Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I commented in this House earlier, the two deputy CMOH have resigned. You know, when asked that question, I did provide the input on that. I understand that they still are on the payroll although they may have actually taken vacation to get to the end of it, which may have caused the confusion in my answer yesterday. The point is that we are going to fill those positions. We have a new CMOH. He is active in his role right now. We are ensuring he has the resources that he needs to do his job, and we'll continue to support Albertans through this challenging time.

Nechi Institute

Ms Sigurdson: Part of the UCP's appalling record on Indigenous issues is their treatment of the Nechi Institute. Since 1974 Nechi has trained mental health and addictions counsellors with an Indigenous perspective. An estimated 15,000 people have been trained at Nechi and gone on to do critical counselling work in their communities. But in 2019 the UCP evicted the Nechi Institute from their premises at Poundmaker's Lodge. Last month the UCP evicted Nechi from trailers they had set up on the grounds of Poundmaker's. Why is the UCP so determined to shut down the Nechi Institute and their vital work?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure has risen.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We have been working collaboratively with the Nechi Institute and the Poundmaker's Lodge to try to find a peaceful resolution to this challenge. We did have to send them a letter. The trailers that they were in were dilapidated and need work, and the Poundmaker's Lodge was asking us if we could find a way to access the site for ground-penetrating radar to look for possible sites of people that were buried there. We have been ongoing working with them. We have sent them a letter. We have yet to hear back from them, but it is my understanding that they co-operatively were moving to a new site, and we're continuing to work with them.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the Nechi Institute executive director, Marilyn Buffalo, is with us here today and given that in his October eviction letter to her the Minister of Infrastructure threatens to fence off and dismantle Nechi's trailers and even potentially arrest and criminally charge Nechi Institute staff, why did the Minister of Infrastructure make these threats towards Indigenous Albertans who were training their peers to do important mental health and addictions work in communities which are disproportionately affected by the drug-poisoning crisis in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're very thankful for the work that the Nechi Institute has done, and it is my understanding that after that letter was sent on November 11, 2022, the Nechi voluntarily vacated that site. We have sent them a further letter, and we have asked if they need help with further work on accommodations. That offer still stands. We are waiting to hear an official response. We continue to hope to work with them and provide them the help that we can to help them into a new site.

Thank you very much.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that when the UCP evicted Nechi from Poundmaker's buildings, the Minister of Indigenous Relations promised that he would find them a new location – in fact, almost exactly three years ago, on December 3, the minister told this house, and I quote: we will find other space for the Nechi Institute. End of quote. Three years have passed, and the Nechi Institute is homeless. Why did the minister break his word in this House to Marilyn Buffalo and to the Nechi Institute?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, we have sent a letter still reaffirming that promise to help them find a location and to provide them new trailers to help them continue to do that work. We are at this time still waiting for an official response to continue that work with them. We thank them for the co-operation that they have shown by voluntarily vacating the site so that we can do the essential work that we need to do, the ground-penetrating radar, to find if there are any burial sites there. We continue to wait for their response.

Thank you very much. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

High School Construction Project in North Calgary

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Education is an important subject for all Albertans. As Calgary's population continues to grow, more students are entering into the education system, thereby increasing demand for new schools. I am happy that construction for a north Calgary high school is under way, making members of my community very happy and excited. However, I am concerned that the current inflationary environment may have impacted this project. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you please provide an overall update on the north Calgary high school project?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As the member said, the north Calgary high school is currently under construction and is actually over the halfway point in that process. Right now construction of the building envelope is under way, HVAC and sprinkler installation is ongoing, the interior framing is under construction, and other interior finishes are on track as well. As a former contractor and project manager I understand the member's concern about inflationary impacts on projects, and I would like to say that this is something that has always been monitored by the department of infrastructure and accounted for throughout the building process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that rising inflation is an ongoing concern in Canada and a significant issue in Alberta as well and given that Alberta is also experiencing supply chain problems and further given that Alberta is currently going through labour shortages, to the same minister: can you please provide an update on the cost of the north Calgary high school project?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The budget for this project is $70.5 million, which, on top of providing a new school, has provided about 400 construction and construction-related jobs. Each individual infrastructure project in Alberta varies in terms of supply chain impact, which is a global problem. However, Alberta Infrastructure continually monitors inflation and cost-escalation trends to ensure that anticipated cost escalations are calculated into our project budget right from the planning stage and all the way through construction. Project teams, contractors, consultants, and suppliers are also actively working to mitigate risk of delayed structures, schedules, and cost implications.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that detailed answer. Given that the Calgary board of education is one of the busiest and largest school boards in western Canada and given that high schools near north Calgary are already reaching capacity while more students are continuing to enrol and further given that parents in Calgary-North are eager to send their kids to this new high school, can the Minister of Infrastructure please give an update to this House on when parents and students can expect the grand opening for the north Calgary high school? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. One thing I can assure the members down there on that corner of the Assembly is that the hon. Member for Calgary-North listened intently while you asked questions. Perhaps you would show him the same courtesy.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of my mandate is to work closely with the Minister of Education to build more schools in our province, and that is exactly what we're doing. The Calgary north high school will be able to accommodate up to 1,800 students. We are expecting to see construction finished during the summer of 2023, when it will be handed over to the school district to prepare for the students' arrival at the start of the '23-24 school year. Our government is focused on creating jobs, providing the facilities and spaces communities need, and ensuring that all Albertans have access to quality education. This project accomplishes that goal.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Police Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It is a privilege for me to rise today and introduce the first reading of Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022.

Alberta is a much different place than it was in 1988, when the current Police Act came into being. This is the first major update of the Police Act in over 34 years. This act would improve accountability and public confidence in the police by establishing an independent commission to handle complaints against police, creating new governance bodies that will give communities greater say in setting policies, priorities, performance targets, building police services that better understand their diverse communities and are more responsive to their distinct needs. I encourage members on both sides of this House to support this legislation, and I ask that we move first reading of Bill 6.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Bill 203
Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties)
Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022.

The purpose of this bill is to improve traffic safety by reducing unsafe, excessive speeding and stunt driving. Mr. Speaker, I look forward to discussing this bill with my colleagues and encourage all members in this House to support Bill 203.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton-Valley-Devon.

Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022.

In 2017 I introduced the private member's Bill 210, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2017. It was patterned after an Amber Alert, which enabled police to issue a notice when a senior or adult with a cognitive impairment went missing. The Assembly passed the bill. The bill received royal assent but was never proclaimed due to the powers it could grant police in disclosing information not collected in accordance with the Missing Persons Act. Private member's Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, will address the concerns by working within the MPA and amending the disclosure section to make clear that silver alerts do not contravene the Missing Persons Act and therefore allow police to be able to access a silver alert to help find a missing senior.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings?

Seeing none, I do have a tabling. I rise to table six copies of a letter from the Member for Peace River requesting early consideration of Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022.

Statement by the Speaker

Private Members' Public Bills

The Speaker: However, members, before we proceed to the remaining items of the Routine, I have a matter to address with the Assembly that has to do with the tabling that I just made. The Member for Peace River has requested that the private member's bill that he's sponsoring, Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022, be granted early consideration and be called in Committee of the Whole on Monday, December 12, 2022. I have just tabled this letter.

Since this type of request has not occurred for some time, in particular during the 30th Legislature, I would like to speak a little bit about what the request entails and what past Speakers have said about such requests for early consideration. Currently Bill 202 is on the Order Paper with a due date of day 12 of session, which equates to Monday, December 19, 2022. The member's request is that Bill 202 be considered in Committee of the Whole this coming Monday, December 12. There is a protocol in place, that has existed since 1997, that a member may request early consideration on their bill so long as it has passed the previous bill stage. In this case, that has occurred. Bill 202 received second reading this past Monday, December 5.

The other aspect of the protocol is that the bill for which early consideration has been granted must not bump another private member's bill where debate has been adjourned, the committee has not completed the work on a bill, or a bill is due according to the rules. Currently there are no other bills that fall into any of these categories. Accordingly, following the practices and precedents of this Assembly, Bill 202 will be first up for consideration in Committee of the Whole on Monday under private members' bills.

I'd like to make a few remarks regarding early consideration of private members' bills. My predecessors repeatedly called upon House leadership to review the procedure for early consideration. This has not happened, and I'm mindful that the early consideration process might jeopardize the ability of private members' bills to proceed through the legislative process as expeditiously as possible. Therefore, I renew previous calls of Speakers, including Speaker Wanner, Speaker Zwozdesky, and Speaker Kowalski, for such a procedure that ensures that the consideration of private members' bills be as fair as possible for all private members.

For additional information – and I'm sure you'll be reading up on it this weekend – on the matter of early consideration of private members' bills I refer you to Speakers' statements from December 3, 2014; November 18, 2013; March 15, 2012; November 23, 2009; November 27, 2001; and lastly, February 11, 1997.

That brings us to Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move second reading of Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

Bill 2 is a priority for Alberta's government as it recognizes the affordability crisis facing Albertans and enables us to provide additional support. Many families are struggling with rising grocery bills, power bills, mortgage payments. Seniors are facing tough choices about whether to fill their prescriptions or buy fuel for their cars. Rising inflation impacts everyone, especially those living on fixed incomes or facing higher costs such as families, Albertans with disabilities, or those out of work.

Our government has moved quickly to put our affordability action plan into motion, but legislative changes are needed to enable us to provide quick and effective supports. It is my privilege to present this bill and to move it through second reading in the House. If passed, these legislative amendments will enable us to deliver affordability relief to all Albertans struggling under the burden of increased costs and crippling inflation. Through Bill 2 our government will deliver critical affordability measures that are designed to provide both broad-based support and targeted relief across the province. Most significantly, this legislation makes necessary changes that will enable our government to deliver upcoming targeted relief to millions of Albertans.

Bill 2 will amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act to enable us to deliver six nontaxable monthly payments of $100 to seniors, families for each child under 18, and vulnerable Albertans receiving AISH, PDD, and income support. We wanted to ensure that all low- and middle-income families received the support. Approximately 80 per cent of families with children will be eligible based on the $180,000 income threshold, which is the same threshold we use for child care subsidies. Legislating this program ensures that the payments are nontaxable and do not affect other benefits. Passage of this bill is a critical and necessary step to enable these payments early in the new year. We remain committed to the legislative process, and more details will be outlined through regulation if the legislation passes. We look forward to updating Albertans as quickly as possible.

Through this legislation we will also index both personal income tax and the Alberta child and family benefit. The Alberta Personal Income Tax Act will be amended to resume indexation of nonrefundable tax credits and tax bracket thresholds in the personal income tax system, retroactive to 2022. With this change, many Albertans will owe less tax or receive a higher refund come tax time. They will also benefit from lower tax withholdings on their paycheques next year. The Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, will also index the Alberta child and family benefit program to inflation, increasing quarterly benefits to low-income Alberta families by 6 per cent.

This legislation will also provide temporary price protection on electricity costs through the newly named regulated rate option stability act. Right now approximately 800,000 Alberta homes, farms, and small businesses purchase electricity through the regulated rate option, or RRO. They are facing record-high electricity rates this winter. To protect them from price spikes, we will set a temporary price ceiling of 13 and a half cents per kilowatt hour, lasting from January through to the end of March. For January, February, and March any electricity costs above the 13 and a half cent ceiling will be deferred until and spread over lower price months. Other changes to the act will ensure this price protection is provided as fairly as possible, including for consumers served by rural electrification associations and for municipalities not regulated by the AUC. The city of Medicine Hat is included as well to make sure that its residents also benefit from this price stabilization.

To ensure providers can shoulder any added costs, the government will offer no-interest loans to RRO providers needing to finance the deferrals created by the price ceiling. Providers will pay back the loans through future RRO rates from April 1 to December 31, 2024. This measure is temporary and necessary. It will provide price protection for consumers when RRO rates are expected to be the highest. This price ceiling combined with the electricity and natural gas rebates will provide real support for millions of people and businesses facing high utility costs.

The high cost of fuel impacts all of us. That's why we will also amend the Fuel Tax Act to expand fuel tax relief and save Albertans money every time they fill up at the pump. To provide immediate help, we will implement a temporary suspension of the fuel tax on gasoline and diesel from January through to the end of June 2023. These legislative changes will enable us to pause the full 13 cent fuel tax for the next six months and make the fuel tax relief program permanent, with ongoing reduced fuel taxes during periods of high oil prices. Details on oil price thresholds and methods for calculation will be outlined in the regulation.

Mr. Speaker, with Bill 2 we are taking decisive action to enable broad-based relief that helps millions of individuals, families, farms, and small businesses during this affordability crisis. Measures we have taken in the past to pay down provincial debt and put our fiscal house in order made it possible for our government to be there now to support Albertans when and where they need it the most. This legislation appropriately balances the need to provide both broad-based relief and targeted support for those most impacted by soaring costs. Alberta's affordability action plan is the largest of its kind in Canada. If passed, this legislation will ensure that desperately needed financial support is delivered quickly and effectively.

I hereby move second reading of Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Other hon. members looking to speak to Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, at second reading? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak at second reading of Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. I'm thankful for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 2. Much of what's in this bill has already been announced.

You know, before I get into my comments about the specifics of the bill, I would just like to say something about the rollout of this piece of legislation. This is perhaps for everybody in this Chamber to hear and understand. This particular piece of legislation touches the lives of a lot of Albertans that perhaps don't understand what's being rolled out or what's being announced by the government. What that does, if there isn't clarity in answers or a place for people to go to get more information immediately when something is announced: it creates fear and uncertainty. Because this piece of legislation will touch tens of... [interjection] Excuse me? Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the minister was saying, but okay.

Anyway, where I was going with this is that because this piece of legislation touches the lives of disabled Albertans, many of which struggle to understand what this piece of legislation structurally means to them, there's a lot of panic and fear. So my suggestion is just, in future rollouts that we know are going to impact the lives of people that are particularly vulnerable and maybe struggle to understand, that there be some clarity, that there be more clarity, and that there be some thoughtful process involved to understand that – you know, we're just going to have to take more care to explain things. I know my office has just been bombarded with: "When is the money coming? When will it go up? Am I eligible?" It's just fear, and it's fear from a lot of very desperate people.

I'm going to move on to my comments. What's new in this bill should be deeply concerning to Albertans. Much like the Premier's signature sovereignty act, that was written in crayon, it looks like this legislation didn't get the benefit of due diligence, that or this government is actually intent on delivering the most poorly designed plan on utilities that this province has ever seen.

In this legislation the UCP government set a temporary ceiling on the price of electricity for customers on the regulated rate option. That rate is set at 13.5 cents per kilowatt hour, nearly twice as high as the hard cap under the previous NDP government.

That egregious doubling of the ceiling is actually not the worst part of the bill. For reasons passing understanding, this government is forcing RRO customers into a utility payday lending scheme. Folks on the RRO get three months of temporary relief but then end up paying more over the next 19 months to pay off the loan. These loans, let us be clear, could come with interest.

We have a bit of a scheme here, but this scheme is very poorly designed. Everyone on the RRO is meant to be paying back these loans through higher utility rates over the next 19 months, but after March this government has created a huge economic incentive for people to leave the regulated rate option. Albertans with good credit who can sign up for the market price option will leave the RRO. Who are those people with poor credit? They're very vulnerable people, usually. Hence, the pool of Albertans paying back the loan will shrink, forcing utility prices higher and higher. This is a terribly designed scheme, what some have called a reverse Ponzi scheme, that will lead to disaster.

University of Calgary economist Blake Shaffer, perhaps this province's leading expert on the electricity market, has called this design feature of this scheme "a death spiral." Now, members opposite heckling may think they know more. They do not. This is someone that has studied this and is an expert, and I think that we need to listen to the experts, not to conspiracy theorists and not to hecklers. The UCP utility payday lending scheme is a trap. It will trap Albertans who can't get off the RRO into paying even higher utility costs. In other words, there will be some Albertans left holding the bag, a bag full of toxic loans, paid back with higher and higher utility rates.

It's been less than 24 hours since this legislation was introduced, and already we can see how deeply flawed it is. It looks like the same level of due diligence and careful thought that went into the job-killing sovereignty act, and that's a pretty low bar. Albertans deserve better. They deserve much better. Instead of delivering a utility payday lending scheme that's designed to fail, the government should get back to basics. We're in an affordability crisis. The solution is simple. In the short term we need a real program that protects Albertans from these price spikes, and in the longer term we need a real solution to drive down those prices.

We're near the end of this government's mandate, yet they've given next to no thought on a real, long-term plan on electricity. The only thought they've got is a reverse Ponzi scheme or, put another way, a utility payday lending scheme that really is designed to fail.

Mr. Speaker, let me move on from this payday lending debacle. There are other things that are missing from this bill that should be highlighted: absolutely no action on sky-high grocery items; absolutely no action on sky-high auto insurance rates, rates that this government knows are set to jump again.

In the view of the opposition, it's time for this government to start listening to Albertans, to their needs. Albertans are under enormous financial pressure right now. The health care system is on the brink. Kids can't get good access to hospitals when they need them, but the priority of this government and its focus and its energy is entirely on the sovereignty act, an act that two-thirds of Albertans don't want. Listen to that: two-thirds of Albertans do not want the sovereignty act. Investors tell us that it will drive away investment in this province, and still government members think they know better. It's time for this government to get their priorities straight and to focus on what really matters.

Let me conclude and reflect on one of the cruelest decisions made by this government, and by that I mean the decision to stop indexing AISH and other critical benefit programs to inflation. Let me be clear. For years this government weaponized inflation to punish the most vulnerable in our society. It was a heartless decision, and it did real harm.

The UCP government can't undo the suffering people experienced for years, but perhaps they could have decided on a go-forward basis to reverse their cruel cuts. Unfortunately, this legislation also fails people on AISH. The UCP government could have just adjusted payments for all of the years that it was frozen, but they chose a different path. Even after the changes in this act, an AISH recipient will still be $3,000 worse off than with the previous NDP government, had we remained in power. They lost three years.

The Premier has a $12 billion surplus, a record $28 billion in natural resource revenues. There's apparently money to set up an Alberta revenue agency at a cost of $500 million per year and another 5,000 civil servants, a 20 per cent increase in that workforce. There's money for an Alberta provincial police force at a cost of billions, but there's not enough money to undo the egregious harm that they've done to people on AISH, some of the most vulnerable people in our society.

Now, I want to stop and tell you that I remember in 2019, when the deindexation – we found it in the omnibus piece of legislation, and we warned that it would be a problem. Then for the next three years, Mr. Speaker, we continued to warn that it was a problem and that people were suffering. We warned at that time that this would increase poverty, the stress and the cost of poverty. Make no mistake: there is a massive cost to poverty; there is a massive cost to government systems when people fall further into poverty. We said: this is going to harm people.

And what do we see now, three years later? Certainly, we have had COVID and inflation and deindexation, and what we see is enormous pressure on Alberta food banks, enormous pressure all over the place. I represent a community that is fairly wealthy on the whole, St. Albert, and even their food bank is breaking records. The pressure is all over the province. I'm sorry, but the food bank plan announced by the minister is insufficient. It talks about matching funding over three years – let me be clear: there is an election in six months – and that is insufficient to fund the hole, really, that food banks are experiencing as a direct result of benefits being deindexed. We warned that homelessness would increase, and what do you know? It has skyrocketed. It has skyrocketed all over the province. Shelters are full. Shelters are turning people away regularly. That is a problem.

Still, these are the things that we warned about when these benefits were deindexed, and since that time I am quite sure that many members in this House have received e-mails from all kinds of people talking about the struggle that they've had with AISH, trying to manage on AISH over the last three years. I know that I'm just completely overwhelmed with phone calls and e-mails and letters, handwritten letters sometimes, from people telling me their stories, telling me their stories that they live in their car, that they lost their apartment, that they live in their vehicle with their daughter. I've heard of people in unsafe situations renting an apartment with an abusive spouse: they have no funds to leave; they have nothing; they can barely afford food. People that were using the food bank before are now going twice as often, and they're eating unhealthy food. They are getting sick in many cases because of the lack of nutrition in their diet.

And it's not just the payments that people are getting or the income benefits; it is so many other things in AISH that are not going to be fixed with this piece of legislation. You know, I have a number of questions that, when we get to that stage of debate, I will ask, but I'm just so alarmed by the lack of thought that goes into this government's legislation.

For example – here's just one little, tiny example – they talk about reindexing benefits for AISH, which is assured income for the severely handicapped, and PDD, which is persons with developmental disabilities. Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you know this, that most if not all people that receive PDD supports are on AISH. So what does that mean? Did you intend for them to get this benefit twice? Did you intend for the amount being indexed to double? I don't know. How many people receive PDD support that aren't on AISH? Tell me. I don't understand that. PDD is not a direct payment support to Albertans. PDD pays for staff to support people with disabilities, so I'm not quite sure what this act intends to do.

There is so much that has gone on over the last three years. You know, I got a little emotional yesterday when I heard an answer from the minister about AISH, and the reason that I got upset is because for the last three years that is what I've spent my time doing, listening to people and listening to the struggle. To hear this government really boast about what they're doing and how they're helping people and helping the most vulnerable – you did the bare minimum. Let's be clear. You did the bare minimum. You started indexing from here on. What they need is for you to make up that difference, and that isn't even going to cut it because they have fallen further into poverty over the last three years.

Mr. Speaker, you know, I want to talk about one other program that is in this piece of legislation.

Can I get a time check, Mr. Speaker?

3:10

The Acting Speaker: About seven minutes.

Ms Renaud: Okay. Thank you.

One of the other benefit programs that is mentioned in this piece of legislation is income support. As you know, income support is very much like AISH except it is an income replacement for people. There are two strains of income support; there's barriers to employment, and there's expected to work.

I'm going to talk about barriers to employment. People that are receiving income support, barriers to employment, very often have chronic illnesses. Very often they have disabilities, and they're just not on AISH yet, or they've been denied AISH benefits. Very often these are people with disabilities and very serious concerns or issues that prevent them from financially supporting themselves.

Now, this government indexed those benefits, and it went up a little bit. It's still under $900 a month. Can you imagine trying to live on $900 a month, that you demonstrably have problems working so you need income replacement, that you get income support and it's $900 a month? Now, at one time people in Alberta had the ability to apply for supplemental benefits to income support. There was a whole host of them. A couple of them in particular that I'll talk about are accommodation or rental support. There was some extra money to help with rent. As you can imagine, people can't live on $900 a month, so there was this extra $300 benefit that people could apply for to help with rent, and that would help quite a bit.

But this government, Mr. Speaker, has systematically kicked people off that benefit. Well over a thousand people lost that benefit. I know directly of probably, like, at least 15 or 20 people that lost their housing because of the loss of that supplemental benefit. Then, to make things worse, when they would appeal this decision – so they would literally go to the Appeals Secretariat to appeal the decision that this government made to reduce income support, get rid of accommodation support, that $300. They would appeal it, but here's the rule: they had to have an address, they had to have a home to be able to appeal that decision. But these guys are the heroes of red tape reduction. That's just one example of the things that have happened over the last three years.

The other one is medical transportation. People literally lost a little bit – it was about $100 that people on income support lost for medical transportation. Now, keep in mind that these are people with chronic illnesses, diseases, disabilities. Clearly, they are unable to work because they're receiving this benefit. Nobody wants to live on $900 a month on income support if they can help it. They lost medical transportation. You know who it harmed? People in rural communities and suburban communities. They can no longer afford to get an Uber or a taxi to get to the Cross or to get to their doctor or to get to a program because there isn't very good regional transportation. Those are the people that were harmed.

I received letters and calls from people all over the place, primarily Red Deer county, weirdly enough, and the Bonnyville area. People are struggling not just because these benefits were deindexed but because of the systematic withdrawal of benefits for people that are extremely vulnerable and people that have disabilities. And then this government has the gall to say: we're stepping up; we're helping. You're vote buying. But you haven't done enough. You haven't made whole these people that suffered for over three years, that lost all kinds of things. All kinds of things. So I have a really hard time being thankful for this because this isn't really progress; this is doing the bare minimum. These folks have struggled.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot be the only constituency office that receives this kind of correspondence. I know because I'm copied on many of the e-mails that go to your offices. Every single constituency has people with disabilities and has people that are low income and has people that are vulnerable and has low-income seniors. It's not enough. Do you know how much the low-income seniors' benefit went up thanks to this bill? Do you know? Did you read it? Seventeen dollars. Seventeen dollars for low-income seniors. That's what it went up. So you have a $13 billion surplus, and low-income seniors in Alberta get $17 extra a month. That's not good enough. That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing that I will ask in future debate – there are so many things that are unknown. Now we have indexed certain benefits, but what about all the thresholds, then? Okay. So what about if someone needs legal aid? Have you changed those thresholds? Have you thought about that? Is there any plan whatsoever? My experience with this government is that they do things, they make bad decisions, and they maybe consult after the fact, if you're lucky. Rarely do they correct the mistakes properly, and then they continue.

Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere hope that through debate on this bill this government will realize, "Maybe we didn't get it right; maybe we didn't fix enough; maybe we didn't go far enough," and they will entertain some amendments that will actually improve life for people in Alberta that are vulnerable, that are low income, or that are disabled, because what is in this bill is not enough. It doesn't undo the years of damage.

You know, I want to say one other thing about this. It is one thing to index AISH, but all of these other things have happened over the last three years specifically to AISH recipients and income support recipients. They deindexed, and then there was a systematic attack, so removing the supplementals, making the application process even more difficult for people to apply for AISH and income support. Now you have to do it online. You don't even know how many calls I get from people way up north that have poor connections, don't have computers, and don't even have the ability to go find someone to help them to apply for benefits online, so they're calling my office. There's no access for people. It's just shocking to me.

The application process for AISH: there is no clear timeline for how long things are taking. There is no benchmark where we can say to the ministry: are you meeting your targets?

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to add to debate this afternoon? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, Albertans are facing an affordability crisis right now, and that's why I am proud to support Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. The UCP government has already announced affordability measures, but these, in conjunction with Bill 2, will undeniably help Albertans during this difficult time.

The provincial NDP has supported the excessive federal spending that we've seen from the Trudeau government. The unnecessary, inflationary carbon tax has made things substantially worse for everyone as well. You know, Mr. Speaker, even though we can't repeal Justin Trudeau's carbon tax and we can't convince the NDP to lobby their ally Jagmeet Singh to support their affordability measure, there are things we can do in a timely and targeted manner. Through Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, we will be able to help the most vulnerable and make life more affordable.

Unlike the NDP, who couldn't make up their mind when they opposed the UCP government's cut of the fuel tax in April and then supported it in September, our government has acted decisively to cut the fuel tax by 13.6 cents per litre on every litre of gas and diesel. Bill 2 acts to authorize the current program retroactive to April 1, 2022, and extends it to June 30, 2023, regardless of oil prices.

With Bill 2 our government will support the most vulnerable by reindexing AISH, PDD, income support, the seniors' benefit, and the Alberta child benefit. For families with children under 18, seniors aged 65 and up, and families with an income below $180,000, they will be provided a targeted $600 by our government. We know that many of these families live on a fixed income, so these payments will be structured as refundable tax credits, making them nontaxable and making sure 100 per cent of these supports go to the Albertans that need them the most.

You know, Mr. Speaker, my mom is a senior, and, as many Albertans do, I help her manage her finances. I can see how she is struggling and is being forced to tighten her belt. But what I see in our measures here is not only seniors' benefits being reindexed, but I also see an extra $100 a month for her for six months. I also see her electricity bill having rebates attached to it, lowering her monthly payments for her electricity. That's important for seniors. That's important for seniors, and it's a heck of a lot more than the base $17 that the Member for St. Albert seems to think is a big nothing burger.

You know what else? As a mom I raised two boys, and I can tell you first-hand that when finances get tight, the first thing you do is decide whether or not your child is going to be able to play soccer or go to dance lessons, and it's an incredibly hard decision as a parent to have to make a decision like that. Right now, after everything that kids have been through in the pandemic, they need activities, really, more now than ever. These are tough decisions. So that's why we're going to help parents with children. A hundred dollars a month makes the difference between being able to put your child in soccer or not in lots of cases. Given our strong provincial financial position I strongly believe that it's our responsibility to support Albertans and families who are struggling to pay their bills, and I'm really happy to see our government doing this.

Mr. Speaker, the use of food banks has also gone up 73 per cent between March 2019 and March 2022, which is why our government will provide targeted support to those in need, and that's also why we're funding food banks. You know, the Member for St. Albert seems to think that $20 million is insufficient. I'm going to point something out: this is the first time ever that food banks have received funding from the government of Alberta. That is incredibly important. It's the first time, and it never happened during the NDP government, I'll point out. [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the call.

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, 180,000 lost jobs, and they think nobody needed the food bank while they were in government? Give me a break.

You know what else we're going to do? We're going to support those that rely on transit, and we're going to provide additional funding for low-income transit programs.

Mr. Speaker, our government understands that heating and powering your home when it's minus 40 outside is not optional; it's pretty much a necessity. But it can also be incredibly expensive, which is why under Bill 2 we expand the electricity rebate for four months and provide an additional $200 to over 1.9 million homes, farms, and businesses. You know what else happens in the wintertime? Not only is it cold, but it's dark. You kind of use a little more electricity.

At any rate, I want to talk here at this point, too, about some comments, again made by the Member for St. Albert. She talked about how this program is so poorly designed. Well, let me tell you a little bit about a poorly designed electricity program. It happened during the NDP government when they accelerated the removal of coal from generation, which, of course, increased the price of electricity. And then what did they do? Oh, that's right. They put a price cap on to hide, to cover up the fact that they'd raised the prices over the acceleration of coming off coal. And then what did they do? Oh, that's right. They pushed the costs forward onto ratepayers through the Balancing Pool. It was a giant cover-up.

This brings the total relief for our electricity program to $500. We'll have a three-month price ceiling of 13 and a half cents per kilowatt hour, and it'll also be set on the RRO for consumers. The government of Alberta will provide zero per cent interest loans to providers to support deferrals. Zero per cent. I think the Member for St. Albert referred to it as some sort of Ponzi scheme – I don't know – interest rate loans. [interjection] Interest-free loans, yeah. Okay.

Furthermore, the natural gas rebate program for when natural gas hits over six and a half dollars is going to be extended indefinitely because we believe that the owners of the resource, which is the people of Alberta, should benefit when our prices are increasing for that particular commodity.

Mr. Speaker, with Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, our government will deliver on our promise to reindex personal income taxes retroactively to the 2022 tax year. As an aside, I'm just going to remind this Chamber that we had no tax brackets and therefore no tax bracket creep until the NDP came along and eliminated the flat tax.

At any rate, reindexing personal income taxes means that 80,000 to 95,000 more Albertans will pay zero personal income tax by 2023. This is in addition to the current 1.3 million tax filers that already pay zero. And you know what, Mr. Speaker? That's actually pretty good news for many seniors and also for young people who are just starting out.

Mr. Speaker, low-income Albertans will also be able to take advantage of Alberta's rent supplement program and expanded temporary rent assistance benefit and the Alberta adult health benefit.

Under Budget 2022 we're also supporting students, Mr. Speaker. Postsecondary students will have $980 million provided for student loans, $108 million in scholarships, and $60 million in grants. Through the new beginnings bursary low-income Albertans will also have access to $15 million in funding over three years and a further 3 and a half million dollars that was just recently announced.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the affordability measures that have been addressed by Budget 2022. I strongly urge my colleagues as well as the members across to support this bill, that will act to support Albertans in this time of need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Others wishing to speak to the matter? I see the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to speak to Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. Before I begin, I just want to thank the countless residents of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain that have reached out to me with their suggestions as well as for the great work that I know many of my caucus colleagues and the minister have done to put this important piece of legislation forward.

As an MLA my job is to ensure that my constituency of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain and the people that live there, the people that call that area home, are looked after. This has always been and will continue to be my main priority and the greatest privilege of my short elected life. With that said, it is my absolute pleasure to speak to this bill as I know that this substantial package of targeted measures will provide some relief and much-needed support to my constituents and countless other Albertans.

Alberta's economy has recovered strongly, but we understand that Albertans are still struggling to heat their homes, fill their cars, and feed their families. We hear you, and we want to help. That's why addressing this inflation and affordability crisis was put at the top of our government's agenda, ultimately resulting in this critical piece of legislation. As we continue to grapple with the inflation and affordability crisis, this act will help Albertans manage these difficult times while we maintain fiscal responsibility and economic stability. Every decision our government makes from now until this crisis is over will balance affordability for Albertans with the need for continued balanced budgets and fiscal responsibility. The Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act provides important legislative changes necessary for our government to take decisive action and deliver timely and effective support for Albertans.

Now, under this legislation families across Alberta with dependent children under 18 will receive $100 instalments for six months for each child. As the MLA for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain and having one of the youngest average ages of any provincial riding in the province, I know this is going to be a massive help for many of the families that live in my riding. According to Trevor Tombe, an economics professor and fellow at the School of Public Policy at the University of Calgary, families have been affected even more by inflation. Those with kids have faced higher costs than those without.

I think any of the parents here would attest to that. It's undeniable that having another mouth to feed without another stream of income makes things much more expensive. Now, that said, this measure proves to be imperative to many of the families that live in my area.

Furthermore, some of the most valued yet most vulnerable members of our society continue to be our seniors. Seniors have always been integral pillars in our communities and in our families. Unfortunately, this demographic is also increasingly vulnerable to situations regarding inflation and affordability. This is one of the greatest sources of correspondence and phone calls and e-mails that I receive from residents in my area. That said, I'm extremely pleased to see that under this relief package recipients of the Alberta seniors' benefit will also see an increase in their January cheques in addition to receiving $100 instalments each month for the next six months. Our seniors have spent decades making our communities what they are today, and I'm proud to stand behind this bill so that we may take care of our seniors as they have spent their lives taking care of us and have helped build our communities for many decades.

Now, for other Albertans, relief through this legislation is going to be seen at the pumps and on the energy bills. Legislative amendments will suspend the fuel tax in its entirety for six months while extending rebate programs for electricity and natural gas. By saving 13 cents per litre at the pumps and receiving additional electricity rebates of $200 per home between January and April, I am confident that my constituents and all Albertans will be better equipped to weather the storm.

For our province's most vulnerable, recipients of PDD, AISH, and income support will receive cash instalments, and they can rest easier knowing that those benefits will now be reindexed. Again, I just want to give kudos to the rest of my caucus colleagues, especially the minister, for ensuring that this change took place. For those who are frustrated seeing their pay increases make negligible impacts in their budget, this legislation will reindex provincial tax brackets to inflation retroactive to the 2022 tax year and ensure that you will not be penalized for moving up a bracket.

If the members opposite choose to vote against this bill, I would consider that to be a direct attack on Albertans and many of the families that they would represent. Alberta's inflation was 6.8 per cent in October, up 6.2 per cent in September, a bump that is likely due to increases in the price of gas, electricity, and food. On a year-by-year basis Albertans paid 6.8 per cent more in October of 2022 for the goods and services over the same period a year ago. Albertans are calling for help, and our government is there to listen. This bill will allow us to follow through on our commitment to answer that call. The Leader of the Official Opposition has warned Albertans to take caution when it comes to our government's substantial package of targeted inflation relief measures. Now, personally, I would be petrified of any party or government that is not willing to offer the same level of relief or support during this type of crisis. Our residents are demanding this type of support.

As we work together to manage these trying times, our goal as Alberta's government is to increase affordability. The Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, does exactly that, Mr. Speaker. That is why I support Bill 2, so that the hard-working families and individuals across this province can go back to living a more affordable life. I encourage all members in this Chamber to do the same and support this very important legislation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With that, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

[Debate adjourned December 7: Mr. Deol speaking]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows has eight minutes left if he wishes to use it.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the floor.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, and thank you to my colleague from Edmonton-Meadows for his remarks earlier on this legislation. It's my pleasure to take a few minutes to engage in it today as well. As we are here today to debate the property rights amendment act, Bill 3, 2022, I want to begin by saying that I appreciate that this bill went through a process to address some of the challenges that were identified through Bill 206, that was brought forward by a private member of the UCP caucus previously, in 2020, and that in turn a committee was created to help gather feedback and bring forward through the committee process a government bill to remedy some of the issues that were resulting of that Bill 206 and then also to do – one of the things I love most about committee work is that there's a very thorough interjurisdictional comparison that's typically done to make sure that we know where our legislation is in terms of national standards and where the rest of the country is. I believe that the bill in the iteration that we're considering today does significantly improve our standing to be more in line with other jurisdictions across the country.

This bill is an example of a bill that was drafted after consultation and the advice of community stakeholders. I know many members of the Legislature, through the committee, travelled the province to get feedback from local residents as well as had conversations with the Alberta Law Reform Institute. I think that these types of engagement lead to better legislation, typically.

I can't help but think about this bill, which is number three of the government's priorities, in contrast to Bill 1. Instead of having the type of in-depth consultation that we've seen with Bill 3, Bill 1 was of course rammed through with no mandate. You know, only 1 per cent of Albertans actually voted for the current Premier, and many members of the current government actively campaigned very aggressively against that bill for many, many months, and they were right to do so, as well as many members of the community.

Bill 3 acknowledges the role of the courts and the judiciary in terms of arbitration disputes. This is important because, of course, when it comes to questions around one's home and the right of one to occupy that space, if it is your primary residence it carries great concern if one was to be evicted from their home without any due recourse or any opportunity for arbitration or for the judiciary to engage in that process in the courts.

I appreciate that this bill does acknowledge the important role of the courts, of arbitrators, and of the judiciary in terms of making sure that no decision is made that could negatively impact individuals without them having an opportunity to get that clarity from the courts. Again, a contrast to Bill 1, a significant contrast, but of course the courts will have to engage in Bill 1 because chiefs have already made it very clear that they will be launching a suit against that.

I did earlier today talk in question period about referring the bill prior to proclamation to the courts for an opinion, and I want to assure members of the Assembly that this has been done before. It's been done before by Conservative Premiers, in fact. Don Getty did as much in the 1990s with a piece of legislation that he wanted to bring forward but, of course, didn't want to waste significant provincial resources having multiple claims launched against that so, prior to it actually being proclaimed, referred it, as the economically responsible thing to do, to get a judicial opinion so that before it was actually passed and proclaimed, members could have confidence that it was, in fact, constitutional and that it would in fact be upheld by the courts and that they wouldn't be throwing good money after bad by trying to fight something that wasn't constitutional. So this is something that we have precedent for.

Again, I like that Bill 3 does acknowledge the role that the courts have in terms of these challenging conversations around people's property rights and typically their homes. I know that there might be some areas in the province where there are disputes where people have been living somewhere that maybe doesn't have a settlement land claim remedied for the location where they're at, and I think it's important for those individuals to have an opportunity to engage in the court process to make sure that nobody is without a home without having due recourse on what might be land disputes.

We know that there is language in here around guidelines, that they will likely be further clarified through regulations. I hope that the government shows good faith to the folks that were consulted in the drafting of the bill and takes those regulations back to those stakeholder groups that engaged in the creation of the legislation prior to enforcing regulations. Clearly, there was interest. There are well-documented stakeholders that are engaged on this topic, and then, of course, we do have significant interjurisdictional comparisons, as supported through the legislative services research branch of the Legislative Assembly.

It's with that that at this point I will probably wrap up these remarks. Simply to say that I think that this bill is something that my colleagues and I are keen to support. I hope that this type of legislation and the collaborative process, the community-driven process, the recognition of the role of the courts – I wish it was something that was emulated in other bills, particularly the first bill of this session, which essentially took the opposite approach, was something that was created in a silo by now well-documented individuals who say that the next step is a referendum as it relates to independence.

This is certainly a much better process, much more collaborative, and something that I wish the government would follow this lead on when it comes to other pieces of legislation to ensure that they are done in a fair, forthright, transparent way and that they will be upheld by court challenges and that they represent something that is not headstrong and disrespectful to communities in this province and our role in Confederation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to cede the remainder of my time on Bill 3.

The Acting Speaker: Others wishing to speak to Bill 3?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been an incredibly interesting, robust week of debate in the House. We've made a lot of progress, and I move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 on Monday, December 12.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:41 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 12, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Nicole Williams. I invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, this morning I had the privilege to meet with a very special guest who is joining us now in the Speaker's gallery. Please welcome the British consul general, Mr. Jonathan Turner. He is joined by Ms Kaitlin Boyd, head of science, climate, and energy at the British consulate general. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, this afternoon I'd like to welcome a group of grade 9 students and their teacher Shayla Westman from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Dr. Elliott community school in Lyndon, Alberta. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has two school groups, I believe, to present.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. It's an honour to introduce not just one but two school groups today. I would like to welcome from Grace Martin school grades 4, 5, and 6, led by their teacher Siraj Hussain, and from Tipaskan school the grade 6s with their teacher Adrian Tsui, students who I recognize from visits at Read In Week and school visits and community events. Please rise and accept the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has an introduction.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the hon. members of this Chamber members of the Premier's Council on Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls: Rachele Venne, Josie Nepinak, Cheryl Uchitil, and Meeka Otway. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly, actually, constituents of yours, Mr. Speaker, but they are local business owners in the great riding of Airdrie-East. Their business is Rival Axe Throwing. We shared a parade float last weekend for the Christmas parade, and it was super fun. Bull's eye every time. Please rise and welcome Jena, Cameron, Asher, and Eleanor Storms, and Joni Daley.

Member Irwin: I'm so proud to introduce the fabulous Margaret Mooney. Margaret was the artistic co-ordinator at the Citadel Theatre from 1965 to 1998 and is a talented visual artist who has exhibited internationally. She's also the coolest person that I know. I just presented Margaret with a Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee medal. Please rise, Margaret, and accept the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of people visiting the Legislature today. I'd like to ask that they stand as I introduce them: Lynette Young, Tjarda Barratt, Donna Mendelson, Neil Konner, Joyce Kyncl, Christina McCharles, Dale Christian, Jody Young, Tony Blake, Ian Skinner, and Mike Northcott. If you could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Tim Arnold. Tim is a prominent businessman and volunteers in his community often. I've had the pleasure of getting to know Tim in a local coffee shop in Three Hills and can say that he is now a proud Conservative after a short stint, a long time ago, with the Liberals. That's what the coffee shop guys like to tease him about, anyways. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Thank you for all the important work you do helping grieving Albertans across this province. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to talk about a national crisis, a crisis that we have the power to change. Indigenous women, girls, and two-spirited people are falling victim to an alarming level of violence across our province and our country. Earlier this year Rebecca Contois, Morgan Harris, Mercedes Myran, and a woman whom elders named Buffalo Woman lost their lives at the hand of an alleged serial murderer in Winnipeg. These Indigenous women, like too many others, had their lives cut short.

Between December 2021 and March 2022 five Indigenous women were killed in Alberta. All of these women were people with hopes. They were people who were loved. They were mothers, daughters, sisters, and aunts, and now they join the thousands of Indigenous women, girls, and two-spirited people who have been murdered in this country. May we all honour them in our efforts to bring an end to the crisis of violence against women. It's time we stand in solidarity to stop this violence and the killing of Indigenous women and girls and make this province a safer place for everyone.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for keeping the red dress on display in the Queen Elizabeth II Building for the past three years. The dress is a reminder to members and visitors about this evil and a tribute to Indigenous women and girls whose lives have been lost.

Mr. Speaker, every Canadian woman deserves safety and a chance to fulfill their dreams. Sadly, Indigenous women experience much higher rates of poverty, and they're more likely to suffer at the hands of their partners from domestic abuse. They are more likely to be forced into prostitution, making them vulnerable to monsters like Robert Pickton or the aforementioned accused serial murderer in Winnipeg. Tragically, the homicide rate for Indigenous women is six times higher than the rest of the population.

More work needs to be done. We need the right resources in place to create safer conditions. I regularly meet with female Indigenous leaders in my office who provide important supports to vulnerable women in our province. Mr. Speaker, there is an enormous need to provide the support for Indigenous women and girls and two-spirited people who seek freedom from dangerous situations.

Time and again the federal government has said that they will be there for Indigenous people, particularly when it comes to reconciliation and to ending the crisis of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls. They talk a big game, but, Mr. Speaker, this is a story we've come to know all too well in Alberta, a story of empty promises. Promises are empty if there's nothing to sustain them, to follow up, and that is absolutely the case here. There is simply not enough funding from the federal government, and women's lives are at stake. If there was a time to step up, this is it.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has joined the cause for safety. We are working across government to implement the Alberta Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls Roadmap to address violence and to increase the safety and the economic security of Indigenous women and girls. Additionally, the new Premier's Council on Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls is an Indigenous-led group that will give advice and recommendations directly to Alberta's government to help make our province a safer place. Their work has just begun, and it is the kind of work that will affect every part of our government.

It's my hope that all levels of government across Canada will take note of this incredibly important work and follow suit. Members of the council are here in our gallery today, and I'm honoured to be in their presence. I've gotten to know them all, and their stories are heartbreaking. Their expertise and their commitment is much needed. May we all follow their lead in creating a safer, more secure future for Indigenous women, girls, and two-spirited people across our province and our country.

Member Irwin: If you won't search the landfill, then we will: those are the words of Kera Harris, the daughter of Morgan Harris, who was murdered by a Winnipeg serial killer along with three other Indigenous women: Morgan, Mercedes Myran, Rebecca Contois, and one other woman who, at the request of elders, we will now refer to as Buffalo Woman instead of unidentified woman. Until her name is known, we honour her. My heart breaks for all who knew and loved these women and for their communities that bear the grief daily.

This is not an isolated case in Manitoba but a systemic issue that continues to occur across this country. Indigenous women and girls are 12 times more likely to be murdered or go missing than any other women in Canada – 12 times – and according to the Native Women's Association of Canada Alberta has the second-highest number of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls and two-spirit people across our country.

We must do more. Multiple governments, both federal and provincial, have launched panels and working groups. We must all push so that their recommendations become implemented. We must acknowledge that the murdered and missing Indigenous women and girls and two-spirit crisis is rooted in Canada's historical and ongoing abuse of Indigenous peoples and that the inaction of the police when family members report missing relatives has only fuelled the crisis further.

This has to stop. Kera and the many family members have been clear: they are fed up with the lack of action. It's time to listen to those words; it's time to act.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Grande Prairie.

Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As others have risen today to speak, I will do the same. There remains a crisis in this country of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls. The recent devastating murders of Rebecca Contois, Morgan Harris, Mercedes Myran, and Buffalo Woman by an alleged serial murderer in Winnipeg highlight this sad and continuing phenomenon. According to Statistics Canada homicide rates for Indigenous women and girls are at minimum – at minimum – six times higher than for nonindigenous women and girls. Attacks on Indigenous women and girls represent attacks on personhood, on womanhood, and on Indigenous identity, and they must end.

Mr. Speaker, in 2020 the government of Alberta appointed the Alberta Joint Working Group on Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls, or MMIWG for short. This group was formed of Indigenous community experts and advocates for the rights of women along with Members of the Legislative Assembly, including myself. As a woman and mother from the north being appointed to this working group and walking alongside these women was a tremendous honour.

Since submitting the working group's final report, 113 Pathways to Justice, an Alberta MMIWG road map was created and is in ongoing implementation, and the newly appointed Premier's Council on MMIWG was formed. The council members are leaders, experts, and advocates for violence prevention and family members of missing and murdered Indigenous women and 2S-plus people.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's government remains committed to the safety and dignity of Indigenous women and girls, and we will continue to work tirelessly towards the prevention of violence perpetuated against them, investing in the resources these women need like shelters, housing, and health supports in order to end this devastating cycle of violence. To the families of the missing and murdered I say: you will not be forgotten.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre is next.

Health Care System

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is International Universal Health Coverage Day. Every December 12 we take the opportunity to raise awareness of the need for a strong, resilient health care system and universal health coverage, but this year I want to use it to talk about Alberta's health care system and the threats that it faces, most prominently from that side of the House.

First, it should go without saying that Alberta has the finest front-line health care workers in the world, bar none. They've been faced with huge obstacles, unfathomable pressures, and crisis after crisis but continue to go above and beyond to protect our hospitals, clinics, EMS, really every aspect of patient care, but they've had to deal with a government that has accused them of being entitled and overpaid, even accused them of manufacturing a capacity shortage. They've had to deal with a government that threatened them, mused about slashing their pay, threatened to fire them, or chose to ignore them and a Premier that would rather lend credibility to a conspiracy theorist who called vaccines a bioweapon than encourage Albertans to simply get their flu shots.

On International Universal Health Coverage Day I want to promise those fighting for our public health care that help is on the way. In May 2023 they will have the chance to vote for a government that supports health care for all, not a Premier that considers making you pay out of pocket to see your family doctor, a new government that will work with front-line health care workers and launch the largest recruitment campaign in Alberta history to ensure they are supported. We will end the UCP's accusations, blame, and insults and return to science, stability, and support.

Alberta health care is for all Albertans, and they should be able to access the care they need whenever and wherever they need it. The UCP has failed to deliver that, but an NDP government will not let Albertans down. We will end the chaos in Alberta health care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Gull Lake and Invasive Carp Species

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, Gull Lake is one of the province's most beautiful and visited lakes. It is home for some Albertans and a major tourist attraction and economic driver, with many campgrounds and beaches. Its preservation is of the utmost importance. For decades the lake's level was declining until a pumping system was installed in the 1970s, bringing in water from the Blindman River to ensure the water level of Gull Lake remained stable. This system worked; Gull Lake's water level stabilized.

The lake now faces a new threat. Invasive species, fish in this case, are a problem across our province. Invasive Prussian carp are now in the Blindman River, the source of the lake's stabilization pumping program. Pumping has been suspended to avoid pumping carp into the lake. These are aggressive fish that reproduce extremely quickly, making them incredibly dangerous to native species. The Gull Lake Watershed Society with the previous ministry of environment has been seeking a solution. With the help of Stantec engineering and the department, a series of pilot projects were done to discover a filtration system that would safely allow the pumping to resume and keep Prussian carp out of Gull Lake.

The most recent pilot successfully filtered out carp and, more importantly, their eggs at the necessary volumes. For the health of the lake ecosystem, native species survival, preservation of many acres of wetland, beautiful beaches, tourism, the economy, and property values, restoration of the stabilization pumping system is essential and not just for this lake. Invasive carp are a threat to much of Alberta. Filtration is the best solution so far. For the protection of these pristine natural ecosystems, I call on the government to pursue the work that has begun, find a solution to restore Gull Lake's stabilization pumping and protect it from invasive carp species.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Cameras in the Chamber

The Speaker: Hon. members, before Oral Question Period begins today, I have a brief statement I would like to make. I'd like to bring to the attention of the Assembly an incident that has taken place. As I understand it, photos were taken in the Chamber last week and later shared on social media. Members will know that there is a long-standing prohibition against taking photos in the Chamber, as indicated in the procedural memo which I sent out to all members prior to the start of session. Page 9 of the memo reads: "The use of any recording device, camera or pager, either as a standalone device or active on a Member's mobile device, is not permitted in the Chamber at any time."

Previous Speakers have been definitive in their approach to this matter, as Speaker Kowalski indicated on November 24, 2010:

The transgression goes to the very heart of the integrity of this Assembly and the right of [its] members to do their work and the security and the privacy of members in this Assembly. Cameras and the taking of pictures is strictly prohibited in this Assembly.

You may find these remarks on page 1478 of Alberta Hansard from November 24, 2010.

I would add to those remarks that members, as elected officials to this Assembly, have the right to privacy and to work unimpeded. They must not be interfered with in doing their work as members. I will leave you with this thought on the matter, as Speaker Kowalski had said: if members would like to have a picture of themselves in the Chamber, contact my office, and we will arrange it.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Emergency Medical Services

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Dangerously sick or seriously injured Albertans are waiting longer than ever for an ambulance to arrive thanks to this UCP government's war on health care. Today our caucus released a FOIP that shows that the number of unfilled shifts for paramedics in Calgary and area has exploded, almost doubling since the spring. Paramedics have called for three things to fix this crisis: offer everyone a permanent, full-time contract, get crews off shift on time, and expand harm reduction efforts. To the Premier: why has this government refused to listen to these recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the reason why we put Dr. John Cowell in place as official administrator. I can tell you what front-line paramedics are telling us. Number one, they have told us that they don't want to be sitting for their entire shift at emergency waiting rooms unable to drop off patients. That's one of the things that we're going to be addressing. They want to make sure that they have more authority to triage and treat on-site. These are highly trained workers, and they shouldn't have to feel like they have to transfer a patient to the hospital every time that they can treat them with the oversight of a medical professional. And we're going to make sure that with dispatch we do more step-down to 811 so that we put less pressure on the hospitals.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, none of those solutions sound like what the paramedics have publicly called for in the light of day.

Meanwhile the departure of the chief paramedic last week pushes the ambulance system even deeper into crisis. It's been almost a year since the UCP commissioned an action plan, months since the report landed on the minister's desk, and the government is idle and the report remains hidden. To the Premier. These delays put Albertans' lives at risk. Paramedics have told us what needs to be done. Why is the Premier refusing to listen to them?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must tell you that Dr. John Cowell has been on the job three and a half weeks, and one of the things that he's told me in my conversations with him: he says that AHS is performing better than he ever could have imagined. He's got great confidence in Mauro Chies as the leader of the departments, not only on the issue of dealing with efficient ambulance service but also dealing with emergency room wait times. Next he's moving on to looking at the surgical backlog. Those are the three priorities that we identified, those are the three priorities we're working on, and we're going to make progress.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the FOIP shows that this UCP government has made progress in doubling the number of cancelled shifts since the spring in Calgary and area. Meanwhile Dr. Trevor Theman, former head of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, former registrar of the college of physicians, says that our Bill 201 would move the health care system closer to meeting Albertans' expectations. Albertans expect an ambulance to show up quickly, and our bill would address that. With this shocking new data released through FOIP, will the Premier agree to debate the Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act today?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're in agreement in this Chamber that we needed to take action. This is the reason why we put Dr. John Cowell in place as the official administrator, so that we could fast-track and move very quickly on the issues that have been identified. We are moving quickly on them, and we are beginning to see results. In fact, I was speaking with the Health minister, and I understand that we have more paramedics on shift now than we ever have in our history. The issue that we have to address is the issue of making sure that we retain our paramedics. We have to make sure that they have an environment that supports them, and that's what we're working on doing.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Automobile Insurance Premiums

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, according to a report released yesterday by Ernst & Young, Alberta drivers are paying more for auto insurance than other Canadians. A young male Alberta driver who's new to the road will pay more than $5,900 for his insurance. That's $700 more than he'd pay in Ontario, $3,400 more than he'd pay in B.C. The fact is that ever since this government removed the rate cap, Alberta drivers are getting taken to the cleaners. Why does the Premier think that young Albertans should pay $3,400 more than in B.C. to insure their vehicles, that they rely on to get to work every day?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard the Finance minister answer this question many times before, and I think what he has pointed out was that the rate cap was not as billed, that we still ended up seeing an increase in insurance premiums. Look, I've appointed a Minister of Affordability and Utilities, and if there are issues that we need to address across the whole range of affordability issues, he's been empowered to do that. If he identifies issues in auto insurance or home insurance that we need to address, then we will, but we have to maintain confidence in our investment environment here, and doing that means that we don't keep on messing around with the rules of the game.

Ms Notley: The most expensive car insurance in the country, and she won't take responsibility for it.

Now, another case study in the EY report looks at a 30-year-old woman with 14 years of driving experience who was recently at fault in a car accident. In Alberta she now pays more than $4,800 while in B.C. she would pay just $2,000. That's right. More than double: she's paying that here. Doesn't the Premier see that auto insurance rates are out of control and that they are hurting affordability for regular Albertans, and if so, why is there no action to deal with that in her so-called inflation plan?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, once again, in 2018, under the NDP's rate cap, premiums went up 5 per cent. The 12-month change in insurance premiums as of the end of November this year is 2.37 per cent. Now, it may well be that we have to take a look at what is happening in different age groups, and I'll take a closer look at the EY report to see if there's anything that we have to address. Our Minister of Affordability and Utilities has been charged with the task of looking at a whole range of issues to support those who are going through this difficult time of inflation, and we're going to make sure that we address these issues as they come up.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, once the cap was removed, insurance went up by more than 30 per cent. Now, there's a long history of insurance lobbyists helping members of this government get elected. And the reward? The UCP immediately removed the 5 per cent cap, and rates shot up 30 per cent or more. Insiders get the green light to rake in profits, and Alberta drivers get run over in the process. This report makes it clear: Alberta drivers are paying thousands of dollars more than they should be every year. Why won't the Premier stop standing up for her lobbyist friends and start standing up for Alberta drivers?

Ms Smith: I think there's a little revisionist history going on here, Mr. Speaker. The NDP rate cap was hard on Alberta drivers. What they forget is that drivers had to pay the full year's premium up front rather than monthly, they were denied collision and comprehensive coverage, and they were not able to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: . . . access coverage through their broker as insurance companies severed contracts with brokers. You ended up with people who weren't able to get insurance at all. Out of 2.7 million insured vehicles, 53 per cent had more than a 5 per cent increase during the 5 per cent rate cap. That is the history that we saw.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is next.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier claimed on Thursday that she had a new, constructive relationship with First Nations, but today we learned the actual truth. A senior staffer in the Ministry of Indigenous Relations office stated that consultation on the sovereignty act was, quote, nonexistent. End quote. That same staffer reported that they had attempted to raise the concerns of First Nations with cabinet, but that idea got, quote, zero support from leadership. End quote. Why is the Premier so opposed to hearing from First Nations?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we did have a conversation about whether the act needed to be further amended to underscore that section 35 rights were protected, and I pointed out that in crafting the bill, that was the foundational principle. Under section 2(c) it says that nothing in the act abrogates or derogates from the rights of Aboriginals and their treaty rights as defined in section 35 of the Constitution. The point I was raising is that we already made sure that that was built and embedded in the act, and as I've been talking with First Nations chiefs, that's the point that I'm making with them.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That same staffer also reported that the Indigenous Relations minister, staff, and ministry had been shut out of the drafting of the bill from the start. And it doesn't stop there: another Indigenous Relations staffer spoke out, saying that the Premier tried to slough off the concerns about zero consultation with First Nations. Expecting Indigenous Albertans to forget about their legal right to be consulted is a level of arrogance that I would not have expected even from Jason Kenney. What other instances of violating the rule of law in the sovereignty act was the Premier hoping would blow over?

Ms Smith: We have a robust process internally for analyzing bills, that includes our cabinet policy committee process, our cabinet process, our caucus meeting, our Legislative Review Committee. There is lots of opportunity for people to engage. The point was that we already had a recognition that the bill had to comply with section 35 Charter rights, which underscore the treaty and Aboriginal rights of our First Nations citizens. I've had some great conversations in the last number of weeks as we signed an MOU last week with the KTC council on mental health, and we're going to do more of these kinds of things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These staffers were concerned and spoke out because they're watching the government's relationship with Indigenous communities go up in smoke, something that this Premier either doesn't understand or doesn't care about. Indigenous Albertans can't trust a Premier who decides if or when their legal rights are applied. Premier, prove me wrong; stand up in this House, apologize for this illegal imposition of the job-killing, undemocratic sovereignty act on First Nations people, and withdraw this bill before it receives legal assent.

Ms Smith: I can tell you what First Nations talk to us about when we talk with them. They talk about having support for mental health and addiction. They talk about the fact that there are 78 per cent of our kids in care, that we're now going to support them in transferring services to First Nations and be supportive of that. They talk as well about bringing gasification to our rural communities so that they don't have to rely on propane, which is incredibly expensive and unreliable. They also talk about how we can work together on developing economic corridors and identifying protected lands together, and they're looking forward to working with us. Those are the things that we're going to partner with First Nations on, and I can't wait to get started.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Alberta in Canada

Mr. Sabir: In or out? That is the question being posed publicly by Barry Cooper, the chief architect of the Premier's job-killing, undemocratic sovereignty act. He went on national radio last week to threaten that either the federal government bends to the will of this Premier, or there would be grounds to vote on Alberta separating from the rest of Canada. The Premier has claimed that her widely criticized bill has nothing to do with separatism. Why, then, is a key adviser and the writer of her awful legislation saying the exact opposite?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will note that Barry Cooper doesn't sit in this cabinet or in this caucus, and even though the Alberta sovereignty act was inspired by the free Alberta strategy, when I looked at that, I said: how can we make sure that we underscore our constitutional rights, make sure that we protect Indigenous rights, and make sure that we defend the Charter rights of our citizens? These are our principles in our Constitution and our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and that's what the genesis of the act was all about. It's the reason why Supreme Court Justice John Major has said that there is nothing unconstitutional about the bill, and it's the reason why I'm looking forward to declaring royal assent soon.

Mr. Sabir: The Premier went on the radio herself this weekend to muse that her horrible sovereignty act could be used to stop the imposition of paper straws on Albertans. That was her justification for a bill that has ignored treaty rights, creates economic chaos, and that has been cited by many as perhaps the worst legislation to ever come before this House. Albertans deserve better than this paper-thin Premier. Is she really willing to break our country apart over some straws?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think it's more absurd that the federal government intervened in our area of jurisdiction over managing our petrochemical industry, which members opposite used to support, so they could do something as frivolous as impose a ban on plastic straws. They have created uncertainty in our petrochemical industry.

They are creating uncertainty as we end up trying to do cross-border trade. They have declared plastics toxic for one reason and one reason only, because they want to intervene in our area of jurisdiction. They do this again and again and again, and it's why we're challenging them in court.

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Barry Cooper and those closest to the Premier, including her own executive director, have teamed up before to write a document that called for pulling Albertans out of CPP, blowing up the RCMP, and that, in broad strokes: "sets up Alberta for independence in the event that independence must be considered." Separatist flames are being fanned from the office of this Premier. Will she stand right now and state for the record that there will be no vote on Alberta leaving Canada as long as she is in the office?

Ms Smith: I am not a separatist. I am not talking about leaving Canada. I'm talking about saving Canada. I'm talking about how we're going to be able to assert the way this country is supposed to work. We are a federalist nation. We are not a unitary state where the federal government dictates to us. We have our own areas of jurisdiction that we have the exclusive right to pass laws in, and the federal government violates it every day by declaring plastics toxic so they could take it over, by trying to enforce an emissions cap on our fertilizer, by putting an emissions cap on oil and gas.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Glenmore is next.

Calgary Cancer Centre

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cancer is an unfortunate reality that impacts us all. Whether it's us or our loved ones, almost everyone has felt the emotional blow of a cancer diagnosis in one way or another. Patients in Alberta are one step closer to receiving comprehensive cancer care in a world-class facility. This past Friday the Minister of Infrastructure announced that substantial completion of the new Calgary cancer centre had been met and has now been handed over to AHS. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what does substantial completion mean for this project, and what is the next step for the Calgary cancer centre?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier and Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The Calgary cancer centre is the second-largest comprehensive cancer centre in North America. It is bringing a ground-breaking approach to comprehensive patient care, where patients will receive tailored world-class cancer treatment. I am also pleased to say that the layout and design are patient and family focused, from patient rooms, treatment rooms, right down to the plants in the central garden.

Mr. Speaker, as we announced on Friday, this project has reached substantial completion, meaning it is ready for AHS to install the vital technology, furnishings, and other items they need to provide excellent care and services to patients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that this project has been a long time coming for Calgary and southern Alberta and further given that the Calgary cancer centre will be the second-largest comprehensive cancer centre in North America, a true feat in both engineering and health care, and given that this centre will bring together much of the existing cancer care in Alberta and Calgary under one roof, once again to the minister: when can we expect to see the cancer centre open its doors to patients?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary cancer centre is currently expected to open to patients in 2024. During this time AHS will fully outfit the centre with all the necessary technology, lab gear, furniture and materials, and everything else needed to be fully operational. In fact, the design of the building incorporates the easy moving in and out of vital medical devices, with portions of the roof designed to lift off efficiently and safely move in heavy technology. While the hospital is not ready to open its doors just yet, we have reached a huge milestone in the construction process and a huge milestone in providing world-class cancer care right here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the minister. Given that in 2022 we are making steady progress in preventing cancer, detecting it earlier, and treating it more effectively and given that, unfortunately, nearly half of Albertans will deal with a cancer diagnosis in their lifetime and further given that the Calgary cancer centre is needed and important not only to the city of Calgary but to southern Alberta and to our province as a whole, once more to the minister: what are the capabilities of this new centre, and what care will they be able to provide patients?

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that this centre was designed to encompass a whole continuum of cancer care, from prevention and screening and early detection to research and collaboration, from development and clinical trials to patient care and education. It will be a giant step forward for patients and families, for our health care system. Projects like this are more than just bricks and mortar; they are a symbol of hope. To quote Nashrin Mitha, patient and family adviser, from our announcement: a thing constructed can only be loved after it is constructed, but a thing created is loved before it even exists.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a question.

2:10 Children's Health Care and Hospital Capacity Vaccination Policies

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ongoing crisis in children's health care is having devastating effects, effects that will get worse if not addressed immediately. Parents are terrified, looking for information on what will be done, yet it's been 300 days since the last time the chief medical officer of health has held a press conference. The social media accounts, once another source of emergency information, sit silent and still bear the name of the fired Dr. Deena Hinshaw. This is ridiculous, and children's health is suffering. Why is there a UCP-imposed gag order on the chief medical officer of health?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. There is no gag order. I am very pleased to continue to work with Dr. Joffe, who has put out information for parents to be able to deal with this very challenging time, with flu, COVID, and the RSV. Also, Dr. Joffe has put out a letter to all parents in terms of providing guidance to how to manage this. I'm pleased to say as well that, you know, we've been working through getting control over the CMOH account, and that will be active very soon.

Mr. Shepherd: Given that last week, in light of the impact of the ongoing severe viral season on Alberta's children, the pediatric section of the Alberta Medical Association recommended increased public messaging on the safety and efficacy of influenza and COVID-19 vaccines to address the pressures in children's hospitals and given that the uptake of flu vaccine is only 22 per cent across the province and increased vaccination would decrease the chance of severe outcomes, hospitalizations for children, will the Premier please simply stand, openly and unequivocally endorse the flu shot, and encourage all Albertans to be vaccinated?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I stated in this House last week, we are running a campaign to increase the coverage of flu vaccines. I'm very pleased that over the last two weeks we have increased that coverage by 3.5 per cent. Our coverage is now higher than last year at this time, at 23.7 per cent. We are continuing to run a campaign – you may have received a text message on your phone last week – we are also running radio ads, we are running television ads, and we will continue to do so and urge Albertans to make the choice to get their flu shot.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, given that this Premier has spent more time promoting the views of conspiracy theorist Paul Alexander than she has addressing the chaos in public health care and given that Alexander celebrated the firing of the Alberta Health Services board, bragged about being named in communications, called on the Premier to drag the board members in front of tribunals, bankrupt them and throw them in jail, and given that this rhetoric from Alexander is deeply dangerous, yet the Premier can't even stand and promote the effectiveness of vaccines in this Chamber, will she support the motion I'm bringing to this House today to promote the effectiveness of vaccines and condemn the spread of vaccine information by Paul Alexander?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as we indicated previously – and we thank very much for the tremendous work that was done by the AHS strategic board – we needed an official administrator. We appointed Dr. John Cowell to do that, to be able to focus full-time on helping to manage through the challenges that we're facing in our health care system and AHS, focusing on reducing the EMS wait times, reducing the emergency department wait times, getting more surgeries done, and pushing down decision-making. I'm very pleased that we were able to do that.

In regard to the motion that's coming forward this afternoon, I look forward to speaking to it at that point in time.

Revenue and Pension Plan Administration

Ms Phillips: The UCP have made clear that the Premier wants to set up a provincial revenue agency so we can all file our taxes two times. This again proves that the Premier and the UCP don't actually care what Albertans want because Albertans have been pretty clear that they do not want a provincial revenue agency. Why? Because it's an expensive, half-baked plan that would require a 20 per cent increase in public service workers. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce survey recently showed a strong majority of businesses believe it will be detrimental. Did the Minister of Finance actually support the sovereignty act because he wants to withhold our federal taxes? Is that what this is about?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, that question is ridiculous. Something we can all count on with the members opposite is a superficial approach.

We can take a look at the approach of a rate cap on insurance – which we were questioned on – a superficial approach resulting in unintended consequences. We're going to study the possibility, the benefits, and the costs of an Alberta revenue agency. We think that we should make informed decisions.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, given that what's ridiculous is this Minister of Finance's flip-flopping on the sovereignty act and given that what's ridiculous is filing our taxes twice and given that what's ridiculous is taking $200 million from our CPP, that no one asked for, to fund a revenue agency that no one also asked for – this scheme doesn't even add up and shows that this government doesn't even understand income tax or pension policy – can the Minister of Finance explain why he's willing to raid our retirement security, a proposal that individuals and businesses both oppose, to pay for a revenue agency that individuals and businesses also oppose?

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, none of that adds up, but should we be surprised? When the members opposite were in government, they ultimately left Albertans with a fiscal train wreck. None of that added up. That's why we inherited billions and billions of dollars of structural deficit. That's why we had to make hard decisions in Budget 2019 to bring this province to fiscal responsibility, which we've done. Look, we're going to look at opportunities with respect to an Alberta pension plan and an Alberta revenue agency for the benefit of Albertans.

Ms Phillips: Well, given that that was not an answer, Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that the Minister of Finance doesn't want to talk about this topic.

Given that many in the business community, including prominent Calgary businessman George Brookman, past chair of Tourism Calgary, have also said that they oppose the chaos that will come from using CPP premiums to fund a revenue agency and given that the Alberta revenue agency will require Albertans to do one of their least favourite things, filing their taxes, twice and given that Albertans and business leaders oppose the creation of an Alberta revenue agency, who exactly is the Minister of Finance pandering to with this policy? Why won't he just abandon this policy? Why won't he just stand in this place and reject it out of hand?

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason is that we're going to do the work. We're going to do the study so that we can make an informed decision. The member opposite rightly points out that an Alberta revenue agency collecting personal taxes may require a second tax return by Albertans. That's something we would consider. That's something that all Albertans should consider. We believe in making informed decisions. We're going to do the work and ensure that we're making decisions in the best interests of Albertans, unlike the members opposite.

Health Care Workforce Recruitment and Retention

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, in the last year we have seen dramatic changes across our entire health care system. One of the most critical problems that continues to plague cities like Medicine Hat is the ever-decreasing number of available doctors, snowballing the inability to see a family doctor or nurse practitioner in a timely manner. Just this last week I was informed about another seven local doctors quitting their practice, leaving the Medicine Hat region. To the Premier: is there a plan to ensure we train more doctors and medical health professionals for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As you know, human health resources is a challenge, not only here in Alberta but a challenge, quite frankly, across all of Canada and across the First World, but we are making investments to address this challenge. I'd like to speak to the $90 million that we have invested annually for the retention and attraction of doctors, and we're continuing to invest also in our advanced education system. I'm very pleased that my colleague the Minister of Advanced Education invested an additional $30 million to add health care capacity, and I'll speak more on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Given that there are not enough seats for Albertans at our medical schools and given that we are not graduating enough trained family doctors to meet our current needs, never mind our increasing population's needs, and given that I repeatedly hear from young Albertans how limited the spots are in medical programs in Alberta and given that when students end up doing their education overseas, they don't return to Alberta, again to the Premier: what is your government doing to ensure more Alberta students attend Alberta institutions to become family doctors, nurse practitioners and then return to work in communities in Alberta like Medicine Hat?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education has risen.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very important question indeed. It's critical that we support our postsecondary institutions and look at creating more spaces to ensure that more Albertans are able to access some of our incredible postsecondary institutions right here at home, right in their own backyards. Just this past spring we announced, as my colleague mentioned, $28 million to expand spaces in high-demand health care programs, including, for example, in nursing, for health care aides, and in paramedicine. The Premier has directed the Minister of Health and me to continue that work, and we have more details coming.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that vaccine mandates struck an undeniable blow to our health care workforce and given that many of these individuals opted to go on leave, move to places like Texas or Florida, or quit altogether rather than face criticism, abuse, and vaccine mandates and given that now we continue to see rural health care facilities unable to meet huge staff shortages, again to the Premier. During your leadership campaign you promised considerable health care reform. What are you doing to ensure Alberta is adequately staffed with family doctors, nurse practitioners so our health care system can be proactive and preventative?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As indicated, we know that we need more health care staff, particularly in rural Alberta. I was very pleased that over the course of the summer and into the fall I was able to travel to over 20 locations around the province and talk to over 1,100 individuals, many of them AHS staff. We know that they need help, and we're working very hard to do that. Not only are we investing in education, but we're also making it easier for foreign-trained health care workers to come to Alberta – changes to the college, supporting bridging education – and we'll continue to do so to get the people that we need to provide the service.

Government Procurement Policies

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, social procurement policies support local workers, businesses, and suppliers, which benefits our economy as a whole, and these policies are supported by municipalities, businesses, and worker advocates not only in Alberta but across Canada. The NDP will always stand up for Alberta workers, businesses, and suppliers. Can the minister of jobs explain why his government supports the economic harm that will come about because of their sovereignty act and why they oppose social procurement policies that would boost Alberta's economy?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we've already been clear: this Premier listened to caucus, listened to cabinet, listened to Albertans, and we made changes to the sovereignty act. Even that famous right-wing columnist Graham Thomson acknowledged just a couple of days ago in a question to David Dodge, the Toronto man, that the amendments to Bill 1 solved the issues that critics of Bill 1 were concerned about. Now even he agrees that we're on the right path. Why can't they get on the program and help us and support Albertans?

Ms Gray: Given that construction workers in this province are among the highest skilled in the world, thanks in part to the world-class training provided by their unions, and given that under current procurement policies many of these workers are seeing lower skilled workers being brought in to take their jobs, lowering wages and making it harder for Alberta tradespeople to weather this affordability crisis, and given that many are leaving Alberta to work in provinces with robust social procurement policies and labour codes that actually support workers, will the minister of jobs please explain to the Assembly why he and his government continue to oppose social procurement policies?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the NDP is reading their news releases. Our record is clear, and investors know this. In Alberta we're already at record-breaking venture capital investments this year over last year, which was a record year. We're at record levels of migration. We have the highest average weekly earnings across all the provinces. In fact, new incorporations are up 13 per cent in Alberta. I don't know where they're getting their news releases, but maybe they should start listening to the government.

Ms Gray: Given that the trade unions and businesses that employ workers to build and maintain projects throughout Alberta support social procurement policies that provide local value and benefit and given that the Business Council of Alberta and the Building Trades of Alberta have teamed up to push government to implement more social procurement and given that social procurement can ensure that subcontracting goes to local businesses, providing opportunities for smaller businesses, and given that the minister does not appear to be aware what social procurement is, will the minister commit to Albertans today that he will meet with the Business Council, with the Building Trades, learn about social procurement, and implement it?

Mr. Jean: Again, Mr. Speaker, I'm so proud of our Premier. You know, she actually appointed a parliamentary secretary of procurement because she recognized this issue and we've all recognized it. The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul – he's a great member – is going to work hard on this file. But let me tell you some other things that are happening. [interjection] I will meet with anybody – let's be clear – and I have met with unions, and I continue to meet with them because I'm from Fort McMurray and I'm proud of that part of our environment. But jobs in finance, insurance, real estate, renting and leasing are up 21 per cent; jobs in professional, scientific, and technical services up 16 per cent; jobs in health care up 11 per cent. It's a good-news story. Come to Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Airline Direct Flights and Tourism Development

Mr. Bilous: Recently Air Canada announced that it will no longer provide direct flights from Saskatoon and Regina to Calgary. There is a strong connection between Saskatchewan and Alberta, including personal and business relationships. This cancellation will triple travel time and hurt businesses and tourism between our provinces, yet we haven't heard a peep out of the government. They're quick to point out any time a new flight gets added, but there have been crickets when we can't even get a good flight next door. Where is the concern from the government over this decision that will impact our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Obviously, we're concerned about flights coming in and out of Alberta and how it affects tourism and how it affects the workers being able to travel also. We have Travel Alberta working on programs, bringing actually thousands of more people into Alberta with flights and working with a program with that. We need to continue that. Of course, we'll look at all different flights coming into Alberta and making sure that we have programs in place so that we can make sure that we have people in those seats coming to Alberta again for both work and recreation.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Given that it's only a short flight from Saskatoon and Regina to watch the Riders play the Stamps, enjoy Stephen Avenue, or take a trip out to our beautiful mountains and given that Air Canada will no longer provide that flight – instead, people will fly to Vancouver just to come back to Calgary – and given that this will seriously hurt our tourism industry, what is the government doing to encourage competition between airlines in support of Calgary's tourism industry and our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you very much again for the question. Of course, we are concerned about these flights, as I mentioned in my previous answer. We have WestJet doubling seats for some of the flights within Canada, and we like to see that happening. We know that's happening now. Again, we have Travel Alberta working with our partners in the air industry to bring those flights in. Again, when we look at the things that people travel for, being able to enjoy our mountains here in Alberta and being able to enjoy sports events, we know that that travel is important, and we'll continue to work with our partners doing that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've been speaking to the tourism sector and they've been telling me that they're desperate for workers, especially those with hospitality and culinary training, and given that this government has cut hundreds of millions of dollars from our postsecondary institutions, effectively turning off the taps of our talent pipeline, and given that this comes on top of direct flights to Calgary now being cancelled, why is the government making a bad situation worse and actively working against the success of our tourism industry and our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, when we look at our postsecondary education system, we know that – you know, I've been talking to some just recently – they are talking about bringing in people from around the world to enjoy our postsecondary education system, to be able to be trained in tourism. That's a great opportunity for us to bring people from around the world here. In other areas that have done this, 96 per cent of the people that have come in and taken those courses have stayed in the industry in that location three years later. So we know that there's success in that, and we know that we can work on that with our immigration here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Rural Health Care Professional Recruitment and Retention

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Boyle health centre has been short two nursing positions since July, resulting in hospital closures every night. This means that some Albertans may have delayed access to the urgent care they need. I understand that this is a national issue and every province is struggling with staffing shortages, especially with nurses, but the fact remains that we need more health care workers in Alberta and we need them now. Can the Minister of Health tell us what the plan is to fill these necessary nursing positions in rural Alberta right now?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Making sure we have the nurses needed where we need them is one of the top priorities of this government. We need further action. We've taken action already. I spoke in regard to the tremendous work done by my colleague the Minister of Advanced Education, but we need more, and that's why we appointed a parliamentary secretary specifically for rural health. My colleague will be working with municipalities across the entire province to be able to identify other areas that we can make an investment in to make sure we have the health care professionals that we need to support Albertans' health.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one short-term solution is to contract nurses from other parts of Alberta and across Canada on a locum status to fill gaps in RN coverage and given that rural Alberta not only has to compete with the major urban centres in this province but also other provinces, can the same minister tell the members of this House what our government is doing to incentivize registered nurses to rural communities in the short term?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The hon. member is quite right. This is a nation-wide, even international issue. That's why we are investing in our advanced education system, to train more individuals here in Alberta. We are competing internationally. I was also very pleased to announce, with my colleague the Minister of Advanced Education, a streamlined process for bringing in internationally trained nurses, for also being able to provide bridging programs for those nurses when they arrive here so that those who are certified as LPNs can increase up to RNs. We're going to continue to do the work until we get the staff that we need.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Minister. Given that constituents are contacting me with concerns that doctors and other health professionals may look at leaving the community because of the partial closure of their hospital and given that the health professionals in these areas often look to areas with more sustained work levels so they can use their full capacity to support the health system, can the minister tell residents of my community what long-term solutions this government is bringing to fix this problem?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the hon. member for the question. We understand that it is a challenge in terms of the retention and recruitment of doctors. We have more doctors than we've ever had in the province, but we still need more, and we still need them in particular areas where there are shortages, so we're continuing to invest in rural recruitment and retention – I mentioned the $90 million – plus, in addition to that, in the rural and northern program, the recruitment and retention fund, the rural physician on-call program, the rural health professions action plan, and the rural medical education plan. In addition, we're very pleased to reach an agreement with the AMA, and we're looking at different methods of pay to be able to recruit and retain doctors.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Capital Projects

Mr. Dach: From day one it has been nothing but chaos under this Premier. She's already had to walk back several comments that put massive infrastructure projects at risk. This includes the Premier musing that she had concerns about the Calgary green line tunnelling under downtown. In the past she has called this project "Green Line to nowhere," a "fantasy," "a catastrophically bad decision," and "of no real use to anyone." Does the Premier or the minister still agree with these past comments that create uncertainty for a vital project for Calgary's economy that puts 20,000 jobs at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is just another great example of fearmongering by the NDP. There's $1.5 billion committed by this government to build the green line. I've spoken with the mayor of Calgary. They want to see shovels in the ground as soon as possible. This is an amazing construction project that will help Calgarians get around their great city. It's something that this government is committed to, and we're hoping to see the construction as soon as possible on the Calgary green line.

Mr. Dach: Given that the Premier has already created uncertainty around another project, the Springbank dam, that will protect Calgary's economy, and the green line, that will create 20,000 jobs, and given that the job-killing, chaos-causing sovereignty act will create even more uncertainty for investors and companies looking to bid on major transportation projects and given that business leaders, including tech investors, chambers of commerce, and a former governor of the Bank of Canada, have all expressed opposition to the sovereignty act, won't this government restore confidence and certainty in Alberta by revoking this bill so we can build important infrastructure projects that support economic growth?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, I respect my critic for transportation, but I'm not expecting this kind of softball question from him. The Springbank dam is being built. He can go there and see it for himself. It's an amazing flood mitigation project that will save Calgary in the event of another flood. It's something that the money is committed there; it is being built. Calgarians will know that they will be protected in the case of another disastrous flood, something that – we can just look at the 2013 flood. About $5 billion of damage was caused. This is a project that Calgarians can be safe with and know that it will protect their communities.

Mr. Dach: Given that the last Premier mucked about with federal-provincial funding arrangements for major projects like the green line and stalled them and given that the radical policies of this Premier are far worse and given that the Premier is focused on a job-killing sovereignty act that could kill projects and put thousands of Albertans out of work, can the government tell working people why they are so blind to the concerns of so many who want them to stop this bill? The sovereignty act should be thrown in the garbage today.

Mr. Dreeshen: Put people out of work. Kill projects. Again, Mr. Speaker, this is just classic fearmongering by the NDP, and I wish they would stop it because Albertans – not a lot of them – do watch this question period, and when they hear inflammatory comments like that, I think – and they can go to the Springbank dam and see that it's being built. They can talk to the mayor of Calgary, know then that the green line is going to be built. When they hear stuff like that, I think it really just devalues the work that is done in this place, and I hope we can get some better questions here from the NDP.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Gravel Operations in Red Deer County

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, my guest Jody Young lives with her family in Red Deer county close to operating gravel pits. This fall AHS verified that her water well is now contaminated with lead and aluminum and is no longer potable. Her children have lead and aluminum in their blood, likely from drinking contaminated well water. Alberta Environment has been notified of the issue but has done nothing to investigate whether the gravel pit is the source of the contamination. Can the minister commit today to ordering her department to conduct a scientific investigation into this matter?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, our environment minister works very hard to make sure that we listen to Albertans and that we take their feedback and that we do good due diligence on all the work that we do. I have every confidence that she is doing the right work that is required in order to defend Albertans' interests and to ensure that the environment is protected. I appreciate the member opposite for raising his constituent's concerns, and we'll of course take a look at that.

Thank you.

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister just said that they're listening but the minister can't even bother to stand up and answer the question and given that the gravel pit in question appears to be operating without the proper approvals in place and given that gravel pits mining below the water table require Water Act authorizations and given that this pit is full of water even during the driest times of year, suggesting that operators are mining below the water table, will the minister commit to pausing operations at this gravel pit until the proper authorizations are in place?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has some of the most robust environmental policies and protections in place in this entire country, and we stand by that. We will continue to make sure that we are listening to Albertans to ensure that we have and continue to have the best environmental protections in the country. That is exactly what we can expect from our minister of environment in the weeks and months to come, and I'm proud of the work that she does on this file.

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, nobody should be proud of a government that refuses to enforce its own legislation.

Given that Jody Young's house is in close proximity to a proposed new gravel pit and given that the existing gravel pit appears to be operating without proper authorizations and may be causing water well contamination, will the minister at least commit to meeting with my guests today to let them make their case for pausing approvals for new gravel pits until the issues with the existing ones have been resolved?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, as I said, Alberta has the most robust environmental protection policies in the country, and we absolutely do enforce them, and we will continue to enforce them. It is so important that we protect the interests of all Albertans, and we know that protecting the environment is part of how we do that. I'm confident that the minister of environment is on the right track and will continue to do the right things to respect and protect the rights of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Health Care System Capacity

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great that Alberta is a growing province but troubling when many Albertans must wait for a long time to book a doctor's appointment or to be seen in the emergency room. Alberta needs to attract more physicians. Alberta has many skilled newcomers and international medical graduates that are ready to start their careers in AHS, but they are met with barriers that do not allow them to get certified in a timely manner. To the Minister of Health: what actions are being taken to bring more physicians to Alberta, including faster certifications of IMGs?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen.

Ms Schulz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're continuing to make Alberta an attractive location for physicians, with compensation that's among the highest in Canada, financial incentives, a variety of practice settings, high-quality medical schools and facilities, and rural medical education. We're enhancing marketing efforts, pursuing both Canadian and internationally trained physicians, posting part-time positions to provide additional flexibility, and providing incentives for full-time positions as well. Collaboration is also under way with the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta to prioritize and expedite assessment and licensing of international medical graduates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertan families are struggling to provide medication for their children and given that many children are showing severe symptoms during this flu season and further given that our government recently announced the securement of 5 million bottles of children's medication, can the same minister explain how the children's medication will be distributed across the province and when Albertans can expect the first shipment?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a parent of two young children I know that this issue is top of mind for parents right across the province. Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services are working with Health Canada to obtain the necessary approvals. At this time it's estimated that Health Canada approvals will take 10 days to four weeks. Once approvals are in place, the medication will be delivered. As soon as the medication arrives in our province, it will be distributed to community and retail pharmacies so parents and caregivers can purchase it for their children. We will be working to get this medication to Alberta families as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that the pandemic highlighted the importance of optimizing EMS response times and given that Albertans still have uncertainties on our EMS response times and further given that our government allocated an additional $64 million in the 2022 budget that is specifically for Alberta's EMS, can the same minister explain what improvements have been made to Alberta's EMS thus far, what plans are under way, and what can Albertans expect for the future?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Supporting EMS has been and continues to be a top priority for this government. We are moving swiftly to reform AHS and improve EMS response times as that is a top concern of Albertans. Our AHS administrator, Dr. Cowell, is working on a plan to free up highly trained paramedics by fast-tracking ambulance transfers at the ER and finding other appropriate options for nonemergency transfers between facilities. Our new parliamentary secretary for EMS reform, the Member for Highwood, has also been working closely with front-line workers to identify ways to improve patient experience and worker safety.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Funeral Services Industry

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Losing a loved one is a difficult experience that affects us all. The decisions, the paperwork: it can all seem overwhelming for families dealing with grief while at the same time trying to ensure that their loved one's life is concluded with dignity. For those going through it, it is often difficult to balance their need to act with their feelings of grief. Albertans need calm, caring, and capable professionals to walk alongside them in their hour of need and to help bring dignity to their loved one's conclusion of life. Alberta mourners need to be provided with an opportunity to share in their grief.

The Alberta Funeral Service Association, the AFSA, is a professional organization of funeral service providers from across the province that are dedicated to the betterment of funeral services by supporting the public as well as their members. Founded in 1928, the AFSA provides confidential business and professional relationships. They conduct all services in a dignified and respectful manner, they provide all merchandise at a fair price, and care for and show respect for all loved ones entrusted into their care with a high moral and service standard for all. These providers have strict provincial health laws to adhere to, including preneed service regulations and all other laws pertaining to their business or profession.

Mr. Speaker, many people are uncomfortable with talking about death and their fears around it, leaving them feeling alone. Death is a topic that the members of the AFSA deal with every day. They are ready to have conversations with families, no matter which stage of grief they are in, and with those interested in preplanning to remove the funeral planning process from their family's plate. Death is one of the few certainties in life. That is why having resources to turn to like the AFSA is so important.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Health Care System

Mr. Carson: Children's health care is under crisis. That is not a point of debate but the simple truth of the situation. For over a month Albertans have seen the stories of the children's hospital struggling to deal with the unprecedented admission of sick children. We've heard the harrowing stories of nurses working with unimaginable fatigue and stress, some describing days where they are worried that someone might die in the waiting room because of the sheer volume. New structures have been built at the Alberta Children's hospital just to ensure that those waiting to be seen can have a warm place to wait.

This is a time where leadership is needed, but instead of that we have a Premier who tried to ignore a question about sick children by claiming that it wasn't on topic. We have a Premier who refuses to recommend the flu shot, a Premier who takes advice from someone who says vaccines are a biological weapon. The parents that I represent are scared, Mr. Speaker. They are worried about their children getting sick and about the prospect of long waits for emergency care should it come to that. As the father of a young son and with another child on the way I share these concerns with my constituents, and I will never stop amplifying their voices.

But I know that there is hope on the horizon. This comes from the prospect of an NDP government in May 2023 that will rebuild the health care system after years of UCP destruction. An Alberta NDP government will bring in real health care standards. We will restore respect and collaboration with front-line workers from day one. We will restore funding cuts by this UCP government. We will make significant moves to improve care closer to home in Alberta communities, and we will launch the largest health care worker recruitment campaign this province has ever seen. For those looking for health care, help is on the way. Alberta's NDP will end the chaos. We will ensure you and your loved ones will be taken care of.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie has a statement to make.

Energy Industries

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I was fortunate enough to join the Minister of Energy in Banff for the Energy Council's global energy and environmental issues conference. Prior to the conference I was able to tour the University of Calgary's research facility and TC Energy's control room for North America. What a great way to show delegates from the United States and colleagues from Saskatchewan the kind of innovation happening in our own backyard.

The Energy Council conference afforded us the opportunity to make it clear that Alberta's energy sector is not only essential for our province but is a key driver of the Canadian economy and a critical partner in attaining North American energy security. Our oil and gas sector continues to be a leader in responsible resource development and GHG emission reductions while rigorously adhering to social standards. In addition to oil and gas, Alberta is home to some of Canada's largest clean energy start-ups, innovators, and investors. Whether it be hydrogen production, geothermal development, petrochemical processing, or the emerging critical and rare-earth mineral sector, Alberta is quickly becoming a central hub and world-class centre for energy transition. Ultimately, Alberta's energy sector is a key contributor in creating jobs, diversifying the economy, and supporting our economic recovery and growth.

Russia's invasion of Ukraine has taught us again that energy security cannot be taken for granted. Energy security and affordability have real impacts on the lives of Albertans. In order to continue to be the economic engine of Canada while supporting Albertans and our own economy, it is more critical than ever that we follow through on our government's commitment to support the responsible development and extraction of oil and gas.

What I heard this past weekend is that the world needs more reliable, responsible, and secure energy. What I hear in that, Mr. Speaker: the world needs more Alberta energy. That is clear. For too long our federal counterparts have controlled the narrative, falsely characterizing fossil fuels in ill-conceived campaigns. Events and conferences like this are an integral part of standing up for Albertans by showing the incredible products we produce and the ongoing innovation happening right here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has a statement to make.

NDP and UCP Government Records

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are tired. I've had the privilege of serving the constituents of south and southwest Edmonton for almost eight years. When I was first elected in 2015, some were concerned about the accidental government, yet many more were filled with hope and optimism for the future. An NDP government in Alberta seems like something out of a fairy tale. In those first four years we accomplished much in and out of this Chamber: we built schools, we protected LGBTQ2S-plus children, we halved child poverty, we took real action on climate change and the environment, we invested in programs for social change like providing hot lunches in schools and affordable child care. The list went on and on.

And then Conservatives were elected in 2019. Conservatives changed course and reversed an unimaginable number of initiatives. They raised tuition, increased costs on families, lifted utility rate caps, lifted insurance rate caps, and Conservatives announced a meagre amount of new schools. They delayed and defunded hospitals indefinitely. Today Conservatives are celebrating legislation threatening Alberta's relationship with the rest of this country, legislation denounced by experts as likely to drive away investment and harm our national interests.

How quickly things can change. Albertans are tired of this government, Mr. Speaker. They're tired of the games being played by the UCP instead of investing in initiatives that make their lives more affordable. Albertans are tired of being left out in the cold while the UCP squabble and play games.

There's one other thing, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are tired, yes, but they haven't given up hope. They know that there is a way, and they know that there are other options. They know that the future can be brighter. I don't know what's going to happen – nobody does – but I do know this: Albertans are motivated and ready to make real change in their lives once again.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Bill 7, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2), sponsored by myself.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has a tabling.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table the requisite copies on behalf of the Member for Lethbridge-West, which she referenced in her question: Alberta Businesses Not Sold on the Benefits of Ditching CPP or Creating Police Force.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, Report of Selected Payments to the Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly for the year ended March 31, 2022.

On behalf of hon. Mr. Shandro, Minister of Justice, Alberta Human Rights Commission annual report 2021-22.

The Speaker: Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 202 Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022

The Chair: I see the hon. Member for Peace River rising to speak.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise on my bill that I'm moving, Bill 202. This is an important piece of legislation, and it's an opportunity for us, in private members' business, to make a meaningful impact to the Alberta income tax act. The purpose of this bill is to allow individuals a break, those who are donating, in what will be a difficult year coming up, with affordability, with an increase in everything from insurance costs to groceries to fuel and everything in between. But on top of that and maybe just as or more importantly, it's an important break for the charities themselves.

Now, I've been going around meeting with as many charities as possible. There are 76,000 registered charities, according to the Canada Revenue Agency, in the country, and disproportionately we have our fair share here in Alberta. If there's a charity, that means there's a cause behind it and there are individuals that care for it.

I want to talk a bit about the importance of charities in our society, and I want to talk a bit about the trend of what's going on with charitable giving. Unfortunately, Madam Chair, the trend of charitable giving and philanthropy has not been very good. Now, there are some redeeming qualities and silver linings in it, but over the last few decades it's notable that we've seen the average age of the donor go up. It's true that, speaking to the Calgary cancer foundation, their average donor is somewhere in their 70s now. In a few years that average donor is going to be in their 80s, and a few years after that they will have many, many fewer average donors. That is a sad state of affairs. It is sad because the work that that community does is absolutely essential – absolutely essential – to the lifeblood of this province for services rendered, for charitable love and care given to Albertans in care, especially those or their family members going through cancer. The average age of donors is going up.

So is the average dollar amount right now, but that doesn't mean more total dollars in the pot. It's a multibillion-dollar private industry in Alberta, but we see the average dollar amount going up with fewer donors. From 2009 to 2019 we saw a 22.1 per cent drop of families, of households that have been putting charitable tax donations in their tax returns. That's more than a fifth drop, close to a quarter drop in the number of households giving donations. This is impactful for the sector.

We see this trend coming – yes, it was accelerated by the pandemic, and, yes, the affordability crunch with inflation is going to make it worse, Madam Chair – but the truth is that we've seen this for decades now, that donors are getting older. Those large donations from second- and third-generation accrued wealth will be happening increasingly as the baby boom generation finishes, retires. Unfortunately, some of that demographic is now passing away. They end up in large donations to these important bodies. But this trend is continuing, and it's a problem for operational sustainability.

I spoke to the Stollery hospital today. They're one hundred per cent funded not by tax dollars but by donations. It's multimillion dollars a year, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $40 million every year fund raised purely through the generosity of Albertans. This trend has a huge impact on the health care of our children. Alberta Children's hospital is in effectively the exact same boat in Calgary. It's a good example there of the importance that charitable donations play in the livelihood of the delivering of health care services to Albertans.

But the trend isn't just limited to larger donations, fewer folks donating that are older. We also see an important difference on the other side of the demographic of donations, young Canadians. Young Canadians are donating less and less to institutionalized charities; i.e., charities that have that charitable tax status according to the CRA. Increasingly they're donating to what the philanthropic community calls causes. We see this all the time on Facebook: an important cause comes out, and they'll e-transfer money. You see this on GoFundMe campaigns or similar websites, sort of these crowdsourced funding organizations.

And these donations now are given just to that cause, to that important cause that they highlight, something that matters to them perhaps as a millennial or a Gen Z or some of these younger generations. As they come into disposable income, as they start to have their first career, job, salary, pay – perhaps they're in a household. Perhaps they have more disposable income. Perhaps they're wondering: "My parents donated; maybe I should, too. Where am I going to donate to?"

It's not that I don't like the causes, Madam Chair. Causes are important. But the fact that we're giving less to these institutionalized charities year over year as return donors is a concern. It's a concern because so many of the services, so much of the work that is done for these charities require operational budgets, require multiyear, $100 million, $200 million, $300 million capital campaigns. It requires the ability to build up expertise and staff on the administration side, never mind the delivery of the service itself. It requires the ability to build networks into each of these communities, whether you're talking about servicing the vulnerable, servicing those in health care, servicing different diverse communities, like First Nations in my community and others.

Every one of these requires long-term investment – long-term investment – that the charitable sector cannot do if they're chasing the hottest trend and the latest dollar that moves from cause to cause. The institutionalization – i.e., permanency, some wherewithal – of these charities is so important. It's instrumental, it's foundational to the ability for us to do the great work that we do. Our friends and our Albertan brothers and sisters that are out there in the charitable sector providing those services, providing charity and love for others, need that stability. They need that wherewithal. They need a route through which they can rest their operations that they know will be there year after year.

We see this trend in the charitable sector and donations in particular changing on these two ends. On the back end, when it comes to age, getting older and older, fewer and fewer families and households are donating, and we see the dollar amount increasing but not necessarily a broadening of new donors coming in to replace them. On the other side we see young donors increasingly not associated with an institution in the same way, without the permanency that we saw for our parents' generation, perhaps, or our great-grandparents' generation, where it was loyal to Queen and country and to a company. No matter what may come, they know that they have a sense of permanency. We see more and more young millennials going through a number of different jobs, at minimum seven, before they get to someplace in their career where they find permanency. We see these trends happening on the younger side of the demographic, and they're not giving in the same way they used to.

We in government need to be reactive to that. We need to be at the front end in seeing what the trends are and helping the sector by giving it the tools it needs to continue to be successful, to continue to be able to fund raise literally hundreds of millions if not billions of dollars in a fiscal year out of the generosity of Albertans. Out of the near 40 million Canadians – I learned this today – approximately 1 million of them country-wide are employed in the nonprofit or charitable sectors. That is a huge percentage of our industry, of our country focusing on this gift, on this virtue of charity. It's important and fundamental, the most important of all the virtues we have that are given to us.

Madam Chair, it is incredibly important that we pass this piece of legislation now, as soon as possible, because the sector, these charities, and those donors are all pointing us in this direction. They're saying: build a wide base of smaller dollar donations; get these individuals into the funnel, as it's said, and move them up so that they continue to be repeat donors year over year; let those repeat dollars be dollars from new Canadians and young Canadians that continue to build a movement within charities for a generation to come. Those charities can continue to build infrastructure like hospitals and services like we've seen across the sector and in our faith communities of all different varieties.

They will be there to serve and help for every single disaster and crisis and obstacle that our province sees. We will be positioned well here, because of the forethought of this Chamber, to incentivize a broad base of those to give and to give generously and to bring them into the fold as donors and to be participatory in that gift of charity and delivery of this giant sector to average Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to hear the debate on the bill today.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022. As I listened to the hon. member that brought forward this bill speak about the concerns of the sector, there are definitely a lot of areas of that that I couldn't agree with more. We know that the nonprofit sector in Alberta is simply at a tipping point in our province. They're desperate for support, for resources, and for help. We know that this sector is essential to Alberta and to our communities.

We know that this sector is not getting these needs met by government funding. They're looking for areas to be funded such as poverty reduction, mental health, cultural and language support, and so many more areas. There has been a recent report that was completed by the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations, or CCVO, that's titled Alberta's Nonprofit Sector: Too Essential to Fail. This report is such an important piece of information as it lays out the current state of our charitable and nonprofit sector and the damage that has been done and will continue to be done if adequate supports are not provided. Basically, it maps out the sector and has surveyed organizations across the province to get a comprehensive understanding of the state of the sector.

Some really important insights, Madam Chair, that I would like to speak to that really stood out for me in the report: they're saying that in the wake of the pandemic they're facing higher demand, a 68 per cent increase, and higher complexity, a 74 per cent increase. We know, when we're talking to Albertans, that needs right now are very high and that for the person or persons that are accessing services – nonprofits, charitable organizations – not only are there more people that are accessing these services, but their demands are more. They're more complex. They might present with one or more needs whereas perhaps prior to the pandemic they could have surfaced with just one presenting area of concern. Now the nonprofits are reporting that there are much more complex needs that are being requested by the people that they serve.

We know that our nonprofits are critical for our communities all across the province. They provide things like food provisions and basic needs. They provide settlement supports and senior supports, sports and rec, arts and culture, entrepreneurship, environmental, health, and so many more. This sector has also been incredibly damaging to women. We know that 78 per cent of people employed in this sector are women. The sector employs 285,000 people in Alberta, with a contribution of $5.5 billion to our GDP.

When we talk about these numbers – 78 per cent women – we've heard over and over and over that the pandemic has been incredibly difficult and largely so to women, yet we have a government that got rid of the status of women. Here we are talking about a proposed bill where 78 per cent of the employees of this sector are women. Listening to this sector, we've heard that this government has not provided the supports that they need to be able to continue to give the services that so many Albertans rely on. So many have had to close their doors because they can't operate anymore.

We've heard that another great concern in this sector is staff retention and recruitment, with more than 55 per cent of the organizations identifying that as a concern. So while we're looking at this piece of legislation, yes, it's a step in the right direction, but it's not what the sector is asking for. The sector is asking for supports so that they can actually retain their staff and recruit. It's hard because there is incredible inflation that's happening all across the province, which is creating rising costs, so it's hampering their ability to retain and attract workers. They simply don't want to put the rising costs onto clients. These are organizations that are putting Albertans first and foremost in their planning, in their services that they provide, and they're struggling.

We know that supports since the onset of the pandemic have failed to address this sector. Less than 4 per cent of the total funding for the small and medium enterprise relaunch grant, or SMERG, went to nonprofits. Approximately 7 per cent of the total hires supported by the jobs now program went to nonprofits. The critical worker benefit saw uneven distribution, and some nonprofit workers were deemed ineligible for this benefit even though they provide the same services as for-profit and public providers. Programs that are designed to support the sector directly are inadequate. The funding requests to the civil society fund totalled 22 times the available budget, with fewer than 1 in 10 applicants selected.

If the member that proposed this piece of legislation, Bill 202, is speaking to organizations like CCVO or ECVO or Canadian Mental Health, he would hear that this is not the solution. Bill 202 is simply not the solution to what the sector needs. It's a positive change, and he mentioned, you know, several organizations that would say that it is a positive change, but this is not the solution that the sector needs.

There are charities within this sector, but they account for a mere 30 per cent of the organizations, Madam Chair. The current ask for this sector is immediate emergency funding totalling $30 million for staff recruitment and retention. They are saying that these are vital – absolutely vital – funds that they need to be able to continue to provide services and for them to be able to continue to support communities and Albertans that depend on these services.

We know, Madam Chair, that Albertans are struggling. We know that the cost of living is absolutely hammering Alberta families and that so many Alberta families and individuals are reaching out to those nonprofit organizations, those charitable organizations. So the same argument that the member that introduced this is using as to why charitable donations are down is the same argument as to why individuals are accessing these services more.

Having this piece of legislation is definitely a positive – it's a wonderful first step – but it is not what the sector needs right now. We've been hearing for years that this sector needs real supports, a real strategy that will help retention and help employees come to the sector. We're losing people.

There's such a disconnect between being able to support Albertans in a meaningful way and this government. There's an opportunity here for all of the arguments that the member stated as to why this piece of legislation is needed. It would counterargue why this government needs to actually provide support and financial backing to this sector. We have so many organizations that have come out, that have been pleading with the government. I would urge all members to read the report that was put out by CCVO, to talk about what they're really asking, what the real needs of Albertans are at this time.

I would say that we've heard loud and clear that this nonprofit sector is in a dire situation. We know that there are so many services that have no longer been available for Albertans, and we cannot allow this to happen. These nonprofits are the space where so many Albertans turn to. This is their church organizations. These are . . . [Ms Goehring's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate in Committee of the Whole? Do I see none? Sorry. I was confused by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Cochrane running around over there. But I see the hon. Member for Grande Prairie rising to speak.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure this afternoon to rise and speak to Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022. First of all, I'd like to start off just by thanking the hon. Member for Peace River for his thoughtful work in bringing this bill forward, particularly at a time like this. When we're looking at rising costs and pressures on families and pressures on communities, I think it's really thoughtful to bring forward a bill like this to encourage those that can to give charitably and to create a financial incentive to do so. I think that it's a very timely piece of work and a timely offering. Bill 202 is actually quite simple, proposing to amend the Alberta income tax act, making it more affordable for generous Albertans who already give to give to charity by amending the act to increase the tax credit on the first $200 of charitable donations in each tax year.

We know, Madam Chair, that charities in Alberta play a vital role in our communities by providing essential services and supports to individuals and families in need. We know – and the data shows – the power of civil society to build and support community. We know that civil society is more effective than government in responding in real time to emerging community needs and to do more with less. They always have been, and they always will be. We saw that. We saw that through the pandemic, that civil society rose to the occasion in community after community across this province as needs emerged.

So I'll say again that I'm happy to support the bill, Bill 202. I think it's timely. I think an incentivization of charitable donation is always a good idea, quite frankly. Under this legislation the nonrefundable charitable tax credit will be raised from 10 per cent to 60 per cent for donations under $200 – that's a significant difference, Madam Chair – and combined with the federal 15 per cent, this would bring the tax credit in line with political donations at 75 per cent. I think that's important to note, too. I think it's been a polarizing time in politics, and to level that playing field for charities to have the same opportunity to be donated to and for citizens of Alberta to be compensated for that on their tax return: I think it's a great idea.

Since the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic, as an example, 2 out of every 5 Canadian charitable donors say their giving has dropped. I'm hoping that this bill will be a small way for Albertans, who are generally more charitable in their giving – I think Statistics Canada shows that Albertans give more than the average province – to raise those numbers back up again and to shift behaviour. Habits form over time, and when you get out of the habit of donating, I think it's important to create an incentive for people to get back into the habit. Between the global pandemic and continuing inflation, our charitable organizations have struggled, to say the least. I think other members in this Chamber have spoken about that. There are a variety of ways to support them. This certainly isn't the only way, but I think it's a creative way and it's a simple way for our government to say, "Yes, we support the charities in our province, and we want to incentivize generous Albertans to think about giving to those charities."

Given that individual Canadian donors gave about $10 billion to charities in 2018, the decrease in giving that's been indicated in current surveys indicates billions in lost revenue for these organizations. I'm hoping that this is one small way that our government and private members that are working on this bill can incentivize a shift in the other direction. Research from May of 2020 found that charities nationally were experiencing, on average, a 30.6 per cent decline in revenue since the start of the pandemic. So I'm hoping a few things. I'm hoping that the pandemic is largely behind us – I'm really hopeful that that's the case – and I'm hoping that we will return to some habits of giving that are more consistent with prepandemic levels as a province and, ultimately, as a country.

I was just going to tell a little story. I love WestJet. I don't know how many people in this Chamber know that, but I really love WestJet. I think that sometimes companies like that are very cutting edge in terms of the way that they incentivize good behaviour. I was delighted last night when I got my annual WestJet Christmas e-mail, which I love also, and it was: giving is receiving. They had this flight, a full flight of people, and the stewardess got on and told this really compelling story about her niece who was a child struggling with cancer. A very sad story. She did not win her battle with cancer, unfortunately. But what came out of that was a new charity and a way for other families to give to children struggling with cancer in their time of need. It was a very inspiring story.

What WestJet did is that for every mile that the flight took – or every kilometre, I guess; I'll be Canadian about it – they were giving a dollar to charity. Each person on that flight got to fill out a little card with the charity of their choice, and WestJet donated in their name for the kilometres flown on that flight. So if I was flying from Grande Prairie to Edmonton, it's roughly 450 kilometres. If my flight was chosen, then WestJet would have given $450 to the charity of my choice. For that one flight WestJet gave, I think, over $90,000 to charity. I just think that's remarkable.

Looking at the joy on the people's faces who came off that plane and the stories in this little video about why they chose the charities they did – they weren't expecting this; this was a total surprise to each person on that flight – what it meant to them in their communities, in their families, in their stories, I just thought it was brilliant, and it actually made me think about this bill. It's a small thing, but it gives people who may not have a lot of an opportunity to give without it costing them as much, and it's meaningful to them. Each person coming off that WestJet flight talked with great passion about why they chose the charity they did and how excited they were to give back and to have some control over that. I think any time that government can get out of the way and empower citizens to support civil society, it's a win. It's a win.

Shifting these dollars from government to charities and donors strengthens civil society and it supports taxpayers in directing their dollars to the community supports that they believe address the needs of their community, and I think that's part of the power of this bill. This is giving the citizen the power to choose, and if that isn't enough, Mr. Speaker, we remember that the nonprofit or voluntary sector contributes $9.6 billion in revenues to the Alberta economy. Sorry, Madam Chair. I called you Mr. Speaker. I apologize. Not only that, but approximately 176,000 Albertans are employed in the sector.

I just really am supportive of this bill. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to it. I want to again thank the Member for Peace River for his thoughtful work on this.

Before I conclude, I just want to take an opportunity to thank all of the volunteers, all of the organizers, all of the donors from my constituency of Grande Prairie who give generously. Grande Prairie is a notoriously generous community, and I'm very, very proud to be a part of it. As a matter of fact, there's a fundraiser hosted by a famous Grande Prairie resident named Tenille Townes, and she regularly, annually, brings in between half a million and a million dollars a year at this point to keep the Sunrise House open. It's a passion in the community, and she's been the spark to that passion.

I hope that this change, if passed, will be a spark for people to ignite their own passions in their own communities right across Alberta, and I want to thank those working in the nonprofit sector in Alberta and certainly in my community of Grande Prairie for all the important work they do to support their communities, particularly in a time of need, and I want to wish them all a merry Christmas.

With that, Madam Chair, I will take my seat. Happy to support Bill 202. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Chair, for a chance to say a few words around Bill 202, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022, which, I believe, in short, is changing the numbers by which you can apply for a return for a charitable gift and increasing that amount. Categorically I think this is a good idea. Other speakers have already outlined how many of our nonprofits and charitable organizations are experiencing some tough times – right? – which is a direct reflection of our economic circumstances where average Albertans: you know, in real terms their incomes have been reduced over the last four years and more because of inflation and because of perhaps the lowest growth rate, more like a stagnant growth rate, in the country in terms of wages. Alberta seems to be the number one province for that, which is unfortunate.

So all of the things that are associated with our economy are made more stagnant, too, when you're not moving money into the hands of the majority of Albertans, right? There are a few Albertans that are making lots of money, but most are not. Our charitable tax regime is sort of an effect of that. People have less money to donate, so we try to create ways to incentivize people to make those donations.

Yeah. I think that we are in support of this concept as well, but there are a couple of caveats, Madam Chair, that I think are very important to put on the table, the first of which – and it's a genuine concern – is that if we are giving a more generous tax return for people making donations, I hope that in no way would this incentivize this UCP government to cut their contributions to our nonprofit sector. If that's the case, then I cannot support this bill at all. Like, if this is in any way a window or a chance to open up – and I can see hand signals. That's great. That's good. I'm glad to hear that. We just have to make sure that we're not just giving with one hand and taking away with the other.

I heard the hon. Member for Grande Prairie, you know, talk about the government getting out of the way of corporations to donate. Well, that's not what we're doing here at all. In fact, it's important that we create a circumstance by which the people can make a donation. I mean, that's the government doing that job. Any change like this does not preclude our responsibility to those same nonprofits.

We know that nonprofits, I believe, are contributing at least 5 and a half billion dollars to our gross domestic product here in Alberta. I heard the Member for Grande Prairie mentioning 9 and something billion. I think that's a little bit high, but I mean the point is still made that we have more than almost 300,000 people working in the nonprofit sector, so this whole notion is a significant part of the overall province's economy, quite frankly. Of course, that's not to say anything about the tremendous services that the nonprofit and charitable sectors do supply as well. I mean, that's kind of the point of giving them charitable tax status as well. You know, we have so many different social services being delivered to Albertans through this sector, and now more than ever we need to make sure that they are being supported.

I don't know, you know, if there's a way for us to formalize this, but I certainly will say it again, as my colleagues will, emphatically I'm sure, that this change to charitable tax returns should not provide an excuse for provincial funding to the nonprofit sector, right? Those two things cannot go together, and if they don't, then I'm feeling pretty good about this bill, really, quite frankly.

The other issue that I wanted to bring up, which is very important, is that we heard other people talking about getting people into the habit of donating and keeping them in the habit of donating, so I would suggest that part of this bill is to ensure that it's put out in the front window of our provincial communications that this change has taken place so that people know that you donate $100 and you'll get $30 back in April when you file your tax returns – right? – something like that, so that you make it a real, tangible thing. Then once you get people on to donating to a charity of their choice, then they'll be likely to continue to do so often for the rest of their working lives. Passing this bill and then putting quite an aggressive education campaign to Albertans about this new tax opportunity, I think, really would make a difference.

The third thing I wanted to mention – and again I don't know exactly how this comes out in the wash – is just for us to lobby the federal government to pursue a similar pattern of a more generous tax return for charitable donations from the federal CRA, okay? Again, that's a more significant part of our overall tax payments that we make every year to different levels of government, so for the federal government to be similarly looking at a more generous deduction, I think, would be a really great idea. We could do this here and then use it as a signal to the federal government to make those changes for all Canadians, really, because I bet that whatever is happening with the nonprofit and charitable industry in Alberta is also happening in all the other provinces and territories, too. That's always a good way to co-operate as part of a confederation, right? You know, having those conversations with the federal government, I think, is a good idea.

Yeah. I mean, I don't want to talk too long about this bill because I know other people want to, but, again, if I could just summarize, changing the tax deduction numbers is a good idea, but in no way should it be an excuse to reduce the provincial responsibility to nonprofits and charities that we have as a government; and, two, once this does occur, that there is an education program so that Albertans can realize that there's something to be taken advantage of here for this tax year – I don't know if it's possible to do it for this tax year, but ASAP, then once you get people on to the notion of a generous tax return when they file in April, then they're more likely to create a whole new generation of donors that can help us – and, finally, to suggest that a similar change to the deductible numbers for donations from the federal government would be a nice notion to leverage this particular bill. In sum, I'm quite supportive with those three suggestions, constructive criticisms, of course, for the bill. That's it.

Thanks.

The Chair: Members to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Chair, thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022. And great thanks to the Member for Peace River for bringing it to the House for debate and hopeful passage.

Madam Chair, Albertans are generous, and they're warm-hearted – and we've seen that so much in the past – and a moving force with respect to addressing the opportunities which community members have to support the charities and those great organizations that help to, I guess, fulfill a broader scope in our community and sometimes to meet some of the needs that aren't met by government and other organizations. It's a great initiative to see tax donations that are being increased for the under-$200 amounts from 10 per cent to 60 per cent – of course, with the federal applications to that bringing it up to a total of 75 per cent, which also aligns with political tax credits, which I think is good. Politics and the charitable sector should be comparable, and people should be able to make the choices of where they direct their dollars.

Madam Chair, we've seen in the past – I know that there has been a marked decline in charitable donations for a number of years, but to maybe take people back to what I think was one of the world's, the globe's greatest outpourings of support was during the 2004 tsunami, Indian Ocean tsunami, which I happened to have survived by running from that wave and coming back and doing some of my own charitable work through the Red Cross at the time. As we know, not only did we get tax credits, but there were also contributions from government at that time, which we've seen through various things, including some of our support of relief efforts in Ukraine.

But this is actually going to change the landscape, change the foundational tax credit for charities to go forward, and hopefully to encourage people to get back and to embrace that heart of giving, which we know Albertans are so proud of and I think so focused on, supporting the vulnerable in our communities. But we can understand; you know, the last six or seven years have been tough from an economic perspective, from the pandemic perspective. Many people have lost their jobs and now are regaining those jobs, gratefully, thanks to many actions of our government.

This is an opportunity for us to set a foundation which says to people, not only those with the disposable income to do so, but even those that want to plan giving as part of their day-to-day budgets – I think that this is an important opportunity for all Albertans. I think we all try and teach our children that, you know, if there is an allowance or if they're earning money in the community or cutting lawns or whatever it is, to actually take a portion of that and budget that to give back to community, Madam Chair. I think that that's important for us as a lesson to pass on to future generations.

Now with this bill we have an opportunity for that to be, I think, solidified into our tax system, that people understand that charitable giving is not only something that they should do and can do, that when they're doing well, they can do more good, but that it actually can benefit them from a tax perspective at the same time and that there's a net benefit to the community, a net benefit back to them as well that supports them and encourages them to be more generous. I think that these are things that we have to embrace even as we face financial challenges, and we know some people are struggling to meet ends and hence much of the work we're doing on affordability within this particular session of our Legislature.

I'd like to sort of take a look at some opportunities and maybe just localize it a little bit more. I know that even in my own constituency we have some groups that have been struggling, but they work hard. I'll use the Rotary Club of Calgary-Fish Creek as an example. During this past summer they raised over $15,000 to support other charities, as we know the Rotary Club does. They take that money and they turn 100 per cent and sometimes more than that in volunteer hours back.

They hosted a pub quiz, which saw an additional $2,000 donated to I Can for Kids. They've supported HomeSpace, which is an affordable housing provider in Calgary. They partnered with HomeSpace and other Rotary clubs in Calgary to raise over $72,000 to upgrade eight family units of affordable housing. Recently the clubs got together to pack boxes for operation Christmas child, bringing 125 smiles to children around the world and hosting similar events to help families, kids, and other local, smaller charities. So here we have just a small organization – it's not one of the long-standing ones; it's a more recently formed Rotary Club – that does some great work. That tax credit increase, I think, will help them to raise more funds in the future.

Madam Chair, this morning I had a chance to do an announcement down at Fish Creek park in my backyard, the namesake of my constituency, and the Friends of Fish Creek were there. A new partnership has been created between them and the province in terms of some of the environmental work that they do. But the beauty of that organization is that they have over 200 regular volunteers – I think 13,000 hours of volunteering just this past year – and they do their own fundraising. So this will help organizations like that who work with us. The civil society groups that bring forward their volunteer efforts: they bring forward their fundraising efforts. They bring forward expertise and knowledge, and they complement what we do as government, which is the way it should work, when we have the public sector and the private sector and the not-for-profit sector working together.

I remember when I was in the corporate world, we went down, about 35 of us from the company I was with at the time, and we picked thistles out of the park. We did it in co-operation with the Friends of Fish Creek, who needed to make sure that they had volunteers there to supervise us, who also had some staff members there to help us. Again, you have that partnership of the public sector, the not-for-profit sector, and the private sector coming together, possibly from the private sector it can be in donations or in time from their staff to assist those groups.

Those are the types of partnerships I think that we're empowering by this type of legislation, Madam Chair. I thank, again, the Member for Peace River for bringing this forward because I think these are things we talk about all the time. How can we help people to be more generous in their communities? How can we help them to consider giving back to their communities or maybe it's to the province or maybe it's a global cause that they can contribute to? This will allow us – if we pass this and we do it right and we bring it to the attention of Albertans and say to them, "You know, you can be more generous and it's not going to cost you; net amount to you is going to be the same or less," maybe you can give more generously than you have in the past and, as importantly as I'd mentioned before, to teach future generations that that giving should be part of when they're doing well, or well enough, to be able to do some good in the community by giving back.

So, Madam Chair, I'd just like to encourage everybody in this House, in this Chamber, to support Bill 202, and I'd like to again thank the good work of the member and those who have spoken on this bill. I think that there's a common theme here, which is that we have an opportunity to encourage the not-for-profit sector to work more closely, to develop their donor bases, and to encourage those donor bases to give more generously.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'll keep my comments brief because I do know that there are other members that are wishing to speak to this piece of legislation, Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022. Now, I appreciate all the comments that the members have been making in regard to looking at trying to encourage Albertans to continue to donate to different organizations within their local communities.

