I'm talking about all of these things is because I want to talk about the one piece in this legislation today that the red tape minister has thrown into this, you know, everything-but-the-kitchen-sink sort of bill, and this piece is to make some changes to the Income and Employment Supports Act. Now, what this does is add some requirements or the ability of the director to actually stop those benefits or just say no right off the bat. Now, the minister also stood up a little while ago and said: well, other jurisdictions have done it. Three, I think he said: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and another one. What he failed to mention: there are far more that chose not to do that or have not done that yet.

Now, the minister could have stood up and said: we're doing this along with these other provinces because it's based in research; what we found is that we did the research, we did the consultation, we did the collaboration with people that support others on income support or work in poverty reduction, and this is a great idea, and this is going to help Alberta, and this is going to make life better for Albertans. But that is not the case. I do believe that if this decision to include this in this piece of legislation was actually based on fact and data, that this would make life better for Albertans, we would have heard that, but we have not heard that. When we ask questions – “Well, what about this? What about if it's just for, say, a parking or a speeding ticket or whatever?” – what we hear is: well, it won't be; it'll be for serious charges. Well, it doesn't say that, does it? All we hear from this government is: oh, it'll be in regulations; trust us.

There is no trust for this government. We have seen year after year after year that this government has made changes behind closed doors, that we find out about later, particularly as it relates to community and social services and income support and AISH specifically. What's today? The 21st of March. Just today there was another change to the regulations that came out. It's like almost every day there are changes to regulations that make life more difficult for people that are on income support.

You know, it's pretty clear what the goal is here, to reduce the numbers, reduce the spending, when, in fact, as a government we should be looking at: yes, the goal should be getting people off income support, but you do it properly, and you do it safely. You do it through job creation. You do it through retraining. You do it through really good child care for people that need it. You do it by supporting people. For people that have issues with the justice system, you do that by supporting – you make sure that your legal aid system is well funded. You make sure that people have access to information and technology that they need to navigate a justice system. You don't just throw in a line and say: “The director may say no” or “The director may do this” and “Trust us; it won't be a problem because we'll fix it in regulations.” Again, Albertans have zero trust for this government. Zero.

Again, I know that some of my colleagues have asked these questions. I, too, am going to ask these very simple, straight-up questions. It is my sincere hope that there is somebody over there that has some information that can provide some clarity. This particular change, I think, if it's not done properly and if there isn't correct oversight, has the potential to actually do damage in people's lives, but it also has the potential to cost the system enormous amounts of money. These are unintended consequences.

My first question is: who has been consulted? Specifically, has the Privacy Commissioner been consulted? We know that there will be some sharing of information based on what this piece of legislation proposes to do, so has that happened? Is it possible for the red tape minister, who proudly stands and supports this bill – then back it up with some proof. Back it up with some data. Table something from the Privacy Commissioner that gives an opinion: “You know what? This will be fine. This will support Albertans. Nothing to worry about here.” It's not a hard thing to do, so I would expect that's a bare minimum.

What research as well does the UCP have on the impact that withdrawing benefits will have on crime rates? I don't know about you, Madam Speaker, but I would hope that when a government proposes changes, significant changes – if you are withdrawing benefits or saying no to benefits for someone that's applying for income support, you need to know that you are impacting their lives. If they don't get access to that pitiful amount of money and it is – under $900 is the core benefit. Nobody can live on that. Let's just be honest about that. If you say no to someone that is that desperate and perhaps has a child that they're trying to support because they have an outstanding warrant, because of this change made in this piece of legislation, you need to know that you are harming people. How is that positively going to impact crime rates? I mean, really? You are going to make desperate people even more desperate. How on earth is that a positive step forward? I just don't know. I have no idea how this government thinks this is a step in the right direction. Maybe they think they're going to come up with some magical regulations. I don't know what the answer is, but this isn't looking good.

An individual with a warrant that has not been convicted of a crime. Okay. Let's be clear about that. It's a warrant, not a conviction. Does this government understand that their proposed change will be penalizing individuals who may not actually be guilty? Let's say that there's a decision by the director or the designate of the director that decides, “You know what? No, we are not going to continue this person's income support benefits because there's a warrant out for this,” and then it turns out that that person is innocent down the road and, unfortunately, still needs income support and gets it. In the interim look at the harm that you've done.

I would think that a government focused on Albertans, like Alberta's NDP will be, would do a risk assessment, the bare minimum, to determine that the legislation that they want to enact will not harm people. To the best of their ability they should determine that this change will not harm people, and I don't believe that bare minimum has been done by this government.

I want to talk a little bit, actually, about what income support is, because I don't get the sense that all members in this place actually understand the group of people that we're dealing with here or that we're talking about. Let's be clear about what income support is. Income support is something available to people who are some of the most desperate people in this province. They have exhausted all other areas of income, they're not eligible for employment insurance, and they're not eligible for any other benefits. They are not working, so they have to go and apply for income support.

Now, there are two streams. There's barriers for employment, and there's expected to work. Now, barriers for employment, Madam Speaker, is a stream where you will find many, many people. The vast majority of the people that are sitting on there are people that have disabilities, that have chronic illnesses, that are chronically unemployed or underemployed. A lot of these folks actually end up eventually going onto AISH because they just have that severe a disability or that severe a chronic illness. Now, that is a group. They live on the core benefit of under $900 a month. I don't know how anybody survives on that.

The other stream is expected to work, which is a little bit different. This is a group that people do expect will work again except, for whatever reasons, there are big gaps and they're no longer eligible for employment insurance. There is this short-term assistance for people. Now, without this support, can you imagine the additional troubles that you start to introduce into people's lives? This bare minimum – small, tiny, little, minuscule – amount that people try to live on: it actually does help. Sometimes it helps people stay away from a food bank one time. Sometimes it helps them, you know, stay away from having to sleep rough for that night or stay in their car or couch surf. It's that little bit that keeps them away from that chronic edge.

If this government wants to introduce change that will say, “If there is a warrant, this person is no longer eligible” – well, again, to put all of that decision-making power into the hands of a director, I don't know, leaves me a little bit chilled, Madam Speaker, that behind closed doors there are going to be people making decisions based on we don't know what. We don't know what the warrants are for or what the criteria are that will be used about who gets kicked off and who doesn't. We don't know; nobody knows. Is it for, like, a traffic violation of some kind? We don't know, but we've just been told that it'll all be sorted out in the regulations. You know what? That is not good enough.

To be eligible for income support: again let me describe to you the people that are on this kind of benefit, because these are the things, right on the government's website, these are the eligibility pieces that must be met. You have to be unable to pay for your basic needs. That's pretty self-explanatory.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to join in debate on Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. As I rise, I'd like to thank my colleagues who have already started talking on so many important parts of this piece of legislation.

Madam Speaker, for my remarks I'd really like to focus in on a piece of Bill 9 that I have had the opportunity to raise in this Legislature multiple times, and that is the inadequate implementation of supports for firefighters who fought in the Fort McMurray wildfire of 2016, also known as the Horse River wildfire. I'd like to explain why this type of coverage is so critically necessary as well as where I see Bill 9 failing to provide adequate supports to all who were on the ground firefighting across the incident of the Horse River wildfire.

I would like to say in second reading that I look forward to the Official Opposition putting forward an amendment to improve Bill 9 specifically in this area, as we have talked about in this Assembly, and it is my hope that the government will support this amendment and will work with the Official Opposition to make the necessary changes as we go forward.

Now, this is an issue that I want to give credit – there are a number of people who have advocated for improved coverage for the firefighters who were on the ground in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, in the city of Fort McMurray during the fire that started in May 2016, and I specially want to give credit to the Fort McMurray Firefighters Association, IAFF local 2494. There are members of the Edmonton Fire Fighters' Union who have made this a priority issue and have been lobbying to have this fixed and, of course, the APFFPA, the Alberta Professional Fire Fighters &

Paramedics Association, which represents many, many firefighters in our province who have been advocating for the recognition that when it comes to a catastrophic, traumatic event, which this wildfire was, we need to take into consideration the conditions on the ground and what those firefighters have experienced when we are looking at workers' compensation coverage.

Workers' compensation coverage needs to be there when someone is injured on the job or incurs sickness or occupational disease as a result of their work as an employee. And in this case, for firefighters, we know that cancer is the number one cause of firefighter line-of-duty deaths. It can happen where there's a specific traumatic injury at a site – someone falls from something or is crushed, that type of injury – but firefighters most often, because of the occupational exposures they have, develop cancer later in life.

Now, it's excellent to know that the health and safety procedures and decontamination procedures for firefighters have grown exponentially. There were times, decades ago, when having the dirtiest equipment was a point of pride for firefighters and a way to show, you know, the types of fires they had been to. But as science has evolved and as health and safety has evolved, obviously that is quite different today, where now there are protocols. When firefighters have been on the site of a fire, they will immediately go and decontaminate themselves and their equipment because we have a better understanding of the carcinogens and the toxins that will stick to firefighters' equipment. That, that need to decontaminate, that need to be aware of the health and safety risks and manage those risks, is incredibly important in this situation. Because of the catastrophic nature, firefighters were not able to do that.

I'd like to talk just a little bit about this wildfire, which is unique in Canada's history because, of course, we know that it forced the evacuation of 88,000 residents and was the largest single evacuation of residents in the history of Canada, leaving a trail of physical and emotional damage.

When this wildfire began, the members of the Fort McMurray Firefighters Association were the first to engage and the last to leave, and that meant being in a toxic environment in the area of Fort McMurray. Certainly, throughout the 60-plus days until the fire was deemed to be under control, the firefighters fought tirelessly, and they did so for a number of different reasons, including trying to save as many structures as possible, trying to preserve infrastructure, and then, of course, trying to protect the citizens from any injury. These firefighters were fighting against an inferno that began with the local firefighters in Fort McMurray, in many ways, and then they brought in assistance from many other locals and from all across Alberta and other areas. Departments from Red Deer and Calgary arrived within 24 hours to provide assistance because of the size of this. All of these firefighters were working together to try and fight the fires and stop the advancement through our urban areas.

Something that many people may not realize is that it wasn't until after the first six days that crews were able to be rotated off shift for the first time. We're talking about firefighters who were working almost to exhaustion, very little rest, and they had limited to no ability to decontaminate or manage personal hygiene. At times there was no access to breathing filters or to wear self-contained breathing apparatuses, SCBA. It just wasn't feasible. The facilities that are normally used to refill SCBAs were within the contaminated areas of toxic air, so it made their breathing apparatus ineffective or refilling them impossible.

4:10

What do we know about that toxic air full of cancer-causing agents? We know that 2,500 structures were completely incinerated or partially destroyed; 80 per cent of the structures in the city were spared, fortunately, but so much was thrown up into the air, creating toxins and creating an opportunity for those firefighters on the ground to be exposed. That air contaminated members' skin, clothing, and lungs and without the ability to clean themselves for almost a week. This is completely against the normal practice for a firefighter, that would visit the scene of a regular fire and be able to then do the decontamination that they would need to do.

In Bill 9 there is a recognition of the catastrophic, traumatic event that occurred and the need to support the firefighters who were on the ground because, as the current president of the APFFPA has said, they were exposed to a career's worth of toxins within a single week in many cases. Making sure that the occupational disease, the cancers that potentially result from that exposure, is seamlessly covered through the WCB should be a priority, and I think it's one that all members of this House, supporting our firefighters – we should be able to agree on this. So I'm pleased to see the government bring this forward in Bill 9. I would note that they took four years to do that, but I will say that it is a good thing, and I am glad it is there.

Unfortunately, Bill 9 and the portions that come into effect when it comes to the WCB: that only turns on when the bill is proclaimed, when the bill is passed. What that leaves out is that there are firefighters we know about – and there may be more that we do not know about – who have been diagnosed with occupational disease relating to the Fort McMurray wildfire in the prior seven years. There is already one known case, that we've talked about in this House, of a firefighter who has passed, whose family has been fighting with the WCB for coverage. There's another firefighter story that I have heard where they've had to go through an appeals process, and I find it completely inadequate that the minister responsible for this area, responsible for occupational health and safety and for WCB, is suggesting that a fairness review process is the right answer. I think that a change to make clear that anyone, any of those firefighters, who has been diagnosed with occupational disease or these cancers should receive the coverage for their illness automatically – it can be resolved with a simple amendment.

Now, Madam Speaker, I've already sent that amendment through to the government and through to the minister in the hopes of gaining a common understanding of how we can work together to amend this and to make it very, very clear that in the case of this one catastrophic event, retroactive WCB coverage just makes sense. I do understand that it is not Alberta's workers' compensation system's normal practice to do retroactive coverage, but to be very clear, that is a choice, and in this case we are talking about a very specific incident with specific health impacts on a narrow group of individuals. We've seen in Ontario that other worker compensation systems do provide retroactive coverage, in some cases for 60 years, and in that case they're not talking about firefighters who were at a particular event; they were talking about all firefighters in their entirety. Here we are asking for retroactive coverage for the firefighters who were on the ground during this very specific event, when they were not able to properly decontaminate, when we know they are at elevated risk of occupational disease, specifically cancers.

I think the amendment we've put forward does make sense, and the government's arguments – that if somebody doesn't fall within the correct window, they will go through a fairness process and the right thing will eventually happen, and if it doesn't, someone can call the minister's office – I find completely unacceptable and inadequate. There may be others who are out there who have not even submitted a WCB claim because they know they don't meet the latency periods that are required. We cannot say that this is only one person. It's wishful thinking. I hope – I hope – that there are not others out there, but it's possible they are, and why not have this be entirely clear?

Now, let me talk about a second way that this Bill 9 portion speaking to firefighters is inadequate, but I won't be able to do an amendment, Madam Speaker, because of the way the bill is drafted. When we talk about the toxins and what was in the air and damage to lungs, the other challenge that we have is that respiratory illness is not being considered; only cancers at this point. We already have studies done at the University of Alberta, studying I believe 1,200 first responders who were on the ground, showing significant lung damage, asthma, and other respiratory illness as a result of being on the ground in Fort McMurray. So I would urge this government, either through amendments to Bill 9 that they may be able to do or through future action, to include not just cancers, not just that occupational disease, but to consider the impact of respiratory illness when it comes to supporting those who were on the ground.

Now, this is not a unique idea. After 9/11 the Zadroga act was passed to recognize that with the amount of debris and toxins that were thrown into the air in that catastrophic event, there was a health impact for people who were on the ground, for first responders. So there's certainly precedent in other jurisdictions that we can look to when considering making that change.

The final way that Bill 9 is inadequate but one in which I think that the government has signalled that they are planning action – and I hope that they do – is the fact that the firefighters' primary site cancer regulation has not been updated since 2018, when I as minister of labour last updated it. Now I will tell you . . .

Ms Hoffman: Best minister of labour so far.

Ms Gray: I appreciate the kind words from colleagues.

Updating that primary site cancer regulation in 2018, we were able to make Alberta the absolute best place in Canada for supporting our firefighters. We covered the most up-to-date science, the highest number of cancers, and we updated our latency periods based on the latest science.

Now, what's happened since 2018, because we are now at 2023: a number of other provinces have now updated their regulations based on new scientific information, and Alberta is no longer providing the most comprehensive list. The impact of that in relation to Bill 9 is, of course, that Bill 9 is providing presumptive coverage for the cancers that are listed in the firefighter primary site cancer regulation, but our primary site cancer regulation does not include a number of types of cancers that the firefighters have been lobbying should be included.

I would ask and urge the government to update that regulation. That is not something that needs to come through the Legislature, which is quite fortunate. That's something that can be done through regulation without coming into this House, but we need to do that as well, because of the interaction between Bill 9 and the coverage for Fort McMurray, and then making sure that firefighters are covered for all different types.

As an example, Manitoba has added pancreatic, thyroid, and penile cancers. Yukon has added thyroid and pancreatic . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. I hesitate to interrupt. There's something wrong with the buzzer. Your time is up.

Are there other members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, in second, and I have to say that I want to continue on a little bit of the thread from the best labour minister in Alberta history talking about the expansion of presumptive coverage for a number of different types of cancer for firefighters.

One that we worked on together, in preparing a bit of a business case, is that there were many hormone-based cancers that were seen as having a linkage to the workplace for men, that there were lots of studies that showed that men who worked as firefighters were at an increased likelihood of getting different types of hormone-based cancers because of workplace conditions.

But there wasn't this deep, long history of similar studies based on women. The biggest reason, when firefighters came to meet with us, was because there aren't many women who work as firefighters, but if we use the same logic to project that the male hormone-based cancers have workplace conditions that lead to their outcomes, we should be able to draw those similar types of conclusions for women. Saying, "Well, we need to wait until we have all of the scientific evidence to be able to back up that there's a definitive link." They said, "You will not get it, because we aren't attracting enough women to the profession right now." One of the ways we could help attract more women to the profession is if we said that the same presumptive coverage for those hormone-based cancers applied for women as they do for men, and I'm really honoured that I got to support the minister of labour in that work and that she carried that through to fruition.

I hear the same arguments being made by the minister of – I don't know the title; the guy who's supposed to be in charge of labour protections for the people of Alberta. There isn't a current minister of labour. Northern development, I think, is the minister who is standing in in that role when it comes to this file.

Mr. Hanson: Jobs, Economy and Northern Development.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks. Jobs, Economy and Northern Development, formerly known as the labour ministry, at least in part. Thank you very much, hon. member.

The same argument is being given around why they aren't going to backdate presumptive coverage for firefighters who had forms of cancer and have suffered the worst fate that anyone can imagine when it comes to workplace-related deaths, getting an illness that's caused by your workplace. Having the current minister stand in this place day after day after day saying that they need to go through a fairness process to ensure that they're eligible I think is a real disservice and disrespect to everyone who works as a firefighter but all of us who stood back and watched in admiration as well when people were putting their lives on the line to help evacuate the city of Fort McMurray and the surrounding region to make sure that people got out safely, that as many homes and essential services were protected as possible.

I have to say that being the Minister of Health at that time and getting the daily briefings about the risk management and where we were at, when I heard that there were fire trucks surrounding the hospital, I was deeply concerned. It was chief fire officials who said: knowing that there are fire trucks in front of the hospital is a very good sign because it means we think we can save it; it means that we're fighting to save it. So even though it was getting that close, they put their resources, their lives on the line to fight and protect the hospital, the major regional hospital for the northeast part of the north zone, in such a difficult time.

And now they're at the point where many of them have required health care services because of the outcomes that they faced, being exposed to so many chemicals over such a condensed period of time, trying to combat that fire. I think we owe it to them to bring forward legislation that would actually improve it. As the former minister, hopefully once again future minister, has said, because of the way that the government chose to draft this and provide changes, the ability to amend that section isn't available to us in this version. I think that's an incredible disservice to firefighters and to Albertans who would like to be able to show our support generally to people who put their lives on the line every day.

I know that all of us are thinking about first responders, I think more over the last week than maybe we did a few months ago or years ago, given other very close tragedies that first responders have faced over the last several days in the province of Alberta.

I'm going to pivot for a few moments to – because this is titled, you know, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, and there's been a whole ministry created to oversee red tape. The ministry actually, for those – since we're in the process of debating the budget as a separate piece to this legislation but relevant to this. This is the ministry, red tape reduction is the ministry, that's going to see the third-most increases to staffing levels in the government of Alberta should the government's proposed budget pass in this House. It surprised me that we would see such an increase to the bureaucracy and such an increase to the number of people working in a department when the whole ministry was created to try to streamline and reduce government, essentially. So that's an interesting piece.

I have tremendous respect for people who do serve in the public service and hope that some of that will be used to address the significant delays that we're seeing in the land titles offices, but I was a bit surprised by the significant staffing increase given that this ministry typically tries to tout that it's about streamlining and creating more efficiencies.

Another area where we've seen, actually, a significant increase in red tape – and I imagine some of us will be meeting Catholic school trustees later this evening – is the tremendous increased accountability and reporting tied to many grant items from the province of Alberta. There's always been regular accounting of how many students come to school, what your class sizes are. Those are things that we were used to reporting and did for years. The government has changed the – they no longer publish class size data, and they don't even have updated numbers on how many students are going to school this current school year on their website. The last year numbers are there, and it still says "projections." We're more than halfway through this school year, but that isn't important information for the current government to share as it relates to education. But they, I will say, have added a tremendous amount of red tape, especially at the beginning of the year, to be able to get the smallest of grants to be able to support students, particularly when they're behind in their learning.

Let me talk a little bit about the early-year assessments that happen, particularly in division 1, kindergarten to grade 3. Kindergarten I think is assessed in January, but in September we start with early-year pullouts. And much of September teachers in grades 1, 2, and 3 spend pulling kids out of the class and doing early assessments with them as opposed to having that time to be able to build relationships and foster trust and excitement as a large school community. In most of those schools they do that without any additional funding to cover substitute teachers. Often, you know, in the single site administrator school somebody will be floating in and out of the classroom, or maybe there will be an educational assistant who's covering for a few minutes while people are being pulled out to do these assessments.

I can also say, having trained as a teacher, having parents who taught, and having worked with teachers most of my professional life, that teachers know who's behind after a couple of months in the classroom. They know, from working with students and building those relationships and finding ways to do authentic assessment, where everyone's at and how they can support them.

There's been a tremendous amount of red tape added by Alberta Education under the UCP when it comes to education funding, and that might be one of the reasons why the Education budget was underspent by a billion dollars when you just look at the last two fiscal years. Again, here we are considering an Education budget. Just looking at the last two fiscal years, Alberta Education underspent, the UCP underspent, on Alberta classrooms by a billion dollars of what we in this Assembly had approved them to spend.

Money that we said should be focused and spent on education in this current year wasn't spent, whether it was through the department or whether through local school authorities. Many have said that part of that is the frustration as it relates to the red tape to actually be able to spend grants that the government has applied, that sometimes it isn't even worth the many, many hours you have to put in filling out paperwork and applying for grants to be able to access these resources. A lot of money got left on the table because so much red tape was added by the UCP when it comes to supporting schools with education dollars.

It's interesting, I think a lot of the time we'll hear talking points from folks around, you know, the best decisions being made closest to the child and the money should follow the children, but there have been so many layers of red tape and so many gates put in the way between good ideas, us making decisions in this place around supporting education funding and the barriers to that funding actually being passed on to the child, what would appear very intentionally by the minister in terms of the billion dollars that hasn't been spent over the last two years, when we in this Assembly have made the decision to allocate that money.

So it is very frustrating, and I imagine many of us will hear more about that tonight as we meet with ACSTA trustees, when we talk to them about what their biggest frustrations are and what their biggest hopes are. Red tape is definitely something that has come up many times in many meetings with trustees from a variety of school authorities.

It is of concern, and I think that we would have had an opportunity in this place to consider ways that we can streamline efficiency rather than having pieces be backlogged and held up for an attempt to have, you know, more press releases talking about surpluses when those surpluses certainly should have been spent on supporting education in classrooms for children in the year that we approved them.

Generally I've touched on the firefighter piece. I've touched on what I would have liked to have seen in terms of reducing red tape and streamlining services for children. I will say that generally I think some of the areas within this bill are just fine. The piece around agriculture as it relates to tying the origins of bees to where they are, and where they are in Alberta to the country of origin: beekeepers tell us that this isn't problematic. I'll trust them and say that these types of changes, that are very surface or superfluous for somebody who isn't an expert in the area, seem like worthwhile initiatives.

4:30

I think that this bill, again, could have been used to address the most pressing issues that most Alberta families are raising with me and, I'm sure, many of us. When we're travelling the province and connecting with folks in preparation for the next election, they want to talk about affordability. It doesn't appear that there is anything that's being done in this bill to make life more affordable for Albertans, who are facing some of the biggest increases to regular things like utilities and the cost of living as it relates to being able to put food on their family's table.

There is nothing in this bill that's addressed affordability, nothing in this bill that's going to make health care services better or more accessible for the people of the province, and nothing in this bill that's actually going to address the urgent need to have a resilient economy for all Albertans.

With that, I guess I will reluctantly support this bill. I wish that it was focused on things that are more aligned with the priorities of everyday families, but I don't think that pieces in it that are problematic are going to move us backwards, so I guess that in this place some days that's a win.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10 Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul on behalf of the minister – or the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. I appreciate members in this House, colleagues, that are always prepared to rise and pinch-hit where required.

Madam Speaker, this bill contains a number of legislative amendments which, if passed, would implement key policies included in Budget 2023. Bill 10 would implement a new fiscal framework for our province. Of all the initiatives in Budget '23 – and there were many – certainly this new fiscal framework, I believe, will be very important to fiscal and financial stability in this province, hopefully for years, even decades, to come. I believe everybody in this House would recognize that fiscal sustainability is necessary if we're going to continue to deliver a world-class education system, a world-class health care system, and the other deliverables that Albertans expect.

This framework would require annual balanced budgets with limitations on in-year and year-over-year increases in expenses. Now, Madam Speaker, there are going to be exceptions, necessary exceptions, to these fiscal rules. We have an economy that's diversifying at significant rates, but it's still an economy that's in a significant way dependent on our resource-based sectors. Our fiscal rules have to accommodate the income fluctuation that we see from time to time in this economy.

Madam Speaker, this fiscal framework would also set policies for the allocation of surplus cash, with at least half of any surplus going towards debt repayment. I believe that right now a focus for a surplus should be debt repayment as well as additional deposits into our heritage savings trust fund. This fiscal framework does create what we will call an Alberta fund, which is really a holding account for surplus funds, funds not used for the repayment of debt in a year where a surplus is achieved.

Funds held in this account can only be used for three things. They can be held for future debt repayment, they can be held for future contributions into the heritage savings trust fund, or they can be held to fund one-time initiatives but initiatives subject to an appropriations bill, initiatives subject to the budget process, and, Madam Speaker, initiatives subject to the other fiscal rules. This Alberta fund will in fact provide significant additional structure for the use of funds.

Madam Speaker, another initiative in Bill 10 will be legislation that will in fact allow the heritage savings trust fund to retain all of its income. I think that, as most members in this House know, right now any income from the heritage savings trust fund not required to inflation-proof the fund automatically gets transferred to the general revenue fund. Well, we're changing that in Bill 10. If the members of this House in sufficient numbers support Bill 10 and it passes, then the earnings from the heritage savings trust fund will categorically stay in the heritage savings trust fund. Again, that's good news for Albertans today but especially good news for Albertans in the future.

Madam Speaker, I've made this point before, but it bears repeating. If we as a province, if we as Albertans from day one had retained all of the earnings in the heritage savings trust fund without any additional deposits other than those that were made, we would not have an $18 billion fund today. We would have a fund approaching $300 billion. It shows the significant value of earnings compounding on themselves and how quickly we could grow a fund. As a lifelong Albertan I regret that we did not start this earlier, but I'm so pleased to join my colleagues on this side of the House to begin this savings practice today. A $300 billion fund would generate close to $20 billion in income per year. That would be absolutely incredible for the future of the province.

Madam Speaker, there are a number of other important pieces in Bill 10, including ensuring that the tax changes regarding the tax credit with respect to charitable giving are made retroactive to January 1, 2023. I want to once again thank my colleague the MLA for Peace River for introducing this change as a private member's bill, effectively increasing the value of a charitable tax credit from 15 per cent to 60 per cent in terms of the Alberta portion. When you combine it with the federal portion, it's a full 75 per cent tax credit on donations up to the first $200 for every Albertan. Albertans are generous. Albertans support charities and nonprofit organizations in their communities. They give back. This will encourage that generosity, and I'm excited to include this piece in the bill.

Madam Speaker, another important initiative in Bill 10 is to ensure that postsecondary students in this province have predictable tuition fees in the future. In Bill 10 we are limiting tuition fee increases to 2 per cent at most public postsecondary institutions, starting in '24-25.

Madam Speaker, to further improve our competitiveness in this province, included in this bill is the new agriprocessing tax credit. This tax credit will provide a 12 per cent nonrefundable corporate tax credit to corporations who take on a project with a cap ex of a million dollars or greater and a project that effectively uses as its feedstock agriculturally produced goods. We've gone to great lengths to ensure that Alberta has the most competitive business environment possible. That's an ongoing effort. Introducing this additional nonrefundable corporate tax credit is part of that effort in ensuring that our world-class agriculture industry in this province remains competitive globally, remains a force as we not only generate economic opportunity for Alberta farmers and ranchers and every Albertan across the province but, in fact, make good on what is both our opportunity and deep responsibility to provide food to a growing and needy world.

Madam Speaker, this bill also includes changes that will provide dental, drug, vision, and other supplemental health benefits for children adopted in the province. Alberta will be the only province in Canada to do so. It also includes amendments which will increase the adoption expenses tax credit and off-set a portion of the cost of adoptions to help Albertans who want to start or grow their families through adoption.

Madam Speaker, Bill 10 also includes proposed amendments to the Local Government Fiscal Framework Act that will tie future municipal funding levels to changes in provincial revenues, and Bill 10 will also update that revenue index factor. Starting in budget '25-

26, percentage changes in municipal funding levels would be equal to percentage changes in provincial revenues from three years prior, again allowing municipalities to plan more effectively for the future. Of everything I hear from municipalities, they want certainty and predictability in their funding.

Madam Speaker, Bill 10 provides important legislative changes to implement Budget 2023, a budget that focuses on strengthening our health care system, a budget that ensures adequate funding for enrolment growth in our education system but, more than that, ensures additional funding to deal with complexity in classrooms.

Madam Speaker, Bill 10 will support Budget '23, which is a budget that improves public safety, with an increase in our public safety ministry budget of 13 per cent. This budget also further supports our justice system by increasing our funding to the Justice ministry by 10 per cent.

Madam Speaker, we together as Albertans have made great progress in the last four years. We've made great progress in this economy, taking an economy that was stagnant and positioning it for competitiveness, investment attraction, growth, diversification, to the point where this province now is leading the nation in economic growth. That is Alberta's rightful place.

We've also taken a province that was really stuck in a structural deficit, spending far more than comparator provinces on a per capita basis but not getting better results, and over four years we've worked thoughtfully, carefully, surgically, compassionately to bring our spending in line with comparator provinces, Madam Speaker. This puts Alberta on a sustainable fiscal trajectory, which is good news for future generations.

Madam Speaker, with that, I would call on all members of this House to support Bill 10.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and – well, “pleased” is maybe not the right word. I'm something to rise and speak to Bill 10.

Ms Hoffman: Respond.

Ms Ganley: Respond. I'm pleased to be able to respond to what we've just heard.

I think that there are a lot of potentially problematic things in this bill, but I think that by far the most problematic – I mean, it's up there in terms of problematic things we've seen come before this House at all – is the creation of a $1.4 billion slush fund in the two months immediately prior to an election. I feel like it's difficult to state the revulsion that I feel and that I think most of the people of Alberta . . . [interjections]

Mr. Toews: It's a structured fund.

Ms Ganley: A structured slush fund. Well, you can call it whatever you like. A rose by any other name.

I think the challenge here is that it's something that generates, I think, revulsion, the idea of spending government funds to achieve political ends, which is exactly what this creates. It creates a fund.

Now, admittedly, it's not strictly untrue to say that it can be spent on three things. It's just that one of those things is a one-time initiative, which could pretty much mean anything. If you say that this can be spent on three things – they are debt repayment, savings, and anything else – it's technically not untrue, but it's not really true either. So I think the problem here is that the government is giving itself the power to, essentially, purchase votes in advance of an election, and I think it's problematic. I do, however, think,

Madam Speaker, that fortunately for us, the Alberta public will see through it. I think that people will see this for exactly what it is. It's a slush fund. It's trying to buy people off with their own money.

I want to respond as well, because I happen to be the first speaker, to a couple of things that the minister had to say. Now, one of them was this talk of how the deficit went away because of fiscal responsibility. Just let me start by saying that that is just wildly incorrect on the facts before us. The deficit went away because the price of oil went up and revenues into government coffers went up. That's what happened. [interjection]

Honestly, this government has wasted massive amounts of money. Let us start with the $1.3 billion they gambled on Trump's re-election after, Madam Speaker, it was clear in the polls that he wasn't going to win. It was literally like: “Oh, there's less than 50 per cent success. There's less than a 50 per cent, significantly less than a 50 per cent, chance of success, so let's put up $1.3 billion that we're most likely going to lose.” I think that's extremely problematic behaviour.

You know, from a government that calls spending to ensure that AISH recipients can afford food fiscal management and waste – apparently food for people who are disabled, for children, is a waste of money, but gambling $1.3 billion: well, that's just wise fiscal management according to these people. I think when you see fiscal management that wise, in quotes, you should really start to wonder every time those folks use those terms, because they clearly aren't reflective of reality. So I think that's the first big point there, that the price of oil coming up and balancing the budget for you is not hard work and fiscal responsibility. It's luck, and that's what this government had, and they certainly have not, in my view, used it wisely.

I think it's also worth talking about some of the spending projects that this government has under consideration. There is the hundreds of millions of dollars to repaint police cars for the RCMP. Well, I guess they wouldn't be the RCMP anymore; they would be the provincial police force. And quite apart from the ridiculous cost – and there are hundreds of millions in one-time costs; there are hundreds of millions in ongoing costs – even by the government's own report, by their own admission, quite apart from this sort of massive waste of money, is the fact that they could spend all this money and it might still not work.

We saw this attempt to transition away from the RCMP happen just recently, not for the whole province of B.C. but for one area, and they had to abandon it. The project had to be abandoned because they literally could not get the officers to fill the positions. They were offering people, you know, $20,000 bonuses to move over and sign on, and they couldn't get it to work. Alberta is a much bigger area, so it's going to be the problem magnified, and it's been the case for quite a while that it is difficult to hire and retain qualified police officers, because you can't just get anyone. They have to be able to operate in certain conditions. The skills required are high. They need to be able to sort of psychologically deal with a number of things, and you can't just get anybody in to those positions.

4:50

We've kind of seen over time that it's become more and more difficult to hire to those positions. It's not entirely clear why that is. I mean, it could be the complexity of what modern police officers have to deal with. It's challenging. People may be looking at that and just making a different choice. But the point is that it is. We know it's difficult sometimes to fill positions like that, so the idea that the government could just sort of – in fact, when we were in government, we had challenges getting enough even RCMP officers into the province to, like, fill the number of positions that we had because, you know, of the difficulty retaining and attracting. Yeah. It's a massive waste of money. It's a terrible idea.

The other one would be the move away from the Canada pension plan and the move to create our own revenue collection agency. In fact, we had been estimating that this would be costly and ridiculous and require the hiring of a whole bunch of civil servants. In budget estimates, believe it or not, it turns out that it was an underestimate, according to the minister, so that's highly problematic. Again we're talking about millions of dollars.

CPP: you know, we're talking about a fund that'll be smaller, that won't be able to necessarily generate the same kind of income and that's uncertain. This government, who has a history of not spending other people's money well – see the earlier gambling of $1.3 billion – takes that CPP, and then people don't know if it's going to be there for them. That's not government money. That's not – it's people's money. People have paid into the CPP. It is their retirement savings. They are entitled to some sort of say over how it is spent, and I think that they certainly don't want the folks over there, the UCP, to get a hold of that, with good reason, because they have a long history of making bad decisions with other people's money. Those are a few of the reasons that I would challenge those statements.

Another big one I want to challenge is that, you know, the minister has mentioned several times, including in the remarks he just made, about this increase in public safety. Now, leaving aside for a moment the problem with switching away from the RCMP and potentially having insufficient police officers in the province, yeah, they are investing in the budget for public safety. You know, anyone who's studied this issue – and pretty much every police service in the province, at least at the time when I was still in, were all onboard with one principle, that the best dollar you can spend on public safety is a dollar which is invested in affordable housing. Affordable housing increases public safety in a way that nothing else does. This is quite consistent. In fact, we were – at meetings of chiefs of police this was stated almost universally. I suspect that if you were to go and ask – if a reporter were to ask right now: what's the best investment? Affordable housing. They see it every day.

This government, I mean, quite apart from the bill they had which changed the definition of affordable housing so they could deem anything to be affordable housing, putting aside that little obfuscation there in an attempt to just, like, point at things and call them affordable housing and be like, "Look, we increased affordable housing," is just ridiculous. This government has consistently cut affordable housing. They have consistently underinvested in affordable housing. They have in large part not, well, created, contributed. It's hard to say. They have contributed. They have contributed significantly to the safety problems we see in our downtowns today, and they have made those contributions by withdrawing funding for affordable housing just as, you know, we moved into several crises: affordability crisis, COVID, a number of things that made life just that much more challenging for everyone, especially people who were marginally housed or barely able to afford things.

This government chose at that moment to stop, basically, entirely investing in affordable housing. They did, however, pass an act to allow them to deem things to be affordable housing, which is, of course, of no actual, practical help to anyone, but I guess it did allow them to sort of do a dance and pretend they had done something.

The other thing I wanted to talk about was the not getting better results. The talk of: we invest too much in the people of Alberta. You know, we have seen in health care the result of this particular UCP talking point. Now, first off, I think it's clear – and it's clear in the literature, it's clear from a number of people who study how we study things – that this statement is entirely dependent on which results you look at, and the UCP and their sort of folks around them just love to cherry-pick statistics. They love to cherry-pick the one statistic and then be able to say: well, we spend more, and we don't get better.

And then they attacked doctors, they cut health care, they cut education, and lo and behold, the health care system got much, much worse. And now they stand up and say: well, you know, it's not really that much worse than other places in Canada. Well, it used to be much better than other places in Canada. We used to have the best health care here in Alberta. These folks with their rhetoric about it not being better have brought us down.

Okay; yeah, maybe it is the case that tens of thousands of people in other provinces can't get access to a family doctor, maybe it is the case that people are terrified because they can't get an ambulance and because they're lined up with their sick children outside the ER. Maybe that is the case in other jurisdictions, but – you know what? – it didn't have to be the case here.

And it is only the case here because those folks, the UCP, engaged in a relentless campaign, a relentless campaign of attacking doctors, of threatening to fire nurses when the pandemic ended, of attempting to decrease the pay of respiratory therapists and adjunct health professionals across the system, and engaged in a war of misinformation against those doctors, when they attempted to defend themselves, until they drove them out of the province.

That's not responsibility. That's not a responsible way to bring down the – responsibility would be not giving $20 billion away to profitable oil corporations to clean up the messes they already have the legal responsibility for. That would not be responsibility. Driving doctors out of the province, relentlessly attacking health care until it was far worse, until you create problems: that's not responsibility. That's making Albertans pay the cost of their poor decisions.

When we talk about this $20 billion that they plan to give away to companies to clean up liabilities that they already have taken responsibility for, that's almost the entire health care budget. That's almost the entire health care budget. So to turn around and say, "Look, we strangled health care until your child can't get into the hospital, but we're going to spend the same amount again to achieve absolutely nothing" and call that fiscally responsible is absolutely absurd.

And now this government, who has made irresponsible choices, who has driven our health care system into the ground, who will cost us hundreds of thousands of dollars in correctional centres because of what they did with the Education budget, because they have starved it, because they refused to invest in children with learning needs when they were five years old, where they could've invested $20,000 to save us millions in justice costs in the future – they have refused to do any of that.

That will continue to be a problem for generations into the future. The actions of this government will resonate. They will resonate throughout time, and those cuts, the cuts to children with special needs, that cut them off from their right to an education, will cost 20, 30, maybe more times into the future in justice system costs, in health care costs, in costs to support these people.

5:00

So, no, it is not wise fiscal management to punish those with disabilities. It is not wise fiscal management to destroy a functioning health care system. It is not wise fiscal management to gamble away money on a foreign election. None of this is wise fiscal management, and it continues to this day.

They want $1.4 billion as a slush fund to try to obfuscate, to try to buy back the people that they have lost by offering $20 billion to profitable corporations to clean up their own messes while they let the people of this province suffer. Honestly, at this point, having sat here and watched this government for nearly four years, I think I can say, Madam Speaker, that the point is the suffering. It isn't the fiscal responsibility, it isn't the savings in the budget; it is the pain that they cause.

Madam Speaker, I really think that this evidence can lead us only to one conclusion, that this UCP government is a government that thinks that poverty is a moral failing, and it is incredibly problematic. It shows in every action. It shows in everything they do. To hear the minister comment on how these punishing decisions, that have hurt the people of this province, that have let them down in a time of crisis while this government hands out and gambles with billions of people's dollars – it's flabbergasting. It really, really is.

I think, with that, I will say that, you know, I think – I believe in the democratic process, and I believe that people will see through this $1.4 billion slush fund. I believe that people will see through the UCP. I believe that the attempts to push off wildly unpopular programs like the $20 billion handout, like the creation of their own police force, like withdrawing from CPP, like creating a bureaucracy of tax collectors so everyone can file their taxes twice here in Alberta – I think that pushing those things off till after the election: people see through it. I think that people deserve better, and I think that very, very soon, Madam Speaker, people are going to be able to choose better, and I believe that they will.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to provide my support for Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. First of all, I express my appreciation to the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance for this significant bill, which will implement measures from Budget 2023 to help build fiscal stability, attract investment, support children and families, cut red tape, improve provincial funding mechanisms, and make life more affordable for students. Bill 10 helps secure Alberta's future by addressing some of the most urgent needs the government heard from families, students, and municipalities throughout the province.

Madam Speaker, fiscal responsibility matters. Bill 10 includes amendments that would legislate a fiscal framework to secure Alberta's future. This fiscal framework would require all future Alberta governments to balance their annual budgets with certain expectations and use any surpluses to, first, pay down the debt and save for the future before investing in one-time initiatives.

What is the importance of balancing the budget? This question, Madam Speaker, never crossed the thoughts of the previous government. Balancing the budget would mean a lot to Albertans as it would give us the ability to reduce the debt-servicing charge and eventually pay the debt. It would remove the burden on future generations to pay a debt that they did not incur.

Bill 10 aims to do that, Madam Speaker. It will require the government to use 50 per cent of surplus cash to pay down the debt maturing in that fiscal year. The rest will be deposited into the federal fund to give the government time to determine how to responsibly use it. It also includes provisions to provide transparency to Albertans by ensuring the government will provide detailed reports on the use of funds from the Alberta fund. Money from the Alberta fund can only be used for three purposes: to pay down debt, to invest in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, or for one-time initiatives that do not permanently increase government spending.

Bill 10, as well, carries amendments to streamline the transfer of money from the general revenue fund to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. Currently legislation requires a portion of the Alberta heritage fund's net income to be kept in the fund to protect against inflation. Any investment income not used for the inflation-proofing of the heritage fund must be transferred to the general revenue fund. Bill 10 will allow the heritage fund to retain all of its net income. Should all the income have been kept with the fund, we would be seeing close to $300 billion in the trust fund, Madam Speaker.

This bill will also amend the personal income tax act amendment act to enable changes to the charitable tax credit rate starting this year. Last year the hon. Member for Peace River tabled a private member's bill, which this Assembly passed, to change the provincial tax credit rate for the first $200 of donations from 10 per cent to 60 per cent. I applaud the member for taking the initiative to increase the tax credit to generous Albertans. It would also encourage Albertans to donate more. Bill 10 would enable the new charitable tax credit rate to come into effect retroactively on January 1, 2023.

Another highlight of this bill, Madam Speaker, is that it reduces the red tape to businesses, saving them around $7 million a year in mailing costs by giving businesses the ability to provide financial statements and other reporting documents with their shareholders electronically instead of by mail.

[The Speaker in the chair]

This bill also amends the Securities Act by reducing the ability of guilty companies to use the appeal process. Sometimes this process has been used to delay enforcement. These changes would free up both time and money so the Securities Commission can continue to do what they do the best, administrating the province's security loans, foster a fair and efficient capital market in Alberta, and protect investors through investigation and prosecutions of violations to the securities laws, rules, and regulations.

Credit unions are an important part of Alberta's financial services sector. Credit unions are an integral part of our communities. They're co-operative organizations that provide similar products and services as other financial institutions. These are owned and operated by its members. When it makes a profit, it shares it back with its members in the form of annual returns. In 2021, Mr. Speaker, about $84 million went back to credit union members. Bill 10 will provide them new opportunities to generate revenue and take advantage of more flexible regulations to support their operations. These changes will allow Alberta credit unions to provide financial services to residents of border communities and other new customers they cannot currently serve.

This bill also seeks to change the Horse Racing Alberta Act. We all know that horse racing plays an important role in Alberta's economy, as it brings significant economic benefit to Alberta's rural communities mostly. Thousands of Albertans and visitors attend horse racing events each year. In order to ensure this vibrant part of Alberta's economy thrives, Bill 10 will strengthen the leadership of Horse Racing Alberta by allowing more public and industry representation to manage daily operations. More representation means more ideas and opinions, which will have more robust and successful decisions and outcomes.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's government is committed to creating accessible and affordable postsecondary education, and Bill 10 will implement a 2 per cent cap on tuition increases for domestic students at the institutional level of public postsecondary institutions for 2024 and 2025 and future academic years. This will save students about $18 million annually. Albertans repaying student loans will see their payments drop by an average of $15 per month.

In addition to this, Budget 2023 provides more help to students receiving financial assistance as they repay their loans with an extension of the student loan grace period from six months to one year and an increase to the threshold for eligibility for the loan repayment assistance plan up to $40,000.

As we strive to create the right conditions for the agrifood sector to do business in Alberta, Bill 10 introduces changes to the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act and the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, that promote investment and increase our competitiveness globally. This includes the Alberta agriprocessing investment tax credit, which will provide a 12 per cent nonrefundable tax credit to eligible corporations that make a minimum capital investment of $10 million in value-added agriprocessing in Alberta. This new initiative, program will build on our current advantages and maximizes opportunities that help create more jobs for Albertans. This will ensure we have the most effective tool kit to land large-scale investments that will help grow our agrifood industry and diversify our economy.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, Bill 10 makes adoptions more affordable by investing $12 million more over three years in providing supplementary health benefits for children adopted from government care or through licensed adoption agencies. There's also $6,000 in grant funding for prospective adoptive parents making less than $180,000 a year and an increase of the provincial adoption expense tax credit to $18,210 to match the federal threshold in 2023. Building forever families shouldn't be a financial burden for Albertans yearning to adopt. New subsidies, higher tax credits, and other supports would make adoptions more feasible for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2023, as implemented by Bill 10, balances the priorities of Albertans in health care and education while ensuring the government lives within its means. This budget builds on Alberta's strong foundations and continues to position the province for further diversification and growth. Through this government's fiscal responsibility during the past four years supports and reliefs to Albertans during this time of high inflation are readily available without incurring debt.

Speaking of debt, Mr. Speaker, through this government's proper management of provincial finances we are now able to reduce and pay down the provincial debt, which was never done by the members opposite during their time in the government. The members opposite did the other way around. They accumulated more debt. Even during the past budgets of this government the members opposite asserted to spend more without regard to the debt that they have piled up. Their hike on the corporate tax to 12 per cent drove away job creators and billions of investment and did not result in more tax collections.

On the other side of the aisle, Mr. Speaker, we have planned to balance the budget from day one of assumption of the office, and it is a wise and thoughtful plan to eliminate the largest deficit in Alberta's history. When the previous government began the administration of the province, debt servicing was under $800 million a year. When they were expelled from the government, it was about $2.3 billion a year. As this government pays down the debt, we're able to use this debt-servicing amount on more valuable services that Albertans rely on, including health care, infrastructure, social programs, daycare, and education. This government has always aimed to have financial stability to ensure a greater and successful future for Alberta by growing the economy, creating good-paying jobs, strengthening health care and education, and keeping Alberta communities safe.

Alberta is continuously moving forward, Mr. Speaker, through the government's focused, responsible fiscal management, relentless pursuit of economic growth. It has put the province on a more sustainable fiscal trajectory, creating expanded financial capacity resulting in additional government revenues. The job-creating corporate tax cut implemented by this government is proving to be a more reasonable approach than the increasing of taxes imposed by the previous government. Through this approach it is estimated for the fiscal year 2023-2024 that there is about . . . [Mr. Singh's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: This concludes the time allotted for that member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre on Bill 10, second reading, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 10, offer some thoughts, and I'd like to begin, if you'll indulge me, with a bit of an analogy. You know, we've all been there at some point. We sign a new contract. Maybe it's with a new cellphone company. Maybe it's an Internet provider, maybe cable TV. A little less of that these days; most folks are streaming. But you sign that new contract. Maybe you were unhappy with your previous provider. You're excited. You got a new opportunity. So you sign up, new contract, and, hey, things are going pretty well. You're pretty happy with the service you're getting. Looks pretty good off the top. You might not be happy with everything about it, but, hey, you're willing to give them a chance.

[Mr. Hanson in the chair]

Well, time progresses, and as time progresses, you start to see your service degrade. Suddenly your download speed isn't what it used to be, or you're getting a lot of dropped calls, coming up with issues that are starting to get concerns. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, your fees start going up. Suddenly you're being asked to pay more while you're getting less. You're certainly not getting what you were promised when they sold you that contract, when they were looking to get you to sign up. And maybe this is something you can work out, so you want to get a hold of them to raise your concerns, but it's harder and harder to get a response. Your e-mails, when you send them in to your customer service representative, go unanswered, or they come back with boilerplate, just telling you: actually, we're doing a fine job; you just don't realize it. You know, you try to get through on the phone, and you spend hours and hours on hold, but you're not getting any response.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, as your frustration is mounting, suddenly you're getting all of this advertising from your service provider. They're sending you cards in the mail. They're calling you on the phone to ask if you want to upgrade your service package and telling you what a wonderful job they're doing. You're getting spammed on the Internet. They're all about telling you what a wonderful job they're doing for you even while, at the same time, you're trying to get through and let them know about your frustrations. But they're not interested in listening. Indeed, the kicker, the punch in the gut, is that they're using your money – the extra fees they charge you, the extra service bits, all of that – to tell you that what you're seeing in front of your eyes is, in fact, not actually real.

You know, every contract eventually comes to an end. Finally, you get that opportunity. You're a couple of months away, so you call in. You try to get hold of them to end that service contract. Maybe you spend a few hours on hold, get cut off a few times, have to call back in. You finally get through to that customer service representative to tell them that you are ready to end that contract, and you know what, Mr. Speaker? Suddenly out of the blue there are all kinds of incredible offers on the table. A few weeks out from when you're ready to end that contract, suddenly they're offering you discounts. They're offering you a special deal, better service. Maybe they're offering you a bit of a refund. They offer to lower your rates. Of course, it's just for the next few months. They'll go back up eventually, but they're offering you a few months' discount, anything they can do to get you to keep from cancelling that contract because suddenly, with that on the horizon, they want you to know how much they value you as a customer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is what we have with this government's Budget 2023. That is what we have in Bill 10, a government that has spent the last three years undermining every single service that Albertans depend on. The Minister of Finance, the Member for Calgary-East were just standing and bragging about their investments in education, their investments in health care after years of cuts, after laying off key people in the classroom, after driving doctors out of the province, making it harder for students to get the help they need, driving up numbers in the classroom, making it harder for Albertans to access care.

But now, when there's suddenly an election on the horizon, well, all of a sudden this government cares so deeply about ensuring that Albertans have access to these same services that they've spent years making it more difficult for them to get while driving up costs, having deindexed AISH and income supports and all these things, making it more difficult for people to actually afford the cost of living, for the most vulnerable in the province, and at the same time deindexing personal tax rates so every single Albertan paid more while getting less from this government. Now they want to stand and pat themselves on the back for suddenly riding to the rescue with a few extra dollars, thanks to the soaring price of oil, when they see there's an election on the horizon. They want to try to get Albertans to forget all of the damage this government has done over the last few years and, hey, sign on for another four.

Mr. Speaker, I think Albertans are smarter than that, certainly the ones I've spoken with, whether it's on the doors or at my office, through e-mail, on social media. They see through this government's charade.

What we have here is a government that is bent on using every tool in the box, scraping up every public dollar they can to try to sell themselves back to Albertans. Indeed, what we have here in Bill 10 is one fine example of that, section 9, which creates the Alberta fund: $1.4 billion of Albertans' tax dollars, $1.4 billion that was scraped out of the pockets of AISH recipients and folks on income support, folks receiving the Alberta seniors' benefit, $1.4 billion that was taken in additional income tax from Albertans in the midst of a pandemic and an affordability crisis, Mr. Speaker, $1.4 billion in services that families were denied when the kids needed support in school or when folks needed the access or that was scraped away from doctors, who were struggling to keep their clinics open in the midst of a pandemic, when this government refused to provide proper funding for virtual care.

[The Speaker in the chair]

That $1.4 billion that they squeezed out of Albertans they are awarding themselves now to use as a slush fund for the upcoming election. Shameless, Mr. Speaker. But, of course, this government has shown us so many times over the last few months that they really don't care about public dollars when it comes to their political interests. The fact that we have two-thirds of this government's caucus as either a minister or a parliamentary secretary, buying caucus loyalty with public dollars: the government is happy to do that. They're happy to take another $9 million in advertising to tell Albertans how wonderful they are for the affordability program that they scraped together at the last minute, that they have made incredibly difficult for most Albertans to actually access, and which will end shortly after the election. They are happy to take $1.4 billion to spend in the month of April, announcing who knows what but initiatives that they feel will perhaps maybe help them get re-elected, much as they like to stand up cardboard cut-outs of schools and point to them and say: "Hey, look at us. Wonderful. We're going to build something."

We went through that with the previous PC governments, empty fields with signs talking about how wonderful the government was. You know, that was entitlement and arrogance that this Premier spoke against, and rightfully so at that time, but that's forgotten now in the rush for power, the desperation ahead of an election, and the deep, deep desire to try to erase Albertans' memories of what they have suffered under this government for the last four years. Here in Bill 10 we have this $1.4 billion slush fund. We can only imagine what projects this government will suddenly decide are so incredibly important that it couldn't have been bothered to actually look at over the last three and a half years, how those projects will just happen to coincidentally be in seats where they are concerned that they might potentially lose.