One of the pieces that we've been hearing in consultation with many of the voluntary sectors is the concern around looking at having stable staffing and stable funding. Now, I recognize that the concern about, you know, supporting nonprofits and charitable organizations and being able to fund raise is an important conversation to have, but we also know that donations that go to these organizations can be inconsistent. It's very difficult for organizations to create an annual budget, to be able to provide those services, whether it be anything from mental health supports to local food banks to culture or language supports and a variety of other things, that can look at the financial budget for the year and say: well, this is what we're going to be able to provide to our local communities, and then on top of that, be able to, hopefully, fund raise to expand our supports and our services to those local areas.

Now, of course, fundraising is very important, and I don't disagree with that, but I think that as a government we do have a responsibility to ensure that that base funding is continuously available so that we can make sure these organizations know and are able to predict their future financial means. Although I appreciate the intent of the act that the member has put forward, being able to encourage Albertans to continue to support their local communities and charities, depending on whatever it is for them, I would also like to hear from the government that there is also a commitment from the government to be able to support that base funding. As we know, the base funding is important. It does ensure that the services that are being provided by these organizations are consistent and that they don't face the continuous concern about whether or not they're going to be able to function year over year over year.

What we've heard is that many of these organizations were significantly impacted over the last couple of years. Their demand for services increased during COVID, and they continue to increase as we hit the affordability crisis, with many individuals seeking supports for mental health as well as looking at supports for, you know, food costs and utility costs and things like that.

What we've been hearing is that many organizations within this sector are looking at ensuring that they have a total of $30 million for staff recruitment and retention. Of course, as we've heard, many of these organizations, although they do depend on volunteers, also need to ensure that they have consistent staffing to run those programs and that it's not just a hundred per cent volunteer based. You know, you need that administrative component and those experts in the area to be able to provide that support.

Although the intent of the bill is good and encouraging Albertans to engage and be part of their local communities is important, we need to ensure that those basic needs are still being met through those organizations. Of course, you know, we need to be looking at settlement opportunities, seniors' supports. Many of these organizations offer sports and recreation opportunities for low-income families. They're also, you know, supporting local entrepreneurs when it comes to our multicultural communities.

Many of those services help build healthy communities and engage with those who may not have those opportunities in the same way as others. Looking at the fact that, in addition to that, we know that about 78 per cent of the individuals that work in these local communities tend to be women and that there is a substantial contribution to our GDP at about $5.5 billion annually, the return on the investment by the government to ensure that these programs continue to function and are funded appropriately is also part of this conversation.

I look forward to seeing in the next provincial budget that that funding will be made available so that there is consistency in the programs being offered, and then, in addition and on top of that, we're able to see an increase in the donations that are being provided on behalf of Albertans that will help to expand the services that are already being provided.

Again, I think the intention of the legislation is good, but I just want to ensure that the government is also acknowledging their responsibilities in ensuring that that base funding is still available so that organizations are not solely relying on those donations annually to run the basic programs.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. It is my great pleasure to talk about this Bill 202. If there is one thing that my office hears from my constituents in Calgary-Beddington, it's all about affordability. This is why I'm so pleased to speak today to support Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. My constituents in Alberta are not only struggling to cover the inflation costs of their utility bills and groceries, but they also are being forced to deal with increases to the carbon tax, which is, of course, what the NDP and their friends in Ottawa, Justin Trudeau and Jagmeet Singh, support. It's really sad to see the NDP support Ottawa over Alberta.

Thankfully, Madam Chair, under this UCP government Alberta's economy has rebounded from the NDP four-year disaster in office and the unprecedented worldwide pandemic. Because of the UCP government's discipline to hold the line on spending after the last four years, we are now in a position where we can offer significant relief to Albertans at the time when they need it the most, unlike the NDP, who would have kept unsustainable deficit spending and placed the burden on our children and grandchildren and all the future generations. We, this government, are helping Albertans.

Madam Chair, under Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, this UCP government will provide over $2.8 billion in relief to Albertans to help them deal with this inflation and affordability crisis. For seniors, who are much of the time on fixed incomes, and parents who are struggling to pay their overloaded grocery bills right now, this UCP government will provide a total of $600 in monthly installments for every senior and child under 18 in a household if their family earns under $180,000 per year.

For Albertans that struggle to pay their utility bill right now, this UCP government will provide $200 more than originally planned in an electricity rebate from January to April of 2023, bringing the total above $500. Albertans will also be protected from the price spike over the winter as the government of Alberta will extend the natural gas rebate indefinitely. Our government will make zero-interest loans available to providers to support the deferrals, which will ensure that nobody is forced to pay more than 13.5 cents per kilowatt hour this winter.

Madam Chair, this UCP government will also suspend the fuel tax of 13.6 cents per litre of gasoline.

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

The Chair: Sorry, hon. member. The hon. member has a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Sabir: I rise under 23(b). The member so far is not speaking to the motion at hand. It's completely irrelevant to what we are debating here.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. This is clearly not a point of order. The Member for Calgary-Beddington is speaking to a matter that is relevant to the issues being debated. We are talking about a bill that talks about the need to provide and to support charities across the province, and she is contrasting our record versus that of the NDP. Therefore, this is not a point of order.

The Chair: Hon. members, it's that time of the afternoon. It's a good time to remind all members that we are on Bill 202 and should speak to the matter as such.

Given that, I will ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington to continue with this caution in mind.

Debate Continued

Ms Pon: Thank you, Madam Chair. This continues from January to June of 2023 regardless of the price of oil, and it will remain in place afterwards subject to the price of oil.

Furthermore, under Bill 202 AISH, the Alberta child and family benefit, income support, and the Alberta seniors' benefit will be indexed to inflation, increasing the payments to the most vulnerable by 6 per cent. This will make the best social programs in the country even better.

Albertans know that we need to share our prosperity with the most vulnerable to make sure that we are all supported. Under just the Alberta child and family benefit indexation a family of four children will receive an additional $307 in payment per year.

With Bill 2, Madam Chair, our government will also index Alberta's personal income tax . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. Just a clarification. We're on Bill 202, not Bill 2. I'm wondering if you have some different notes there that might be more helpful to this debate, and/or just a caution that we're on Bill 202, not Bill 2.

Please proceed. The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you. My apology. I should have said Bill 202.

Our government will also index the Alberta personal income tax to inflation retroactively to 2022. This means that a significant number of Albertans will receive a refund or owe less tax after they file their income tax for this year. On top of that, Madam Chair, this will increase the number of Albertans that pay absolutely no provincial personal income tax; the number will rise by up to 95,000 Albertans, to a total of about $1.3 million.

Madam Chair, this support means that some of the most vulnerable Albertans right now will receive several thousand dollars in increased support in the next year alone. They don't need to decide between eating and staying warm anymore; Albertans will be able to do both. I know this support will make a huge difference for all of us, for all Albertans, and I applaud this government in making this right choice to target this relief to those that need it the most.

These are just some of the ways that this UCP government will help Albertans struggling to heat their homes and fuel their tanks or put food on the table. I only listed some of the actions that our government is taking, but more is being done to help Albertans across the province. Madam Chair, this is why I'm so proud to stand up today in support of Bill 202, the inflation relief statutes amendment act . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. Bill 202 is the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022. One final reminder to speak to the bill, or I will have to cut your time.

Please proceed.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Madam Chair. Remind me again.

Anyways, I'm almost done sharing my thoughts with you. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Are there others to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm proud to speak to Bill 202, the personal income tax act, as opposed to the previous speech, which was a campaign platform speech which had little relevance to this bill.

Now, I'll keep my comments brief. I know that there are a lot of members in the Chamber that also want to comment on this. I'm speaking to Bill 202. I'm pretty confident that I'm speaking to Bill 202. We've heard from a number of charitable and voluntary organizations that they're in a situation that they're referring to as quite dire as far as the need for emergency or urgent funding in order to continue to operate.

The one piece that I will agree with from the previous speaker is that high inflation is causing additional challenges for our not-for-profit and charitable sectors. It is placing a larger burden on the services and supports that many of these organizations around the province offer. We also recognize, and I appreciate there's been some comment on the fact, that many of these charitable organizations that lie outside of the two major urban centres are for some communities the only on-the-ground supports that community members can access, so it's critical that they have the resources to be able to support their communities.

Now, I am in favour of this bill. I appreciate where this is coming from as far as increasing the tax receipt portion that Albertans can get to try to incentivize Albertans to donate more. We know that Albertans are very generous, but this increase or change in the charitable tax receipt will hopefully translate into millions of more dollars from Albertans to charities that provide critical work.

What I will say is that my caution and my concern is that the government will interpret this bill as replacing the core funding that charities and not-for-profits require to be able to function, and I do not support that notion, Madam Chair. There is an absolute responsibility that the government has to ensure that our charitable, not-for-profit sector is adequately funded.

This is a way to support or provide a tool for those charities to be able to generate more dollars to provide supports, especially in light of inflation. I think immediately of organizations that support families when it comes to direct support for food, for utilities. Those are going to be facing even higher costs.

The spirit of this bill and the intention of this bill I strongly support, but again not-for-profits have – in order to fulfill their mandates, they need to be able to recruit and retain staff, and that's the crux of where they have come to the Official Opposition caucus. And I'm sure the government caucus has heard it as well, that they need some of that base funding in order to be able to hire. They cannot rely on donations to make their staffing budgets because every year there could be huge swings depending on the amount of donations that come in.

My hope is that the government will not abandon their responsibility to this sector, that they will in fact fund them and increase funding, give them predictability, long-term commitments, and use this as a tool for these entities to enhance the dollars that they get on a year-by-year basis.

With that, Madam Chair, I know other members are interested in speaking to this bill. I'm mindful of the clock, and I will take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Who can measure the value of compassion and generosity? It's because of that that I really want to highlight the importance of the passing of Bill 202, which increases the tax exemption available on the first $200 of giving to Alberta charities. It'll encourage new people to give that maybe haven't given in the past. Maybe it'll even encourage some not-for-profits to also obtain charitable status to strengthen them. But the important thing here is that I think all Albertans understand the value of compassion and generosity, charity, if you want, in our communities so that we can continue to support one another through all the challenges of life. Civil society, in fact, is built on the free and independent action of individuals expressing their goodwill and their generosity to people around them in their neighbourhoods, in their communities.

Just a brief story from my constituency, Lacombe-Ponoka. A few weeks ago the Lacombe Police Service hosted its charity Checkstop event, which is held every year during this time. I know that nobody likes to get stopped by the police, but if you get stopped by the police and have an opportunity to express your generosity and make a donation, that's an extremely valuable thing, so kudos to the police for stopping as many as they possibly can. You know, when the men and women of our police service spend their Saturday collecting donations of food and toys and money to give to multiple charities, ranging from the Lacombe Food Bank to Big Brothers & Big Sisters, that is a good thing. The Checkstop is just one of those examples, among many, of the value that charities provide to our communities. It brings people closer together, encouraging community building between individuals and institutions while supporting those in need.

This generosity shown by my constituents is one of the reasons I'm standing here today in support of Bill 202. Charitable contributions, though, have been in decline for the last couple of years and have decreased even faster during the pandemic with the current affordability crisis. In spite of this, there's still a spirit of generosity amongst Albertans, but I really want to throw out a challenge to the constituents of Lacombe, Ponoka, Blackfalds, and the rural areas around to donate whatever you can to support your province and your people.

I want to remind Lacombe-Ponokans that in 2014 Lacombe was recognized by the Canada Revenue Agency as the most generous community per capita of any city or town in the country, the most generous community in Canada. That was in 2014. More recently I just found an article from March of 2022 that Lacombe has slipped to third place. So my challenge to Lacombe-Ponoka residents is: we need to be back in first place. We need to find that same generosity. We need to return to the place where we are giving to our communities around us. That's my challenge to Lacombe-Ponoka. A year from now I want to see Revenue Canada report you as the most generous community in Canada, not just Alberta, and I dare any other constituency to match it.

Just to reinforce that a little bit, I heard on the news this morning that wages generally across Canada from November of this year to November of last year are actually up 5 per cent. There's room there, my friends. I have to throw out a little bit of a statistic, though, to further raise the challenge. While we may have been number 1 and are now number 3, did you know that the per cent of annual giving to annual income across Canada is 1.5 per cent? It's not a very big number. It wouldn't hurt very many of us to give a little bit more, especially with a 5 per cent average across-the-country, I understand, wage increase over the last year. For those of you that are giving more than $200, I know this doesn't necessarily impact you, but my challenge to you there is: hey, this is your chance to make sure that the Laurentian Liberals in Ottawa get less and that it stays in your own community. Give to your local community rather than to the Liberals in Ottawa. So that's my challenge.

We need to encourage this practice. We need to make it easier for people across the province to give so that they can get the help that's required, so that we can pay respectable wages to those who are working in these sectors. We need to make sure this all stays in our own local communities. That's what we need to be doing.

That's why I'm supporting this bill. That's why I think it's a great idea. The people of our province who donate our time as volunteers and money as donors do have an outsized impact for people who need generosity and who today may receive but tomorrow may give. One day we give; one day we receive. This is why it's so important that we Albertans show our support for all the charities in our local communities by supporting Bill 202.

Encouraging more Albertans to help these charities by increasing the tax incentive is one of the ways that as a government we are trying to help the not-for-profit and charitable sector. We introduced crowdfunding as a tool, free to use for them, a while ago. There have been government matching donation programs.

By the way, I almost forgot to say that there are also many corporations where you may work that will match your donation as well. While you may only give $200 and you'll get 75 per cent of it back in your tax, if your corporation matches it, it becomes $400 or maybe even $600 in some cases. It doesn't really even cost us that much. We just need to open up our hearts and learn the practice of being charitable and giving and generous and kind to one another.

It will increase the revenue that charities receive, and it will help Albertans to be more generous than they've ever been before. From supporting seniors to newborns, from food to toys, everything in between, our not-for-profits and our charities constitute a pillar foundation in our society. As a conservative I am committed to making sure that we support the independent operation of nonprofits and charities created, really, out of the passion and the hard work, the volunteerism, the donations of individual Albertans all across our province in every community making their community a better place. That's what this is all about.

Madam Chair, this bill is important because it reduces taxes. It incentivizes generosity and compassionate society. It helps Albertans, and I believe that it can be a real support for our nonprofit and charitable sector. Any number of new donors that the passage of this bill creates is worth it. Every single dollar counts when it's committed to important causes like this. I, quite frankly, think this should be a nonpartisan bill, a nonpartisan issue. We must support each other. Our society is built on community, and community means helping others in times of need.

I believe that by increasing the capacity of that independent action, the members of the House stand for principles of generosity and goodwill, and that's something that I think we can and we should all support. There couldn't be a more timely moment as we enter the Christmas season, the holiday season. It seems like in our world these days peace and goodwill are in short supply. We can change that a little bit today by the passing of this bill. Thank you, Madam Chair. It stands for good things, and I think we can all stand for that, so let's work together for the betterment of our province and our people.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to Bill 202? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to make a couple of comments here today to Bill 202. We're going to be very brief. The move towards allowing Albertans to be able to get a better break on their taxes when they give to a charity is going to be really important, and I know that in my community, where so much of the help that we give those that are less fortunate is coming through private charities, it's going to be important for us to be able to provide the incentive for Albertans to be able to do that. This will help things like Warming Hearts in Drayton Valley. It'll help things like the opportunity home. It'll help the warming centre. It'll help the shelter pods that are in Drayton Valley that cater to about a hundred homeless people.

I would just like to stand and, for a couple of minutes, ask this House to consider Bill 202 and to support it. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to the bill? [interjection] I will decide when the question is called.

I will call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 202 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? That is carried.

The hon. Deputy Premier to rise and report out of committee. Would you like to make a motion to rise and report?

Mr. Madu: Yes, Madam Chair. I ask that we rise and report on Bill 202.

[Motion carried]

The Chair: We shall now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 202.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. That is carried.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 203
Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties)
Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Toor: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to move second reading of Bill 203, the Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022.

Every day Albertans across the province tragically lose their lives as a consequence of unsafe driving. Oftentimes those who perish as a result of their own unsafe driving are our youngest drivers testing the limits of their vehicles in attempts to peer pressure or to impress their friends. This heartbreaking reality is something that we as elected officials should do more to prevent. Excessive high speeding is a criminal act that does not only endanger the drivers themselves but all other Albertans who use the roadways where these crimes are being committed.

In order to protect the people of this province from these needless, preventable traffic accidents, we must act. Therefore, I am pleased to introduce this bill. The proposed bill would strengthen the penalties in place for excessive speeding in Alberta so that would-be reckless drivers are more thoroughly deterred from endangering themselves and also others while those who still violate the law are punished more severely. Alberta, quite frankly, is lagging behind other provinces when it comes to pursuing more severe penalties for excessive driving or speeding. Other provinces have rightfully strengthened their laws surrounding these crimes, and it is time for us to follow suit to help to prevent any more needless injuries or deaths.

If passed, Bill 203 would increase the maximum fine for excessive speeding to $5,000 and introduce an automatic seven-day licence suspension for anybody caught excessively speeding. Additionally, there would be an option of a seven-day discretionary impound to be decided by law enforcement on a case-by-case basis.

The time to implement these more severe penalties is now. In the past few months alone there have been high-profile incidents both in Calgary and Edmonton. The two cities claimed the most excessive speeding and street racing that involved unavoidable accidents. Two months ago two Albertans were killed in a two-vehicle crash that authorities believe to have been the result of a street race. Even more recently, last month, I think, two vehicles crashed on the High Level Bridge here in Edmonton, both of which were involved in a street race. The saddest thing about crashes like these is that they are entirely avoidable. They're caused by reckless bravado, specifically amongst our youth.

My priority as an elected official is ensuring the safety of Albertans, and it is my conviction that passing this bill will greatly improve road safety in our province, especially in the residential areas. I'm proud to say that despite incidents like this, as I mentioned previously, Alberta still has the lowest fatality rate of any province. Most Albertans are committed to road safety as they know that acting responsibly on the road keeps us all safe. A notable exception to this rule involves those who excessively speed and others who drive recklessly.

It is so important that these people receive the punishment they deserve when they commit these crimes. Through mandatory licence suspension and discretionary vehicle impounding, drivers who commit these needlessly dangerous acts will be prevented from doing so again in the immediate future. Their friends will hear about their fine and the suspension and will rethink twice before ever going 40 K over the limit, especially in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton. Deterrents are extremely important. Madam Speaker, it is much better if we prevent drivers from doing this in the first place more than it is to get them serious penalties. On top of this, the increased fines will further contribute to deterrence so that these drivers will not act so dangerously again after their licences and vehicles are returned to them.

As stated earlier, this bill would bring Alberta's penalty for excessive speeding more into alignment with other provinces. Ontario's excessive speeding penalties are similar to the changes proposed by this bill. Additionally, these increased penalties have been requested by police chief associations, community associations, residents, and especially the people who live in so-dense communities like Calgary-North East. The implementation of similar penalties in Ontario has been seeing results. The number of people charged for committing these dangerous crimes increased, and the laws have given police in Ontario more options to make the streets safer.

This problem has not gone unnoticed. Multiple city councillors in Calgary and Edmonton have noted the problem and need more options to deal with it. Those who have committed their lives to protecting Albertans in all areas of life, not just on the road, believe that increasing the severity of these penalties will improve road safety. When organizations like the police chief association make requests like this, I as an elected official do not take it lightly. According to research done by this association, the large portion of speeding drivers – 40 per cent, to be exact – are between the ages of 16 and 24. Evidently, this same age group also has the highest traffic casualty rate of any age group; it's almost 80 per cent.

This same age demographic is also most likely to engage in excessive speeding, especially in residential areas. When these young people engage in excessive speeding, they endanger themselves and others. In their I'll call it silly attempts to impress their friends or peer pressure or to show off, Albertans can be severely injured or even killed. These young drivers need to learn to respect the power they have when they go out behind the wheel. Without more severe penalties for acts as dangerous as excessive speeding these young people may continue to take these unnecessary risks. Parents would agree that oftentimes it is important to be strict with your children, especially when they are pursuing a course of action with consequences that they do not fully understand. If a young person is caught excessively speeding and receives the penalty outlined in this bill, they will be far less likely to commit the same acts again. Preventing the repetition of criminal behaviour works to increase community safety and to prevent death or injury that may have occurred if the penalties were less severe.

Preserving life and limb is the main motivation behind the bill. Taking every reasonable step, we can keep Albertans safe as our top priority. These penalties will increase public safety. If these penalties were not seen as effective, then their implementation would not have been called for, especially by the police chief associations. By ensuring that the penalties surrounding excessive driving are proportionate to the crime, all Albertans will be made safer. This includes young drivers who may be tempted towards recklessness, other drivers who expect . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon as critic for transportation to speak to Bill 203, the Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022. I would be hesitant to suggest that the traffic safety issues that are caused by excessive speeding are anything but a significant concern to all Albertans. We've all experienced times on our Alberta highways when somebody has gone blowing by us at a crazy high speed which scared the daylight out of ourselves and/or our passengers and we wondered, of course, what in the heck this individual might be thinking, disorderly and irresponsible behaviour that, as the previous mover of the private member's bill has suggested, brings great harm and injury to Albertans as a result of their risky behaviour.

However, the member who brought forward this piece of legislation, as a general rule, should be reminded that, of course, any time we are looking at increasing the consequences regarding punishment or deterrents for traffic infractions, that is something that we should be considering after consultations have been done. I'm wondering if indeed the member – he alluded to certain consultations, and they seem to be rather informal attempts at consulting with members of police forces and members of the public.

I'm just wondering if indeed there were municipalities involved. He mentioned quite often the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary as places where high-speed infractions were quite prevalent, speed racing quite prevalent. Some high-profile incidents have occurred where injuries took place, unfortunately. I'm wondering if indeed the member has spoken directly to the municipal authorities in Edmonton and Calgary about these proposed changes in enforcement to the bill that he proposes in Bill 203.

Has the Rural Municipalities association been formally consulted? Other large Alberta municipalities: have they had the opportunity to express themselves to the minister in a formal way rather than an ad hoc way that it seems as though the member was describing? I wonder if the consultation took place. I think it's important to have those talks with the people involved in administering the roadways and the speeds in their particular municipalities and jurisdictions.

The Alberta Motor Association often will conduct studies and bring forth their public opinion about changes to legislation. Most recently, of course, they spoke about the blue lights on tow trucks and had some concerns about implementation there that were openly expressed publicly.

I would like the member to really inform the House as to what formal consultations took place before he came forward with the bill, the private member's bill, that he's promoting, because, of course, public safety is everybody's concern, Madam Speaker. We all want to minimize the carnage on our highways throughout the province. One of the – well, the most dangerous form of transportation, of course, is on our highways versus trains or versus buses or versus aircraft.

We certainly want to minimize it, but there can be some unintended consequences to any legislation, and I think we see kind of a glaring example here in this piece of legislation when we talk about the people who might be captured by this increase in penalties for excessive speeding, who are travelling through what would be called transition zones, coming off an exit ramp from an Alberta highway – these are going to be divided highways, Madam Speaker – and entering into a lower speed zone to perhaps transition to another highway. Quite often we don't know exactly the lengths of those ramps transitioning from the highway speed, which is currently at 110, to the 80 kilometres or less of the area of speed that you might be going to to get to the next highway.

These are what we might call fishing holes, Madam Speaker, and Albertans, of course, are rightly concerned about photoradar and the use of it. It's been called a cash cow by our former transportation minister Mason when he was the minister in the NDP government. We want to avoid sort of replicating some things like that, where we use a transition zone as a means of capturing people who otherwise might, you know, not be breaking the law with any malice; they just didn't slow down in time to get onto the off-ramp and transition to the next highway that they were travelling to.

That may be an unintended consequence, Madam Speaker, and I don't bring this up just as a matter of bringing something out of thin air. I have already mentioned in the House once about travelling in Australia, driving a camper van down the east coast of Australia, and coming home to find in the mail some rather large speeding tickets, two of them, that happened in transition zones. I recall seeing the lights flash on the photoradar unit that was in a vehicle that was parked in that transition zone, and I certainly know and recall exactly those two incidents because I was making a normal effort to slow down, and before I knew it, I was barely off the main highway onto the roundabout or to the off-ramp, the cloverleaf, to get onto the next highway, and, boom, the photoradar went off, and a ticket resulted twice. Luckily, they were reduced because I happened to be a visitor, but in the mail the ticket that I got was, like, 750 bucks for each infraction, so that would have been a significant amount of money.

We can capture tourists who are maybe not as familiar with our roadways innocently not slowing down quick enough when perhaps on a short exit ramp transitioning from the high-speed two-lane highway to a smaller highway and ending up with a ticket that will be super hefty and perhaps an immediate suspension of their licence or impounding of their vehicle. That's one of the situations off the top, Madam Speaker, that I'd like the member promoting this legislation to consider when looking at the sort of blanket application of new penalties and deterrents for individuals who would be speeding, especially at high, excessive rates.

The UCP members, Madam Speaker, seem to be sort of at crosspurposes on a couple of their pieces of legislation, particularly private members' bills. They seem to be a little confused about what their policy should be in relation to higher speeds on highways. They're driving, as one might say, in opposite directions on this. The reason that I say that is that earlier in 2021 another private member brought forward a bill, Bill 213, and it sought to actually increase highway speeds on Alberta's double highways, two-lane highways, from 110 kilometres an hour to 120 kilometres an hour, implying that perhaps speed wasn't a contributing factor to decreased public safety. The member who brought that forward, the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain, kind of argued or implied that the higher speed would actually be an improvement to public safety because individuals were going that speed anyways, and they might as well just raise the speed limit.

That is in contrast to what we see here before us today, Madam Speaker, where Bill 203 is very clearly stating that, of course, speed contributes to higher danger on the highways and endangers public safety. I wish the UCP members just might get it straight when they decide upon whether they're going to be suggesting speed injures and kills or whether it actually harms the public and public safety. I think the public kind of gets it, but there is that element of confusion in the two pieces of legislation brought forward by private members regarding the impact of speeding on our highways. That as an aside, I think it's a pretty well-accepted doctrine that higher speeds contribute to higher rates of accidents.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have so much to say. It's going to be hard to say everything in 10 minutes. With the permission of the Member for Calgary-Falconridge I hope I can help to answer some of these questions, and I want to thank you very much for bringing this bill forward.

We're not talking, Madam Speaker, about a 10-kilometre increase on the highway; we're talking about in excess of 40 kilometres an hour in an 80-kilometre zone. In fact, I believe, yes, on page 3 of the bill, that when section 158 is amended, it's specifically speaking about the $5,000 fine if you're driving at a speed of "40 kilometres per hour over a maximum speed limit that is 80 kilometres [an] hour or less."

We're not talking about a couple of kilometres here. This isn't a cash grab for speeding or for tourists that don't happen to understand the legislation. This is, like, excessive speeding. Excessive. Significantly different. Bill 213, that was brought forward by the member from Spruce Grove, was talking about increasing the highway speeds by 10 kilometres an hour. To the point, I mean, I drive that highway pretty much every week, like the rest of you. I'm fairly certain I don't stay at 110 kilometres an hour consistently on that highway, to be truthful.

I thought I would add my voice to this simply because – I'm very grateful for this piece of legislation – this is about prevention. This $5,000 fine is added on to fines that already exist. This is a higher fine, and as the Member for Calgary-Falconridge was speaking about, this is actually about preventing deaths, Madam Speaker. This isn't a couple of kilometres over.

I would like to just address – the Member for Edmonton-McClung was talking about fishing holes. I don't understand how 40 kilometres an hour over an 80-kilometre zone is in any way a fishing hole. That's not a fishing hole. It's criminal. To that point, the deaths that happen – the member had already relayed some of the numbers of the deaths that happen as a result of collisions. I want to give, actually, a few personal examples just to help illustrate why this legislation is necessary. Like I said, I just need to repeat that these aren't fishing holes. This isn't a cash grab. This is excessive speeding.

For example, not only are we engaging in education about that, but you add alcohol and drugs to this whole scenario, and in fact this excessive speeding and stunting happens when the roads are actually fairly empty. It happens between 11 p.m. and 3 in the morning. This is when the deaths are happening, and they're happening to our young people.

I'm a parent of a 24- and a 26-year-old. I remember when they got their drivers' licences how excited they were but having that conversation around, you know, speeding. This is a completely – completely – different conversation. We're looking at a 22.3 per cent fatality amongst drivers that are travelling at these speeds; 22.3 per cent.

This is not a fishing hole, Madam Speaker. This is about prevention of death and also making sure that we're engaging with the demographic that is actually finding themselves either – I mean, the folks that are involved in this excessive speeding: it's not only them. Their friends are dying. There's injury, criminality. Should they choose to do anything else in their lives and have these charges against them for the rest of their lives, particularly when they're young, it could impact everything that they do in the future.

I actually am so grateful for this legislation, to the Member for Calgary-Falconridge, because it's not only about the fine; it's actually about education. You cannot change anything if you don't have preventative measures in there to make sure that there are serious consequences for this behaviour.

In Chestermere, in fact, in my riding of Chestermere-Strathmore, there was a police officer monitoring speeds on range road 284, which is just near, actually, where I live. I don't know if the member remembers this. We share some roads between the rural constituency that I'm in and the city constituency that he's in. They caught a driver going double the limit, weaving in and out of traffic. By the time that they were able to monitor the top speed of 205 kilometres per hour – the vehicle was actually tracked at 199 kilometres per hour when he was arrested and pulled over. Not a fishing hole, Madam Speaker; serious, serious speed violations. Fortunately, thank goodness, nobody was hurt in this, but Sergeant Bowman himself said that travelling at these speeds is outrageous and not only shows a wanton disregard for their own safety but other members of the public, and it could have ended extremely tragically.

I was just speaking, actually, to a dear friend here in the Legislature, who was just telling me a story. He was called to a case where excessive speeding ended up with them hitting somebody at a traffic light. The car exploded, and the people inside that vehicle passed away from the fire. He was there. He was on the scene. He saw it. Not a fishing hole, not an accidental tourist, not a few kilometres over the speeding limit but excessive speed, a massive difference. And it's written in the legislation. To the member again: thank you so much for clarity in this legislation.

This is about safety and a duty to care but also about educating all of us about what our responsibilities are when we take a vehicle out on the road. Vehicles are weapons when used the wrong way. There are many opportunities whereby – I don't think we realize, when we get behind a vehicle, the amount of weight and metal and steel and power and speed that you have at your fingertips. I'm 52. I've been driving for a really, really long time. There's absolutely no way I could handle those levels of speed, and I've been driving for a really long time. Full disclosure, Madam Speaker: I'm a rural kid. I've been driving a truck since I was 12, out in a field, picking up rocks. Thank God there were no humans or anybody else other than gophers out in these fields, because I probably didn't have the capacity to do that. Those were the things that we did when we were younger, hauling stuff around when we were working out on the farm.

Out on those back roads, the gravel roads out in my area, holy moly, we could get our cars up to some pretty high speeds, but fortunately for us – and this happened when I was 17. I would have been 17, yeah. We were actually pulled over by a police officer – in the rural areas by the RCMP – because the fellow that I was with that day was driving at excessive speeds. We were pulled over. Not only did he have a discussion with us, but the driver of the vehicle was forced to watch – there was a movie back in the day that we used to have to watch when we were kids that showed what happened when there was excessive speed or bad driving or alcohol and drugs involved with all of this. He was actually made to watch this movie to understand the consequences of his behaviour should he actually impact somebody else, hit another vehicle, a curb, a side, anything. In my area there are loose animals all the time, all sorts of livestock in the middle of the roads.

If we don't start here, where we have preventative measures, where we have the opportunity – losing $5,000 is nothing compared to losing your life or another person's life or having a criminal record. Every year we have so many people who are so excited to have passed their drivers' licences, and it's so exciting, but we have a responsibility to make sure that that independence doesn't lead us towards death and destruction also. We have a responsibility to make sure that folks are protected.

According to the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police 40 per cent of speeding drivers are in that young group. As the member had said earlier, this isn't about pointing fingers at a particular demographic; these are the actual statistics. So what is it that we need to do to inspire change? Not only do we need to talk to our kids about the privilege they have of being out on the road, but if we want to keep them safe, we need to make sure that there are really heavy-duty consequences. Again, it's not meaning that it's just that demographic. It's not. There are lots of people who are doing this, but we are losing our youth. These are our future leaders. These are people that might end up in this House one day. We want to make sure that they're safe to be able to do that, but we also want to make sure that the laws of the land have severe enough consequences and penalties that, hopefully, it doesn't happen in the first place.

I'm very, very proud of my friend the Member for Calgary-Falconridge for bringing this forward and holding up that commitment. I know that you've been talking about a lot of other work that you're going to be doing along with consultation, particularly with the youth, because they need to know what it is that you're doing, and you need to be able to hear from them. I was really happy to hear about that, so thank you so much.

I just would like to share a few numbers, Madam Speaker, with you as I have a few minutes left here. In 2019 233 Albertans were killed and 15,364 were injured in traffic accidents. Out of 132,000 collisions, 120,000, 91 per cent, involved property damage; 11,700 had nonfatal injuries; and 215 people died. Between 2015 and 2019 80 per cent of those fatalities were from those collisions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Honoured to rise and speak to Bill 203. Just a couple of things that I do want to clarify with the member. Again, we're only in second reading, so these are more questions and comments than they are anything else.

I represent the northeast, similar to the member opposite. Obviously, the writer of the bill is in Calgary, I'm in Edmonton, but our areas are similar. Now, something that happens in my riding is that if you're coming off the Anthony Henday and onto Manning freeway, it is 100 kilometres an hour on Anthony Henday. The minute you hit the exit to merge onto Manning freeway, it drops to 70. So what my colleague was trying to explain is that that's a trap, right? Like, that is the concern in the context of: if it was decided that photo enforcement sits there – which they do quite often, to be fair. They're there a lot because it's an immediate drop, right? Many people will get speeding tickets there often.

Now, the problem with this piece of legislation is that now, if they are not immediately hitting that 70, right in there, they're on that cusp. So let's say that the speed limit is 100 but they were going 110, and they're slowing down to get into that 70 zone. If they don't do it immediately when they hit that exit, they would be in this category of excess speed. They would lose their vehicle, they would get a $5,000 fine, and all of the things would happen. So the question that I would have about that – like, again, that's my intersection; I know that intersection quite well; I hear about it all the time – is: what is the protection for the Albertan in that specific zone, where it becomes such an immediate drop?

I appreciate that what the member is trying to get at is that we're looking at people who are, let's say, within the city of Edmonton where the speed limit is 40 kilometres or 60 kilometres, which is also within my area, and people are going 120 when it's 60 kilometres an hour. But it's because they've come off the freeway and made a right-hand turn onto 167th, which is right there. There are no lights to slow them down, and they just whip right through.

And, as the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore was saying, I do have – and I hear about it often from my northeast police division – individuals who are at 3 o'clock in the morning or at 1 o'clock in the morning drag racing down 167th because there are no lights to slow everybody down, and they're going excessive, like 130, 140 in a 60. That is a fundamental problem. I don't disagree with what the member is saying, but to reinforce what my colleague was saying, there are also these weird pockets in the city where this could potentially become a problem. So the question is: what are the protections around that?

Now, the other piece that I'm curious about is that the act as it's currently written actually speaks to 50 kilometres an hour, and the member has chosen to drop it to 40 kilometres an hour. I'm curious as to why the drop and why there isn't a consistency with 50 kilometres an hour of excessive speed. The reason that I'm asking that is because if we look at what is currently drafted within the legislation, if an Albertan is getting a speeding ticket over 50 kilometres an hour, they automatically get a pink ticket and they automatically have a mandatory court appearance. If they don't appear, a warrant can be out for their arrest for failure to appear, and then six demerits will exist and a possible licence suspension and fines in excess of $2,300. That's consistent if you're going 50 kilometres an hour over the speed limit. That's no different than a residential area or a highway, right?

What we're seeing within this piece of legislation as it's written now: it says that if it's an 80-kilometre zone or less and you're going 40 kilometres over, all of a sudden the fines go to $5,000, there's an immediate seizure of your vehicle, and a couple of other things. The struggle with that is that it's not consistent with how the act currently reads. So you could be going down the Queen Elizabeth II highway at, like, 180 and not have your vehicle seized. You won't get the same amount of fine and – well, you still get the same demerits. Demerits are the consistent part within these two pieces of legislation. But they're inconsistent from highway driving to residential driving. So although, again, I do appreciate what the member is saying, I do think that we have to figure out a way to address the fact that people are burning through residential zones.

I have a park right by my house. The park is 30 kilometres an hour, and you see people whipping through there at, like, 60. It's ridiculous. Kids are swinging on the swings and chasing balls, and the next thing you know someone is going to get run over at the crosswalk. That is the problem, and I don't disagree with what the member is saying. That is a problem. But the question is: how are we doing the enforcement? The reality of it is that in those school zones or those playgrounds I don't actually see a lot of enforcement happening. I don't see my local department having a vehicle there every day enforcing what is going on. So how do you enforce this new piece? Like, you can write the legislation and you can say that these are the issues, but it's the enforcement component as well.

If the member is trying to address the issues in residential areas, that we're worried about kids getting run over, all of those things, like, I worry about that all the time. I have a school that is built in the worst intersection ever, where we've talked about lights and all the things and speed bumps and: how do we slow people down? The way our communities are built is that they're just like these straight drag racing opportunities because it's: how do you get people in and out of their communities? There is a planning and building of communities that is kind of the conversation and then the speed. But how do you reinforce it? Unless you're going to have a police officer sitting at these parks and these school zones every day, people are still going to be whipping through there because there isn't an issue or a consequence to those problems. So there's that piece.

I agree that maybe there isn't sufficient signage, right? In the city of Edmonton the assumption is that unless you see a sign that's marked a different speed, you should go 40. Well, when you're on a main thoroughfare of a major avenue that runs east to west, people aren't going 40. It's actually maybe a 60 zone, but you don't see a speed sign. You know, it could be 20 blocks before there's, like: oh, here's the speed zone for the day. There's, I think, some of that conversation that needs to happen around the infrastructure piece.

But my biggest concern is the inconsistency between the penalties. If I'm on a freeway and I am going 180 in a 120 zone, the only penalty I'm going to face is a pink slip that requires me to go to court, and if I don't show up, there'll be a warrant. The fact that the six demerits are the same but that there may be a possible licence suspension and that the fine is $2,300 if you're on a highway – so if you're 80 kilometres or less and you're not following municipal rules, you actually have a significantly higher penalty. The issue is that both of those are bad driving skills, and both of those could cause fatalities, and both of those things are a problem, but it's inconsistent. I guess my question to the member – and I'm happy to hear this as we move into Committee of the Whole – is: is there a way to align the legislation to ensure that the penalties are consistent between both? If you're on the highway, you get the same penalty as you would if you're a residential driver.

Also, I do believe it is a bigger discussion around residential issues. I have a significant concern in my community about how they're widening one of my roads. We have repeatedly had EPS officers arresting people going 130 down that avenue, and the city has decided to widen it because the traffic flow – there are so many new neighbourhoods; there are so many people driving down it. Well, it's counterintuitive in a way because if it's narrower, people have to naturally slow down, right? You have to slow. Do people get annoyed because it takes forever to get down the avenue? Yeah. Is it safer? Probably, right?

What they are doing now, in fairness to the city, because we should be fair, is that they're putting lights, but the lights are going to be, like, every .5 of a kilometre, so you're going to hit a light, and then you're going to hit another light, and then you're going to hit another light. That's probably going to irritate people just as much as the narrowing of the road. Like, I'm not a city planner, so I should be cautious around this, but . . .

Are there others to join? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 203, the excessive speeding penalties act. I'd like to, first of all, thank the Member for Calgary-Falconridge for bringing this important issue to the Chamber. Like many have spoken about today, including the Member for Calgary-Falconridge, you know, many of us see every day or hear every day excessive speeding. I guess that's one of the reasons I'm standing up to speak today, because in my riding we hear excessive speeding many, many, many times, particularly in the summer and the spring and early fall.

Where my constituency is located, I have a lovely racetrack, actually. It consists of the ring road, and then it consists of 90th Avenue, and then it consists of 24th Street, and then it consists of Anderson Road. Many do circuits on those roads, and I think, Madam Speaker, you may have been chatting with me on the phone one night when you heard that particular noise. It's that loud, and it's annoying. Everybody will admit – you know, you hear those mufflers, you hear the excessive speed, and it's really annoying.

But I'll tell you what. As annoying as it is, I can't imagine being that family member who gets the phone call the night when the race goes wrong; you get the phone call that your loved one is at the hospital or arrived at the hospital and has passed away. Sadly, too often street racing is undertaken by younger people, and we know the statistics. We've heard all the statistics today. We were all young once. We know how much we like to challenge our limits, you know, push the envelope, and that's all well and good until something goes wrong.

I know that there are a lot of folks who put a lot of time and money into perfecting their vehicles in order to undertake some of this street racing, but it's not a sport. If it is a sport that someone wants to participate in, they need to go to a racetrack, but our roads and our neighbourhoods are not racetracks. Unfortunately, there are those that undertake speed racing. They do treat it as some sort of a sport, and they put a lot of time and effort and money into it, and then they undertake it on our streets and on our highways.

I will say that the Member for Edmonton-Manning has raised a good point today about trying to understand how we can make the legislation consistent so that it is applicable on highways as well as roads. But in my riding I will tell you that they literally do circuits from a highway onto city streets in my neighbourhood, back onto a highway again, so I am particularly interested in seeing if we can make it more consistent.

But to say that we don't have racing within our city streets – we do. Sadly, you know, there are occasions, I am sure, where there are narrow misses of pedestrians, maybe taking a little shortcut to the 7-Eleven in the middle of the night across a boulevard, and it's too late. This is very much a safety concern. It's also about ensuring that those families out there don't lose a loved one.

Honestly, I don't know how we get through to people other than making the penalties so stiff that they actually might pay attention. Perhaps that does mean having the vehicle towed away to an impound lot. Maybe that's what it takes – sadly, I don't want to see it take a death or a life-changing injury to convince somebody to stop street racing – maybe that driver's licence suspension that's going to keep you from going to work the next day, maybe having the vehicle towed and impounded. Certainly, $5,000 is a pretty big chunk of change for most people. Maybe that will help people understand that street racing is the wrong thing to do.

But I think the intent of this legislation is very good. I think maybe the member will be willing to work on an amendment to help us align it for highway and city streets. But I will say this as well. You know, I know that for some, having an excessive speed ticket that results in, potentially, a record is very harmful for people, but if you're doing 40-over in a school zone when kids are present – I'm not sure. Maybe somebody needs to learn a lesson there. I would hope – I would hope – that it wouldn't take too many instances of that before somebody understands.

At any rate, I won't repeat much of what's been said today except to say again: thank you to the Member for Calgary-Falconridge. I really do hope that we can ensure that we take some meaningful action to ensure that street racing comes to an end in this province and certainly, I would hope, in my own riding.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this bill. I will be offering some cautions, but I wanted it clear at the outset that I will be supporting the bill because of the reasons that have been spoken about by so many people: the danger to members of our society and particularly, as we're learning, young people in society who seem to be engaging in very dangerous behaviours such as stunting and racing on our city streets. Because of my concern for these young people and, well, for all of us, of course, both the participants and the unintended victims that unfortunately are likely to happen at very, very high speeds, we certainly want to do what we can to limit the likelihood of these kinds of things happening.

I do have a couple of cautions around the bill, though. It fits into the category of what I've often been concerned about with bills brought forward by the Conservative government, that the bills too often do not dig deep enough into the issues that they're trying to address. We often get bills that do a small, little piece towards something but don't actually work on the structural, underlying issues that need to be resolved in order for whatever we happen to be dealing with to be properly resolved, and I think this bill fits into that case. I have some sympathy for that. I know that private members' bills are a different case than government bills. I know that all the resources are not necessarily available to create a bill with greater depth, but I still think it's one of the things we should be doing in this House. We should be encouraging depth in problem resolution whenever we possibly can.

As such, I have some comments about this bill. I guess the thing that's most important is this question of deterrence. I know that the member who moved this bill has indicated that there's a hope that if somebody gets this kind of a fine, word will spread amongst their friends and family and that that will act as a deterrence to other people doing it. I must say that I certainly hope that's true. I would love to see that happen.

However, having, you know, been in the area of social sciences most of my life and been a researcher, I also know the research on deterrence. The research on deterrence indicates that the severity of the punishment is not a particularly effective mechanism for reducing a behaviour. We know that's generally true with regard to behaviour, that if you just keep upping and upping the cost of engaging in the bad behaviour, you don't actually tend to get – I mean, you certainly get some response. Don't let me limit it. But the amount of deterrence you get is considerably less than one might hope.

We know, for example, that there are a few other things that are much more effective. The likelihood of getting caught, for example, is often cited as something that is certainly demonstrated to have a greater deterrence effect so that you can actually keep fines small if the likelihood of being caught rises dramatically. That's a problematic area in our society. I know that when we put up speed traps, for example, people often object and say that they're just cash cows when, you know, I generally support them because they really do increase the likelihood of being caught. I think in this case that we haven't looked at that. What are some of the mechanisms that we can employ that will actually increase the likelihood of being caught?

The other thing that we need to understand from a statistics point of view is that we have a distinctive, statistically significant aberration in the commission of this illegal activity, and that is that it is not equally committed by people across the age ranges and genders. In truth, what we're seeing is that young males are significantly more likely to be engaged in this kind of behaviour, which tells us some important things here. It tells us that it is not the level of the fine that's allowing people to make the decision to engage in this type of behaviour or not. The distinctive characteristic that seems to be associated with the decision to engage in this kind of behaviour is actually gender and age rather than the level of the fine.

Therefore, we should be looking at responses that understand that and respond to this by addressing: what are the factors associated with gender and age that are contributing to the decision to engage in this kind of behaviour? We know from some of the brain research that goes on that younger people tend to make more irrational decisions than older people. They don't have the experience. Their brain is not fully developed, and they may not even have the mechanisms for making those kinds of decisions. We know that males tend to also make more dangerous decisions than females. One of the things I would have liked to have seen in this act is something attached to the government's attempts to reduce speeding and stunting by addressing the kinds of things that may be associated with those factors, so that would probably mean some kind of education or relationship process.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but time for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has the call.

COVID-19 Vaccines

502. Mr. Shepherd moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly is of the view that COVID-19 vaccines are a prudent and necessary tool that allowed the economy to open more fully in 2021 and the ongoing use of these vaccines supports public health and safety and the full operation of the economy and the education system; and be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly

- (a) affirm its trust in the science-based research, including research and vaccine development here in Alberta, that led to the creation of COVID-19 vaccines and that has saved the lives of tens of thousands of Albertans, and
- (b) reject claims that COVID-19 vaccines are bioweapons.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I'm guessing that there will be those who will claim that the motion I'm bringing forward today is divisive, that it's intended solely to play political games. Indeed, I wouldn't be surprised to see a government member rise and perhaps argue that shortly after I take my seat. But the fact is that there is good reason to question where members of this government, particularly the Premier, stand on the question of the COVID-19 vaccine. As noted by columnist Rob Breakenridge, shortly after the Premier declared that those who chose not to get vaccinated against COVID-19 were, and I quote: the most discriminated against group that I have ever witnessed in my lifetime. As Mr. Breakenridge noted, the Premier had not yet and still has not yet addressed any of her previous social media posts or statements on vaccination, "which included false and dangerous claims like 'the mRNAs had no obvious effect on COVID deaths and may have actually increased deaths from other causes.'"

In videos posted online, the Premier endorsed avowedly antivaccine groups like Vaccine Choice Canada, a group that has spread the discredited hypothesis that vaccinations cause autism and claimed that COVID-19 vaccines aren't necessary, as well as Taking Back Our Freedoms, whose board was advised by Paul Alexander, whose claim that the COVID-19 vaccine is a bioweapon is noted here in the motion before us. The Premier, at a forum during the recent by-election, stated that her anonymous, unknown group of medical advisers had invited Mr. Alexander for a consultation and that she was, I quote, interested in hearing what he had to say.

So, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have good reason to question just where the Premier stands regarding the science of vaccination, particularly regarding the COVID-19 vaccine and particularly given the current crisis in pediatric care as a wave of respiratory illness is sweeping through children in our province, leading to overwhelming pressure on children's hospitals in Edmonton and Calgary. This wave is driven by three respiratory viruses: influenza, COVID-19, and RSV. For two of them we have safe vaccines that are scientifically proven to be effective in protecting against and reducing the spread of illness.

Unfortunately, the current rate of vaccination against influenza in Alberta is only just over 20 and a half per cent. While children under five and seniors are two of the groups at highest risk of serious complications due to influenza, just 12.7 per cent of children between the ages of six months and four years and 57 per cent of seniors have had their dose. The immunization target, Mr. Speaker, for both those groups is 80 per cent.

Now, clearly, we need leadership from public health, but sadly we have none. That, again, is due to the Premier's decision to leverage conspiracy and misinformation in her campaign to lead the UCP, targeting the boards of AHS and the College of Physicians & Surgeons and the former chief medical officer of health, accusing them of being lawless, blaming them for the damage done by the COVID-19 pandemic and this government's mismanagement of it. That's what prompted former AHS board member Tony Dagnone, appointed and removed by this UCP government, to speak out regarding the Premier's "dangerous rhetoric" designed to "play to her misguided followers who rant against science and academic medicine" and who warned that if the Premier "persists in vocalizing false, conspiratorial and unfounded claims, she will be responsible for putting healthcare providers, and Albertans needlessly in harms-way."

That is precisely the situation we face today as doctors, nurses, and other front-line staff at Alberta's children's hospitals are forced to beg this government to take real action to protect children in our province and ease the unprecedented pressure on the health care system, actions including increased public messaging around the safety and efficacy of influenza and COVID-19 vaccines in children to create awareness of their importance in decreasing severe outcomes and hospitalization as well as increased accessibility to vaccines, especially amongst marginalized populations, by offering school vaccine clinics or mobile vaccine services, increased messaging, Mr. Speaker, which I'm sure the minister will stand and say: indeed, we have increased our messaging.

Let's be clear. These pediatricians spoke out last week, so unless the minister has done something striking between then and now, there is work to be done. Now, increased messaging, Mr. Speaker, is a simple ask that would be well within the purview and the mandate of the chief medical officer of health, but it's been 300 days since Albertans last saw a CMOH stand at a podium and speak to the province.

Indeed, it's clear just how unseriously the Premier and the Health minister take the role of the CMOH. After they fired the previous individual, they chose to replace her with a volunteer who already holds another full-time job, a volunteer they seem studiously intent on keeping out of sight, allowing him only the occasional statement by letter and text. In the words of Dr. Paul Parks:

Seriously: while a tridemic is overflowing our EDs and hospitals, and truly harming our children, does it make sense to place our [CMOH] role on the side of the desk of an already extremely busy physician [with] a full time job already? And [with] no deputies to help?

Of course, Mr. Speaker, the two deputy chief medical officers of health have resigned in the face of the challenge they face with this Premier.

Dr. Parks goes on to say:

And this is not a criticism of the person chosen.

Indeed, I am not criticizing Dr. Joffe; neither is Dr. Parks. He says: I don't think anybody could add the job to an already full time position and be successful.

What does this say about current priority for public health?
Is it worse to pretend like this even seems reasonable?

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this government has spent more time and resources trying to promote their job-killing sovereignty act than they have encouraging and supporting Albertans to get vaccinated against viruses that are impacting tens of thousands of children across the province and crippling our pediatric health care system to the point that nurses were speaking of black Sunday, a recent day when the Alberta Children's hospital was so overwhelmed, they were worried a child could die in the waiting room.

Mr. Speaker, in jurisdictions around the world it's become an annual tradition. Indeed, it has been here in Alberta. Celebrities, community leaders, political leaders, leaders of all stripes: they take a moment to take a picture of themselves either receiving or having just received the influenza vaccine or, indeed we saw during COVID, the COVID vaccine. They post it to social media. They talk about it to the press. It's a moment of celebration of the wonders of science and the importance of each doing our part to protect ourselves and others.

I'm pretty sure every Premier of our province as well as ministers and MLAs have done this for well over a decade, but this year our Premier can't even muster a simple endorsement of flu vaccination in front of a microphone. She has refused to do so several times in this House, and as noted, she spread misinformation and doubt about mRNA vaccines, going so far as to travel to the U.S. to get the Johnson & Johnson viral vector vaccine. She spoke publicly about that, so it's not disclosing private information. Mr. Speaker, when you undermine confidence in one vaccine, you undermine confidence in all of them, like the influenza vaccine. Indeed, we saw the Premier do exactly that at a press conference a few weeks ago. She was asked if she would recommend the influenza vaccine for children. She instead talked about: well, really, it's only 50 per cent effective, and, hey, people are always going to get sick, so the important thing is just to make sure that they can get Tylenol. So her record is clear.

With this motion I am providing the opportunity for each MLA in this House to make their own record clear and show whether they stand with science and for public health, whether they stand in support of our front-line health care workers. Will they stand against the growing scourge of deliberate, intentional misinformation and delusional conspiracy theory that threatens to continue to undermine our public health care system and the very principles of public health that allow our society and our economy to function?

There is no prosperity without a commitment to science and robust public health. Mr. Speaker, I encourage every member of this House to support this motion today for the sake of the province, our health care system, our economic prospects, the health of the most vulnerable, and for the sake of our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Motion Other than Government Motion 502. The hon. Health minister.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleague for putting this motion forward. There's no doubt that vaccines have fundamentally changed the course of health care. They've been integral to the development of the field of public health from the start because identifying the source of communicable diseases and how they're transmitted goes hand in hand with developing effective measures to stop transmission and help protect people from infection.

Arguably, the biggest step forward came with the creation of the smallpox vaccine, and since then, one by one, the threats of tetanus, diphtheria, rubella, meningitis, measles, polio, influenza were all greatly diminished through the study and development of vaccines. Today parents can choose to give their children routine childhood immunizations to protect against all these illnesses, along with the annual flu vaccine, Mr. Speaker. Vaccines have changed the course of human history several times over. They contributed to the dramatic increase in life expectancy that we all take for granted today, together with advances in sanitation and other areas of health care, especially care during pregnancy and care for newborns and infants.

Here in Alberta today immunization has an important role in public health, just as it does around the world. It is one of the most successful and cost-effective public health interventions we have, Mr. Speaker. I've mentioned our children's routine immunization schedule, which helps protect them from childhood through to later in life, and our schedule begins as an infant and continues through the teenage years given the importance. These routine childhood shots have almost eliminated diphtheria and tetanus, just to take two examples.

Mr. Speaker, simply put, vaccines work. They've served us well for decades, and they've shown their value again in the past two years in helping us manage through the COVID pandemic. COVID vaccines have worked to reduce the toll that the pandemic took on our families and our communities, and by making these vaccines available, we had another tool to help manage through the pandemic. Over the past two years COVID vaccines were offered to the most vulnerable people first but eventually to all Albertans age six months and older, and we continue to offer COVID vaccines to Albertans, particularly as different forms of the vaccines are developed. We have continued to make them available to Albertans, and we will continue to do so.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, today's COVID vaccines are not the same as the ones that were first available when they first came out over two years ago, and that is why it is important to continue researching and developing so that we can prepare for whatever future disease may hit us or as COVID evolves. Alberta has tremendous research and health professionals, and we have a role to play in global efforts to get ready for the future.

We also need to take matters into our own hands so that we are less reliant on companies and countries elsewhere. That's why just over a year ago our government announced funding to grow our pharmaceutical and life sciences sector. We are investing up to $81 million to fund four vaccine development projects right here in our province of Alberta. The impetus for this investment was our pandemic experience, and our support for science is real.

Ultimately, though, vaccination is a personal choice. COVID vaccines are being made available by the Alberta government today, Mr. Speaker, as a choice, and our government will continue to make vaccines available to Albertans in the future. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. If the hon. minister would like to join in the debate, he's welcome to do so. Until then, the Minister of Health has the call.

Mr. Copping: We'll continue to support Albertans in making their choice to stay up to date on their vaccines, be it routine immunizations, COVID vaccines, or influenza, Mr. Speaker.

I'll step aside, because I know – just to respond to the hon. member across the way talking about flu vaccines, Mr. Speaker, we have been very supportive of flu vaccines. In fact, over the last two weeks we've increased the rate of flu vaccinations by 3 and a half per cent. We are in the middle of running a campaign here in this province to support vaccines and support Albertans in making the choice to get vaccinated, and we will continue to do so as we are running a campaign on flu vaccines so we can support not only Albertans in managing through the flu season but also to support the tremendous job that our front-line workers are doing across our entire health care system, particularly in the children's hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to come back to this particular motion. You know, our government has been making COVID vaccines available. We will continue to support Albertans in making their choice to get access to COVID vaccines, and we'll continue to make COVID vaccines available and support Albertans in making their choice.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I ask members of this House to support this motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise this afternoon to speak to Motion Other Than Government Motion 502, and I'm happy to hear, from what I can tell from the minister, that at least the minister will be supporting this. We'll see how the Premier votes on this. Again, just looking at what we see in this motion, I think that it's pretty straightforward. In terms of understanding and reflecting on the fact that the COVID-19 vaccines are prudent and a necessary tool that allowed our economy to open more fully in 2021 and onward, the fact is that, you know, without this, of course, this tool through this pandemic, we would have found ourselves in a much different situation.

I would argue that if we had the Premier that we have now – as I reflect back, even though I had many, many concerns with the past one, I might even find myself more worried if this current Premier was the Premier at the time. Just looking back on a few of the comments that have really undermined our public health system and our public health officials, some comments from our current Premier, of course, a comment that was made – and eventually they came back and, you know, after being proven wrong, apologized and deleted the comments that they had made, so I'm thankful for that, I guess, Mr. Speaker. But the fact is that once you release these kinds of statements into the public and, again, undermine our public health care system and our health research, science-based research, as is listed in this motion, it's really hard to come back from that.

Again, the quote that I have before me: "Hydroxychloroquine cures 100% of coronavirus patients within 6 days of treatment." That was a comment that was made by our now Premier, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's truly disappointing. I don't think that we've seen much learning on the Premier's behalf when it comes to undermining science-based research and undermining the vaccine efficacy, and it's truly unfortunate. Further, we also heard the current Premier talk about the use of ivermectin as a coronavirus, or COVID-19, treatment, again, another circumstance that continues to be unapproved, first of all. But this idea of using ivermectin as a COVID-19 treatment has been discredited and debunked.

Now we find ourselves in a situation in the middle of flu season, of course, compounded with all of the other illnesses and diseases that we're dealing with, including COVID-19, and all the critic for Health and the NDP opposition have asked this Premier to do is simply make a statement saying that they believe in the efficacy of the flu vaccine, that Albertans should go out and get the flu vaccine.

The previous speaker, the minister, brought up the point around mandated vaccines. Nothing in this motion is pointing towards that, so it was interesting that the minister felt that necessary to bring forward. I thought that that was going to be followed by the minister saying that they didn't plan on supporting this motion, but thankfully that wasn't the case. Again, I hope that we do see all government members, including the Premier, supporting this.

Now, the other piece, of course, within this motion is rejecting claims that COVID-19 vaccines are bioweapons. It really goes back to the decisions that this Premier has made to invite certain conspiracy theorists to provide information, to provide guidance to this Premier and to this government, in respect to Paul Alexander, and I think that it should be pretty straightforward that these are not the types of people that we should be expecting or looking to for medical guidance, medical information.

Looking back at other – I believe it was during the leadership process of the current Premier and the UCP government that we saw this Premier again blaming both Alberta Health Services as well as the previous chief medical officer of health, Deena Hinshaw, for giving bad advice and execution through the pandemic. Of course, that eventually led, when this Premier became the Premier, to firing that chief medical officer of health. I think that the Health critic laid out a very reasonable and clear timeline of what has happened since then, with the subsequent hiring of a voluntary chief medical officer, the resigning of the two deputies. We find ourselves in a very unfortunate situation.

The fact is that with our last chief medical officer of health, Deena Hinshaw, we heard again and again that that position was there to provide advice to this government, and it was up to the government and this Health minister to take that advice or to not take it. I guess, Mr. Speaker – I can't necessarily claim to know – it seemed in some circumstances that this government was not necessarily following the advice that was given to them, very likely going against many of the decisions that were made by that chief medical officer of health at the time.

The fact is that the decisions that were made through that process lay squarely at the feet of this UCP government, lay squarely at the feet of this Health minister, so it's interesting that with all of the attacks the Premier has done on our health care system and the previous decisions of politicians in this province and, through them, the chief medical officers, they decided to keep the same person in that role. I'm interested to find out why, again, we have a Premier attacking those decisions but not necessarily making changes to structures or designs that were in place at that time and likely made some decisions that were not necessarily the best ones.

Now, there is just so much to be said on this, Mr. Speaker. I, again, fully support the motion that has been brought forward. I thank the Member for Edmonton-City Centre and the critic for Health within our caucus for bringing it forward. I think that it should be very easy for all members to support this motion because at the end of the day the effectiveness of vaccines – through COVID-19 and through several flu seasons every single year it is very clear that these vaccines are effective, that we should do everything in our power to not undermine the effectiveness of vaccines, that we should be doing everything in our power to encourage those to make the choice to get them.

I think, with that, Mr. Speaker, again I would just thank the member for bringing those forward. I would encourage the Premier to stand up in this House and support this motion, speak to this motion, and, further to that, make it very clear to the general public that they as the Premier and as a citizen believe in the efficacy of the flu vaccine, among other vaccines as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to join in the debate? Seeing the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For a second I thought that somebody from the other side will speak, so I was willing to wait and hear them and then speak, but while I am now on my feet, I will speak to Motion 502, proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre, which essentially is asking this Legislature and this government to say unequivocally that they trust in science-based research, including the research and development of vaccines, and reject the claims of conspiracy theorists that vaccines are bioweapons.

We do know that science has settled that vaccines are the most important way to keep Albertans healthy, in particular as the spread of respiratory illness is on the rise. We're grateful to every Albertan over the period of the last two years who stepped up to receive the COVID-19 vaccine and played a role in ensuring that we remain open, our economy remains open, and Albertans – fellow Albertans, their neighbours – remain healthy. Now that our health system is under strain and in particular children's hospitals have seen a huge rise in workload because of respiratory illnesses, we must send a strong message to all Albertans that it's important that they receive vaccines and that vaccines do work.

When we were going through the COVID-19 pandemic, I remember that former Premier Jason Kenney once blamed people in northeast Calgary for spreading COVID-19 without any basis whatsoever. I think that most people living in northeast Calgary, living in my riding, were in the kinds of jobs that they were not able to do from home. They were mostly front-line people working in hospitals, working in retail, working in transportation, the kinds of jobs that you would not be able to do from home. Then Premier Kenney blamed them, that they were spreading COVID-19, which he never apologized for. But afterward people in my riding, people in northeast Calgary came together, and they worked on making sure that people got vaccines. Now, as a result of that work, where many organizations, including AHS, were involved, northeast Calgary has a 99.9 per cent vaccination rate. That's huge.

Now, if they will hear from the Premier of this government that somehow vaccines are bioweapons and, instead of getting the COVID-19 vaccine, they could have used hydroxychloroquine, that doesn't send a very good message. That is disrespectful to all those people who stepped up and got a vaccine. So I do want to stress that the words that we say, the words that people in positions of power say, do influence public opinion, and we should be very careful when we say such words.

Not only that, in the last week or so while I was here in question period, the Premier was asked more than three times, I believe, just to simply get up and encourage Albertans to get a flu vaccine. I think that was too much for the Premier to say. Not once – not once – did the Premier get up and state that simple fact, that vaccines are good, that people should talk to their doctors and make their choice. Instead, the Premier is saying that they won't defer to experts anymore. Also, when this government will bring in people like Paul Alexander, when this government will legitimize the work of people like Paul Alexander, a conspiracy theorist who has called vaccines a bioweapon, that doesn't send a good message.

That's why it's important that this Legislature votes in favour of this motion, which the Minister of Health has indicated they will, so that Albertans can be assured that vaccines are effective, they save lives, and Albertans should consider making that choice. We should also condemn and oppose the misinformation spread by the likes of Paul Alexander, who thinks that vaccines are bioweapons.

It's also important that we send that message because we do know that we have a crisis in children's hospitals. There are capacity issues in Lethbridge. General hospital systems are getting overwhelmed by respiratory illnesses. So passing this motion and urging Albertans to get vaccinated, get flu shots, will certainly be a step in the right direction. It will also help us deal with the workload that our hospitals are seeing and focus more singularly on managing the crisis in health care.

Thank you. With that, I urge everyone in this House to support this motion. Use your circle of influence to urge Albertans to get flu shots. Use your influence and position of power to urge Albertans to seek expert advice, not politicians' advice, when they are in doubt about vaccines and get vaccinated. That will certainly help us address some of the strain that we are seeing in our hospitals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 502. I've got a number of comments that I want to make. I think that the debate of this motion today is very important. I want to thank my colleague the Member for Edmonton-City Centre for bringing forward previous motions like this, bringing forward emergency debate resolutions that, unfortunately, in the past – we have seen over the course of the past few weeks, since the start of the fall sitting, the government refuse to engage in emergency debate around things like the crisis of our health care system, the crisis of lack of medicine for our children, which, yes, I will acknowledge that the minister and this government have secured, you know, children's medicine to come into the province, which is greatly appreciated. However, that solution doesn't address the backlog of children's surgeries.

The fact that we've seen staff in Calgary providing a critical service for children suffering, you know, unbelievable health issues, who are terminal, moving over to support other children who are critically ill: that shouldn't be the case in a province like Alberta, a province as rich as ours, a province with a once incredible health care system but that is under immense strain.

Now, the reason for this motion, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, is because we've seen numerous examples where the Premier and leader of this province refused to encourage Albertans to get their vaccinations. Now, I'll acknowledge that the Minister of Health has done that. I appreciate that he has done that for the past couple of years, throughout the COVID pandemic, and now encouraging people to get their flu vaccine.

I will give a plug that – you know, for those who don't understand how flu vaccines work, our health care professionals try to anticipate the strain of the flu virus. Some years they get it bang on; some years they don't. This year, from what I've learned, our health care professionals have done an amazing job identifying the strain that is coming through. All this to say that if you get your flu shot this year, it is going to be very effective against four different strains of flu that are going to pass through our province throughout this fall and winter. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to say that my two-year-old daughter just got her flu shot two weeks ago and has both of her COVID shots.

The purpose behind this resolution, which, you know, we heard the Minister of Health stand up and acknowledge that he is encouraging members to vote in favour of – and that, quite honestly, was a bit of a surprise. It's very welcome news. I thank the minister for his support on this motion. Having been in this Chamber for quite some time, Mr. Speaker, as you're also well aware, it's rare that government will accept motions from the opposition and vice versa. You know, it's very exciting when those moments happen. I appreciate the Minister of Health acknowledging this, and my hope is that the Premier will also acknowledge this.

Some of my comments are going to be around the responsibility that we all have as the 87 Alberta legislators. We are in a position of leadership, a position where the public does – some look up to us, but the public does often listen to our words and what we say. You know, if we want to lead by example, if we want to be good role models, then we should be encouraging actions that will protect ourselves, our families, and our communities. The Premier, being the chief spokesperson for the province of Alberta, should be encouraging Albertans to get their flu shot and to get their COVID vaccinations. I appreciate the fact that the Premier respects every Albertan's individual choice, but encouraging people to do something that's going to protect their communities, I believe, is a responsibility of looking at the greater benefit versus just thinking of ourselves as individuals and it's my choice and I'll do what I want. Yes, but let's use our positions of influence to better our province, to better our communities.

I am hopeful. I will encourage all members to vote in favour of this motion. I think this motion will also demonstrate to our front-line health care professionals something that they've been asking this government for. I'll acknowledge that the previous Premier encouraged Albertans to get their vaccinations, standing in this Chamber.

Mr. Sabir: He offered a hundred dollars.

Mr. Bilous: Pardon me?

Mr. Sabir: A hundred dollars a job.

Mr. Bilous: Oh, right. Well, he even, yeah, offered a hundred dollars per job. That's a good point. I forgot about that one. Right. Yeah.

Well, regardless of that, the point is that there was an acknowledgement of his position and of the position of influence that we all have.

I will take my seat momentarily here, Mr. Speaker, but my hope is that, one, our Health critic will continue to hold the government to account but continue to press the Premier to use her position as Premier to influence Albertans to protect themselves, their families, and their communities.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my chair and encourage all members of the Chamber to vote in favour of this motion and to go out, get vaccinated. Let's protect Albertans. Let's protect our economy and do what's right.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Motion Other than Government Motion 502. Are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the hon. member to close debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to close debate on my motion calling for the Assembly to affirm its trust in the science-based research, including research and vaccine development here in Alberta, that led to the COVID-19 vaccine, acknowledging that it has saved the lives of tens of thousands of Albertans, and reject claims that that COVID-19 vaccine in any way is a bioweapon.

I appreciated the response from the Minister of Health, the lone response from any government member towards this motion, but I do appreciate that he recognized the history and the importance of vaccines, that he recognized that they are indeed life saving, that that includes all vaccines up to and including the COVID-19 vaccine, that he does not share the skepticism, outright misinformation that at times has been shared by the Premier. I appreciate that we have that in the Health minister's office and that indeed that is a perspective he brings.

He spoke of this government's continued work on an influenza vaccine campaign, noting they've increased by 3.5 per cent the number of vaccinations. That indeed is a good thing.

They're in the middle of a campaign, but again, Mr. Speaker, I would note it was only four days ago that the entire AMA section of pediatrics called on this government to do more. This has been a consistent pattern throughout the COVID-19 pandemic up until now, that this government chooses to act last, act least, be somewhat, shall we say, less than full throated at many times in its promotion of vaccination, walking a very careful line under the previous Premier and even more so under the current Premier, who, again, has chosen to court communities that spread outright disinformation and indeed used them to propel her into the position that she holds today. That is clear on the record, and I outlined it clearly.

I recognize that the government is making vaccines available, and certainly the Deputy Premier was very vocal in pointing out that it is an individual's choice. Indeed, it is an individual's choice, and we should be encouraging people to make that choice, not discouraging and spreading misinformation. Now, I did note that at a time this Deputy Premier came out and said that in terms of many of the public health measures that were brought forward, they were never about science but about political control and power. He thanked all those citizens, freedom convoys who had the courage to mobilize against what he called tyrannical policies.

Mr. Madu: Yeah. By forcing people. It's a choice.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, when we use that kind of politically charged rhetoric, we are tainting the choice people have the opportunity to make.

Let me remind this Deputy Premier that his government held a two-year, 3 and a half million dollar inquiry into anti-Alberta energy campaigns, claiming that there was disinformation about the oil industry. That is something that they thought was worth while to combat disinformation on. Of course, that report found that the organizations, individuals involved, in fact, had done nothing wrong. They just exercised their personal choice, their free speech and did not spread misinformation, but the government insisted on spending Albertans' time and money and a great deal of political hot air on combatting that because they claimed it hurt our economic interest and our reputation. Mr. Speaker, the kind of disinformation that's been supported by this Premier, that the Deputy Premier chose to skate up to in his tweet: that harms our economic interest. That hurts Alberta's reputation.

So they will stand and they will vote for this today – and I'm glad to see that – to help repair some of the damage that they have done and that they continue to do as this Premier continues to undermine public health in the province of Alberta. The Health minister continues to support her in doing so. The Premier was very clear during her leadership campaign why she was firing the chief medical officer of health, the board of AHS, and we will see about the board of the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta. It's because she said they were lawless during the pandemic. It had nothing to do with improving the health care system; it had to do with her political objectives in catering to a particular base. She said it. It's on the record.

We have this motion today. I'm glad to see that the government will support it. Perhaps this will help. Indeed, I hope to see that the Premier will stand and will give full-throated support to vaccination against influenza for children, indeed for adults, for seniors in the province of Alberta and that we will see this government take the action that is being called for to help address the very serious crisis in our health care system, particularly in terms of pediatric care.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 12, 2022

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6 Police Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to be here today to move the second reading of Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, which will ensure police in Alberta are more accountable and more responsive to the communities that they serve.

This is the first time Alberta's policing legislation has undergone substantial changes in 34 years. In that time the world and Alberta have changed, of course, dramatically. Policing has changed, too, Madam Speaker, and so have the public's expectations of the police. We've moved from having police forces with a narrow mandate to maintain law and order to having police services that still perform the vital function of keeping communities safe but do so in a much different environment. Today police are expected to involve their communities in developing approaches and solutions that we now understand to be very complex and often nuanced in public safety challenges.

Police derive their authority from having the confidence of the public that they serve, but maintaining public confidence isn't their job alone. Under the Police Act the legislated responsibility to ensure adequate policing throughout the province falls to the Alberta government. If we want our police services to be representative of the communities that they serve and respond to their needs, not just today but into the future, the provincial government has a responsibility to provide them with the framework in order to do so.

I'll now detail how the Police Amendment Act will serve this important purpose. Firstly, the legislation answers long-standing calls from a broad range of stakeholders, including the police, to reform the public complaint process. This legislation will establish an independent agency to handle complaints against the police, the police review commission. Establishing the police review commission replaces the system of police investigating police, which invites a perception of bias, with an independent body that will be responsible for receiving complaints, investigating them, and conducting any resulting disciplinary procedures.

This would make the complaints process totally independent by changing these functions from being handled in-house by police services and putting them under the authority of an arm's-length organization. By creating an independent agency to receive, investigate, and adjudicate complaints, we'll also make it easier for Albertans to access the process, stay updated on the progress of the case, and resolve their matters in a quicker fashion.

The Albert Serious Incident Response Team, which investigates deaths and serious injuries involving police services in Alberta as well as serious and sensitive allegations, would become part of the police review commission. We're proposing amendments to ensure every death and serious injury involving law enforcement is investigated independently and consistently by expanding ASIRT's mandate to include cases involving peace officers working for the province and authorized employers, including municipalities.

Bolstering public confidence, which is one of the main aims of this legislation, also aims in finding ways to ensure that police are in tune with the community's public safety goals and priorities. We're proposing amendments that will give Albertans a larger role in working with police to ensure their community's needs and aspirations are being met. Firstly, many communities across Alberta policed by the RCMP would gain a role in setting policing priorities and performance goals that they currently don't have under the current system.

If passed, this legislation will mandate the creation of formal governance bodies for communities policed by the RCMP, giving them oversight closer to what municipalities with stand-alone police services have via their local police commission. Communities policed by the RCMP currently have the option of forming policing committees, but during the stakeholder engagement that informed this legislation, we learned that most communities, unfortunately, have not done so. Although this legislation would mandate the creation of these civilian governance bodies, we've taken care to develop a model that respects the distinct needs of different sized communities.

For small and rural communities policed by the RCMP under the provincial police services agreement, we're proposing a provincial police advisory board. This group of communities is also represented by an interim board, established in conjunction with the police-funded model that was implemented in 2020, but the interim board is made up solely of municipal elected officials. This legislation would open membership on the provincial board to a much wider, broader scope of the public, with one seat designated for First Nations and representatives and one seat designated for representatives of the Métis communities.

In addition to those communities, there are 47 municipalities in Alberta that have their own contracts for the RCMP to police them. Communities with a population over 15,000 that have municipal RCMP contracts would be required to set up a local governance body. Smaller municipalities with a population under 15,000 will be represented by regional governance bodies unless they prefer to form their own local board.

This legislation would also give the public throughout Alberta a more meaningful role by requiring police to develop community safety plans. Community safety plans will require police to work more closely with civilian partners on strategies that go beyond enforcement and better address the root causes of crime. When you have greater collaboration between the police and their partners in the community, it leads to more co-ordination, and it helps identify gaps in services. Ensuring people get the help that they need when they need it, whether it's from the police or local social service agencies, will make our communities a much safer place.

The legislation will mandate diversity and inclusion plans that outline steps that police are taking to reflect their communities and to train officers about the distinct cultural needs of the communities that they work in. Improving those connections will result in better outcomes between police and the people that they serve. Additionally, building better relationships could lead to more opportunities for mentorship and encourage more people from diverse communities to pursue careers in policing.

This legislation also aims at increasing the diversity in voices that are involved in police governance by giving the minister the authority to appoint members to municipal police commissions. Provincial appointees on municipal police commissions are a common practice in several other provinces, including British Columbia, Ontario, Manitoba, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia.

The number of provincial appointees will be based on the size of the commission; however, it's important to add that what we're proposing here is just a seat at the table and more modest than what we see in our friends in British Columbia, where the province can appoint up to three-quarters of the members of their municipal police boards. The provincial government has a legislated responsibility to ensure adequate policing in Alberta, and this is a logical extension of that mandate.

Similarly, we are proposing that sections of the act governing ministerial intervention be clarified to allow the minister to step in at the request of police services or commissions in the event of a dispute at the local level.

Another proposed amendment will enable the minister to set provincial policing priorities, which will help foster consistency in policing right across this province.

Police commissions will also need to create their own policing priorities while taking the provincial priorities under consideration and report whenever there is a change. Police will need to report annually on their progress while they will increase accountability and transparency with the communities that they serve.

We're also proposing administrative changes that will underpin and support our reforms of the public complaints process. First, amendments will create standardized categories of complaints. This will establish a consistent framework on how the police review commission triages complaints to improve the public's understanding of the process. Further amendments will distinguish between police misconduct and employee performance, ensuring police services can better handle performance issues through human services and the collective bargaining process. Separating police misconduct from employee performance will allow the commission to focus on misconduct and help with a more timely resolution of the complaints.

Finally, there are the small, administrative changes to the Law Enforcement Review Board, most significantly the increase in the chair's term from a maximum of three years to five years.

The legislation we'll be introducing today represents a fundamental shift that reimagines police as an extension of the community and provides a variety of practical and realistic reforms aiming at getting us there. This legislation is the product of listening to a broad range of Albertans from all corners of the province from a variety of backgrounds, a variety of occupations. This is the culmination of years of important work that started in 2018, under the previous government, and included meetings with more than 200 organizations representing law enforcement, health and social service agencies and sectors, municipalities, Indigenous organizations, and diverse communities. We have heard from nearly 15,000 Albertans who completed the public survey as well as 1,500 respondents who filled out a survey for law enforcement members.

I hope that members on both sides of the House will support this legislation, which ensures police are more accountable to the public, more responsive to the community that they serve, which ultimately will help safer communities and build relationships between the community and the law enforcement at large.

With that, Madam Speaker, I thank you very much, and I'd like to move second reading of Bill 6.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the minister for bringing forward this piece of legislation. We can all agree that the most fundamental role of the government is to make sure that all Albertans can feel safe in their homes, in their communities, and across this province, and certainly law enforcement plays an important and fundamental role in making sure of that. On this side of the House I want to state for the record that we support civilian oversight of law enforcement, and we believe that policing should be responsive to the needs of the communities and reflective of the diversity of our communities.

There are a number of things that the minister also touched on that need to be unpacked in this piece of legislation, but before I do that, I do want to say that these changes are coming out of a review that we started in 2018. The purpose of that review was to make changes to the Police Act to make sure that the Police Act is responsive to Albertans' needs, but we have not seen any report coming out of that review. That report has not been shared with Albertans. It would have been nice to see what we heard from the communities across this province.

Also, that report is important for us to see because when it comes to this government's record, we have seen that despite significant opposition from the majority of Albertans in municipalities, the UCP remains hell bent on creating a costly provincial police force that no one is asking them for. Their own report says that that will cost them more than half a billion dollars – more than half a billion dollars – to set that up. Alberta Municipalities, Rural Municipalities of Alberta, and Albertans at large have opposed that idea, but still the UCP are pushing ahead with that.

We also know that early on the government changed the funding model for the municipalities and downloaded millions of dollars, 250-plus million dollars, onto municipalities. We also know that for the last three years they have made massive cuts to the Justice department budget. We also know that in 2015, when we started, for instance, the Legal Aid Alberta budget was $64 million. In 2018 the then Justice minister and MLA for Calgary-Mountain View entered into an agreement, a governance agreement, with Legal Aid Alberta, making Legal Aid Alberta funding $104 million at the end of 2019. In 2022 that funding has shrunk to $82 million. Those organizations have been calling on this government to sit down with them and pay up in the areas the government is owing to Legal Aid Alberta under that governance agreement, and so far we have not seen any action from this government.

Whenever the government says that these changes reflect what was in the report, it's hard to trust this government. But, as I said, we are all for civilian oversight of law enforcement. However, the problem with this piece of legislation is that there is one provision that a new body will be created and that the minister will appoint a CEO and registrar for that oversight body. The rest, literally everything governing the powers, duties, and functions of the commission, the provincial advisory board, and policing committees, is left for the regulations. These are the three bodies that were mentioned in the act, and literally everything – their powers, their duties, their functions – is left to the regulations.

There is one provision that there will be a commission that will be responsible for the oversight, and there is no other detail that is provided in this piece of legislation. Again, civilian oversight is really good. In principle we agree with that, but this piece of legislation leaves far too many details to regulations that are yet to be developed and will be developed by this cabinet.

A second thing. I will come back to this civilian oversight piece, but I also want to say that throughout this legislation the government is trying to get more control and concentrate all those powers in the minister's office. Before the minister was responsible for establishing standards for police commissions and policing committees, but now they are also adding that now they will be the one setting the priorities instead of working collaboratively with those commissions. To achieve that goal, what this legislation is proposing is that now the minister will be able to appoint members to different police commissions across this province. There is no detail whatsoever on how those members will be picked, whether that will be a public process or if it will be just at the minister's discretion.

The concern there is that when we were in government, there was an open process, the Alberta boards recruitment process, where every single appointment was published on that and all Albertans were invited to apply for that. The criteria was not who you know; the criteria was what you know and whether you qualify for that position. Since this government came into power, there is no such process, and we have pretty much seen UCP insiders, former party office holders put in positions like senior advocate and on other boards. Here we are talking about policing, so certainly there is a concern that if the minister is able to stack the deck at his or her own discretion, that could lead to the politicization of policing. That's a huge concern.

There is a certain formula that the legislation suggests as to how the minister will appoint these board members, that for every three members the minister is going to appoint one member on the commission. However, there is another residual power in this legislation, where the minister could appoint up to 49 per cent of the commission – 49 per cent – and there is not a word about how those members will be chosen, what their qualifications will be – and I will ask that later – who they have consulted on these changes. Were municipalities consulted about these changes? Were First Nations consulted about these changes? Was this something that the Police Act review recommended? Since they never published that report, we will not know whether that was recommended by that review.

The minister is also able to establish policing committees now, which will be mandatory. The history of these policing committees is that existing legislation allows for these committees, but historically there have been only four or five established in this province. For the most part the elected representatives of municipalities, the mayor and council, have worked with law enforcement on policing priorities, and then, in the case of First Nations, the chief and council have worked on such priorities. But now the minister is making those committees that were there, permissible under previous legislation, existing legislation, which were not used – now the government is making them mandatory. When it comes to the details of who will be on those committees, how people will be selected, there is no detail whatsoever. Their powers, their duties, their functions: that will be determined through regulations. Again, the most critical details are left for this government to decide behind closed doors in cabinet. That certainly seems like overreach again by this government, which cannot be trusted with those powers.

The other thing. They are establishing a police advisory board, which will take over the current board, and there will be 15 people appointed to it. Again, they will all be appointed and picked by this government. The only requirement there is that there be one member of a First Nation, one member of a Métis settlement. In a province like Alberta, where we have 48 First Nations, three different treaty areas, I would want to know how that number was reached and what the recommendations were coming out of the Police Act review. Was that something Albertans recommended? Was that something that the minister consulted on with First Nations?

As I said, civilian oversight, independent oversight is a good thing, and we support that. But for that commission, the police advisory board, municipal policing committees, regional policing committees, their powers, their functions, their membership – everything is left for this government to decide, and there is nothing in this legislation to make sense of how this new model will work. I don't think that the government was ready to bring this bill forward. They have not done their homework. They just want to make an announcement that, oh, they are bringing forward civilian oversight.

Another thing is that for all people who are appointed to municipal or regional policing committees, the government is asking the council to pay for the remuneration or allowance to the members of the committee in accordance with the regulation. So there is a possibility that the government will establish these committees and further download costs onto the municipalities, which they have done previously.

Then there are other provisions. A few were requested by police services, the police commission. The minister now can direct the council. When asked in the technical briefing what kind of matters can be directed by the minister and where the minister can intervene, it didn't seem like anything was on the table, including police budgets, that now the minister will be able to intervene in.

There are additional reports that the minister may request from the commission, from municipalities. However, there is no mention whether such reports will be made available to the public, and as we saw from that police review report, this government seldom wants to be transparent, so they cannot be taken on their words.

I mentioned about the police review commission earlier. It says that the minister may appoint a chief executive officer and a registrar, and then there is absolutely nothing in this legislation that can tell us how much that will cost, how this organization will be staffed, what their function will be aside from the fact that they're a civilian oversight body. How will they operate? What's the time frame for this commission to be set up and up and running? There are no details around any of that.

I think there are a few other good things. I think one good thing I would like to highlight is that this act will take peace officers and sheriffs under the jurisdiction of the commission, so complaints arising from their conduct now can also be investigated.

Before this piece of legislation ASIRT was the independent, arm's-length body that was tasked to investigate serious harm and injuries. Now this legislation makes ASIRT subordinate to the commission. Again, I think I would like to know who was consulted on this change, why this was the best route, and will there be further consultation about that? There is still a lot that is left to the regulation, where they will determine the powers and duties of the commission.

There are a few other things; for instance, the government has set the limitation period for one year. Again, why was that one year chosen, and what will happen if one year's time has passed or somebody has retired or switched police services? There is no mention of that.

In general I would say that the intention of the bill is good, to bring civilian oversight to make police more responsive to the needs of Albertans, but government left far too many details to regulations. I think there are many substantial details that generally are included in the legislation, and they should have been included in this.

The second thing is that the government has given itself power to appoint members to various police commissions. I think that's overreach.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise to speak on Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022. The bill will make important changes, and I appreciate the comments from the previous speaker. I enjoyed a bunch of those references. One of my favourites was one of the ones that the hon. member closed with, that the government will give themselves power to do things. Well, the government doesn't give itself power; the people of Alberta give the government power at an election every four years. For someone that claims to have finished law school, I thought that that was a really interesting comment to have heard in this House.

I also heard comments about the act, whether it was – I heard at different points. If you check the Hansard, I'm sure you'll find at different points in the discussion we heard comments where the hon. member said that it was too slow, based on some report done some time ago, and then a couple of paragraphs later the hon. member said that it was too fast and the government couldn't possibly have time to have done it right. Clearly, what we just heard was a bunch of gobbledygook with no real focus or real consistent amount of thought into what's actually happening.

Here's the other thing. I appreciate that the hon. member said that civilian oversight was a good thing – probably one of those few sentences that I agreed with in what I just heard – but, also, then the hon. member went on to complain about all the things that would be necessary to provide that civilian oversight, and they were all bad.

Madam Speaker, it seems to me that this is a bill that is well intended. I can tell you that as a person in this Legislature – I may not be the only one. I'm probably one of very few that actually sat on a police commission for a couple of years, so I can tell you that civilian oversight is a good thing, and it's a good thing to support police.

Now, I appreciate folks on the other side: many of them are on the defund-police camp, which is not really supportive of police. I myself am on the I-support-police camp. Having been part of civilian oversight in the past, Madam Speaker, I can tell you that it makes a big difference. Let's face it. Many of us, if we're honest with ourselves, if we had to pass judgment on what a good job or a bad job we have done, we'd probably give ourselves a passing grade, and, in fairness, in some cases that would be correct.

But where it gets complicated, Madam Speaker, is if we perhaps didn't deserve a passing grade, it might be hard for us to give ourselves a failing grade if we were judging ourselves. So, let's face it, civilian oversight is a very good thing. This is part of the reason why even the rules now, before this piece of legislation, have it such that in some cases a police service from an area, a jurisdiction, a geographical jurisdiction, different from the one where somebody's charged, if there is a connection to the police, gets investigated by a police service out of that particular jurisdiction, for obvious reasons. It gives credibility to the investigation, it gives credibility to the police service in the area where the event took place so that people who actually look at this don't say: well, yeah, the police investigated themselves; who could take that seriously? It's not fair to the police, actually, so this actually is supportive of our police services, which we all ought to support here because they are the ones that are one of our last lines of defence. Them and, of course, all of our other first responders.

Madam Speaker, I would say to you that this is a bill that has been well thought out. It has a very good chance of making Alberta a better place, and I, for one, support it and recommend that other members of the House do the same.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. This is an interesting bill. I have a lot of questions about it. I will say to the diatribe, I suppose, from the previous speaker that it's a bit rich to get up and be confused about what bill you're speaking to and then proceed to complain that the last speaker didn't know what he was talking about.

On the bill, Madam Speaker, Bill 6, which has, I think, a lot in it, I'd like to start, rather ironically, by speaking about what I think are the good things in it. The first good thing in it is the police review commission, in principle. I say "in principle" because a lot of details are left to the regulations, so one is never totally certain what's going to happen there. But I think, overall, the idea of a centralized police review commission is a very good one. My recollection is that this is something that everyone was asking for. The police chiefs were asking for this, the people that acted for complainants were asking for this, the oversight bodies were asking for this, so this is, overall, I would say, a very good step. I think it is better governance.

It certainly removes the sort of appearance – because, of course, we had ASIRT for higher level things, but for things that weren't death, serious injury, or a serious and sensitive matter, those things would typically go to either another police service or the specific police service being investigated. It just didn't always look great, and it was very challenging for the police services to manage that, because even if they did a good job, which they did, by and large, the vast majority of the time, it didn't look great. I think that's a very good thing. I think everyone will be happy with that.

The guiding principles, also, which are at the beginning of the act, I think are good. They're good principles insofar as they go. I might quibble somewhat with the language. I feel it's a little bit out of date, the language around mental health rather than trauma informed, the language around respecting diversity rather than, say, addressing something like systemic racism or dealing with intersectionality. I think there's more modern language that could have been used, but in principle I think those guiding principles are good. So those are the things that I think are in the right direction.

There are some things – I don't want to say they're bad. I would more say they're questionable in that they don't have sufficient substance, and there isn't really a clear reason. I guess I'm a natural skeptic – might be the way to put it – so when someone does something and there's no clear reason for why you would do that thing, I always sort of wonder what's going on.

Ms Hoffman: What do you think is going on?

Ms Ganley: Well, this is the thing. I don't know what's going on.

There's the establishment of a provincial board and then municipal and regional committees, and in both instances – I'll read out the section. With respect to the provincial board – it's section 28.02 in the act – "the Provincial Police Advisory Board shall have the powers and perform the duties and functions set out in the regulations." That's the entire substance of what the provincial police advisory board will do. Its powers, duties, and functions: that's, like, one hundred per cent of what it does, and that will all be in the . . . [interjection] Oh, an intervention.

Ms Hoffman: If you're okay with it.

Ms Ganley: Yes, I am.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. It's not every day that I get to ask an intervening question to the former chair of the Legislative Review Committee, so having the opportunity to do so, I would say that one of the things that I appreciate about the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is her incredible attention to detail. That definitely applied to bills that came before this House but also to regulations that didn't necessarily come to this place because regulations are passed behind closed doors.

I would say: what is one of the member's concerns around a section being that broadly defined to be later spelled out in regulation? For me, as a not lawyer, one of my concerns would be that we don't get the clarity about what the actual purpose is, that that is determined just by a subset of the members in this Assembly, a subset within the government caucus, and that there is no clear transparency. Sometimes, as we know, regulations aren't necessarily communicated in the clearest of ways to those that might be impacted. So if the Member for Calgary-Mountain View could elaborate on that, I would find it helpful.

Ms Ganley: I would be delighted to elaborate on that. I love talking about the difference between legislation and subordinate regulations. Nobody else loves it, but I love it.

Yeah, generally in good legislation what I would say is a rule of thumb is that the legislation, which is the piece that comes to the Legislature, which is the piece that is passed by all elected members – so arguably everyone who doesn't live in Calgary-Elbow or Calgary-Lougheed now in this room is represented, and they have a voice in this room. That's the purpose of representative democracy. So the legislation should have the substance of the issue. The regulations should be left to sort of work out details or things that change frequently or maybe, you know, like a process or something, but you wouldn't normally leave everything.

You might say that additional ways in which the commission would do its work would be there, you might say that they can add sort of additional powers, maybe, in certain circumstances, but generally – generally – you would want in the legislative part to broadly define what the powers are and what the duties are. The powers, duties, and functions are what the board does; otherwise, you don't know what the board does aside from the title. It's called a policing advisory committee, but that's pretty much it. So that's a concern.

With respect to the municipal and regional committees – the section is 28.06, again – “a policing committee shall have the powers and perform the duties and functions set out in the regulations.” Again, this is very, very broad, and the reason I am reluctant in this case is because, again, at least in theory, if a constituent were to come into my office and say, “You voted for this bill and it does something I don't like; I would like you to explain to me why you thought that was good or why you thought it was worth voting for,” in this case I wouldn't be able to explain anything to them because I'm being asked to vote on the bill without knowing what the substance of the issue is. That's way too much power being devolved to cabinet. [interjection] I see another intervention.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for allowing the intervention. I guess where my head goes, based on the remarks that I've heard so far, is that there are very significant parallels between this section within the bill and Bill 1, which of course has been already . . .

Member Irwin: Rammed through.

Ms Hoffman: Well, rammed through, indeed, but also plagued with scandal and deep public concerns about its legality. Knowing that it's going to be brought to the courts by Indigenous leaders already is something that's been talked about significantly. Definitely, this section of the bill, I think, is intended to give large, sweeping powers within this piece of legislation, so I'm wondering if the member can maybe talk about other times – I know that this is only the fifth bill brought in under the current Premier and the current cabinet although many of the cabinet members were there previously, often in the same portfolio – what some of the concerns are around seeing this type of sweeping power delegated to the authority of cabinet.

Ms Ganley: Yes. Thank you very much to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. Might I add, as well, that you are looking lovely this evening.

Ms Hoffman: Aw, thanks.

Ms Ganley: Returning to the bill, yeah, I think that's an excellent point, and that is what, to a certain degree, gives me cause for concern here. This isn't the first time we've seen it. We saw it in Bill 10. Obviously, that was under a previous Premier. Then the government had to go and sort of walk that language back after giving itself too much power. We saw it again in Bill 1 in this session, the sovereignty act, which again gave cabinet way too much power. So it does appear to be a theme that the power is sort of centralized in the hands of cabinet, and that's not good governance. I know that good governance isn't always a thing that is a sexy political issue, but it's important. Without it we can't govern ourselves, and that's extremely problematic.

I think this is problematic. It does cause me to question. You know, I would be willing to give it the benefit of the doubt but for, as the member mentioned, these previous instances in which there has been sort of a massive overreach by this government attempting to sort of take too much power. Everything is in the regulations. That's my big concern with this.

My other question is: who's asking for this? As the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall pointed out, you know, there was a consultation. It was started in 2018 originally, under our government. The report from that has – I mean, it came back and then never went out. The government still has it; they've just never released it. I don't recall anyone asking for this.

In fact, these sorts of regional and municipal committees are allowable under the current legislation. Under the current legislation they're permissible. They're not required, but they're permissible, and there have been maybe a handful in the entire history of the province. People can do this now and they choose not to, so I don't understand why we're forcing it on them. Who's asking for this? Who is it that wants this? Who thinks it's helpful, and why do they think it's helpful? That might help us to define what it is that the powers, duties, and functions ought to be.

Member Irwin: Oh, just one more intervention.

Ms Ganley: Oh, sorry.

Member Irwin: No, that's okay. It's hard when I'm behind you.

Thank you so much. I do hesitate to interrupt the Member for Calgary-Mountain View because her knowledge is deep, but I want to allow her to be able to speak without interruption for the next 10 minutes or so.

She brings up a really good point about consultation. Again, I do hope that the minister – he touched on it slightly in his opening remarks, but I would love to hear, you know, who exactly was consulted. Who's asking for this? It wouldn't be the worst thing if he could even table the folks, the groups, the individuals who were consulted. I think we'd like to hear that, especially given what we heard from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, this government's lack of ability to consult, as we saw with Bill 1, the sovereignty act. We've got multiple treaty chiefs, First Nations chiefs from around this province who've spoken out, who've said that there was absolutely no consultation that took place. In fact, that minister's office was shut out. So I would give an opportunity to the minister to clear the record.

Thank you. No more interventions.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much. I appreciate that. That was very helpful, actually, because it reminded me to sort of go back and run through the history of this matter a little bit. I don't think anybody disagrees that the Police Act needs to be amended. In fact, I think that there is broad agreement on a lot of things that need to be done. However, there are some places where the details are problematic, and the act is sort of a mishmash of amendments, and that sometimes makes it run in a bit of a clunky way.

In 2018 it was me who got to go out with the consultation, and I went very broad. I took that consultation to social-serving agencies, to stakeholders throughout, because the truth is that the problems that occur in policing are impacted by health and vice versa. The problems that occur in terms of social disorder, in terms of mental health and addictions: the police get those problems because, at the end of the day, when all other services fail, the police have to pick up the phone. They are legally obligated when they are called to pick up the phone, so it is often the case that the police find themselves involved in matters that are not best dealt with by the police, that would have been better dealt with by a mental health intervention, that would have been better dealt with by an addictions intervention, that would have been better dealt with by having housing and appropriate supports.

In order to try and solve that problem, we did a very broad consultation, because we wanted to talk to those other systems about what belonged there. We wanted to talk to housing and to mental health and to addictions about how they could better handle those issues so that they didn't wind up with the police, who normally – again, they have to show up because they're legally required to turn up when they're called. The police don't think that they are the best place for those mental health and addictions issues either. It's just that the system is not designed to work together. Anyway, that is why we did the consultations so broadly, because that was one of the problems we were attempting to solve.

Now, my immediate successor – there have been so many; I've lost track – the former Member for Calgary-Elbow, thought that this was a laughable approach. He made fun of this approach. He thought it was ridiculous to consult with all of these outside stakeholders. He said that he'd have the act in by 2020.

Ms Hoffman: Oh, you can say his name now.

Ms Ganley: I still don't think I can say his name.

Ms Hoffman: A member who's no longer sitting . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'll just remind that all comments are to come through the chair.

Ms Ganley: Oh, sorry, Madam Chair. Anyway, it doesn't matter. Everyone knows who I'm talking about. The former Member for Calgary-Elbow, currently unrepresented, yeah, found it hilarious that we would consult with these sorts of stakeholders around mental health and addictions and all those things.

I had not heard that another round of consultation went out, so it would be very helpful to me, and I think all members of this House, to know what consultation was done and who was talked to and sort of what the follow-up from that was. That first brush that we did in 2018 was never supposed to be the whole conversation. That was supposed to be a scoping of the conversation. That was a conversation around: how broad do we need the conversation to be? Who needs to be included? What do we need to talk about? What are the areas of focus? It was, like, designed to set up principles and then have further conversations. So I would love to know what happened to all that.

Okay. I am now going to – oh. Other things that are questionable in my view. The minister's ability to step into disputes: I find that a large centralization of power. It seems odd to me. I don't really understand why you would do that. The minister is not a chief of police. The minister is meant to be oversight of the chiefs of police. It doesn't seem like great governance, so I would love to know a little more about that to make me a little bit more comfortable with it. Again, it just seems like a huge centralization of power.

The questions I have. I note, at least with respect to level 1 complaints and possibly others, that the costs associated with the investigation are to be borne by the police services themselves. Just overall, I'd like to know how much this is going to cost and, like, how the costs will be divvied up, whether they will all be borne by the police services paying into it, and what we expect the total cost to be. What exactly will be the powers, duties, and functions of the board, broadly speaking? Who asked for the Solicitor General to be able to step into disputes in the case of a dispute? I find that, again, a very weird thing, so I would love to know who asked for that and why we think it's a good idea. Okay. I'd also love to know who asked for the advisory boards because, again, I don't recollect – like, people can do it now and they don't, so I'm a little curious.

Oh. Big issue. Currently the disciplinary process loses jurisdiction when an officer resigns. Is that problem addressed in this legislation, and does it intend to be addressed? That's one of the biggest problems that needed to be fixed.

Okay. I have a lot more. Do I have . . .

Member Irwin: You've got, I think – time check? – a minute.

The Deputy Speaker: About a minute.

Ms Ganley: About a minute. Okay.

I would just love to know a little bit more about the substance. I can see that a complaint is made, it goes through the process. It seems generally good. The minister intervening thing, again, is a bit curious, so I'm hoping that the minister can answer those questions. Being as they were asked at second reading, hopefully, they can answer those in committee.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will adjourn debate in what I think is just in the nick of time.

The Deputy Speaker: Actually, you had, like, 35 seconds left, but maybe I shouldn't tell you that.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

[Adjourned debate December 7: Mr. Deol]

The Deputy Speaker: Anybody wishing to speak to Bill 5 in second reading? Seeing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: May I just have a check as to how much time my colleague, the member who . . .

The Deputy Speaker: It's too late because you stood. So now it's your time. I don't know how much time is left. My apologies.

Ms Hoffman: Okay. That's okay. I rise tonight as the first speaker to Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. While others may have been so keen to want to speak to it, I look forward to hearing what they have to say now that we are on that bill. It has been brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Acadia, who is currently the Minister of Justice.

Of course, it does have implications in other areas, namely agriculture, as it relates to amending the legislation of the Sale of Goods Act. That, of course, is a follow-through in response to federal legislation changes that were made around being able to identify and record the vehicle and registration of grain being delivered to an elevator and changing a "track buyer" to "grain dealer." I think that that certainly is a good move, and I'm glad that the current government hasn't decided that they are as opposed to that as they are to some other things to date. Definitely, this is around ensuring that we have a consistently strong reputation when it comes to the sale and distribution of our world-class grain products.

When we still had the Canadian Wheat Board a number of years ago now, probably about a decade ago, maybe even slightly longer, I had the opportunity to visit and to learn about some of the ways that we were using that process to be able to market our products internationally, and one of the things that they did is that they had a test kitchen. They had a test kitchen as well as a test brewery as well as a test distillery, and they used that to be able to say: if you're using barley that's grown in the prairies, here are some excellent recipes that you can use. A lot of buyers were purchasing those products to be able to make the recipes as they'd been tested in that kitchen and then later sold in, for example, distilleries in parts of the valley in California that focuses on other types of alcoholic products. They were using Canadian products to help build and grow their market share in that area. I found it incredibly interesting, and I think that the collaboration that was in place around the sale and distribution of Canadian products certainly has strong merit.

I think that part of the reason why the federal government has brought this piece in is around ensuring that if there are any issues with a product, it can be traced back to its place of origin to make sure that we don't have to destroy any products unnecessarily. I think that making sure that we have the record of the vehicle and the registration and that we can track the buyer to the final dealer is an important piece to make sure that we don't impede our ability to sell our products locally, nationally, or internationally when it comes to our world-class agricultural products. I wanted to begin by saying that piece.

Definitely, there are a few other pieces in this bill that give me a bit of a pause for consideration. I appreciate that we were able to get a bit of an interjurisdictional comparison through briefings that we've had from officials. One of the big pieces that seems to be an outlier in terms of the interjurisdictional piece is the fact that the current cap around civil court rulings is $50,000 here in Alberta. The bill proposes to raise that cap to $200,000. That's a significant increase, quadrupling the cap, and $50,000 is closer in line with what the interjurisdictional comparisons are. I believe it averages at $85,000. That is a significant increase over what it used to be. I guess one of the questions that it begs for me is why we think it's important to raise it by such a significant amount. Don't we anticipate that that will drive more traffic towards the civil courts as opposed to where they lie today?

And with that additional traffic to the civil courts – we know that we've seen many budgets brought forward by the current governing party that have not kept up with the current demands, let alone the increased demands that we will likely see should this part be passed. I don't think it's a reason to not support the bill. I think there are a number of pieces in this legislation that I'm generally supportive of, but that definitely is a piece that's cause for some concern. I think it's important for us to be able to ensure that if we are making decisions in this place that will drive up traffic to different types of court, including the civil court, there should be resources put in place so that people can have access to justice or some sort of remedy in a timely fashion.

I know that the government has been more focused on renaming courts than actually staffing courts, thinking that it's going to magically make things better if you change the title. It definitely hasn't, and we know that a lot of people have waited far too long, especially over the last three and a half years under the current government, to receive some sort of clarification of remedy and decision as it comes to a number of their cases that they've brought forward. So we will probably have at least one recommendation, one potential amendment, but of course in second we won't be in a position to bring that forward – it will be something that probably comes at the next stage of the legislation – and that's definitely something that we will speak to in greater detail at that time.

But when members do speak from the governing side, if they can speak to that cap piece. I hope that that's something that current members of the government caucus have asked questions of. We know that the process that they have in place – they definitely talk about the fact that they have bill briefings behind closed doors in caucus, and I hope that they've asked the question around the cap for the civil court rulings being increased from $50,000 to $200,000 and would appreciate some clarity being offered to this House either by the front bench or any member of the government caucus.

Just to summarize, this bill does amend six different pieces of legislation. I've touched on a couple so far. There is another piece that we haven't talked about yet at this stage or as it relates to the Referendum Act. There is an amendment to ensure that all referendums require a motion of the Assembly. I guess one of the questions I have with that is why it is that the cabinet believes that limiting it to having to come to this place before something can go to the people of Alberta would be a move that they think is in the best interests of all Albertans, limiting those who can actually bring forward referendum questions. I know that there was talk under previous members of the House: the former Premier, who's no longer a member of this Assembly, Jason Kenney; the former Justice minister who, again, is no longer a member of this Assembly, Doug Schweitzer.

I also have to say that this has given me a moment to reflect on the fact that we've had three resignations in this place in short order. The Premier acted very quickly, as did her cabinet, to call a by-election for one of those seats but left the seat of the former former Justice minister vacant in Calgary-Elbow, unrepresented, as it says currently on their website. They have no MLA. There is not a current party that represents those folks. Then, of course, the day that Bill 1, the job-killing sovereignty act, was introduced, Jason Kenney decided to resign as well.

It definitely, I think, gives some pause for concern about what this government, the current government, has chosen to make priorities for themselves and if it is fair to trust that the current government, which, of course, holds presently the majority of the seats in the province of Alberta, is indeed in the best position to decide what warrants a referendum question or not. It seems like there could be more power held in the hands of many, an opportunity to – if this is really about bringing the power of the people to the forefront and making sure they have a chance to weigh in on matters of significance to them, whether it be provincial, local, municipal, school-related, or federal issues that the government wants to call a referendum on, why is it that the provincial government is the only one to determine who is in a position to be able to make that call and ask for that clarity from the people of Alberta?

It feels like it's an attempt to use political influence yet again, as we've seen, political interference as it relates to ensuring that every Albertan has an opportunity to elect and have an elected member representing them in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Again, we don't have that for Calgary-Lougheed. We don't have that for Calgary-Elbow. Why is the current government so scared to let the people of Calgary actually have a by-election and have their voice heard in this place? That relates directly to this section around referendums in that the government wants to decide what referendum questions they'll have. The government wants to decide where they'll have by-elections. It seems incredibly antidemocratic, and we've seen this be a bit of a theme so far under the leadership of the current Premier.

It definitely brings some significant pause for consideration. Do we as Members of the Legislative Assembly want to delegate that power again just to ourselves, or do we want to truly channel representative democracy and ensure that all members of the population have an opportunity to, through some form of fair lobbying, be able to bring forward referendums for the people of Alberta as opposed to just Members of the Legislative Assembly bringing forward a motion and getting majority support? [interjection] I'm happy to welcome an intervention from my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I wasn't going to intervene, but I guess I'm passionate about justice statutes. You know, one of the things that I think is an interesting connection here is that you talked about referendums, and you kind of alluded to the fact that this is a government that's not really been listening to the people of Alberta. We saw that most recently with the sovereignty act, Bill 1, pushing that through, and hearing even more about that today, that not only were First Nations across this province not consulted, nor were even some of the key cabinet ministers. I guess my question for the Member, soon to be minister, for Edmonton-Glenora – sorry; knock on wood – is: is she concerned about the fact that there are these pieces around, let's say, referenda in this piece of legislation when we've seen a government quite recently, in fact, really not heeding the wishes of Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the intervention and interjection and the opportunity to reflect on that, because when I woke this morning and began reading the media that had broke over the evening and saw that there was at least one – I think it was two referenced – employee of the government of Alberta within Indigenous Relations directly speaking to media about their grave concerns and the fact that they know that their minister has been raising concerns around Bill 1 and its lack of consultation, its lack of engagement with the folks that are supposed to be partners, that work being led by the Minister of Indigenous Relations and the department that supports that minister, it caused significant concern for myself and, I'm sure, for many others, to see people feel brave enough to come forward, when they work in this building, to speak about the concerns that they have around their inability to do their job when the Premier's office shuts down any feedback and doesn't allow for that type of voice to be raised and significant concerns to be heard and, in turn, acted upon.

We've seen it under the current government in other areas of deep public concern as well, as it relates to people wanting to whistle-blow as it relates to their own safety and well-being within this building, for example. So for the government to say that we can have the public weigh in on items that only we, the majority government, deem them to be able to vote on a referendum question is – it should be concerning to all of us, I think, that the government wants to continue to consolidate power around a few friends and insiders to the Premier.

I know many people, probably, in this place will say, like: well, you know, it's a new Premier; let's try to give her a chance. But I would say that the record so far on these first six bills that we've had an opportunity to debate in this place doesn't bode well for the voice of private members, for the impact of improved processes, or for the public at large. We've seen an incredible attempt to rein in power and control around a few specific people that the Premier chooses to surround herself with, and I think that that is not beneficial to the public at large or to the roles and responsibilities that each of us carries as members of this Assembly.

Let's go to some of the stuff in this bill that is probably a step in the right direction. I am going to speak specifically around the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act – that's, again, a Justice bill – specifically the piece around child and spousal support orders from other provinces and how we will have an expedited enforcement process. Some of the pieces right now that are definitely slowing that ability of spouses and children to receive fair compensation relate to the fact that the orders can't currently be provided over the telephone or electronically, that they have to have original documents transmitted, for example, and received. I think having electronic or telephone transmission will be an improvement. It will help expedite the process.

I think the other piece, around removing the need for sworn documents, is also beneficial. I think there are other ways that we can ensure their authenticity, including notary and ensuring true copy. So I think that this will be a potential improvement to the legislation. I think it will put us more in line with other jurisdictions, and it has the potential to ensure that partners, spouses who are entitled to compensation and children who also are entitled to compensation, compensation which they need, usually, to pay the rent and keep the lights on and keep food on the table – I think removing some of the red tape in this bill could be a benefit.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that. Happy to rise on this bill. Now, changes in this bill include amendments to the Provincial Court of Alberta and Court of King's Bench – there: King's, not Queen's. Good. I got that. I had to think about that for a second. Still have the reflex to say Queen's, but it is indeed the Court of King's Bench. The Alberta government will be enhancing the court's ability to fulfill its duties to provide fair, accessible, and timely resolutions for Alberta. It will be achieved by allowing more claims to be dealt with through the Provincial Court, which uses a simplified and more cost-effective process than the Court of King's Bench.

Now, I heard the member opposite talk about access to justice. I certainly would agree that that's an important issue, and I guess the change from $50,000 to $200,000 for Provincial Court claims, instead of going through the Provincial Court bench, should actually, I believe, provide more access. Now, it is arguable: what is the right number? I suppose that's something that's the perfect argument, Madam Speaker, because we could argue about that for six days and not agree: is the right number $1 or $10 million? Well, it's highly likely to be somewhere in between, and we've chosen something in between, and what was here before is something in between. I think that's a fair thing to comment on.

Nonetheless, it's been a number of years, and I sincerely hope that most if not all members of the House would think it might be time to increase that number. If the members on the other side want to quibble about whether the number is the right number or not, again, I suppose we could fight about that all day, but at least, I hope, we can agree that it is indeed high time and perhaps then some to increase that number to provide what the member opposite suggested was concerned about, which is access to justice.

Provincial courts, of course, are located across 72 communities and will provide Albertans with easier access to legal proceedings and quicker resolutions while, we hope, maintaining the same fair and high-quality rulings that Albertans depend upon.

Now, the last time civil court claims were increased was indeed 2014. Again, I'm hopeful that this change will be seen by most Albertans as a positive thing. Indeed, once you get past that limit, generally speaking, you need to hire a lawyer. I appreciate that you can represent yourself, but there's a saying about a client that represents themselves. Somebody probably wiser than me made that claim, and I won't pass judgment on the claim; I'll just say that there is a point where one is probably wise to get professional judgment when they're dealing with some matters.

The bill will also support our hard-working farmers by eliminating some bureaucratic record-keeping requirements for buyers, sellers, and distributors of grain. Our farmers work tirelessly to feed the people of our province; indeed, Alberta farmers work hard to feed people all across this planet, and they should not be burdened with excess and redundant paperwork and regulation. I hope we can consider that a good piece of legislation.

Work will be done to support single parents in their ability to collect child and spousal support payments from ex-partners who live outside of the province. Under the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, Alberta would work with other jurisdictions to allow for the electronic exchange of certified documents in order to facilitate the enforcement of these orders. Let's face it, Madam Speaker. If there is a parent living in another province that is legally obligated to provide funding to the parent with custody and their children, I sincerely hope we can all agree that having some teeth in the legislation to require those payments to be made to provide for the basic needs for the parent in custody and, mostly importantly, for those children – I sincerely hope that members of the House consider that to be a positive change.

Of course, we're not really leading the pack on this. On one hand, you could say that maybe we are; on the other hand, when you're leading the pack, you take some risk of making the first mistakes. In this particular case similar steps have been taken in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia, so I think, based on the experience we have and learning from those other provinces, we can have reasonable hope that this particular change will be a positive one and one that's been proven in other places. Isn't it nice that we can bring those learnings here to benefit Alberta families and, particularly, Alberta children? It would allow Alberta to join these provinces in enhancing single parents' ability to collect critical child and spousal support. I'm feeling very positive about that.

The bill introduced also includes the Trustee Act. This proposed amendment would allow and provide Albertans with certainty that trusts will not fail when left temporarily without a trustee; furthermore, the act would remove the transfer of trust property to the courts, thus making it easier for such property to move directly to a new trustee once one is appointed. I think that's also important. Certainly, the courts would always, always do the best job that they could. Certainly, our government is not doubting that; I hope nobody in this House is doubting that. Nonetheless, a trustee that may have better personal knowledge of the family, the children, the parents: I think that we can agree that there's a better chance of a good job being done when that familiarity takes place.

Additional changes to the Referendum Act. This act demonstrates the government's commitment to strengthening democracy in the province by ensuring that Albertans have a direct say on important matters. The proposed adjustment would clarify the requirement to bring legislation to the Legislature, and this only applies to constitutional matters. I think the member aside certainly seemed to me to suggest that all of those resolutions would have to go to here. I'm pointing out that this is just for constitutional matters, so indeed not all of those would have to come to the House.

Now, here's what I think is really important. One of the most pertinent changes included in Bill 5 is allowing the Legislative Assembly security to carry firearms. This change was proposed by the Speaker and the Sergeant-at-Arms in order to better ensure the health and safety of elected officials, staff, and visitors to the Legislative Assembly. The Sergeant-at-Arms is responsible for directing, controlling, and managing security personnel while the Speaker's office is responsible for the overall security of the Legislative Assembly, its committees, and members.

Now, Madam Speaker, following the 2014 shooting on Parliament Hill – and I just have to say that this is part of the reason why this piece is so important to me. I actually was there. Some members of the House may remember that, and some may not. I can tell you it was not a pleasant experience, not because I did anything right, wrong, or indifferent. By sheer happenstance I was leaving the grounds of the Parliament building. At the time when the shooter was coming through the front gates, I was trying to get out of the front gates. You know, one of the few claims to fame I may have in this world is that the next day every newspaper in Canada had a picture of the shooter coming through the gates and an old, fat, bald guy about three steps ahead of him heading the other direction.

But here's what's important. That's kind of fun for me to tell, but what's actually more important is that at that time our national Parliament allowed very few firearms in the Parliament. In fact, the Sergeant-at-Arms, if I have my facts straight – I think I do here, and if I get corrected, I'll live with that. I believe the Sergeant-at-Arms is the only one allowed to have a firearm. It was the Sergeant-at-Arms that stopped the perpetrator of the crime by shooting the perpetrator. I don't think anybody would argue that wasn't a legitimate action to take, but what if there were zero guns? Wow. I'm just a little bit afraid of how much more damage there would have been.

It actually leads us to the question that we're answering here today with this piece of legislation: should there be a measured and well-thought-out number of people with firearms in a Legislative Assembly or a Parliament in Canada? After what I saw in 2014, I certainly feel that the answer is yes. This legislation actually answers that question for the people of Alberta. If there's ever an issue that all members of the Legislature, no matter what party we belong to and what else we believe – I think that something we should all have in common is that we want each other to go home safe every day. Even if we think the folks on the other side are wrong about everything, even if they think we're wrong about everything, I sincerely hope that we all want each other to get home safe at the end of not one or two but every single day that we come into this important place, because that actually serves Albertans the best.

This piece of legislation deals with that and, I think, in a responsible way. The review that was done concluded the Legislative Assembly security service should be allowed to carry firearms in the Legislature Building and the surrounding precinct. Of course, training of the Legislative Assembly security personnel as peace officers will take place, ensuring that they have the most up-to-date training to keep Alberta's legislative buildings and grounds safe for elected officials and indeed the public that are here, because we work for them and they are indeed the most important people although all human life is important and all needs to be protected. This change would bring us in line with other Canadian jurisdictions such as Ontario, Manitoba, and now Parliament Hill in Ottawa.

In closing, Madam Speaker, the bill covers a fairly wide breadth of territory, yet it is a positive change for the people of Alberta. I believe it increases access to justice, improves the efficiency of collection of child support, reduces needless paperwork for grain dealers, and it is indeed in line with what this government is always focused on: making life better for Albertans. On those grounds, I intend to support this bill, and I recommend the same, that all members of this Assembly support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the chance to rise. Of course, I would certainly agree with the Member for Calgary-Hays. I believe everybody in this entire building needs to go home safe every night, especially when you're wrong because I want you back here the next day so that I can continue to tell you how wrong you are. I want that opportunity over and over again.

Probably most of my comments here this evening are just going to be around a couple of different subjects. On the whole, around Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2), I'm in support. I guess it's more around questions, and we'll get the opportunity to delve deeper into some of those questions when we get the opportunity in Committee of the Whole.

I want to, of course, always layer the sandwich here a little bit. I know the Member for Calgary-Hays was talking about when it comes to maintenance enforcement and paying those – and as a father of two stepchildren certainly I saw challenges with respect to getting those payments. You know, when we can make changes that expedite that type of thing, that is not a bad thing, to say the least. I certainly would have loved the chance to have benefited from that, but unfortunately back in those days there was a challenge around that. So definitely supportive of that change in Bill 5.

Again, I'd probably be remiss – as has been mentioned, there are multiple changes across this, which kind of makes Bill 5 a little bit of an omnibus bill. And I'd be remiss if I didn't remind that members that served in the 29th Legislature, you know, very effectively in opposition very much disagreed with omnibus legislation. So I can't help but ask: what's changed? I don't want anybody to think that I've forgotten about that, Madam Speaker, so I will continue to remind them about that, and that maybe ties back into the whole wrong part that I originally brought my comments to in the beginning.

One of the changes that we do see here is around the referendums. I think my friend from Edmonton-Glenora had mentioned this, around why there seems, I guess, a desire to not have the Assembly involved in this process. The reason I'm asking this is that I think back to the recent referendums that were held here in the province of Alberta, specifically around equalization. I bring this up because what I found when I was talking to people about that question around equalization: there wasn't a very clear understanding of what that was. I very quickly lost track of the number of folks that thought that it meant changing what was currently there, and that actually wasn't the question. The question was: do you want to remove equalization, period? So when you kind of start to talk people through that, it was: oh, that's what it meant; I didn't quite understand that.

So I think it's incumbent a little bit upon the Assembly that when we are potentially posing referendum questions, Albertans can very clearly understand what they mean, and that wasn't the case with the question around equalization. I think there still is a role that the Assembly could be playing with regard to trying to clarify those things. Again, happy once we get into Committee of the Whole what some of the reasoning is around that, what they heard, then, of why it seems so straightforward that maybe we should, you know, back off, hands off a little bit.

The other part that I want to talk about, which, again, the previous speaker had also brought up, was moving us in line, moving that cap with regard to some court rulings from $50,000 up to $200,000. I certainly agree: $50,000 might've been fine way back when that was first established; it's not fine anymore. Again, you know, I could make the exact same argument. What's that proper number? Is it $200,000? I don't know. But it would be interesting to know what kind of information the government has managed to bring together to inform that decision a little bit.

I guess, more importantly, with that information, when will they actually plan to make that actual change to that level? That, then, of course, now starts to ask the question: will we see an increase in court filings and, obviously, then in court cases that will be coming forward? I know that in the past the province has struggled with regard to capacity around efficiently getting through court cases that are coming through for various reasons, not even including how we've gotten through the pandemic over the past couple of years.

Going forward, I'm wondering if the government has managed to come up with maybe some predictive models or something like that in terms of: what kind of increases do they think will result in increasing that cap? Maybe at different levels, you know, if we increased it to $100,000, we would see this many more court filings, at $150,000, and so on and so forth. With those increases, is the government prepared to be able to help the court system in terms of any other additional resources, especially staff?

As we all know, we can come up with all the great technology in the world, but if we don't have the amazing people that work in that system running it, we're going to start to run into problems. We've got to make sure that we have all of that backup there for them. I'm wondering: what kind of plan is in place? As I said, I'm not expecting any kind of finite details. I mean, that starts to get into the realm of the whole polishing of the crystal ball, at which point why don't we start asking about the lottery numbers at the same time for that? But it would be helpful to know where that might be going.

I guess one other thing I did want to touch on around the Sale of Goods Act. As somebody who had come from working in the food industry, you know, my 26 years at Lucerne Foods, at the ice cream plant, I know that tracking the transportation of goods was important, especially if there was some kind of a problem, whether it be contamination of an ingredient or a recall of some kind of a product or, as maybe was suggested, just simply outdated information or a practice that no longer happens and has morphed into some other procedure, which happens as you find more efficient ways to do things or you've simply gotten away from a certain practice because you no longer produce that, whatever the case may be. I'd be interested to hear some of the feedback on that so that we can understand why the proposed changes around the Sale of Goods Act will be beneficial.

Again, I'm not necessarily against removing some of the paperwork. You know, as the red tape critic I've always said that we don't need to do 15 copies when only 10 will do. But, at the same time, we don't want to put the system in any kind of jeopardy, especially when we are talking about food. With the increase in allergies, cross-contamination, things like that, we want to be able to ensure that our food system is secure, that it is safe for everyone to eat here.

Like I said, as I'm not necessarily, you know, opposed to any of the changes, I would certainly like to see some more clarification around some of the questions that I've been having. Again, it's about ensuring that Albertans can be confident in what's going on with proposed legislation. It's one thing to tell them that decisions are being made elsewhere, but we certainly don't want people to think that the Assembly might be, I guess, being circumvented here, a little bit in reference back to referendums.

Again, I know that members of the 29th Legislature did have significant issues around any more extra powers and whatnot being afforded to ministers to make decisions or, of course, around the claim: well, it's all coming in regulations. I know that members served very well trying to remind the government at the time: well, perhaps you should put it in legislation, not in regulation. So part of that layered sandwich there, again reminding folks what changed from that position back then, when you wanted to see a lot of things in legislation, and now, when you're seeing more of a desire to put things in regulation.

You know, we don't want Albertans to think that we're circumventing the responsibilities of this House. Unfortunately, we have now seen a couple of attempts by the government to do that. We saw that during the one health bill, where they were trying to provide the opportunity to modify legislation, bring in new legislation, delete legislation without the consent or oversight of the Assembly. We saw that again with the recent sovereignty act, which caused great, great concern and still is, quite honestly. We don't want that, of course, happening here with Bill 5, because I think we've got some changes within here that are very, very good, that I've talked to already.

I do look forward to more debate going forward here, especially Committee of the Whole. Hopefully, I'll get a few answers to some of my comments as we move forward. I know that some of my other colleagues have some other things to say about this, but I guess that at this time I will take my seat and see what else in the debate comes up. I'll be taking notes vigorously.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other members wishing to join the debate in second reading on Bill 5? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 5, which is the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). There's a bunch of stuff in here. I'm going to start with the interjurisdictional support orders. Once again, I'm starting with something that I think is good about the bill. I think that anything we can do to support the ability to do these interjurisdictional support orders, especially these sorts of things, which are, like, allowing electronic means and telephone and that sort of thing, is really, really good.

The interesting history on this is that once, long ago, it used to be next to impossible because maintenance enforcement is a provincial agency in each individual province. Essentially, what could happen was that the parent who didn't have the child, who didn't have primary custody, could move to another jurisdiction and just stop paying the child support. That's obviously not a very good situation, and that left a lot of children in poverty, and children in poverty is a very bad thing. Over time provinces have developed the ability to sort of enforce each other's support orders through various mechanisms, and this takes that one step further, and I think that can only possibly be a good thing. To all those people out there who think that we never agree on anything in this place: we agree on this. So there we go. That's two things – three things – tonight. [interjection] Yeah, I think that's a pretty good thing, so I'm glad to see that that is changing. I think, again, it's a big step in the right direction.

Now, of course, I couldn't just leave it at that, could I? One thing I do have to point out when we're talking about this is that maintenance enforcement, or the orders, I guess, for child support, has usually originally gone through the courts. Now, there's a table that kind of sets out, based on the payor's income, what the child support will be, so there isn't much of an argument. There's not a big argument over how much you're going to pay unless the person isn't sort of – sometimes it's unclear what the income is, or people try to write things off. Like, there can be a little bit of an argument, but for the most part the support is based on what the income of the payor is.

What that's designed to do is to bring both households up to a similar level, essentially to say, you know, that if you're a wealthy individual, you can't leave your children in relative poverty. You're required to support them to the level that they otherwise would have been supported at, and I think that's a fairly reasonable rule. I think that's a fairly reasonable rule.

Often enough times one of the things that legal aid does that a lot of people don't think of – a lot of people, when they hear "legal aid," think of criminal matters, but actually legal aid does a lot of family matters, and those family matters are actually often more difficult to retain counsel for. Legal aid often had close to a six-month wait to get a family lawyer who would take the legal aid rate and the legal aid retainer to handle a client. That's really, really challenging. It leaves a lot of people in a lot of trouble, and what it means is that not only do you wind up with a lot of unrepresented people in court, but you also wind up with a lot of situations where the person who has more money is able to advance the better argument.

While we're talking about this piece and the importance of sort of greasing those wheels and making sure that children get the supports that they need, I think that I just can't let it go past without commenting on the fact that this government is woefully in violation of its obligations under contract to fund legal aid. That is incredibly problematic. They're also in violation of a conversation they're supposed to have around the legal aid tariff.

Again, this isn't an issue that always bubbles up in the public that high, but one of the reasons it's next to impossible to get a family law lawyer to take on legal aid cases – and I don't want to say "next to impossible," but there are far more people needing representation and wanting to go through legal aid, even people who are getting approved, than there are lawyers to take that case. Admittedly, it can be challenging to get a family law lawyer at all right now in this province. Certainly, the tariff, which was set at $92 an hour, sounds like a reasonable amount of money, but you have to bear in mind that that's not what the lawyer is paid. [interjection] Oh, sorry. An intervention.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Member, for allowing a quick question. As I was listening to you speak so eloquently about the matters of family law and the impact that Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2), might have on it, it occurred to me that there may be some impacts on child support payments that are adversely affected by this legislation in that it may not empower the individual who is not getting support to have the means to actually get legal representation to go after that support. Is this bill going to help the situation any more, or does it address it at all?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much to the member for the question. I mean, I think that's one of the challenges, that this bill addresses the enforcement of interjurisdictional support orders. Once you have the order against the other party, if they move to another province, this makes it easier to get the money, but it doesn't do anything about getting the original order. It doesn't help those individuals who are seeking support or where there's a dispute about support, because there are still some things that can come into dispute like who has custody, that sort of thing. This doesn't help with that, and I think that that is problematic.

Another thing – oh, that was what I was saying. What I was saying was that the government went to review the tariff rate. The reason that's important is because that actually pays for, you know, the rental of the office. It pays for the support staff, that sort of staff in a lawyer's office, for access to legal databases, which is actually extremely expensive. I knew, when I was in practice, a couple of my colleagues from my class had gone into criminal defence work, and they basically practised legal aid criminal defence work full-time. Most of them practised out of the backs of their cars because they couldn't afford to have an office on what the current tariff rate is.

It definitely is a problem, both the overall funding to legal aid and therefore the people that can seek legal aid. And the refusal of the government to engage in this tariff review process particularly is a problem for people in the area of family law. That tends to be worsened when there are children involved. I would be remiss if I didn't mention that that is another thing that the government could do to make this better, but this thing is still good – just another thing.

The other thing this does is that it allows sort of an increase to $200,000 of – well, it allows cabinet to potentially increase Provincial Court's jurisdiction. This is an interesting proposal. I would love to hear more from the government about it, about why they're doing it and who they're doing it for and what the intended consequences are. The reason I say that is – essentially, what it means is that currently you can go to what many people will call small claims court, which is just Provincial Court civil division, for anything up to $50,000.

There – I don't want to say there are because there may have been an increase in the complement since this government came in, and I'm not sure. In 2019 there were nine Provincial Court judges in the civil division. Nine; that's not very many, obviously. I mean, if you were to increase the remit from $50,000 to $200,000, you're potentially looking at sort of four times higher, so four times more cases. Perhaps more than that – right? – because the amount that people are claiming is not going to be, like, perfectly distributed in that way, but let's say even four times.

What that means is appointing a bunch more judges, which is fine if the government is going to do it, and might I add that if they are going to do it, those judges require support staff. They require court clerks and judicial assistants and sheriffs and a bunch of folks to make that work. If the government wants to do that, that is fine. I will point out that what that does do is that justices at the King's Bench level are remunerated through the federal government. The federal government pays the judges when they're at the King's

That's, you know, several hundred thousand dollars a year per body that the province is agreeing to take on rather than having the federal government take it on, which is, again, their choice if they think that there are good reasons for doing it, but I would like to hear a little more about what those reasons are. There are definitely some reasons in favour of this, but, again, it's important to hear what those reasons are. Now, the government will cite access to justice, and in some ways, yes, it is easier to file your claim in Provincial Court. The forms are less complex. The system is maybe more easily comprehensible to someone who is representing themselves.

Arguably it gives more people that ability, but it cuts both ways. Giving more people the ability to sue means that more people get sued. Yes, we have a problem with people who would like to sue who have valid claims and cannot get their suits into court. That is a problem that we have and that the government should be concerned with.

We also have a problem with people getting sued – so people who are the recipients of a lawsuit, they're on the receiving end of a lawsuit – and the claim is not a valid claim. This is a thing that happens also, because anyone can sue you. Anyone can sue anyone over anything at any moment. So, yes, allowing more people to sue arguably gives more people access to justice, but it also puts more people – because you're not just going to increase the number of valid claims; you're going to increase the number of invalid claims also, which means that there are people who are going to get sued and who are going to have to go through the time, trouble, and expense and just general personal life stress that is involved in getting sued who have done nothing wrong, who have done nothing to warrant it. Yeah. Increasing access in that way kind of cuts both ways.

I would love to hear from – because the government, I'm sure, keeps statistics on this, so I would love to hear from people about, like, how they're measuring what the legal needs are and how this better meets the legal needs. Because there is out there in the province – and I suspect other places, but I'm most familiar with Alberta – a problem of unmet legal needs. It's a big problem, and it's growing every day. A lot of it is in family law. Some of it is in civil law. It's all over the place, and the problem doesn't just arise in terms of those who are least able to afford it. Like, probably people up to the median income and above can't afford to pay for their legal needs currently, so it is a big problem. It is something that the minister and the courts and the entire legal system should greatly concern themselves with.

But what I would like to know is: what sort of analysis was done on what the unmet legal needs are and why this is the best solution as opposed to any other solution? I would raise, once again, legal aid. If the province is going to take on the increased cost – because this, allowing claims up to $200,000 in Provincial Court, is not a thing that's going to help anyone access justice unless it comes with the resources to process those claims. So unless the government is willing to pay for additional judges and additional support staff to deal with those claims, it doesn't help. [interjection] Oh. Sorry.

Thank you.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for allowing me to quickly intervene on the topic of legal aid. I have spoken in this House about the, I think, unprecedented public protest by acting members and legal aid profession lawyers on the streets in this province, begging, demanding, protesting the government's inaction to addressing their acute needs to keep their system functioning. I know that I worked in that system as a volunteer, and it's been an ongoing lack for decades and has finally come to a head with this crowd in the streets of lawyers actually protesting. I've never seen that before, and I don't think the public has. So what indeed needs to be done to address that acute critical need, as you mention legal aid in particular?

Ms Ganley: Yeah. Thank you very much for that question, because you're right. The problem extends beyond just those who qualify for legal aid, but it definitely covers those who would otherwise qualify for legal aid, and it is incredibly problematic. The reason you're seeing criminal lawyers and now family lawyers as well sort of come together to try to take the government to task on this issue is because it is a critical problem.

It's also another violation of another agreement. I think that's one of the most frustrating things, that there was a lot of time and energy put in not just on the part of the government but on the part of legal aid itself and the Law Society of Alberta, who obviously are an important partner in this as well, to come to an agreement in terms of how to go forward with legal aid, in terms of what funding was necessary to meet those most core, most basic needs. Like, this isn't a luxurious system. This isn't a system that's going to fix all the problems. It was a system that was designed to, like, at least – at least – hit those minimums, those basics. A lot of time and effort went into setting up an agreement to go forward, and everyone signed it, and this government just tossed it out, much like they tossed out the contract with doctors and threatened to lay off nurses after the pandemic. I mean, it's another step. It's another step. Yes, legal aid is in a critical shortage, and certainly we ought to see more funding going there. Yes.

That being said, you know, compared to putting this money, say, into legal aid, why is this the government's solution? That's the question I have, because I think that when the government talks about access to justice, what they should be doing is looking at what the needs are and how those needs are best met. I'm not saying that this doesn't do it; I'm just saying that no evidence has been provided that it does do it. At the same time that this costs more money, we have legal aid still continuing to be underfunded. At the same time, incidentally, Madam Speaker, the government is continuing to raid the victims of crime fund to fund its other programs.

So this is – yeah. It's problematic, and I would like to know a little more about it. It might not be problematic, but I would like to know a little more about this specific thing: what it's intended to achieve, why the government thinks that this is the best throw they have on access to justice, and what they're going to do about things like legal aid, what they're going to do about the other side of the coin; i.e., more people get access to the court system, but more people wind up on the receiving end of lawsuits that are potentially unmerited. And those people can't even go to Legal Aid and seek legal aid because the funding just isn't there.

Yeah. I mean, this has the potential to be a good thing. It has the potential to be an extremely problematic thing. Overall, I would say, I mean, that we're generally supportive of the bill. I do have questions. I would say, again, that it's one of those "yes; and" things.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 5?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022

The Chair: I seek a speaker for Bill 4. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm honoured to rise today to speak to Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022. Across this province our front-line health care workers have dedicated their lives to ensuring that we receive the best care possible. Even during unprecedented times with unimaginable pressures our front-line workers acted with unwavering dedication to serve all Albertans. Whether it be the lingering effects of the COVID-19 pandemic, the current wave of seasonal flu or respiratory viruses, or simple everyday health care needs, our physicians continue to show up for Albertans.

Across this country, however, front-line health care workers are not being given the support that they need. As a father I need to be assured that when my family needs care, it will be there when they need it. For that to happen, we need to have the right supports in place, supports that acknowledge and address the challenges our physicians are facing in delivering essential health care services. That being said, I'm proud to be able to support this government in upholding our commitment to giving our world-class front-line health workers the support that they need.

This bill allows us to not only uphold that commitment, Madam Chair, but to strengthen it as well. By ratifying a new agreement between the government of Alberta and the Alberta Medical Association, we can rebuild our relationship with physicians and ensure that Albertan families receive the best care possible. A new agreement will stabilize the health care system, target areas of concern, and effectively support Albertans' health care needs. With its significant investments the new agreement will also provide a path forward to address the challenges that the health system is currently facing.

Madam Chair, this bill contains the solutions we need, concrete solutions, with financial resources behind them to address these challenges. Under this bill Alberta's physicians will continue to be among the highest compensated in Canada with an average increase of 4 per cent over the four-year term. Not only is this in line with other recent public-sector agreements, but there will be larger average increases for specialties facing greater pressures as well. Under this bill we will see $252 million in new spending over four years on target initiatives, $59 million in annual funding, and $16 million in one-time investments targeted at communities and specialties facing recruitment and retention issues.

Now, this funding will address pressures, including recruitment and retention programs, so more Albertans can access family doctors along with more support for practice viability. The list goes on, Madam Chair. Lump-sum increases for primary care networks, PCNs, of $20 million in each of the 2022 to 2023 and 2023-24 will provide additional support for primary while the modernizing Alberta's primary health care system work takes place. In comparison to Budget 2022, we expect physician services budget spending to be an additional $450 million in the 2022-2023 fiscal year, $573 million the next year, and $770 million in 2024 to 2025.

Madam Chair, under the leadership of the Minister of Health our government has been sincere over the past year in showing a willingness to listen, to acknowledge the challenges in the health care system, and to do something about it. That's why outlined in this agreement is our commitment to remove section 40.2 of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act, or Bill 21 as some people call it, to take away any government's ability to terminate this agreement in the future. As a government this agreement allows us to provide stability during historically volatile times. It will allow us to work together with physicians or partners and to provide innovative solutions regarding things like payment models that work best for family physicians to keep their practices viable.

Madam Chair, the agreement also sends a very positive message to physicians and the AMA that the government values the relationship and is working collaboratively to strengthen our health care system. We hope the stronger relationship may also strengthen attraction and retention efforts, especially in rural and remote communities. For physicians, this agreement gives them the voice that they are entitled to, and it recognizes physicians as leaders in the health care system and will allow them to have an expanded role at the table.

The fact of the matter is that we have just experienced a historic global pandemic, one that inevitably has highlighted some of the cracks in our country's health care system. I would hope that the members opposite agree that this agreement sets the right tone and will help us put our best foot forward over the next four years as we start to repair the cracks and move the system forward so Albertans can access the care they need when they need it. Madam Chair, that's why I'm supporting Bill 4, so that we can continue doing our job and tackling the challenges that are before us in the health care system to the betterment of all of our families.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill 4. It's interesting. As I listen to the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain and his comments talking about how indeed the bill which rescinds the government – he's suggested it's going to be any future government's right to tear up a contract that the government had made with an organization. In this case it was doctors. To suggest that would be forever done with: I'm thinking that in doctors' minds that is the farthest thing from what they believe to be the truth because, indeed, if it happened once, they probably feel quite certain that it can be made to happen again. This is not a permanent peace accord. It perhaps is a period of truce, but it certainly is not something that will be forgotten or forgiven.

I remember the final words in one of the movies that I've seen a long time ago, The Killing Fields, about the war I believe it's in Cambodia where lots of – lots of – people were taken hostage and murdered by the Khmer Rouge. One of the individuals who was incarcerated was a journalist who was Asian, and he was associated with an American. He ended up spending lots of time in an internment camp and finally was able to escape. The American journalist went overseas to see him, and he sought forgiveness, and the individual who had been suffering in incarceration said: nothing is forgiven.

I think that's the same thing that holds true for the doctors in this province who suffered the ignominy of having their contract torn up under the terms of Bill 21, now being rescinded, that power being rescinded under the terms of Bill 4. The government members are looking for a pat on the back. They're looking for forgiveness. I won't deign to speak for the doctors, but I can't imagine that forgiveness is the first thing on their mind when they see Bill 4, because indeed the hatchet, the guillotine still hangs above their head. The memory of that Bill 21, which eviscerated their contract, will never ever be forgotten and will forever be a stain and a blight upon the relationship between government and our doctors and indeed the whole health care system in this province.

While Bill 4 does repeal the government's right to extinguish or tear up or rescind or kill or eviscerate or cremate, however you want to describe it, the right to doctors' contracts, the government has continued to find other ways, other means to diminish the role of the medical professionals in this province while boasting about Bill 4, which retracts the switchblade the government used to carve out this signature from the contract with doctors.

The new Premier adds insult to injury by refusing to stand in this House and simply, very clearly encourage people to get vaccinated against the flu. Why? They seek a pat on the back, Madam Chair. They seek a pat on the back and congratulations, yet they won't do the very basic things that will actually gain them some reward from the medical community in this province, and that is by advocating from the highest office of this province, from the Premier's mouth, that people actually get their children and themselves vaccinated against the flu, which is causing our emergency rooms to be overloaded. For one small utterance the price that we're paying – or for lack of that utterance, the price that we're paying is an unforgivable one. It's petty that we can't hear the Premier say those words: get yourself vaccinated. We hear it in government advertising. We hear the Health minister say it. But for the Premier to deign to say that is somehow beneath her. Somehow it's a slight to her right-wing rump, which is actually dictating to the government its own policy.

That's an embarrassment, Madam Chair, that Albertans are scratching their head at. I find that on the doors repeatedly I hear about the things that the government has done, and one of the top-of-mind things that is remembered by people in this province is how doctors' contracts were torn up. People still have a very great respect for the medical profession in this province, and they do not put the blame at the foot of doctors and nurses and LPNs for the failures of this government to manage the pandemic and manage the now respiratory disease outbreak that we have this province going through. They put it squarely at the foot of the government, and it's plain to see why when the Premier won't even come out and say to Albertans: I encourage you to go out and get vaccinated against the flu. It's a safety measure. It's a health measure to protect each other. It is mind boggling that one sees this type of behaviour from the Premier. It's really mind boggling to Albertans. I've witnessed it time and time again on a doorstep.

It's embarrassing, frankly, to see the sin of omission by a Premier who knows full well – knows full well – even though she doesn't want to admit it publicly, that vaccines work and they work against flu transmission. It will help from having our hospital system overwhelmed in the next little while if it already isn't overwhelmed.

I've spoken with doctors at the Misericordia hospital who, in response to my question about "What would it take to be the final straw that breaks the camel's back?" both looked at me and said, "It's already broken." It's already broken. We've gone beyond the point of it being the straw that broke the camel's back. We're seeing outcomes that are much, much worse than they otherwise would have been had other measures been taken. We're seeing premature deaths happen as well, Madam Chair, and that's a disgrace to this province and disgraceful behaviour by this government, that indeed we're having those things happen in their hospitals, and it just simply requires a more forthright acceptance of real facts and real science by particularly the leader of the government, the new Premier of this province. So congratulations? No. That's not what doctors and not what nurses are going to be extolling upon the government. They want to hear from the Premier: get vaccinated; wear a mask indoors.

I mean, my grandfather – I've told this House before – over a hundred years ago, while harvesting away from home for a few months, returned near the end of the fall harvest, got a ride close to home on a farmer's wagon. That farmer picked him up and proceeded further down the road, close to their homestead, a short while closer to the homestead picked up another young man, and they continued on. Both got off at the same homestead, my grandfather's homestead. To his dismay my grandfather realized that the young man who got on was his own brother. He didn't recognize him, Madam Chair, because he was wearing a mask to protect themselves against the Spanish flu in 1918.

A hundred years ago, over a hundred years ago, people knew well enough 60 miles north of this city of Edmonton, this Legislature, to protect themselves from the Spanish flu, a pandemic then, yet here in this day and age, in 2022, we have a Premier who won't utter the words: please go get yourself vaccinated; I encourage Albertans to protect each other; come together as a province and protect each other. That's the type of leadership we're seeing in this province, and for that this government hopes to be congratulated? For rescinding something as onerous as the ability to tear up a government contract with doctors? Unforgivable, Madam Chair. Unforgivable.

Other ways that the government is finding to create a poor relationship with the doctors, nurses, and other health care providers in this province continue to astound me. I hear, on one side of the coin, the government members saying: my goodness, they're doing wonderful jobs; they're doing excellent things. And then they, on the other side of the coin, felt justified in tearing up the doctors' contract. What changed then and now? Why was it so justifiable to tear up a bona fide, legitimate contract . . .

Ms Hoffman: Because an election is coming.

Mr. Dach: Well, probably because a lawsuit was coming. That might have been one reason, sure.

But now they're apologetic for it? I haven't really heard apologies, but I've heard the request for congratulations for doing so. Nothing so despicable can I think of has ever happened in terms of relationship between doctors and the government of Alberta.

It's emblematic, Madam Chair, of the type of dictatorial powers that this government likes to exercise and then apologize for later. They tried to get away with something in Bill 1 that we railed against and all Albertans railed against, legal scholars railed against, giving themselves the power to change legislation and create legislation within cabinet behind closed doors. Now, that little element of it, which was a significant departure from normal legislative practice in the Westminster parliament, was taken out of the bill, but there are still many, many parts to that piece of legislation, Bill 1, which will affect us forever if indeed it's allowed to stand. You can bet that we won't allow it to stand should we hold office in May of 2023. Bill 4 is yet another example of the draconian tactics that this government will use and then apologize for later, expecting thanks and forgiveness to be granted by the province of Alberta, by the population of Alberta, and that's not going to be forthcoming. This is one of many Achilles heels that this government has created for itself in hopes of serving its right-wing flank, which has taken over the party, which is now sitting on the front benches of the party.

The government is not recognized by the people in this province. There is maybe a small percentage, maybe 15, 20 per cent. I'm not sure of the percentage, but I'll tell you what, Madam Chair. I uttered the other day that Mr. Diefenbaker and other major Conservatives historically in this country would be rolling in their graves to see what this purported Conservative party has become. I know that my own mother, who is a former Conservative supporter, would with her limited capacity right now even turn the TV off when she hears the current Premier coming to speak. That's saying something, because I thought that she was not capable of that type of analysis still. But, believe me, the Premier has elicited things from my mother's capacity that I didn't think still existed. I was pleasantly surprised about that but very disturbed that it took that length and that depth of a problematic, dictatorial capacity exercised by our Premier to show that that capacity still existed in my mother's critical analysis ability.

Nothing could be further from the truth, Madam Chair, that the doctors and the health care professionals in this province are coming to congratulate the government for rescinding the onerous measure in Bill 21 by enacting Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act. There's a very large fear that will always remain within that profession that they can do it again. They did it without shame the first time, and, believe me, that maxim rings true from the last line of the movie The Killing Fields with respect to doctors and the relationship between doctors and the government of Alberta: nothing is forgiven.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise and speak once again to Bill 4. I want to extend my thanks to the members of the Assembly for their comments during second reading and during Committee of the Whole, in particular to my colleague that I'm looking across the way at, Spruce Grove-Stony Plain, for his comments. I also want to thank all members here for their support for this bill. It is truly greatly appreciated.

As I said during second reading, Madam Chair, we acknowledge that the health system is under pressure and is facing significant challenges. Physicians and health care professionals are facing strain. It is a difficult time, and their dedication to caring for Albertans is truly valued. Once again I say thank you to all of them.

Now, these challenges, contrary to the assertions made during second reading, are not unique to Alberta and are not the result of government policy but, rather, are the result of a particularly challenging respiratory virus season and the impacts of COVID. They are happening in jurisdictions across the country and indeed the entire world, Madam Chair.

Alberta's government is taking concrete action to address these challenges facing the system. Examples include a new official administrator for AHS and a concrete AHS reform plan. That plan tackles EMS response times, decreasing ER wait times, reductions in surgery wait times, and longer term reforms through consultations with front-line workers to be able to push down decision-making and enable and support front-line workers in providing care to Albertans that they greatly need and so greatly deserve.

Of course, the new agreement with the Alberta Medical Association is another example of concrete action. We are confident the agreement will help stabilize the health system, target areas of concern, and support Albertans' health care needs. The agreement has significant investments to address the current challenges and issues brought forward by physicians during our conversations, Madam Chair. It is an agreement that focuses on partnership, working closely with the AMA, and on stability by adding an estimated $750 million to the budget to stabilize the health care system, including $260 million in targeted funding to address various pressures.

Finally, it is an agreement about innovation. This is about working jointly with doctors to promote different pay models. There were comments made during second reading about physicians leaving Alberta. To be perfectly clear, Madam Chair, physician retention and recruitment is one of our top priorities. We know there are barriers to care for those looking for support and treatment close to home and family, and we are committed to providing access to health care professionals, including physicians, no matter where Albertans live.

The latest data from the Canadian Institute for Health Information shows that in the last four years Alberta's physician supply grew by almost 4 per cent and that the number of specialists grew by just under 10 per cent. According to the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta there was an increase of 176 physicians in Alberta at the end of September 2022 compared to the same period in 2021. Alberta performs more physician practice readiness assessments than any other jurisdiction in Canada, and the majority are for family medicine placements in rural Alberta.

According to the latest data from the Canadian Institute for Health Information Alberta had the second-highest proportion of foreign trained physicians in the country in 2021, at just over 34 per cent. [some applause] Thank you. But we know there is more work to do, particularly to have the right number of doctors in the right places throughout our province, so we will continue to work to address these issues.

Madam Chair, I also want to take a moment to address comments that members made during the second reading debate regarding the issue of trust. Since becoming Health minister, one of my top priorities has been the relationship with physicians. I've listened to them, acknowledged the difficulties they're facing as well as the challenges that we are facing collectively in our health care system, and I've committed to taking action to address these challenges. I was personally at the bargaining table. I respect Alberta's physicians, full stop. We'll be working with the AMA as very close partners in the weeks and months ahead, and we will continue working together to implement the agreement to address other key issues related to physician compensation.

Madam Chair, the bill before us is about following through on our promise to the AMA and to physicians, and it is a further step toward continuing an environment of partnership. It repeals section 40.2 of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. This section of the act allows the government to terminate compensation-related agreements, and if the bill is passed, the government's mechanism for terminating the new AMA agreement will be removed, as we committed to do in the agreement. The legislation is no longer required. There is now a defined term for the agreement and a process and timelines in place for negotiating and amending a successor agreement. Bill 4 also proposes a housekeeping amendment to update language in the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act to reflect the updated title of the Minister of Justice. It was previously the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

To conclude, Madam Chair, I want to thank Alberta's physicians and all health care providers for their tireless work and selfless commitment over the past few challenging years. Our government appreciates the tremendous contributions physicians make on the front lines in the health care system each and every single day. Alberta's government is deeply appreciative of their critical role.

Once again, I thank all members of this House for their support of Bill 4.

Madam Chair, thank you for the opportunity to speak once again.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this bill because what it does is reverse a decision that I think was one of the worst and most egregious things that this government has done, and that list is a very long list. This government is patting itself on the back, talking about upholding their commitment and ratifying a new agreement, but what about "Sorry"? What about "We made a mistake"? What about "We apologize"? None of those words seem to be coming from the folks over there.

Madam Chair, they ought to apologize because not only is this reversing a bad decision that they made, but they cannot reverse the damage the decision caused. Physicians take a long time to train. Four years of undergrad, four years of medical school, internship, residency: they take a long time to train. You're looking at at least a decade. So those physicians that this bad decision on behalf of the government has forced out of our province will take a very long time to replace.

Albertans are suffering. Albertans are suffering right now. There are tens of thousands of people in the city of Lethbridge alone without a family physician. Part of the problem with why our ERs and our paramedics are presently overwhelmed is because many people have no access to primary care. When people have no access to primary care – and let us be clear. The government's original decision to tear up that agreement was aimed at family physicians; it was aimed at primary care. There is no question. It was clear in their messaging. It was clear in their actions. That decision has had huge impacts.

What happens when people don't have access to primary care, Madam Chair, is that they get sicker, and it costs more to treat them. It is worse for the individuals, it is worse for the system as a whole, and it is worse for the budget and the bottom line. It's worse in every conceivable way, and this government just stomped in and made those decisions without considering the ramifications of their actions. They had no regard to duty, to the rule of law, to contracts, to promises, to any of that.

You know, this was an egregiously bad decision. No one is saying that there aren't challenges in other jurisdictions. No one is saying that everyone isn't struggling with respiratory illnesses and health care systems, but this government chose to make a bad situation worse. They chose to stomp in and rip up the contract with doctors. They chose to publicly attack family physicians and drive them out of the province at the worst possible time. They chose to drive the health care system to the red line over and over and over again, exhausting health care professionals throughout the province. They chose to threaten nurses with laying them off as soon as the pandemic was over. They chose to try to roll back the salaries of respiratory therapists and many other health care professionals in the midst of a pandemic, when it was the worst possible decision.

No one is saying that there aren't challenges in other places, Madam Chair, but what we are saying is that this government was handed the best health care system in the country, possibly in the world, and they have done everything they can to drive it to the brink of disaster, with no word of thank you to the health care professionals who have given up time with their families, who have suffered from enormous stress during this pandemic, who have worked around the clock to try and clean up the mess that this government made. To have the minister stand in his place and say, “You know, since I’ve become minister, our relationship with doctors is top priority”: well, that’s not good enough. It doesn’t fix the damage that was done.

Sure, the government has repealed its ability to tear up the contract with doctors, but, I mean, they didn’t have the ability when they came in, and they went ahead and passed legislation to grant themselves that ability. So what gives us any assurance that they won’t do it again? They’ve demonstrated a total disrespect for laws, for contracts, for promises, for what people are owed, for duty, for the health care system, for the public. I don’t know. You know, they’ve repealed it for now because they say that it’s no longer necessary. Well, Madam Chair, it was never necessary in the first place. When was attacking doctors necessary? What made that necessary? I don’t think anything.

Yes, this is a good bill. It fixes a very big mistake that the government made. But normally when you make a big mistake and you try your best to undo it, even though, again, you can’t undo the consequences, you can’t undo the damage to the trust – there was a contract in place. There was a promise – a contract is a promise – to these physicians, and this government went back on that promise. They broke that trust, and it doesn’t just reappear. That’s not how trust works. Once violated, it is very difficult to get back, and it doesn’t undo the damage that tearing up the contract did. It doesn’t undo the damage that this government had done. Worse still, you know, the government is undoing this one thing. Meanwhile the fact that they pushed the system to the verge of collapse: no apology for that. No apology for this action.

We have a Premier now who won’t even tell people to get their flu shot in one of the worst flu seasons in recent memory. We have a Premier who won’t tell people to get their flu shots. We have a health care system that is overwhelmed and a government unwilling to do the least that they possibly can. So, sure, this is a good step. Congratulations to the government for reversing an atrociously bad decision. Congratulations. That’s a little thing we call damning with faint praise.

Madam Chair, I am appalled that the government would not apologize for this decision. I am appalled that the government would refuse to apologize, would expect to be congratulated. You know, this should be a moment in which the government is willing to stand before the people of Alberta and admit that they made a mistake, that they were wrong, and apologize for it. At least they’re reversing the decision, but the first step to rebuilding trust with the people of Alberta would be an apology. I think that that is the least that this government could offer. I think that physicians are owed that apology. I think that the damage that this government has done to our system will last for decades, and I think that that is extremely problematic, and for that, they owe an apology to every person in this province for the damage that they have caused.

I think, Madam Chair, that I have made that point fairly clearly at this point. I could go on at length, but I will leave it there. With that, I will adjourn debate.

Bill 3

Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

The Chair: Are there members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 3, the property rights amendment act. I know that all the members of this House had been waiting with bated breath to hear from the member representing Edmonton’s downtown on the question of property rights. I recognize that this is not something that generally is an issue within Edmonton’s downtown. I will say that this is something that I have heard from constituents about. Now, admittedly, not many, but it has been brought to my attention. For example, just recently I was out at an event and I met a gentleman. We were talking, and he said: hey, by the way, my dad is your constituent, and I’d like to get him in touch with you because he has an issue on his property with an abandoned oil and gas well.

Now, I recognize that that’s not specifically about the sorts of things we’re talking about here in terms of adverse possession, but it is connected with the question of property rights. Indeed, I was able to help his father. He was having some trouble accessing the documents online to be able to file his application to be able to make a claim about the neglect of the particular company that’s responsible for the oil and gas well that’s degrading on his property. His father is living here in my constituency now but, of course, still owning the property out in the rural area of the province.

I am also aware of the impacts that these sorts of situations can have just through, of course, situations between landlords and tenants. I know that this is something that has been exacerbated lately, particularly with challenges around housing prices. I remember recently reading a story online of a woman in Ontario who had used all of her savings to buy a property, a condominium that she was going to move into, a townhouse, and, in buying it, discovered that there was a tenant living there, that she had not known about, who was refusing to leave the property. This woman found herself in a situation where she’s essentially living in her car while somebody illegally occupies her property while she waits to get through in Ontario, where their landlord-tenant dispute system is so badly backlogged. So I recognize the challenges that there can be when you run into these situations where you have somebody that is illegally occupying a property.

I know this has been quite a process. This is a question that’s been debated for some time. Indeed, the current Premier, the first time she was here in this House as Leader of the Official Opposition and then a member of the government party after she crossed the floor – but before that part she indeed was speaking quite a bit as the leader then of the Wildrose Party about the issue of property rights in the province of Alberta. So this is something that has been going around for some time, and there’s been a lot of consideration, and we’ve seen quite a process that has gone through to get us to having this bill in front of the House today.

Indeed, I was taking the opportunity to review some of the history, and I was reading a blog post from Stella Varvis, who is with the Alberta Law Reform Institute, about some of their review that they did as part of the consultation. I believe this was around 2020. The blog post was published in August of last year, in 2021. She talked about some of that review that they did. Indeed, they went out and talked with Albertans, and approximately 87 per cent of the folks that they surveyed agreed that adverse possession should be abolished in Alberta, so strong support. The respondents offered comments like: well, whoever holds title to the land should be entitled to keep it, that no one should be able to take land from the person who paid for it, that adverse possession is indeed theft, and the law should not be something that rewards bad behaviour.

Now, it was interesting. There were a few folks that were not in favour of abolishing. Some interesting arguments such as suggesting that adverse possession promotes responsible land ownership and stewardship or suggesting that it’s a good way to adjust property boundaries. I can’t say that I find much sympathy with that, Madam Chair, the idea that a property owner should have to regularly go out and inspect to make sure that nobody is squatting on their property, that nobody happens to have built a shack or taken over some other space or moved a fence while they weren't looking and therefore they should be punished by losing that portion of their property. That does not make sense to me.

Certainly, I'm happy, I think, to support this bill. This is a reasonable step to ensure that a property owner is not unduly punished or taken advantage of by a disingenuous actor. There are a few thoughts as we sort of take a look at this legislation and consider what some of the potential impacts might be, again, agreeing with the overall principle of the bill and the concept and moving in the direction but certainly some questions about the impacts it might have.

Now, certainly, I think, as some other members on our side of the House have noted, there are some questions about wanting to be sure that there is absolute clarity that this legislation will not impact Indigenous and treaty rights, to ensure that they're respected within the context of this legislation, including for First Nation, Métis, and Inuit rights holders.

Now, of course, as others have noted in debate today, Mr. Chair, just this morning we all awoke to find an article from staff from the government of Alberta, folks that worked in the Ministry of Indigenous Relations, who spoke out very clearly about an utter failure, in fact, a refusal on the part of the government to consult with First Nations on their signature piece of legislation, Bill 1, the sovereignty act. It's an egregious oversight, an intentional choice to abrogate and ignore the duty to consult that this government knew it had. The condescension that we have seen coming from this Premier as she tries to suggest, "Well, it's not really a big deal; we'll talk to them after the fact; it's not really what's important to them; there are lots of other things" flies directly in the face of reconciliation.

I'll be honest. I feel badly for the Indigenous Relations minister for the position that he's been put in by his own government and his own cabinet colleagues and the utter disrespect that's been shown to First Nation leaders in the province of Alberta. I don't care, Mr. Chair, how much this government talks about how they're going to – well, we'll make sure we'll give you more opportunity with oil and gas, and we'll work on other things. The fact is that it is a fundamental step of disrespect coming from a government that is, in that act, declaring their own sovereignty and talking about their own rights and how they have to stand up to the overreach of Ottawa to then turn around and do exactly the same thing to First Nations leaders and First Nations in the province of Alberta.

It's an insult, Mr. Chair, which is why we want to ensure that with this bill the government has indeed done due and proper consultation with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit rights holders and certainly looking for them to make clear on the record their intent with respect to Indigenous rights holders with respect to exercising their treaty rights and their traditional activities on the land.

It was interesting, actually. I listen to a podcast called Canadaland. They cover a wide range of topics, and this morning they were talking about the creation of Wood Buffalo national park and the process by which that land was – there's no other way to put it – stolen from the First Nations here in the province of Alberta. There is, unfortunately, a long history of this kind of action by government and not all in the past, as, again, we see with the sovereignty act that same sort of arrogance, entitlement, and disrespect still exists in government today.

Certainly, I think it's important that when we are bringing forward a piece of legislation like this, which indeed is doing a good thing – again, to be clear, I support the principle of the legislation and the removal of adverse possession, but we need to be absolutely sure that as we do that, there has been the proper consultation and that nothing in this act will in fact impact those treaty rights. We certainly do have the question, and I apologize if perhaps during the debate when I have not been present in the House, a member of government has stood or perhaps the Minister of Indigenous Relations or the Minister of Justice has stood and explained what consultation took place with First Nations, but certainly I think that would be important to put on the record in this House.

Now, the second piece, Mr. Chair, is, as noted by the Alberta Law Reform Institute in the blog that I mentioned from Ms Stella Varvis – they proposed that there be a tribunal, an ombudsperson, or an alternative dispute resolution to be considered along with a legislative amendment so it does not create additional capacity issues in the courts. We know that we have faced real challenges in the court system. We saw that happen during COVID-19. We saw the issues that that generated and indeed, as I noted, for example, the situation of the woman that bought the property in Ontario who has been forced to live in her car because she cannot get into the system that exists because the capacity is overreached.

Certainly, if we are going to implement this and it's something that is going to require an individual to go to the Court of King's Bench in order to get remedy, if there is no access there due to a lack of capacity or indeed due to a lack of funding – and indeed we've had much discussion about the current challenges with funding for legal aid for individuals that may not be able to afford a lawyer or are, say, in certain situations. If we do not have an opportunity for them to seek some other resolution, then, in effect, the change that's being made in law is ineffective for them. It is not accessible to them because they do not have the means to be able to actually access the justice that they are entitled to.

Now, certainly, this is something we have discussed as well when it comes to issues with condominium boards, and indeed that is something I still hear from my constituents about, Mr. Chair, because, again, that is an incredible challenge, an incredible burden for individuals who are facing a situation with their condominium board and something that may in fact be unjust. But being forced to have to go through the court system and having no other option, facing a board that has much deeper pockets than they themselves do, ironically pockets that are funded by some of their own condo fees: it presents an incredible challenge and makes it very difficult for them to in fact obtain justice. It's unfortunate that this government chose to put the brakes on that process and took that option off the table and have kind of left those folks hanging after a lot of promises and time invested to try to get there.

So I think it's important that as we consider this property rights amendment act, we consider whether or not the courts are going to be able to handle the additional capacity for individuals who may need to bring a case forward regarding adverse possession or are trying to regain control of their property or evict someone that should not be there.

Certainly, again, we saw the foot-dragging, the resistance from the Minister of Justice as defence lawyers have fought to get changes on funding, to get the amounts that are due to them under legal aid that were committed and that this government has failed to live up to. Indeed, if we were going to add a lot of extra burden onto the court system at a time when we know we are still challenged for capacity, the question is: what is this government going to do? Is there going to be additional funding? Are there going to be additional steps? How is it going to move forward to ensure that this additional caseload – and, again, it is right that individuals be able to pursue this justice and have that opportunity, but we need to have the capacity in the system for them to be able to do so.

Lastly, Madam Chair, as I said, as in the case of the constituent who came to me for assistance in obtaining the paperwork to be able to move forward with a claim regarding the oil and gas infrastructure that is degrading on their property, it's my understanding that the committee that was undertaking the review that has led to this legislation indeed heard from many landowners on the context of surface rights, specifically like this situation from my constituent, where an oil or gas well has been orphaned or abandoned or where companies have tax arrears and money that's owed to the property owners. So it would be helpful to get a bit more clarity on how or if this legislation will actually help these individuals as they are seeking remediation of their property or seeking to be compensated for the arrears that they are owed.

If, in fact, this bill is not going to help them to get there, the question is, then: what steps is this government intending to take? What help are they planning to provide to help individuals be able to seek that? Of course, we know that has been happening in a larger context, and we have seen some small steps from government towards helping municipalities who are in a similar position of trying to recoup taxes that are owed from oil and gas companies but not nearly the amount that was needed. Certainly, we hear from municipalities quite regularly that they need more assistance from the government, particularly given that this government has downloaded so many of its costs onto municipalities while at the same time cutting key funding in areas like MSI.

All that said, as I've noted, the steps that are being taken in this legislation are indeed appropriate. We should be moving forward to eliminate the existence of adverse possession in the province of Alberta, so I'll be happy to join my colleagues in supporting Bill 3.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 3. I'll start with a couple of words: it's time. I'll probably end with the same words.

Madam Chair, I first became aware of adverse possession in about 2016, when one of my constituents was facing a claim of adverse possession. Oddly, we always think of adverse possession, squatter's rights, in a rural context, but this was in an urban context, in my constituency. Sadly, the good-neighbour policy is not something to be presumed. In this case a fence had been in the wrong place for about 10 years. I was just reading up on the Law Reform Institute's citing of this, Moore versus McIndoe. Jim McIndoe is my constituent, as was Mr. Moore as well.

That fence had been in place – they knew it was in the wrong place – for the 10 years plus a day. It was a little bit longer than that. The person who claimed the adverse possession was not an easy neighbour. Hence, they knew the fence was in the wrong place, but they left it in place, but when the fence was starting to become a little bit decrepit, they contacted the neighbour and said that it was time to move that fence, to rebuild it, which they would pay half the cost of, and to put it in the appropriate place.

Shortly thereafter they received a claim of adverse possession against about 800 square feet of his land, which then resulted in my getting involved with that. That was 2016. The result for my poor constituent, because the other one gained, was to lose about 800 square feet of his lot. Now, it happens to be a lot that's on a lake, fairly expensive property. Loss of that 800 square feet, which included about eight feet of lake frontage, between that and his legal fees, was over $150,000. For someone to claim his land with no compensation, in fact the opposite at about $150,000 loss of land and cost to him – that got me involved. That got me pretty upset about the whole thing, again proving that the good-neighbour policy is not one to be presumed.

Madam Chair, if you look back a little bit, as early as 1989 the Alberta Law Reform Institute took a look at this. In fact, Sandra Petersson did a full report in 1992. Guess what that report was basically coined as? Something for Nothing. That's exactly what my constituent's neighbour got, something for nothing. In fact, that neighbour had been cited previously for encroaching on some community lands, which was a lake access, before and had been sued and had to move his fence. This was not only somebody who was not a great neighbour, but they were a serial not-great neighbour. Very sad for the situation at that time. So the Alberta Law Reform Institute took a look at that in 1989, 1992, and 2003, where, in fact, one of the quotes in their report was that the recognition of the proposition of adverse possession was absurd.

In 2012 MLA Ken Allred, who I interacted with significantly on this – he happens to be a land surveyor by profession as well – had Motion 507, which was passed but was never taken forward. Sorry; that was in 2011-2012. He managed to get a draw of Bill 204, and that passed second reading and, unfortunately, was ended through a proroguing of the Legislature at that time. We also know that, interestingly enough, Bill 204 seems to be a magic number, because Pat Stier brought that forward in 2017, and then I actually had the Bill 204 draw in 2018, which was pushed back to the Alberta Law Reform Institute by the then Minister of Justice and was again delayed. So I'll use those words that I started with: it's time.

Since that time, in watching it very closely, there's been, obviously, research done by the Alberta Law Reform Institute and many other bodies. In July 2019 there was an interim report; in April 2020 we had a full report. Again, the number one recommendation was the abolition of adverse possession with some conditions on some of the other legislation that needed to be changed with it. We've had, you know, repeated recommendations for the abolition of adverse possession from the Alberta Property Rights Advocate, from the Resource Stewardship Committee based on many, in most cases, reports from the Alberta Property Rights Advocate.

Interestingly enough, there was another article around that time, done by Miller Thomson law firm. The title of their report for the public's consumption was What's Yours Is Mine, and that is what adverse possession has been in this province, sadly. It is outdated, and it's time to move it on, Madam Chair. When we look at some of the quotes around some of the issues there in What's Yours Is Mine, it says: "The reader is then transported back in time to medieval England to bear witness as historical forces forged the law into twin principles of extinction and acquisition. From the regal court of Henry II . . ." So here we reach back into history and see where this came into play: typically squatter's rights, maybe centuries of possession of land and use of land.

But, Madam Chair, we're now in a time where it is time to move forward with this. I thank the Minister of Justice for bringing this forward after repeated and repeated and repeated attempts, a couple of those during a previous government, who punted it off to review, to committee, back to the ALRI when it was very clear to us that there was a risk. My constituent Jim McIndoe continually called me and said: Richard, when are you going to stop this happening to one of my neighbours, one of your constituents?

Many of you may know I was in the home-building business. When we start thinking of this in urban context – just think about it. You've got an infill lot that's 25 feet wide. The fence on one side goes a little bit short, six inches back into the wrong side, and the one on the other side goes for 10 years. You get adverse possession claims on both sides. Now the people have a 24-foot lot. They don't meet setbacks anymore, so legally the city could come and say: your lot doesn't reach setbacks any more; tear the house down.

This is a time bomb waiting to hit us in the urban environment. We think of it in a rural environment, but if it hits somewhere and people don't lay – you know, the fence goes in. Where do fences usually go? You pull the old posts out, and you put the new ones back in the same hole because it's the easiest thing to do. It goes decade after decade after decade in communities. How often do they call a surveyor and say: could you make sure we're right on the centre of the line? It doesn't happen. But it can be, as we found out in this situation, that a neighbour who is maybe not exercising the good-neighbour policy says, "Ah, thanks; it's mine; I'll take it," with zero compensation. Then they have to go to the city, and they actually have to have a subdivision appeal, which shouldn't be allowed. He said to me: well, if they can take, like, eight feet of my land and a foot and a half of the front off, maybe I should just split my land into two, sell them for $2 million a lot, and we'll build a couple of nice condos on this spot on the lake. It gets from the ridiculous to the absurd, Madam Chair.

It is past time. I'm really appreciative of the work done by the Minister of Justice to finally take this and put it to paper. I know that MLA Ken Allred is there cheering us on to get this done once and for all. He and I have been talking almost consistently since 2016, when I first became aware of this. All the fits and starts of trying to get this passed, and we're finally there.

This was also a commitment, because we approached the 2019 election, and this was still a festering part of what we needed to get done to protect Albertans and their property rights. That is on the 2019 UCP platform. Guess what? We're going to get this done before the next election. We're going to keep checking off the check boxes on that platform and deliver to Albertans what we said we would deliver, and that's going to be property rights for Albertans and their protection in one of the best land registration systems on this planet. We have that to back this up, to protect your property, to protect my property, to protect my constituents' and all of our constituents' property.

Madam Chair, now is the time. It's time for us to get this done, for us to quit delaying, for us to quit punting it down the road, and to pass this legislation. I'll be voting for it. I hope everybody else in this Chamber will do so as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise in the House to speak to Bill 3, Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

Absentee landlords and adverse possessions: I was searching before to be speaking to this bill. I was searching the information and looking at the context, like, why these bills were in place. It goes back two centuries, as my friend the member from across the aisle actually tried to give some examples of from Britain and other European countries. In the U.S. the Homestead Act, absentee landlords, and adverse possession have a history. It was brought forward initially by the American Senate members or the members in 1860, and interestingly it was vetoed by the then Democratic President, if I'm not forgetting the name, James Buchanan. The next President of America, Abraham Lincoln, actually in 1865 reintroduced the homestead laws.

It has so much significance to understand why this law was in place. There was a public demand. There was lobbying, union activism, intellectuals' calls. That bill has done a lot to provide the rights to purchase land by landless labourers working on the properties for generations without having the right to own the land. Not only that, but that also provided for the very first time the opportunity for African-Americans and slaves to purchase land before it went to the auction. Looking at this, it has significance in history, and when we look at it in the current context, things are changed big time.

This bill, Bill 3, you know, is a correction to Bill 206, that the UCP brought in in 2020 and that failed to address the many issues that were supposed to fix our property rights, that there was a call for in Alberta. I just wanted to say for the record that we do support this legislation to bring property rights remedies in line with legislation in other provinces and countries. But also, while I'm supporting this bill, I just wanted to say how the government missed the approach, the same approach and understandings, when they brought forward Bill 1, the importance of clear rules across jurisdictions that can help create economic certainty and good relationships between neighbours and support businesses. This bill, the property rights amendment act, is a clear example of a bill drafted after consultation. The importance of the consultation: that's what we asked a number of times in this House, and the government failed to recognize that while debating Bill 1.

In this bill we see the government's approach, that they clearly believe in the rule of law, that they're working to set clear guidelines around. They failed to do this in the sovereignty act, Bill 1, even from all walks of people: the majority of Albertans, experts, legal advisers, journalists, and economists. As I said, we support the mandate of this bill, that will fix the problems and provide remedies in property rights for adverse possession. But, similarly, there are concerns in looking into the historical contributions of this bill and also what the UCP has done in debating and passing Bill 1, the sovereignty act, the impact of this bill on the Indigenous communities.

So we have a concern that we would like to know about. This Assembly needs to make sure that Indigenous and treaty rights are to be respected within the context of this proposed legislation, including First Nations, Métis, Inuit right holders. The government needs to make it clear on the record in this House its intent with respect to Indigenous rights holders; for example, with respect to exercising treaty rights in traditional activities.

We know that this bill is the result of the Alberta Law Reform Institute's report recommendations. We also see, you know, in this report that the consultation was mostly feedback coming from – I'm just trying to see – mostly landowners in the context of surface rights. So the people, basically, who participated specifically were related to oil and gas wells, wells that had been orphaned or abandoned. Also, there are companies that have tax arrears, money owed to property owners.

So these are my very important questions. At the next, you know, opportunity to debate this bill, I would be happy to see the minister or any government member answering these concerns on whether the Indigenous nations were consulted on this bill or not and whether their treaty rights are respected in this. These are very important concerns. I think that the government members, the next time we have the opportunity to debate this bill, should answer some of those questions I have raised in this House.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate on Bill 3?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: I will decide when the question is called.
I will call the question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 13, 2022

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education has an introduction of a visitor.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand here today to introduce an outstanding former MLA to the Assembly, through you. Seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Stockwell Day. Stockwell served as the MLA of what I believe to be the most beautiful constituency, my constituency of Red Deer-North. He served from 1986 until 2000. During that time he served as the minister of labour, the minister of family and social services, and Provincial Treasurer. He later moved on to a successful career in federal politics. I'm blessed to have his guidance and friendship, as many also here in the Assembly today experience. I would ask that we give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: It seems to me that perhaps I should have asked the minister to do the introduction, because I am pleased to invite to the Assembly and welcome back the former Member for Calgary-South East, the Hon. Rick Fraser; the former Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, the Hon. Luke Ouellette; and the former Member for Calgary-Elbow and leader of the fourth party, Mr. Greg Clark. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, also seated in the Speaker's gallery today are some constituents from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Please join me in welcoming Matthew Rowley, Brian Rowley, and Esther Rowley. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations has an introduction.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the president, Beverly Allard; vice-president Aretha Greatrix; and board member Richard Leask from the Indigenous Congress of Alberta. The Indigenous Congress of Alberta aims to serve Indigenous people from across Alberta who do not feel actively acknowledged by any other representative body. Over the past two years it has supported over 100,000 Indigenous individuals with COVID-related support. Let's ensure they receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the amazing staff of the Edmonton-Decore constituency office. Joining us today in the gallery are office manager Irshaad Khan, caseworker David Mandrusiak, and first-year social work student out of Grant MacEwan Mahat Abdi. Gentlemen, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you Jenn McManus of the Canadian Red Cross. She's the vice-president for Alberta and Northwest Territories, whom I got to know through her supporting Fort McMurray through fire and flood. Please show her the warm reception of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the entire Assembly two of my great friends from Cypress-Medicine Hat. First, we have Garret, one of the hardest workers I know and one of the best directional drillers in all of Alberta, and his wife, Mandi, a realtor and a very hard worker, a great volunteer for Conservative caucuses. Mandi and Garret Campbell, could you please stand and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Turton: Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to introduce to you and through you councillor Stuart Houston. Mr. Houston is a close friend, a former mayor, a current member of Spruce Grove city council, and recipient of the Queen's jubilee medal. I'm proud to say that our vibrant community is a better place because of the hard work he has contributed over decades of public service. Councillor Houston, please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Postsecondary Institutions and Downtown Calgary

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, over the next decade 100,000 Albertans will finish high school and start looking to the future. This will be the largest group in history. We need to give these young Albertans, our future leaders, real opportunities right here at home or they will leave. At the same time, Calgary's downtown has been forced to contend with office vacancy rates not seen in decades. Overcoming these challenges will be critical to building a resilient economy, but there is a solution.

Alberta's NDP has committed to establishing a new downtown Calgary postsecondary campus. We proposed a downtown campus as part of our Alberta's Future project, and the response has been overwhelmingly positive. Calgary Economic Development and the Calgary Chamber of commerce recently released reports supporting a new campus, and the city of Calgary has already committed to contributing $9 million.

Research indicates that downtown campuses support the creation of more start-ups, the development of more inventions, and more licensing deals. We're already starting from a position of strength because of our world-class institutions. The University of Calgary, for example, is the top start-up creator amongst research institutions in Canada. Today we sent a letter to postsecondary presidents requesting a proposal for this exciting new campus. We can convert empty office space into housing and other usable spaces. This new campus can be a place where Albertans can live, work, and learn.

We know postsecondary education is an economic driver. That's why we will move quickly to undo the damage caused by the UCP to postsecondaries, cuts that totalled nearly $700 million. We will have a real plan to keep education affordable. We will increase access. We will be willing partners with postsecondary. Alberta's NDP knows that investing in postsecondary is an investment in a better future. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. the Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Edmonton Public Safety and Community Response Task Force

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues are impacting every community in Alberta, including in our province's capital. These are serious issues which are disrupting the lives of Albertans, and they are so often interconnected. That is why over the past three and a half years Alberta's government has taken significant steps to address these top-of-mind societal issues, from eliminating user fees for publicly funded addiction treatment to announcing $187 million to address addiction and homelessness in Alberta's two largest cities. This government has taken action, and there is still more work to be done.

That is why I am pleased that the ministers of Mental Health and Addiction; Public Safety and Emergency Services; Seniors, Community and Social Services; and Municipal Affairs have come together to form the Public Safety and Community Response Task Force. This task force will be responsible for rolling out the initiatives funded by that $187 million. Their efforts will include further increasing addiction treatment capacity, providing addiction and mental health treatment in correctional centres, creating hybrid health and police hubs, expanding medical detox services, deploying harm reduction and recovery outreach teams, piloting a service hub model to increase access to recovery, and improving access to affordable housing options that support recovery.

Mr. Speaker, our government has made addictions treatment and prevention a top priority, and this is one more step in that direction. Albertans can be assured that our government is taking a fair and compassionate approach in addressing the addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues that our communities are facing. Every Albertan deserves the opportunity to pursue recovery and should be supported in that pursuit, and every Albertan deserves to feel safe as they commute to and from work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bob Neufeld

Mrs. Allard: Today I rise to honour a truly remarkable Albertan. William Robert Neufeld, known to most as Bob, was born on September 12, 1929, and passed away on December 2 at the age of 93. A lifelong resident of Grande Prairie, Bob was a visionary, a community-minded leader, and an inspiration to anyone having the fortune to know him.

I first met Bob and his wife, June, in the fall of 1997. Twenty-five years of friendship later and my family is grateful for these dear friends who became family, serving as adopted grandparents to our three children. Bob was like a second father to my husband. He was an innovative teacher and coach. He pioneered the Grande Prairie composite high school outdoor ed program and the high school hockey league and curriculum, both of which were subsequently adopted province-wide and replicated as far away as Australia. He was a trendsetter and a visionary, bringing passion to his role as an educator and shaping programming for thousands of students all over the world.

There is so much to share about Bob that I could fill hours. Here are some highlights. He was a founding member of the Grande Prairie Storm hockey team. He was the founder of Camp Wapiti in 1963, and for the past 59 years and counting, Camp Wapiti has allowed youth to learn more about nature, the outdoors, and the faith that guided Bob his entire life. He was a founder at Nitehawk ski hill. For those who use the hill, Bob's bump training area is named after him. He was the founder of the Wild Kakwa Society, working over three decades to gain official recognition of this nature reserve. He was a lifelong member of McLaurin Baptist church. Not many can say that they were a member of anything for 93 years.

The longest serving ski instructor in Canada, teaching for over 50 years, in April of this year Bob was honoured for his service at a celebration in Jasper, where he gleefully took to the slopes at Marmot Basin at the age of 92. Bob received several awards, including the sovereign's medal for volunteers in 2005, the Alberta commercial travellers sportsman of the year in '68, and the honour medallion presented by the Canadian association for health, physical education, and recreation in 1978. In addition, it will be my tremendous honour to award Bob the Queen Elizabeth platinum jubilee medal posthumously.

Bob Neufeld was a champion of our community and our province. We loved him dearly. May he rest in peace.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, I stand in this House every day to represent the constituents of Edmonton-Meadows, their hopes, their ideas, and their concerns as we work to build a better future for all. My constituents couldn't be more clear that they don't support the job-killing, undemocratic sovereignty act. In my riding I have heard from business owners who are worried about the economic impacts this government's actions are having on their livelihoods. COVID was disastrous for businesses. They needed support, but this government abandoned them. Now the government is asking small businesses to face further economic uncertainty just so the Premier can make useless power grabs. When will it stop?

I've also heard from members of my riding who are immigrants. They have faced unfair challenges over the last three years, losing their jobs, struggling to feed their families, and worrying about whether or not they could make ends meet. The sovereignty act gives the provincial government an undemocratic amount of power but leaves immigrants in this province to face chaos, uncertainty, and unpredictable futures. Mr. Speaker, over 23 per cent of Alberta's population are immigrants. They are a fundamental part of our province, and they have every right to feel confident that this government cares about them.

I want to be clear that an NDP government will care about them. We will grow immigration and get people better access to credentialing. We will support small businesses, helping them combat the rising cost of inflation and shortage of skilled workers and more. We will repeal the job-killing sovereignty act, move immediately to restore investor certainty, and build an economy filled with good-paying jobs. I can't wait to make all of this a reality come May 2023. Alberta NDP will build a better future for all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has a statement to make.

Health Care System

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a first-class province that prides itself on delivering exceptional public services. We have highly trained professionals across all areas who are committed to serving Albertans year-round. We hold ourselves to world-class standards, and our health care services are no exception. Alberta's government has prioritized health care and has allocated a record budget of $23.59 billion to further strengthen the health care system.

Alberta has the best front-line health care workers in the world, and we will work to have the right supports in place to ensure Albertans get the care they need when and where they need it. The Premier, the Minister of Health, and AHS official administrator Dr. John Cowell have announced our government's plan to improve EMS response times, decrease emergency wait times, and reduce wait times for surgeries. Since the pandemic Alberta Health has been running at overcapacity, and people have been facing long wait times during emergencies and for key surgeries.

I recognize the inconvenience and distress this has caused for those who are on the waiting list and their families. That's why getting back on track has been a top priority. We want to offer a health care system that Albertan families can trust and depend on. I am confident in the initiatives that Alberta's government has put forward to address the issue.

I want to share important news on emergency wait times. Currently the emergency wait time at Alberta Children's hospital is two hours and 19 minutes; at Peter Lougheed Centre, two hours and 43 minutes; and at Rockyview general hospital, two hours and eight minutes. The complete information for emergency wait times can be seen at the AHS website. The government of Alberta has accelerated the changes, improvements necessary to once again efficiently offer consistent, quality care for Albertans across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Human Rights in Iran

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 10 each year we mark Human Rights Day and the 71st anniversary of the universal declaration of human rights, a milestone document that proclaimed the inalienable rights which everyone is inherently entitled to as a human being. Today I would like to take this opportunity to speak about the human rights violations happening in Iran right now.

Mahsa Amini, a 22-year-old Kurdish woman, was arrested on September 13 in Tehran by Iran's morality police for allegedly wearing a hijab in an improper way. Iranian authorities said that Amini had a stroke while in custody. She died in a hospital on September 16. Protests, which erupted in many parts of Iran following news of Amini's death, have continued daily and expanded around the world even as Iranian authorities restricted access to the Internet. At least 488 people have been killed since the demonstrations began in mid-September, and according to Human Rights Activists in Iran over 18,200 people have been detained by authorities.

Yesterday the government in Iran carried out the second execution. Majid Reza Rahnavard was hanged in public on Monday after being convicted of killing two members of security forces. This public and open execution is intended to terrify the people of Iran. They are designed to stifle opposition.

More than before, the Iranian people need us to hear and amplify their voices. The Alberta Iranian community has hosted many demonstrations here in Edmonton and Calgary in support of freedom of expression, protection for human rights, and specifically for the brave women of Iran, who are leading the charge and risking their lives. I stand in this House along with all members of the Alberta NDP caucus to call on the Iranian government to stop this repression, and I also call on Albertans to support the Iranian people in denouncing the human rights violations taking place in Iran. I also call on this Premier, her cabinet, and all members of this House to do the same and stand in solidarity with the Iranian community and the many Iranian Canadians that now call Alberta home.

Multiculturalism

Mr. Toor: Mr. Speaker, during the holiday season we can clearly see the extent that multiculturalism has enriched the lives of many Albertans. Newcomers from all over the world, of many backgrounds, ethnicities, faiths, cultures, and languages, have been coming to Alberta with the hopes of fulfilling their dreams. Today, in addition to First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people, people from more than 200 ethnic groups call Alberta home and celebrate their cultural heritage with pride. They are at the heart of our success as a vibrant, prosperous, and progressive province. The diversity of Albertans is a fundamental characteristic of our heritage, of our identity, and it's important for everyone who lives here, whether their families came here centuries ago or only recently, in the past few years.

Our schools, places of worship, workplaces, and other foundational institutes benefit from multiculturalism. As we continue to build a more inclusive and open province, we recognize that multicultural society is a work-in-progress. We must continue to promote the values of respect, inclusion, and many other commitments that have sought to promote multiculturalism. Along with Alberta's strong multiculturalism policies, we must recognize the rich cultures of First Nations, Inuit, and Métis peoples. This may require us to confront painful truths about our history and society, learn from them, and take meaningful action together to address those issues and ensure everyone is treated with respect and able to participate equally in economic, social, cultural, and political life in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, during this holiday season, let's celebrate the cultural diversity that makes us who we are. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I had the opportunity to meet with the chiefs of Treaty 6. We spoke about their concern with the Premier's sovereignty act, which they assert will impact their treaty rights here in Alberta. The chiefs reiterated to me that the Premier passed her flagship bill without any consultation with them, something that contradicts the very statements the Premier has made in this House. Will the Premier admit today that she failed to consult with any of the currently elected chiefs of Treaty 6? Will she correct the record and then apologize?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as I've said many times before, when we drafted the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, the very first principle in that act was to respect treaty rights and land claims and Aboriginal rights as defined by section 35 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That was essential in the discussion. This is not about interfering in our First Nations and their ability to be self-governing. This is about us asserting Alberta's right to be treated fairly and equally in Confederation. We just want to be treated the same way as Quebec. That's what the bill is all about.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, respect would be demonstrated by apologizing for failing to consult.

Now, another one of their concerns is the Premier's new power to direct public agencies, everything from police forces to municipalities. The Premier also mused about withholding grant funding from organizations that don't comply with her political agenda. So this is a question that I'm asking on behalf of Treaty 6 Grand Chief George Arcand Jr: will the Premier pledge to never withhold provincial funding from First Nations who do not recognize or support her job-killing sovereignty act?

Ms Smith: That's an easy one. Yes. I've said on the record that I support Jordan's principle, which is the exact opposite. I want to look for opportunities so that we can partner with First Nations to address their issues on-reserve. Part of the agreement that we signed last week, an MOU, was to support our First Nations in mental health and addiction. I'll be meeting with the Treaty 6 chiefs tomorrow to talk about their areas of concern. Every time I meet with chiefs – and I've met with about seven or eight in the last week – they identify issues that are causing tension and concern in our relationship, and that's what I'm going to work with them on solving.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that is an issue, that is a problem, a concern for chiefs is the fact that this Premier did not consult with them prior to introducing the sovereignty act. Meanwhile, while the chiefs all acknowledge, for instance, the value of the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation, which the opposition also supports, they told us that they are concerned about the impact of this act on their ability to protect their air, their land, and their water, to feed their elders and their children. Will the Premier pledge to never use the sovereignty act to interfere with the land rights of treaty holders in any way, even where they disagree with it?

Ms Smith: Once again the answer is yes. This is all about making sure that Ottawa stays out of our jurisdiction. The way I've described it to the chiefs that I've spoken with is that they have fought a battle over the last number of years to get sovereignty respected and to extract themselves from the paternalistic Indian Act. We get treated the exact same way by Ottawa. They interfere in our jurisdiction all the time, and we are looking forward to pushing back and being treated exactly like Quebec.

Health Care System

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier suggested that after just three weeks with Dr. Cowell she's hearing that health care is now, quote, better than ever, so much so that Dr. Cowell is already, quote, moving on from ER and ambulance crises. But here's what that actually looks like: ERs overwhelmed with sick children, more unfilled paramedic shifts, more nurses leaving front-line care, public health officials resigning, and a Premier who will not endorse the flu shot. Is this, quote, better than ever? What exactly does the Premier think a crisis looks like?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we identified three priorities that Dr. John Cowell is going to be addressing. He has made progress on addressing a fast track into our emergency rooms, and we're beginning to see the results. A few weeks ago we were seeing wait times of 12 and 14 and 17 hours. We're not seeing that today. In addition, we're going to see changes happening with EMS. We're looking forward to announcing some of those in the new year. Based on the feedback that we've gotten from our paramedics, now the big issue is that we've got 69,000 surgeries on our surgical backlog, and we've got to make sure that we start addressing that so that nobody has an unreasonable wait.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the crisis in ERs and ambulances is not addressed. Come on.

Now, aside from having John Cowell talk to people at AHS for three weeks, the Premier could also take real, practical action to set standards for health care in this province. In an op-ed published yesterday, the former HQCA chair, Dr. Trevor Theman, says about our Bill 201: setting and reporting on standards make good sense. Dr. Paul Parks, president-elect of the AMA, agrees. Why doesn't the Premier listen to these doctors and then stand up and declare she will vote in favour of Bill 201 here in the Legislature?

Ms Smith: I can tell you why I won't vote in favour of Bill 201. It's because there's a clause in there that would deny the private sector the ability to do chartered surgical centres. We have an excellent example of a chartered surgical centre that opened up in Edmonton. They're going to be doing 4,500 surgeries. If this bill passes, what's going to happen is that it's going to limit the ability of private-sector entrepreneurs to be able to get in and start clearing the surgical backlog. I have no problem supporting the reporting of standards, but the NDP have gone too far.

Ms Notley: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, if the bill passes, this government will be held to account for reporting and meeting standards of public health care which otherwise they've been ambivalent about. All Albertans deserve to get the health care they need when and where they need it. A good start would be setting those proper standards. Our proposal empowers the Health Quality Council to do just that, yet the UCP has refused to even debate our bill. The Premier could commit to supporting it today and starting real work, not a conversation for three weeks but real accountability and responsibility. Why not?

Ms Smith: The NDP is a little bit late to the conversation, because that's exactly what we announced when we put Dr. John Cowell in place on November 17. We identified at least 10 different measures that we're going to look at. I've had a meeting with the statistics division of Alberta Health Services. They have identified the measures. They've asked for a few weeks to be able to get the benchmarks and then be able to show some improvement in reporting. I'm looking forward to the NDP supporting our measures when we're able to reveal those in a couple of weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Automobile Insurance Premiums

Mr. Sabir: "Alberta drivers are getting hosed, often royally." Those are the words of Calgary Sun columnist Rick Bell, and he's right. Alberta has the highest rate of auto insurance in Canada according to a new report by Ernst & Young. Older drivers, younger drivers, those with experience, those in an accident: everyone is paying more here. The Premier refused to commit to any action yesterday. Rick Bell thinks cutting insurance costs is a slam dunk. Why doesn't the Premier agree? Why does she refuse to act?

Ms Smith: I've learned that you ignore Rick Bell at your peril. He always has his finger on the pulse of what people are talking about, and it is true that we have seen an escalation in insurance going back to, quite frankly, the NDP's time in government, when they were . . . [interjections] No. It is true. Between 2015 and 2019 insurance went from $1,178 to $1,406. That's 5 per cent per year. Exactly. It's only increased 12 per cent in the last . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: The point is, Mr. Speaker, that the approach of the NDP didn't work, and it ended up causing people to lose their insurance, having to pay up front. We absolutely agree that there does need to be a solution. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall is the one with the call.

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, that was a lame answer, but we have a solution. Later this week I will be tabling private member's Bill 206, which will impose an immediate one-year freeze on auto insurance. This would give us time to clean up the mess caused by this UCP government, and it will take effect immediately upon proclamation. Will the Premier rise in this House right now and commit to supporting my legislation?

Ms Smith: There's no question that Albertans are in the middle of an affordability crisis, and the issue of insurance goes back to 2015. They didn't solve it. I know they're trying to suggest that they did, but here's the fact of the matter. Alberta does have the second-highest insurance rates in the country. We used to have an advantage in our insurance, and clearly we . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: Clearly, we need to take a closer look at it. I've tasked the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance to work together with the minister of affordability to find a solution for Albertans, and I'm looking forward to reporting that back when they've had a chance to talk to the industry.

Mr. Sabir: Another non answer. So many of my constituents rely on their vehicles for work. I will be sharing the Premier's comments with them.

We know that the UCP connections to insurance lobbyists run deep. They helped Jason Kenney get elected in 2019, and they have backed numerous members of that cabinet. Albertans are rightly asking if it's only UCP insiders who can get ahead under this Premier. They are getting hosed. They want transparency. Will the Premier commit to tabling, by end of the business day today, a full list of the meetings her ministers have had with insurance industry lobbyists?

Ms Smith: I haven't met with any insurance industry lobbyists, but we are going to meet with the insurance industry because if we're going to find solutions that are both short term and long term, then we need to engage with the industry to find out what those would be. I know simplistic solutions like the one proposed by the NDP . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. You might not like the answer, but the Premier has the right to give one.

Ms Smith: Look, I know that the simplistic solutions proposed by the NDP of capping rates at 5 per cent per year – it resulted in an increase of 5 per cent per year. We are in a position where that solution didn't work either, so we need to talk with the industry and find a solution.

Finance Minister

Ms Phillips: Yesterday the Finance minister talked at length about how hard he's working to hijack Albertans' retirement savings and to force us all to file our taxes twice and cost us hundreds of millions of dollars to do so. To his credit, when the minister wants to inflict bad ideas on Albertans, he does so with confidence, with zest, with esprit de corps. His sneaky income taxes are no different. We've just found out from a freedom of information request that the Finance minister knew months ago how much more we'd be paying in income tax, but he hid those amounts from Albertans. Premier, in the interests of transparency, why aren't we getting those tax increases back, retro to 2019?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, it just is amazing how the members opposite simply don't want this government to look for opportunities and solutions for Albertans. We inherited a fiscal train wreck from the members opposite, who were spending 4 per cent more every year while their revenues were going down. We presented a budget in 2022 that ultimately resulted in a $500 million surplus. Had we continued on their track, it wouldn't have been a surplus; it would have been a $6 billion deficit.

Ms Phillips: Well, just as he refused to answer the question, he refused to be honest about his income tax hikes for years, even when asked about it in this House. He let our taxes rise with inflation. As a result, we're all paying more. He wouldn't tell us how much more, but the Finance minister knew that by 2024 his sneaky tax hikes would be taking $868 million a year more from Albertans, a cumulative $2.2 billion in higher income taxes, but he hid that information. Why doesn't the Premier fire this Finance minister, that refuses to level with Albertans? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we were very transparent with Albertans in 2019. Any programs that we paused the indexing on: we were clear with Albertans that when we brought our fiscal house in order, we would resume indexing, and that's exactly what we're doing. More importantly, we're not spending the next generation's income, like the members opposite would. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Phillips: The Finance minister claimed that he didn't increase income tax. That was false. His last budget miscalculated inflation. Oops. The same budget also claimed that wage growth would be greater than inflation. Wrong again. He refused to even acknowledge the harm he was causing as 40-year-high inflation took more and more from Albertans. The Finance minister got it wrong. He implemented Jason Kenney's bad ideas. He put party over province. He didn't level with Albertans about how much he was costing us. So why, Premier, beyond his 46 per cent of the vote, does he still have a job?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have two case studies here. The members opposite, when they were in government, raised taxes on everything that moved, increased regulatory burden, sent tens of billions of dollars of investment packing, and delivered successive deficit budgets. We dropped taxes, created the most competitive business environment possible. We're attracting investment, leading the nation in economic growth, and we've got a balanced budget. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Edmonton Public Safety and Community Response Task Force

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every community in Alberta is facing addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues. Constituents consistently raise concerns. We have seen numerous stories coming out of Edmonton of assaults and attacks on hard-working Edmontonians commuting within the city, and the government has a responsibility to act. To the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction: can you please explain how this government intends to address addiction, homelessness, and public safety in Alberta's capital city?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is absolutely right. Every community in our province has been impacted by addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues, and Edmonton has been hit especially hard. Today my colleagues and I announced the creation of the Edmonton Public Safety and Community Response Task Force, and I look forward to working with them to provide more life-saving services to Edmontonians who are struggling with addiction and homelessness while enhancing public safety.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his answer. Given that there's no one solution to addiction and its associated social issues and given that collaboration with all aspects of a community is essential in supporting those who are affected by addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues and given that the task force that was announced this morning is responsible for implementing initiatives that will help provide more life-saving services to Edmontonians, can the minister explain who will be serving on the task force and why the representation is important as the province continues to tackle these issues?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have brought together a talented pool of local leaders who work collaboratively on addressing these issues in Edmonton. The membership will include councillors Hamilton and Cartmell, Chief Billy Morin, Chief Issac A. Laboucan-Avirom, four cabinet ministers, and others as well. Other municipal and emergency services representatives will be there to help out. I am confident in our ability to work together to tackle these significant issues facing Edmonton, the capital of our province, a place where I grew up. I'm happy to help, and so will the rest of our government. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government has committed $187 million to address addiction and homelessness in Edmonton and Calgary and given that Edmonton continues to be hard hit with addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues and given that this government has committed to building a recovery-oriented system of addiction and mental health care, can the minister please explain what initiatives the Edmonton Public Safety and Community Response Task Force will be responsible for implementing?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Public Safety and Community Response Task Force will implement a series of initiatives as part of a $187 million plan to address addiction and homelessness in Alberta's urban centres. This includes further increasing addiction treatment capacity, providing addiction and mental health treatment programs in correctional centres, creating a hybrid health and police hub, and so, so much more. I look forward to working with this talented group, and I'm sure that we will be able to come to a conclusion in order to help Edmontonians with regard to mental health and addiction issues going forward.

Thank you.

Canada Pension Plan

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, in 2013 the current Premier stood against an Alberta pension plan. She knew that removing Albertans from the CPP and replacing it with a provincial pension was wildly unpopular and went against the wishes of the majority of Albertans. An Alberta pension plan is an absurd proposal that will unnecessarily complicate retirement for many Albertans. It will also allow this provincial government, with its terrible track record, having lost the trust of all Albertans, to gamble with their retirement. Will the Premier stand here today to agree with herself from 2013?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, part of my mandate letter from the Premier was to investigate the merits, the opportunities, and the risks of an Alberta pension plan, and I intend to do just that and report to Albertans. I believe there is great potential in an Alberta pension plan, the potential to bring down premiums and the potential to improve pension benefits for Alberta seniors. But we will complete our work and report and engage with Albertans; the NDP would have us not do so.

Ms Gray: Given that finding supporters of this idea is worse than finding a needle in a haystack and given that top economists, academics, and worker representatives have all said that Alberta leaving the CPP is incredibly unpopular and will not happen without, quote, a very big fight and given that this government has done nothing to prove itself capable, can the Premier please explain why she's so willing to defy the wishes of the Alberta public on something that is risky, that is expensive, and that is going to cost Albertans' retirements?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, again, the member opposite continues to rule out the consideration of an opportunity for Albertans, for Alberta businesses. Why would they pre-empt the report? Why would they not be interested in taking a look at the facts, the actuarial work? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore will remain in order.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we're going to complete our work, the actuarial work, the econometric work, and we're going to report to Albertans and engage Albertans because they deserve to know.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, given that the analysis has been done and the idea is bad and given that Alberta pensions are not the Premier's fun money and given that during a debate she opined that they could use this money to fund other government programs, it is clear that an Alberta pension plan is a waste of time and resources. It is not supported by Albertans, and as my colleague said, and I quote, it is catastrophically stupid. Will the Premier stand here today, back away from this awful idea, protect retirement security for Albertans, and focus on the real issues?

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are focusing on the real issues, the issues of affordability, the issues of health care, the issues of investment attraction and job creation. At the same time we're taking a look at the opportunities, the benefits, and the costs of an Alberta pension plan. We're looking forward to a report.

Technology Industry Investment in Alberta

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, in the UCP's first budget the Finance minister called economic diversification a luxury and proceeded to cut several tax credits, including the Alberta investor tax credit, which delivered a 3 to 1 return on investment. As a result, investors pulled out of Alberta, venture funds that were on the verge of being announced dried up, and companies that were expecting investments were left empty-handed.

Mr. McIver: Wrong. Wrong. Wrong.

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. You might not like the question, but the member has the right to ask it.

The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, is my time restarting?

Mr. McIver: Still wrong.

The Speaker: I don't restart their time. I won't . . .

Mr. McIver: Four, three, two . . .

The Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays will come to order. Oh, my. Of all people. [interjections] Order. Order. We've come this far.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview will go from the top.

Mr. Bilous: Oh. In the UCP's first budget the Finance minister called economic diversification a luxury and proceeded to cut several tax credits, including the Alberta investor tax credit, which delivered a 3 to 1 return on investment. As a result, investors pulled out of Alberta, venture funds that were on the verge of being announced dried up, and companies that were expecting investments were left empty-handed. We also saw investors leave for other provinces. To the Minister of Technology and Innovation: why won't this government reinstate a tax credit which was working to attract investment and diversify the economy?

The Speaker: The Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. Let's talk about facts; let's talk about numbers: in 2016, $68 million in venture investment; in 2017, $37 million; in 2018, $100 million. That was under that government when they were in power. In 2019 we turned a corner, $227 million; in 2020, $445 million; in 2021, $561 million; and in the first three quarters of this year, $509 million. We're on track for record investment in venture capital. We are getting the job done.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you to the minister for confirming that the investment we're seeing today was because of the tax credit that our government instated years ago.

Given that investment in early-stage tech companies has dropped significantly and given that we're seeing tech investment grow across the country but Alberta pales in comparison – we aren't even keeping pace on a per capita basis – why is this government holding our province back and hurting our competitiveness?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, the NDP never let the facts get in the way of a good story, but let me correct the record. In the first half of this year we saw a 66 per cent increase year over year in investment in venture capital in Alberta when the rest of the country was down by over 20 per cent. We are leading the country in the rate of investment in venture capital and in the tech industry. The NDP had a failed program that was seen as overly burdensome and that the industry didn't like. We are instead creating the conditions to open up economic activity and investment across every industry, including technology. Technology is not just an industry; it's the future of every industry. These numbers show that we are getting the job done.

Mr. Bilous: Given that the minister recently said that the AITC did not create long-term sustainable tech companies even though I recently met with a company that said it would not be here today if it wasn't for the AITC, given that the minister also said the worst thing we can do for tech is to make it easier for people to invest in tech and given that the minister also said he doesn't want to put taxpayer dollars at risk even though the venture fund he used to work for relied solely on taxpayer dollars, how can the minister be so out of touch?

Mr. Glubish: They clearly have no problem misrepresenting the facts, as that member just did.

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

Mr. Glubish: Let me correct the record. The fact is that I said that the worst thing we could do for investment is to encourage people to invest in bad deals where they lose their money because then they will never invest in tech again. We want to create the conditions to ensure that good companies get investment and that investors make money because then they will be addicted to investing in tech, and that's a good thing for the tech industry in Alberta. That's what I said, Mr. Speaker. He grossly misrepresented the facts, and shame on him for doing so.

Affordability Plan and Fuel Prices

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, inflation and affordability are the largest issues facing Albertans right now. While this is not a problem unique to Alberta, federal fiscal mismanagement and looming increases to the carbon tax threaten to make inflation worse before it improves. This government has made strides recently in providing cost relief to Albertans, including electricity rebates and reducing the provincial fuel tax. To the Minister of Affordability and Utilities: how will our government continue to respond to the inflation crisis and deliver relief to Albertans?

The Speaker: A point of order was noted at 2:16.

The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through our affordability action plan we are taking steps to protect Albertans from inflation-driven cost-of-living increases. If passed, the inflation relief act will provide stability on utility bills, including up to $500 in electricity rebates and natural gas price protection, to help Albertans power and heat their homes this winter, with peace of mind. We are passing on even more savings – 13.6 cents a litre, including GST – to Albertans at the pumps by eliminating the provincial fuel tax for six months. We are also providing $600 over six months to low- and middle-income families, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans, making sure that people who need it get the support.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that fuel is one area that was identified as being heavily monitored, it's good to see that the Competition Bureau of Canada is looking into it as it has become a national issue. We also have the consumer investigations unit monitoring Alberta communities for potential gouging. However, despite the suspension of the fuel tax, gas in Edmonton is still $1.20, Airdrie is still $1.30, and Grande Cache is as high as $1.40. To the same minister: has the government identified if there's any gouging whatsoever?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question as it appears the NDP doesn't have a critic for Service Alberta. I'm glad somebody is asking the important questions because right now we know that Albertans are struggling with high costs. Yes, the member is correct: the consumer protection unit has been monitoring prices at the gas pumps in Alberta. I'm happy to report that there have not been any incidents of price gouging. In fact, prices are in line with market conditions, and the best part is that Albertans continue to enjoy the lowest prices in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that even though Fort McMurray is a region that provides billions of dollars to our government treasury on an annual basis by mining the hydrocarbons used to make this very fuel – fuel prices are at about $1.50, around 30 cents higher than in Edmonton. Recently a constituent that used to manage a gas station in Fort McMurray said that the cost of transportation to Fort McMurray only adds about 2 cents per litre. Again to the minister: why are prices in Fort McMurray 30 cents higher than in Edmonton, and is there anything that the government can do about this?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. There are a number of factors that go into the price that we see at the pumps. One of them, of course, is the price of crude oil. Another one is supply and demand. We also know that prices will vary by retailer. We know that the path forward for lower prices is through increased competition and more choice for the consumer and, of course, a healthy economy, and that will continue to be our priority. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has a question.

Economic Indicators

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month 15,000 Alberta workers lost their jobs. Despite this, the national unemployment rate continues to drop. It's clear that the UCP government is more focused on separating with Canada than even bothering to keep up. Families aren't asking for American-style private schools, they're not asking for American-style private surgeries, and they certainly aren't asking for American-style tax cuts for corporations. My question to the minister of jobs and economy is simple: will the minister stand in this place and apologize to those families who are struggling to afford Christmas presents this year?

Mr. Schow: Will you apologize?

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I would like to apologize for the four years that the NDP put us in the decade of darkness, starting the situation where our economy retracted. What we will see is that – as the minister just mentioned previously, we've seen record amounts of investment in venture capital here in Alberta, and we've seen record amounts of that investment, 75 per cent, in Calgary, in fact, where right now we need to fill up some office buildings. We're seeing people flock to Alberta because it's the place to invest and it's leading the country in growth. I'm not going to take any lessons from the NDP where they closed our economy down.

Mr. Dang: Given that venture capital doesn't pay for Christmas dinner and given that Alberta's growth in average weekly wages since 2019 is one of the lowest of all provinces in Canada and given that the government has been extolling Alberta's job growth and wages for years and given that we know this UCP government likes to brag about how closely they work with these big wealthy corporations, will the minister today take accountability and apologize to the working families who have to stop at the food bank on the way home while he rubs elbows in boardrooms?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, our sympathies are with any family right now that is having troubles in Alberta. That's why we're so excited to tell Albertans and the member opposite that, you know, housing starts in Alberta are up 22 per cent, the value of building permits up 9.6 per cent. All experts agree that Alberta will lead the nation in GDP growth in '23-24. We're not going to apologize for something that's actually working out well for Albertans. Albertans have the jobs. They're going to see significant savings and significant money from our minister of affordability.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that building permits and housing starts are about as useful to little Timmy as a lump of coal and given that according to the Alberta Living Wage Network the living wage needed to achieve a standard of living in Alberta is higher than our current minimum wage and given that Alberta is the only province to not raise its minimum wage this year – so that gap is only getting larger – and given that everything the minister has said is going to be too little, too late, will the minister commit today to raising the minimum wage so that next year families won't have to choose between their heating bills and Christmas presents?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we don't have an affordability measure of $7,200 for politicians who break the law, we do have significant financial relief coming to Albertans at a time when they need it the most. We have $500 in electricity rebates. We have fuel tax relief every time you fill up your car with gas or diesel. We have natural gas price protection so you can heat your home with confidence. While I'm open to suggestions from the member opposite, we are busy. We're not at a computer. We are helping Albertans at a time when they need it.

South Edmonton Hospital and School Construction

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, the south Edmonton hospital is critical to so many people living in Edmonton and nearby municipalities. It would provide additional capacity that my constituents desperately need. Our NDP government was proud to approve this project in 2017 and pledged to have it open by 2026. This government abandoned those timelines. They said that they intended to start construction by 2023 and open it by 2030, but then another change: the government's own website for the project pulled it down, and the '23 start date is now blank. For the record can the minister state clearly when the south Edmonton hospital will be open?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. It is true. The NDP started this process with an announcement of money but no plan. Now we are working through a business plan with Alberta Health Services to find out exactly how we're going to serve the people of Edmonton, what facilities will meet that need, and then, moving forward, when we can start the project, how long it will take, and what it will cost.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Member Loyola: Given that Edmonton hospitals are overrun with multiple respiratory viruses like RSV, influenza, and COVID-19 and wait times are getting as long as 18 hours in some instances and given that we are facing a massive capacity issue in our health care system, which the south Edmonton hospital would help address, but given that this government has slowed down this project for years, potentially adding millions in costs to the construction, will the minister finally do the right thing and commit today to the full funding of the south Edmonton hospital and guarantee that it will be built, staffed, and open before 2030?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are proceeding with a good plan to find the best way forward to meet the needs of those people in Edmonton. Yes, there is a capacity, but this is what happens when you go forward with a political announcement with no plans to back it up. We are having to go back and do that work to show the people of Edmonton how we can best meet their needs. There are many needs. Whether it's the Stollery children's hospital or other hospitals, they all need help. They all need support. We are building that plan so we can serve them better. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Member Loyola: Given that the UCP can't be trusted to deliver the health care Albertans need and given that the same is true for education and given that parents in the south Edmonton community of Edgemont have long been seeking a school closer to their homes and given that thousands of new students have enrolled in Edmonton public schools but not a single new project was announced last year and given that the Leader of the Official Opposition has committed that she will build the Edgemont school when she is elected Premier again, can this government explain why it has ignored desperately needed south Edmonton schools and hospitals?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. I draw the member opposite's attention back to the fact that the Edmonton public school division actually did not prioritize that particular school in their previous capital budget. Thankfully, we've had conversations. They understand that if they want schools in growing areas, they need to make them a top priority, and that's exactly what they're doing. I look forward to bringing my capital budget up in the months to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East has a question.

Emergency Medical Services

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Airdrie-East I've heard just how much our health care system is struggling in the rural areas of our province. EMS response times have gone up drastically, and these delays could be tragic for Albertans if we don't do something. Can the Minister of Health answer this: how will the government specifically improve EMS response times in rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for the question and her passionate representation of Airdrie. As stated in this House before, this is a priority, and we're making some progress through the AHS metro response plan. They've cut the number of trips into the major cities, including Calgary, and out of areas such as Airdrie and other surrounding communities, and we're seeing some improvements in these response times. In Airdrie in October the median response time was around eight to nine minutes compared to the target of eight minutes. Now, the longer responses were still above target, so we have more work to do, but we're going to stick at it until we get those response times down.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister, for the update. Given that our government has provided funding for many new ambulances this year, including one in my own constituency, and given that Alberta Health Services struggles to find paramedics to actually staff them – hundreds of shifts are being left unfilled every week – and given that over 9,000 shifts in Alberta, including 463 shifts in Airdrie, have been left unfilled this year, can the minister please tell us what the plans are to improve these staffing shortages?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the hon. member for the question. As you know, EMS has seen an unprecedented 30 per cent call increase since 2021, the summer. Similar pressures exist across the entire country. We increased, as noted by the hon. member, EMS's budget by $64 million this year, and the main purpose for that is to add staff. EMS has hired 364 new staff members since January 1, including 264 paramedics, and since June '19 they've added more than 450 paramedics, an 18 per cent increase. Now, they'll keep hiring until we can actually get all those shifts filled, and we're working with Dr. Cowell to be able to roll out a plan on that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and Minister. Given that our rural ambulances are being dispatched to the urban centres to fill gaps in their own city and rural residents are left waiting for help by the paramedics who are too busy attending city calls and given that those rural residents aren't getting the critical help that they rightfully deserve, Minister, what do you plan to do to keep paramedics and ambulances working in Airdrie and other rural communities?

Mr. Copping: Thanks again to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, we are moving swiftly to improve response times and continue to make this a priority so emergency care is available when and where it's needed. Again, our goal is to have more ambulances available for emergency calls and fewer ambulances needlessly tied up in transfers or waiting at an emergency room. We've made progress. I'm very pleased. That is part of the 10-point plan to be able to reduce the number of calls for ambulances coming from rural areas into the large communities like Calgary. That's been reduced by 40 per cent. We're going to keep working at it till we actually get those response times down.

Education Concerns

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, teachers across the province continue to endure extremely challenging working conditions because of the UCP's absolute failure to support students, staff, and families. A recent ATA survey showed that class sizes have ballooned to 30, 40, and often even more students in many classrooms across the province. This pressure on teachers is not only causing great harm to their well-being, but it's also negatively impacting students who are forced to try to learn in overcrowded classrooms. Will the Minister of Education admit that this is the UCP's plan? It's clear that they don't value public education.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, that's absolutely ludicrous. In fact, the member opposite a while ago admitted to the fact that she didn't read the curriculum. Obviously, she also hasn't read our budget. We have increased funding to the highest level ever in this province, $8.4 billion. That, in fact, has created an opportunity for school divisions to hire 800 more teachers and 800 more educational assistants. The members opposite did nothing to address class sizes.

Ms Hoffman: Well, given that Jason Kenney and the current Education minister cut funding that was dedicated to reducing class sizes, funding that was in place when the NDP was in government and other governments before, and given that the UCP, under the current Education minister, has decided to try to hide the ballooning class sizes from the public by refusing to publish class size data, data that had previously been available to Albertans for generations, will the current Education minister admit that trying to hide the impacts of her cuts was wrong and disclose class sizes in this House today?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again misinformation. Again, they do not understand the fact that in the previous budget we were funding 730,000 students when 716,000 students actually attended. The previous year prior to that, the 2021 school year, we actually funded 730,000 students; 705,000 students. I'm happy to say that students are coming back. Because of the fact that we have a great province and people are migrating to this province, I'm happy to share that we have more students, and we're funding them.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, given that we do have more students and we also have fewer teachers than we had when the NDP was in government and given that Alberta teachers are struggling with overcrowded classrooms and, on top of that, teachers are reporting an increase in complexity and diversity of the students they're supporting and given that the decline in support for students has resulted in a six-month to one-year wait for speech therapy, occupational therapy, physical therapy, psychoeducational assessments, will the Minister of Education commit to emergency funding today to stop that gap, to make sure kids can get assessed this year, while she's still the Education minister, or do we have to wait for the election?

Member LaGrange: Again the member opposite has not done her homework. We are actually doing that: $10 million to address the backlog of assessments, $110 million over three years, doubling the number of mental health and wellness projects and pilots throughout this year, addressing mental health issues, addressing enrolment growth, addressing assessment backlogs, Ukrainian students, and so much more. I could go on and on. I'm happy to go on and on. Mr. Speaker, $700 million on top of everything. I could keep going.

Legal Aid Funding

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, I was proud to be a part of an NDP government that in 2018 signed a long-term agreement to increase funding for Legal Aid Alberta. We provided $70 million more over four years. We did this in recognition of increased demand and the right of every Albertan to be fairly represented. Can the Minister of Justice tell this House for the record why this government tore up this critical funding agreement and risked leaving so many Albertans without legal aid in the process?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice has the call.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, as he knows, the government is only one of the funders of legal aid. Legal aid is funded. It has all the funding that it requires to make sure that Albertans have access to justice. We've also throughout '22 received requests from various members of the criminal defence bar on concerns they have with the current tariff rate. We're happy to get that information from those folks. I'd also say this. We had been in the middle throughout '22 of doing a modernization project, reviewing the 40 items in the tariff. Now that that modernization project is complete, I'll speak more to that later.

Mr. Sabir: Given that this minister has a habit of putting down his stakeholders rather than working with them and given that the UCP cuts to legal aid and inaction to properly support legal aid prompted repeated demonstrations by the lawyers' association and given that I attended some of these demonstrations and heard first-hand just how badly cuts imposed by this minister and this government have hurt our justice system, a simple question for the minister: how did he get this so wrong?

Mr. Shandro: Well, none of that is true, Mr. Speaker. Legal aid is funded. It has all the funding it requires to make sure that Albertans have access to justice. We have just finished a modernization project for the 40 items in the tariff, working with legal aid, empowering them to be able to do that review, and now we're happy to continue to work with legal aid, making sure that they have all the funding that they require to make sure that Albertans have access to justice, that they deserve.

Mr. Sabir: Given that legal aid roster lawyers have stopped accepting files for serious offences, including sexual assaults, homicides, and family law matters, and given that we may never know the true extent of the damage caused by this government, will the minister tell this House how he plans to determine how many people were denied justice as a result of the chaos this government created, and will he commit today to restoring the legal aid funding agreement signed under the NDP government and revise legal aid tariffs and eligibility guidelines?

Mr. Shandro: Well, none, Mr. Speaker, because everything he just said is not true. Legal aid has all the funding that it requires. People have access to justice. In fact, we have in the last couple of months increased the tariff amounts for the criminal defence bar by 8 per cent. Everything the member has said is completely and totally untrue.

Provincial Debt Repayment

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, during the 2021-22 fiscal year Alberta's government debt-servicing costs alone were over $2.6 billion. This amount exceeds the total operating expenses of the Children's Services, seniors and housing, and Municipal Affairs ministries combined. Can the Minister of Finance please share with this House: what is the plan to repay the debt as soon as possible so we can stop paying the interest to bankers and start focusing on providing the services that Albertans deserve?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that important question. Paying down debt is one of our top priorities. In fact, our goal is to pay off debt as it matures. I'm pleased to say that we're planning on paying off all the debt that's maturing in this fiscal year; that's $13.4 billion. During a time of inflation and increasing interest rates it's critical that we pay debt off as it matures instead of going to markets to borrow at what might be twice the cost of capital, because that will double our interest costs.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans also support growing the Alberta heritage trust fund to support future generations but given that the debt governments have racked up over the past 14 years threatens the future, can the minister, who I respect for his long background in ranching and accounting, tell us how best to balance the need to reduce the debt with the opportunity to increase long-term savings in the heritage savings fund?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a great question. You know, what's really great is to actually be debating the intention between paying down debt and additional investment in the heritage savings trust fund. We can only do that because we have a balanced budget. I've asked for the analysis, and the analysis I've received is this: if from the start of the heritage savings trust fund all of the earnings were reinvested in the fund, we would be sitting at close to $300 billion in that trust fund today.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that Premier Ralph Klein famously declared in 2004 that Alberta had paid back all of its debt in full but given that the latest fiscal update forecast showed $75 billion of taxpayer-supported debt since 2004, what does this minister, who is a proud grandfather and not a career politician, plan to do to ensure that the fiscal discipline of this government's first three years continues into the future so we can pay back our debt?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, running surplus budgets is not only responsible fiscal management; we're being responsible to the next generation. We're not downloading irresponsible fiscal decisions onto our children and grandchildren. I appreciate the question. At the end of this fiscal year we're projecting a net debt-to-GDP ratio under 10 per cent. That will ensure Alberta has by far and away the strongest balance sheet of any province. Continued fiscal discipline will matter into the future along with positioning this province for investment attraction and economic growth. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Hon. members, this does conclude the time allotted for Oral Question Period, but before you go, if I can remind you of two quick things. We had the pleasure of being joined by some former members this afternoon. They are here primarily because of the reception that is being hosted between the former members' association and the current members. If you are able this evening: 6 p.m. in the Capital View Room. Also, members would have received a memo from the Speaker's office earlier today indicating that the packages for your constituency offices are available for pickup at my office.

In 30 seconds or less we will continue with the daily Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of the Social Health Equity Network of Lethbridge and Area 2022 Lethbridge Child and Family Poverty Report, and I'd like to acknowledge the authors: Echo Nowak, Ronda Reach, Janelle Marietta, Dr. Sharon Yanicki, Stasha Donahue, Germain Wells, Mila Luchak, Erin Mason, Lori Harasem, and Heather Loewen.
Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Madu, Deputy Premier, Minister of Skilled Trades and Professions, pursuant to the Land Surveyors Act the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association report of the proceedings of the 113th annual general meeting, April 21 to 23, 2022.

On behalf of hon. Mr. Horner, Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation, pursuant to the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council annual report 2021-2022; pursuant to the Farm Implement and Dealership Act the Farmers' Advocate office annual report 2021-22; pursuant to the Livestock Identification and Commerce Act the Livestock Identification Services Ltd. report to the minister and summary of activities April 1, 2021, to March 31, 2022; pursuant to the Agriculture Financial Services Act the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation 2021-22 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, now we are at points of order. At 2:16 the hon. Deputy Opposition House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j). At that time, 2:16, the Minister of Technology and Innovation rose to answer a question from the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview and said twice – I don't have the benefit of the Blues – that that member is misrepresenting facts, and "shame on him."

If we look at (h), (i), and (j), certainly, the member was stating facts. If he disagrees with it, the minister has every right to correct those, but telling the other member that he's misrepresenting: that's making false allegations against another member. That would be covered by (h). Imputing false motives to another member: why would the member misrepresent anything? And the language he used was certainly abusive and insulting. So under (h), (i), and (j) the minister's comments were offside these rules, and I think the minister should retract and apologize.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader has the call.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe you have given caution to the Chamber in the past about doing things indirectly that you cannot do directly. Suggesting a specific member misrepresented the facts: whether I agree with it or not is irrelevant. I do withdraw the comment.

The Speaker: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

[Adjourned debate December 8: Mr. Turton]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West has the call.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to provide some comments on Bill 2, a bill that does provide some inflation relief to families, to working people, to people with children.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I've just received some news, Madam Speaker, that I will share with the House, and I'll tie it into this bill. My friend Curtis Noble, who is a firefighter in Medicine Hat, who has been active in the Alberta association of professional firefighters and paramedics for some time, a friend to me, a father to his three children, committed to his community, to his family, to his friends, in particular our mutual friends Megan and Andrew Hilgendorf. He worked very hard and has worked very hard for presumptive coverage for his brothers and sisters in the firefighters, for better health care, for a better education system.

He's in the ICU this afternoon. The prognosis is not positive, Madam Speaker, and he's on my mind as I deliver these remarks. Last time I saw him, we had a pretty good Alberta moment. He came into town and he and Andrew stayed at my place to go see the Corb Lund show. They refused to let me pay for the ticket. They drank too much of my expensive Scotch, I think as an exchange, and we all stayed up really late after having a good time at the Corb show.

Families all across this province work hard to contribute to their communities. Curtis is one of those people. He has worked hard for a well-functioning public health care system, and now he is using it. I'm glad that he can receive the care that he needs in the Medicine Hat hospital, and I thank those medical professionals for all of the care that they are giving to him. His three girls – Leah, Julie, and Keelin – are also on my mind. We will make sure that we update the House as to his progress and to recognize his service as a professional firefighter in the city of Medicine Hat.

On Bill 2, we are considering this piece of legislation because Albertans are hurting from 40-year-high inflation. There is no question that this bill is needed to provide some relief for working people and for people living in poverty. At a glance, you know, people living in low income – for example, in Lethbridge 11.2 per cent of residents at last count. I just tabled this report, Madam Speaker, written with funding by the city of Lethbridge, from the Social Health Equity Network of Lethbridge and Area, and I want to commend the folks that worked on this report, many of whom have been doing such work in Lethbridge on antipoverty work for many years. Certainly, a couple of the report's authors – Dr. Sharon Yanicki, Stasha Donahue, Lori Harasem – have been hard at work for as long as I've known them, which is probably 15 years, maybe more.

Using the 2019 census family low-income measure after tax for Lethbridge, 15 per cent of children and youth aged zero to 17 are low income, and children living in lone-parent families have a greater likelihood of experiencing conditions of poverty than those in two-adult families. Almost half of children in Lethbridge of lone parents live in poverty. Children live in deeper poverty than adults, with children aged zero to five experiencing the highest rates of low income across age groups.

This is compounded by racialization in the city of Lethbridge. Madam Speaker, for Lethbridge CMA the low-income rate across all ages for those who identify as Indigenous is 27 per cent for children ages zero to 17. The low-income rate is greatest for First Nations children, at 42 per cent. Wow. Access to housing, food security, and education and early childhood development are all affected by living with low income, and of course we talk about this in terms of the social determinants of health. Nowhere do we see this more than in the city of Lethbridge.

The recent survey for the greatest degree of poverty is, of course, folks who experience homelessness. The point-in-time survey: Lethbridge is one of the seven participating cities in Alberta that participates in the point-in-time homeless count. It's conducted in 65 municipalities across the country. This is the third time it was conducted. According to the survey 454 people in Lethbridge are experiencing homelessness. That's more than double the 223 people recorded in 2018. Those numbers, collected over a six-hour period on September 27, were released last week. Indigenous people make up 6.6 per cent of the city's population but were overrepresented in the results, making up 72 per cent of unsheltered people and 36 per cent of sheltered homeless people. [interjection] Oh, yes. Yes, I will accept this intervention.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you. Thank you very much. Well, I really appreciated hearing about some of the issues in the Lethbridge area, the area you represent, and certainly we know that homelessness has exploded here in Edmonton, too, since 2019, and I guess that's when the UCP was first elected. It has doubled here in Edmonton, and a lot of that, I know, is due to the lack of investment in affordable housing, in permanent supportive housing, in so many significant areas that support people to be able to be well housed.

Another thing that we know is that Alberta has much lower than the national average of other provinces in terms of housing availability, in terms of affordable housing. You know, 4.3 per cent is about what the national average is in the other provinces, and Alberta has about 2.9 per cent. Really, I just wanted to go ahead and talk about that.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, hon. member. I also want to thank her, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, for her advocacy both in housing and affordability for seniors as well, both in her time as a minister and as an opposition critic.

When we learn about these specific numbers and instances of deep poverty with respect to housing and homelessness and instances of living in low income for children, particularly Indigenous children in the city of Lethbridge, that I have just raised with the House, this bill leaves out the past years of allowing income support and assured income for the severely handicapped, the AISH program, and the seniors' benefit to lose ground to inflation. There was really no need for this over time. It was not a question of fiscal rectitude or whatever the government might claim. It was a question, at the time, when inflation was a smaller amount, in 2019, in 2020, of simply trying to find operational savings in areas where they essentially thought they could get away with it. That took advantage of folks, the folks at the lowest end of the income scale, folks who were at risk of experiencing homelessness. We've seen that double over this government's tenure in the city of Lethbridge. Certainly, when one's basic assistance programs, whether it's AISH or income support, are not keeping pace with inflation over time, that adds up, and especially it starts to add up when we're in a year where now we are looking at a compounding 40-year-high inflation.

This bill goes some way to fix that – that is to say, it indexes these programs to inflation going forward – but it does not fix what was lost in 2019 to now. For example, someone receiving assured income for the severely handicapped would be $3,000 better off if we had just continued with the legislation that all UCP MLAs voted in favour of in the fall of 2018 and then cynically ripped away from people at their first available opportunity in the budget of 2019. That could be fixed in this bill, and I think it should be, a good-faith attempt to ensure that we're doing the work that we need to do in the context of commodity prices going up as much as they have.

There was one additional deposit in the heritage fund – sadly, not two – because, of course, that money gets saved in order to fund future program expenditures in health care, education, and social services. But this legislation could be amended to fix these, essentially, what amounted to sneaky income tax increases on the personal income tax side with a failure to index brackets to inflation and, on the other side, a clawing back of benefits around income support and seniors' benefits.

3:00

I will say here that these housing and homelessness numbers, shocking as they are, and these child poverty numbers that are astonishing, in particular incidence of poverty among Indigenous children in Lethbridge: many of these issues can be and are addressed through income support programs. One of the income support programs that we still have not seen a restoration of is around that housing supplement for income support recipients, which has been cut. I think that is part of what has led to so many people living in unsheltered homelessness in Lethbridge, which is a massive issue in our city and one that remains not even grappled with, let alone having a strategic plan to address it from the UCP government.

I'll begin with that piece of the legislation, which I think has, in many ways, my most effusive praise for Bill 2 in that indexing those programs going forward rights a wrong. It was wrong to pause that indexation on the backs of people who can least afford it, and it was wrong to delay and delay and delay. It remains wrong not to do it retroactively.

Secondly we have this other matter of the $100-a-month payments to people with children. You know, I'm thinking here of my friend Curtis Noble, who is in the ICU currently in Medicine Hat and has three kids, because I know he was off work for a little while and I know he was getting treatment for PTSD. I was really proud of him for that when we last talked about it, I think, in June, and I said: you're going to rock this; you can do this; there's a life beyond PTSD; the "post" is the first word in that acronym for a reason.

I think of families like his. You know, that $100 a month per child for six months probably helps quite a bit when you're off work and you've got three kids. The cost of living, we all know, has gone pretty bananas, maybe not when you're buying bananas in the grocery store – those have remained fairly stable – but I don't know if anybody has had a look at the price of eggs lately, depending on where you go. I've noticed that one's moderated a little bit, but certainly there have been many, many things when I'm going through my usual – I try to do it online still because of time – grocery order where I just go: whoa; some things have really gone up. Even potatoes, curiously, have gone up quite a bit.

So I can imagine that, you know, families are really going to be looking forward to these cash payments, but this is a program that leaves out nearly 2 million Albertans. A single-income earner, someone working full-time on minimum wage, does not get anything from this. You know, there was a significant lag of time between the Premier's announcement a few weeks back – it'll be almost three to four weeks now – and the introduction of this bill. During that time they could have gone back to the drawing board, given, as we know, that within the documents, within the mid-year fiscal update, within some of the costing for these programs and for this bill, which has been a little bit confused – it's been a bit tough to untangle whether the government actually knows how much they're spending on these initiatives – they've got a sort of line item in there and keep sort of saying: oh, yeah; future provisions, future provisions. Albertans know that that means closer to the election.

Certainly, there was a Leger survey that indicated that, in particular, people in Calgary saw this program as a bit of a cynical ploy. Be that as it may, a lot of families do need it, even though I think people recognize it for what it is. It says that they're provisioned for more initiatives, and I think it sums to about $1.3 billion if I'm not wrong. Like I said, it . . . [Ms Phillips' speaking time expired] I'll provide more at a different time.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to be able to rise today to be able to speak to Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. I do so with great excitement because of the relief that I know this is going to create for Albertans. Specifically, this act will have an impact especially on low-income seniors, those living with disabilities, and others that rely on social benefit programs like AISH, seniors' benefits, and income support.

I can tell you, after spending almost the entire summer door-knocking and connecting with many of my constituents at the door, it became increasingly apparent, the challenges that many in our community are facing, especially folks on fixed incomes. Life has slowly but surely become unaffordable, forcing folks into situations where they have to choose between food and rent or paying utilities. So this is timely, and it's necessary. When the Premier first won her leadership race, she gave each of us MLAs 30 minutes just to get to know us, to find out what the issues are that we're concerned about. We then spent the next 45 minutes discussing the challenges that we had seen and that I had been seeing at the doors in Calgary-Klein. I was just so excited to see that she shared my heart and concern, especially for the disability community and those who work in that sector as well.

For me, this is personal. You know, for my whole career I've worked in the not-for-profit sector. My own family has experienced challenges over the years. My own grandmother fled domestic violence and ended up in a situation where she was trying to raise her two sons alone and with the challenges that came with that. My father was homeless, of course, as a teenager. It took a full community coming around him to help him overcome that, with the opportunity, then, for him to be able to go pay that forward. As all six of us boys have worked in the social sector, this is close to our hearts.

I believe that this is no different for the disability community, that relies on programs like AISH, assured income for the severely handicapped, as well as PDD. What we've seen is the cost of living just slowly rising and making things more and more difficult for people as affordability gets less and less for folks in our community. This is why for a long time I have been an advocate for indexing of these supports. As the members across mentioned, this shouldn't be something that we have to revisit every eight years to come back and beg the government for a bump up but something that keeps up with inflation as we move forward.

I am struck by the level of cynicism from the other side – and I've heard a few comments not just today but in debate on a different day – about how we're doing this six months before an election and that this is somehow some sort of ploy to get re-elected. I just need to remind members across that they didn't index AISH and other supports until five months before the election. So I'd like to throw it right back at them and maybe have them answer for that. Was that just a ploy to win votes, or was it doing what was necessary to make sure that we were helping people in the community? I would suggest and hope that it was doing what was necessary to help people in our community, for them and for us. Should we wait six months until the next election to help Albertans through this crisis? The answer is definitely not. That's why this government is acting and it's acting now.

The difference, however, Madam Speaker, between that party when they were in government and this party when we're in government is that we are indexing AISH, income support, and seniors' benefits, and we have a balanced budget. Our economy is working. It's roaring. We're seeing growth in sectors right across the board. We've been able to put ourselves over the last three and a half years into a financial position so that the long-term viability of these programs is not at risk.

Under that government they were at risk. They were at risk. Honestly, I think we have an important question as we approach an election. If we want to make sure that these programs can continue to be indexed and that we continue to have the financial wealth to be able to help support Albertans that are vulnerable in our communities, we need to make sure that we keep this government in charge so we can continue to grow our economy and we can continue to have strong balance sheets. Again, a hundred billion dollars in debt put these programs at risk not only for today but into the future, and we need to make sure that the viability of these programs is protected.

It was clearly outlined in my mandate letter just how much of a priority this was for our government, to make life more affordable for Albertans, especially for low-income and vulnerable Albertans. That is why we were very quick to increase benefit rates, which thousands of Albertans will see before Christmas. Bill 2 has a long list of measures that will bring help with affordability. The electricity rebate has already been in place for quite a few months now, providing money relief for millions of Albertans. With Bill 2 that is being extended for another four months.

If you remember back for a moment when the electricity rebate was being put in place, the NDP, of course, criticized this as a fake rebate. Five hundred dollars does not sound like a fake rebate to me, Madam Speaker. That's very real. Absolutely. Five hundred dollars is going to make a significant impact, I know, for my constituents, again, as they have to make those difficult decisions. Five hundred dollars is a lot of food on the table for people. For some families that's weeks' or even months' worth of groceries. That is enough money to cover an average person's groceries for two or more months.

Now we're hearing very similar rhetoric from the members opposite in regard to our targeted relief payments for seniors, families, and low-income and disabled Albertans. Madam Speaker, what I'm getting at is that the NDP enjoys creating a lot of fear. It's what they know best at the end of the day. When the government makes an announcement that we are providing $600 in relief, people are happy because that is something that is going to make real change for them and their families.

I'd like to take just a couple of minutes to shift gears and talk a little bit about Alberta's relationship with Ottawa. Obviously, Alberta is not the only place in Canada that's facing an affordability crisis. Fuel, utilities, groceries: they are all more expensive across this entire country. Here in Alberta it is unrealistic to think that anything the provincial government is able to do can fix the nationwide inflation crisis. However, we are able to provide support for those that have been impacted, and we're doing that. Additionally, we can call on the federal government to fix the problems that they've created. We have been doing that since before we were even elected back in 2019. Our government's first bill of this Legislature was to repeal the carbon tax that the previous NDP government, of course, had put in place.

Talking about the 13 cents a litre off the gas tax, maybe we'll flip that and have a conversation about if this government was putting forward a bill in this Legislature right now to actually increase the gas tax. Could you imagine if we were doing that right now, having a discussion about increasing the gas tax? I am 90 per cent sure that the members opposite would be losing their minds, and rightly so, because right now we should not. That's the last thing that we should be doing, increasing taxes on Albertans, especially on gas taxes. We know that the higher cost of the gas tax has a significant impact on the cost of everything.

Of course, it would be utterly absurd if we were sitting here right now talking about increasing the gas tax, but the reality is that the federal government has just done that with the carbon tax. By doing that, they have increased the cost of everything. But now if we were increasing the gas tax, I'm 90 per cent sure we would be hearing a lot of noise from the other side. The federal government increases the gas tax: not a peep. Not a peep. [interjections] Actually, Madam Speaker, I'm hearing the members opposite defending their good friend and ally Justin Trudeau and his carbon tax policy and their federal leader, Jagmeet Singh. When are these guys going to stick up for and defend Albertans and push back on this carbon tax? This government is taking real action by the elimination of the gas tax to help Albertans during an affordability crisis.

Madam Speaker, Bill 2 is an example of our government taking an approach that will ensure that those who need it are going to get the support that they need. We see the need. We are addressing it. In addition to this bill, our government has also put $20 million in support for food banks over the next two years. During the pandemic we were the first government in recent history to financially support food banks in Alberta. We provided $6 million to help restock shelves during the pandemic and make sure that Albertans didn't go hungry. That is $26 million more than the previous government ever spent on food banks, so I do not believe they have credibility to be able to criticize this action.

There are thousands of Albertans that are eager to contribute to food banks, which is why we chose to run a donation-matching campaign. Our food banks are very talented at involving the broader community in the solution, and that's what we need. We can't just rely on government alone to be able to get through this crisis. We all have a role. We all need to take part, and this matching program allows these food banks to be able to leverage these dollars to engage the broader community and make sure that all Albertans are part of the solution.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to simply re-emphasize my support for Bill 2. These measures have made and will continue to make a huge difference for every Albertan as they navigate this inflation crisis. This is not a crisis that will be solved by simply cancelling your monthly subscription to Disney+. That is why we are providing legitimate relief that will have a real impact for Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. My pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2 and comment on some of the previous speaker's comments on this bill. It's interesting – and I will always find debate in this Chamber interesting – that there are so many differences of opinion of what's said in this Chamber. I'll lay out at the outset that there are some measures in this bill that I can get behind, that I can support. There are a couple of specific issues that I have with the bill, and I'll speak at length to those.