Ms Hoffman: Almost certainly will lose.

Mr. Shepherd: We're certainly going to work as hard as we can to ensure they do, Mr. Speaker.

The fact is that it shows, I guess, how afraid and desperate this government is, knowing what their record is in front of Albertans, knowing what it is that Albertans have seen. Indeed, I'm sure that they are hearing about it when they're out on the doors, Mr. Speaker, or when they're reading the inbox at their constituency office or in the minister's office or certainly that we continue in our role as the Official Opposition to bring into this House and share with them every day. What we have here, again, is a government that is going to use Albertans' own tax dollars to try to buy support.

We have seen clearly what the realities have been under this government. They talk about fiscal responsibility, the Member for Calgary-East, a fiscal framework to secure Albertans' future, removing the burdens for future generations to pay a debt they did not incur. Albertans now and in future generations are going to pay for the damage this government has done to our health care system, I say more damage than any previous government has ever done to our public health care system before, driving doctors out of practice and out of province, leaving entire communities in this province right now where there is not a single family doctor accepting new patients, leaving Albertans in a position where health care workers – Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. They are still in a state of crisis. They are exhausted. They are demoralized.

Under this government, because of their financial decisions, which they are doubling down on in Bill 10, which they are bragging about in this House today, health care workers are still being mandated, forced to take on extra hours despite their exhaustion, despite the toll on their mental health, their physical health, their families and relationships.

On the eve of an election, much as this government in Bill 10 is awarding themselves this $1.4 billion slush fund to try to cover over their mistakes, they are also, within the health care system, mandating health care workers to try to cover over their damage, to try to juice the numbers so they can brag about their fixer, Dr. Cowell, having fixed the health care system in a mere three months. But the fact is that nurses on the front lines are being burned out. They are choosing to quit, Mr. Speaker. They are leaving their jobs because they have a government that is tone deaf and refusing to listen and is putting their political priorities and their desperation ahead of an election ahead of the actual good of those health care workers and the Albertans that are in desperate need of care.

We see that, Mr. Speaker, as the Health minister stood in this House and admitted that they are mandating anaesthesiologists from public hospitals in Calgary to go and work in chartered surgical facilities, because this government is interested in juicing the numbers on hips and knees to have a bragging point and a talking point ahead of the next election rather than actually looking at the proper functioning and good of the health care system as a whole. And that is what this Minister of Finance, the Member for Calgary-East stands and brags about as being fiscal responsibility. The fact is that they are creating a debt that will be borne by the next generation.

That's just in health care. Let's talk about schools, Mr. Speaker. How many students were not able to access the support for special needs because of this government's cuts and changes to PUF funding? How many families are further behind? How many of those students are going to struggle? What is the debt that they are going to bear because of this government's cuts and decisions? The fact is that debt is not just measured in dollars and cents; it is measured on the social impacts. And, on that, this government's record is unconscionable.

But, Mr. Speaker, that doesn't seem to matter, not to this Premier, not to this government, as long as they are able to provide the rewards that are needed to their friends, as long as they are able to cherry-pick those particular statistics, as my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View spoke about earlier, to try to make things look good as they try to sell themselves back and get Albertans to sign on for another four years. In their desperation they can throw everything they've got against the wall. They can blow millions, $1.4 billion of taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. Schow: Sounds like your campaign.

Mr. Shepherd: But Albertans are smarter. They're smarter than this government and the Member for Cardston-Siksika, as he heckles. They see through it, and they know the truth. And we'll see who signs a new contract on May 29.

The Speaker: Hon. members, second reading of Bill 10. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows has risen.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House to add comments to Bill 10, Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, on behalf of my constituents. When I say "on behalf of my constituents," I really mean it. A lot of feedback around these issues on a daily basis is from my constituents, from my communities, and communities from around the ridings. There's much evidence, like what people wanted, what people suffered through. There's not really a lot of room for debate. It's sad to see that instead of, you know, looking at that feedback of Albertans going through the crisis and facing challenges, coming up with solutions – and eventually we're discussing this Bill 10 in the House.

The government wants – I don't know if I can call it unprecedented but unethical, I would say – the amount of money that in two months before the election they can use these funds, the public money, to make their image better so they can buy the votes from those many Albertans that they have upset in the last four years.

Every single day I get calls, people who walk into my office, and, of course, people on their doorsteps. Why are they worried? They're asking me, like: what are you going to do with the insurance premiums? This government has jacked them up about maybe 30 to 38 per cent, on average, but in some instances the premiums went up 40 to 45 per cent. The worst part of this is that the government, I heard, approved another increase in the premiums after their fake premium cap. People in my riding are very concerned.

People are asking about, in my riding and my neighbour ridings – they wanted to say what this government could have done to relieve the growing pressure on the Grey Nuns hospital. There was a project already going ahead, that was approved, for another hospital in the southwest. That was halted under this government. Not only this; in the last few years the whole world went through the very unprecedented, challenging time of the COVID pandemic. It's senseless to see, and it's very painful to describe, and that was the time when this UCP government failed to spend or account for where they – I don't know. What did they do with the $4 billion? They initiated the fight with doctors and nurses.

I met with a very brilliant young registered nurse. I just wanted to share the story. She was changing her career selection. What the heck? Like, why? She said: "It's not bearable what we're going through. Overtime, the N95 equipment and this, and at end of the day the treatment we get. I can't bear it. I'm quitting it." And the feedback from doctors.

I had a constituent come into my office loaded with information that she is not happy with. Her children are going to school and, you know – I try to keep my office as much as possible nonpolitical, being their representative, being very polite and nice. She was saying, "Oh, you don't have to" – like, I got a reply before I said anything. "Oh, no, no, no; you don't have to explain anything. I already know what's going on. My child lost PUF funding already. I know it's not your fault. What I want is for you to be aware of what we are going through. I want you to take these voices to the House. We want to be represented."

The affordability crisis: a mere help, a mere and disappearing help, I would say. The Alberta fuel tax: a little help that will disappear right after the election. People are concerned. It's not only me. It's not only the constituents and the people from the communities that come forward and tell me their stories, their struggles with price gouging in the stores. Interestingly, I would tell the House that you can easily go to the UCP candidates in these ridings on their social media platforms, and these are exactly the questions they are facing.

They're feeling kind of, you know, helpless to answer those questions. It's very funny. Like, I have seen the candidate kind of diverting himself into the NDP platform, you know, as if this is his own, to kind of face the questions from the media, from the people. At least, you could get feedback from those people and help them, get into the communities with answers they could have, but you don't.

I know all my colleagues and myself many times in the House have brought forward this feedback of the pain and the challenges, the utility prices costing my constituents and Albertans. Growing prices: insurance is one of those. I met with a taxi company two weeks ago. They said that these changes have brought $1.3 million in extra cost to that small cab company in Edmonton. They've been struggling. They're trying. They will try this year, and they might lose next year. They might not be able to keep up with all the challenges they are facing.

I do know that I cannot imagine, you know, UCP MLAs or the ministers, that those people would not approach them. I can't think – but I don't know where that feedback goes. When I've seen for the past four years, during all those challenges, that none of the UCP MLAs actually stood up and shared these views and these concerns, I don't know if it's that Albertans are telling it to the Alberta opposition NDP only or because they don't have hope from this UCP government going forward.

That's why there's this bill we're discussing in this House, because the Premier and the cabinet know what they're facing practically on the ground. They have planned to buy votes, to bring this bill in so they can, you know, change their image. But that's not what we're here for.

We are the 87 privileged out of a population of 4 million in this province, and we promise our constituents and Albertans when we get elected: we will represent your voices, and we will take your issues back to the House. We will discuss in our caucus, we will discuss with our colleagues, and we will discuss this in the House with all the members.

But one after another, a $4.7 billion investment, the government in those four years could not tie even one job directly. You know, none of the ministers could stand up and say: oh, this is the job because of that; this is the investment because of this. The Energy minister then in the media accepted that they needed to look at it. Like, why is it not working? But did the government look back? No. They didn't. They came up with another plan, a $1.43 billion giveaway, a bet, a risk on the election in the U.S., on Trump's election. The timing is very suspicious, when the money was handed over. I think Trump had already lost the election before the money was being transferred.

What we hear from our constituents are the problems that people are facing of houselessness, affordable housing. We have seen the way the government treated municipalities. Now they are discussing also another way. Like, they are trying to fix their own mistakes close to their term. I don't know how much that will do to help those municipalities and the people who are upset with those decisions, because we will not have enough time to, you know, reverse those changes and damages and harms that that bill has done. So out of, like, hundreds of millions of dollars of investment proposals to eliminate or address houselessness, affordable housing, the city of Edmonton was promised $5,000 from this government, and my councillor tells me that finally they got that cheque two weeks ago, after one year.

This is the kind of help this government is giving to the people. That's the kind of feedback I'm hearing from my constituents. You know, I had better, actually, expectations from this government, that after four years they would have learned something. They had their opportunity with the growing prices of energy, oil, a windfall of money, but they wasted the opportunity by handing, again, $20 billion to their corporate friends to deal with the responsibility they already had in the contract. It is sad to see that this is how the UCP government is dealing with public money, handing it over to multinational corporations and transferring all kinds of burdens to ordinary Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, with this, I conclude my remarks. I'm sad to see that the government is moving in this direction. I know my colleagues will definitely oppose this bill. I will look forward if any other UCP MLA, government member, can come up with the feedback they get from their constituents and stand up in this House and share that feedback and their views on this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, today I'd like to address Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. The purpose of this bill really is to help build fiscal stability, attract investment, support children and families, cut more red tape, improve provincial funding mechanisms, and make life more affordable for students. Fiscal responsibility really requires that we build a prosperous and a sustainable future. Bill 10 proposes amendments that would legislate a fiscal framework to secure that sustainability. The proposed framework would require that the government use any surpluses to, first, pay down debt and, secondly, to save for the future. This framework will ensure fiscal stability for all Albertans as we move forward.

Bill 10 also proposes amendments to the Personal Income Tax Act to enable changes to the charitable tax credit rate, starting this year, actually, retroactively. The rate will change from 10 per cent to 60 per cent on donations under $200. This is really to encourage support for those organizations in our province that do such great work, that make such a great contribution to our society generally, and that do everything that makes us a great place to live. It will actually be retroactive to January.

The government is also making changes to cut red tape for publicly listed corporations, saving them roughly $7 million a year in mailing costs, if you can believe it, giving them the ability to provide financial and other shareholder reporting documents electronically instead of by mail. This happens across the country pretty much everywhere already anyway.

Changes to the Securities Act will reduce the ability of bad actors to use the appeal process to endlessly delay enforcement. Quite frankly, it'll free up both time and money for the Securities Commission so that they can do what they do best, which is investigate and prosecute violations under the securities laws and rules and regulations.

Credit unions are an important part of Alberta's financial services sector. Changes proposed by Bill 10 will provide them with new opportunities to generate revenue, take advantage of regulations that will support their operations. It'll allow credit unions to provide financial services to residents of border communities and other new customers that they cannot currently serve, again providing sustainability for them.

Horse racing plays an essential role in Alberta's economy, particularly providing benefits to rural communities. To ensure this vibrant part of Alberta's economy thrives, our government is proposing to strengthen the leadership of Horse Racing Alberta by allowing more public and industry representation in the management of its daily operations.

We are committed also to making postsecondary education more affordable. To improve that, the government will implement a 2 per cent cap on tuition for domestic students, and hopefully that will help them as they move forward.

Bill 10 proposes the Alberta agriprocessing investment tax credit, a 12 per cent nonrefundable tax credit for eligible corporations that make a minimum capital investment of $10 million. The goal here, really, is to ensure that we have the most effective tool kit in order to land large-scale investments that will help grow our agrifood industries.

Building forever families through adoption is a noble pursuit, so we are introducing the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act changes. These bills will provide higher tax credits and other supports that will make adoption more feasible for Albertans by easing some of the financial burden of adoption. We really hope to encourage more families to open their hearts and their homes to children in need of loving families, because we believe that every child deserves a stable and nurturing environment, and these changes will help make that a reality for them.

We're introducing the Local Government Fiscal Framework Act, which addresses long-standing concerns by municipalities regarding predictable and sustainable funding. It will provide that to them. As was announced this morning at the RMA, it will tie future municipal funding levels more closely to provincial revenues – actually, at 100 per cent, at RMA request – and it will help address the concerns that have been raised for many years by municipalities as we move forward.

Bill 10 also aims to secure Alberta's future by addressing some of the most urgent needs of families, students, and municipalities throughout the province. The proposed amendments in this bill, if implemented, will provide that fiscal stability and ensure that business investment continues to be preferential to Alberta, thus making life more affordable for Albertans.

One last thing: the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act will be strengthened under Bill 10. Currently legislation requires that a portion of the heritage fund net income be kept for protection against inflation only, but everything else over the last few years or the last quite a few years, actually, has been required to be transferred to the general revenue fund. Now, with the proposed amendments, the heritage fund will retain all of its net income.

This is extremely important because if you compare the heritage trust fund from 1983 to now on a per capita basis, it's actually only worth per capita about one-third of what it was in 1983 because we have continually either not made contributions to the fund or we have siphoned them off for general revenue, and of course the population has increased. The per capita value of the fund has significantly decreased from about $12,000 per Albertan down to just over $4,000 per Albertan.

These are some of the changes that we've made, great changes for Alberta. I encourage everyone to vote for the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Well, slightly disappointed, because I was quite surprised to see another UCP member stand up there. I was ready with my 15-minute speech, but I will have to condense my 15 minutes into six, which I can probably do. You know, it is an honour to rise . . . [interjections] I don't know why I'm already getting heckled. I've literally just begun. But perhaps the member who continues to heckle, who never does join debate, might like to do so.

I stand here speaking to Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. I must get it on the record, you know – and I've shared this before, especially in the previous session – that it is certainly disappointing that at a time when this government has an opportunity to really do some transformational work, instead we see a lot of cleanup bills, administration, statutes, a bunch of things sort of addressed in a bit of an omnibus. This one is not as much of an omnibus, but I think back to the comments from my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View, who envisioned a world in which perhaps this government would invest in affordable housing – right? – as an example, something that truly would be transformational for my constituents and constituents across the province. [interjections] Again, I'm fully getting heckled. If the Member for Calgary-Klein would like to join debate on this, I would sure love to hear from him as well.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: On affordable housing?

Member Irwin: Well, please do join, then.

You know, health care, public education, housing, all of these things – the list certainly goes on. Instead, a whole lot of not much.

It is, of course, I would say, one of the least robust legislative agendas that we've seen, but from a Premier without a mandate I do get it. I understand why we end up with bills like this one. But I digress.

On this bill, I think I do need to get on the record that one of my most grave concerns about this bill is the slush fund. The slush fund: $1.4 billion – $1.4 billion – as a campaign slush fund to really, really buy votes. I mean, as we've heard – we talked about this in question period today – you know, I'm not sure that that Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, the Premier, would like this, at least not the her of 10 years ago. The her of 10 years ago? You know what I'm saying. I can't say her name, so that makes it complicated.

When we look to that member's own words from just a decade ago, she was so against using taxpayers' dollars for any sort of partisan purposes. In fact, quote, you should not be able to use taxpayer dollars for blatant partisan advertising in advance of an election. And, of course, we know, fast-forwarding to right now, the current day, 2023, she's putting $9 million of Albertans' tax dollars towards pre-election communications, and we see in Bill 10 ahead of us $1.4 billion for a campaign slush fund. Quite alarming.

This fund – and I've been really, really blown away by the discourse here from my colleagues on this side of the House prior, especially the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, Edmonton-City Centre, well, all of them. I don't want to put anybody on the spot; they all did a great job just outlining how incredibly alarming this slush fund is. The fine print on this fund allows the UCP to spend the projected surplus for re-election before the bills come at the end of the fiscal year. As my colleague the Member for Lethbridge-West put it – she said: that's bad fiscal management, and it's exactly how you squander a resource boom. We all know in this House the past saying around squandering a resource boom. I can't say it in this Chamber. But, as has been noted, none of this should come as a surprise to anybody in this Chamber and, in fact, outside of it. The people we meet door-knocking all over the province: they're bringing these things up.

This is the same government that gambled away $1.3 billion for Trump's re-election, the same government that couldn't account for $4 billion when it came to COVID spending, and we know they had – what? – nearly $2 billion in accounting errors the first year in office. Well, it doesn't end there. It doesn't end there. This is the same UCP government that plans to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on a provincial police force, a provincial police force, might I add, that Albertans aren't asking for. Oh. Attack Alberta's CPP? Yeah. Again, something that Albertans aren't asking for. They want their retirement security protected.

One more thing – I'd better add this one for good measure – the $20 billion that this Premier hopes to give away to, you know, her corporate buddies to clean up the messes that they're already legally obligated to clean up.

With all of this – all of this – the UCP has clearly already cost Albertans billions of dollars . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(1)(c) the House stands adjourned until this evening at 7:30.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9

Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

[Adjourned debate: Ms Hoffman]

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton–Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to speak to Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. I can tell you that this bill is less about red tape reduction and more about fixing the UCP errors. This is another piece of legislation that shows this government pushing ill-informed ideas, and it doesn't have the data to back that up.

When we're looking at this legislation – and I think I've said this to every piece of legislation that the red tape reduction ministry has entered – it just seems a little bit ridiculous that we have a minister assigned to something that every ministry should be responsible for doing. This is a piece of legislation that impacts agriculture and forestry, Municipal Affairs, multiculturalism, labour and immigration, service Alberta, seniors and housing, community and social services, red tape reduction, Infrastructure, Culture, and Justice.

Now, I've been through the legislation, and it's quite significant. There are areas of this legislation that do not have concerns, but, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the WCB portion of this legislation, we've watched in this House over and over as our incredible critic has brought up retroactive pay for firefighters. Now, this piece of legislation could have been an opportunity for this government to honour the heroes that so valiantly fought in the Fort McMurray wildfires. They could have gone back and introduced retroactive coverage, but they didn't.

I can say that on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, we will always have the backs of our front-line heroes.

Mr. Nally: You had three years, and you did nothing for them.

Ms Goehring: We are very concerned that the minister responsible has got up in the House and talked rhetoric and talked about not anything related to retroactive pay. But what he hasn't committed to is providing that presumptive coverage that is retroactive, which is really concerning.

I was a member in the Legislature during the Fort McMurray fires.

Mr. Nally: That did nothing.

Ms Goehring: I had friends that fought in the fire, that had businesses there, that were working alongside so many front-line workers, desperate to keep homes, desperate to keep property. Then hearing the incredibly devastating stories of so many that fled the wildfires, and then to not honour and support those that stayed and fought the fires is unimaginable, Mr. Speaker. When we've continued to bring forward that this should be covered and it's not being acknowledged – and it's certainly not in this legislation – it is concerning.

Now, it has one minister responsible, the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction. I'm just curious. How much consultation happened with the other ministries that I named and with all of those that are impacted? Because when you're dealing with that many ministries, Mr. Speaker, putting forward a piece of legislation, that's a lot of consulting that needs to happen. I would love to hear from the member who's been chirping about what kind of consultation he had. Was it him who decided to say no to the Fort McMurray firefighters? Was it the minister responsible that said no? I'm just curious, when it comes to consulting, who said no, and why, when we've asked repeatedly for this coverage to be retroactive, this government hasn't done it. I really hope that when it comes time to hear from the members of government, we can hear some of the reasons why they've said no to the Fort McMurray wildfire heroes.

When it comes to this piece of legislation, there's another piece in here that's a bit concerning, and it's regarding income and employment supports. Now, what they're introducing, Mr. Speaker, is the ability to deny someone income support that has warrants. That gives an incredible disadvantage to people that may not know they have warrants, may have warrants so old that they thought they had been resolved, and now they're in a place where they can't access income support. That is very, very concerning. I can speak to a few people that I'm aware of who have struggled with mental health and addiction, who have received warrants for different instances, and I can tell you that with three of the cases that I'm thinking of, they're related to someone who has failed to appear in court. They're not for horrific crimes. When people are served and they fail to appear, a warrant is issued.

Now, when you're struggling, you don't have a home, when you're struggling with addictions because you can't access the adequate supports and services, I can tell you that getting to court is really difficult. Having these individuals come forward, connect with a support worker who can get them their ID, help them get on to income support and then have them denied because they have an outstanding warrant – to be clear, Mr. Speaker, a lot of those warrants are issued when someone fails to appear in court. They haven't been convicted, so to put this barrier to those on income and employment supports is a major, major concern.

This government will tell you that the reason is because it's regarding dangerous offenders, but that's not what this legislation does. It doesn't discriminate. It says: warrants. Period. There are so many individuals who have come in contact with the justice system, who have faced barrier after barrier after barrier and now are at a place to find support. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes it can take years for an individual to be able to have the capacity to reach out and connect with someone who can get them to the steps of income support. Once they're at that phase, you have this person who's able now, in a position, to apply for income support, and then to have them denied because of an outstanding warrant is ludicrous. It's going to be another barrier that for some is going to absolutely prevent them from progress and stability.

Now, the other thing that is concerning with this is that it will allow the minister to divulge information to assist in locating the individual. This gives the minister the authority to release private information of someone who has a warrant. Now, again, there's no definition of what that warrant needs to be for. It could be someone who failed to appear in court. That is very, very concerning and a significant overreach when it comes to people who have warrants looming. We should be providing supports and opportunities for individuals to access supports, not creating a space where this government is creating more and more barriers and closing doors to those that need actual support and are entitled to support.

There's a pattern that we see with this government. They talk about wanting to help and they talk about wanting to go through and reduce red tape, but at what cost? I fail to see how this is a red tape reduction. [interjection] Now the minister is chirping again, and I would welcome him when it's his time to speak to stand and share your views in this Chamber.

You know, it's concerning when so many individuals are reaching out asking for ways that they can access supports for their loved ones, trying to find a landlord that will rent to them because they've been unhoused for years and have no formal reference. Now, what would that look like, Mr. Speaker, if not only do they not have a formal reference but they don't have income support? This is another barrier that is creating more and more trauma to individuals instead of reducing red tape, as this bill suggests.

There's an incredible number of individuals in the province that are in a place where they need income support, and as a social worker I've worked with so many who are doing it because they simply need support. People that are accessing income support – it helps Albertans accessing food, shelter, personal items, medical, other benefits that are absolutely essential to their health and well-being. And this minister has put in that someone with a warrant, regardless of what that warrant is for, can be denied. That, to me, just doesn't make sense, Mr. Speaker.

I know that – I would love to hear from the minister responsible for Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction, not to talk about the key messaging that he's been told he should say and all about the things that red tape is going to do but talk about the human side and the human impact that these decisions and this legislation are making. How does he answer to those Fort McMurray firefighters? I would love to hear that. Talk to Albertans who are paying attention, watching what this government has done, turned their back on Albertans over and over and then put forward a piece of legislation that they all get up and praise each other over.

That's just two of the ministries in this omnibus legislation that have a direct impact on Albertans, people that are vulnerable and struggling and our Fort McMurray wildfire heroes. I would encourage, instead of chirping on the sidelines, to have him stand up in this Chamber and speak to the legislation and speak to the questions that this side of the House are asking on behalf of Albertans. It's something that I think they need to answer to. It's simply bad policy, Mr. Speaker.

It's not going to have an impact or deter people from committing crimes, if that's what they're going to stand up and talk about. It's not going to reduce crime. It's not going to do any of those things. It's simply going to create another barrier for an individual struggling to get ahead, to get those vital supports that I talked about like housing and food.

This winter I had a very dear friend whose brother and his significant other had been unhoused for about two and a half years. They both struggle with addictions, both from a car accident where they were prescribed medication, and both were living rough. They would try to access supports, try to access shelters, but there were so many barriers. Then they tried to access safe consumption sites, and again significant barriers. When it came time for them to find housing, they really struggled. I can tell you that this piece of legislation does absolutely nothing to help those individuals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Assembly is Bill 9. The hon. the Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening intently as the member opposite was sharing her thoughts on this legislation, especially as it relates to the part of the legislation that deals with income supports for those folks who have been accused of a prescribed offence. That is some language that she neglected to refer to. She was so materially inaccurate in her assertion about what this bill will do that I just felt compelled to stand up and correct the record.

For those watching at home, what is this about? At the end of the day, this is about dangerous offenders. Mr. Speaker, our government cares deeply about protecting our communities, protecting Albertans, and ensuring that our communities are safe. I think that is in keeping with what all Albertans want to see from their government.

Mr. Speaker, as the member well knows, there is a time and a place to put something in legislation and a time and a place to put something in regulation. This legislation very clearly states that this restriction on access to income supports will only apply to those folks who are accused of a prescribed offence, and we have made it very clear that our intention is to in regulation clarify that that is going to be for dangerous offenders. The members opposite are trying to make it sound like every person who has ever had a minor brush-up with the law is all of a sudden going to lose access to income support. Nothing could be further from the truth.

This legislation is designed to protect Albertans from the most dangerous offenders. Mr. Speaker, we have a track record of making great progress in that regard. Many in this House will remember when we brought forward legislation to ensure that dangerous offenders and sex offenders could never change their names in Alberta and hide from their past and hide in our communities. Those were two very concrete steps that we took to make our communities safer. Well, I am proud of the work that the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction is taking to go even one step further, which is to make sure that those dangerous offenders in Alberta who are hiding from law enforcement cannot rely on income support to make it easier to hide in our communities and to avoid justice.

Mr. Speaker, I believe firmly that Albertans want justice and that they want safe communities, and this change in legislation, followed by the accompanying regulatory work that will follow it, will in fact make our communities safer. I can say that in good conscience, and I know that the constituents in my community will sleep better at night knowing that this is in place.

What the members opposite are doing is classic fearmongering. They apparently can think of nothing better to do than to scare Albertans with things that are not even accurate, and they don't care about the harm that those allegations they make might cause. They don't care about the fact that people will be afraid of the things that they are saying even though those things are not accurate, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I felt so compelled to stand up and to correct the record and to explain what exactly it is that this legislation will do and why our government feels so compelled to act on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day, this is about protecting Albertans, keeping our communities safe, protecting Alberta families. The members opposite should be ashamed of themselves for the way in which they have mischaracterized what this will do.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very happy to get up and address this bill, particularly after the statement we've just heard from the minister across, because what we just heard from the minister is wholly inaccurate. I will take the time to talk about why it is that we're really concerned about this.

You know, with these omnibus bills there's always a problem.

There are so many different things that are being put forward here that inevitably, of course, I support a variety of them. They're just minor changes, or they're decent changes that come from experience, and I support that kind of thing. But somehow the Conservatives always manage to find a way to slip in a poison pill, which just makes it impossible for me to support the bill overall, and this is it for me. This piece of the Income and Employment Supports Act is one that I just really cannot support, and I want to take people to a place so that they can understand a little bit about why it is that we are concerned in spite of what the minister said, and I'll go on to talk about why the minister is essentially wrong about what they have indicated.

What is happening in this particular bill, in this particular section, is essentially the criminalization of poverty. Many people in this House will know about the book written by Victor Hugo in 1862 called Les Misérables, and many people will know it, of course, through the Broadway play Les Mis, in which a man who is trying to feed his sister's six starving children steals a loaf of bread and is sentenced to jail for five years, ultimately spends 20 years, and is pursued even after by the police. The whole point of the writing of this novel by Victor Hugo over 160 years ago was to say that we cannot criminalize poverty, that it is an injustice, and that whenever somebody commits an offence, we must endeavour to right the wrongs, to invite that person back into civil society and give them the wherewithal and the abilities to integrate back into the society we want with the skills and the resources necessary to become a successful member of society. A hundred and sixty years ago it was identified that this was an injustice, to punish people continually for an offence, and that's essentially what this section of the bill does.

Now, I know the minister gets up and says: oh, this isn't going to be used on everybody. No. Nothing is used on everybody. And he says: you know, don't worry about it; it'll come out when we do the regulations, and that's when we'll talk about what those prescribed offences are. Our point is that he had the choice. He could have put in this bill what the prescribed offences are that this will be used against, and he chose not to do that. It would have been no problem at all to say: those people convicted of violent offences. It would have been no problem at all to say, "It is people that have used a weapon in their offences" or any number of other descriptors. They're all possible. It's quite easy to define terms in a bill like this. They chose not to do that because it allows them to stand up in the House and say, "We don't mean that" when, in fact, their intention is to do exactly that later on.

That's what we see here. We see that this is a bill that can be used against people that simply did not have the money to either pay their fines, which results in a warrant, or failed to attend court, which, again, results in a warrant. Both of those situations are situations that are extremely related to the issue of poverty, people that simply do not have the resources to arrive at court, people that simply do not have the money to pay their fines that they have.

I know, in working closely with the Indigenous community, that they're very concerned about these kinds of provisions, because whenever you put these kinds of provisions in, inevitably they're used against Indigenous people at a much greater rate than they are used against non-Indigenous people. They're very concerned about this, and this is why I say that this is a poison pill, and this is why I cannot support this. What they're saying is that you just opened a great, big, wide open door to go after poor Indigenous people.

Now, I heard the minister. The minister said that that's fearmongering. But I'm telling you that members of the Indigenous community are telling me that they are afraid, and I'm reporting that here in the House. They're afraid that, like so many other provisions that have happened in our legislation over the last 100-plus years, it is really legislation that is designed to go after their community.

They remind me that this government brought in what was known as Bill 1, which was the infrastructure protection act, which was to say that you weren't allowed to protest on public property such as Alberta highways. Then all of a sudden the Coutts border crossing happened. Did they use it against all those White folks down there? No, they did not. So the Indigenous community says: ah, what we're seeing here is a bill that was designed to pretend to look at protecting the people of the province of Alberta but was not used against one group of people but certainly was designed to be used against others. They say that they know within their community that that bill was designed to prevent Indigenous people from protesting when they want to protest infrastructure.

They say: here it is again. Here we have another situation where we're going to see a differential application, because the minister failed in his job to define in this act what a prescribed offence was. Now we're in the same position where Indigenous people across this province are saying: we are going to see this used repeatedly against Indigenous people who are living in poverty because they simply cannot afford to either attend court – they can't afford the cost of coming down from northern Alberta into Edmonton in order to arrive in court on time, and therefore they get a warrant against them for failure to appear – or people who just simply cannot afford to pay their fines. They know this is going to happen.

I just want to take us back to Victor Hugo. This is 160 years ago that in civil society we defined the notion that you should not criminalize poverty, that instead we need to use these opportunities to try to invite people back into the good society that we are trying to create for all citizens. That's what we should be doing. Instead, this government creates yet another bill where its tone is one of the retribution model, and that is that we create laws in order to punish those people who we don't like, those people who somehow make us feel uncomfortable, those people who somehow have violated our sense of what we'd like to have happen in society, without any understanding about why they committed those offences, why they do those things that make us feel uncomfortable, and how we can actually change the way we engage with those people so that they become part of society in a successful way, a justice-based model that Victor Hugo 160 years ago was asking for. It tells you how far back this government's thinking is. It's more than 160 years old. We've seen this time and time again, this notion that this government doesn't understand what it's like to come from a background of poverty, a background of trauma.

I can tell you that the Indigenous people certainly had that experience and tell me all the time that they know from that experience that they are going to have a disproportionate number of people to whom this legislation applies, and they think that that is just a continuation of the colonialist oppression that they've experienced over all the years that Canada has been in existence. They've asked us to take the time to stop and consult with them and say: is this going to be used in a way that is going to be terrible for your community, and if it is, then how do we go about changing it so it doesn't do that?

But no consultation has happened with the Indigenous community. I don't think this minister can give me a single example of going to one of the treaty organizations and saying: "We're going to slip this into the bill. Can the treaty organization tell me what they think about this section of the bill? And what are the concerns? How might we address those concerns before we actually write the bill so that it doesn't have a differential effect on Indigenous people?" They didn't do that. They failed to do their work. They failed to define it properly in the bill. Now they've set themselves up so that I have no choice but to vote against this bill.

I absolutely do not believe in the criminalization of poverty. I do believe that more Indigenous people are in jail because of the history of the treatment of Indigenous people, not because of bad choices by individuals. It's the legacy of trauma, it's the legacy of poverty, it's the legacy of violence that has resulted in the situation where a lot of Indigenous people have indeed broken the law. They've broken the law because they had few options. They've broken the law because they had few resources. They've broken the law because they had so much trauma that they could not come to the place where they could make the decisions we would hope all Albertans would be able to make. And now we're going to punish them for that. We're going to punish them for acting out the legacy of the history of colonization and traumatic oppression that the Indigenous people have experienced here in this province.

Again, the same thing that we have argued time and time again in this House: if you simply go out and you have a consultation and you want to do this kind of thing, can you not work with the Indigenous community to actually look at: how can we make sure we can write this in such a way that it actually won't become a weapon against the Indigenous community?

Now, many in the Indigenous community will admit that there's a higher rate of acts such as violence perpetrated by Indigenous people than other people in the province, but they say that there's a reason why that is. What we should be doing is creating legislation that addresses that underlying reason, and if you do that, if you actually go after what's the cause of the trauma – how do the people respond to trauma? How do we get them to get to a place where they're no longer responding in this negative kind of way? Even if they admit, "Yeah, there are probably more Indigenous people that have committed certain types of violence than other groups of people," it's still not okay because of why they committed that violence.

Even if you say, "Oh, we're only going to use this in specific cases," I can guarantee you now, if you keep any race-based data on who this is used against, you're going to see an overrepresentation of Indigenous people, which is, again, why we on this side of the House asked for the collection of race-based data by this government. Again this government refused to do that, refused our bill that would have the police collect race-based data so we could see if indeed this kind of legislation ended up being imposed against Indigenous people in a disproportionate way. And I can absolutely guarantee you that it is going to be, and I can absolutely guarantee that the Indigenous people will feel it is yet another continuation of the colonization that they've experienced in this country for many years.

So I cannot in good faith support this bill even though there are other things in this bill that I'd be happy to have happen. I wish they would stop putting together these bills, this thing they've learned from the Americans, that put all these disconnected things together so that you can't oppose one piece without opposing the whole bill. Unfortunately, I'm in that position.

In my last minute I also want to say that I'm very disappointed on their stance with regard to the WCB. Their argument has simply been that it has not been a major issue because there have not been that many firefighters that have died so far, and they often cite the number of one. And my position is always: are you telling me that you agree with the principle but it hasn't affected enough people yet for you to care? I want to know: how many people have to die before you care? What's the number? Give me the number. It's not one, apparently. It's going to be more.

It's not a future-, forward-looking piece of legislation. It's saying that in the past it wouldn't have had that much effect. It certainly would have had an effect on that family, and it would have had an effect on all the other ones that right now are struggling through the process of working with a very difficult red tape process at WCB in order to get their benefits appropriately forwarded to them. I wish this government would take the chance to say: look, we don't want people to be in that place, so we'll create the legislation to actually make it possible. We know they did it in Ontario, so they can certainly do it here.

Mr. Speaker, I've been very concerned about the approach this government has taken to the people of Alberta and the very deep lack of compassion for the experiences they have and the lack of desire to create structures that invite people to the greatest level of success and fulfillment of their desires as citizens of this province. I certainly wish they would change, and I am going to oppose this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. the Deputy Premier, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to proposed changes in Bill 9, specifically the proposed changes to the Public Works Act. Working with the Ministry of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction, Alberta Infrastructure has proposed an amendment to the Public Works Act that will expedite regulations and allow our government to respond to changes more quickly and more straightforwardly. We are actively listening to our industry partners, and we have heard their feedback. It's time for an update of the Public Works Act, which hasn't been updated since 2010. A lot has changed since 2010, including technology and process improvements within the construction industry. We also need to be agile and able to change with the times.

Section 34 of the Public Works Act currently states, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations respecting any matters that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable to carry out effectively the intent and purpose of this Act." Essentially, what that means is that we currently need to adopt or amend a Public Works Act regulation; an order in council is required, or, in different language, an order passed by cabinet. That can be a long process, especially when the whole purpose of amending a regulation is to provide clarity and streamline regulatory requirements. In the proposed change outlined in this legislation, the regulation-making authority will be updated from the Lieutenant Governor in Council to the minister responsible for the Public Works Act. It's a simple change. The proposed amendments to the act will make the government's regulation-making process faster and more agile. Any future changes to the act will be done in consultation with other ministries and partner organizations that would be impacted.

We're also working with the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction, who's leading the consultation, on extending the rules of prompt payment to government of Alberta projects. To be clear, the proposed changes in Bill 9 do not consider any changes to the Prompt Payment and Construction Lien Act, but Alberta Infrastructure will continue to work with partner ministries as well as organizations and stakeholders within the industry to explore further opportunities to reduce red tape and streamline government processes. The change we are making here is in direct consultation with and in the best interests of our industry partners.

Over my past six months or so in this chair as Minister of Infrastructure I have been all across the province meeting with our construction industry partners, anything from a quick coffee chat to formal AGM events. I've heard loud and clear from industry that we cannot lead with government fixes and procedural corrections only. We need to foster and build relationships with our key partners. That means this is listening to feedback, taking a good look at how we currently do things and what works and what doesn't. In the end, we have the best regulatory environment in the world, and I do believe we're on our way there, but now we need to prioritize relationships between the government and industry.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a small, achievable change in the Public Works Act and is an excellent first step to fulfilling our commitments by listening to Alberta's construction industry and acting. I'm confident that the changes that we are proposing in Bill 9 will expedite the making of regulations and allow government to respond to changes more quickly, helping Alberta Infrastructure and industry partners to deliver public infrastructure safely, on time, and on budget.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate on Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. This is an omnibus bill, which, you know, we're pretty used to from the UCP government. I mean, there often used to be some decorum in that, not putting 15 pieces of legislation in one bill, but the UCP does this repeatedly. Certainly, if the NDP did that in government, they were often outraged and said: it was too much to have in one bill, and we need to debate these bills separately. Cavalierly, we get these bills all the time with this government. Certainly, they are having, I guess, no integrity in their concerns that they presented previously.

Yes, it's an omnibus bill, and, like my colleagues the MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs and the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford, we're looking specifically at one piece of this legislation, the part that amends income support. It is about the criminalization of poverty, which is what this bill does, and my colleagues spoke very well about that. I know that the Minister of Technology and Innovation stood up and very forcefully indicated: no, no, no; it's not just about warrants; it's about violent offenders, and that's who this is about, and that's who we would deny income support to. But, gosh, you know, when I look in here, it doesn't say anything about violent offenders. On page 21 it says:

The Director must, subject to the regulations, refuse to provide income support and benefits to an applicant or recipient under Part 2, Division 1 when notified that

- (a) a warrant for the arrest of the applicant or recipient has been issued in respect of a prescribed offence, and
- (b) the warrant has not been executed.

Nothing about: these are warrants for violent offenders.

8:10

If indeed that was the intent of the government, then why is it not here? Warrants can be for, you know, not paying some kind of a fine. Warrants can be for jaywalking. There can be a whole diverse kind of warrant. If it is indeed for that, for the violent offenders, then why isn't it in the legislation? This gives the government a wide berth to do whatever they want with folks who happen to be poor, happen to be people who are receiving income support, so we can deny them that if they have a warrant of any kind. This is not specific at all, so it definitely is the criminalization of poverty.

But I just want to ask the government, like: why stop there? Why not people who are on the Alberta seniors' benefit? Or perhaps that's already included in here, and I haven't read all the subsections. That's income support. What about people on AISH? Why aren't they included in here? I mean, why don't you just go for it and take a whole bunch of people off if this is what you want? But why are you picking on this particular group of people? Can you help me know that? Or why do you deny other people other services the government gives? Why don't you take people who need some kind of health support? They need to go to the hospital, but they have a warrant out. Well, they can't go to a hospital. Why are you picking on people on income support? Perhaps the minister responsible can explain that to us, because it does definitely, definitely look like it is focusing on people who are vulnerable.

The people who are on income support: they need food, they need shelter, and they often need personal items, sometimes medical and other benefits. Oftentimes they're supporting children. A lot of times they're women. As my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford talked about, a lot of times they are Indigenous people, and that's because of our legacy of colonization, something that, you know, we certainly don't want to continue. We want to empower people.

Income supports are meant to also provide some training, hopefully to support people to develop independence and self-sufficiency. So it doesn't make any sense that someone who's struggling – and he may have a warrant out – would be denied funding for food, shelter, clothing. These are the basics. It is unfair, and it's not very becoming of a government that repeatedly says: we care about our most vulnerable. I don't see that. I see barrier after barrier going up in front of people who are struggling in our province. I really challenge the government to make some sense of this, have the minister speak about this: why specifically are you saying this for people who are on income support? What's the rationale for that? You know, why not deny all public services to Albertans with warrants if that's what you want to do? Why are you picking on this group of people?

Then another section later on in this legislation, still on page 21, says, "The Minister responsible for Schedule 9 to the Government Organization Act is authorized to disclose information, including personal information, for the purposes of section 15.1." Personal information can be shared of these people. Well, usually there's a pretty high bar. Private information is not disclosed, and just because someone is on income support doesn't mean that their information should be shared with other authorities. Why is it that people who are poor all of a sudden don't have rights like the rest of us? I'm hoping the minister did his due diligence and talked with the Privacy Commissioner about this legislation and indeed that that was seen as following the rules regarding that, because in my, you know, reading of that, it seems like that should not be done. People need to be – their confidentiality needs to be respected. It is, again, just about taking away the rights of people who are poor.

I know the government does repeatedly say that they want to support vulnerable people in our society, but this legislation is showing us very clearly that it's not. Some of the rationale that was explained by the Minister of Technology and Innovation was that it was because, you know, we don't want to be supporting people who are violent offenders. Well, I agree with that, but why doesn't the legislation say that? It doesn't say that at all. It just says: someone with a warrant.

It's gone far beyond what the minister has indicated, and, you know, I just wonder why this particular program, this particular income support program, is being targeted for this type of disclosure and denial of services. I mean, it just absolutely seems abhorrent and unfair for people who are poor in our province.

Certainly, as a social worker for more than 30 years my job has been to take down those barriers, and having worked within government's programs and without, those were some of the biggest challenges, the uncaring government that did not want to really support people. They wanted to judge people who are poor, judge people who maybe were victims of domestic violence, judge people who, you know, were newcomers and didn't always speak the language, and they had barriers to employment and therefore lived in poverty.

I've worked my life to make sure that people had access, but I see a government here who says one thing and does another. Certainly, we can see it very clearly with their decisions around the opioid crisis, our drug-poisoning crisis in our province. They make it harder and harder for people to even stay alive by the closing of supervised consumption sites, the reduction of harm reduction, and the moving of Edmonton's detox way out to Alberta Hospital, making it so hard for people to access that.

You know, despite some of the words of the government, that they want to support people to overcome these challenges, really, if you look closely, you see how they are actually impeding people from overcoming the challenges that are facing them. Certainly, it is disturbing to me to see a government target this particular program. As I said – and I'm, of course, facetious in my comments about: well, why don't we just not let people use the health system if they've got a warrant? Of course, not all people who use the health system are poor; some of them are, for sure.

I really ask the government to think about why they would leave out that very specific information, you know, about violent offenders and just put a general warrant: anyone with a warrant can be denied financial support. Why is that not clear? Perhaps, sadly, I'm right and my colleagues are correct, and this government really doesn't want to support the most vulnerable people, wants to make life harder for people who are vulnerable. That is a sad day, but it seems like we're at that sad day.

I think, with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll end my comments.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 9, which is the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. This is, again, an omnibus piece of legislation, that amends 15 pieces of legislation. I don't know whether it reduces red tape or not, but it certainly reduces debate in this House, curtails debate in this House. Many of the changes contained in it could be stand-alone pieces of legislation worth debating here over time.

For instance, this bill adds a new section in the WCB legislation to exempt firefighters engaged in the Fort McMurray fire from the latency period on presumptive cancers. We all know that the Fort McMurray fire was one of the worst natural disasters in Alberta's history, and many brave firefighters, first responders, put themselves in harm's way to save people in Fort McMurray, to save Fort McMurray, and they deserve to be recognized for that. They deserve to be compensated for the harm that resulted as a result of them engaging in fighting that fire.

Recently Ontario made that coverage retroactive to 1960. I think Alberta can certainly do that. No one who was engaged in that fire should have to fight WCB on how they got that cancer. They deserve better than this. We'll be introducing an amendment later on to make those changes retroactive. As it stands now, that change doesn't go far enough.

Another change in it is that the government is reversing a change allowing the provincial government to terminate agreements without cause with a minimum of 90 days' notice to the city of Calgary or the city of Edmonton. This was initially implemented by this UCP government so they can get out of green line work in Calgary. When they brought forward that change, many of us here were in this Legislature. The government was asked if they have consulted with anyone from the city of Calgary, any other city that was getting impacted, and there was no answer. They used their majority to ram through that change. Now all they're doing is that they're reversing their own bad decision, that was bad then and that we opposed then. It's a good change; the government should not have done it in the first place.

Another change that my colleagues talked about and the minister of Service Alberta and technology responded to as well:

The Director must, subject to the regulations, refuse to provide income support and benefits to an applicant or recipient under Part 2, Division 1 when notified that

- (a) a warrant for the arrest of the applicant or recipient has been issued in respect of a prescribed offence, and
- (b) the warrant has not been executed.

There are a number of problems with this provision. As my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford said, it perpetuates, legalizes poverty. Warrants can be issued for a number of reasons, and it may or may not be the case that the person who has a warrant is convicted. In our justice system the Charter of Rights and Freedoms upholds the presumption of innocence before somebody is convicted, so that may offend the Charter as well.

The second problem with that is that although the minister said that it will be only for prescribed dangerous offenders, there is nothing in this legislation that shows what those offences will be. The UCP is asking us and asking Albertans to trust them on this, and their record shows that they cannot be trusted, and they should not be trusted.

Those who are on income support: if you have twice the amount of what the income support is on a monthly basis, you don't qualify. Essentially, if you have $1,050, you do not qualify for income support. That's how our income support program works. For those who are on income support, that support, that benefit gives them some money to be able to eat and, in some cases, be able to have some shelter. This provision is essentially cutting those individuals, the most poor among us, from that support as well. That's another cruel decision from this clueless government, and that cannot and should not be supported.

As my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford said, it will target Indigenous communities, it will target person of colour communities because they are the ones who are among those who are among the poorest in this society. Without any information of what those prescribed offences will be, it's still a bad public policy. We should not be criminalizing, we should not be perpetuating poverty.

As was mentioned, the government passed Bill 1, Critical Infrastructure Defence Act. On the face of it, it was to protect our main infrastructure. It was brought forward by the government because the then Premier was offended by some youth making a TikTok on a railway line and Indigenous communities protesting in British Columbia. At that time Indigenous communities did share those concerns, that this bill would target them and nobody else. That turned out to be true because when Coutts was blockaded for 21 days, this government didn't mention that piece of legislation, but some from their caucus also visited the Coutts blockade.

Another change is to amend the Petty Trespass Act and the Trespass to Premises Act so that it can apply to federal government agents, again another change that no one is asking for, and even the government doesn't know what the rationale is for this. On March 1 the Government House Leader was at a presser downstairs – I was present there – and when asked about what's prompting this change, the Government House Leader said, and I quote: we are seeing federal employees trespass onto private land in Alberta, and as a result of that, we don't think that that's appropriate. End quote. That's the Government House Leader on the morning of March 1, 2023. Later that afternoon the Justice department's spokesperson said this, and I quote: there have been no confirmed cases of trespass by federal government employees in Alberta. End quote. The Government House Leader is saying that the government is seeing federal employees trespassing on Alberta lands; the Justice department is saying that they have no evidence of such trespassing.

This change does nothing other than putting federal employees and their families at risk. It will jeopardize their safety. When the government has no evidence, when the government's own Justice department says that they have no evidence of anybody trespassing, they should not be passing this kind of legislation. Although there are a few things that we can put our support behind, there are these things that we cannot support, and for that reason I urge my colleagues and all members of this House to oppose this piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate. The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction has waived closure of debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Bill 10 Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

[Debate adjourned: Member Irwin speaking]

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West has risen.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 10, Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, here this evening for the first time, for myself anyhow. Just looking through this bill, which we just got, the biggest concern that the Official Opposition has generally and me specifically is that it enacts the creation of this Alberta fund, which is access to $1.4 billion that the minister can use in any number of ways for one-time funding.

[Mr. Turton in the chair]

News flash, Mr. Speaker: of course, we are just on the cusp of an election, and the UCP government arms themselves with a $1.4 billion one-time spending bill in this, Bill 10, and it seems like it's a fairly obvious opportunity for the government to try to buy their way into the next election. I think that Albertans have been observing this government engaged in this kind of activity already with this budget that they just put forward. It's a substantial budget, you know, and completely out of keeping with the language and the direction that this government has used over the last three and a half years, and then with an about-turn of quite a substantial budget that's just on the floor here now, and then plus another $1.4 billion activated for one-time spending, presumably to try to cover whatever places the government desperately will try to look to buy the favour of Albertans.

I mean, this is wrong on a number of different fronts, Mr. Speaker, not the least of which is that we are entrusted to ensure that we spend money for the people of Alberta, that we save for the future for the people of Alberta, and to be stewards of both the land and the resources that we have here within our boundaries, and so on. So this whole idea of rushing to election spending within a few weeks – right? – probably goes on the wrong side of all of those principles, all of those responsible things that this House and members of this House should observe: the idea of thoughtful spending and saving over time, the concept of ensuring that you are just and equal in the dispensation of those funds or the saving of those funds or the preservation of the resources that we have available to us. None of those things happened with this Bill 10; quite the opposite. It's like you're opening up the floodgates to just desperately try to cover off whatever the government thinks that they can deal with in the last, you know, few weeks before an election.

That is the main concern I think that we have with this bill. Of course, the regular questions do apply, Mr. Speaker, like "Who did you ask about this?" in order to say: "Yeah. You know, this is what we need. Albertans, this is what we need at this juncture in our history," to give the government access to more than a billion dollars to announce a month before an election. I mean, you'd have a hard time finding people that would concur with that judgment, I think. I really don't think that there was anything that resembled consultation on that. But you can always try, I suppose. I would ask the government who they did ask if they thought that that was such a good idea. And, really, to what end besides the naked attempt to buy people's votes before an election? That's really just so obvious.

[The Speaker in the chair]

You know, when I've been out talking to Albertans across the province, all over the place, really, this is the recurring theme that I hear from people. They will say some version of, like: "Do the UCP take us to be fools? Do they think that we are so easily bought? Do they think that we can't remember what happened in the last thousand days or more that suddenly is erased in the last 60 days before an election?" I mean, all of those things are just – people take offence to it. Of course, you don't have to even remind people, but it bears reminding that it's not the government's money either. It's the people of Alberta's money, in the first place. So trying to buy the favour of someone with their own money – right? – again, it feels bad. It feels dirty. And it doesn't concur with the best practices of democracy or of what common sense tells you is right or wrong, quite frankly.

Those are the things that I'm hearing. You know, that was before Bill 10 came out, so I mean Lord knows what they're going to think about now, right? That was just with the budget. Then, of course, this amendment act is clarifying some of the – just the depths to which this budget does head down that path.

I mean, there are other sections in here that I really don't have much of a problem with, right? But, you know, again, as my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Riverview described, you have these bills with many different facets to them, and dollars to doughnuts, there'll be one element in there that completely negates all the other things and makes it impossible to support that bill. In this case it's the Alberta fund, the $1.4 billion one-time spending powers that this bill does give us.

The other sections that I do see here just offhand – I mean, the thing that jumps out at me is, you know, of course, with the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act. I have sat on that board previously and presently. I did like to see that we have some provision to save money in the heritage trust fund. I believe it's $750 million with this bill. This is what it was designed to do under a much more prudent and reasonable government that started the heritage trust fund concept. It's not just to save money for the future; it also helps to pay for budgets every single year. You get interest off that. You can use that interest to pay for programs that we all benefit from. Of course, it does create a rainy-day fund. It has an added benefit, too, if you have really a lot of money, that you're not distorting the economy literally, not just provincially but even nationally, by just spending it all in some sort of way.

I mean, that said, you put $750 million into the heritage trust fund on one hand, then you've got a $1.4 billion thing that you can spend in eight weeks. That kind of negates that reasonable practice of saving for a rainy day and not distorting the economy on one hand and then, of course, building something even larger, which could do both of those things no problem, right?

These are the initial thoughts that I've had around Bill 10. I think we can be looking at it – of course, there's more than just me around here, so we can hear from other people – to see if the analysis proves correct, but you know it does have that glaring Alberta fund, section 9, in there that raises very large red flags for not just the Official Opposition but the general public, economists, and anyone who's concerned about the future of our province here.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will allow time for other people to speak, and I welcome them to participate in the debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise this evening, which very well could be one of my last opportunities here in the Assembly. With that, speaking to Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, and much like the previous member, the Member for Edmonton-North West, I also have concerns with this legislation, primarily focused around the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act amendments within this piece of legislation.

Now, when we look at even the alberta.ca, the Alberta government's website recognizing some of the changes that are being proposed in here, specifically on this act, a few points down we see that this act will set policies for the allocation of surplus cash with at least half going toward debt repayment.

I think that's fair, Mr. Speaker. Reading past that:

The rest would be allocated to a new Alberta Fund, which would be used only to fund additional contributions to the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund . . .

Fair. And beyond that, additional debt repayment and one-time spending initiatives.