But before I launch into the bill specifically, I just want to talk about the affordability crisis that currently exists in Alberta and the approach that this current government took three and a half years ago when they first formed government. There are a number of measures that actually increased costs on everyday Albertans because of programs that the government brought in. You know, one of the first things this government did was to deindex AISH in 2019. Now, I appreciate that it's being reindexed; however, the challenge from constituents that I'm hearing from is that for the three years where it didn't grow or increase because of cost-of-living increases, they've fallen further and further behind. I appreciate that AISH is being reindexed, and my hope and my request for all members in this Chamber is that any future government does not deindex AISH, that we leave AISH indexed in perpetuity. [interjection] I see my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I will give way.

Ms Goehring: Thank you to the hon. member. I hear you speak about recipients of AISH falling further and further behind. These are people that you talk to on a regular basis. Can you just expand a little bit on what that actually looks like, what that means to fall behind? We know that so many are struggling, and it's not a simple thing such as not being able to do luxurious things. It's quite devastating to hear the stories of those people that are being impacted. We're hearing stories about people not being able to afford rent and groceries and those types of things. I would love for the hon. member to be able to share a little bit about those details and those personal stories that he's hearing from his constituents.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Yeah. Thank you to my colleague the hon. member. You know, I've heard a number of stories of folks that have – again, people that are on AISH receive a very modest amount that covers off all of their necessities. The challenge when this government deindexed it is that we were starting to see inflation grow at quite a rapid pace. Now, I don't have the number in front of me of the actual dollars that were lost by it not being indexed over three years, but to the minister who spoke before me – I mean, he talked about some of the comments that our side has made around the electricity rebates and how little the amount was, where the minister was claiming: well, no; $500 over five months is substantial.

For a person on AISH that is probably even more impactful. We know that every dollar, especially for low-income Albertans, that they can either keep in their pockets or that, you know, through supports from the government, it can increase makes a significant difference, Madam Speaker, in their lives. That's one of the things.

I mean, I appreciate the member saying that one of our criticisms is that this is coming in six months before the election. I just think that's an interesting coincidence. We'll leave it to Albertans to decide. I appreciate the fact that our indexing came in in a similar type of window. What I will say on that, and part of the reason that I support this element of the bill, is that I'm glad it's being brought in. Regardless of when it's being brought in, it's a positive step.

It doesn't eliminate a frustration that I have that this government deindexed AISH in 2019. You know, I can appreciate how cabinet and Executive Council works. My hope is that some of the members opposite, including the minister because of his background and his experience, would have spoken out against the former Premier saying: we're going to deindex AISH. Now, I'm not privy to those caucus meetings, but it's frustrating to hear that three years later the same group of people who were the government that deindexed AISH are now saying: yes, we're behind this; it's great. Well, where was that vigour, where was that persuasive standing up for the people on AISH three and a half years ago? But, I mean, I'll leave this.

As far as the bill goes, I've laid out my concerns over the past three years. I appreciate the fact that it's in this bill, that it's being indexed. I wish the government would consider some type of measure to help support AISH recipients for that loss of indexation over the past three years. I can tell you that if it was possible for the government to bring in some kind of amendment – the opposition cannot because that would require dollars – then that would be greatly appreciated, and I think the government would have the opposition's support in doing that. I think it would be fairly nominal, quite frankly – not nominal, but a smaller amount – because we're talking about inflation over three years. I put that on the record. You know, I appreciate this debate.

I think some of the other challenges – and it's interesting, Madam Speaker, that, you know, being in this place you really learn how people's brains work. On this side of the House we had raised the alarm bells around bracket creep when the current government increased personal income taxes. We're talking semantics now. On this side of the House we say that the government increased personal income taxes. On that side of the House they say: no, we didn't; we're just not indexing people's wages anymore.

Now, the irony in that was that the former Premier railed against bracket creep when he was the head of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. So there's a little bit of doublespeak going on when it was not okay for governments 15 years ago, 20 years ago to do that, yet for this government that was not seen as an increase in personal income taxes. I mean, at the end of the day call it what you want. It is an increase in income taxes. Now, again, I appreciate that the government is reversing that now; a different bill. That does mean that it will leave more money in the pockets of Albertans, which is a positive thing.

I mean, I'm sure all members in this Chamber hear about the affordability crisis everywhere they go. You know, quite frankly, Madam Speaker, I too am surprised when I go to look at the prices of certain items. I know that Albertans are making choices of changing their diet because they simply can't afford to eat the way they used to. Action is needed.

Again, I'll finish my comments about earlier decisions the government made which actually increased costs on Albertans. I mean, in addition to raising personal income taxes, there was a significant spike in the increase in cost of utilities, insurance, tuition, park fees. The fact that the government removed the drug coverage for seniors: I think that's a shot below the belt, quite personally.

The fact of the matter is that Albertans do see that, you know, the number one outstanding reason of why there is a surplus is because the price of oil has been much higher than the government forecasted. Of course, Alberta has zero influence, zero control over the price of oil. It's not because the government are these phenomenal financial stewards of our dollars. It's because the revenue coming into the provincial coffers has more than doubled what was coming in under the tenure of the NDP.

I'll jump back to the bill because I know my time is running short. One of the biggest concerns I have with this – and I'd love to hear the minister or ministers get up and speak on this – is the whole payday lending scheme. I appreciate that the concept is to defer payments so that Albertans can pay later, which would save them money. The problem is that the people that are still paying the rate regulation option are going to be shouldering a larger cost of those loans in six months' time, and that will likely lead to higher and higher utility costs. There is a U of C economist who called this idea a death spiral. You're just deferring costs to down the road.

The problem is: for the people that are going to vie for this option or choose this option, how are they going to afford those increased payments down the road? It's dangerous in the sense that it could be setting them up to fail. I appreciate that the government was looking for a way to help Albertans in the immediate future for higher utility costs. I'm just not convinced that this is the best mechanism to do that. There's a significant potential downside and significant risk that Albertans are going to be bearing.

Another point that my colleagues have touched on is the fact that the affordability measure, or the $100 a month payments, leaves out nearly 2 million Albertans. We're not talking about Albertans who are earning hundreds of thousands of dollars a year and don't necessarily need that – I'm not saying it wouldn't help; I'm saying, “need that” – in order to continue to live month to month. The challenge, Madam Speaker, is for somebody who is working full-time. A full-time minimum wage job does not see any of this relief.

We know that if you're working full-time at minimum wage, you're not making hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. You're not even making $100,000 a year. Those are the people that are really being squeezed right now when you've got the increase of the cost of gas for driving. You've got costs at the grocery store, increased costs in utilities. For people that do own their homes, we've seen significant increases in mortgage rates. Again, I appreciate that's outside of the purview of the provincial government, but it's still an increased cost. All of this results in newer costs. [interjection] I see my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Manning rise. I'll give way.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Member. You know, as you were speaking about mortgage rates going up and costs that are going up for Albertans, I think one of the other things that we're hearing about is the increase in municipal taxes. I'm just wondering if you have any thoughts around what the government could have done in relation to ensuring that local municipalities aren't forced to have to increase municipal taxes on Albertans.

Mr. Bilous: Yes. Thank you, through you, Madam Speaker, to the member for a great question. We are seeing in some jurisdictions, like some municipalities and regions and communities in Alberta, not just double-digit tax increases on their municipal property taxes; we're seeing tax increases close to 20 per cent. You know what? I get that the government will blame the municipal councillors and leaders for the fact that their – whatever they're going to say – pet projects are raising taxes through the roof. Municipalities deliver 90 per cent of the services that Albertans rely on and receive 10 per cent of the funding. The inversion on that is very flawed.

When you have municipal leaders calling on the government not to cut their funding, which the current government has done over the past three and a half years – they need more support to be able to deliver services for their community members. We know that municipalities have very few tools in their tool box to be able to increase the revenues that they have to provide services. Councils across this province right now are having very, very difficult conversations on: what are the priorities that they need to fund?

The problem is that if you look at the rate of inflation this last year, it was over 7 per cent. So when a municipality says, “We're going to raise taxes by 3 per cent” and this government criticizes them for doing it, that's still far from the increased costs of operations, of the day-to-day. Now, I'm not advocating for higher property taxes, but I can sympathize with municipal leaders in this conundrum that they're in where citizens expect the delivery of services. They're expecting cities that are growing to be increasing their amenities. We have increasing costs, and the government is not sharing their revenue surplus with municipalities, who are desperate to just continue providing the same base level of services. This is a problem, Madam Speaker, because the result is that the municipal leaders are increasing taxes on Albertans or on their constituents municipally, which means more costs.

Once again, the provincial government is directly responsible for the funds that go to municipalities. I mean, the Premier and the Finance minister recently spoke about how municipalities are governed by the province, they exist because of the province. So it is the province's responsibility to be able to share some of its revenues with municipalities, who deliver 90 per cent of the services that Albertans rely on. This is another way that the current government is actually increasing costs on Albertans.

Now, you know, I appreciate that in this bill, Madam Speaker, there is, again, the provincial portion of the gasoline tax Albertans will not have to pay for six months. That does help Albertans. We had concerns when they first introduced this measure, but we have seen some savings for Albertans. As my colleague often points out, the challenge with that measure is that it's only benefiting those who drive, so if you're not driving, I don't think – and I could be wrong – that municipalities are taking that savings themselves and passing it on to their ridership. Having said that, I wish the current government would have kept that break on the provincial portion of the gas tax going as opposed to it ending for several months.

I see my colleague has risen.

Mr. Feehan: I just am interested in your conversation about the municipalities. I know that you've had a significant amount of experience with the municipalities, and I also know that you're quite aware of the variety of ways in which this government has increased costs on municipalities. I wonder if you can remind the House a little bit about some of the changes that were made with regard to linear assessments, for example, about giving tax holidays to wealthy corporations, about increasing the cost on municipalities for having RCMP officers and actually diminishing the ability of municipalities to make decisions regarding their own budgets and budget increases, you know, all of these kinds of things that have made life in the small towns of this province much more difficult to administer and have resulted in increased costs as well.

Mr. Bilous: Yeah. Thank you to the hon. member, through you, Madam Speaker.

I'm just curious how much time I have remaining.

The Deputy Speaker: Less than 30 seconds.

Mr. Bilous: Less than 30 seconds. Well, that's always a problem.

What I will say to answer the member's question is that costs for policing have gone up significantly as the province has pulled some funding for that. There have been challenges as well with municipalities collecting money that is owed to them.

Madam Speaker, there are elements of this bill I absolutely support. There are elements that are challenges, and my hope is that we will see some progress to improve the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I stand today to voice my support for Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. Bill 2 is here to ensure that Albertans who are finding it difficult to make ends meet will be supported by our government. Just recently the Premier and the minister of affordability announced $2.4 billion in inflation relief measures that will make life more affordable for Alberta families.

Before going further, I would like to applaud the Premier, ministers, MLAs, and our leaders for making difficult decisions during these unprecedented times here. At this time we need to ensure and let Albertans know that they're supported and protected by their government. As well, I extend my appreciation to all working Albertans, families, children, seniors, and our most vulnerable populations that have been under pressure from the increasing prices of utilities, food, and rent. There is no doubt that Albertans are facing price hikes, and I am pleased that Bill 2 will help Albertans during these difficult times.

Every choice we make in this crisis must strike a balance between Albertans' financial needs and the requirement for an ongoing balanced budget and fiscal prudence. We can assist Albertans during a crisis like this one when our financial house is in order. Madam Speaker, over the past couple of years our government has worked tremendously hard to balance the budget and ensure that we acted with speed to address the economic consequences of the pandemic. We created a system of supports for job creators and freed up cash for families and businesses to help relieve the pressure and keep their doors open. We passed numerous legislations, revised many policies to ensure we attract investments which boost our economic growth and, most importantly, improve the lives of all Albertans.

Madam Speaker, Calgary-East is a community that is facing a lot of hardship from the current inflation. I have spoken to many constituents these recent months and heard time and again that life is becoming financially challenging. In recent years I was delighted to see Alberta's government fund and complete infrastructure projects in Calgary-East, including the revitalization of Forest Lawn high school and Clifton Manor to ensure that our children and seniors in long-term are supported, construction of a new playground in St. Kateri, and the completion of Journey to Freedom park. As well, Calgary-East is a growing community with new families, new businesses, like Calgary East Hills. Neighbourhoods like Belvedere would enhance the presence of the city.

As Alberta remains one of the most affordable places in Canada to live and work, Alberta's lower cost of living combined with relatively high average earnings and the lowest overall taxes mean Albertans keep more money in their pockets. Madam Speaker, let's not forget that Alberta's recovery plan's aim was to take a bold action to create jobs that got people back to work, assisted in building infrastructure, and, most importantly, helped us diversify our economy to ensure that our resources are well utilized.

The focus in the past was to eliminate red tape that was holding back the economy since these changes have brought more investments and good jobs into our urban, rural communities and ensured more jobs for Albertans. This was a promised platform that will always be a commitment, a way to protect workers and restore balance and strengthen democracy. As we work together to build our economic strength, to attract investment, and position our province for prosperity, at the end it's all to support Albertans and to provide hope for the future.

Through many provincial government initiatives we were experiencing broad-based investment and economic diversification in our province. Amazon Web Services announced its plan to establish its second cloud computing hub in Calgary, amounting to $4.3 billion, while Mphasis has recently opened its digital centre in Calgary and committed to create 1,000 jobs. Mphasis also opened their Canadian headquarters this year in Calgary with 200 jobs and will expand to create thousands of tech jobs. RBC has also opened a tech hub in Calgary which will create about 300 jobs while EY, impressed with the talented offers, opened in September this year. A new finance hub will create about 200 jobs in Calgary. Northern Petrochemical also announced a $2.5 billion project in the municipal district of Greenview, and Dow Chemical plans to open a project that will be the world's first net-zero carbon emission petrochemical plant, which is predicted to cost about $10 billion. Another huge investment that has landed in Alberta is Lynx Air, Madam Speaker, Canada's newest low-cost airline. It joins Flair and WestJet as Alberta-based airlines.

These are just some of the many investments creating jobs in Alberta and boosting our economy, Madam Speaker, as we saw the unemployment rate dip down to 5.2 per cent in October. We are also seeing the continuous entry of job creators in our province. Whether new businesses or business expansions, Alberta's government is helping employees, employers create exciting futures for Albertans.

Madam Speaker, although Alberta's economy has made a solid comeback, many residents are still finding it difficult to pay for food and heating due to the rising prices and record inflation. We as a government are unable to address the inflation challenges on our own, but because of our solid financial standing and balanced budget, we're able to provide significant assistance to Albertans and their families in the challenging times ahead. Our current focus is to provide urgent cost-of-living supports and inflation relief and work with our ministries to improve long-term affordability. Since our vulnerable populations are most affected by rising prices and soaring inflation and require greater support, I'm pleased that we are directing our attention to providing supports to our elders, families, and vulnerable groups that are severely affected.

Madam Speaker, Alberta's inflation increased to 6.8 per cent in October from 6.2 per cent in September. The rise is brought by growing gas, electricity, food prices. Families with children often spend a greater percentage of their income on food, energy, and transportation. The average income of seniors and disadvantaged Albertans is lower. All Albertans are receiving broad-based relief from the expense of living while receiving additional assistance for those who most need it, and I'm proud that we are doing this while maintaining budgetary responsibility.

The government of Alberta has already taken a number of measures to make life more affordable, including the electricity rebate, which has already given up to $250 in relief to 1.9 million families, small businesses, and farms, and the fuel tax relief program, which will be saving Albertans money on gasoline and diesel every time they fill up their cars. Families may be secure in their own ability to heat their homes this winter thanks to the natural gas rebate, which offers natural gas price protection while focusing on providing extra aid to families, elders, and our most vulnerable citizens. I am pleased our administration will expand broad-based services. Our government is aware that the main issue Albertans are now facing is affordability and that they are looking to us to act swiftly to address Alberta's accelerating cost of living.

We aim to concentrate on areas where the government can move quickly and effectively to lower expenses for Albertans while also laying out a better, more affordable future for coming generations. AISH, PDD, income support, the seniors' benefit, the Alberta child and family benefit, extended fuel tax relief, action on utilities, including increasing the electricity rebate, targeted payments for families for each child, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans will all benefit during these upcoming months.

To assist Albertans in heating their homes and paying their energy bills this winter, our government is committed in giving an additional power rebate, better price protection. We will increase the power reinvestment by $200 this winter, providing a total of $500 in rebates throughout the life of the program. Madam Speaker, more steps to safeguard families from price increases in electricity, while maintaining the natural gas price protection program, are taken to help all Albertans.

Madam Speaker, it is wonderful that Alberta's government has decided to postpone the entire provincial gasoline tax for at least the next six months. We have seen this fuel tax relief program from June up to September this year, where the provincial government suspended the collection of fuel tax in that prior year. As we saw the downward trend from oil prices, the reimposition of the fuel tax started in October, which is the lowest among Canada's provinces. Currently we are just collecting a fuel tax of 4.5 cents per litre of gasoline and diesel. Following that, the province will alter the provincial gas tax based on the price of oil as it does under the current relief plan. As a result, beginning January 1st, Albertans will save 13.6 cents, including GST, per litre of petrol and fuel. This initiative will give significant help to Albertans who are dealing with high inflationary prices.

In addition to the roughly 1.3 million tax filers who now do not pay provincial personal income tax, an additional 80,000 to 95,000 Albertans will now do so by 2023. As a result, many Albertans will either receive larger tax refunds or pay less in taxes as a result of 2022 indexation. Provincial tax rates will be updated to reflect inflation by the government. With these changes, it is less probable that an employee who receives a small wage increase may face tax consequences. We will keep our commitment to retroactively adjust personal income taxes to inflation beginning with the 2022 tax year.

Alberta's government provides more than $8.9 billion in services and supports to Alberta seniors each year. This includes financial support and health benefits as well as housing and health supports for seniors with low income. These supports are most of the reasons Alberta has the lowest senior poverty rate in Canada.

Madam Speaker, beginning January, the government will reindex AISH, PDD, income assistance, the seniors' benefit, and the Alberta child and family benefit for inflation, making it even more affordable for Albertans. This will make it possible to adjust payments for inflation and provide benefits to assist vulnerable groups in paying their bills in the face of growing living expenses.

Changes to the Alberta child and family benefit, AISH, the persons with developmental disabilities program, the income support program as well as the Alberta seniors' benefit: Madam Speaker, this increased financial support will have an immediate impact on more than a quarter million vulnerable Albertans, including 43,000 children who are dependent on AISH and income support benefit recipients.

Madam Speaker, I am happy to draw attention to the supporting advantages that seniors and families with . . . [Mr. Singh's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to join debate on Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. Certainly, as the title of the bill indicates, there is some relief regarding, you know, this inflationary crisis that we are in currently. We know that we're witnessing the greatest crisis we've had in decades, and certainly it's important that the government take some responsibility to support its citizens regarding this time, so I'm pleased that the government is bringing forward this bill.

It's just that there are some contradictory policies of this government. As they indicate in this bill that they want to move forward, for example, on indexing the Alberta seniors' benefit, they themselves were the government that deindexed that benefit three and a half years ago. You know, it concerns me that the government is sort of patting themselves on the back a bit by bringing forward this legislation, but some of this legislation would not have even had to come forward if the government hadn't done previous legislation that really did hurt Albertans. I must say that it is like they're doing one thing that's contradictive of something that they did earlier in their mandate.

I do want to just talk about the responsibility of government. Absolutely, when there are events that happen in our world that are beyond sort of individual responsibility – you know, we can't control the price of groceries, which is an example of some of the very high inflationary issues Albertans are facing. We know that the costs of utilities have gone up significantly. An individual cannot control those things. Governments can influence those things. They can't completely control them, but they can make them more reasonable so citizens can cope, can live with dignity. This is an extremely important role of government. Certainly, one of the main reasons, probably, that I got involved in politics is because there are so many significant issues that citizens just can't manage by themselves, so we need just, fair, compassionate government to stand up and provide policies that support our citizens.

One of the things that I, you know, disagree with some of the UCP about – and the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services just mentioned it – is that we can't pay for social programs if we don't have a balanced budget. I completely disagree with that. Actually, governments can do that. They have access to many economic levers, that individual citizens don't, that can support people. Certainly, that was something that we significantly did when we were government.

We know that the oil and gas industry is very important to Albertans and to our economy, to our citizens. Certainly, we've had booms and busts over many, many years in this province. We're all familiar with them. Certainly, when we were government, the price of oil was $26 a barrel at its lowest, and you know it's been over a hundred during this government's mandate. So there is a significant difference in revenue, especially because previous Conservative governments had repeatedly just relied on the oil and gas industry to get us through. They hadn't diversified the economy, and that was something that we, an NDP government, aggressively moved forward in doing.

But did we slash public programs that citizens needed, especially citizens who worked in the oil and gas industry? They lost their jobs oftentimes, and they didn't have that income to provide for their families. Did we slash public programs? No. We did the opposite. We buffered citizens. We supported citizens because that's what good government does. It doesn't have to be a balanced budget to do that. Governments can do many things with their financial resources that an individual can't. I'm very proud that our government did that, and I'm dismayed that this government doesn't see that that's their role also.

People have been absolutely suffering under this government because of the cuts they made when they first came in that they didn't have to make. The example that I used earlier about the deindexation of seniors' benefits – we know of AISH also. We know that they didn't increase the tax brackets. Property taxes went up, school fees, tuition: there are so many things that this government has done, so they've kind of created their own difficulties. But now with this Bill 2 they're saying: oh, well, we're going to give Albertans – some Albertans, not everyone – some money to help them because, yeah, we agree that there is an affordability crisis. But all along they could have been doing so much more, and people could have been supported quite well.

I speak every day to Albertans who are not making ends meet, who are losing their housing. One fellow told me – and he was a senior. He said: "I haven't had meat in months. I can't afford meat." He relied on the Alberta seniors' benefit and he relied on it keeping pace with inflation, but he couldn't have a lifestyle where he ate meat because it was too expensive for him.

So the UCP certainly does have a choice, and I think good government, a compassionate government, would actually buffer citizens when times are tough and not focus only on balancing the budget, because governments don't have to balance their budgets. They have a lot of financial levers so that they have much more latitude to provide those public programs.

We know, Madam Speaker, that oftentimes when those programs are provided, when people can live in dignity, people are well housed, people can access health care, people can, you know, go to postsecondary and improve themselves, those actually save governments money because then they're not accessing those more expensive services like emergency medical services. We know that providing a person who is homeless affordable housing with the proper supports costs less for a government than it does them living homeless. So besides just the human rights argument for providing public programs, there is an economic argument. A wise government would not cut these programs in the first place and would provide Albertans with this buffer, this support. Certainly, I feel like that's the main responsibility of a government, to care for its citizens. Certainly, I differ greatly with some of the views of UCP members in this regard.

You know, I'm reminded of way back when Premier Klein was in office. I was a social worker in child welfare, and he cut public programs by 50 per cent. He didn't have to do that. He did it because he wanted a balanced budget. So he said that he had slayed this dragon and it was so great for everyone. It wasn't good for my clients. It wasn't good for the professionals I worked with. It was a select amount of people who could benefit from that kind of thing. So I really question this premise of the UCP that you have to balance your budget. You can actually do many things as a government.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will take my seat.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on Bill 2? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Police Amendment Act, 2022

[Adjourned debate December 12: Ms Ganley]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022. You know, we've heard from this government for quite some years now about their intention of moving on a costly provincial police force despite opposition, significant opposition, from the majority of Albertans and municipalities, and they have now introduced a piece of legislation that really gives a lot more control from the government into community policing.

We have a piece of legislation that comes on the heels of millions of dollars being downloaded onto municipalities in policing costs in the last three years. On top of that, they made a significant cut to the Justice budget. We have a piece of legislation that's coming forward from a government that, we know, wants to go against the direction of Albertans and look at a costly provincial police force.

While there are pieces of this legislation that we can one hundred per cent support such as civilian oversight into law enforcement, there are so many things glaringly missing from this piece of legislation, Madam Speaker. I think that when we look at the cuts that this government has put towards municipalities and the impact that it's had on policing and the justice system, it is detrimental to communities.

We're hearing that, you know, municipalities' services need support. We saw a government that cut funding for victims' services in a time when crime has increased, when supports have become more and more necessary, cuts to nonprofits. It's just a piece of legislation where some of it is good, Madam Speaker, but there's so much left unknown in this legislation.

We're seeing a government that wants to create a lot of things that are left to regulation, which is quite concerning knowing the history that this government has with interference in some criminal matters and policing matters. I don't know that Albertans trust this government to come up with regulations that aren't part of this legislation. There are things that should be in this legislation that just simply aren't available.

When I've looked through this, you know, our government, the NDP, started the Police Act review, and we were doing things like consulting with Albertans. That was a priority for our government, to be able to listen to those that are involved in policing and have feedback from those. Yet we've heard that some significant legislation has gone through and, with this piece of legislation, is intended to go through without consultation. We heard from Treaty 6 that there was no consultation on Bill 1, the sovereignty act. That went through. Now we've heard that there's been no consultation on this bill.

Now, when it comes to Indigenous communities, I would argue that they have some significant input and voice that needs to be at the table when it comes to policing in this province. We have an overrepresented community of Indigenous people that are in our court systems, that are in our jails, that are being charged unfairly, and the fact that this government has left them out of the conversation for the consultation for this piece of legislation is quite concerning. I would be curious to know what the reason for that is. We heard the Premier over the last few days state that she has in fact met with Indigenous communities regarding legislation, and then, immediately following, we heard Indigenous leaders come out and say that that is not true. So what are Albertans to do, Madam Speaker? We have a piece of legislation that's come forward where they're saying, "Just trust us; we're going to make up these things in the regulations," yet we know that no consultation happened with Indigenous communities.

I'm curious if consultation happened with municipalities. This legislation is going to have some significant impact on municipalities all across this province. When they're looking at putting a committee forward that is 50 per cent supported – not supported. I would like to retract that word. There's no support indicated in here, whether that comes financially or what. They are going to be appointing 50 per cent of those boards, and I find that significantly concerning without adding the piece that there is going to be financial support along with that. We have a government that's saying: "We want things to happen in the province. We have a direction that we want to see policing take, and we're going to appoint" – I've been corrected – "49 per cent of the boards. But how we're going to do that is going to be left in regulations." So knowing that there wasn't consultation that happened to create this piece of legislation, I'm very fearful that consultation may not happen when they're appointing the individuals that are going to be on these committees.

I know that there are some significant concerns and questions when it comes to the relationship that this government has with the RCMP. Now, in the province of Alberta we have some wonderful working relationships with the RCMP. Right here in Edmonton we have K Division. Now, what is going to happen when this piece of legislation comes forward? Will there be any sort of agreement that needs to change or anything required formally with the RCMP K Division?

I can speak from direct experience, Madam Speaker, when it comes to working with K Division. I had the privilege of working with Alberta ICE. For those of you that don't know what that is, it's the Alberta Internet child exploitation unit. It is a provincial strategy, an integrated unit that works with the RCMP, the Calgary police, the Edmonton police, the Lethbridge police, and the Medicine Hat police. What they do is that they directly work with child luring over the Internet; the child sex trade and tourism; voyeurism involving victims under the age of 18; accessing, possession, distribution, importation, manufacturing of child pornography; and any other child-related sexual abuse. I would say that this unit, that represents all Albertans, is essential, and I'm concerned that these well-established relationships and partnerships could be at risk because of the government's plan to come in and start dictating their priorities to local policing.

Now, as a child welfare worker that worked as an investigator, I didn't have the expertise to work on Internet exploitation. I relied heavily on the expertise of the ICE unit. The Edmonton police that I worked with also relied on the information that the RCMP and the specialists in this unit had. We were working with criminals out of Florida that were impacting individuals in Edmonton. Now, as a worker, knowing that I could pick up the phone and contact our federal partners through the RCMP K Division meant that I knew I was doing the best thing that I could for the families and children that I worked for.

There are so many relationships within the police service in communities all across the province that exist because the community came forward and said: "We need this. This is an area of concern in our community, and we as a community, a municipality have decided that this is a strategy that we would like to have involved with the police." I fear, Madam Speaker, that with this piece of legislation, Bill 6, the government is going to come in and start dictating what community policing looks like.

I can think that in Edmonton-Castle Downs at one point we had a NET team, a neighbourhood empowerment team. That came about because our community leaders, through the Edmonton Castle Downs Rec Society and multiple different organizations, came together and said: "We have a need. We need some community policing. We had a high break-and-enter space within Edmonton-Castle Downs. We had a lot of car thefts." And what the community asked for was a neighbourhood empowerment team, and that was provided because the community came forward and said, "This is what we see in our community." It wasn't the provincial government that came in and said, "This needs to happen." It was a community initiative that came forward and created a wonderful relationship with EPS and the community leaders that were naturally there.

I can think of some other wonderful relationships that have happened in Castle Downs, Madam Speaker. We have some beautiful community facilities in Castle Downs. We have the Edmonton Islamic Academy, that is right next door. We have the Al Rashid mosque, that is right next door, and we have the Castle Downs YMCA. They were seeing that some of the kids in the community were a little bit restless and that there were some struggles with community policing in the area. So what the community did was that they came together and had a conversation with EPS, with the hate crimes unit, and with the natural community leaders.

With the support of EPS and the relationship building that took place, they were able to create a wonderful space where youth could get involved with EPS. They were doing basketball games. They were playing hockey. They were doing things where the police in the community said: this is something that's needed to enhance and build relationships in this community. That happened organically because the community came forward and said: this is what we see; these are possible solutions. EPS was incredible at coming forward and offering their feedback and insight and listening to community. There wasn't an additional layer of having to have the minister come in and provide direction on what the community should be doing. EPS and the community leaders believed that they knew what was best for the community, and they were successful in that because they live there, they work there, and they see what's going on.

We have a policing system in north Edmonton that many feel is supportive, but we also have a policing system that many feel is not working. I've held town halls, Madam Speaker, to talk about the racism that's happening within the community and how the community feels that police are contributing to that. Rather than shying away from it and having to go through a provincial whatever to direct some sort of plan, we had the hate crimes unit come and directly talk to the community and share and listen about what was happening on both sides. The community naturally did this.

I fear that when we're looking at a provincial government and a minister that want to get directly involved and have their hands on every component of municipalities and communities across Alberta, we're going to get further and further away from what communities actually need. They need to feel heard; they need to feel involved. The best way to get buy-in is having all parties at the table that are directly involved coming up with solutions. It's a simple mediation format. When you have both sides represented equally, sharing concerns, you can come up with a beautiful solution.

When you have a minister and a government that are coming down saying, "This is what we need; we need to appoint 49 per cent of those involved in the communities," we are getting further and further away from grassroots community engagement, community enhancement, community safety, and that's concerning. These are things that the government shouldn't be so... [Ms Goehring's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak this afternoon to Bill 6, a bill which, you know, I have mixed feelings about, a little bit of disappointment. I certainly have said in the past that I have some concern that too often when the UCP government has a bill with some good points in it, they put something in it that becomes a poison pill and makes it impossible to support. I'm a bit conflicted over this particular bill because I think it fits into that area. I do think there are some things that are important here that I'd like to support, and I really want to encourage the government to find a way to pursue them. Even if I vote against this bill, I want them to pursue some aspects. I'd like to address those pieces first.

[Mr. Turton in the chair]

I guess that the pieces that I think are important and good for this government to proceed with are the shift toward having increased citizen oversight of police forces in the province, the idea that there will be people who sit on commissions who make decisions on the local basis about the nature of the police. I think it's something that's a good thing. I think, you know, all societies should have control over their police forces by the people that are being served by the police forces because it just makes sense that we need to have civilians making decisions as to the length and the breadth to which police can act to control citizens. We don't want to be in a situation where the power rests solely with the police forces over citizens. As such, a movement toward some kind of citizen oversight is a good decision. I have some concerns about the mechanism that the government has put in, but perhaps I'll speak to my second part that I do really wish to support in this bill before I go on to some of my concerns.

The second thing that I like is the decision to actually move ASIRT away from its present circumstance to under the control of the citizen board because, you know, I never think it's a good idea to have police policing police. The way that ASIRT is set up right now, it's essentially current and retired police officers who are making the decisions about the police's behaviour, and I just always think that's problematic. There certainly should be a role of police officers in ASIRT, describing appropriate police procedures and the reasoning for them and so on, so I certainly want a presence of police in helping to review the behaviour. The police said it also helps them to understand where things have gone wrong, where there are problems, and hopefully they bring that information back to the police forces and change behaviour where it's required to change, but there should also be a very strong external review of that kind of behaviour.

I know that, you know, when I was a member of the Alberta College of Social Workers, we had a committee that reviewed social worker behaviours. It certainly had social workers on it but also had civilians on that review committee to ensure that the review that was done by the committee over the social workers' behaviour was done with an eye to making sure that the profession wasn't simply protecting itself but was actually protecting the public. I think that's exactly the same concern that I have with ASIRT if it's too much of the police being in a position of being able to protect themselves rather than assess themselves and evaluate themselves and change themselves when necessary.

I guess I wanted to say that those things are pieces of the bill that I hope will continue to move forward and find some life in the future, but there are other parts of the bill which I am very, very concerned about. I'm going to divide that into two pieces. One of them is the issue of control and ministerial control over the bill, and the second piece is a First Nations concern that I learned in my meeting with the Treaty 6 First Nations this morning, who, by the way, tell me they do not support Bill 6.

Let me go through the first piece about my own concerns about Bill 6 and talk about why it is that I am concerned about the mechanism of control that is being put in here. Now, as I've said, I'm certainly happy to support a citizen-based overview of police activities, but I am very concerned that in this bill all of the decision-making about who sits on the board goes back to the minister again. You know, many times over the last three years I've stood up and said, "Why is this government always trying to take power out of everybody else's hands and bring the power back into the minister's office all the time?" whether it be about pensions I was concerned about or whether it be about health care or, in this particular case, about policing services.

You know, the section of the bill which says that this should be about citizen oversight suddenly becomes null and void when we realize that it's actually the minister that's making the decisions about things, and that starts with the decision about who sits on the boards and the fact that the municipalities are directed to create these boards but the minister gets to review who the municipalities put on the boards. These kind of things are just unnecessary overreach and a distrust of the public by this government, and I just don't think that they're necessary to do that.

It appears that even when a municipality is setting up a board, my understanding in reading the act is that the government will actually be appointing 50 per cent of the members to the board, so it really isn't a municipal board that's being set up. It's not local. The control of this goes to the provincial government, and then if there's any problem with the local board, it goes to the provincial board, which is a hundred per cent appointed by the provincial government. So really what we have is a board which, you know, undermines municipalities' efforts yet again.

We certainly have seen this government make multiple decisions to undermine municipalities over the last number of years, everything from adding provincial government votes onto municipal elections, which they absolutely opposed but this government did anyways; to giving tax holidays to, you know, highly profitable corporations, which caused grief for the municipalities; to changing rules around linear assessment, which caused problems for the municipalities; to promising to increase the number of RCMP officers and then charging it all back to the municipalities; and then decreasing the municipalities' abilities to make decisions around taxation. So it seems to be that this government really dislikes municipalities. We seem to be moving in the direction of essentially making municipalities redundant.

This government is clearly moving to a place where they want the provincial government to control all aspects of life in this province, don't want a check and balance with local authorities, and I think that that's very problematic. You always have to question why a government is slowly drawing in all the lines and bringing them together and creating significant power in the provincial government that used to be more diversified and more spread out around the province. We've seen them also do the same thing with school boards, taking power away from school boards and making decisions about who's in the union and who's out, about where their pension plans will be, decisions about making mandates for health care in the classes. We've seen the government pull all that away.

We go to the ballot box, we vote in school board elections, we go to the ballot box and we vote in municipal elections, and it turns out that it doesn't really matter what you vote in either of those sets of elections because the power has been taken away from those entities and shifted to the provincial government. That's got to be a concern for all Albertans because it's, first of all, unnecessary. We certainly have seen this province be quite successful with having school boards actually have the power to make decisions over schools, and we've seen municipalities be quite successful in making decisions over the municipalities. I think this is, you know, exactly opposed to the direction we were going in when we were starting to talk to Calgary and Edmonton about having supercity initiatives in this province.

I think that people in this province should be very concerned at the number of times I've had to stand up and say: this is an undermining of democracy on some level or another. One by one you might argue with me, "Well, that wasn't so much really a challenge to democracy," but when you start to look at the trend over four years of the number of times we've had to say that this in some way diminishes the democracy – in this case it happens to diminish the democracy in municipal governments, but we've said the same thing with health care, we've said the same thing with school boards, and now we're saying this with police forces. I think that the citizens of Alberta need to be very concerned about where this is going.

I'd also like to take some time to talk a little bit about why it is that the First Nations are concerned about this. The number one reason that the First Nations are concerned is the fact that it is a shifting of power away from First Nations back into the provincial government's hands yet again. The same complaint that I have from a democracy point of view, the First Nations have from their democracy point of view. What they're saying are a number of things.

First of all, they know that the government is essentially using this bill as an incremental achievement of a provincial police force. They're setting this up so that they can then say: we have provincial oversight of the police, so we might as well have a provincial police force that is reviewed by the same committee. We know that this is a step towards something that has absolutely no support in this province – no, I guess that no one can ever say that; that has very little support in this province by the citizens. People don't want a provincial police force. The polls have been very clear about that time and time again, yet this government is pursuing this over and over and over again no matter what they've been told, and now the First Nations are saying: we have said that we do not want a provincial police force; we want to remain with the RCMP.

Certainly, there are some things that they'd like to change, and they talk to me about that on a fairly regular basis, but they want to remain with the RCMP because of their relationship with the federal government. In speaking to some of the people at the meeting this morning with Treaty 6, I was approached by the CEO of one of the corporations within Treaty 6 who said to me: you know, we've reviewed this; we looked at this, and we can see that having a provincial police force is going to cost this province a lot of money, a billion dollars' worth of money, over just staying with the RCMP. But then he said to me: but you also have to understand it's going to cost every single First Nation because right now there's a sharing agreement, a 52 to 48 per cent sharing agreement, for costs of RCMP officers between the federal government and the First Nations. So if this government undermines the relationship with the federal RCMP, they're going to cost that cost-sharing arrangement with every First Nation across the province. They said: and they're doing all this without any consultation even though they know it's clearly going to affect the arrangements between First Nations and the RCMP.

So here we are yet again on a day where we challenge this government many, many times for their failure to consult with First Nations, saying again: you're bringing in a bill that they have serious concerns about, and you haven't done any consultation with them at all.

The other part that they're very concerned about is that this bill allows the provincial board to actually review the behaviour of First Nations police forces. It's very clear in there. They're saying: again you're actually taking the power away from the governments of the First Nations and bringing it into provincial jurisdiction. This is federal land with an independent First Nations government making decisions to have a localized police force, and now you're saying that that police force is subject to Alberta laws.

You know, the irony here is absolutely incredible. This is a government that brought in Bill 1 to say: we don't want another jurisdiction coming in and telling us what to do in our jurisdiction. Now they immediately turn around and introduce another bill that does exactly the same thing to a different government, just like they have with municipalities, just like they have with school boards.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

This government is constantly taking power away from other democratically elected organizations and bringing it into themselves, yet somehow they want us to support a bill that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to the bill? The hon. government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to weigh in on the Police Act amendments. Having listened to Edmonton-Rutherford for a bit, I'd like to just add that if a council is appointing members to a commission, if it's one to three members, then one can be appointed by the minister; if it's four to six, two can be appointed by the minister; if it's seven to nine, three can be appointed by the minister. That does not sound like the province trying to take power away from local councils.

Three First Nation police services: those nations with those police services were consulted on this. The nations that are looking to develop their own police services as well were consulted on this. The other thing is that if you're policed by the RCMP, this is increasing civilian oversight to be able to review the policing priorities and the complaint process involved in that, and I don't see why that is an issue.

I'd also like to start by just simply saying thank you to our police service community. I was a police officer for 10 years. It is a very difficult job. I think that a lot of those years in working with the community have prepared me well for this job and the different personalities that you can come across. It's a high-volume, high-stress job. There is a lot of scrutiny to it. Similar to politics, you are probably being filmed and recorded at any given time that you are working with somebody, so your professionalism always has to remain high. It is always tested, and I think that police services across this province and our policing community do a tremendous job, frankly, in providing policing services to the community.

There are probably a countless number of interactions between the police and the community, and a small percentage of those lead to complaints. I am not making excuses for every police officer in this province. If they've done something wrong, they deserve to be held accountable for that, but there are also a lot of police officers who are going to their job each and every day, doing the absolute best they can to fairly and unbiasedly police the communities that they're in because, frankly, they live in those communities as well. They want those communities to be safe. Their families are there, their kids are there, so they are just as interested in a well-policed, safe community that has a low amount of crime as anybody else is.

I think that this act, in updating the Police Act, is a good step forward. I think the objections so far – I think I can easily disregard them. Yesterday I think it came from one of the NDP members that this was the politicization of policing, which I think is a ridiculous comment, frankly, given that – at the Coutts border crossing, yes, there was an illegal blockade, but the members opposite would have had the RCMP charging into a dangerous situation, a situation that they knew was quite dangerous, putting both civilians and the police service at risk and not giving them the time that they needed to properly deal with that, which they clearly showed that they could without the Emergencies Act as well. They just needed a little bit more time, frankly.

But what I'm enjoying that I can see here is that increased oversight is important, having that independent body taking in complaints against the police and making sure that it's a central agency. That people across the province understand what that looks like and what it is, how to file a complaint, what the expectations are, I think, is important. I don't equate that with a provincial police service. I think it's just important that wherever you live in this province, you have an understanding of what the expectations of police are and, if you have a complaint, you know how to do that. Instead of trying to figure out a dozen different processes across this province, you'd be able to just have one central intake. It's easier to hold that agency accountable as well.

More civilian involvement: I've touched on that. I think that that's important, setting the process and oversight. Civilian involvement is necessary because, frankly, if you don't have the support of the community, you're not going to be successful in policing. Police agencies know this, and they know that without the support, they are not going to have the same success in investigations that they would like, so that's always important.

This bill also touches on diversity, which is also extremely important. Our communities are becoming more and more diverse. I can tell you that I on numerous occasions relied on other members' language ability, cultural knowledge as well to help defuse situations and to communicate with people where English was maybe their second, third language or further down the list. I had my eyes opened to maybe something cultural that I didn't know so I could better understand the community and work with other members. That is growing, I think, quite a bit. I think police services have realized for a while that they need to have more diversity in their hiring, and that is occurring as well.

As far as I understand, too, this review, yes, started under the NDP in 2018. It's been years in the making as well, so a lot of stakeholder involvement has occurred. A lot of feedback from the community has gone into this. I'm happy with the minister's changes and what they've brought forward.

As well, the expanded role of ASIRT in investigating any serious complaints brought forward about peace officers I think is an important step. I think ASIRT is an excellent organization. I don't have the same objection to them investigating complaints. I think ASIRT is an organization, frankly, where if you're in trouble and they are looking into you, they will find out what happened. They're a very skilled group of people who are very dedicated to finding the truth. Also, using independent prosecutors from other jurisdictions to review their work and to recommend charges as well is another added step in that process.

I'm just trying to see what else I have in my notes here as to what I can cover off. I think I've gone through most of the . . . [interjection] Oh, is there an intervention?

Mr. Getson: There is, Member, if you'll accept.

Mr. Rutherford: Absolutely.

Mr. Getson: Yeah. Member for Leduc-Beaumont, you know, again, I think you've quite well articulated what the intent of the act is. We've listened to a ton of rhetoric from the other side, so thanks for dispelling that. On a personal note, since you and another member of our team here were members before, can you expand a little bit, if you would, on that personal element of how it makes the front-line police services feel when you've got a group that's touting the bandwagon to defund the police? If you could give us some insight into that as well.

Mr. Rutherford: Absolutely. When the rhetoric of "defund the police" carries over from the United States to here, it's demoralizing. I mean, there's no way around that. You know, even comments where I don't – however they were phrased, frankly, it sounds like police were unfairly charging specific communities. That's what I think I just heard; I won't expand more on that or that somehow police are targeting specific communities. I think that these are inflammatory comments which really go against what the vast, vast majority of police officers are trying to do every day, which is just make their communities safer.

Who phones 911 and the non-emergency line and who they're filing a complaint against is not up to the officers, right? They're responding to calls based on what citizens have brought forward. Police officers aren't responsible for who is incarcerated either. If you think there's a particular group overrepresented in jails, I would go talk to the judges. They sentence. They remand. It is not up to police officers to do that.

I think it's important to remember that in all professions there are people who cause problems. No profession is spared from that. It includes doctors and nurses and teachers, politicians even. We all know that from question period a little bit earlier. It exists in every profession, and the mechanisms should exist for people to be able to file complaints, to have their complaints taken seriously and investigated in an unbiased way, and to make sure that public trust is maintained. It is of the utmost importance. As I said before, if the public does not trust you, they're not going to go to you, and that is true of any profession.

Let's remember that when we talk about policing and we talk about the reforms or the complaint processes or individual circumstances that you've come across or heard, these are not representative of the broader interactions that are occurring every day, because if they were, then this problem would not just be something that comes up every once in a while. It would be all day, every day that we would hear about it, and we don't. There are lots of interactions that occur between police and citizens all day. There have probably been a couple of hundred, since I started talking, across this province. They are not all going to result in complaints against the police, and not all those complaints are serious in nature either.

I just want to remind everybody that police officers are more and more coming from more diverse backgrounds, that the police are trying to evolve. They are trying to work better with communities, as Edmonton-Castle Downs touched on: a number of points where EPS has taken a lot of effort to work with the community, to build that level of trust, which I think is great. I don't think that the changes to the Police Act would inhibit that from carrying forward.

We need to talk more about those examples where police are being successful, because the more we talk about it and the more it gets into mainstream media or social media, I think the more that people are going to respond positively to policing. That interaction will just continue to build off itself. If we always talk about it from the stance of it being negative, then of course, you know, people's perception publicly will be negative.

I think we just need to make sure that we're cognizant of how many officers are out there every day doing the best they can, who would probably do absolutely the best job without the Police Act, frankly. They're just ethical. They're moral people who are trying their best. We do need rules. I'm not saying that we don't need it. We do need to set expectations, but we also need to recognize just how hard they all work.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022: are there others wishing to join in the debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 39(1) in order to move immediately to Government Motion 16.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Government Motions

16. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly rescind its approval of the motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 8(8), agreed to on December 5, 2022.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Government Motion 16 is a debatable motion. Does anyone choose to join in that debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the hon. the Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Schow: Waived.

[Government Motion 16 carried]

Mr. Schow: Mr. Speaker, I now rise to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8(2) in order to allow the Assembly to move immediately to consideration of Bill 201, the Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201

Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Assembly is Bill 201, and I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen to join in the debate.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak in favour of Bill 201, the Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act, brought forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition. I thank the government members for the opportunity to hold this debate. This is an important bill, and it's not just me that says so. Folks are speaking out who have been involved in the tracking and quality of our health care. Health care professionals who are out on the front lines are speaking out in favour of this act.

Now, interestingly, the Minister of Health did not speak in favour of this act before he moved a motion to delay debate. I'm glad that the government has reversed on that and is giving us the opportunity to actually hold this debate now. But what the minister said was – the minister suggested that this wasn't necessary. Now, what this bill does is that it proposes a set of specific service standards to be set, working with patients, communities, health providers, that the government would be accountable to meet. They'd relate to access to health care services and would be publicly reported. Now, the minister rose and said: "You know what? We don't need that because the government already reports on standards." The fact is that the government reports on some data, and it is not always clear, and it does not always pertain to all of the areas that have greatest concern. What this bill is proposing is a very clear and specific set of standards that provides that public accountability and transparency.

Now, what we have seen repeatedly with this government, Mr. Speaker, is that they are very fond of cherry-picking very specific statistics. We saw that in the MacKinnon report. We saw that again as they talked about the Ernst & Young review of Alberta Health Services. We have heard that repeatedly in minister after minister's talking points about the health care system as they endeavour to try to paint the picture that they need to dismantle our public health care system and force more privatization, more private profit in our public health care system to cure the problem that they claim exists. But the fact is, again, that they are choosing very particular data, and they are handling it themselves.

Indeed, we hear that from the minister when he stands and talks about the number of doctors and nurses in Alberta and doesn't go into the actual things that lie behind that, the fact that he's talking about the numbers of doctors registered, not the numbers of doctors that are actually necessarily practising and billing. Of course, the minister has the information on the number of doctors that are billing in the province of Alberta, and he could certainly choose to make that public and tell us exactly how many family physicians are billing on behalf of Albertans, but he does not do that because it does not serve the government's purpose.

What we have here is an opportunity in this bill to establish, independent of government, some very clear standards on our health care system. I would think that any government that truly believes in transparency and accountability would want to see that. That power would be placed in the hands of the Health Quality Council of Alberta. I think that's a very important opportunity for us, to empower the HQCA to handle that, and they are well equipped to do so.

To be honest, Mr. Speaker, they used to have much more independent power to do so before this government passed Bill 30. Now, Bill 30 was passed by the previous Minister of Health, and that essentially took away the independence of the HQCA. That bill stopped the HQCA from being able to report directly to individual members of the Legislature and forced them to report directly to the Health minister, who will then decide whether or not the information he receives from the HQCA will be allowed to go public.

This was noted by Dr. Trevor Theman, the former chair of the HQCA, himself an accomplished physician here in the province of Alberta, in his recent editorial in support of Bill 201. He notes that for the $20 billion or so that we spend on health care in Alberta, we have precious little easily accessed reporting on how well our health care system and the entities that comprise it perform, and setting and reporting on standards makes good sense. No one would run a $20 billion business without measurement and reporting as to how well it meets its goals. Now, again, the Minister of Health is maintaining that he thinks he reports enough to Albertans, that there is no need to provide further data, that the carefully cherry-picked statistics and numbers on the very particular things that they like to talk about should be enough for Albertans.

What Bill 201 says is: let's work together. Let's work with community, let's work with physicians, let's work with the folks who are involved and who have a stake in this to determine what the regular reporting should be to Albertans, on which standards, and the standards specifically on access to care, Mr. Speaker, because that is the crisis we have in front of us, where Albertans cannot access a family physician. Albertans have trouble accessing an emergency room. They're having a real crisis right now accessing pediatric care, and certainly we are all aware of the challenges Albertans have accessing an ambulance when they need one. So having clear, public reporting on those standards and what the expectations should be and a requirement, then, that when we'd failed to meet it, whatever government that might be, the minister is required to put forward an action plan to address that concern: that is a simple and straightforward thing.

This bill would give the HQCA back some of the independence that was taken away from them by this government to perform that service on behalf of Albertans, providing an independent oversight of the standards and how they need to be addressed. As Dr. Theman says, the HQCA is underused. It is underfunded and burdened by its current reporting relationship to the Minister of Health. Indeed, he speaks about, during his time as chair, how many times they were stymied by the bureaucracy within the office of the Minister of Health, the first Minister of Health under this government, that made it more difficult for them to actually be able to report and do their work on behalf of Albertans. So I believe this is incredibly important.

Now, the Minister of Health and the Premier have also made claims that putting forward Bill 201 would forbid, would stop the province from being able to be make use of chartered surgical facilities. That is patently untrue, Mr. Speaker. What the bill does say is that if a minister puts forward an action plan, that action plan needs to look at investing in the public health care system to address the issue. It does not affect any current funding for a chartered surgical facility. Certainly, we have a number of them that are operating today, and nobody is proposing that we stop making use of them. We recognize that we have real challenges in our public health care system with meeting surgical wait times, and we must use every resource that we have at our disposal.

However, Mr. Speaker, this government has yet to provide any evidence that the kinds of efficiencies that can be realized in a stand-alone surgical facility not attached to a hospital cannot be achieved within the public health care system just as well if not better than by a private provider, who also then has to find a way to make a profit. Multiple folks have stood up and pointed this out. In fact, we have an example of just such a stand-alone surgical facility attached to the Royal Alex hospital here in my constituency. If this government has any evidence that they are unable to provide surgeries as efficiently at that site and as cost-effectively as any of these private chartered surgical facilities that this government is intent on proliferating across the province of Alberta, I would invite them to present it, because that is what we're asking here in Bill 201. Let's just simply put the evidence on the table.

This government has a good deal of ideology around health care, Mr. Speaker. Again, they like to pick and choose their numbers to justify it. What we are seeing right now is the result of a lot of that ideology, unfortunately, with the pressures and the impacts on our health care system, their war on doctors, their war with so many other health care workers. Again, the minister would stand and say, "Well, every jurisdiction is having these problems because of the pandemic, because of other issues," and indeed this government didn't light the fire, but they certainly liberally doused it with fuel.

The fact is that there is nothing in Bill 201 that should be of concern to a government that is indeed dedicated to more transparency and accountability, that indeed in its work to improve our public health care system – they're willing to take such radical changes as firing the entire board of Alberta Health Services, firing the chief medical officer of health, putting it all in the hands of a single administrator. If they truly believed that they are effective in these actions, Mr. Speaker, they should not be afraid to measure it and report on it publicly and clearly.

Bill 201 provides the opportunity precisely for that. It is simple accountability. It is simple clarity at a time when Albertans are desperately looking for action to improve our health care system, not just these sort of short-term, lurching, radical actions that this government is choosing to take out of desperation but actual, thoughtful, long-term reform. We do not achieve that without clear data, without clear standards. That is what Bill 201 is offering here. This is a constructive work. Certainly, I'm going to, as a member of the opposition, take my shots at government. We do that. But this is not part of it.

The Speaker: Are there others? Bill 201. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to address Bill 201 and talk about the very important need to have public health standards in order to ensure that our public services are available. I want to start by thanking the government for their agreement to return this bill to the House for a debate. I appreciate that you would do that. It certainly is an improvement over the previous situation where a hundred per cent of the private members' bills brought in by the opposition were thwarted outside of the House and weren't even allowed to be brought in, a very, very undemocratic move by this government. I'm glad to see that their shame has brought them to a place of changing this behaviour.

Well, I just wish their shame would help them get to a place of fixing all the other problems. I'm glad to see we also have Bill 4 in the house, which is fixing another one of their problems. If we work long enough, eventually we'll fix all of their problems, but that will all be done, of course, in May of 2023.

I'd like to say that it's important that we establish in this province the ability to review health care as it's provided in this province and to support some very fundamental principles of health care in protecting the services that are available to the people in the province. It is sort of somewhat ironic that in the last bill that we were talking about, the government was arguing that it was important to have a civilian oversight body reviewing the police force, and now when we suggest that it's also true, therefore, in health care, they somehow have a different opinion 30 minutes later. We'll try to point out why this government should at least try to be consistent on a single day within this Legislature.

We in this country have enjoyed some of the best health care in the world. Nobody is saying that there aren't some difficulties, some problems, but that is the function of government, to take some time, to assess, and to figure out what's going right, what's not going right, and how do you fix that?

Instead, this government has mostly created a situation of great turmoil in this province around health care. They have been fighting with doctors and nurses and other health professionals, like respiratory therapists and social workers and so on, on a regular basis in the middle of a pandemic. They have cancelled the doctors' contract. They've gone into wage negotiations with nurses asking for a diminishment of their salaries. They've done the same for groups such as respiratory technicians and other hospital workers. They've been in the paper on a regular basis saying egregiously nasty things about the medical service providers in this province while we're in the middle of a pandemic.

And then they don't follow scientific advice around how to resolve that pandemic. They won't even share with us the advice given to cabinet by the chief medical officer of health, so we can only assume that the reason why is because they were not following medical advice in the decisions they made with regard to the pandemic, which is still with us and is still affecting the citizens of this province greatly. We have significant numbers of people in hospital right now with COVID, and unfortunately now we're also dealing with other diseases that are flus and childhood diseases, that are sort of giving us the triple whammy right now.

Then this government changes their leader, but they don't change their belief system around the public health system. They still go back in to attack it. They remove the public oversight body for the health care system and institute a single person who is running our health care system off the side of his desk because he has other employment, and he's doing so on a voluntary basis. I mean, this is hardly a commitment to public health care in this province. Now, of course, we see that the two deputy chief medical officers are resigning because the situation is chaotic.

What we have seen consistently from this government is the introduction of chaos into the health care system, and it's time that we go back to the fact that we have enjoyed incredibly good health care in this country because we started with a series of principles about the health care that we wanted. Those principles under the Canada Health Act are quite well known, and they start off with a principle of universality, a belief that this health care is for all Albertans, not just people with deep pockets, and that you should be able to access that health care regardless of whether you are someone who is wealthy or has a health care plan through your employment, that just simply by being a citizen within this country you have access to that health care.

We know that there was a principle also of portability with regard to health care in this province, and that meant that the health care that we have in the province of Alberta is the same or similar, as much as we can possibly make it, to anywhere else in the country so that when we have family members who decide to leave the province of Alberta and move to other provinces, we can be assured that they will be receiving significantly the same level of support in terms of health care. And now this government is, you know, threatening to move it in a different direction away from that so that you actually have to start considering your move to seek employment also based on: well, if I do move to this other province to get a better job or to earn some more money, I might also not get the health care I deserve. This government is threatening the notion of portability in this country.

We know that the third principle of health care that we have established in this country is one of accessibility, and that is that health care must be available where people are and that it can't be impossible for people to get that health care because they happen to live in the north and there's no health care available. We have to then say that as a government we will bring the resources into the north or at the very least ensure that people from the north are given the resources to come south. And that's a very difficult one. We understand that. We know that that can be expensive for both the citizens and for the government. Yet, you know, a government that really cared about health care would be constantly examining that and coming back and saying: how do we ensure that accessibility is there?

We know as well that one of the original principles of health care was comprehensiveness, the fourth one. That principle is that we should have all the things related to your health be covered by this plan. Over time, over the history of Canada, we've come to define the notion of comprehensiveness more broadly than was originally done when the bill came in, in the 1960s, and we understand that there are many aspects to health care that we should be including. We've been supporting that growth here in the province of Alberta, certainly on this side of the House, to look at the comprehensive needs of people in their health, not just simply catastrophic events such as heart attacks and so on but all the things that contribute to that such as drug coverage and so on. I know that the Conservatives have consistently been resistant to that particular principle, but it's one that we should be protecting if we really care about the ultimate health of our citizens.

We know, finally, that the fifth principle of the federal health act was one of public administration; that is, that you should be able to depend on your government to actually establish the entities that are necessary to provide health care in this country. That is, that you can depend on your government to build the hospitals, you can depend on your government to pay the doctors through government mechanisms, and that you should be able to depend on the availability of services such as ambulances to get there. Now, unfortunately we've seen over the last little while . . . [Mr. Feehan's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Other members looking to join in the debate? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak to Bill 201, Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act, brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the Leader of the Official Opposition. I also want to begin by thanking the Government House Leader for agreeing to bring back this important piece of legislation for debate.

I think our system has been under stress for the last three years. The pandemic certainly has been one reason, but, more importantly, the UCP policies have been driving our system into chaos. We can all agree that Albertans must be able to access health care when they need it and where they need it, but on the ground that's not happening. We know that.

They should be able to get an ambulance in a matter of minutes, access an emergency room in a reasonable time frame, and be able to have a family doctor and be able to see that doctor in a reasonable time. But for far too many Albertans that's not happening. In many places in this province emergency rooms are getting shut down. In many parts of this province people are unable to access family doctors. For instance, in Lethbridge half of the Lethbridge population doesn't have access to family doctors. In Bow Valley there are many Albertans who don't have access to family doctors. These are facts.

I was door-knocking and I came across a constituent whose child fell down and there was some bleeding. The parents took that child to emergency. They waited there for 13 hours to see a doctor, and that's before this new surge in respiratory illness cases. That's before this surge. That's the state of our health care system.

Albertans, rightfully so, want their government to make health care a priority. Every Albertan I have talked to, things like cost of living, health care, kids' education: that's top of mind for them, not this government's job-killing Bill 1.

In the last little while we are seeing longer ambulance response times everywhere across this province. In Calgary AHS has to pull ambulances from neighbouring communities. That is the case for Edmonton as well. Albertans expect this government to prioritize addressing that, and we have not seen a plan from this government. Those who are on the front lines asked for three things, but still we didn't hear anything from this government.

Alberta Health Services released some aggregate data on ambulance response times, and that data shows that the slowest 10 per cent of calls have gone from 12 minutes or more to 17 minutes or more. Albertans call an ambulance when they think their health and well-being is in danger, when they think their loved one's health and well-being is in danger. They deserve a system that responds to their needs, responds to that urgency. The median response time, according to AHS, in urban areas began to miss targets in the first quarter of 2022, but again there is no transparent, accessible data that Albertans can look at in this piece of legislation. We will do exactly that.

This will require this government to create standards and have an arm's-length body, Alberta Health Quality Council, to report on that so that Albertans can see where their health system is at, what needs to be improved. Earlier, when the Premier was asked whether she will be supporting this piece of legislation, the answer was that they're more concerned that this bill messed up their privatization efforts, their private surgical initiative. [interjection] That's what the Premier said.

Health care is not a business. It is not a business. The delivery of health care is not a business. Getting health care should be Albertans' right; it is Canadians' right. No one should be allowed to make money off sick Albertans. It's a responsibility of this government, us as a society that we should provide health care to those who are sick regardless of their ability to pay. The fundamental principle of universal health care is that when one of us gets sick, all of us come together to care for that person, look after that fellow Albertan.

That's the fundamental principle. There are no business opportunities. There should be no profiteering off sick Albertans. Government should be delivering health care whenever Albertans need it, where they need it. That's what Albertans expect from this government, and I'm sure that Albertans will have a lot more to say about this government's record when it comes to health care when they go into election. They became government, they tore the doctors' contract, put our health care in chaos.

Throughout this pandemic, where governments around the globe were cheering on front-line workers, this government was engaged in bullying health professionals, even on their driveways. That's what this government was doing. Those who work in our health care system doing important services, keeping our hospitals clean, keeping hospital kitchens going the Member for Calgary-Falconridge, I remember, went on a radio station and he said that they are not front-line workers.

Mr. Toor: Who?

Mr. Sabir: That's on the record. The Member for Calgary-Falconridge said that.

Those are important people. Those are the people, together with other professionals, that make our hospital system work.

Mr. Toor: Oh, come on.

Mr. Sabir: They are front-line people. They are front-line people.

This government has shown disrespect for health professionals from day one.

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to add to debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you can't measure it, you can't manage it. Those aren't my words; those are the words of Peter Drucker, who is a business consultant, a business management professional. In other words, if you don't measure, then you don't know how you're doing.

I rise to speak in favour of Bill 201 because it establishes service standards that will be set in working with patients, communities, health care providers, Indigenous communities to ensure that the government is accountable to certain standards. I think that this is very timely, Mr. Speaker. This is not political theatre. This is addressing the fact that we have seen a crisis in health care that's continuing to this day.

Mr. Speaker, you're well aware of this as a rural MLA, the fact that we have a shortage of doctors. There is a shortage of access to doctors. We've had rotating blackouts for ambulances, where they're simply unavailable. We've had certain facilities that have to temporarily close or limit the surgeries or services that they're providing for their community members. Honestly, I'm sure you've heard from many constituents, as have I, that in a province such as Alberta this should not be the case.

I think it's important to provide the government with some tools to be able to address these issues but also to identify where these issues are coming from so that we can provide solutions. Having those metrics available and those specifics will help the government, whoever the government is, to provide targeted relief or additional targeted supports to strengthen our health care system.

You know, Mr. Speaker, when I go and talk to grade 6 classes, I ask them if they know who Tommy Douglas is and the fact that he was voted the greatest Canadian a few years back. In fact, he got more votes than even, you know, folks like Wayne Gretzky, and

I'm a huge fan of Gretzky. He's my favourite hockey player. I ask the students if they know why he was voted the greatest Canadian, and they're always very fascinated to learn that it was Tommy Douglas who introduced public health care, the first public medicare, in the province of Saskatchewan, in Canada's history, which then spread across the country. That's something that is very unique to Canada and very precious. We talk about many other jurisdictions globally where there isn't that universal access to health care, where if you cannot pay, then you cannot get the care you need.

My colleague, the member who was speaking previously, was talking about a public health care system, public delivery of health care. Now, we all recognize that doctors are small businesses, essentially, and incorporated and negotiate with the province for their salaries. But the point I believe my colleague was trying to make is that we should be investing in public health care, not looking at emulating other systems that have gone down the path of privatizing health care, which has inevitably led to higher costs.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that I have friends that live in the U.S., and I have a friend who used to be a fan of private health care and who said: "You know what? It should be privatized. It's lower cost. Why am I subsidizing all these other people?" When a family member of his got super sick, actually developed cancer, they ended up having to mortgage their home and went in debt to pay for the care they needed. His tune changed completely, and he has since been a fan of public health care and recognizes what we have here in Canada.

As members in this Chamber know, because I've said it inside and outside of the Chamber, can AHS be improved? Yes. Absolutely. The answer is that it can be improved. We need to do better. We need to do better enhancing the care that Albertans are getting. We also need to get better value for the money that we're investing in our health care system. A hundred per cent. I don't disagree with that, Mr. Speaker. I think part of what we've discovered in this Chamber is that the two different parties have two different approaches to it. But my hope is that the members from the government can recognize the importance of a bill, this bill, 201, and how measuring and having those specifics can help us to drive outcomes that will benefit everyone.

Now, I just want to clarify a point the Premier made today in question period, where she talked about a new chartered facility that's going to be doing surgeries to help with the backlog. Her comment was that this bill would essentially shut that facility down. The answer is that, no, it wouldn't, Mr. Speaker. I've been chatting with folks to try and find out, "Is that true?" and the answer is: no, it wouldn't. It would require that new dollars, future dollars, be invested in our public health care system.

I know that the majority of my constituents and the majority of Albertans that I've talked to are proud of our public health care system, publicly funded, publicly delivered. We want to see that continue, but we also want to see it improved. You know, it's interesting that when we talk about ER wait times, there is some data that AHS releases, but it's interesting to me that they can't go backwards to look at previous wait times in previous years. So there need to be mechanisms for us to be able to enhance the system. Again, Peter Drucker's line: if you can't measure it, you can't manage it. If we don't know what's causing these wait times, then we don't know how to improve them. I appreciate the idea that, yes, we need to fund our health care system, but we also need to fund it to deliver those outcomes that Albertans rely on.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we continue to hear horror stories about the state the system is currently in. I appreciate, you know, that the Premier will say, "Well, that's why I got rid of the board and brought in the administrator" and that they're making changes. I mean, the reality is that we need to make some changes, but this bill will hold the government accountable because these standards will be public.

I think that in an era of transparency, where our citizens, Albertans, want to see processes, want to see clear lines, this will provide that. This will give Albertans a perspective and a view into our health care system that they haven't had previously. Again, if the standards aren't met, then the government has to come up with a plan on how to meet those standards. I mean, that just sounds like good planning to me as far as, if we see that there's a deficit, we address these issues, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nally: Never in four years did you do it.

Mr. Bilous: I always find it fascinating that when good points are being deliberated, members of the government have to scream – whatever – insults over to this side or "why didn't you do that?"

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of things that we did address, and I can tell you that there are a number of things that we will fix when we form government next spring. The member on that side can be patient for that to happen. This will be addressed. Here is an example . . . [interjection] Am I allowed to give way on a motion? I don't think I am.

The Acting Speaker: No interventions, hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I know my time is limited on this, but this is an example of a reasonable bill that I encourage members to support.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 201, Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act, that was introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I'm proud that this piece of legislation has come forward. We've been listening to Albertans, and we know that health care – public health care, good, reliable public health care – is top of mind for Albertans.

We watched this government bring in their Bill 1, which did not address anything that Albertans are worried about right now. They're not worried about anything that was related to that bill. The fact that we are here this afternoon being able to debate this is very much appreciated, and I thank the Government House Leader for bringing this back so that we could debate this piece of legislation this afternoon.

I and my colleagues in the Alberta NDP firmly believe that Albertans must be able to access public health care, full stop. We know that Albertans are in a place right now where many do not have a family doctor. Many, if they need a doctor, are turning to emergency rooms because they don't have access. In the worst case scenario, if you need to be seen by a doctor in an emergency scenario, we've watched numbers and times increase across the province for wait times for an ambulance. We have an expectation that when you call for an ambulance in an emergent situation, one shows up in a timely manner, in minutes, not hours, Mr. Speaker.

What this piece of legislation would do is that it would ensure that expectations are set up in collaboration with patients, with health care professionals, to make sure that the expectations that Albertans have for their health care system are being met. It would then turn around and make sure that the government is required to act to ensure that these services are being met. I don't think that it's too much to ask that patients and health care professionals have input into what the health standard expectations are, and then to have the government be accountable for that is a reasonable expectation.

We've been hearing heartbreaking stories all across the province of families waiting 15 hours for access to the emergency room at children's hospitals, trailers being set up so that families can wait inside before they see a medical professional. Just today, Mr. Speaker, in question period we heard the Premier say that wait times are fixed, that EMS response times are fixed. That is simply not true.

I had a very dear friend reach out to me yesterday with an absolutely heartbreaking – heartbreaking – story. Their sibling has been struggling with mental health and addiction and been homeless for years. It's a frequent rotation of living on the streets, living rough, being assaulted, overdosing, interactions with police, interactions with health care professionals, to being turned around back on the streets. This cycle has been going on for this family for years.

Unfortunately, the situation has gotten incredibly worse. November 22 was the last point of contact that my friend's family had with their sibling, and they decided to reach out to the Edmonton police to file a missing persons report. They had been in contact with all of the hospitals, they'd been in contact with numerous organizations that work with those that are living rough, those that come in contact with people that are using, and those that struggle with mental health. The list of people that she's attempted to reach out to is endless. There were numerous individuals within the policing system that had contact with them, and the police were incredibly informative and helpful and supportive to my friend. However, they weren't able to find him.

Yesterday morning my friend was on her way to work and received a phone call that EPS had located him. They didn't know what the options were. He clearly needed medical help, but the officer told my friend: "We could call an ambulance; we have no idea how long it's going to take for an ambulance to respond. Your brother needs medical attention. What would you like us to do?" She clearly dropped everything and went to him and was so grateful that the police had called her. She's not a medical professional, Mr. Speaker. The police left it up to her as to whether or not to call EMS or to have them respond.

When they responded and met up with her sibling and the police, the police said that their previous call had been a stabbing. The person was actively bleeding out, and it took over one hour for EMS to respond. This happened yesterday morning. Today when our Premier stands in this Chamber and says, "It's fixed; it's good," that is absolutely not acceptable. When Albertans call police and when they call an ambulance, they expect help. I can't imagine what it would be like for that officer to be waiting and have no response. One hour for a stabbing victim.

My friend picked up her brother and went online, looked at the emergency room wait times. The police had suggested that – they're reported – these are the options in and around Edmonton; you can go there. They got there at 5:35 yesterday afternoon. At 10:40 p.m. he saw a nurse. That's six hours of waiting in the waiting room before a nurse was able to come and see him. At 10:53 a nurse came in and said: a doctor should be with you at any moment. Now, this human being was sick, going through withdrawals, had been severely beaten up, in pain, in agony, and still that was the wait time. It wasn't until 3 a.m. that a doctor came in to see him. So when we have a Premier that's saying, "Wait times are good; EMS response times are good," I don't know where that information is coming from, but it is not coming from Albertans that are sitting in waiting rooms, sitting at home waiting for EMS to respond.

When you talk to the nurses and the doctors that are in these ERs and the paramedics that are responding, they are pleading for support. They are pleading for resources. People are burning out.

Bill 201 is exactly the piece of legislation that's needed. We need to really critically look at what's happening in health care, listen to those patients and their stories, listen to the health care professionals that are providing these services. People get involved in this field because they care and want to make a difference. Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely heartbreaking to hear health care professionals breaking down, desperate for support, feeling that there's been an attack from this government on them while they're trying to simply take care of people. There aren't enough resources available, and this government hasn't provided any... [Ms Goehring's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate on Bill 201, Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act. I mean, certainly, this is a very important bill, especially right now, currently, in Alberta. It is something that could improve our health care system significantly. We are in crisis, as we see every day on the news where there are long lineups to get into the emergencies, EMS, access to ambulances takes a long time. I and my colleagues have spoken about this.

I really encourage all of my colleagues here in the Assembly to seriously consider supporting this bill. It really lays out three purposes, and I'll just go through them. It ensures Albertans have reliable and timely access to public health care, it has standards that are established by independent experts, and, thirdly, it ensures Albertans' lives and quality of life are not put at risk due to lack of transparency regarding health data. These are three fundamental aspects of this bill, and it is very important that we, I think, pass this legislation, because it can make a huge difference for Albertans.

We have had certainly a lot of support in the community regarding this. One of the leading experts – he's a former CEO of the physicians and surgeons and a former chair of the Health Quality Council of Alberta, Dr. Trevor Theman. He is obviously very aware of what's happening in our health system, has worked in that system for a very long time, has been a leader in that system, and he has spoken out in support of Bill 201 very much, saying this is exactly what Albertans need to ensure that we have a health system that is working.

Right now it's not working, and we can see that so, so, so clearly. Frankly, there are many things that the UCP are doing to make it not work. I know that one of the things that was in the Health minister's mandate letter was just about the fundamental importance of primary care. This is what the UCP was talking about, but then on the other hand just recently, actually before the mandate letters were put out, they changed policies to erode the relationship between the patient and the primary care provider. What I'm talking about specifically is the opioid transition program. This is a program where safe pharmaceutical alternatives are prescribed by your primary care provider. The UCP now say that, no, they have to go to an Alberta Health Services clinic. So they're eroding that. There are so many things the UCP are doing to hurt our health system right now, despite what they're saying on the one hand supporting.

I speak in support of 201, and with that I'll conclude my remarks.

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to debate second reading of Bill 201, the Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act?

Seeing none, I'd like to call on the Leader of the Official Opposition to close debate.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in order to close debate on this important bill. You know, we've been talking to Albertans on their doorsteps, in their communities for years now and particularly in the last 12 to 18 months. Before then, too, but in the last 12 to 18 months in particular folks have been raising their very, very deeply held concerns about the deteriorating state of our health care system across this province, whether it was emergency rooms and operating rooms starting to shut down, at first in rural communities across the province, followed ultimately by major cessations of service in huge urban communities, whether it was the fact that we were hearing increasingly concerning reports about delays with respect to ambulance times and their arrival time, or whether it was about the fact that an increasingly large number of Albertans simply cannot find a family doctor and cannot secure primary health care, which, of course, we know means that there is a cascade effect on those previous two things that I talked about, not to mention, of course, the ongoing wait times with respect to surgery.

All of these things have engendered a growing level of uncertainty and worry on the part of Albertans. Whether they're worrying about their own health or whether they're worried about the health of their children or whether they're worried about the health of their parents or friends and loved ones, they are wondering whether they can actually count on our health care system to be there for them when they need it.

In order to fix this, then, you know, we've been attempting to have a wide-ranging debate in this House. Now, we haven't been able to have a wide-ranging debate, but we have been able to spend the last 45 minutes or so talking about the solutions proposed in this bill. The reason this bill is important is because what it does is that it sets out clear standards and it sets out, then, an obligation to report on those standards, and it sets out an obligation to report on what kind of actions will or will not be done to meet those standards if they are not being met.

This is so important, because it is very frustrating for Albertans to be in a position where they feel like their government is sort of gaslighting them, telling them: no, no, there's not a problem here; oh, no, that closure over there is normal; oh, no, there's not a shortage of health care workers; oh, no, the doctors are fine with their contract being ripped up; oh, no, it's totally reasonable to wait 45 minutes for an ambulance. Like, those kinds of answers frustrate people.

The fact of the matter is that the simple act of transparency breeds accountability. What's really good is that the bill actually compels accountability, and beyond that the bill compels resources to be dedicated to meeting those standards. It's time that we start, all of us, no matter who's in government, holding ourselves accountable to fixing our public health care system and doing better.

You know, firing the AHS board of directors, putting someone in there as a temporary head who's been in there before for short periods of time in very temporary roles, and then saying, "Oh, he's been there three weeks, and he tells us, now that he's been there, that actually everything is working well": well, that's just so frustrating, and in fact it worries Albertans because it sounds like they're really not holding themselves accountable or taking real action or preparing to open up the doors to Albertans so that they can see what's happening and what's not happening and keep the government accountable.

We know that this government, outside of COVID funding, has essentially taken well over a billion dollars out of our health care system at a time when it's facing more pressure than it ever, ever has before, so it's not surprising that there are systemic problems. The fact that there's been such a hostile relationship with front-line health care providers of every type: it's not surprising that there are difficulties with respect to delivering health care. The fact that COVID was the most poorly managed in Alberta relative to the rest of the country: it's not surprising that we're experiencing systemic problems in our health care system.

For those reasons, all of us have an obligation to be open with Albertans about what the problems are and what we're going to do to fix them, and that's what passing this bill would do. Because it is the most important issue for Albertans, that's what folks should agree to vote in favour of.

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 2 Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to the bill? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. This is my first opportunity to speak to the bill, so I'm happy to address a couple of different things that have come up. I think – yeah. Let's see.

Maybe I'll start by talking about the changes with respect to AISH, because I think that that is a fairly major concern to a number of Albertans. I, in fact, have a personal friend who is on AISH and has experienced a lot of struggle the last few years as her ability to pay relative to inflation has eroded over time.

I think it's worth setting out again the history of this matter on the record. When we were in government, we brought in a bill to index AISH to inflation, which seems only fair; otherwise, people are getting sort of further and further behind. We indexed a number of other things. We indexed the seniors' benefit and the child tax benefit as well.

I'm probably on the record saying this more than I've ever said anything on the record, but I'm going to say it again anyway, that the moves we made with respect to the child tax benefit when we first came in, in terms of increasing it, admittedly combined with some policy from the federal government: those measures cut child poverty in half. And I think that if there is one thing that we should be concerned about here in this place, it's ensuring that children don't go hungry in a province as rich as Alberta.

That is something that I am very proud of, I continue to be very proud of, and of course this government's members, who were members of the UCP caucus when we were in government, voted in favour of that indexation and claimed to be in favour of it, and then as soon as they got the position to do anything about it, immediately revoked it, which is disingenuous at best and quite harmful to a number of people throughout the province.

I do appreciate that this is a step in the right direction, but I think we all know that inflation has been at record highs in the last several years, this year in particular. I mean, it's outstripping wage growth as well. Like, inflation is a problem for everyone, but particularly for individuals who rely on benefits that have not been indexed for these last three and a half years, it's been a real struggle. So I appreciate that the government is doing this, but I think it is definitely worth noting that an Albertan living on AISH is $3,000 a year behind right now on where they would have been, and for someone who is living on AISH, it's a real struggle.

Yeah. Like I said, a friend of mine is on AISH. For anyone who has loved ones or friends who are in that situation, I'm sure – and I expect that there are members on both sides of this House that have this experience – that you are aware of just how much of a challenge, particularly this year, it has been for people to keep up with basic costs like healthy food. I do think it's a step in the right direction, but I think it could definitely go a lot further.

I actually think that this bill could go a lot further in a number of ways. People are experiencing significant challenges right now. Inflation is at an all-time high. Government policy, provincial government policy, has had an impact on that. I'm not going to say that it's the primary driver – I don't think that that's accurate – but it's definitely a driver forcing up things like car insurance and tuition and taxes, both municipal taxes and income taxes. I mean, income taxes was the inflation thing, which is, again, being reversed, but, you know, people are not getting back what they have lost over the last three and a half years in terms of purchasing power.

Again, it's a thing where this government expects to be congratulated on reversing its own bad decisions but not even reversing them all the way, so I think that that is problematic. I think that if there's anything that a government should be concerned about – and maybe I think this because it's where I came from.

One of the things that drove me into politics was the erosion of the middle class, the fact that the cost of things relative to average salaries has been growing disproportionately. We've seen massive growth in the incomes of those at the very wealthy end, but the sort of median income hasn't been increasing as fast as the costs of basics like housing and food and school and the very basics that people need to live. That, in my view, is a problem. It's a challenge that government should concern itself with because government policy has an impact. It has a big impact. It has an impact not only on inflation, but it also has an impact on wages.

Some of the changes that this government made in terms of employment standards in the Labour Relations Code have absolutely had a downward pressure on wages. Real, verifiable studies have been done about this. That is a huge impact. It's complicated and it's difficult to describe, but I think that it is one of the things we should be most concerned about. If we – and I say we in the larger sense – are creating a province in which a person on a median salary is constantly under stress, is unable to afford a comfortable life, is unable to afford the things that we all expected, is unable to afford food and shelter and clothing and education for their kids, that is a problem.

We are getting to that point, and government policy absolutely has an impact. Things like, for instance, the massive cuts that have been made to MSI, the downloading, massive downloading, of police costs on to municipalities. Municipalities can't run a deficit. They can't act as a shock absorber. Their only option in those instances is to raise property taxes, and they have done so. They have done so, and that is absolutely a direct result of government policy. This government, this UCP government's policy has forced those property taxes up, and that is problematic. It hits people right where they live.

Again, like I said, the changes in terms of minimum wage, in terms of overtime pay, in terms of the ability of workers to bargain collectively have all had a downward pressure on wages, and that is why we are seeing, even in a place of record inflation, wages just not keeping pace, and we should care about that because the majority of our population being able to afford a decent life is what we should imagine.

I would like my daughter to have at least as good if not better than what I had. I would like her to live in a world where she can afford to, you know, have a house and to pay for postsecondary for her kids, like I hope to soon – well, not soon; she's only five – at some point in the future. I hope that she's able to live a reasonable lifestyle on a reasonable wage and able to pursue whatever career she wants, and I would like her to be able to do it here in Alberta if that's at all possible. I think that those things are very reasonable things.

Yes, this bill does some things. Some of those things are good. I think it could do a lot more. I feel like I've said this about almost every bill in this session, but this should be a: yes, and. It should be: yes, and. There should be more: more in terms of indexing of AISH and giving people back that $3,000, more in terms of the erosion of taxes that this government has foisted onto people and the increases in taxes, and more in terms of utilities as well. So I think it's worth discussing.

This bill has in it – they call it a rate cap. I feel like that's not an accurate enough description that I want to use it, because it's not a rate cap. It's a loan. Essentially, what the government is doing is they're saying that for everything over 13 and a half cents we will loan you the money, but we'll loan it to you collectively as a pool. So if people move out of province or jump off the RRO, get on a contract, any number of things, then the people who are left on it are paying not only their loan but other people's loans as well. People remain on the RRO for all sorts of reasons, often because they don't feel empowered with sufficient information to sort of assess a contract and make that decision. Most of the contracts are very short term, but, I mean, people are busy. They have kids and lives and jobs, and they're under a lot of financial stress, as previously discussed, and I think the result of that is they don't always have the time to make these assessments.

The idea that everything should be buyer beware, that the government has no place in worrying about this – well, obviously, they don't think the government has no place, because they've done something about it. So they can't claim that position. But the idea that, you know, the government ought not to intervene in any way I think is just wrong.

What you have is a situation where people are going to start paying this rider. Essentially, you have three months where the government loans you money for electricity costs over 13 and a half cents per kilowatt hour – so that's January, February, March – and then starting in April you start paying it back with this rider. Now, people might not notice it right away in April because prices tend to be low in April. They might not notice it right away in May, but in June or July as prices start to increase again, people are really going to notice this. Coincidentally, that happens to be after the next election. Interesting little policy quirk there.

People will notice this at some point, and the people who have the ability may start getting off the RRO so they're not in a position to pay that back, and what that means is that, increasingly, the people who are left – and those will be those who are probably most vulnerable to this. They'll be people who don't have, you know, sufficient English necessarily to be able to get on a contract or to understand what's occurring. They'll be people who don't have, for whatever reason, the ability to sort of understand what's happening with their bill, and they'll be people who don't have the credit rating to get onto a fixed-term contract. So as people jump off, fewer and fewer people will be left to repay this loan that the government has saddled them with. I think that's problematic for a number of reasons. I believe it was described in a tweet, I think, by Blake Schaffer as a “death spiral,” which is a fairly accurate rendition of the policy issues with this. I mean, I think that's really problematic.

I don't think there's anyone out there – and, I mean, it's kind of hilarious, because this is a government who, when bringing in a highly politicized curriculum, sort of tried to defend it by saying that there's financial literacy in it. Incidentally, there was financial literacy in the expert-developed curriculum that they decided to highly politicize – just, you know, for everyone's awareness – but that's how they tried to defend it. I think if there's one thing that financial literacy teaches you, it's probably that payday loans are not usually the solution to your problem.

In fact, you know, when we were in government, we actually acted to get some products into the market that weren't payday loans, because people were stuck in this horrible cycle – this horrible cycle – where they had one thing go wrong, and they could only get this loan at this high interest rate and just sort of spiralled and spiralled and spiralled. That's what I feel like this policy is doing. It's putting people in exactly that position. It's saying: well, we'll protect you now because we're worried about the next election, but you'll have to pay it back, and maybe you'll have to pay someone else's loan back, too, with it. It's – I feel like “deeply flawed” is an understatement. I'm not really sure what else to say. It's deeply flawed. It's deeply flawed from its inception all the way through. I think it's highly problematic, and I really do find the timing with respect to the repayment just a little too coincidental and extremely, extremely troubling.

I mean, what we're looking at, Mr. Chair, is a government that has contributed to an inflationary cycle, that has contributed to the fact that wages are not growing to keep pace with inflation, that has raised taxes, that has raised tuition, that has raised interest on student loans, that has raised any number of costs in a way that is really harmful to Albertans. And now, for the last year, because that's how long we've been hearing about this for – people have been concerned, they've been worried, they've been wanting action, they've been needing something from the government, and they've been needing the government to listen for a year – the government has done nothing.

Coincidentally enough, six months before an election they're offering people a loan that they'll have to repay mostly after the election. I think that that's extremely problematic behaviour. Extremely problematic behaviour.

Ms Hoffman: Is that how you speak to Wren?

Ms Ganley: It is. That is my mom face.

I think, to sum up, I would say – oh, before I sum up, that's the other thing I should probably point out: the $100 a month leaves a lot of people out. A lot of people are struggling. Right now young people without kids who are trying to pay off their extra high tuition from this government with their extra high interest payments from this government, who are not able to get jobs that sort of pay a salary commensurate with people coming out of university 20 years ago, who are not able to get housing that's nearly as affordable as for people, say, 20 years ago are some of the most stressed, some of the most challenged by the current state of affairs. They are completely left out.

As I mentioned, folks on AISH, the seniors' benefit, the child tax benefit: they're not getting back, for the people on AISH, that $3,000 a year that was eroded. People whose taxes have gone up: they're not getting that money back either. I would be remiss if I didn't point out that the government's payments, $50 a month for utilities, also leaves out a bunch of people who live in condos because of the way that the condos are metered. They don't really seem at all interested in addressing that with a policy fix.

Overall, I would say that this bill is far too little and far too late. I think that is the best way to sum it up. It's too little too late, and I think that Albertans will see through it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to add comments, questions, or amendments? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Happy to rise this evening and provide some of my initial thoughts on Bill 2. I haven't had the chance to speak to that in second reading, but that's okay. We're in Committee of the Whole here now, which is always the best place to be able to possibly even do some back and forth should I have questions, which I do, around Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

First off, I think it would be important to talk a little bit about the history of how we kind of got here and the reasoning behind, I think, bringing this bill forward. This is the government's attempt to try to reduce the impact that, you know, the past couple of years has had literally on their pocketbooks. We were talking about reindexing personal income tax, reindexing the child benefit, reindexing AISH. I think it's very, very important to remember that the government was very, very adamant earlier in the 30th Legislature that they weren't doing that, that we weren't deindexing. Well, if you weren't deindexing, why are you reindexing now if you didn't deindex to begin with?

Again I find myself at odds, Mr. Chair, and I've found myself at odds throughout the entire 30th Legislature. I've done my best. I haven't always been successful at it, but it's, you know: what does the legislation say, what doesn't it say, and what have you been saying about it? I've noticed a persistent and consistent effort from the government to conflict with all of those things. When I was trying to explain to them that they were deindexing and they were telling me they're not, of course – I can't even remember some of the things: I was lighting my hair on fire; I was fearmongering. Go ahead and insert whatever word you'd like in there; I'm sure it's fitting. But, then, here I am seeing that we're reindexing. Was I wrong, or were we not entirely accurate with some of the information that was being put forward? I'm picking those words very, very carefully because I wouldn't want to run afoul of some of the standing orders.

So here we are now trying to make up for some of that. You know, again, maybe I'd better layer the sandwich here a little bit. I don't want the minister to think that I'm against this, because I'm not. It's kind of like when you're bargaining contract language. I certainly have what I would like to see as all the language being put into a contract. Sometimes I just don't quite get that, but at least I can get something. In this case some of the relief that I'm seeing here for Albertans in Bill 2 is something. Is it all that I want? Well, no, because I think you have a lot of ground to make up, but at least it's something. But it is my duty to remind you how far you're falling short and maybe some of the things you could do, because we still have the chance to look at things differently in certain parts of the bill at least.

We've seen things around help for electricity in terms of rebates. I'm trying to be nice here to some degree, but I feel that getting, you know, $200 towards that feels a little cheap. I've shown that just one of my constituents one month saw an electricity bill of $600. Yes, $200 would help going towards that, but what about the next $600 bill? What about the next one after that, that maybe is $500 or maybe is $700? We ran out there.

Mr. Nally: Tell them about a fixed-rate contract.

Mr. Nielsen: I look forward to the minister responsible for red tape to participate when he gets his opportunity. I will take notes vigorously, and I'm sure there'll be some red tape in there I'll get a chance to criticize, because I haven't been able to criticize any red tape so far since he's taken over.

You know, we see some relief coming in terms of the fuel tax. Again, I'll take what I can get, but here's the problem. I've got constituents who have parked their vehicles because they can't afford their insurance. If they're not operating their vehicle, how do they benefit from the fuel rate being suspended, the tax on that? There's no benefit to that. The thing is, Mr. Chair, that we've seen significant increases in insurance rates. Just one constituent alone showed me that their condo insurance went up by 46 per cent; their vehicle insurance went up 52 per cent. All it takes is one example. When you have one example, you can't ignore it. You shouldn't ignore that. I think the government is doing that a little bit. Again, I appreciate the attempt here, but it's falling short.

We saw some of the rebates here earlier around, you know, for instance, heating your home, getting $50 a month for three months, which is $150. Again, thank you, but you're being cheap with Albertans. There could be more done. I always hear about: we have to be fiscally responsible. Is it fiscally responsible to spend $30 million a year to chase a cartoon character? So far nobody has told me it is. They were actually kind of surprised when I said: these two logos and a cartoon character later, and it doesn't seem like we're any further ahead.

Is it fiscally responsible to bet over a billion dollars on an election south of the border? I would suggest that maybe it's not. It's not fiscally responsible. You know, we're spending a couple of million dollars to write reports about organizations that did nothing wrong. They were just doing what they were doing. Yet all we've got for Albertans is $150.

Mr. Nally: Two point eight billion.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, feel free to explain that to my constituent that asked me to bring their question forward, which I did, and they got a really bad answer. I look forward to him jumping up to explain that to my constituent.

Now, when we look at this little – I guess it is a bit of a scheme around putting off the payments, spreading them out over 19 months. Here's the thing. People can't afford their bills now, so over the next 19 months they're going to have to try to catch up on them. They can't pay now. How are they going to pay later on? You're, as they say, kicking the can down the road, giving people false hope. I know. I have a personal friend that's in this boat who decided to take advantage of that little deferral payment that went on and now is looking back and going: wow, that was a really bad decision. But it seemed like a really good thing at the time. It got sold as a really good idea.

Mr. Nally: You voted in favour of it. Zero per cent.

Mr. Nielsen: Yeah. The company got to pay zero per cent on their loan, but Albertans had to pay interest on it.

That's what I'm saying. They're getting into this cycle, this financial rabbit hole that people are getting directed to go down, and it's not beneficial to them.

As my friend from Calgary-Mountain View pointed out, the way this is being set up, you have individuals that will probably temporarily be on the regulated rate option right until the point they realize that it's not to their advantage and they have the ability to get off, making the remaining pool individuals that actually don't have the option.

As we know, there are criteria when you start to go on some of these fixed rates, things like a good credit score. The reality is that some Albertans don't have that, not through any fault of their own. They've been sitting here maxing out their credit cards because – oh, I don't know – their kids decided to go to postsecondary to increase their education. Their student loans went up. The student interest rate on those loans went up. Their insurance went up in trying to go there every day with their vehicle. So they've run into problems, or they just simply don't have the deposit to be able to put towards that.

It's very, very difficult when you're trying to raise a family on minimum wage. We already know that that's a very, very difficult thing to try to do. You just don't have a whole lot of extra money to spend. While, you know, it'd be great if they had that money to put the deposits so they could maybe get there – but then, of course, that problem starts to expand where we have fewer and fewer people that are going to take on that burden that's left over, as my friend from Calgary-Mountain View had pointed out. There's a very, very big flaw in that.

Now, because we're in the Committee of the Whole, I'm hoping that maybe someone from the government will be able to rise in the discussion and maybe talk a little bit about: should that scenario start to play out where that pool of people start to leave the RRO, shrinking the pool that's left over, making it a larger burden on those that are left, what's the plan to help them should that occur? I haven't heard anything yet. That doesn't mean there isn't, and I'd be happy to hear more about that should that opportunity arise, and I would definitely take notes on that.

Again, I'm not necessarily opposed to Bill 2. I kind of feel like I'm in that corner where I at least have to accept something on behalf of my constituents, on behalf of Albertans so they're getting at least something, but I think that there is more that could have been done. I think there was a larger opportunity here to be able to help people. So it's my hope that maybe some of the folks that were providing some interesting commentary during my commentary might be able to pop up, might be able to answer some questions. I have a feeling probably not. I might just get a whole bunch of rhetoric, but really, at the end of the day, you can feed me all the rhetoric you want, because Albertans are the ones that are paying the price, and really the rhetoric that you're directing at me you're directing at them, which I don't think is very fair. Hopefully, we get a chance maybe to look at this.

Like I said, Albertans are struggling right now to do things. Kicking the can down the road is not going to help. You know, introducing a rate cap here which is a lot higher than what people are facing right now – people are struggling right now at the rate that it is, and we're not even at this proposed cap. What happens when it gets to there? They're already in trouble here. Hopefully, there's a plan.

I look forward to hearing that more, and perhaps I'll even jump up again as I furiously write notes from members that did decide to jump up.

The Deputy Chair: Other members wishing to add comments or questions to Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022? The chair sees the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Perhaps during what I hope is a riveting 10 minutes, my colleagues across the aisle will feel inspired to speak to what is supposed to be one of their flagship pieces of legislation this session. Bill 1 was supposed to be the big bill, which, of course, we know the government tried to ram through in the middle of the night because they were wildly unsuccessful in their attempts to communicate how their job-killing sovereignty act would be beneficial to the people of Alberta. Albertans aren't convinced; that's for sure.

Number two, I know they keep heckling about how much money they're investing through this bill, but certainly the many, many Albertans who have weighed in on this are saying that, across the board, Alberta families are feeling a real pinch. And when I say "families," I don't just mean your nuclear family; I mean ordinary, everyday Albertans: retired, working, students. Nobody has gotten a break under the UCP or found life got better in the last four years. We're hearing regularly from people that they're really having a hard time making ends meet.

Bill 2 was brought forward to this place. It's titled the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, but just to start, Mr. Chair, it leaves out about half of Albertans. It leaves out about half of the people of this province, many of whom are young and working or are in school and have seen huge budgetary pressures. I was really happy to have met last week with SU representatives from the University of Calgary, who made very clear how disappointed they were by this legislation and the fact that we have seen record food bank usage, including the food bank at the University of Calgary itself. We've seen tuition continue to escalate just in the last two years.

This government likes to say that they care about health care workers and that they want to make sure we have enough. At the University of Calgary, because of government cuts and because of a board appointed by the UCP, we've seen the tuition in the Faculty of Nursing this upcoming year and this past year: a cumulative increase of 20 per cent, a 20 per cent increase in tuition for nursing students who want to study in the province of Alberta at the University of Calgary, who would like to probably spend their careers serving the people of Alberta, or at least that's what they were planning on doing.

We know how difficult it can already be to get into these programs, and now the government, for those who are able to get in, is jacking up their tuition by 20 per cent approximately – it was 10 per cent last year and 8 per cent this year, so a cumulative of approximately 20 over two years because it compounds, of course, things that the government certainly should understand – making life incredibly expensive. Those university students, who are seeing their tuition go up, their inflationary pressures, about 6 per cent, go up: many are reporting on the significant increases to rent. We know how difficult it is to buy groceries right now in this province, and there is nothing in this bill to help a single university student who doesn't have dependants, unless they're over 65.

The University of Calgary students' association, rightfully so, was really disappointed when this bill came forward and there was no relief for university students. The government has refused to cap tuition at inflation. That's another thing that they're lobbying for. They would have really liked to have seen a bill that would have capped tuition increases to inflation. They'd like to see some requirements for authentic consultation, and they would like to see some relief for students in terms of their costs but also their income. One said: how is it fair that others will be able to get this money, but those of us who are doing our best to contribute to our postsecondary education and, in turn, to the success of our province aren't eligible? I think that's a very good and fair question.

There are approximately 2 million, almost half of Albertans, who are left out of this. It was mentioned that there are a lot of people working minimum wage, and there absolutely are. Let's look at the income for somebody who is working full-time, 37 and a half hours a week; minimum wage, 15 bucks an hour; 52 weeks in a year. They're taking no time off. They're making 29,250 bucks in a year, and unless they have children or unless they're a senior, they don't qualify for this relief in this bill either. That is ridiculous, to have somebody make less than $30,000 a year working full-time and for the government to not even pause for a moment and think that that person might be in need of some relief right now, as we're seeing such significant increases to the cost of everything, including the cost of food, the cost of rent, the cost of transportation.

I am disappointed that there was – it's a big cabinet. It's a big cabinet. There were a lot of people who sat around the table. I'm disappointed that either the people sitting around that table didn't even stop to think about the minimum wage workers of this province or the low-income people in this province or the university students in this province or that they were so incapable of convincing their colleagues to actually put something in this bill to help address them and their needs. The people sitting around that cabinet table should be embarrassed that they've left out almost half of Albertans through this bill.

I guess something is better than nothing. I typically try to come to this place and think: as long as we're not moving backwards, I can probably support it, and we can move forwards. I guess it is a step forward. But at a time when we're seeing significant, record-breaking revenues, due in no way to the decision-making of the current government – we're seeing significant revenues, revenues that belong to the people of Alberta, mostly off nonrenewable resource revenues, including royalties through the royalty framework that was negotiated under the last NDP government. The government of today, though, has decided that they're going to give a very small fraction of that back to the people of Alberta and instead boast about how fortunate they were to stumble into those backwards.

At the same time, we have people making minimum wage working full-time and people going to university having to rely on the food bank, record food bank usage. I know that there were members previously who spoke about how great it is that the UCP is giving money to food banks, and obviously it is desperately needed right now. We've never seen food bank usage as high as it has been. The Member for Calgary-Glenmore scoffed at that and said: well, of course, it was higher when the NDP was in government. It was not. That is well documented, factual, that food bank usage has never been higher than it is right now.

Getting back to those University of Calgary students, they talked about how international students in particular are having to rely on the food bank in much larger proportions than ever before in the past. And why? Well, one of the reasons is because the current government has decided to jack up tuition, particularly for students who are international students, to use them as an opportunity to make more money to support programs. Or to make more money to support the current government, I guess, would be the other side of that.

The other piece I want to touch on in my brief opportunity here tonight is around the regulated rate option, and I know that the current Member for Morinville-St. Albert yelled out: tell them about the regulated rate option. I will tell them about the regulated rate option, because under the regulated rate option what the government is doing through this utility payday lending scheme is that they're creating a bigger burden for those who are on the regulated rate option to pay off the loan for those who are still stuck in the current RRO when the loan comes due.

You've heard some of my colleagues talk about how – what it is is a short-term payday loan for the period right before the election. Surprise. The government right now is wanting to find a way to earn some votes, so they're telling people: your bills are going to go down. The other part of that is that your bills are going to go way, way up pretty much right after the election, because this isn't actually forgiveness. This isn't actually easing of the pressures. This is deferral. This is a loan, a loan that will see those who are still stuck in the RRO when this period is up having to shoulder the significant burden that will be left upon them because the current government decided to bring in this toxic loan program. It definitely is not about making life more affordable in the long term at all.

It is simply trying to put a very small Band-Aid in the lead-up to the election, hoping that people will forget about all the harm that's been caused, all the escalation that's been experienced, the vast majority of that through direct decisions that the UCP has made to prioritize friends and insiders over everyday Albertans, friends and insiders like lobbyists for large insurance corporations, automobile insurance corporations, who fought to have the cap lifted from automobile insurance. We saw published across the nation yesterday just what an impact that has had on the people of Alberta, that here in the province of Alberta we have the highest, in every single category, automobile insurance costs, according to EY. We used to call them Ernst & Young, but I think now they've rebranded as EY. They have very clearly documented that in every single category people in Alberta are paying more for insurance than they are in other parts of the country, driving up the costs for ordinary families, making it more and more difficult for people to afford to have a vehicle, to keep it on the road, to buy groceries.

The government wants us to come into this place and do a big song and dance for them. Or maybe they don't, because they can't even be bothered to speak to their own bill. This is, again, Bill 2 under the new Premier, supposed to be the top two priorities. We're going to talk about affordability, and they won't even talk about it because I think that they know, rightfully, that they are leaving half of Albertans out through the formula they created. They are causing an even greater gap between many haves and have-nots in our province, and they are making it harder for ordinary folks to be able to make their ends meet.

I also can't help but reflect on about four years ago, when we brought in indexing of AISH, and the government of the day, the NDP, was really proud to bring in indexing. We put it in legislation. This was going to happen in perpetuity. And the UCP at the time, under the leadership of Jason Kenney, actually voted for it. They said, "Well, of course, the NDP is going to tell you that we're going to get rid of indexing, but we wouldn't do that." "Don't be mean, and don't spread lies to people who are low-income," they said, "to people who are severely handicapped; don't tell them we would do that; of course, we wouldn't do that." "We voted for the bill," the Premier said, then Premier Jason Kenney. Jason Kenney said: "We voted for the bill. We're absolutely going to stand by indexing, and we're going to increase everybody's salaries when the cost of living goes up."

It was the eve of an election, and what happened almost immediately after that election? The summer of repeal. They repealed their promises. That is what they did. They jacked up the cost of living, and they got rid of those inflationary protections for people who were living on AISH. But here they are on the eve of another election, and they want everyone to say: "Oh, don't worry. Trust us. We're going to increase your cost of living. We're going to give you an increase to your AISH. Don't worry; it's all going to be good. Don't tell people who are severely handicapped that we won't do that. Don't tell them to look at our record. Don't tell them to look at what we've actually done and what impacts we've had on their lives. Don't worry. Trust us this time. It's going to be different this time." Are you kidding me?

An Hon. Member: It's never different.

Ms Hoffman: It is never different with the UCP.

I have to say, Mr. Chair, that I don't think this bill moves us backwards, so I guess I will vote for it, but the government sure could've done a lot better. They sure could've done a lot more in this bill and over the last four years to actually address the pressures that everyone has been telling us have been significant on them and their families. Instead, the government wants to throw about a sixth of what the surplus is anticipated to be at half of the population, probably the half they think they need to vote for them, and say: good enough.

Well, it's not good enough, Mr. Chair. It's not something that I think the people who are sitting around the cabinet table drafting there should be proud of. I think they should be ashamed of how many people they've left out and the huge gaps that they're going to only further through their failure to actually protect every Albertan who is struggling right now.

With that, I guess I'll support the bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other members wishing to add questions or comments? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I paused there for a moment just to see if any of the government members would want to speak to what should be one of their flagship bills. We also know they were pretty cautious about speaking to their actual flagship bill, which was Bill 1, the sovereignty act.

It turns out that they don't really want to speak to this, which is shocking, because I know – I know my caucus colleagues will share this feeling. I mean, speaking about affordability is probably one of the top issues that Albertans are talking about. I know that we have been committed to speaking to these issues for almost a year now, when we first started to see inflation start to rise significantly in the fall of 2021. It has been something that on this side of the House we have been talking about nonstop. Why, Mr. Chair? Because that's what Albertans were talking about. That's what they cared about deeply. Their ability to pay for the things they needed to live, their utilities for heat and electricity, their groceries – they need to drive their car – their car insurance: they were seeing all those go up while at the same time not seeing their income or their wages go up.

One of the things that I think is really important to keep in context, Mr. Chair, as we think about Bill 2 and inflation relief is that while we have heard great enthusiasm from the government caucus to talk about certain aspects of economic recovery, what they failed to talk about is that wage growth, actually, in Alberta is the second slowest in the country right now. We know that Albertans, while they're seeing their costs go up, are not seeing their income go up. We've seen that reflected in the challenges that all households are facing, including those of my constituents.

I, like my colleagues, have been door-knocking relentlessly for, honestly, almost two years. Even between waves of the pandemic I've never stopped, because that's our number one job, listening to our constituents and hearing what they have to say. I've also been privileged and honoured to knock on doors not just in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud but across the province. I've lost track of how many constituencies in Calgary I've door-knocked in and in Fort McMurray as well as other constituencies in Edmonton such as Edmonton-South West as well as in Medicine Hat.

Edmonton-South West is also – I mean, if you're allowed to have a second-favourite Edmonton constituency, there's no doubt that, for me, Edmonton-South West is it. So many of those great people live very close to me, go to the same rec centres. They attend the same schools as my constituents, and they know that they always have a voice in the Legislature for them even if it's not their current MLA. They know that the Alberta NDP caucus as well as myself will take to heart their issues, especially as they raise concerns about affordability. I'm very proud to represent so many people right now.

In any event, Mr. Chair, affordability is one of the number one issues that we're hearing from constituents, and it's one of the number one issues that I've been talking about and I know my colleagues have been talking about for months. So I'm glad that the government is finally bringing in some inflation relief measures.

Unfortunately, as many of my colleagues have shared – and I want to give a shout-out to my colleagues who've already talked. The Member for Edmonton-Glenora just did a fantastic job articulating some of those challenges as well as the members for Edmonton-Decore and St. Albert the other day and Calgary-Mountain View.

You know, there is a lot of concern that this could be done a whole lot better. I think what we're seeing is a pattern of behaviour, Mr. Chair, from sort of the rushed way. I guess we've got a Premier who is very enthusiastic about some issues although even her flagship issues she didn't give much thought and attention to because somehow she accidentally gave herself and her cabinet unbelievably undemocratic powers to change legislation. That was, oops, a little mistake.

We know that's the level of attention that she'll pay to her flagship bills. It's not surprising, then, with this one, which has not been a priority for the UCP to talk about or for this current Premier when she was running for leadership – rarely ever heard her talk about affordability – so maybe it's not a surprise that this bill came forward and it was not well thought out. Now, certainly, I think we've been very clear: we will support measures that will address some of the affordability issues Albertans are facing.

It is critically important that we take some action, and I will support a bill that does take some action. But our job in this Assembly, Mr. Chair, is to give some critical thinking and thought to the legislation that's put before us and to suggest changes and point out where things could have been done better, because at the end of the day we are stewards not only in terms of the laws that we pass in this place, but we are stewards of Alberta's taxpayers' dollars as well. We have an interest in making sure that those dollars are being spent effectively.

This is why I think there is significant concern around the parameters that have been laid out in Bill 2 and the eligibility for some of these affordability measures. You know, first of all, I will say that the threshold that was chosen here of the $180,000 to have a minimum income is, I think – I've heard from some of my constituents questioning how that amount was determined and why that was determined to be the threshold for providing some support.

Should it be higher? Should it be lower? You know, I think there needs to be some clarity around that. I understand that the current Minister of Affordability and Utilities will indicate that it was based on the household income used for the child care subsidy, but of course this is excluding a huge number of Albertans. When we're talking about a child care subsidy – and often in situations we're talking about double income, of course – what about the single-income individuals who don't have children who now don't qualify? I have to tell you, Mr. Chair, I know many of them.

I know many individuals who have been struggling with affordability issues. In fact, many of them who work with us and our colleagues – when I say “colleagues,” I mean work as staff. I'm sure many of the MLAs in this Chamber have constituency staff, for example, who do not qualify because they don't have children or they're not seniors, and that is really difficult for me even as an employer and somebody who works, my staff, to hear that they don't qualify for these measures because they don't have children.

I wish I could pay them a whole lot more, Mr. Chair, because they sure are worth it. I want to give a shout-out to them right now because they're fantastic. A shout-out to Rick and to Melissa in my office; they are fantastic human beings who work so much. I would love to be able to pay them what they're truly worth.

But they don't qualify because they don't have children. Yet I know, in the circumstances that they live in, that they're struggling with utility bills. They are struggling with groceries. They're struggling with a lot of other challenges, and they don't qualify. At the same time, Mr. Chair, I have to tell you I have heard from constituents in my riding who say that they are shocked to find out that they do qualify because they don't believe that they need it. They say that they would rather have those dollars going to people who need it more than they do.

Particularly, I know a number of seniors who qualify because their income is at a fixed-income level and it's lower, but they have a significant amount of, you know, savings and various investments that they're doing just fine. Their income falls below that $180,000, and they're saying: why do they qualify? When we talk about ways to be stewards of taxpayer dollars, we needed more specificity and, I think, more targeting in these affordability measures to make sure that we're being really clear that those who truly need it get it. That is, I think, the problem that we're seeing.

To me, it's about making sure that we are not drawing arbitrary lines, that we are not making assumptions about people based on having children or being seniors and saying that they can or cannot. We need to actually look at need. I do believe truly, Mr. Chair, that had some more thought been given, more attention – if this had been at all a priority for this government up until two weeks or three weeks ago, then we would have seen a more thoughtful bill that was presented and a more thoughtful program that would have been clear about targeting those individuals who need it the most. That is one of my critiques. It is a significant amount of money that's being spent as a result of these affordability measures. We should make sure they're being spent where they can do the most good. That is my concern.

You know, I actually have had a number of constituents and individuals who haven't typically been Alberta NDP supporters, although they've indicated they will be this time around, saying that they're also concerned that not only hasn't it been targeted properly, but they want to know that this is actually going to go to support the people who need it the most. It feels like, to them, this is just an attempt to buy their support going into the next election.

Ms Hoffman: There's a poll for that.

Ms Pancholi: It sounds like many Albertans actually believe that.

Again, I don't want to help this government with, you know, the very cynicism that they have created and incubated and encouraged in Albertans, but if they don't want this to be seen like a vote-buying measure, then I think they should've been more thoughtful about making sure that it would go to the people who need it rather than the people who they think will support them. I think that's a very important issue that would've given them more credibility. But, by all means, I don't think it's my job to try to encourage this government or try to give them pointers on how to be more credible, because we know they won't take them. Certainly, I think that's one of the concerns. It's a way to make it seem like this is actually about helping Albertans, and I'm not sure that the thought and attention has gone into this bill and this program to ensure that.

I also want to mention, of course, of the many issues that my colleagues have already raised, you know, the reindexing of AISH and indexing of a number of other measures. It's really difficult, Mr. Chair, to sit here and listen. We've heard a parade of various now ministers, former ministers, backbencher MLAs talking about: oh, they never really liked deindexing AISH. I mean, they all voted in support of it. They never wanted it. They always spoke behind closed doors, conveniently, where there's no record of it, against the deindexing of AISH – that also belies their credibility – but they all voted in favour of it, enthusiastically, in fact, and heckled and critiqued and yelled. We said: you're breaking your word to vulnerable Albertans by deindexing those individuals from those benefits, and it will be a cut. Oh, goodness. I can't even – who can forget?

Ms Renaud: It's not a cut.

Ms Pancholi: It's not a cut. It's not a cut. When individuals on AISH were seeing their costs go up and their benefits stay the same, it was a cut. The semantics that were played by members of the government caucus on that issue – now they're saying: oh, behind closed doors they never supported it. But they did.

What it showed, Mr. Chair, as well as what it shows now, that they're agreeing to reindex AISH just before an election, is that they have always been willing to play games, balance budgets on the backs of the most vulnerable. When it suited their purpose to, you know, try to seem like they were being austere and they were going to rein in spending, they were more than happy to all support deindexing individuals who are on AISH. Now, when it's time for an election, they're more than happy to talk about, "Oh, it was really a terrible idea," and they're going to reindex AISH. I think that makes it very clear that they will do this again. That's really what we have to know.

We will run into tough economic times again. That is likely going to happen. That's the way, you know – we've seen that happen in this province too many times. And when that happens again, Albertans can rest assured that every single member of this government caucus will vote once again to deindex benefits that the most vulnerable Albertans rely upon. Why, Mr. Chair? Because they've done it already. They've made it very clear: they're happy to balance the budget on the backs of those people who are most vulnerable in our society and to do it with a straight face. That's why it's hard to cheer and clap when they're now saying that they're going to index what they never should have deindexed in the first place.

Let's also be clear that they're not talking about reindexing to the point of time where they deindexed. Three years ago, during a pandemic, we saw those individuals on AISH absolutely see their benefit cut. They're not talking about going back in time and even atoning for the mistake they made. And we know that those individuals have lost the equivalent of $3,000, which is, by the way, quite a significant amount of money for somebody on AISH.

I also want to mention, for example, the indexing of the child and family benefit. Now, again, those are things that we absolutely have been calling on for some time as well as the seniors' benefit. We've been saying that those absolutely should be indexed.

8:30

But I want to go back to 2019 again to actually point out what, again, this government won't talk about, which is that in 2019 they actually combined the Alberta child benefit and the Alberta family employment tax credit into one, into what we have now. What they were not transparent about was that when they did that, they actually cut off a number of vulnerable families. Now, we have to remember, the families that are eligible for this benefit are very low-income families. At the time that they made the changes in 2019, they actually decreased the benefit for a number of very vulnerable families.

In fact, the University of Calgary School of Public Policy did an analysis of the changes that they made, and they found, for example, that a two-child, two-parent family in 2019, under the new benefit as put forward by the government, who lived right at the poverty line – we're talking about, you know, under $40,000 per year, two children, two adults – actually lost $500 in a benefit as a result of the changes that the UCP made. So, again, I'm really happy to hear that they're going to index the Alberta child and family benefit to inflation, but let's not forget that they actually decreased the amount of support to vulnerable families back in 2019.

Once again we're seeing a pattern, Mr. Chair, of trying to – well, they can't even say that they're repairing their mistakes because they're not backdating. It's not retroactively available, but they want some credit for doing the decent thing that they should have done in the first place. Certainly, going forward, we know how they will act. We know what they will do. They will absolutely go after the most vulnerable once again to balance their books.

Lastly, I want to speak really quickly, Mr. Chair, to the regulated rate option and the changes made to the electricity and the benefit that – well, it's not really a benefit that's being provided. I had to, you know, go through this to truly understand what was happening here. So for those who may not be aware, the regulated rate option, which is sort of the default option for Albertans – if you don't get on to a contract yourself, that is what most Albertans are on. They're on a regulated rate option until they choose and seek out to be on a contract on their own.

The current scheme – and it's pretty clear in Bill 2 – is that, essentially, what they're saying is that, yes, for three months they are going to cap that rate for the regulated rate option, the RRO – at a much higher rate than we had the electricity cap on when we were in government – at 13.5 cents. They're going to cap it at that point, but they're not going to cover the cost of the difference between the cap and what the actual price is. They're not actually saying: "We're going to help you as the Alberta government. We're going to cover that cost because we know it's a big challenge, and it's a burden, and it's costing a lot of money at a time when your wages and income aren't going up." They're not saying that they're going to cover it. They're actually saying: "We're actually just going to loan that difference. That money that it costs us as the government: we're going to loan that to the electricity companies, and then we're going to let the electricity companies charge you back for that after that three-month period is over."

So that means those individuals on the regulated rate option are going to be repaying the loan that essentially the government of Alberta has given to utility companies. That means they are going to be paying it back over 19 months, and if that increases – because we don't know what those prices are going to look like; we don't know how much that's going to cost; they won't know that – they're going to see their costs go up significantly afterwards. And, as pointed out by many of my colleagues, the individuals who are on regulated rate options sometimes are on that option because they don't even know that they can go and seek out a contract. I mean, we have to talk a little bit about what we're doing to actually educate Albertans on their options. But also it means that they're individuals who may not qualify to go on a contract because they may not have great credit scores. So those are the individuals who may be struggling already financially, and now this government is asking them to pay back a loan that the government has taken out on their behalf.

That is not relief, Mr. Chair. That is not actually providing a benefit to Albertans. It's actually saddling them with more costs. It is again reflective, I think, of poorly thought out affordability measures. That's actually a generous interpretation of this, that they did this because they didn't think it out carefully. The more cynical interpretation would be that they are pretending like they're giving relief to Albertans and hoping that they won't notice that they're actually paying more afterwards. Seeing as we saw that from a number of their COVID relief measures, I wouldn't be surprised.

I'd like to err on the side of thinking that it was just an oversight, because we've seen many, many oversights already from this new Premier and her government, but unfortunately, I believe, they're not actually looking out for Albertans, because they're only just starting to talk about the affordability measures that Albertans have been talking about for over a year, that the Official Opposition has been talking about for over a year; instead, what they've brought forward is untargeted relief that is not going to support most Albertans, and it's going to cost some of them even more because of the way they've decided to deliver this program.

Albertans need real support, Mr. Chair. They need authentic support that's really going to make a difference for them, for all of them who are struggling. They deserve a better-thought-out bill and a better-thought-out program from this government.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wishing to add comments or questions? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I rise to move an amendment, so I will just wait for that to get to you.

The Deputy Chair: Hang on for a moment while we get a copy.

Hon. members, this will be amendment A1.

If I could get the hon. member to read it into the record for us, please.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, be amended in section 3(4) in the proposed section 2 by striking out "the rate of 13.5 cents per kWh" wherever it occurs and substituting "the rate of 6.8 cents per kWh."

I guess what this amendment does is fairly obvious. Unfortunately, it was difficult to solve some of the more substantive problems, shall we say, with the way that this program has been structured by the UCP, but one thing we could offer Albertans was an attempt to set the rate cap to what it would have been had the UCP not repealed the rate cap originally.

Now, there were a couple of things that we couldn't do in this bill. One of them was that we couldn't amend the bill to back index AISH. There were some difficulties with sort of solving the substantive problems with the way the UCP has structured this loan, but one thing we were able to do was suggest that perhaps Albertans deserve a little more relief than this government is providing them. Here what we have suggested is just a return to the rate cap that could have still been in place had the UCP not gone and repealed this.

I think that at this point it's maybe worth talking a little about the sort of I guess I would say tendency of this government to do one thing and then, you know, three, three and a half years later reverse the thing they did and try to do a victory lap on that. There was a cap in place. The government chose to remove it. There was a cap that was an actual cap and not a loan, and the government chose not to structure it that way. Now they want to do a victory lap on this.

AISH was indexed; the seniors' benefit was indexed; the child tax benefit was indexed; the government reversed all that. Income taxes were indexed so that people didn't lose money with inflation; the government reversed that. We had a contract with doctors that was negotiated with them; the government tore that up.

This government just has a history of, shall we say, reversing itself and not apologizing when they reverse themselves, which is very strange. They can't seem to admit: okay; we made an error. They just reverse themselves, they don't apologize, they try to move on, but it doesn't always work. We saw it, incidentally, with Bill 10, too. That was the health statutes act, where the government had to walk back a massive power grab, actually much like the sovereignty act. First, it wasn't a massive overreach. "There's no way it could be a massive overreach. It's fear mongering. The NDP is making things up. It's definitely not that." Then suddenly it was that, but they're reversing it. I don't know. They seem to have a dubious relationship with the facts, shall we say, a dubious at best relationship with the facts.

This is an attempt to at least provide Albertans with what they would otherwise have had. It doesn't do all the things that I think we ought to do, it doesn't do all the things that I think this government ought to do, but it does give them the opportunity to maybe reconsider and give Albertans just a little bit more.

I think it's an incredibly important amendment. I think that Albertans are struggling, and I think – I mean, we've been hearing from folks on their power prices, their natural gas prices for at least a year. Again, it's additive, right? It's not just one thing that does it. It's increases to taxes and tuition and a whole bunch of other things that this government has allowed to happen, but people really are struggling, because electricity is a basic need. You can't live these days without electricity, and people are really, really struggling, and it's usually those who are least able to afford it who are on the regulated rate option.

I think there are some reasons to think that the regulated rate option itself is maybe not a great product. I would encourage people to get on a fixed rate. I think that's probably a better way to go. That wouldn't be the advice in every instance. I would say in this instance, certainly. Yeah. I would say that's probably actually good advice for several years now. But, you know, the product itself tends to be a bit volatile, and those who are left on it are usually people who don't necessarily feel empowered to understand enough about a fixed-term contract to get on one or who don't have the credit to get on one, which is also a problem that occurs, or who just don't understand the system, whether that's because they're new to the country or they don't have the sort of language facility to understand – I mean, these are pretty complex things – or because they just haven't done it. In any event, I think this is an opportunity for the government to show that they're serious, to go back to what would have been otherwise.

So I hope that all members will vote in favour.

The Deputy Chair: Other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Chair, and thank you to the members opposite for supporting the bill. I anticipate that they will support the bill. Just to highlight that the bill we're talking about includes substantial affordability and inflation relief for Albertans at a time when they need it most, including $900 in estimated benefit to families who are not receiving targeted relief payments, including $500 in electricity rebates, natural gas price protection, and, of course, savings on fuel tax.

The amendment here proposes that the rate be changed to 6.8 cents a kilowatt hour. Just comparing the previous government's rate cap, which in this case would cost taxpayers – all taxpayers – $375 million to subsidize 39 per cent of a ratepayer's bills for three months. This ceiling and deferral will cost taxpayers a net $12 million but still provides ratepayers on the RRO, who are facing extreme volatility and high prices over the coming winter months, with stability, the same way that fixed-rate contracts provide stability; you pay less in high months, and you pay a little bit more in lower cost months in return for that stability. That's what the ceiling and deferral mechanism does.

Unfortunately, the members opposite have proposed a rate so low that if it were in place, virtually all electricity consumers would likely switch to the RRO, away from fixed-rate protection, causing instability and future volatility for our most vulnerable. I don't think that was their intent, but we certainly don't want to destabilize our entire electricity market.

So I would recommend that we don't support this amendment, but I look forward to the members supporting the broad bill. It's great news, great help for Albertans when they need it. The faster we get it through here, the faster Albertans are going to see it in their hands and for their kids.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Others wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Back on the main bill, Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has risen.

Mr. Dach: Edmonton-McClung, did you say?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mr. Dach: Thank you. I think you said, "Edmonton-McClung," Mr. Chair. I appreciate that. I didn't hear it clearly.

Mr. Nielsen: There are so many people standing, you couldn't see.

Mr. Dach: There you go.

I am pleased to say that I'm going to be supporting this bill, but I do have severe reservations about it, Mr. Chair. We did just go through an exercise where we brought through an amendment that would have seen the rate of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour in replacing the 13.5 cent rate in the legislation that was defeated, too, by the government with claims that are dubious at best.

But let me focus on the main bill and what I hear at the doors from my constituents about what they're saying about the bucks that are being passed into their hands by this government right now. It is reminiscent, Mr. Chair, of a time a few years ago when there was another Premier in this province named Ralph Klein, and he left a legacy of Ralph bucks. I think that we may be headed towards the same type of legacy when it comes to the bucks that are being flowed through this government's hands via when we're looking at rebates and we're looking at affordability comforts or affordability efforts to cushion Albertans at a time when they're struggling to make ends meet.

We have a situation where perhaps the government was kind of gleeful about the opportunity to pass money to people in the province so close to an election without it seeming as blatant as Ralph Klein's, former Premier Ralph Klein, $400 cheques that he gave to every Albertan over 18 years old in the province in 2006. Now, that announcement – they were called then prosperity payments. The election was being lost, and the Premier at the time, Mr. Klein, had this great idea that it would boost popularity, and he could perhaps win the election by handing out these $400 cheques. It did actually turn the election, but the smile on their faces was short lived in the Klein camp, Mr. Chair.

The Ralph bucks legacy is talked about in a CTV news article, and I'll quote some of it, and I'll table it later. It says that even with oil prices down [they'd] be nowhere near [the] deficit if they'd taken corrective action.

That was Scott Hennig with the Canadian taxpayers' association.

Two months after the cheques were mailed out he announced his intention to resign . . .

This is Mr. Klein, the Premier.

. . . after his fourth term on Oct. 21, 2007, some 19 months later.

"He was beginning to lose his edge,"

as Mr. Mensah says.

"The Ralph edge, the common touch."

But by the end of March, the Progressive Conservatives had had enough with delegates giving Klein an underwhelming 55 per cent . . .

An underwhelming 55 per cent.

. . . show of support at a party leadership review.

That number seems to ring true to the type of numbers and level of support that Conservative leaders seemed to garner from more recent leadership contests as well.

"He was done in by the party establishment," the article goes on to say.

Klein eventually resigned near the end of September of 2005.

Oil prices crashed in 2008 and the province has posted deficits in every year since . . . "I don't think any . . . government is going to follow that path [again]," said Mensah. "That path was a unique period in Alberta's history where the government was simply flush with all the money coming in."

"In hindsight, we see that was not an appropriate approach given what we are now facing as a province."

Now, we have political commentary looking backwards on the Ralph bucks saying that it probably wasn't a very good thing to do and in hindsight probably won't be done again, yet here we are in 2022, Mr. Chair, looking at another version of Ralph bucks. I'll leave it to others to give a prefix as to what kind of bucks we're seeing right now, handed out within five months of an election in the hopes that the public will once again reward the Conservatives with a victory as a result of having their pockets filled with Conservative bucks.

What I'm hearing at the doors, as I began to say, Mr. Chair, when I began my comments, is not a thank you for the upcoming potential money should this bill pass; what I'm hearing is that the public is seeing this as a very, very cynical attempt to buy them with their own money. That indeed is something that has gone on before in this province, as I've alluded to in the CTV news article, and it's something that Albertans are saying very clearly at the doors that I've been knocking on in my constituency, in Calgary, in Brooks-Medicine Hat, in Leduc, in Morinville, and other places upcoming very soon. I hear at the doors that that happened once, but they're not going to be falling for the same stunt. They figure it's a cynical attempt by the UCP to buy support with their own tax dollars at a time when they're using it as a cover for putting a cushion underneath Albertans who are suffering economically.

It's a happy coincidence for the Conservative Party. I think they feel that they're able to cloak these so-called new Ralph bucks in the clothing of support for Albertans during a time of need. They're splashing around the dough to help with the affordability crisis without having to be as blatant as Ralph Klein was when he handed out the Ralph bucks. This is the Conservatives' vision of a social contract, Mr. Chair: we pay you; you vote for us. It's a simple contract, but I'm really hearing at the doors that people aren't falling for it.

I was at a meeting, a Christmas dinner, actually, of former Conservative individuals who invited me to come and join them at a local seniors' residence in my constituency. I was happily surprised to learn that I couldn't find any one of them amongst the 30 attendees who were going to be supporting the Conservatives; they were going to be coming over to the New Democrats.

That age group typically will be having a few more Conservative supporters in it, but it's very clear, given that anecdotal response amongst a group of former Conservative supporters who voiced actual cynicism about specifically what we're talking about tonight, Mr. Chair, that they felt that all of these dollars that were flowing to so-called cushion Albertans against the cost of utilities and so forth were very, very cynical dollars that were being used to curry their vote, to buy their vote. People were turned off by it. They see this so-called Conservative social contract, this pay-for-play Conservative contract, this new prosperity bonus to help them over this period of economic difficulty, something that in 2005 worked for Ralph Klein – they see it for what it is, once again as a cynical attempt to buy their votes.

That interpretation is not my imagination, Mr. Chair. That's exactly the way it was being told to me at that dinner last week in my constituency by seniors, who were in their 70s and 80s, who have now switched their allegiance. They're not going to be voting for somebody who looks to buy their vote.

This bill was supposed to be a flagship, Mr. Chair. The flag is drooping. The flag is drooping, because people have seen through it. It's a limp rag. This is what folks are saying in my constituency: thanks for the dough, but we're not selling you our vote this time; we see right through what you're doing.

So history seems to be repeating itself in one respect, Mr. Chair, in that the Conservatives are trying to use what was a tried-and-true tactic: spill a bunch of cash into the pockets of Albertans prior to an election in an implicit contract that they would then, in turn, be rewarded with their votes. It's not something that is going over very well in my constituency and, dare I say, in many others that I've campaigned in and canvassed in very recently.

The Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act certainly is something that will put money in the pockets of Albertans, but indeed the motivation behind it is something that I seriously question. I can tell this House, Mr. Chair, that the reward that the Conservatives hope to garner from this money is not going to be there. The voting pot at the end of the rainbow is not going to be the same that was rewarded to Mr. Klein in 2005. People are fed up, and they are tired of being treated as though their vote could be bought. They see other things that are motivating them to choose to put their vote elsewhere, other than the Conservatives.

I think this is a concern probably to Conservative members across the way, yet they don't seem to have quite gotten the picture yet. That will become very clear when repeated attempts such as Bill 2 to try to use the royalty surplus that's filling the Alberta coffers right now – when Conservatives try to use that cash to make other attempts to buy the votes of Albertans with their own tax dollars. That's something that I think the Conservatives will probably fail to comprehend over time, and I hope that is something that Albertans remember over the next five, six months because you will see it very clearly, Mr. Chair, in my estimation, in a number of ways.

The current government will be incessant in its attempt to throw money at Albertans in hopes of currying their votes in the next election. Sorry. I'm not focusing on the amount in specific dollar amounts, but that's not what I was hearing at the doors. Basically, the constituents are saying to me that whether it's the electricity rebates or whether it's the elements that will help them in other ways, reindexing the income tax system, the government is not going to end up with the benefit they hoped to receive, and that, of course, would be a political payoff by getting re-elected in the spring if indeed the government decides to hold the election in the spring.

That's something that I was asked about at that meeting as well, Mr. Chair. What are the rules? Of course, the rules are that a government, under Canada's Constitution, is enabled to hold an election every five years. That is something that people are speculating about – will this Premier decide to go longer should it benefit her politically? – of course, which is what Bill 2 is all about: political benefit.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to the main bill tonight? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak again, actually for the second time, to Bill 2. I was really hoping that some of the ministers or some of the government members would have some answers for the questions that were posed last week, actually. Just to maybe refresh their memory, I just got a copy of one of the press releases that was sent out talking about the huge difference for vulnerable Albertans that this particular piece of legislation will make. Huge remains to be seen, but let's talk about this.

The one bullet under the part where it says if Bill 2 passes talks about Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act... will enable key affordability support measures through legislation.

If you go down, the second bullet says:

Upcoming targeted relief payments to vulnerable Albertans collecting Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped (AISH), Persons with Developmental Disabilities (PDD) and Income Support.

Those are three programs.

9:00

Now, two of these things are income replacement programs – we know this, right? – assured income for the severely handicapped and income support. Both of those programs are income replacement. PDD, persons with developmental disabilities, actually pays for staff. The question was asked for clarification. Now, this release says that it's going to be indexed, so I'm assuming that's about 6 per cent, the way that you're talking about the other products. But what does that mean? Is it 6 per cent overall for the total budget? That's about a billion dollars. Is it going to the service providers, or is it going to the staff? Do you know who the staff are? How are you going to do this? If anybody over there has any answers – if this was an error, a mistake, that's cool – maybe you could just explain that, because people don't understand.

And if you think it's just me, let me just draw your attention to a statement that was made from a validator that I'm sure the government has used before, and that's Inclusion Alberta. On November 24 they put out a release, and they asked the very same question that I'm asking: what on earth does this mean? You've indexed PDD, but you know that PDD is a collection of contracts that either go to families – so there are the financial administrators – or they go to service providers, both nonprofit and for-profit, who then pay staff. So what does this mean? What are you indexing? Where is this money going? Who's getting it? I would suggest that most if not all people that are on PDD, that use PDD as a staff support, are already on AISH or income support. So I'm a little bit confused.

Now, what Inclusion Alberta further said, and I started to talk about this last week when I spoke to this bill, was that what this bill doesn't do – I mean, you all can give yourselves a pat on the back if you like for undoing the extraordinary damage that you did. Let me just remind everybody in this place what we've heard from this government for the last few years. We've heard: "It's not a cut. It's not a cut. It's not a cut." We heard that for years. It most definitely is a cut. We also heard: it's the most generous benefit in Canada. It is not. Even if it was the most generous benefit in Canada, it is still below the poverty line. That is nothing to be proud of.

Anyway, going back to the statement that was put out by Inclusion Alberta about Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, they said that what this government failed to do was address the wait-list. Sure, you may have indexed benefits, but what you failed to do was to address the wait-list. If the 6 per cent to PDD is actually meant to provide more support to people, that would be good. That would be a good start. But you have to clarify, because this isn't clear in the bill, it is not clear in the release that you put out, and nobody has really answered any questions, so nobody knows. So perhaps someone could stand up and answer the question.

But you could also address the wait-list. Now, here's what magically happened under the last minister. There used to be a wait-list that was recorded for family support for children with disabilities. Now, that program was left out of this bill. You included PDD, which is for people over 18 with disabilities, but you neglected to include FSCD, which is family support for children with disabilities. I'm not entirely sure why you're indexing one program that pays for staff but you're not indexing the other program that pays for staff. Is this a mistake? Do you have something to clarify? Would you like to explain this to us? It's not just us on this side that are confused; it is service providers that would like some answers.

The wait-list is massive, only what the UCP has done is called it something else. What they call it now is "in planning." That means that you've applied for the benefit or the program that you're eligible for, you've met all of the eligibility requirements, but now you're waiting for a referral to a service provider. You're waiting for a contract. You're waiting for a contract to be signed. You're waiting for it to be mailed to you. This can go on for two, three, four, six, nine, 12 months. This can go on for a long time. To me, that means you're waiting for service. That's a wait-list. But this government, this UCP government, has seen fit to mess around with how they label people as waiting for something else so it looks like they have nobody on a wait-list when, in fact, they have a massive wait-list.

If I look at PDD, the open data – now, unfortunately, this government doesn't update very often, so all I have is December '21. If you add up all the categories where they messed around with the titles and the definition – you can even look at the data descriptions – they have a total of 2,608 people waiting for service, or a service planning caseload. That's PDD. I'm sorry; if you made a mistake with PDD and that 6 per cent was supposed to increase the services that you're providing to people, that's not going to cut it.

FSCD is even worse. That wait-list has completely vanished. It's called something altogether different. It's called in planning, or it's called in planning waiting for a service provider. All that means is that the children are eligible, the families are eligible, they have applied, and they have gone through the steps that they need. They know they need support. They need support now. Early intervention – the key is early – they're waiting for support. They're not getting support. That's a wait-list. There are over 4,000 families that are on those wait-lists. Now, you don't call them wait-lists, but those families are still waiting. You've got 2,000 adults waiting, and you've got 4,000 children and families waiting. That's about 6,000 people.

Now, if your 6 per cent about PDD is in error and you accidentally left out FSCD, just explain that. Just amend this bill. Fix it, or change your release. Put something out. You have clearly made a mistake. We've tried to identify it. We've asked questions, hoping for answers. Now is the time. I hope there's somebody here that has some information or has some understanding. You're spending over $2 billion. I would hope that you know what you're spending it on.

Mr. Chair, I'm going to take my seat and really hope that someone – oh, actually, I'm going to adjourn debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, having heard the motion to adjourn debate, I'm just wondering if the hon. member may have wanted to mention that they would like to move that we report progress as well.

Ms Renaud: I'm sorry?

The Deputy Chair: In addition to adjourning debate, do you also want to report progress?

Ms Renaud: No.

The Deputy Chair: All right.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4

Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Chair: Anybody wishing to add comments or questions to the main bill? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View has risen.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I'm thrilled to get another chance to speak to Bill 4. It's just really thematic of this government, Bill 4. This bill is a bill which reverses a previous – this is funny; I feel like déjà vu all over again. This bill is a bill that reverses a previous decision of this government. The UCP chose to give themselves the power to tear up a contract with doctors.

Now, I happen to think contracts are important. I think the world turns on people making promises and then living up to the promises that they made. In this case, I think that people includes governments. I think it includes corporations. I think it includes a lot of things. So I think it's incredibly problematic that the UCP government chose to tear up that contract with doctors. I think it was disrespectful to doctors. I think it was disrespectful to Albertans. I think it was a violation of the sacred trust that is placed in us by the people of this province. Yeah, I'm not sure that there are enough words to suggest how bad a decision it was.

What we have to add to that is the context. It's bad to break your word at any time, in my opinion. In this case, it was particularly bad because we were headed into a pandemic. The moment at which this government chose to attack physicians was as we headed into a pandemic. And everybody knew what was happening. It wasn't like we were surprised by what was going on.

In addition to tearing up the contract, the government was incredibly disingenuous in its communications with the public in the way it used language. You know, the government chose to attack, in particular, practitioners of family medicine, so primary care.

An Hon. Member: Did she say “disingenuous”?

Ms Ganley: Yes, I did in fact say “disingenuous.” That was the word I used. Thank you very much to the member for that. It was a word I chose very carefully. I think it's a word that accurately reflects the situation.

I think that what was disingenuous about it was that this government tried to make it out like doctors were abusing the public purse in some way. They tried to make it out not like they were in the wrong, not like they were choosing to break their word, to go back on their contract, but they chose to make it out like somehow doctors were doing something wrong and that they deserved what the government was doing to them. I think that that is extremely problematic.

I mean, it's bad enough to make a decision like that; it's worse to try to essentially blame the victim for what is happening. I think, you know, those physicians felt the weight of that at the moment when they were being asked to stand on the front lines to deal with a disease that we didn't yet understand, that was killing a lot of people, that was sweeping through the population. We didn't know what to do yet. We didn't have protocols in place yet. We didn't really understand how to make ourselves safe. There were no vaccines yet. To attack the very people that were essentially standing on the front lines for us in that moment: I mean, I think it's a choice that history will always remember. It's a choice that history will always remember.

And it didn't stop there. This government threatened to lay off nurses as soon as the pandemic was over. We're in a massive shortage right now, just to be clear. They threatened to lay off nurses when the pandemic was over. They tried to roll back the wages of respiratory therapists and other health professionals. I mean, the lives of Albertans were at stake, and people were on the front lines, and this government attacked the people that were standing on the front lines. I think that that is a decision that the public will remember, and I don't think the public's memory of this will be undone by the government's reversal of this bill. Certainly, the damage that has been done to the public will not be undone by the government's reversal of this decision.

So the government tore up the contracts. They attacked doctors, in particular family physicians, suggesting that somehow the doctors deserved what they got, and people left. Of course they did. Nobody wants to be in a place where your government talks about you like that. Nobody wants to be in a place where your government treats you like that. And doctors are difficult to train. It is very expensive. There are four years of undergrad and four years of medical school, and there are internships and residencies. It is difficult to create a doctor, and they are people we need. I think that right now we are seeing more than ever how much we need them. The number of Albertans who lack a primary care physician, the number of people who can't get treatment: it's incredibly problematic. We need them very much, and this government chased them away.

Now, I'm sure they're going to get up and they're going to tell us how that didn't happen, but the problem with facts on the ground is that people know them, right? Doctors wrote to us. They told us they were leaving. They told us the reasons why they were leaving. We heard from doctors. I heard from doctors talking about how the family residency program didn't fill on the first attempt for the first time in Alberta. The family residency program in Alberta didn't fill. I heard from doctors who speak to medical students who were looking at going out of province. It was incredibly problematic, the actions of this government, and this doesn't reverse that. It doesn't reverse the breach of trust. It doesn't reverse the fact that physicians left, the fact that nurses left when this government attacked them, the fact that I have no doubt that other health professionals left as a result of the actions of this government. None of that is reversed, and it leaves Alberta in a dire situation.

I know the government is going to get up again and say: “Oh, it’s not so bad. You know, you had to wait two and a half hours outside of the Children’s hospital in the snow and the cold with your child who’s struggling to breathe, but it’s not so bad because it’s like that in other places.” That is not an adequate response. It’s difficult to describe the level on which that is not an adequate response.

This government was handed the best health care system in the country, possibly in the world, and now it’s like it is in other places. Well, Mr. Chair, I don’t know. I’m a pretty proud Albertan myself. I like it to be better than it is in other places. I’d like to think it’s better. I liked a health care system that was better.

I think that, you know, this thing that the government is suggesting, that the public’s concern is somehow misplaced because it’s like that in other places: I just don’t think that that’s good enough. I think that Albertans deserve a government that recognizes the damage that they did and that apologizes. I really think that if there is one thing that is missing from this bill, which I will say I support because it reverses a bad decision, again – I feel like I say this over and over with this government – it can be a yes, and. Maybe this bill could come with an apology. At least that would be a start. It wouldn’t undo the damage that was done, but maybe it could come with an apology.

Ms Hoffman: One of the most Canadian things you can do.

Ms Ganley: One of the most Canadian things you could do.

Maybe this government could stand up and while reversing their decision, tell the people of this province that they’re sorry, tell the doctors that they’re sorry for the way that they talked about them, for tearing up the contract, tell the people of the province that they’re sorry for the damage that was done to our health care system that will take probably a decade to reverse because of the length of time it takes to train health care professionals.

I think that’s what I have to say about Bill 4. Yes, it is a step in the right direction, but writing a bill to let yourself tear up a contract, tearing up a contract, attacking doctors, attacking nurses, leaving every person in this province with worse health care than when they came in is something for which an apology ought to be offered, and I think that this government should do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other hon. members wishing to speak to the main bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore has risen.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that you were able to pick me out of so many members that are standing up in the House this evening to speak to Bill 4, but I luckily got the call here. Thank you very much for that opportunity.

Of course, the last time I got to chat about Bill 4, we were running out of a little bit of time that afternoon. In the minute and a half that I did have, I did manage to cover a lot of ground, but I think there are still a few more thoughts that I have to try to bring across. I believe I left off at the point where I was thanking the Minister of Health for bringing the bill forward to reverse, again, what I characterized, quite honestly, as a bit of a childish tirade by the former Minister of Health by tearing up the contracts with Alberta doctors. Certainly, Bill 4 is the right move to try to restore that relationship with doctors. But, you know, as I’ve always said, I try to layer out the sandwich a little bit here, and I know that at the time our current Minister of Health was minister of labour, and I think a decision to tear up that contract would’ve probably maybe thrown up some red flags for the minister of labour at that time because, as we know, that kind of course of action in any kind of negotiations usually never would solve anything.

So I’m wondering: you know, was there at some point in time maybe some advice to the former Minister of Health, “Hang on; this might not be a really good idea; it might not be productive; you might want to hold up on that decision”? If not, I have to ask. There must have been somebody either within the government bench, within the government caucus that thought perhaps tearing up the contract with doctors was a little bit too extreme, or even one of the many amazing bureaucrats that the government has access to. Somebody must have said: this is not a good idea. But it is what it is. Here we are, and we’re reversing the ability to be able to do that in the future, so definitely the right decision.

Again, some of the comments that I’ve heard, you know, even before Bill 4 but as well during here – I would like to challenge the Health minister just a little bit with some of those thoughts that have been expressed. I think the first one I’m going to bring forward is around some of the comments we’ve heard about the amount of money that Alberta is spending on health care. We’ve heard remarks that have said: well, we are spending the most money we’ve ever spent in the history of Alberta on health care. I’m happy that you’re spending all of that money. I’m not prepared to quite say that it’s because of the goodness of your heart. I’m wondering if perhaps maybe one of the reasons we’ve seen an increase in health spending is because of population growth within Alberta.

I did a little bit of research here, and looking back in, you know, 1998 – Mr. Chair, you’re probably wondering, well, why 1998? That was because that was the year that the Calgary General hospital was blown up, as it probably should have been. A very, very old building. It was at end of life. Way too much money to probably try to fix it; it was easier probably just to demolish it. At that time there were 2.8 million Albertans in the province. As we know, it was previous to 1998 that the last hospital was built in Alberta. Fast-forwarding now to – and I’m picking 2019 because, of course, we had an election at that point, a change in government. There were 4.3 million Albertans, which looks to me just about, you know, double, and in 2022 we have 4.4 million Albertans in the province.

So I’m wondering if population growth has had anything to do with this need to increase spending in health care not just simply because there’s a desire to want to look like we’re spending, you know, all this money; it’s because we have to in order to be able to provide services to Albertans. Again, while I’m grateful that the money is being spent, to sit here and say, “Well, look at us; we’re doing such a great job” – it’s probably because you have to a little bit. That was one of the thoughts I wanted to challenge there.

One of the other things. Obviously, thinking back to when we tore up the contract with doctors, created that strife, created that very confrontational atmosphere: it’s what I like to call a disruptive decision. These disruptive decisions didn’t just stop there. Now, one of the ones that we’ve just recently seen – and we can certainly get into a debate about it at another time around this – is the firing of the entire AHS Board. The reason I’m referencing that – you know, part of my past days, when I was a little bit younger, a little bit fitter, and playing basketball, one of the things that I always noticed: coaches, when they were substituting players, never ever substituted the entire line at once. The reason they did that was because it was too disruptive. You lost that flow. All of a sudden you have five players coming onto the court. They may have been sitting there for a little while; their bodies are cold. They’re not quite as up to speed as the guys that are coming off. What would happen is that you would have a couple of players come into the game, and then after 30 seconds, 45 seconds or so, another stoppage of play, the coach would put in maybe another player and then finally the other two, rotating all five off at that point.

I'm wondering if the Health minister has considered that by the entire board being fired, we might not have created yet another type of disruptive situation here. We know that a couple of the medical health officers have recently resigned. I must admit I am very curious as to what all of a sudden brought that up, that the two of them would resign in the same period of time. I don't know if there's any kind of relation to the firing of the board, but clearly they felt the need, that their place there was no longer viable for them.

When you make these disruptive decisions, it's usually Albertans that end up having to kind of literally pay the price for that. I'm always happy, of course, to hear from the Minister of Health around that. You know, again, I'm genuinely looking for answers here. This is Committee of the Whole, and we get the chance to explore those kinds of things.

I know that throughout trying to be fiscally responsible, one of the things, a decision that was made earlier which the current Health minister decided to reverse – I'm very grateful for that – and I've brought this up on many occasions prior, was around reducing costs for diagnostic imaging. What happened was that there was a call to do that: it's going to save us a bunch of money. It was very, very clear and proven from the physiotherapists and the chiropractic professions that that indeed was not the case; it was costing the province more. It was also costing Albertans not only in money, because if they needed that diagnostic imaging, they either had to go pay for it themselves or they would have to go to their own doctor to get that diagnostic imaging. Then, hopefully, that paperwork was sent back to the chiropractor or the physiotherapist, for instance, and then they'll hopefully get treatment after that. Quite frankly, that was a bunch of red tape, which – again, I'm glad that that has been reversed and Albertans are now getting care much more promptly than what was happening under that.

Again, you know, a bit of a disruptive decision, all trying to find some financial constraints rather than actually consulting with those professions. While I'm definitely going to vote in favour of Bill 4 proceeding, as I said, there were some thoughts that I did want to share with the minister and challenge some things that were said before. My hope is that should cabinet be looking at more kinds of disruptive decisions, perhaps maybe we'll hear the opportunity from folks that actually realize that might be a problem and, hopefully, stop it before it happens, because, as we know, this whole contract tearing-up didn't work out.

I thank the minister for changing that and trying to repair that relationship because we're going to need it going forward. I know you like to mention, you know, that we have more doctors than ever on the list, but there's a difference between having them registered to practise and actually practising. If we actually have more doctors than we've ever had, why are we still experiencing challenges within the system? I can only surmise that we don't have as many actually practising as we have on the list. That's certainly the feedback that I have received.

Appreciate the chance to expand on a couple of the other items that I missed in that first minute and a half that I had at second reading, and I look forward to any further debate here on Bill 4. Perhaps I might even jump up with some more ideas and thoughts.

The Deputy Chair: Others wishing to add questions or comments to Bill 4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. I'm honoured to take my place in this House and speak to a health care bill because, certainly, it's among the list of major issues that Albertans are raising with me and, I'm sure, with all of us. It's certainly reflected in the polling, the current public health care system and how it's been managed by the current government. So as we consider Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022, I have to say, I do want to say that every Albertan deserves to have the right care in the right place at the right time. While that was consistently our goal while we were in government just a few years ago, although it feels like a lot longer some days, it doesn't seem that that has been the goal of the current government.

We know how headstrong they were – I was trying to think of something parliamentary to say; I think “headstrong” is parliamentary – in trying to attack and erode public health care, and the way that they dealt with physicians was one key piece among that. And, of course, the relationship with the patient's medical home, with the primary care provider, with the family physician, was incredibly problematic. It included specific incidents, including yelling at doctors in their driveway as well as more general incidents of the type of disrespect that was seen at the bargaining table and through this House, through legislation that was brought in. So it is a significant concern for many Albertans.

I think that the current government could have taken this opportunity through a government bill to bring forward something that would have resulted in improved outcomes for patients, maybe something like what was proposed by a private member, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the Leader of His Majesty's Official Opposition, around having specific benchmarks and metrics and guarantees for the people of Alberta in terms of making sure that we are actually making improvements to the health care system. Instead, what we have here is a quite thin bill to undo some of the harm that they brought in in the first place just a couple of years ago. It definitely isn't the kind of sweeping improvement that I think most Albertans would expect, but it is a small bill that does undo a very small piece of the harm that the current government already caused, so I guess with that, I can speak in support and will vote accordingly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Others wishing to speak to the main bill?

I am prepared to call the question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

I see the hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Chair. I move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 2 and report Bill 4.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 4. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and to move third reading of Bill 3.

I, first, just want to thank the Member for Highwood, the now Minister of Mental Health and Addiction, and all those who served on the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights and for their recommendations, their various recommendations. This is one of the recommendations, that government proceed with the great work that was done by that committee but as well by the Alberta Law Reform Institute, that recommended in April 2020 that adverse possession be abolished, and as well, Mr. Speaker, some of the work that was done by the Alberta Law Reform Institute and others who had engaged Albertans for many years.

And a shout-out as well to Ken Allred, who previously had proposed abolishing adverse possession in his private member's bill in 2012. It's taken this long, though, for this to get to this point, but thank you to Ken for starting the conversation. He had been a passionate advocate for abolishing adverse possession in his career as land surveyor for, he says, 50 years.

Some of the feedback that was received by Albertans, the concerns that people had with adverse possession: they wanted to abolish it. I'll advise the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that whoever holds title to the land should be entitled to keep it. No one should be able to take land from the person who paid for it. From one respondent who sent in to one survey: adverse possession is theft, and the law should not reward bad behaviour.

We're very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to have now a piece of legislation to amend the Land Titles Act, the Law of Property Act, and the Limitations Act for the practice of adverse possession to be abolished in the province of Alberta.

Thank you to our friends opposite for their broad support of this bill.

With that, I move third reading of Bill 3, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Others wishing to speak to Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 3 on third reading this evening. Of course, I have always enjoyed the debate whenever it was around the topic of land and property rights in this province, having been a member of the Alberta Real Estate Association for over 30 years in an active real estate career.

Of course, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this issue colloquially called squatter's rights, or adverse possession, has been something that has been discussed in real estate circles since I was a realtor for the first time in 1980, and before then it's been a debated topic. Finally, we're getting around to getting rid of it as a right in Alberta.

It's something we support here on this side of the House, finally abolishing squatter's rights. It was something that was actually a correction to Bill 206, that the UCP brought forward in 2020, which really failed to address many of the concerns that Albertans had been calling for.

We will be watching, Mr. Speaker, for some matters that may not be fully enveloped and encompassed by this legislation, Bill 3. Of course, I'm speaking right now about the effect upon treaty rights that this legislation may have, whether or not the consultation really revolved closely with Indigenous populations to arrive at a spot where they felt that their treaty rights were properly protected under this legislation. We will continue our conversations with the Indigenous leaders to ensure that they see no conflicts in the operation of this bill should it pass this evening or in future sittings of this House.

I also have a concern about the provisions that revolve around compensation for improvements made to the land in question, whereby an individual who had made a claim under adverse possession rules while they were still in force would perhaps be entitled to compensation for improvements on that land and the subject would be coming up between the two parties, the actual owner and the adverse possession claimant, as to what amount of compensation would take place, and there may be a resolution through the courts. But, indeed, if you have a sort of malicious claimant on the one hand versus an owner who supposedly is going to be the beneficiary of the property rights amendment act and not have to suffer losing his land to a claimant, the problem is that we may see individuals who are malicious in their intent taking it upon themselves to drag out this negotiation process in every way, shape, and form.

That, Mr. Speaker, is something that I think we are very, very much going to be paying close attention to because we don't want to have individuals who would still, for all intents and purposes, be making claims or acting as if they still owned the land by exercising court actions and not seeking to resolve the compensation disputes they may have under a former adverse possession claim for improvements they made to land that was not theirs.

[The Speaker in the chair]

We want to avoid any situations like that. So if we see circumstances, Mr. Speaker, where individuals are dragging their feet in finalizing claims with landowners on former adverse possession claims, certainly that is something we'll pay close attention to and seek to find some resolution. After all these many years we do want to be finally done with all the historical claims as soon as possible to provide resolution to the landowners who seek to have nothing but their title to the land, which they should expect to have, having paid for the property.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the underlying concern that I always have with respect to property rights is, of course, the Alberta land titles registration system that we hold so dear in this province, especially those that are practitioners in the industry, whether it be realtors, whether it be property managers, whether it be real estate lawyers, mortgage companies, banks, appraisers, you name it. Anybody in the province relies upon a fully functioning and up-to-date land titles registration system, which, of course, we do not have at this point in time.

We're looking at months rather than weeks for registration time in this province, and that is a very, very large cost to the economy of the province. The fundamental backbone of an economy is the ability to transact in land, and if indeed there is a holdup, a time lag on a registration, it costs money for everybody. There's potentially interest on the unpaid balance until registration is achieved, if indeed there is a system of insuring the land title. There are costs of insurance that companies and individuals have to undergo. There's anxiety and stress and uncertainty created when a title doesn't transfer in a timely fashion, whether it's a homeowner buying their home for themselves or a condominium for themselves or whether it's a multinational corporation or a large corporate individual, client buying a property to invest in and expand their business.

That uncertainty created by the lack of investment over a long period of time in the land titles infrastructure, computer infrastructure, as well as the recent firing of many of the individuals who worked at land titles and now the rehiring by this government to try to catch up because they created a backlog as a result of that, combine to create an unhealthy delay in the land titles system.

It shakes the confidence of business communities in what has been historically a very, very proud system of land registration. Mr. Speaker, when I began my real estate career in 1985, we were still dealing then with a paper system. You'd go to the Brownlee Building on 97th Street and fill out a three-piece carbon form to order a land title. I think it cost a buck or two then. Now they're up to $10 or $12. We did transform into a computer system, but it's still very, very archaic. I think most Albertans would be shocked to know that it's a system that actually shuts down over the weekends and after a certain time at night. Can you imagine, you know, Staples or Costco shutting down their store, their online purchases overnight? It doesn't happen, and it shouldn't happen with the land titles registration system, but it does because the system is archaic. The hardware is in need of updating, we need a revamping of our computer system, and the SPIN 2 system, which is the means by which people search for land titles, is something that is underrated and undervalued and is certainly undermaintained and undermodernized. I would hope to see that rectified in the very near future.

We have, particularly, real estate lawyers and corporate lawyers tearing their hair out because it's taking months for a land title transaction or a registration to happen at land titles. Even though there have been some instruments of title insurance made available, including the western protocol, that lawyers use to close transactions, they're reaching the end of their rope, the end of their capacity to do that. There are some title insurance companies, Mr. Speaker, which are saying: no more; we're not taking on any more because it's become just too much of a burden, too much of a risk.

We're reaching an acute point in the history of our land titles office, and I'm hoping the government is not going to use this critical delay that we're suffering right now – it is largely caused by themselves by getting rid of a lot of the land titles staff and now hiring back, Mr. Speaker – to try to privatize the land titles registration system.

As part of the comment that I have on the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, I suggest that while abolishing squatter's rights is certainly something that has been a long-standing desire of practitioners in the real estate industry and, I think, pretty much everybody because it's an antiquated instrument, there have been other things that we look forward to seeing in the real estate world in Alberta. Of course, one of them is the land titles registration system modernization, that can't come soon enough, along with the Bill 3 changes that will abolish adverse possession.

One of the things that we've seen, whether it be corporate registrations or in residential real estate contracts, is that most of the adverse possession claims or disputes which took place were not necessarily malicious disputes, Mr. Speaker. They happened as a result of an innocent mistake, an unintentional mistake, where somebody built a structure, either a fence or a well or some other building, inadvertently across their own property line onto somebody else's and then, sometimes years later, discovered that they didn't build it on their own land. It's pretty problematic when that happens. I think anybody who's had personal experience with that would know how much of a quagmire that can be and how much of a stigma it attaches to both pieces of land.

One recent example near the end of my real estate career happened at an acreage property, Mr. Speaker, where a water well appeared on the real property report of a property I had listed for sale. It was in an odd location, quite near the property line of the neighbouring property and far away from the house that I was about to list for sale. I asked the landowner whose listing I was about to take. I said, "Why is that well over there?" And he said, "Well, that's the neighbour's." I said, "That's the neighbour's well, but this is your property line, and that well isn't on your property." He said: "I know. It's just been there for a long time. We just left it there." I said: "Well, you're going to have to deal with that now because you're selling the property, and if indeed you want to sell it, you're going to have to get some kind of agreement entered into with the person who put that well on the property. They're relying on that well for their water for their acreage property, and the prospective buyer and their lawyer are going to have some real issues about liability with respect to that well. You may have some real trouble selling this property." Those are the types of inadvertent errors that had to be dealt with and were sort of lumped in with the more malicious and sort of newsworthy stories of adverse possession.

These are the lingering compensation matters that I referred to earlier in my remarks. It's very concerning as to how indeed the two parties – the landowner who wishes to sell the property to somebody and the individual who in this case built that well – will come to terms that are mutually agreeable to compensate either the person for the well or perhaps have the individual give up rights to the well. There are a number of ways things like that can be dealt with. You may have a willing party who's co-operative, or you may have somebody who just wants to drag their feet. It could cost that landowner, who is fighting the adverse possession claim or the compensation claim from that individual who had a historic adverse possession claim on that land, a sale and thousands and thousands of dollars as a result.

This is a lingering concern that I have about the bill and the compensation elements of it, and I hope that the government has its eye on that ball as well. We certainly on this side of the House will be watching very closely as to what transpires with respect to these negotiations. If we are seeing a number of claims and disputes that seem to be going unresolved, with incessant malicious behaviour on the part of some claimants trying to extend their compensation to avoid having to do anything at all, then we would like to see that issue addressed in this Legislature.

I think there may be others, Mr. Speaker, who wish to address their concerns and/or make comments with respect to this bill, so I'll take my seat. I'll look forward to those comments.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise again, after Committee of the Whole from yesterday, to address Bill 3, Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, or what I like to think of as the abolition of adverse possession, which has been something under discussion in this Chamber for a number of years.

I wanted to take an opportunity, actually – there's been a lot of work done on this through the years on both sides of the House, and I wanted to thank everyone who has done so. I think it would be remiss of us not to mention the Alberta Law Reform Institute, Sandra Petersson and Stella Varvis, who have done some great work on this and made many recommendations through the years for the abolition of adverse possession, that took us a little while to get around to in this House. The Property Rights Advocate has done considerable work on it and has made many recommendations as well, and those recommendations, of course, were brought through the Resource Stewardship Committee, who also made numerous recommendations for us to abolish adverse possession. Finally, I'll end with my colleague from Highwood, who chaired the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights, again with a recommendation for us to finally abolish adverse possession. Surprise that we're getting there.

I mentioned the other night that I was brought into the idea and the whole issue of adverse possession through one of my constituents. I said in my previous speech that it is time now, but it's too late for Jim McIndoe, who is my constituent who brought this to my attention in 2016. He lost about $140,000 of his suburban property because of a fence in the wrong place next to a neighbour who, as I said before, maybe did not exercise the best good-neighbour policy. When he said that we should rebuild the fence and put it on the right property line, he was served with a claim of adverse possession on that property, which can happen to any of us, because I bet you that there are not a lot of fences in an urban environment that are actually in exactly the right spot. You pull a fence post out and you put a new fence in, and the surveyor is not called in: maybe a reminder to us to check those real property reports, to possibly occasionally get a land surveyor in if you're not sure where those are. Drop those pins back in that maybe have been buried for 30, 40 years, and make sure that you know where your fenceline is.

Also, watch out – and I think it was mentioned by the hon. member opposite – when you're making improvements. Make sure it's on your land. I think we can solve this problem. If you're going to do improvements, make sure it's on your land. Make sure that you've got the real property report and the surveys to prove it before you do those improvements. Yes, there can be some extenuating and some unusual circumstances, but quite frankly, when I see what happened to my constituent Jim McIndoe in that particular circumstance, I'm willing to take the risk that they can sort that out with the improvements done on those lands in an equitable manner.

But the seizure of somebody's land without compensation has got to stop in this province. It's past time to do that, Mr. Speaker. It is time for us to respect the fact that when somebody pays for that land, it is their land, that we should have the property rights that go along with that, and that they cannot have that legally seized without compensation, which is exactly what has been happening with adverse possession for a number of years in this province. We can go through the law books and find some examples of that and some egregious ones, as could be represented in Moore versus McIndoe, in my case, for my constituent.

I know he's going to be happy to hear it, and I hope we can pass this bill tonight here and get this moving forward. Again, too late for him, too late for many others, but let's make sure that this egregious piece of legislation can no longer harm hard-working, law-abiding, landowning citizens in this province.

I'll just say that this is not inadvertent. Some of these are very, very deliberate moves to take somebody else's land, and it's very sad that that happens. We'd like to think that we're pretty good neighbours in this province, but that is not always the case, and unfortunately when there are legal remedies and ramifications of that, that's a problem.

Lastly, as was mentioned by the minister, former MLA Ken Allred, the former MLA for St. Albert, brought a motion forward in 2011, which actually passed in the Legislature but was not enacted. He had private member's Bill 204 in 2012, that died after second reading due to proroguing. I recognize Pat Stier from Livingstone-Macleod, who brought forward also another Bill 204 in 2017. In 2018 I was able to bring forward another Bill 204, and that was sort of punted down the road and pushed back to more research and more study.

Mr. Speaker, it's time. It's past time for some, unfortunately a little late for others, but it's time for us to pass this bill. I would like to thank members on this side, and hopefully we'll have unanimous support for this bill once and for all in this House to protect the property rights of Albertans. I hope we can get to that right away.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise in third reading of Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. I simply wanted to add my voice to the colleagues across the aisle and here on our side as well. A shout-out to the Member for Edmonton-McClung for his very thoughtful comments. He has a lot of experience with respect to these issues, and I appreciate it very much.

Certainly, I'd also like to share the accolades that many in this House have already given to former MLA Ken Allred. I was actually quite honoured. After I spoke at second reading on this bill last week, Mr. Allred reached out to me and thanked me for my comments, and I had the great opportunity to actually meet Ken Allred in person today at the reception for former and current MLAs. It was a pleasure to meet him, and I want to thank him for his persistence on these issues and for bringing forward his thoughtful submissions to the committee as well.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank the Alberta Law Reform Institute. As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, the former Minister of Justice and Solicitor General under the NDP government had reached out to the Alberta Law Reform Institute for their thoughts and recommendations as to how to implement legislatively changes to remove adverse possession and what the recommendations were on how to do that thoughtfully across pieces of legislation.

Of course, they brought forward a very thoughtful, long – 137 pages, I believe – report as to how to properly, you know, amend legislation in Alberta to really bring us up to speed with where other provinces across Canada have been and ensuring that we have a very clear process for dealing with disputes related to improvements that are made by somebody on land that is not their registered land but, of course, more importantly, to ensure that Albertans can be assured that their rights to their property are undisputed and are not affected by somebody who may have been making use of the land without having the proper right to do so for years at a time.

Removing the limitation period, clarifying the process under section 69 of the Law of Property Act, and, really, just making it very clear, after thoughtful consultation as well with Albertans who have raised this issue for some time, it is a pleasure for us to speak in favour and support the good work that's been done and to thank all those who contributed to making sure that this bill was finally ready.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that I will be supporting Bill 3 in third reading, and I encourage my colleagues to do so as well. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be here with you this evening and an honour to be with all of the members as well. I rise to move second reading of Bill 7, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2).

Just a couple of details for members about Bill 7. It proposes amendments needed as a result of the government reorganization. The good bill amends 97 acts. Ninety-seven, Mr. Speaker.

The amendments fall into three categories. The first category: direct updates to minister or department titles; for example, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General is now updated to Minister of Justice. Second, adding and updating definitions to eliminate the need to refer to specific titles; for example, adding the definition of "Minister" that refers to the minister responsible as per the Government Organization Act. And lastly, and certainly not least, other ad hoc changes directly related to changes in titles and responsibilities; for example, updating wording to eliminate an outdated reference to a minister or department but not substituting an updated title.

We have consulted with the Official Opposition as per custom and therefore recommend that all MLAs in this Chamber swiftly pass second reading of Bill 7.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Assembly is second reading of Bill 7, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: All right. What an absolute honour to rise and speak to Bill 7, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2).

Mr. Schow: Have you read it?

Member Irwin: You know what? Through the chair, I was just asked by the Member for Cardston-Siksika if I had read it. I actually do have it open on my laptop, and I have to say that, yes, this is absolutely a miscellaneous statutes amendment act. That's for sure.

You know, it's hard to follow that commentary on second reading, but what's interesting is that the main reason for Bill 7 is due to the fact that under this new Premier this cabinet is the largest in recent history, with 27 ministers, two Deputy Premiers – wait for it – 11 parliamentary secretaries.

Mr. Nielsen: Parliamentary secretaries for everyone.

Member Irwin: Exactly.

You know what? This is truly a dramatic expansion of cabinet, you know, and because of that, it's not just a change in title, which you see multiple times throughout Bill 7; it comes with pay increases, budgetary adjustments, staffing changes, cars, legislative assignments. To paraphrase a journalist from the Calgary Sun,

Ricky Leong, he said that everyone is a VIP in Smith's government. Unfortunately, there are few that aren't.

Some Hon. Members: Name.

The Speaker: Oh, that is a name.

Member Irwin: Oh, my apologies. Sorry. I was just getting so passionate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would not want to say a name.

The point is that, in all seriousness here, most of this bill, Bill 7, would not be necessary if it weren't for this Premier's bloated cabinet. This government in its reallocation of duties and collective back-patting forgot to assign certain key pieces of legislation to a minister. In fact, we've tried – there were a few times that we were trying to figure out who was responsible for what, and it was awfully, awfully confusing. I'm not sure – I could be wrong – actually, if they're totally certain who's in charge of what, but, again, when you have the largest cabinet in recent history, I can understand that there would be some confusion. Again, not only do they have the largest cabinet in recent history; they failed to do the one key step in assigning all pieces of legislation to a relevant minister. But, you know, a rookie government, a one-time government, I'm sure.

You know what? One of the things that was actually really interesting, because I'm thinking about my colleague for Edmonton-Mill Woods, is the fact that for weeks, which is just one example, there was no minister responsible for the labour code – wow; that's big, right? – or the Occupational Health and Safety Act. [interjections] That's exactly right. Again, you know, that is a bit troubling. It shows a lot about the incompetence of this government, the lack of trust that Albertans have in this government, the same government that we've seen has failed to consult with Albertans multiple times; the sovereignty act, as an example. [interjections] Exactly. I feel like we should all be joining in debate here because we've got a lot of really key points. I'll try to bring them all onto the record here tonight.

But, again, you know, the point of this very thick piece of legislation is, for the most part, just to clean up the mess that this government has made with government organization and to account for the fact that, once again, this is the largest cabinet in history. [interjections] You're right. I mean, along with – what was it again? – 11 parliamentary secretaries . . .

Ms Renaud: No francophone one?

Member Irwin: You're right, to the Member for St. Albert: 11 parliamentary secretaries but not one for francophone Albertans, who, we know, are key stakeholders in this province and should be acknowledged, two Deputy Premiers – I know I mentioned that earlier but thought I'd get it on the record again – and, of course, 27 ministers.

I could go on at length here, but I think I've made my point quite clear. I can repeat my points again if the House would like that, but I've made my point quite clear that with Bill 7, while we will agree to pass it, much of this bill would not be necessary if it weren't for the incompetence and the fiscal irresponsibility of a government that insisted on having the largest cabinet in recent history.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 7?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate. The hon. the Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief in closing debate. Based on the remarks from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, this must be the most controversial miscellaneous statutes amendment act I have ever heard introduced in this Chamber. The reality is that the Premier has done a wonderful job managing this government since she was elected as leader and has chosen a cabinet she feels will take us forward to continue serving Albertans in the best manner possible. [interjections] I'm not sure why the members opposite are heckling, but in any event I will simply close by saying that I reject almost in whole what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood said about this bill. I encourage all members to support it. I suspect, without trying to presuppose the outcome, that they will. I'm not sure how all those comments were necessary, but I appreciate the participation.

With that, I close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Toor moved, seconded by Ms Lovely, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate November 30: Mr. Dach]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity for me to rise and be able to speak, with a new Speech from the Throne. I was inspired to be able to rise, with the passing of Her late Majesty the Queen recently. Look, even before her passing, for years before her passing, folks throughout the Commonwealth had speculated that perhaps with her passing, if it ever did happen, there might be a growing interest or appetite in republicanism in the Commonwealth. Indeed, we have seen those conversations.

As well, we have seen protests in this province that I saw as alarming, with flags saying, "Republic of Alberta." I think that our friends opposite, I hope, wouldn't consider me to be uncharitable by perhaps describing their interest in the monarchy as one of disinterest. Is that unfair of me to say? I'm looking at my . . .

Ms Renaud: Yeah, it is.

Mr. Shandro: It is unfair? Okay.

Well, on one side of the political spectrum we're seeing protests and flags saying, "Republic of Alberta." On the other side of the political spectrum we often see folks on the left side of the political spectrum, I would say. Our friends opposite: they're obviously loyal to His Majesty but perhaps not always having the same type of interest in the monarchy that – well, anyways, Mr. Speaker, I thought it was important for us in this Chamber to have a case for constitutional monarchy to continue in this country. I wanted to be able to stand and to make a point that it is important for a system of government to separate the chief of the executive from the head of state, to separate what Churchill described as "what is permanent from what is temporary."

We're all politicians in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker. There are matters which must necessarily be in dispute between parties and factions of politicians. But in the unwritten aspects of our Constitution, which we inherited from the United Kingdom, the wisdom is in placing the supreme position in the state beyond the reach of private ambition. Again, quoting Churchill, perhaps not quoting him but paraphrasing him, he made the case that a constitutional monarchy is the most practical and effective means through which the democracies in the Commonwealth, including a democracy like ours in Canada, can preserve against dictatorship. And why is that? It's because in a constitutional monarchy like ours – this is going to be a quote from Churchill – "no one can presume to set [themselves] up as a national representative against the hereditary rights of the King."

Mr. Speaker, we dwell in our constitutional monarchy more happily, more safely, more prosperously, and more progressively than those who do so in either an oligarchy or a republic. It's because of that that we need to continue to preserve the constitutional monarchy. It's a tradition that we have in Canada. I hope that with the accession of His Majesty we will continue to see support for the monarchy, continue with this tradition.

With that, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity for me to speak.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Phil, do we need a motion to adjourn on this matter?

Mr. Shandro: You know, Kowalski would never have the table come up to him.

The Speaker: Ain't that the truth. He was twice the Speaker I'll ever be.

[Motion carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 14, 2022

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King, to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture has a visitor today.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a special guest, hon. Laura Ross, Minister of Parks, Culture and Sport and the Minister Responsible for the Status of Women Office for the government of Saskatchewan, who sits in your gallery. I had the privilege of working with the hon. Minister Ross and other ministers across the whole country recently, endorsing the national action plan to end gender-based violence. Earlier today we discussed further actions that Saskatchewan and Alberta can jointly take to advance women's success in our respective provinces. Please extend our warm welcome to our special guest, Minister Ross.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, some of you have expressed some concern around the timing of introduction of visitors or guests. Those are two separate categories inside our Routine. As such, the rules are different.

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, it is my incredible pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two incredible grade 6 classes from Baturyn. There are over 70 guests here joining us today with their teachers and some grown-ups that are here to support them. I please ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the chief government whip has guests.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very excited to introduce East elementary school from Leduc and the classes here today from grades 4 to 6 and their teachers as well. Welcome to the Assembly. Will you all rise, please, and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you my colleagues from the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. We have council chair Dominic Shaw, vice-chair Shino Nakane, and members Earl Thiessen and Katie Suvanto. Please identify yourselves in the gallery and accept the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Are there other guests? The hon. Member for Airdrie-East has risen.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two of my constituents from the great riding of Airdrie-East, Mr. Lucas Daley and Mr. Jason Schuler. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock has a statement to make.

Economic Development in Rural Alberta Plan

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Due to the strong economic policies implemented by Alberta's government, our economy is rapidly evolving and diversifying beyond our core industries of agriculture, energy, and forestry. New industries and opportunities are emerging, and rural Alberta deserves a strong plan for economic development that reflects the needs of the people who live and work there.

Over the past year the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation hosted 23 engagement sessions with over 370 rural stakeholders. Using the feedback we received from these engagements, the minister built the economic development in rural Alberta plan. Several themes were brought up that will guide the plan's strategic actions, including critical infrastructure, red tape reduction, workforce strategies, rural investment attraction, tourism, and business supports. Rural Alberta represents 18 per cent of our population while accounting for 41 per cent of Alberta's private and public investment. The significant impact of rural communities in our province means that getting it right is essential, and that is only possible by recognizing the importance of grassroots inclusion in the policy-making process.

Telecommunication networks are vital to attracting rural investment, and strategic direction 1 in the plan will ensure all of Alberta has broadband service availability by 2026, ending the digital divide and enabling rural businesses to compete in an interconnected global economy. The plan will establish new targets for the Alberta agrifood investment and growth strategy, and the plan also encourages continued collaboration with our partners in the nine regional economic development alliances. Each REDA will receive an investment of $125,000 from the Alberta government in the new year.

Our United Conservative government represents nearly every rural community in Alberta, and we will continue ensuring they have the tools and resources to compete and succeed.

Economic Development

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, just the last hour the Leader of the Official Opposition and soon-to-be Premier of Alberta unveiled our new competitiveness jobs and investment strategy. It's a broad-ranging plan that'll create 47,000 new jobs and attract $20 billion in new investment.

It includes the introduction of a new Alberta's Future tax credit, which will position our great province as a destination of choice for new and emerging sectors, like critical minerals and advanced manufacturing, and strengthen existing sectors, like agriculture, forestry, life sciences, and tourism. We're also introducing a regulatory fast pass, a Nexus-type pass for business that will ensure our upstanding Alberta companies can get their projects approved faster.

We're also supercharging the Alberta petrochemical incentive program, which our government launched and the current government kept because it's working so well. We'll expand to new areas with this program, including eligible feedstock, new end products, and we'll bring back partial upgrading.

We'll also consult broadly with our Indigenous partners on expanding the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation, something we think this government actually got right, but the key is consultation with First Nations, and we take that responsibility seriously.

Oh, and for the record there will absolutely be an Alberta investor tax credit, a digital media tax credit with an NDP government in place. Additionally, we'll introduce an Alberta venture fund, which gives Albertans the opportunity to invest in companies in their own backyard, giving Alberta start-ups and scale-ups a shot in the arm.

Mr. Speaker, these measures are just part of the economic plan we're building at albertasfuture.ca. We're putting rural broadband in every community, expanding affordable child care, supporting postsecondary, and putting a new campus in downtown Calgary. Our postsecondary institutions are major economic drivers that will grow the talent pipeline to help address labour shortages. We're unlocking our potential in hydrogen, geothermal, bitumen beyond combustion, and supercharging Alberta's rural economies. Alberta's NDP opposition is excited for 2023, when we'll implement this plan. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore has the call.

Chestermere-Strathmore Constituency Update

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been an honour to serve you in this House as a minister, a private member, and as an opposition member. I'd like to share some of the many accomplishments in the riding of Chestermere-Strathmore and Rocky View and to thank the partners, colleagues, and friends who have worked so hard to see these projects through.

In March the Wheatland County Food Bank was awarded $300,000, and in May the Carseland fire hall celebrated their grand opening. Changes were made to improve local EMS services, adding paramedic staff and expanding 24-hour service in Chestermere and adding core-flex shifts in Wheatland county to avoid burnout; and multiple playground grants plus stabilization grants during COVID-19 for nonprofits and community organizations. We modernized Indus school, originally built in 1952. Carseland expanded their school and developed Speargrass park. Chestermere recreation fixed their roof, and Springbank recreation upgraded their facility. Bears paw Lions Club enhanced their facility and a new emergency services building, school, and baseball diamonds all in the hamlet of Langdon.

We attracted new businesses, creating thousands of jobs, with state-of-the-art facilities such as Phyto Organix in Strathmore and Canadian Gypsum and De Havilland in Wheatland county. We expanded broadband, and the Canada Infrastructure Bank made a historical $850 million joint investment with us by increasing irrigation lands to southern Alberta by more than 200,000 acres. This is small by comparison to the thousands of hours spent by folks building our communities, a direct result of the tenacious advocacy and passion in the ridings that I represented.

It has truly been the greatest honour of my life to represent you and work on behalf of the people of Alberta. A huge thank you to our constituency staff, who are on the front lines, and thank you to all of the ministers and the ministries and colleagues of the past eight years. Jacinda Ardern, the Prime Minister of New Zealand, said: I really rebel against the idea that politics has to be a place full of ego where we are constantly focused on scoring points against each other. Yes, we need a robust democracy, but you can be strong and you can be kind.

Thank you to all of you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is next.

1:40 Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville Constituency Update

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Things are really looking up in my constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville. Over the past couple of years my constituency has seen billions of dollars' worth of investment, creating good-paying jobs and sustaining our communities. We have some of Alberta's largest and highest profile investments over the past few years, investments like Dow Chemical's $10 billion net-zero polyethylene and ethylene derivatives facility. Dow also plans a $298 million expansion to its existing ethylene plant.

My constituency is home to projects like Suncor and ATCO's joint venture to build a hydrogen production facility. There is also Shell Canada's Quest carbon capture and storage facility, which has already captured and stored 6 million tonnes of carbon dioxide, as well as the Enel Green Power Grizzly Bear Creek wind farm, which will be able to power over 73,000 households, and the ATCO Future Fuel renewable natural gas facility that will produce gas to heat the county of Two Hills. And, of course, Air Products' $1.6 billion blue hydrogen complex will make Alberta a world leader in hydrogen. Inca is investing $72 million in a hemp processing facility in Vegreville, making good use of a $400,000 grant from the government of Alberta. We also partnered to invest in Vegreville's agrifood industrial park project. I'm pleased that Rocky Mountain Hemp has also made my constituency their home.

Alberta's economy is on a roll. We lead the country in job creation, and our economy is rapidly diversifying into new and emerging sectors. We also continue to lead the world in Alberta's traditional sectors of energy and agriculture. This year we have led the country in Q2 interprovincial migration. I know that my constituents are recognizing the low-tax, pro-growth policies of our government. They can see clearly the record investment in Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and we have just begun.

Chinese Community

Ms Pancholi: Alberta is fortunate to have a large and vibrant Chinese community, especially in my riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. Chinese immigrants came to Canada over a century ago to help build the Canadian Pacific railway, which was critical to the development of western Canada. However, these Chinese immigrants were exploited. They were not paid fairly, and they suffered under terrible working conditions. These workers and their families deserve our immense gratitude and our apologies for their treatment.

Today Chinese Albertans are many things, including engineers, physicians, entrepreneurs, front-line health care workers, service industry workers, and so much more. Chinese Canadians have helped build the Alberta we know today and play a key role in shaping Alberta's social, economic, and cultural landscape.

In my conversations with members of the Chinese community they shared with me their vision for a strong, prosperous, and inclusive Alberta. They're worried about the fragile state of our health care system. Students are feeling burdened with increasing tuition costs all while worrying about cuts to seniors' benefits for their grandparents.

Anti-Asian hate, unfortunately, has been on the rise since the pandemic. Surveys indicate that we each have Chinese neighbours, friends, and colleagues who do not feel safe and like they belong.

As leaders this is a problem that we must address. It's why the Alberta NDP's antiracism proposal on albertasfuture.ca includes strengthening hate crime legislation, developing an antiracism curriculum that teaches about Chinese Albertans, collecting race-based data, and reducing barriers to access support programs.

Pandemic-related increases in business closures, community disorder, and anti-Asian racism have also harmed the historic communities of Chinatown in Edmonton and Calgary. Government must provide funding and support for Chinatown revitalization.

Chinese Albertans want to feel safe. They care about their families, they care about quality health care, they worry about having a strong education and postsecondary system, and, of course, they want a stable economy. I'm looking forward to our continued engagement with Chinese Albertans as we work together to build a better future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With my history of working in residential construction, it is perhaps no surprise that I consider housing as a vital pillar of the Alberta advantage. Housing ranks as the second-largest expense off the paycheques of most Albertans, with 30 per cent of the income being a benchmark for affordability.

We speak often of the importance of affordable housing and the protection of the most vulnerable, and I am grateful for the recent allocation of $55 million by our government in support of this sector. However, we must put a renewed focus on housing affordability writ large with particular attention to workforce housing for low- to middle-income households, who, quite frankly, rarely get the hand up that they need to achieve housing stability at various stages of their lives. The challenges we face in a growing economy range from ensuring a steady, predictable, and balanced land supply to the ever-escalating burden on renters and buyers of a multitude of municipal and other jurisdictional fees, taxes, and levies which always – and I repeat: always – get passed on to the tenant or owner.

Mr. Speaker, through a deeper understanding of the housing continuum it is now time for us to focus not only on housing affordability but choice and suitability and meeting the needs of Albertans but also to consider we can move towards empowering all Albertans to aspire to a dream home at each stage of life, whether that be the comfort of a safe, warm, and welcoming roof over their heads, their first studio or one-bedroom apartment, urban or suburban condo or townhome, or that single-family home with a swing set in the backyard, not to mention the perfect downsizer for the retiring Albertan looking to free up equity to live a better active ager life.

The choices of housing tenure range from social or subsidized rental, near or near market rental, rent to own or shared equity through to attainable, assisted, or market ownership or even the demographic shift from many retirees moving back through the continuum. It is now time for a deliberate drive towards more innovative housing models with nimble and comprehensive plans to protect our people, our economy, and to nurture the dreams and ambitions of Albertans for generations to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

NDP Government Record

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The UCP have been cleaning up the mess the NDP made during their time in government. I'm not sure the NDP leader even likes Albertans as she has called us: embarrassing cousins. Those her party disagrees with, they call sewer rats. Her solution to high energy costs, which she herself caused with the carbon tax, is to, quote, take the bus. I'm sure that goes over big where no bus service exists. The NDP showed a lack of support for parental choice in education and want extremist groups like Extinction Rebellion in the classroom. Their disastrous health policies drove up wait times and created backlogs for surgeries, putting our system in a constant state of disarray even before a pandemic.

Rather than supporting treatment for people afflicted with addiction, they choose supervised injection sites as the main course of action. They even defended the misuse of funds at one location. Under the NDP these sites were clustered together in areas where a particular group of people had to deal with all of the crime and disorder, unfairly.

The NDP leader constantly sided with the Trudeau government with his hostility towards Alberta. She helped Trudeau cancel the Northern Gateway and Energy East pipelines and did not support the Keystone XL. Now they expect Albertans to believe they are for the economy after driving out 180,000 jobs and over $100 billion in investment. A former NDP minister once told Albertans to go to B.C. and find work.

Mr. Speaker, our UCP government has attracted the largest investments Alberta has ever seen. We're putting more money into both health care and education than at any other time in Alberta history. Our recovery program for addiction is becoming famous for its success in helping those suffering from addiction.

We are seeing massive levels of economic diversification, including in financial services, high tech, film and television, hydrogen, agriculture, irrigation, and more. The contrast is stark, Mr. Speaker. In May Albertans can choose to go back to the dark days of the NDP or choose to support our UCP government building a better economy, health care, and quality of life.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Bill 206, Insurance (Private Essential Vehicle Premium) Amendment Act, 2022. The bill will be sponsored by yours truly, the MLA for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has question 1.

Health Care System

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans need the right health care in the right place at the right time, but today Albertans are waiting longer than ever. They're waiting in overwhelmed emergency rooms, sitting next to their sick children. They're waiting for an ambulance to arrive, unsure if one is even on the way. They're waiting for a family doctor to move back to Alberta because they already watched them move away once.

Bill 201 would have set standards in health care. It would have included standards for shorter wait times. Instead of passing it, why did the Premier choose to leave Albertans waiting yet again?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the members opposite are forgetting that there are multiple parts of their bill, and they put one part of their bill that would have shut down publicly funded chartered surgical centres, which are now performing 20 per cent of all publicly funded surgeries in our province. If we had voted to endorse that, we actually would have reduced the capacity for our ability to cut surgical wait times rather than increased it. I have no problem supporting measures on EMS, on surgical wait times, and on operating rooms, and we're going to continue to work on that.

Ms Hoffman: Under this Premier sick children are waiting for health care in a trailer outside of their hospital. Mr. Speaker, the health care system is in chaos, and front-line health care workers are exhausted. Since the UCP formed government, the number of health care workers quitting has gone up. Workers are now more than twice as likely to quit within their first year. More staff are working overtime. More staff are getting sick, and staff vacancies are through the roof. The representatives of more than 120,000 front-line health care workers asked for a meeting with the Minister of Health months ago to address this crisis. To the Premier: since your minister refuses to meet, will you?

Ms Smith: Yes, I'd be happy to. In fact, before we announced that Dr. John Cowell was taking over as the official administrator, we made sure to have one-on-one calls with the head of the HSAA, with the head of AUPE, and with the nurses' union so that they understood that as we're making decisions, we would need their help and support in making sure that we got it right and that if there were any issues along the way, we could troubleshoot them so that we could make course corrections as we go along. That relationship is working very well. We're going to continue to work together to make sure that we're addressing the front-line issues, and I have asked as well, as part of our measures, to make sure that we're measuring measures of workplace satisfaction.

Ms Hoffman: Calling Heather Smith to tell her you're firing the board is not working with her in a meeting, like she's requested, to address the health care worker crisis, Premier.

The Premier claims that the front-line staff crisis is manufactured and that health care staffing is their creation, the issue that they're facing. But the truth is much more simple, Mr. Speaker. The UCP's bad decisions and their repeated attacks on health care workers have caused chaos. Alberta needs more health care workers, including nurses, at the front lines, and that includes Alberta trainers. To the Premier: instead of jacking up tuition on University of Calgary nursing students 8 per cent this year and 10 per cent last year, will you reverse it?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AHS had made a decision to bar unvaccinated workers from being able to work in the system, which was a decision we reversed – which is a decision we reversed. When I mentioned that that was creating unnecessary shortages, that's what I was referring to. I'm pleased to see that everybody has been invited back in to the system. That allows for us to increase capacity on the front line. That's the important part, that we've got to create a welcoming environment for workers from around the country and around the world to come to this province, and that's what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for the second set of questions.

Ms Hoffman: And the Premier is hiking up tuition for nursing students at the University of Calgary.

Affordability Plan

Ms Hoffman: Speaking of affordability, let's talk about the UCP's plan for inflation. The package put forward by the UCP government deliberately excludes more than 2 million Albertans. That's 2 million people who are stressed, who could use some relief, but they'll not be getting a single bit of help from the UCP. Mr. Speaker, those same nursing students who are seeing their tuition go up, unless they have children, won't get a dime from the UCP. Why isn't the UCP giving a penny to postsecondary students in need?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as we have seen issues identified where we have additional pressure points like postsecondary, like student loan costs, like tuition, I've asked our Affordability and Utilities minister to take a closer look at it. We have only come forward with an initial package on affordability, and we intend to develop more initiatives, so we will certainly have a look at that one. But this is just the beginning. We also have support for all Albertans through gasoline and diesel tax rebates, through electricity rebates, and through price protection on natural gas. That's going to help everybody.

Ms Hoffman: Among those 2 million, how about Rick, Mr. Speaker? Rick is in his forties. He doesn't have kids. He doesn't drive. He works hard just to pay his rent, buy a bus pass, and put groceries on the table. He's feeling the impact of a 40-year-high inflation hike, just like everyone else. To the Premier: why isn't Rick getting a dime in Bill 2? Why did the UCP leave half of Albertans empty handed?

Ms Smith: You know, if the members opposite were so concerned about the cost of everything going up, I don't know why they didn't call out their federal leader, Jagmeet Singh, when he signed on to a 300 per cent increase in the carbon tax, which increases the cost of everything; in particular, groceries, the price that we're paying at the pump. If you increase the cost of the fuel tax, it's going to be built into everything that we're paying for. I would think that they would have more credibility on this issue if they advocated at the federal level, as we have, for suspension of that carbon tax rather than asking for it to be increased threefold. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, it'd be one thing if these cheques were actually arriving with some urgency, but instead the UCP government is making families jump through hoops to apply. This means hundreds of thousands of Albertans logging on to a government website, hoping it doesn't crash, and in the past that hasn't worked out so well. Why do corporations get a no-jobs corporate handout of $4.7 billion, no strings attached, while families have to deal with red tape just to maybe, hopefully, a few months before the election, get a little bit of relief?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think we saw from the federal program for CERB that the portal access actually works very well, and we have the expertise that we're developing at the provincial level to use our provincial portals for the same thing. I'm looking forward to working with the Minister of Technology and Innovation and watching what he develops with the Minister of Affordability and Utilities. That's the approach we're going to take, and as we start developing this expertise, we'll be able to apply it to more things. This is the important part of us being able to do these programs, being able to have the flexibility to provide the support when it's needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has a question.

South Edmonton Hospital Construction Project

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, in 2017 the NDP government responded to the needs of Edmontonians by announcing the creation of a new south Edmonton hospital to meet the needs of a growing city. It's also clear that, with our health care under so much stress, this hospital would be critical. However, despite the clear need, the UCP government has delayed this project time and time again. Even yesterday the Infrastructure minister couldn't answer simple questions about the hospital, questions like: when will the project start? How long will it take? And what will it cost? Since the Infrastructure minister doesn't know, maybe the Premier can answer. What year will the south Edmonton hospital open?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure and the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to answer this question. Of course, the NDP, as is their wont – and now it's a huge spending with no plan. We have gone back to do a functional development so we know what we're building. We have to know what we want to solve. We have to know what we want to treat before we can build that. Unlike the NDP, we're doing the work first to create a functional plan so we know what to build. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Member Loyola: Every day in this House the Premier and the Health minister talk about how focused they are on building capacity in health care, capacity that a south Edmonton hospital would provide. Our government would have opened it by 2026. The Kenney government delayed it to 2030. And now this government has taken the start date off the website, leaving many Albertans worried that this project is about to be cancelled. Can the Premier confirm, with a yes or a no, whether the south Edmonton hospital is still going to be built, and on what date will construction formally start?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2022-2025 capital plan is providing $370 million over three years for this project. We continue to build a plan so we know what service we are providing. Without that plan we can build a huge building, but to serve what? We need a plan first. Once we have that, we'll move ahead. We will start the building. We are committing to all Albertans and all Edmontonians to do this right by planning first. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Member Loyola: In addition to the long delays the UCP have subjected to this project, they also plan to return to the failed model of P3s to build it. We know that the P3 model doesn't make sense. In fact, that was a direct quote from former Conservative Infrastructure minister Wayne Drysdale when he shut down the approach for building schools in 2014 since it increased costs and caused huge delays. Can the Premier tell us why her government continues to use this broken model to build schools and hospitals? Is she really going to make the same mistakes of the past and harm the health care and education provided to Albertans in the process?

Mr. Neudorf: In fact, I would ask the member opposite to do his homework. The last bundle of schools I actually took apart, I took them out of a P3. We're going to a direct design/bid/build process.

We will however continue to use P3s, public-private partnerships, where they're warranted, where they make business sense, where they save Albertans money, and where they will serve the needs of that project on a case-by-case basis best. Again, we are doing the work behind the scenes that the former government failed to do. They didn't do their homework. They didn't build a plan. They don't understand contracts. We're doing all that work for Albertans to save them money. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is next.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Mr. Feehan: Yesterday in question period, while defending her complete failure to consult with Indigenous people regarding the sovereignty act, the Premier ignorantly compared First Nations' struggles against oppression and their fight for their rights to her government's bloated feud with Ottawa: "They have fought a battle over the last number of years to get sovereignty respected and to extract themselves from the paternalistic Indian Act. We get treated the exact same way by Ottawa." Does the Premier understand the harm her comments create when she minimizes the abuse of First Nations that they have faced throughout Canada's history and that they're still fighting now?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, that was certainly not the intention of my comments, and if it was taken that way, I absolutely apologize for that . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: My intention was to demonstrate that the process that our First Nations have gone through to develop sovereignty over their own affairs and extract themselves from the Indian Act is the process that we are following in going through and asserting our rights under the Constitution. I take inspiration from what the First Nations have done, and I'm looking forward to continue engaging and consulting with them.

Mr. Feehan: Indigenous people within Alberta and across the province have faced genocide through abuse in residential schools, the pass system, the '60s scoop, and countless community members who are murdered and missing. Indigenous people are still tirelessly fighting so that their culture, language, and existence remain. To compare her fights with Ottawa over issues like fertilizer policy is a complete failure of understanding of the atrocities Indigenous people have suffered. A simple question: will the Premier apologize for this comment?

Ms Smith: As I said, if my comments were misconstrued, I absolutely apologize for it. My intention was to demonstrate that we have a common problem with Ottawa. Ottawa, I think, unfortunately, treats First Nations with disrespect, and they also treat provinces with disrespect. What we need to do is to go back to the original intention of the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and make sure that Ottawa is respecting both First Nations sovereignty rights as well as our rights under the Constitution.

Mr. Feehan: Just hours ago Treaty 6 chiefs stated:

It was clear from our discussions that Premier Smith does not understand Treaty or our inherent rights nor does she respect them . . . The Premier will not dictate how we will be consulted – we point her once again to the duty to consult to learn more about how to engage and work with us appropriately.

To the Premier. The sovereignty act is another bill forced on First Nations without consultation that is attacking their sovereignty and their inherent and treaty rights. What will it take for her to listen, apologize, and withdraw Bill 1?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we won't be withdrawing Bill 1. I am speaking regularly with the chiefs to point them to section 2(c) of the act that we've put forward, that expressly states that nothing in the act is going to impact their treaty or Aboriginal rights. That is what section 35 is all about. I respect the Charter. I respect the Constitution. I respect that we have a nation-to-nation relationship with First Nations, and I'm looking forward to identifying those areas that we can work with in partnership. Every time I speak with a new nation, I identify areas that we can work with together. I'm looking forward to doing that more. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Economic Development in Rural Alberta Plan

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Record levels of interprovincial migration, a balanced budget, skyrocketing levels of venture capital investment: it's all great news for Alberta. It means our province is a magnet for ambitious Canadians. It has an optimistic future and more minds and money to drive innovation. Every Albertan and member of our Legislature should take pride in the last few years of economic reinvigoration. However, some regions of our province have yet to reach their full economic potential. To the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation: how is Alberta's government ensuring our province's economic prosperity benefits rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I was happy and pleased today to be joined by the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development, representation from one of Alberta's regional economic development alliances, and the presidents of both RMA and Alberta Municipalities to announce a new five-year economic development in rural Alberta plan. The plan provides a co-ordinated and strategic approach to support economic growth and create jobs in rural Alberta. The plan outlines clear priorities to achieve maximum benefit for rural communities as Alberta's economy grows. I think this is important to everyone in this House, because when rural Alberta thrives, all of Alberta thrives.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that centralized planning is the worst approach to governance and fails the needs of rural businesses, Indigenous communities, and small towns and given that the new two solitudes in Canada is the rural-urban divide, which means that city bureaucrats are necessarily urban biased and unconscious of those outside of their immediate circle, and given the importance of including the input of people impacted by government policies, to the same minister: how were rural businesses and communities included in the drafting of the economic development in rural Alberta plan?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it was very important to us to make sure that this consultation was very thorough. We all saw what's happened when you don't consult rural Alberta, like in the Bill 6 circumstance. I'd say that over the last 18 months we had 23 virtual engagement sessions with over 370 rural Alberta businesses and communities, collected over 3,500 individual comments and thoughts, had an online survey with over a thousand responses. This included ag producers, municipalities, economic development agencies, the Indigenous community, postsecs, not-for-profits. We tried to make it as thorough as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for that good work. Given the extensive level of consultation that went into ensuring that the economic development in rural Alberta plan addresses the concerns of small rural businesses and not urban bureaucrats and given that Alberta's government includes a caucus, cabinet, and Premier with deep personal understandings of life in rural communities and given that Alberta's low taxes, budget surpluses, and educated workforce mean that our province is once again open for business, again to the minister: what initiatives does the economic development in rural Alberta plan support to drive investment and diversification in rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of agriculture.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The plan supports these ongoing initiatives, these important initiatives: the investment and growth fund's rural stream, Alberta's broadband strategy, Travel Alberta's rural tourism initiatives, the forest jobs action plan, the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation, just to name a few. Also, to make it clear, there are five strategic directions: economic development enabling infrastructure, rural business supports and entrepreneurship, skills development, promotion and marketing of rural tourism, and rural economic development capacity building.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-City Centre is next.

Edmonton Downtown Revitalization

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton's downtown needs help as businesses and communities struggle to recover from the impacts of COVID-19, which saw thousands of workers leave their offices here while the number of our friends and neighbours living houseless doubled and social disorder increased. Business and community leaders have stepped up to advocate. The city of Edmonton has been taking action, but for too long they've lacked provincial support. To begin in March of this year, the government committed $5 million to help with downtown revitalization, but 10 months later, despite a $13 billion surplus, it is yet to be paid. To the Minister of Finance: when will you release the $5 million you promised?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we're working with the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, we're working with all Alberta municipalities on revitalizing our economies, both locally and right across the province. The best thing we can do as a government is ensure that we have the most competitive business environment possible, that will attract investment, create opportunities. Our plan is working.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that business and community leaders in our downtown have spent years struggling to get the attention of this government – but that's been a challenge as they've been mired in their own internal drama and multiple cabinet shuffles, leaving conversations and consultations on hold or forced to restart – and given, indeed, that this government has yet to even release the report from the Edmonton Metro Region Economic Recovery Working Group and given that the UCP has now simply struck yet another task force, one with no representation from our businesses or communities or any consultation with council, why doesn't this government simply step up and act now on recommendations already out from their own working group, city council, the Downtown Recovery Coalition, so many others?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economy is on fire. We created almost 25 per cent of the jobs for the entire country over the last year. But let's talk about downtowns. Let's talk about plans. This is an NDP plan. Like all their plans, it's a plan to ask other people to come forward with a plan. That's not a plan. We have a plan to create jobs and to create wealth for Albertans, and that plan is working.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that this government continues to rail against Ottawa, complaining of heavy-handed paternalism, a lack of consultation, a failure to understand the unique culture of their province but given that their new task force doesn't include anyone who lives or operates a business in our downtown or anyone with lived experience – instead, we have a collection of newly minted Calgary ministers, two suburban councillors who don't actually represent council, and a handful of bureaucrats – and given that the Municipal Affairs minister claimed she wants to work with all stakeholders on this, will this government recognize its own hypocrisy and add someone who actually lives in and loves this community?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We have brought together key cabinet ministers, emergency responders, first responders, city officials, Indigenous leaders, and health system experts to quickly implement over $63 million worth of initiatives in Edmonton. Our task force does include two Edmonton city councillors. We have also invited . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.
The hon. the minister has the call.

Mr. Milliken: We have also invited the city manager as well as the Edmonton fire chief, and we hope that they will be allowed to come. I would ask that Mayor Sohi and the rest of the individuals on that side of the House stop playing politics and get to work with the rest of us. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mental Health and Addiction Services

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, a recent Canadian Mental Health Association report, from October, found that Albertans, more than those in any other province, are feeling stressed, angry, lonely, and depressed. We know that the pandemic has had a massive impact on the health of Albertans, which is why our caucus has proposed giving Albertans five free counselling sessions to ensure that they're able to better care for their mental health. Why hasn't the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction supported our simple policy, that could help so many?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this side of the House we have been actively working with regard to the general mental health of individuals in Alberta. Our government was elected to increase access for Albertans and ensure that every Albertan has the opportunity to pursue recovery from their mental health challenges. That's why we've invested over $58 million for mental health and addiction in response to the pandemic, including $25 million for community-based organizations. This is on top of the more than a billion dollars that we spend every year on mental health and addiction care and services. We are committed to supporting Albertans in their active recovery and moving forward with treatment.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that despite the claims of the UCP that they are supporting recovery, they continue to put up barriers to people struggling with addictions, given that this government made it impossible for those seeking pharmaceutical alternatives to toxic street drugs to access these from their primary care providers and instead forces them to go to AHS facilities, which for many is time-consuming or even impossible for those living in rural areas, and given that this could force people back to the streets and result in more overdoses, why won't the minister reverse this decision and ensure that there are no barriers to those seeking to overcome their addictions?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The evidence is clear. When high-risk opioid narcotics are widely available, many are traded or illegally sold, and addiction and overdose rates increase. That's why we have taken steps to protect Albertans and their communities from high-risk opioid narcotics while still providing care to those who need it. We will continue to support Albertans in their pursuit of recovery. When it comes to reducing barriers, it's us who got rid of user fees. Under them, even if they were accessing publicly funded recovery services, often individuals had to pay $40 a day, something addicts likely will not have. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the recovery system only works if vulnerable Albertans awaiting treatment services don't die while waiting and given that while this government brags about the treatment beds they've created, I hear from front-line workers that they are unable to access beds to support their clients, why is the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction putting up barriers for those seeking treatment? How many lives will these decisions negatively impact? How many lives will be lost?

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we are proud of the work that we are doing on this file. We have gone from looking to increase funding for spaces for 4,000 – we actually did 8,000, so it's 19,000 now to 27,000. In fact, it was the NDP who left beds unfunded. What happened from that? By leaving treatment beds unfunded, the NDP forced a backup into detox, into shelters, thereby onto the streets and into tents. Essentially, the policies of the NDP with regard to this file leave communities in crisis. We've seen it in L.A., we see it in the downtown east side of Vancouver, we've seen it across the west coast. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Calgary Ring Road Completion

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The southwest Calgary ring road project is a huge win for Calgary and Alberta. The truth is that we can no longer run our north-south trade route through the middle of our city. It has benefits for those in my constituency, who no longer are limited to one way in or out of our neighbourhoods. Today a trip to West Hills takes seven minutes compared to the previous 25 minutes. We're now looking forward to the west leg being completed, which will allow us to get to WinSport in 15 minutes. To the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors: when can we see the entirety of the southwest Calgary ring road, including the west leg, open for traffic?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The construction of the final three phases of the west Calgary ring road will be completed in 2024. That's totalling five new kilometres of road, five kilometres of upgrade to the Trans-Canada highway, and six new interchanges. But under NDP social procurement policies that give control to big union bosses, provincial construction projects like the west Calgary ring road would have seen huge delays and cost overruns, but the NDP already did a pilot in Alberta, so they know this. It failed. But Gil McGowan must be pretty persistent when he's not accosting accredited members of the legislative press gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that traffic on the ring road is growing every day as we see the project near the finish line and given that more traffic often means more noise from the roadway and given that my constituency borders the ever-growing traffic on the southwest Calgary ring road, what is the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors doing to ensure that the noise from the ring road does not spill over into the communities that I represent?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has been a champion for neighbourhoods in her constituency like Cedarbrae and Woodbine, but we are planning to build a sound wall in Budget 2023. Hopefully, the NDP will support it, but I wouldn't be too optimistic about the NDP voting in favour of the budget, especially when it supports Calgary, because everybody knows that the NDP cares more about their big union bosses and Gil McGowan than Alberta families and Alberta workers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that noise attenuation would be a significant relief for the communities that I represent and given that my constituents and I are advocating for the noise from the southwest ring road to be addressed before it further impacts our quality of life and given that this has been an issue for quite some time now, to the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors: when can we expect to see shovels in the ground and the overdue noise attenuation built?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, hopefully, we'll see shovels in the ground this spring in Calgary-Glenmore to mitigate this traffic noise.

But there's been a lot of noise from what the NDP just did in B.C. The NDP kicked out Indigenous workers who were building the Cowichan district hospital just because they didn't hold the right NDP-approved union membership. NDP union wars are shameful. They do not belong in Alberta, and I wonder if the NDP MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford mentions to chiefs in Alberta how the NDP puts union politics over Indigenous rights.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Municipal Property Taxes in Mountain Communities

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The town of Banff is looking at a potential 10.2 per cent increase in taxes. The town of Canmore is looking at a 12.3 per cent jump. These increases can be tracked back to the actions and decisions of this UCP government and the Finance minister. Canmore Mayor Sean Krausert stated publicly, and I quote: Canmore, like all municipalities, has suffered from provincial downloading in one form or another. End quote. What will it take the Finance minister to stop hammering Alberta mountain communities with higher costs and higher taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we're working with all municipalities to ensure that Alberta is not only prosperous today but prosperous tomorrow. We inherited a fiscal train wreck from the members opposite: spending completely out of control, $10 billion higher than comparator provinces on a per capita basis. We brought responsible fiscal management, at the same time positioned Alberta's economy for competitiveness, investment attraction, and growth. We're leading the nation in investment attraction.

Ms Sweet: Given the fact that passing the expectation on to municipalities and saying that they're overspending when their budgets have been cut by the provincial government is just another example of this minister bucking all of his actions and expecting Albertans to just accept it and given that Banff and Canmore are discussing adding a specific line about the cost of provincial downloading on to their provincial tax bills and given that on top of piling on taxes to residents, the UCP has also repeatedly moved to silence the voices of local leaders and strip away their powers, is the minister trying to suffocate municipalities in order to cover up their hiking costs on every Albertan?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, that's a ridiculous question. We're making key strategic infrastructure investments right across the province. During the difficult days of COVID and the energy price crash we increased our capital spending envelope to municipalities so they could build critical infrastructure and, more importantly, put tens of thousands of Albertans to work. We're bringing responsible fiscal management, management that ensures sustainable programming – sustainable programming – for Albertans in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the councillor for Canmore said what we're all thinking – the province has a $15 billion surplus, yet they're forced to increase their taxes – and given that Albertans are facing an affordability crisis not seen in a lifetime and given that our mountain communities already face additional costs that aren't funded due to an influx of tourists using municipal infrastructure, can the minister explain to the UCP MLA for Banff-Kananaskis why this government clearly doesn't care about her constituents?

Mr. Toews: Again, Mr. Speaker, that's a ridiculous question. It's due to our responsible fiscal management that Alberta was able to deliver the largest affordability package of any province in the country, $2.8 billion over three years. We made key investments in the Nordic ski area in the Banff-Kananaskis region. We will continue to bring responsible fiscal management so we can build key infrastructure for Albertans in the future.

Nonprofit Organization Funding

Ms Goehring: While no industry emerged unscathed, nonprofits were particularly underresourced throughout the pandemic. Now, as the sector begins to recover, nonprofits continue to struggle. Nonprofits fill critical needs, employ nearly 300,000 Albertans, contribute $5.5 billion to the economy and another $5 billion in volunteer labour. Analysis by the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations shows instability. Many Alberta nonprofits are in crisis. They are calling for an urgent, one-time injection of $30 million, only .2 per cent of the government surplus, in immediate aid. Will the minister rise in this House and commit to the more than reasonable request?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, thank you to that member for the question and her concern for the not-for-profit sector. I do share that concern, and it's why I was so happy to see our Premier put that into my mandate letter, to make sure that we're looking at addressing wage challenges for our social sector, make sure that we are helping our social sector to be able to get through this. We rely on our not-for-profits, especially during hard times. I will continue to work with our not-for-profit leaders, with my colleague the Minister of Culture to make sure that we're supporting not-for-profits and working with them.

Ms Goehring: Given that many organizations are facing higher demand, 74 per cent reporting an increase in need and lack of supports for programs with complex needs, and given that 41 per cent identified significant reduction of capacity to provide services and given that the current affordability crisis has major impacts for this sector, with 88 per cent citing inflation as a massive concern, forcing downsizing and layoffs, while funding agreements are not keeping pace with population growth and inflation, with a $13 billion surplus and not-for-profits crying out for help before they cease to exist altogether, is providing some emergency funding really too much to ask?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the hon. member continuing to raise this question. I echo with my colleague the minister of housing and social services: we are on top of this, not only his ministry but mine. With the Ministry of Culture last year we increased $20 million for the community facility enhancement program. We're on top of this, helping Albertans recover.

Ms Goehring: Unfortunately, it seems that this government doesn't actually listen to the experts in this sector, who serve important roles in their very own backyards. Given that government private member's Bill 202 is only beneficial to charitable organizations and given that the majority of nonprofits do not have charitable status to accept donations and issue tax receipts and given that this is a poor measure to compensate for grant funding not keeping up with inflation, will the minister take the experts seriously, listen to their concerns, and move forward with their incredibly reasonable asks?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for her question, her advocacy. I'm actually glad that she brought up the hon. Member for Peace River's bill, Bill 202, because I know that that will have a significant impact for not-for-profits. It'll give our community, it'll give Albertans a meaningful way to be able to engage in the solutions. At the end of the day, that's a big part of what we need here. We need to make sure that all Albertans are involved with it, so I thank that hon. member for bringing that forward. We are taking real action, though, and one of the most recent things we've done is that we actually put $20 million into food banks to help address some of these issues.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Provincial Debt and Fiscal Policies

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be part of this government that has held the line on spending, in line with other provinces. This has allowed our government to fully benefit from the recent surge in energy prices, which has given us the largest surplus in Alberta's history, a projected $12.3 billion for the 2022-23 fiscal year. To the Minister of Finance: how does our spending record compare to the NDP on sustainable recovery spending increases?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that important question. I've mentioned more than once in this House that our government inherited a fiscal train wreck from the NDP. We were spending over $10 billion more than comparator provinces on a per capita basis. I'm pleased to say that we've brought our spending under control. We're now comparable on a per capita basis with other provinces. More than that, our revenues are going up because of higher energy prices and higher tax revenues due to a booming economy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the answer from the minister. Given the fiscal restraint that has allowed government to fully benefit from the recent boom in energy prices and to attain the largest surplus in the province's history, the government has been able to use the surplus to make the largest debt repayment in Alberta history, a startling $13.4 billion. Again to the minister: how much of the annual interest payments has this debt repayment allowed Alberta to save by not having to raise tax and pass on additional debt to our children?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the question. Our government continues to build a prosperous economic future for all Albertans, and paying down debt is a key priority. We are paying down $13.4 billion in debt this year, debt that is maturing this year. If we had to go to capital markets today, with increased cost of capital, increased interest rates we would be paying about $600 million more per year in debt-service costs if we had not paid off the $13.4 billion. Fiscal responsibility matters.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: That's impressive. Mr. Speaker, thank you. Thank you again to the minister. Given that the fiscal restraint shown by this UCP government over the lack of restraint of the previous NDP government is crystal clear with their figures, can the Minister of Finance share with this House how important this saving is for the Alberta government to be able to provide significant financial relief to Albertans during this inflationary crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we are in an inflationary time, and that's putting pressure on all Alberta households. Responsible fiscal management and a growing economy have allowed, again, this government to respond to this crisis, this challenge with the most programming of any province across the country: $2.8 billion of relief both in tax reductions and direct support. Again, we will continue to bring responsible fiscal management to the province so that governments in the future can respond appropriately to challenges.

2:30 Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Yesterday the Member for Calgary-Buffalo and I sent a letter to the presidents of postsecondary institutions inviting proposals for a new downtown Calgary campus. Calgary's downtown vacancy rate is still at about 30 per cent. Mr. Speaker, downtown campuses are awesome. They spur, on the average, the creation of more start-ups, more licensing deals, more inventions, and more investment in the downtown. This is a plan that would support downtown Calgary, postsecondary institutions, and Calgary in general. Will the Advanced Education minister rise and endorse this vital project that we're proposing?

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to chat with the member and get a better understanding. You know, I watched the press conference, and I left scratching my head. I didn't hear details about a budget. I didn't hear any details about timelines. I think my colleague mentioned it earlier: it seemed as though it was a plan to develop a plan. I'm not sure I can stand and get behind it without any real details, but I'd love to find out more as to what they have in store, because from the press conference it was clear that this was just scribbled together on the back of a cocktail napkin on their way down to Edmonton. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can certainly lend the Advanced Education minister a hand if that's what he wants.

Given that the UCP is still imposing additional, unnecessary billions of dollars of debt on Albertans pursuing postsecondary through unprecedented funding cuts and skyrocketing tuition and given that this means that students are requiring loans and have to take on a significantly larger burden and given as well that the government hasn't even included the majority of students in their inflation relief legislation, why is the Minister of Advanced Education doing nothing to help students with the cost of living? Please answer.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As per the mandate letter from the Premier, of course, the Premier has asked for us to take a look as it relates to affordability, and I know that that's a consistent theme across all ministries. My team and I are speaking very closely with student leaders to get a better understanding of some of their challenges and get a better understanding as to whether the government may be able to provide assistance to work with students. So we're looking at those options, and we'll bring forward some thoughtful plans in the future.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this government's inflation act missed more than 2 million Albertans, including almost all of the postsecondary students in this province, and given as well that the Alberta New Democrats do have a plan for capping postsecondary tuition increases, ending the UCP surcharge on student loans, bringing students and research into the downtown core, ensuring stable, predictable funding for institutions, making postsecondary career training more accessible, and so, so much more, my last question is simple. Does the minister want my help so that we can put together what's best for students?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Albertans are struggling under high inflation and the related escalated cost of living, and that includes our students. We've been meeting together and discussing options to support them as we move forward, and that's exactly what we'll do. Right now they're benefiting from cheaper fuel to get to and from school. They're benefiting from lower electricity prices and natural gas price protection, and students will benefit from the targeted relief that our government is releasing early next year.

Racism Prevention

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a rich province, rich in diversity and multiculturalism, but racism continues to find a home on our streets, in our schools, workplaces, in our media, and in this very building. It is the duty of every Albertan, especially those in positions of power, to stamp out racism in all its forms. To do otherwise is morally bankrupt. Can the minister of multiculturalism explain what tangible action this government is taking to address racism in Alberta? Please be specific. Albertans are looking to us to lead.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you to the hon. member for that question. First of all, I'd like to thank the former associate minister of multiculturalism, the hon. Member for Calgary-North, for his groundbreaking work on the antiracism action plan. In fact, this plan is on our website, and it outlines a number of recommendations in a forward plan that is designed to tackle racism.

Mr. Deol: Given that racism has been on the rise in Alberta and given that the Calgary and Edmonton gurdwaras were the target of hate crimes last year and given that only a few months ago a racist representation of Sikh culture was included in a rural Alberta rodeo parade and given that a 24-year-old Sikh man was murdered last week in Edmonton, newcomers are scared, racism is on the rise, and minorities are facing daily instances of racism in their lives, will the Premier stand in this Chamber today and condemn racism in all its forms?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These are tragic and unacceptable acts. Obviously, I do condemn all acts of racism all across the province and in our nation. With the COVID-19 pandemic, we have seen increases in anti-Semitism, anti-Black racism, anti-Asian hate, which was addressed earlier here today. I am very personally invested as a minister, as an MLA, as an individual to ensure that we tackle racism so that every single Albertan feels included, welcomed, and is able to actualize their potential in every realm of life.

Mr. Deol: Given that a third-party advertiser that calls itself Alberta first recently released a television ad that is undeniably racist and given that the ad is black and white but colours only the turban of a federal political leader and given that this is a clearly visual dog whistle on racism and given that fighting racism is the duty of every person in this House, including the Premier, will someone on that side stand and for the record condemn this racist ad and tell the people behind it to pull it off the air?

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, as I had mentioned before, I categorically condemn all acts of racism everywhere in the province and in the country as well. I have had the benefit of talking to the antiracism council members as a council and as members individually, and again we are going to be bringing forward further initiatives on this matter to make sure that, again, everybody feels safe and included and welcomed in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has a question.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an MLA who represents rural Albertans, my constituents are pleading for more stable health care. Currently emergency rooms in rural communities are being left inaccessible due to doctor shortages and closures. Because of these closures, rural Albertans are being left without critical emergency care. To the Minister of Health: what is this government doing to improve and stabilize emergency room accessibility in our rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question and advocacy on this file. We've had numerous conversations in this regard. You know, bringing down emergency room wait times across the province is one of our top priorities and, in fact, one of the main reasons why we appointed an AHS administrator. We have tasked Dr. Cowell to reduce ER delays by bringing in additional staff to improve on-site patient care and management and by transferring an increased number of patients from hospital beds into more appropriate care settings. In order to measure the success of these initiatives, we will track the time it takes from the moment a patient enters the ER to when they receive the appropriate level of care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the incredible strain that the pandemic has had on our doctors, our nurses, and support staff over the past two years and given that, with the lack of staff in rural regions, many Alberta families are struggling to access the health care services that they require, can the minister explain to Albertans and this House what the government is doing to bring more doctors and health care workers to our rural hospitals, thus improving access to health care for these communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this very important question. We fully understand that there is a challenge across the entire country in health human resources and here in Alberta, and it's particularly acute in rural Alberta, which actually is impacting our level of service. We are moving forward with a number of initiatives, including training more nurses and allied health professionals across the entire province. We are leveraging our immigration system, welcoming more doctors. We have more doctors and more nurses than ever in the province, and we're going to continue to do this work until we can get all the staffing we need to be able to provide the services, particularly in rural areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has announced $3.5 billion in health-related capital funding over the next three years and given that a significant portion of this amount is dedicated to upgrading facilities in Red Deer, Calgary, and Edmonton and given that those upgrades will improve the quality of service and life for residents in those regions, again to the Minister of Health. These urban centres are receiving significant support for health care upgrades, but what is this government doing to help improve health care services and facilities for rural Albertans?

Mr. Copping: Thanks once again to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, you know, we are investing significantly in health care infrastructure, $3.5 billion in Budget 2022, and that is across the entire province. One component of that is focusing on renovations in rural hospitals. This year's budget provides $45 million over three years to modernize and improve our rural health facilities across the province. Now, the rural health facilities revitalization program supports upgrades and renovations in hospitals, emergency departments, pharmacies, EMS stations, ambulance garages, medical laboratories, and other facilities, and we'll continue to invest.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has a tabling.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings that I'll quickly make, tabling documents I referenced earlier this week in debate, one being a CTV News article titled Ralph Bucks 14 Years Later, which I referenced in arguing that the population of Alberta will not be bought with their own money again as they seemed to be back in the Ralph bucks era.

Secondly, a tabling with respect to an article that I cited from CBC, Need for Speed: UCP MLA Wants to See 120 km/h Speed Limit, where I argued that it was difficult to determine whether or not the UCP members were in favour of higher speed limits because there seems to be some debate in their caucus about whether they are injurious.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from the Confederacy of Treaty Six First Nations, a statement from the Treaty 6 chiefs regarding their meeting with Premier Danielle Smith, in which they indicate, "It was clear from our discussions that Premier Smith does not understand Treaty or our inherent rights nor does she respect them."

Thank you.

The Speaker: I appreciate that the hon. member may have been quoting from a letter, but it would still be inappropriate to use the proper name in the Assembly.

Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 4

Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again for the support of the Assembly on Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022. As members know, it is a straightforward bill that proposes repealing section 40.2 of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. This section allows the government to terminate compensation-related agreements such as the one we have with the Alberta Medical Association.

Repealing this legislation is part of our commitment in the new agreement with the AMA. Mr. Speaker, this commitment is not only to the Alberta Medical Association but to physicians throughout our province. I want physicians to know that we are moving forward together. With this agreement, we are partners, and they have my commitment that I will work collaboratively with the association and its members to continue building an environment of partnership and of innovation.

To physicians I say that you have faced a tremendous amount of responsibility and strain throughout the past few challenging years. It's affected many personally and professionally as you have given all your support to patients. Your hard work and dedication to Albertans is greatly appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, our partnership with physicians is reflected in the concrete actions we're taking to address the challenges facing our health care system, because those actions reflect the very issues that have been brought forward by physicians in our conversations. These actions will result in improvements to the health system overall and improvements for individual physicians as we work together as partners to implement the new agreement.

This agreement adds an estimated $750 million to stabilize the health care system, including $260 million in targeted funding to address current pressures. This includes recruitment and retention programs so more Albertans can access family doctors, and it provides more stability for practice viability. It is an agreement that focuses on partnership, stability, and innovation. It targets areas of concern and provides the necessary supports to help ensure Albertans get the health care that they need. To quote from former president of the AMA Dr. Vesta Michelle Warren, with whom I sat at the bargaining table and then proudly shared a podium with in September, when we announced the ratification of the agreement:

This agreement is good for physicians, patients and the health-care system. It will allow physicians to contribute to decision-making and provide expertise on what matters for patients. It provides increases in line with other settlements, valuable programs, business cost support, fair processes for working together on compensation or other matters and ways to resolve disputes. The agreement will help stabilize physician practices that are struggling with rising costs. Stability is critical to retain and attract physicians. There is hard work ahead, but we look forward to rebuilding the relationship with government and seeking solutions through collaboration.

Mr. Speaker, there is indeed hard work ahead, but I'm looking forward to continued collaboration with the current president of the AMA, Dr. Rinaldi, and the rest of her team to tackle this work together with physicians as our partners in the weeks and months ahead. This bill is about working with physicians to improve Alberta's health care system. It's about stability, which is absolutely critical during these challenging times, and it's about keeping our promises and our commitments.

I once again thank all members of the Assembly for supporting Bill 4. With that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate on third reading of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2), that makes changes to six pieces of legislation. However, I do find this session that this government has for the most part prioritized legislation that will not help this government address issues facing our communities, our province.

Frankly, when I talk to individuals and groups in my riding, I think the top-of-mind issue for them is affordability, cost of living. UCP policies certainly have contributed to that as well. The other thing that we'll talk about is health care. That is top of mind for many of my constituents. We are now seeing an increase and surge in respiratory illnesses, and now our hospitals are again really stretched. Here we have another bill that is not focused on what Albertans want this government to focus on. Earlier they also introduced a piece of legislation, the sovereignty act, that will drive away investment, will drive away jobs, and has created huge chaos and uncertainty in our economy.

This bill makes a number of changes. For the most part, it will be helpful if the minister would clarify some of these issues. For instance, this bill makes amendments to the Referendum Act and what it does. In the technical briefing they said that they're clarifying that constitutional referendums will only be brought before the Legislature and that all other referendums cabinet can decide behind closed doors. They're creating a two-tier process. If a referendum relates to constitutional issues, only then will it be brought before this Assembly, and on all other issues, on all other matters of public importance, the cabinet is giving themselves the right to decide that without any input from this Legislature.

As much as I'm not a big fan of governing through referendums, this Legislature should be the governing body. This elected government should be the governing body. We have seen fallout from referendums like Brexit and in other places as well. I do believe that whenever a question is put before the public to weigh in, this Legislature should have a right to weigh in on that matter. Generally speaking, referendums are done on matters of public importance, where we want to know where the public stands on a certain issue, so I think as public representatives we do have a right to weigh in on those matters. I think we will be bringing forward an amendment later on to change that. I don't think that cabinet should be the only body that decides a referendum.

This is the kind of pattern we are seeing from this government. That's exactly what they did with their sovereignty act, and they didn't consult anyone. They tried to consolidate powers within the cabinet, and as a result earlier we saw a call from Treaty 6 chiefs about that piece of legislation as well, that they were not consulted so that bill should be withdrawn. And the same thing here. There is nothing to suggest that the government consulted on these changes that they're making to the Referendum Act.

This bill will also make some changes to the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, and that's a pretty straightforward change. That change will bring Alberta legislation in line with other provinces and will allow for the expedited enforcement of child and spousal support orders from other provinces and vice versa. That's a good change, and we can certainly support that change.

Another change is to the Provincial Court Act, which will change the financial limit that the Provincial Court can deal with. Currently it stands at $50,000, but now through this change cabinet is giving itself flexibility that they could raise it to, I believe, $200,000. I think a question that we have is: if Alberta is already in line with other jurisdictions, other provinces, in fact if Alberta is at the higher end of the bracket, why does cabinet feel that this was necessary, and was there any consultation done with courts, the Provincial Court, the Court of King's Bench? Was there any work done on how it will impact their caseloads, how it will impact the Provincial Court work? Do we have enough judges there? Are we just trying to push more and more Albertans towards Provincial Court because the King's Bench would need involvement of legal representation and Provincial Court has relatively simpler processes? I think we need to understand why cabinet thinks that they need this power to raise that civil court limit to $200,000. Again, who is asking for it, and are there any plans that they will be using it fairly soon?

We do know that because of the pandemic and because of this government's policies our courts are struggling. Because of Jordan's principle there are now time limits that cases have to be dealt with in a certain time frame, in 18 months for summary offences and 30 months for indictable offences. So that has also put pressure on the court system. At the same time, this government has cut the Justice department budget every single year. Every single year they have cut the Justice department budget. When they became government, they started promising that they will hire 50 prosecutors. That didn't happen up until now. If they have hired some, now there are so many more vacancies that have not been filled. So adding more casework, more caseload on Provincial Courts: if that's their plan to address delays, they should say so.

Another thing that has really caused delays, caused concern for many Albertans is that this government has also cut legal aid funding. They have made deep cuts to legal aid funding. Mr. Chair, when we became government in 2015, the total legal aid funding at that time was $64 million. In 2018 we entered into a governance agreement with Legal Aid Alberta and promised to increase it in four instalments by $70 million. We delivered the first instalment, making the legal aid funding $104 million. In the last three years this government has cut that funding, making it $82 million.

As we speak, there are many organizations representing defence lawyers, family lawyers. They have started job action, and they are not accepting legal aid certificates. That means there will be more delays when it comes to bail hearings. There will be more delays in criminal matters, in family law matters, in custody matters, and Albertans will not be fairly represented. Our court system is already under pressure, and just adding this limit, raising this limit to $200,000, I don't think will make any difference in our court system. If we want to see our court system improve, we need real action from this government. We need more prosecutors. We need more resources in the justice system. We need more resources for legal aid. Changing that limit won't help us address any of that.

Then there are some other changes to the Trustee Act, which we were briefed that it will just remove the need for a trust to be transferred to the courts when there is no trustee. It clarifies that property can go directly to the new trustee. I think that's a good thing. There was some assurance provided that in that process the trust won't fail.

Then there are some changes made to the Sale of Goods Act. It removes the need to keep a record of the vehicle and registration that deliver the grain to the elevator and changes "track buyer" to "grain dealer". I think we didn't hear any concerns with respect to these changes. My friend and colleague, our critic for agriculture, the MLA for Edmonton-Manning, who has done amazing work on her file, has also reached out to stakeholders, but we didn't hear any concerns. We would like to hear from the government who they have consulted and if they could explain the rationale for that. I think that in general we think that it's a good change.

As I said, these are the changes. They're fairly straightforward, but at the same time I think this government needs to focus on real issues that are facing our economy, that are facing our society. They need to do something tangible to address the cost-of-living crisis, the inflationary crisis, and when they come up with plans, they need to make sure that all Albertans who need those supports, need that help are able to access that help. What we saw from this government is that they left more than 2 million Albertans out of that support.

Similarly, making changes to the Referendum Act further erodes the role of this Legislature. What we have seen from this government is that it's a pattern of behaviour, that they have done many things to curtail the role of this Legislature and to erode our democracy. On many occasions they have brought forward closure motions just to shut down the debate. They brought the sovereignty act, at one point giving themselves the powers called Henry VIII powers so that, again, they could limit the role of the Legislature.

In this legislation as well, with respect to changes to the Referendum Act, what they are doing is that they are again limiting the role of this Legislature by eliminating the need for this government to bring referendums on questions other than constitutional questions to this Legislature. I think as a member of this Legislature and as a representative of the people of this province – we think that whenever this government feels that there is a need, that they need to govern through referendum, they should come to this Legislature. It shouldn't be just the cabinet playing politics with referendums. There should be some accountability through this House.

So those changes certainly are not good. They're not good for our democracy. They're not good for our province. As I indicated, we will consider amending those to make sure that government brings back all questions of importance, whether constitutional or not, to this House.

The other thing, as I raised some questions – it would be helpful if the minister would share with us who they have consulted on all of these changes. We also know that when it comes to consultation, this government's record is very poor. They do not consult. They claim to consult, but they do not. That's what they claim with respect to the sovereignty act. That's what they claim with respect to Bill 6, that we will be debating later today. But when we talk to stakeholders, when we talk to Albertans, then we find out that they did not consult. That's the reason that the Treaty 6 chiefs issued a statement today saying that they were not consulted on the sovereignty act and on many other issues that pertain to their treaty rights, that has the potential to . . .

The Deputy Chair: Other members wishing to add comments or ask questions? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). Now, I have a few questions pertaining to the bill. I appreciate the fact that it amends, I believe, six pieces of legislation. I'll go through them one at a time just to make it as logical as possible.

You know, I appreciate on the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act that it is, for the most part, from what I can see, bringing Alberta legislation in line with other provinces. I do appreciate that it will allow for expedited enforcement of child and spousal support orders from other provinces through, really, modernizing a piece of legislation by allowing easier use and transmission of documents. I appreciate that sections 5, 24 remove the need for sworn documents, sections 6, 24, and 25 remove the need for certified documents or at least provide some flexibility for that certification, which I think is important, and sections 10, 30, 39, 44 allow for electronic or telephone transmission of documents. I appreciate there that we're modernizing this to allow for electronic transmission of documents in today's day and age. This seems to make the most sense.

I can't help but think about the fact that most doctors' offices still use fax machines to fax requisitions, et cetera, around. My hope is that we will look at modernizing that system. There is an example of a constituent of mine, that I discovered while door-knocking ahead of the 2015 election, who went to see a specialist to get a diagnosis – oh, no. Sorry. She had a cancer diagnosis, went to see a specialist. The requisition was via fax, and the challenge, Mr. Chair, is that the requisition ended up in a pile of papers for the specialist. The specialist was on holidays for a couple of months and then couldn't get back to the paperwork or didn't realize it was there. The worst possible thing you can think of happened, and that is that she died. She died because she couldn't get treatment because of an antiquated system that we use in our health care system, which is, you know, the use of fax machines. It was very, very tragic. I had met with her while she was waiting for treatment and then was in touch with the family when she passed several weeks later. Of course, I advocated on her behalf. My office tried to do what we could. But the point of this story is that I can support pieces of legislation that make sense to modernize, especially the use of documentation.

We know how busy our court systems are, so that's appreciated. I mean, in section 17 of this piece of legislation – amending, again, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act – rose the need for statutory certified copies. Again, I think that will help improve as well. So for the first piece of legislation that this bill amends, I can get behind that, Mr. Chair.

The next piece is the Legislative Assembly Act. I appreciate that this will bring Alberta in line with other jurisdictions. That's looking, I believe, at enhancing security for personnel in this building. Again, you know, it makes sense that we bring our legislation in line with other provinces.

This bill does touch on another bill that we'll be debating this afternoon, Mr. Chair. There's clarification in changes to the Police Act, which we'll be debating later this afternoon, for increased civilian oversight of law enforcement personnel. I think that's very important, that we have civilian oversight. When I speak to Bill 6, I will start my comments thanking the men and women that serve our communities around the province, that risk their lives day in and day out to keep us safe. There are incredible people who join the service, as I said. When I speak to Bill 6, I'll tell a couple of stories about some of the men and women that I've gotten to know in my riding, and I would argue that out of EPS, the finest work is in northeast Edmonton. Of course, I'm quite biased because I've gotten to know many of them. We'll talk more about that when we get there.

The next piece of legislation, the third piece, that this act amends is the Provincial Court Act. I think the rationale behind this change: the government has outlined that it will give cabinet more flexibility, but the concern that the opposition has identified with this change – and, again, when we talk about potential unintended consequences, it could lead to an increase in claims through the lower courts, so that is a bit of a flag.

The other thing that it does, Mr. Chair, is that it increases the maximum decision under civil courts from $50,000 to $200,000. Now, I know my colleague our Justice critic has spoken about this already, but I think it's important to highlight this. As I said at the start of my speaking this afternoon, there are a few questions that I have. This increasing the level fourfold, from $50,000 to $200,000, again, a 400 per cent increase, is significant. Now, the second highest – so that would put Alberta at the highest level at $200,000. I think the existing highest level in the country is $85,000, so Alberta would jump over that by another $115,000.

You know, a number of things, Mr. Chair. I'm not sure why cabinet feels the need to quadruple the $50,000 cap on civil court rulings that Alberta currently has today, why it needs to jump to $200,000. Now, I'm not saying that I'm necessarily opposed to that decision. I just would like a little more rationale behind that decision and that increase. My hope, quite frankly, because we are in Committee of the Whole, is that a member from Executive Council will respond to some of the questions that the opposition has been raising. This is definitely part of our bill debate process, where I very much appreciate going back and forth with ministers. We've seen that openness or willingness to answer questions in the past on other pieces of legislation, and I've seen this especially in my tenure or time in this Chamber. My hope is that we will get some answers.

The other question I have is: if the cap is raised to $200,000, would that not lead to increased cases being brought through the civil courts? If that's the case, Mr. Chair, what plans does the government have to support the lower courts in increasing their capacity? Again, if this cap being raised to $200,000 has a snowball effect or a knock-on effect, has the government planned for this? Have they accounted for it? I would imagine that Executive Council would've thought this through, that this is likely one of the consequences that would stem from increasing the cap from $50,000 to $200,000. If they haven't thought of that, well, I mean, that's – you know, happy that the opposition has identified that. So the logical question is: well, then, how do we support the lower courts to be able to deal with this increased caseload and workload?

The next question is a simple one: when does cabinet expect that they're going to amend the regulation on the cap? Is this an urgent issue? Is this one of the top priorities for government? I don't want to diminish the importance of this change, but I do know that when I talk to my constituents and when I talk to Albertans in general, you know, on issues that are urgent or pressing, this isn't one of the issues that is raised to me. Again, I'm not trying to diminish the value of this change, but when I think about urgent and pressing issues, I think about our health care system and the strain that it's under. I think about the number of kids who can't get in to see doctors within a reasonable time frame. There are a number of hospitals that have brought in temporary trailers to act as waiting rooms. That's unheard of in my lifetime. I've spent getting close to five decades on this planet and lived in Alberta my whole life and have not heard of that in the past.

When I think about, you know, urgency and what should be a priority and top of mind for government, I think about affordability. I think about – every Albertan at every door that I’ve knocked on for the last couple of months raises the issue of inflation, rising costs, whether it’s gasoline at the pumps, whether it’s paying for food in the grocery store, and I’ve heard time and time again stories of families that have completely changed their diet because they simply cannot afford to eat the way they did. Mr. Chair, we’re not talking about families going out and buying steak and lobster dinners often or even from time to time. We’re talking about some basic, staple food. Costs have risen so much so that they just simply can’t afford it.

I appreciate that we are debating Bill 2, that deals with the government’s approach to addressing rising costs and inflation. Of course, you know, the opposition has some difference of opinion in how to best address that. I can say that I supported Bill 2 in its second reading because I think that there are some initiatives in there that will help families, but when we look at issues that are most pressing for Albertans, from what I’ve heard on the doorsteps, it’s rising costs and it’s the crisis in health care.

You know, to come back to this bill, Mr. Chair, when does cabinet expect that they’re going to amend the regulation on this cap? I would appreciate getting an answer to that throughout Committee of the Whole.

The next section I’m going to talk about here is the Referendum Act and that within this piece of legislation makes it clear that nonconstitutional referendums do not require a motion by the Assembly prior to them being ordered. Of course, constitutional referendums will require the passage of a motion by the Legislative Assembly prior to being ordered.

I appreciate the comments that my colleague gave just around, you know, the use of referendums and when we use them. I think there definitely is a time and a place for a referendum. I do think, and I’m sure you have as well, Mr. Chair, that when we go and speak to grade 6 classes who study provincial government in the grade 6 curriculum, we talk about the difference between direct democracy and representative democracy. You know, of course, direct democracy many, many years ago was the common style of governance. However, today I can’t even imagine a country like Canada trying to implement direct democracy, where we’re going to the citizens every time we want to make a decision. Naturally, our representative democracy, I think, has served, for the most part, our citizens quite well. Having said that, there are times when governments have chosen to go to a referendum, to its citizens to enable them within a four-year term to have a say on a specific issue.

I appreciate that my colleague the Justice critic had mentioned in his comments that, you know, given the choice, he prefers that decisions are made, for the most part, through this Assembly. We are all elected to represent our constituents. But that’s a smaller change to the Referendum Act.

Two acts to go, Mr. Chair. One is the Sale of Goods Act, and that one, quite frankly, I’m still trying to sink my teeth into, just the changes that it’s made. My initial understanding of this is, really, under the Sale of Goods Act, making changes to the provincial act to align with the federal government and – I shouldn’t say “federal government” – federal legislation.

Section 25 specifically removes the need to keep a record of the vehicle and registration that delivered the grain to the elevator. Now, my interpretation and understanding of that: yes, it’s bringing it in line. You know, if this is going to make it more efficient and reduce an extra burden, then I’m in favour of it. If, again, industry has said, “Listen, we don’t need this; once upon a time we did; today we don’t,” then I’m completely in support of that. A question I know other colleagues have asked is: who has the government consulted with? My hope is that the agricultural sector and some of the associations have weighed in on this, and if they haven’t, then, I mean, that’s a pretty big flag for me. My hope is that there was consultation and engagement with our agricultural sector on this change.

It also changes “track buyer” to “grain dealer.” Once again, you know, if it’s just cleaning up legislation, then that’s great. If there’s an additional benefit of reducing some red tape for our hard-working farmers, then I’m also in support of that.

Finally, Mr. Chair, the Trustee Act. Now, these changes: my understanding is that they address concerns that were raised under Bill 12 from our spring session. It makes changes to the new Trustee Act that removes the need for a trust to be transferred to the courts if there’s no trustee and clarifies that in these situations the trust remains intact until a new trustee is appointed. Again, if this provides a little bit more continuity and simplicity to a system and ensures that people aren’t being bounced around and having to go through a lengthy and complicated process, then, absolutely, I’m in support of this change.

Again, you know, Mr. Chair, I appreciate that this bill amends six different pieces of legislation, is looking to provide some clarification for some, bringing other pieces in line with federal legislation. I recognize that and the need for that, but I can’t help but think about the other pressing, urgent issues that the government should be working on, whether through legislation or through regulations or just programs and supports. Again, Albertans are struggling.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others with comments or questions? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It’s a privilege to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). I have appreciated the points made by my colleagues so far this afternoon on this legislation and through the entirety of the discussion on this bill, and I, too, have some questions that I’m hopeful we can maybe have addressed as we continue through this debate.

I do think that there are some pieces, as the last speaker did, within this legislation that are removing red tape, that are going to streamline some of the process, and I think that is important. Of course, some changes to the Sale of Goods Act, which were previously described – the previous member, honestly, did quite a good job of going through the entirety of this legislation, so I likely won’t spend as much time on every piece as the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, but I do appreciate, again, some of the streamlining of pieces specific to the Sale of Goods Act, specific to the Trustee Act.