That is what the previous member spoke to, where I also have concerns, this idea of one-time spending initiatives.

I think that, again, we should be doing everything we can to be transparent and accountable with the dollars that we are spending across this province, especially when we see ourselves in an opportunity for surplus. Of course, this government has found themselves with a surplus, primarily, the majority of the reason being the price of oil. Again, that's fair. We should be considering how we are spending those funds.

But the fact is that there have been so many opportunities for this government to invest in stability in this province. Just thinking back to some of the decisions of this government, and there have been many, Mr. Speaker, that have affected primarily the lowest income Albertans, when we look at the decision of this government to deindex AISH early in their term, the decision to deindex personal income taxes, the decision to cut off beneficiaries of low-income seniors to receive benefits for medical coverage. I mean, the list is long of the decisions that this government has made that have hurt vulnerable Albertans.

So now when we find ourselves in a situation where there are dollars left over, again, primarily because of the price of oil but also because of some of the decisions that this government has made to cut off benefits and supplies to low-income Albertans, we find ourselves in a situation with a surplus, and instead of potentially looking at how we can spend this in a more accountable and transparent way, whether it's looking at capital plans, whether it's looking at those benefits that have been decreased previously, unfortunately we see this government going down the path of one-time spending initiatives, starting April 1, right before an election, Mr. Speaker.

I think that we've heard previously, whether from this Premier or the previous Premier under the UCP, the importance of not spending government dollars during or close to an election cycle; unfortunately, we see this government going down that path with absolutely zero accountability for those dollars.

You know, I think back to some of the other decisions that this government has made, primarily looking at decisions of this Education minister around the complete lack of funding specific to Edmonton public school board, and of course that goes past just our Edmonton public school board; it goes to the Catholic school board in Edmonton, it goes to municipalities across the province and the school boards that have the important work of funding education across the province. Unfortunately, this government has done anything but support those initiatives of building new schools, of ensuring that there are dollars to put teachers in those classrooms.

Again, I think back to the rhetoric of the Education minister and, coming back to Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, this idea of one-time spending initiatives. Instead of ensuring that we are properly and adequately funding the dollars that should be designated more systematically to things like education, to things like health care, we continue to hear this rhetoric from the Education minister around how the NDP didn't fund schools in Edmonton nearly as close to how this current UCP government has done so. It would be completely laughable if it wasn't so sad for the residents in my community and communities across this province.

You know, just looking back to some of the accomplishments, Mr. Speaker – and I appreciate that there is quite a bit here, and I'll do my best to be quick. Just thinking back to our investments in education and to schools in Edmonton specific to the public school board, I mean, we saw the funding for Aleda Patterson, Alex Janvier, Garth Worthington, Dr. Anne Anderson, Thelma Chalifoux, Soraya Hafez, Jan Reimer, Kim Hung, Shauna May Seneca, Michael Phair, Donald Getty – I'm close; I promise – Svend Hansen, David Thomas King, Dr. Lila Fahlman, Hilwie Hamdon, Constable Daniel Woodall, Ivor Dent. These are all schools that were funded by our government. Some of them were modernizations; many of them were brand new schools. While I appreciate that some of these schools were finished under this UCP government – and they would love to take credit for that – in fact they were funded completely by our government.

When Albertans go to tally up how many schools – you know, we can look at my community. The minister I believe two years ago committed to one Catholic school to be built, and now that's set for '26-27. This UCP government hasn't even been able to build one school in my community in their entire term when we built at least two or three, possibly more, Mr. Speaker, not including the many other schools across west Edmonton that were built.

When we look at opportunities to invest in our community in a more systemic way, in a more accountable and transparent way, we have mechanisms like our school boards, like our health authorities and municipalities that should be able to access this funding. Instead, this government is going to take it upon themselves to create a $1.4 billion slush fund named the Alberta fund, Mr. Speaker, and spend that as they see fit right before an election. It's deeply concerning to me because there's no accountability here. Again, we don't know what criteria this government is planning to use. There are no assurances that it is going to be disbursed equally across the province or used on the communities with the most need out there. Instead, we are left to guess at what this money is going to be spent on. Again, when we look at the timeline for this, the lack of criteria, it sure seems like this government is going to use it as an opportunity to get themselves re-elected, and I don't think that that is how we should be spending Albertans' dollars across this province.

Now, we tie this into the millions and millions of dollars that this government is using to advertise their so-called affordability payments. Again, we see this government leaving so many Albertans out, with no accountability as to how this money is going to be spent. We see students across this province not being able to access any of this funding on top of previous decisions of this government to hike interest rates on tuition, increasing tuition to historic levels. There are so many reasons why this government should have been more accountable in how this money was going to be spent. I would say that in many ways this slush fund that the government is creating is on the backs of vulnerable Albertans who shouldn't have seen their benefits cut in the first place, who shouldn't have seen their tuition cut in the first place, who shouldn't have seen schools not being built. Now this government has found themselves in a surplus situation because of all those cuts that they've made, and they are going to be unaccountable in how they spend the money that has been left over.

As the previous member, the Member for Edmonton-North West, said, I think that there are pieces within this legislation that are reasonable and potentially tackling some of the more housekeeping issues that have been brought forward to them from stakeholders, and I can appreciate that, but the fact is that when you tie it in with this unaccountable slush fund, there's just no way that I could see myself supporting this.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity. I will take my seat.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is next.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise this evening to speak to Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023.

Before I get into that, I just wanted to acknowledge what the previous speaker had mentioned, about this potentially being his last time speaking in the Chamber. I need to say how important it is that his voice has been part of this Assembly for eight years, and hearing the incredible advocacy that he does on behalf of Albertans is so impactful. I needed to start with that because that has been the voice on this side of the Chamber for the eight years that I've been elected. Knowing that that's what this side of the House represents, it's such an honour for me to work alongside these incredible individuals.

Earlier on this evening we heard from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who had also made reference to this perhaps being one of the last times speaking in the Chamber. I'm reminded, Mr. Speaker, of the countless hours of debate that have been held in this Chamber and the incredible, powerful stories of Albertans that we've heard from this side of the House and how their stories are what we're fighting for, individuals in Alberta. When we have a piece of legislation, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, that we're debating here tonight, it's having that reminder that we're here for Albertans, that we're here to talk about people and how we can better their lives.

It's concerning, Mr. Speaker, when on this side of the House those are the stories that we're sharing, those are the values that we hold, and those are the policies that we want to see brought into place, that actually make a difference for Albertans who are struggling. Instead, we're in the Chamber tonight at 10 to 9 talking about a piece of legislation that essentially gives $1.4 billion in slush funds for this government to buy votes. Now, that is such a huge contrast between what both parties are talking about.

I hear members on this side of the Chamber talking about wanting to make sure that we leave this place leaving Alberta a better place. I'm incredibly privileged to stand alongside these members that are sharing tonight and have shared for the last eight years that I've been elected. It gives me strength, Mr. Speaker, to speak about what matters. To have this piece of legislation before us tonight is quite frustrating when we know that this government isn't fooling Alberta when they're putting in a $1.4 billion election campaign slush fund. Section 9 creates the Alberta fund; that's what this government is focusing on.

This government is focusing on trying to buy Albertans' votes. Last night, Mr. Speaker, we were in the Chamber. For those of you that weren't following along at home – maybe you were watching the Oilers game – we were debating the supplementary supply 2023-2024. Just like tonight's Bill 10, we were talking about ways that this government is campaigning on the public dime. We haven't heard from this government any sort of believable justification as to why this piece of legislation was brought forward and tonight why they believe that $1.4 billion, that can be accessed on April 1, is in the best interests of Albertans right now as opposed to, you know, giving access to a slush fund to the Premier and the UCP.

It's concerning that that's what we're debating right now, Mr. Speaker. This is another piece of legislation, just like the piece of legislation, Bill 9, that we were speaking to right before this, that has more than one portfolio being impacted, and it's a little slip-in in the legislation that they're hoping people won't pay attention to. There are pieces of this legislation that make sense – the Children's Services piece, and Culture has some good things in there – but there are two major pieces of this that are quite concerning. I think that it creates some significant questions when we see a government giving themselves a slush fund and calling it the Alberta fund. That's quite, quite concerning.

This money that they're allocating could have been spent in so many other ways, Mr. Speaker. We're in a health care crisis despite what this government and the Premier continue to say isn't true. We've heard heartbreaking stories from all across the province of people that haven't been able to access a family doctor for years, people that are waiting incredible amounts of time for surgeries, hospitals that don't have physicians, ERs that are shut down. That's where this money should be spent. Instead, we see, under the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, them creating the Alberta fund, which is essentially a slush fund for them to buy votes, a $1.4 billion slush fund.

It's clear what the priorities of this government are, Mr. Speaker. We have watched for four years as they've attacked doctors, as they fired educational workers, as they refused to listen to nurses and health care practitioners. Instead, they're making sure that their friends are taken care of, and this piece of legislation allows them to do just that. Effective April 1 they're able to use taxpayer money called the Alberta fund to fund one-time funding announcements. I fail to see how this is anything but desperation before a campaign.

It's certainly not helping Albertans. It's not helping the countless number of postsecondary students that I have reaching out to my office, stressed. The cost of tuition has gone up under this government. The cost of living in general has gone up. This government brags about their affordability. Well, it doesn't impact postsecondary students. They have no access to that money. If they do not have a child, they don't get access to it. If they don't drive a car, they can't access that. When they're saying that it does impact, it absolutely does not.

This government should just simply be doing better, Mr. Speaker. When we look at section 9, it's hidden amongst quite a bit of legislation in here that they're changing and making adjustments to. But I would argue that $1.4 billion for a slush fund is a desperate attempt from the Premier and the UCP to campaign on taxpayer dollars, and I think that Albertans know what this is about. They see the announcements with no funding behind them. They see these statements from the government that they're helping, that the health care crisis is over, but when you talk to Albertans, they know that that's not true.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will end my time. I encourage any member of the government to stand up and defend this $1.4 billion slush fund.

Mr. Stephan: Surplus fund, not deficit.

Ms Goehring: They're chirping on the other side. I would encourage them, when it's their time to speak, to get up and defend this because, honestly, Mr. Speaker, I don't see any way possible that it can be defended.

With that, I will end my remarks. Thank you.

9:00

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie is next.

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and defend Bill 10 and talk about Bill 10 and the merits of Bill 10. I'm honoured to rise to discuss the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. We'll start with record spending in health care to province-wide affordability measures. Budget 2023 focuses on securing Alberta's future for generations to come, and I'm proud of that. By growing the economy, creating good-paying jobs – and I think that the Minister of Finance said today that there are 100,000 jobs waiting for people to come to Alberta to fill, and that's just the start; I'm proud of that – by strengthening education, by expanding health care, keeping communities safe, Budget 2023 addresses many of the most urgent needs we are hearing from every corner of our great province.

To effectively answer these calls and secure Alberta's future, Mr. Speaker, fiscal stability and responsibility must be upheld, clearly defined, and absolute. That's why I'm happy to support Bill 10. Albertans deserve stability and confidence in the fact that no matter what storms we face in the future, we will be as prepared as possible. As we've learned through this term, we can't predict the future. We don't know what's coming next, but we can do everything in our power to ensure Albertans are taken care of no matter what challenges may come their way. They deserve to know that our province's prosperity is not contingent on uniquely volatile revenue, revenue that's impacted by global markets and events beyond the government's control, no matter who that government is. That said, we need to focus on what is in our control; that is, our expense decisions and our ability to implement fiscal frameworks that provide flexibility for revenue swings while helping Alberta avoid past mistakes.

I just want to say, Mr. Speaker, for the record that earlier in the House today a member opposite talked about how the only reason we balanced the budget was because of oil revenue. I'd be the first person to say that oil revenue certainly helped – there's no question – but that is not the only reason that we balanced the budget. We balanced the budget because we exercised a measure of fiscal discipline unknown in the four years before our office, and I'm proud of that. I'm proud that our Finance minister – I would argue the best Finance minister in Alberta's history – put in these fiscal rules. He put in these fiscal anchors at a time when it was extremely volatile and uncertain. At a time when we were paying other jurisdictions to take our oil, we still stayed the course. As a result, we balanced not one budget but two back-to-back budgets, setting a record and a trend that we hope will continue. That's what Bill 10 is all about: encouraging and setting guidelines for other governments, future governments, to be held to that same account for the benefit not of us but our future generations, which is why we're all here.

Ultimately, Albertans deserve to know that their future is secure and grounded in fiscal responsibility, preparedness, and stability, and that's what Bill 10 is about, Mr. Speaker. It proposes a new fiscal framework that will provide exactly that. The proposed framework would limit expense increases except where there are unexpected and uncontrollable circumstances, something like a global pandemic, which, hopefully, we won't see again for a very long time. Setting limits would allow the government to continue focusing on improving programs and services while ensuring that Albertans' hard-earned tax dollars are spent wisely.

Aside from certain defined exceptions – and I want to stress those words, “defined exceptions” – Bill 10 will require all future governments to balance the budget and use surpluses to first pay down debt and then save for the future. I think that's critical, Mr. Speaker. If past administrations had focused on paying down debt, we wouldn't be in the position we're in today, and I'm proud of the record of this government and the work that we've done to start turning that around. It would help guide fiscal decision-making by setting guardrails to achieve and maintain balanced budgets while providing a fair degree of flexibility to deal with revenue swings and unexpected pressures. I think that's reasonable. It would also guide the government's management of cash from future surpluses, with a primary focus on debt repayment, investing in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, and providing opportunities for one-time spending initiatives.

Ultimately, Bill 10 would bring more stability to the financial outlook of Alberta's government and position our province for a bright future. As our Finance minister has said many times, Alberta's brightest days are ahead. I believe that, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to say that. I'm thrilled to say that. We've seen some great days in this province. In the 26 years I've lived in this province, there have been some tremendous, tremendous days, but our best days are still ahead. That gives me a tremendous amount of hope.

In addition to implementing a new fiscal framework to secure Alberta's future prosperity, Bill 10 also proposes several amendments that address numerous other concerns we've heard from Albertans. Bill 10, if passed, would implement measures from Budget 2023 to help build fiscal stability, attract investment – attract more investment, Mr. Speaker, because we're already actively attracting and successfully attracting investments – support children and families, cut more red tape, improve provincial funding mechanisms, and make life more affordable for students.

To start, Bill 10 proposes amendments to allow the heritage fund to retain all of its net income. That is remarkable, Mr. Speaker. Right now, as the legislation sits, it requires a portion of the heritage fund's net income to be kept in the fund to protect against inflation. However, any investment income not used for inflation-proofing of the fund must be transferred to general revenue. And this gets interesting. We are learning from the past to secure a brighter future for Albertans. Had we kept all of the previous earnings in the fund from day one, instead of the $18 billion that we currently have in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund – wait for it, Mr. Speaker – we would have nearly $300 billion in the trust fund today. That is remarkable.

I'm sad that we didn't do that, that past administrations didn't do that, but we can't go back. We can't change what's already happened, but we can go forward. We can set the stage for future generations to enjoy what others didn't plan for. That's why we're putting in this bill. That's why we're proposing these fiscal anchors, these fiscal frameworks so that future administrations are held to a higher account on this. Imagine what we could have done through the pandemic if we had had that kind of money in the heritage savings trust fund. It would have been remarkable.

The list of benefits Bill 10 provides for Albertans today and in the future goes on, Mr. Speaker. I'm not done yet. Amendments to the personal income tax amendment act would enable changes to the charitable tax credit rating, an increase from 10 per cent at present to 60 per cent for the first $200 of donations. This is scheduled to come into effect retroactively on January 1 of this year, and that's really great because Albertans, as we know, are very generous. They are very giving people, and I believe, if I have my stats correct, Albertans give more per capita than any other province. That's remarkable. Now we're giving them an even greater financial incentive to do so. Just imagine what we'll unlock in civil society as that occurs.

Bill 10 will cut red tape and save businesses around $7 million a year – $7 million, Mr. Speaker – in mailing costs by giving businesses the ability to provide reporting documents to their shareholders electronically instead of by mail. I don't want to rag on Canada Post too much, but I will tell you that I've had a lot of interesting mail show up very late. I think this is a great change, to get my documents when I need them, as I need them, instantly. And for a $7 million saving, that's just, like, the icing on the cake.

Changes under Bill 10 will give credit unions the opportunity to provide financial services to residents of border communities and other new customers they cannot currently serve to generate even more revenue through more flexible regulations.

Bill 10 proposes amendments that would strengthen the leadership of Horse Racing Alberta by allowing more public and industry representation to manage daily operations and ensure that this vibrant part of rural communities continues to thrive, a vibrant part of my rural community of Grande Prairie.

Bill 10 also allows Alberta's government to follow through on our commitments to create accessible and affordable postsecondary education – I have three kids in postsecondary education, Mr. Speaker; I'm very happy about that – to create the right conditions for Alberta's agrifood sector to be globally competitive, which is a win for all Albertans; to alleviate the financial burdens for those building their forever families through adoption; and to give municipalities across the province the predictable and consistent funding they have long been asking for, and I can attest to that personally with my role in the ministry.

Mr. Speaker, for this and many other reasons, I support Bill 10 so that the concerns that we hear from Albertans can be addressed, so that we can continue to learn from our mistakes collectively as a province, so that instead of repeating what's already been done, we go forward with a brighter future for the next generation and the one after that and the one after that, so that we can effectively implement Budget 2023, and, most importantly, so that we can ensure Alberta's future will be prosperous and secure for generations to come. I know that's why I ran in 2019, and I'm sure that's why many in this House put the hours in to sit in this Chamber, because we want a brighter future for our kids and grandkids and their kids and their grandkids.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat, but I'm happy to support Bill 10. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 10. I want to start my comments on Bill 10 by just reading a small quote from March 7, 2012. The quote was: you should not be able to use taxpayer dollars for blatant, partisan advertising in advance of an election. Something that I completely, fundamentally agree with, and perhaps the members on the other side should because the person who made that statement was a woman who – I was about to say her name, and I just realized I can't – is now Premier of this province.

Of course, she said that when she was on the other side of the House, and at the time the Conservative government was putting together about $1.3 million for advertising campaigns just before the election. The now Premier, who was in opposition at the time, stood up in quite an indignant state to say how repugnant it was that this government at the time was using taxpayer dollars to advertise and to promote their political brand under the guise of government advertising.

Here we are a dozen years later, finding that this government is not only spending that small amount of money – the money that, back then, Wildrose House leader Rob Anderson referred to as using taxpayers' money as their own campaign piggy bank – but now, instead of just a $1.3 million slush fund, this government has identified about $6.6 million for “developing and implementing the Affordability Action Plan, including an advertising campaign to inform Albertans about affordability [initiatives],” which is advertising their government policy on the eve of an election.

We know what the now Premier thought about that when she was standing on this side of the floor. I would certainly love the Premier to stand up and explain why she was terribly wrong then or why she's terribly wrong now or why she is speaking one way on one day and another way on another day, which we find happening quite frequently with this particular Premier.

I'm very, very concerned that we are in this place of the government taking such a cynical view of Alberta taxpayers' dollars that they would use such significant amounts of money to create funds for their own purposes, that will benefit only them just before an election. The creation of this $1.4 billion election campaign slush fund, called the Alberta fund, really is the epitome of cynicism by this government.

You know, I think they should hang their head in shame at the fact that they are supporting this kind of activity. They certainly would not when they were on the opposition side. They certainly would have agreed with their own Premier and called this a slush fund that is unacceptable. I think it's fascinating that the government can purport to say that they care about Albertans and that they care about how to spend Albertans' money, but when it comes time to their own good, to kind of getting what they want out of it, they certainly have a whole bunch of money available, and they're using that money just before an election in a way which I think is really undermining the democratic system that we have in this province. I think they should certainly have some shame about it.

I noticed that they don't have money for some other very important things that they could have spent money on. I noticed that they don't have money for a public lab to make sure that we have good resources here in this province for identifying responses to viruses and other health crises. They could have easily had one in this province, but this government said that we don't have the money for that kind of thing. In fact, not only did they not continue a public lab that had been started before they became the government, but they went to the site and they dug out the beginning cement work that was put in, the foundation work that was being put in, and covered it up at the cost of over a million dollars. They were literally using money to cover up what they were taking away from Albertans. That just seems to be the pattern here in this government.

I noticed this government also did not have the money to keep 35,000 educational assistants in the schools when times got tough in this province, that they did not have the money to provide PUF funding for children who are five years of age who need extra supports in the schools so that they can overcome disabilities, overcome learning issues, and be successful at an early age, which we know is directly tied to success later in life. They didn't have the money for that. They didn't have the money for it earlier when they had the single-year greatest deficit budget ever introduced into this province, but they also don't have it now that they got lucky and got a whole bunch of extra money that they didn't count on from the increased price of oil.

I noticed they also didn't have money for reducing class sizes, for meeting some of the needs of some of the school boards across the province of Alberta who are seeking new schools because the population of this province is rising so rapidly that we have thousands and thousands of new students every year, more students than we've ever had before, and the number of schools are simply not keeping up to it. They didn't have money for that, but they certainly had $1.4 billion to create a slush fund for themselves. [interjection]

I can see that the government members are laughing about this, because they know what a joke it is that they're pulling on all Albertans. They know that they got away with something here, and they're going to be able to use that money for personal purposes, which are really political purposes.

I noticed they didn't have money to go to the municipalities and say: look, you're struggling, we know, because of actions that we have taken over the years, by giving a tax holiday to some major corporations, by increasing RCMP officers and putting the taxes on you, putting the costs on you. And doing all kinds of other things for small municipalities, increasing the stress that small municipalities have trying to pay their bills. I was standing in front of the Legislature not that long ago with reeves and mayors from all across the province who were here to say that their governments are under extreme stress, and a large part of it is created because this government had made decisions that put more expenses onto them and took away some of their resources. Did they have money to fix any of that at this particular time? No, they didn't have money for that; they only had money for a slush fund.

I noticed they didn't have money to resolve the problem of massive increases in tuition that we've seen under this government for the last four years. We've seen programs at universities go up by as much as 30 per cent in terms of tuition costs during their tenure here in this House. Do they have money to fix any of that? No, they don't. They don't have money for the people of Alberta. They certainly have money for their own advertising so that they can satisfy their own desire to retain power. That's really what it's all about.

I noticed they don't have any money for the people who are living on AISH, whose income this government deindexed, who took thousands of dollars out of the pockets of the most poor people in this province, both poor and disabled people. They took money away from them for four years. Have they made any suggestion that perhaps they would give back the money to the people who live on AISH with this surplus that they had? No, they didn't do that. Not only did they take money away from them by deindexing AISH; they haven't supplied any increases. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Feehan: Not only did they not deal with the fact that they had deindexed AISH payments over the years, but they have not taken this money and said: look, we owe you a couple of thousand dollars each, so perhaps we should give that back to you. They could have done that. They chose not to do that. They chose instead to give themselves money. They chose instead to create a slush fund that is really about them using government resources to talk about their program of governance and advertise to the people of the province of Alberta using the money of the people of the province of Alberta. This is something that should simply not be allowed, and in fact this Premier said that it should not be allowed. On March 7, 2012, this Premier said that that was not an acceptable behaviour on the part of the government, yet now here we have this Premier and this government doing exactly that.

You know, you couldn't write fiction about this because people would say: that's so unrealistic; no government would act with such malintent. Yet here we have a government that has indeed done exactly that, who have stood up at one time and said that this is wrong behaviour and stood up at another time and engaged in that very same behaviour. This is really unacceptable, and I think that this government should be ashamed to bring forward this Financial Statutes Amendment Act, Bill 10, at this time with this kind of behaviour engaged and embedded in it.

I would have loved to have seen an act that did more to correct the very many mistakes of this government, that resolved the problems this government created with affordability, for example, the fact that they took the cap off electricity rates and people started paying huge amounts more, some in the neighbourhood of 300 per cent more than they used to pay. Because they took the cap off insurance, people's insurance rates went up 20, 30, 40 per cent, and even after they somehow decided that a cap was okay after saying that it wasn't okay, they brought in a cap, and then they allowed a number of companies to increase their rates right away as the cap was coming in. We saw some companies increase their rates by 15 per cent. I mean, they didn't even protect people when they were bringing in the cap, which they originally opposed.

This government has made a lot of errors in the time that they've been in government, and I'm always happy when they fix those errors. I'm just, you know, really surprised that they are here with this huge amount of bonus money that came from the sheer chance of the price of oil going up dramatically from where it is now and then not using that money in a way to make life better for Albertans. I think they could have done that. They chose not to do that.

Here we are now talking about a bill where they have found money for themselves, for their own self-interest, but not money for the people that have been suffering with high rates of the cost of food, the cost of insurance, the cost of tuition, and how difficult it's been for so many people who live on very limited incomes. Seniors who have had money taken away from them for drug coverage, students in schools who have had money taken away from them for their educational assistants: the list of people who have had to suffer under this government rhetoric . . .

An Hon. Member: Go away.

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Unparliamentary comments on or off the record are unparliamentary.

Mr. Feehan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a little leniency for this particular member because it is his last week being an MLA in this House, and I guess it's his last chance to take shots, knowing that he won't be standing here after May 29.

You know, I think I've made it very clear what I think about this act, and I certainly wish the government would take the opportunity to fix the problems that they've created in a way that was direct and honest in terms of the needs of Albertans and not the needs of their own political party.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the call.

Ms Issik: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm reasonably certain I'm not the only person in this Chamber who remembers a certain bumper sticker from years ago. It said something along the lines of: please, God, let there be another boom, and I promise not to . . .

An Hon. Member: Piss this one.

Ms Issik: Sh. Dot, dot, dot.

Why would somebody put that bumper sticker up? It's because our natural resource revenues are worth something. They're worth something not only to every individual in Alberta, every Albertan who is living now of all ages, but they're worth something for those who are yet to be born. The resources that are within the ground in the province of Alberta belong not just to us as Albertans today; they belong to future generations of Albertans as well. At some point this province – because it's a nonrenewable resource, oil and gas will at some point see those royalties eventually vanish. So we ought to be treating these royalty revenues with respect, with the respect that is due for those future generations and for the younger people in our province today.

I'm a bit disappointed, I'll say – and I use that word – I'm just using a nice word.

Mr. Sabir: Disappointed with the slush fund.

Ms Issik: I'm very disappointed to hear the opposition talking about slush funds. Clearly, they've been given their word of the day by their caucus bosses. They're out there with their anger words for the day, whipping it up so that tomorrow on Twitter they can, you know, have another good Twitter day. Good for them. This is a pretty serious matter, though. It's not to be taken lightly whatsoever.

What is this fund called the Alberta fund? What is that? Well, it's not a slush fund. It is the fund that represents fiscal responsibility and using funds properly when you have a surplus.

I'm sorry, but I door-knock a lot. I talk to constituents every day. I talk to them on the phone. I talk to them at meetings. I talk to them on their doorstep. They all tell me that they want our debt repaid. They all tell me they don't want to spend debt-financing charges instead of putting that money towards services. They all tell me that our heritage savings trust fund deserves to have funds put in it, not just taken out of it. They tell me that every day. They're very happy that a fiscal framework has been put into place, and they're very happy that there's some fiscal discipline.

Guess what? That money belongs to Albertans. It is not there to just spend willy-nilly on pet projects. It's outlined – and I don't know. Maybe instead of just rambling on about this, that, and the other thing that has little relevance to the conversation tonight on this bill, Bill 10, perhaps they could take a look at page 14 and onwards, where we talk about the fiscal framework. The fiscal framework not only talks about surplus funds, but it also talks about balanced budgets. There's a concept for the members opposite.

You know, let's talk about slush funds for a minute here. Does anybody remember the carbon tax?

Mr. Getson: Oh, yeah.

Ms Issik: Okay. I remember the carbon tax. I remember what it was supposed to be spent on. It was supposed to be spent to reduce emissions. What happened with that? Well, they used it as a money recycling program. That's number one. Number two, they had some programs where we had good people coming from Ontario, driving around in wrapped vans, replacing light bulbs and shower heads, light bulbs and shower heads that any of us could buy at Home Depot, by the way. [interjection] Yeah. That's how they spent it.

You know where the slush fund ended up? At the end of their term they had half a billion, almost, dollars laying around that they couldn't even figure out how to spend. They were really good at taking it out of people's pockets, not just families but every community centre, every hospital, every school, every not-for-profit agency, every women's shelter. Every single place that they could find a carbon tax to take, they took it. Then they couldn't figure out how to – there was a slush fund right there. But good thing that we had good folks from Ontario coming and changing light bulbs for us.

9:30

Let's go back to the fiscal framework. The first thing to recognize is how you get a balanced budget, and what are the guidelines for that?

The budget will only be permitted to be in deficit if:

- Revenue declines by $1 billion or more from the prior-year third quarter . . . revenue forecast.

These are the exceptions that we get. Your revenue has to decline by more than a billion dollars.

- Revenue is expected to decline to an amount that is below the prior-year Q3 total expense forecast.

At year-end, a deficit is only allowed in the consolidated financial statements if:

- A deficit is forecast in the budget as permitted by the exceptions;
- Actual revenue has declined by $500 million or more from the current year budget amount; or
- The budgeted, voted contingency is exceeded due to unanticipated costs beyond the government's control due to disasters or emergencies declared by Cabinet; expense increases required [by] the Alberta Petrochemicals Incentive Program (APIP); non-cash, non-recurring expense increases required under accounting standards; and/or expense increases by $500 million or more for payments related to litigation or settlements not anticipated in the budget.

Okay; so there's your exceptions.

One of those exceptions is actually for APIP. And what does APIP do? It's an incentive program that brings businesses and large projects into this province that will generate revenue for years to come based on what? Feedstock of? That's right; nat gas. So, yep, we can put a big project in after a budget is done.

In-year expense growth is to limit in-year adjusted operating expense increases to the budgeted and voted contingency except when increases are due to:

- Dedicated revenue-expense increases;

So these are expenses that are actually incurred to raise revenue.

- Non-recurring, non-cash expense variations required by accounting standards;
- Emergencies or disasters declared by Cabinet;
- Expenses under the [APIP] Program . . .
- Payments related to litigation.

Okay.

So if we end up with a surplus, then what? This is what these folks across the aisle are referring to as a slush fund. Let's see. What's that for? What's this slush fund for?

50 per cent of the available surplus cash must go to the repayment of debt maturing in that fiscal year with the remaining cash allocated to the new Alberta Fund. The Alberta Fund allows the government to set aside surplus cash while it decides the best use of this cash. There are three allowable uses of cash from the Alberta Fund.

Does that sound like a slush fund to you? Hmm.

- Debt repayment;

That's one.

- Additional deposits into the Heritage Fund;

That's two. Number three,

- One-time initiatives that do not lead to permanent increases in government spending.

Well, that sure sounds like a slush fund, doesn't it? Hmm. Wow.

And our in-year expenses. What are the guidelines for that? Four components, that we

- Require annual balanced budgets, with certain exceptions;

We've gone over the exceptions. We

- Limit year-over-year increases in operating expense to population growth and inflation;

Yes, folks, that's called fiscal discipline. It's long overdue in this province, and people have been begging for it.

- Limit in-year expense growth to a budgeted and voted contingency; and
- Set out policies for the allocation of surplus cash to repayment of maturing debt, saving for the future, or one-time initiatives that do not lead to permanent increases in government spending.

That's the fiscal framework. That is not a slush fund; that is responsible fiscal management of the people of Alberta's money, respecting the resources that belong to the people of Alberta and future generations of Albertans.

And I'm sorry that the debate tonight has just been disrespectful of those who are yet to be born and those who are young. Those resources belong to all Albertans. The revenue from those resources belongs to all Albertans, and it is required that we manage those responsibly, with discipline. Albertans want that. They tell me over and over again. So the side across can keep talking about their word of the day for their Twitter fodder, but I think Albertans deserve better than that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. members, seeing none, I am prepared to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 8 Alberta Firearms Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 8 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

I see the hon. government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Yeah. Mr. Chair, I would like to rise and report progress on Bill 8.

The Deputy Chair: Sorry. Are you asking that we rise and report on Bill 8?

Mr. Rutherford: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: All right. Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 8.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: All those opposed? Carried.

Bill 11 Appropriation Act, 2023

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Toews]

The Acting Speaker: Anyone wishing to add to debate tonight?
Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

9:40 Bill 12 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Toews]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 12, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to ask the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It seems like a lot of great work has been done tonight in a very short period of time. I thank all members for their participation. At this time I move that the Assembly be adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:41 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 22, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Alberta Hansard Special Edition

The Speaker: Hon. members, on your desks you will find a copy of the special edition Hansard for the special sitting that was held on September 15, 2022. As you will remember, the sitting was a tribute to Her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth II following her passing on September 8, 2022. This special edition includes all of the words of grief and gratitude that were shared by members on that day. As well, it includes many photographs of the special sitting, the memorial ceremony that was held on the front steps of the Legislature as well as images of the life and legacy of Her late Majesty. I'd like to extend a thank you to members of Hansard and the communications team from the Legislative Assembly Office for putting this important document together.

I hope that this keepsake will be a treasured reminder of your service to the Queen and to the province, and if you would like an additional copy, I do have a limited number available at my office.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, today I am very pleased to introduce a group of visiting officials from our sister province of Hokkaido, Japan. I had the pleasure of meeting with them this morning, and we discussed a number of important issues as we continue to strengthen ties between our two great regions. We have much of a shared desire of freedom, of support, and I know that they are here visiting members of our Ministry of Education. I invite you to all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, also seated in the Speaker's gallery today is Ms Heather Toporowski. Heather is a constituent of Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock, has worked in the Alberta health care system for over 30 years, and now coaches leaders in health, education, and government sectors, including providing some leadership coaching to LAO staff and members. I would invite her to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction has a school group to introduce.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Guthrie school serves military families and students on Edmonton's military base. Through you and to you I would like to introduce the grade 6 class. If I could ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has an introduction.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on behalf of my friend from Edmonton-South to introduce to you and through you 35 grade 6 students from Monsignor Fee Otterson school, which is located in the constituency of Edmonton-South. The students are seated in the public gallery and are joined by their teacher, Colin Oberst. I'd ask that the House join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier has an introduction.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you two of my constituents from the beautiful constituency of Edmonton-South West, Yuki Wong and Harris Liu. Yuki Wong is a recipient of the Queen's platinum jubilee medal. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Shandro: Well, [Remarks in Punjabi]. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Dr. Navjot Gosal and Pam Cholak. Now, Dr. Gosal worked as a mixed-animal practitioner in Punjab before moving to Edmonton in the winter of 2008. He was a veterinarian with a mixed-animal rural practice in Morinville but mostly in Lac La Biche before moving to a small-animal private practice in Edmonton. You might have heard him on the radio in previous years on 630 CHED talking to pet owners on a weekly radio show. A proud Albertan raising a son with his wife, as they stand in the gallery, I ask all members this afternoon to join me in giving them a warm welcome to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Sheila Ethier. Sheila founded Blankets of Love, which provides quilts to patients who are in hospital for treatment of mental illness. She's a lifelong resident of St. Albert, an author, and a Global women of vision recipient, 2008. Sheila is here today because her family has been impacted by the backlog of cancer treatment. I ask Sheila to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise and introduce four amazing women who I'm very proud to call my friends. Wendy Walker is an Indigenous singer and songwriter who's had an incredible 30-year career, including representing our province in the 2018 Pyeongchang Winter Olympics. Thank you so much to the minister of Indigenous affairs for meeting with us. Welcome to Leen Yaghi of Nisa Homes, a national housing organization and a safe haven for women and children fleeing domestic violence, and finally, Savita Singh and Anita Ngau from first step together, a community-based group that works to increase the participation and integration of immigrants and refugees in Calgary and the surrounding area. It is truly an honour to have you. If you could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Cost of Living and Affordability Plan

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, this past Monday marked the first day of spring. Although this is Alberta and there's always room for one more or maybe many more snow days, you can definitely feel in the air that spring is coming and summer is not far behind. For many Albertans, myself included, the first few days of spring always bring with them a feeling of hope and optimism, and Albertans are feeling that springtime relief stronger than elsewhere thanks to an exciting trend continuing from last month. Yesterday the consumer price index released its February 2023 data, and for the second month in a row Alberta has led the country in fighting inflation and making life more affordable.

Alberta has the lowest year-over-year inflation growth, at 3.6 per cent, while the rest of the country sits at 5.2 per cent. Measures like the electricity rebates, the fuel tax relief are contributing directly to reduced inflation in Alberta. Targeted supports, including $600 in affordability payments for parents, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans, are helping them pay their bills and save money for what matters most. Our lower cost of living, affordable housing, abundant jobs, higher earnings, and lower taxes continue to prove that the Alberta advantage is alive and well. Alberta's government has focused on taking timely, effective action to reduce costs and keep life affordable for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, there are many things that Albertans are looking forward to about spring: the return of warmer weather, hockey playoffs or, if you're like me, the start of the Canadian football season, with summer almost here on the horizon. But, beyond that, I know Albertans are excited to re-elect a UCP government, that they know has the strongest record on fighting inflation in the entire country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Ramadan

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to recognize the holy month of Ramadan, which starts tomorrow. Ramadan is the ninth month of the Islamic calendar, and fasting during Ramadan is one of the five pillars of Islam. During Ramadan Muslims around the world observe a monthlong period of fasting from dawn until sunset, abstain from eating or drinking anything, and focus on strengthening their relationship with the Creator and Its creation.

Family and faith-based gatherings are a huge part of Ramadan. It brings people, communities, and Muslim umma together as one. Ramadan is an opportunity to embrace self-restraint and self-reflection. It encourages those with the means to connect with the less fortunate among us, to reach out to neighbours, to the sick and elderly, and to those who are struggling to make ends meet.

1:40

Ramadan is also an opportunity for all Albertans to learn more about Muslim Albertans: their faith, history, cultures, traditions, and their contribution to this province. In recent years we have also seen a rise in Islamophobia and hatred, and we also saw attacks on hijab-wearing Muslim women and increased racism and prejudice against racialized people and people of Asian origin. I urge all to take this opportunity to reach out to your neighbour, attend an iftar event, and learn about each other and come together to create a society that understands, respects, and values diversity. There is no place for racism, Islamophobia, and discrimination in our province, and we must stand together against it.

With that, I wish all Albertans observing Ramadan a blessed Ramadan. Ramadan Mubarak.

NDP Government Record

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to talk about the big NDP successes when they were in government. Well, that covers that.

In the time remaining, let's talk about the other things that they did, like protesting against pipelines with their Extinction Rebellion besties, leading to the cancellation of the Northern Gateway and Energy East pipelines, followed by a 4 and a half billion dollar crude-by-rail scandal; over $10 billion in extra costs incurred passed on to electricity consumers, including hundreds of millions of dollars in corporate welfare – such a reckless mishandling of the market – the blatant attack on Alberta farmers, private and home-schools, and the attack on virtually anybody that disagreed with their agenda. And did I forget to mention the carbon tax? Well, they sure did, at least till after they were elected. A hundred and eighty-three thousand jobs across Alberta lost, and the NDP leadership referred to Albertans as embarrassing cousins, as sewer rats, and told Albertans to move away if they wanted a job.

But then it got better. The 2019 election campaign: the largest number of unfunded election promises in Canadian history in the hopes of manipulating Alberta votes. Most people expected the former Premier to hang her head in shame and take over the federal NDP leadership after that failed attempt, but it seems that Justin Trudeau warned her of a vote split, making way for a Conservative victory, so she chose to stay in Alberta and maintain a four-year fear and smear campaign in hopes of getting control of the province once again. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker; the NDP plan to rack up debt, to shut off our resource-based economies, and to shutter small businesses. Jobs would be lost again, families would be destroyed again, a future in Alberta would be nonexistent again. Alberta can definitely not afford the NDP again. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Crown of the Continent Tourism Region

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been my privilege to rise in this Chamber many times to brag about the special corner of Alberta that I'm fortunate to call home. In my little corner of southwest Alberta we have an abundance of beautiful vistas, many of which have captured the eye of Hollywood and have played an important supporting role in film and TV. In fact, we were recently home to zombies and ghostbusters.

We're also fortunate to have not one but two UNESCO world heritage sites in Livingstone-Macleod: Head-Smashed-In-Buffalo Jump and the world's first international peace park, formed in 1932 between Waterton Lakes and Glacier national parks in Alberta and Montana. This is the place I want to invite you to go with me today. At the narrow waist of the Rocky Mountains, where Alberta, British Columbia, and Montana meet, sprawls one of the wildest, most diverse and intact ecosystems in the temperate zones of the world. This area is known as the Crown of the Continent. The Crown of the Continent refers to Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park and the surrounding communities in Alberta, British Columbia, and Montana. These regions have been working hard together to develop a very special transboundary and international visitor experience, and now their hard work is being recognized internationally.

As I mentioned, Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park was established in 1932. In addition to being an international peace park, Waterton-Glacier also shares the designation as the UNESCO biosphere reserve and most recently was named the world's first transboundary international dark sky park. Today I want to recognize the hard work done by Bev Thornton and the Alberta SouthWest regional economic alliance in promoting this area of Alberta. Their hard work has resulted in international recognition of the area as a top global destination and as an alternative to traditional destinations like Banff and Lake Louise. This month Alberta SouthWest was awarded second place in the business and marketing category of Green Destinations' top 100 sustainable stories for 2022.

This summer I invite you and all members to pack your bags and come visit one of the most amazing places in the world right here in our own back park.

Government Policies and Rural Albertans

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, as the critic for rural economic development, agriculture, and forestry I've been privileged to meet with Albertans from across this great province. During those conversations two things are abundantly clear: Albertans are resilient, they're innovative, they're hard working, and they're honest people; and they feel abandoned by this UCP government.

This government has had four years devastating their health care, forcing communities like Olds to wait with over a quarter of the population on a wait-list to see a family doctor, increased the tax burden of rural Albertans by failing to recoup taxes owed by profitable corporations to municipalities with a combination of slow action and ideas that everyone knew were going to fail. Landowners are paying the price for the inaction of this UCP, whether it be infrastructure spending with bridges and roads, water access to support our livestock industry, and ignoring the fundamental principle of surface rights. Then they gave the ultimate insult to rural Albertans by trying to use their tax dollars to pay off the bad actors that refused to clean up their abandoned wells, that they are legally obligated to clean.

After four years it is clear that this UCP government doesn't have a plan to support rural Albertans and their communities, but the Leader of the Opposition and the Alberta NDP do. We are grateful for rural Albertans and all the people that have crafted our rural economies. As a government we will make sure that rural Albertans have access to quality health care when they need it, close to home. They know that economic diversification will not be considered a luxury under the Alberta NDP. An Alberta NDP government will not leave rural Alberta behind like the UCP has because we will stand up for them with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has a statement to make.

Eavor Technologies

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and advocate for Alberta's geothermal opportunity, which is led by a Calgary-based company that represents the spirit of Alberta's entrepreneurialism, Eavor Technologies. Their geothermal technology, the Eavor-loop, represents the world's first and only viable form of baseload, firm, scalable power, encompassing power generation, district heating and cooling systems, and enabling local energy autonomy at scale everywhere. Eavor-loop was established through drilling techniques perfected by Alberta's oil and gas sector and patented by former conventional energy sector workers who now work for Eavor.

Mr. Speaker, the potential of Eavor-loop has been recognized internationally as a mechanism to support energy security and decarbonization goals abroad. The Alberta-based start-up was the only North American company to attain funds from the European Union innovation fund amongst international energy supermajors, culminating in a $120 million grant to support the commercialization of their first project in Geretsried, Germany, the largest geothermal-specific grant allocation ever provided globally.

A recognition ceremony of this monumental achievement will occur in Geretsried on August 24. Attendees will include the likes of Chancellor Olaf Scholz and other senior dignitaries from the German government and the European Union. I would urge all members of the Assembly to save the date in their calendar and consider attending.

Unequivocally, synergies and opportunities for partnership exist between Alberta's oil and gas and geothermal sectors. Our province has all the prerequisite requirements, from a labour and capital perspective, to become the global epicentre for geothermal technology exports, mirroring what China has achieved with solar infrastructure. This opportunity should be fully leveraged to promote job creation and economic prosperity for Albertans.

Retrospective by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, this will be my final statement in this Assembly. I have spent my life in service to people in family, churches, local communities, and, lastly, in our great province. The last eight years have been a supreme privilege for which I am deeply grateful. We have achieved so much as a government, and it has been a sacred trust to represent the constituency of Lacombe-Ponoka.

I have learned so much about the perspectives and contributions of other people; about how hard it is to change things for the better; about democracy, its strengths and weaknesses, that it is still the best system of human governance. The most encouraging, hopeful thing that I have seen is the voluntary, spontaneous, generous hard work of so many Albertans. In every community there are ordinary, heroic community people who see a need or an opportunity, who rally others together or they create, by the sheer energy of their passion, innovative and beautiful solutions that enrich us all. This is so hopeful, so inspiring, so reassuring for the future.

The last few years have been difficult for everyone: the crash of energy prices to zero and broad economic pain, COVID-19 challenges not seen since the 1919 Spanish flu, and now the fears and threats of inflation. But worse than all of these is the increasing polarization of society. Social media algorithms reconfirm prejudices and biases. People are grouping into echo chambers, where they no longer listen to others or respect one another. Albertans: we can and we must do better.

It is time to consider others with humility. It is time to put away our grievances and animosities. Albertans, we have the greatest wealth in the world: the wealth of the land; of peace, not war; of unimaginable opportunity; of fascinating technological revolution; of a greening society. With so much to be grateful for, I end one season to begin another being grateful for everything, entitled to nothing.

God bless Alberta. [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Cancer Treatment Wait Times

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, Sheila Ethier is an author, a Global woman of vision, and a registered nurse. Her spouse, Brian, was diagnosed with stage 4 lung cancer on January 26. The doctors told Brian he should see an oncologist before the end of February. This didn't happen. Now the cancer had spread, and Brian is under palliative care. He still has not seen that oncologist. Now, the Premier has said that the crisis in health care is over, but it's not for Brian and for Sheila. So my question simply is: what does she have to say to them today?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for raising this issue. My heart goes out to Sheila and to your family.

This is a challenging time for our health care system and, in fact, all health care systems across the country. We know that we need more staff. We know that we need more people to provide the services to Albertans, and we are working towards that, to expand capacity, to hire more people, Mr. Speaker, as part of Budget 2023. We are increasing our capacity. Again, I know that these are challenging times. My heart goes out to anyone impacted . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: I quote Sheila: Brian is in pain; all he wants is to receive the treatment that may save his life. Mr. Speaker, Sheila and Brian were told by several staff at the Cross that the wait time for new patients used to be four weeks, but now it is 10. Sheila wrote to the UCP government looking for answers as to why that is, and she received no reply, so I'll ask Sheila's question today. Why have wait times at the Cross gone up over a hundred per cent, and why, eight weeks after Brian's diagnosis, has he still not seen an oncologist?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as already mentioned, we know that there is increased complexity for Alberta patients. We need more health care professionals, specialists to be able to provide the services, and that is a challenge not only here but around the country. We are investing to be able to ensure that we have the staff to provide the services. I was very pleased to announce with my colleague about increasing the number of doctors through U of C and U of A programs, and also we are bringing in more doctors from overseas so we can actually provide the services to Albertans when they need it.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we're hearing from Albertans who are reporting wait times on referrals to the Cross of three, four, and even five months. Now, on February 28 of this year our opposition raised the issue of the delay being experienced specifically by Brian. The Premier called it "fearmongering," and she refused to answer the question. Three weeks later Brian's cancer has spread. So will the Premier or her minister drop the rhetoric and tell this House what is being done specifically today to deal with these terrifying wait times for cancer care? The specific answer.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As indicated, challenges in regard to having specialists and given the increase in complexity of the cases and the number of cases – there are currently 16 positions under active recruitment for oncologists. AHS is aggressively pursuing both Canadian and international trained physicians. They're closely reviewing the local workforce to be able to provide extra care. You know, we are getting more surgeries done; surgeries have increased by 110 per cent over what they were pre-pandemic. But we know we need to continue to add capacity to our system, and through Budget 2023 we're doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre is next.

Anaesthesia Care

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At 10:30 this morning I sent three questions to the Health minister in hopes that we can set political spin aside and put some factual answers on the record for Albertans. In a previous question period the minister confirmed anaesthesiologists were being redeployed from AHS hospitals to work in private, for-profit chartered surgical facilities. To the minister: will any surgeries scheduled to be performed in AHS hospitals be cancelled or delayed due to anaesthesiologists being redeployed to these private clinics?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for providing the questions beforehand. I only have 30 seconds, so I'll be providing a more fulsome answer after QP for the member and the Alberta public. I want to start with: the premise for the questions is incorrect. CSFs are part of our publicly funded health care system, no different than attending a family physician or than when previous governments used CSFs. Surgeries have been and will continue to be scheduled so that the most urgent and those waiting the longest get done first. These will be done at the most appropriate venue, either at hospital or CSF. It's all one publicly funded system. We're going to make sure . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, it's not a complex answer to say yes or no.

Despite the minister's and Premier's claims that there's one big, happy health care system, we actually have two systems at work here: public health care funded by taxpayers, with the sole goal dedicated to keeping Albertans healthy, and a private system, also funded by taxpayers, with a competing goal of generating a profit for corporate shareholders. My second question is this. What contractual guarantees were provided to private surgical facilities for AHS to supply anaesthesiologists for operations?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to be clear. These contracts, which are posted publicly online on the AHS website, are for the CSFs to provide procedures for Alberta Health Services. This is done to increase capacity in our system. It works no differently than a hospital. CSFs provide space, equipment, and care teams. AHS then assigns the surgeons and the anaesthesiologists. AHS schedules these anaesthesiologists to support the highest priority cases and are always available for emergency and urgent surgeries in addition to those schedules on the slate in AHS or CSF facilities. This is part of our public system, and we're doing it . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, public health care provides care to all Albertans regardless of how much money they have in their bank account, regardless of how many other health complexities they may have. For-profit clinics prefer to take on the simplest procedures for patients with the least amount of complicating factors. That allows them to bill taxpayers for the largest volume, leaving hospitals with only the most complex and challenging surgeries. To the minister: are private clinics being given the least complicated patients and procedures either by their own self-selection or by deliberate assignment by AHS?

Mr. Copping: I want to be succinct. The short answer is no. AHS does the scheduling. This is no different than our current public hospitals, Mr. Speaker, where the patient is assigned based on the list that AHS have and the priorities associated by the surgeons and the anaesthesiologists. Then they are assigned to what location based on the complexity associated with the cases.

Mr. Speaker, we know that our system is broken. It was broken under the previous government. We know we need to fix it. We're investing to fix it so that we can actually save money and get more procedures done. That's what Albertans want. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Government Advertising

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, on Monday night the Premier gave herself permission to spend $9 million of taxpayers' money on pre-election campaign ads, including $3 million on the budget alone. Now, yesterday the Premier went to war with her past self, and her past self lost. Later in the day we received a FOIP showing that the former UCP Premier Kenney spent only $600,000 on budget advertising. Why is the current UCP Premier spending five times that amount to advertise just ahead of this election? Is someone over there a little nervous?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the course of this past year we're projecting to spend $20 million in our advertising budget this year. There are many components to that, certainly the affordability measures, which warrant communication with Albertans to ensure that every Albertan and every Alberta family can participate in these significant affordability measures.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, we have an Alberta Is Calling campaign that is yielding great results. Once again, in the last quarters Alberta is leading the nation in net in-migration.

Ms Notley: Well, let's talk about those affordability payments, Mr. Speaker, because the one fact the Premier is not advertising is the fact that those payments all end right after the election. She left that part out. Hmm.

Now, the Premier once said that this kind of behaviour was – and I quote – offside with what people would consider to be legitimate spending. End quote. Once again, if the Premier is willing to sell out her beliefs in just five months, what will she sell out if she gets four more years?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that 1.2 million Albertans are now enrolled and receiving the affordability payments that seniors, families, and Albertans on core support programs really need. The members opposite are clearly not paying attention. Here's a list of the programs not ending in June: our fuel tax relief – that is a permanent program – natural gas price protection, our indexing of AISH, income support, the Alberta seniors' benefit, the Alberta child and family benefit, retroactive indexing of personal income taxes. Parents will continue to benefit from affordable child care and our affordability measures in postsecondary.

What will end in June is their aspirations at government.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, back in 2012 the Premier and her Wildrose caucus were apoplectic when the then PC Premier announced $400,000 for advertising. Back then the Premier's executive director accused the Tories of using taxpayers' money as their own, quote, campaign piggy bank. Well, this Premier's piggy bank is a heck of a lot fatter. She's spending 20 times that amount. To the Premier: isn't it 20 times more wrong now than it was then, or do your beliefs change when it's your hand in the piggy bank?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're projecting to spend $20 million this year on substantive advertising on an Alberta Is Calling campaign, which is working, and to ensure that Albertans know about all the affordability measures.

My question to the Leader of the Opposition is this. Back in 2018-19 they spent $25 million in advertising ahead of the election. What did Albertans get for that? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning and Official Opposition deputy House leader.