I do, however, have some questions that likely have been brought up so far. Again, hopefully, we can receive some answers. Just looking at the Provincial Court civil claims limit amendment act, as many speakers have already, I find this change interesting, looking at civil claims and the limit currently being $50,000 and moving up to a maximum of $200,000. The government is expressing that this is going to reduce pressures on courts and enable more Albertans to file small claims at the provincial level as per the alberta.ca website and the briefing on this Bill 5.

But I am a little hesitant surrounding this. You know, I would appreciate it if the government is willing to provide some more detail and some more context to what that might look like at a higher court, if it's going to reduce some of the strains there, because we, I think, have all heard stories of the strain that is happening in our higher courts. I agree that anything we can do to alleviate some of that pressure is a valuable undertaking, but I don't think that this government has been very clear about how that is actually going to play out.

I mean, the fact is that, again, we've heard stories about the underfunding of legal aid and cuts that this government has previously made to the victims of crime fund. I mean, these are two essential portions of our justice system, and unfortunately this current government has continued to underfund these programs, even to the point of defence lawyers in our justice system going on strike. I think that while some of them have potentially come back to the table and maybe even come to some agreement, Mr. Chair – and maybe somebody would like to correct me if I'm wrong, but I believe that as per an article from CBA National, the Canadian Bar Association's website, nationalmagazine.ca, they have brought forward that these concerns continue now and likely into the future.

We have some major problems within our justice system, so it is somewhat interesting to see the priorities that this government is putting forward, and I would be interested to hear if there's any expectation that some of those challenges are going to be alleviated. But, at the end of the day, when we talk about the importance of supporting justice within our legal system, the idea of the continued underfunding of legal aid is something that needs to be tackled, and it's something that this government has not been able to address up to this point. It's deeply concerning for social justice and just as a representative of my community and a citizen that wants to see everyone have equal representation under the law.

With that being said, just looking again at this idea of moving from $50,000 to a maximum limit of $200,000, I am interested, as the critic for Service Alberta, in how this might affect other pieces of legislation. Of course, this government previously made amendments to the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act with Bill 3 in previous times in the Legislature, and in that legislation or that amendment act it talks about the idea of this $50,000 limit, which at the time was consistent with what is in the legislation right now in terms of being able to take this to civil court.

Now, with these changes, I'm just wondering if we might see changes to legislation like Bill 3 and, further, when we talk about, you know, tribunals within our province, looking at the residential tenancy dispute resolution service and, again, the tribunal opportunities there to keep these types of cases out of the court system, if we are going to be needing to look at adjustments there, if there's any thought from the minister for Service Alberta in regard to the limit of $50,000 before no longer being able to use the residential tenancy dispute resolution service tribunal process, if that is going to change at all. I would hope to hear an answer on that, if there's any expectation or thought around the process of potentially increasing that as well.

Just looking at the idea of the changes around the Referendum Act – I think members have spoken at length on this piece from the opposition – and just looking at the amendments through Bill 5 regarding the Referendum Act with interest, you know, again, the alberta.ca website talks about clarifying the requirement to bring a resolution to the Legislature and that it only applies to constitutional questions. It's really, Mr. Chair, giving me flashbacks to Bill 1, which, of course, we weren't debating too, too long ago in this House, and the idea of this Legislature now deciding what is and isn't constitutional. Of course, at the time opposition members made it very clear that we as a provincial Legislature should not be making those decisions, that those should be decided by our higher courts.

But this government has given themselves the power, until it's potentially challenged and loses or wins – I, of course, can't try and foreshadow what might happen there or if it will happen. But this government has tried to give themselves the power to deem what is or isn't constitutional within the provincial Legislature and within our jurisdiction. So it's interesting to see these changes around the idea of, again, not having to bring forward the resolution to the Legislature around the idea of a specific referendum unless it's constitutional.

Further, we have a government that is now saying: we will decide what is and isn't constitutional. So I am interested to see what this government has in mind for the future, if we are going to see this play out and, you know, what pieces of legislation or federal jurisdiction this government might decide to try and, I guess, judge whether it be constitutional or whether it not be and if they try to put forward a referendum under this amendment even if it is clearly within the Constitution or regarding the Constitution, Mr. Chair.

There are definitely questions that I continue to have regarding this legislation. I think that, overall, there are some valuable changes that are happening here in terms of streamlining pieces, but there are questions that I'm left with. Hopefully, we will hear from the government regarding potentially specific changes around the current limit of $50,000 going up to $200,000, the idea that this is going to reduce pressure on the courts, if the government is going to be providing any additional supports to our lower courts, among other things.

You know, Mr. Chair, at the end of the day, as previous members have said, this isn't addressing many of the concerns that we have ongoing in Alberta regarding our health care crisis, regarding our inflation crisis and the many Albertans who find themselves struggling to make it day to day, again, faced with a government that is putting forward legislation that in many cases is not going to support them.

With that being said, Mr. Chair, I think I will take my seat and look forward to hearing more debate on Bill 5. I, again, see pieces within this legislation that I'm happy to support, but I do have questions in regard to other pieces.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has risen.

Ms Goehring: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). You know, I've been listening to debate on this, and I have to agree that, unfortunately, this government has introduced yet again another piece of legislation that really does nothing to address the concerns that Albertans are being impacted by, things like health care in a collapsing system, to be quite honest, and lack of affordability, which is top of mind for so many. I've said it over and over, on behalf of my constituents and Albertans that reach out from across the province, that this isn't what Albertans were expecting when it came to legislation for this session. There's an affordability crisis, a health care crisis, and instead we're debating things that this government has prioritized. It hasn't prioritized Albertans.

I have a background, Mr. Chair, in working in the Provincial Court system, in family courts here in Edmonton. We worked with family and community services for Edmonton and area – St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Spruce Grove, Fort Saskatchewan, Wetaskiwin, Leduc – and I represented the director of Children's Services in Provincial Court. So I have first-hand knowledge of what it's like to work in the Provincial Court system, and I'm in regular contact with a lot of my former colleagues, whether they are clerks in the court, lawyers both on the side of the Crown and on the side of defence, many who have over the years worked with legal aid, and many who are saying that they are no longer able to take new files.

The court system right now as we know it is really struggling. There are extensive wait times to get a matter before a trial. If you're doing a JDR or if you're doing mediation or any alternative to trial, those tend to be a little bit quicker, but when we look at what this legislation is proposing, we're looking at an increase in civil court, which is right now $50,000. The government is proposing a quadrupled rate of $200,000. To put that in context, the highest rate in the province is currently $85,000. I'm confused why this government is taking its traditional King's court matters over $50,000 and bringing them into civil court on the provincial side when we haven't seen the government infuse supports into the Provincial Court system. In essence, they're taking away from King's court and putting that burden onto the Provincial Court side without any increase of supports and resources, which simply does not make sense. We have legal aid lawyers pleading for supports and resources so that they can assist those that don't have the financial capacity to qualify for legal aid.

There are many impacts when we're looking at what this piece of legislation is going to do. For those of you that aren't quite familiar with what the Provincial Court currently handles, they handle the majority of criminal matters, regulatory offences, family and youth court, and traffic cases. That's a lot, so when we're looking at adding from $50,000 to $200,000, that is a significant jump in the types of matters that are now going to be brought forward to civilian court.

I question where this number came from. Who was consulted to do this? Does the Provincial Court believe that this is something that they can handle, the capacity, that increase? From what I'm hearing from those that are working in the Provincial Court system and those that have been experienced individuals that have had matters before the Provincial Court, it is not a process that is working well right now. They are struggling. We need more Crown prosecutors. We need more supports for victims. We need more supports for people that qualify for a reduced rate through Alberta legal aid.

We're just simply not seeing that. We're not seeing the government put those supports in, so why they're increasing matters being brought forward to the Provincial Court without increasing the amount of supports – it just doesn't make sense. It's going to have an impact. It's going to have a negative impact for those that deserve their right to have their matter brought before the courts in a reasonable amount of time. I question who put this number out there. It's not a number that we see anywhere else in the country. It's significantly higher, and it's going to have a major, major impact.

I know that when I was working in the court system, families relied heavily on duty counsel. There would be wait times of hours sometimes, waiting for an individual to be able to speak with duty counsel. They would come into family court – I was there representing the director of Children's Services; duty counsel was there to support families that didn't have representation yet – and just for a first appearance it was often hours of wait to have their matter simply brought forward to the judge and adjourned because they needed more time, more information, more resources. By the time some of these matters got to the point where both sides were represented by lawyers, trying to plan a court date was really difficult. There wasn't a lot of court time available. I don't know offhand what the current wait times are for court specifically, but I can imagine that it's not a quick turnaround. From when you walk in and you're expecting to have your matter heard in a trial, it is a significant wait. That's not fair to families. These are matters where children oftentimes are removed from the family home, and they have a right to be put forward in a system that isn't bogged down with so many different matters before the court. So I'm curious how this government came to this decision to put these matters into Provincial Court.

There are pieces of this legislation that I think are good. It looks at, I believe, six different acts. I can say when I look at the part regarding the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act that this is a good thing. When we have the capacity to bring Alberta in line with other provinces and expedite enforcement of child and spousal support orders from other provinces, that is so important to those that rely on that support. To watch families be delayed in receiving those supports because of a court system that isn't flowing properly – this is great news for those families that heavily rely on this support. It's often the only type of financial support they are able to receive. Seeing that is a great step, and I am very excited that the children and spouses that are so reliant on this are going to have an expedited process in place.

When we look at the pieces and the sections that are being changed and allowed, it makes sense to look at how they're updating the capacity to allow for electronic and telephone transmission of documents or testimony. All of those different things are bringing the Alberta court system in line with so many other jurisdictions that already do that. I do caution, however, that when I was with Children's Services in the court system, we did some of that transitioning from original legal documents being commissioned and sworn to electronic versions, and it was quite a task to transition that system. That was just such a small section of the court process. That was only the Edmonton and area courts that were doing it. It was only family and Children's Services that was doing it, and it took quite a long time to transition in a way that all sides felt that it was effective. So I am expecting some bumps along the way, and I would hope that as part of this legislation they are giving those additional supports that are going to be required by the clerks that are filing, by the judges that are reviewing these documents. It's new, it's different, and it's something that requires some patience and some understanding as that process changes.

I know that there were some difficulties while we were doing it with Internet access. Some of the areas in the province didn't have reliable Internet, so it was sometimes quite difficult to get documents alternatively sworn in and presented before the courts because of the delays with capacity, being able to accept a fax or an e-mail. There are definitely some bumps in this process, and I hope that when the courts are coming forward and bringing forward some ideas and suggestions about what could help transition this process, this government is listening and providing the supports necessary to be able to implement these changes. Like I said, it's coming in line with so much of the country when it comes to electronic testimony, alternative ways to accept documents, but it's just simply not that easy. There are definitely some growing pains in that transition, and I hope that this government is listening to the workers that are doing it and providing support and patience necessary when it comes to that transition.

The other piece of this legislation that I think is somewhat concerning is the Referendum Act that's being impacted and allowing the government to make decisions outside of the Assembly regarding nonconstitutional referendums. I'm curious why this government wouldn't want to have the Assembly weigh in on that.

It doesn't sit well that we have a government that brought in a piece of legislation, Bill 1, their flagship bill, the sovereignty act, that is really going against so many. We've heard Treaty 6, 7, and 8 come out against it, we heard them come out and say they weren't consulted, and we saw it be pushed through. This gave sweeping capacity for the government to make decisions behind closed doors and without consultation.

Here we are with a piece of legislation, this bill, looking at the Referendum Act and saying that it doesn't require Assembly input. Again this government is giving themselves sweeping authority to make decisions for nonconstitutional referendums. I just question what the intention is behind that. Why not have the assembly weigh in? Why not bring it forward so that as a member that was elected to represent my community, I can bring it back to my community and talk to them about what is coming forward and what their concerns are?

That's what I was elected to do, Mr. Chair, to bring forward the voice of my constituents, those that I represent. Again, this government is taking away the voice of Albertans. It's not just the Assembly members' voices. It's not the elected officials. We're here to be the voice of those we represent. This piece of legislation under the Referendum Act is, once again, taking away the voice of Albertans.

I pride myself on my communication and consultation that I have with my community, and I pride myself on being able to share their personal stories and experiences and bring forward their questions on their behalf. That was what I was elected to do, and if this government is making changes to that, I'm curious why. Where did they see the voice of those that are elected in this? Why are they shying away from listening to Albertans and what Albertans want?

I think that we're in a place with this government where so many things are being brought forward that really don't address the needs and the wants of Albertans, and they're stepping further and further away from allowing Albertans to weigh in on that. It's frightening. It looks at the democracy that we have, and it is just another step of taking away the voice of so many that we represent.

Today I had the pleasure of having two grade 6 classes from Baturyn elementary, which is a wonderful school in my community. They came here, over 70 of them. They had their teachers with them and some grown-ups that came along, and the kids were excited to learn about what we do. It's one thing to read about it, but these kids were just super thrilled to be able to be in this space and to watch democracy and to watch what question period looked like. I had met with these two classes in September during Read In Week, and we had some questions and answers. At that point in the curriculum they hadn't really learned yet about political practice, so being able to explain to them when they were here put it in context for them.

This is a place where we want to encourage people to come and watch and listen and have their government being open and transparent to what is happening. Bill 5, that piece of legislation that speaks to the referendum, takes away the capacity for Albertans to have some sort of experience when it comes to the legislation that's being brought forward for a referendum, and that's concerning, Mr. Chair. I really don't know, you know, how to take that back to these students that are learning about the importance of having a voice, the importance of advocacy, the importance of what their government should be doing when we're debating a bill that says that it won't even make it to the Chamber floor. I just struggle with the disconnect between what this government sees their role as and what they see as the role of the members of this Assembly and the people that we all serve, Albertans, not being able to have voice in this place. I think that there's lots that could be done; however, not all of this piece of legislation is something that makes sense and that supports Albertans.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will stop my comments and continue to listen to debate. Yeah. I hope that government is really paying attention and that when increasing the capacity, they're supporting the capacity in another way, if that makes sense.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

The Deputy Chair: Looking for members with questions or comments. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thanks for the opportunity to have a couple of comments on our miscellaneous statutes bill for this session. I mean, this is a common practice, that you do group some miscellaneous statutes together, agreed upon between the parties to package them so that we can help to expedite them through the Legislature. You know, again, always, when we exercise the miscellaneous statutes agreement, I like to say from the beginning that it's always important not to abuse this or conflate it as an omnibus type of legislation, where you group together a whole range of seemingly unrelated concepts and try to pass them together as what's called an omnibus bill. I believe and always have that omnibus legislation is dangerous and it's confusing and it doesn't help with the democratic process or for the public to understand the democratic process, too.

With that being said, I mean, certainly, this particular version of a miscellaneous statutes collection truly is sort of a random collection in some ways. You know, I must say, Mr. Chair, that it's all been made necessary because of the way that this new government, this new version of the UCP government, came back together again after voting out their leader and reassembling with a different cabinet and so forth. If it wasn't done in such a sort of haphazard and comically confusing sort of way – you see that built into this miscellaneous statutes act, where they literally, this UCP government, failed to cover off some of their essential duties as a government and needed to amend those things in this miscellaneous statutes act so that they could actually cover off what a government is meant to do here in the province of Alberta.

For example, there was no minister responsible for the labour code or occupational health and safety. There was confusion about other responsibilities in this cabinet, which is, I think, one of the biggest in history if not the biggest in history. As one gentleman from the Calgary Sun sort of comically described it, everybody is a VIP in this government, right? Maybe you can take on what I saw FIFA do when they were here in Edmonton and have a VVIP category or have a VVVIP, I suppose, category since everyone seems to have a title over there.

You know, this expansion to 27 ministers, two Deputy Premiers, 11 parliamentary secretaries is unprecedented, and quite frankly it has lent itself to the requirement to have so many miscellaneous statutes amendments so that they could literally retool and reorganize the government. I don't think it's a good way to run a cabinet or to run a government, to run a railway, as they say, to do this. Albertans have taken notice that a government that otherwise likes to pride themselves on efficiency and making cuts and tough choices – I mean, a tough choice to make everybody a cabinet minister or something, some version of a VIP, is not really good cricket as far as I'm concerned. Yeah.

I mean, we see that this collection of miscellaneous statutes otherwise has a lot to do with the reallocation of duties and trying to cover off duties that were missed and clean up this and clean up that. I guess, reluctantly, we have to kind of go along with it because that's what the government is supposed to do. Here we are with the miscellaneous statutes trying to cover off what they forgot they were supposed to do, so let's do it now. We'll be glad to, as always, help the government out because that's what the Official Opposition is all about. You know, we're helpers, and we've got constructive criticism that can make life better not just for Albertans but for the UCP government as well. There you go.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Bill 6

Police Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Chair: Any members wishing to add comments, questions, or amendments to this bill? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 6. I do have an amendment to move, so I will let the pages distribute that. I will read that amendment into the record, and then I will deliver some remarks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. Just give us a moment.

Hon. members, this is amendment A1. I'd ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall to read it into the record, please.

Mr. Sabir: The Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall moves that Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022, be amended in section 4, in the proposed section 1.1, by adding the following after clause (e):

(e.1) it is desirable that policing services be provided in a manner that recognizes the importance of intersectionality, anti-racism and trauma-informed practice as critical analytical frameworks for meeting the diverse needs of individuals and communities in Alberta.

In this bill the government enshrines some guiding principles, that policing in Alberta should be conducted in accordance with the principles that are enshrined in section 4 of the legislation. They want policing to make sure that they protect the safety and security of all persons, that they respect their fundamental rights listed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that they should co-operate with the members of the communities they serve. They ask that policing should take into account health-related situations affecting individuals' mental health, and police should promote a culture of accountability and be transparent. These are all good principles, and I do agree with it.

What this clause will do: this clause will enshrine an additional principle in that list. The reason for that is that, as is stated, police should respond to the needs of Albertans and should reflect the diversity of Albertans. We do know that Albertans come from many different backgrounds, many different cultures, many different talents. We have a huge diversity in our province, and seeing things through the lens of intersectionality will give us a better understanding of who we are as a society, what the makeup is of our society. That will help us acknowledge our differences better, and that will also guide public policy responses that we formulate as a result of such analysis of intersectionality.

Why it's important lately in particular: we have seen tragedies in the United States which receive huge media attention, in particular the murder of George Floyd, and then we have seen tragedies here in Alberta as well, how a person from South Sudan was killed in Calgary. We have also heard concerns from our Indigenous communities. They certainly have long-standing grievances about policing in this province, and when we look at stats about representation of Indigenous communities, other person-of-colour communities in our justice system, we do know that Indigenous communities are overrepresented in our justice system. They're disproportionately incarcerated in our remand centres and penitentiaries.

This principle will make sure that we take into account intersectionality of gender, race, and all other relevant factors and try to understand our differences, try to understand a problem more holistically and come up with public policy responses in a much, much better way. Similarly, it will enshrine antiracism as a principle in the legislation. Again, we do know that Alberta is made up of people of many different backgrounds, and there have been concerns raised by person-of-colour communities, how they are treated by the law enforcement in this province and this country, and I think that having that enshrined as a principle will also help us make policing better in our province.

Earlier we also tried to bring forward a piece of legislation that would have asked this government to collect race-based data so that we can see the extent of these issues that exist in our system. Unfortunately, that bill didn't pass, but again, now with this legislation, we have that opportunity, that we have explicitly written in legislation that policing will be guided by the principles of antiracism.

Then it also enshrines that trauma-informed practice should be part of all delivery of public service. We do know that in particular our Indigenous communities have been through a lot. They have been through residential schools. There has been cultural genocide, the '60s scoop, and there are still impacts of that trauma that can be seen from generation to generation. We have enough evidence that such trauma that was endured by Indigenous communities, like, a few decades ago can still manifest itself in their current generations. So it's more important than ever before that when we know that such trauma can be seen in their generation today, we inform our policies, our services, be that police service, be that any other government program, with a lens that is trauma informed.

This principle, I think, will do a few things. One, it will send a strong message from the government of Alberta to Indigenous communities, to person-of-colour communities that the government recognizes their concerns, the government is listening to their concerns, and they're enshrining these key principles in the legislation that will guide policing in our province. The second thing is that this will also help us address the concern, gauge the concerns of systemic racism in our law enforcement. There are those concerns. Those concerns need to be heard, and I think one way of doing that is that we guide our policing through the lens of intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed practice. This will help us make our law enforcement better. This will help us instill trust and confidence of Albertans in our law enforcement, in particular those from Indigenous communities, those from person-of-colour communities.

I think it's a very common-sense, straightforward amendment, and we can all agree that police services exist to serve the people of Alberta. They should be trained in diversity; they should be trained in principles of intersectionality. They should realize that those differences exist and be able to tailor their response to the needs of Alberta society as it exists today.

These principles will serve as the cornerstone for our policing going forward and help us with community safety and address the concerns that Indigenous communities, that Black communities, person-of-colour communities, racialized communities have in relation to policing. We have shared this amendment in advance with the minister for the minister's consideration. I look forward to hearing from the government side what they think of this amendment.

Thank you, and with that, I will take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, we are on amendment A1 as moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Others looking to add to the debate? I see the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. Look, when it comes to this amendment that has been proposed by the NDP, we encourage police services to include these principles in their diversity and inclusion plans or their community safety plans. Police services already have this as part of their HR practices, and these are principles that guide recruiting and employee expectations. The ministry does in fact also offer training for police services which would cover some of the points in this proposed amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Others? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I want to stand up and overwhelmingly support this particular amendment. I think that the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has stated explicitly why it's so important that this particular amendment be accepted by the government, by all members of the Legislature in making sure that it is incorporated into the Police Amendment Act, 2022.

I can't tell you the number of times that I hear from multiple communities, not just one in particular, that they do not feel that policing services in the province of Alberta are sensitive – I guess that's the best word I could use – to the issues being brought up in this particular amendment. So I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall when he brings this amendment that wants to focus on intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed practice and including that in the framework.

Now, we have seen that in order to address these issues, you have to be intentional. You have to be intentional. That's all that we're asking. I know that it has been suggested, it has been encouraged, but if we bring it and we actually amend the piece of legislation before us, then this would include a level of intentionality that at the level of the Legislature we would like to be incorporated into the Police Amendment Act, 2022.

All we need to do is look at Alberta history. Why is it that Indigenous people are overrepresented in our justice system? It has to do with our track record of colonialism. Not only that, Mr. Chair, but you know the greater injustice here, in my personal opinion, is the fact that it's not just Indigenous people that are overrepresented in the criminal justice system, but it's actually that a greater percentage of them are women when compared to the general population.

I can't remember the exact numbers off the top of my head right now, but I have quoted them in the Legislature before. They're as high as 30 per cent, if I'm not mistaken, in some cases, when Indigenous people only make up 3 per cent of the Canadian population. Now, you have to ask yourself: why is this the tendency?

Now, when you look at the legacy of colonialism in the province of Alberta and throughout Canada and throughout the world and how Indigenous people have been treated by policing structures and how they feel targeted by the policing services, it is – and this is where trauma-informed goes to, Mr. Chair. Trauma-informed. We cannot continue to expect this to change unless we're intentional about actually bringing trauma-informed perspectives into the understanding of policing and the relationship that exists between police and the communities that they are there to serve.

We need this intersectionality. We need the training in antiracism. We need the training in trauma-informed practice so that we can get this right. It's a huge injustice, that overrepresentation of Indigenous people in our prisons both at the provincial and the federal levels. It's something that I've called the Legislature's attention to before a number of times.

But, you know, I'll be honest with you, Mr. Chair. It's not surprising when we hear from Alberta chiefs of First Nations communities stating publicly that the Premier of the current government doesn't even understand the treaty relationship. This is not coming from my mouth; this is coming from one of the chiefs of the First Nations here in Alberta. If you don't even understand the treaty relationship that exists between nation to nation of Indigenous communities here, how can we expect you or people in general – and I'm not pointing any fingers – to then understand the trauma-informed practice as it relates to Indigenous people and the legacy of colonialism that exists here in the province of Alberta? You need to be intentional about this, right?

I see some shaking heads over here that just don't get it. It's very important. It's very important that we recognize, number one, that we're all treaty people and, on top of that, that there are specific calls to action of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission when it comes to the gross injustices that have occurred here in the province of Alberta and throughout Canada with a legacy of colonialism. How can we ever expect to get it right if we're not going to, number one, accept the truth of what has happened?

I mean, that's the whole intention between truth and reconciliation. First, you've got to accept the truth, the historical truth that occurred, the injustices that occurred. And only from being able to understand that can we then actually hope to get it right. That's why this amendment is so important specifically when it comes to Indigenous people but not only Indigenous people, Mr. Chair.

Over the last several months we know that Black hijabi Muslim women have been attacked here in the province of Alberta, specifically here in the city of Edmonton. In one of the very first cases, Mr. Chair, the woman that was attacked, when she went to go and report what had happened to her, felt grossly mistreated by the officer that was taking her report. This is common knowledge. It was actually reported. It was in the papers. Here we have an instance where someone from a racialized background is saying: I don't even feel comfortable reporting the gross injustice that happened to me, the hate crime that happened to me, the violation that happened to me to a police officer and trusting that the system, the policing service system, is going to be able to actually get this right and actually be able to correct the injustice that occurred. So you see how important it is that this not be left to a voluntary: well, it's nice if it happens. No. We have to be intentional about it. That's why this amendment is so important.

You know, I would have liked to see the Minister of Justice get up and actually support this amendment instead of saying: oh, yeah, we encourage policing services to do this. This is an opportunity for all of us here in this Legislature to make sure that every Albertan feels that the policing services that are being provided in this province are going to respect them, are going to be able to help them feel that they are being listened to. The officers, whoever they may be – I'm not trying to point fingers at any one or another; that's not the point here – every officer will have the knowledge because we've been intentional about them receiving education when it comes to intersectionality, when it comes to antiracism, and when it comes to trauma-informed practice and having a historical perspective when it comes to injustices that have happened in the past.

I'm not trying to shame or blame anybody here. That's not what this is about, and I hope that the members on the other side of the House aren't misconstruing my statements as that being the case. That's not what this is about. This is about trying to build a better Alberta, Mr. Chair, where people, when they've had an injustice or a violation happen to them, feel comfortable enough to go to the services and the individuals represented by those institutions and that they'll actually be listened to and understood. That's what this is about.

The Black hijabi Muslim sisters who, unfortunately, had to go through all that trauma want the policing services and the individuals of those institutions, at bare minimum, to understand: okay; well, in living your life as a Black hijabi Muslim woman here in the province of Alberta, you are going to feel different. It's not the same when you have a whole – Mr. Chair, it's been well documented – industry creating more and more Islamophobia, taking misconceptions about Islam and reinforcing them and sharing them as propaganda through social media.

It's well known that here in Canada we have over 3,000 – I want to be careful with the words that I choose – if I'm not mistaken, White nationalist either websites or social media pages, from my understanding of the last report that I read. More than 3,000 of them take these misconceptions – in this particular case I'm talking about Islam – and then add fuel to the fire and go out there and try to misinform other Albertans about Islam.

And it doesn't happen just with Islam, Mr. Chair, as you well know. It happens with anti-Semitism. It happens with the Jewish community. We've seen all kinds of places of worship being attacked, and I will say that, you know, providing a grant for places of worship to put up security cameras or whatever they deem necessary in order to protect their places of worship was a good step on behalf of the government. But notice that we still have this incredible problem of people being attacked on the streets of this province, in cities, where a grant to a place of worship is not enough.

We need to put our priorities in line with this particular problem, and at the root of it is people feeling safe enough to go to the institutions that are supposed to be there to protect them and serve them and make them feel safe in their community and that the individuals who make up those institutions are going to be informed and at least, bare minimum, not necessarily understand what it's like for a Black hijabi Muslim sister but at least know that there's a difference between what she is experiencing on the streets of Alberta and someone who is not identifying the same way.

That's what this is about, Mr. Chair, to be able to understand that we need to be sensitive to the experiences of others. I get it, you know. Like, people talk about cancel culture: oh, you can't say this, and you can't say that. You know what? It's a sign of respect. It's me telling the rest of the world that I'm not going to use offensive language or sexist language or whatever the case may be because I respect other Albertans who identify in another way. That's all it is. Nothing difficult about it.

I believe that it's so important that – in this case we're talking about policing services, and I'm sure that you've heard me get up in this House before, Mr. Chair, through you to all the members here, and talk about how important it is that we be sensitive to this in all of our institutions, that we need to decolonize all our institutions, not just the policing services, but in this particular instance we're here talking about this amendment, which is being intentional about including antiracism, intersectionality, and trauma-informed practice to the policing service.

You know, if the members on the other side of the House could get up and give me an actual, concrete, rational argument about why this shouldn't be done, I would like to hear it. It doesn't seem like something that far of a stretch for us to actually include in legislation. I don't understand why you would be against something like this, why you would be against this amendment, and for the Minister of Justice, the individual himself, to get up and say, "Whoa, we're already asking them to voluntarily do this; it's up to them if they want to do it or not" is not enough. And guess what? It's not enough for Albertans. It's not enough for the Albertans in this province that feel unsafe walking through the streets of their cities and other municipalities throughout this province, and it's not fair, Mr. Chair.

Here's an opportunity for this Legislature to go above and beyond and make a change that will drastically make a difference, make a huge difference, for a lot of people, racialized people, Indigenous people. This will make a huge difference for them to feel more safe on our streets and in our communities.

I can't fathom why the members on the other side won't vote for this amendment. Like, has the level of partisanship come to that degree where – and we're talking about 30 per cent of the population. Last I checked, 30 per cent of the Alberta population, Mr. Chair, is ethnically diverse. Thirty per cent. We're talking about 30 per cent of Albertans that this would actually go to serve, and all it's doing is saying: look, institutions, be intentional about providing intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed education to the individuals that make up your institution so that they can be better informed about how to help and serve the Alberta public, of which 30 per cent will be impacted, will feel safer, will feel listened to, will feel understood.

I challenge the members on the other side of the House. Get up and give me a good reason why this amendment shouldn't be passed in this House right now. I'm asking them. Legitimately, I'm asking: give me a good reason why. Or else the only thing that I can blame it on is the fact that we've gone so far down . . .

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the floor.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment on Bill 6. I had the opportunity to speak to Bill 6, and as I indicated yesterday, I certainly have some aspects of Bill 6 that I wish to support. Hopefully, we'll see some of that move forward although I've also expressed my concerns, but it's nice to be able just to stand up and talk about something that I think would really improve the bill, help move things along, doesn't detract from any of the intentions that have been described by the minister.

I took a little bit of time to review Hansard records on this from yesterday and listen to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont as they talked about the bill and quite rightly talked about how important policing is and thanked the police officers in our system for the work that they do. I certainly agree with all of that. I don't think we're in an antagonistic place here.

I certainly have worked with police officers quite regularly in my career as a social worker with a specialization in the area of family violence. I worked with police officers in the child welfare system. I worked with police officers when I was at Catholic Social Services, our elder abuse program. I certainly found that when we worked together, we got great things done, and we dealt with some of the very darkest things that happen in society. You know, we had to deal with people that were abusing their children, abusing their elders. We had to do that from a place of clarity as to what is acceptable and unacceptable behaviour, but we also had to do that from a place of compassion, knowing that people who are in the position of becoming offenders are often there for very specific reasons in their own life, often related to their own experiences of trauma, often related to their own experiences of racism, often related to their own lack of receiving compassion throughout their lives. It means that at the time of the police intervention it's very important that that work be informed by an understanding of the circumstances.

There was a study done on one of the jails in the Edmonton area a little while ago now. I guess I've been out of the academic field for a while, so it's a bit of an aged study, but it was very interesting. What they did is they did an examination of everybody in the jail system and came back with the determination that upwards of 80 per cent of the people in jail demonstrated some level of involvement with FASD, fetal alcohol syndrome disorder. I think that's very telling, because what it tells us is that it wasn't simply an issue of people making bad choices and people, you know, who were committing acts out of greed or other kinds of self-indulgence but, rather, that people were committing many of these illegal acts because of their inability to act in an appropriate way, because of their inability to make good judgments because of the consequence of many of the negative things that had happened to them in their own lives. And the more we understand that, the more likely we are to be able to intervene and to make changes in the criminal's life and, hopefully, therefore in the lives of all the current and potential victims.

I think it's very important that we move policing in an appropriate direction. I certainly found, when I worked with the police officers, that they understood this. They weren't antagonistic to this notion that we can do it better and that we can do it better by understanding the social circumstance of the people we're dealing with and to construct interventions that are reflective of what we know about their circumstances, about their abilities, about their traumas and that having done that, we can reduce the amount of conflict that we have, not only in society but conflict with the policing services themselves when they're out on the street.

I certainly don't want to see police officers in the position where their lives are threatened or their well-being is under assault, so if we can find a way to intervene with people that isn't about, you know, having more firepower than the offender – because that always leads to a clash of firepower, and that means that the outcome is often one that's tragic, not only for the people who are the suspects or the criminals involved but far too often for the public servants that are involved. So I think it's very important that we think very seriously about this issue.

Now, I know that there's a bit of a trend in the United States, particularly, of sort of the militarization of police, you know, bigger weapons, even bringing in armoured cars and so on, and I think that's a terrible, tragic mistake. I think it's a failure to understand that you can resolve issues without always coming in with more weaponry and more focus on the violent aspect of the interaction.

I know that's true because as a social worker, when I was working for child welfare, I, you know, frequently went into people's homes as an individual, the sole person. The people in these homes were often people with significant records, often involvement with gangs, and I would go in without arms and without violence and sometimes have to apprehend and remove their children. All of this was done without any violence. All of this was done without getting to a place of forcing myself upon the family but just simply using the authority invested in me by the Legislature under the Child Welfare Act. It told me that we could work with people no matter how much they were in conflict with the law, that we could work with people in such a way that we could come to a better resolution even when we had to do things that they were unhappy with, like remove their children from their care.

This happens thousands of times every year by child welfare workers who engage people who would otherwise be considered somewhat dangerous in other circumstances very often, but the fact that we make the decision not to go in from a militaristic perspective but, rather, from a socially informed perspective: we are able to achieve, I think, better outcomes.

Now, we certainly think a lot needs to be done to work on those kinds of interventions so that we get better at them. It's something we're just learning about now in the history of intervention, and I think that, you know, we have to give some patience for policing services and their affiliated support workers, like social workers, to figure out how to move forward on this. One way we can do that is that we can put into this bill a request, as the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has indicated, that the services that are provided recognize the importance of some of the social things such as intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed practice. This doesn't change the nature of the bill. It simply asks us to be supportive, to encourage police forces and their allies to think about ways that they can go about doing things to resist the Americanization and weaponization of the police forces and instead go to a set of interventions that are well informed, that are based on good science and good research, and that have outcomes that are more desirable both for the offenders and for the police services themselves.

I must say that I was disappointed earlier in the year when we made recommendations that race-based data be collected so that we could ensure that our institutions themselves are not causing some of the trauma that leads to negative outcomes. I was very disappointed that when we introduced that as a possibility here in the House, the government voted against it.

I'm asking them now not to go down that same route. This amendment does not change what it is that you're wanting to do. This amendment merely adds to it, gives it something more. It makes the bill itself more robust in its framing of the work that needs to be done in the community. I think it's a good chance for the government to say: "You know what? A reasonable amendment: let's go with it. Let's, you know, work co-operatively across the floor to create an outcome that will be desirable for everyone involved."

They could include, you know, some very specific directives like race-based data – I would certainly have liked to have seen that happen here – but given that they're not prepared to go that far, perhaps they're just prepared to go as far as this suggests, "that policing services be provided in a manner that recognizes... intersectionality, anti-racism and trauma-informed practice." It's not a directive. It's a suggestion. It's an establishment of a tone, of a manner of policing that we would like to see.

I think that if we do that, we will be able to reduce criminality in our society because we'll begin to intervene in ways that address the underlying issues that lead to criminality, and I think it's really important that we do that. It's quite easy for us to just sort of say, "Bad guys are bad guys," and therefore they should be punished. I think it's better for us as a society to say: these people have done bad things, but if we understand how it is that they arrived at the place where they've done bad things, then we can actually make the changes that are necessary.

Those changes may not even be with the individual. They may be with society. They may be with a society that is racist. They may be with a society that has too much alcohol being used inappropriately. They may be with a society that allows deep poverty amongst wealth. There are lots of social reasons why negative things happen in our society, and if we take responsibility for our part of it and then we assist and help members of our community to do that as well, we're likely to see some serious improvements in terms of the outcomes.

Hopefully, that means some desirable things for us, that means we have fewer people in jail and save a lot of money when we do that, we have fewer people committing crimes and we save a lot of money from that, we have fewer people ending up in hospitals from fights and conflicts and, you know, assaults and so on, and as a result we save a lot of money. There is a lot of money to be saved in policing if we do policing in a way that actually leads to reducing the underlying causes of criminality rather than putting more and more money into the notion that somehow we just have to be bigger, badder, more militaristic in our policing style. It's not necessary.

I certainly, as I said, have worked with many police officers who get this and who demonstrate exceptional skills in this area. They are quite able to enter into a situation and employ these social skills and come out with everybody being okay because they understood what it is that they're trying to do in their interventions. They didn't just go in saying: I'm in charge; I get to decide what happens, and if you resist me, I'm going to beat you up. They don't do that because they're skilled police officers. They are officers who understand that there are a number of ways to intervene: some of them accelerate the chaos, some of them increase the conflict, and others decrease the conflict and decrease the chaos.

So here it is. Here's a chance for us to say: look, we know some of the ways that we can decrease chaos in our society. We know that if we understand issues like intersectionality, if we understand issues like racism, if we understand issues like trauma, we can actually change our behaviour, we can change our social constructs, and we can change our interventions, and then in doing that, we can invite the citizens who are in conflict with the law to also change their circumstances so that they're less likely to find themselves in a place of conflict with the law. That seems like a pretty desirable outcome to me.

This amendment to the bill does it in a very nice way. It just simply invites the services to think about this and to create a circumstance where the opportunity to learn about this and to employ these kinds of effective skill sets will be done on a consistent basis and on a provincial-wide basis because every police service will have the same kind of mandate to do these kinds of things.

There's nothing terribly foreign about this to the police services I've worked with. Certainly, many of the police officers I've worked with can articulate these things much better than I can. They can tell you about how they have found ways to intervene that did not lead to violence. You know, when somebody is kidnapped in our society, for example, they don't always just bring in the guns; they bring in a negotiator. They bring in somebody who actually has learned the set of social skills that is likely to lead to the kidnapping being resolved in a positive way, where neither the victim nor the perpetrator's lives are forfeited. The police officers know how to do this kind of work, and I think most of them would welcome doing this kind of work.

Unfortunately, there is a trend, I think, coming largely from the States going in the opposite direction, and I think it's a good chance for us to say: "Not here. Not in Alberta. We don't want to move in that particular direction. We want to move in a positive, progressive direction. We want to create a society in which everyone is treated responsibly and respectfully by the services that we have." In the same way that we would ask that of health care or social services, we could ask that of policing, and I expect that we will be very happy with the outcome if we indeed see police services being set up around this kind of agenda rather than an agenda of power and control over citizens, which is not a very productive agenda.

I don't think that our police services are asking for that – I'm worried about the trend I see from the States – but I think that we need to be really clear where we stand on this, and we stand in a place that says: all citizens are worth recovering; all citizens are worth inviting back into the fold, no matter what kind of activities they've been engaged in. We can do that by having intervention services that are focused on the structural reasons why people are outside of the fold, the drivers that have pulled them out of being good citizens.

I'll finish my comments by saying that I appreciate the government bringing forward this bill. Although I've had some concerns about it, I see some potential here. I certainly like the emphasis on citizen involvement and citizen review, some of the changes to ASIRT, and so on. I think that this amendment fits right into that, is really consistent with that, and will allow us to feel like we've had a fulsome discussion of what it is that we want to see in our police forces and will invite a new pattern in society that is citizen based and positive outcome based. It's not about control. It's not about the containment of people. It's about inviting people to become participants in our society in a positive way.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has risen.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Chair. You know, I rise today to speak on this amendment. I want to commend the members opposite for raising these issues. I think that everyone in this Chamber would agree that antiracism, trauma-informed practice, understanding the diversity of the people of Alberta are incredibly important.

I know that I've been personally blessed to be able to work on a number of issues in my time as an elected official. I've worked with the missing and murdered indigenous women joint working group, where indeed we undertook lengthy conversation, lengthy research, in-depth thought, and debate to produce the joint working group report. We had an emphasis throughout all of our discussions certainly on antiracism but definitely on trauma-informed practices.

We also see that – I see, at any rate – across our province police forces are changing. They have been changing for years. The police services that came in front of us, in fact, for the joint working group: we had Aboriginal police forces, we had city police forces, we had RCMP come before us to have conversations on how policing is done. Antiracism, trauma-informed practices, looking at desegregated data are certainly also important. I will say this. I have seen a great deal of change in policing. I look to Police Chief McFee, for instance, and the work that he's done in the city of Edmonton, and I don't think there's anybody in this Chamber who could say that Chief McFee and his police force don't understand these concepts.

I recognize the sentiment behind this amendment and why it was brought forth, but frankly I think that this amendment – at this point our police forces have this in their minds at all times, in my view. I think they work every day with these values as a premise to their work. I'm not sure that we need an amendment. Although I understand the sentiment and I appreciate the sentiment, I'm not sure that this amendment is necessary for this legislation.

I just want to say that I appreciate our police officers out there who are doing good work every day to make sure that diversity and inclusion are part of their everyday work, making sure that trauma-informed practice is occurring every single day and that antiracism is something that we all take seriously and our police forces take seriously. I think that that goes without saying. Our police forces understand antiracism, and they undertake it every day.

I would say that while the sentiment behind it is commendable, I think that this amendment is extraneous to what we're trying to get done with this bill today. I think the bill proceeds nicely without any amendments, and I'll just leave it at that.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

5:00

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment regarding Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022. I want it read into the record what we're asking, especially after the previous speaker and their comments. I just can't believe some of the things that come out of this Chamber. I mean, those comments were so tone deaf to what is happening in our province in regard to the treatment of Albertans. To say, you know, "This amendment is wonderful, but I'm not going to do it" just throws in the face of so many individuals their experience.

Mr. Chair, what we're proposing, what we're asking this Assembly to do is that the Police Amendment Act, 2022, be amended in section 4, in the proposed section 1.1, by adding the following after clause (e):

(e.1) it is desirable that policing services be provided in a manner that recognizes the importance of intersectionality, anti-racism and trauma-informed practice as critical analytical frameworks for meeting the diverse needs of individuals and communities in Alberta.

This is essential when it comes to an expectation of the police force and those that they serve that is representative of Albertans. We have a very, very diverse province. We have experiences that we have all heard first-hand, that we've witnessed in the news. We've heard heartbreaking stories of racism, of systemic racism, not just from individual officers but from the system itself. To ask that this be included but to have members of government say, "Yes, this is important, and it's already done" completely minimizes the experiences that so many in Alberta are experiencing.

We have a society that needs to do better, needs to come from a place of understanding, and when we're asking for an amendment to include these strong needs – intersectionality, antiracism, trauma-informed practice – I think those are key guiding principles that should be enshrined in the Police Act. It would enhance what this government is trying to do in Bill 6. I think that standing up and saying, "Yes, it's important, but we're not going to support it" tells a really strong story to those that are experiencing trauma, that it's not important enough to put it in writing, to make it part of the guiding principles.

That, to me, Mr. Chair, is very telling. When we have the responsibility in this Chamber to make sure that we are putting forward legislation that takes into account the human experience of so many, we need to take action and do something that not only acknowledges that experience but puts real language to what the expectation is.

I've worked alongside police for most of my career in social work, whether I was working in the school system, working in group care, working in Children's Services as a family support worker. We relied heavily on the support of the police. Sometimes it was in awful circumstances where we needed police assistance to come in and to help. I can tell you that there is so much work that can be done. So many officers that I've spoken to when working with Children's Services have expressed a desire to understand and to learn more. But if that isn't an expectation or training for police, how can that come into place? You have to have legislation that supports this as part of the practice. You can't sit in this Chamber and say that it's already happening. We're talking to Albertans. We hear those horrific stories of mistreatment. To say that it's done in recruiting is enough – that's not enough.

I have sat in training sessions with EPS in Children's Services to go through sexual assault training and to assist with police members in understanding how to take a disclosure of sexual assault from a child. The interest of those members – they had to personally sign up for that. So often they had shared that they wished that that was something that was just part of their job. This gives the government an opportunity to highlight the importance and to take action in supporting our police in getting the critical analytical framework that they need to properly and effectively and compassionately support Albertans.

You do what you know until you know better. This is a wonderful opportunity to provide some very specific language that enhances the guiding principles of our Police Amendment Act. I think that encouraging their members to vote it down is a detriment to what they're claiming this act is intended to do.

I think that when we talk about antiracism and trauma-informed practice, it's essential that those serving Albertans, the first responders, have an understanding of what those individuals' experiences are. To show up at a call with that deep understanding of what it means to have trauma-informed practice is so essential. I know through social work over the years that as we learned better, we did better. We come from a place of truly wanting to serve and help, but if you don't have all the tools necessary, perhaps you're not able to do your best work.

I'm just baffled that this government sits here and says: "It's already done. It's good enough the way it is. We don't need to put that language in there." Well, that's the whole purpose of opening up the act, to be able to listen to the true life experiences of Albertans and to make sure that they are part of that act and that we have guiding principles that really meet the needs of individuals and communities in the province of Alberta.

With that, Mr. Chair, I hope that everybody in the Chamber supports this amendment. It doesn't take away anything. It adds incredible support and value to what this piece of legislation is intending to do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has the floor.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment on Bill 6. I appreciate the comments that my colleagues have made so far on this. I think, you know, first and foremost, the Minister of Justice and, I believe, the Member for Calgary-Glenmore both spoke about: in their opinion, this amendment is not necessary. I strongly disagree. I mean, I'll start off by saying, first of all, that we're adding a guiding principle. There are other guiding principles that I think augment this bill: the fact that we're talking about acknowledging the history and culture of Indigenous peoples. We're talking about the fact that "police services should strive to reflect the pluralistic character of society and the communities they serve," that they "should promote a culture of accountability." This is a guiding principle.

You know, earlier I listened to the Minister of Justice talk about the fact that police already do this. Well, if they do this, then let's codify it in legislation. Then there shouldn't be a resistance to it. This isn't adding more work. This isn't adding red tape. This is augmenting a guiding principle.

From my experiences, I can tell you, Mr. Chair, that there are some officers who are asking for this, who are looking for more training, you know, because they recognize that the communities that they serve are increasingly diverse.

Now, before I dive into this further, I do want to take a moment, as I foreshadowed earlier this afternoon, to recognize the outstanding work that our men and women do to serve and protect. I am firmly in the belief, Mr. Chair, that the men and women who serve in our police force in Edmonton's northeast are the best of the best. I was at an event a couple of months ago. It's the annual Fort Road AGM, so the Fort Road BIA, business improvement area. I've got to tell you that every year not only do our beat officers come to this event; we get all of the senior officers from the northeast division that attend.

This year being my final time to speak at this event as an MLA – it was back in October – I took, you know, an extra couple of moments to recognize the incredible contributions that EPS has made to improve the lives of so many constituents in my riding and the fact that the northeast division has a stellar reputation for building relationships with community members. They are active in the community. They turn up to every single community event, whether we're flipping pancakes or we're at the farmers' market or we're participating in a parade or we're doing a cleanup. EPS in the northeast are absolutely outstanding.

An example of that: one retired superintendent – a retired superintendent – showed up again this year because he is so committed to the community. Tom is his name, and I gave him a shout-out. One of the nicest human beings you will ever meet and a great leader and has accomplished so much for not only northeast but for all of Edmonton and Alberta. As well, Randy, one of our beat officers who's been in the northeast forever, got moved to another division but still showed up to show his support. We had, honestly, probably around 10 EPS officers that attended by choice – not because they had to – because they are so involved in the community and part of a community. I thank them. On behalf of all Members of the Legislative Assembly I thank them for their service because they truly do make our community a better place and do it from a place of humility and sincerity. You know, with that, Mr. Chair, they want to find ways to enhance the work that they're doing. They want to provide an even better level of service for the community.

This amendment that my colleague the Justice critic has put forward will augment the work that they're doing. All that this is asking – I mean, this isn't even requiring additional training. This is simply recognizing the importance of intersectionality, of antiracism, and of trauma-informed practices.

Every time I listen to my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford speak about his experiences as a social worker, likewise my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, I learn something new about their perspective but also, you know, the incredible service that they gave to our city and their communities. The fact that trauma-informed practice means that the men and women who serve can do an even better job, if there's a way that we can through our day-to-day practice foster a culture and be able to work with people where they're at and ensure that we're serving them in a way that not only benefits them but can also benefit our system, then I think it's a win-win.

Again, you know, honestly, Mr. Chair, I will be shocked if the government doesn't accept this. This is a guiding principle. We're not asking them to make sweeping changes to the bill. There are already four guiding principles. This is adding one more.

But if there's one thing I've learned in this place, Mr. Chair, it is that it is important, words written on the page, that things like guiding principles matter and should be in legislation. They should be codified because entities like our police services province-wide look to the legislation, what's in there. This could result in enhanced and augmented training. This could better inform the men and women who serve our province on how they interact and deal with Albertans. This can help them do a better job.

Mr. Chair, I'm a huge fan of continuous learning and of professional development. I think everyone in every position should have opportunities to grow and to improve. I think a rising tide lifts all boats. When individuals are given those opportunities, they're going to do better in their job. It doesn't matter if they move to a different job; they're improving their whole workplace no matter where they move. This amendment helps them do that.

You know, I can talk a little bit more broadly about the fact that one of the things I appreciate in this bill is the acknowledgement and recognition of civilian oversight and the role of civilians in participating. I think that's important. I can go back to my example of why northeast division for Edmonton police is so effective. Do you want to know why, Mr. Chair? Because of the relationships that they build in the community. I did a ride-along with two outstanding officers – this was probably a couple of years ago now – and I was so impressed with the relationships they had built with members of the community, and I mean all members. I mean, even people who have been in and out of incarceration still have good relationships with EPS and help inform them so that they can do a better job.

The role of Albertans and civilians is critical. We see that all the time, how police services rely on the relationships they have with Albertans, because they can't be everywhere. A bill that enhances civilian oversight and participation is positive. It's positive for this bill, and I think it's positive for our police.

I honestly believe, Mr. Chair, that if we had the ability – and we don't because of time – to survey the men and women who serve as to whether or not they would like to see this guiding principle included in the legislation, I'm confident that there would be an overwhelming majority who would say yes. If we had time to go out and survey them, then we would. But for Albertans watching at home, I mean, the bill was tabled a week ago, we're in Committee of the Whole, and it'll likely pass out of committee sometime today and this week, next week pass out of third, so there just isn't time for that.

But in the relationships that I have with our police, whether it's EPS, the Calgary Police Service, the RCMP, or others, they're looking for these types of signals that will enable them to sign up for more training. There is no downside to including this in the legislation. This is where I don't understand when members get up and say: no, we don't need this; most of them are already doing this. Okay. Well, that's fantastic if they are. That's great. But, then, let's codify it in legislation.

Mr. Chair, I've told the story in this place of probably the most disappointing day of mine as a Member of the Legislative Assembly in my 10-plus years in this place. It was back in my first term, between 2012 and 2015, when I was part of a four-person fourth party, and we tabled an amendment to enhance a bill. Members of government, the cabinet, stood up and said: this is a very reasonable amendment; this makes sense; we see no reason why we can't do it. But they still voted against it, and we divided.

During the division I went across and I spoke to members of Executive Council and said, "If you stood up and said that the amendment was reasonable, why are you not accepting it?" And the answer, Mr. Chair, was, "Because it came from the NDP." I can tell you that that answer is what disgusts Albertans. They don't want to see partisan politics get in the way of good ideas. And you know what? The reality is that good ideas come from all sides of the Chamber. Nobody has a monopoly on good ideas, and for anybody who thinks they do, that's dangerous, and they won't put forward good ideas. The best CEOs surround themselves with really, really smart people who help them make those great decisions and come up with those great ideas.

So that day I will never forget, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Eggen: Was I there?

Mr. Bilous: You were in the Chamber. The Member for Edmonton-North West was in the Chamber. I served with him, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and the former Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

That was really disappointing, and that's why, you know, Mr. Chair, I will give credit where credit is due and always have. When I've been in opposition and the government has accepted amendments, I will give them kudos. I will give them the appreciation that they deserve. When we were government and I was the minister of economic development and trade, I adopted a number of amendments from the opposition. If they are good and they're going to strengthen or enhance a bill, then why wouldn't I? It is the most ridiculous answer in the world to not accept an amendment because of the party or the person who is moving it.

Albertans want to see good policy. Every time I talk to a business owner, whether it's a sole proprietor, a small-business owner, or an executive from a multinational, they just want to see good policy. Frankly, Mr. Chair, that's part of the success of the Westminster system. We have a multiparty system to be able to share ideas, to come up with the best solutions, the best approaches to tackling problems.

I'm of the position: let's encourage that; let's adopt that; at every opportunity let's accept good amendments. And to say, as the answer, that police are already doing this – great. So let's enshrine it in legislation. That's not a reason not to accept it. I've yet to hear a good reason for the government to not accept this amendment. This is augmenting the guiding principles.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will urge the government to do the right thing, to accept this reasonable amendment. Let's strengthen this bill, and let's do what we came here to do, which was to bring forward the best possible legislation to serve our constituents and Albertans and make our province a better place.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A1? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's an honour to rise again just for a few moments. I have really appreciated the debate on Bill 6 and, in particular, this amendment this evening and want to thank, well, all of the members of the opposition for speaking to this. I'm sorry if I leave anyone out here in particular, but I want to give my thanks to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie as well as the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall. I'm going to end up naming everyone here, so I'm going to stop. I really appreciate, over my last seven, going on eight years in this House, the wisdom of those members as well as the members for Edmonton-Castle Downs, Edmonton-Rutherford – okay; I think I've named most of them now – and everyone on this side in their own respect, whether they're a social worker, whether they've dealt with these issues in other ways.

I do just want to reinforce one more time the very important point that many members on this side of the House have made, just recognizing this amendment, again, just adding in the guiding principles. We see many guiding principles here, and they all seem very reasonable. I think they strengthen this legislation. I think that they're valuable to have included in this legislation.

I was disappointed, to say the least, to hear government members say: well, you know, our police services already do things like consider intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed practice, so we don't think it's necessary to include it in this legislation. But then I would argue, Mr. Chair – and I would disagree with this point. It seems that the government is arguing that none of these guiding principles need to be in here, then, if they already recognize the history and cultures of First Nation, Inuit, and Métis people in Alberta. I don't think that the government is arguing that they don't already do that, but they are including it in the guiding principles within this legislation because it is valuable to have it included and codified in legislation, as the previous member and many members of the opposition said before.

Very quickly, Mr. Chair, I think this is an incredibly important amendment. I think that it is a valuable addition to the guiding principles. I think that it's become very clear, the importance of considering intersectionality, whether we're talking about GBA plus policies when we're considering any government policy, especially in cases of police matters and the idea of antiracism.

The fact is that in this day and age, Mr. Chair, we need to be more than not racist. We need to take every opportunity we can to be antiracist, to call out racism, and to uplift communities who have traditionally been affected by racism. It's not enough to simply let people, you know, just live, I guess, to not call out racism. We need to celebrate and recognize the importance of their contributions, of diversity, of backgrounds, considering intersectionality, considering ethnicity, culture, and many other things.

With that, Mr. Chair, I look forward to hearing more and eventually voting on this, but I do appreciate the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall for bringing this forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

5:30

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my privilege, actually, and my pleasure to rise in the House and have the opportunity to add my comments on this amendment to Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022. I understand that there's not much time for me to say this, and I also really will say thank you to my colleague who put this amendment forward and many of my other colleagues who added their important comments and supported this amendment. I don't know exactly how much time I would have, how far I wanted to go, but this issue is very close to my heart, and I've been very passionate about this. I was looking for the opportunity in this House where I could just share my views and my learning and enrich the experience of this House, how both sides of the House can come together and then do better to address the issue of racism in this province and social equality and all those.

We have a history of racism in this country. The history is deep rooted in colonial rule. We all know that it goes back. Canada was,

I now understand, not very unique. I come from the very place that also was ruled by British colonial rule for over 200 years. What had happened: Canada was probably one of the very real places where the Indigenous people of that land faced genocide, and they were systematically attacked over 100 years, 120 years, 125 years, during the residential schools, how the children were snatched from the families. Canada probably is one of the rare places in the world where you will see the mass graves of those children are being recovered, you know, day to day. Canada is the only place, probably, where we call the graduates, the people from the schools, the survivors – not the graduates; survivors – the term coined because of the history and brutality and the options and the choices and lives existed for those very people.

We also know that Canada was built by immigrants. Immigrant communities have played a very important role in the development of Canada and this province, but unfortunately every immigrant or nationality did not experience actually the same thing as the majority of the immigrants coming from, probably, European countries. They were privileged to receive welcome and support and settlement help, including in Alberta. We see that happened from the early '90s to the mid-20s while Canada was openly accepting the immigrants from some parts of the world, mostly the White immigrants. Similarly, those immigrants from other places played a critical role. Chinese immigrants, from the late 1800s to early 1900s, played and worked hard to build the Canadian railways, but they were provided with the Chinese head tax in the 1920s, one of the worst things that could happen to them in Canada.

Similarly, Indians – united India, including India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, many countries. The immigrants from India: as British subjects they were under British rule. They served in the First World War for the British. They served in the Second World War for the British. But they had a very different experience coming here. Coming to Canada, what they experienced was that in restaurants, in stores, in public places Indians and dogs were not welcomed. This is what they faced. This is when their light and fight against racism started. Not only this. In 1908 the right to vote from Indians was taken back, snatched. They had to fight for another 40 years, until 1947, when they got it back.

There's a lot to talk about. We know that racism is not any government's policy in this country or any of the provinces. We also know that many of those colonial practices do still exist, not only in Canada. Canada has definitely the overt things – the people like me who come from different parts of the world can see what is happening – but in many of those countries where the British ruled, those practices still exist the way it was.

The bill we are discussing, the Police Amendment Act, is very important. We have discussed this in this House many times. As a multiculturalism critic I had the opportunity with the consultation of Albertans, the consultation we had for almost 10 months in this province. That was one of the main, actually, feedbacks that we got back, addressing the issue with the police force, law enforcement. This was one of the biggest ones, that, you know, the police force, law enforcement's force, comes in many cases, to the immigrant particularly or the racialized communities, as a substitute to the support for mental health, a substitute to the trauma-informed situations.

We have seen the recent case of what happened in Calgary with Latjor Tuel, the very gentleman, a hard-working individual, how he fell through the cracks and ended up in, you know, the police. I would not call this encounter that; he was killed. A number of those issues. I know the UCP members – the family came all the way from Calgary to speak with someone from the government, but no one was available. I had the opportunity to come out and listen to them and even received the memorandum not only for ourselves but for the government members.

This issue is very critical. What we are asking is the bare minimum. That is one of the demands. There are a number of those things we can do, but adding in the intersectionality just as a guiding principle: I think this is just a symbolic change. There's a lot more to do. If we don't seem to see that we cannot even, you know, come up to support this bare minimum thing, then this is a demonstration that we have a long way to go. Our legislators themselves need to learn a lot about our own society, what is happening, because what happened a hundred years ago – probably not in the same way, but we will see that practices still exist. We will see the disproportionality of those communities when it comes to law enforcement. We need to start it from somewhere, and this is the bare minimum and a very good proposal. I would call this a friendly amendment, that my colleague has actually proposed.

I would really like to see support coming from the government House members. They had a chance. I brought forward a motion not long ago, when the government announced the Police Act review, that the antiracism panel should be formed to go out, speak with racialized communities and minorities, Indigenous leaders, the Indigenous community, and come back and set up their report, but that was defeated. Now we have a chance to do it. I would really appreciate – I would like to see this – the government House members supporting this.

With that, I conclude my remarks, Mr. Chair, and I'll be happy to see that all the members of this House will support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the main bill.

I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has risen.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also rise to now move another amendment. I can read that into the record while it's being distributed.

The MLA for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall to move that Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022, be amended as follows. In section 28 in the proposed section 42.2 by adding the following immediately after subsection (9):

(10) For greater certainty, a complaint may be filed with respect to a former police officer under this section if, at the time the subject matter of the complaint occurred, the former police officer was a police officer.

In section 29 in the proposed section 43 by adding the following immediately after subsection (9):

(10) For greater certainty, the chief executive officer of the Police Review Commission may not dismiss a complaint under this section with respect to a former police officer if

- (a) at the time the subject matter of the complaint occurred, the former police officer was a police officer, and
- (b) there is no other basis for dismissing the complaint.

Basically, this amendment . . .

The Deputy Chair: One moment.

Hon. members, this amendment will be known as amendment A2.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. Basically, this amendment protects the jurisdiction of the police commission for the review of conduct of the police officer for conduct while employed as a police officer. This aligns the professional conduct review of police officers in line with the medical profession. This ensures that an individual cannot avoid justice by quitting, being fired, or moving to a different police force. It is important for accountability that the procedure is protected in alignment with other regulated professions and bodies.

With that, I urge all members of this House to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any others wishing to speak to amendment A2? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

And, hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt . . .

Mr. Eggen: Oh, no.

The Deputy Chair: . . . but the time for debate this afternoon has concluded. The House stands adjourned until this evening at 7:30 p.m. The committee; sorry. The committee will resume at 7:30 p.m.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 6 Police Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A2. Would anyone like to add comments or questions to the amendment? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in Committee of the Whole on Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022, and specifically to speak to what I believe is amendment A2. If I'm correct, the number of it is A2. For those who may not be aware yet or maybe are just joining us on live TV wanting to watch what's happening in the Assembly tonight, which I do encourage everybody to do, we are speaking to an amendment that was brought forward by my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall, which is an amendment related to, essentially, when complaints can be brought and who they can be brought against under the police.

I want to begin – I haven't had an opportunity yet, Mr. Chair, to actually speak to this bill. I know that we're on the amendment, and I certainly will be speaking to the amendment; it's very related. But just more generally for those, you know, who are interested in knowing what's happening, Bill 6 is taking what I believe are some very positive steps towards providing some more independent oversight over the police, really, by establishing a commission that will be responsible for reviewing complaints made against police officers. This is really important, of course, because we have significant concerns, as many Albertans do, about, you know, the fairness of a process when it is police essentially investigating themselves. We've heard those concerns raised loud and clear, that police shouldn't be investigating police. There are conflicts of interest there. There are skewed perspectives that have challenged, really, the credibility of some of the decisions that have happened.

More than ever I believe it's important for Albertans to have trust and have faith in their police. We also know that there are so many really fantastic police officers who are doing incredible work, and, you know, that relationship and that credibility should not be undermined because of the actions of some. One of the steps to ensure that we have a process in place that's perceived as as well as is fair is to provide that civilian oversight of complaints that are made against police.

Bill 6 does a great deal in terms of establishing the police review commission and processes for handling certain complaints that are made. In particular, I noted that it's established what they kind of call level 1, 2, 3, 4 complaints. Certain complaints, level 1 complaints, are, you know, an allegation that – actually, I'm not going to try to paraphrase it, Mr. Chair, because I think it's important to be accurate. It does say that a level 1 complaint is where

An incident has occurred involving serious injury to or the death of any person that may have resulted from the actions of a police officer, or a complaint alleges that

- (a) serious injury to or the death of any person may have resulted from the actions of a police officer, or
- (b) there is a matter of a serious or sensitive nature related to the actions of a police officer.

Those are level 1 complaints. They will continue to be investigated by what we all know as ASIRT, but it will now be done under the auspices of the police review commission. There are a number of other levels of complaints that can be made, as set out in this bill, based on the seriousness and the nature of the allegations.

Again, very supportive of the idea of an independent body reviewing complaints made against police. That's actually good for everyone. It is good for Albertans. It is good for police officers. It is really the best outcome. This is really something that, you know, had been initiated when we began the review of the Police Act as the NDP back in I believe it was 2017 or 2018. I may have my dates wrong. My apologies, Mr. Chair. But this was really one impetus behind that review of the Police Act: how do we provide better oversight of police, but also, how do we ensure that Albertans have confidence in those processes to make sure that they are fair?

In that spirit, Mr. Chair, really, the amendment that was put forward by my colleague the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall was really to go further than perhaps what the act has suggested, to ensure that a police officer cannot sort of escape a complaint being made or being investigated by the police review commission by virtue of either quitting the police force or moving to another police force. Essentially, what the amendment does is, you know, clarifies and proposes an amendment to the proposed section 42.2 of the bill by adding the following, which would be subsection (10):

For greater certainty, a complaint may be filed with respect to a former police officer under this section if, at the time the subject matter of the complaint occurred, the former police officer was a police officer.

And it goes on by adding in section 43 another subsection (10), which reads:

For greater certainty, the chief executive officer of the Police Review Commission may not dismiss a complaint under this section with respect to a former police officer if

- (a) at the time the subject matter of the complaint occurred, the former police officer was a police officer, and
- (b) there is no other basis for dismissing the complaint.

It's pretty straightforward. It's simply to say that if an allegation and a complaint is made against a police officer, they can't just quit and that's the end of the complaint. That doesn't provide resolution to the complainant or the individuals who may have been affected by simply saying: oh, we can no longer look into this complaint because that police officer is no longer employed.

I would say there is precedent for this in many other, you know, settings, which is that simply because an employee is no longer employed does not mean that the conduct by which a complaint is made – and let's be clear. We're talking about very potentially serious issues, and when we're talking about police, we're talking about individuals who are in a great position of public trust and of power.

The reality is that the police serve Albertans. They serve the public, and if the conduct of one police officer, you know, would merit a complaint and would be found to be legitimate by a complaint process, you would not want that person to just escape sort of any investigation or outcome or resolution simply because they have either been fired or they have resigned from their position. That conduct doesn't just fall – it's not just a matter that affects that individual police officer. If a police officer has engaged in conduct that is worthy of a complaint, that's calling into question the very trust that Albertans have in that police force more generally. It's why the complaint process must still be able to apply to police officers even if they've stepped down.

So this is what the intent of this amendment is about, and I'm really hopeful that – you know, this is not a partisan issue. In our view, this is something to simply clarify the language of the bill, to be clear that they're still going to be held, some accountability held, when somebody steps down as a police officer. Again, very similar to what happens in the medical profession: simply, if a doctor stops practising, it doesn't mean that their conduct is no longer investigated. It is important to have that trust. That is what I believe the intent is behind Bill 6, to actually encourage trust in our police, provide that oversight, and the intent of this amendment is simply to provide clarity for Albertans.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chair, I think we have an example that is very top of mind for many Albertans, particularly Albertans who are in Calgary, where they have a sitting city councillor who has actually not even disputed that he engaged in inappropriate conduct with a minor when he was a police officer. In fact, he tried to imply that there was some kind of consent, at least, or something. You know, it is quite egregious that we having a sitting city councillor who as a police officer sexually assaulted, really – let's be clear – a minor while performing his duties as a police officer. We would not, I think, feel satisfied that that person, that individual, should be not held accountable for what they've done simply because they're no longer a police officer. In fact, that is a breach of public trust, and we certainly deserve, Albertans deserve, I can say Calgaryans deserve to be able to hold Mr. Sean Chu accountable not only as a former police officer but, of course, also as a city councillor.

I will take this opportunity to note that we are still seeing no movement from this government on taking action to remove Sean Chu as a sitting city councillor in Calgary, and that continues to send a profoundly insulting and disturbing message not only to Calgaryans but particularly to those who may have already been survivors of sexual violence. Really, it's this message that women in particular should not feel safe around their city councillor. So I encourage once again – and I use this opportunity, when we're talking about public trust in police officers and complaints made against police officers, to encourage this government, its cabinet, particularly its Minister of Municipal Affairs and Minister of Justice, to take action, because I think Calgaryans have spoken out loud and clear that they expect Sean Chu to be held accountable, and I can say I certainly do as well, Mr. Chair.

The other piece I want to add to this, which is not necessarily part of this amendment – but I hope we will have an opportunity to bring forward another amendment to address the limitation periods that are in Bill 6. Currently in Bill 6 it talks about – I want to just get the section correct here, Mr. Chair. I know I tabbed it. Apologies. Here we go. It is in section 29 of the bill, and it is set out in the new section 43 proposed for the Police Act. It says that

The chief executive officer of the Police Review Commission shall dismiss any Level 2 or Level 3 complaint that is made more than one year after

- (a) the conduct complained of occurred, or
- (b) the complainant first knew or ought to have known that the conduct complained of had occurred, whichever occurs later.

In plain language it essentially means that the complaint must be brought against a police officer within a year. If it's not brought within that year of when the event occurred or when the complainant became aware of the circumstances leading to the complaint, then it will be dismissed.

I want to remind Albertans that level 2 complaints include those where a police officer may have committed an offence under an act of the Parliament or the Legislature, or level 3 is “a complaint alleges that a police officer has committed a contravention of the regulations governing the discipline of police officers.” These are still significant concerns, and right now Bill 6 puts in a one-year limitation period on that. I would suggest, Mr. Chair, particularly when we're talking about allegations of sexual violence against a police officer, that there should be no limitation period.

Honestly, I think we all know in this House enough about the challenges, both emotionally, psychologically, administratively, all the reasons why there are challenges in bringing sexual assault allegations and claims forward in a timely fashion, not the least of which is, of course, that too often those who bring forward sexual assault or sexual violence allegations are not believed. They are treated very poorly through the whole process. Honestly, Mr. Chair, since we are talking about the context of police, we do know that many fear bringing allegations to the police itself. That is actually where we often see that women in particular but any person who has been subject to sexual violence will be hesitant to go forward to police because the very process can be incredibly traumatizing.

Let's add on, Mr. Chair, that we're talking about allegations of sexual violence potentially being brought to police against a police officer. We can imagine that that provides a huge additional barrier for individuals to bring forward those complaints. Of course, we often know that there are so many emotional factors that go into why a person may not be able to bring an allegation immediately after the event takes place. We know that there is a multitude of complex factors that go into that. I do think it's important that the government consider reviewing the limitation period as set out in Bill 6 and consider removing the limitation period for allegations or complaints against police officers that relate to sexual violence.

In fact, I'm very proud that the NDP government, when they were government, brought forward changes to the limitation periods for civil claims of sexual violence and actually removed the limitation period, recognizing exactly what I just spoke about, Mr. Chair: the challenges of bringing forward those complaints. I bring that in the context of this amendment because when we're talking about a former police officer, we want to ensure that simply no longer being employed as a police officer should not prohibit somebody from bringing a complaint.

Likewise, if the allegation is about sexual violence, that may take place somewhere long after the fact. I think those two amendments are pretty important to consider together because they certainly would apply to the example of Sean Chu in Calgary. You know, he is no longer a police officer, and those claims and allegations, which actually were founded, occurred many, many years ago. We do not want to see another situation where a police officer escapes accountability simply because they're no longer a police officer and the allegation of sexual violence happened many years ago.

I think we understand in this Assembly how important it is to offer those protections to individuals who may be subject to that kind of violence and enable them to access this process, which I again go back to believing was brought with the intention of providing greater transparency, accountability to the public for the actions and conduct of police. If that is the objective, Mr. Chair, I'd argue that the members in this House should vote in favour of this amendment, and if they are not going to vote in favour, I would really, genuinely like the members of the government caucus who may vote against to stand up and express why, why they would not support an amendment that would say that former police officers are also going to be held accountable.

I genuinely hope – we often have the situation, Mr. Chair, where we bring forward thoughtful amendments and they're voted down, and we don't even hear why. I think Albertans need to have an explanation. I certainly would not like it to be that it is voted down simply because it was brought forward by the Official Opposition. This is a thoughtful amendment that is intended to improve accountability, to meet the objectives set out by this government in this bill, and it should be given due consideration. I do hope that the members of the government will vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A2? I see the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate that. I just wanted to add that you can't quit your job and run away from criminal allegations. If a crime has occurred, simply resigning as a police officer doesn't absolve you of responsibility. You can still be investigated for that.

I just wanted to make sure that that was clear for everybody here, because I think it sounded like – if somebody, you know, say, 20-plus years ago had committed a sexual assault, they could still be charged for that, whether they're employed as a police officer or not or if it's under the Police Act. You've still committed a Criminal Code offence. You could still be held responsible for that. I just wanted to clarify that as well. I think that's the only thing I really wanted to touch on, because I think it insinuated that you could somehow do something criminal while a police officer and just simply resign and you've absolved yourself of that responsibility, that you can walk away from it.

The other part of it, the one-year limitation: it does exist. It is to make sure that complaints are handled in a timely manner. I think it's important for people to understand how complaints should be made. I think that having a provincial body as proposed in the main bill is important so that people understand how to make a complaint, how to do it quickly. I think we should get to those complaints and investigate them well to make sure that if any discipline needs to happen, it does happen, that if any training needs to happen, it does. Changes in practices are also important. There are many lawyers who wait one year less a day simply for their favour as well.

So having that one-year limitation: it does exist. I don't see any problem with that. I hope that anybody who has a complaint against a police officer knows where to go and how to make that complaint and also knows that if it's a criminal complaint, that can be investigated regardless of their employment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Others wishing to speak to the amendment? I see the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the member speaking and responding. I just want to clarify: the police review commission is not a criminal body. I don't think that anything in Bill 6 suggests that this is proving criminal allegations. The purpose of the police review commission is to carry out investigations and conduct disciplinary hearings.

What we're saying is that a former police officer should not be able to avoid a disciplinary hearing and a review of their conduct simply because they are no longer employed. It's very different than criminal provisions. That's not what this bill is about. It cannot be establishing a criminal process. The police review commission is about disciplinary hearings.

What we're saying is that certainly it is possible, under the reading of the bill that's currently before us, that a member who is no longer a police officer, who has stepped down, has resigned, has been terminated, cannot have their conduct reviewed for disciplinary purposes as a result of the way Bill 6 is drafted. What we're suggesting is that that former police officer should still be able to, within the time limitation period set out in the bill, be subject to disciplinary investigation and a hearing.

We're also saying – and I want to go back to the limitation period – that we're not necessarily objecting to one year as a limitation period. What we're saying is that there should be an exception made for those who are making allegations around sexual violence. That was my point, Mr. Chair. We're saying that in those circumstances where an allegation is made around sexual violence and the additional barriers that exist to bringing those claims in a timely fashion, many of which are compounded when those complaints are being made against a police officer, we're expecting somebody who's experienced sexual violence to go to the police to complain about conduct done by a police officer. Those are compounding issues which would create additional barriers. For sexual violence, for which we have recognized in civil law that the limitation period should not apply the same way as other allegations, we're simply suggesting and I put forward – it's not in an amendment right now before the House, but I certainly hope it will be – that that is the consideration.

I just want to be very clear that I do appreciate, though, members of the government standing up to respond, because I think this is the purpose of Committee of the Whole, to have this opportunity to engage back and forth. This is a well-intentioned amendment, simply to make sure that the police review commission, in its authority to conduct a disciplinary hearing, can include former police officers.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

7:50

The Deputy Chair: Anyone else wishing to ask questions or make comments on amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Committee, we are back on the main bill, Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022. This is an important bill, and I'm very happy to see it arrive at long last in front of the House. This is a process that, we know, began in 2018, and this is an act that has not seen significant review or a full-scale update since 1988. Certainly, in the years between 1988 and today we have seen significant shifts in many aspects of our society, how we view the treatment of many members of our population. We have learned a lot about inequities that exist in many of the systems that each of us lives under every day. Certainly, we have seen that there are disproportionate impacts within the justice system, and that also affects policing.

Of course, the changes we are making today are not solely about addressing those sorts of inequities and concerns around systemic racism, but they are certainly a large part of the conversation we've been having over, I'd say, the last decade, certainly as we've seen the conversations that arose as we began to see the conversations around Black Lives Matter, with the killing of a number of young, unarmed Black men in the United States, concerns that we have seen that have occurred here. Indeed, you know, we have seen that here in Alberta, the death of Latjor Tuel in Calgary in the last year. His family was just recently here, I believe, just arrived this week from Africa to pay tribute at long last.

I recognize, Mr. Chair, that this has become a very politically fraught conversation. It is wrapped up in what can only be termed a larger culture war, a lot of people wrapping themselves in a lot of flags, a lot of sloganeering. It has made it difficult in many ways to have the conversations that we really need to have about important changes that need to be made. But what we have in front of us in this bill is, hopefully, some steps that can help to reduce some of that tension. This conversation has been going on for some time, but certainly one point on which all in this conversation are agreed is that police should not be making decisions about police when it comes to a discipline and investigation process. This is one of the most politically fraught aspects of these situations.

When a citizen brings forward a complaint or a concern – indeed, again, this has been a big topic of conversation as we have had these conversations about the impact on racialized communities of policing, the concern that when a citizen brings a complaint forward, that complaint then is considered within the same police department in which the individual to which the complaint is addressed is working. Frankly, what we have heard clearly is that police themselves no longer want to be put in that position, where police officers have to think about how their decision on one of their fellow police members is going to be taken by others within the force. What is the impact that's going to have on relationships? What are the repercussions going to be within there?

They would prefer that this is taken out of their hands and put within an independent body to remove that challenge. Certainly, that is what we hear from citizens and others who have raised concerns about policing, that this should be in the hands of an independent body who themselves will not be influenced by relationships that they may have already and that are pre-existing or biases that may come from being in similar circumstances or knowing these individuals.

That is one of the pieces we indeed see coming forward in this bill, the creation of an independent police commission here in the province of Alberta to handle these complaints. I absolutely support that, Mr. Chair. That is an important and essential step. As I said, I think this is one step that can help to reduce some of the tension in this conversation, if when we have a complaint brought forward, it is considered by a fully independent body that has no connections to the police service or the police officer that is being investigated or against whom the complaint is addressed. That allows for a far more open conversation, that allows for more trust and faith in the decisions that are made, and that allows, hopefully, then, for a better quality of justice and certainly the feeling of a better quality of justice.

Again, Mr. Chair, what we talk about so often when we talk about concerns around conflicts of interest – and that's really what this boils down to – when police are investigating police and holding police accountable, the concern of conflict of interest, is that we must not only have justice be done, but it must be seen to be done. So that means that we go above and beyond to ensure that all involved can be sure that there is no bias in this system. This is important.

You know, when we talk about this, it's easy for, I think, folks to speak up and misconstrue or misunderstand and suggest that by having these conversations or bringing these things forward, people are denigrating police or that by suggesting that there needs to be a heightened level of accountability, we are targeting police. We should be clear. Police are given extraordinary power. In their duty to enforce the law, they are given a wide latitude regarding the use of force, regarding being able to restrain someone, to arrest someone, to place that person in prison. I recognize that there are a number of constraints that are built into that, but the fact is that, if I may revert momentarily to my comic book nerd roots, with great power comes great responsibility.

So if police are granted extraordinary power, there should be an extraordinary system of oversight and accountability. What we are talking about today is what that accountability looks like. I think we are likely all in this Chamber in agreement with having an independent oversight body. That is an important step, and I'm glad that that is being taken.

Now, I would note that there have been some comments about the way this has been structured. A friend of mine, Dr. Temitope Oriola – again, if we're going to talk about and be honest about conflicts of interest, I'll note that Dr. Oriola is a friend of mine. I have a lot of respect for him. We have some good conversations. He provided advice to the previous Minister of Justice, now the Deputy Premier. He was tasked as a special adviser, and he provided a report to the minister at the time. He is speaking now and giving his opinion on this particular bill, and what he has stated about this independent oversight body is that he has raised a concern that, unlike other jurisdictions, unlike what he says is the standard amongst our peer countries around the world, there is no provision that will prevent a former police officer from serving on this commission. Now, again, that is not to suggest it is impossible for a former officer to impartially assess the actions of a current officer.

Again, if we are talking about wanting to ensure that we are eliminating even the appearance of a conflict of interest, if we want to ensure that all communities who were affected by the extraordinary power that is granted to police trust in this independent oversight body, there is a question of whether the involvement of police in that oversight body, whether they are former police officers is appropriate. What we see in other jurisdictions is that they have taken steps to have that not be the case. In this case the government is not choosing to do that. I think that's something that should be under consideration, and Dr. Oriola agrees. The reason is, Mr. Chair, that we have a public perception.

I note a recent story which just came out about an officer in Calgary who was charged and under investigation for his treatment of an individual who was in a wheelchair. Video was released in the court, and just released recently this week, which shows that officer pushing over the gentleman in a wheelchair. He was handcuffed in the wheelchair. The officer pushed him over, stepped on his bare foot, and kicked him in the face. I think we're all in agreement, Mr. Chair, that that is unacceptable behaviour under any circumstance. That is an abuse of the power that is granted to a police officer, so it was appropriate that that was reported then by staff at AHS and that was duly investigated.

Now, that officer has been given, in my understanding, a suspended sentence, but the thing is, Mr. Chair, that at that court trial, where this officer was summarily found guilty of inappropriate behaviour, the news report says that at least 15 Calgary police officers attended the court that day to support that officer. Half a dozen of them were in uniform, and after the court ruling they greeted the officer with smiles, hugs, and handshakes to celebrate the fact that he did not go to prison.

Now, Mr. Chair, the judge noted that at the time of the incident that officer was going through a difficult divorce. I think we've all been in circumstances where we are emotionally vulnerable, where we are in a bad state, where our anger may get the better of us, but in this case this, again, was a police officer with extraordinary power, and he allowed that to override and to physically assault an individual who could not fight back.

The appearance of this, that his fellow officers would arrive at a court case where he was found guilty of that assault and congratulate him on escaping a prison sentence: what message does that send to the broader public? What message does that send to others who have experienced potentially abusive police powers? We know it does happen and it does exist. That is not impugning all police. It is just simply being factual about what we have seen in stories we have seen reported and, unfortunately, reported more often than really should be occurring.

Again, when we have these sorts of situations, one can understand why members of the public who are vulnerable and who statistics show are more likely to experience these sorts of circumstances at the hands of police would have difficulty with the idea that an independent oversight commission that investigates these sorts of incidents should be allowed to have police officers sit on it. When we see, at times, the kind of culture and camaraderie – again, it may simply be a question of these officers not understanding how their actions and their choices in this matter appear to members of the public and people from outside of that culture and that circle. I think we're all familiar with the idea of dome disease, how we ourselves can get caught up in our political culture here and forget sometimes how our actions and words and behaviour can appear to people who are outside of this. Again, I absolutely support the idea of an independent oversight commission, but I indeed share Dr. Oriola's concern that he raises regarding police officers being allowed to serve on this independent oversight commission.

The other piece I would note here is that this government is awarding itself the power to appoint members to municipal police commissions. This is something that some municipal leaders have raised concerns about. Tanya Thorn, the mayor of Okotoks and a board member with Alberta Municipalities, has said that she doesn't love the idea of provincial politicians being able to appoint members of their local police commissions. She notes that those groups need people who understand the local area and its people and policing needs, and there's certainly nothing in the provisions the government is giving itself that says that they have to appoint anybody locally or who knows that community or is involved with that community. What she said was: anything that takes away from our local autonomy as municipalities we always have a concern about.

Of course, Mr. Chair, we've been having some very robust conversation in this Chamber about autonomy and sovereignty and certainly this government's deep concern about anyone taking away its sovereignty and autonomy over areas over which it feels it should have sole jurisdiction, to the point that we have ministers shooting videos using some very interesting old literature that certainly has some questionable commentary about racial history in the province of Alberta. The fact is that I can't help but feel that in some senses this is a government which says one thing and then does another, which sets one standard for itself and has another expectation for others.

Now, the minister did note that in B.C. that is the case – the B.C. government has the ability to appoint members to local police commissions, and that is true – but I would note, Mr. Chair, that it is a very different process. The minister did not note that. It is not the minister by regulation, sitting in his office by stroke of a pen, that simply appoints them; they go through a process, just like we do for independent officers of the Legislature, where a motion is actually brought into the Legislature and in front of all MLAs for consideration before an appointment is made.

We have seen again, repeatedly, that this is a government that likes to try to look for opportunities to give its ministers more power to make these decisions behind closed doors, by the stroke of a pen, without the oversight of the Legislature. Now, this isn't quite the circumstance that we had under Bill 10 or recently was originally in Bill 1, denied by the government for a good while before they finally admitted it was there and amended and took it out, but that said, it is still a circumstance where I think there's reason to question whether this is the appropriate way for the government to do this or even to have the discussion around whether the government should be appointing members of local police commissions at all.

Certainly, I can say, Mr. Chair, as a representative here in Edmonton's downtown and having seen some of the recent conversations at our local city council and with a number of members in our community about the role of policing in our community and how funding is allocated to police or to other folks who may provide similar services or oversight or other options, we have seen a tendency from this government to weigh in with a bit of a heavy hand. Certainly, their recent appointment of a task force to deal with some issues here in the city made it very clear what their opinion is of a good majority of our city council and certainly our mayor. I was accused today by the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction of politicizing the issue. Let me be clear, Mr. Chair. This government chose to politicize that task force by the means by which they put it together and who they chose to include and exclude.

Certainly, I would have some concern that when we have had the sort of government we have had, who has not been afraid to go in and try to interfere with, say, the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, which has targeted the Alberta Medical Association, which has gone on a great crusade about the need for greater oversight of the Alberta teachers and taking those things away from them, certainly treating them much different from how it's choosing to treat police officers, this government could choose to use the powers that it wants to give itself to appoint members of a police commission to attempt more interference.

That said, I do appreciate some of the other aspects that are brought forward in this legislation and some of the other pieces that are being put in place: certainly the requirement for police to develop community public safety plans, report annually on their progress on achieving their goals, report greater public transparency and accountability. Indeed, that's what we attempted to bring forward for our health care system in Bill 201 recently, which this government chose to defeat. Certainly, in principle I agree with having greater data and accountability, the requirement to develop a diversity and inclusion plan, again, having better representation.

I've had the opportunity to attend and speak at a number of police graduations as the MLA for Edmonton-City Centre during the time we were in government and certainly always appreciated seeing growing diversity in the ranks, having the opportunity to be there to see folks from diverse communities stepping up as police officers and seeing the difference that makes. For people to see themselves and have people there who understand those communities can make a real difference in building bridges and building trust between our officers of the law and our local communities.

I think, certainly, the provincial guiding principles respecting human rights, recognizing the history and culture of First Nations, et cetera – I'm sorry the government did not want to accept some of the additional suggestions we had, but certainly those are important, too. I look forward to further debate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to Bill 6? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise once again in the House to speak to Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022. I just wanted to state for the record that I know many of my colleagues have said similar words, that the Alberta NDP supports civilian oversight of law enforcement in order to ensure policing is responsive to the needs and diversity of our communities. There was a time we took some initiatives in this House, and I regretfully remember those moments were not supported by the government House members.

This legislation includes some positive steps, and we welcome this bill in the House. In that regard it is, however, very thin on details regarding how they plan to achieve these goals we are discussing in this bill. The Police Act review was started under the NDP government, and in general this legislation is on the right track, but there are a number of issues that will have to be addressed in a committee for us to support it. There are some questions, concerns. I know many of my colleagues and my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre highlighted those in the House. I just wanted to as well, you know, on behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Meadows who'd like to be on the record.

This bill leaves too many questions to regulations that are not developed. The bill creates new rules and new compositions for police commissions but allows the minister to appoint up to 50 per cent of provincial representatives to the commission, which, in turn, set local policing priorities. One of the main stated goals for the bill is independent oversight, but this bill technically, looking at what it proposes, is centralizing too much power and discretions with the provincial minister.

As I said, the review of the Police Act started under the NDP government, and the UCP state that this legislation is a result of the findings of that review and subsequent report. Interestingly, we did not see the findings of the reports. We will be happy to see if the UCP will share the findings of those reports or just make those reports public. The question is there: what is the rationale for stacking commissions with up to 50 per cent provincial representatives appointed by the minister? A number of the details on the composition of the policing committee are left, again, up to the regulations. Will the impacted communities and municipalities be consulted on regulations as they're being developed? That is the exact same concern we tried to address when the previous, you know, Justice minister actually promised in the House that they will share the Police Act review very soon.

We brought forward a motion addressing a similar mandate, that the antiracism panel should be constructed to talk to, you know, minorities and consult with racialized communities and Indigenous communities and provide a report back to the Legislature, and that was defeated by the government members.

The powers and the duties of the provincial police advisory board will have the duties and functions set out in the regulations. Why is this important work, why are these being left to regulations and therefore subject to the particular will of the government? The advisory board is intended to represent communities served by the RCMP under the provincial police service agreement. According to the materials provided by government, it is not clear how this representation will happen. How many communities are covered under this service agreement? Will the government be consulting with representatives, communities on regulations that will determine eligibility for requirements? Will there be formal changes to require an Alberta agreement with the RCMP K Division?

Proposed section 21 of the bill proposes an amendment to section 30, ministerial intervention, which would allow the minister to intervene with the council. This section of the act already allows the minister to intervene in the instance that adequate or effective policing services are not being maintained or contravening the act or regulations. What other areas does the minister envision needing to direct the council on regarding policing that is not already covered? Would this include requesting the council to amend funding decisions even when there is no increase in funding? Can you point to best practices and examples from jurisdictions where a provincial minister has broad discretion to reach in and set local policing priorities.

Proposed section 22 of the act would amend the responsibilities of a police commission to include two new reporting requirements, reporting of policing priorities and annually or on request reporting of the programs and services to implement these priorities. Will the government be increasing financial support for policing to ensure that councils have the ability to provide adequate resources to the commission to meet the requirements of the act? We have seen that many times the government has brought bills forward and passed the legislation, even in many cases setting the timelines, but did not provide the required amount of resources to implement those legislations.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would like to move an amendment on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall. I think you could probably call this amendment A3. Moved that Bill 6 . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'll just have you send copies to the table, please, and then we'll have you read it. Thank you.

Mr. Deol: Sure. That Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022, be amended as follows . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just wait a moment, please. Thank you.

Mr. Deol: Sure. Okay.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, this will be amendment A3.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows, please go ahead and read it into the record.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Amendment A3 reads that Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022, be amended (a) in section 17(b), in the proposed section 25, by striking out subsections (1.1) and (1.2) and substituting the following:

(1.1) The Minister may appoint additional members to a regional police commission if the Minister considers it necessary, provided that the total number of members appointed by the Minister does not exceed 25% of the total number of commission members.

(b) in section 18 in clause (a), in the proposed section 28, (A) by striking out subsection (2.1) and substituting the following:

(2.1) A commission shall consist of not fewer than 3 nor more than 12 members appointed in accordance with subsections (2.2) and (3).

(B) by striking out subsections (2.3) and (3) and substituting the following:

(3) The Minister may appoint additional members to a commission if the Minister considers it necessary, provided that the total number of members

(a) appointed to the commission does not exceed 12 members, and

(b) appointed by the Minister does not exceed 25% of the total number of commission members.

(ii) in clause (b), by striking out "subsection (2.3)" and substituting "subsection (3)."

Mr. Chair, this amendment reduces the ability of the minister to appoint 50 per cent from the bill, down to 25 per cent to the police commission. This appointment of authority over the operation and oversight of policing should not be centralized with the minister. In particular, it makes no sense to limit municipal representation so significantly, especially given the cuts to municipal funding and downloaded policing costs.

This amendment also reverts to the 12-member police commissions. We do not support the blatant overreach of the power that the bill in its current form is proposing. This amendment ensures that local voices are the majority at the table in police commissions.

With that, Mr. Chair, I would request all House members to support this amendment A3. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Anyone else wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has the floor.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to rise this evening to speak to such an important amendment and important piece of legislation. As has been mentioned by previous speakers, it is a piece of legislation that has been long coming and one that was initiated by a review that was begun under the NDP in 2018. The UCP, of course, has stated that this legislation is a result of findings of that review and subsequent reports, so we certainly would like to see that report being made public by the UCP and finding out if indeed that report did show what the rationale was for stacking the commissions with up to 50 per cent of provincial representatives appointed by the minister.

The basics of the amendment, Mr. Chair, are to actually get at the concern that we have in the opposition about the percentage of commission members that the minister would be able to appoint, thus affecting the perception of the public in terms of the impartiality of the commission. That's at the root of the concern, I think, of all parliamentarians here in the Legislature when it comes to amending the Police Act, because we are in a time of extreme stress on the reputation of the police not only in our province and our country but throughout the western world, where it is deemed that the police need to really take a close look at how they relate to the public in terms of protection of rights versus the perception of somebody is guilty before – you know, everybody seems to be a guilty party till proven innocent.

Mr. Chair, the police have a rather special obligation – and it seems to have been lost in recent years – to uphold to a higher level a perception of impartiality to the public, and that, I think, is something we're revisiting, hopefully, with this amendment by ensuring that the minister is limited to a 25 per cent total number of commission members that he or she has the ability to appoint. Public trust is absolutely sacrosanct when it comes to many things, and it really, really includes the police. The public has to know that when they are subject to any type of disorder, when criminal activity is found in their neighbourhoods, when indeed we find that there's a threat to our democratic rights, the police can be counted on to be impartial protectors of the law.

When it gets to a police commission hearing, Mr. Chair, if indeed the component membership of a police commission is not deemed in its inception to have been fair, then, of course, the public faith and public trust in the outcome of the commission's findings when they are considering the conduct of police and disciplinary actions will be suspect as well, and that's something we cannot allow to happen. So it's very, very critical that we make sure that we don't do anything that's going to cause the public to have misgivings about the very process we are about to formulate here in this House by setting the terms of membership for police commissions. Giving the minister the ability to appoint up to 50 per cent of the provincial reps is, I think, too much. This amendment serves to restore public faith in the process and to ensure that they believe the police commission will be an impartial body.

We've gotten to a point, Mr. Chair, where when we hear on the news that a police officer has been either charged or has been accused of misconduct in a particular incident, the public doesn't expect the police officer ever to be found guilty, where there's an expectation of innocence, not necessarily of innocence but the expectation that the officer will be absolved of responsibility or guilt. The expectation of the conviction of a police officer is not something the public has. There's no surprise expressed by almost any member of the public now when a police officer is absolved of responsibility in a situation where they were accused of misconduct. We can look at the case law and look at the numbers and find that it's pretty well documented that the highest percentage of cases do not result in convictions or findings of wrongdoing against police officers. That in and of itself has led to a diminished level of public trust in the whole system of police oversight, public oversight of police officers. That, I hope, is something that the government is really wanting to address and rectify, because it's something that I can't imagine the police would want otherwise as well.

Police officers are part and parcel of many families of members of this Legislature, and you don't have to go very far beyond anybody's family to know that there are police officers close to one's family. They live amongst us, and we are grateful for their service, but they would be the first ones to know that the public trust is what they need to have in order to function properly. Often you hear it said that the police officer's best defence is their mouth, in other words talking. You don't gain somebody's trust without being able to communicate properly. At the very basic street level – I'm sure most police officers will agree – if that initial trust isn't there, then you've got a much more difficult job ahead of you to form relationships which will help you in your policing on the street or at higher level investigations.

The limitations that we are proposing in this amendment, Mr. Chair, will go a long ways to ensuring that the public trust in the whole process is encouraged or is augmented by the changes to the Police Act that we are contemplating under Bill 6. I hesitate to say that this in and of itself will cure the lack of trust that many people have in the oversight system that we have in this province of the police services. I think that if indeed we would have had a different composition of police commission members, we might have ended up, potentially, with different outcomes and findings in some of the cases that have been before them in the most recent years and even in past years. We shouldn't be in a judgment situation in a police commission hearing where the outcome is almost going before it, where there is no expectation that there may be a finding of guilt.

I know that those who are in more vulnerable populations than myself certainly have about zero faith in ever having a police officer found guilty of misconduct. The cases are so rare that they actually make much bigger news than the cases of police acquittal. That's not to say that the system is totally broken, but it certainly has lost the public trust that it needs to have in order to function properly.

As has been noted by the Member for Edmonton-City Centre, police officers will be the first ones to say that they are not comforted by being judge and jury. They don't want to have an overabundance of members on a commission, and they want the public trust in the whole process. The last thing that police officers want is a disconnect between themselves and the public, because once that trust is gone, their job is almost impossible to do.

Their job is a difficult one. I've been on a ride-along. That was a one-day contract for a dollar when I was a volunteer in the Solicitor General's court intake unit. That in and of itself was a bit of an eye-opener. But there are police officers in my family. My sister is married to an RCMP officer who is retired now after 25 years, so I've had that through him and his experiences and those of his brother, who's a city constable, now retired, and many others who I grew up with in Edmonton. I think half of the recruited members for the years 1975 to 1980 probably came from my neighbourhood of Wellington Park under the Edmonton Police Service, because as we go down the street, there were – I don't know – 10 or 12 members from my graduating class that actually went into the Police Service.

There's a large understanding that, you know, police officers are us and that we are them but not necessarily in communities that are found closer to the inner city. We certainly see that the police officers are underrepresented when it comes to people of colour, minorities, Indigenous populations, and that's an ongoing problem that police organizations are attempting to address. But there's a lot – a lot – of work that needs to be done, and part of it is because of this trust issue, Mr. Chair, that we need to address and that we hope to address in part by the amendment that we're contemplating this evening by making sure that the complement of individuals that can be appointed by the minister to police commissions is limited to 25 per cent rather than the 50 per cent that the bill has in place currently.

I encourage members to take a serious look at this amendment, realize that it is put forward in very good faith, that it is an idea that wasn't drafted up over coffee just before we got here. It's something that we feel strongly about on this side of the House, and I think that it should be accepted by other members of this Legislature and the government members as a very respectful and carefully considered amendment that will help heal the trust issue that exists in Alberta between the public and the police.

The attempts that have been made in the past to do this perhaps have been stymied by some of the issues of the membership makeup of police commissions, and I hope that the goal of the government isn't to centralize the appointment process so that it rests primarily with the minister to appoint police commissions although that seems to be part of the underlying philosophy. The local nature of police commissions, I think, is their strength, is something that they have a long-standing tradition of, and I don't think it's a problem that needs to be solved. I think that the minister is perhaps creating another problem that didn't have to be created and creating another source of distrust with the public by reserving unto himself or herself the ability to nominate or appoint 50 per cent of the members of a police commission. I can't think that it was anything but a deliberate attempt, and I hope they will reconsider, chat amongst themselves as a caucus, and come up in support of this amendment and look at it in the spirit in which it was brought forward.

I don't know if there are any other members who wish to speak to this amendment. I'd like to encourage members on the other side to do so because I'd like to hear their opinions as to our well-considered offer of limiting the percentage of members to a police commission that a minister might appoint. I think I see members opposite rushing to stand to speak, so I'll yield my seat.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. chief government whip has risen.

Mr. Rutherford: Oh, the many titles tonight, Mr. Chair. Thank you. First off, I just want to agree that public trust is extremely important, that being impartial is extremely important, but when we're talking about public trust, I think that you can damage public trust by openly speculating that if only there were different people at the time, there would have been different outcomes in a conviction. Without more examples – I don't doubt that they exist, but I think that talking about it like a disciplinary hearing or going before a judge is a predetermined outcome just isn't accurate. There probably are examples of it, but I think that to say that they are all like that just isn't true.

8:40

People's perceptions, though, may be of that, and I think we need to work on that. But I think that how we phrase it we need to be somewhat careful on so that we're just not perpetuating that misconception. I know officers who have been before disciplinary hearings, who have gotten in trouble, who've had additional training, who have been fined, who have been fired – that all exists – people who have been convicted of crimes. These things all happen, and I think we need to make sure that the public is aware that when somebody is performing poorly or they do something egregious or something criminal, they should be held accountable for that. I think we can all agree on that.

I just want to highlight, though, that in regard to this amendment it says that if they're appointing more members, it has to remain less than 50 per cent. In section 17 it already lays out the number of members that the minister can appoint. It keeps it below 50 per cent. I don't agree that the minister of public safety – we know who it is today – five years from now or 10 years from now is simply going to use that mechanism to be able to skew outcomes. I just don't agree with that. I think that there are enough checks and balances in our system to make sure that those people who are appointed to that are vetted, are watched, and that if there are issues, it is dealt with. I just wanted to add that.

I think that having provincial appointments to these boards is important as well because we are looking at a province-wide complaints system. Having some provincial input and feedback to the province can be helpful in making sure that the system is working for the public.

The Deputy Chair: Other members wishing to ask questions or add comments to amendment A3?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the main bill, Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022. Anyone looking to add to the debate? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak in committee to Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022. It's unfortunate that these amendments continue to be defeated. It was my hope, I think, that this new front bench and new sort of collection of people that are in charge would be a little bit more open to making their legislation better or working with the opposition to try to make it better, and that just doesn't seem to be the case, which is unfortunate.

In any event, what I would like to say and add my voice to what my colleagues have said is that it is profoundly disappointing, Mr. Chair, that this government has once again demonstrated that they basically have earplugs or earbuds or whatever you want to call it in their ears and that they are just not listening to Albertans. I think Albertans have been very, very clear over the last while – I don't recall the exact date where the UCP started to talk about a provincial police force, but I think Albertans on the whole have been fairly clear that it's not something they're interested in. I think organizations like Alberta Municipalities, Rural Municipalities of Alberta have been fairly straightforward and fairly clear that this is not their priority. So it is unfortunate but not too surprising that we see once again that the UCP is just unwilling to hear from Albertans and hear what they want.

It's been significant opposition, so let me just put on the record once again that in the community that I represent, which is St. Albert, the mayor and council and the people of St. Albert have been crystal clear that this is not something that they're interested in pursuing. They are quite satisfied with the way things are right now in St. Albert, and they have some really heavy priorities for the next few years, over the next few years, as all municipalities do. They have numerous challenges, and they recognize, as do others, Mr. Chair, that there's a huge cost, there's a huge price tag to this.

But this UCP government doesn't seem to be too concerned about spending a lot of money, spending a lot of taxpayer money on things that Albertans, taxpayers don't actually want, you know, like a pipeline to nowhere because they're betting on Trump getting re-elected or a ridiculous war room, yet they'll tell disabled Albertans that they need to tighten their belts because we're having rough financial times right now, so they're going to deindex their measly little disability pension, and they just need to suck it up. But you know what? Provincial police force? No problem; we got the money for that. That is unfortunate.

St. Albert has been very clear, the mayor and council have been very clear that this is not something they're interested in. I think they've also been very clear that there has been very little to zero consultation with the communities that will be impacted, and St. Albert is one of those communities. We don't have a St. Albert police force. Well, we actually use the RCMP, and there's actually a terrific relationship with the RCMP on the whole.

I think they have done a lot of work over the last few years, and as I'm going to sort of touch on some of the work that they've done, I would just like to thank the women and men who serve in St. Albert, the RCMP detachment in St. Albert. I have had a chance to meet with their commander and the women and men that work there, and I think they do extraordinary work. Certainly, it's always in the news when we hear about problems or those bad apples or officers that are choosing to do things that are against the law. But for the most part the people in St. Albert, anyway – I'm deeply grateful for their service, and I'm thankful that they're there when we need them, and they're always there when we need them in St. Albert. Again I thank the women and men who serve with the RCMP.

One of the things that this bill purports to do – as I was looking through some of the notes about this particular bill, you know, it almost seems like a bit of an afterthought, Mr. Chair. I like it. I'm not going to say that I don't like it because I actually appreciate that it's in here. One of the things that the legislation – it would require police to develop diversity and inclusion plans. That's awesome. That's fantastic. I think that developing diversity and inclusion plans is terrific. But I find it really, really strange that this particular government has paid so little attention to supporting diversity and inclusion in their other work, yet this is something that they feel is so important.

Now I'm just going to give you a really small example of that. Now, inclusion can include all kinds of things. I guess that's the whole point of the word: it's a bit of an action word; it's a verb in some instances. But it requires measurement. It requires a goal, and it requires measurement, and it requires thoughtful evaluation, and then it requires more work. In the portfolio that I am fortunate to be critic for, Seniors, Community and Social Services, inclusion is vitally important. It is vitally important in education, in health care, in every area, really.

But what this government has failed to do – and we know this because we have been repeatedly asking questions to different ministries through Public Accounts for years now, Mr. Chair. When we're in session, every single Tuesday morning there we are, asking questions of officials of different ministries. Of course, as you can imagine, frequently my questions are around inclusion and diversity and about measures. "You say that you have spent this many millions in Advanced Education to promote the education and therefore future employment of people with disabilities. That's terrific that you're investing all these millions. Where are your metrics? Are they getting employed after finishing, after graduating? Are they graduating? At what rate?" But we don't get any of that because this government doesn't seem really interested in doing a deep dive. Certainly, to see this mentioned in a piece of legislation, diversity and inclusion: great idea, love it, love it, would love to see it everywhere. But, Mr. Chair, I'm a little disappointed that their track record is so sad.

I will have a chance to stand up a little later and chat a bit more, but I'm going to talk about the policing committee in St. Albert. This act proposes a number of changes to work with committees, but St. Albert is so far ahead in this work in terms of their goals and their plans and their monitoring and their reporting. Their reporting to council and the community is transparent and open. Why I will spend some time focusing on that is because it is very clear, when you see what is in this bill and the plans that this government has, that they have not done the consultation they need to do. Otherwise, they would know better.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you.

8:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other members wishing to add to debate on the main bill? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has risen.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 6 in Committee of the Whole. This is my first opportunity to speak to this bill, so I'm just going to make some broad comments initially, and then I do have an amendment to introduce.

I'll make some comments to begin with, starting with: Bill 6 does have some positive steps inside of it. Certainly, the Alberta NDP supports civilian oversight of law enforcement. We need to make sure that policing is responsive to the needs of our community. The Police Act and its revisions is something that's been a priority both under the NDP government, when a review was started – and that work has continued through under the UCP government, where this legislation has been introduced. Now, there are a number of issues with Bill 6 that, through the Committee of the Whole process, the Official Opposition is trying to address. Now, often we see legislation that leaves too much to regulations that are not yet developed – that is a common theme with the government in the legislation we've seen introduced over the last three years – and we see that again here.

We've introduced a number of amendments that I think would have materially improved Bill 6 and done some very important things, starting with amendment A1, which we talked about earlier today, enshrining the principles of intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed practice into Alberta's police services, making sure that these principles are included, because we know they are key to creating a safe community for everyone. That amendment would have ensured that intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed practices were a cornerstone for community safety and policing structures. Certainly, I know a lot of my colleagues spoke significantly towards that earlier today.

We also offered amendment A2, talking about making sure that the jurisdiction of police commissions for review of the conduct of a police officer is protected as well as just recognizing that, in line with other professions and other regulated bodies like, for example, the medical profession – making sure that an individual cannot avoid justice by quitting, being fired, or moving to a different police force: that was amendment A2.

Amendment A3, which I thought my hon. colleagues from Edmonton-Meadows and Edmonton-McClung did an excellent job putting forward – really, seeing the minister appoint up to 50 per cent of the members of these boards is quite concerning, particularly in an environment where municipal governments are having some of their influence damaged by the downloading of costs and the budget pressures that are being put on. Having that oversight and operation centralized to the minister does not make sense. That amendment would have reverted to the 12-member police commission and not really put forward some of the overreach we see, because we really want local voices to be a majority at the table of the police commission.

Again, there are some positive steps that this bill is attempting to move forward on, but there's a lot of concern about the details in the implementation.

With some of those introductory comments, I would like to put an amendment on the record, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

This will be amendment A4.

If you could read it into the record for us, please.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022, be amended in section 29, in the proposed section 43, as follows: (a) in subsection (1) (i) by adding “Subject to subsections (2) and (2.1),” immediately before “The chief executive officer of the Police Review Commission shall” and (ii) by striking out “one year” and substituting “2 years”; (b) by adding the following immediately after subsection (2):

(2.1) The chief executive officer of the Police Review Commission must not dismiss any Level 2 or Level 3 complaint under subsection (1) if the complaint relates to

- (a) sexual assault or battery,
- (b) any misconduct of a sexual nature, other than a sexual assault or battery, if, when the subject matter of the complaint occurred,
  - (i) the complainant was a minor,
  - (ii) the complainant was in an intimate relationship with the person who is the subject of the complaint,
  - (iii) the complainant was dependant, whether financially, emotionally, physically or otherwise, with the person who is the subject of the complaint, or
  - (iv) the complainant was a person under disability.

(c) by striking out subsection (4) and substituting the following:

(4) If a complainant in a Level 2 or Level 3 complaint refuses or fails to participate in an investigation, the chief executive officer of the Police Review Commission may dismiss the complaint if

- (a) the complainant has been provided with a reasonable opportunity to participate in the investigation, and
- (b) the chief executive officer is satisfied that the refusal or failure of the complainant to participate is not the result of intimidation by the person who is the subject of the complaint.

Mr. Chair, this amendment is doing two distinct things. First, you will note that in section (a) it is striking out “one year” and substituting “2 years,” so aligning the time limit on filing a complaint against a police officer with the statute of limitations on similar conduct for wrongdoing that is not of a criminal nature. We are putting forward this amendment quite seriously and after a great deal of consideration because it's very important for Albertans to have access to justice in all its forms. Increasing the time limit for the filing of complaints against police officers is in line with the values of ensuring there's access to justice as well as aligning with other time limits for filing complaints against a police officer.

Certainly, we understand that when someone experiences wrongdoing, it can take time to process a situation, to understand what's happening, to understand the impacts, or even to understand what the course of justice can look like, because it may not always be easily accessible or understood for someone who has been a victim or is involved in a complaint like this. I think that the move from one year to two years is a reasonable and measured choice to make. If the government is not supportive, I would be very interested in hearing any specific or detailed reasons on the difference between one year versus two years, because the extended timeline, to me, would provide access to justice, does assist someone who has potentially been a victim or is a complainant, and, I think, makes good sense.

Now, the second part of this amendment is also incredibly important – that is part (b) – because it essentially removes the timeline entirely when there is a complaint that relates to sexual assault or battery or misconduct of a sexual nature when the complainant was a minor; when the complainant was in an intimate relationship with the person who is the subject; when the complainant was a dependant, whether financially, emotionally, physically, or otherwise; or a person under disability. Specifically talking about someone who was the victim of sexual assault or battery or misconduct of a sexual nature, I think we need to recognize and acknowledge the distinct trauma that happens to an individual who has been victimized by these types of crimes and the reasons why sometimes it can take years before someone is prepared to come forward and to report these crimes. This is known, and we have adjusted legislation in this very Chamber to acknowledge the trauma that can happen and to extend timelines when it comes to the criminal nature of these types of incidents.

9:00

Here we are asking for those timelines to be removed when we are talking about this complaint process as part of Bill 6, and this again, like I said with section (a) and section (b), aligns the complaint procedure time limits with the same statute of limitations that ensures police officers are held to the same standards of justice as lay people.

I know I have other colleagues who would like to speak to this, so I will conclude my remarks with that, only to say that I hope that the government will seriously consider the context and the situations that we are talking about with this amendment A4, because I think this is one where we can come to an agreement and improve Bill 6 when it comes to the complaint timelines. We'd be pleased to work with the government to be successful with amendment A4.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A4? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in support of the amendment just proposed by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. I've already placed on the record this evening my thoughts about why it's critically important that we remove any limitation period related to allegations of sexual assault, sexual battery, sexual violence against a police officer. This is a very thoughtful amendment that's meant to align with, really, measures that were already taken when we were in government to remove limitation periods for complainants to bring forward claims of sexual violence in civil court. It does not need to be said again that it is very clearly established, the multiple layers of challenges of bringing timely sexual assault allegations, for a variety of very complex reasons.

I will come back, Mr. Chair, to the example of Sean Chu, a city councillor. If this Assembly will note, the allegations that actually were founded and were the basis of reprimand of councillor Chu when he was a police officer were because of sexual conduct that was made against a minor, a 16-year-old, in 1997. Now, I believe in this circumstance that young woman was incredibly brave and came forward with those allegations quite quickly, but one can imagine a 16-year-old may not be in a position to be able to bring forward such an explosive allegation against a police officer, somebody in a position not only of trust but of power. I think we can all imagine how many young people would not be able to bring forward an allegation like that, particularly not within a year. A year from when this incident took place, that young woman was only 17. We cannot expect that somebody who has suffered sexual violence from a police officer should only have a year to bring forward that complaint, again, not for criminal proceedings but for disciplinary purposes against a police officer.

This is simply, I believe, a common-sense amendment. As my colleague mentioned, we are absolutely willing to work with government to make this happen. We are simply wanting clarity that there is no limitation period for a complaint to be made against a police officer on the basis of sexual assault or sexual battery. This is the decent thing to do. Again, it is about ensuring that the public can have trust in its police, that there is accountability, and that we continue to respect those police officers who do conduct themselves by professional standards and perform their duties well to serve Albertans and their local communities as well. We owe them as well an obligation to make sure that when there are police officers who do not conduct themselves in that way, there is accountability. It ensures that the public has faith in those who are protecting them.

I just simply wanted to add my comments once again to say, please – I sincerely hope that the government members will consider this amendment in the thoughtful way that it has been presented and that they'll work with us to find a way to make this happen.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Anyone else wishing to speak to amendment A4? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you, truly, to my colleagues who have spoken tonight on Bill 6 and on the amendments. I tweeted about it. I just noted that – just really proud to be able to serve with colleagues who are, you know, just sharing such eloquent thoughts. My colleague from Edmonton-City Centre brought forth a lot of really powerful ideas related to the impacts on racialized communities, and of course he's done some really great work, which you can find at Alberta's Future, including his work on race-based data, and my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud, of course. Yeah. I'm going to echo a few of her comments here shortly but, again, particularly her comments around police accountability and her very apt and timely example of city councillor Sean Chu.

Okay. This amendment that we have in front of us is a really, really important one. Like my colleague to the left of me, I too want to urge the members of this Chamber to collaborate with us and to really consider the power of this amendment. As was noted, this amendment aligns the time limit on filing a complaint against a police officer with the statute of limitations on similar conduct and increases the time limit for two years that is not of a criminal nature. What that essentially means is that, you know, there won't be a time limit at all when it comes to, say, sexual assault.

I want to just bring this Chamber back to conversations that we had in this very House starting in about – I should've checked the timing on this, but for sure starting in early 2021, related to victims of crime. Bill 16, I believe – I still don't remember the bill name, but time is confusing, as you all know, being in a pandemic. Victims of crime was a piece of legislation that we pushed back against because one of the things that it did was it narrowed the window for survivors to report. We talked about it. We stood up. We had people – I remember I talked to two young women on social media who were willing to share their stories, and they basically said incredibly powerful stories. One of them, who'd never shared her experience of horrific sexual assault, shared it publicly in the hopes that this government would change their mind, so that they would remove that window. They didn't. They didn't.

However, fast-forward two-plus years, we've seen, through some of the consultations that have been done on victims of crime, that they've reversed that decision, which was the right thing to do. It should never have been done in the first place. But the point is, bringing it back to this amendment, that we know that survivors need time. They need time, and that's a fact. You know, this government, this current minister responsible for status of women, that fellow has gone on the record even just today talking about gender-based violence and talking about how his government is taking this seriously, and I applaud that. I support that. We need to see investments. We need to see investments in housing, in prevention. The list goes on. I support that. But this is an opportunity today to show that you really are serious about sexual violence and sexual assault.

I assure you, Mr. Chair, that I won't refer to the presence or absence of members, but I must say that, you know, today I've seen the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, the Member for Chestermere-Strathmore, both of whom held the role of minister of status of women. I would love – I haven't heard them speak. Again, not saying whether or not they're in this Chamber right now. I haven't heard them speak, however, and I'd love to hear them stand up and speak to the importance of this amendment. They might not hold those titles now, but they can be leaders. I know both of them. I remember speaking to both of those individuals in their roles, and I'm not putting it just on them as women – absolutely not – but they both held those roles. I spoke to both of them about the importance of addressing sexual violence and gender-based violence, and I know both of them took that seriously. That's my call to folks who I know care about these issues, to put a little bit of action behind the words that they've shared with me.

The case of Sean Chu is a horrific example, and I don't want to talk about him too much more, but what a perfect case study in why we need to amend Bill 6 and why all of us working together can do the right thing, not just for the survivor involved in that situation but for future survivors as well.

Like I said, I've had the opportunity to hear from a lot of survivors in my role as the critic for status of women and 2SLGBTQ-plus people. That's a reminder to me as well that, again, we're not just talking about women who are survivors or victims of sexual assault or sexual violence. We know that members of the 2SLGBTQ-plus community are disproportionately impacted.

We know, as an example, that racialized trans folks experience the highest levels of violence and discrimination. We know that Indigenous women experience far higher levels of violence and discrimination than their Caucasian counterparts here in Canada.

We know that Alberta has the second-highest number of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls, right? So we've got a lot – we've got a lot – we need to work on here in Alberta. We do. I know that everybody in this House is aware of that.

I heard the Minister of Indigenous Relations stand in this House and deliver a powerful statement, and in his statement he, too, talked about the need to address violence against Indigenous women, and using the words – I think the words that I've used way too many times in this House and many of you as well who've delivered either ministerial or members' statements, saying that words aren't enough. We need action, right? I know I'm a broken record on that.

Fortunately, in my role as an opposition MLA I do have to use words a lot, and I do have to urge this government to do the right thing and to, in this case, accept our amendment. I'm hopeful they will. I've heard a rumour that they're looking at it and that they are assessing it. I won't presuppose the outcome of this House, but that makes me hopeful. I'd also love to see, you know, perhaps more members speak to not just this amendment but the bill broadly. I've heard both in second reading and in committee as well a lot of really important questions being asked around Bill 6 and, you know, not getting a lot of answers.

I can again say – and I know that I'm obviously biased – that, you know, on this side of the House we've done a lot of consultation. We've done a lot of consultation with racialized communities, with women, with the 2SLGBTQ-plus community. So it's not just us. It's not just me, a White cisgender woman with a whole heck of a lot of privilege, asking you to do the right thing; it's all of us.

Mr. Chair, I would just really urge this entire House to do the right thing tonight and to support us in this amendment. Thank you for listening.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you to the hon. member.

Looking for others wishing to speak to the amendment. I see the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I think that the members opposite have made some good points. I don't disagree with that. In my time in policing it can take victims of sexual violence many years if not decades to come forward and to report an incident that has occurred to them. Some early on don't want to be retraumatized. They are intimidated. There are many factors for that individual that might dictate when and how they decide to come forward.

I'd like to just point out that subsection (2) says, "Despite subsection (1), the chief executive officer of the Police Review Commission may extend the time for making a complaint in accordance with the regulations." I know that the members opposite often say, "Well, we don't see the regulations" or "We don't trust what the minister is going to put in the regulations." Okay. I would, you know, take those arguments back. But at the same time, when they bring up the Sean Chu incident, would two years have been enough at this point? Are we looking for something further or something broader in regulation that can be more flexible in making sure that we are capturing different circumstances that are coming up as well?

I think the purpose of this is to address this in regulation, as I understand it, and that would provide further flexibility later on as well to be able to make changes as needed, keeping and respecting the fact that there are many victims who take a long time to come forward. It also doesn't absolve anybody of a criminal charge either. If they've committed a crime, this one year does not apply to that. Those charges can still come at any time.

With that, Mr. Chair, I will take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Others wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the government responding on this. I will say that what it sounds like: rather than removing timelines for someone who is potentially the victim of sexual assault or battery, they are asking that person to go through additional hoops to get an exemption to a process that by default they would potentially try to make a complaint, be told that the timeline has expired, and then have to do additional work. That's the type of barrier that this amendment is trying to avoid, in line with what we've seen for other court processes in other legislation. I appreciate the government's response, but it does not address what we are trying to do here: increasing access to justice and recognizing the impact of these types of traumatic incidents when it comes to somebody reporting and seeking that justice.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

I see the hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont has risen.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I don't want to see the regulations put in additional hoops either. I think it needs to be clear what the expectations are so that that is also clear to the public.

The one to two years: making that the cap, then, would put additional – if there are additional hoops, they would then come at the two-year-plus mark. The regulations need to cover these kinds of things off – I don't disagree – but I think that the regulations could provide the flexibility necessary to ensure that if there are barriers that are coming up, they can be quickly changed, and we are respecting the fact that intimate partner violence or sexual violence can take people a very long time to come forward with. They will come forward in their own time, in their own way, and we just need to make sure that we are as flexible as possible and make sure that that can still be reported, respected, and dealt with as well.

The Deputy Chair: Others wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I'll just be quick. Thank you very much for this discussion, and thank you to our government members for answering back to you.

I think one of the things that is really important, particularly when we're talking about the Sean Chu incident, is that multiple times this person went back to try and actually change the course of that situation. What's happening right now is that we're actually giving parameters around the work that actually has to be done initially, which I think actually changes the outcome, particularly in that situation. She was 16 when it first happened, so she had no advocacy. On top of that, we have coercive control, which means that you have a person in a position of power holding that over a young person.

There are several things that need to happen, but if we don't have timelines and parameters to actually make this happen – the regulation, in my opinion, will actually help to set the standard for how it is that we come forward with this information. The biggest issue we had in that particular situation and others who are dealing with domestic violence and sexual assault is like the member said: they come forward in their own time. But for those who are coming forward, who find the strength to come forward initially, at that beginning part there has to be a way for the system to be actually able to manage and help out initially. That's how the system failed this particular person who was assaulted when she was 16.

I really think that this is a great jumping-off point to understand, and I think as we go forward and understand how it's going to – I mean, unfortunately, when we're dealing with this, the person is already a survivor. The act has already been perpetrated. There have to be parameters around being able to actually get action done initially, because that's how we failed this person initially.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the main bill, Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022. I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has risen.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity just to say a few brief words. As I mentioned earlier, I was looking forward to this legislation coming forward. It's been a long time coming. There are some very important things here for many communities I have spoken with in terms of addressing some long-standing issues and making some very important updates in how we approach policing in the province of Alberta.

It has been disappointing to see government members turn down every amendment we have brought forward, some reasonable amendments around providing more time for folks who are in particular situations such as having suffered sexual assault or are a minor or other things to add more time to be able to report, to making changes to the number of individuals the minister would be able to appoint to a commission, to ensuring that a police officer could not simply choose to move to a different jurisdiction to escape a disciplinary hearing.

Ultimately, other concerns have been raised by folks in the community. Indeed, I know that one Treaty 6 chief has spoken out saying that this bill would alter their relationship with law enforcement and that they had not been consulted by this government on that. So while there are elements of this bill that certainly I support, I feel that at this point in principle I cannot vote in favour. Certainly, I recognize that this government has a majority and has the ability to move forward with those portions, so things like an independent investigatory body, despite the concerns I have, will still have the opportunity to move forward in the province of Alberta. But, again, on point of principle, I feel that I cannot vote in favour of this legislation. But should we have the opportunity to form government in the next election, I certainly would look forward to being able to make some of those changes and improve on this act.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other members wishing to speak to Bill 6?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 2

Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Chair: Anyone wishing to provide comments, questions, or amendments? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has risen.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to rise again in Committee of the Whole, this time to speak to Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. You know, I mentioned this in my comments in second reading, and I think it needs to be said again, because there is no doubt about it that this is one of the most pressing issues that Albertans have been speaking about, which is affordability. When we think about the rise in inflation – and this is not a surprise. We've seen this happening for well over a year now. There are lots of complex reasons for that. One of the things that, when I'm door-knocking in my constituency and, actually, many other constituencies across the province, I talk about: we need to be having thoughtful and more fulsome conversations about what exactly are the causes and sources of inflation as well as what we can do to address them. I always say that any provincial politician who's going to stand at your door and tell you that they're going to solve global inflation is not being honest with you. These are complex issues as a result of lots of geopolitical factors, including, obviously, the horrific war on Ukraine, the supply chain issues going back to the pandemic. There are lots of complex reasons.

But what provincial elected officials can do are two things, Mr. Chair. It's what I keep telling my constituents. One thing is that we can certainly ensure that we do not make things more expensive for Albertans. We do not increase the things that we have control over such as things like car insurance, things such as utility. Where we have the capacity to make things less expensive, we should also do that. The two things are: don't make things more expensive, and when you can make them less expensive, do so. Pretty simple. Put more money into the pockets of Albertans. That's what they care about right now. They are not seeing their wages and income go up the same way. We have to be really certain that we are focused on those issues right now because that's what Albertans are focused on.

Knowing those two things, you know, we have to look at the various choices that this government has made to date that have added costs on. They did not cause inflation – I'm not going to stand here and say that because that is not true – but this government has done a number of things to make things more expensive for Albertans, not just in this high inflationary period that we've seen over the last year but prior to that, in many, many ways that we've all spoken about quite often in this House.

You know, we saw, of course, the removal of the tuition cap freeze. We saw the removal of utility caps, of car insurance caps. I know Albertans and I know Edmontonians are feeling this right now and Calgarians are feeling this because of the massive underfunding and cuts to municipalities. Albertans across this province are seeing their municipal taxes go up because municipalities do not, and should not, have the ability to be able to carry debt. Because of that, they do not have enough revenue to provide services. Therefore, they are in many situations forced not only to increase property taxes but to now cover through their taxes things that the UCP are no longer funding. We've seen downloaded costs onto municipalities for so many things, including, you know, policing, which we were just speaking about in the previous bill debate, Mr. Chair.

We also know school fees have gone up. We had a limit on school fees when we were in government. We've seen all of these costs – oh, and tuition. Let's not even talk about tuition. Actually, let's talk about tuition because so many students are seeing their tuition astronomically increase over the last few years, Mr. Chair. Why is that? Because this government does not value and does not support and does not invest in our postsecondary system.

You know, this used to be a place where Alberta would have high-quality postsecondary institutions and they'd have low tuition. It was a perfect opportunity to really attract and draw people to Alberta postsecondaries for our outstanding programs. I myself am a proud graduate from the University of Alberta. It is heartbreaking for me to see not only the cuts that have been instituted by this government on the University of Alberta – I'm so proud to have graduated from there – but to see the effect that that has on so many of the staff who work at the University of Alberta and, of course, directly on students as well.

Affordability. I already think that this government has broken the first rule, which is: don't make things more expensive. They've done it in a number of ways. And then we said: let's bring down costs where we can. This is where I think Bill 2 comes into play, where it's clearly an attempt by the government to put some more money back into Albertans' pockets. Now, we've already indicated we support measures to do that, but it is our job to stand here and call to account how the government has chosen to deliver that. We see some serious challenges in the way that the affordability programs are proposed to be implemented and what's set out in Bill 2.

We have raised already in this House, and I will continue to do so, how many Albertans are excluded from these supports. So many Albertans, 2 million, don't receive the direct $100 per month supports that are outlined in this bill. Now, some of those Albertans, of course, will be well over the $180,000 income threshold. I think we can agree that that's probably not appropriate, to provide financial supports where it's not needed, but the problem is that there are a significant number of Albertans who are in need who do not qualify, who have single incomes but who don't have children. Maybe they even have double incomes but don't have children, so for some reason their struggles are not of value to this government. They're not seen. They're not even visible to this government. They're apparently told to make do. If they drive, because not all of them do – if we think about, for example, postsecondary students, they take transit – they may get some relief from fuel tax exemptions, but that's only if they drive. Many of them don't. That's not a direct input into their bank account, which is what they need. They actually need to have some additional support.

I'll add, Mr. Chair, that we know that there are a number of seniors who do need this support, and that's fantastic, but there are some who don't, yet they're captured by this program. It is not responsible stewardship of taxpayer dollars to be giving this money and this support to people who don't need it but excluding so many who do. So I will continue to raise those concerns about that issue.

Then, just as we saw with I believe it was Bill 4, which is before this House still – maybe it's passed. I'm not even sure. [interjection] It's still before this House. That's to reverse this government's terrible decision, which was, I would say, the first domino to really fall and have significant implications on the stability of our health care system during a pandemic and now in the worst pediatric health care crisis that we've seen in a long time in this province. That first domino was this government's decision under Bill 21 to unilaterally have the ability to terminate doctors' contracts. They're trying to reverse that now, but they've already exercised that authority. They've already unilaterally broken that contract. They were just trying to – well, I guess they've used it. They did what they wanted to do with it, and now they're expecting doctors to be happy that they've removed the ability to do that again.

So it is with Bill 2 as well, Mr. Chair. We're seeing once again that this government is trying to basically correct the mistakes that they made, but the mistake that they made by deindexing AISH wasn't just a mistake. It was cruel, it was heartless, and it was contrary to the stated position of a number of these UCP MLAs, who claimed that they had compassion and that they supported the idea of indexing AISH benefits. Let's remember that we're talking about a benefit that's just over $1,600 a month. It is not a lot of money, yet they voted in favour three years ago of deindexing that support.

As my colleague the Member for St. Albert has said, you can't make up for that by doing what you're doing in Bill 2, because not only did those Albertans lose out on over $3,000 in supports over the last couple of years while their supports were not indexed, but there is a more profound impact that it has on Albertans when you break their trust and you tell them that they're not valued. That is another consistency between this government's action when it broke the contract with doctors unilaterally and what they did to individuals on AISH: they broke the trust. They told severely disabled Albertans: "You are not valued. We will happily make your struggles worse to be able to crow about a balanced budget and to show that we're tough." The same government had no problem throwing away over a billion dollars on a pipeline that everybody knew was going to fail, with no apologies for that – no apologies for that – yet they looked to disabled Albertans and said: "Yeah, you're not worth it to us. You don't have the value of a pipeline that wasn't going anywhere."

What it says, as I mentioned, Mr. Chair, is that it is that broken trust. It means that when times are tough again, Albertans and those on AISH can be certain that this government will take from them again and will cut their supports again and that to try to balance a budget, they'll make terrible financial decisions on all fronts. But they'll look and they'll stand proudly and say, "I'm a fiscal conservative" when they cut supports for the most disabled Albertans. They will do it again. That is a trust that cannot be repaired.

When I spoke on Bill 4 and Bill 21, which was the bill that allowed for the UCP to unilaterally end doctors' contracts, I thought it was remarkable, when I went back and I looked at the debate on that bill, to see how many UCP members spoke out in favour of being able to do that. I went through days and days and days of debate in Hansard on that bill, and I couldn't find a single time, other than the minister who introduced the bill at the three readings, where a UCP MLA actually spoke to the content of the bill. Not once.

It's not surprising, then, that when they want to try to fix their – it's not a mistake; they don't think it's a mistake. They did it. They used it for the doctors. They didn't really speak to that either, why they no longer think that was the right thing to do. I think that's the same here. We are not hearing any UCP MLA say: "I'm sorry. We got it wrong when we deindexed AISH. We actually did a cruel thing, and I voted in favour of it. I voted in favour of it because – I don't know – I didn't have the backbone or courage to stand up to a cabinet member or to the Premier or because I really, truly believed that the most vulnerable should pay for our poor political and economic decisions."

I don't know what that reason is, but it's not my job to give that explanation to Albertans. Every single UCP MLA who voted in favour of deindexing AISH: it is their responsibility to stand up and explain why they did that when they now try to, quote, fix their mistake. It can only be considered a mistake if they actually call it that and acknowledge that that's what it is. But if they don't and they say secretly, behind closed doors, "I expressed my concern about it" – how many leadership candidates do we hear whisper behind closed doors? Oh, what courage – what courage – to stand behind closed doors. We all hear the stories about what happens behind closed doors in UCP meetings. In fact, we used to know from the Western Standard. They used to live tweet it.

An Hon. Member: It's transparency.

Ms Pancholi: Well, the Western Standard never captured any of those MLAs standing up and speaking out against deindexing AISH. So if there is transparency – maybe it never happened, Mr. Chair. Maybe they never did actually speak out behind closed doors. Maybe they just lost a couple of winks of sleep at night. In any event, that is not an apology, and that does nothing for the individuals who are on AISH who lost out on $3,000 during a pandemic, an incredibly stressful, inflationary time, where their money was going less far every single month and this government chose to ignore them.

Again, I believe it is incumbent upon each UCP MLA to stand up – and they all voted in favour of it, Mr. Chair – and explain why they're now supporting indexing. As they say, you can't begin to move anywhere towards reconciliation or to atone unless it begins with a heartfelt and meaningful apology. On that note, I just have to say that an apology does not constitute saying: I apologize if someone misconstrued my comments. I think I heard that today. That is also not an apology. But we'd be happy to counsel or – I don't know – edit their prepared apologies although I'm not going to hold my breath that they're coming.

With that, Mr. Chair, I've spoken, and I could speak at length on Bill 2 and continue to speak at length. What I want to say to Albertans is that for over a year the NDP caucus has heard your concerns. We have put forward countless proposals to this government to either reverse cuts that they have made, to put caps back in place on things like utilities and car insurance, to do things to raise your income, to support your wage increases. We have put forward countless measures to ensure that you do have more money in your pockets, especially those who need it the most.

We will continue to do that advocacy. We will vote to support affordability measures, but we want to make sure that all Albertans see the support that they need when they need it. That is our commitment to Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Other members wishing to add questions, comments, or amendments to Bill 2? I see the hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, in committee. I truly appreciate the comments of my colleague. I think she captured some of the frustration that we are feeling. For the people watching at home – and I actually know there are some folks with disabilities that are watching and who know what we're debating right now, Bill 2. They understand what this is about, and let me tell friends that are watching online: I can tell you that this UCP government has continued to ignore any amendments that we've tried to bring forward to make these bills better. In particular, I think there was only one for Bill 2. I'll tell you: they aren't speaking to this bill. They aren't defending this bill, particularly as it relates to AISH and income support and those income replacement benefits. In fact, I'd say that they're hard-pressed to make eye contact. Not surprising, but that's the way that it is right now.

Now, let me paint a picture for you, Mr. Chair, and this is where we are. Let's start in 2019 . . . [interjections] If you have something to say, stand up and say it. I'll let you go.

Mr. Chair, let me paint a picture for you, and you know what? It's rarely this simple that you can draw lines between points in time to say: this happened, and then this happened, and this happened. I think that we can do that with this particular situation.

Let me tell you that in 2019 one of the first things that this government did was decide that belt-tightening was required, but they didn't do that to themselves. They didn't say: "Let's just put our plans aside for the war room, that we're going to direct $120 million to over four years. Let's put that aside because people are having a hard time." No. One of the very first things they did was shove the income support, AISH, and seniors' benefit into a huge omnibus bill that did a whole bunch of other things that were very damaging, and they instantly deindexed these benefits.

Now, all of these benefits, all of these income replacement or income augmentation programs – all of these programs – are for some of the poorest people in this province and some of the most vulnerable people in this province. I'll tell you: if you've never looked at AISH eligibility or the process to apply for AISH, do yourself a favour and look at it. It is not easy. It is time-consuming, and you know what? In many cases people describe it as humiliating to go through those difficult assessments. In any event, these are people that are poor, that are struggling, and that have disabilities, and these are benefits that this government decided to cut. They spent the next few years saying that they didn't cut it, but we know it was a cut.

So they did that in 2019. Poof. We get a global pandemic, all of these unknowns, all of these things that we were learning as we went. And what did we learn? One of the first things that we learned about COVID was who was very vulnerable. And who was vulnerable? People with disabilities, people with pre-existing health conditions, comorbidities. These were the groups of people that were extremely vulnerable, and of course we know they always have extra expenses. They have medical expenses. Instantly people were frightened to go to the grocery store. There were extra fees for ordering food, for having it delivered. They had difficulty with transportation; sitting on a packed bus wasn't really an option. Instantly these expenses went up. Instantly. Tack onto that generational levels of inflation that drove the cost of everything up – we know this – not to mention the things that the UCP made worse. But, you know, I'm not going to speak to insurance and things like that, because for the vast majority of folks that wasn't an issue that I was hearing.

But they were struggling with expenses, and all along the Official Opposition stood up. We did press conferences. We brought in people to talk about: "Look at what's happening. I'm going to lose my apartment. I'm going to get evicted. I can't pay the rent. I'm going to the food bank every single week now, and they won't let me come more. I can't feed myself and my family." These were things that we heard all the time.

You know, I did something a few years back that I wasn't, like, super excited to do, because it wasn't about me, but I thought: "You know what? It's probably a good reminder." So for one little month – and I have enormous privilege – I tried sort of keeping my expenses down to be in line with what somebody on AISH would live with, how much they were spending on groceries. I took the bus for a month because I couldn't afford . . .

Mr. Nally: You worked from home.

Ms Renaud: To the Member for Morinville-St. Albert: if you have something to say – I mean, honestly. You know, just taking swipes at people is not cool. If you have something to say, stand up. I'll acknowledge you.

What happened in 2019? We saw COVID, we saw inflation, and then – surprise – we find out that homeless counts are doubling in rural communities that are struggling with homelessness that did not struggle like that before. We saw that happening. Why? People are losing their homes. It makes sense.

10:00

We saw food bank usage explode. Explode. People cannot afford food. You've got over 70,000 people on AISH. You have over a hundred thousand seniors that rely on that extra money. You've got around 60,000 people that rely on income support products. That's a lot of people. When you make life difficult for that many people that already are on the edge, they're going to be driven to food banks. They're going to be driven into homelessness. They are going to be at risk, and that's exactly what we're seeing. What is the solution that this government has, Mr. Chair? Incredibly disappointing. More half measures because they just can't seem to get it right the first time. Well, they shouldn't have cut it in the beginning, but they can't seem to get it right the first time.

They did not undo all the damage. Had they done that, they would've reindexed this right to the point that they cut it. They would have made these folks whole. Not only that; they would've looked at the other cuts that they did so sneakily through the last few years. Not only did they cut income support by deindexing; they also started kicking people off supplemental benefits that made income support even viable. Now, that's under $900 a month that these folks are living on. Sixty thousand people. They were living on that because they got little bits of extra money, like rent. They got another $307 for rent, or they got an extra $99 for medical transportation. Particularly for people who live outside of large urban areas, they need that for transportation to get to doctors, to get to AISH assessments, to get to places where they can start to look for work, any of those things. But those things were cut.

Once again this government makes a big cut and gives a little back and says: look at us; yeah, I was always a big advocate for not cutting. That is bunk. That is bunk. If anybody here had the courage to actually say, "No, I vote against this; I am not supporting this," they would've said so publicly. They're politicians. They wouldn't hide it. None of them did. None of them did. So, yeah, that's bunk. I can't say bad words in here.

There are a number of things wrong with this legislation. Obviously, you can tell that I'm a little upset about this particular piece because for the last three and a half years that's what I hear from people almost every workday. When I go in on Monday, it piles up. When I tried that little experiment trying to keep my personal budget at under $1,700 a month, I couldn't do it. And I thought I was, you know, pretty good. I have enormous privilege, and I have a lot of skill to be able to budget like that, and I couldn't do it. I could not do it. So imagine somebody trying to live on that. They can't live on that. That's why this time of year is so dangerous for them.

Next time you talk to a constituent with a disability or somebody on income support, ask them about their interaction with places like payday loans. That's where they go or they take out credit cards that they can't afford, and they never dig themselves out. Yet this government wants to tell you that, yeah, they're supporting people with disabilities and low-income people. Sure. You're giving them a little bit, but it's not sufficient. This is a group that is vulnerable and that continues to struggle.

In that period of time where I tried living on that limited income, I actually had a group that I was working with. We did a bit of a survey, and we heard from around – I did table it with the Legislature, so it is part of the record – actually I think about 1,100 or 1,200 Albertans from right across Alberta who shared some of their own struggles. At the time they weren't deindexed to the point they are now – that was a while ago – but they were struggling before; let's be honest. At $1,685 they were struggling. Try to live on that; it's very difficult. They were already struggling.

We heard from people from all over. This isn't just a city problem. I would suggest that actually people that live outside of the large urban areas have far more stress and far more difficulty than people that live in the bigger cities that have access to better programming, more programming, easier access. They're just used to the volume. It's just a different situation. Some of the most heartbreaking stories – still to this day I hear from smaller communities. People are saying: "You know what? I'm about to lose my apartment, my apartment that, you know, I used to be able to afford but the rent has gone up." Let's say that it's $1,100 or $1,200. Imagine you're living on $1,700 and your rent is that much, and then you have to factor in food, just the basics. Food. Maybe a phone. You just can't do it. It's not doable.

So for this government to be unwilling – and they've demonstrated this for years, but they've demonstrated in this particular session their unwillingness to hear from anybody but their own little bubble. You know – I don't know – step 2 of dome disease, when you only listen to friends and insiders, is that you don't actually hear the scope of the problem. Let me tell you: the scope of the problem, which is poverty, is huge, and it's getting bigger. If you don't think that the growth, the explosion of the need of food banks isn't a symptom – and, honestly, I know this government will say: well, you know, we're making a big commitment to food banks.

Let's be honest about that, Mr. Chair. It's a $20 million commitment over three years. When is the election? Five months. Five months, and it's going through FCSS or something like that, so there's a matching component, when food banks need money now. There are over a hundred food banks in this province. There are two massive food banks that really act as feeder food banks for many, many smaller food banks. What are they going to get? I'm hearing, like – what? – under $300,000 each. That's insufficient. That is not going to cut it. That's not enough. This government created the problem. It began in 2019, and it continues to this day. So, sure, make yourself feel better, maybe sleep at night thinking: oh, yeah, we undid the damage. You did not. You did not undo the damage. There is enormous damage, and it will take more than this little effort or, you know, putting money in a food bank. It is going to take far more than this.

Let me just say, Mr. Chair, that I think that we had a pretty good sense about what an antipoverty plan would look like, what a comprehensive antipoverty plan would look like, and why that is a benefit to any province. You are making people whole so that they can participate in the economy. They can contribute. They can be all that they can be. You build a stronger province, and that is something that we will get done. That is something that this government has continuously failed to do. Sadly, every workday we have to see examples of that. So snicker, laugh, you know, roll your eyes all you like. Albertans see the damage that this government has done, and they will not forget it.

I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to Bill 2?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? And that is carried.

I see the Government House Leader.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Good evening, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move third reading of Bill 7, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2).

It's a good bill. I encourage all members to vote for it.

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to speak? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 7 in third reading. This is a very straightforward piece of legislation, but I just want to make a couple of quick comments. The reason that this legislation has had to be put forward in this session is because our new Premier has made the decision to expand cabinet to such an extent that we now have 27 ministers, 11 parliamentary secretaries or associate ministers, and 24 ministries, changing a lot of the government structure.

Something I find very personally disturbing: removing the ministry of labour and instead trying to encapsulate that under the title of jobs, which I think completely misses the importance of workers and not just jobs. We need to be making sure that we've got that focus, which I think the government does not. My assumption that the government does not seem to be proven true when the OICs, the orders in council, to do the government reorganization came out and occupational health and safety and the Labour Relations Code were forgotten for many, many days. The importance of the ministry of labour and their files really slapped someone in the face, right off the bat, when I and stakeholders and people who find this ministry and their work critically important and valuable went to try to determine which of the two new ministers was responsible for what, and key pieces of that ministry had not been assigned. Fortunately, that information came out days later in a new OIC, but I think it proves the point that workers were forgotten in this cabinet shuffle.

Twenty-seven ministers, Mr. Speaker. To be very clear, the previous five Premiers have never had more than 20 ministers. Now we have 27 of them. Of course, having a minister comes with additional pay, additional benefits, additional staff. It certainly appears that this Premier has put about half of caucus into cabinet, has given themselves titles that no one in the public understands, and made it harder to know which minister to speak with.

I know political scientist Duane Bratt said, "When you need to satisfy two goals (party unity and rewarding loyalty) you get a large cabinet," and that's what we seem to see here. From a group who felt it was critically important that they all be called "honourable" for the rest of their lives, it strikes me – I would just simply like to quote, as Maximus said to Commodus in the Ridley Scott classic Gladiator: "Time for honoring yourself will soon be at an end."

I will conclude my remarks with that, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Sure.

Hon. members, before the Assembly: third reading, Bill 7, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). Are there others wishing to add comment?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the hon. the Government House Leader to close debate. The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I rise to respond to members opposite with regard to Bill 7, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). Striking that this is one of the most controversial misc stats bills this Legislature has ever seen. In response to the movie quote: solid movie quote, but the reality is that this cabinet was selected by the hon. Premier in response to the needs that she feels Alberta has. That is the job of this government, to respond, and I think we're doing exactly that, recognizing that we are facing a number of issues in this province, particularly an inflation crisis created by our friends in Ottawa. The members opposite and their federal leaders have chosen to take a path that is contrary to our conservative principles, and we believe it's the wrong path. In response to that, the Premier has chosen individuals to be part of her cabinet who she thinks are best fit to address the issues facing Alberta today.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I do believe this is a good bill. I believe the members opposite are going to be supporting this bill. No need to grandstand and take opportunities to throw shots when the reality is that if you're going to be supporting it, might as well just get on with the people's business. With that, I will conclude my remarks and encourage all members of the Assembly to support Bill 7, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Bill 4

Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Copping]

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has 16 minutes remaining.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We stand here at third reading of Bill 4, a bill whose sole existence – the sole existence of this bill is to undo this government's decision to award itself the extraordinary power to tear up the master agreement between the government of Alberta and physicians in our province. As I said when I spoke to this in second reading, this is an admission of the government's failure.

The Minister of Health has stood and he has attempted to mount a defence at multiple times during debate on this bill to say that this is a piece that is no longer required. As I said previously, Mr. Speaker, it was never required, because this government has achieved nothing for over two years of war on physicians, strife, Albertans not able to access care, creating chaos throughout the health care system, driving physicians out of practice and out of province. They have nothing to show for it. Every single piece that they insisted was absolutely essential has been walked back. Every principle that they said they absolutely had to stand on has been rescinded. There is nothing in the master agreement that was signed in September that could not have been signed at the negotiating table two years ago.

But, really, that is kind of the record, the history of this government on so many fronts, Mr. Speaker, coming in with incredible arrogance, buoyed by certainly a notable election win. Certainly, we'll give them credit for that. But based on that, having the idea that they could go ahead and bully and bulldoze their way through reform of the health care system with the idea that they could simply go in, tear things up by the roots, intimidate physicians, break their association, and somehow achieve savings on behalf of the people of Alberta, reform the health care system, again, they have failed.

They maintained this during the midst of a global pandemic. I won't go through the full history. I've already done that once on the record. I had a full 20 minutes to do so and needed most of it, because the number of petty decisions by this government, by the previous Minister of Health, who, I will say, showed incredibly disgraceful conduct repeatedly, a level of arrogance, entitlement, contempt from himself and staff in his office towards physicians in the province of Alberta – and we saw what the impact of that was.

The minister stands and talks. He says: "Well, you know, this is a situation we have in every province in Canada. Everybody is having challenges recruiting physicians right now. Everybody has an exhausted health care workforce." Mr. Speaker, you know, it's true. Every jurisdiction is struggling right now. I will give this government credit: it didn't start the fire, but they sure heaped on the kindling and added fuel repeatedly. The situation in our province right now is worse in every way because of the decisions of this government. What we are now reversing in Bill 4 was the first and chief step of so many that they took that have done that damage to our public health care system in the province of Alberta.

Indeed, just today we saw a CTV article come out showing that emergency room wait times in Edmonton are at their highest level ever, Mr. Speaker. Ever. This is data that was obtained by a CTV reporter via FOIP because it is data that is not available from the government. Now, of course, we had a private member's bill from the Leader of the Opposition which would have made that data public, would have made it consistently public so we could track these issues in our public health care system. The government defeated that bill. They do not want that accountability. They do not want that transparency with Albertans because it would show, as this bill does before us today, the truth of the damage that they have done and continue to do to our public health care system in Alberta. They prefer to cherry-pick statistics.

When the minister stands and talks about "We have more doctors in Alberta than ever before," Mr. Speaker, well, we also have a larger population than we ever had before. We don't know exactly how many of those doctors are actually practising or where they're practising or what discipline they're practising in, so frankly it is a useless number when we know that we still have multiple rural sites across this province that have fully closed or partially closed emergency rooms – indeed, this government's own members stood and talked about it in question period today – because of a lack of physicians, when we still know that we have tens of thousands of Albertans in Lethbridge alone who do not have access to primary care, when we know – you know, this minister talked about recruitment and retention and he talked about how we're going to train more.

The fact is that because of what this government did in tearing up this master agreement and forcing through the physician funding framework, which they are now largely walking back, they undermined and did great damage to a number of our best rural training sites in the province of Alberta: in Sundre, in Pincher Creek, in Stettler. So we have less capacity now to train the doctors that we so badly need, again, because this government, starting with tearing up that master agreement, went to war with physicians and intentionally targeted family physicians, and of that we saw the greatest impact in rural health care and rural physicians.

The minister now is moving forward with some primary care task forces. That's good and important work and it's valuable, but the fact is, Mr. Speaker, we could have been doing that two years ago. We could have been doing that collaborative work. We lost two years of time, two years of work that we could have been doing, and we are having to start over at the beginning because this government chose to adopt this aggressive posture against physicians and try to bully and bulldoze its way through to a reform of the health care system.

And what this government had in mind to replace it? Just a couple of days ago the Premier was at the opening of a new pharmacist-led clinic in Brooks, one of a few sites that are opening. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that pharmacists are an important part of the health care system. They play an important role in conjunction with physicians, with family doctors, with nurse practitioners, with a number of others. Indeed, there is some independent work that pharmacists can do, but a pharmacist does not replace a family physician. They cannot. But what we have with this government – it was quite clear with Bill 30 that they brought forward, giving corporations the ability to bill in the same way that an individual doctor could, that what this government had in mind was the replacement of family physicians with corporate care. We saw that with their investment in Telus Babylon, who they were paying twice as much as people's actual individual family doctors for a number of weeks at the beginning of the pandemic.

The fact is that this government did not think through its actions. The same arrogance and entitlement that, frankly, bedevils them today and indeed seems to be coming back in spades under the new Premier made them think that all they had to do was just simply tear up that contract, force their will through and break the will of physicians, and they would just be on their way to setting up a whole new health care system in the province of Alberta.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, as I said previously, that they have not saved a single dollar. Not one. Now, let's be clear. They actually did underpay family physicians during the course of the two years of the pandemic, folks who were dependent on having to use virtual appointments to see their patients and were being paid for 15 minutes regardless of how much time they spent with those patients. If they were providing complex care for seniors or mental health support or other things, they still got paid for a 15-minute appointment if they spent 30 minutes or 40 minutes or 50 minutes with that patient. And doctors were putting care first, so they did.

So, yeah, actually, you know what? This government did save a whole lot of money on the backs of family physicians, forcing clinics to close, forcing staff to be laid off, but I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker: every single one of those dollars they saved on the backs of family physicians is being lost now as we pay for people to have to go to receive care in the emergency room because they can't access a family doctor or because they weren't able to during the pandemic and now their chronic condition is considerably worse or their cancer has advanced. We are paying for this government's pennies saved with pounds on the other end in acute and emergency care.

Again, an incredibly short-sighted strategy on behalf of this government and one on which, unfortunately, they continue to double down, as we see them attempting to take the same sort of grand gesture that they did in bringing forward the original changes under Bill 21 to tear up the contract and impose their will. They are doing the same thing now, as they have fired the board of AHS and appointed a single administrator, answerable to the Health minister and the Premier, to try to force through their changes in EMS, in emergency rooms, and in surgeries. I don't think, Mr. Speaker, this government is going to be any more successful with that approach.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, our health care system is functional, is successful because of the collaboration of thousands of Albertans who step up to provide care. We don't succeed by attacking or belittling or demeaning or blaming those individuals; we succeed by working collaboratively. I will again give, as I have previously, the current Health minister credit in that he has done that for the last year and a half, repairing the damage that was done by his predecessor and was supported by every member of this government, who sat quietly and looked the other way.

But the fact is, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, that was a year and a half of effort just to get us back to zero. We are not ahead. We are still substantially behind because of this government's decision to tear up that master agreement, symbolic of the bullheaded, short-sighted approach this government has taken to our health care system. Unfortunately, as I said, I do not see this improving under the current Premier, who achieved the position she has by, again, denigrating the folks who operate our health care system.

This is the government that fired Dr. Verna Yiu, the CEO of Alberta Health Services, who my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Glenora awarded the Queen's platinum jubilee medal just this week. She was incredibly deserving of that, Mr. Speaker. This government fired her to set the course for their attempt to once again try to force their will on Alberta Health Services, much as the Premier has come in now having vilified then fired the board, having fired the chief medical officer of health, replaced her with a volunteer, and has lost now both the deputy chief medical officers of health. The chaos continues.

10:30

Bill 4: we will vote in support because it will undo that one piece of harm. The rest, Mr. Speaker, we will undo when we elect the next Alberta NDP government in 2023.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Bill 4 is before the Assembly. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has risen.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Gosh, it is always very difficult to follow the Member for Edmonton-City Centre and, of course, the Health critic as well. I'm not sure how I can possibly follow that and do this justice, but I will make my best effort.

It's good to see some support from the members opposite over there. Thank you for your attention, Calgary-Hays.

I am honoured to rise and to speak to Bill 4 not because I'm deeply appreciative of this government's record on health care but because I, too, like the Member for Edmonton-City Centre, can't say enough about the health care providers, the health care workers in this province who day in and day out have just – yeah, they truly are heroes. It takes me back to, you know, banging pots and pans and all the things we did to really show them that.

It seems to me like we've forgotten, and it seems to me like we've – you know, just like we seem to have forgotten that a pandemic is still going on, that we still have health care workers who are working in the most challenging of times and really have not seen the respect that they so deserve, and, as the Member for Edmonton-City Centre pointed out, the incredible damage that was caused by previous members of this House who were in that role, the lack of willingness to work with those health care workers, the antagonistic approach that was taken instead of a collaborative one. To the health care workers out there – I know many of you are not able to watch tonight because you're working right now – thank you. Thank you for the work that you're doing.

While we will, perhaps somewhat begrudgingly, support Bill 4, I think my reflection tonight is that we didn't need to be here, right? It never needed to get to this place. I've got a lot I want to share in the time that I have, although I do have to acknowledge, as I seem to have acknowledged multiple times in this relatively short session, that it troubles me deeply that we're not hearing from UCP members about these bills because, as I've said in this House – and I know I'm a broken record – we're hearing about health care from our constituents. And – you know where this is going next – it's not just in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood where I'm hearing from my constituents. I'm hearing from your constituents, right?

I won't go walking down every single riding that I've door-knocked being held by UCP MLAs, but there are a lot. And I say that to point out that health care is a huge concern for your constituents. I know that. It comes up. I'll be back in some of your ridings this weekend, and I guarantee you that health care will be one of the top issues because that's how – when I go to the doors, when you go to the doors, Member for St. Albert, you know, you ask people what's top of mind for them, right? Yeah. You're there to listen as their representative or as somebody who's supporting a candidate in their area. Health care comes up all the time.

So for government why I'm concerned is that: why wouldn't we hear other than from the minister, why wouldn't we be hearing from these UCP MLAs on – you know, in my three and a bit years of being an elected official, I've learned from this government that I'm not going to hear: I'm sorry. I'm not going to hear an apology for the damage that's been done to health care and health care workers, but what an opportunity for some of you to rise and just talk about the fact that: “You know what? Some mistakes were made, but we're here; we're trying to rebuild trust.” But you're not doing that, which shows me that either you truly don't care about health care and health care workers or you've been muzzled. I'm not sure. You've got an opportunity still.

One of the things that I wanted to do, because I have had a chance to speak to this bill multiple times, was share. Like my colleagues, we've all been inundated by stories from folks on the front lines, from health care workers. I committed to somebody that I would share briefly – and it is connected closely to Bill 4 as well – a letter that she wrote to her UCP MLA, who may or may not be in this Chamber. I would not want to refer to his presence or absence, but perhaps he will have read this e-mail. She's given me permission to share. I'm not going to share her name, but I can table it.

Once again I find myself sending an email because I feel like it's the only thing I can do. Yet it continues to feel futile because very little response is received. But I do it because I feel like I owe it to my colleagues and most importantly our patients.

I've been a Registered Nurse for almost 16 years. Currently I work in ER. And over the past year we are watching our healthcare system crumble and no one in your party [the UCP] seems to care. The UCP continues to turn a blind eye and more drastically chose to fire the entire AHS board... literally the people who have been managing the failing system through a global pandemic. I'd love for you to rationalize that decision...

More importantly I want you to understand the absolute suffering that is taking place within the walls of our hospital. Over the past several months we have seen patients waiting upwards of 7 hours, sometimes [more than 12] hours to be seen by a physician. These people are in pain, vomiting, absolutely suffering. And unfortunately dying. We have seen unprecedented numbers of cardiac arrests happening in our waiting rooms over the past several months. Imagine the distress of those other patients waiting to be seen, watching someone collapse and receive chest compressions. Or how about the adults or child that began seizing in the waiting room. Or how about the patient undergoing Chemotherapy that presents with a fever... no immune system, now febrile and surrounded in a cramped waiting room by other infectious people. Would you wish that upon your wife, sister, mother, friend? What about the gentleman that comes in, in obvious distress passing a kidney stone. No care space for him to be seen and given pain control? Is that something you believe to be acceptable? Because the inaction from your party leads me to believe that.

This past week we had 15 pediatric admissions in our 18 care spaces in the Stollery ER. 2 of the available care spaces are Mental Health beds and not equipped to safely manage the acutely medically ill child. That gives our physicians 1 bed to see ER patients. I wonder how you would pick who gets that precious space at any given time. Would you choose the 2 week old who has feeding trouble, the 5 year old fighting cancer that is now febrile, or the 12 year old with appendicitis? Can you answer that for me? I don't think you can, because you're not a trained medical professional. It's time to start listening to the people who are.

It's also not unheard of to have 60 adult admissions in ER with no place to go upstairs. Not to mention the pressure put on inpatient units upstairs getting pressure to discharge patients way too early. Or the fact that this causes EMS to be stuck in hospitals waiting to offload their patients so they can get back on the road. How would you respond if you called 911 for your child or wife and was told there was no ambulance in the area to respond?

We are trained medical professionals with years of experience assigned to sit at triage for hours, watching people suffer before our eyes. Knowing their condition is serious and they need to see a physician and yet knowing we have no place to put them. It is absolutely morally distressing and our mental health is suffering. [But] we continue to show up for Albertans each day because we know you and your party won't... There is no wonder nurses are quitting and leaving the profession. Eventually you... can't do it anymore...

As she closes, she would like both her MLA and the minister to help her understand how you all think this is ok for our province. In the meantime, myself and my colleagues would welcome you to come sit in the waiting room for 8 hours to witness the suffering yourself.

She concludes by saying:

Over the past several weeks I have heard so many people say, “I've never voted anything but conservative, but I can't vote for them anymore”. I pray this province turns Orange because the UCP continue to fail every Albertan day in and day out.

Those are the words from a registered nurse here in Alberta.

Ms Renaud: That's a great letter.

Member Irwin: It is a really great letter. It was a hard one to read. I can tell you that myself and my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre, all of us, get letters like that. We get messages like that all the time. All the time. You might say: well, okay; is that member getting off track here from Bill 4? No. Think about what she says in her message there. It's time to start listening to the health care professionals, and we're not seeing that. We're seeing it too late with Bill 4. We didn't need to be here.

She touches on the crisis in pediatric health care. Crisis is almost an understatement. I think back to last Monday – it was two Fridays ago – when we learned of the discharging of pediatric respite patients from the Rotary Flames House in Calgary. I heard from nurses who work there, who aren't allowed to speak publicly for fear of reprimand, just how – and they even shared that, you know, it's even worse than what's being reported, right? It never needed to be there. It never needed to get to that place. What kind of province are we in where we're accepting the fact that we have to limit services for palliative children? How did we get here? We know how we got here. Bill 4 attempts to try to address some of that.

I think about the family doctors and the nurses that we've heard from who are also leaving this province in large numbers. We've seen, I believe it was in May – I pulled it up earlier. Earlier in the year they shared that as many doctors left Alberta in 2021 as in the prior two years combined. We saw government and the ministers start to realize that, like, their choices were having a tangible effect on physicians. It wasn't just the NDP fear and smear. The data was showing...

Mr. McIver: Oh, yes, it is.

Member Irwin: ... that doctors were leaving; 140 doctors left the province in 2021.

I don't know if the Member for Calgary-Hays, who's heckling right now, knocks on doors or talks to constituents. [interjection] But I guarantee you – I don't know. I don't know because he doesn't join debate. But I guarantee you that his constituents . . .

Mr. McIver: Fear and smear.

Member Irwin: . . . are concerned about health care. They absolutely are.

For folks watching at home who can't hear, he's saying "fear and smear." This kind of rhetoric does nothing to address health care in this province.

We are. The numbers are clear. The data is clear. We've lost physicians. We've lost nurses. We've lost health care providers.

One of the things that I think about is the loss of health care services as well, so not just the workers, but it's tied into that. For instance, the loss of obstetric services. We've seen obstetric services close across this province. My hometown of Barrhead – I'm pointing to the Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock – is one example, Fort Saskatchewan, Bonnyville, Cold Lake – I don't have the list in front of me, but it is an extensive one – Rimbe, Rocky Mountain House. And hardly a peep from this government. When a family can't deliver a child in an area close to where they live, it's incredibly stressful.

Ms Renaud: In the winter.

Member Irwin: In the winter, exactly. At a time when you're already experiencing a great deal of stress and having to add on those extra layers of anxiety, it's simply not acceptable. Again, it didn't need to be there. Most of the times when releases were put out about the reason why: staffing issues, unable to staff some of those rural hospitals because people have left. Health care providers have left.

Ms Renaud: Fact.

Member Irwin: And that is a fact. I just wish that this government would start – and that's perhaps some of my closing comments here – not only listening to their constituents, to the experts, public health experts, to health care workers but not get us into a place where you're having to fix the mistakes of the past.

You know what? I won't conclude as eloquently as my colleague the Member for Edmonton-City Centre, but I think it's a clear, clear reminder that Albertans have seen a lot. It's hard to remember everything. It's hard to remember all the many attacks on health care in this province by this UCP government, but there's one thing that you can remember. That thing that you can remember is that a better future, a strong public health care system is in sight, and you'll get there through voting for the Alberta NDP.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on behalf of the Minister of Justice and move third reading of Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2).

This proposed bill, piece of legislation, changes six laws: the Legislative Assembly Act, the Provincial Court Act, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, the Referendum Act, the Sale of Goods Act, and the Trustee Act.

Mr. Speaker, changes to the Legislative Assembly Act will allow Legislative Assembly security to be considered peace officers. As a result, they would have the legislative authority to carry firearms. Before they are armed, they would receive necessary training to handle the use of firearms. This change will bring Alberta in line with many other jurisdictions.

Next of the proposed changes: the Provincial Court Act. Mr. Speaker, we are advocating to increase the civil claims limit of matters that can be filed through the Provincial Court. To be clear, what we are proposing today doesn't actually increase the limit; this is just about making sure the government has the ability to do so if it decides that the amount should increase. Currently the limit for small claims court is $50,000. Changes will let the government adjust the limit up to $200,000. This would give Albertans the option of resolving more civil legal disputes by filing their claim with the Provincial Court. This means that more Albertans could choose to represent themselves. At the same time, this would free up time and resources in the Court of King's Bench to focus on more complex matters.

To make it easier for Albertans to collect child and youth spousal support, Bill 5 includes recommended changes to the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. This would help families receive financial support they are owed from ex-partners and -spouses when they live in different parts of the country. This would also reduce the time needed to collect, exchange, and process information.

Bill 5 also proposes changes to the Referendum Act, specifically clarifying that only constitutional questions require a resolution to be made in the Legislature.

This will also be amending the Sale of Goods Act to acquire a good title to grain. Right now a buyer must keep a record of the kind of vehicle delivering the grain and its licence number. These changes were requested by the agriculture stakeholders. Changes will eliminate redundant record-keeping requirements for buyers when grain is sold and delivered to a grain elevator. The Sale of Goods Act dates back to 1919 – that's a while ago – and this provision regarding grain sales originated in English common law which was carried over into provincial legislation when Alberta became a province in 1905. This need is now met by other such records as the bill of sale.

The final change proposed to this legislation would amend the new Trustee Act, that comes into force next year. The proposed changes will make it clear that a trust will not fail if there is temporarily no trustee. We've removed the transfer of trust properties to the court, allowing the trust property to move directly to the new trustee once appointed.

Mr. Speaker, all these changes mean that Albertans will now have more choices and an improved experience when dealing with legal or court process, and you can look forward to a more safe and positive experience when visiting the Legislature. I'd also like to give a shout-out to the security officers here as they do a tremendous amount of work on our behalf. Thank you for them.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for support of third reading of Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to speak to Bill 5? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief in my remarks this evening. Although I plan to support the bill, I do have reservations with elements of it, including, of course, the Referendum

Act portions of the legislation whereby it no longer will require . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order. There's lots of opportunity for private conversations in either of the lounges or in the hallways. I encourage members to keep them to a minimum.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that the part of the act that I do not feel comfortable with is the part that deals with the Referendum Act whereby, under the new changes to the Referendum Act brought upon by Bill 5, there would be no longer a requirement to have nonconstitutional referendums requiring a motion to be passed by the Assembly first. This, I think, is a mistake. Anything that is important enough to be decided by a referendum in the province I think needs to be formulated via the Legislature. I think that the Legislature should be formulating that question or at least speak to the issue of the referendum question at hand. Of course, the government will still have its majority, but indeed anything that's important enough to go before the province in a referendum question should be run through this House first. I really will be watching that carefully.

Of course, we've only seen two referendums in the time frame that I've been a member of this Legislature: a constitutional referendum on equalization, for which an order in council was issued on August 9, 2021, and then the daylight saving time referendum, a nonconstitutional referendum. Both of those were important. The daylight saving time was very, very controversial and engaged a lot of Albertans. Anything that is important enough to go to a referendum in our representative form of democracy should be run through this Legislature first. We don't have a direct democracy, and that is what a referendum is, an element of direct democracy. It's a bit of a clash with our representative system. Therefore, I think that when we do depart from a representative system and go towards the tool of a referendum, it's incumbent on us to make sure that the Legislature speaks to it by having it run through the Legislature first.

I'll end my remarks there. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, others wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House and speak to Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2), on behalf of my constituents and all those Albertans who came forward and shared their griefs or challenges in dealing with the justice system.

This bill amends six pieces of legislation and has some good changes. You know, I will acknowledge that. Certainly, some of the questions are around a few of the changes put forward in this bill. The bill amends the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act and also the Provincial Court Act and the Referendum Act, as my colleague said, and the Trustee Act.

I do support changes to the Trustee Act as I have personally experienced some of the process going through the Trustee Act and the process to establish a trust and then also the provision of losing the trust due to the trustee retires or has passed away. The changes help to re-establish or appoint new trustees in this case.

Not going too much into detail, I do have questions around the Referendum Act as well as the Provincial Court Act. This act just increases the limit from $50,000 to $200,000 on civil court rulings, but there are questions like: what kind of support are they providing and resources are they providing to improve the capacity of the law court to handle these cases?

Interestingly – I really wanted to say this for the record – for the past almost four years, like more than three and a half years, under this UCP government and two Premiers we have discussed the justice act many times, but it's just surprising to see that every time what we're discussing is just the tip of the iceberg. It was not something, really, that Albertans are looking at the government to make changes to, particularly for those folks or Albertans who feel the pain and experience, fell through the cracks, or they're looking at the government to make changes to improve access to the justice system. Not only this; I remember those moments when the Justice minister himself was discussing the findings of this government, how the justice system requires improvements by investing into it, hiring more judges and Crown prosecutors. Furthermore, there's a lot more to do in the justice system by expanding the services into different languages or hiring more interpreters, hiring more translators. There's a lot more to do, but it was very discouraging to see the complete exhibits on this government's lack of understanding or, you know, lack of commitment or lack of humility to address the people's many issues, that they're aware of, I will say.

What I want to say on the record: we as Alberta's NDP conducted consultations for 10 months from 2020 to 2021 and heard from mostly the racialized and marginalized communities and business leaders. I want to say that we are determined to raise their voices and address their issues. If we can't do it and can't work with this government, then we're determined to do it given we form government in 2023.

With that, I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others?

If not, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Bill 2

Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

The Speaker: Hon. members – oh, I'm sorry. Didn't see you there. The hon. the Minister of Children's Services to move third reading.

Mr. Amery: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is both an honour and a privilege to rise this evening on behalf of the Minister of Affordability and Utilities to move third reading of Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

This legislation will ultimately help millions of Albertans deal with the affordability crisis. Rising inflation is impacting all sectors of society, and I know that each and every member of this Legislature genuinely recognizes that we need to help make life more affordable. Mr. Speaker, if passed, this bill and the supporting regulations will allow this government to provide quick and effective relief supports. This means that it will help cut the costs of fuel, reduce taxes, protect Albertans from price spikes and increases, and increase supports to some of our most vulnerable citizens.

There has been a lot of good debate in this Chamber from all members of this House, and I appreciate the input that we've already received. Because of that input, we are already working on regulations and online systems to help facilitate and deliver those financial payments, but the passage of this legislation is absolutely critical and necessary to providing help right away. This bill and the $2.8 billion in affordability measures will help enable and make real differences for hard-working individuals, families, and businesses all across this province. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to urge all members to support moving third reading of Bill 2 as quickly as possible.

However, at this time I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 6 Police Amendment Act, 2022

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be here today on behalf of the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services to move third reading of Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022, the first substantial changes to Alberta's policing legislation in 34 years.

One aspect, establishing the police review commission, replaces the system of police investigating police, which invites a perception of bias, with an independent body that will be responsible for receiving complaints, investigating them, and conducting any resulting disciplinary hearings. This would make the complaints process totally independent by changing these functions from being handled in-house by police services and putting them under the authority of an arm's-length organization.

Communities policed by the RCMP currently have the option of forming policing committees, but during the stakeholder engagement that informed this legislation, we learned that most communities have not done so. This legislation will help make them a reality. We also heard from many communities that the existing requirements to establish a policing committee in the Police Act were too onerous and came with too high a price tag for smaller municipalities. These amendments will fix that by eliminating the requirement to hire specific staff for the committee and by allowing smaller communities to share these administrative costs through regional committees.

This legislation will require diversity and inclusion plans that outline steps police are taking to reflect their communities and to educate officers about the distinct cultural needs of the people that they work with. We believe that improving those ties will result in better outcomes between police and the people they serve.

The provincial government has a legislative responsibility to ensure adequate policing in Alberta, and this is a logical extension of that mandate. The key proposals in this legislation are a product of listening to a broad range of Albertans from all corners of the province from a variety of backgrounds and occupations. It's important, if this legislation is passed, that we continue to listen to stakeholders as we move to implement it. For Alberta this bill is a fundamental shift that reimagines police as an extension of the community and provides a variety of practical and realistic reforms aimed at getting us there.

I hope that all members on both sides of this House will be able to support this legislation, which will ensure police are more accountable to the public and more responsive to its needs. Ultimately, police services that are more in tune with the people they serve will help build safer communities for everyone in Alberta, no matter where they live.

I ask that we move third reading of Bill 6, and with that I would also like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 15, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: The Deputy Chair of Committees is entirely out of control this afternoon.

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us pray. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will be now led in the singing of God Save the King by Ms Brooklyn Elhard.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King!
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the King!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, this morning I had the privilege of meeting with a very special guest who's joining us now in the Speaker's gallery. Please welcome the consul general of the Portuguese Republic, Mr. Costa, and he is accompanied by the honorary consul of Portugal in Edmonton, Mr. Fernandes. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you Chief Leonard Standingontheroad, Councillor Eric Shirt, and Chief Billy Morin from Treaty 6 nations. I am honoured by all the incredible work they do surrounding mental health and addiction supports, health centres, and the continuous work improving the lives of Indigenous peoples in Alberta. I am pleased to have continuous engagement with our First Nations partners, and I look forward to a bright and strong future relationship between us. I am honoured by their presence and very pleased that they are actually in the Speaker's gallery today. May you rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek also has a visitor.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members in the Chamber a visitor who is no stranger to this Assembly. Ken Allred is a seasoned and experienced Alberta land surveyor and the former MLA for St. Albert, having served our great province from 2008 to 2012. He currently resides in the beautiful Crowsnest Pass. Ken was an incredible resource to this Assembly and to me personally, a mentor to me given his research and topical discourse around adverse possession leading up to the recent passage and imminent royal assent of Bill 3. His research encompassed every adverse possession file since the first Alberta case in the early 1900s. Despite being retired, Ken remains active in the Crowsnest Pass, serving on various municipal and other volunteer boards as well as continuing a small practice in arbitrating land and boundary issues inside and outside the court system. May I ask former MLA Allred to please rise in the Speaker's gallery and to receive the warm appreciation and welcome from this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members of my family visiting the Legislature today. Seated in the Speaker's gallery are my father, Brian Glubish; my aunt Bev Lozinik; and my uncle Fred Lozinik. Family is so important to me and, I'm sure, to everyone in this Assembly, and it's so special to have them here today. I wouldn't be here without all the mentorship and counsel from my dad, and I want to thank him for all he's done for me. I invite them to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I too have some guests visiting from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They are Councillor Faye McGhee of Kneehill county, county councillor; her husband, Todd; and their son Mike. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has a school to introduce.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the Edmonton home-school ARPA club. Accompanying them today is the leader of the club, Andrea Veldkamp, and many of the parents are with them as well. Could the Edmonton home-school ARPA club please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod and Deputy Chair of Committees.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise in the House today and introduce to you and through you friends from Livingstone school in Lundbreck. I'd also like to highlight that among this group are Kathy Rast, Paige Rast, and Sophie Lynch-Staunton, granddaughter and great-grandchildren of Alberta's 11th Lieutenant Governor, Frank Lynch-Staunton. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Alberta Malcolm, Sandra Sutter, Candice Calliou, and Raelene Young from the Métis Women's Economic Security Council. I was pleased to meet with these ladies this morning and support their work to improve the lives of Métis women in Alberta. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier has an introduction.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my constituents whom I had the honour of awarding Her late Majesty Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee medals: first, former Member of Parliament Peter Goldring, Jeremy Hamelin, Dr. Jennifer Njenga, Chinaemerem Ogbonna, Imam Bassam Fares, Janice Krissa-Moore, Sheri Doyle, and Jorgia Moore. May I please ask you to all rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce Maria Vicente, Shannon Berry, and Joe Hak. They hail all the way from Edmonton-Castle Downs, but I have adopted these folks in God's country, Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland. They're amazing volunteers that help out all over the place. Please, members, if we can give these folks a warm round of applause. Please rise to accept that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose has an introduction.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you members of the rodeo community. Please welcome Muriel Hill from the Cloverlodge Stampede in Viking, Dave and Trudy Berrecloth from the Tofield Ag Society, Brooke Busenius and her grandparents May and Don Korobko. Brooke is an international rodeo competitor, and I'm so glad that they are here today. Please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Chamber.

Job Creation and Economic Development

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, a real plan to create good-paying jobs, drive investment, and spur competitiveness: that's exactly what our Official Opposition rolled out yesterday, and I encourage everyone to read it at albertasfuture.ca. No, it doesn't include a job-killing, undemocratic sovereignty act. Instead, it does include actual consultation with Indigenous communities about expanding opportunities for First Nations partnerships on critical economic projects. It includes a new tax credit, the Alberta's Future tax credit, which will support innovation in new spaces, lead to $10 million in new investments, and create an estimated 20,000 jobs.

It also includes a move to supercharge the petrochemical incentive program started under our government. Additional support for this program will lead to another $10 billion in new investment and create another 27,000 good-paying jobs. It also includes a performance fast pass, a NEXUS-type support for businesses with good track records to get their projects off the ground faster. These are game-changing proposals from Alberta's NDP, Mr. Speaker. What does it mean for Albertans? It means good-paying jobs, more diversification, more investment opportunities, more opportunities for everyone.

We're also going to support our future leaders with a new campus in downtown Calgary and by restoring funding cut by this government at the worst possible time. We're going to support workers by restoring their rights. We're going to protect the retirement security of those who have worked their entire lives and who will rely on the CPP, and we're going to support families with affordable child care. We're going to connect communities with an actual plan for rural broadband. We're going to build an economic future for all.

There's an exciting conversation happening at albertasfuture.ca that everyone is invited to. Coming together to solve major challenges and ensure economic prosperity for all: that's how we build a better future. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

NDP Government Record

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, the members opposite are spending a lot of time these days claiming they know what's best for Alberta, but let's take a look back, shall we? Under the NDP average weekly earnings grew 1.7 per cent over four years. Under this government average weekly earnings have increased 11 per cent. The NDP raised taxes, fees, and fines 97 times, amounting to $3.4 billion in tax hikes, including the carbon tax, the largest tax hike in history.

Let's look at venture capital, Mr. Speaker. Under the NDP: 2016, $34 million; '18, $58 million. In 2017 Calgary wasn't even in the top 10 country-wide. Under this government for the third year in a row Alberta is on track to shatter venture capital records. Under the NDP there were hits to investment across the board. Overall, investment dropped 38.1 per cent, with a 46.5 per cent decline in construction, 40.2 per cent in utilities, 18.6 per cent in transportation and warehousing, and a 14.1 per cent decline in wholesale and retail trade. The NDP even promised a budget surplus of $586 million, but in 2019 they created a $7.9 billion deficit. NDP government spending was out of control, with a path that would have cost every Alberta taxpayer $2,400 more in taxes every year. Their only success was making Alberta a high-cost, high-regulation market that drove $45 billion of investment out of our province.

Today our government is leading the country, with a forecasted $57 billion of investment this year alone. Alberta beat the national average in real GDP growth this year, at just under 5 per cent, higher than any year the NDP was in government. Mr. Speaker, these numbers speak for themselves. Albertans can't afford another four years of the NDP. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. I've watched the federal Parliament. I've seen lots of standing ovations. I feel like we're all heading on a bad path with standing ovations.

Official Opposition and 2022 Fall Sitting

Ms Rosin:

Well, 'twas the day before Christmas, and all through the House

MLAs were stirring for session was almost out.

Our families had hung our Christmas stockings with care
In hopes that eventually we'd get back there.

Albertans were watching from their nice, warm homesteads,

Feeling hope for jobs, affordability, finally getting ahead.

Conservatives gave rebates, supports, and cheap gas,
Lowered tax, help for parents, and all in one act.

When out of the Chamber there arose such a clatter,
I looked across the aisle to see what was the matter.

The NDP cried, "Job killers, dictators, destroying 'Berta,"

Forgetting their leader – well, he lives in Ottawa.

They opposed all we did without reading the bills, Showing a pettiness that should probably send their support for the hills.

When what to my wondering eyes should appear,

A new 338 poll; they must now think: oh, dear.

On Jagmeet, on Trudeau, on Liberal appointee.

Those were their top sources, now can't you see?

To the top of the party, to the ends of the Earth,

Albertans know that they'll never ever put Alberta first.

They scoffed and called our sovereignty act
undemocratic,

But if you didn't read the bill, then how can you be mad at it?

If the NDP had their way, it's clear they'd do nothing.

They say they have solutions, but we know they're just bluffing.

All session long our government acted in good faith.

We listened, proposed amendments, and participated in debate.

Unfortunately, for them, the same can't be said,

Which leaves me here just scratching my head.
 Because they claim we're the problem, that Alberta won't fare.
 But deep down they know that their record is quite bare.
 So if you listen closely, then you'll hear the truth.
 Today Alberta is better, and we have the proof.
 We have grown the economy and diversified, too,
 Giving hope to new grads that their dreams can come true.
 We fought for our province and defended its right
 To develop its resources and package beef more polite.
 So in next year's election people don't want false fear.
 They want a vision to bring hope to the year.
 So to all who are watching this afternoon bright,
 Merry Christmas to all, and keep up the good fight.

[interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Misericordia Community Hospital

Mr. Dach: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be the MLA representing the Misericordia hospital, which opened in 1900 and has been in its current location since 1969. I'm proud to be able to stand here and advocate for this hospital, the people who access it, and the front-line health care workers, who work hard to protect Albertans' health.

During the pandemic we saw the lengths that health care workers would go to protect the lives of their patients. They worked themselves to exhaustion and risked burnout to ensure that those who needed their help were supported, and they did this while at the same time dealing with a government that was focused on fighting with front-line workers.

We owe our hospital front lines more than we can possibly pay back. The Misericordia hospital urgently needs two new CT scanners, one to replace an aging CT scanner which can be out of service for long periods of time, impacting health care across the region, and another one primarily for emergency room use in a soon to be open emergency room funded by the previous NDP government. As I'm sure all members of this House know, CT scanners are fundamental to emergency treatment and diagnosis. They are as essential to hospitals as stethoscopes. This is a simple investment that will help with diagnostics in their emergency room and for the rest of the hospital. The return on investment is almost incalculable for the hospital, for the community, and for the entire region served by the Misericordia.

I urge this government to look at the needs of our hospitals and ensure that they are supported, because when we invest in health care, we're investing in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. An Alberta NDP government will always stand with our front-line health care workers and the patients they serve.

Small Business, Job Creation, and Affordability

Ms Pon: Mr. Speaker, small businesses are the backbone of Alberta. Particularly in my riding, Calgary-Beddington, there are so many amazing small businesses that I'm proud to support, small businesses like Brixton Pub, owned by Becky, in the neighbourhood of MacEwan, who started her business during the height of COVID-19 and worked through the many challenges that the pandemic presented. This place had many challenges, but Becky never gave up on her business. She made it through thanks to the support of community and the support of this UCP government, like our small-business grant.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has it all despite the NDP attempts to stifle our economy while they were in power. The UCP has invested in growing it, and this government's work has paid off enormously. We have gained over 100,000 jobs in the last year; we now have among the lowest unemployment rates in the country, which is tremendously different from when the NDP was the government. Edmonton and Calgary have two of the top three unemployment rates in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we know that a strong economy makes a strong Alberta, and when we have a strong Alberta, we all share in the prosperity, especially those that need it most. This includes offering the most generous social programs of any province, programs that have only gotten stronger. This is including the indexing of AISH, income supports, the seniors' benefit, and the Alberta child and family benefit. This includes the $2 billion in affordability packages that will benefit all Albertans, including small-business owners.

I'm so proud to call Alberta my home and to be Albertan. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Livingstone-Macleod and the Deputy Chair of Committees.

Agricultural Environmental Stewardship

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes when I look at the news, I'm stunned and I cannot believe the headlines that I read. It's not always just on the CBC. One such report states that the Dutch government is planning to purchase over 3,000 farms only to shut them down soon after. They are claiming that this is an effort to comply with European Union environmental mandates to slash nitrogen emissions. The Netherlands is not the only place where attacks are taking place on farming. Here in our own country we are seeing similar intentions. The federal government wants to increase the carbon tax, which would cost Canadian farmers upwards of $100,000 annually. These plans will jeopardize the sustainability and the viability of the Canadian family farm.

Some farmers have voiced opposition to the new rules, and how could they not, Mr. Speaker? Farming is the livelihood of many people and the backbone of this province, and these rules have put these livelihoods at stake. Our ag producers have a long history of environmental stewardship. In fact, I'd even say it's in their DNA. I know this because I'm proud to say that I'm the fifth generation raised on our family farm.

I watched my dad and grandfather year after year work the land with respect, knowing that if they took care of the land, the land would take care of them. This was so important to them that following the Depression, my grandpa Reid and my great-grandpa Reynolds ran part of their operation as an experimental farm, looking for ways to develop farming techniques and seed that would better the environment. That work played a large role in developing innovative farming hardware, just like the Noble blade.

Because of the roots and the heritage that I have in the farming sector, I must stand up for our ag producers. I truly believe that farmers and ranchers are stewards of the land, yet all over the world they're being devalued and attacked. The federal Liberals pick on farmers financially over and over. The rules the Trudeau government has put into place defy common sense and practice. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with food insecurity across the globe, so why are we attacking the very people that put food on our tables?

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora has question 1.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, before the House rises, let's look at who was really focused on Albertans this session. Our party brought forward legislation to protect and improve health care, we introduced a framework for jobs growth and investment attraction, we released a plan to freeze insurance premiums and lower costs for families, but what did the UCP do? They rammed through a job-killing sovereignty act dividing Canadians and setting Indigenous relations back a generation. Does the Premier understand why no one trusts her government to act on what really matters to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I've observed about the NDP plan is it seems to be a continuation of all of the policies of the UCP. So if they're just going to continue the policies of the UCP, they may as well just vote us in again. One of the other things I would also note is that they are trying to rewrite history. Many people in the province, and certainly everyone on this side, are not going to forget the NDP job-killing record. When you look at what we have done: increasing the amount of venture capital, increasing the amount of capital investment, we've got oil sands companies increasing again. Alberta's seen a net increase of over 100,000 jobs since last year.

Ms Hoffman: The most pressing concern of this session was the health of Alberta's children, who are fighting RSV, COVID, and influenza. We saw overwhelmed emergency rooms at our pediatric hospitals. Waits of 20 hours. In Calgary there are so many sick children waiting, they had to put a trailer outside to keep them in. The Health minister said that help was coming soon, but it never arrived. The government voted against addressing the child health care crisis three separate times. So why does the Premier care more about paper straws than she does about sick children in Alberta?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was very concerned about the 20-hour waits, which is why we put Dr. John Cowell in place, and as I've been monitoring the wait times, they've never exceeded that level since he came in. So the system's working. But I know that the members opposite are already trying to change the channel because they are forgetting, and Albertans won't, that the NDP hiked taxes by $3.4 billion in their four years of government. They raised taxes and fines 97 times. That includes the carbon tax, the largest tax hike in Alberta history. That is the record of the job-killing NDP, and people are not going to forget that.

Ms Hoffman: Another story this session is all of the UCP members who lost their moral compasses. They spoke against the sovereignty act, but when it came time to stand up for Albertans, they sold out for power and a promotion. They backed the Premier issuing clarifications for things like her defence of Vladimir Putin or claiming that the unvaccinated were the most discriminated against or her attacks on cancer patients or her refusal to support vaccines, her insulting comments about Indigenous people. Is there anyone left over there who's got a spine, and if so, will they stand up and say the Premier was wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do recall that when the NDP were in power and we saw a decline in our economy, the former NDP Energy minister said this: certainly, there are always ways to talk about mobility of jobs between provinces, so maybe they can go work in B.C. until it gets better and then come back home. That was their job-creating strategy, to chase people out of this province, and we saw six consecutive quarters of people leaving this province. That's turned around. We now have net in-migration that is the highest that we have ever seen.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Glenora for the second set of questions.

Health Care Workforce Recruitment and Retention Vaccination Policies

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, earlier this month the former president and CEO of AHS, Dr. Verna Yiu, gave a presentation at the University of Alberta. It was on health care and Alberta's workforce. She warned that demand for nurses and other health care workers in Canada is going up at a time when all-time vacancies are the highest they've ever been, yet the UCP government continues to attack and blame front-line workers instead of working with them to attract more people to the profession and keep those who are working in it today, so to the Premier. You've spent a lot of time firing people, but that doesn't fix health care. When will you actually start hiring?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, you have to remember that we had to rescind a policy that had been put in place by AHS that was chasing workers out of the profession and out of the province. We now welcome anyone, regardless of the medical choice that they make, to work in our system in Alberta Health Services. That's reaching out a hand to other provinces where they still have those restrictions in place. That's what we're going to be doing. We're also working, through our Minister of Skilled Trades and Professions, to ensure that we are doing recruitment internationally. We are also making sure that we reduce the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the chaos caused by the UCP in our health care system is driving workers away. Dr. Yiu's presentation showed that the health care worker vacancy rate in Alberta has gone up 50 per cent under the UCP. The voluntary termination rate – that's people quitting in our province in health care – has gone up 50 per cent. The number of workers quitting in their first year under this government has doubled. More health care workers are working overtime, and they're getting sick, so why won't the Premier start listening to the front lines, listen to the workers, take action before things get even worse?

Ms Smith: I don't know why the member opposite keeps on standing up for administration and management, because what we are hearing is that it's the front line that continues to be ignored by layers . . .

Mr. Feehan: Why do you hate health professionals?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford will know that unparliamentary language on or off the record still remains unparliamentary. [interjections]

The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: We are the party that sticks up for the little guy. They are the party that sticks up for the managers. That is why we are working with our front-line workers to identify their issues to make sure that we are addressing them on the ground to push decision-making down so that we've got more money for the front line. We're going to continue that process that we started, and it only started because we took the bold decision to put Dr. John Cowell in place.

Ms Hoffman: According to documents released today by CTV News, ER wait times at Edmonton hospitals are the longest they've been since 2015. AHS data shows that four hospitals either matched their longest monthly wait times or surpassed them in September. That is driven by the triple whammy of RSV, COVID, and influenza, of which Alberta has the highest rates of spread in Canada. Why won't the Premier show some leadership, stand up with the chief medical officer of health publicly, tell Albertans that vaccines work, and answer questions about the growing health care crisis in Alberta?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we believe that it is important for people to talk to their family doctor about the medical choices that are best for them. Obviously, the influenza vaccine is important for those who are most vulnerable and can help reduce the risk. That is the message that has been put out there by Dr. Joffe. He has put it out in press releases. He has put it out on Twitter. He has written letters to parents, advising them of their options. The other thing that they can do, of course, is stay home if they are sick – I commend parents for doing exactly that – and to make sure that they're taking measures to protect themselves. That's just common sense. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall is the only one with the call.

Automobile Insurance Premiums

Mr. Sabir: In 2019 the UCP did a favour for their buddies in the insurance industry. They removed the rate cap on car insurance; right away premiums soared. For Albertans in my riding this meant thousands of dollars in extra costs on top of the worst cost of living in 40 years. Meanwhile insurance companies are making record profits. The Premier says that she knows we need a solution. Will she admit that the problem was caused by her Finance minister picking his friends in the insurance industry over Albertans?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that insurance rates have been going up for a long time. They went up all the way through the NDP's time in office, 5 per cent per year, for a total of 20 per cent. We now know that we're in a position where Alberta has some of the highest insurance rates in the country. That's why I've asked my Finance minister and my Affordability and Utilities minister to meet with the insurance industry so that we can talk about ways that we can address this in the long run. Part of the problem with the approach taken by the members opposite is that it resulted in people having to pay their insurance premiums up front. People were deinsured. People had to bundle their insurance, and it became unaffordable. We need better solutions.

Mr. Sabir: According to a recent report by Ernst & Young Albertans are forced to buy the most expensive car insurance in Canada. An Alberta driver could pay more than double what their twin brother pays, having an identical car, in British Columbia. These premiums have soared since the UCP Finance minister removed the rate cap. That's fact. Will the Premier accept responsibility for Albertans paying the most expensive car insurance in the country after her government gave the green light to massive increases?

Ms Smith: Most of the increase that took place, took place in the 2015 to 2019 period, under the former government, so will they apologize to Albertans for the fact that it increased under them? In fact, when we released the cap, we ended up seeing a lower average increase year over year. Now, what we are hearing is that there are a certain number of our insured . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: What we are hearing is that there is a certain percentage of the insured that are seeing double and triple the increases, and we need to understand why that is. We are hearing stories of people who have a clean driving record and they're seeing an increase. We need to understand why that is. To act as if it's a hundred per cent across the board is not true.

Mr. Sabir: On Tuesday, like today, the Premier said that she's concerned by the cost of car insurance and she hopes to find a solution sometime. My challenge to the UCP is: why wait? My private member's bill will be introduced today, and it will freeze insurance rates for one year. We can pass this bill in a day. Last night I invited the UCP to join us in getting this done before we leave and giving all Alberta drivers some holiday cheer. To the Premier: will she join us in freezing car insurance rates today so that we can find solutions? Yes or no?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we believe in consulting with industry and identifying areas where we can work together to solve the problem. I think it's pretty well understood that we've got some issues that are . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: It is well understood, with the Ernst & Young report, that we have seen an escalation in rates that began in 2015 and has continued. The bulk of that increase happened under the NDP time in office, and that's why we've got to go and we've got to address this. We've got to identify the issues, and then we've got to work over the next number of months to find short-term, mid-term, and long-term solutions. What they put forward simply didn't work.

The Speaker: Hon. members, my apologies. A point of order was called at 1:57, that I failed to note, by the hon. Member for Taber-Warner.

Seniors' Issues

Ms Sigurdson: Since 2019 we've turned away about 300 seniors a year because we didn't have a bed when they needed a bed: those were the words of Larry Mathieson, the CEO of Calgary's Kerby Centre, which runs the lone elder abuse shelter in the city. This news is horrifying. Ensuring that no one is turned away when fleeing from abuse is critical, and I worry about the health and safety of those 300 seniors who were turned away. Will the minister commit to fixing this problem immediately?

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question and, of course, for her advocacy. Of course we want to make sure we're working with our not-for-profit providers, our shelter providers, to make sure that especially our seniors are not turned away. I'm more than happy to continue to work with these folks that provide these excellent services in our community to make sure that we have excellence in support and services for seniors in our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Sigurdson: Seniors built this province, and we owe them respect, dignity, and support to live their best lives. Seniors need a voice, especially when dealing with a government that has no compassion, like the UCP. We have proposed the creation of an independent seniors advocate, someone to stand up for seniors and bring their concerns to government. This government threw seniors off their benefit plans. They cut their income support programs and attacked our health system. Given the legacy of cruel UCP policy decisions impacting seniors, will the minister agree it's time to bring back the seniors advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for her question and her advocacy. This government is taking action to help address affordability challenges for seniors in our community. I, like her, have been out hitting doors, and I've heard from seniors first-hand about the challenges around affordability. That's why we reindexed seniors' benefits. That's why we have come with a hundred dollars a month starting in January for seniors in this province to help address affordability issues. Of course, there's also the money that's been put towards food banks to make sure that there's food available for all Albertans.

In regard to the seniors advocate we did consolidate the seniors advocate. There is a seniors advocate under Health. A lot of the issues . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: The pain, suffering, and stress Alberta seniors experience under this government continues to deepen. The UCP is planning to pull seniors off the Canada pension plan. They're throwing the retirement security of hundreds of thousands into complete chaos. Seniors shouldn't have to worry about the Premier and Finance minister blowing their retirements on a police force no one wants or a revenue agency that no one wants. Will the Premier please stop scaring seniors and stop threatening their retirement by pulling out of CPP right here and right now?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am disappointed by that hon. member continuing to scare seniors. This government is taking real action to help seniors during this very difficult time. Of course, seniors' pension is not at risk. We . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, seniors' pensions are not at risk, and we will continue to make sure that our seniors are cared for, that we have supports in our community. We, obviously, are so thankful for seniors for building our province and giving us the legacy that we have here today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has a question.

Federal Firearms Act Prosecution Protocol

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 1, 2020, the federal government arbitrarily banned more than 1,500 types of firearms. After the amnesty expires in October 2023, law-abiding Albertans could face jail time under the Criminal Code for simply possessing property that they legally purchased. To the Minister of Justice: how will taking back constitutional jurisdiction for handling charges under the federal Firearms Act help protect Alberta's law-abiding firearms owners?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Look, we know that Public Safety Canada doesn't have the capacity, they don't have the wherewithal, they don't have the resources to confiscate hundreds of thousands of firearms across Canada, but that doesn't mean we're willing to take any risks. This is a federal government which is making a habit of making life more difficult for folks. The federal government – if they don't extend the amnesty, any person who owns a firearm listed in the 2020 ban will be criminalized by the federal government in October of '23. That's less than a year from now, and that's why we're taking action now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for the response. Given that Alberta is taking back constitutional jurisdiction for handling the charges under the Firearms Act and given that Alberta's Crown prosecutors will now determine whether to pursue charges or not and further given that this new protocol provides prosecutors with guidance in respect to public interest when determining the charges, to the same minister: how will the newly issued protocol to Alberta's Crown prosecutors help protect Alberta's law-abiding firearms owners?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, while respecting the operational independence on individual cases, the new protocol provides prosecutors with guidance on figuring out when something is or is not in the public interest and whether or not to pursue charges. The protocol states that it will not be in the public interest to proceed with a charge of possession of a banned firearm where the following factors exist: first, that the accused lawfully obtained the firearm before May 1, 2020; second, that the firearm was reclassified as prohibited on May 1, 2020; and, third, that the accused has not been charged with any other offence in relation to the possession or use of that firearm.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the minister. Thank you for your work on this file. Given that the federal government handles cases involving the federal Firearms Act and given that the provinces have the constitutional authority to handle federal criminal law charges, including the charges related to the federal Firearms Act, to the Minister of Justice: how will these steps you've taken today help protect Albertans who own firearms that could be banned under the proposed amendments in Bill C-21?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Over the past month or so we've seen the federal government continue to push further than we could've ever imagined with the proposed amendments to Bill C-21. These amendments arbitrarily ban hundreds of new models of legally owned shotguns and rifles. This is now legislation which is proposed to target hunters, farmers, sport shooters, who collectively own hundreds of thousands of firearms that could soon be prohibited. If these amendments are successful, C-21 will be the most sweeping and arbitrary ban in Canadian history. The ban will not only be unenforceable but will criminalize hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

Cost-of-living Indexing of Benefits Programs

Ms Renaud: In 2018 our government tied the value of benefits for AISH recipients and low-income seniors to inflation finally. In 2019 one of the first things the UCP government did was to attack the vulnerable and disabled Albertans in our province by cutting the vital benefits. The UCP justified the cruel decision by saying that they couldn't afford the increased costs and running deficits, yet they paid for their ridiculous war room and gave away handouts to wealthy corporations. That was three years ago, and still the UCP has failed to apologize for the harm that they've done. In fact, they'd rather run around patting themselves on the back. Will the minister stand up today and apologize for making life unbearable for vulnerable and disabled Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the history lesson. I remember three and a half years ago the previous government left us in a fiscal mess, deficit after deficit after deficit, on the path to over $100 billion of debt. That's $5 billion a year at the current tax rate in just financing cost, money that could have gone to the people that need it in our community. This government took real action on getting our financial house in order so that we could be at a place in time now, today, so that we can help our most vulnerable.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Renaud: Given that the UCP government thinks so little of vulnerable people that they'd like to make life even more difficult for them by cutting vital benefits and given the public pressure finally forced the UCP to reverse their devastating decision and reindex benefits and given that the UCP is doing this on a go-forward basis only and ignoring the fact that they'll be responsible for people impacted in society with three years' worth of cuts, will the minister just admit that they've only done the bare minimum and it won't actually undo the harm that they've caused over the last three years? Just apologize and do better.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I've stated this before in this House, but it bears repeating. We inherited a fiscal train wreck from the members opposite, and we brought our fiscal house in order for the sustainability of programs going forward. No longer . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: No longer will we borrow from our grandchildren. No longer will we jeopardize programing for the most vulnerable in the future, Mr. Speaker. We brought responsible government to Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Renaud: Given that we're all living through the worst affordability crisis in 40 years and given that for many of us it means just, you know, cutting costs at the grocery store, putting vacations on hold, but for the most vulnerable and disabled it can be the difference between having a home and being forced onto the street; it can be a matter of life or death. I still hear from people every day who can't make ends meet. This inflationary crisis is crushing them, and what this government is proposing to do is not enough. You need to make them whole. You need to undo the damage you have created.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I share that member's deep concern for our most vulnerable in our community, and that's why this government is taking action, has taken action, will continue to take real action to make sure that we address the affordability challenges that our most vulnerable are facing in our community.

But, Mr. Speaker, again, we have to revisit the track record from three and a half years ago . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for St. Albert had her opportunity to ask the question. The minister . . .

An Hon. Member: Shame.

The Speaker: Order. I don't need help from the folks on this side doing the job either.

The minister has the opportunity to answer the question, just as you've had to ask it.

The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, let's revisit the track record from three and a half years ago and the financial disaster that we found ourselves in when we took over government. This government got our financial house back in order, not only protecting these programs today but also into the future to make sure that we can support vulnerable people long . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Diabetes Supports

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over six months ago the UCP government created fear and anxiety by cruelly attempting to take coverage for insulin pumps away from 4,000 Albertans who rely on the insulin pump therapy program. Now, thankfully, Albertans organized their rallies against this, and the UCP backed down. The Minister of Health rightly apologized and in July promised there would be meaningful, ongoing conversations on future policy with the diabetes working group, but as of today the membership of the group is still not known and, from what I've seen, hasn't even met. So will the Minister of Health please explain why he's yet to follow through on his commitment to the type 1 diabetes community?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We understand that diabetes is a significant issue. We were very pleased to be able to announce the two co-chairs of the diabetes working group, and they are working. We are identifying the other individuals on that working group to continue to be able to identify how we can address this chronic disease, better support Albertans, you know, who have it, and also prevent other Albertans from getting diabetes. This is a significant issue. We have set up the diabetes working group, and I'm looking forward to making more announcements on this in the future.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that a group with no members is not set up and given that after the UCP promised not to cancel the program, they also committed that new pumps with updated technology would be added to the program as early as possible this year and given that that was exciting news for Albertans who would benefit from that technology, to hear it would happen this year, but given that there is not much time left in 2022 and I'm hearing from many Albertans that when they ask this government, their questions are going unanswered about when they'll have access to those new pumps, will the Minister of Health please tell type 1 diabetics when he will actually do what he promised and make more insulin pumps available under this program this year?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the hon. member is quite correct. We made a commitment that we would make new pumps available, and I'm very pleased that work is being done right now between Alberta Health and manufacturers to actually make those available. I'm looking forward to being able to make an announcement on that in the very near future.

Mr. Shepherd: Given that the UCP's initial plans to cancel the insulin pump therapy program created anxiety in the type 1 diabetic community because it looked to cancel full public coverage and force them to potentially pay more out of pocket and given that when a type 1 diabetic asked the Premier about coverage for new pumps on her radio show, she talked about her plan for health savings accounts, which she previously suggested were intended to help Albertans get used to paying out of pocket for care, will the Minister of Health confirm here and now that any changes to the IPTP, including access to new pumps, will never require Albertans to pay out of pocket for life-saving technology?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we talked about the potential changes to the insulin pump program, we indicated, you know, at that point in time when we actually made the change that we were going to maintain the program as it stands. We will be maintaining the program as it stands. Again, we're working through negotiations with other insulin pump manufacturers. We'll be able to provide the new pumps to those under the program, and I look forward to making that announcement in the near future.

Pharmacists' Walk-in Clinics and Health Care Access

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, I recently had the opportunity to attend the opening of the Shoppers Drug Mart pharmacist walk-in clinic in Fort Saskatchewan. This location is one of a few that recently opened. The pharmacist walk-in clinic is a new and innovative concept serving to offer basic health care services to patients with common ailments and injuries by expanding the roles of prescribing pharmacists. Can the Minister of Health please inform this House how this innovative idea actually works?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the excellent question. Albertans need better access to primary care, and this pilot project uses the skills of pharmacy teams to improve access safely and appropriately with the same regulatory oversight as all other health care providers. These clinics will enable Albertans to get help quickly and easily for minor health problems and the management of chronic conditions. Pharmacists work within their defined scope of practice. They're key assets in delivering quality primary care and can help address many health concerns that may otherwise go untreated.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Mr. Speaker, given that wait times are a major issue within the health care system in Alberta and the rest of Canada and that patients are often left waiting for far too long for simple yet critical treatment and diagnosis and given that prescribing pharmacists are front-line health care staff, which many Albertans count on for a variety of services, can the same minister please explain how this new concept of pharmacists' walk-in clinics will help reduce wait times for Albertans seeking health care?

Mr. Copping: Thanks once again to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, pharmacists in Alberta have the broadest scope of practice in Canada. By leveraging their extensive training, this pilot offers Albertans another health care option, which can ease pressures on other parts of our health care system. Through better management of chronic diseases like diabetes and high blood pressure, pharmacists can help to take pressure off family doctors and emergency rooms. With the knowledge gained from the pilot project, we can improve health care delivery, and Alberta can continue to be a leader in pharmacy practice across the country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that pharmacists' walk-in clinics are simply one step closer to shortening wait times and that many of my constituents have contacted me over the years with concerns and suggestions regarding the state of our health care system and given that our government is committed to improving the health care system for all Albertans, can the minister please share with this House the government strategy to reduce wait times and improve accessibility of health care for all Albertans? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

2:20

Mr. Copping: Thanks once again to the member for the excellent question. Mr. Speaker, we know our health care system is under strain, and we're taking action to address it. Last month the Premier and I appointed Dr. John Cowell as the official administrator for AHS in order to provide efficient, effective, and decisive leadership that we need right now. Dr. Cowell's mandate is specifically targeted to reducing wait times for surgeries, emergency rooms, and ambulances. We are confident he'll be able to make the necessary changes, and Albertans will have better access to the care that they need when they need it.

Homelessness in Edmonton

Member Irwin: Another task force from the UCP. Unhoused folks dying on our streets can't wait for a task force. The evidence is clear. We know what's needed – housing, investments in harm reduction, preventative health care – not a task force consisting of mostly White, privileged politicians who've never experienced homelessness or known what it's like to struggle with addiction. To the Premier. Now is your chance to set a new direction. Stop with the committees, the panels, the task forces and instead roll up your sleeves, make the investments we all know are needed, and support our communities today.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Addiction, homelessness, and public safety issues are impacting every community in Alberta.

That is why we are taking extreme action with regard to this fantastic task force. I kind of actually already feel like I answered some of these questions yesterday, so maybe I'll just give a couple of quotes here. I'd like to quote the Edmonton police chief, Dale McFee, who said: this is the first time that I've seen the right ministers take the right approach, in my opinion, and actually drive change. He called what we are doing on this issue real leadership.

Thank you very much for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

Member Irwin: The tragic murder of two men in Chinatown this year highlighted the need for greater support for community safety. Multiple ministers from this government met with leaders from the Chinese community and promised to support the healthy streets operation centre, which the city has funded for two years as part of the safety plan demanded by the Justice minister, yet that same minister hasn't even responded to the city's request for provincial support. Will the minister commit today to follow through on his government's promise to help fund this key ask from the Chinese community?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This now falls to the new Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services. He's very happy to continue to work with the city of Edmonton, as he has been since he's entered into the role and as I did before, making sure that Edmonton has the resources that it needs to be able to respond to the safety concerns that all Edmontonians have had in their city, the concerns that they've had in the lack of response from the city of Edmonton and their council and the proposals previously about reducing funding for the Edmonton Police Service. We're very happy to have received the community safety plan from Edmonton and to work with the city.

Member Irwin: Given that residents, business owners, and leaders in the communities that I represent want to see compassionate support for those who use drugs, including investments in harm reduction, transitional supports, and pathways to recovery, and one of the biggest asks that we're all hearing is the need for investment in transitional housing and shelter options to bridge the gap from homelessness to permanent housing, to the minister, any of the ministers: why do you refuse to invest in supportive housing? It saves money. It saves lives. Do the right thing.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this government is taking action. We have been taking action. We've been investing in affordable housing for the last three and a half years.

Member Irwin: Supportive.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: It's supportive housing and all types of housing: seniors' housing, transitional housing.

We will continue to invest in affordable housing. Actually, I just did a big announcement the other day. Again, they obviously missed the announcement; $55 million was just announced the other day here in Edmonton. We are building housing. We are taking real action to address these very, very real challenges on the street. Mr. Speaker, it's more than just a budget line item for us; we're actually building these houses.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is next.

Energy Company Municipal Tax Payment

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's rural municipalities are under increased financial pressure as they prepare to go yet another year without collecting unpaid taxes from the energy sector. According to the RMA these unpaid taxes have grown from $173 million in 2020 to now more than $253 million in 2022. Losing those revenues means that more municipalities are forced to cut services and eliminate positions. In November the Municipal Affairs minister promised the RMA that this issue was her top priority, yet they're still waiting. When will they get their unpaid taxes?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I was happy to have an announcement yesterday where both the presidents of RMA and AM were in attendance, a great announcement on our economic development in rural Alberta plan. This question came up from the press gallery. Paul McLauchlin, the president of RMA, stood with this government with full confidence that we are getting to the root of this problem. There have been changes that have been discussed by both Energy, Municipal Affairs, and Environment. We're going to do it and not just on municipal taxes but for landowners, too.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that last year's Bill 77 clearly failed to get the payments flowing to municipalities and given that the reeve of Vulcan county has said that he expects the number to increase, saying that oil and gas companies with active wells actually use this law as a loophole to get out of paying their back taxes, and given that Vulcan county has already had to lay off staff because of the UCP failure, will the minister admit that they don't have a plan or a strategy and that it was actually a failure under Bill 77 and they should be paying rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm from a part of the world where there's tons of legacy oil activity, where the orphan well issue is a big thing. I work closely with my municipalities, and that bill did help. Did it fix the problem? No. We have a few bad actors that are giving the industry a bad name, frankly, and we're going to continue to work with municipalities. We talk about municipalities – I have 26 municipalities in my riding. We talk about everything. We're not planning bike lanes on the weekend. We're talking about real problems, and we'll continue to do that.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition rolled out a new performance fast pass as part of our plan for job creation in Alberta and given that this pass acts like Nexus but for economic project approvals, allowing companies with good track records to get shovels in the ground quicker, and given that this fast pass could act as an incentive for companies with outstanding taxes owed to hurting municipalities to pay them off, will the minister stand today and offer support for our performance fast pass? It's a good idea, Minister. Let's just get on board with it.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it sounds very much like something we've already done and municipalities are using. I know that even in my department of agriculture we work with municipalities in a concierge service style, bringing in business, working through problems, whether it be rail or water. I will promise that member and all the opposition that if they do ever find themselves in possession of a good idea, we'll look at it.

Calgary Economic Development

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, recently I was on a private visit to my family in India, the first time in three years. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The hon. Member for Calgary-Edgemont is the only one with the call.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, recently I was on a private visit to my family in India, the first time in three years. During that time I also met with CEOs of major companies in various sectors. I was pleased to find that many of these business leaders were excited about investing in Canada and especially in Calgary's booming economy. Can the minister of jobs and economy please explain why there is such an excitement about the opportunities in Calgary?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, thank you to the hard-working Member for Calgary-Edgemont. I will tell you that Calgary's economy is booming. People can't wait to set up shop in Alberta and especially Calgary. Here's the proof. Calgary right now is one of the most livable cities in the world. It's a rating, and it is. In fact, 75 per cent worth of the venture capital deals have happened right in Calgary. That's almost a half a billion dollars this year, and that's a record. That's going to be a record here. A thousand jobs by Mphasis, a global tech firm opening a new office in Calgary; $24 million invested by Sidetrade, another major global tech company: there are so many success stories in Calgary. Calgary welcomes the world.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that I have also spoken to entrepreneurs in Silicon Valley who are interested in expanding to Calgary, creating more jobs for Calgarians and Albertans, and given that these companies require a labour force with job-specific skills, can the minister of jobs please share with this Assembly what programs Alberta has to train Calgarians to fill these skilled jobs?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we all remember the four years under the NDP where tens of thousands of businesses left Alberta and fled to other jurisdictions. It's not like that now. Record numbers of people are coming to live here in Alberta. We're investing in helping them get new skills to succeed: $600 million through the Alberta at work program so that Albertans can find well-paid jobs, $171 million being invested to create over 10,000 new postsecondary seats in high-demand programs. We have a huge demand in almost every single industry, all sorts of jobs. Alberta's calling. If you want a job, if you want an opportunity, come to Alberta.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that there is tremendous excitement regarding the economic opportunities in Calgary and Alberta and given that this government has been talking about the renewed Alberta advantage, can the same minister please inform this Assembly what the renewed Alberta advantage will mean for my constituents in Calgary?

Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to all my colleagues and constituents: Merry Christmas.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it will be a merry Christmas if they come out to Alberta. That's because they'll save $14.8 billion compared to other jurisdictions in Canada just on taxes. We have low taxes, but there's so much more. We have low taxes, no sales tax, a business-friendly government, and the renewed Alberta advantage is so much more. It's livable, affordable, vibrant cities like Calgary and Edmonton. It's a booming tech sector. It's world-class universities. It's over 100,000 job opportunities right now here in Alberta. If you want a job, if you want an opportunity, this is the place. Come on out to Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Student Enrolment and School Construction

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, schools in my community are using libraries, staff rooms, and hallways as makeshift classrooms: 60 students packed into one room divided by pylons; students in classrooms so large they don't even know each other's names by the end of the year. Both Bishop David Motiuk and David Thomas King are way over their capacity. BDM has 1,400 students when it was built for 940. DTK is in a similar situation. Kids in my neighbourhood are being forced to take 40-minute bus rides twice a day. Minister, this is your legacy. Are you proud?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. You know, we're addressing school classroom enrolment growth by providing additional funding. The members opposite continue to raise fear, but what we're actually doing is increasing the number of schools we have. We have actually built more schools in three years than they built in four. We are addressing those issues. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Carson: Given that the Rosenthal K to 6 school is a year 1 priority for the Edmonton public school board and Hawks Ridge K to 6 is a year 2 priority and given that these schools would have alleviated the massive pressures our community is seeing and in many cases would have removed the need for students as young as four years old to be bused out of their communities and given that the minister repeatedly uses the talking point that Edmonton public didn't have a priority list, which is simply not true – if the minister even attempted to provide adequate funding, these schools could have been built already. Minister, west Edmonton families need and deserve new schools. Why does the minister continue to play political games with the future of our students?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, that is just not true. The members opposite know that we have a gated process that all school divisions go through. It is very detailed. It goes on the priorities of the school divisions, but I cannot help it . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: I can't help it, Mr. Speaker, if the school divisions themselves don't prioritize schools in growing areas. I can tell the members opposite that I have spoken with Edmonton public school division, and they're happy now that they understand the process more fully. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Carson: Given, Mr. Speaker, that under the NDP government we saw 60 schools a year built compared to the dismal record of this UCP government, 60 schools over four years – I saw the building of David Thomas King, Bishop David Motiuk, Michael Phair, just to name a few in my community – but given that this minister can't even be bothered to properly fund the schools that are already built, let alone fund the desperately needed schools across my community and across the province, forcing these projects back a minimum four to six years, to the minister. Thousands of families who have listened to your rhetoric for nearly four years are tired, but I promise that an NDP government will get the job done. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Member LaGrange: You know what, Mr. Speaker? The members opposite are not telling the truth. This is not factual. They only built 60 schools over four years. We built over 66 over three, and we're building more. You know what . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. I might just warn members that me standing and then sitting down isn't another opportunity to shout down another member of the Assembly.

The hon. the minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? The NDP has failed on so many fronts: they failed on delivering curriculum, they failed on addressing class size, they failed francophones by cutting the Francophone Secretariat, and they failed choice in education. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Government Policies and Red Tape Reduction

Mr. Nielsen: I've decided to help my friend the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction fulfill the terms of the Premier's mandate letter. The Premier recently imposed the job-killing sovereignty act on Albertans, opposed by the Calgary Chamber of commerce, municipalities, Indigenous communities, and so many more, which means the act will be bound in litigation and force this government to use regulation to compel compliance with their decrees. Can the minister of red tape explain how using extra regulations to carry out the Premier's demand is not red tape, and will he do his job and remove this red tape, that's harmful to Alberta's economy?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, I always appreciate a question from the opposition. Unfortunately, in this case they're using it to disguise the fact that in 2011 the Leader of the Opposition said, and I quote: sometimes public interest is better served by limiting the profitability of that business. Unquote. Then the Leader of the Opposition has the audacity in 2015 to support that by raising taxes on everything that moved, including corporations, and proceeded to chase $100 billion worth of investment out of this province. Shame on them. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: Given that the next step of this Premier's agenda is a massive expansion of bureaucracy, spending, regulation, and red tape that comes with hijacking the pension plans of Albertans against their wills and given that the Premier plans to use pensions of Albertans to purchase herself a police force that Albertans also oppose, which will result in another massive expansion of bureaucracy, costs, and red tape, and given in addition to being overwhelmingly opposed by Albertans, an Alberta pension plan and Alberta police force will impose countless layers of red tape on Albertans, will the minister do his job and shut these down?

Mr. Nally: Mr. Speaker, you have to forgive the hon. member because they've only got two tools in their tool box; one is taxes, and the other is regulation. We saw that in 2015, when companies like Shell and ConocoPhillips fled the province because of the socialist ideologies. I'm proud to report that our plan is working. We cut taxes, reduced red tape, and jobs and investment are coming back to the province, just like we said it would. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: Given that the trifecta of bad ideas generated by this Premier is the idea of an Alberta revenue agency that will cost millions, massively expand the bureaucracy, with the only benefit being that Albertans will now get to fill out two tax forms, but given that asking Albertans to fill out their taxes twice is the very definition of harmful red tape, surely the minister of red tape can stand in this place and confirm that it will not go ahead on his watch. Or can he alert this House when his position was renamed from minister of service Alberta to the minister of carrying water for the Premier's bad ideas? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have two case studies here in this House. The members opposite, when they were in government, raised taxes on everything that moved. They added regulatory burden and red tape, sent tens of thousands of jobs packing, and perpetual deficits. We have deregulated, we've cut taxes . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have trimmed regulations. We've reduced taxes, created a competitive business environment. We're leading the nation in economic growth, creating tens of thousands of jobs, and we have a balanced budget. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization and Management

Mr. Rehn: Mr. Speaker, provincial road construction projects are crucial to allow our economy to grow and to help Albertans drive to work and to get home safely. My riding in northern Alberta is home to hard-working families, difficult terrain, and trillions of dollars worth of resource wealth. Can the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors comment on his commitment to build highway 686 and other economic corridors?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great question from the Member for Lesser Slave Lake. We are working with industry and created a ministerial steering committee to expand economic corridors, especially in northern Alberta. We'll be developing an economic corridor along 686 between Fort McMurray and the northeastern part of the province. Obviously, that's an important region, Alberta having the third-largest oil reserves in the world and the fifth-largest natural gas reserves in the world. Help growing economic corridors within this province not only helps grow our economy, but it also helps protect families and communities when natural disasters strike.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you to the minister. Mr. Speaker, given that provincial construction projects support jobs, improve our quality of life, and build assets that last generations, can the same minister comment on how he plans to prioritize needed projects across our province, especially since the NDP neglected so much of Alberta during their disastrous four years in government?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the NDP were disastrous for Alberta, and a sequel for another four years would be even worse than the original. In the first year of the NDP Alberta lost nearly 17,000 jobs. But the NDP could actually help Albertans. There's talk that the NDP is starting to buck against their Liberal coalition deal in Ottawa, so I do have a Christmas wish for the NDP: break your 2025 agreement with the Trudeau Liberals, help Albertans, call a federal election. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rehn: Mr. Speaker, given that failed NDP restrictive contract arrangements in B.C. have seen a work stoppage at the Cowichan district hospital in Duncan, B.C. and given that it was after an Indigenous contracting company said it was denied a permit to continue work due to an NDP rule over union membership and given that my riding in Lesser Slave Lake has the highest Indigenous population out of any constituency in Alberta, can the same minister assure Albertans that NDP-style, pro big union boss policies won't delay projects here in Alberta?

Mr. Dreeshen: Mr. Speaker, the NDP cares more about their big union bosses than Alberta families and Alberta workers, and we all know the NDP would bring in socialist procurement for provincial construction projects, creating labour unrest, increasing delays and cost overruns. The NDP, as the member mentioned, has already used it to kick out Indigenous workers from the Cowichan regional hospital project in B.C., but we will always stand up against NDP labour wars. To paraphrase a TV show, Yellowstone: we are the opposite of socialist procurement; we are the wall that it bashes up against, and we will not break.

The Speaker: All members will be sad to know that that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine. Merry Christmas and safe travels if you're heading home this afternoon.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has a statement to make.

Victim Services

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our criminal justice system there are those who are often left voiceless: the victims of crime, the very people who have experienced unspeakable harm and trauma, the ones who need our support the most. Victims' services agencies have stepped in, advocating for and supporting the needs of victims of crime, yet this government is planning to remove the voices of victims of crime. It is another folly in this government's approach to the justice system.

The UCP government also already funnelled money out of the victims of crime fund and failed to keep funding for legal aid in step with inflation. Just last night the government quashed an amendment to the Police Act which would have enshrined a trauma-informed perspective in policing principles in our province, helping to protect the dignity and well-being of victims. Now they're going to centralize victims' support services without consulting municipalities or victims' support service organizations.

We have already seen the devastating failure of centralized EMS dispatch. Now they want to introduce a new model of victim services which fails to take into consideration local interests or established relationships.

My colleagues and I have heard from victim services across the province opposing these changes. To them we say: we hear you. An NDP government believes in the fundamental importance of victim services. We will support the existing service providers and expand their competencies. To the victims of crime: we stand with you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowsell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting to you a vital petition coming from my constituency, Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright. Ty Thiessen, a high school student in Lloydminster, started and managed to get 192 signatures from other students in my constituency. Within this petition is a remedy being sought to amend the sixth schedule of the Constitution Act, 1982, and fight the federal carbon tax.

Introduction of Bills

Official Sport of Alberta Act

Ms Lovely: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 205, Official Sport of Alberta Act.

Our team has been laying the necessary groundwork to recognize rodeo in its rightful place as the official sport for Alberta. I believe including chuckwagon races is essential for rodeo, and chuckwagon races are quality family entertainment. These activities are wholesome, family oriented, and an important pillar of our cultural foundation in rural Alberta. I believe all Alberta families should have the opportunity to attend Alberta rodeos and create these special memories that will last forever. Yee-haw.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Bill 206

Insurance (Private Passenger Vehicle Premium) Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce a bill being Insurance (Private Passenger Vehicle Premium) Amendment Act, 2022.

If passed, this act will freeze auto insurance premiums for one year upon proclamation. During this time Albertans will be protected. It will give the government time to develop changes to make premiums more sustainable, more affordable for Albertans. Given the changing views of the Premier, at the appropriate time we will seek unanimous consent to pass this legislation today and freeze auto insurance premiums for one year from today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of jobs, the economy, and innovation has a tabling.

Mr. Jean: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to the Northern Alberta Development Council Act I am pleased to table five copies of the council's 2021-2022 annual report. This annual report highlights the outstanding work the council undertook during the 2021-2022 fiscal year. This council champions the cause of Alberta's northern communities and our economy, and this work helps foster the economic and social development opportunities in northern Alberta. Thank you for their work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a tabling.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In question period today I referred to AHS workforce numbers around, specifically, the number of people quitting or retiring early and the number that are doing it in the first year. I noted that it has doubled under the UCP's leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a petition along with letters of support in regard to the Whitecourt health care centre. I'd like to thank everyone involved in getting this put together, in particular Don and Lynne Connell and Elaine Gunderson for their efforts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud I'm tabling five copies of a letter from a mom whose son has severe combined immunodeficiency writing because of the Alberta government's passing of Bill 32, which has limited union support to social causes and organizations, and delaying donations to charities is having a negative impact on her family.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this brings us to points of order. At 1:57 the hon. Member for Taber-Warner called a point of order, and I see the hon. the Government House Leader will rise on his behalf.

Point of Order Imputing Motives Addressing the Chair

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order on behalf of the Member for Taber-Warner under 23(h), (i), and (j), where (h) reads, "makes allegations against [the] Member"; (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another"; (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." At the time noted when the point of order was called, it was clearly heard from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford the following: why do you hate health care workers?

Mr. Speaker, making such an allegation at the Premier while she was answering a question in question period, doing what her job is here, responding to the concerns of the members opposite: that kind of language is unnecessary, it's unparliamentary, and, frankly, it's totally disrespectful. You cannot make those kinds of allegations against another member in this Chamber. I would ask that that member himself apologize for using such language. It's not the first time that this member has used such language in this Chamber. He habitually likes to walk the line of what is and what is not parliamentary. These outbursts are, frankly, disrespectful to this Chamber and should not be accepted.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the Government House Leader was arguing this point of order, he also used the words that the member habitually walks and makes those kinds of comments. I think it's a matter of debate. The reason it's a matter of debate is that we do know the Premier's own record for saying that AHS health care workers have manufactured some of these crises. Based on those comments, I think it's clearly a matter of debate that we don't see that health care workers are liked much by that government side or the Premier. It's in that context. It's a matter of debate; it's not a point of order.

The Speaker: I am prepared to rule unless there are any other meaningful submissions.

I'd like to make two points this afternoon. First and foremost, during that particular exchange the hon. the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was called to order, and the Speaker noted that unparliamentary language, either on or off the record, was still unparliamentary. I'd also like to point to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, while he's doing some Christmas reading this weekend, that he might take out rules of order and decorum, House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 610, chapter 13:

Members are less apt to engage in heated exchanges and personal attacks when their comments are directed to the Chair rather than to another Member. If a Member directs remarks toward another Member and not the Speaker, the Member will be called to order and may be asked to rephrase the remarks.

On this occasion he's going to be asked to apologize, and I'm sure you'll be happy to do it on his behalf.

Mr. Sabir: I will retract and apologize. Thank you.

The Speaker: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded. We are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader is rising.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 8(2) and Standing Order 9(1) in order to revert to private members' business so that the Assembly may debate third reading of Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022, moved by the hon. Member for Peace River and mensch, my good friend behind me here.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 202 Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Chamber for unanimous consent. I rise to move third reading of Bill 202, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022.

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

It's an important piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker. It is probably one of the most impactful pieces of private member's legislation that I have seen. I'm very, very proud to be working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle. I'm very proud to be working with a number of different charities. I visited food banks; the Salvation Army; the Kids Cancer Care Foundation; the Alberta Cancer Foundation; Fear Is Not Love, an emergency centre amongst other services in Calgary for vulnerable women; the Alberta Children's hospital; the Stollery hospital; the Canadian National Institute for the Blind; the Canadian Islamic Centre and a number of different mosques; a number of different church and religious organizations; the Calgary Health Foundation; the Calgary volunteer organization; the Edmonton volunteer organization; upon hundreds of others that I have yet to speak to that I know are interested.

The support for this bill is broad, widespread, and deep within the charitable sector. It's deep outside of the charitable sector with anyone who donates, which is disproportionately a high number of Albertans compared to other provinces, and we're incredibly proud of our charitable history and heritage in Alberta. I'm very proud that this piece of legislation will get passed, God willing, by the end of this very short debate with unanimous consent, again, as it's been through the first readings and the Committee of the Whole. So, with that, and underscoring the importance of supporting the charitable sector, giving a break to average families in their donations towards those charities, I ask every member to support this and to move forward in Alberta's great tradition of charitable giving and philanthropy.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 202, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few final words on Bill 202, and I thank the hon. Member for Peace River for following this bill through. As a token of co-operation we, of course, are moving it into this last day, with the Official Opposition giving you a hand.

Again, I just wanted to say a few comments that I had put forward on this bill previously, just to remind all members in the government in particular and then whoever happens to be the government afterwards – right? – to make sure that this is not used as an excuse to in any way cut the government of Alberta's responsibilities to charities and nonprofits in the form of grants and other supports that they require to function. As you are registered as a charity, this is a stream of income, but it's not the only stream of income, by any means, for any number of the hundreds – there are really thousands – of nonprofits and charities here in the province.

By passing this, it'll be a way by which they can enhance one element of their fundraising stream, which is charitable donations, but it should in no way somehow allow or think that the government has licence to cut any other grants or benefits that nonprofits and charities need to survive and provide essential service to Albertans. So that was my first caveat. You know, I think the government promised to do that, so that's good.

The second issue that I had brought forward before was to ensure that with this bill, if passed – I've got a good feeling about it – there is an education, public awareness element that accompanies this bill so that people know that the terms of charity and income tax returns have been enhanced, right? I know that when we follow the patterns of donations, donations have dropped off, and we need to get those people back, because once you are in the habit of donating to a particular charity, chances are you will continue to do so, sometimes for the rest of your life. So by just pointing out to people just how much better it is, the return for income tax, based on this bill if it passes and if we get that information into people's hands, then I think we'll really help the charitable sector a lot. An education program that will accompany Bill 202: that would be my strong suggestion. Yeah. You know what? I've got a feeling maybe the government will do that, too.

The third thing is to again encourage other jurisdictions, especially the federal government, to look to increasing or changing the tax return for a charitable donation and increasing like we are doing here in the province of Alberta. I think we're setting a good example for other jurisdictions, and certainly it would benefit Albertans and Canadians in general if the federal government looked at reforming charitable donations and enhancing the return that a donor could enjoy if they donate to a charity. Those are my three things that I would like to see, and I'm certainly happy to support this bill.

And don't forget – let's all remember what we just did here, which was to give unanimous consent for a bill to move forward. We're going to do that again in just a few minutes. You know, in the spirit of giving and in the spirit of looking at our unsustainable car insurance rates, maybe we could try that again here in just a few more minutes.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 202?

Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

The hon. member for – oh.

Mr. Williams: To close debate. Waived.

The Acting Speaker: Close debate waived. Sorry about that, hon. member.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Deputy Opposition House Leader has risen.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since there is a very collaborative environment going on in this House – we're in the spirit of collaboration; good bills, good ideas are getting passed – I would also like to seek unanimous consent of the Legislature to waive Standing Order 8(2) and Standing Order 9(1) to proceed to private members' business in order to consider Bill 206, Insurance (Private Passenger Vehicle Premium) Amendment Act, 2022, at second reading. I hope that government members and all Members of this Legislative Assembly will consider this unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 2

Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

[Adjourned debate December 14: Mr. Amery]

The Acting Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to third reading for Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning has risen.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise to Bill 2. You know, I'm going to try to keep my comments short just because I recognize we have some things, that there may be other people that would like to speak to this. But one of the concerns that I do primarily have with Bill 2 is the piece within the legislation that speaks to RROs and this direction that is happening by the government to cap the rate at 13.5 cents but only for a short period of time between January and March, until March 31, and then what we will see is that the rate will then go back to the market rate of whatever that may be, whether it be less than the 13.5 or over the 13.5, but the consumer that is actually going to be receiving that service from the retailer will have to pay that adjustment back.

For example, for those that find RROs a little complicated, if it's capped at 13.5 cents for a consumer on an RRO and it goes up to, let's say, even 15 cents – that's a 2 cent difference on your kilowatts – then you're looking at all of that having to be accumulated over a period of time. Now, I appreciate what the government is doing is trying to bring down the costs for Albertans over the winter peak, when typically the rates may be high – however, we've seen higher rates in the summer when we hit severe heat waves – but the issue that I have is that I don't know if consumers are going to be aware of this cap and then this need to have to pay it back.

What we typically see on a bill – let's think about, like, if you have a cable bill and you only pay a percentage of your cable. You will always see on your bill your outstanding balance. So if your bill was $100 for cable, you only pay $50, your bill tells you that you owe $50 on your next upcoming bill. I don't see anything in this piece of legislation that is ensuring that the consumer is aware that they're going to have to pay the difference back.

What concerns me about the fact that that's not in the legislation and that there isn't a requirement under this cap to notify the consumer is, one, the government has a responsibility for consumer protection, and they should be making sure that any consumer that is accessing an RRO through a retailer is aware that this is the agreement, and, two, we know that primarily the Albertans that are accessing the RRO agreements or contracts tend to be living either in low income or have bad credit and aren't able to access a fixed rate, so they have a higher probability of not necessarily understanding that there may be an adjustment on their bills. I really struggle with this piece on Bill 2 because I want to make sure that Albertans that are accessing it, who are going to be impacted by the cap and then the need to have to pay it back, know what that looks like.

I would've really appreciated the minister being able to speak to the fact that there is going to be a requirement or a mechanism in talking to these retailers, that they're willing to create some form of mechanism that ensures Albertans are aware what they're actually accumulating to have to pay back, right? You know, maybe it's $10 a month, so over those three months they're going to have to pay $30 back come April 1, and this is how it will be.

The question also around the payback would be – let's say that's $10 a month for the month of January, February, and March. Do they then have to pay that $30 back on their April bill, or is it going to be over a period of time? Will the payments – all of a sudden is it going to be a huge payment in April? How will it look to ensure that those Albertans that are going to be on this payment program, I would say, are not actually going to be in more financial crisis come April than they would be if they were having to have to pay a higher rate over the next three months?

There is some accountability that I would like to hear from the minister about to ensure that Albertans do have the notification, that they are educated on how the system will work, that they know they're going to have to pay this percentage back and that it's accumulated over a period of time and their bills reflect that accumulation. If they don't, then one day there's a surprise bill in the mail that says that you owe this amount of money.

It's no different than people with cellphones when all of a sudden they go over their data, and then they get this huge bill at the end of the month where they're like: oh, my goodness, I now have a $100 phone bill when my bill should only be $50, because I did this huge overage on my data. Well, this is the same thing. All of a sudden my utility bill I thought was only 13.5 cents is all of a sudden now worth 16.5 cents, but now I have to pay it in April.

So what is the notification? How are Albertans going to know what they owe? How is it going to be reported? Is it going to be communicated? The retailer will be communicating to the government to tell them what it looks like. They will know what their costs are because, of course, there's the loan program that these retailers can access if they need to be able to carry the balance. Albertans should have that same transparency when it comes to this piece of legislation. They should be aware of how much they're going to end up carrying over on their bills.

Again, I would encourage one of the ministers to stand up and to explain how Albertans are going to know and be aware and how that's going to be reported to them so that they're able to make sure they can budget effectively to pay those bills.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and address Bill 2. Of course, many of the members on this side of the House have gotten up and actually described some of the flaws with this particular bill, but, you know, let's go back down memory lane. I remember being in this House last March, last February, I believe it was, and at that point all Albertans, including ourselves, were finding that we were all paying much higher on the utilities. Some people's utilities – I remember people contacting my office and them saying that when they were used to paying $200 a month, now they were having to pay $700.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, I got up in this House and I asked the current Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction, who was the minister of natural gas at the time: what are you going to do about this? His answer was: absolutely nothing. Absolutely nothing. That's what he said. We're not going to do anything, right?

Mr. Nally: Tell them what you really asked.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the record is there. The Hansard is there. The question was asked, and the minister at the time said: we're not going to do anything about this.

Mr. Nally: You wanted to experiment with price controls.

Member Loyola: You know why? Because the members on the other side of the House refuse . . . [interjections]

The Acting Speaker: Just a general reminder, hon. members, that all comments and questions should come through the chair. Thank you.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It seems we have a very lively, lively session going on here today. Lots of people want to get their voice in and their opinion in, right? I welcome the minister of service Alberta to get up and actually speak to this bill, you know, instead of just chiming from the sideline over there. Maybe he should get up and actually speak to it.

At that time the minister said that he was going to do absolutely nothing. We have it on the Hansard, right? We have it on Hansard.

Now, months, months later come, and they recognize that something has to be done because it's just not acceptable that Albertans have to pay the amounts, the utility bills that are being demanded of them. So then now we have this deeply flawed bill in front of us that's been put together by this government in their attempts to address the affordability crisis as it relates to utilities here in the province of Alberta, and I can honestly say that it's a miss.

First, they've introduced this utility payday loan scheme. It's a scheme. It's a scheme. They've created an enormous incentive for people to leave the regulated rate option after the cap ends in March . . . [interjection] Is this an intervention? I'll gladly accept it.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for accepting my intervention. I would like to clarify the record only because he was talking schemes. You know what? One of the greatest schemes that has been perpetrated on the Alberta public was when the NDP spent $7.5 billion on transmission fees. Now, allow me to put that in perspective. In 2020 we spent $100 million on transmission, and in 2021 we spent zero dollars on transmission. Compare that to the 7 and a half billion dollars they spent on four years. You want to know why electricity prices are high? Just look at the NDP. The best thing that we can do to keep electricity prices low is to keep them away from the electricity grid and make sure that they never get into government again. That's the best thing we can do for cheap electricity prices.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, full of hot air. You know, I understand that the minister of natural gas is going to be full of hot air, not addressing the actual piece of legislation that we have in front of us, going back into the history of decisions that were made by previous Progressive Conservative governments that actually got us in that mess in the first place. The minister doesn't talk about how it was Conservative policy that led us down the road of having to make those bad decisions, yet the minister can't address the actual bill that we have in front of us when I give him the opportunity to actually give an intervention. There we go. That shows the track record of this UCP government and its ministers, where they have a very skewed view of our history. [interjection] Please, go ahead.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you to my colleague for giving me the opportunity to correct the record. I was surprised how ill informed the minister is. Transmission was a hot issue in 2009, and at that time the leader of the NDP, Hon. Brian Mason, told them that if they will invest like that, at the request of their friends and insiders, coming generations of Albertans will pay for these costs. The last transmission line they approved was around 2012-13. Then Prime Minister Harper closed down 12 out of 18 coal-fired plants without giving them any money whatsoever. All those bad decisions of Conservatives in Alberta and in the federal government are making electricity costs unaffordable, and here we have a government that refuses to act at all.

Thank you.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall for his intervention. Of course, I agree with him that these are Conservative policies that have led us to the point where, at the end of the day, they end up making Albertans pay more.

You know, Mr. Speaker, these Conservatives believe in this outdated perspective that competition is going to lead to lower prices, but Albertans can't see it. Albertans can't see it. They get in here and they're like, "Okay; less regulation, less government," and what ends up happening? Albertans have to pay more, at the end of the day, because there's a flaw in the way that they approach it. They get up and they talk about how, yeah, they're in the best interests of Albertans, yet Albertans have to pay 30 per cent more, 40 per cent more.

The decisions of this particular government now bring us to this payday loan scheme that we have in front of us, and this scheme will result in what University of Calgary economist Blake Shaffer called a "death spiral." A death spiral, Mr. Speaker. That's not me saying it. Again I'll share with you all that it's University of Calgary economist Blake Shaffer who called this payday loan scheme a "death spiral." It would leave a group of Albertans holding the bag on a group of potentially toxic loans.

The members on the other side of the House desperately – desperately – need to take this bill back. Take it back, please. I'm begging you on behalf of Albertans to take this payday loan scheme back to the cabinet and make them revisit it and make sure that they come back with something that's actually going to help Albertans, because this thing is a death spiral. My goodness. My goodness.

To be clear, not all Albertans can get off the regulated rate option. You need to have a certain personal credit quality, like a good credit score, to get on that option. [interjection] You know, Mr. Speaker, I would accept the intervention on behalf of the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction, but after his last intervention, which added absolutely nothing to the debate, I'm not going to accept another intervention on his behalf.

Those holding these toxic loans will pay more, more, and more at the end of the month, and of course people will flee, and they are most likely to leave Albertans in a less beneficial place than they were before. [interjections] You know, the members on the other side of the House are gladly welcome to get up and speak to this particular bill if they would like to instead of heckling me from the other side over there while I contribute to the debate, Mr. Speaker. They're welcome to get up and speak to it if they like, but I would appreciate having my opportunity to actually speak to it.

Second, this government's signature affordability measure, the $100-a-month payments, actually leaves out 2 million Albertans. It's deeply unfair that someone working full-time on minimum wage gets nothing. You know, a lot of the talk on that side of the House – they're talking about affordability. Okay. And we've already seen in question period, Mr. Speaker, that when addressing the whole issue of affordability, they have impacted the most vulnerable people in our . . .

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Interrupting a Member

Mr. Sabir: I rise under Standing Order 23. I'm just trying to get the right section that says that the member speaking in the House who has the floor, given by you, has the right to speak uninterrupted. What I'm seeing here is so much interruption coming from that side, so I ask you to intervene and make sure that the member can speak what he wants to share and contribute to this debate. If any member on the other side wants to speak, they have every right to do so. They can speak at their turn.

The Acting Speaker: I see the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. Standing Order 23(h), (i), or (j) refers to a particular member. The hon. Deputy Opposition House Leader has not stated with any particularity any member to which this point of order should apply, and therefore it is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

We are so close to getting some good work done here this afternoon, and I do enjoy the lively debate. I would encourage all members that if they have something to add to debate, to please take the time to stand, add to the debate so we can all hear and enjoy the wisdom that you choose to share. I do not find this a point of order at this time, but I do caution all members that we do want to encourage lively, hearty debate and respect in this House.