Energy Company Municipal Tax Payment

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Rural municipalities are owed over $268 million in back taxes by oil companies. Recently the Minister of Energy ran away from reporters when they tried to ask questions about the details of his plan to block oil companies from acquiring or transferring licences on wells if their unpaid taxes exceeded a threshold amount. Municipalities deserve an answer. Simple question, Minister: how much do these companies have to dump onto residential taxpayers before the UCP starts to think it's a problem?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, we understand that municipalities and landowners are frustrated by overdue and unpaid property taxes owed by oil and gas companies. We take these matters seriously, which is why on Monday I signed an order to allow the AER authority to prevent the transfer of or issuance of a well licence if a company has outstanding taxes. In these cases the AER must be satisfied that the payment of municipal taxes have either been paid or are a condition of sale. The AER aims to develop and implement this process by April 30, so they will find out in due course. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Sweet: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, today at RMA we heard from municipal leaders who said that they haven't been consulted; in fact, the solution doesn't fix the problem. These companies are allowed to drill on landowners' properties, extract production, and take away enormous profits during boom times. They used municipal roads, water, drainage, infrastructure, and then left without paying their share. For years the UCP ignored this problem without taking action, and now on the eve of the election they've come up with a promise to make a plan. Why doesn't the Energy minister have a real plan after four years of studying this problem? Four years, Minister. The rural municipalities have a right to know.

Mr. Guthrie: Well, this morning at RMA we received overwhelming support for the initiative that this government has taken.

It should be noted that earlier this month a little further encouragement was made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and I, having sent out letters to every functioning company in Alberta who isn't compliant in paying their municipal taxes to request their co-operation. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and I look forward to settling these bad debts in an effort to strengthen the balance sheets of our rural municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, at RMA this morning we clearly heard that consultation has not happened. So I encourage all municipal leaders to join our consultation tomorrow night at albertasfuture.ca. It's easy to see why Albertans are fed up with this UCP government; they're stuck paying higher taxes that the profitable companies can take their own tax bills – now we're watching this minister and this Premier launch a scheme to hand over $20 billion of Alberta's tax money to companies who've polluted the landscape and refuse to clean up the mess. Why is the Premier turning her back on rural Albertans by sticking them with higher taxes, less infrastructure, and rewarding the bad . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, this just boils down to the anti oil and gas sentiment of the opposition. I want to be clear that the vast majority of companies in Alberta are good operators, and they do not fit this order. Our government strengthened the liability management framework. We empowered the AER's ability to intervene, and we're working to ensure municipalities have every opportunity to collect owed taxes through this order, the legislation implemented to allow for liens against assets, and the letters to delinquent companies. Municipalities and landowners across this province can expect this . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Affordability Plan and Fiscal Policy

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I frequently hear from constituents who are thankful for the affordability support they've been receiving, thankful for real action from this government. Parents tell me that thanks to affordability payments they've been able to provide their children more nutritious meals and keep them in the activities they love. I hear from households, farms, businesses that are thankful for extra help on their electricity bills, and many of my constituents appreciate the price relief they are receiving at the pumps, including Mr. Sadlier, who has joined us from Grande Prairie in the gallery today. To the Minister of Affordability and Utilities: can you provide an update on the affordability action plan and how it's supporting Albertans?

Mr. Jones: Thank you to the member for the question. The affordability action plan has provided effective and timely relief to Albertans during this period of increased inflationary pressures. The average household is receiving an estimated $900 in broad-based relief alone, and this includes up to $500 in electricity rebates to 1.9 million homes, farms, and small businesses since July. I'm also pleased to report that 1.2 million low- and middle-income families, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans have now enrolled and are receiving monthly affordability payments. Albertans have expected timely, effective action on cost-of-living concerns, and we've delivered.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and, through you, to the minister. Given that even though our economy is strong and this government has worked hard to make life more affordable today while keeping Alberta affordable long term, the cost of living remains a top-of-mind concern for many Albertans. Given that I hear from many of my constituents who are thankful for the support this government has continued to provide but are still concerned about inflation trends nation-wide and further given that we know that provinces are limited in what they can do on their own to fight inflation, to the same minister: what is this government doing to combat inflation effectively?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm pleased to share that in addition to providing cost-of-living relief to Albertans, our affordability action plan is directly combatting inflation. Newly released consumer price index data indicates that Alberta's inflation rate is nearly two points lower than the rest of Canada for the second month in a row. For February 2023 Alberta sits at 3.6 per cent compared to 5.2 per cent nationally, and this difference is directly linked to our affordability measures, including our electricity rebates and fuel tax relief, measures which are saving Albertans hundreds of dollars and lowering inflation. Alberta continues to lead the way. I'm proud to be part of a government with the best . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again, through you, to the minister. Given that we inherited a fiscal train wreck from the members opposite that required tough decisions throughout this term to get the province back on track and given that we can't address the needs of today if we have to mortgage our future by borrowing from future generations and further given that we want to position the province well to respond to potential future crises, to the Minister of Finance: can you tell this House how responsible fiscal management fights inflation and secures our future?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very appropriate question. Responsible fiscal management matters. I've been on the record – and I truly believe this to be true – that the best thing governments can do during times of inflation is spend less, borrow less, and tax less. That's why we're suspending the fuel tax as a permanent feature in Alberta's economy. That's why we reduced our debt this year by $13.4 billion, saving Albertans $560 million in debt-service costs. Responsible management matters. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

2:10 Energy Company Liability

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that if you make a mess, you clean it up; that is, unless you're the Premier's friend. Then what's clear is that you get paid off with Albertans' money to clean it up. That's the premise of the Premier's R-star program, that offers up to $20 billion in royalty credits for a small number of bad companies to clean up their own messes. This is a giant waste of Albertans' money, especially at a time when our health care system is in crisis and Albertans are struggling to make ends meet. Why is this government prioritizing their friends over Albertans?

Mr. Guthrie: You know, Mr. Speaker, the NDP are desperate. It's obvious. They can't find their footing, and their followers are getting frustrated with their Dumpster-fire campaign. With the lack of traction, they're just trying to manufacture a crisis. There is no program, Mr. Speaker, and there's nothing in the budget, but that doesn't matter to the NDP. If they keep repeating it, then it must be true. The people of this province: they can see through this trash, and it's exactly why they cannot be trusted. On this side of the House we will remain focused on making life more affordable for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, hidden agendas are hidden. That's what we're trying to speak to today.

Given that the president of the Rural Municipalities of Alberta said that the Premier's $20 billion giveaway is how a fox would design a henhouse and given that Scotiabank has said that the Premier's plan could create "negative public sentiment toward the [oil and gas industry]" and that it "goes against the core capitalist principle that private companies should take full responsibility for the liabilities they willingly accept," why is this government so intent on wasting $20 billion of Albertans' money?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, it should be understood by everyone that the NDP want to see an end to fossil fuel production. We know that our producers are good stewards of the environment. Methane reductions: 44 per cent; oil sands emissions reductions: over 35 per cent. The Pathways Alliance has a goal to be net neutral by 2050, and all of these come with billions of dollars of capital investment, and all of these are done above and beyond mandatory closure limits. The NDP's ideology only paves a way to poverty.

Member Ceci: Given that the government has not yet held public consultations on this $20 billion giveaway – all they've done is hold a few closed-door meetings with a select group of people and friends – and given that the Premier lobbied for this giveaway before becoming Premier and hired another lobbyist into her office to orchestrate this giveaway and given that the minister has said that there won't be anymore details about this handout until after the election, why is this government hiding this $20 billion giveaway from Albertans? Are they too scared to run on it? Run on it.

Mr. Guthrie: Let me provide you with a proof point here, one regarding the provincial board of the NDP. On this board sits Gil McGowan of the Alberta Federation of Labour, who was supposed to be a champion of Alberta workers, but, Mr. Speaker, that's not the case. He opposed Trans Mountain. He opposed Energy East, opposed Keystone, opposed Northern Gateway, opposed the Alberta Clipper, and that's not all. In 2016 the NDP appointed him co-chair of a committee to diversify the oil and gas sector, and by diversify we mean eliminate, one more reason the NDP cannot be trusted. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The minister has had his opportunity to answer the question. Now it's time for the Official Opposition House Leader to ask hers.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's first responders are heroes, and this is something we can all agree on. We remember the support that Albertans had for the heroes of the 2016 Wood Buffalo wildfire, who put themselves at great risk to protect communities and people. The very last thing these heroes need is to worry about whether they will have access to WCB coverage. They deserve the peace of mind to know that if they fall ill due to work, they will not have to fight or wait for coverage. I have an amendment to introduce this afternoon that will provide this peace of mind. I've shared it with the minister more than a week ago. Will he rethink his opposition and support it?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the member and the member's hard work, and I did have an opportunity to see the amendment. I'll just say this, that we're going to make sure that no firefighters are left behind on WCB coverage in Fort McMurray. We're going to make sure that all firefighters, all emergency services personnel are respected properly but also make sure that WCB and the people that support it, which, of course, are the employers of Alberta, are treated respectfully. All of our decisions are evidence based, something different than they've ever done before.

Ms Gray: Given that the WCB is a partnership between workers and employers and given that this debate should be about the firefighters and their families, who are worried that Bill 9 may exclude them, and given the stress and the sacrifice these firefighters put into saving communities from the Beast, they deserve better than a bill that may leave some behind. Given that the government doesn't need to do any work – they just need to listen to firefighters and support an amendment that's already been drafted – can the red tape minister explain why he doesn't think that every hero of the Fort McMurray wildfire deserves the confidence to know that they will be covered for occupational cancers?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, WCB has a fairness review, and they make sure that these cases, as they come forward, are treated fairly. That's exactly what we're going to make sure happens. We've already sent a clear indication to WCB what needs to be done in this particular case, and there's more good news coming. I just wish the member would be a little bit patient. I mean, after all, she was the minister in charge of this file when that particular person that was in that fire died from cancer, and she was the minister that could have made the change. She didn't make the change because she knew it was the wrong thing to do at the time. We're doing the right thing. We'll continue to support firefighters in Alberta.

Ms Gray: Given that the UCP has been in government for four years and has done nothing and given that we have a bill in front of the House today that we can amend and make better and given that this should not be about politics – it should be about what's best for our heroic front-line responders, who deserve better than a fairness review – and given that Ontario has shown retroactive coverage is absolutely possible, can the minister explain why he is fine with denying coverage to a single one of the firefighters who were there in 2016 fighting that wildfire? Let me assure him that an Alberta NDP government will correct this failure.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the member has said that she doesn't want to play politics. Well, she's playing politics. She had the chance, she had the ability to sign on the dotted line, and she didn't. You know why? Because it was the wrong thing to do. We are doing the right thing. There is more good news coming. The firefighters in Alberta are going to be extremely happy. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Allergy Awareness and Supports

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, anaphylactic reactions are allergic reactions that can cause severe effects, up to and including loss of life. Severe allergies are often to food, environment, sometimes to bees and wasps. Thousands of Albertans, including myself, live with severe allergies, and reactions can occur unexpectedly. Can the Minister of Health please share with this Assembly the importance of the Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act, that was passed earlier in this Legislature?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. In 2019 the government of Alberta passed the Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act. The act requires schools to maintain an epinephrine autoinjector within the school for use if a student becomes anaphylactic. This, along with the Canadian anaphylaxis readiness education training program, provides teachers and administrators in all public, separate, charter, private, and francophone schools in Alberta with quick information and access to EpiPens when needed.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, given that thousands of Albertans live with severe, life-threatening allergies, with effects ranging from skin irritations, hives, severe stomach pain and upset, choking, and loss of life, and given that often people do not know they have a life-threatening allergy as this can develop at any time, can the minister please provide the Assembly with an overview of the measures this government has taken to help protect the lives and health of Albertans living with severe allergies and other related conditions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for the question. As I noted earlier, we did pass the Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act, which requires schools to maintain an EpiPen within the school for use if a student becomes anaphylactic. We also provide education about the causes, signs, and symptoms of anaphylaxis and what steps people can take if someone is experiencing issues, including calling emergency services for help when needed.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, given that schools are not the only public spaces where someone may have their first anaphylactic reaction and that someone having an anaphylactic reaction may not have epinephrine with them and given that B.C., New Brunswick, and 35 of the 50 American states are beginning to allow for epinephrine to be stored in public spaces, can the minister please look into whether or not it would be beneficial for Alberta to follow their lead and allow entities the freedom to store epinephrine in public spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the hon. member for her advocacy on this issue. Certainly, our government can explore what other jurisdictions have implemented through legislation and see what lessons can be learned to improve our response. We know that epinephrine is a powerful drug and, if administered incorrectly or for an inappropriate purpose, may result in harm or even death. Proper instruction on recognizing anaphylaxis, proper use of EpiPens, and emergency steps to follow are critical and not being overlooked, but we're happy to do the research and work with the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

School Construction in Northeast Calgary

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The community of Redstone in Calgary needs a school. It's a vibrant and growing community with young families who deserve access to top-quality education in their neighbourhood, but this government has completely ignored this need. It is disgraceful. Luckily, come May, Redstone will get its school moving if Alberta's NDP is elected as government. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why have you ignored the needs of children and families living in northeast Calgary?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again, the member opposite needs to do his homework. In fact, we have provided more schools in Calgary than the NDP did. During the four years under the NDP, they only built 11 projects or announced 11 projects. We are over 18 projects and six for the CBE alone this year.

Mr. Sabir: Given that I have done my homework and that it takes about three years to build a school, which means the community of Redstone is going to have to be without a school for some time, and given that government knew about the need for a school in northeast Calgary but chose to ignore it and given that the Alberta NDP is proud to support education in this province and build schools in growing communities, can the Minister of Infrastructure explain why they only approved one new school in Alberta's largest city this year and nothing for the growing community of Redstone?

Member LaGrange: Well, I'm not sure how he does his homework, but he would get an F on it because, Mr. Speaker, Calgary was approved for a new elementary school in Redstone, also for a new K to 9 school in Nolan Hill, a new Catholic school in Chestermere, a new high school in Rangeview, a new Bishop McNally high school. We're continuing to fund more and more schools than the NDP ever did, 106 over four years; the NDP, 47.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the students and families who live in northeast Calgary clearly do not matter to this government and given that the UCP school capital plan ignores the need of northeast Calgary and given that the UCP has turned their back on students, staff, and families all across this province by ignoring the capital needs of school boards, will the Minister of Infrastructure explain to Calgarians and all Albertans why he's okay with stuffing students in ever more crowded classrooms instead of building the new school that we need?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, shame on them. Shame on them for politicizing our children. Shame on them, because we've added hundreds of millions of dollars to operating budgets in Calgary alone. We are adding an additional 11 school projects in Calgary in this year alone. Shame on them. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Francophone Services and Education

Ms Renaud: Cette première ministre a bâti un cabinet énorme, et elle a créé douze postes de secrétaires parlementaires, mais elle a choisi d'ignorer la communauté francophone. Le recensement de 2021 nous a appris qu'il y a plus de 260,000 albertains qui connaît le français. Ma question pour le ministre de culture: pourquoi ne pas nommer un secrétaire parlementaire pour les francophones quand il sait que c'est une communauté énorme?

Mr. Glubish: M. le Président, notre gouvernement est un allié avec la communauté francophone.

Mr. Speaker, I am a proud speaker of French, I'm a minister in this cabinet, and I work very closely with the Premier and with her entire cabinet to represent the government to the francophone community across this province. We care deeply about Franco-Albertans. We care about their future, and we value their contributions to this province, and we will continue to operate in that fashion.

Ms Renaud: Le gouvernement a coupé le financement du Campus Saint-Jean et plus tard combat l'association canadienne française d'Alberta devant les tribunaux pour défendre leurs coupures. C'est un droit constitutionnel d'avoir accès aux programmes universitaires en français, mais le PCU ne respecte pas la constitution ni la loi. Le ministre, va-t-il s'excuser pour leur mauvaise décision? Oui ou non?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, as the member well knows, there is a current court case ongoing, and we will not comment on an ongoing court case. That is completely unacceptable.

But what I can tell you is that our government cares deeply about Campus Saint-Jean and the role that they play in our postsecondary institution. Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of being there just last week to speak with them and to explore the topic of scientific research in Alberta but doing so in the first language of French. We know it's important for Franco-Albertans to be able to participate in Alberta in all aspects of society but to do that in the language that they were born and raised in, and we will be committed to working with them to make that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Les Albertains doivent avoir accès à l'éducation en français. C'est un droit constitutionnel. Les données de recensement montrent qu'il y a un besoin croissant d'éducation en français. On sait qu'il n'y a pas assez d'enseignants francophones, et quand même ce gouvernement attaque le Campus Saint-Jean. Le ministre responsable pour les questions francophones, va-t-il expliquer aux Albertains francophones qui veulent leurs enfants soient éduqués en français pourquoi l'école francophone n'est pas une priorité pour ce gouvernement?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again the members opposite seem to ignore the record. Under the NDP they only built four schools for the francophone community. We've already allocated 10. While the members opposite don't want to hear this, they actually took apart, they got rid of the francophone directorate that was under my purview, under my department. We recreated that under the French-language service branch. We added the francophone equivalency grant, the French-language service branch. We keep going and working with the francophone community. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Education Funding and Parental Choice

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As families flock to Alberta to gain a better financial future, even more children will be looking to attend one of the many schools and options that our province offers. I've got a brief question for the Minister of Education: what is our government doing to ensure that every family has a place to send their child to school while also ensuring that school authorities are properly equipped to receive the increase in students?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2023 adds an almost $2 billion increase over three years to education operating, with $820 million specifically going to support enrolment growth. This funding will support school authorities to hire more additional staff, including teachers and classroom supports. On top of this significant investment, the supplemental enrolment grant will also continue next year, which provides additional funding for school authorities facing enrolment growth above a certain threshold. This grant provides more than $21 million in additional funding to school authorities, and it will continue next year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for the answer. Given that many new students are coming to our province and will find a seat in an Alberta classroom, we know that classrooms may become increasingly complex. Also given that many students in Alberta have diverse cognitive, social, and emotional needs – some may have learning disabilities or behavioural challenges, and others may need extra support learning English as an additional language – to the same minister: what is the government doing to ensure all students are set up for success?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to let you know that we are providing $126 million over three years to address class size complexity and enable school authorities to hire more educational assistants or increase their hours, provide more training opportunities for staff, and/or hire specialists such as counsellors, psychologists, and interpreters. Students with learning disabilities or behavioural challenges or those who need extra support in English as an additional language will benefit from this funding. This is part of $1.5 billion in Budget 2023 that will go to support our most vulnerable students. [interjections]

2:30

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. member.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is a province that offers choice in education and supports parent choice and given that choice includes publicly funded Catholic education, alternative programs, charter and independent schools, can the same minister please tell this House how choice in education has been supported under Budget 2023, and how does this contrast with how it was treated under the previous government?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I've heard many of the members opposite repeatedly share inaccuracies about education funding. In Budget 2023 our government is making historic investments in education. Make no mistake; the members opposite want to eliminate choice. They do not support public charter schools, independent schools, or home education. I was president of the ACSTA under the NDP government, and let me assure this House that the greatest threat to publicly funded, authentically Catholic education under the NDP was the NDP. On this side of the House we stand for families and students and for choice in education. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Seniors' Support

Ms Sigurdson: The UCP government has a very sad record when it comes to standing up for Alberta seniors. One of their first moves was cutting the seniors' benefit, imposing new fees on home care, and throwing 60,000 Albertans off the seniors' drug plan, and let's not forget the plans the Premier has to get her hands on their pensions. Now the UCP is hiking accommodation rates for seniors living in continuing care. Can the minister explain why he feels that seniors need to bear these extra costs?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations is rising.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud of our government. Just today we're taking action to support more households with affordable housing and stronger foundations and working with seniors. Our affordable housing partnership program is providing nearly $66 million to support 11 projects across the province. The funding will support hundreds of families, individuals, children, volunteers, veterans, seniors, and those recovering from addictions. It's a great program.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that raising these fees is just the latest in punishing policies imposed by the UCP onto seniors who worked to build Alberta and given that seniors are already concerned because of the decision of the UCP to eliminate the Seniors Advocate, whose role it was to fight for seniors, and given that once upon a time the Premier herself supported having a Seniors Advocate, that she insisted had to be independent, why did the Premier abandon her support for an independent Seniors Advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. As the hon. member knows, and we've spoken many times in this House, you know, we focused on – given that much of the work that the Seniors Advocate was doing was health related, we combined that office with the Health Advocate and the Alberta mental health advocate, and we also brought staff over from that office. That staff today continues to provide services to seniors to be able to refer them to the program. I'm proud of the work our government is doing supporting seniors, particularly in terms of the billion dollars we're spending to transform our continuing care sector. We're going to continue to support seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this UCP government has deferred this hike of the accommodation charges to right after the election and given that this is just another example of the UCP springing a pile of new costs and fees onto Albertans right after the polls are closed, why won't the minister tell seniors the whole story about how expensive a UCP government is and will be for them before they cast their vote?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be part of a government that's actually looking after seniors. As the hon. member already knows, fees go up with the consumer price index. We recognized how difficult it would be for seniors if the fees went up, so we actually subsidized those fees this year, you know, to be able to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member had her opportunity to ask the question. The hon. minister can answer it.

Mr. Copping: We subsidized those fees so that they only went up a small portion, and we continue to bear those costs associated with it. Mr. Speaker, I look forward to working with my cabinet colleagues to continue to support seniors and make sure the cost of living doesn't go up as high and they can afford it.

School Construction in North Edmonton

Mr. Nielsen: Edmonton-Decore is home to all three high schools in all of north Edmonton. Queen Elizabeth high school opened in 1958, Archbishop O'Leary opened up in 1960, and M.E. LaZerte opened up in 1969. All of them are full. Queen Elizabeth and O'Leary are, in fact, over capacity. Much to the surprise of no one, the UCP failed to invest even a single dollar in upgrading or replacing these schools. Can the Infrastructure minister explain if he has an issue with north Edmonton, and if not, why is he ignoring the needs of the students there?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I have to correct the members opposite. The public school division this year alone received their top five asks for schools. We worked really hard with the Edmonton public school division because in the previous years they weren't actually prioritizing schools that needed to be built in high-growth areas, and the other ones that they had prioritized were actually good schools that did not have health and safety issues, that were not in high-priority areas. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore is the only one with the call.

Mr. Nielsen: That's not what I heard from those boards.

Given that the board chair of Edmonton public says that it will be out of high school space by 2027 but given that the attitude of this minister is that the students of north Edmonton should just get used to their overcrowded classrooms since this government is in no rush to build schools that they need and given that while the minister talks about the process of building schools, he's cheerleading the Premier's plan to hand over $20 billion to bad companies that refuse to clean up their own messes, can the Infrastructure minister explain why he feels these companies who don't follow their legal obligation are more deserving than Alberta students?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, from 2015 to 2019, under the NDP watch, Edmonton only received eight new projects. Under our watch we've already allocated 16 new projects. I have to wonder if Edmonton public schools . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The minister is the one with the call.

Member LaGrange: I have to wonder if the Edmonton public school division isn't playing politics as well because their vice-chair is running for the NDP, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Nielsen: Two hundred and forty-four new and modernized schools, I know, at least while I was there.

Given that we will be out of . . .

The Speaker: No, no, no. No preamble. This is the point, why there is the no-preamble rule, so that you don't do exactly what you just did.

The hon. member can continue directly to his question.

Mr. Nielsen: Given that we will be out of high school space in 2027 and given that rather than solving that, the minister and government play the blame game to cover their failure to properly support students in my constituency and all of north Edmonton and given that the Premier has tens of thousands of dollars to sole-source contracts for a campaign manager and nearly $10 million to spend to promote her government right before an election, can the Infrastructure minister explain why there's money for the Premier's friends while north Edmonton students are ignored?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again, the members opposite need to go and do their homework. Edmonton public school division's overall increase to their overall budget, which is $1.1 billion: they're going to see almost $66 million additional dollars just to their operating budget. They have over $28 million in their operating reserves and over $41 million in their capital reserves. We are making sure that all school divisions across this province are well resourced, well funded, and ready for students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Mental Health and Addiction Services

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we are emerging from a global pandemic, Albertans are struggling to find the support they need. The mental health of Albertans is essential to proper growth and development, and it is crucial in building and maintaining healthy communities. If passed, Budget 2023 will invest a record-breaking $275 million for mental health and addiction support. Can the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction explain what this funding will do for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I just want to reiterate that, if passed, Budget 2023 would provide a record-breaking investment of $270 million in funding for the Mental Health and Addiction ministry. This is an increase of over 200 per cent from when the NDP was in power. This funding will support key priorities like continuing to build recovery-oriented systems of care across Alberta, that will ensure every Albertan has the opportunity to be supported in their pursuit of recovery from addiction and mental health challenges no matter where they are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that youth in our province have been hit hard these past few years in relation to pandemic restrictions and unconventional learning techniques and given that assisting our youth is one of the top priorities this government has planned for 2023, can the same minister explain what new assistance is available to support youth and children with their mental health and how we can better promote early intervention?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the hon. member for the question. As stated by the hon. member, again, Alberta's youth is one of the top priorities for this government, and that includes their mental health. Through Budget 2023 the province has provided $2.4 million to Kids Help Phone for children and youth to access professional counselling and crisis services. Our government is also investing $10.8 million over three years to continue expanding youth mental health hubs across Alberta to help improve youth mental wellness. In addition, we are partnering with CASA, a recent announcement that I made of $92 million.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-North.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that recovery is possible and everyone should be supported throughout their personal mental health and addiction journey and given that our government is working towards modernizing Alberta's primary health care system and further given that this government is planning to transform how addiction and mental health services are treated, can the same minister please explain what Albertans can expect with a more modernized primary health care system and with an Alberta model of care?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question to the member. I am working closely, of course, with the Minister of Health to ensure that we modernize Alberta's primary care system. We are supporting recovery and mental health and addiction challenges. Noted was the Alberta model, a model that's getting attention from across the world. People are calling us and asking us how we're experiencing the successes that we are through the recovery-oriented system of care that we have been building out throughout the province. We have taken historic steps such as removing user fees, making counselling services available, affordable, and accessible across the province. VODP is an award-winning program, treatment on demand.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue with the remainder of the daily Routine.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Bill 209, the Animal Protection (Prevention of Animal Neglect) Amendment Act, 2023, sponsored by yours truly, myself.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Kananaskis.

Ms Rosin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give oral notice of Bill 208, the Municipal Government (Tourism Community Designation) Amendment Act, 2023, sponsored by myself.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has a tabling.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a number of letters from my constituents who are speaking out for the protection of the Athabasca watershed, calling on this government to work with Indigenous communities in the area. All of these letters were sent before the news of the Kearl tailings leak, so they're more timely than ever, and we'd be wise to heed their warning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were no points of order today. That brings us to Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Adjournment of Spring Sitting

25. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2023 spring sitting of the Assembly shall stand adjourned upon the Government House Leader advising the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The Speaker: Hon. Members, the hon. the Government House Leader has moved Government Motion 25. Pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) this is not a debatable motion.

[Government Motion 25 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 11 Appropriation Act, 2023

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Bill 11 requests a total of $57.4 billion from the general revenue fund, consistent with Budget '23, consistent with the budget I presented in this House on February 28. This will add a total of $180 million for the Legislative Assembly and $57.2 billion for the government to meet funding commitments as laid out in the '23-24 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the '23-24 government estimates. The government's funding will provide for $50 billion in expense, $3.9 billion for capital investment, $1.5 billion for financial transactions, and $1.5 billion for contingencies.

Mr. Chair, I ask all my colleagues in the Assembly to support this bill, and I request to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 12 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments that would like to be offered? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Bill 12 will provide authority for government to pay from the general revenue fund for additional costs that are not already covered or otherwise provided for during the current fiscal year.

Again I ask all of my colleagues in this Legislative Assembly to support this bill, and I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 9 Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members wishing to add comments, questions, or amendments in respect to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen.

Ms Pancholi: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. I've actually lost track of how many red tape reduction acts we've had, so I was going to say number 5, number 7, number 8, number 12.

The odd thing I will just mention – because, hopefully, this is the last time I'm speaking to an omnibus piece of legislation called "red tape reduction." You know, it's become sort of a generic term for the UCP government to try to jam in things that would in some circumstances be considered miscellaneous statutes amendments and then in some cases to do things for performative reasons and then sometimes to do legitimate – I believe sometimes there is some legitimacy, but it's often, like, crammed in with other pieces that are completely irrelevant or problematic. I think some of these pieces could be worthy of their own pieces of legislation and conversation, but they try to put it all together into these omnibus pieces of legislation so that Albertans can't really know what's happening.

This piece of legislation, this omnibus piece of legislation, does change up to 15, if I'm correct, pieces of legislation, some of them that seem, you know, pretty innocuous. If I have some time, I'll go back to those ones, but I do want to talk a little bit about some of the changes that are, I think, worthy of a little bit of debate and discussion. Here in Committee of the Whole is an opportune time to do that kind of discussion, Mr. Chair.

I want to begin with some of the changes that are very small in this bill but that are made to the Income and Employment Supports Act. As I said, this is a very small change in the actual bill, but it does make a change that I think is worthy of discussion. It says, for example – it's section 5 of the bill, and it amends the Income and Employment Supports Act to add a provision. The provision is essentially – and I'll read it into the record, Mr. Chair. It says:

Consequences of outstanding warrant

15.1 The Director must, subject to the regulations, refuse to provide income support and benefits to an applicant or recipient under Part 2, Division 1 when notified that

- (a) a warrant for the arrest of the applicant or recipient has been issued in respect of a prescribed offence, and
- (b) the warrant has not been executed.

What this does is essentially say that, you know, an individual can be refused – in fact, it says "must" be refused by the director – income support benefits if that individual has an outstanding warrant issued against them.

I think in principle we can somewhat understand this kind of a change and the idea of, you know, one of the ways that we compel people is that we have warrants, essentially, basically, meaning an individual can be brought before the court if found to appear before the court – a court for various reasons; let me just add that. I'll get back to that point. But why should an individual who has an outstanding warrant be eligible for financial support? I can understand that there is some fundamental thinking about that: if somebody's got an outstanding warrant, maybe they shouldn't be entitled to government supports.

However, there's a little bit more, I think, nuance and detail to that that I think we need to better understand because, for one thing, as it stands right now, it does say that it's a warrant that is issued for a prescribed offence. Later on in Bill 9 it sets out that there will be the ability to prescribe offences for the purposes of this act, but until that's decided, in terms of which offences are considered prescribed offences, we have to be clear that bench warrants are issued all the time for individuals simply for nonappearance in court.

A bench warrant is essentially, you know, ordered where somebody fails to appear in court. It means you've missed a scheduled trial date, you've missed an appearance, and the judge issues a bench warrant. Sometimes those are not for significant offences. Sometimes they're minor offences. That individual may not even know that they've missed an appearance, so they may have a bench warrant issued against them, and they may not be aware of it. I think it's important that we are not further penalizing and isolating and ostracizing folks who may, through – we know the complexities of the court system are hard for many people to navigate, especially if there are language barriers, especially if there are educational barriers, to really understand.

I would hate to see that there are people who genuinely, with no ill intent, may have a bench warrant that's been issued against them, yet now they're being cut off from very critical income supports, which really just furthers, perpetuates that disadvantage that they're experiencing and can further isolate them and create more strain at a time when – I mean, I think this would be the case no matter when we're talking about this – we know that many Albertans are struggling with cost of living right now. We know many Albertans are struggling with finding appropriate housing, with being able to pay their cellphone bills, with being able to, you know, afford transit, and all of those pieces. I don't think it's appropriate to be basically piling on more disadvantage and isolation to folks who may not be aware.

Now, again, there are circumstances where I think we would all agree that there are individuals who, when there is a warrant issued, should not be eligible for government supports. I see that in other jurisdictions, in other provinces. They've been more specific about what kinds of offences: serious offences, right? If there was somebody who has a warrant issued because of a serious criminal offence, I think there can be some consensus here that we don't believe that that person should then be getting income supports.

So I guess my concern around Bill 9 is that we don't yet know what offences will be captured by this, and we want to be sure that we are addressing the problem in a very targeted way to make sure that those individuals who have warrants issued on serious criminal offences are the ones who will not be eligible for income supports. That's just one piece that I wanted to mention about that.

The other piece is that I'm also conscious that we do not want to be in any way penalizing family members who may be innocent of any wrongdoing whatsoever, you know, when perhaps the individual who has a warrant issued against them is perhaps the only – is financially supporting the household. This can be very detrimental for children, for spouses of somebody, for partners of an individual. Again, if we're going to do this kind of action, I believe it should be very specific and targeted so that we are not punishing and further pushing into poverty those individuals who are at no fault whatsoever but may have the unfortunate reality of living with somebody who has a warrant issued out for them.

I'm wondering what measures are being taken, especially because the proposed amendment to the act in this bill is prescriptive. It doesn't say that the director has discretion; it says that "the Director must, subject to the regulations, refuse to provide income support." So what abilities are there for the director to take into consideration that there may be individuals who are dependent – children, family members – on that person and who are really being hurt by that decision to prevent that person from applying for income supports?

You know, I think there are some other questions that we kind of need to ask about looking at what other jurisdictions have done and what has been effective and what has not been effective. Have there been conversations done with those who work on the ground with those who receive income supports? There are so many organizations, both in Edmonton and Calgary and across the province, who work very closely with those who rely on income supports, and I think those conversations are important.

As well as to note, you know, is this an effective way of ensuring that – does that compel individuals to then, I guess, appear for warrants or, basically, stand up and be subject to whatever the trial proceeding or court proceeding is? I guess what I'm asking is: does that work? Perhaps that has been done, that analysis has been done, and I look forward to hearing from a UCP minister, either the minister who tabled this bill or the ones responsible for the income supports act, to address that question of how effective this is as a mechanism.

I want to also talk a little bit about the changes that have been made in the act to the Petty Trespass Act. This is an example, Mr. Chair, I believe, of an amendment that is performative at best and wildly likely to be incredibly ineffective. At worst it could actually create greater tension and – I don't know – put some federal workers in very difficult situations as a result of the rhetoric around this change more so than the change itself. You know, Bill 9, under the Petty Trespass Act, basically amends the Petty Trespass Act to include the statement: "This Act binds the Government of Canada." That's what it does. It says that the government of Canada is bound by the Petty Trespass Act, which has always been the case. It always will be the case. It is completely unnecessary for this to be even included in the bill because it's pretty much completely unnecessary.

Of course, we know that the reason behind – and we saw some very awkward, I have to say, press conferences with the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction. A really embarrassing performance at a press conference. When asked, really, "What does this change?" the response was: it really doesn't change much of anything; it's clarifying the situation. What this is – it's not even anything that has to do with Alberta, Mr. Chair. You know, sometimes I wonder if the members on the other side are angling for federal politics or they want to be Saskatchewan MLAs. I'm not sure what's going on, but half the time they're not even talking about things that have to do with Alberta.

This is a perfect example. This was really one case in Saskatchewan, that I don't even remember the details of other than it didn't really turn out to be much of anything, but everybody in Saskatchewan, all the conservatives in Saskatchewan got their hands up in a roar of, you know, federal employees trespassing on private property. I understand that not one single UCP minister has been able to point to a single instance of this being a concern in Alberta. When asked, they could not come up with an example. They're creating a – I don't know, this is a made-up problem, and this is a made-up response and a made-up answer to it. Fine. They want to play games; they can do that on their own time. It's really annoying to do it on Albertans' time and, frankly, on our time. I've got so many other things to be doing, but here I am talking to this.

This is just an example, Mr. Chair, of how this government is consistently performing but not actually delivering. They've done that in so many instances when it comes to the federal government. They're very good at throwing tantrums and writing strongly worded letters and now, in this case, passing a completely redundant amendment, but what have they delivered for Albertans on that front? We've had four years, Mr. Chair, of watching the silly tantrums and antics of this government that has failed to deliver.

I think fondly to why I ran. I think we're all doing a little bit of self-reflection, right? We're at the end of a four-year term. We're looking at re-election for some of us, some of us are choosing to retire, and, you know, we're doing a little bit of reflection. I go back to one of the reasons why I ran in 2019. I had multiple reasons, but one of them was watching as an outsider, not politically active at all from 2015 to 2019 and watching the Premier at that time deliver on something that I knew would make a big difference for Albertans and having to do it by having conversations, negotiating, pressuring, and that was forcing, essentially, or convincing the federal government to buy TMX. That was something that was pretty critical for our economy, and that was something that the former Premier was able to do, actually deliver something from the federal government for Albertans.

If the UCP wants to continue to do their performative antics, that's fine. I mean, I guess this is the nonsense that we've dealt with for four years. I guess I have the patience to go through it for another couple of days. Really, it's not delivering anything. It's a waste of time, but if they get to pat themselves on their backs and say, "Hey, we passed a piece of legislative change that will do absolutely nothing," good on them, I suppose, Mr. Chair.

What I do want to point out is that hyping up that rhetoric, that there is actually some wrong that they're trying to address here, is actually going to put at risk Albertans, Albertans who do work for the federal government, Albertans who – because there are many of them; there are thousands in this province who work for the federal government who are Albertans – do things like census, who do things like implement surveillance or other kinds of work pursuant to federal legislation, legitimate federal legislation. They perform that work because that is their responsibility to meet those standards. This kind of rhetoric is going to be dangerous, I believe, for some of them, and I don't think that this government cares too much about that. They just care about, I guess, looking like they're doing something even though they're not actually doing something.

I had to put some comments on – as I mentioned, Mr. Chair, there are other pieces of legislation that are amended by this act. Most of them are innocuous, but I know that my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has a lot to say. I share her concerns around the changes to WCB and making sure that all firefighters – all firefighters – are provided the supports and the coverage that they deserve. I should think that would be something that all members of this House can get on board with. I look forward to hearing a more fulsome discussion about that and to supporting any amendment that would ensure that every brave firefighter who fought in Fort McMurray on behalf of all Albertans – they deserve to be recognized and have their health conditions recognized and covered. It's, quite literally, Mr. Chair, the smallest thing we can do compared to what they gave to all of us. I look forward to having that discussion further.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any others wishing to speak to the bill? Oh, I see the hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, in committee. I want to continue with some of the comments that I shared with this House yesterday when we were in second reading. Again, you know, just to add to my colleague's excellent comments about being exhausted by these omnibus bills, they really just inflict a lot of damage in a lot of ways in that they hide some things, some changes that this government is making in this great big piece of legislation, that does do a few things that are probably good to do – things to fix, things to alter – but what they also do is put in some other things that are sometimes performative and sometimes have the ability to create or cause harm.

One of the areas that my colleague talked about is the changes to income support. Now, certainly, I would agree that there are some warrants for some crimes. There are, absolutely, some people that I don't think should be eligible for government support, but I don't think that we should leave this government with all of the power to come up with this list behind closed doors. They've demonstrated to us over and over again that they don't seem to have the best interests of Albertans in mind when they're making decisions. They seem to have their own political futures front of mind as opposed to the best interest of Albertans. We've seen repeatedly over the last four years that this government makes decisions that are questionable at best.

Let's say that the government proceeds, and they likely will because, obviously, they have a majority. They have the ability to change whatever they like for now, for a few more weeks. But there are some issues that I don't believe that they've thought of. They've demonstrated to us that they make these decisions like that, without a lot of thought, without a lot of consultation, and certainly without a lot of data and research.

Taking you back, in 2019 this government set us on a course to make poverty worse. That's just a fact, Mr. Chair. They deindexed benefits, all kinds of benefits, not just benefits for severely handicapped individuals, who rely on AISH, but also people who rely on income support and also the seniors' benefit. I won't even get into more income taxes that all of us had to pay because of their sneaky work. But this is what they did.

They started us on a path to make poverty worse. Not just that; they chose not to aggressively invest in affordable housing. They chose not to aggressively invest in preventative social services, and we are seeing things that have happened as a result. We know that food bank usage has exploded right across the province. That's a fact. Just google any report. The Food Banks Canada report is right there. It will tell you the increase. Every food bank is feeling the pressure.

We also know that there are more people in Alberta that don't have homes than ever before, and that is a direct result of changes that this government has made. Now, I will say that, yes, certainly the pandemic also played a role; it played a significant role. But this government almost did everything that they could to make things even harder.

Let me give you an example of somebody on AISH. Let's say that I'm a person with a severe disability, and I qualify for AISH. I receive that benefit. I decide at some point in my life to get married. Now my spouse's income is taken into account when the calculation is made for what I will receive from AISH; there are clawbacks. During the pandemic, let's say, my spouse lost their job and needed to go on EI or got a CERB benefit. Well, it was likely an overpayment because they were probably getting more than they were before – a lot of low-income people, unfortunately, live on AISH – so that income was clawed back.

We know right now, Mr. Chair, there are many, many Albertans that are AISH recipients or income support recipients that are on a repayment plan. That means that they're having money taken out of their deposits every single month to pay back an overpayment because their spouse, perhaps, lost their job and earned more on EI or CERB – for sure CERB – and now it's getting clawed back from AISH or income support. That is the reality, but get this. This government is giving them $100 affordability cheques right till the election. So they get $100, but they're losing $100 to pay back clawback that this government did not fix. They knew about it. We asked repeatedly about it. They chose not to fix it. So they did not make life better for Albertans.

Now this very vulnerable group – and for the most part the group on income support is quite vulnerable. To be eligible for income support, you pretty much need to be destitute. You can't have a lot of savings; you can have a vehicle to get to and from work and things, but you can't have much. You need to have exhausted all other supports before you apply and are eligible for income support. So imagine that you have a director now that is making decisions about warrants and is just going to say: yeah; if there's an outstanding warrant, you are no longer eligible, or you are cut off.

And, like my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud said, it's likely that some people wouldn't even know. They don't even know that they have interacted with the justice system and there's a warrant for their arrest. That income support will cease, and then the harm becomes worse. That cycle of poverty becomes worse, and you know what happens? [interjection] They're scoffing over there, which is a bit weird. When it becomes worse, it is more expensive on health care. We know this. Emergency rooms get packed. People go without treatment for mental illnesses, all kinds of treatment. More people are homeless. There are all kinds of problems. Policing: there are more demands on policing because there are more issues. All of these things compound and eventually cost more money. If you invest properly in poverty reduction, and investing properly means not taking away – that is key here: poverty reduction. When that is top of mind, poverty reduction happens. This kind of stuff is really just performative.

Let's talk about people on income support and some of the issues. Now, it shouldn't surprise anyone in this place that there are likely many people that are reliant on government supports that have unresolved legal issues. The social and economic cost of unresolved legal problems and various gaps in access to justice are hard to estimate, but there is no doubt whatsoever that they are substantial, and the costs are sometimes transferred to other sectors, as I said, including personal health, public health, public housing, child care, and so much more. Considering the costs and barriers associated with accessing justice, it is – and we know this – marginalized populations due to intersectional barriers they face.

Now, I'm going to give you this example, and this is just one, likely, that we all can picture. In general, homeless populations are groups of people that do not have homes, face enhanced vulnerability due to mental health conditions and increased potential to become homeless. Chances are that they may at some point end up with a warrant, but think about this. Homelessness stems from poverty and social inequity. Criminalizing homeless populations often creates more disadvantage and does, in fact, contribute to cycles of poverty. I'm telling you this information – and this is actually data that you can look for yourselves. Instead of just scoffing, you can actually do a little bit of research and educate yourselves – I'm speaking to the members opposite – to find out what you could do to make these issues better instead of worse, because this government has shown a propensity for making things worse.

My colleague talked about the impacts on families. For sure, if somebody's on income support and, let's say, there is a warrant, and they are either cut off or not put on in the first place, that is going to impact families. Not just that, but we know – because nobody can live on what income support pays. Let's just be honest about that. Income support, the one program, barriers for employment, is under $900 a month; the other program is even less. Nobody can live on that. It's just a fact. However, if you take that away, you are going to make issues worse, and so many people on income support already have precarious housing, right? Very often there is a track record of inability to fully pay their rent, let's say, on time if they've skipped a month or if they've been late and they've been warned, perhaps. Now, let's just point out that this government put a lot of people at risk when they decided to change the payment date for AISH and income support to make their books look better a few years ago and had to reverse it because the Auditor General busted them, but people pay their rent late, and there are ramifications to that.

This piece of legislation has the potential to be as damaging unless this government, I think, takes the time to consult with the appropriate people, do a little bit of research, and make sure that their list of crimes is appropriate, make sure that they have some safeties in place for family members, particularly children, if there are older parents, perhaps dependants, dependent adults even, that are being taken care of by the recipient. It is so important that that work gets done because we have seen four years of things that have happened. I don't think, actually, that government sets out to harm people. I don't believe that that's their intent, but that's what their legislation and their regulation and their policy changes have done, inflicted harm to very vulnerable populations. I would suggest that people on income support are pretty vulnerable, so I do worry about this.

In many cases we know that poverty and criminality are in a perpetual cycle with each other. That is just a fact. On the one hand I understand that there are some people that should not get government assistance because they chose to engage in criminal activity. On the other hand, you know, I need to know that this government has done their homework in terms of ensuring that things that they're changing or legislation they're bringing in or regulations they're changing will not inadvertently cause more harm to Albertans. We have just seen that happen far too many times, Mr. Chair, that I am worried that this is going to happen again. Sadly, I've not seen any evidence that this government is doing anything different.

Criminal justice systems create debt through the accumulation of nonrepayment of criminal offence fines, court fees, victim surcharges, restitution. It's called justice debt, and that is also a reality. Can you imagine someone so destitute, really, that they have to apply for income supports that are impossible to live on? It's just a small amount of money to help them. They are so destitute, and now they're cut off from that because there's a warrant. Perhaps they didn't even know about it. This vicious, vicious cycle of poverty: stuck in this place, they are never going to get ahead.

Our goal should be that every single Albertan should be given the support that they need to be successful, to find the job that they want, to be able to care for their family in the way that they want, to be able to live in safe housing, to know they can feed their families. That should be all of our goals every single day, to do everything that we can to support Albertans. I don't believe that this government uses that lens, Mr. Chair. I don't because I've seen far too many examples of policy changes or legislative changes that are really made with a political lens, not a lens that looks at the quality of life of Albertans and their future.

You know, let me just say that when we address poverty and when we reduce poverty and we talk about it and we bring in good legislation and good programming that systematically reduces poverty because that's what it sets out to do, our entire economy is strengthened, our future is brighter. It's just a fact. It is just a fact. I think that – I hope that everybody in this place understands that. I hope that all members of this Assembly are asking themselves the same question or will look at the list that is generated behind closed doors, when eventually it is, and make sure that that list does exactly what we need it to do.

There was a study published in 2021 in partnership with Public Safety Canada, Stats Canada, and Correctional Service of Canada. They found that previously incarcerated individuals make less income, file less tax, and had less participation in the labour market, and more social assistance. Now, the reason that I'm bringing this up is it just sort of validates the point that I made earlier, that we should all be working together to ensure that we keep people out of those places, that we keep people out of the justice system, that we support them so that they don't continue to have these warrants or they don't continue to have fines amassing that they can never pay, that we help them with job retraining or finding employment, that we support them and lift them out of poverty.

That is not what's happening. I feel like this is a Band-Aid that will say: oh, look at us; you know, we're going to take care of those bad guys that apply for government benefits. Sure, there might be a little group of people that you will identify that should never get government assistance. Absolutely. But I believe that the vast majority probably don't even know there's a problem, don't have the resources to fix the problem even if they wanted to, yet we're going to further penalize them because it's going to make us look tough on crime. We're going to be tough on those who are really, really poor and struggling. If they have a warrant, forget it.

Again, it's disappointing that instead of talking about poverty reduction, instead of talking about what we can do to actually invest in getting people off income support properly, not tossing them off but helping them transition off, you know, it'd be really great, Mr. Chair, if the members opposite chirping away – as some of them say, I'd be happy to entertain a question, but, you know, that's about it.

Mr. Chair, I'm wondering if I can get a time check from you.

The Deputy Chair: Four minutes.

Ms Renaud: Okay. With that, I'm actually going to take my seat. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much. I'd like to briefly address this bill before us, Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. Mr. Chair, the focus I'd like to bring to this is on the Public Transit and Green Infrastructure Project Act. It's right towards the back end of the bill.

You know, most of this bill – 15 statutes are being amended – is innocuous, some of it is problematic, and this is a really problematic part, Mr. Chair, because it was a problem created by the government when they brought this amendment in in the first place. What they did has to do with the green line in Calgary. I'll just spend a few minutes to read what the government did that they're now correcting. What they did is so problematic that they eventually heard from city council, they heard from, probably, people who are wanting to procure that project that this is the death of the project.

What this government did, the minister of transportation, the previous Premier did, is put in a clause that said, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may, by order, with a minimum of 90 days' notice to the City of Calgary, terminate the grant agreement without cause," a grant agreement from the province of Alberta that was $1.5 billion. The total project is somewhere about $5 billion. Phase 1 of this project, that'll take the green line from Shepard all the way to 16th Avenue in the north, is about a $5 billion project at this point in time, and the government thought it was okay, thought it was good practice to bring in a clause that would kill any procurement wanting to go forward. Why would it kill any procurement wanting to go forward? Because what company is going to stand up and say, "You know, I want to bid on this"? It's $5 billion worth, but within 90 days a third of that amount of money can come out because of – I don't know – the government believing that it's an LRT to nowhere. That's what we heard from this side before, Mr. Chair.

What I think was going on is that the government didn't like the project – maybe they don't like mass transit, more particularly – so they were looking for ways to kind of slow it down, to kind of create some noise, some interference. I can remember the news articles of the day saying: this is crazy; how can you procure, how can you get a project going of that magnitude, the biggest one, the biggest public infrastructure build in Calgary's history? This government decides they want to put a clause in that makes it almost impossible for anyone to step up and say: "Yeah. I'll take that project on. I'll design it. I'll create it. I'll create it for the people of Calgary to get them moving from south to north and north to south." But maybe a third of it is going to go away, and, you know, I can't control that if I'm a company. I can't control what this government is going to do.

Today they're taking that clause out. They're saying: we're repealing section 10; we're repealing this bad clause that the minister of transportation and the former Premier had put in place and everybody on that side voted for. They're taking it out because it doesn't work. It doesn't work for a project of this magnitude. You can't shut a project like this down in 90 days. A project doesn't go forward like this with a 90-day clause to kill it. So that's good news. Today we're standing up and saying, you know, that cooler, better, smarter heads prevail, but they didn't months ago, when the government put that in. They thought it was best to put it in then. Well, it wasn't. What it did is that it delayed this project, Mr. Chair.

The previous minister of transportation also said: you know, I want a report; Calgary's got to give me a report; show me where this is going to be a beneficial project to move people, mass transit, that you can do this, that you can tunnel under a portion of downtown, and you can get people moving with the money that the province of Alberta, approved by the previous NDP government, put in place. The government of Canada is on for a 40 per cent share of that project, and the city of Calgary's on for a 20 per cent share of that project. So the previous minister of transportation said: I need a report.

We know that report and the time delay was about a year, Mr. Chair. Things would have got moving a lot quicker had the government just got onboard, just got onboard the C-Train. But they decided to put an arm down, like one of those arms that comes down over a rail crossing. This government put a stop to the C-Train moving forward and the planning and the organization, and that has delayed the project and cost more money to this project. Fiscal sense over on that side is not anything that happens. There is not any effective, efficient fiscal responsibility on the other side, because they delayed a project and made the cost, as a result of inflation, as a result of materials going up, more to the city of Calgary, more to the people of Alberta, and more to the government of Canada.

Mr. Chair, there's no debt of gratitude owed to the other side for finally coming to their senses and taking this out. What there is is the identification to everyone in this Chamber, all people in Calgary that the clause that was put in there was not in the best interest of the project, not in the best interest of the people of Calgary and taxpayers generally, because now the project's going to cost more money. I think that's disappointing. It's not talked about by the other side. They just sort of slipped it in here right at the end.

The same sort of thing went on for the city of Edmonton, of course. I guess you can't punish one city without punishing the other. That's the thinking I think we hear from the other side. Even though the city of Edmonton, even though today probably neither city will stand up and say, "You know, this was the wrong thing to do," they did at the time. They're just glad they're getting rid of this punishing clause that makes it difficult for anybody to get onboard and to procure this project.

So that's good news, that it's finally coming out. It should have come out a long time ago. It shouldn't have ever got in in the first place. It should have never occurred that the minister of transportation stood up and said that he wanted the report as if the minister of transportation knew better than the people who are working on this project at the local level, the municipal level, who have built one, two, three, several arms of an LRT system that is the envy of cities in North America because of the number of people it transports, because of its effectiveness and efficiency. Calgarians and the people at the city of Calgary and the leadership in council for decades have been doing this work and doing it well, and to have the rug pulled out from under them by this government, this minister of transportation, and the Premier is a slap in the face. It was a slap in the face. But now they're correcting it, so kudos to the red tape reduction minister for doing the right thing finally, but no debt of gratitude is owed to any person on that side for voting in support of this today, because they created the problem.

Thank you, Mr. Chair. [interjections]

3:30

The Deputy Chair: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has the floor.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'll continue with some comments on the green line topic, that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo alluded to in much of his discourse recently, because, of course, it was another omnibus bill that the UCP government brought in under the current Finance minister, Bill 20, which, in fact, imposed upon the cities of Edmonton and Calgary a minimum of 90 days' notice eligibility for the government to revisit or eliminate a grant application.

What happened as a result of this is that it's had a very chilling effect on business, on not only the green line or LRT development in Edmonton and Calgary but just the very notion, Mr. Chair, that the government would see fit to bring in such a draconian measure to basically put a stop-work order on the green line, in particular, in Calgary. It has also had an effect on the valley line in Edmonton. This creates a crisis in confidence amongst the major contractors, who are small in number, who would be able to actually bid on these types of contracts.

It was the largest infrastructure build in Calgary's history, and this government played games with it and let that legislation rest in place until now, finally, it's going to rest in peace after they see fit to react to the immense pressure and outcry that's been raised against it by, of course, former city mayor Nenshi, city councillors, and councillors in Edmonton as well because the measure is one that is a business killer.

At the highest level of finance businesses need to have confidence and certainty, and this is something which we hear the so-called conservative, business-supportive UCP government claiming all the time, that they are looking to create conditions of confidence and an economic playing field that is fair and will attract business. Well, this is anything but, Mr. Chair. This very chilling measure that was brought in by the UCP, that is now being eliminated by virtue of another omnibus measure, was something that the business community is not going to forget.

It was a very, very poorly thought out sledgehammer that this government decided to come forward with. It has a major impact on not only these rapid transit LRT projects but on major projects that either of the major cities of Edmonton and Calgary might want to undertake and other major projects throughout the province that the province will be a funding partner in. It was claimed that indeed the standard practice was the opportunity for the province to exit a grant agreement with certain notice, yet in fact it's not the case.

I know that Mayor Nenshi has commented publicly saying that they looked. They tasked their city managers to take a look and see if indeed there were contracts that enabled the province to exit using similar techniques, but in fact they could find none. I'll table the article that Mayor Nenshi is referenced in when he makes the statement about the search they made for examples of the city having an opportunity where the province would be able to exit from grants that they had previously pledged legally, if indeed they gave notice to the cities. There's no evidence that it was a standard practice, Mr. Chair.

The very context that we are in right now, where we are hoping that the green line is going to move forward and we're not going to see obstacles to this largest infrastructure build in the province's history put in place again – we'll see the procurement and progress of phase 1 move forward with confidence. That's something, Mr. Chair, that I'm sure the business community, not only in Calgary but throughout the province and the wider Canadian construction industry, looks forward to with interest. Any time a province comes forward with legislation which is so draconian that it actually would seek to put a stop-work order on the largest infrastructure build in a province the size of Alberta, that certainly gets the attention of the business community on a national and international scale.

These are multibillion-dollar projects; $5.5 billion is the slated cost as it stands currently. That type of planning that has to go into these projects is costly, especially if companies are bidding to be the companies that actually get to build and put in place the infrastructure. They will not have the confidence they need if they decide that the government is going to possibly put in place legislation like this once again because they happen to have some disagreement about the direction of the project or some of the details of the project and the only way they see fit to influence it is to put in this so-called stop-work order, as I call it, by giving themselves a 90-day clause, allowing them to rescind a grant agreement that they had in place, thus, for all intents and purposes, killing the project.

It's a sad commentary, Mr. Chair, that for many, many years this example will be reflected upon by the business community, especially when they see a UCP government involved in major construction infrastructure projects. They'll give themselves pause about whether or not they want to participate. Thankfully, I think that they will find a much more business-friendly government in a few months in this province in the form of the NDP majority government, but we'll let the chips fall where they may there.

I do join my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo in expressing concerns about the effect on the business community of the sledgehammer, the mechanism that the government gave themselves, that they're now rescinding, to kill such a large infrastructure project by withdrawing their grant agreement. It throws question into the confidence of the business community in Alberta's government to be able to promote major infrastructure projects.

I know that the province is fond of poking their finger at the federal government and saying, "Hey, you're the ones who are putting a spoke in the wheels of major infrastructure projects," particularly in transmission in the pipeline field and mining projects. But here is a prime example, Mr. Chair, where this government themselves really created a problem that didn't have to be created, where because they just disliked the project or wanted to change the direction of a project, they created a mechanism by which they could issue a stop-work order by withdrawing their grant funding and, for all intents and purposes, killed the largest infrastructure project in the city of Calgary. Now, of course, we've seen them rescind that, and hopefully they've learned a valuable lesson. But at what cost?

That's a cost that I think the UCP government has to tally for Albertans, because it is the largest infrastructure build in the province, Mr. Chair, and we need to know what damage the UCP government has done. I know that the business community certainly would like to see an accounting, and they probably should be part of that accounting to let Albertans know just indeed what damage they've done to the large business community by having this measure in place for so long.

But I'll move on now to something on a smaller scale, that I've had an interest in in my past role as the critic for agriculture, and that has to do with the happy subject of bees, Mr. Chair. All of us, I think, love bees, except maybe if we've had the experience of being stung by them. On the topic of bees, the omnibus legislation before us speaks to a number of measures that enable a beekeeper to register and prohibits the importation of bees without prior consent. It talks a lot about addressing concerns of threats of disease that might be carried by bees that are imported into the province.

Of course, Mr. Chair, many Albertans may be aware that we don't actually produce what are called packaged bees in the province. We do produce some queen bees, and they are sold to beekeepers for honey production, but the beekeeping industry loses, on average, about 25 per cent of the bees in its hives due to overwinter die-off or kill, and there are further losses due to pests and infections. The result of that is that we have to import bees to replace those that have died over the winter, and almost all of them come from overseas.

This act, of course, looks to try to prevent infection from coming from those overseas sources of imported bees, and while doing so – those are good measures, Mr. Chair, to protect the rest of the bees that are in our province. We have a thriving honey industry, a pride of Alberta, and it's a product that is known throughout the world as one of the top sources of honey. There are many opportunities for growth in that industry.

But one of the things that should've been done – and it's a sin of omission once again, Mr. Chair. Rather than dealing solely with the importation of bees and protecting against contamination of those bees by threats of disease or outbreaks or other emergencies – in addition to these measures, insofar as we need to keep supplying bees from overseas to restock our hives each year after the 25 per cent or so die-off, what we should've been doing is investing in our apiary or apiculture industries to ensure that we produce those packaged bees here in Alberta.

There are many arguments about – people will say that it's difficult to do because of the seasonal differences and so forth, that we can't produce a new crop of bees to replace those who have died off because, of course, we'd be doing so in the wintertime to replace them in the spring, but there are lots of creative ideas flowing out there, Mr. Chair, that would allow it to actually be done in this province. That's economic development. That's creativity. We've done things in this province by using the grey matter between our ears, and I think it was incumbent upon the government to listen to a few of the ideas that are out there regarding production of packaged bees in this province so we're not reliant upon importation of bees from other parts of the world such as Australia, New Zealand, and elsewhere.

We found during the pandemic, especially, Mr. Chair, that, of course, when the supply chains broke down, we were in a really, really tough spot to replace the die-off each year of the bees, the 25 per cent or so that die off each year, from foreign sources because, of course, air transportation was shut down, and we couldn't get bees. We were looking at importing bees perhaps from the United States, and they, of course, were prohibited because of the impact of inbreeding with so-called African bees. It was the fear of importers that we would actually cause a contamination in our own supply of bees, in our own bee population here in Alberta. It put us in a difficult situation. The whole industry was put at risk because we did not have a reliable supply of packaged bees to replace those that died off in the wintertime.

That, Mr. Chair, is what I would hope one would have seen as an adjunct part of this omnibus bill when it relates to the Bee Act. It was a real opportunity to build upon the experiences that we've recently gone through during the pandemic, when we saw our supply chain basically eliminated for packaged bees, and to look at how we could become a leader in the apiculture industry by producing packaged bees not only for our own consumption here at home but for export ourselves so that those countries who now buy from countries that we have to buy from – New Zealand, Australia, and so forth – would look to us for a year-round supply or a seasonal supply of packaged bees to replace theirs in their country that may have died off.

I mean, that development, I think, is one element of the beekeeping industry that is a natural extension of where we're at. We're world leaders in the production of high-quality honey, and there are growth opportunities there. We use our bees for pollinators of our major crops. Many Albertans will know that our canola crops in particular, any of our flowering crops, require pollination, and you will find beehives being transported throughout this province during the crop-growing season to pollinate the crops so that they grow properly. Without them, we don't have crops. They're extensively used throughout the province to ensure that our crops get pollinated, and it's an industry in and of itself not only to produce honey but actually to pollinate our crops.

Globally, of course, we have bees at risk of dying off because of encroachment of urban development on our farmland. There are diseases in the bee populations that are threatening them throughout the world in many spots. It's a fragile insect, population of insects globally, that needs to be cared for and cultivated, and we have an opportunity to do that in the province, and this omnibus bill, Mr. Chair, missed the opportunity to develop that industry beyond what it does by enabling a beekeeper registration system and prohibiting the importation of bees to Alberta without prior consent.

As the bill says, the beekeeping compliance system is outlined, including designation and powers of inspectors and the authority of the minister in relation to quarantining bees or equipment, but there could have been a lot more done, Mr. Chair, and I'm disappointed that it wasn't. When we do hear from other members, perhaps across the way, who have had experience with bees themselves, perhaps they could comment on what they feel would have been a better opportunity by the minister to bring forward a more comprehensive piece of legislation when it came to the Bee Act to include in this omnibus bill.

[Mr. Turton in the chair]

I could go on about bees for a long time. I certainly think we've got huge opportunities in this province to develop the apiculture industry to a much larger degree than we have and to expand it into growing and repopulating our bee population each year and exporting packaged bees throughout the globe. That's one element of the omnibus bill that I wanted to shed some light on.

I wonder if I could have a time check, Mr. Chair.

3:50

The Acting Chair: About 30 seconds, hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Well, I can continue on about bees for 30 more seconds, I think, but I'll cede my time and let somebody else have the floor.

The Acting Chair: Excellent.

Next up the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to say thank you to my colleagues, who have – Bill 9, being an omnibus bill that impacts a number of different statutes, has many, many different parts to it, and I’ve appreciated hearing the debate about different parts of this bill, everything from impacts to poverty to bees to the green line in Calgary. But I don’t think anyone in this Chamber will be surprised that I would like to speak very specifically to the parts that touch on the Workers’ Compensation Board within Bill 9. It’s an incredibly important part of the rights that workers have: the partnership, the bargain that has been struck between workers and employers so that when a worker is injured on the job, they will get the help, the compensation, the coverage to be able to recover, or their families will receive the same in the tragic case where a worker has died.

In Bill 9 we touch on the workers’ compensation section specifically because of the Fort McMurray wildfire. The wildfire started in May of 2016 and became one of the largest – the largest – evacuations in Canadian history and had a huge impact on the community, with over 2,000 structures burned and dedicated efforts having to be made to keep infrastructure and people safe on the part of first responders.

In Bill 9 specifically it seeks to ensure that firefighters who are exposed to toxic chemicals and carcinogens will still be covered with WCB coverage should they have an occupational disease develop, specifically cancers. Now, we know that cancer is the number one reason for firefighter deaths, and this type of occupational disease often takes time to develop, so our regulations for cancers for firefighters in this province oftentimes look at something called the latency period – how long has someone been a firefighter? – based on the science that it takes time for those carcinogens to act in the human body and to cause cancer.

Now, in the case of Fort McMurray we know that there were firefighters who started fighting that fire and essentially weren’t able to fully move off shift for six full days. There were firefighters across the additional weeks that weren’t able to properly decontaminate. There were firefighters who were not able to have a breathing apparatus, so they were literally breathing in the toxins of thousands of burning buildings. The health impact of that is something incredibly significant and serious. We’ve already heard from firefighters who were in Fort McMurray who have developed occupational cancers, and in fact there’s the story of a firefighter from Fort McMurray who has already passed.

Bill 9 seeks to provide presumptive coverage for occupational cancers for the firefighters who were in Fort McMurray, but, Mr. Chair, it fails to cover all firefighters who were there, so I’d like to introduce an amendment at this point.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Thank you, hon. member. We’ll just wait until we get the original sent over to us.

Thank you. This amendment will be known as amendment A1. Please proceed.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, be amended in section 15(3)(b) by adding the following immediately after the proposed section 24.1(3.1):

(3.2) For the purpose of subsection (3.1), a full-time firefighter and part-time firefighter includes the following:

- (a) a full-time firefighter or part-time firefighter who has made an application for compensation that was not accepted by the Board for an injury described in subsection (2);
- (b) the estate of a full-time firefighter or part-time firefighter if that worker has not received a payment from the Board with respect to an injury described in subsection (2).

(3.3) For greater certainty, subsection (3.1) applies to an injury described in subsection (2) suffered by a full-time firefighter or part-time firefighter any time after May 1, 2016.

Now, the “any time after May 1, 2016,” Mr. Chair, is the crux of what I’d like to speak to when it comes to this amendment. Without this amendment the changes in Bill 9 provide presumptive cancer coverage only from the date that this bill is proclaimed, the date the bill is passed, so essentially a date that is going to end in 2023. Knowing that this fire started in 2016, that is a six-year gap, and we need to include the retroactivity because we already know that there are firefighters who have found themselves struggling with the WCB system for compensation. There is the case of a family that has been in dispute with the WCB for years over a case where the firefighter has passed, and there have been other firefighters as well.

Now, the government has had an opportunity to consider this amendment because it was submitted to the minister over a week ago, and we’ve already talked about this through question period. I will say quite honestly to you, Mr. Chair, that the first time we realized that this wasn’t retroactive and we spoke with the APFFPA, the Alberta Professional Fire Fighters & Paramedics Association, and said, “Oh, this isn’t retroactive; we think this doesn’t go far enough,” they said: oh, no; this doesn’t go far enough; we need to cover them all. I came into this Chamber to ask about it in question period, and I quite literally expected the minister to say: we’d be happy to work with you on an amendment to make sure this is covered. And I was surprised, as a former minister of labour, asking a member who represents Fort McMurray, that we weren’t able to get to: yes, let’s work together and make sure that this is completely covered.

The government’s answers on why they won’t support this amendment up till now – and I welcome them changing their mind at any point; I’d be happy to work with them to ensure we get this done – have not made sense to me. The government seems to be acknowledging that, yes, there are firefighters that this won’t apply to but they will get to go through a fairness review process and that fairness review process will eventually get them coverage rather than accepting an amendment that makes it very clear that we are going to extend this coverage back to May 1, 2016, back to the start, when the fire initially began. I have been listening very carefully through media and through multiple questions in question period, trying to understand the government’s argument for why this amendment will not be accepted today, and I am hopeful that through the debate perhaps I can even get a bit more clarity because it does not make sense to me.

What this amendment does is that it makes it incredibly clear to families, to firefighters and colleagues, to the WCB, and to all Albertans that any firefighter who was on the ground during the Beast who develops occupational cancer because of the toxic exposures that they had, the inability to decontaminate, because of the work they were doing to protect lives and livelihoods, infrastructure, and the citizens will automatically have that presumptive coverage through WCB. Without that, saying that there is a subset of these firefighters that are going to need to go through a separate process does not make sense to me, and I don’t understand why the government is making firefighters and their families go through some alternate way.

Now, the government has said that the Alberta WCB system does not typically do retroactivity, and that’s completely correct. I acknowledge that. As the former minister of labour I am aware of that. But that is also a choice, and that is a choice the government is making in the directions that it gives to WCB, and it is a choice that other provinces make differently. Ontario has made their presumptive cancer coverage, not specific to an incident but just in general, retroactive by 60 years. They've just updated their cancer regulation to include new cancers, which Alberta needs to do, and the minister keeps signalling that that is coming, which is great news. I encourage him to get on with it and to do that because they've been in government for four years and Alberta's regulation is out of date. But that's great.

In this case we are asking for retroactivity to a very specific, catastrophic, traumatic event that all Albertans are aware of. I think that Albertans understand why retroactivity makes sense in this case given the nature of the toxic exposures that firefighters had to work through. They were doing their jobs. When someone is going to their job and doing their job and they get sick because of that or they get injured because of that, it is incumbent on all of us to make sure that we have a strong workers' compensation system that will protect them. To hear that there are already families that have struggled and had to fight on top of fighting cancer, it's incredibly frustrating to me that we can't get this right.

The government loves to talk about: why didn't you do what when? Well, today we have a bill in front of us, an amendment in front of us that the government can support, so let's talk about today. Let's talk about getting to a place where both government and opposition can come to agreement on this amendment, providing the clarity to all firefighters and not relegating some to a fairness review process. Let's send this clear signal. It is specific to one event: the Horse River wildfire, that started in May 2016, that first responders spent weeks fighting, first responders who deserve our support.

Now, I would welcome any member of the government to speak on this amendment because I truly am looking to better understand the lack of support. It is not just me and my voice calling for this. The Alberta Professional Fire Fighters & Paramedics Association, the firefighters' union in Fort McMurray have been advocating for this for many years. The Edmonton Fire Fighters' Union has been a leader when it comes to advocating for this coverage that we need to have for those first responders. So there are a number of people who are watching this debate and are interested in seeing the government do the right thing.

The fact that Alberta hasn't done retroactive before may be true, but that's not a reason not to do it. We know we can. We know other jurisdictions have. And this is specific to a single event. We are not opening the barn doors wide for chaos and it will disrupt our system. We are just making sure that any firefighter who has been diagnosed with cancer in these past six, seven years that are currently not going to be covered by Bill 9 will be able to find themselves in this legislation, understand that they are getting the coverage, and not have to go through a fairness review process but will instead be able to say with confidence that they know that they are getting the coverage.

I, again, don't understand the government's unwillingness to work with the Official Opposition on this. I would be happy to accept a government amendment that fixes this issue. I just want to see this done right. I just want to make sure that this happens in the correct way. That's one of the reasons why I have been talking about this in the House and with firefighters for years now. The Alberta NDP has committed to making sure that this is done and done correctly should we form government. That commitment was made last year. The government has certainly been aware of this for a great deal of time.

It was an honour to be able to speak to the firefighters' conference and convention back in I think it was May of last year about these very topics and to stand with the Leader of the Official Opposition when she made this commitment again in December of last year. It's something that we've known for a while.

I think this amendment is clearly written. Really, the key thing is section (3.3), that talks about "any time after May 1, 2016." Although we know of a couple of cases now, Mr. Chair, there quite literally may be other firefighters who've never applied to the WCB because they knew that they fell outside of the latency periods. We can't say that this is only one or two cases. There could be many more.

Changing this and changing this the right way is the best way to manage this. Asking people to reach out to the minister's office is unfair. We want to see consistent coverage, we want to see retroactive coverage for all the first responders who were on the ground in Fort McMurray who battled what became known as the Beast and who were exposed to so many toxins for weeks, days, sometimes without rest, without the ability to decontaminate, without the proper protective procedures being able to be in place because of how catastrophic that event was.

My intent, Mr. Chair, was to be convincing and to really put forward the arguments for why I believe all members should support this amendment. I hope to hear that support from members of the government caucus, because I think this is incredibly important. I know this is important to the members impacted, and it's an important example of making sure we have a strong workers' compensation system that is there for all workers, that we recognize the risks that workers put themselves under and our need and our responsibility to take care of them.

With that, I look forward to debate on this amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Thank you, hon. member.

Anyone else to speak to the amendment? I see there the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore. Please proceed.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I realize our time might be starting to grow short in this session of the Legislature. This possibly could be my last time to address this Assembly, so I don't want to waste it, but I do want to be very direct in what I want to talk about today. As you can imagine, I do rise very much in support of this amendment that my friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods has brought forward with regard to the proposed changes in Bill 9 for the WCB.

I have had an amazing experience, over the better part of three decades, being able to advocate for hard-working Albertans. I know that during that time the things that I would fight for within labour, within unions also impacted work sites that weren't unionized. If you managed to get higher wages in a union shop, there's a good likelihood that in a similar industry you'll see those wages go up. If you get better safety conditions in a unionized shop, you will see better safety conditions come up in non-union. You know, it's been that way forever.

One of the things that were advocated for way in the past was, of course, WCB coverage for workers. Now, the thing that has unfortunately happened over the years is that the WCB has become adversarial towards workers. It was never intended for that to happen. It was supposed to be much like an insurance policy. If you get into an accident, you have insurance to try to get your vehicle fixed. If you get hurt at work, you have something to back you up until you can get better and return to work in a full capacity.

Over the years, obviously, there have been very, very directed efforts to try to raise that up and to try to stop how adversarial the WCB has become. When we're talking about Bill 9, the changes to the WCB, and the implications they have on what ended up being referred to up in Fort McMurray as the Beast, it is to try to make sure that the heroes that ran towards that fire while everybody else was running away, as they should – that we have those individuals' backs no matter what. You know, changes to try to protect our firefighters: it's not something new to Alberta. There's been a concerted effort right across the country to try to raise this up, to try to cover the cancers that we know – there's no speculation here; there's no controversy; there's no guesswork – impact firefighters and the jobs that they do.

Again, I'll be very clear. I'm not opposed to the changes to the WCB here in Bill 9. What I'm clearly saying is that it's tripping right at the finish line. All we have to do is change just a little bit of language to push it across that finish line, to make sure that in the event, again, that we should have a major catastrophic fire, our firefighters, these members, will know that they're taken care of, that their families will know that they're taken care of should we lose any of those members.

Some of the things, I know, I have been arguing for for a very long time, and part of those three decades was another two spent not only on my own work-site Health and Safety Committee but my union's provincial Health and Safety Committee. How do we come up with language to protect people so they go home each and every night?

You know, as they say, we don't live to work; we work to live. Everybody needs to come home at the end of the night. Thinking about the images that I know I saw from Fort McMurray and the stories that I've heard over the years – my neighbour literally right across the street from me was a deputy chief with Edmonton fire. I was surprised the day when I spent time with Edmonton fire not only doing their fire ops, which I've done twice now – and I think that only gave me a tiny, little inkling of what they face. He was telling me about how he finally got up there but that it was a week after they finally got control of it. He said that the conditions were horrendous. It's not like he was complaining; he was trying to tell me what it was the members were facing.

You know, as every member in this House knows, over the past eight years that I've spent here, I've made no bones about where I come from, where my priorities have been, what I advocate for, and I proudly continue to do it now and will continue to do it in my time outside of this House: trying to make the lives of workers better.

Now, here's where I might ruffle some feathers, Mr. Chair. I have heard members of this House, members that are part of the government, part of the government caucus, who've very proudly talked about the roots they have in labour and what they come from. I'm going to issue one final challenge. It's likely what it's going to be. If indeed your roots are in labour, if you believe in fighting for the safety of Albertans, if you believe in trying to make their quality of life better, then it should not be any problem whatsoever to accept this amendment, because that's exactly what it will do. It will make the lives of Albertans better. It will make them safer.

As I'd mentioned, with the WCB being adversarial, this will at the very least take that adversarial role away for our firefighters. I've always said that all it takes is one example. We already have that example where we have lost a member and they're now having to fight to get their claim reviewed. That just simply should not happen. If you really, truly are a labour advocate, if you're fighting to make the lives of Alberta workers better, you need to do what it takes to eliminate that. Saying anything else? I'm sorry. It means you don't actually believe in fighting for hard-working Albertans, and it doesn't mean that you have the backs of firefighters. I know that's rough, Mr. Chair. It's meant to be. I've fought too long to sit here and candy coat things for people.

We have an amendment. Like I said, what's proposed in Bill 9 for WCB: it's not wrong. It's not bad. It's good, but we can make it even better. I cannot urge members of this House anymore. Take the emotion out of it. Take the politics out of it. Just look at the language. We know the language is falling short. It's stepping in the right direction, but it's falling short. We can add this little bit, push it over the finish line. Truly, everyone could then stand up in this House and get to say: we have the backs of our firefighters no matter what. We've already seen examples elsewhere that it can be done. We can do it here in Alberta.

I am adamantly pleading with members of this House, please accept this amendment. I know you don't like other amendments that we've brought forward over the course of the 30th Legislature. This one's genuine. This one will do the job. Going forward, I guess we can always have other arguments later about what we can do to change WCB to make it better for all Albertans.

I'll be supporting this amendment, and again I urge all other members of the House: please accept this.

The Acting Chair: Excellent. Thank you.

Anyone else to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Chair. The firefighters can already access benefits for fighting the Fort McMurray wildfire through the WCB process. All Bill 9 does is clear the red tape to those benefits and prevents denial.

I am aware of two cases impacted by the NDP amendment. As part of their standard operating procedure the WCB already has a fairness review panel to deal with these two cases. Our government will ensure that these Fort McMurray firefighters will get the benefits they deserve.

The NDP is playing fast and loose with what's really going on here. Retroactivity does not need to be applied when the WCB fairness review for two people achieves the same thing. Our government has worked hard to reduce red tape in Alberta, and adding another amendment with a process that already covers the situation is an unnecessary addition. That is why I am urging my colleagues to vote this amendment down.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Up next, I see the Member for Edmonton-City Centre. Please go ahead.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the amendment brought forward by my colleague for Edmonton-Mill Woods, the House leader and former minister of labour.

Now, we have had some stand in this Chamber and say, "Well why didn't the NDP do anything?" or "What did the NDP do about this?" Well, what the NDP did, Mr. Chair, when this member was minister of labour: in 2018 we introduced the workers' compensation amendment act that added a mental health disorder presumption for correctional officers, emergency medical assistants, firefighters, police officers, and sheriffs; expanded that coverage to also include many others; and took action to support firefighters and others who were facing challenges in the system. Our government took action.

Now, of course, as we continue, we learn more and we find more that needs to be done, and I respect that the government finally listened. Certainly initially, when we had the initial debates on these questions and this was brought forward by my colleague on behalf of the firefighters – let's be clear, Mr. Chair. This is not something we dreamed up out of thin air. This is not something that, as the government is claiming, is a politicization of the process. This is the voice of the firefighters themselves, so I'm pleased that the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development eventually came around from his initial position back in December and that now his colleague the minister of red tape reduction is including it in this bill.

However, the same firefighters who approached my colleague and who she spoke for in December, the same firefighters who stood and commended the government for bringing this forward, are now standing and asking the government to make one further change, that simple change to add retroactivity. Because the government has chosen not to listen to them, my colleague has brought forward this amendment. Mr. Chair, that is not a politicization unless the minister of red tape reduction is accusing the firefighters of our province of being political.

Is he accusing them of attacking his government? Is he accusing them of introducing a redundancy, of not understanding the system, of not understanding the challenge their own members face? That is the reason that amendment is here in front of us today. I, for one, will take the word of those firefighters, will take the voice of those firefighters over that of this government. It's my hope that other government members will do the same, because – let's be clear, Mr. Chair – this is not a government and these are not members that are shy about exceptions in legislation.

When they feel it suits their political interests, Mr. Chair, they are prepared to do all sorts of interesting bending and twisting of convention when it comes to legislation in the province. Let's remember Bill 10, introduced at the beginning of the pandemic, where these government members were willing to stand and vote for the members of cabinet to have the ability to change, alter, or create new legislation out of whole cloth without ever setting foot in this Legislature. But they stand and say: "No. We can't provide retroactivity for these two firefighters; that's going too far."

These government members were willing to pass a piece of legislation giving them the ability to unilaterally tear up their contract with physicians in the province of Alberta and then do so, but it's too exceptional for them to provide retroactivity to cover these firefighters. Instead they say: no; go and fight it out in the system.

The Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development is willing to sit in a cabinet with a Premier, who he once said he would oppose that sovereignty act that she intended to bring forward. Let's be clear: another extraordinary piece of legislation, which again attempted to give members of this cabinet the ability to alter legislation, change laws without ever setting foot in this Legislature. He was willing to stand for weeks and support that before this government finally recanted in the face of public pressure, but he says no; he cannot stand and make an exception here, an exception that has been demonstrated to be possible in the province of Ontario, for the sake of these firefighters.

There are government members, Mr. Chair, that were willing to stand in support of this Premier when she was running in the leadership race for their party, when she said she intended to exert extraordinary influence in our justice system. They stood in full-throated support of her then, and the question is: will they say it is too exceptional now to stand in support of these firefighters?

Let's be clear, Mr. Chair. This is not a question of this being a government that is so concerned about the rule of law, that is so concerned about proper procedure that they simply cannot allow this to pass. They have demonstrated time and again on the record that is not the case. If they will not support this amendment today, it is because they don't want to, because they don't feel that it's politically significant enough for them. That is their choice, and that is the message that they are sending to working men and women, to firefighters across this province.

I'll have more to say on the rest of Bill 9 later, but I think that's enough for now. In a moment we'll get to see just where the priority of these members and this government actually lay.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Excellent. Thank you very much.

Next up, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'd like to say thank you to the minister for responding to the amendment. I am asking for more clarity because, from a plain-language perspective, I do not understand the government's reasoning, and I would genuinely like to, because we're talking to the same stakeholders. The idea that firefighters who may have been impacted between May 2016 and today need to go through a different or fairness-based process rather than being clearly included in Bill 9, when we know that it is a very defined time period because of the catastrophic event from Fort McMurray: to me that creates an additional barrier or possible confusion because we know that there are a few cases. We believe there could be additional.

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

There could be people, firefighters, who have been diagnosed with a cancer that, because the cancer latency period is 25 years, they have not even applied to the WCB because they knew that they were not covered, they did not match it. Without this amendment, which clearly indicates that this is retroacted back to May 2016, there may be firefighters who were on the ground in Fort McMurray who will never approach the WCB or get the compensation that they are owed. That could happen.

I think that the amendment shows a very clear: firefighters who were on the ground from May 2016 on who develop occupational cancers will get the coverage that I believe so strongly all Albertans support that they should get. I hear the government saying, "Oh, they will get the coverage but through a fairness review process," so my question is, then: why not just accept the amendment? Why not accept the amendment that clearly provides the coverage and responds to what firefighters have asked for? If the end result, according to you, is that, through the chair, Mr. Chair, I'm trying not to – if the end result is that they will get coverage, then why not accept this amendment, which makes it clear and will ensure that no firefighter falls through the cracks because they were unaware and did not know?

Why have a hidden, unclear fairness review based process that only some firefighters will go through rather than having clear coverage and retroactive support for all firefighters? I've been listening closely. I am trying to understand, and it does not make sense to me. So I would ask the minister if he could please try to clarify for me and for – I know there are firefighters who are watching our debate today. I am asking this in a very genuine way because this doesn't make sense, why you are rejecting this, when accepting it would provide the clarity, respond to what firefighters are asking for, and ultimately, according to the answers we've been given, provide the exact same result.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to pose questions or make comments on amendment A1? I see the hon. Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development.

Mr. Jean: Yes. Thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to stand up today and talk about inhaling and exhaling at the same time. Now, Mr. Chair, the firefighter they're referring to that fought the fire died while that member was the minister of labour, while that member had the opportunity to sign on the dotted line and change things. If she thought it was so important to change at that time, why didn't she? Well, I'll tell you. The reason why is because they're playing politics today.

It sort of reminds me a lot of the comments in relation to advertising before campaigns. Now, Mr. Chair, we saw $20 million being spent by the NDP advertising before the last campaign, before the 2019 campaign. It reminds me of the $9 million they spent advertising the very popular carbon tax just a little while before that.

What we have in place here is a piece of legislation that works, that is going to work because it has a fairness provision. We don't have exactly the same legislation as Ontario or other jurisdictions; we have legislation made in Alberta for Albertans, and that's why we have a fairness provision within that legislation to make sure that there's nobody that falls through the cracks. Now, Mr. Chair . . .

Ms Renaud: You know they're falling through the cracks.

Mr. Jean: No one is going to fall through the cracks of this government.

They did through the last government, the NDP government, when they were in power. We know that. That's why I say to you today that inhaling and exhaling at the same time takes a talent, saying one thing and doing another thing and being all of that righteous indignation that is coming from the opposition – because they know that they had the opportunity to do it, and they didn't do it. We are doing it. We're getting it done. We're going to make sure we do it properly. We're going to do it on the evidence, because WCB is there for the people of Alberta, the workers of Alberta, and it's very important.

I've met with the groups of firefighters. I was actually at the fire. I was there during the time that that fire was burning my town down. Mr. Chair, I was providing food and water to firefighters, I was supporting them, and I was in there. I don't remember any of them being there. In fact, all I remember from them is a lot of chatter, a lot of talk but no substance. This government has substance, and we are standing up for the firefighters. We are going to make sure that no one falls through any NDP cracks because we actually care about firefighters and we care about the workers in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I agree with the minister. This government has substance. It's a substance that, if I were to name, would be unparliamentary.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

To be clear, Madam Chair, our government made substantive investment, did substantive work to support Fort McMurray through that fire. That minister knows because that minister was briefed every day by our government about the situation, had access to the officials, unlike his government throughout the COVID-19 pandemic. We provided open access to the opposition during the time that he was leader. The minister knows full well.

He certainly has creative interpretation of the facts both today and of what occurred then. I don't question that the minister was there. It was his hometown; it was his constituency. He looked out for the people there, and I recognize that he looked out for the firefighters then, but the question is whether he will today, Madam

Chair. There's certainly plenty of righteous indignation on that side of the aisle, too.

The fact is, as I said, that what we are bringing forward today are the voices of those firefighters. They are asking the minister of red tape reduction, they're asking the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development to make this amendment. Again, as I've laid out, they are not shy of making all kinds of other exceptions when they feel it suits their political interests, when it's their job that they feel is on the line as opposed to the lives, livelihood, and health of these firefighters. I suppose we'll leave it for those firefighters to judge when we hold the vote today.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Madam Chair. To all of our colleagues here today, honestly, across the aisle: we're all trying to work through something here with genuine intent. To the minister: obviously very near and dear to your heart since that was your home. I understand that there was personal loss as well. A real plea to everyone in the room: if we can just keep our sticks on the ice, so to speak. There are a lot of emotions here, and we don't want to politicize this, honestly. It comes down to looking out for good folks that stepped into harm's way when most of us would have run the opposite direction.

I remember full well, you know, the Fort McMurray fires. There were no recorded deaths at the fire scene, but there was a young couple that had a traffic incident getting out of there again, coming back to areas to get out of there. Coincidentally, up in that area we'd been pipelining a couple of years prior, and we still had a thousand-man camp sitting at Christina Lake, or Mariana Lake, I should say. The camp manager there was Glen Brooks, former lance corporal from the airborne, and he ran the camp for us. He started welcoming people off the highway to get them in and find a place for them to stay.

The firefighters went above and beyond trying to do what they could. I remember, you know, hearing some testimony from the command centre and the chief that was up there, that had that responsibility to take care of it. It took an awesome toll, and not one of those people, first responders, whether it was firefighters or otherwise, flinched. They literally went headlong into that. So I can understand that there's a lot of emotion here today because we all feel compelled to do the right thing for those folks that stepped up.

One of the best things that we can do, I would hope, since this might be one of my last speeches in this place as well, is that honestly we can hang our hat on something good, that we had a meaningful impact on them. It's with that spirit that I believe the member opposite brought this motion forward and is really just trying to take something that's good and trying to make it a bit better. Now, with that intent there are invariably some issues that could arise, and I think that maybe it's not being fully articulated here in the House, again, with some of the emotions and where we're at in this season – I think someone said it – on the eve of an election. We all know we're looking down the barrel of a gun in that regard.

But I won't be voting in favour of this. I do really appreciate the intent of it, wholeheartedly, from my heart right across the aisle to the member. But looking at a prior lens in a prior life, looking through contracts and processes and procedures, I think where a lot of the hesitancy on this is is that if we try to tweak it too much more than what we have in the existing legislation, the new legislation coming forward might inadvertently cause some issues on the back end. Again, when there's already a process in place to catch, with the fairness review panel – I think fully that's what's taking place here. The fairness review panel has to run its process as well.

If the folks in Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, through you, Chair, to the member opposite that brought this motion forward, choose to have me as their MLA again and if that process falls through the cracks and it doesn't meet the intent, then you have my full commitment that we review this at a later date and take a look and see if we can do that. But it's with that, too – and, hopefully, the member can understand, through you to that member and the others opposite, that I'm fully supportive of the concept, but I'm concerned that we might cause some other issues in behind the process. Again, it's with that full intent to make sure that none of our first responders have any issues.

So I would compel folks to understand the spirit of the intent of this, with the amendment, but to vote against it so we can get the bill through and then allow that process to take place. Again, a full commitment from me, if there is an issue later on, that we can go back and look at that, if it has to be tweaked through regulations or an amendment in an act. But I think we should take our win. I think we should do what we can while we can to make sure we get it there – if it's not a hundred per cent, at least it's 99.9 – and then review those items later.

So it's with that to everyone here, Madam Chair, if we can keep the emotions down – I know it's emotional, but it's really with good intent on both sides of the aisle. Thank you.

The Chair: Any others on amendment A1? We'll go to Edmonton-Meadows and then the hon. minister.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't take very long. I just wanted to thank you, Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, for jumping into the debate, but unfortunately that doesn't serve nothing at all, actually, what we are asking here and what is the issue. We open the bill, we are debating the WCB, and all we see is a real case, that we are discussing here. It's not a principle. It is not just a thought process. We are guided by the principle: we learn more, we do more or learn better, do better. This is exactly what this case is. This is the real-time case.

More of this – this area belongs to the member from Fort McMurray. He's well aware of this, and it's very sad to see and hear the kind of rhetoric we're coming to. Even this should have been very personal to a member from Fort McMurray. He didn't see who in Fort McMurray even it was warning. I don't know if he was able to see there were firefighters actually putting their life on the line to control the fire, a national disaster, and protect the people in Fort McMurray. That is what we are discussing here today. "Have something the NDP didn't do": if we come to your rhetoric, is that the basic principle: you wouldn't do it? If this information was not there then and we have the case here and those hard-working firefighters – and I don't call them workers. National heroes, because they go into the situations: they're not ordinary work; they're not at ordinary work. When people are dying, when people are in danger, they jump on the situation, risking their life to save others.

We had a natural disaster, one of Canada's largest natural disasters, and that's what we're discussing here, and there's a live case on this. It's sad to see the government House members' attitude and approach towards this, and they couldn't understand it. In a few days I'm really disheartened when I see the government has a very big heart on a number of those issues that are not related to Albertans at all, but when it comes to helping real people, I don't see that approach. Once again, I will request and I will encourage, I hope, that you might show big hearts and look at this amendment with a bit more sympathy.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Madam Chair. You know, I do get emotional about this issue. It is a very important issue to me. I've fought hard for this.

I just want to say that historically in Alberta WCB does not do retroactivity because they have in section 17(3) of the act – and that's the fair process review centre – the ability "to reconsider any matter that it has dealt with and to rescind or amend any decision or order previously made." Now, I would also note that not only did the member opposite, when she was the minister, not make this particular issue for that firefighter that died on her watch retroactive, but she never made one WCB issue retroactive. Not one, Madam Chair. Not one. She didn't do that because she knew it was not the right thing to do. It wasn't necessary because under section 17(3) of the act they have the ability to reconsider and go back in time and to deal with the issue if it's considered unfair. The process is there; the process works.

I've said it in question period; I'll say it again: there's more good news coming for firefighters. In fact, we were number one in Canada for firefighter coverage, for WCB coverage, and then other provinces copied us. The great news is that very soon Alberta is going to be number one by a large margin, number one again, because this government cares, because this government cares about those people that take care of us. We're not going to let this firefighter or any other firefighter from the Fort McMurray fire or other fires that contracts cancer that's directly related to any of these fires behind. It's just not done, Madam Chair.

This government is a caring government, is a government that relies on evidence and makes sure that the people of Alberta that put their lives on the line for us and their families are taken care of, because that's what a caring United Conservative Party government does. We take care of those that can't take care of themselves. The minister of affordability: he came forward with a huge package, over $2 billion, to take care of those less fortunate than some of us, the people that are the most vulnerable: seniors, young people, families. During a time when inflation is hurting everybody – and might I add, Madam Chair, that that initiative has made Alberta the lowest jurisdiction in Canada for inflation, under 4 per cent whereas the rest of the country is above 5. That speaks to the caring nature of our government, just like this does.

In the coming weeks, the coming days possibly, I encourage all members of this House and all firefighters, all families of firefighters to watch, to watch what we're doing to take care of the most vulnerable, to take care of our firefighters, to take care of Albertans, because we know that the only people that are going to take care of Albertans are this government.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The minister can't help bringing politics into this, and that's fair. I'm very proud that in 2018 under the NDP, as I was minister of labour, we were able to make sure that Alberta had the strongest primary site firefighter cancer regulation in the country.

I'm glad, genuinely glad, to hear that the government, after four years, is finally going to do the adjustments to make sure that our firefighters have the coverage and support that we are now behind on because other provinces have done more. That is wonderful and a success for firefighters, and I would encourage him to do that as soon as he can, because we've been asking about that for some time.

But I'm incredibly disappointed by this government ignoring this amendment and not providing clear retroactive coverage for firefighters, because it does absolutely cause firefighters who are already fighting cancer to have to go through an additional, different process to fight for coverage, which they should not have to do but the minister has clearly described that they will, and it does risk letting firefighters fall through the cracks. What does that look like, Madam Chair? That is firefighters who are fighting cancer or possibly passing away from cancer not getting the coverage they and their family deserve and possibly having to go through an additional bureaucratic battle to get that coverage. That's what this government is risking with not accepting this amendment, which clearly provides very narrow support to firefighters who were on the ground in Fort McMurray and retroactivity in this one case.

As I've said in my remarks, I fully understand that retroactivity is not something Alberta has typically done with the WCB, but it makes sense now and in this case because of the catastrophic, traumatic event that we are talking about. I've heard the government. I've heard their response. I don't think I'm going to hear any new arguments. At this point, Madam Chair, I disagree. I think the government is doing the wrong thing, and they are forcing firefighters who are fighting cancer, families who have lost loved ones to go through additional steps. It is disappointing to me, but I appreciate the debate that we've had here today, and I look forward to a future NDP government rectifying this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate on amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A1 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:48 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We'll go back to debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 9. Are there members wishing to join the debate?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 9 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 9. [interjections] Oh, I apologize. And report progress on Bill 12 and progress on bill – I apologize. I do not move any motions at this point in time.

Let's move on to Bill 10.

The Chair: Let's do that.

Bill 10

Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

The Chair: Are there any members that wish to join the debate? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 10, Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. I think what we can clearly see is that this is a bill about giving the Premier every tool she needs to use taxpayer money to try to secure another term. What it does, this piece of legislation, is create the Alberta fund, which is a $1.4 billion election campaign slush fund to buy votes. That's exactly what it is. In addition, it sets up conditions to bypass this place, the Legislature, oversight, by allowing the minister to designate a number of things, which we'll get to a little later.

You know, this couldn't be any more clear, Madam Chair, that this is a government – I mean, we are just weeks away from an election. We see a government spending millions on advertising, and now we see that they have put $1.4 billion aside, basically for a slush fund. It bypasses oversight, and – you know what? – it's vote buying. That's what it is. Now, this UCP has a horrible track record when it comes to spending money on things that are questionable at best, and I think it's important to remind this government and anybody paying attention of their track record.

Let's talk about the first – one of the things. I mean, there are so many things. Going back to 2019, we saw them bring in another piece of legislation, an omnibus piece of legislation, that included all kinds of things. In addition to deindexing benefits of some of the most destitute, I would say, people in Alberta, people that are living in poverty for the most part, people that have disabilities so they're on income support and AISH – they deindexed that benefit and told them that they wouldn't find it onerous and that it was really important to get our fiscal house in order. That's what they said, all of them. They stood up, they defended it for years as we continued to tell them about the problems.

At the same time, they decided that they were going to designate about $120 million for a war room, an energy war room. Now, all of us know how ridiculous that has been, what an enormous waste of money that has been, and actually embarrassing on the world stage a number a times. But it is what it is.

The next big fiscal train wreck happened around . . .

An Hon. Member: Was you.

Ms Renaud: You know, it's unfortunate that they can chirp but they can't stand up and contribute to debate. It is unfortunate that we have to remind this government about that.

Now, here's another one, Madam Chair, that you'll find interesting, I'm sure, because it's almost as big as the slush fund that's being created here, and that's when this government decided right before an American election that they were going to bet a whole bunch of money on then President Trump being re-elected. Kind of interesting that they would bet on this person being re-elected. I mean, all it takes is looking at polling. Clearly, they look at polling. They know what polling is about.

Mr. Schow: Hillary looked at polling, too.

Ms Renaud: Sure.

You know, the point is that they bet Albertans' money, resources, on something so ridiculous, never mind that he had a track record that there is no need to mention here because it's – well, there's no need to mention it here. We'll see, I guess, in the next few days if there's something that happens, first time a previous President being indicted on crimes. Sort of looks like that's the way it's going. It's interesting that this government chose to bet a whole chunk of Albertans' money on his being re-elected. That tells you a lot.

At the time, Alberta's Finance minister said that this $1.3 billion investment of taxpayers' money to the now defunct Keystone XL pipeline project was a prudent gamble. That's what this government said, that it was a prudent gamble, when polling was pretty clear – I'm not American; I don't vote in American elections, but just being an observer, it was pretty clear what was happening. But this government thought it was a prudent decision.

And here's another quote, actually a quote from something the Energy minister at the time said: added that this decision to put all of this money behind this was meshed with the broader commitment to grow Alberta's wellspring industry. That doesn't even make sense when you look at the state of American politics and that this government chose to waste all of those resources on a gamble. That's a fiscal train wreck. They made a comment a day after the project operator, TC Energy Corporation of Calgary, officially abandoned the multibillion-dollar cross-border project. They said that it was a good idea still, that it would mesh this wellspring of industry.

Around that time, you know, there were also numerous court challenges. Of course, this government doesn't actually like to pay attention to fact and what's going on. We also had the person that was also running for the job, the Democrat, Joe Biden, the now President of the United States, who was very clear that if he was successful for his bid for the presidency of the United States, this would be over. There was no sort of hedging or hints. It was very clear, crystal clear. Still this government chose to waste Albertans' resources on a bet that was sure to fail. That was one thing.

Here's some reporting, some public reporting, around the end of June in 2022. You know, we heard from, actually, the Auditor General this time telling us that there were some serious problems around $4 billion in COVID spending in 2020-21, serious problems in COVID spending. This is a government that wants to create a $1.4 billion slush fund. This is their track record. So $4 billion in COVID spending that wasn't really clear. Now, we have a really terrific Auditor General. I believe we have a really terrific Auditor General in Alberta, and I think that that office is certainly looking at the financial statements but also looking at ways to improve. I think, you know, the report did talk about what we could do better in the future. Unfortunately, this government really chose not to take those recommendations. They just chose to not follow the recommendations and to not do the work, so we continue to see these financial problems going forward.

You know, some of the findings: the audit at the time could not trace how $1.3 billion in federal aid for the safe restart agreement made its way through the ministries and was spent. This is the Auditor General of Alberta saying that there's a problem here. With billions of dollars, it's not clear where it went. Did it actually help? Did you meet any targets? Did you meet any goals? Did it make life better for anybody? This government has not been able to demonstrate that with $4 billion in COVID spending. This is a government that wants another $1.4 billion for a slush fund just weeks away from an election. That is not good.

Some of the other findings that the Auditor General shared with Albertans going back a couple of years. This government has a problem – they don't have a problem announcing the spending that they're going to do; they do have a problem sort of coming out the other end and saying: well, we did spend this much, and here were the results.

One key finding was that the results analysis did not always include the spending end results. Here's a list. Ministry of Health, disclosing the quantity of PPE and rapid tests distributed but not how much was spent on each of the categories of PPE, contact tracing, or rapid testing. There was no information. There was no clarity about where that was spent. The Ministry of Health, again, not disclosing the number of vaccines received by the federal government. This is the Auditor General saying that we have a problem here.

The Ministry of Health not describing what it achieved by spending $260 million to protect staff and residents in long-term care. Still we know they were devastated. People living in long-term care during COVID were devastated. They were devastated by illness, by death, by isolation. This government – there's just no clarity on where the money went and what were the results.

The Ministry of Education not disclosing individual initiatives spending or results for $263 million in spending for the safe return to class. These are federal dollars that the province of Alberta received during COVID to distribute for a number of programs, and the Auditor General of Alberta is saying: whoa; we have a problem. It's not the first problem this government has had. There have been many. Let's fast-forward a little bit further to the Auditor General telling Albertans about some of the errors that this government has made in their accounting that they actually had to go and correct.

One of the things that this government did – and maybe you will remember this – is that they decided that they were going to make life better for disabled Albertans by changing the date that they received their benefits, so changing the date that the money showed up in their account. Before the UCP decided to mess with this, they used to get their funds a few days before the end of the month so that there was enough time to go and get a bus pass if needed, to make sure the rent was paid on time, all of those things. This is a group of people typically with not a lot of resources. As you can imagine, they're living from month to month on that deposit, so when things are a little bit late, life gets difficult.

This government decided to just unilaterally change the date. "We're going to make it for the 1st. We're doing it to line up all the programs," which wasn't really true because they didn't do it for seniors. They only did it to the big programs to make the budget look better. They actually only recorded 11 months of expense in a 12-month period to make their books look better. They got caught by the Auditor General, and they had to make that change. They had to reverse this because it was wrong. In the meantime tens of thousands of Albertans were impacted by this decision. They didn't bat an eye.

This is the kind of fiscal mismanagement you get from this UCP government. It just goes on and on. That's just one teeny example from the Auditor General. They flagged $1.6 billion of accounting blunders. That's not me. That's the Auditor General of Alberta's report card on this government.

He noted that the government also had to make a hundred-million-dollar adjustment to the Keystone XL pipeline investment. The government made that investment before the fiscal year-end, but the money wasn't reflected in the balance sheet. Just a little error on this government's part.

There was also $152 million added to costs for two more income support programs. This is what I was talking about. Assured income for the severely handicapped: they recorded 11 months out of the 12. I mentioned that. The Auditor said that the department adjusted the numbers to "appropriately disclose that Community and Social Services exceeded its budgeted appropriation by $120 million."

The Auditor also criticized the environment department for muddled oversight on grants handed out under a $563 million fund that places a levy on heavy industrial greenhouse gas emitters. The Auditor said that there wasn't enough evidence to show that projects receiving fund money were, in fact, reducing emissions. Another example: $563 million and this government could not prove the results. This is not me saying this. This is the Auditor General of Alberta. This is one more financial disaster from this government. This is a government that wants to create a $1.4 billion slush fund weeks before a provincial election. It's not good.

Well, we heard yesterday – it was actually quite funny. I think the Finance minister corrected one of our comments, saying that it was a structured slush fund. I think he said it in jest, but I would suggest that's exactly what this is. This is a whole bunch of money sitting there for this government to decide where they're going to spend it depending on where they need the most votes. That's all this is. There is no transparency. There's no oversight. There's no debate in this place about deciding where these resources are most needed or how they will most make life better, none of that.

This is a pure and simple partisan slush fund. It is unfortunate that so many of the funds that Albertans need to make health care better in this province, to make education better in this province, to reduce class sizes, to do all of the things, to properly reindex benefits that were cut in 2019 – instead of just going forward, making people whole, and getting rid of those cuts that started in 2019, no, this government would rather take $1.4 billion and put it in a fund for them to decide unilaterally what they're going to fund right before an election. You think that's not partisan? That is. That is partisan.

It's incredibly disappointing that this UCP government has so little respect for Albertans that they have the audacity this close to an election to say: "Yeah. Don't worry about it. We're just going to put $1.4 billion over here, and we'll let you know where we're going to spend it as we go. Don't worry. Trust us." Albertans don't trust this government. This government will find out soon enough; Albertans don't trust them.

Thank you, Madam Chair. That's all I have.

5:20

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thanks, Madam Chair. I'm really excited to stand in support of Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. There's a lot of good material in this act. I won't have time, of course, to cover all of the merits of this bill, but I'll just cover a few.

When you go to page 6, it talks about amendments to the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. Of course, one of the great things that this Legislature has done – and I appreciate the members opposite. They supported this amendment as well. In Alberta we have the most generous charitable tax credit in the entire country. I love it that Alberta – you know, we have the highest per capita of giving – compared to any other jurisdiction in Canada gives the most to charities. I think that speaks to the many great individuals and families that we have in Alberta. It is truly a place of freedom and prosperity.

What the amendments to this act do is that individuals, on the first $200 that they donate – you know, this Legislature as a whole voted to increase that tax credit, from a provincial perspective, to 60 per cent. So when an Albertan gives $200 – on their first $200 of charitable donations now they receive 75 cents on the dollar back. Wow. What a great – I think it's something that I hope that each and every one of us in the Legislature can be proud of. It's a wonderful thing. It helps and recognizes, perhaps, Albertans that have more modest means. Perhaps they want to donate to a charity, and now that we partner with them – the Alberta government, the taxpayers partner with individuals who give to charities – they can receive, for their $200 donation, $150 back.

The reason why I love that amendment as well is that it establishes parity with the political donation tax credit. Of course, if individuals donate to a political party here in Alberta, they receive a tax credit of 75 per cent as well on the first $200, and now we've established parity with that. The donation limits on charities, rightfully so and from a policy perspective, are much higher for charitable donations than political donations. I love the fact that we have created parity of treatment for our charities in Alberta.

Not only are we the most generous, most beneficial place to donate for individuals donating over $200, but now, of course, we also have established ourselves as the most competitive jurisdiction in Canada for people donating $200 or less. Now we give a 75 per cent credit. And you know what? Bill 10 amends that to make it effective for this year. Any Albertan that donates in 2023 will receive a tax credit, 75 cents on the dollar back. What a wonderful thing. I hope that the members opposite don't find that offensive. In fact, I expect they wouldn't. I certainly hope they wouldn't. They supported the bill, and I appreciate that they did that. That's a really good thing.

Again, of course, I don't have time to cover everything, but one of the other things in Bill 10 is that we've amended the Local Government Fiscal Framework Act. You know, in Alberta we are blessed with natural resources. We are a land of prosperity. We have eliminated the 50 per cent factor, now making municipalities a full partner in terms of 100 per cent, you know, sharing under the fiscal framework. That increases the amount and resources they get through the provincial government to help them as they seek to serve Albertans. My understanding is that they're very excited about that. Again, another positive aspect of Bill 10.