The floor is back to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Debate Continued

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate it. As I was saying, it's deeply unfair that someone who is working full-time on minimum wage gets absolutely nothing by the passing of this particular bill. A student who is paying higher tuition fees, high student loan costs, again, gets absolutely nothing from this here government, right? They like to get up, especially during question period, and, you know, scream from the top of their lungs how they're the best thing since sliced bread, but of course nothing could be further from the truth. [interjections] Nothing could be – definitely not white bread.

Here we have two examples, Mr. Speaker – someone working full-time and students who are paying higher tuition fees and higher student loan costs – yet they're not going to see any benefit from this particular bill. We all know tons of Albertans who were deeply disappointed, and they deserve an answer for why they were left out. A lot of Albertans are going to be asking themselves why they were left out.

Number 3. For years this government weaponized inflation to attack the most vulnerable, like people on AISH. You know, first of all, they changed the actual payment date – they changed the payment date – which actually led to people not being able to make it to the end of the month. We're talking about the most vulnerable people. A bad decision, Mr. Speaker, a bad decision that they have yet to apologize for. They have yet to apologize for this very bad decision that had drastic effects on the lives of many people here in the province of Alberta.

You know, the Member for St. Albert has gotten up multiple times and demonstrated with e-mails and letters that she's received personally. I've also received them. Many members – I suspect that members on the other side of the House also were receiving e-mails and letters from constituents that were actually complaining about the fact that they changed the date. Then they refused to index the AISH payments to inflation for three years. Three years.

Now what we have is – you know, the fact that they decided to do that, Mr. Speaker, was absolutely cruel. It didn't need to be done. It didn't need to be done. It was the most vulnerable people here in the province of Alberta. You know, to me, it's heartbreaking – it's heartbreaking – to see the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board get up in this House day after day and defend that poor decision made by him and the rest of the cabinet. You know what? I understand that it's important to be fiscally responsible – I get it; it's important – but you don't do it on the backs of the most vulnerable people here in the province of Alberta. That is absolutely shameful.

Here we are. Now we have this new legislation which tries to rectify so many of the past mistakes made by this government. But even with every measure included in this legislation and what this government tells us will come with the regulations, an AISH recipient would be $3,000 better off if we had operated under the policies of the previous NDP government. For a person living on AISH, $3,000 is an absolutely enormous amount of money.

Mr. Speaker, there's still time. There's still time for this government, this cabinet to go back to the drawing table and address all of the issues that we have highlighted as being problematic under this particular bill and to get it right. That's all we're asking.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I know that, from your perspective, you get to see it each and every day. [interjection] Member, I'm going to finish in, like, a couple of minutes, so you're welcome to have the floor after me if you like.

Mr. Speaker, you see it from a different perspective being the deputy chair. Of course, you see the partisanship and how it is actually deteriorating our democracy here in this House. Last night we put four amendments forward – four amendments forward – not one of them accepted by this government. One was so desperately needed, that had to do with intersectionality, antiracism, and trauma-informed practice, which made so much sense. You know, last night I had dinner with a few constituents, told them all about it, and they just couldn't believe that the UCP would all vote against an amendment that would actually contribute . . .

3:30

Mr. McIver: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Items Previously Decided

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one wants to relive last night more than I do, to be clear. Nonetheless, this place operates under a set of rules called Standing Orders, and one of those standing orders is 23(f), which says:

A Member [shall] be called to order by the Speaker, if in the Speaker's opinion, that Member debates any previous vote of the Assembly . . .

which he was just doing,

. . . unless it is that Member's intention to move that it be rescinded.

Now, if the member is planning on moving to take back the decision of last night, then I'm all ears. Otherwise, I respectfully request you to direct him to today's business rather than the previous vote of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the member was referring to last night's amendments in the context of how co-operation has so much decreased in this Legislature. I think the intention of the context of the member's comments is not that he falls in the purview of the rule that the member cited. I don't think it's a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I'm willing to give the hon. member a little bit of latitude because I think I can see where he's going with this. But I do want to encourage the members to stay on debate on the matter at hand, which is Bill 2.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Debate Continued

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The point that I was getting at – and thank you for the latitude – is the fact that here we are, as the Opposition, providing an opportunity for this government to address the limits, the flaws that this particular bill has. But blind partisanship doesn't let them get past the fact that they just do not want to address the flaws – they're your flaws, they're your flaws – to actually get them right.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul has risen.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to be very brief, but I'd just like to respond to the member, seeing as he didn't let me stand up and do an intervention. He spoke about apologies and the difficulties that AISH recipients have, so I'd just like to, through you – the hon. Deputy Opposition House Leader and Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall, when he was a minister back in 2019, sent out a tweet that upset AISH people considerably, resulting in one of them coming and throwing a rock through the window of my office. To this day, that member has never apologized to my staff or to that AISH recipient, that now has a criminal record for the first time in his life. So I'd like to give that member the opportunity to stand up and apologize.

The Acting Speaker: Again, hon. members, I just want to extend a little bit of caution or invitation to maybe remain focused on the business at hand today. We are on Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, so at this point I'd like to ask if any members would like to speak to the bill.

Mr. Sabir: I rise to speak to Bill 2, Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. Certainly, I will address the comments that were raised by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul. This act is designed to help address the cost-of-living crisis facing Alberta. That's the intention of this act. In order to address a problem, we need to know what went wrong, where it went wrong. Let me start with a few things that added to the cost-of-living crisis in the province and that should be fixed.

The first thing that this government did was give $4.7 billion to wealthy corporations on the back of disabled Albertans, on the back of seniors, on the back of those unemployed and getting benefits from this government. They deindexed AISH. That's why people with disabilities, that's why the unemployed, that's why seniors are facing such a crisis. In 2018, when we were still in government, we said that this government – the then opposition, the UCP, if they become government, will cut AISH: that's what I said. That's exactly what this government did. As soon as they became government, they cut AISH, so I have nothing to apologize for. That's their record. They should apologize for cutting AISH benefits at a time when inflation was at its 40-year high. They should be ashamed of that, every single one of them who supported cutting AISH benefits, deindexing AISH benefits. They should be ashamed of that, and they should be apologizing for it.

The second thing: what's adding to the cost of living? I think there are many things I can point to, but when I talk to my constituents in Calgary-Bhullar-McCall, I will relate what they tell me is adding to their cost of living: insurance. When we were in government, we had a 5 per cent premium increase cap on insurance. This government, as soon as they came into government, this UCP, what did they do? They handed the pen to the insurance industry, removed the cap, and now we are seeing 30, 40, 50 and in some cases 100 per cent increase in Alberta's insurance premiums. That's what is causing a cost-of-living crisis in this province.

When we were in government, we had a rate cap on utilities, 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. As soon as they became government, they removed that rate, and that's causing this cost-of-living crisis in our province.

We had a tuition freeze on postsecondary education. As soon as they became government, they removed that freeze and made postsecondary education one of the most expensive across this country, a 30 per cent to 40 per cent, in some cases 100 per cent increase. They cut $700 million from the postsecondary education budget, resulting in skyrocketing fees in our institutions. That's causing the cost-of-living crisis in our province. That's the direct result of this government's policies.

Then they talk about inflation, and then they blame the federal government, that during the pandemic the federal government was handing out money and that money handed out by the federal government is the primary cause of inflation. You are doing exactly that. Then find solutions that work for Albertans. Put the rate cap back on insurance; make it affordable for Albertans. Put a cap back on utilities; make utilities affordable for Albertans. Investigate why grocery prices are going 100, in some cases 200 per cent higher than what inflation is at. Investigate those corporations. That will make life more affordable.

Just six months before an election, handing Albertans $100 up until the election will not address the cost-of-living crisis. A hundred dollars for those on fixed income may still go a long way, but that's not the permanent solution. The permanent solution will be: cap the insurance rate, cap the utility rate, lower tuition fees, investigate grocery prices. That will help us lower and address the cost-of-living crisis.

This bill may help some, but it's leaving out 2 million Albertans. We need systemic changes to address this crisis that is caused by this UCP government. In six months there is an election coming up, and Albertans will have a say. They will have a lot more to say about this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:40

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to third reading?

Seeing none, would the minister like to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Bill 6 Police Amendment Act, 2022

[Adjourned debate December 14: Mr. Neudorf]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, looking for those who would like to speak to third reading of Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022, I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall has risen.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to third reading of Bill 6, Police Amendment Act, 2022. I will be speaking against this bill, and I will give my reasons to do so. Basically, there are four primary reasons that we will be speaking against this bill.

Since the murder of George Floyd, the conversation around policing has changed. The murder of George Floyd was not the last one. Since then we have seen more incidents, such as one in Calgary. A person named Latjor from the South Sudanese community, who had a history of mental health, was also shot dead by Calgary police. Indigenous communities across this province, Black communities, person-of-colour communities have raised serious, serious concerns about bias in policing across this province, across this country. When we look at our institutions, we still see Indigenous communities overrepresented in our justice system. We see Black, person-of-colour communities overrepresented in our justice system.

The number one ask that you will hear from these communities is that we should be looking at policing from a lens of intersectionality, from a perspective of trauma-informed practice, and from an antiracism lens. What we did: we tried to make this bill a bit better. We tried to enshrine those principles in policing because that's what communities need from policing, because that's what Indigenous people are demanding from this government and every government, that our policing should be done from a lens of intersectionality, from a perspective of antiracism and trauma-informed practice. We have a history of colonization here, so our policing response needs to be well informed. I think this government refused to enshrine such principles in this legislation, so that's a concern.

The second thing. This bill makes sweeping changes: how police commissions will have now members from the government, how there will be new policing committees. A couple of concerns with that approach. The government did not consult with municipalities on these changes. They did not consult existing commission members on these changes. They think they know best.

They said that they will put 1 member for every 3 members on police commissions, and then they thought that that might not be enough, so the minister should have the ability to appoint up to 49 per cent. That's called stacking the deck, and it's in particular from a government whose Justice minister was caught interfering in the administration of justice. We can't let this government politicize policing in this province. We do not know how those members will be picked. There is just this much, that the minister will appoint them. Will there be any public process? Will all Albertans be invited to be able to participate on those commissions? Will it be about what they know or who they know? This government's record is such on these appointments that they cannot be trusted. There are few to no details about these appointments. That's why we think that this bill needs more work.

The third thing is that this bill will have a significant impact on how policing is done in our province, and Indigenous communities are concerned about it. The day prior to yesterday I was also at the meeting with Treaty 6 chiefs. You didn't hear from them – they didn't issue any press release – after we left because we were there to listen to them. We were respectful. One of the concerns raised by one chief was around policing, around how this Bill 6 changes the policing in this province and for our communities.

They shared that they were not consulted on this piece of legislation. No wonder that after the Premier went to see Treaty 6, they released a statement, which I'm sure all members of the government must have seen, that they did not consult. They did not consult on their job-killing sovereignty act. They don't even know what consultation means. They don't respect treaties. Those meetings, according to them, don't constitute consultation. Consultation is a constitutional obligation. It has its own requirements. It's not a check box. There are huge concerns that the government, as usual, failed to consult Indigenous communities on this bill.

Other concerns raised around this bill are that they are creating an advisory body which will have 15 members again appointed by the minister. They said that they will have one Indigenous person, one Métis person on that advisory board. Mr. Speaker, there are 48 distinct First Nations in this province. There are eight different Métis settlements in this province. Then we have a huge population of Indigenous people living in urban centres, Métis people living in our cities. There is no process whatsoever how they will pick that one person. Again, they did not consult with First Nations. Is that enough representation of First Nation people who have concerns about policing in this province, who have shared those concerns, who have a vested interest in making policing better in this province? It's not only that they were not consulted; I think that representation is not enough on that advisory board.

Then another concern is that they are creating a commission that will act as a civilian oversight body. On this side of the House we a hundred per cent support the intention behind that move. There should be civilian oversight of our police. That will improve Albertans' trust and confidence in their law enforcement. That will help us improve in general our law enforcement in this province. We a hundred per cent support civilian oversight, but again the problem is that there is next to nothing in this act that tells you what it will look like.

After reading this legislation more than a few times, there are three things about that. There will be a CEO and registrar that will be appointed by the minister, and then what their duties will be, what their power will be, what their function will be: every single thing is left to the regulations. What we should vote on: we don't have the details. There was absolutely no engagement from the government side to help address these concerns, help address these questions. All we know from this is that there will be a body that will have a CEO and registrar appointed by the minister, and then everything is left to regulations. There is no timeline. When will we have that? There are no costing details. How much will it cost?

Again, there were some obvious flaws in that, too. That's why we tried to make some changes to those provisions as well, that once there's a complaint about an officer from the time he or she was an officer, the commission should have jurisdiction over that complaint. That will help us deal with cases like the one in Calgary of Councillor Sean Chu. And not only before, when we were asking the then Minister of Municipal Affairs to act, they refused; they even refused to make that change so that people like Sean Chu can be held accountable in front of this civilian oversight body. They refused that. That's a huge flaw in this piece of legislation.

With so many glaring shortcomings, despite being well intentioned in terms of civilian oversight, I don't think that as members of the Legislature we have enough detail to pass this legislation. This piece of legislation fails to consult municipalities, Indigenous communities, those who have a vested interest in the implementation of this piece of legislation. With so many flaws I don't think that we are able to support this legislation, but I do want to say that we absolutely support civilian oversight. Should we become the next government, we will do better. We will bring forward a body, a process that will help us breed trust and confidence in our law enforcement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Others wishing to speak to third reading of Bill 6, the Police Amendment Act, 2022?

Would the hon. minister and Deputy Premier like to close debate?

Mr. Neudorf: Waived.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, February 28, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we'll now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Timothy Noel. I'd invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all of us command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we would traditionally pay tribute to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. However, I hope that you'll provide me some forgiveness as I have decided to postpone the tribute for former member Mike Cardinal until Monday, March 6, when his family is in attendance.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, for your awareness I have a number of introductions today, which will not take away from any of the time allotted for members to introduce other guests. However, I did have the privilege this morning of hosting a very special guest, who is joining me in the Speaker's gallery. We had a wonderful opportunity to debate the merits of Beauchesne's over House of Commons Procedure and Practice and other parliamentary discussions. The hon. Anthony Rota, the Speaker of the federal House of Commons, is joined by his wife, Chantal Piché-Rota, and his chief of staff, Alexandre. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I would like to take this opportunity to introduce a couple of other guests who are joining us in the Speaker's gallery today, including the best Schow of this place, the hon. the Government House Leader's spouse, Nicole Schow. Also joining us in the Speaker's gallery today is a former Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, Mr. Bruce McAllister. If you both would like to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Last but certainly not least, I think we can all agree that today's rendition of O Canada was something special as it was led by Mr. Timothy Noel. Mr. Noel, in his assistance to help us honour and mark Black History Month, the month of February, joined us today to lead us in the national anthem. His father emigrated from Grenada in 1973. Here he is today leading the Assembly in the singing of O Canada as the first Afro-Caribbean Albertan to lead this House in the singing of our national anthem. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has a school group to introduce.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you a grade 6 class from Sister Alphonse Academy, with teacher Sean Brass and a special guest, Kristi Rouse, who is a mom and helper today but also a trustee for the St. Albert public school board. If they could all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 34 brilliant students from Belvedere elementary school. They are joined by their amazing teacher, Bonnie Clydesdale. I've had numerous opportunities of speaking to Belvedere school during Read In Week. I ask that all the students rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you it is my distinct pleasure to welcome one of my constituents. She is a grandma, a musician, and a true leader within the freedom movement. She gave hope to all of Alberta, Canada, and the world. She was proud to stand strong and free in the face of the worst government overreach in a generation: Tamara Lich. Tens of thousands of Canadians supported and helped Tamara. This includes a constitutional lawyer from Alberta who held the Prime Minister to account during the Emergencies Act inquiry. Please welcome Eva Chipiuk and Tamara Lich. Ladies, please stand and accept a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to this House Linette Soldan, who is the executive director of Rowan House Society in High River, an organization I have had a chance to brag about often in this House. Please rise and receive the warm, traditional greeting of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake has an introduction.

Mr. Rehn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you from Lesser Slave River Deputy Reeve Lana Spencer and also from the same Lesser Slave River Reeve Murray Kerik. Both of them work tirelessly in order to help fulfill the dreams of their constituents.

Thank you.

Mrs. Allard: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and introduce to you and through you two guests to the Assembly. First, I have Mr. Ken Drysdale. Mr. Drysdale is an innovator and entrepreneur with deep ties in the community, and he is working tirelessly to reform health care for the residents of Grande Prairie. I'd like to thank him for his efforts. Beside him I have Owen Lewis, a lawyer and managing partner at KMSC Law. Gentlemen, please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, do you have an introduction today?

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a former Clerk of the Saskatchewan Legislative Assembly as well as of the Senate of Canada, a former Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan, and my good friend, Gordon Barnhart. I'd like to welcome Gordon to our Legislature as a recently new resident of Alberta.

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of amazing constituents of West Yellowhead: the mayor of Jasper, Richard Ireland, and Joehn Torres, a student at MacEwan and resident of Hinton. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Primary Health Care

Mr. Shepherd: Primary care is the foundation of our health care system. At its best it's one of the most personal, powerful connections we have with one of life's most personal things, our health, but over the last few years the UCP have attacked that foundation with every tool they had. When they launched their war on doctors in February 2020, they took particular aim at family doctors, cutting their pay, withholding resources, harassing them online and in person, and forcing them to deal with mountains of new paperwork just as the pandemic slammed into Alberta. Many were forced to close clinics or lay off staff; others retired early, left the profession or the province. Fast-forward to today: hundreds of thousands of Albertans have no access to primary care and are forced, instead, to go to emergency rooms or go without care, more victims of the health care chaos created by the UCP.

But, Mr. Speaker, unlike the UCP, we have a plan to repair and strengthen primary care, to restore the foundation of our health care system with family health teams, a plan that the former chair of the University of Alberta's department of family medicine, Dr. Rick Spooner, calls a pathway to the evolution of primary care in Alberta. A family health team can include family doctors as well as a wide diversity of other health care professionals working collaboratively to provide care, one location to get help for health concerns. We'll invest $600 million over four years to help existing clinics, practices, and PCNs expand their teams, and we'll invest to build and staff 10 new health clinics in communities of greatest need across the province.

The UCP: they've just got plans to make more plans. This May Albertans will have a choice: Danielle Smith and the UCP, who have created chaos in primary care and now want applause for simply revoking their own disastrous . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Welcome back to the Assembly. The hon. member knows that the use of proper names is wildly inappropriate, and the hon. members know that the interruption of members' statements is wildly inappropriate.

Hon. member, you have 20 seconds remaining.

Mr. Shepherd: The Premier and the UCP, who created chaos in primary care and now want applause for simply revoking their own disastrous policies and bad decisions, or Rachel Notley and the Alberta NDP, who are ready to move forward with a bold plan that will ensure 1 million more . . . [interjections] Oh, sorry. I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Perhaps you can try again tomorrow.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park has a statement to make.

Federal Energy Transition Plan

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we learned that before she claimed to be against the just transition plan to shut down energy jobs in Alberta, the Leader of the Official Opposition was for it. Now, this doesn't surprise anyone on this side of the House. We know the opposition leader and her party eliminated jobs in Alberta, 183,000 of them to be exact. Albertans know it, too. It's one of the reasons why they fired the members across the aisle in 2019 and chose our government to lead Alberta into better days. Today we can confidently say that Albertans made the right choice.

Thanks to the policies of our government, Alberta is leading the nation in economic growth. We've kept taxes low. We've balanced the budget, which has brought our credit rating back up. We've created hundreds of thousands of new jobs for Albertans, and we've welcomed tens of billions of dollars in new investment from major international companies like Amazon, HBO, Walmart, Air Products, Dow, De Havilland, and more. We've diversified the economy, and now new industries like film and television, agrifood processing, and technology are booming in Alberta and setting records for investment.

We've welcomed a record number of new families who want to participate in the Alberta advantage. We're providing direct affordability supports to Albertans who need them and broad supports that will benefit everyone. We're tackling long-standing issues in health care, and as we learned yesterday, we're starting to see improvements in the system. We're standing up for our province against hostility and interference from Ottawa. Albertans should visit puttingalbertansfirst.ca to learn more about the work we've done to renew the Alberta advantage.

But later today, Mr. Speaker, we will all see a new budget, and I believe this will be one of the best budgets our province has ever produced. We didn't get to this enviable place by accident either. We got here because our government put the right policies in place, and now we're getting the right results. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North.

Job Creation and Affordability Plan

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy is recovering strongly, and it continues to gain momentum through steady job creation and diversification. Alberta has created a vast number of jobs in a short period of time, thus replacing all of the job losses during the pandemic. Along with stellar job growth numbers, Alberta's labour force has also steadily increased. More and more Canadians continue to come to this great province because there are opportunities available for everyone.

Alberta is diversifying the economy by creating opportunities in technology, in innovation, as well as our film and television industry. The brand new HBO series The Last of Us is a prime example of how impressive and experienced Alberta's film crews are. Our government's incentives enabled many high-profile companies like Amazon, IT companies, and manufacturers to come to Alberta, creating hundreds of permanent jobs. To assist Albertans with high inflation, Mr. Speaker, our government put a pause on collecting the provincial fuel tax of 13.6 cents per litre, thus allowing Alberta to have the lowest fuel price in Canada.

Along with reindexing the provincial tax brackets for inflation, we are also providing substantial rebates on electricity bills. Mr. Speaker, more than 1 million Albertans have enrolled and are scheduled to receive their affordability payments of $600. Albertans are receiving real, tangible support during these times of high inflation.

Year 2022 was about celebrating a huge budget surplus, paying down our debts, growing industry, supporting businesses, enhancing trade infrastructures, improving health care deliveries, and providing inflation relief. I am so excited, Mr. Speaker, to see what Budget 2023 has in store for all of us here in Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Ms Renaud: As we approach a spring election, there are clear differences that separate us from the UCP government. The Alberta NDP is focused on things that matter to Albertans. We will make sure that every Albertan has access to a family doctor. That's why we released a comprehensive plan to get 1 million more Albertans access to a doctor. We're also focused on addressing the inflation crisis, helping Alberta families manage, including guaranteeing that nobody will ever pay out of pocket to see a doctor.

But this Premier has the wrong priorities. She's obsessed with reckless and extreme ideas that will increase the cost to Alberta families. She wants to fire the RCMP, making your community less safe and downloading additional costs to municipalities. Despite massive backlash the Premier is pushing forward with her plan to get rid of the RCMP to create a new provincial police force, to the cost of $366 million in start-up, with $735 million a year in operating. Her plan fails to deliver any additional services, and Albertans will be on the hook to pay more in property taxes.

The Premier also wants to gamble with Canada pension, making your future less secure. She is continuing to move forward with the plan to pull Albertans out of the Canada pension plan despite the lack of public support. She's risking retirement savings of Alberta workers while hitting taxpayers with more costs.

In 90 days Albertans have a choice to continue with the UCP government that prioritizes reckless ideological ideas for their fringe extremists, that will continue to hurt Albertans, or move forward with an Alberta NDP government that is focused on what matters to you. The choice could not be clearer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Maskwa Medical Centre in Grande Prairie

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A common concern in Grande Prairie is the shortage of family doctors for our young and growing community, which leads to an array of challenges and delays for my constituents in seeking care or diagnosis. Ideally, increasing efficiency, accessibility, and service within the region is the goal, with all reforms centred around better outcomes.

Thanks to the innovative work of the Maskwa Medical Centre board, that is exactly what we are working towards in Grande Prairie today. As I mentioned earlier, in introductions, I'm pleased to be joined in the gallery this afternoon by Mr. Ken Drysdale, the chair of the Maskwa board and the driving force for this initiative.

The Maskwa Medical Centre will be a multispecialty, patient-centred diagnostics facility based on the Mayo Clinic model and is close to being a reality, Mr. Speaker. Pending approval from Alberta Health, Maskwa will be publicly funded and accessible to all, run as a nonprofit, and will provide life-saving care for our people in the northern region.

By implementing a patient-centred, collaborative diagnostic practice, the Maskwa Medical Centre will connect patients and their physicians with the right specialists to provide an early, quick, and accurate diagnosis.

Maskwa is already fully engaged in striking a detailed partnership with the University of Alberta that will provide clinical access to over 450 specialists, and Maskwa is actively collaborating with Northwestern Polytechnic to lease adjacent land and integrate with existing medical training programs in the region. This medical home approach to health care will expand the capacity for medical residents to train in Grande Prairie and will increase the number of family physicians in our community over time, addressing this critical shortage.

This type of thought leadership coupled with the can-do culture in our region is exactly what is required to transform health care, Mr. Speaker. Too many families in our region have been adversely impacted due to delays in acquiring diagnostic and specialist care, which is why the vision for this clinic resonates so deeply within my community.

I believe Maskwa is one large step forward in improving health care and health outcomes for the good people of the Peace Country. It is way past time for Grande Prairie and area residents to have access to health diagnoses and the timely treatment available to others in other parts of the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre has question 1.

Health Care System Capacity

Mr. Shepherd: Barbara Ross, a 91-year-old Albertan, called 911. She was experiencing chest pains that left her barely able to stand. She needed an ambulance but was transferred to 811 and eventually told to go to a clinic. Her daughter eventually took her to the Misericordia, where Barbara spent an entire day waiting to be admitted, sitting in agony in a chair. Things like this happen every day. Barbara's is just one horror story in an endless list.

Health care is in crisis. It's been in crisis for years as a result of this government's horrible, incompetent, and cruel decisions. Is the Premier really going to stand here today and claim that the crisis in our health care system is over?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all have our heart broken when we hear stories like that, which is why we made the decision very early on to put in Dr. John Cowell as the head and official administrator of Alberta Health Services, so we could accelerate changes in the system, and I am so pleased to report that we are seeing year-over-year increase in ambulance response time. What we saw last year, last January, is that there were over a thousand incidents of code red in Edmonton, meaning there wasn't an ambulance available when it was needed. That's gone down to 82. That's a 92 per cent reduction. We've seen a 60 per cent reduction in Calgary as well.

Mr. Shepherd: There was no ambulance for Barbara Ross.

Mona Koch was forced to play the lottery to keep her family doctor, and she lost. She's on a list of patients dropped by her local clinic and far from alone there: 40,000 people in Lethbridge without a doctor. Mothers living in communities an hour from here are being forced to drive into the city while in the middle of giving birth. Surgeries are being delayed. Specialists are meeting with cancer patients months after it could be too late to do anything. Again, will this Premier explain to all Albertans how she can stand here and claim that this is not a system in crisis?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I accepted when I got elected in October that the system was in crisis, which is why I appointed an official administrator, and all of the measures are moving in the right direction. As I mentioned, a 92 per cent decrease in code reds in Edmonton, 60 per cent decrease in code reds in Calgary. We've also seen since November of '22 that the number of patients waiting longer than the clinically recommended time has gone down 9.4 per cent. A wait in an emergency room is down 10 per cent. We intend to spend $158 million on physician recruitment and health professional recruitment. Things are moving in the right direction.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, the Premier fired the board of AHS for a political vendetta, not to help Albertans. And speaking of specialists, days ago my colleague stood with a St. Albert nurse named Sheila Ethier, whose partner was diagnosed with stage 4 lung cancer and facing an eight-week delay to see an oncologist. Stage 4 cancer, a two-month wait; the longest two months of this person's life. These people aren't being heard. They're clearly being ignored by this Premier. So will she stand today and apologize for trying to tell Albertans that what they see in front of their eyes, what they experience every day in this health care crisis isn't real?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, one of the advisers that I have is Dr. Raj Sherman, who was working every day in an emergency room, and one of the things that he told me was that patients were showing up in emergency room sicker because of the fearmongering from people like those on the other side that the system could not take care of them. What we want to do is instill some calm, instill some confidence that the system is going to be there for them. All the measures are going in the right place. I certainly wouldn't want anybody to resist getting the medically necessary care they need because of the fearmongering that they hear on the other side.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Energy Company Liability

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, before the Premier took on her current role, she worked as a lobbyist, and in that role she supported a program that was designed to give $20 billion in royalty credits to companies to clean up wells they are already obligated to clean up as a condition of their drilling licence; $20 billion to incent profitable corporations not to fulfill their legal obligations but, instead, to wait for taxpayer cash to do it. Why is the Premier putting the interests of her friends and insiders, the people who worked on her leadership campaigns, ahead of the people of Alberta?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's simply not true. What we have done as a government is that we have put in place a process where each energy company has a mandatory amount of money that they have to spend on liability cleanup. That's going to amount to over $700 million this year, escalating 9 per cent per year as we go forward. We have a $30 billion liability problem. This is a problem that I have known about since 1997, when I started landowner advocacy. The members opposite had an opportunity to address it; they failed. It is up to us to make sure we're standing up for landowners, municipalities, and First Nations. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Ganley: The UCP's proposed $20 billion royalty handout was originally proposed by an organization called SAEN. SAEN's cofounder Kris Kinnear now works in the Premier's office, but the Premier has been extremely reluctant to answer questions about what he does or what special project he's supposedly working on. Despite the potential for this $20 billion handout to tarnish the reputation of good actors in the energy sector who clean up after themselves, the project is suddenly proceeding to pilot. So, Premier, connect the dots for us. Is Mr. Kinnear working on anything besides handing out $20 billion?

Ms Smith: Once again what the NDP is saying is just simply untrue. There is a pilot program that the Energy minister is consulting on at the moment, and what it is is that it's focused on the worst wells. We have tried many different ways of trying to ensure that wells that have been inactive since before 1980 and been inactive for more than 20 years get priority to clean up. Under the NDP they just kept on getting transferred forward again and again to a new company. We have to make sure that we're cleaning these sites up. It's important for municipalities, it's important for First Nations, and it's important for landowners.

Ms Ganley: It gets worse. There are even members of the UCP's own cabinet who don't support the Premier's $20 billion giveaway. When the current Premier was still working as a lobbyist, she wrote to the UCP Energy minister asking her to consider, but the minister wrote back saying that she didn't support the handout because it was, quote, a violation of the polluter-pay principle. The current Premier won the leadership, removed the then Energy minister – now environment minister – replaced her with the current Energy minister, a vocal supporter of the handout. Can the Premier explain why she thinks polluter-pay should be replaced with Albertans?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're talking about a targeted program, that may be $100 million, that is focused on making sure that the worst wells in Alberta . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: . . . are taken care of. These are wells that have been around since the '40s and '50s and '60s. They had an opportunity to put a program in place that would have incentivized the cleanup of those sites; they failed at that. We cannot allow for this problem to continue to be passed forward to future generations. We owe it to future generations to make sure that these sites get returned to their natural condition as quickly as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Coutts Border Crossing Protester Conspiracy Charges

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year our border was held hostage by an illegal blockade which cost Alberta's economy over $200 million. Some of the people involved stockpiled weapons and planned to kill RCMP officers. When the Premier took over, she prioritized to get amnesty for those arrested at this blockade. The Premier even claimed that she called Crown prosecutors to get them to reconsider the charges. Why did this Premier spend her time to get allegedly violent criminals off the hook? Is that really what the Premier should be prioritizing?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there may be a point of privilege in here, but let me just say that the CBC published a false story. They published a story that my office staff had been calling Crown prosecutors. They had not seen e-mails. They were not in possession of e-mails. They made false allegations. We've put in a request to the Ombudsman to investigate this. We've asked for a retraction, and we have asked for an apology, and we are still waiting.

I would advise the member opposite not to repeat false claims, because they have absolutely no evidence at the CBC for the claims they made. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Sabir: Premier, you admitted twice to having talked to Crown prosecutors. That's on record.

Not only did the Premier admit that she was calling Crown prosecutors to get amnesty for those who broke the law, but according to Artur Pawlowski, who was arrested at Coutts for encouraging the blockade to continue, she promised to get him amnesty. This was a major theme of the Premier's leadership campaign. She, again, twice claimed publicly that she was speaking to Crown prosecutors. To the Premier: what did she promise those arrested for holding southern Alberta hostage and those threatening the lives of law enforcement?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, rather than call another point of privilege, let me also correct the record from what is being said across the aisle, which is simply not the case. I have always said that any communication that I had about the issue of amnesty would be done through the proper channels, which is my Justice minister. There is no question that I campaigned for seven months saying that I would look into that, and I can tell you what my Justice minister told me: one, that a Premier does not have the power of amnesty and, two, that we are waiting for the result of the Ingram decision. I accepted what my Justice minister told me, and that is what I've communicated.

Mr. Sabir: While the Premier prioritized trying to get lawbreakers amnesty for breaking the law, Albertans have suffered through a health care crisis, an affordability crisis, and a government that was slow to act to either. Our team put together a jobs plan, supported by the Industrial Heartland, a health care plan that will get 1 million Albertans access to a family doctor, supported by many in the medical profession. Mr. Speaker, it is clear what we are focused on. Will this Premier admit that her decision to call Crown prosecutors, which she admitted twice publicly, and seeking amnesty for lawbreakers was the wrong choice?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, they're focused on fake stories; we're focused on addressing issues for Albertans. My very first action when I became Premier was to focus on fixing the health care system. That was the number one priority. They continue to talk down the front-line workers in the health care system. We're supporting them because we have confidence in them that they're going to be able to address the issues of Albertans with our support, and that's part of what we're doing.

The other part of what we're doing is an affordability plan, which even Trevor Tombe has said has counteracted the federal inflation crisis caused by the NDP coalition.

Canada Pension Plan

Mr. Dach: The Alberta pension plan is, quite frankly, one of the worst ideas this government has put forward. Respected economists, academics, and workers' representatives have all been adamantly opposed to the idea. Mr. Speaker, they are right. Seniors fear for their retirement security. Those considering retirement worry about their futures. Albertans want to keep their pension investments within the CPP, period, full stop. Why doesn't the Premier understand this?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we had a Fair Deal Panel that did widespread consultations across the province, and one of the things they asked us to do was to look at the feasibility of an Alberta pension plan, and if there was any decision to be made, it would be made through a public referendum of Albertans. We've had an initial report done, and we need more work done, quite frankly. It looks promising, but we want to make sure that Albertans have the most up-to-date information. That will be available, we've been told, sometime in May. When the final report is available, we will put it out into the public and Albertans will decide.

Mr. Dach: Albertans do not want this Premier anywhere near their pensions. They've made it abundantly clear, yet this government is refusing to listen to the very people they represent. They talk of a referendum, but they know already where Albertans stand. Thankfully, there's a vote coming. I suspect Albertans will have the final say on protecting their pensions, and that's how it should be. Will the Premier agree with me that the fate of Alberta's pensions is on the line in the coming spring election?

Ms Smith: Well, no, I won't agree to that because there's a process we'd have to go through. We'd have to issue the report, we'd have to do public consultations, and we'd have to see whether or not Albertans even want to have a referendum on the issue of a change in the pension plan. So there are many, many months of work ahead of us, but I will agree with the member opposite on this: this is Alberta's pension. It will be Alberta's choice. We listened to what Albertans said when they wanted us to investigate. It sounds to me like the members opposite would ignore what they heard from the Fair Deal Panel, ignore what Albertans told them. We think it's our responsibility to put the information on the table and let Albertans decide.

Mr. Dach: Moving from the CPP to the Alberta pension plan is so unpopular, more than 60,000 Albertans signed a petition telling this government not to do it. Let me say that again: 60,000 and counting. Albertans work their whole adult lives building their retirement savings, and the UCP wants to gamble them away. It's shameful. Pension plans are not political games, and treating them as such is dangerous. I want to send a message to all Albertans. An Alberta NDP government will never treat Albertans' pensions like their fun money, as the UCP have. We could never be that careless. For the last time, can the Premier explain why she wants to gamble?

Ms Smith: Well, I wish the members opposite would stop fear-mongering. I suppose it doesn't surprise me that they don't want to see the results of the report. They didn't want to see what Bill 1 looked like before they voted against it as well. We believe that Albertans want to see this information. They asked for us to do the report. We have done the report. We will release it when it becomes available. We're hoping that'll be in the next few months, and we look forward to having a robust discussion. We have always said – and this was the recommendation from the Fair Deal Panel – that if there is any decision to be made, it has to be through public referendum by Albertans, and that's what we've committed to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Health Care Wait Times

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the best front-line health care workers in the world, and this government is making meaningful changes to our health care system to improve outcomes for Albertans all across the province. Yesterday the Minister of Health, along with the Premier and Dr. Cowell, released a 90-day report to provide us with a status update on this very important work. To the Minister of Health: can you please inform the members what results we've seen in EMS response times over the past three months?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question on this important issue. We've seen significant progress over the past three months. During that time, since November, EMS added 39 front-line staff, including paramedics and emergency communications officers. EMS response in urban areas has improved by 22.1 per cent, and remote areas have improved by 10 per cent. EMS response times for most urgent calls improved across the province as well. That's in metro, urban, rural, and remote areas: 17 minutes in metro and urban areas, down from 21.8; 19.2 minutes in communities over 3,000, down from 21.5; and further improvements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the effectiveness of our health care system is an issue that impacts all Albertans and given that Albertans deserve to have confidence that they will receive high-quality care with minimal wait times, can the Minister of Health please share how we're working to reduce wait times in emergency rooms and for surgeries and what progress we're seeing so far?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're working with Dr. Cowell, our official administrator, and working with AHS, and I want to thank all of our health care workers on the front line for doing significant work over the last three months. We are making progress. The ED wait time to see a doctor went down by nearly 10 per cent since November. The number of patients waiting longer than the clinically recommended time has decreased by 9.4 per cent. By March 31, 2023, AHS and the chartered surgical facilities anticipate that they will complete 290,000 surgeries. That's a 4 per cent increase over next year, and progress in lowering ED wait times has been seen in all three measures. We're going to keep working and bring those times . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: given that a strong team of health care workers is critical to our system running smoothly and given that the Premier committed to empowering our health care workers to make more decisions about the running of the system, can the Minister of Health please share how this will be achieved and his overall impression of these first 90 days of health care reform?

Mr. Copping: Thanks once again to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, as you know, on November 17 we announced our health care action plan and promised Albertans that help is on the way. Wait times are trending down, and we are seeing a decrease in provincial averages for ambulances, surgeries, and emergency room waits over the last 90 days. We will continue to put in place the structure for both immediate and long-term reforms and changes. I know that Dr. Cowell has been meeting with AHS employees across the entire province and getting their input. We'll keep driving changes until we get these times down.

Red Deer Regional Hospital Expansion

Member Loyola: Red Deer is Alberta's third-largest city, and it currently has no doctors accepting new patients. On top of an already grim situation, the vital Red Deer hospital expansion project continues to be delayed. Mr. Speaker, all of this is unacceptable. The people of Red Deer deserve timely, high-quality public health care. The UCP promised that construction would begin in 2021, but now in 2023 nothing is started. Can the minister please explain why they have chosen to delay this critical project every chance that they've had? Clearly, a strong public health care system isn't a value of the UCP. It is of the NDP, and I can't wait to deliver for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier has the call.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. This project is proceeding. In fact, the RFP for design is out, and we expect it to be completed and returned by the end of March. At that point we can carry on with the design. Unlike the NDP, we believe in planning first, so we're going to do a good plan so we can do a good build so we can meet the needs of people in central Alberta and Red Deer, giving them the health care they need in a good-designed building, meeting the needs of all citizens within central Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Loyola: Given that walk-in clinics in Red Deer are overrun and this government has continued to delay the Red Deer hospital expansion despite it being critical to the service of the central zone and given that when pressed about the delays, the Minister of Infrastructure insultingly said, quote, that there are complexities that most of the general public doesn't understand, and it's difficult to explain to them because it's tedious and very time consuming, will this minister apologize for this arrogant comment and admit to the people of Red Deer that their hospital was not a priority for this government over the last four years? If it was, construction would have started already.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's ironic hearing from the NDP, who removed the Red Deer hospital from the priority capital list, that it's not a priority. We have put it back there. In fact, what I did when I made those comments was – when I went to Red Deer to talk face to face to the citizens of central Alberta to answer their primary question: why does it take so long to build a hospital? We're trying to be very transparent. We had plans there. We had officials from my Department of Infrastructure, officials from the Department of Health, and we had AHS members all there to answer people's questions and help explain: why does it take so long?

Member Loyola: Given that there are zero doctors accepting new patients in Red Deer, which leaves thousands of Albertans without any form of primary care, and given that the lack of primary care leads to more costs and more burden on our hospitals because far too many Albertans have nowhere else to go other than an emergency room and given that the UCP have no plan to get Albertans a doctor and the Alberta NDP have a comprehensive plan to get a million Albertans more doctors, which includes building a family health clinic in the new Red Deer hospital, can the minister stand in this House and admit that we will deliver health care for Red Deer after four years of this government failing so badly?

Mr. Neudorf: All the NDP will continue to do is make promises that they can't fulfill, so we're going to keep moving forward with good planning and good building, with all kinds of community consultation to make sure that they get the building that they need, the hospital care that they need, the services they need planned well, delivered well, and in good time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

South Edmonton Hospital Construction Project

Ms Pancholi: Recently my colleagues and I went to visit the site of the south Edmonton hospital, you know, the hospital that the Alberta NDP announced in 2017 and construction was supposed to begin in 2020, but, Mr. Speaker, that construction site was just an empty field. The UCP, without saying anything to the people of south Edmonton, has delayed this project countless times and now indefinitely. The UCP clearly do not care about ensuring that my constituents have access to health care, but I can promise Albertans that an NDP government will get this project done. Can the minister explain why the UCP has failed to get even one single shovel in the ground for the south Edmonton hospital in four years?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the capital plan from 2022 has over $371 million provided for this project. That money is already being put to use. There is site work happening; there is servicing work happening. We are in the middle of a functional design plan because, again, we need to know what design to do before we can build it. That's the order of construction, and that's what we're looking forward to working on, and that's what we're doing, making sure that we have a plan to meet the needs of all Edmontonians, especially those in south Edmonton, and build them a facility that works.

Ms Pancholi: Well, the minister should visit the site; nothing is happening.

Given that Edmonton is currently short over 400 hospital beds and that number is projected to more than triple in the next three years and given that some Edmontonians have to drive nearly an hour to get to a hospital that will no doubt be over full with long wait times and staff who are stretched too thin and given that this government has thrown public health care into a crisis, making the need for a new south Edmonton hospital even more critical, to the minister: can he explain to my constituents why the UCP has abandoned the health care needs of Edmontonians, of those living in communities around the city, and all Albertans, as a matter of fact?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier and the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we are doing the work that the NDP failed to do. We are developing a plan. We are making sure that we meet the needs. The first thing you have to do when you do a good building is have a good plan. What are we providing for the services for those in Edmonton? Is it ambulatory care? Is it emergency rooms? Is it surgery suites? We need to answer these questions through our service providers, Alberta Health Services, work with the Ministry of Health. Once we have that, then we can go to design and building. We look forward to doing that. We continue to invest money in the capital budget from 2022 and beyond, and we will provide health care services . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pancholi: Well, given that south Edmonton is one of the fastest growing areas in Canada and given that the last hospital in the city was built in 1988, when Edmonton's population was almost half of what it is today, which is why the Alberta NDP committed to building the south Edmonton hospital, and given that my constituents are tired of asking why the UCP keeps delaying this project, I think they're ready for a change, so this is our commitment. The Alberta NDP will get the south Edmonton hospital built, and we will deliver public health care for all. They can count on it. Is the minister getting used to the idea that we will finish what he can't even start?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Yeah. A great example of what the NDP didn't do is the Grande Prairie hospital. How come that took 14 years to deliver? Again, the NDP makes promises they can't deliver on. Where you start with building is with a good plan. We are continuing to work with the residents of Edmonton and south Edmonton, and we have an obligation to all taxpayers in the province to manage their finances well and appropriately. We need to build a building that will serve the needs not only today but into the future, and we're developing that plan, something the NDP failed to do in their four years in office.

Energy Company Liability

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are hearing conflicting reports concerning the Premier's proposed liability management incentive program. The Premier argued that this thinly veiled corporate welfare scheme somehow doesn't undermine the polluter-pay principle. She stated that the projects to be cleaned up were – and I quote – left with somebody holding the bag who may have not been responsible for the initial liability. Given that the oil and gas under our feet is owned by all Albertans, to the Premier: why should Albertans be left holding the bag for private companies who pumped every last cent out of these wells before they abandoned them?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the member is just getting a little ahead of his skis here. You know, as with any government we're looking at a variety of ideas and programs. One we're exploring in the Department of Energy is the liability management incentive program, but it's a program that's still under development. It requires further stakeholder engagement and consultation. I would just ask the member to have a little bit of patience, and we will release the information and details in due course.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the Premier and this Energy minister have very different ideas of how this program may actually work. Given that this minister has indicated that projects belonging to active, financially responsible oil and gas companies may be considered under this revised R-star program and given that the Premier has been more adamant that the pilot project will be reserved only for abandoned and orphaned wells, will the Premier actively commit right now that if all Albertans must pay for this, at least it'll be limited to orphan wells that have no current owner?

Mr. Guthrie: Mr. Speaker, the basic premise of the liability management incentive program is to encourage further well site cleanup. We want to focus on some of the most challenging sites that are out there, some that have been around the longest, say, inactive for greater than 20 years, so those from the '60s and the '70s. We know that industry is a good steward of the environment, and we want to support those efforts while encouraging new investment and creating jobs while we're at it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnes: Given that there is a long history in Alberta of major projects being used to feather the nests of lobbyists and companies close to this government – sometimes, like the case of the massive overbuild of Alberta's electrical transmission system, these companies hail from eastern Canada – and given that the Premier has personally lobbied for a similar program in the past and given that orphan well cleanup is being billed as a job-creation project for Albertans, will the Premier commit to ensuring that if the polluter-pay principle is abandoned, at least all of the out-of-province companies will be banned from participating in any facets of this cleanup?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, as mentioned, the details of the program haven't been released yet, so I think the member is just jumping to conclusions here. You know, I can say that the program does not change anything around the new liability framework or with directive 088 and the mandatory spend requirements. Those will remain in place. The liability incentive program is meant to be a supplementary thing and very targeted to some of the oldest liabilities. Consultation is ongoing. It's early days. It still has to go to caucus, committee, cabinet, Treasury Board . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning and Deputy Opposition House Leader.

Provincial Policing

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite overwhelming public objection, this Premier still plans to fire the RCMP and saddle communities across this province with a new provincial police force, all with new bills and new bureaucracy that will come with it. Now, while the minister ignores the feedback that we're getting from councillors, municipalities, the RMA, and more, we've been listening, and we can't find one municipal partner that supports this bad policy. Can the minister tell us who exactly supports this failed policy that is being forced on Albertans, and why are their opinions more important than those of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of public safety and emergency preparedness.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. As I've indicated before, there's no decision that has been made regarding the Alberta police service, and we continue to consult with municipalities and First Nations communities. I guess my question, though – I mean, we have nations such as Siksika that are interested in doing their own police service, you know, and we have had other municipalities, we've had other First Nations that are interested in doing their own policing service. So I guess the message coming from the NDP to the First Nations communities is: we don't care what your opinion is; we don't care what you have to say. They're going to impose whatever they want on the First Nations communities.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that the government might want to go back and look at their sovereignty act and given that all across this province communities are struggling with the rising cost of everything and given that the city of Red Deer already explored the idea of leaving the RCMP and abandoned it over a decade ago and that it's clear that this minister isn't a fan of common sense and given that the minister had his chance to listen and he chose to put the Premier's demands over what Albertans are asking for – Albertan communities don't want the UCP to impose $735 million per year for a provincial police force, period – why isn't the UCP listening?

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I mean, contrary to the NDP's belief, many people, including the federal government themselves, have been talking about reviewing and moving away from contract policing for years. A 2019 briefing note provided by the federal Minister of Public Safety – and let me just give you a bit of a quote here. It says, "It has been the Government of Canada's objective since the 1960s to decrease" – let me say it again: to decrease – "its contract policing financial liability." We are listening to municipalities, we are empowering municipalities, and we're . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that this government likes to say that there will be cost savings with their new police idea but that is based off a report that was paid for by this government and given that other reports not commissioned by this government show the opposite, including what's going on in Surrey, and that Alberta municipalities can't afford to gamble millions of dollars and loss of services on hypotheticals or reports bought and paid for by the government and given that this minister refused to listen to what people are telling and insists even as recently as last week on standing behind this awful plan, I'm just going to be clear, Mr. Speaker: the Alberta NDP government will keep the RCMP and invest in community safety.

Mr. Ellis: Again, I'm hearing the NDP say to First Nations communities: we do not care what you have to say; we do not care what your opinion is; we will force the RCMP on you. They have no respect . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford will come to order. You may not like the answer, but he's entitled to give it.

Mr. Ellis: On this side of the House we're trying to empower municipalities. We are . . .

Mr. Feehan: You're making this stuff up.

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford will come to order.

Mr. Ellis: On this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to empower municipalities, we are trying to empower our First Nations communities, and we are trying to listen and do what is best for them. We want to hear from them. We are listening to members like Siksika. We are listening to First Nation communities like Enoch, and they are giving clear direction, and it is not towards the NDP.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted.

COVID-19 Outbreaks in Seniors' Care Facilities

Ms Sigurdson: The office of the Auditor General released reports on long-term care and COVID-19 in continuing care facilities. The reports make it clear that long-term care and continuing care facilities were poorly resourced during the pandemic. Shortfalls in staffing, resources, and procedures were known. They were noted in previous audits, raised by those living and working in these homes. The UCP government failed to make the homes of seniors and the workplaces of our front-line heroes safe. To the Minister of Health: why has this government failed at supporting Albertans living in continuing care?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health has the call.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, and thank you to the hon. member for the question on this important issue. Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member, we are investing in our continuing care system and supporting seniors. We accepted all of the recommendations made by the Auditor General, and a number of those recommendations we have already acted on. As part of Budget 2022 we invested over $200 million in capital to be able to expand our continuing care system, including to ensure that we had enough spaces for seniors so they didn't need to double up. We're going to continue to invest.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that the report highlights that paid sick leave would have halted outbreaks in long-term care facilities and given that mitigating outbreaks could have saved lives and given that the Official Opposition proposed paid sick leave and drafted a bill that the government could have introduced during the pandemic but they ignored it and failed Albertans, to the minister: why ignore real measures like paid sick leave that could have improved the care and saved the lives of Albertans?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the facility-based continuing care review identified staffing as a significant issue in regard to the continuing care sector. That same review identified that we also need to actually transfer our approach from congregate care settings to home-care settings. We started that process in Budget 2022 with an additional million hours in home care, and I'm looking forward to the budget that's going to be released today. We'll talk more about the investment that we are making to improve continuing care for seniors and for all Albertans.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that continuing care residents accounted for 65 per cent of COVID-19 deaths in the province and given that while they were dying, the now Premier was spouting conspiracy theories about the pandemic – even now she seems more focused on getting the people who undermined the public health response out of their criminal charges than improving care – can someone explain to the surviving relatives of thousands of Albertans who died in the continuing care system during the COVID-19 pandemic why they didn't implement life-saving policies?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, we invested significantly during the COVID crisis to support those most vulnerable. I appreciate, again, the report being done by the Auditor General. We accepted all of the recommendations in principle. I just want to be clear. We invested hundreds of millions of dollars, both from a staffing standpoint and to provide PPE for those who were the most vulnerable in the continuing care setting. We learned from waves 1 and 2 that we needed to only have single rooms, and we're investing to make sure that we can ...

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has the call.

Calgary Crime Rate

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the minister of public safety. According to the latest statistics crime rates in Calgary have been on the rise for the past two years, with significant increases in property and violent crimes. Can the minister please inform the House what measures the government is taking to address this concerning trend?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and of course I thank the member very much for the question. Of course, public safety is very important in our large municipalities, Edmonton and Calgary. You know, people have a right to feel safe in their homes, children have a right to play outside, and these sorts of rights are being infringed upon right now. That's why we created the Calgary public safety task force. We've been working with multiple levels of government, and we've deployed several initiatives that we believe are going to be in place – and, believe me, several more will be coming – to ensure that families, that people that live and work and play in Calgary can feel safe within their communities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has the call.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. Given that the recent reports have highlighted the growing concerns among Calgary residents, particularly in high-crime neighbourhoods, about their safety and well-being, can the minister elaborate on how the government is working with local communities, leaders in law enforcement agencies to address these concerning concerns and ensure that residents feel safe in their homes and neighbourhoods?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of emergency services.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much, and thank you again to the member for that very important question, especially to his residents, many of whom do not feel safe in their homes with the gunfire that has been going on with the gang-related activity. I can tell you that, of course, through the department we've been in touch with the Calgary Police Service to make sure that they have the necessary resources to go after those gang members, because I can tell you that in this province we are not going to tolerate gang members instilling fear in our community members. Let me be very clear on that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that the COVID-19 pandemic and related economic pressures have contributed to the increase in crime rates in Calgary, can the minister provide details on any specific programs or initiatives being implemented by the government to support vulnerable populations and how this has improved public safety in Calgary?

Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Ellis: Sure. Thank you very much. Yes, Mr. Speaker, absolutely, of course, we work very closely with the Ministry of Mental Health and Addiction to make sure that those officers that are being deployed, whether it be through the Calgary Police Service or the sheriffs, have the necessary resources to provide support for people, especially vulnerable people. To be honest with you, I can tell you that it's not about moving people along; it's about ensuring that they have the resources, including the HealthIM app, to make sure that those individuals are actually getting the help they need and a pathway to recovery and treatment.

2:30 Support for Victims of Gender-based Violence

Member Irwin: Violence against women, girls, and gender-diverse people has created a shadow pandemic over the last three years. Overwhelming demand for support services compounded with high inflation and inadequate government funding have left shelters overwhelmed and survivors struggling. This government has completely turned their backs on survivors. This is disgraceful. Will the Premier commit today to addressing the funding crisis that women's shelters are facing? Stakeholders are here today. They're listening. Tell them your plan.

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of seniors and community services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I share her deep concern for women that are fleeing domestic violence, and I want to assure her and anybody that's finding themselves in a situation where they're in a domestic violence situation that this government is there for them, this province is there for them. We continue to work with not-for-profits across this province to make sure that there's a safe place and there's support for people in that situation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Irwin: Given that nearly 1 in 2 Albertans has experienced sexual violence in their lifetime – and in the last few years survivors are reaching out and they're asking for help at record rates, which is a good thing, but because of lack of government funding survivors are waiting months, even years to access counselling – and given that the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services has made it clear that funding is desperately needed to shorten wait times, address the complex needs of survivors, access justice, and offer prevention programs, do the right thing today, Premier. Show your government cares. Fund the organizations doing the critical work to support survivors.

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of seniors and community services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Again, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for her question and her concern. I'm pleased to report that I've been working very closely with our parliamentary secretary for the status of women. We have been going across the province meeting with front-line service providers, not-for-profits, and working to understand what the challenges are to make sure that we do have the funding in place to meet the needs that are there. Again, I continue to look forward to working with our amazing parliamentary secretary for the status of women as well as our fantastic not-for-profits to work towards addressing these challenges.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Irwin: Given that the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters said it best, "Survivors deserve better; Alberta deserves better," yet crickets from this government – this is your legacy, Premier, one that eliminated the status of women ministry, one that abandoned survivors of violence, one that continually attacked women-dominated sectors like health care and education, one that purposely denied nonprofits essential funding, all while having billions in surplus to give away to your corporate buddies. That's the legacy you're leaving, Premier, and you should be ashamed.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure what the question was there, but I'm happy to address what's being said here.

This government has demonstrated compassion, and we will continue to work with not-for-profits across this province in all sectors, especially for women fleeing domestic violence. We have increased funding for shelters by 10 per cent. We have increased funding for folks that work in the disability sector by 10 per cent. We fund women's shelters, $51.3 million a year. Anybody who is in a domestic violence situation will get help in this province. You have my commitment to that. We will continue to work with our not-for-profits.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's postsecondary students and the schools in which they learn are crucial to Alberta's economic recovery. Unfortunately, students are struggling because of decisions made by this UCP government. The Premier and this minister have approved hikes of anywhere between 16 to 104 per cent in tuition, more than $10,000 in additional fees, removed access to grants, underspent student aid, slashed funding to postsecondary at record levels. So it begs the question: why would the postsecondary minister make it so hard for students to get a postsecondary education?

Mr. Nicolaidis: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the member is curious about why it's so difficult, he should ask his boss in Ottawa, Jagmeet Singh, who is working with Trudeau to jack up the carbon tax. Reckless spending is driving up inflation. One of the reasons that postsecondary students are struggling is because of a cost-of-living crisis created by the Trudeau Liberal and Jagmeet Singh alliance through reckless spending. We are taking action. A couple of weeks ago I announced a series of affordability measures to help our students while the NDP sits there and does nothing.

Mr. Eggen: Really, Mr. Speaker. I mean, given that tuition in this province was amongst the lowest in Canada in 2019 – now it's the highest; students report increases of more than 30 per cent to their tuition because of this minister – and given that they didn't even get a piece of the Premier's so-called affordability plan announced last year, they're having to sell their vehicles, skip meals, and pile on debt just to make ends meet. How does this minister stand in the House with a straight face, which he doesn't even do – he has a smirk – knowing the pain and the suffering of students he is personally responsible for?

The Speaker: That sounded a lot like a direct, personal attack on the minister, which the hon. member knows is not appropriate.

The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: It's okay, Mr. Speaker. He can buy me a coffee afterwards and it's all done and dusted, although I have to correct the member. I'm not sure where he's getting his information from. I think we talked about this last year. I encourage the member to look at Stats Canada. Again, it's a very reliable source of information. I really don't know what the member is talking about when he says that tuition prices are the most expensive, because that is simply not true. The average undergraduate tuition rate right now in the country is $6,800. Alberta is just above that at $7,100, far below neighbouring provinces, far below Ontario, far below Saskatchewan.

Mr. Eggen: Well, given that this government is forcing more and more costs on to the backs of students who are already struggling due to the UCP's countless poor decisions – to date $700 million has been cut from universities, colleges, and polytechnics; $700 million – and given that they have done this while the Premier seems somehow to find $20 billion to hand over to her friends and insiders, can the minister then explain why they get the support and our students do not?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the member missed the press conference, but we've announced a series of affordability measures to help our students. We're eliminating the plus 1 per cent on student loan interest rates to help students cope. We're extending the interest deferral period from six months to 12 months. We're extending the repayment assistance program. As well, we're adding more money to student financial assistance to help those who need funding the most. We are taking direct, real, and measurable action to help our postsecondary students right now and well into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Postsecondary Students and Affordability Plan

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Making life affordable for Albertans continues to be a top priority for this government. We will continue to aid Albertans in achieving financial security by a variety of means. Our policies have already provided support to a multitude of groups such as seniors, AISH recipients, and families who are struggling with inflation and affordability in large part due to poor federal fiscal management. Our government has laid out plans to help protect the bank accounts of postsecondary students, starting with implementing a tuition cap. To the Minister of Advanced Education: how will the new tuition cap benefit Alberta students?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. You know, one of the things that students have been asking for and have been lobbying me about over the course of the past four years has been stability and predictability when it comes to tuition policy. We currently don't have that because of the cap, that the members opposite created, that's allowed tuition to increase by 5 and a half per cent this current year. We're introducing a new cap that'll establish a base rate of 2 per cent. Institutions will not be permitted to increase tuition by that 2 per cent, giving students and families predictability and stability.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our government aims to provide a foundation for Albertan graduates to be successful contributors to our economy and given that upcoming and recent postsecondary graduates will still face financial barriers and given that these individuals will require government support, what new supports are available for students who have already graduated or are graduating before 2024-2025?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Yeah. Recent grads and upcoming grads will benefit from some of the affordability measures that we've just announced. We are extending the interest, the student loan deferral period. Right now students have a six-month window after they graduate to begin repaying their student loans. We're going to extend that out to a year. We're changing the interest rates on student loans. That'll affect all current and future borrowers, giving them more ability. In addition, we are expanding the thresholds for the repayment assistance program to help those recent graduates who need assistance in repaying their loans.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, through you, to the minister for that answer and for recognizing the value of Alberta postsecondary graduates. Given that our government is prioritizing affordability for all Albertans and given that as a result we have already put significant measures in place to lighten the financial load on Albertans, how do these new measures support other initiatives to make life more affordable for all Albertans?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, addressing the cost-of-living crisis is a top concern for the government and, as the member noted, is being driven largely by reckless federal policies. But Alberta's government is focused on making life more affordable for Albertans, our postsecondary students, seniors, and other individuals. I know that the minister of affordability is working hard to address that. These measures that we announced a couple of weeks ago will help our postsecondary students through some of these challenging times and help them transition into rewarding careers in the near future. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

This concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In light of the budget, coming at 3 o'clock, we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine immediately. If you are leaving the Chamber to prepare yourself for such activities, please do so quickly, quietly, and appropriately out of respect to the remainder of Members' Statements.

Ukraine

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, it's been over a year since Ukraine was invaded by Vladimir Putin's Russia. It's been a long year of watching cities devastated, families and communities forced to flee the onslaught of devastation wrought against a peaceful country by the Russian Federation. There are heartbreaking stories of people losing their loved ones, of communities devastated by invasion and bombings.

But throughout it all we've seen heroism of people standing up against the invaders determined to crush a free and independent Ukraine. We've seen compassion both around the world and right here at home with Premier Stelmach and Thomas Lukaszuk, who shipped tonnes of aid and supplies to Ukraine and filled planes full of refugees, who found their way here to find peace and stability as this illegal and immoral war continues. It's been a year of pain and hurt for Ukraine, but the people of Ukraine are still standing in defiance of the tyranny of Putin.

Now, there are those, including the Premier, who suggested that the only solution for Ukraine was neutrality. The Premier even stated that she thought the invasion was understandable. Although I appreciate that she corrected her wrong opinion, it still caused harm to the Ukrainian community here and those fleeing violence. Some may never forgive what she said.

Mr. Speaker, I'm deeply proud of my Ukrainian roots, and I know so many Albertans are of theirs. As a province I know that we will continue to stand up for Ukraine and its people.

Slava Ukraini.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright has a statement to make.

Federal Energy Transition Plan

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because the federal government persistently employs newspeak rhetoric to disguise its progressive ideological policies, the referencing of George Orwell has become necessary. In his essay on Politics and the English Language, written in April 1946, he said, “Political language . . . is designed to make lies sound truthful and murder respectable.”

Happily for the federal Ministry of Truth, a leaked memo exposed the rhetoric of the just transition policy as classic newspeak. The actual aim of just transition was revealed to be the murder of the Alberta oil and gas industry, albeit a respectable murder. A quote from the memo gave the game away: Canadians thrown out of work by climate change programs can get jobs as janitors. The memo revealed that they intend to throw 2.7 million Canadian employees out of work into janitorial jobs.

Surely no political party leader in Alberta can know this situation and with good conscience sit on their hands. However, the Leader of the Opposition’s hands are tied because her federal boss has already signed up to this attack on Alberta’s oil and gas industry, the industry which provides the funds for the social programs socialists claim to champion. Then conscience is obsolete.

Happily for Albertans, their Premier has not sat on her hands. Indeed, she is squarely on her feet. She proved this when, immediately and without compromise, she called out the newspeak rhetoric of the just transition policy. I know that the Premier along with my UCP colleagues will continue to expose just transition newspeak euphemisms and resist this ideological attack on Alberta until it’s defeated. However, we should heed the admonitions of Thomas Jefferson, who said that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance, because once we send this dishonest nonsense packing, Canada’s federal government will launch a new attack on our province.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has a petition to present.

Mr. Turton: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s an honour to present this petition coming from the southwest Edmonton community of Edgemont. Spearheading this petition is the Edgemont Community League School Advocacy Committee, who have obtained 480 signatures. Right now the children of Edgemont have the longest average commute times to school in Edmonton, and this petition seeks to comprehensively address the educational infrastructure in the area by building a much-needed K to 9 public school in the community of Edgemont.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(3) I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of the 2023-2024 estimates schedule.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings?

Seeing none, hon. members, that brings us to points of order, and at 2:22 the hon. the Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’ll be short. At the time that you mentioned, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford clearly shouted, after being warned by yourself, “You’re making this stuff up.” I don’t have the benefit of the Blues, and I suspect it may not even be caught by the ambient mics, but I sure heard it, and I suspect many other members in the Chamber heard it. That kind of language isn’t appropriate for this Chamber, especially because it was directed at a specific member, the hon. minister of public safety. I believe this is a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j), and I encourage that member to apologize, withdraw, and do better.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the member we withdraw the comment.

The Speaker: I accept this and consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Ordres du jour.

Please be seated.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2023-24 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates and the '23-24 government estimates. In addition, I also wish to table the '23-26 government of Alberta strategic plan and the Budget 2023 ministry plans.

Budget Address

21. Mr. Toews moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the government's 2023-26 fiscal plan and move Government Motion 21.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I count it a tremendous, tremendous honour today to rise in the House and present Budget 2023, the fifth I've presented on behalf of Albertans. In the fall of 2019 I put forward a four-year plan to bring the province back to fiscal responsibility and a balanced budget. In some respects these past four years have felt like a century, in part due to the extraordinary global challenges we faced but also because of how far we've come. When as a government we took office in 2019, Alberta had an economy that was flatlined, and we were spending $10 billion more than comparable provinces on services, without better outcomes.

Our plan to strengthen Alberta's economic foundation was twofold: first, to bring discipline to Alberta's spending – we could no longer afford to be the spending outlier among Canadian provinces – and then we were determined to position our province for competitiveness, leading to exceptional investment attraction, economic growth, diversification, and job creation, thereby ensuring an increase in fiscal capacity and provincial revenues. These goals were, to put it mildly, ambitious.

To achieve them, we committed to three fiscal anchors that informed our decision-making. The first anchor was a commitment to keep Alberta's net debt to GDP ratio below 30 per cent. This would ensure that debt and debt repayment would not strangle our economic growth. Second, it was imperative that we would get our spending in line with comparative provinces and, third, when there was economic clarity, to chart a path to a balanced budget.

As we implemented our ambitious economic recovery plan, the impact on Albertans was almost immediate. Our red tape reduction initiative has saved Albertans $2.1 billion. We established the Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation with $1 billion of capital so that Indigenous communities can be full partners in the Alberta advantage.

Our government invested in strategic infrastructure projects that were essential for future growth while getting Albertans back to work at a time they needed it most. By July 2020 we had cut Alberta's corporate tax rate from 12 to 8 per cent. We recapitalized the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, adding $175 million to support investment into Alberta start-ups, and we established Invest Alberta to sell the province's incredible value proposition to the world. Then on February 24, 2022, I was able to stand in this House and present Alberta's first balanced budget in a decade.

That brings us to today. Today Alberta is leading the nation in economic growth. Today, with a rapidly diversifying economy, there are career opportunities that didn't even exist a few years ago. Today Albertans pay $20 billion less in taxes than they would if they lived in the next lowest taxed province. Today, after some very difficult years, the opportunities for small businesses and entrepreneurs are exploding, and today I again present a balanced budget.

This means debt is on the decline. In this last fiscal year, Mr. Speaker, we paid off over $13 billion of debt, all of the debt that matured in 2022. This means lower debt-service costs and more resources available for health, education, and other programs. It means more available fiscal room and thereby more runway and capacity should we experience another economic shock. We are far and away below our net debt to GDP ratio ceiling of 30 per cent. Today Alberta is at 10 per cent, the lowest in all of Canada by a long shot. And because of our strong balance sheet, Alberta has received its second credit upgrade of the year, remarkable when we consider that our last credit-rating increase was back in 2001.

Investment attraction is essential to Alberta's strong economic growth and job numbers. In my business experience a government will either help or hinder progress, get in the way or get out of the way. It's an attitude, Mr. Speaker, and it matters to investors. Four years ago we put out the Open for Business sign, and we followed it up with real actions, not just words. We've reduced business taxes, cut red tape, and have created one of the most business-friendly environments on the continent, and the results speak for themselves. In a year when venture capital investment dropped in Ontario, Quebec, and B.C., we in Alberta, at $729 million, set another record.

Businesses across sectors and across the province are creating thousands of new jobs while diversifying Alberta's economy. Just days ago Applexus Technologies announced they were moving their Canadian headquarters to Calgary, creating 125 tech jobs. Southland Trailer Corp. in Lethbridge will double its production, creating 250 jobs. De Havilland is moving its head office to Alberta – instead of to subsidized Quebec, I might add – and it's building an aerospace centre and manufacturing plant, employing 1,500 people, and that's just the start.

CGC development is building a $210 million wallboard manufacturing plant in Wheatland county. Garmin Canada has announced expansion plans for their Cochrane head office that will double their workforce in two years. We have Imperial Oil investing $720 million in the heartland for a biodiesel refinery. Drilling activity in the oil and gas sector ramped up to an eight-year high last year, and investment is expected to grow by a further 19 per cent in 2023.

IBM is opening its client innovation centre for western Canada in Calgary. Sidetrade is investing $24 million to make Calgary its North American headquarters. Air Products is building a net-zero hydrogen complex right here in the heartland. Amazon, Walmart, Canadian Pacific, Dow, Infosys, Mphasis, HBO, Northern Petrochemical, RBC, CN Rail, Ernst & Young – I could go on and on, but there's not time this afternoon to detail every good-news investment story in Alberta's economy.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be crystal clear here, and it's important that our colleagues across the floor hear this. Governments do not create wealth. They create the conditions favourable for investment attraction and wealth creation, and over the last four years this government was relentless in its focus to make Alberta the best place to do business in North America. Behind the long list of good-news stories the best part of the story is what this means for Albertans every day on the ground: 92,000 jobs were created in 2022 and over 20,000 in January of this year. In fact, almost a quarter of all jobs created in the nation in 2022 were created right here in Alberta.

These jobs are paying Albertans more. Workers in our province make more than in any other province. Since January 2019 the amount Albertans earn per week has gone up 12 per cent, and we expect these earnings to keep growing. Further to that, thanks to the lowest taxes in Canada, Albertans keep more of their hard-earned money in their pockets.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians from other provinces and those new to Canada are taking note of Alberta's growing economy, our lower cost of living, and the abundant opportunities we offer, like the story of Nick and Jessica, two young professionals – one from Edmonton, one from Vancouver – debating about where they're going to start life together. When Jessica recently visited Edmonton for the first time, she was surprised by its natural beauty, but what tipped the scales? The high wages, the affordability, and the cost of housing. "Edmonton is cold," Jessica says, "but I can buy a coat." It's not surprising, then, that Alberta is leading the nation in population growth and that more Canadians are moving to Alberta than any other province.

Our growing population means good news for Alberta's labour market. Opportunities in every sector from finance to film, energy to agriculture mean we need a skilled workforce to keep up with the labour demands in the province. Budget 2022 committed $170 million intended to create 7,000 training spaces for jobs in high demand. I want to commend our Minister of Advanced Education for his work in this area because, Mr. Speaker, he took funding for 7,000 spaces and worked with our incredible postsecondary institutions to create 10,000: 10,000 additional learning spaces for high-demand occupations across sectors and across this province.

Now, while Alberta's economy strengthens, we cannot afford to become complacent. We continue to face headwinds. Fuelled by supply chain constraints, global unrest, and our federal government's irresponsible fiscal policy, inflation is making life more costly for all Albertans at home, in business, and even in government. At the same time, despite record-breaking investment in Alberta, we continue to see declining business investment nationally. Since 2015 Canadian real GDP has grown by 13 per cent, but this growth has been entirely driven by government and consumer spending and residential investment. Much of this growth has been funded by debt, and it's masked the stagnant state of Canadian business investment.

Alarming, between 2015 and 2019 business investment in Canada actually declined. One of the impediments to business investment is Canada's growing reputation as a nation where it's difficult if not impossible to get large projects completed. Global investors have taken note of the many projects killed by the Trudeau government: Northern Gateway in 2016, Energy East in 2017, the Teck Frontier mine in 2020, and at least 15 LNG projects. In fact, since the federal impact assessment legislation, Bill C-69, was passed in 2018, there's not been one project subject to the act approved in all of Canada.

3:30

Not only has Canada lost out on billions of dollars of investment that would have created more jobs, better paying jobs, and greater financial stability for Canadians; we've turned our back on a world that desperately needs what we offer, including responsibly produced energy. If Canada fails to maximize responsibly produced energy production, we're not only failing Canadians; we're contributing to massive hardship for the world's most vulnerable. Canadian energy will help those living on the margins heat their homes. It will make fertilizer more affordable and boost agricultural output. It will improve air quality by displacing dirtier fuels. But it can do none of these things if it's left in the ground.

If Canada abdicates production, it simply moves to countries that give no credence to ESG concerns, with despotic leaders who use their energy wealth for destructive purposes. It leads to increased emissions and pollution as more coal is used in electricity generation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, if Canada is serious about reducing greenhouse gas emissions, the best thing we can do is export clean-burning Canadian LNG.

An energy-rich democracy like Canada that continues to hamstring its world-class responsible energy production with carbon taxes, emission caps, and a regulatory quagmire at a time of global shortage is irrational and grossly irresponsible. Canada not only has an opportunity, Mr. Speaker; we have a deep responsibility to prove ourselves a reliable trading partner and ally and deliver responsibly produced energy.

Mr. Speaker, as we reflect on our journey as a province over the past four years and as we recognize both the significant triumphs and the challenges we're experiencing today, the question becomes: where do we go from here? How do we maintain a strong balance sheet and positive economic trajectory? What can we do today to secure Alberta's future tomorrow?

First, Mr. Speaker, I'm appealing to the rest of Canada to follow Alberta's lead to make business competitiveness a key priority. Securing a prosperous future for the next generation depends on it. We need to be a nation that once again can get big, visionary projects completed. We need to be a nation that values the welfare of Canadians above the ideologies of the elite.

In the 1980s and '90s there was a saying going around the province: please, Lord, give us one more oil boom, and I promise not to squander it this time. As I recall, there was a different term, a less parliamentary term, used for squander. Remaining disciplined and responsible is most difficult during years of plenty. I expect most if not all of us in the House today would agree that, whether in our businesses or households, the tendency to unsustainably increase spending as revenues rise is almost inevitable. In this province, with our economy heavily influenced by commodities and our volatile revenue structure, it's been our story all too often.

The second key, then, Mr. Speaker, is to maintain responsible fiscal management into the future through a framework, a series of well-calibrated fiscal rules and guardrails. We're introducing legislation that will require a balanced budget. We'll limit year-over-year operating expense growth to population and inflation, ensuring appropriate and disciplined spending growth in easy times and difficult times. We'll implement a fiscal framework for surplus allocation to ensure that heritage fund earnings are retained in the fund and debt repayment is given first priority.

Mr. Speaker, had we from day one invested the earnings of the heritage fund back into the heritage savings trust fund without any additional deposits other than what we have made to date, instead of the $18 billion we have in the fund today, the fund would be approaching $300 billion. A fund of this size would earn Albertans close to $20 billion a year in investment income. While we all wish we started reinvestment earlier, the best day to start is today. Speaking of today, to make up for lost time, we will immediately invest an additional $2 billion into the heritage fund from the surplus of the last two years.

All of these measures together provide fiscal stability, enabling low taxes, and will ensure that business investment continues to be preferential to Alberta. It means future generations will not be encumbered with a debt they did not incur. Mr. Speaker, Budget '23 is about the future. It's about doing more of what has worked these past four years, more to champion Alberta's incredible value proposition around the world, more to attract investment, more to ensure Albertans have the services they need, and more to give a hand up to the vulnerable among us.

To further position Alberta's economy for investment attraction, we're introducing a nonrefundable tax credit for agriculture processing and manufacturing investment. This carefully calibrated incentive will build on our broad-based value proposition and ensure we're able to compete with neighbouring jurisdictions, growing our value-added agriculture sector.

As the largest hydrogen producer in Canada we're building for the future with the Alberta petrochemical incentive program as we do the regulatory work, assign carbon hubs, and work with industry to advance logistics in our commitment to position this emerging sector for growth.

We're ensuring that future generations of Indigenous Albertans are partners in prosperity with a 50 per cent increase allocated to the Aboriginal business investment fund.

According to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business there are 100,000 unfilled employment positions in Alberta today. It's remarkable. A skilled workforce is crucial to meet the needs of a growing and diverse economy, and as such broad and diverse training opportunities are needed not only to ensure key capacity for employers but to ensure more Albertans are invited into the Alberta advantage.

In addition to the 10,000 postsecondary seats created last year, Budget '23 is allocating $111 million to expand seats in construction, tech, business, and energy and another $11 million for aviation training with the new bachelor of aviation program. Over $180 million is earmarked for upgrading or expanding facilities around the province, including a new school of business building at MacEwan University and a power engineering and instrumentation lab at Northwestern Polytechnic.

Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we, like every other province, are experiencing a serious challenge in health care capacity. This challenge is less about bricks and mortar but, instead, a lack of front-line health care professionals. The new health workforce strategy provides $158 million to support multiple initiatives to recruit and retain health care workers, including the targeted recruitment of internationally trained workers and nurses. This budget provides funding to increase the number of learning seats available in health care professions, including 1,800 new seats for health care aides, licensed practical nurses, and registered nurses and an additional 120 seats to train more physicians at our schools of medicine, a 40 per cent increase in our physician training capacity.

Budget '23 provides $2 billion over three years to fund the health care action plan, with investments to strengthen the EMS system, reduce surgical and ER wait times, enhance and update Alberta's primary health care network, and empower front-line workers to provide improved services for Albertans.

Although Alberta has the youngest population in Canada, it's estimated that the demand for long-term care beds could double in the next 25 years. We're investing more than $1 billion over the next 10 years to ensure that our loved ones, the ones on whose shoulders we stand, will receive the care they need in their later years.

Mr. Speaker, affordability and the high cost of living due to inflation have been a source of hardship for many Albertans. The affordability action plan provides over $3 billion in relief measures that will help Albertans. If we added all of the measures up, including all of the reindexing, we would be well over $8 billion over the four years this fiscal plan represents.

3:40

The fuel tax suspension program is saving Albertans and Alberta businesses real dollars every time they fuel up and gives Albertans an enduring affordability advantage as we benefit from an owned resource. Electricity rebates are providing almost 2 million Alberta homes and businesses with relief from the high cost of electricity, and targeted affordability payments will support families, seniors, and our most vulnerable. Under this action plan the student loan interest rate will be reduced and the no-interest, no-payment grace period will be extended to one year after graduation.

With so many families choosing Alberta, additional resources are required for our K to 12 education system. Budget '23 provides $950 million to ensure schools are well prepared to welcome new students and includes additional targeted funding to provide for the increasingly complex needs of our youth. Budget '23 increases funding for school bus transportation, off-setting rising costs, supporting school choice, and providing a ride for an additional 80,000 students with a new family-friendly distance eligibility. And, Mr. Speaker, with all these new students we need more schools. Budget '23 provides new capital for 58 new schools in planning, design, operating, and construction. When I say "new," I need to say that "new" means schools being refurbished and upgraded as well as brand new builds.

Mr. Speaker, living a life free from the effects of crime should be the expectation of every Albertan. Sadly, this is not the case for some. Budget '23 includes a significant investment into Justice and public safety, with funding to include more Crown prosecutors and support staff to address the backlog, increase capacity, and modernize our courts. Funding is provided for increased law enforcement, more boots on the ground to better fight crime in our communities, both urban and rural. Budget '23 is also providing $65 million over three years to strengthen First Nations policing. This will fund a new First Nation police service for Siksika and additional officers across the country.

Mr. Speaker, part of investment attraction means making sure we have the infrastructure and systems to meet the demands of growth. With tens of thousands of Canadians making Alberta home, the volume at land titles has been unprecedented. To all the realtors, developers, and lawyers out there: we've heard you. Service Alberta will again receive increased funding to clear up the backlog at land titles and, more importantly, to finally modernize the system.

Speaking of critical infrastructure, keeping communities connected with a road network that supports jobs and ensures the safe and efficient flow of traffic is essential. Budget '23 provides an additional $580 million for transportation projects across the province with a focus on projects that improve productivity and competitiveness.

Mr. Speaker, Thomas Jefferson once wrote that the measure of a society is how it treats its weakest members. I believe that the budget I'm presenting today reflects the true measure of Albertans with care across the province, across ministries for the most vulnerable and those who need a hand up. One hundred and seventeen million dollars will expand mental health services for youth across the province. Budget '23 provides for three new addiction recovery communities, and in Children's Services $4 million of adoption supports will make it easier for a child who needs a home to become part of a family.

Now, Mr. Speaker, government initiatives and funding are essential in the care of vulnerable Albertans. They are so important, but the measure of our society goes so far beyond government programs. This province was built by people who didn't wait for government. They saw a need in their family or their community, and they stepped out to meet that need. The future of Alberta will in some measure be contingent upon our ability to preserve and foster the character trait of self-determination even in our compassion. There are examples every day from every corner of our province, people like Matthew Potts from Samson Cree Nation, who opened up his restaurant's kitchen to Ukrainian newcomers; like those from an Edmonton youth group who prepared a traditional Lebanese meal and care package for members of Edmonton's homeless community; people like Tylynn Hollingshead from my constituency in Sexsmith, who raised over $24,000 for the Stollery children's hospital; or 11-year-old Kennedy Bruno, who started her own T-shirt design business and donated the proceeds to the Ermineskin Women's Shelter. There are thousands – literally thousands – of stories like these across our province, and, Mr. Speaker, it's stories like these that fill me with such hope for the future.

Albertans are generous, compassionate, and intentional, and just like economic investment, when it comes to generosity, government can either be a help or a hindrance to Albertans as they work together to meet the needs in their communities. A good job is more than just paying the bills; it creates conditions favourable for people and families to thrive so they can lend that helping hand to their neighbour, to newcomers, or to those in their community who are less fortunate.

I would like to thank the MLA for Peace River, who brought forward Bill 202, reflected in this budget, which increases the value of the charitable donations tax credit. This is a substantial investment in supporting the generosity of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, in three months Albertans will have a decision to make regarding their next government. As a province we have the benefit of contrasting two very different approaches to governance and the economy, not theoretical or hypothetical conjecture but the actual results of two contrasting economic strategies. Now, I want to be clear. I believe that almost every MLA that comes to this House comes with the intention of making life better for Albertans regardless of which side of the aisle they sit on, but we have to be honest with ourselves and the people we were elected to serve. The NDP's economic management model of raising taxes, increasing regulatory burden, high operational spending, and working to expedite the energy transition in conjunction with Trudeau's Liberals was nothing short of disastrous. It resulted in the flight of billions of dollars in capital, tens of thousands of lost jobs, and perpetual deficits. Our government brought a different approach. Sound fiscal management coupled with tax reductions and reduced regulatory burden have positioned Alberta to lead the nation in economic growth, with a surplus budget, less debt, more and better jobs, and, from my perspective, a whole lot of hope.

Mr. Speaker, 61 years ago my parents came west to Alberta with nothing more than a dream, a big work ethic, and a deep sense of self-determination, a story shared by so many in this province. They worked hard, sacrificed much, and built a home and a life for their family in a place where opportunities abound, in a province where family, faith, and community are held in high regard. We, the next generation, are privileged to build on that solid foundation and are now working to secure a similar future for those that will follow.

Mr. Speaker, four years ago I sought public office for one reason, to fight for an Alberta that can offer the next generation of Albertans the same opportunities, prosperity, and freedom this province has offered me and my family, the same opportunities for our children and grandchildren, for people like Nick and Jessica, and for those that don't yet call this land their home, the same opportunities for all Albertans.

We've faced some real challenges these last few years, but like those that came before, Albertans have dug in, worked hard, made incredible progress, and I couldn't be more optimistic and hopeful about the future of this province. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I believe Alberta's best days are ahead.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, March 6, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Hon. members, I invite you to remain standing. As is our custom, we pay tribute to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met.

Mr. Melvin P.J. "Mike" Cardinal July 17, 1941, to January 12, 2023

The Speaker: Mike Cardinal was elected as the Member for Athabasca-Lac La Biche on March 20, 1989. He subsequently won three elections in Athabasca-Wabasca and one in Athabasca-Redwater, serving five consecutive terms before retiring in 2008.

Mr. Cardinal was the first status Indian to be appointed to cabinet in Alberta. He served as the minister of family and social services from 1992 to 1996, associate minister of forestry from 1999 to 2000, minister of resource development from 2000 to 2001, minister of sustainable resource development from 2001 to 2004, minister of human resources and employment from 2004 to 2006. During his 19 years of service he also chaired the Northern Alberta Development Council from 1997 to 2000.

Mr. Cardinal worked in the forestry industry for over 10 years before moving into the public sector. With an early career in the civil service focused on housing and career counselling, Mr. Cardinal entered public life serving as a member and chair of the Northland school board and as town councillor for Slave Lake. He continued his extensive community involvement on many boards and associations such as the Calling Lake Community Association and the Métis Association of Alberta. Mr. Cardinal said that one of the reasons he got into politics was to find how to improve the lifestyle of northern Alberta and Indigenous communities. With his dedication, he worked tirelessly for his constituents and the people of Alberta.

Mr. Cardinal passed away on January 12 at the age of 81. In a moment of silent prayer and reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Cardinal as each of you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Berlyn Broadhead. I invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Member for Edmonton Strathcona's 15th Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call upon the Clerk to call for the daily Routine, I want to take a moment to recognize that March 3, 2023, marked the 15th anniversary of the first election of the hon. the Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is the first member of the 30th Legislature to reach this milestone. It may also interest you that of the 956 members ever elected to the Assembly, only 104 of them have ever served over 15 years, and as of today the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has served 5,481 days in this Assembly. I invite her to the dais to receive her recognition. [Standing ovation]

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is gratitude to the members of families who have shared the burden of public office and public service. Today I'd like to welcome members of the Cardinal family who are present in the gallery. I will call each of you by name. Please remain standing until the remainder of the family has been introduced, and we will express our gratitude to you: son Michael Cardinal; daughter Marieka Cardinal; granddaughters Aliyah Cardinal-Mobley and Evelyn Horstemeier Cardinal; grandson River Horstemeier Cardinal; brother Irvin Cardinal; sister Clarice Cardinal; brother-in-law Clarence Cardinal; sister Linda Gladue; and brother Larry Cardinal. Hon. members, the Cardinal family.

Members, also seated in the Speaker's gallery today is a skilled young singer-songwriter from northern Alberta who led the Assembly in our national anthem just moments ago. Ms Berlyn Broadhead is an 18-year-old country singer from the constituency of Lesser Slave Lake who's been nominated for five Alberta country music awards. Thank you, Berlyn, for leading us.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has a statement to make.

Budget 2023

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Tuesday the Minister of Finance tabled Budget 2023. It is a good-news budget. I would even say that it's a great-news budget. It is a plan that, if passed, would secure Alberta's future by achieving the priorities of Albertans while ensuring our government lives within its means. Fiscal responsibility matters. It matters for Albertans, their families, and their communities.

Over the past four years our relentless focus on investment attraction, job creation, and diversification has secured our position as the economic engine of Canada. Budget 2023 continues the positive fiscal trajectory with yet another balanced budget, the second year in a row – two years – and a forecasted surplus of $2.4 billion in 2023 and 2024 and projected surpluses for future years.

But what will this budget mean for you and I, Mr. Speaker? For our constituents, our job creators, and all Albertans it means we are securing the health and education of Albertans by increasing access to family doctors, surgeries, and emergency services by making sure our children and grandchildren have the education system they need to reach their full potential. A new fiscal framework means the next generation is not encumbered with a debt they did not incur. Budget 2023 is securing Alberta's future, a bright future for our children, grandchildren, and communities across the province.

Budget 2023 is a good lesson for the members opposite who are sitting here today. It's worth repeating: fiscal responsibility matters.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Health Care System

Ms Hoffman: If the current Premier follows the law, the election will begin in 56 days, and we want every Albertan to know that Alberta's NDP will get you the health care you need where you need it, close to home.

The present government wants Albertans to forget the last four years and how much worse the UCP has made health care, but Albertans remember that the UCP chased nurses, doctors, and allied health professionals out of the province immediately after the last election. The Health minister even yelled at a doctor in his driveway. The UCP kicked 40,000 Albertans off the seniors' drug plan. They cancelled the much-needed Edmonton and north zone lab, a lab that would have been a game changer for timely health treatments. The UCP cancelled the child and adolescent mental health centre, saying that there wasn't a mental health crisis. What a slap in the face to every parent desperate for a therapist or teacher needing a student assessment or teenager fighting to make it through the day.

The UCP pushed privatization and chased nurses, anesthesiologists, and surgeons out of public hospitals. You'd better believe that Albertans remember the cruel and hurtful words of the current Premier suggesting that it was their fault if they got stage 4 cancer. The UCP even tried to take insulin pumps away from children with type 1 diabetes, and then there's the current Premier's ongoing plan to make everyday Albertans pay out of pocket to see their family doctor. We just can't trust her with our health care.

The good news is that we have a chance to vote for a government that will protect and improve public health care and ensure that you never have to pay to see your doctor. Albertans can vote for a Premier who cares about them and their family. We can vote for a Premier who believes in public health care, and she actually wants it to serve us all well. We can choose a stable, competent, caring leader. We can elect a government with a plan to ensure that 1 million more Albertans can have a family doctor and a health home. This spring we can stand for an Alberta that works for us all, one with better health care and much better leadership. This spring we can elect Alberta's NDP.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has a statement to make.

Joan Snyder

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in recognition of the life of an amazing woman, a business leader, and a visionary philanthropist. Her name was Joan Snyder. Joan was a business leader who had a special place in her heart for the University of Calgary and their women's hockey programs. She leaves behind an amazing legacy and an outstanding gift to the University of Calgary.

This amazing donation of 67 and a half million dollars will boost research, student learning, and athletics at the university; $30 million of the gift went to establish the Joan Snyder program of excellence in kinesiology. It will be used to help change the landscape of chronic and infectious disease research, sports science, and women's hockey. Another $35 million went to the Cumming School of Medicine's Snyder institute for chronic diseases. This gift will sustain the institute in perpetuity and spark new discoveries. The last of it went to the Joan Snyder program of excellence in women's hockey fund for the benefit of the Dinos women's hockey team. She had actually previously donated $500,000 to benefit the team back in 2011.

I hope all of my colleagues in this Chamber share the same sentiment and thank this woman and her family for the gift and her legacy she left behind to build a better future for us and our grandchildren.

The Rolling Barrage PTSD Awareness Ride

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about a cause that is very close to my heart, The Rolling Barrage, founded in 2017 by Scott Carey, a Canadian veteran dedicated to addressing an issue that many shy away from. For the past five years, after receiving an invite from Carola Singer, the wife of a veteran and firefighter, I've had the honour of engaging with this amazing organization, which conducts a coast-to-coast motorcycle ride to raise awareness for PTSD in veterans and front-line workers and to combat the stigma associated with it.

As the parliamentary secretary of EMS, the son of a nurse, a paramedic, and veteran, I am acutely aware of the critical role our veterans and first responders play in protecting our communities. The sad reality is that these individuals are at a far higher risk of the impacts to their mental health. The Rolling Barrage aims to assist recovery by raising awareness about the impacts of PTSD through encouraging an open and honest conversation about mental wellness. By doing so, the ultimate goal is to remove the stigma that is associated with mental health issues and create a positive culture of support.

As a supporter and rider for the past five years I have seen first-hand the incredible impact The Rolling Barrage is having on individuals and the communities it visits, but the work is far from done, and there is still much more that we can do to support our first responders and veterans who are struggling with mental health challenges. That is why I'm so proud to continue to support The Rolling Barrage and its mission to raise awareness for PTSD and mental wellness.

I would urge all members of the House to join me in supporting this important cause. By working together, we can create a brighter future for our first responders, veterans, and all those who are struggling with mental health challenges.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Emergency Medical Services

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, last week this Premier had the gall to get up and claim that there is no crisis in health care. "Everything's fixed," she said. "Dr. Cowell says so." But today we are learning that's just not true, as if we didn't already know. What's actually happening is that paramedics are being directed to dump critically ill patients off at the ER even if there's nobody there ready to care for them. This is dishonest and dangerous, and it puts lives at risk. To the Premier: is dumping people in hallways her version of fixing our health care crisis?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate the member opposite on 15 years in the Legislature. But she continues to spew information that is unverified, untrue, and irresponsible. The e-mail in question – we'll make sure that we get proper information out, but we have been very clear from the beginning. That's part of the reason why we have delayed rolling out targets, not directives, on what the acceptable drop-off time is at hospital. The target is 45 minutes. That's the target across the entire country, and we're going to be striving to achieve that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the e-mail itself says, "I just found out this information yesterday . . . so I don't have all the details [and] solutions as to how we are [possibly] going to proceed with this in a safe manner." That is really a very good question. Today the Premier claimed she would magically find hundreds of nurses to fill in these spots, yet we know there are 3,400 vacancies in nursing today alone. How is the Premier going to implement this ridiculous plan safely?

Ms Smith: Well, there's no magic involved, just the good work of Dr. John Cowell and Mauro Chies, who is our CEO, going out, doing recruitment, and being methodical in putting out the call for resumés. They are systematically hiring 114 full-time equivalents. As we know, there's lots of part-time and casual staff, so it'll probably be more people than 114, but as they get rolled out at our 16 acute-care facilities, we will have off-load teams that are able to accept patients as they're being dropped off by paramedics.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, there are 3,400 vacancies right now, and this is scheduled to start in nine days. Now, meanwhile, this government has starved health care funding going on four years. The budget from last week is still $1.4 billion short, accounting for population and inflation. Today we have more than 30 communities with bed closures. Expectant parents are driving hours for their babies to be delivered. Emergency rooms with random shutdowns, including the most recent last night in Airdrie. No urgent care. None. To the Premier: what is it about hospitals with giant flashing closed signs . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: I wish the member opposite would calm down and stop giving information out that is incorrect. At the Airdrie urgent care centre last night, I'm told, they did find a doctor, and it was not closed down. Here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. What we are doing in health care is that we are restoring some calm because it has been under stress for the last two and a half years. The calm, stable leadership of Dr. Cowell and Mauro Chies is allowing us to attract more workers back into the system so that we can meet some of these issues of service.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the only person that is calm about health care is the guy who gets to take a limo up to Edmonton for a meeting. Everybody else just sees this Premier gaslighting them, and it is not creating calm.

Budget 2023 and Capital Funding

Ms Notley: Meanwhile, the people of Calgary also feel let down. They feel that they have been completely insulted as a result of this government putting not one single cent in this last budget into downtown revitalization. When asked why the province snubbed Calgary, the Chamber president said simply: ask the Premier. So, Premier, why the snub?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no snub of Calgary. In fact, let me take this opportunity to talk about the investments that we're making in Calgary: $541 million over three years for the Calgary LRT, $429 million for Deerfoot Trail, $282 million for the Springbank off-stream reservoir, $166 million for the Calgary cancer centre, $134 million to complete the Calgary ring road, $59 million over three years for the Glenbow Museum revitalization – that's downtown; I know you guys don't spend time downtown, so you might not know that that's downtown – $15 million over three years in the Repsol sport centre . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Nothing for the Calgary downtown revitalization strategy, yet lots of money to hire more political staff to write weird answers.

Here's another fact. This September another 8,000 kids are going to walk through the doors of the public school system in Calgary; 8,000 new students. Yet how many new schools are we building? One. Just one. Mr. Speaker, there are 21 Calgary MLAs over there. Half of them are in cabinet. They all failed. To the Premier: if it's not new schools, what's her solution for class sizes that are too big? Double-decker desks?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure where the Official Opposition gets their information from. We're building 58 schools, over $300 million, 11 of which of them are in Calgary. We have got 11 projects, and as the opposition knows . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The Premier.

Ms Smith: . . . there are stages that you go through for the type of development that you have. I can tell you that both the Calgary board of education and the Calgary Catholic board have given us accolades for the amount of investment that we're giving because we followed their capital plan.

Ms Notley: One and a half real projects and a whole bunch of pretend ones, Mr. Speaker. That's all they got.

Now, we come up to Edmonton, and we know one of the biggest pressures residents are feeling is health care. The city badly needs a new hospital on the south side to address the rapid expansion of suburban communities. Families live there, all of them needing hospital care, yet once again the UCP government has failed to deliver. No plan to get shovels in the ground for the new south Edmonton hospital: four years of inaction, and now more of the same. To the Premier. I am one hundred per cent committed to building that hospital. Why isn't she?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we are one hundred and ten per cent committed to building that project, and we've demonstrated it with the $634 million over three years that we have budgeted to put in there. I mean, as the opposition likes to point out, it takes a long time to build these hospitals. The cancer centre: I think it took 12 years to end up building. We are committed to building this hospital. We have already begun the work on the site. I know more misinformation was given out last week in the Legislature. The site work has already begun. We're going to be servicing the site, we're going to do the design, and we're going to get it done. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her third set of questions.

Ms Notley: The site work is not done. I would urge the Premier to drive by there sometime.

Affordability Plan and Energy Company Liability

Ms Notley: Now let's talk a bit about affordability. Despite sending out taxpayer-funded campaign leaflets touting their so-called affordability plan, these programs all start expiring right after the polls close in July. I've seen jugs of milk last longer. No more affordability cheques, no more gas tax relief, no more rebates, and Albertans will have to start paying off their deferred electricity bills. To the Premier: why do big, profitable corporations get permanent annual handouts while families are forced to pay more?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we wanted to make sure that the affordability payments actually didn't have an implication on the election, which is why that they go on after election day is over, which is May 29. May 29 is when election day is over. The payments will go until June 30, and we've said that we'll continue to look and hear from our constituents . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: We'll ask Albertans whether or not we continue to have the pressures. As we all know, leading into a winter season, when you have higher electricity charges, higher home heating bills, higher costs of gasoline and diesel: that's why we've targeted . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason the Premier can't afford a long-term solution for Alberta families is the fact that the money is already spoken for. She wants to hand up to $20 billion to her irresponsible friends who don't want to clean up after themselves. Every single oil and gas economist has called R-star a bad deal for taxpayers. Even the environment minister said that it violates the polluter-pay principle. Why won't the Premier commit today that no version of this backwards idea in any form will ever be forced onto the backs of Alberta taxpayers?

2:00

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the leader opposite – she seemed to like this type of approach when her boss Justin Trudeau gave a billion dollars for site rehabilitation. She kind of likes it when her boss Justin Trudeau proposes a 300 per cent increase in the carbon tax, which she implemented when she was on this side. If she was worried about affordability, she would go and talk to Jagmeet Singh, who is in partnership with her boss Justin Trudeau, and say: do not increase the taxes on Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only person this Premier is standing up on behalf of is her boss, the very companies who stand to benefit from this giveaway, who are funding her re-election – they're paying for her ads during the hockey game, for heaven's sake – just as affordability programs for families and the Premier's $20 billion handout to her funders will start to kick in. This is exactly the kind of corrupt, cynical politics she used to rail against; now it's her bread and butter. Why won't she reverse this program and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there is no program. All there is is an intention to make energy companies live up to their obligations under the law. For a number of years energy companies have been allowed to have liabilities passed forward year after year, decade after decade. We are searching for a broad range of approaches so that we can clear up what is now a $30 billion liability. It didn't get addressed when they were in government a few years ago. We're going to address it now that we are in government, and one of the ways that we're doing that is that we are demanding that 3 per cent of liabilities have to be cleaned up every year.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her final set of leader questions.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this is about doing the bidding of her donors and nothing else.

Kearl Oil Sands Project Tailings Leak

Ms Notley: Now, last May it was discovered that runoff from the Kearl project was seeping into surrounding muskegs and waterways. At the time Albertans living nearby were given one notice describing discoloured water; that's it. The seepage continued for months, and it was later determined that the levels of arsenic and other pollutants exceeded safe thresholds. Proper monitoring, protecting public safety, and public notice, Mr. Speaker, are among the most basic of government responsibilities in these situations; the UCP failed on all of them. Premier, who will you hold responsible for this travesty?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I hold Imperial Oil responsible. Under the law they are required to communicate to stakeholders. I think they fell short in this case, and I pressed them to not only make sure that the Official Opposition was briefed but also our federal environment minister so that misinformation was not going to continue to get into the media, because the misinformation that was in the media left a lot of people fearful that their drinking water had been polluted. There were no leaks that went into our tributaries, it did not go into our river system, and people need to know that their drinking water is safe.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, she doesn't know that. The investigation is still ongoing.

Between July and November the government had clear evidence that the seepage of arsenic and other pollutants was unsafe, yet no one picked up the phone to notify those Indigenous leaders or their communities about what was happening on their treaty lands. The regulator is now claiming it was up to the company. A pretty sorry excuse; same for the Premier. This is grossly irresponsible. This government knew about it and did nothing. Why is this government so disrespectful of their obligations to honour treaty rights?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there's no justification for any spill, and that is the reason why the Energy Regulator issued its emergency order, and that is the reason why Imperial Oil has been working diligently to clean it up. If you actually look at the press release today, the 5.3 million litre spill is almost completely . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford would like to ask a question, perhaps he can get in line and do so, but until then we'll hear from the Premier.

Ms Smith: The 5.3 million litre spill which happened recently is almost completely cleaned up, and they will be having Indigenous leaders on the property over the next two days to demonstrate that cleanup. In addition, they are still working on doing the work to make sure that the additional seepage they found last year is going to be cleaned up.

Ms Notley: Nine months, Mr. Speaker, and this government kept the community in the dark. Shameful.

Now, in addition, they also broke their legal obligation to notify the Northwest Territories. In fact, the environment minister from the Northwest Territories said that he was in multiple meetings with this environment minister and was told nothing, further damaging our reputation and our credibility all across the country. To the Premier: how can Albertans or anyone else trust you on anything if you can't even follow the most basic law, the most basic rules, the most basic job of government?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, because I know that the opposition leader has been briefed on this, I also know that she is overstating what actually occurred here. The water did not seep into tributaries. We have testing to confirm that. It did not get into the water system and into the river, so it did not impact drinking water. Our obligation is that when it gets into the tributaries, we do have to make sure that anyone downstream of that leak does get impacted. This has identified an area, so we should have done the extra diligence to make sure that everyone knew it was safe.

Balanced Budgets

Mr. Williams: Well, Mr. Speaker, this year's budget is a testament to the perseverance of Albertans in the face of adversity. With unparalleled world-wide events affecting our country and our province, Alberta has come out on the other side stronger than ever before. The economic stewardship of this Conservative government and this Minister of Finance has led us to introduce again a second balanced budget, and we expect more in the out-years to come. Now, my question to the Minister of Finance. Please tell us, for the information of this House, especially the members opposite: if this government were to continue on the same spending that the NDP would have spent, would we have a balanced budget?

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no, and here's why. The NDP increased per capita spending in real dollar terms by $300 per person over their term. We made it a goal of this government to bring down our spending to align with other provinces. Mission accomplished. We're running a $2.4 billion surplus. They would run a $4 billion deficit. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the members opposite appreciate the question, as I do.

Now, given that the members opposite are stable and reliable at running deficits and our government is stable and reliable at good fiscal management, could the minister please inform our House, Albertans, and especially members opposite what the cost is to not balancing the budget, not just in dollars and cents but the human cost to families, to Albertans, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Toews: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's so much value to bringing responsible fiscal management back to the province. Strong fiscal management is attractive to investors – it attracts investment, it grows the economy, and it creates jobs and career opportunities – but surplus budgets ultimately result in the ability to pay down debt. The debt we paid down last year, over $14 billion, is saving Albertans $560 million in debt-service costs this next year alone, equivalent to 4,100 teachers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know even the members opposite are happy to hear that answer, as we all are in this House.

Now, given that difficult events have shaken the world economy in the past and given the irresponsible position that the NDP government left our government in when we came into power in 2019 and given the diligent work that we have done to pursue two balanced budgets in a row through the difficulties of a pandemic and world-wide oil price crashes, can the minister please let this House know what decisions he made in the past that he made now and will make in the future to continue having balanced budgets in this province?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, during the dark days, during the pandemic, during the time of the energy price crash, and during the time of the related global recession we set three fiscal anchors. We would keep our net debt to GDP ratio below 30 per cent. Mission accomplished. We're below 10. We would align our per capita spending with that of other provinces. Mission accomplished. We've aligned this year. We would bring a balanced budget. We did that last year and this year right through the fiscal plan. Mission accomplished. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order.

2:10 Calgary LRT Green Line Funding

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, Don Braid reports that the Premier is upset with his latest column, pointing out how the MLAs and ministers in the UCP who claimed to be representing Calgary were silent as Calgary and its priorities were ignored in the recent budget. This is the latest from a government that has seemingly dedicated itself to ignoring Alberta's largest city. Since they are apparently unable to identify a single Calgary priority, let me give them one. Will the Premier rise and commit to supporting the full vision of the green line LRT?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, we have been clear and transparent in Budget '23 around our capital plan, the fact that this government supports LRT expansion in both Calgary and Edmonton. We've been clear and transparent. Moreover, this government has . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay. Okay.

Mr. Toews: This government has been focused on creating the most competitive business environment, attracting investment, creating jobs, bringing this province back to fiscal responsibility with a balanced budget.

Member Ceci: Zero for Calgary downtown is an insult. Given that this UCP government has made it clear that the needs of Calgarians are not important to them, like when the Premier refused to let the people of Calgary-Elbow vote for their representative and now the laughable claim that not a single minister in this government actually knows what Calgary priorities are, and given that the green line is a critical project to get Calgarians to work, to school, to home, and to families, can the Premier please rise in this House and commit that despite her repeated failings of Calgary and Calgarians the future of the green line LRT will be supported and, importantly, funded?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the opposition would actually read the budget, they would see that in the capital plan there is funding for the green line. The Calgary green line is actually in the budget, so that's just something that – there's a $541 million commitment from the province. There's $674 million from the federal government. This province has committed $1.53 billion for the Calgary green line, a huge win for all of Calgary. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Member Ceci: Only one phase, Mr. Speaker.

Given the importance of the projects like the green line to Calgary, given that Calgarians rightly don't trust this government and given the repeated failures to support Calgary when it comes to health, education, affordability, infrastructure, and more and given that the Alberta NDP is committed to serving the needs of Calgary – the future of the green line will be safe under an Alberta NDP government – can the Premier make the same claim?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, we want to talk about Calgary. I can tell you what Calgarians cared about in 2019. It was making sure that we had a pro-growth, free-market, growth-focused government in the Legislature pushing forward for things that mattered most to them. We have a tale of two governments now. Here's their track record: they hiked up the corporate income tax, emptied out the downtown, chased away 183,000 jobs from our province. Now, the member opposite is also known as the worst Finance minister in Alberta's . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order.

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite increased the debt by $51 billion. Now, we are not going to take lessons from them. We're not going to write blank cheques with Albertans' hard-earned taxpayer dollars. We will work with the . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall is next.

Calgary Downtown Revitalization

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me try. Calgary is an economic driver for all of Alberta, yet Budget 2022 allocated just $5 million to revitalize Calgary's downtown, a figure so small that the CEO of the Calgary Chamber of commerce couldn't believe it. Worse, Budget 2023 allocates nothing whatsoever for downtown revitalization. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why does this government continue to neglect the needs of our largest city?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the top-of-mind issues for Calgarians are absolutely economic growth, jobs and opportunity, health care, education, affordability. That is why this fiscal plan commits nearly $3 billion to infrastructure in Calgary. Please, let me read this list for the members opposite. I hope that they stay quiet enough to actually hear these investments. Mr. Speaker, they are: $541 million over three years for LRT projects, $429.7 million for Deerfoot Trail, $166 million for the Calgary cancer centre, $134.2 million for the ring road, $84.7 million for . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Given that this Premier prioritized an extra $3 million in this budget for her own office and given that this Premier wants to hand out $20 billion in royalty credits to her friends and insiders and given the desperate need for revitalization of the Calgary downtown core, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs again: does she agree with the CEO of Calgary Chamber, who says that zero dollars for Calgary downtown revitalization is an insult?

Ms Schulz: Mr. Speaker, I do just want to highlight a few other capital investments that we're making: $57.1 million to support continuing care modernization – I can tell you that that matters to seniors right across our city – $9.5 million to Telus Spark. The list goes on and on. But, again, we can't just write blank cheques. Albertans wanted to see a balanced budget; there have been no specific asks. I know that the members opposite maybe didn't work this way when they were in government, but I am committed to working with the city, with our postsecondary institutions, with our business community to bring business back . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the Finance minister once said that the UCP government should do nothing to address office vacancies in Calgary's downtown and given that the Calgary downtown office vacancy rate now sits at 32.6 per cent, nearly double the national average, and given that the Alberta NDP caucus has put forward specific proposals to address downtown vacancies and downtown revitalization, to the Minister of . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order. Order. Order.

Now, this is a new experience for you to be interrupted like this, but when I call order, you can stop, and then I'll give you the chance to re-ask your question once the House has come to order. The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: will she admit that this government has no plan to strengthen Calgary's downtown and never had any intention of creating one?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I find it very rich that the members opposite would actually talk about Calgary's economy because when they were in business, they jacked up taxes on everything that moved, added regulatory burden, joined Justin Trudeau in getting in the way of energy projects. That sent billions of dollars of capital out of the province, tens of thousands of lost jobs, and emptied out the buildings in downtown Calgary. We're turning that around. The economy is booming. Office buildings are filling up. We're bringing relief.

Affordability Plan

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, it's no secret that the cost of living has increased due to poor fiscal policies of the federal government. NDP-Liberal carbon taxes have increased the cost of everything. Struggling to keep the lights on is not just a common phrase but a reality for many Albertans. Our government remains committed to easing this burden by strengthening our economy, creating jobs, and providing financial relief and support to those most in need. Can the Minister of Affordability and Utilities tell the House how the affordability action plan is working to address the financial struggles faced by Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy has recovered strongly, but many Albertans continue to struggle under inflationary pressures. Because of our strong fiscal position and balanced budget we've been able to provide substantial relief. Through our affordability action plan we are providing an estimated $900 per household in broad-based relief alone and additional targeted support for families with children, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans. Broad-based support includes our fuel tax relief, electricity rebates, utility price protection, and more. We will continue to assess . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order.

An Hon. Member: Good question.

The Speaker: It was a good question. If I could hear the answer, it would be even better.

Mr. Jones: As I was saying, we will continue to assess inflation and cost of living and provide support to Albertans that is appropriate.

Thank you.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the newly introduced affordability payments are only accessible to seniors, families with children with a combined income less than $180,000, and Albertans receiving core benefits such as AISH, PDD, or income support and given that we know inflation is top of mind for many Albertans, can the same minister explain why our government chose to target these specific groups as recipients of affordability payments?

Ms Hoffman: And leave half of Albertans out.

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. the minister of affordability.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We wanted to ensure that all low- and middle-income Alberta families receive targeted affordability supports because families with children face higher fuel, energy, and food costs as a portion of their total expenditures. We selected an income threshold that was consistent with other family supports, including the federal-provincial child care agreement, and at this threshold roughly 80 per cent of Alberta families, including all low- and middle-income Alberta families, are receiving targeted affordability supports. The top 20 per cent highest earning families are excluded, unlike other provinces. We also know that seniors and vulnerable Albertans are on lower incomes, often fixed, so we wanted to make sure they got those benefits as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and through you to the minister for his ministry's excellent work in implementing this program. Given the clear need for this program within our province and given the anticipation and excitement the announcement of this program has caused, can the same minister tell the House how many individuals have accessed this program and what other savings Alberta households have seen as a result of the affordability action plan?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As of today over 1.1 million Albertans have successfully enrolled and received affordability payments, including over half a million Alberta children. I'm pleased to report that our affordability action plan is working. Albertans are seeing significant cost reductions and savings, and inflation has eased more in our province than every other province in Canada. Albertans will save between $200 and $400 just on gas and diesel from January to June from the fuel tax relief. Nearly 2 million Albertans are receiving up to $500 in electricity rebates until April 2023, and we're saving families between $450 and around $600 per month in child care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South has a question.

Child Care Access and Affordability

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I often hear from families in my riding about the rising cost of living. Recently constituents again are raising concerns about the struggles parents are having with finding child care. Some daycares are asking families to pay a nonrefundable fee of up to $700 in order to be placed on a wait-list. Now, families are already paying more for basics like groceries and gasoline under this government, and of course that's due to rising inflation, but they don't need additional barriers when it comes to trying to provide for their children. Can the Minister of Children's Services please explain why these operators are allowed to charge excessive wait-list fees and why families are being left in the dark about decisions?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's not entirely accurate. We have been working very closely with our daycare providers to find a delicate balance that allows for affordable daycare in this province to remain affordable, and that's exactly why we've been monitoring the prices in this province. We've been imposing a number of different restrictions on daycare operators to ensure that daycare fees in this province remain affordable. I'm pleased to announce that daycare in this province has decreased down to an average of $22 per day, and we're slated to get to a $15-per-day daycare fee in this year.

Thank you.

Mr. Dang: Given that this minister knows very well that families have to sign up on five or six lists sometimes, which means that there's a predatory wait-list fee, and given that this government claims to be focused on affordability, given that families in my riding are struggling to pay the bills while this minister is out campaigning instead, will the Minister of Children's Services create a formal policy preventing child care operators from charging these predatory, nonrefundable wait-list fees to Alberta families?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, unlike the members opposite, we've been working with all daycare providers in this province, whether they're not-for-profit or are private operators, to ensure that they have a viable and sustainable and long-term commitment in this province. What we've done is that we've introduced, or we've been able to release, 1,600 new spaces very recently. We have a number more that are coming through the channel. We're reviewing them quickly for eligibility, and I'm pleased to say that you'll see a number of new daycare spaces available right away.

Mr. Dang: Given that nothing the minister has said today does a thing for families in my constituency and given that this government is willing to give away millions of dollars in corporate handouts to oil companies and given that this government is not supporting a child care program that actually works for parents, who, when they return to the workforce, we know provide hundreds of millions of dollars in economic activity, what is this government doing to ensure that child care providers are adopting ethical practices and not taking advantage of Alberta families?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I find it funny that the hon. member talks about daycare operators in this province as though they're their enemies, and that's exactly what they did when they introduced their failed pilot program back when they were in government. We do not choose between winners and losers in this province when it comes to operators. We will not waver when it comes to protecting all operators in this province, and we'll continue to respect parental choice and make it accessible for all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Kearl Oil Sands Project Tailings Leak

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start this question by expressing my support for the people of the Athabasca Chipewyan and Mikisew Cree First Nations and Fort Chip Métis as they deal with the impact of the spill and discovery of a leak from an Imperial Oil facility onto their territory that went on for months without the local communities being adequately informed. This is unacceptable, a violation of the treaty rights of the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation that could have long-lasting impacts to the land and the health of the people who rely on it to live. Why did the Minister of Energy fail to inform First Nations and Métis of this threat to their health?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Safety and environmental protection are always the number one priority. Always. Protecting our waterways and our environment, our wildlife always comes first. We've been assured by both the Alberta Energy Regulator and Imperial that no drainage fluid, no water, no substance reached the tributaries. Nothing went into the waterways. It's being remediated and cleaned up. That said, communication needed to be better, and it will be.

Mr. Feehan: Given that leaving this community in the dark about a leak like the one at Kearl put people's lives and livelihoods at risk and chief and council are requesting its members to throw out the fish and wildlife that were caught since May 2022 and given that while the Minister of Indigenous Relations has found time to tweet about the budget but no time to tweet about the failure of health and safety, given that our caucus has been working with the people and leadership of the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nations to offer them our support, has anyone on that side of the House done the same? Have they finally picked up the phone almost a year late?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was very clearly an obligation and responsibility of the project, of Imperial, to have notified those First Nations. That said, we are looking at improving and enhancing some of the processes and procedures within the Alberta Energy Regulator to make compliance orders align with environmental protection orders, which require communications plans and require notification. Clearly, there needs to be a better communications plan.

Mr. Feehan: Given that this crisis requires the government to take action to address the health and environmental concerns and as well to honour the rights of the community impacted and given that the affected communities were not informed for months about this leak, meaning that it could take a long time before we know the full impacts, and given that the municipality of Wood Buffalo has stopped drawing water from Lake Athabasca, meaning there is a limited supply of drinking water, what steps is anyone on that side of the House taking to get accountability for the people affected and the communities who were failed by this government?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's an ongoing investigation by the Alberta Energy Regulator. We've been briefed, as has the opposition, that no substances released reached the drinking water, no substances reached the waterways. Our water system is intact. They were briefed on that themselves, but don't let the facts get in the way of a good story with the NDP.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Reid: As a rural Albertan and as the MLA for Livingstone-Macleod I am all too familiar with the need to improve rural health care for constituencies like my own. Rural farmers and families are the backbone of this province, and they deserve an EMS system that responds quickly to every emergency, no matter the time or place. To the Minister of Health: please tell the House what the government has been doing to improve EMS wait times and to ensure that rural Albertans get the help they need when they call 911.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As noted by the hon. member, each minute is critical in responding to a 911 call. As part of Alberta's health action plan we are constantly fine-tuning our efforts to improve times. In communities over 3,000 residents, as we noted in the 90-day report last week, we reduced the response time by more than two minutes. That's a 10 per cent improvement. In rural communities under 3,000 we've seen a response that's nearly as significant. In remote communities we've seen another 10 per cent improvement, chopping 10 minutes off the response time. We'll continue to work at it till we get it down even more.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the demand for health care services in many constituencies, including mine, has outpaced supply and given that the government of Alberta remains committed to ensuring that rural Albertans and their families stop experiencing doctor shortages and long surgical wait times, can the same minister explain to this House what programs and strategies they have in place to attract physicians and health care workers to rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. As part of our strategy to attract health care workers, we are using training, using international graduates, both nurses and doctors, and we are actually having success at this point in time. AHS has recruited 28 physicians to rural Alberta and added 278 more registered nurses, licensed practical nurses, and health care aides since November. In addition, EMS has added 39 front-line staff, including paramedics and emergency communications officers, over the last three months in rural areas, and we're going to continue to add staff.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, thank you and to the minister, through you. Given that the RESIDE program commenced in 2021 to give more family doctors the opportunity to start their careers in rural Alberta and given that in 2022 the Ministry of Advanced Education created over 2,400 new seats in nursing, health care aide, and paramedicine programs at postsecondary institutions across our province, can the Minister of Advanced Education explain what their ministry is doing to help regional postsecondary institutions in delivering medical education to improve health care services in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member said, you know, in the last budget we allocated approximately $30 million to create 2,400 new spaces – that's in nursing; that's in paramedicine and health care aides – and we're continuing that in this budget. In fact, this budget contains $95 million to support growing our health care capacity. That will allow us to create 2,500 additional spaces, again, in high-demand programs, in health care, in nursing, and in other areas. As well, as the Minister of Health mentioned, we're also working to support internationally educated nurses to support that capacity.

School Construction

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, education is a path to a better life. It's the foundation upon which our society is built, and it brings growth, opportunity, security, and prosperity to Alberta families. Every child deserves to learn at a comfortable, safe school with well-supported teachers who are teaching a future-focused curriculum. However, the current government has failed on all accounts. Why don't they care about growth, security, and prosperity for the next generation of Albertans? Why have they failed Alberta students and families so much?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again, a ludicrous statement from the member opposite. In fact, when I started as Minister of Education, we had a budget of $8.223 billion. Right now we're at $8.8 billion for the upcoming school year, and $1.8 billion over three years is what we're investing in operating capital. School board reserves have never been this high. We started at $268 million in 2019; they're now over $400 million. I could go on and on, and I can't wait to school the NDP tomorrow.

Ms Hoffman: Given that public, Catholic, and francophone student enrolment for Calgary and the surrounding area is at record rates and given that the current Premier, Education minister, and the entire UCP government have failed families needing public, Catholic, and francophone schools, it's embarrassing that the minister is pumping her own tires over there while only funding the construction for one new school for the entire city of Calgary. Why has the UCP failed the Calgary families of Redstone, Rangeview, Walden, Carrington, Saddle Ridge, Cornerstone, Shaw? The west end needs a high school.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, again the member opposite has not done her homework. During our time we have announced 106 schools: 58 in Budget 2023, 48 previously. Do you know what the NDP did during their time? Forty-seven schools. Forty-seven. In Calgary alone the NDP announced 11 schools. We've already announced 18 schools in