I want to talk a little bit about the Alberta fund because it seems that the NDP doesn't necessarily understand how we have an Alberta fund in the first place. The Alberta fund is really a surplus fund. If we didn't have a surplus, we wouldn't have any amount in the Alberta fund. Of course, the NDP, if they were ever in government, would never have an Alberta fund. They only have a deficit fund – right? – and a debt fund. That's the NDP fund: a debt fund, a deficit fund. We have an Alberta fund. The only reason there is an Alberta fund and that there's a billion dollars in it is because we have a surplus, right? Of course, well, the NDP never had a surplus. Why? Because they were very bad fiscal managers. They were a horrible government.

When they came into power, they jacked up corporate tax rates, of course, making us very uncompetitive. Guess what happened to our corporate tax revenues as a province when the NDP came and jacked up corporate tax rates? Overall revenue from a corporate revenue tax perspective actually fell. We've reduced corporate tax rates so that we are the most competitive jurisdiction in Canada to start and grow a business. You know what our corporate tax revenue has done? Even though we reduced corporate tax rates, we actually now have record corporate tax revenues. You know, that is a wonderful thing.

I think, you know, when we kind of talk about surpluses and prosperity, we're having record migration to Alberta, right? That is a wonderful thing. While the NDP like to talk about us being a fiscal train wreck or they like to talk about fiscal management, well, people seem to be voting with their feet, and they're coming to Alberta. We see people coming from all across Canada, from all over the world because this is a land of prosperity and freedom, and I love that. In the fiscal framework it talks about expense growth, and it seeks to limit expense growth to inflation and population growth.

Before I became an MLA – of course, I am from Red Deer. I love Red Deer. It's where I grew up. It's where I came back with my young family. I raised my family in Red Deer. It's a beautiful place. It's centrally located in the Calgary-Edmonton economic corridor. You know, it's not too big, not too small. We have a beautiful river, parks system, trail system, and we're close to these beautiful lakes, the beautiful west country, which I love. It's such a great playground. Of course, we have the mountains nearby. Most important, it's a place where I raised my family. I love the individuals and families in Red Deer, as I think each and every member in this Legislature loves and cares about the individuals in their community. What we're seeing in Red Deer – and I expect that we're seeing it throughout the province of Alberta – is that people are coming here, right?

Even though from a macro perspective we live in a very challenged economic environment, Alberta is sort of a shining star, not only in the world but in Canada. People are wanting to come here. Why do you think that is? Do you think that's because they want to come to a woke, socialist, fiscal train wreck? No. They're coming to Alberta because we are leading Canada in economic growth, right? We have the lowest taxes and the highest incomes. That is our inheritance and our legacy. That is the Alberta culture, freedom and prosperity. Does that have anything to do with the socialist, woke NDP? Madam Chair, it does not. It has nothing to do with them. So, of course, they wouldn't understand the concept of an Alberta fund being a surplus fund.

Ms Renaud: A slush fund.

Mr. Stephan: It's a surplus fund because if there was no surplus, there would be no balance in it.

Of course, the NDP: it's a foreign concept to them because they were horrible people in terms of how they managed this province. Yeah. Madam Chair, sorry; I didn't mean that. They were horrible fiscal managers. They were very incompetent. They did a horrible job. The reason I know that is because when I visited individuals and families when I was knocking on doors in Red Deer-South, you know, there would be individuals that perhaps worked in the oil and gas sector, right? Under, unfortunately, this horrible government they chased out capital. They drove away businesses. They've never apologized for the economic harm that they did.

5:30

When they were in office, when they became government, during the four years that they were in government, private-sector jobs actually shrunk under their mismanagement. They've never apologized for that, but that – of course, they had their billion-dollar deficits. They were horrible government. I mean, they did a horrible job. We know that. But they inflicted a great human cost kind of underlying their incompetence. They drove away Albertans from being able to provide for themselves and their families. They chased away capital under an NDP, socialist, woke government. Businesses didn't want to come and invest in Alberta. No; they left, right? They were, like, partners with their bosom buddy Justin Trudeau, part of an NDP-Trudeau axis, a socialist, woke alliance. They were just a horrible, horrible government, and it's so good that they're gone. Really, because they were a horrible government, what are the fruits of horrible government? Huge, billion-dollar deficits.

I'm so grateful that we find ourselves now in a place of freedom and prosperity. We have record migration coming here. You know, I know why Albertans are coming here: because it's a place of opportunity. The clouds have lifted under this horrible grey NDP storm cloud going away, and in the next election they'll be even further away. I'm very happy about that because we've be able to repair the damage that they've done.

I'm really excited, Madam Chair, about supporting Bill 10. I love individuals living in their means. Of course, this government never understood what that is. They were a horrible government. We have surpluses. We are on the right track, a place of freedom and prosperity, and I'd invite the members opposite to vote in favour of Bill 10. Vote in favour of freedom and prosperity. Vote in favour of us undoing the horrible things that they did.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 10. I'd like to thank the Member for Red Deer-South for a colourful speech, perhaps his last in this Legislature. Certainly, it was one that allowed me to completely fill out my Conservative cliché bingo card, so I certainly appreciate those efforts on his part.

Madam Chair, the Member for Red Deer-South spoke at length about the Alberta fund being a surplus fund. Certainly, this government does have a surplus, in part because of the social debt, infrastructure debt, debt they've created in many other areas in the province of Alberta and in part due to a soaring price of oil, for which they can take absolutely no credit. But, certainly, I would note, Madam Chair, that it has been observed by economists in the province of Alberta that with the drop in the price of oil this government could in fact find itself running a deficit under its current projections. So while the member celebrates and claims fiscal responsibility, we know what the realities actually are, that this a government that continues to gamble on a high price of oil, which is about the opposite of what this member is claiming.

Again, it's very similar with this Alberta fund slush fund. The fact is, Madam Chair, that even if this was actually a surplus fund, it is not fiscal responsibility to set $1.4 billion aside for the government to simply spend on a whim one month before an election. That is not the kind of integrity or fiscal responsibility the Member for Red Deer-South was just claiming that his government champions. Certainly, if any other government before had attempted to do such, I'm pretty sure that member would have been in strong opposition and spoken vocally against it. When it is his government approaching an election in which he is perhaps in danger of losing his seat, he's in favour.

Now, there are many things that could be done with that $1.4 billion, Madam Chair. When we were speaking about the legacy of this government, as many of their members have and as the Minister of Finance did and took extensive time during their discussion on Bill 10 to brag about their record on investing in health care and other areas – let me tell you a bit of a story about a current situation under this government while they are setting $1.4 billion aside in a slush fund for their election campaign.

Down in High River, for nearly 15 years the High River youth and adult or teen clinic has been providing safe, confidential, accessible sexual and mental health services to teens and young adults in and around High River. It is celebrated. It is respected. I received a letter in support of it from the boys and girls club in the area recognizing the deep impact it has on supporting young people, youth, in that area. Many of the youth they serve come from vulnerable groups, like the LGBTQ2S-plus community, or from Indigenous communities. I received letters from doctors, from the boys and girls club, others calling it a vital part of health care in their community, important and life-saving, a vital preventative service.

Madam Chair, under this government as they were preparing this budget, as they were preparing to set aside $1.4 billion for their election slush fund, on February 7, just a few hours before Dr. Jennifer Norheim, who has been at that clinic since it began, was getting ready to open the clinic for the day, she gets a call from her local PCN, who had gotten a call from Alberta Health telling that local PCN that they could no longer use their funding to pay for her work at the young adult and youth clinic. No warning, no offer of time to negotiate, no suggestion of how they could find another way to fund that work, just simply an ultimatum: you cannot fund that with your dollars anymore.

Now, the argument, Madam Chair, was that that work should be done under fee-for-service. Well, the Minister of Health is crusading on having accepted the recommendations of the MAPS committee, the early recommendations, which talk about trying to get away from fee-for-service. Regardless, while this government was preparing to set aside $1.4 billion, as in here, in Bill 10, for their election slush fund, they told that local PCN they could no longer use their dollars to fund the work of Dr. Norheim.

So Dr. Norheim is left with the choice, Madam Chair, of choosing to volunteer her time at the clinic, do that work unpaid, as this government demanded so many family doctors do throughout the course of the pandemic while they were still maintaining their war against physicians in the province of Alberta. Dr. Norheim can't afford to do that, so the clinic will be closing as of March 31, the end of next week.

And you know what, Madam Chair? Dr. Norheim mentioned that there are no family doctors accepting new patients in their area. None. So those young people will lose their access at the youth and young adult clinic, and they will have no other options in the community to access that care. None. That is the reality on the ground while this government celebrates their $1.4 billion in this apparent surplus fund that the Member for Red Deer-South is so proud of. What better use of a surplus than to actually fund access to care in the community for vulnerable youth? But, no, they're not doing that; they're setting this $1.4 billion aside to campaign for their jobs. It flies in the face of everything that the Minister of Health and the UCP say they're actually working to support.

In the words of Dr. Norheim: this is a decision that will add more chaos and instability to the system. It will hurt access to primary care. It will increase the pressure on their local emergency departments while this government stands with their chosen fixer, Dr. Cowell, and claims that they have solved all of these issues. Again, Madam Chair, more interested in their re-election than actually doing the work they were elected to do for Albertans.

5:40

I can tell you, Madam Chair, that this clinic is precisely the kind of model of care that an Alberta NDP government will invest in, that we will support regardless of the price of oil, because that doesn't change the need in the community or the needs of these youth.

The Member for Red Deer-South talked about people voting with their feet. When we're talking about family doctors and care in the community, Madam Chair, better places where we could be spending this $1.4 billion that they're using for an election slush fund, let me tell you that just today we got the results for residency positions across Canada, young, graduating doctors making their choice of where they want to go do their residency, training, and potentially build their career. In family medicine Alberta had 42 vacancies. From what I've seen, that's the highest of any jurisdiction in Canada. B.C. had two vacancies. Young doctors are voting with their feet in the face of this government and its decisions and its supposed fiscal responsibility.

That is a different kind of debt, one that doesn't show up necessarily on the actuarial table but certainly does show up for these youth in High River and the tens of thousands of other Albertans who do not have a family doctor and don't face much of a prospect of getting one under this government.

This is part of a pattern, Madam Chair. This government, as they're preparing for this election, you know – and in their debate on Bill 10 and in some of the other debate this government has talked about election advertising. “Boy, the Alberta NDP in 2018” – let's see; so that's a full year they're talking about here, about the amount of government advertising that was spent on an election that took place four months after that, when they themselves are massively increasing government advertising spending directly before the election, including $9 million that they're awarding themselves in supplementary spending.

You know an interesting thing, Madam Chair? On February 1, 2019, the former Premier, the hon. Jason Kenney, committed that a UCP government would extend a ban on nonessential government advertising to include not only the campaign period but also the months leading up to it. Promise made; promise not kept. Indeed, instead what we saw this government do was, through Bill 81, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2021 (No. 2), create a fixed election date, which then removed the existence of that campaign period. All of a sudden, conveniently, there are no rules and restrictions anymore on government advertising right up to the red line.

What we see, again, Madam Chair, is that through this $1.4 billion slush fund, through the massive increase in government advertising spending, which the Member for Red Deer-South would have decried if any other government were doing it but he's happy to support to potentially try – and I do say “try” – to save his own seat, this government is willing to abuse the use of taxpayer dollars, the same dollars that they claim they're so proud to protect, the $1.4 billion, as I noted yesterday, that they clawed out of the pockets of AISH recipients, folks on income supports, seniors that receive the Alberta seniors' benefit, students who needed special-needs support in schools, family doctors as they were scraping to get by, having to close clinics and lay off staff in the midst of the pandemic. None of those folks, none of those causes, none of those issues were as important as this government needing to save its own skin. That is the reality of what we see before us in Bill 10 with the Alberta fund, a $1.4 billion slush fund for the next election. But Albertans see it, Madam Chair.

Now, certainly, there are a number of things in this bill that we don't find objectionable. Certainly, as the Member for Red Deer-South said, making it easier to begin the expansion of the tax credit for charitable donations: we have no issue with that whatsoever. The government choosing to force Albertans to make donations, which, basically, is what we have with this $1.4 billion slush fund: that we do have an issue with.

Nonetheless, we've seen quite clear where this government's standards lie and what its intentions are and how far it's willing to go when it's seeing the writing on the wall as Albertans make quite clear what their thoughts are on this government's record, on the choices it has made, on the level of arrogance and entitlement that they have brought forward, that rivals that of the 44-year dynasty of the PC government. Indeed, you could say that in some sense it exceeds it, because they managed, where it took 44 previously, to get there in four.

Thankfully, in May, Madam Chair, we have the opportunity to cut that short and make sure it ends at four and bring some integrity and respect for Albertans back to this government. I look forward to the opportunity to do that.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is always a pleasure to rise and speak in this Chamber. I stand today to express my support for Bill 10.

Firstly, I would like to applaud the Premier, the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance, all the ministers for coming up with a budget that will secure the future of Alberta. It balances the priorities of Albertans in health care and education while ensuring the government lives within its means.

This budget builds on Alberta's strong foundations and continues to position the province for further diversification and growth. Through this government's fiscal responsibility during the past four years, supports and reliefs to Albertans during this time of high inflation are readily available without incurring debt.

Speaking of debt, Madam Chair, through this government's proper management of provincial finances, we are now able to reduce and pay down the provincial debt, which was never done by the members opposite during their time in government. What they did was to accumulate more debt. The members opposite were not even able to balance the budget, and it seemed that they never intended to balance it, as can be noticed in their continuous assertion of a spending spree. They even hinted that they would increase taxes. As we already have seen, it drove away job creators and billions in investments. While they plan to spend more and incur more debt to Alberta, leaving future generations to pay for it, they have yet to mention any shadow budget.

On the other hand, this government has planned to balance the budget from day one of assumption of office. It is a wise and thoughtful plan to eliminate the largest deficit in Alberta's history. In fact, during the start of this government in administration, the deficit has decreased even faster than initially planned. A balanced budget would give us the ability to reduce the debt-servicing charge and pay down the debt. It would remove the burden to future generations to pay debt that they did not incur.

When the previous government assumed governance of the province, debt servicing was under $800 million a year. When they were ousted from office, it was about $2.3 billion a year. As this government pays down the debt, Madam Chair, we are able to redirect this debt-servicing amount to more useful services that Albertans rely on, including health care, infrastructure, social programs, child care, and education.

Budget 2023 is another opportunity for this government to create and build Alberta's future, with a forecast surplus of $2.4 billion and robust economic activity poised to lead the country in economic growth. It is aimed to have financial stability, and it ensures a greater, successful future for Alberta by growing the economy, creating good-paying jobs, strengthening health care and education, and keeping Alberta communities safe. Through the well-thought-out strategy of this government our economy is showing encouraging signs of recovery and growth, but there is a lot more to be done to further diversify, to strengthen our workforce, grow our resources, and extend the needed help for all Albertans.

Madam Chair, Budget 2023 also includes inputs from Albertans and stakeholders. The government received feedback and submissions from Albertans and various stakeholders through consultations conducted by way of online surveys, written submissions, and telephone town halls. Everyone's views were considered by the government, and all received were of great help in understanding the priorities of families, businesses, and communities. Having said that, let me express my appreciation to all who participated with the Budget 2023 consultations. Alberta is continuously moving forward through the government's focused, responsible fiscal management and relentless pursuit of economic growth. It has put the province on the most sustainable fiscal trajectory, creating expanded financial capacity and resulting in additional government revenues.

The job-creating corporate tax cut introduced by this government, Madam Chair, is proving to be a more sensible approach than the increasing of taxes imposed by the previous government. Through this approach it is estimated that for the fiscal year 2023-2024 there is about $1.6 billion more collected in annual corporate tax revenue at the 8 per cent rate than the previous government did at 12 per cent in 2018-19, demonstrating the huge investment framework established since this government took office.

Multibillion-dollar investments have started to come into Alberta, Madam Chair. It has been forecast that Alberta will again have outstanding economic growth this year. Amazon Web Services is building its second cloud computing hub in Calgary, amounting to $4.3 billion. Infosys and Mphasis opened their tech hubs last year in Calgary and created thousands of jobs in the province. RBC has also established a tech hub in Calgary, with about 300 jobs. EY created a new finance hub, with about 200 jobs in Calgary, impressed with the talented workforce. Just recently Appexus technology is to open its new Canadian headquarters in downtown Calgary, creating 125 jobs in the process. An additional huge investment that has landed in Alberta is Lynx, Madam Chair. Canada's newest low-cost airline joins Flair and WestJet as Alberta-based airlines.

These are just some of the many investments creating jobs in Alberta and boosting our economy, Madam Chair. We saw the employment rate hit prepandemic levels in December 2021 by gaining about 130,000 jobs for the year, including 6,100 to the oil and gas industry. Moreover, in January 2022 we heard that Canada lost 200,000 jobs, but Alberta's economy gained over 7,000 jobs; 8,200 jobs were created in February 2022, which means that more Albertans are returning to work and receiving a regular paycheque.

Alberta got off to a strong start in January this year, with our province gaining 20,600 new jobs, and almost 11,000 more Albertans gained full-time jobs in February. Since 2021 Alberta has created more than 221,000 jobs. Our plan is working, and we are putting the right policies in place to grow and diversify the economy.

Under the NDP 183,000 Albertans lost their jobs, and businesses fled our province. This proves that Alberta's economy has momentum, and this government is focused on even more job creation in Alberta, which continues to be the economic engine of Canada. With a strong focus on investment attraction, job creation, and economic growth, Budget 2023 sets the stage for Alberta to remain Canada's economic engine for decades.

A $176 million grant to the already successful Alberta at work initiative will help Albertans build their skills and find good jobs. It will also assist employers in their search for workers in existing and emerging sectors. Further investment in aviation and aerospace, agrifood manufacturing, and $24.5 million for the Alberta technology and innovation strategy will enhance emerging and innovative technologies and help attract even more venture capital investment to Alberta.

Let me also add that Alberta continues to be a world leader in sustainable and responsible resource development among oil-producing jurisdictions. This shows that while we recognize that Canada's largest exporter is still the oil and gas industry, we're experiencing broad-based investment and economic diversification in our province. Nonetheless, this investment climate and composition does not mean that the government's approach in carefully handling the province's finances will twist.

Alberta's government continues its disciplined spending to maintain balance and to secure Alberta's future. Albertans need a strong health care system with the capacity to manage extraordinary surges and provide an excellent standard of care to all. That is why Alberta's government is also setting new records for spending in health care through Budget 2023. Madam Chair, we have the best front-line health care workers in the world, and Budget 2023 provides the right supports to ensure that Albertans get the care they need when and where they need it.

We are seeing a record-high investment into the Health ministry's operating budget. An additional $965 million this year will help the Ministry of Health continue building a stronger health care system and ensure that the government can do what's needed to improve wait times for ambulance services, emergency rooms, and surgeries.

EMS services will be strengthened with $196 million in funding over three years. This means that more staff will be hired, and it implements the recommendations made by the Alberta EMS Provincial Advisory Committee. Over three years $15 million will be spent to source more EMS vehicles and replace or upgrade related equipment.

As we aim to increase surgical capacity and help reduce wait times, Madam Chair, Budget 2023 commits $237 million over three years for the Alberta surgical initiative capital program, including $120 million in new funding to support additional projects in Alberta Health Services owned facilities.

To attract, recruit, and train more doctors and nurses, with a focus on family physicians for rural areas, Budget 2023 also allotted $158 million for these initiatives. This record investment also ensures . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the committee is now recessed until 7:30 this evening.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 10 Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

The Deputy Chair: Are there any with comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 10 here in committee. I did have some comments last evening around the general, the second reading type of thing. And then, you know, second reading did imply reading, and upon further analysis I did see a section that I did want to draw the attention of the House to, which is section 15 on page 42 of Bill 10. As we said before, there are a number of sections in here that we have no quarrel with. I mean, there are lots of things that needed to get cleaned up. It sort of reads in some ways like a miscellaneous statutes act, but then in other ways there are other areas that I think perhaps we could have a little more close analysis of. So I do have an amendment that I would like to bring forward in regard to section 15, which is on page 42 of the bill, if everybody wants to flip there.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

This will be amendment A1.

If you would read it into the record for us, we'd appreciate it.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Sure. Thank you, Mr. Chair. The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West to move that Bill 10, Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, be amended by striking out sections 15(2) and (5). As I said, those are sections that you'll find on page 42 and page 43 of this bill.

I guess what I was told by the minister's department when they brought forward this bill was that they were looking for ways by which they could allow for collaboration with other postsecondary institutions to support regional access to collaboration and undergraduate degree programs and stuff like that, right? Now, the thing is, though, that the example that the ministry gave for us was NorQuest, but of course NorQuest is not one of the private, independent colleges in Alberta, you know. In fact, it's funded like Bow Valley and Lethbridge College and so forth. It's in a different category to that. So my concern around sections 15(2) and (5) was that it could open the door for the government, without making new laws, to bring forward further degree-granting powers to private universities without the proper oversight that that change should entail.

If you're bringing forward a private degree and they're offering an undergraduate degree in the arts, let's say, for example, at a private university or private college, then there's usually a process that should go through that's quite rigorous. This seemed to circumvent that somehow. You know, I've been around long enough to see that we've had a number of colleges historically in Alberta that would come in and offer degrees and so forth. Number one, sometimes we had complaints, students had complaints about the quality of education that they were receiving. And then: to what degree were the colleges with their certificates being actually recognized by employers and across Canada and across North America and around the world?

Always, when you are making changes to degree status and accreditation status, Mr. Chair, you have to make sure that you are ensuring the reputation and the credibility of not just the institution that might be asking for those changes but for our whole postsecondary system in general, because, of course, whether it's fair or not, the public and individuals will judge a degree or a ticket or a diploma or so forth, you know, collectively, sometimes saying: "Well, this is an Alberta diploma. Hey, have you heard that the Alberta diplomas maybe are not coming through as reputably as other places, from certain schools and so forth?" Part of our job here in the Legislature is to make sure we protect that reputation as well as protecting the integrity of degrees and diplomas that students will receive from schools around the province, right? Also, that protection means value for money, too. Of course, it's very expensive to go to school. If people are spending and getting for something that's advertised as one thing but maybe it's not, then, again, that is not fair to students and, again, affects the reputation of our postsecondary system in general, too.

My amendment – probably everybody has received that now – simply strikes out sections 15(2) and 15(5), which is, I think, a not unreasonable thing to do. Indeed, you know, if the purpose is to have more collaboration between colleges, like NorQuest or Bow Valley or something like that, to talk about other degree-granting potential, I mean, they're free to do that, and there are other ways by which we can do that. We don't have to remove the regulatory oversight that this body does provide to postsecondaries around the province. I believe there are other ways to do that. So I would encourage everyone to at least take a sober second look at this section and, hopefully, support my amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this section of the bill and specifically with regard to the amendment that's just been brought forward by the previous speaker. I certainly want to caution this government about how they move forward with changes to legislation that affects universities and academic institutions, particularly when it comes to independent academic institutions, that often find themselves in a very different category than some of our major institutions like the University of Alberta or the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, for example. These institutions have, often, a different perspective on what it is that they're trying to accomplish in their work, and as such, you know, we should be a bit cautious about how we deal with them.

In this particular case we have under section (5) that it allows the minister the ability to add regulation-making authority. I'm concerned about having the minister given that kind of responsibility when they are not part of the very significant peer-led process of making decisions at a university. Moving decisions to the minister's ability and having institutions do that is something that we need to be a bit cautious about because the whole nature of successful universities is that they work on a collegial basis, that they work to examine each other to ensure that their standards are up to an appropriate level, and I think this is a good way to go about doing it. I think that they are the generators of knowledge. They are the transmitters of knowledge.

We should always try to ensure that it is the people who are most steeped in the area of knowledge that are the ones that would be making the decisions over all of the aspects of training our students, of ensuring that our students get the right kind of experiences, that they are exposed to the highest level of current information, and that they reach the standards that they need to reach in order to be able to graduate and be recognized as professional representatives within whatever field they have chosen. I think this is a good standard. It ensures that the people with the most knowledge in a particular situation are indeed making the decisions, and it has proven to be very effective over the years around the world in keeping the standards at a very high rate.

As such, I think it's important that we ensure that our universities all stick to what has been demonstrated to be a very good standard in society and that we ensure that the universities in the province of Alberta try to achieve that highest level of standard, as many of them try to do. I mean, we are fortunate to have universities here in Alberta that are considered in the top 100 in the world. We certainly want to maintain that level of success, and we don't want to do anything that will undermine the reputation that our universities have. Having a reputation is very significant in terms of being able to get grants from around the world, to attract excellence in research and scholarship. You know, we need to guard that here in this province to ensure that that's always the thing that we focus on most when we think about what a university does – that is, that it's achieving a level of excellence – and we shouldn't be doing anything to undermine that.

I know that there is a different kind of model in the States, that universities are often run by people with particular kinds of agendas and aren't always concerned about, you know, achieving the standards of excellence that our universities here in Alberta are trying to achieve. I would hate to see us move in any kind of direction that would start to slide down that slippery slope that they have in the States, where they have situations where a guy named Trump can put a university together and charge a lot of money for people and not produce any results and eventually have to close down. All of those students who went to that university not only lost their money, but they lost their time and they lost their opportunities. That's a dangerous place that I think that the Americans have gone, and I certainly don't want to see us go in that direction. The way we guard against that is that we ensure that all the decisions that are made in universities are reviewed by the other universities, the peers in the other universities, that they set the standards, that they review whether the standards have actually been met, and then they set a course for correction if ever a university is offline.

I know that as a university instructor I participated in exactly those kinds of processes. I have had the opportunity to meet accreditation standards and was very happy to receive feedback from, you know, experienced, knowledgeable people from around Canada who have given us direction about things that we should improve or things that we should change. I'm very happy that that's the process because, indeed, if we want to maintain our accreditation, we would respond to those kinds of criticisms and defend ourselves if indeed we felt the criticism was offline. It was an important, rigorous, collegial process, and I think that kind of a process is one that has resulted in excellence and one that we want to continue to support.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to join debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to applaud the Member for Edmonton-North West for bringing forward this amendment as it highlights very specific concerns.

Adding to the debate, I would really like to contribute how this actually impacts a lot of racialized people here in the province of Alberta. Of course, as you well know, many racialized people have been coming to the province of Alberta over the last 50 years, calling it home. The population of racialized people has been increasing, and we're very close to almost being at 50 per cent racialized people here in the province of Alberta. The Alberta of today looks very different than the Alberta of 50 years ago.

Now, the reality is that a lot of these racialized people are coming because of economic conditions in their own home country. They don't have as much equitable access to being able to provide for their families, so they look at coming to Edmonton and Alberta and Canada as an opportunity for them to provide a better future for themselves, for their families, especially their children. Especially their children. When they get here, often it's very difficult for them to receive accreditation for past education that they have received in their home country.

I've come across many a racialized constituent that now calls Alberta home, that has been in this particular situation, and then desperately is seeking some kind of recourse to be able to get education as quickly as possible so that they can enter into the job market and be able to make more money than just, for example, working in the service industry. I mean, that is an option for many of them. However, they would like to be able to provide for their families a lot more than just minimum wage, for example.

So then they go to some of these private postsecondary institutions, and they've actually come to me – a number of them have come to me and, for example, they've signed a contract with one of these postsecondary institutions for thousands and thousands of dollars. For some reason or another they have been unable to complete the program, and then they're left having to owe all of this money to that postsecondary institution, that private postsecondary institution. Then not only that, but we actually see a lot of these private postsecondaries saddling a lot of students with a lot of debt.

I mean, for some programs, yes, there is an opportunity for people to get some kind of grant from either the federal government or even to some extent from the provincial government as well. However, the vast majority of them can't access these grants, but they're so desperate to be able to provide for their family and also – let's be real about it – send money back home to dependants that they have back home, family members who they have back home who are going through very difficult times because of the economic situation in their home country.

I won't get into that, but in my particular perspective a lot of immigrants are coming here because, I will say, economic interests of Canada and the United States have impacted their economies in a negative way. Because those countries are saddled in debt through either loans that they received through the International Monetary Fund or the International Development Bank, they have created the conditions such that the economic situation in their home country has made it so that they can't actually have a future there. So because of that situation, they end up coming here, hoping that they're going to have a better future here. And, of course, with these postsecondary institutions, those who attempt to enrol in some of these programs or some of these courses and things like that end up being saddled with an enormous amount of debt, and it puts them in a very precarious state because eventually they have to pay that back. It's a very difficult situation.

I applaud again the Member for Edmonton-North West for bringing forward this amendment. I'm not saying that there are an incredible number of bad actors when it comes to private postsecondary institutions – there are a lot of them that are doing an incredible job; they're providing opportunities for a lot of people so that they can go back and get an education and then enter the job market, and a lot of them do then provide for their families – but unfortunately there are some bad actors. That's why this amendment is suggesting that sections 15(2) and 15(5) be stricken from the bill, so that instead of this being done in regulation, it'll have to actually come back into legislation so it could actually be discussed inside this House, where we can actually debate these matters before just writing kind of, like, a blank cheque to a lot of these postsecondary institutions so that they can do whatever they like.

Of course, as I was stating, saddling a lot of these students with debt actually adversely impacts a lot of racialized communities here in the province of Alberta. I would beg the members on the other side of the House to give this a second thought, to really consider this amendment, that it really does impact the pocketbook of people who are desperately seeking opportunities to become further educated, too, so that they can supplement their income. At the end of the day, we're trying to make it easier and better for Albertans to be able to access better paying jobs inside of the Alberta job market, so that they can provide for their families, make sure that their children can go to postsecondary educational institutions, which is what a lot of them end up coming to Alberta for. They want to see their children be able to go to postsecondary and be able to get an education so that the whole family can then improve their lot.

With this particular amendment, again I ask the members to please consider it. It's something that should come to the House through legislation rather than just having the minister focus on particular regulations, so that there can be more oversight of these private postsecondary educational institutions.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to join debate.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to add my voice to the debate on this amendment to Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. Of course, as my colleagues have all shared, it does strike out two sections, the part that gives the minister the authority to just, through his office, through regulations, designate these independent academic institutions or take away that designation, either/or. Both of those pieces in the legislation the amendment wants to strike.

There's a bit of a trend, of course, with this government. The UCP has brought other bills forward giving ministers authority to do things through regulation. That means that they get to do it through a ministerial order, not by bringing it to this Legislature so that all 87 members can have a say, so that it can be a transparent process. We can all, both in opposition, independent, or government members, speak to that. I guess I just ask: why? Why is this needed? Why does it need to be done sort of clandestinely? We know that, as I said, many other pieces of legislation – probably the most egregious one was the health bill during the pandemic. It gave extraordinary powers to the Health minister, and even the UCP could see in time that that had gone too far, and they did introduce legislation to take that power away. That was an important step back.

But I think that it does erode democracy when these types of bills come forward. We know that a constitutional democracy has checks and balances. Certainly, putting the legislation in front of the members of this Assembly is an important aspect of the oversight. It gives people an opportunity in our province that may have interest in this area to know what we're talking about, and then they can reach out to their MLAs, give them feedback about it. But all of that is being, you know, taken away because it just can be done behind closed doors by a ministerial order.

This amendment, of striking out these two sections, I commend all the members of this Legislature to support because it takes away that undue power. I mean, I think it's much better if that legislation can be brought to the House. Just looking at the way the bill is written now, it's always really important to ask, like: who benefits? Who benefits from legislation? Why is someone bringing this forward? Who is the government wanting to support in this? It's always important to look at, you know, who's going to have a benefit.

Let's just think about that, and I know some of my colleagues have already talked about this. Will students benefit by this, by the creation of an independent academic institution that the minister can just designate? I don't know; we have some pretty significant public institutions in our province. We know private institutions don't have that rigour of public oversight. Why is it that we need private ones?

We know from past experience – DeVry is an example. You know, it closed suddenly. Students were left with a lot of debt. Their courses were – they may have been midstream in their academic career, and all of a sudden the institution that they were meant to complete their degrees in was gone. Besides the other, you know, issues that have been brought up, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about how much newcomers to Canada are impacted by this and perhaps taken advantage of by some of these institutions. So it doesn't sound like students are benefiting.

Would staff benefit from this? I guess they would get a job, but there is that precariousness about whether that institution is solid enough, you know, and if it's a for-profit model. It seems like there are so many factors. And that's what happened with DeVry. They had issues with enrolment in the States, and that impacted some of their – well, I think Calgary was the only one that had a DeVry academic institution, and that closed because of stuff that happened in the States with the markets and that kind. So – I don't know – it makes it pretty precarious for staff as well.

Would the owners of these private institutions benefit? I mean, I guess that's where I'm heading. I'm thinking that's probably why the UCP wants to do this: because they've been in consultation with people who want to start up private academic institutions, so this is kind of reaching out to them for support. You know, they could obviously stand to make a lot of profit from these types of private institutions, so perhaps that's what it's about.

I think the fourth group that I'd ask who benefits would be the community. Do they benefit from this? But, again, if it is a pretty precarious situation, if it's not an institution that's going to stay and support people over time, it probably will take more away than support the community.

This amendment goes a long way to, I think, supporting that not to happen. We want to make sure that we have strong academic institutions that are here for a long time, that are serving the community, the students, and also that the staff have stable jobs in them. I guess I commend all of my colleagues in this House to vote for this amendment so that the minister cannot designate, just by ministerial order, by regulations, the independence of an academic institution that is degree granting. I just commend everyone to support this amendment.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

8:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Anyone else wishing to speak? I see the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak against the amendment that the hon. member opposite has put forward tonight. Independent academic institutions play a very important role in offering choice in postsecondary education to Albertans. You know, a number of the issues that have been raised by the other side I believe are very weak. There's an accreditation process that is required before any postsecondary institutions can ultimately receive the status as an accredited degree-granting postsecondary institution in the province. Moreover, there would be rigorous review before any changes were made by the minister. Again, I believe that it would be in the purview of the Minister of Advanced Education to ensure that there are additional responsible school choice options for postsecondary students in Alberta. That's why we believe this regulation-making authority is important in Bill 10.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Anyone else to add to the debate this evening?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the main bill, Bill 10. I see the hon. Member for Calgary-North has risen.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am honoured to rise to speak to Bill 10. One of the reasons I ran for public office was because I always wanted to see responsible and accountable government, and I think this bill has achieved that objective. Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, will help build fiscal stability, attract investment, support children and families, cut red tape, improve provincial funding mechanisms, and make life more affordable for students. These measures are crucial to Albertans, and they are critical to the well-being of our province. With the implementation of Bill 10, Alberta will be able to safeguard the present and provide security for future generations.

Bill 10 would propose amendments to the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act to legislate a new fiscal framework for Alberta to prosper. The fiscal framework would require all future Alberta governments to balance their annual budgets, with certain exceptions, and use any surpluses – and I emphasize the word “surpluses”; they would have to create surpluses first and then deal with that – to first pay down debt and save for the future before investing in one-time initiatives. It would require a government to use 50 per cent of surplus cash to pay down debt maturing in that fiscal year. The rest would be deposited into the Alberta fund to give the government time to determine how to responsibly use it.

I truly believe that this is the way forward for Alberta and for Albertans. A balanced budget would allow more fiscal stability for our province without adding further burdens to our debt, that taxpayers and future generations of Albertans are forced to pay out. Bill 10 would also require transparency to Albertans. The government would provide a detailed reporting on the use of funds from the Alberta fund. A government that keeps secrets is not a government that works for Albertans. Transparency is an essential component to healthy government-public relationships.

Bill 10 states that money from the Alberta fund can only be used for three purposes: to further pay down debt, to invest in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, or for one-time initiatives that do not permanently increase government spending. Enforcing rules that will be applied pertaining to any government entity is important in ensuring that a government cannot make sweeping changes to Alberta's savings plan and funds. Consistency is the key when it comes to future planning, especially for a growing province such as Alberta.

Mr. Chair, Bill 10 also proposes amendments to streamline the transfer of money from the general revenue fund to the heritage savings trust fund. Currently legislation requires a portion of the heritage fund's net income to be kept in the fund to protect against inflation. Any investment income not used for inflation-proofing of the heritage fund must be transferred to the general revenue fund.

This new legislation would allow the heritage fund to retain all its net income. If we had done this from the very beginning, as stated by a number of members on this side, there would be close to $300 billion in the trust fund today instead of $18 billion, that we presently have.

Mr. Chair, I remember that this fund was established in 1976, actually May 19, 1976, under the government of Alberta, and at that time we had Premier Peter Lougheed, who was an inspiration for me to get into politics. So gone by is gone by. We need to protect this fund now. Although we are unable to protect the past, we can look forward to the future and recognize how we can do better and ultimately make better decisions.

Albertans deserve responsible policies that create effective and positive changes. Albertans deserve to feel financially safe and secure for many years to come, and they deserve a government that promotes these values. With all the good that comes with Bill 10, the section pertaining to postsecondary students is particularly important to myself and to my constituents in Calgary-North. Mr. Chair, affordability is a top priority for many Albertans, but affordability for postsecondary is especially important. Reducing financial barriers for students to access postsecondary education is a personal goal of mine but also for this government.

With Bill 10, Alberta's government would implement a 2 per cent cap on tuition increases for domestic students at the institutional level at a public postsecondary institution for 2024-25 and future academic years. A 2 per cent cap would make a significant difference for tuition and tuition increases. Students should not have to feel barred from classes because they cannot afford to attend, especially with consideration of inflation.

Bill 10 would make sure that more students will be able to enter postsecondary institutions, and it will also ensure that they can afford to stay until graduation. It is so important that Albertans have access to postsecondary learning, and I am very proud that Bill 10 effectively addresses this issue.

Lastly, I would like to touch on Bill 10 tackling the financial hurdles of families wanting to adopt in Alberta. Every child deserves a safe and loving environment to grow up in. The process of giving a child a caring home should not be difficult or expensive. With Bill 10, new subsidies, a higher tax credit, and other supports would make adoption more feasible for Albertans.

Mr. Chair, this bill incorporates aspects from various categories that are incredibly important to our province and to Albertans. Bill 10 will allow Albertans to feel confident in major financial decisions of the government while also building vibrant communities, municipalities, and supporting strong families, students, and individuals. Those are the reasons that I will be supporting this bill, and I urge members on this side and on that side to please support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Other members wishing to add comments, questions, or amendments? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has risen.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure, you know, on one of my final occasions, to rise and speak to a bill in this Chamber. It's interesting, the bill that I'm speaking to. Honestly, I appreciate that much of this bill is housekeeping, but there were a couple of numbers where my eyes went over and went back and went over and went back, and I thought: this can't be correct. But here it is, printed in black and white, that the government, this government, that has often decried, when it's been in opposition, previous government spending before an election, including the Premier when she was the leader of the Wildrose Party – I was in this Chamber listening to her decry how outrageous it was that the then Premier, Alison Redford, had spending in her budget ahead of an election.

Mr. Chair, it is absolutely ridiculous, preposterous, absurd that this bill gives this government a $1.4 billion slush fund ahead of the election. If there is actually a true conservative over there, they should be outraged. Apparently, there aren't; the UCP are a bunch of socialists. What world am I living in? A $1.4 billion slush fund for one-time infrastructure investments: like, you can't scream "buying votes" more than $1.4 billion worth of them, one-time investments, before an election.

There are members in this House that served back in 2015 that agreed and voted in favour of legislation that we brought forward which put a buffer zone around the election that prohibited governments from spending ahead of writ drop. Why? Because everybody sees it for what it is: it's buying votes. One of the first acts that this government did under the former Premier Jason Kenney was to undo that legislation, which allows the current government to be able to spend $1.4 billion in April. That's in addition, Mr. Chair, to the $3 million of advertising in this bill plus the $6 million additional advertising fund in the sup supply bill.

This bill is an attack on democracy. If every party doesn't have the same ability to spend that kind of money, the government is essentially bribing Albertans with their own money ahead of the election. It's absolutely ridiculous.

What I like less are conservatives in socialist clothing, which is what this bill is doing. Honestly, Mr. Chair, this goes against every fundamental tenet and pillar of democracy. This was the exact reason that in 2015 the newly formed NDP government brought in election financing as our Bill 1, which banned both corporate and union donations and said that if individual Albertans want to make contributions to political parties, then they should be able to, with a limit on how much they can donate, but we should remove the ability for corporations and unions to be able to donate. And we did.

We did bring in a bill that then ensured that governments couldn't take advantage of tax dollars and their position to be able to make a whole bunch of spending announcements right before the election. Members on the other side that were in this Chamber voted in favour of it. I mean, I can start naming them by constituency, who voted in favour of it. It was essentially every member who is still in this Chamber who was elected in 2015. I don't know if we had unanimous consent, but members agreed that it is undemocratic and unfair to all the other political parties if the government takes advantage of their position of being government and using tax dollars.

The other thing here, Mr. Chair, is that governments should not be allowed to use tax dollars to buy votes on the eve of an election. It's beyond frustrating that the government is doing this. You know what? Honestly, I'm quite surprised that the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board actually supports this and has put this bill forward because I believe – and I still want to believe – that he's a man of integrity and that this crosses that line of giving the government the ability to do major announcements, injecting $1.4 billion, on the eve of an election. It begs the question. The government had four years to be able to make these announcements, to make these investments, so I will struggle to accept the answer that these are critical investments that Alberta needs. Maybe. But then they should have been made six months ago or three years ago, or they should be postponed until after the election, not used as a way to try to curry favour. So that's disappointing.

Like I said, the rest of the bill is mostly housekeeping, which I can support and I appreciate, but this one section, along with an additional $3 million in advertising – Mr. Chair, political parties during the campaign period can only spend somewhere around $2 million, so this is giving the government another $3 million to advertise. You know, I appreciate the argument that the government is currently using on advertising, yet if the government checks what they said in Hansard in 2018-19 or in 2014-15 or 2011-12, all of those opposition parties said: well, this is ridiculous. I mean, back in the day Alison Redford spent a few hundred thousand dollars, and the then leader of the Wildrose lost it. I encourage Albertans to check Hansard and look at the comments that she made, citing that it is completely undemocratic, that it's buying votes, that it should not be allowed, that it places the government at an unfair advantage, which it does.

I appreciate that the Deputy Premier is trying to signal the chair. I'm talking about Bill 10. I'm giving context to previous opposition parties, which the government was . . .

Mr. Eggen: And will be again.

Mr. Bilous: . . . and will be soon, decrying, through the chair, that this was completely undemocratic. And it is.

I mean, I honestly believe that members on the other side of the Chamber in the future will look back and go: yeah, that was completely undemocratic, trying to spend $1.4 billion in the month preceding the election. It really begs the question: are we still in Alberta? Are we still in a democratic country? Are we still in a democratic place? This type of pre-election spending should not be allowed by any political party. It shouldn't be.

I appreciate that governments have a job to do and that some spending, which is again why I can support the majority of what's in this bill, needs to take place. But a one-time funding announcement of $1.4 billion: no matter which way you cut it, Albertans will recognize that this is an undemocratic move meant to buy votes.

For that reason, I cannot support this bill.

The Deputy Chair: Others wishing to speak? The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Just want to get up and respond to the hon. member. Firstly, let me say and let it be on the record that I appreciate his concern around fiscal responsibility. That's a concern we both share.

But, Mr. Chair, I struggle to understand the section that he's referring to when he talks about $1.4 billion in pre-election spending because included in Bill 10 are, in fact, a number of sections related to establishing fiscal rules. These rules, in fact, will provide more structure, not less, more discipline, not less, more oversight, not less, more transparency, not less than the current financial administration rules, that are in place today. They will not supersede the financial administration rules. They will add to the FAA, the Financial Administration Act, where those rules are found.

Mr. Chair, Bill 10 does not give the government any ability to spend $1.4 billion ahead of the election. It simply does not. If the member is referring to the Alberta fund and the provisions, the ability, and the very specified narrow uses of the Alberta fund, I want to add some colour because there are three allowable uses . . . [interjection] If the member opposite would listen, he may learn right now.

There are three allowable, eligible uses for funds from the Alberta fund. Number one is to hold the funds for future debt repayment. I think everybody in this House would agree that that's a very legitimate purpose. Number two, funds from the Alberta fund can be transferred to the heritage savings trust fund. It's excellent when we can in fact transfer additional funds to the heritage savings trust fund, and I will add, Mr. Chair, that this year we're sending over an additional $2 billion. The third eligible use is in fact to use the funds for one-time, non-reoccurring projects. To fund those projects, they have to be one-time, non-reoccurring, and align with government priorities.

But in the absence of an Alberta fund, that ability was always there. The Alberta fund does not create the ability. The Alberta fund creates transparency around the use of those funds. In fact – in fact – any spending from the Alberta fund for one-time expenditures has to be subject to an appropriations bill, an appropriations bill debated right here on the floor of this House. It is required.

We have a budget on the floor right now. [interjection] Again I would ask the member to listen because he has lots to learn here. We have a budget on the floor today. We've gone through the estimates process. We will be, I trust, passing that budget in a transparent way, and that appropriations bill will guide the spending of the government for the upcoming year. Any expenditures from the Alberta fund are subject to that process, Mr. Chair. The Alberta fund adds more structure, more transparency, more discipline, not less.

The Deputy Chair: Others wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday has risen.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a privilege to rise this evening. [interjections] I'll just give everyone a moment. Before I begin, I am hoping that as I get into discussion on Bill 10, you will provide some latitude and maybe more latitude than you've ever provided a member before. You know, with this being my last opportunity, very, very likely, this evening to address the House – and I would be happy to make a contribution to a nonprofit charity of your choice, nonpartisan preferably. And for any Albertans who have a private member trying to bribe the chair on their bingo card, you can mark that one off.

But in all seriousness, with this being my last opportunity, very likely, to speak to the Assembly and to speak to Albertans – and I'm usually quite an emotional person, Mr. Chair, so I'm going to do my best here – I just want to take this opportunity, first of all, to recognize my parents, Kimberly and Regan; my amazing sister Mikaelyn, who inspires me every day; my beautiful, patient, brilliant wife, Kailey, and partner, coming up this month, of 15 years – I don't want to get that wrong . . .

An Hon. Member: You're not even that old.

Mr. Carson: We've been partners for 15, married for far less. . . . our amazing son, Clark, who is about 20 months old now. In addition, you may or may not know, Mr. Chair, that we are expecting another boy. Now, everything I've done over the last eight years has been for my family, and I hope that I have made all of them as proud as they have made me.

Mr. Chair, it's not lost on me, the privilege that it is to stand in this Assembly. As I've said before, my mother was 14 years old when I was born and raised me as a single mother for many years. There is no way that I could repay her for what she has sacrificed to provide for me.

But every day as an MLA I think about the many Albertans who find themselves in situations where they need support. Now, my role as an MLA has always been about giving back to the province and my community, that helped me in so many ways from childhood on, and I believe it's my job to leave the ladder down, so to say, not pull it up behind me.

You know, going to Britannia junior high, followed by Jasper Place high school, finally NAIT: there are so many educators that have helped and inspired me along the way. To the health care providers at our local hospitals, like the Misericordia, to the health care aides that provide support to seniors throughout our communities, to the thousands of volunteers of nonprofits who support a variety of important initiatives across the province: thank you from the bottom of my heart. I know that goes the same for all members of this Assembly.

Now, I could not ever have imagined to find myself on this journey. There are so many people to thank. Again, I appreciate your indulgence, Mr. Chair, I really do. The many volunteers and caucus staff that have helped over so many years, personally Sabine and Phil in my office, who work on behalf of so many constituents, as well as the many CAs that have supported me and my office over the years: I am forever in debt for your support.

I'm very close, Mr. Chair. I promise.

The MLAs that have served with me over the last four to eight years: there is nothing that I could say to properly portray how important your voices and your friendships mean to me. You know, you truly are my family. Each and every day I see them breaking down doors and smashing glass ceilings for those who will follow.

Finally, to the sheriffs and Legislative Assembly security that protect our democracy every day, to the pages who provide support to our members, to the table officers, and other support staff here in the House: thank you for everything over the last eight years.

You know, Mr. Chair, our democracy is a beautiful and imperfect system. We must do everything in our power to strengthen and protect it. That includes finding ways to make it more equal, to give voice to the voiceless, and to inspire others. This has been the honour of a lifetime, and I will do everything in my power to repay my community, which has provided so much to me for so many years.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

8:30

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just want to say: good for you on getting the years together right, because it's in the public record for time eternal. Good for you. Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, we're ready for the question. You didn't give me enough time to practise in Committee of the Whole last night, so bear with me.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Rutherford: Mr. Chair, I move that the committee rise and report bills 9 and 10 and report progress on bills 11 and 12.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

Mr. Turton: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 9, Bill 10. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 11, Bill 12. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 8
Alberta Firearms Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. It is an honour to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Justice and move third reading of Bill 8, the Alberta Firearms Act.

We introduce this legislation to clarify and protect the province’s role in regulating firearms and to advocate for lawful firearm owners. The Alberta Firearms Act will put the interests of law-abiding firearms owners first. It accomplishes three main goals: one, it supports the firearms community in the face of Ottawa’s attacks on lawful firearm owners; it reduces confusion and increases accountability regarding the Chief Firearms Officer’s role; and, three, it creates tools that enable Alberta to protect its jurisdiction over firearms. Mr. Speaker, with over 340,000 licensed firearm owners in the province, with over 680 firearm-related businesses the firearms community is an essential part to the Alberta culture and heritage in this province.

The suggestion that this legislation is unnecessary or creates a less safe environment for Albertans is patently false, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Firearms Act enables Alberta to protect its jurisdiction over firearms and raises awareness of the work of the Chief Firearms Officer, who, I must recognize, has done a fantastic job in a very short amount of time since her appointment. She has tirelessly reached out to the public across this province, including the Alberta firearms community, in helping to educate Albertans about the importance of safe, lawful firearm use.

By passing Bill 8, the Alberta Firearms Act will ensure that the important work can continue. The Alberta Firearms Act will strengthen Alberta’s ability to regulate, administer, and advocate on behalf of firearm owners. The act will clarify the role of the Chief Firearms Officer within the provincial legislation to provide the CFO with a stronger, clearer role and require the CFO to issue an annual report in order to enhance public accountability.

Upon its passage the Alberta Firearms Act will be the most comprehensive provincial firearms framework in the country. As the Minister of Justice has said, by establishing in legislation the role of Alberta’s Chief Firearms Officer, this legislation will elevate the responsibilities and legal mandate of the office to the fullest extent of the law. Alberta stands unequivocally with hunters, farmers, sport shooters, and the Indigenous peoples, all of whom understand the importance of responsible firearm ownership and its part in Alberta’s heritage and culture.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move third reading of the Alberta Firearms Act.

The Acting Speaker: Are there members wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 8?

Seeing none, I look to the minister to close debate.

Mr. Rutherford: Waived.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:37 p.m.]

Bill 9
Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move third reading of Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023.

Bill 9 continues this government’s efforts to eliminate red tape for Albertans and Alberta businesses. It marks another step toward our goal of reducing red tape by one-third by the end of 2023. Since 2019 we’ve eliminated thousands of burdensome regulatory requirements. We’ve streamlined processes and procedures to make life easier for Albertans, and we’ve also reduced costly and unnecessary administration. Mr. Speaker, the changes we’ve made through our six previous red tape reduction bills have helped make Alberta one of the most business-friendly environments in all of North America, and job creators are taking notice of our efforts to make it easier to invest and do business here. We’ve sped up approvals and enabled the use of digital communications for organizations. We’ve maintained important protections for Albertans’ health and safety as well as the environment, and we’ve created opportunities for businesses to expand and grow.

Mr. Speaker, by eliminating unnecessary red tape, we also continue to improve the way we deliver services to Albertans and make their lives easier, and we've done it all by listening to Albertans who best understand the challenges that red tape presents. Hundreds of Albertans have shared their red tape reduction ideas on our cut red tape website, and through nine separate industry panels we've listened carefully to the recommendations of experts in our key industries. Their comments and participation have guided us in prioritizing initiatives that have the most impact on the ground, and we continue to see this reflected in Bill 9.

Bill 9 is the seventh red tape reduction bill the government has brought forward and includes 14 sets of amendments across nine government ministries that will save Albertans, businesses, and government time as well as money. Many of these common-sense changes respond directly to input from Albertans and Alberta businesses and will lead to more outcome-based regulation, greater legislative clarity, and improved service delivery through digital solutions while supporting economic growth and job creation and improving the way we deliver services to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, our government made a commitment to make life easier for Albertans and Alberta businesses by reducing unnecessary red tape. With Bill 9 we're doing just that. This is further action we're taking as a national leader in cutting red tape for job creators, taxpayers, and families.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I'd like to thank all members for the thoughtful discussion that's taken place about this bill. I will continue to bring forward legislation that reduces and eliminates unnecessary red tape.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. the minister of red tape reduction has moved Bill 9, Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, for third reading. Is there anyone else wishing to join in the debate? The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and offer some thoughts on the bill that we're considering here this evening for third reading, specifically Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. This is the latest in a series of red tape reduction bills that the government has brought forward that have varied from the completely meaningless and empty to downright cruel, and we have examples of both of them here in this piece of legislation.

Now, when the minister got up to introduce this bill here just a few minutes ago, you know, he talked about the thousands and thousands of pieces of red tape that this government is alleged to have reduced. It's quite the easiest thing in the world to do, Mr. Speaker. You make up a target, a completely fictional number, and then you say, "Well, we'll reduce that completely fictional number by one-third," and then, oh, all of a sudden: it's four years later; we've magically hit our target that we made up from the very beginning. It's quite the easiest thing to do. It's like playing darts, and then once the darts have hit the board, you go walk up to the wall and draw the circle wherever the dart has landed. It's an incredible trick that the government has played here on itself, thinking that it has reduced red tape by a third, because it's a completely meaningless number.

How do we know this is meaningless, Mr. Speaker? Well, I've had the privilege to sit on the Public Accounts Committee for the last couple of years, and every annual report from every department has one brief section on the so-called red tape that they've reduced, and they say: well, when our bean-counters went through the department, we found 10,478 pieces of red tape that exist in the department, and we reduced 2,949 of those. They give themselves a big pat on the back, and then the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain asks the deputy minister to go into more detail about the alleged red tape that they've reduced, and then they go back and forth and talk about how good a job they've done. Meanwhile they don't get into any of the real issues that have cropped up in that department every year. It's a mutual appreciation moment of public accounts.

Our members on Public Accounts have started challenging the departments to release the lists of the alleged thousands of pieces of red tape that they claim to have reduced in their annual reports. And guess what, Mr. Speaker? They failed to produce a list at all. So I think the reasonable Albertan would suspect when the minister of red tape reduction makes these claims about thousands of pieces of red tape that his government has allegedly eliminated over the past four years. If his department can't produce a comprehensive list of those things, then I think that the average Albertan has the complete right to be skeptical that any meaningful red tape has been reduced whatsoever.

I look forward to being proven wrong, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the minister could make a call to the departments that have allegedly reduced red tape and get these lists, that our members have been asking for in Public Accounts for the last few months, and table them here in the Legislature. I think that would be an illuminating exercise for all of us, to go through each department and see exactly how many thousands of pieces of red tape they claimed to have eliminated and what those are and a detailed explanation as to how the lives of Albertans have been improved by the elimination of each of those pieces of red tape. That would be, I think, a tremendous service that I'm sure the minister is no doubt willing to do to justify his claim that his government has reduced thousands and thousands of pieces of red tape.

Mr. Speaker, these red tape reduction bills would normally just be a minor irritation, like I said, just this government creating a fictional target for itself and then claiming that they've achieved it four years later and giving themselves pats on the back if it weren't for the sections of this bill that actually hurt people. I'm specifically referring to the changes made in this piece of legislation around the WCB.

Now, I'm very encouraged, Mr. Speaker, that the Workers' Compensation Act is being amended so that the latency periods for firefighters who were in the Fort Mac fire from May 1, 2016, to June 1, 2016, are being removed. I think it's only fair that people who were exposed to more than a lifetime's worth of carcinogens in the matter of a few hours and who have subsequently developed cancer in the process of saving the thousands of people who live in and whose livelihoods depend on Fort McMurray, that those people be treated fairly, that we look after them because they did so much to look after us.

Upon review of this bill, our caucus identified the fact that these changes only apply on a go-forward basis and that anybody who has already applied to the WCB for compensation and who has either not made it yet through the system or who has been denied compensation won't be covered under this piece of legislation. That's incredibly heartless and cruel to those members of the firefighting community who gave their all to save a significant portion of this province from disaster and are now suffering the personal health consequences of their bravery, and the government is telling them: too bad; there's nothing we can do.

You know, I want to thank my friend the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for continuing to raise this issue in question period day after day. When she raised this issue in question period the first time, I remember the Premier quite clearly saying: oh, we'll take a look at the amendment that the member was going to bring forward, and the minister will have more to say on that once we've had a chance to review it. Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, before we got out of question period, the minister had already decided that, no, he wasn't going to entertain these changes. So any hopes that somebody who might be covered by this amendment might finally be eligible for WCB coverage for injuries, disabilities, health conditions that they've suffered or developed because of their work to fight the Fort McMurray fire were dashed within an hour of my friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods asking the question.

My friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods, I think, in her generous spirit, thought that the minister didn't realize exactly what he was saying no to, so she gave him a second chance, asked him again whether or not he would consider this amendment, and he flat out refused. In fact, Mr. Speaker, he gave an answer so bad that he was not allowed to answer any further questions on the matter here in question period. Instead, the member from Fort McMurray started answering the questions from my friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods on his behalf.

At that point I thought: well, finally, we're making some progress. Surely, the member from Fort McMurray wouldn't deny his own friends and neighbours and constituents who bravely fought this fire and are now suffering the personal health consequences, surely he wouldn't be so cruel and heartless as to deny them access to WCB by allowing this amendment.

Imagine my shock and surprise when, in fact, that's exactly what he stood up and did over and over and over again. He did it again today, this afternoon in question period, and then later this afternoon all members of the government voted against the amendment that our party brought forward that would finally give these heroes a chance to be covered by WCB when they've previously been denied the coverage that they're properly owed.

We haven't heard anything resembling a reasonable argument as to why this amendment couldn't have been adopted. At first, they said that it wasn't possible, that it was legally impossible to look back, to create these kinds of look-back clauses in the legislation. Well, that turned out not to be true, because just a few days after they floated that excuse, the Conservative government in Ontario amended their workers' compensation legislation to allow similar people to have retroactive coverage all the way back to 1960. So there went that excuse.

Then they were all out of excuses, Mr. Speaker, so they just started to throw metaphorical dirt in our eyes, said: well, you had four years to change the system; why didn't you do it? Well, we made significant changes to the WCB system that significantly improved the way that it treats injured workers.

I know for a fact that the number of calls and e-mails to my office from people who are upset about how the WCB has been treating them plummeted after the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods made significant changes to the operations of the WCB through a number of pieces of legislation that she brought forward here, and I commended her for her work. All Albertans who have been through that system should commend her for her work in improving a system that was really not well suited to treating injured employees fairly. She made significant advances on that front.

But nobody gets everything right all the time. This is something that needed to be addressed – can still be addressed – and the government, when it says, “Oh, you could've done something but you didn't do it when you had the chance,” is tacitly admitting that it is a mistake. But instead of owning up to it and just accepting the amendment, they want to pitch a fit, point their fingers at the NDP, blame us for not doing what we should have known needed to be done four years in advance, and then they refuse to do the thing that needs to be done. Mr. Speaker, it's completely unfair. I don't know why the government would be so stone-hearted on this matter.

9:10

By his own admission, the member from Fort McMurray says that the number of people who would be impacted by this change is very small. I don't know the exact numbers. I'm sure the minister could provide them if he were so inclined. That makes it even more galling to know that they refuse to adopt this amendment that my friend brought forward, because an effect to the overall WCB system would be so minor as to not be noticed, but that would be life-changing to those people who would be covered under WCB who right now are being denied. Absolutely life-changing and validating.

Those people know that the injuries and health effects that they suffered were a direct cause of the Fort McMurray fire, but the processes that they're going through with the WCB, or that they've gone through, have told them that, no, on paper it isn't. We owe them not only the financial compensation that they deserve for the health effects that they suffered saving this province, but we also owe them the validation that will come from having the WCB tell them that what they're going through is a direct result of their heroic actions in the Fort McMurray fire.

It floors me that these members opposite are so stone-hearted that they refuse to take action on this. I know that firefighters won't forget. Certainly, the firefighters who laid their lives on the line in Fort McMurray won't forget. I know that in spite of the way that this government has treated them, should Albertans ever find themselves in need of their services, they will go and risk their lives again without question. It would only be nice if the government would return the favour of service and treat them with the dignity and respect and the sense of care that they treated us with. But I guess under this UCP government that's only a one-way street. These are people who are only interested in taking from others and not giving back. It's a real shame.

I'm glad that I don't have to live with this on my conscience. I'm glad that my friends here in the NDP opposition are on the right side of history. I suspect that there are 60 or so members who will live to regret this day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I dive into the debate at hand on Bill 9, I hope you'll allow me some latitude for a few parting comments in what could be my last time to rise in this Chamber. Firstly, as a proud born-and-raised Albertan it has indeed been an honour and privilege to serve the 48,000-plus constituents of Calgary-Fish Creek, my hometown of Calgary, and people across this province. As MLA 900 – and some of my colleagues will know that my Chinese friends would like me to have number 888, but that happens to be the privilege of the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul, so kudos to him – I'm reminded of the small number of Albertans who can claim to have enjoyed this rare opportunity for and privilege of public service.

Mr. Speaker, I came into this Chamber with a commitment to principled behaviour, ethics, integrity, and fairness, and I am proud to say that I am leaving it with those commitments intact. And trust me; it has not always been easy. But rest assured that I'm not about to break into song with my own version of Frank Sinatra's My Way. I'll spare you that tonight.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the work that I've been able to do in aviation, housing, seniors' care, and cross-border relations and will take those accomplishments and the friends that I've made through those sectors with me in private life outside of this Chamber. But this is really, most importantly, my last chance to thank so many people who have allowed me this privilege, and I apologize in advance in knowing that I will forget many more inside and outside of this building.

Firstly, I would like to thank my wife, Cathy for enduring love, support, hard work and encouragement, patience and guidance in the almost eight-year journey of serving family, friends, neighbours, and constituents in our roles as candidate, MLA, and partner. All of you know that when we sign up, they sign up, and it's not always an easy role, with politics often creating unimaginable challenges in our relationships and in our lives. Special thanks to my now adult children, Jordan, Justin, and Georgia, who have also supported me in so many ways with their love, encouragement, and hard work, learning about the world of politics from the inside and often engaging lifelong friends in the cause and being understanding when duty called and being understanding and knowing that I would rather have been by their sides.

Mr. Speaker, knowing that they are always watching reminds us all to lead by example and to make sure that they're proud of us, of what we do, and when we do it. And kudos to the extended families we have all enjoyed that are vital to our roles, be it parents, siblings, or just those people in the community that adopt us as we adopt them as members of our political family or, further, as a part of a passionate and dedicated team off and on the doors. To them a huge and heartfelt thank you, which brings me broadly to my incredible volunteers and the people that show up so selflessly to give of their time, energy, passion, and commitment to democracy. That is what makes so much of this all worth while in this Chamber. I thank them for the thousands of hours of commitment in supporting me and my family during campaigns and throughout the year and providing open, honest, and frank feedback to me and, through me, to my party and our government. They indeed make us better and remind us of why we are all here.

And not to be forgotten, Mr. Speaker, the dedicated staff we have the privilege of working with in these hallowed halls each and every day, ministry and caucus staff, and the many young, smart, and ambitious legislative co-ordinators I've had the privilege of mentoring over the years – I have to admit I've kind of lost count, but they know who they are, and they know how much I've appreciated them – the incredible people in the Speaker's office, not the least, Mr. Speaker, of course, is yourself, and more broadly across the LAO in administration, finance, HR, IT, and security roles, not to mention our delightful pages. Thank you, all, for making our world easier and brighter each and every day and for keeping us grounded by reminding us who we serve: you and millions of other Albertans outside of this building.

Lastly, I would like to thank my legislative colleagues on both sides of the aisle for challenging each and every one of us to keep an open mind, look at things through a broader lens, to embrace good ideas wherever they may come from, and to bring intelligence, honour, humility, and integrity to this Chamber each and every day as we all stand committed to serving Albertans. Yes, we may disagree, and many have strived to do so without being disagreeable – sometimes that doesn't always work – but I have to believe and remind myself that each and every person in these 87 seats of honour and representation believe that they're doing what's best for Albertans. And, Mr. Speaker, what's wrong with a little healthy debate and banter on how best to get there?

Mr. Speaker, in my last few hours in this place of tradition, where we collectively build a bright future for all Albertans, I would implore each and every one of us to do the best that we can to lead by example, to bring out our best so that we can do our best for Albertans, to reflect on how we can co-operate and collaborate and occasionally compromise for the betterment of all, and to do what we can to bring people together versus fanning the winds of anger, polarization, and division, as there is no doubt in my mind that we can all be better, do better, and deliver our best each and every day to the people that we serve.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for this privilege, for the latitude in being able to share my thoughts today, for your patience, and Godspeed to us all. Thank you. [Standing ovation]

9:20

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to express my strong support for Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. If passed, this piece of legislation will not only be a testament to this government's commitment to serving the people of this province but also a clear demonstration of its dedication to reducing red tape for Albertans. Bill 9 will address a wide range of concerns identified by Albertans through consultation, from protecting our bee populations to improving municipal taxpayers' rights.

However, what stands out for me as both a representative for Calgary-Fish Creek, a resident of Calgary, is the crucial role that it will play in ensuring public safety through reducing the risk posed by violent offenders. Anybody that knows me well will know I'm a bit of a tough-on-crime guy. I believe in safe communities, I believe in deterrence, and I believe that we need to move forward in ways that will achieve that.

As a resident of Calgary I, as many other Albertans, know first-hand how the federal Liberal government's failed bail polices have led to a growing public disorder and an increasing threat to the safety of our communities and, in particular, to our major cities. That is why I'm proud to see that this government has been tirelessly working to protect Albertans from these dangers. The proposed amendments to the Income and Employment Supports Act included in Bill 9 are a prime example of its commitment to this goal.

Under this bill individuals with outstanding warrants for violent offences will be subject to the suspension of provincial income supports. It sounds pretty simple. While this may seem like a small and straightforward action, it is, in fact, a crucial step that will ensure our tax dollars are not going towards supporting known violent offenders who are actively avoiding justice. Mr. Speaker, I am certain that yourself and many others in this House will agree with me when I say that Albertans should not have to foot the bill for violent offenders avoiding arrest.

The thought that law-abiding citizens in this province should be forced to pay for financial assistance going to individuals who have committed violent offences and are actively evading the law is not only an insult to our taxpayers but also a blatant acceptance of grave danger towards our communities. We will not accept that, Mr. Speaker. By passing Bill 9, this government will be taking a decisive step towards protecting Albertans from violent offenders while improving public safety.

The proposed amendments to the Income and Employment Supports Act included in this bill reflect a necessary and common-sense step in achieving this goal. By targeting violent offenders who decide to evade capture, Bill 9 demonstrates this government's resolve towards tackling social disorder while maintaining a humane approach to doing so.

Mr. Speaker, let me be clear in my emphasis on the considered approach that this bill will take in its amendments. While targeting the violent offenders themselves, the amendments will ensure that dependants and families, often victims themselves of wanted violent offenders, continue receiving the government support that they need. Additionally, we are not targeting nonviolent offenders as there's an understanding that, for some, these supports are critical for them, their dependants, and to continue living healthily and safely and to recover from other issues that they may be facing.

This bill is not just about being tough on crime for the sake of it. It is about protecting our citizens and ensuring that our communities are safe and secure. This by no stretch is a new concept, with adoption of similar policies in British Columbia and Saskatchewan, but without doubt it is a necessary and overdue one. In addition, Bill 9 will act to reduce risk to our law enforcement personnel, near and dear to our hearts due to recent events, in serving risky, costly, time-consuming search warrants for violent offenders. I am confident in the fact that as of the last few weeks the dangers posed to our community law enforcement officers is something at the front of everybody's minds, all Albertans, and in our hearts, indeed.

By cutting wanted violent offenders off from government funds, we may be able to force them to turn themselves in and surrender peacefully rather than continuing to avoid justice through means that put them and the general public at risk. By supporting them, we possibly support them reoffending in the community. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be supporting this bill and encourage everyone in this House to do so as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? Thank you to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his service to the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning and Official Opposition deputy House leader.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I rise to speak to Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023. Given that today is water day, I'm going to focus on the changes that are being made to the Irrigation Districts Act, and then I'm going to move into talking a little bit about the changes that were also made to the Municipal Government Act. Again, I think, you know, as the minister indicated when he moved third reading of this piece of legislation, that this is now the ninth bill that the government has introduced. As a member of the opposition I know we have repeatedly stood up and spoken to the fact that some of the changes that continuously keep being made throughout these different pieces of legislation are at some point going to create problems down the line as they do start to impact other pieces. I'll get to that in a minute.

First, I just want to talk about the changes that are being made to the Irrigation Districts Act. Obviously, there are no concerns in relation to the act or this specific change, as the Irrigation Districts Act basically disenables all 13 irrigation districts in Alberta and removes the reference to the Taber irrigation district, as it's been amalgamated with others, and obviously clarifies ways waters may be misused, and therefore a delivery of water can also at some times be stopped if it's determined that it's being misused.

Part of the concern that I have around and the part that I want to discuss specific to irrigation is that we've heard repeatedly from the government about the substantial investment that's being made in these specific irrigation districts. I don't disagree that those investments are important to the economic opportunity that will be created in those communities, the opportunities to look at specialized crops and supporting, obviously, some of the issues that have come up through our drought that has happened over the last couple of years. But the one thing that I did want to flag – and I've spoken to the minister about this and was hoping to also flag it with the Minister of Finance – is that we know that when this money was initially promised by the federal government in partnership with the provincial government and in partnership with the irrigation districts, it was promised a couple of years ago.

These projects have been under planning, have been, you know, looking at putting shovels in the ground. All of that is great work, but the issue that has arisen out of that, that we all are aware of, is that there have been substantial inflationary costs that have been attached to many of these projects. In fact, if you speak to different members of the irrigation districts, part of the other issue is the fact that they can't even get the pipe that they need at this point because of the issues that we're seeing through the supply chain. The direct issue that's going to happen with that is that although these projects are important and we need to be supporting them, there needs to be a recognition by all levels of government that there is going to be a substantial financial increase due to those inflationary costs. I've spoken to some of the districts that are saying that at this point, even though they still don't even have the pipe, they're estimating it's going to be an additional 30 per cent increase on the overall cost of the project.

The concern with that is: where will that money come from? We know that because of the way that the project is being funded and the fact that it is split between the different partnerships, there is a responsibility for each level to contribute to those costs. As we were just debating some other financial bills, there needs to be a recognition that in the next couple of years these projects are going to actually require more financial assistance. If the federal government decides that they're going to be willing to increase their funding contribution, I think that's great.

I think the province also needs to be looking at those projects and determining what their roles and responsibilities are going to be in relation to making sure that those are still financially viable and then, of course, talking with those irrigation districts and consulting to make sure that they're aware that there continue to be some financial costs that are going to increase over time. I know they're aware because they're the ones that are able to tell me that as of today it's potentially 30 per cent more than what was initially estimated. That will, over the 13 different districts and the potential new projects that are being evaluated at this time, have a significant financial cost to the provincial budget and also could potentially delay the ability of these irrigation districts to be able to expand and build.

I just wanted to make sure that that is still something that is live and aware to all members of the government side. It's one thing to talk about the investment, but there also needs to just be an acknowledgement that now the actual investment that is coming forward, the dollars that have been promised are actually going to be short, and it will ultimately impact. There needs to be a conversation and an adjustment made to address that component.

The other changes that are being made to the act, I think, around the electronic notices, the increase to the appointments to irrigation councils from seven to nine: I mean, that's housekeeping, and that makes sense. Other than that, there really aren't any other substantial changes. You know, I don't particularly have a problem with that.

Now, the other part and going back to my comments when I first started speaking, about the minister speaking about how many of these red tape reduction bills the government has had and the fact that, you know, as opposition we keep continuously flagging that when you change one section of an act, it sometimes will impact other sections of an act: we've had this conversation repeatedly. We now see in this piece of legislation that the MGA, or the Municipal Government Act, is being changed again. What happened, just to walk us down memory lane, was that in 2022 we had a previous red tape reduction act, and that act actually made it so that municipalities were not able to add additional charges onto property taxes if the property was considered to be unsightly or the property was considered dangerous or there was a deterioration of that property.

Obviously, going back to, you know, conversations around abandoned wells and cleanup and the importance of all of that, municipalities also need to ensure that their properties that are existing within their municipalities are kept to a place where they are not considered a safety risk. Their mechanism to be able to do that was to ensure that they were able to go to property owners and say: we're going to charge you an additional fee on your property taxes unless you clean this up. Well, that was removed in the red tape reduction act of 2022. Who would have thought, Mr. Speaker? I mean, I think the opposition flagging that this was going to be an issue would've been enough to consider that maybe the government shouldn't have done it, but it went ahead. Now we see in this piece of legislation: oops, government made a mistake. We now have to change it again to ensure that municipalities have the mechanisms that they need to make properties safe and be able to have financial penalties for those property owners who are not taking care of their land. I hate to say, "I told you so," but, like, this was one of those things where we said, "You probably shouldn't do it," but it happened anyway.

Again, I think, you know, as much as the government likes to continuously talk about how great these red tape reduction acts are, we continuously – and we've had this conversation on the last debate, on the last red tape bill about the fact that every single time there's one of these bills introduced, it makes a change somewhere, and then we have to see the government coming back and having to do another amendment to the exact same section because they mess it up. This is the problem when you do these big pieces of legislation that impact different statutes through a variety of different pieces of legislation that don't connect. The government, when they do these things, misses the big piece of the legislation, looks at only one piece of the section, and it ends up impacting a variety of other sections. That's a problem because we can't continuously keep coming back into the House, although the government likes to do that, and keep fixing the same mistakes over and over again because the government isn't taking the time to actually review the pieces of legislation and the statutes the way that they should be.

Again, I mean, I'm glad to see that the government fixed the mistake, but it really shouldn't have been an error to begin with. It should have been something where, you know, when it's being brought up by the opposition and recognized that this is probably going to be an issue, it is acknowledged that the mistake is being made.

I think, you know, that brings me to what my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar was speaking about in relation to: the opposition has tried to be helpful in relation to Bill 9. My hon. colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods has identified the fact that there is a piece of the legislation in relation to workers' compensation where there is a gap missing in the way that we support our firefighters and specifically the firefighters in Fort McMurray and is trying to be working in collaboration with the government to say: "Since you are doing this, why don't you fix this section? Make it retroactive. Do the right thing, and make sure that the presumptive cancer coverage is there. The section is already open. This one little piece was missing. Put it in, get it done, and just move on."

Instead, this government is so adamant about not taking any type of suggestion from the opposition that it's almost like it's become so that even if it's a good idea, it's still a bad idea because the opposition brought it up. I think that in relation to something like this, it's a bad idea to use this just to be stubborn, would be my summary of that. I feel like the government has chosen to be stubborn on it just out of the fact that it's because it's the opposition. Had a member on their side of the House, maybe, flagged this and said, "Uh-oh, this is a problem; why don't we do this?" the government may have been more willing to do it. I think that that's a disservice to Albertans.

You know, I've been listening this evening to the hon. members who are retiring and the great speeches that they've given us this evening in relation to the responsibilities that we have in this House as elected officials. We don't always have to agree. It's clear that we have fundamental differences in how we view things, yet there are opportunities for us to work in collaboration and work together to the betterment of Albertans. I believe that the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the amendment that was brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods are an opportunity to demonstrate to Albertans that we have the ability to do that. We can get past the partisanship and just do something that is in the good and in the proper way to support the people of this province.

So I'm disappointed that we're at third reading and that we're still having to debate this issue that clearly has been able to be demonstrated across the country. We have other jurisdictions that have been able to adapt and been able to find a legislative mechanism to be able to provide the back pay and expand on the presumptive cancer coverage for firefighters. It can be done, so I don't understand why, while the section is already open and we are already debating it in this Legislature, the government wouldn't just take the opportunity to do it. It's easy. It was already done. The opposition did all the work. The government just needed to say: hmm, sounds good to me; let's get 'er done.

Again, I would caution the government around the use of these red tape reduction bills. I think the hon. minister said this is number nine. I feel like we've done this nine times, and nine times we've learned that every time this happens, something doesn't work, and there's always a mistake somewhere that then needs to be fixed in the next red tape reduction bill. Although the government will be, like, "We got a gold star from an organization about how great we are on red tape reduction," the problem is that every time there's a red tape reduction, they have to come back and undo the red tape reduction because it actually creates problems in relation to other pieces, so it doesn't work.

I would encourage the government to slow down, to take the time to do the proper analysis, and to really look at the legislation that they are amending and make sure that the changes that are happening make sense and – let's be fair – consult with the organizations, whether it's municipalities, whether it's firefighters, whether it's around agriculture. Whatever organizations are impacted by the changes that are going to be made, make sure you ask the question about whether or not it actually is going to do what the government thinks it does because, clearly, there are pieces missing, and there continue to be pieces missing. I am sure that if we come back to this place and we have to do another one of these acts, we're going to be fixing another section that we're talking about this evening.

Again, I just would like to encourage the government to slow down and reconsider their direction.

The Speaker: Members, are there others? The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My colleagues on this side of the House have spoken to a number of issues relating to this particular bill. I would like to address another one that is of concern.

Now, I understand that the members opposite are tough on crime.

Mr. Bilous: They say they're tough on crime.

Member Loyola: Good point. They say they're tough on crime. But my particular concern has to do with their proposing to cut anyone with an outstanding warrant off income support. Of course, when you read the actual bill, it says:

- 15.1 The Director must, subject to the regulations, refuse to provide income support and benefits to an applicant or recipient under Part 2, Division 1 when notified that
- (a) a warrant for the arrest of the applicant or recipient has been issued in respect of a prescribed offence, and
  - (b) the warrant has not been executed.

Now, I understand that members on the other side of the House are selling this particular portion of the bill as for people who have committed violent crimes, but nowhere is that specified in the bill. When you do a crossjurisdictional, there are other jurisdictions that have specifically focused on people who have committed violent crimes and cutting them off any kind of government support. But in this particular bill we don't see that. Then what's the concern, Mr. Speaker? It's that a person could have a warrant out for their arrest for jaywalking, as far as we know, which, of course, is not a violent crime. They jaywalked.

Also a concern that I have with this is that there are many people on the streets of Edmonton and other municipalities across the province who have an issue with addiction. As we all know, addiction and having a drug problem is related to prior trauma that that person has experienced in their life. Now, I understand, as the Member for Edmonton-Manning was saying, there are things that we fundamentally disagree on in this House. When it comes to the issue of addiction and those who have made bad decisions in their life, and I'm not saying that – you know what, Mr. Speaker? I always tell my sons this. I have two beautiful sons, 14 and 18. I always tell them: we're all one bad decision away from our life spiralling down to a point where we could be in a very serious predicament, and we could be facing a dire situation; we're all that one bad decision away. For me, an Albertan who makes a bad decision and has an issue with addiction because of the past trauma that they've had in their life needs our help. An individual like this could be one that has a warrant out for their arrest.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it's come to my attention – and I'll take this opportunity to wish all my Muslim brothers and sisters in the province of Alberta, across Canada and the world Ramadan Mubarak, Ramadan Kareem. May Allah grant them many blessings and continue to encourage them to do their good deeds, to continue doing good here in the province of Alberta and contribute to our beautiful province. May they be blessed always.

It has come to my attention, Mr. Speaker, that, you know, we have Muslim brothers and, I assume, sisters as well who are incarcerated both at a federal level and at a provincial level. To me, I think about this, and I say to myself: okay; my Muslim brother who is incarcerated isn't any less Muslim and isn't any less human; my brother or my sister in that kind of predicament, in that situation made a mistake. Now, we're all trying to do our best to live our best lives. It came to my attention that Muslim brothers and sisters in the corrections facilities are not allowed to have a prayer rug, and they're not allowed to have a tasbeeh, prayer beads. I can understand why. I can understand, like, why there would be a situation with this. But then what I found also really disheartening is the fact that Muslim brothers and, I assume, sisters who are incarcerated, because of the not enough space and correctional officers to inmates, can only pray their jum'ah prayer every four or five weeks.

Now, I get it; they're being incarcerated. Someone on the other side might say: "Well, you know what? They don't have the right to do so." But, again, I would say to them, "It doesn't make them any less Muslim, and it doesn't make them less human." We should be inspiring and encouraging people to make the right decisions and, if they are in a correctional institution, to better their lives, eventually rehabilitate, get out of there, come back out into society, and be contributing members to this society. Help them get back on track.

So my concern with this particular piece of the legislation is that we could be having a very adverse effect on individuals within our society who, again, may have a warrant out for their arrest for something that is not a violent crime because it's not stipulated in the legislation, as I mentioned. It is stipulated in other pieces of legislation across Canada. When you look at the crossjurisdictional, there are other pieces of legislation that do have this, but they specifically focus on people who have committed a violent crime.

I think that there are a lot of factors that members on the other side of the House have actually let themselves get a little bit carried away with when it comes to this piece of legislation. I understand that they want to be tough on crime, but there are individuals that could be caught in this that it may not warrant them being treated in this particular way.

Of course, we have to remember that those individuals are also fathers, are also mothers, we could be adversely impacting the children that are part of that household. I would ask the members to please consider that. Let's get this piece of legislation right. If other jurisdictions across Canada have actually focused on violent offenders and that's what the members on the other side of the House want to do, then do that. But don't leave it so open that individuals in our society who are having a tough time, who perhaps are addicted to substance abuse because of past trauma, are being caught and trapped in this dire situation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore has the call.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As always, it's a privilege to rise, and for me, I just wanted to say that particularly with red tape reduction I want to thank all my colleagues as well. There's so much that goes into this kind of legislation and so much work and consultation that happens in order to make sure that the legislation that gets passed in here is actually helping and contributes to how business moves forward in this province.

I really appreciate my colleague who just stood up to talk about addiction and mental health, and we all know how difficult legislation is going into these pieces, and how we work with that is very, very hard. I appreciated what he was saying, but I don't think that this legislation is going to cause folks to be arrested for the wrong reasons. In my opinion, I think that that might be a bit misleading, but I certainly appreciate the conversation.

If you permit me, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to speak since this will also be my last day in the Legislature. I wanted to say what an honour it's been to be part of this institution, and it's been one of the biggest privileges of my life. I'm honoured to have served with each and every one of you in this Legislature, and from security to the folks in Hansard that are sometimes in this with us – I think, what was our longest day? Was it 82 hours, 84 hours? I can't remember – and the LAO, the pages and the staff, and especially our staff who are the heartbeat of all of our offices, whether here or at home as well.

To my colleagues who have spoken before me: thank you so much for everything that you've done and for your contributions to my life. In this building – I leave this place full of so much gratitude in serving this beautiful province. The power of this place comes from the people and the democracy and the right to vote and equality and the power to make meaningful change.

Thank you so much to my family for their sacrifice and for their support during the last eight years.

This place is the House for all Albertans. So many of us bring folks into here, and they don't realize that this is their House. Thank you to all of you who have opened this House to so many people and shown them what democracy actually looks like.

In my time here I think about how tentative and unsure all of us were when we first walked in, and many of you: we've served together over the years, and now we speak with passion and conviction about the things that are important to us. I learn so much from all of you every single time any one of you speaks.

Thank you so much to the constituencies of Chestermere-Rocky View and then Chestermere-Strathmore for allowing me the privilege of representing you.

And to you, Mr. Speaker, as well: thank you so much.

I will be forever grateful for the trust of the people for having been able to serve here. This has been a remarkable experience, and I thank you.

Thank you very much. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you for your service.

Hon. members, are there others wishing to join in the debate on third reading of Bill 9?

Seeing none, I am prepared to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent to waive standing orders 8(2) and 8(7)(d) in order to proceed immediately to third reading on Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 204

Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to move third reading of private member's Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022.

Private member's Bill 204 was designed to correct the inconsistencies that were discovered between the Missing Persons Act and private member's Bill 210 that was passed in 2017. It may have been passed, but these inconsistencies impeded the proclamation of private member's Bill 210.

Should private member's Bill 204 be passed by this Legislature, it will ensure that all police services across the province of Alberta will have access to a silver alert that will help to safeguard vulnerable and at-risk seniors or other adults with cognitive impairments that have gone missing. Mr. Speaker, by 2031, as the tail end of the baby boomers, my generation, reaches 65 years of age, Alberta's seniors population is projected to reach approximately 1 million people. At the same time, as Albertans age, the risk of dementia doubles every five years after the age of 65. Private member's Bill 204 will enable police services to bring all citizens and the resources of the media infrastructure to bear on finding and returning a missing senior back to their loved ones.

Mr. Speaker, I've chosen not to run in the upcoming election, so my opportunity to address this Assembly on behalf of my constituents in Drayton Valley-Devon is rapidly coming to an end. It's been one of the paramount privileges of my life to serve in this Legislature, and private member's Bill 204 will help to save lives and to protect our seniors, and I believe it is a fitting piece of legislation upon which I can retire. This bill has all-party support and, I believe, represents how this Assembly can work best. I want to thank the members of this Chamber for their support, and I want to thank the leadership of both parties for ensuring that we could pass this piece of legislation within the limited time that we have left in this session of the Legislature of Alberta.

But I would be remiss if I did not recognize tonight the many people who have helped make this bill possible. My thanks to the many legislative co-ordinators and United Conservative Party staff who have helped make this bill possible. I would like to especially recognize Ms Karah Folk, Mr. Benjamin Smith, Dr. Bill Bewick, Ms Elina Pachon, Ms Emma Hopper, Mr. Benjamyn McKay, and the many staff of the Ministry of Justice and the ministry of seniors who have helped push this bill forward. I would like to thank Mrs. Maureen Gough, who helped me understand the need for a silver alert, and I would dedicate this bill in the memory of her mother. I would like to thank all of the stakeholders that helped to guide the amendments that have been built into private member's Bill 204.

And I would like to thank my family. None of us in this Chamber can do our job of representing our constituents and the people of Alberta without the many sacrifices that our families make on our behalf. While they will never be able to vote or to speak to this bill tonight, it is my firm belief that this bill would not have made it past the germ of an idea without the support that I have received from my wife and my immediate family. Thank you.

Finally, I would like to thank all of my constituents of Drayton Valley-Devon for the opportunity to serve you over these last two terms. It's been the singular privilege of my life, and I leave this Legislature more convinced than ever in the common sense of the common people. It is you that makes our democracy a vibrant and a viable form of government, and I pray that you will continue to exercise your democratic rights, that you will choose wisely your next MLA in the upcoming general election.

With these thoughts I would ask this Assembly to vote in favour of private member's Bill 204 and provide the people of Alberta with a silver alert tool that will help to find at-risk seniors when they go missing in Alberta. Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: On third reading of Bill 204 are there others?

Proceed. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview – I see he's now rising.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry I was a little slow to pop up.

I want to start off by thanking the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for moving this bill, but also his words, as others who have spoken this evening, thanking a number of people that we all, I think, feel and think about every day, you know, the people who have supported us to come to this place and do the work that we do. The fact of the matter is that if it wasn't for our families, our friends, and the people around us, none of us could do this job. I echo the words of my colleagues on all sides of the House thanking, you know, their loved ones, their families for supporting them and enabling us to do the job that we do because without them, we couldn't.

I think about the fact that I am very privileged to have represented a riding here in Edmonton. I think about my colleagues that travel from all corners of the province often, that in addition to serving in this Chamber, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members, you all spend countless hours on the road, away from your families, travelling to and from this place. You know, I'd be remiss if I didn't say that part of the reason why I decided to pursue provincial politics over federal politics was because I didn't want to spend half my life on an airplane away from my family, even more than we do. I salute all 338 members of our federal Parliament who made that choice and that sacrifice, which implicates their families as well. But to the members here, from Taber-Warner to our northernmost ridings in this province, in east and west and all around, I mean, it's a great distance to travel, sometimes in atrocious weather.

I recall, you know, many people who have served in this place, members from all sides of the House, and I can't help but think about Manmeet Bhullar, who lost his life helping others and made the ultimate sacrifice. Again, had he not had to travel a far distance, then I'm sure the outcome would be much different today. This, I must say, is not what I had planned to say when I rose, but I do want to thank each and every member in this Chamber.

I'll take this opportunity to say my hope is that the 31st Legislature could bring together the 87 MLAs to focus on policy, to focus on making Alberta a better province. I appreciate we all come with our own unique perspectives and we come from different political parties, but I, for one, didn't run for office to try to smear somebody's name or to ruin them or their family. You know, I ran because I love my community and I want to see Alberta grow and prosper and I wanted to serve. I believe that every member in this Chamber and every member before us chose to run because they had that same passion for our communities, our neighbourhoods, our families, our friends, our province.

You know, I've been here long enough to understand how this place has worked and can work, but that's not the only way. We've seen collaboration on all sides of the House. We've seen the political parties set aside their differences, pull off their colours, and work together for better legislation, for better policy, for better debate. I truly hope that our next Legislature will do better than we did, because when I talk to Albertans, that's the part they like the least about politics and politicians: the division, the hate, the anger, the trying to win at all costs. And what is winning? Who wins in the end? We all want to see Alberta prosper and succeed and do well.

Again, I've been very lucky to have been a part of this place when we have all parties voting for unanimous consent to move a bill from first reading to third reading. That's happened fewer than 10 times in the history of our province, but it's been done, and we can do it again. I stand in support of the silver alert bill and – I was not planning to get emotional – want to thank the member for bringing it forward. There's no chance I'm going to be able to get through a personal story of how this would impact me and my family, but through you, Mr. Speaker, to the member, know that it does, and I thank you.

Times when we can stand together in unison and in solidarity: I think that restores the faith that Albertans have in our democratic system, that parties can work together to deliver outcomes for Albertans. In my final words I do also want to thank all of you, members. I want to thank the incredible people that enable us to do the jobs that we do: everybody in this building, from the people who take care of it and clean it to the people that keep us safe, our security brothers and sisters, to Hansard to our table officers to the constituents and the voters that put us here. You know, one of the things that I try to remember is that there are fewer than one thousand Albertans who have ever had the privilege to serve in this Chamber, and it's been an incredible honour.

I'll end by thanking my family, my wife, my daughters, my parents, my friends, and all of you. It has been an incredible 11 years, and it's been an honour and a pleasure to serve.

Thank you. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you for your remarks, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Know that all members of the Assembly develop friendships and relationships across the aisle. Through me to you: I have appreciated your friendship, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, amongst many of you but in particular yours.

Are there others who are wishing to join in the debate on third reading of Bill 204?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the hon. member to close debate should he choose to do so.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a third time]

The hon. government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that the committee rise and report bills 11 and 12.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Sure. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 11, Bill 12.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur with the report? All those in favour?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Ordered and so carried.

The hon. chief government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly be adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Thursday, March 23, 2023.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:14 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 23, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of God Save the King by the hon. the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King!
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the King!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Legislative Assembly Office Staff

The Speaker: Hon. members, following the 2019 election I don't think anyone could have predicted the challenges that would arise in the coming four years. Through it all the Legislative Assembly Office staff helped to ensure parliamentary continuity as we faced so much uncertainty. We were just mere months into the 30th Legislature, and the Legislative Assembly staff leapt to action and stood the test of time. The LAO staff remained agile and resilient to ensure the Assembly and its committees could continue to operate safely and the business of parliament could continue.

During this time the LAO also launched multiyear enterprise resource systems to enhance and modernize human resource, payroll, finance, and IT systems throughout the organization. Staff worked hard to improve access to a new mobile-friendly website, virtual tours, online education programming, video, social media, and broadcasting. Last year the LAO expanded upon a 2021 pilot project to incorporate American sign language, or ASL, into the broadcast of our daily Routine.

Members, it's my absolute pleasure to serve as the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and as the head of the Legislative Assembly Office, and it is the work and the dedication of these knowledgeable professionals that make the LAO an absolutely outstanding and incredible organization, and this year we did that as we marked its 40th anniversary.

Today joining us in the gallery are close to 30 members of the Legislative Assembly Office team that so rarely join us here in the Assembly because they are busy about the work of the people. I invite them to rise and receive the thank you from the members.
[Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a number of guests joining us in the Speaker's gallery today that I would like to introduce. The family of one of our pages, Joy Yang: I'm pleased to introduce Joy's mother, Ms Wu; her aunt Ms Xiang; her uncle Mr. Lin; and her cousin Andrea Lin. I invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also joining us today are three members of the Speaker's office team. They are a critical support to the Speaker, and certainly the work of your Speaker could not be undertaken without them. I'd like to personally express a sincere and a lifelong debt of gratitude and thank you to each of them for making it happen: Ms Erin Camponi, Mr. Santiago Jimenez Loza, and Ms Katja – they didn't put the phonetics in – Oosthuis. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont has an introduction.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this will be my last introduction in this Assembly, I thought I would make it for the most important person to me. My wife, Lora, is joining us up in the gallery. For the last 15 years I've worked a lot of shift work with the Edmonton Police Service and in this term a lot of hours away, a lot of late nights, and she's been incredibly strong and supportive of me throughout my career. I'll be spending a lot more time at home in the next few weeks, which I'm sure she will grow tired of shortly. But for now please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so happy to introduce to you and through you to the House my first grandchild, my beautiful granddaughter, Amal Yaseen. Amal is accompanied by her parents, Aamar and Javeria, and my loving wife, Parveen. It is an honour to have my family members here today. I am so blessed to have their full support and love. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services and the Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you. I'm honoured today to be able to introduce to you and through you my daughters Alexis and Elizabeth Nixon. They are the apple of their father's eye and, I think, a bright, shining example of the hope for our future. I also want to introduce their class, who are watching live right now, and their teacher Mrs. Barone. Through you and to you, Mr. Speaker, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has a school group.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise today and introduce to you and through you the fantastic grade 6 class from High Park school in Stony Plain along with their incredible teachers. I had the pleasure of meeting with them and this group earlier, and they asked some great questions, and I know that they're fantastic representatives of the town of Stony Plain. Students, please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you 19 students from John A. McDougall school in the heart of Edmonton-City Centre, a school I very much enjoy visiting during the year at Read In Week and at other times. They're accompanied today by their teacher Victoria Land. I invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Chair of Committees.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you it's my privilege and my pleasure today to introduce students and families from Rockyview Christian School in Pincher Creek. We talk about rural people doing lots of driving; this is a day trip for them to be in the Legislature. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two very important people in my life. It is a high calling to be a pastor, and I am so grateful that these gentlemen have faithfully ministered to me and my family. My two pastors, Pastor Kenton Penner and Pastor Joshua Holt, please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Scott Crichton, Artem Litvyak, Olga Lytviak, and Natalie Lytviak. These guests organized a petition, that I'm going to present on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods today, calling on the Legislative Assembly to express support for the people of Ukraine and oppose the Russian occupation. I ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce the Moore family: LeAnne and her husband, David, as well as their children Olivia, Emmalee, and Samantha. I'd like to recognize Olivia specifically and commend her for her bravery and resilience that she shows every day.

I'd also like to welcome Anu Srivastava, a Canadian, Albertan, and for the last 18 years a passionate singer, an exceptional community leader, philanthropist, and entrepreneur, and a constant champion for women.

Lastly, I'd like to introduce Nandini Debnath, an amazing vocal artist, current mechanical engineering PhD student. Please rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through I'd like to introduce my cousin Dave Morton, who's been involved in the forestry and trucking industries for many years; David Bensmiller, who comes from a great line of rodeo stock; and Marty McSorely, who does lots of charity and fundraising work, who's around here so much in the area he seems like a hometown boy. Thank you very much. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Terry Gibson and Phil Rosenzweig. Terry is the founder of the Condo Owners Forum and Phil the treasurer, and they join us today to witness the tabling of their petition, containing signatures of over 1,000 condo owners. I ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. Patrick M. Haney. I ask that he rise – he's in the member's gallery right now – as he receives the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the following individuals from the Ministry of Forestry, Parks and Tourism. Please rise as I say your name: Samantha Steinke, press secretary; Claire Toews, arch co-ordinator; Pam Davidson, ministerial assistant and Senator-elect; and Shannon Fowler, scheduler. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Canada Pension Plan

Member Ceci: The Canada pension plan is a pension my parents relied on in part to make up their income into the retirement years. Albertans trust their Canada pension plan. It's been around since the 1960s. Albertans are telling us loud and clear that they do not want their CPP touched, Albertans like the tens of thousands who have signed online petitions. Mr. Speaker, these Albertans are motivated and want the members of the UCP government to hear loud and clear: keep your hands off our CPP.

Later today I'll table a petition. This petition was started by members of the public who wanted more than an online petition. They wanted to put their name to a paper to give directly to this House. These Albertans took this matter into their own hands and took pen to paper to prove to this Premier and the UCP that they don't support an Alberta pension plan.

Mr. Speaker, as I wrap up my final member's statement of the 30th Legislature, I'll leave with this: Albertans trust the Canada pension plan; Albertans want it left alone. The good news is that soon Albertans can do more than sign petitions that for years have fallen on the deaf ears of the UCP government. In 67 days Albertans can vote to protect their futures and their pensions, vote to show this Premier and the UCP the door, and vote to elect an Alberta NDP government.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's UCP government has focused on making life more affordable, especially for those most in need. A major part of our focus has been to expand access to affordable housing, which provides families and individuals a safe and secure place to call home. Whether they be a senior who has spent their life working hard on contributing to the Alberta we have today, an individual who has gone through Alberta's world-class addiction recovery system, a woman with her children who has fled domestic violence, someone living with a disability on a monthly fixed income, a veteran who has fought for our freedoms as Canadians, or even a low-income family that is struggling to make ends meet, affordable housing serves thousands of Albertans facing a wide range of challenges.

Mr. Speaker, that's why our government recently announced a huge $120 million to directly support 28 affordable housing projects, creating nearly 1,100 new units for families and individuals in need.

Now, you may probably remember that under an NDP government Alberta lost more than 180,000 jobs, and the wait-list for affordable housing grew by 76 per cent, meaning fewer families were able to afford a place to call home.

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we believe in compassionate conservatism. Whether it is my annual veterans food drive for Calgary veterans or raising $83,000 for the Calgary cancer foundation or $62,000 for prematurely born babies, it's all about compassionate conservatism, helping people that need help. As Albertans prepare to vote in the upcoming election, I ask you all to think about the track records of both parties and their impact on your community in making life . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Adoption Supports

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans desperately want to start or grow their families but simply cannot afford it. Between the expenses, long waits, and the complex process, these Albertans are losing hope of becoming parents through adopting a child. I've listened to their stories, and I've seen the sad look in their eyes when they talk about how long, expensive, and complicated it could be to adopt a child, which forces some of them to walk away from providing a child with a forever home, and it breaks my heart.

That is why I'm so pleased to see that our government is taking decisive action to remove these barriers and provide new funding supports for these families. Yesterday the UCP government announced a $4 million investment over the next three years to make adoption more affordable to Albertans and help more children find a stable and loving home. We are boosting the adoption tax credit by almost $4,000 to match the federal credit, which means we are putting more money in parents' pockets.

In addition, the funding package would cover the cost of supplemental health benefits for children adopted here in Alberta through licensed adoption agencies as well as government care. This will help remove medical cost barriers to adoption, especially for children with specialized medical needs. These new supports will benefit up to 5,000 children in the public system and help them find their forever homes.

There are many unknowns when parenting children, Mr. Speaker. Having assurances that there is extra support to manage a child's medical needs, whatever they might be, is going to lift a huge weight from the shoulders of families in our communities. It will allow parents to focus on taking care of their child instead of wondering how they're going to cover costs. By providing these benefits as well as subsidies and higher tax breaks for families looking to adopt, we are securing a strong future for children and families in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

UCP Government Record

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, there are 67 days until the next election, 67 days until Alberta casts its final verdict on this UCP government. I know that concerns the members opposite, who will have to run on their record, their record of hiking utility prices, insurance rates, school fees, income taxes, property taxes, tuition, student loan interest, all the while handing out money to their friends and insiders.

Those members will have to explain why they stood and cheered while the Health minister started a war with doctors and created a generational health care crisis, explain why they whooped it up while the Education minister fired 20,000 education workers via tweet while the government plotted to tear down the Rocky Mountains to mine for coal. They'll have to answer for the entitlement of Alohagate and the liquor cabinet sky palace patio parties.

They'll have to explain why they remained silent while a record number of children and youth died in their government's care. They will have to explain why they stood behind the current Premier as she justified the Russian invasion into Ukraine, insulted Indigenous communities, meddled in the justice system, blamed cancer patients for their own health conditions, and plotted to give away $20 billion to pay bad companies to clean up their own messes.

But on this side of the House we have a leader we are proud of, a team that's truly united, and a vision for Alberta that is positive and forward looking. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's future is at stake in this election. That's why I know that on May 29 Albertans are going to elect an Alberta NDP government. We have stood up for all Albertans for four years as the Official Opposition. We are ready, eager, and honoured to have the privilege of serving you as your government.

See you at the polls, Alberta. Let's build a better future together. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Forestry Families and Workers

Mr. Rehn: Mr. Speaker, it has been a privilege to serve with fellow Albertans who have worked hard and struggled to see a better tomorrow for our amazing province. It's not the naysayers who count or the people who point out how the strong stumble or who do the deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the people who are actually in the arena, whose faces are marred by dust, sweat, and blood, who at best know the triumph of high achievement and, at worst, if they fail, at least fail while daring greatly so that their place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who neither know victory nor defeat.

1:50

Being from the north, I would like to pay tribute to all the past and present forestry workers and some great Alberta forestry families like the Buchanans, Bissells, and Vanderwells. In 1939 Julian Benson married my aunt Margaret Rehn, and they had three children: Marg, Joan, and Gerry. They started a thriving sawmill and a logging business and had over 100 men and women working for them near MacKay, Alberta. Unfortunately, in 1949 Julian, who was 39, got killed in a sawmilling accident. The people who worked for him had great admiration and respect and wrote this.

There's a pretty spot in Canada
It's a place they call MacKay,
A lovely patch to spend the night
When you're thumbin' on your way.

There's a vibrant, bustling, lumber camp
Just 13 miles below
Calling all who think they're a work champ
To come out and put on an awesome show.

Oh, the boss is Julian Benson,
And you often heard him mention
Of another great invention
George Cooling was his name.

He's brash, and he is lazy
Good natured, but he's crazy
In the gummy Jack pine timber,
That's where he won his fame.

They can talk about their north camps
 And all their pretty lakes
 But just take a trip to Julian's camp
 And I'm sure it'll take the cake!

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Are there no rules in this place? Pure anarchy when song breaks out.

Unfortunately, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora will just take a seat for a brief moment, prior to moving to Oral Question Period, I would just like to take another brief opportunity and invite all retiring pages to join me here at the dais.

Page Recognition

The Speaker: As hon. members will be aware, at the end of every session – not that I would ever presuppose a decision of the Assembly, and who knows what the future holds? But I do know that the session will come to an end here in the next little while, and I would hate to miss the opportunity to thank the retiring pages. They've prepared a letter for all members of the Assembly, through me, and it goes as follows:

Dear Mr. Speaker,

As the end of this session approaches, many of us [pages] will be moving on from the Page Program. We, the retiring Pages, would like to express our gratitude for the incredible opportunity to serve the Legislative Assembly and participate in Alberta's democratic process.

We would like to extend a special thanks to Kaitlynn Church and all the staff in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office for their support and the excellent work they do overseeing the Program; to the Bills and Journals Clerks in 315 whose procedural knowledge is [critical] to our duties; to the members of the Legislative Assembly Security Service whose humour and stories make the time pass quickly; to the Members for their dedication in serving their constituents, and finally to the Table Officers and the Speaker for their dedication in facilitating democracy in our province and for their Leadership within this Chamber.

Finally, we would like to express our gratitude for the opportunity to work alongside our fellow Pages. The friendships we have made in the Program will last a lifetime, and we are forever grateful for the opportunity to work on such a dynamic and outstanding team. We will all miss working as Pages.

Yours sincerely,

The retiring Pages

Ayla, Sophie, Alison, Amelia, Angelina, George, Joy,
 Laura, William

On behalf of all members of the Assembly let me say a very special thank you to each and every one of you for everything that you do. There's a more than likely chance that in a few years you'll have most of our jobs. Thank you so very much. Hon. members, the retiring pages. [Standing ovation]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora has question 1.

Pension Plans

Ms Hoffman: Your pension is yours: that's the name of our Alberta NDP proposal to protect Albertans' retirement savings which the Leader of the Opposition presented in Calgary earlier today. From the pipeline tech who hits the road in minus 40 to the teacher up all night working on tomorrow's lesson plan, Albertans have a right to know that their retirement is secure and free from political meddling. With an Alberta NDP government your CPP will be secure and protected in legislation. Why is the UCP so obsessed with gambling away Albertans' pensions?

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that members on this side of the House believe Albertans' pensions are secure. What we are doing and we've been tasked to do is taking a look at the opportunity of an Alberta pension plan. The NDP would not give Albertans that opportunity, but this government will. We have done the work. We're completing the work. We will ensure Albertans ultimately can make the choice. It's their pension. It's their choice.

Ms Hoffman: Nice words, Mr. Speaker, but one of the first things the UCP government did was seize control of many Albertans' pensions. Teachers, firefighters, county clerks all used to have a voice in the management of their retirement savings until the UCP took it away. An Alberta NDP government will restore joint governance for public-sector pensions, giving employees representation on the AIMCo board, and if those employees decide that they want to leave AIMCo's management, they'll be free to do so. With the Alberta NDP your pension is yours. Why did the UCP seize control of these pensions in the first place and take away Albertans' control of their own retirement?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, something that hasn't changed in four years is the ability and propensity of the members opposite to farmonger unnecessarily. We have worked to secure the pensions of all Albertans and Alberta public-sector workers. We have worked with AIMCo. We have worked with the pension service administrators to position those pensions for maximum growth, for maximum efficiency for the benefit of Alberta workers.

Ms Hoffman: Well, with our plan we actually want to go further. An Alberta NDP government will work with the private and nonprofit sectors to help establish a voluntary workplace pension plan, with the province covering the administrative costs. This unlocks the potential for so many small businesses and nonprofits to offer their employees a secure, defined contribution pension. That would be transformative. It will help attract global talent to Alberta. I'm proud to have a leader who is fighting for working people and who wants them to have a stable future and a secure retirement. I wish the soon to be opposition could say the same.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, when we take a look at the track record of the NDP when they were in office, what they did was this. They raised taxes. They raised fees. They added regulatory burden. They stood in the way of large projects necessary for our economy. They chased out tens of billions of dollars of capital and, with it, over a hundred thousand jobs. That's their legacy. Our legacy is job creation and a balanced budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for her second set of questions.

Physician Recruitment and Retention

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, there's a profound crisis in Alberta health care driven by the UCP's war on health care workers and the Premier's love of conspiracy theories and junk science. Alberta medical students are voting with their feet. New data from the Canadian residency matching system shows that Alberta has 42 residency spaces left open this year but in B.C. only two. Medical students don't see a future launching their careers in Alberta under the UCP. Does the Premier take any responsibility for chasing these young doctors away from their own province?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the work our government is doing in investing and improving our health care system. We are investing $24.5 billion, the highest amount ever, into our health care system. We are expanding our medical programs at the U of C and the U of A. What you hear on the other side when they're making comments is, quite frankly, fearmongering. Yes, in the first round of matching 42 are unmatched, but let's put that into perspective. That's 42 out of 351 positions unmatched across the entire country. We are investing in health care, we're investing in our doctors, and we're going to keep investing . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: For the past three years we've heard from family doctors who were retiring early, leaving their profession, or leaving the province due to the hostility faced by the UCP. This government tore up their contract and piled a mountain of new paperwork on them just as the pandemic hit Alberta. The former Health minister even visited a doctor at his home, yelling at him in front of his children. Now we know that the med students who should be taking their place in Alberta are looking elsewhere. Those 42 doctors could make a big difference in many Alberta communities. Does the Premier understand that she's causing permanent harm to Alberta families needing doctors?

2:00

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out and make sure that the opposition understands that this is the first round. This is typically done. You have one round in terms of matching. Then there's a second round to be able to fill. Now, historically, even under the previous government, they didn't fill all those spaces, but we're going to actually change the process. I've already asked the department to work with the deans to make sure that if there are any unfilled spaces, and typically they are – just so you know, we've had over the last eight years more than 95 per cent filled, but if there are any unfilled spaces, we'll provide them to IMGs because we need more doctors . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, there are entire cities or regions in our province where you can't find a family doctor who's accepting new patients. Families in Red Deer, Lethbridge, and the entire Bow Valley are left with nowhere to go but an overwhelmed hospital. Alberta's NDP will fix this with family health teams which connect a million Albertans with a family doctor and primary care. We will build buildings that are great places to work and great places for families to get their health care needs met. Will the Premier admit that her chaos is chasing a generation of young doctors out of Alberta? Everyone knows it's true.

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of the work that our government is doing and will continue to do in bringing more doctors into this province. We have more doctors than there have ever been in this province, and actually, if we compare 2022, as of December 31, to 2021: 254 more doctors into the province to be able to expand services for Albertans. Now, we appreciate there are challenges; we still need more doctors. That's why I'm very pleased in places like Lethbridge, where we're leveraging our international medical graduates. Seventeen more doctors have signed on over the next 10 months. They're going to continue to do the work, and we're not going to stop until everyone here gets access. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning and opposition deputy House leader.

Energy Company Liability

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. During question period yesterday I asked the Energy minister why he's still trying to force onto Alberta the Premier's R-star program. The current Energy minister said that the program doesn't exist, yet the former Energy minister has said that the program will violate the polluter-pay principle, and the current Premier, the former lobbyist, advocated for the program in this very building. I'm also hearing from landowners who say that this is kind of like the henhouse a fox would build. So who should Albertans believe: the former Energy minister, the current minister, the current Premier, or the landowners that the government is clearly ignoring?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, what a woeful group of provocateurs. Let's talk a little bit about the motion that they put forward this week. Our province saw negative oil prices. People's livelihoods were at stake, and the SRP program was created to help stimulate jobs by incentivizing well site closure. SRP closed up to 38,000 sites and employed thousands of Albertans, putting food on the table. The NDP? They say: no; let them eat cake. Say hello to Alberta's anti oil and gas, antibusiness, anti-Alberta . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, Mr. Speaker, our record is one pipeline; UCP, zero pipelines.

In Alberta Albertans have benefited from oil and gas revenue for generations, in large part due to royalties that oil companies have had to pay. The Premier's scheme would give these royalties away to bad companies who don't feel they need to clean up after themselves without getting paid. This would reward the bad companies and the lobbyists, who are putting in for this handout while Albertans are losing. It's no wonder the Premier is keeping her plan secret. Will she just admit this was never about cleaning up wells and actually about giving Albertans' money to her friends and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, the activist mentality of the NDP has a target, to end fossil fuel production. They want to do it by driving up the cost of doing business, raising the carbon tax to $170 and beyond, introducing windfall taxes, introducing corporate taxes, higher electricity costs, red tape, and confiscating land to curtail development. By doing so, the NDP want to make life more expensive for everyone. On this side of the House we are focused on prosperity and making life more affordable for Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear to me and to most Albertans that this government is trying really hard to hide the details about this $20 billion handout from Albertans, right on the eve of the election. We heard it from the municipal leaders this week, we've heard it from landowners all over the province, and it's clear that the government has no intention of sharing their plans with Albertans or collaborating with them. So I have an offer to the minister: how about you come and join me tonight on my consultation at albertasfuture.ca? I'll even give you a shout-out. You want to join me?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, it's amazing to me to see how easy it is for the NDP to run fast and loose with the truth. They were not forthright with Albertans on their secret carbon tax or their ideological imposition against farmers and ranchers with Bill 6, not to mention their social licence alliance with Justin Trudeau. It reminds me of a saying: I'm not upset that you lied to me; I'm upset that from now on I can no longer believe you. That is exactly how Albertans feel about this NDP.

Calgary's Economy

Member Ceci: In the last election the UCP promised to fill the offices in downtown Calgary, but today Calgary has the highest downtown office vacancy rate in the country, and there are fewer head offices in the city than there were when the UCP government formed. Members of the UCP said that it wasn't their job to support downtown Calgary, and in this year's budget there wasn't a single dollar for downtown revitalization, which the Calgary Chamber of commerce CEO said was an insult. Why is the UCP ignoring Calgary as the city continues to struggle under this government?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're doing anything but ignoring Calgary. Calgary is a critical city in this province. I find it very interesting that the members opposite, who were in government at the time that billions of dollars of wealth left this province, at a time when those towers began emptying out, would have the gall to raise the issue. This government, our government, has positioned Alberta's economy . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Whoa, whoa, whoa.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, our government has positioned this economy for competitiveness, investment attraction, and growth, and it's growth that we're seeing.

Member Ceci: The UCP also promised to create jobs for Calgarians in the last election, but today Calgary has the highest unemployment rate in the country among major cities. This comes after the UCP declared economic diversification a luxury and cut several tax credits that were attracting investment and creating jobs. They also delayed vital projects like the green line, that would have created 20,000 jobs, supported economic growth, and reduced CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. Why has the UCP spent the last four years holding Calgary back?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the NDP chased out investment and jobs, this government is investing in Calgary, which is resulting in job creation. We've invested hundreds of millions of dollars in critical . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

You could run again if you wanted the job.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we've invested hundreds of millions of dollars in critical infrastructure in Calgary, but moreover we've created an investment climate where we're seeing real true sustainable economic diversification. The tech sector is leading the nation in growth. Financial services are exploding. Film and television, manufacturing – I could go on.

Member Ceci: The UCP claims there is no business case to convert empty spaces in downtown Calgary, but their own report says that investment and office conversion is required to revitalize the city's core. Meanwhile the business community is asking for tax credits to be restored in order to attract investment and jobs. The Premier actually promised to do this and then broke her promise. An Alberta NDP government would go a step further and bring a bustling postsecondary campus downtown. When the UCP break their promises and don't even take their own advice, how can Calgarians possibly trust anything this Premier says?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, every time the member opposite rises, I'm afraid of another credit downgrade.

This government is positioning this province for competitiveness and growth. We're seeing economic diversification at rates I've not seen in my lifetime. Financial services, tech, manufacturing, De Havilland announcing their manufacturing plant just outside of Calgary: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is winning.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's UCP government has been hard at work cleaning up the mess of the NDP following their misdirected term of office. This has required improved fiscal management, investment attraction versus divestment, and enhanced support of the broader interests of Albertans. Affordable housing is just one of the countless matters the NDP has failed on as they increased the wait-list by 76 per cent through their four years in office. Can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services tell the House how our government's collaborative approach is different from the failings of the NDP with respect to affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek for his hard work over the last eight years. Congratulations on a great career. Part of our success has been because of that member's strong advocacy for affordable housing over the last eight years and his amazing work in the sector before his public life, so thank you to that member.

The biggest difference, I'd say, between what we saw under the NDP and what we see under this government is a focus on collaboration. We're working with municipal governments, we're working with federal governments, but we're also working with the not-for-profit and private community to find innovative solutions for how we can increase the supply.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that affordable housing and housing affordability broadly serves thousands and millions of Albertans, including seniors, low-income families, those living with disabilities, women and children who have fled domestic violence, and given that there is significant need for more access to affordable housing, especially in our two major cities of Calgary and Edmonton, can the hon. minister tell the House what investments are being made specifically to support innovative new projects in affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Through the innovative, collaborative programs we're taking initiatives to work alongside not-for-profits that work in these sectors, that understand the clients. By working alongside not-for-profits, we're able to build innovative programs, and that's led to success. Just in the last month we've announced almost 1,100 new units of affordable housing, and over the period of this government we have built over 2,500 new units of affordable housing. That's because of those strong, collaborative initiatives. That means more women who are fleeing domestic violence are going to have a place to stay. More people exiting homelessness are going to have a place to stay. More people . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the minister for his answer. Given that Alberta's UCP government is committed to making life more affordable in Alberta, ensuring that those most in need, as mentioned, are able to access the supports they need but given that the previous NDP government is actually the one that made life more expensive as they conspired with their Liberal friends in Ottawa to implement a damaging carbon tax, meaning more and more people are now in need of affordable housing and housing supports, to the hon. minister: how is Budget 2023 securing a bright future for the many vulnerable and hard-working Albertans that rely on affordable housing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the previous government, we're actually building housing. In Budget 2023 we've invested a billion dollars towards improving existing buildings, to funding operations as well as building new housing, again, 1,100 units announced just in the last month. Our stronger foundations plan, which the good member had a great role in developing, is going to be investing in and building out 25,000 additional units of housing over the next 10 years so that more Albertans have a place to call home.

Again, thank you to that member for his long advocacy. I look forward to working with him long into the future.

Utility Rebate Programs and Multifamily Buildings

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to be joined today by condo owners who represent a large portion of the population that has been overlooked by this government's supposed affordability measures. The Minister of Affordability and Utilities has said that his department is working on changes that will allow more people in submetered and single-metered multifamily homes to apply for electricity rebates available to other Albertans. Minister, when will rebates for condo owners be available, and will it be prior to the election?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we want as many Albertans to benefit from our affordability program as possible. That includes our electricity rebates, which are providing up to $500 to 1.9 million farms, small businesses, and homes across Alberta. When it comes to Albertans living in units behind a sub-or single meter, there are technical challenges that my department is working to overcome, and we also want to ensure that these payments are nontaxable and that they wouldn't jeopardize the nonprofit status of these condo associations.

Thank you very much.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that natural gas rebates have been made a permanent part of the affordability action plan, they are potentially even more of an issue for multi-unit buildings because the vast majority share a single meter for natural gas. Given that currently the same Albertans are not eligible for the natural gas rebates because the caps put on the program only allow individual homes, small businesses, and small apartments to qualify, why hasn't the UCP government removed this cap so that residents and all residential multifamily buildings qualify for the natural gas rebates?

Mr. Jones: I'd like to thank the COF and the members opposite for their advocacy on this issue. The member opposite did a good job outlining some of the challenges of getting these rebates to those Albertans as we transition the program from what was a temporary price protection program to a permanent feature of Alberta where Albertans will benefit from an owned resource and be protected from natural gas spikes, as seen around the world. As we make that transition, we're looking at this situation, trying to find options, ways to get those rebates to all Albertans.

Thank you.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that this government failed these Albertans with their so-called affordability supports and given that we are approaching an election, with the UCP having failed to address their concerns, why should the hard-working people in Alberta, who have been consistently overlooked and ignored by this UCP government for four years, expect anything new from the UCP? Will the minister apologize for failing these Albertans for so long?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for her question. We are of course looking at options to expand these rebates to more Albertans. But we also have a number of other supports: our affordability payments, which are going to virtually all seniors in this province 65 and up, the vast majority of households with families with dependent children under 18, and to Albertans on core support programs, $600 over six months. We've removed the fuel tax, saving everybody on every litre at the pump. Perhaps our greatest affordability measure is that every day we keep the socialists out of government.

Racism and Hate Crime Prevention

Mr. Sabir: Yesterday Stats Canada reported that hate-motivated crimes are on the rise in Canada and Alberta. Police-reported stats showed that nationally there was a 27 per cent increase in 2021, following a 35 per cent increase in 2020. In Alberta the number of hate-motivated crimes against religious groups tripled to 91 incidents in 2021. No Albertan should ever have to feel unsafe in their communities. These numbers show that action must be taken. Why has the UCP failed to step up?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. I have read this report, and I share the concern across the country in the rise of hate-based crimes. That's what's important to point out, the historical, groundbreaking work that the government of Alberta has done in terms of engagement with the community and actually putting steps in place to make sure that we are drafting antiracism legislation and putting more protections in place for cultural communities.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the work the government did is not working and given that, sadly, 2021 saw the total number of reported hate crimes in Alberta increase to over 300 and given that one step that could have helped address incidents of racism is the collection of race-based data – something our caucus proposed, but the UCP refused to debate it – does the minister regret the UCP's refusal to support the collection of race-based data, that would help in fighting racism across this province?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say again that we have undertaken historical and groundbreaking work on the antiracism file. We've done tremendous work in terms of multicultural engagement all across the province, and that includes the collection of data. It's important to do this engagement before you put any legislation in place. The Anti-Racism Advisory Council has also been instrumental in advising us. We have done tremendous engagement, and that engagement will continue.

Mr. Sabir: Given that on her first day in office the Premier dismissed the discrimination experienced by so many different racialized Albertans and has refused to apologize yet and given that our caucus conducted extensive consultations with racialized Albertans to create recommendations on how to end racism and given that with information showing that incidents of hate crimes are on the rise in Alberta, we need to work together to ensure that we finally end racism in Alberta, will the Premier take this last chance to formally apologize for her deeply insulting comments and inaction?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, this is not a partisan issue. Everybody in Alberta, whether they're a temporary resident, a refugee, a newcomer, or have been living here for generations, every resident deserves to feel safe, included, and celebrated. This government is committed to making sure that happens. Through the multiculturalism portfolio I'm proud to say that we have actually announced historical funding for ethnocultural communities, $4 million in next year's budget, to help with antiracism initiatives and social cohesion.

Federal and Provincial Carbon Pricing

Mr. Barnes: This April Fool's Day Ottawa will continue to play us all for suckers with a hike in the inflationary carbon tax of 14 cents per litre on gasoline and 12 cents per cubic metre of natural gas. Given that this tax unfairly burdens rural residents who need to drive for work, for health care, for education, and for recreation and given that this tax directly hammers families and those on fixed incomes and given that this tax unfairly targets Alberta and western Canadian primary sector industries, to the Premier: please tell us when you're going to start fighting for a fair deal, a fair deal for Alberta families.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member opposite in his propensity to stand up for Albertans and stand against Ottawa. Number one, we need regime change in Ottawa, and every Canadian should be working to that end over the next two years. I call on the members opposite to stand with the government on this side of the House against the Trudeau-Singh alliance, which is pushing our nation's economy backwards. We're doing everything we can to position Alberta for competitiveness, investment attraction, and growth.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, that's interesting, considering that this government will also be increasing its provincial carbon tax by $15 per tonne on April 1. Given that on December 15 this government approved an order in council to tie the provincial industrial carbon tax to the federal carbon tax pricing schedule and given that the federal government plans to triple its carbon tax by 2030 and given that the Minister of Energy has publicly stated – and I quote – that this is good news for the province, can the Premier please explain: why are federal carbon taxes devastating but provincial carbon tax is wonderful?

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had a carbon levy on heavy industrial emitters for years, for a long, long time. We've worked with the industry on that levy. The funds raised in that levy largely go towards technology improvements. But I want to be clear. We stand against the federal government's carbon tax. We took the federal government to court over that carbon tax, we've opposed the members opposite when they brought in that carbon tax, and we will stand up for Albertans' interests.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying: there's only one taxpayer. Given that provincial carbon taxes on industrial emitters are passed on to consumers, just like all other forms of corporate taxation, and given that the bottom lines of family budgets do not differentiate between provincial or federal taxes and given that rapid inflation means every dollar taken from Albertans' wallets hurts now more than ever, will the Premier please explain to us why she believes this is a good time to hike the provincial carbon tax?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, low taxes are important. In Budget '23, through financial discipline and fiscal discipline, we've been able to keep Alberta's taxes the lowest in the country. In fact, the next lowest tax jurisdiction, which is Ontario: if we applied their structure over Alberta, we would be collecting $20 billion more. Albertans have a $20 billion tax advantage compared to any province in the country. We're going to keep it that way.

Rural Hospital Service Disruptions

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, AHS has just announced the closure of Ponoka's emergency department. Albertans need access to health care, and every day the UCP pushes Alberta's health care system further and further into crisis. It is unacceptable, and I'm tired of waiting to see which community in our province will be harmed next by the UCP's health care crisis. These UCP hospital closures put Albertans' lives at risk, so will the minister stand here today and explain to the people of Ponoka how long they should expect to go without emergency health care services?

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, you know, there are challenges that we're seeing here in Alberta and, quite frankly, across the entire country with staff to be able to make sure that we maintain the services, particularly in rural areas. I had the opportunity to tour the province, rural areas, and speak with municipalities and speak with AHS employees, and we are making change. Part of our change is investing in a health workforce strategy so we get more people – and we're doing that across the entire province – additional seats for doctors, for nurses, and other allied health professionals, and we'll . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Given that the people of Ponoka deserve access to health care, just as expectant mothers in Sundre and Barrhead deserve access to health care and the people of south Edmonton and of Red Deer and so on and so on and given that across the province AHS is reporting dozens of partial hospital closures and given that AHS reporting alone shows that our health care is in crisis under this UCP government, does the Health minister take any responsibility for the dozens of hospital closures on his watch and for the danger he has exposed all these Alberta families to?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, we know this is an issue, and we are working to address it. Part of our health human workforce strategy is to train people in rural areas. A great example is in Wainwright, with the U of C setting up a program where nurses apply to the program, do the initial part of it online, and then work at the Wainwright hospital for on-the-job training. We are going to be expanding that program out. In addition, we are working very hard to attract and retain internationally trained nurses, internationally trained doctors. We know this is a problem, and we're working . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Member Loyola: Given that Albertans should never have had to deal with these closures and disruptions in the first place and given that the people of Ponoka, just like all Albertans, have a right to health care close to home and given that right now across our province Albertans are suffering because they cannot get the care that they need – let me say it again, Mr. Speaker: they are suffering because of this government – will the minister stand here today and apologize to all the people and their families who have faced hardship and anxiety as a direct result of this government's damage to Alberta's health care?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, we are fully aware of the challenges that are being faced in rural Alberta. We hear that every day. I'm very pleased that I was able to speak with members of the RMA earlier this week and talk about all of the things that we're doing as a government to ensure that we can rebuild the services in rural Alberta. This is not a new problem. This problem existed pre-COVID, actually even prior to this government, but we are taking action to fix it. We have a health care workforce strategy to get more people into rural Alberta, and we'll keep getting till it's done.

Appeals Secretariat

Ms Renaud: Mr. Speaker, it was three years ago when the Appeals Secretariat received a complaint from Bill Day, who was mistreated during his wife's appeal. Bill has a hearing loss, and AISH, an agency that works with disabled people, failed to provide him with the necessary accommodation for the appeal hearing. It's been nearly a year since the Ombudsman report, and the report listed five recommendations to address the lack of accommodation. A year has passed, and not one of these recommendations has been met. To the minister: will you please tell Bill and his wife and all of us here why this government has failed to fix the problem in one year?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Obviously, having a good appeal process to make sure that there are checks and balances in the system is very important, something that I am taking very seriously, and I hope to have a better update for you soon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Renaud: Given that that is not good enough and given that the previous minister said that the recommendations were reasonable and that they would get to work on them right away but the UCP has failed to act and given that the government has treated AISH recipients so poorly over the last four years – I can't say that I'm shocked that this happened at an appeal – will the minister stand here today and apologize to AISH recipients and their families who advocate alongside them for the mistreatment they have been forced to endure during appeal hearings? That's just unfathomable.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of the recommendations have been accepted and been actioned, so we are moving forward to make sure that we have a good appeal process. This is something we are taking very seriously. We're also taking very seriously making sure that there's care for people with disabilities in our community. It's why we indexed AISH. It's why we've added our affordability payments. It's why we've focused on building inclusive housing for individuals across this province. We care about individuals with disabilities, and we're taking real action to improve lives for Albertans.

Thank you.

2:30

Ms Renaud: Given that during budget estimates I asked this minister how the government was addressing the problem and all he could say was – this was from the ADM – and I quote: making sure that staff are aware of the problem. Awareness means nothing without action, and given that this government has a responsibility to ensure that AISH recipients have access to fair and equitable treatment during every step of a quasi-judicial process, will the minister please explain to the people like Bill why making sure that people with disabilities are treated with dignity and respect is not a priority for this UCP? Why is basic access and accommodation not happening under your watch?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are taking this very seriously. It's why we have actioned every recommendation, and we are moving forward to make sure that there is better accountability in the system, that individuals accessing the system are getting appropriate care. I'm going to continue to keep my thumb on this and make sure that Albertans with disabilities that are going through the appeal process are getting adequate access to supports through that system. We're taking this very seriously. This is very important to me, and I thank the member for the question.

Bail System

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, Premiers across Canada are calling on Ottawa to reform the bail system, a call that Ottawa has been refusing to take any action on. The leniency of the current federal catch-and-release protocols are making Alberta's communities unsafe. I'm personally appalled that our NDP opposition has refused to speak up to their bosses, Trudeau and Singh, in Ottawa on behalf of Albertans about this issue. Can the minister tell the House how we plan to make our rural communities safer and what programs we will implement to help off-set the dangers of the federal bail system?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, our government takes the safety and well-being of Albertans seriously. Albertans deserve to feel safe and secure in their communities no matter where they choose to call home. We will continue to invest significantly in policing and in the justice system. Budget '23 has significant increases in both the Justice and the public safety budgets, increases in a budget that the NDP chose to vote against. But while we take that safety of Albertans seriously, we'll continue to invest in policing and the justice system, and we will continue to look for innovative ways to make sure people stay safe.

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, given that reports from my communities typically involve the same offenders and given that a woman with 19 arrest warrants recently was released back into a West Yellowhead community and only given an order to appear in court, to the minister: what can our government do to encourage our police officers in their daily duties to know their efforts are not in vain?

Mr. Shandro: Well, the difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal government has the purview in whether you committed a crime, how long your sentence is going to be, and whether you get bail. The difficulty is that in 2019 the Trudeau government chose, through Bill C-75, to make massive reforms to the bail regime here in Canada, which has led to our communities being less safe. And it's not just Alberta saying that; it is every province and every territory bringing that to the table and demanding that the federal government take this seriously and have serious and significant bail reforms that are going to be focused on keeping our communities safe. That's what we're advocating for as a province and what we hope to continue to advocate for.

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, given that my communities are still facing crime issues, particularly by prolific offenders, and given that an offender with 41 previous criminal convictions was recently arrested for stabbing a man and then released just hours later, can the minister share how we will reduce the risk to my community members from repeat offenders?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As we continue to invest in the justice system, making it more efficient, investing in policing, we can't spend our way out of a problem that Justin Trudeau created with C-75. That's why, when we went to an emergency meeting in Ottawa, the minister of public safety and I, just a couple of weeks ago, we did thankfully hear from the federal government that they are proposing soon some changes, and hopefully it will include a reverse onus for those who are a repeat offender as someone accused of a serious crime. Bail is appropriate for many situations, but we do need pretrial custody for repeat offenders.

Edmonton Downtown Revitalization

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton's downtown needs help. Like my fellow residents here in the heart of our city, I've seen the deep impacts of the pandemic on our neighbours, local businesses, and economy. One thing that could help are the recommendations in the report from this government's Edmonton Metro Region Economic Recovery Working Group. Five months ago they delivered their report, but it's yet to be released. Perhaps it's because it recommended a tax credit for AI, matching grants for improvements and beautification, support for new housing: all things absent from Budget 2023. For the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development: when will they finally release this report?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question by the member. It's been a hard couple of years for small businesses as a result of the pandemic. So many businesses, particularly in the hospitality and accommodation sectors, were really hard hit. That's why our government supported our businesses at degrees higher than any other province. We recognize it didn't off-set all the losses, but we knew that this government needed to underpin small businesses that were struggling. That's what we did.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that we also need help to ensure everyone who lives in and visits downtown feels safe and welcome and to support our friends, neighbours, and family in need and given that after years of inaction this government's eventual response was to form a task force to address addiction, homelessness, and public safety with a mandate until March 2023 and given that that's one week away and their only action so far has been to deploy 12 sheriffs to help patrol downtown but there's much, much more that needs to be done and given that we're five weeks away from the writ, why haven't we seen specific plans for further concrete steps, investments in increasing capacity in day shelters, housing, harm reduction? Why is this not a priority for this government?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, first of all, I want to address one of the questions from the first, around housing. We are investing in housing. We've made a number of significant announcements just in the recent past about significant investments in increasing affordable housing in Edmonton and the Edmonton area as well, and there are more announcements to come. We are building housing, so we are listening. In addition to that, we are working very closely with our not-for-profit partners to address the challenges that we're seeing around homelessness in our downtown core. We've increased funding for Homeward Trust. We've also increased funding for day shelters and our service hub model to provide people with more access into services.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, given that it's clear this government is clueless about Edmonton's downtown – their Budget 2023, in fact, failed to put forward any plan for revitalization of downtown in Edmonton or Calgary; indeed, they can't even release the plan from their working group – and given that this is after years of advocacy from businesses, community, and city governments and given that our caucus has released a full plan to renew vibrancy in downtown Calgary, and I'm proud to say we'll soon be releasing our plan for downtown Edmonton, will the minister just admit it's going to take an Alberta NDP government to actually collaborate with communities, businesses, and municipal partners to invest in downtown vibrancy in Edmonton?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that COVID was hard on our downtown cores of all our cities. One thing I hear from business owners is the importance of additional public safety. That's one reason why we've increased public safety's budget by over 13 per cent, an additional 235 sheriffs right across the province, including many in downtown Edmonton, to ensure that there is an acceptable level of public safety. Moreover, we continue to position the province for investment attraction, economic diversification, and growth.

Kearl Oil Sands Project Tailings Leak

Mr. Feehan: The Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation released details gathered from their time at the site of the spill of the Kearl tailings pond. They are concerned about the impact that this leak has had on drinking water and wildlife in the area. Their investigation found uncontained toxic water and animal tracks leading out of the spill, directly contradicting the Premier, who earlier called such concerns, quote, misreporting. Does the Premier stand by her claim that the concerns of Athabasca Chipewyan First Nations are misreporting, or will she apologize for dismissing their very real concerns about food and water?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Safety and environmental protection are our number one concerns, and I'm pleased to report that we've been doing continuous water monitoring and water testing downstream of the site. Just yesterday we had some results back from 12 water samples over six locations testing over 575 different metrics. They've been sent to six different labs, and there have been no concerns raised whatsoever about the water quality.

Mr. Feehan: Given that the Premier and this minister have chosen to ignore the concerns of First Nations who are rightfully concerned about the impact of a long-running leak that they were not informed of for many months and given that trust is essential between the government and the communities they serve to ensure that crises like these are appropriately addressed but given that only yesterday ACFN cited the comments of the Premier as examples of the government not being accurate in their statements, does the Premier know that her words and actions are destroying trust with the people of the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue to deploy continuous monitoring downstream of Imperial's Kearl site. That includes water samples taken from the Fort Chip drinking water intake. Nothing has shown that there's been any harm to the drinking water. We continue to do daily testing. That's on top of seasonal monitoring that continues. There are rush results from the daily testing being done, and if we find something, we do have the potential to adapt monitoring to include more.

Mr. Feehan: Given that the office of the Privacy Commissioner has opened an investigation into this incident and given that we owe it to the people of Alberta that this never happens again and given that this Premier has lost the trust of the people, which will make the work of reconciliation more difficult, will the Premier stand and admit that the Kearl incident is more than a communications mistake but one that is impacting both the treaty rights and the safety of First Nations and Métis people? Minister, stand up and look directly at the people from the ACFN and tell them that they're wrong again, and they will respond with the anger that they've been showing throughout the last three weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We actually welcome the report and the investigation from the commissioner. We see this as something we've asked for. We've said right from the beginning that we would like to take a step back, look at what the processes are around communications, understand if they were followed, and commit to improve them if there are changes that need to be made. We see that this will be an important insight into whether there should be some improvement in processes.

Flood and Drought Mitigation on the Bow River

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, it has now been 10 years since the floods of 2013. There's a flood mitigation project under construction on the Elbow River but not yet on the Bow. Currently, according to government's timeline, the potential start of flood and drought mitigation on the Bow could be 10 more years away. Let's remember: this project will provide economic development for our First Nations neighbours. Since it's the job of the minister of environment to decide where the dam will be built, what's being done to speed up your work so that a site can be selected for flood and drought mitigation on the Bow?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for this question. We've been looking at three different on-stream reservoir options for new flood and drought storage to protect downtown Calgary and other communities along the Bow. Those three sites include a new reservoir located near Morley, an expansion of the Ghost reservoir, and a new reservoir located between the Ghost reservoir and the Bears paw dam. Also, in the spring of 2021 we extended our modified operations agreement with TransAlta for another five-year term. This will allow the government to modify operations at several facilities to help protect communities along the Bow River.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to hear that the minister talked about the flood mitigation agreements with the dams further upstream. That is a good thing. But what if 2013 happens again between now and when the dam gets built? What other measures can be put in place to protect southern Alberta and Calgary from further damage? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for this very important question. Flood mitigation for Calgary and communities in Alberta is very important, and that's why Budget '23 actually has $282 million over three years for the Springbank dam. Just an update on the construction work that's there this week: there's about 20,000 cubic metres of concrete that's been placed at this dam. That's about 2,500 truckloads. Also, about 420,000 cubic metres of dirt work. That's about 32,000 truckloads. We're also working with the city of Calgary for the Glenmore reservoir to expand about another 4,000 Olympic-sized . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Stoney Nakoda Nation has already passed a band council resolution . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. McIver: A band council resolution has already been passed by the Stoney Nakoda allowing Alberta Environment to do the work, and given the fact that the elders and chiefs have even blessed the site of the future dam, which means our First Nations partners are doing their part, I would ask the Environment minister: please tell the House how your ministry will shorten the time until we can get an agreement with the Stoney people on where the dam will go. It matters to the Stoney people. It matters to everyone in southern Alberta.

An Hon. Member: Preamble.

The Speaker: If the member had never used a preamble before, perhaps the intervention would be more warranted.

The hon. the minister.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's advocacy and passion about this issue. As you know, projects of this size, with the added complexity of an on-stream reservoir, require time for careful analysis and engagement to make sure that we get this right and it's safe. We need to get this right. In the meantime the city of Calgary, with $69 million in funding from the Alberta community resilience program, has initiated 13 mitigation projects, 11 of which are along the Bow River. This includes the west Eau Claire and downtown flood protection barriers as well as the upper plateau stormwater separation project in Sunnyside.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Ramadan

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Remarks in Arabic] I am honoured as a member of this House and as a member of the Islamic faith to rise today and acknowledge the holy month of Ramadan, which began last evening, on March 22. As Muslims fast from dawn to sunset, we enrich our faith through spiritual reflection and introspection. Fasting is one of the five key pillars of Islam. It teaches us patience, generosity, discipline, and unity. During this most holiest and solemn month we focus on personal growth and renewal and reflect upon ourselves, our values, and our actions.

Although participating in family and communal gatherings is important in my culture, it is especially valuable during Ramadan. I'm happy that we can resume traditions post-COVID and that we can further promote strong communities through participation, giving, sharing, caring, and praying.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of one's faith or religious background all Albertans can join those marking Ramadan this year. We can all take time this month to be thankful for our family, for our friends, and the many things that make this province a great province. We can remember and raise empathy for the less fortunate and celebrate with acts of kindness and charity.

Alberta has a profound history with Muslim faith. Canada's first and oldest mosque, the Al Rashid mosque, is located here in Edmonton, and it was built in 1938 with the support of Christian and Jewish communities.

For everyone here in Alberta, across Canada, and around the world I wish a blessed and peaceful Ramadan. May you experience renewal during this time of reflection and prayer. Ramadan Mubarak.

NDP Retiring Members and Election Candidates

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate and thank four members of our caucus who won't be returning to the next Legislature. Each of them has served their community and changed Alberta for the better, each in their own way.

The Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview sat in this Chamber when our caucus only had four members. After the 2015 election he served as our minister of Municipal Affairs, service Alberta, and economic development and trade. He drove innovation and diversification in our economy and continues to be an advocate for advancing technology in Alberta and the opportunities that it unlocks.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was our Indigenous Relations minister, and during that time he visited every single First Nations community and Métis settlement in Alberta in person. His commitment to truth and reconciliation is absolute. We wish him all the best in his well-earned retirement.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore is a fearless advocate for working people and for the labour movement. He's been a loyal and hard-working member of our movement to lift up working families and make sure that everyone gets home safely and everyone takes home an honest day's pay for an honest day's work.

The Member for Edmonton-West Henday, one of our youngest ever MLAs, is a great example of how young people can succeed in public life and make our communities stronger. Even today he's standing up for schools in west Edmonton to make sure that kids get what they need to be successful close to home. I know that he has many more adventures ahead of him with his growing family.

We're going to miss our friends, but we're also very excited by the many new Alberta NDP MLAs who we hope to see elected in just 67 days. Alberta's NDP candidates, volunteers, and staff are working hard to fill this Chamber with NDP MLAs who will end the chaos, cruelty, and conflict filled by the UCP government and replace it with a stable, competent, and caring Alberta NDP government, with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona as our Premier.

If you'll forgive me, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a heartfelt thank you on behalf of our entire movement to Deron, Richard, Chris, and Jon. We love you guys, and we wish you all the best. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Complete lawlessness; between the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake and now you with the use of names. How can we ever proceed?

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to present a petition calling on the Legislative Assembly to express its support for the people of Ukraine and to express its opposition to the Russian occupation of Ukraine and the unprovoked Russian attack on the Ukrainian people.

Introduction of Bills

Municipal Government (Tourism Community Designation) Amendment Act, 2023

Ms Rosin: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce Bill 208, the Municipal Government (Tourism Community Designation) Amendment Act, 2023.

Recognizing that communities with tourism-based economies face unique challenges with regard to supporting visitation beyond the resident populations and market demands to be unique as a destination, this bill sets the framework to give communities committed to tourism-based economies tools to increase capacity, enhance their unique character, facilitate destination marketing, and support other related initiatives to remain globally competitive.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain on behalf of the hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Animal Protection (Prevention of Animal Neglect) Amendment Act, 2023

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise today on behalf of the MLA for Sherwood Park to request leave to introduce Bill 209, the Animal Protection (Prevention of Animal Neglect) Amendment Act, 2023.

Animals should not be subject to unnecessary harm or cruelty, and it is our responsibility to ensure that they are properly cared for and protected. This private member's bill will ensure that animals are treated with compassion and care by raising penalties for animal abuse, especially for repeat offenders.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 20 of the Auditor General Act it is my pleasure as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices to table the report of the Auditor General, March 2023. A copy of the report will also be provided to members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I have the five requisite copies of petitions organized by the Condo Owners Forum Society of Alberta containing 378 signatures of condo owners from all over Alberta, including Calgary and Medicine Hat, calling on the government to include condo owners in the affordability action plan, specifically the rebates on electricity and caps on natural gas.

The second one is also from the Condo Owners Forum Society of Alberta, containing 639 signatories from condo owners from all over Alberta, again calling on the Alberta government to include condo owners in the affordability action plan, specifically the rebates on electricity and caps on natural gas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has a tabling.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of yet another petition calling on the government to keep Alberta in the Canadian pension plan, this one containing approximately 900 signatures of motivated Albertans who want their government to leave their pension alone.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Mr. Jeremy Nixon, Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services, pursuant to the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities Act the Advocate for Persons with Disabilities annual report 2021-22.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were no points of order today during Oral Question Period. [interjections] Perhaps there should have been.

Prior to calling the hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board, I believe there may be a unanimous consent request coming from the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to briefly revert to introductions.

Mr. Barnes: Yes, there is. Please, Speaker, with the House's consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, all. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the entire House someone that a lot of us know very, very well. For over six years she has worked effectively and diligently. For the last six months she's worked effectively and diligently for me, and for a year and a half before that she worked effectively and diligently for myself and the MLA for Central Peace-Notley. Could I please ask Rebecca Lees to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: For the benefit of members, I also understand that there may be an additional request for unanimous consent following the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board, but we will take that as it comes.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Appropriation Act, 2023

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege to rise and move third reading of Bill 11, the Appropriation Act, 2023.

The funding amounts in Bill 11 will ensure the province has the resources to address Albertans' needs, deliver programs critical to Albertans as well as pave the way for prosperity. Mr. Speaker, Budget '23 is securing Alberta's future, securing the future for our children, grandchildren, and communities across the province.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all members in this House support this bill.

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: You don't give me much time, hon. member.

The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance has moved third reading of Bill 11. Are there any others looking to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has the floor.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government claims that the funding amount in Bill 11 will address Albertans' needs and their priorities. Let me tell you, from the standpoint of my constituents that I hear from every single day, that it will not address their needs; rather, it will again ignore their needs.

Just talk about health care. They are struggling to find family doctors. They have been made to wait in emergency waiting rooms for 10 to 15 hours. There's complete chaos in health care, and this bill will not address that. In fact, this bill, if we talk about inflation and population growth, is cutting funding to our health care system.

The second thing I would say is that, like, parents across this province, in my riding also care about schools. For the last four years people in the northeast have been asking for a new school in the northeast communities, in particular Redstone, and this bill will only fund one school for the entire city of Calgary, not a new school in northeast Calgary. It's not in Redstone. Again, it's not addressing the needs of my constituents and many Albertans across this province.

The third thing. The UCP created a cost-of-living crisis. When they came into power, they removed the cap from insurance premiums, and insurance premiums went through the roof. They have not done anything about that. People are forced to pay a 30 per cent, 40 per cent, in some cases 100 per cent increase in their premiums. They removed the cap from the utilities, and people are forced to pay double the utilities that they were paying a couple of years ago. It's not addressing the high grocery prices, which are rising way above the rate of inflation, and instead of investigating, the government still stands with those who are using this crisis to line their pockets. Clearly, this bill is not addressing the crisis facing my constituents and facing communities across this province.

I urge all members of this House and my colleagues to vote against this piece of legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to add to debate?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

Does the hon. minister want to close debate?

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do. I would like to close debate. I think the last word here is important because the last word, in fact, will bear truth to Bill 11, the Appropriation Act, 2023. Bill 11, this Appropriation Act, 2023, will strengthen health care in this province. It supports enrolment growth in our K to 12 education system. It improves public safety. It will support a fair and efficient justice system. It supports Albertans directly who are struggling with inflation, and it continues to ensure that Albertans have a massive tax advantage over every other province. Moreover, it will ensure future prosperity for Albertans. This will ensure that we are on a sustainable fiscal trajectory, that we have an economy that's growing and diversifying, generating opportunities for Albertans, and generating wealth for future governments.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 11 secures the future for this province, and I encourage every member to support it today in the House.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you to the hon. minister. And my apologies; last day on the job for me.

I am now prepared to ask the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Bill 12

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Again it's a privilege to rise and move third reading of Bill 12, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023.

Bill 12 will provide authority for government to pay from the general fund for additional costs that are not already covered or otherwise provided for during the current fiscal year. It includes $2.7 billion in expense, $500,000 in capital investment, and $292 million in financial transactions. The funding in Bill 12 will cover costs reflecting the government's commitment to save for the future, strengthen our health care system, and adapt to the changing global economy.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to point out that included in Bill 12, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023, is an investment of $753 million, which will make a total investment of $2 billion in the heritage savings trust fund. This is an investment in future generations of Albertans, and it's a privilege to serve with colleagues in the government that have the foresight to make this kind of investment.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, again I ask the hon. members to support this bill to help government move forward with funding Albertans' priorities. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. the President of Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance has moved third reading of Bill 12, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2023. Is there anyone else wishing to join in the debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker, to speak to Bill 12 at third reading. I'd like to say that the West Edmonton Mall roller coaster is now retired, the Mindbender roller coaster, and the Conservative Party's boom-bust roller coaster, that is the hallmark of Tories' rule, under the UCP is still operational.

All we're getting offered by the UCP is more of the same, as reflected in the appropriation bill and all of the budget items that were brought forward before this House. More of the same is all they offer: more reliance on oil windfalls to bail them out of their economic mismanagement. Mr. Speaker, we've been pumping oil out of the ground in this province for over 70 years, and what have we got for it? The Minister of Finance and Treasury Board has admitted in estimates that even he regrets that we failed to have a sovereign wealth fund in this province that rivals that of Norway so that we would actually have the benefit of the resource revenue that we've been pulling out of the ground for decades and decades, yet more of the same is all we get from this government, more of the same, the mind-bending roller coaster that Conservative governments are intent on offering once again to Albertans.

This NDP opposition is going to shift into drive, Mr. Speaker, shift into overdrive, guiding Alberta, as the new government, confidently into the future, a better future, a future under a new majority NDP government that will definitely end that roller coaster and smooth things out for the benefit of all.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Getson: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely proud and privileged to rise probably on what may be our last day to be in full support of this budget. I heard the member opposite talking about roller coaster rides. Well, I think the only thing that Albertans can remember is that when they ran the bus, when they were in charge of the budget, the only ride the Albertans went on was the Drop of Doom, and we sure as heck aren't going back there. So I strongly encourage everybody to support this budget, because this is the thing that sets the path for the future, not the scary, freaky-deaky Friday rides that they gave us four years ago.

The Speaker: Are there others?

I am prepared to call on the hon. the Minister of Finance to close debate should he wish to do so.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

The Speaker: Just prior to calling the hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board, I believe that there may be a request for unanimous consent coming from the chief government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Mr. Speaker, it is just that request, exactly, I guess; I really got that sentence out quite well. I would like to move for unanimous consent that we revert back to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The chief government whip is rising.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to introduce caucus staff who are joining us here in the gallery from the United Conservative Party and just extend to them on behalf of all of caucus a huge thank you for all the work that you have done over the last four years, if you have been with us for that long, or if it's been a bit shorter. Thank you for being here and everything that you have done. Our MLAs are very much appreciative of the work that you do, enhancing the work that we do here in the Chamber. I can tell you with a great deal of certainty that we can't do it without you, so thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board to move third reading of Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023.

Bill 10 Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do rise to move third reading of Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023.

Mr. Speaker, this act introduces a fiscal framework to this province. We've heard a bit about the roller coaster ride, heard a bit about the Drop of Doom here in this short afternoon. We know that we have a resource-based economy. We do have a volatile revenue structure in this province, and when we take a look historically, during times of great prosperity there has been a propensity, a tendency, to increase spending during those times of great prosperity, spending levels that simply aren't sustainable. This fiscal framework will ensure that governments have guardrails in the future to ensure that spending remains sustainable so that we can continue to deliver necessary government programs such as health care and education into the future and ensure that the next generation has the ability to receive those deliverables.

Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, also will require that all income earned by the heritage savings trust fund stays in the heritage savings trust fund. Mr. Speaker, it's worth noting again – and the member across noted it earlier – that had we as a province from day one reinvested all of the earnings from the heritage savings trust fund into the fund, instead of an $18 billion fund today we would have a $300 billion fund, a fund generating $20 billion of investment income for Albertans every year. While we all wish we had started earlier, the best day to start is today. Bill 10 creates that start.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 10 also includes the agriculture processing tax credit. This is a nonrefundable corporate tax credit that will ensure our agriculture industry and the value-added industry is incredibly competitive. We've already seen the results of that with McCain announcing a record-setting investment in southern Alberta. This is only the first announcement of many to come.

Bill 10 includes a number of other amendments that directly support Albertans and their families. Mr. Speaker, Bill 10 reflects this government's commitment to secure Alberta's future, and I encourage all members on both sides of the House to support Bill 10.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you. [interjections] Oh, it's so kind of you to clap for me. I hope you're all comfortable because I do have a long speech that I've prepared. No. I kid. I will keep it short.

I do want to just get on the record for third reading of Bill 10. I said this in second reading, in fact, that this government had such an opportunity. It is a little bit of a broken record, I think, me saying that they had such an opportunity with their session to offer some sort of, you know, tangible hope for Albertans through their legislation. And, again, what did we get? We got not a whole lot with their bills, and Bill 10 is just one example of a government really squandering their opportunity to do some transformational work.

You know, I reflected the other day. A number of my colleagues talked about the work that this government could be doing; strengthening health care, investing in housing, to name a few. The list certainly goes on. This is, of course, probably the least robust legislative agenda we've seen from this government. No surprise, of course, from a Premier with no mandate, so I do understand why we end up with bills like this one.

I do need to highlight the most troubling part of Bill 10 once more to get this on the record for all those watching. This creates the Alberta fund, which is a $1.4 billion campaign slush fund to essentially buy votes, right? What's so interesting about this is that this government's own Premier has spoken against this sort of thing in the past. It's quite interesting to all of us on this side of the House that this Premier and this Finance minister are seemingly going against their own past values and principles.

Ms Hoffman: If they had any.

Member Irwin: That could be true.

And I want Albertans watching – I'm sure there are at least two or three – to understand that the fine print in this bill, Bill 10, the fine print on the fund in particular, allows this UCP government to spend their projected surplus for the re-election before the bills come due at the end of the fiscal year. This is bad, bad fiscal management, and it's exactly how you end up squandering a resource boom.

Now – no surprise – we shouldn't be shocked from a government that's been an absolute train wreck when it comes to fiscal management. They speak a big game about fiscal management, about being fiscal conservatives, but their record shows absolutely otherwise. [interjections] In addition, as my colleague from Edmonton-Glenora points out, huge deficits.

In addition to that, this is the same UCP government – let's just maybe share a few of their highlights as we close the session. They gambled away $1.3 billion on Trump's re-election. They couldn't account for $4 billion in COVID spending, $1.6 billion in accounting errors in their first year in office. Oh, but wait, it doesn't stop there. Let's add a couple more highlights or lowlights, I perhaps should say. This is that same government, fiscal conservatives, who planned to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on a provincial police force, a provincial police force that, in fact, no one's asking for. They planned to gamble away Albertans' retirement security again, pulling out of the Canada pension plan, something that a whole lot of Albertans certainly aren't asking for. Our leader, in fact, is down in Calgary right now with a whole bunch of seniors who would argue that . . .

Mr. Schow: Point of order

Member Irwin: Oh, that's right. Good point.

The Speaker: A point of order is called.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Schow: What kind of a last day would it be without a point of order? Mentioning a member's presence or absence: we know that that's a no-no in this Chamber. It's not novice hour. The member should apologize and retract.

The Speaker: Such lawlessness, as I mentioned earlier.

Member Irwin: I retract. I apologize.

The Speaker: I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Debate Continued

Member Irwin: Thank you so much.

I'm just so grateful that those members opposite are listening to my every word today because that is a change. That is a change. But I really do appreciate it.

Okay. I'll just end with one more lowlight, and that is the incredibly troubling development from this government in that they plan to spend $20 billion to give to already profitable oil and gas corporations, friends of the Premier. In fact, for those watching, please do join our consultation at 6 p.m. tonight, albertasfuture.ca, for all the details.

With that, you know, I just want to remind Albertans that you absolutely have a choice. In just – what, 67 days? – 67 days you can vote for a government that is going to continually squander away your hard-earned tax dollars, or you can vote for competent, stable leadership in the Alberta NDP.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? I am prepared to call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent to make the bells one minute for the remainder of the afternoon.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Are there others?

I am prepared to call on the hon. Minister of Finance to close debate. The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise again and close debate on Bill 10 because I just simply have to respond to the member's false assertions, the assertion that the NDP somehow brought responsible fiscal management. Nothing could be further from the truth. We inherited, back in 2019, a government that was spending $10 billion more than comparator provinces, but what was really tragic is that we were not getting better results.

This government worked over four years, compassionately, thoughtfully, and surgically, to bring our spending in line with other provinces, to ensure our spending was sustainable. Mr. Speaker, promise made, promise kept. This fiscal year we've arrived at that level. We've eliminated the $10 billion deficit. My department provided some analysis. Had we continued on the spending trajectory of the members opposite when they were in office, we would not be projecting a $2.4 billion deficit in this upcoming fiscal year. It would be a $4 billion deficit instead of a $2.4 billion surplus. The members opposite simply did not bring responsible fiscal management.

But, Mr. Speaker, in this bill is a series of fiscal rules that will provide guardrails for future governments. With respect to surplus management the fiscal rules will prioritize debt repayment. The fiscal rules will prioritize further investment in the heritage savings trust fund. The fiscal rules will strengthen – strengthen – any further use of surplus funds.

Mr. Speaker, it's a great privilege – it is a great privilege – to rise in this House and close debate on Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, and I call on every member of this House to support this bill.

[The voice vote indicated that motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:21 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

Statement by the Speaker

30th Legislature

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to calling on the hon. the Government House Leader, let me provide some brief closing remarks. There have been significant changes around the legislative precinct in the 30th Legislature. The Annex building was torn down after 71 years, and the scaffolding was finally removed off the Legislature thanks to the hon. the Minister of Infrastructure. The Federal Building was renamed the Queen Elizabeth II Building to honour Her late Majesty. Violet King Henry Plaza was named to celebrate the legacy of this pioneer of the Alberta Black community.

On a more sombre note, the constituency of Calgary-Bhullar-McCall was changed from just Calgary-McCall in honour of the former member, Mr. Manmeet Singh Bhullar, after his tragic death. [some applause] Sure. Let's give the former Government House Leader. . . [applause] This is the only occurrence in Alberta's history of an electoral division name being changed mid-Legislature.

In the 30th Legislature there were 252 sessional days, 471 individual sittings, and 47 evening sittings that went past midnight. The Assembly sat for a total of 1,748 hours and counting, and the number of words that have been spilled on the Legislature floor is over 14,200,000. For someone reading along, the average reader, it would have taken them 40 full days to read what we had been up to. Two hundred and fifty-two sessional days have been the third most of any Legislature in Alberta's history, and there have been 5,676 sessional days in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta since its first day on March 15, 1906.

Over the span of the 30th Legislature a total of nearly 3,525 questions were asked during Oral Question Period. I understand that there were approximately a dozen answers. There were no less than 1,854 sessional papers tabled, and there were 198 bills introduced.

Hon. members, serving as the 14th Speaker of the Legislative Assembly is one of the greatest privileges of my life, and I say thank you to each and every one of you for your hard work, for your dedication to our community. If there's one thing I know about members of this Assembly, it's that each and every day every one of you, whether you're a member of the opposition or you're a member of the government: you wake up and come to work to try to do your best to make Alberta a better place to live, work, and raise a family.

Now, there's one big difference between all of us, and that's that some members believe there's one path to accomplish that, and other members believe in an entirely different path. But we all share so much in common, and that's that we have an intrinsic desire to make Alberta the best place in the entire world. I couldn't be more grateful to have served with 89 individuals who share that passion, that goal, and that desire.

From the very bottom of my heart, let me say thank you. May God bless you. May God bless Alberta. [Standing ovation]

The Government House Leader.

3:30

Mr. Schow: Thank you for those very kind words, Mr. Speaker. It's been an honour to serve in this Chamber with you as Speaker. Thank you for your service.

There is something to be said about having the last word, and I have that distinct pleasure. As we conclude the 2023 spring sitting today, I want to thank all of you, all of you members, for your time and your service to your communities, to the constituents of Alberta, and for your hard work. I also want to thank your families. I know as a husband and a father I could not do this job without the support of my family, and I know many members in this Chamber are in the exact same position. I'm grateful for them. Please pass along my gratitude.

I know that there is a campaign that will be taking our attention over the next couple of months, and it will no doubt be a very tired summer. But I want to wish everyone here the best. For those of you who are retiring, I want to thank you for your service from the bottom of my heart and for the hard work and dedication you provided to this House and to your constituents. It's not every day you get to spend your time here at the Alberta Legislature, though it may seem like we are here every day, making things for Alberta better.

I also want to thank the Official Opposition, in particular the Opposition House Leader, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods – it has been an honour to work with her and continue the service of Albertans – for their work and all your work in this session. We may not agree on a lot, but we can all agree that when we come here, we're here in the best interest of Albertans and our constituents.

Another group that needs to be thanked is the tireless LAO staff who work around the clock, literally in some cases, to support MLAs both in and out of the House. I want to thank the security staff, the sheriffs, Parliamentary Counsel, broadcast services, Hansard staff, and there are many, many others. I wouldn't be able to mention all in this statement. I am very grateful for you, and on behalf of the government we express our gratitude for helping us in this part of democracy.

Finally, I want to end by saying that it has been an honour to serve as the House leader in my capacity on the government side. With that, I wish to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Government Motion 25 the business of the 2023 spring sitting is now concluded.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until October 2023.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:32 p.m. pursuant to Government Motion 25]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 4th Session (2022-2023)

Activity to Thursday, March 23, 2023

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.
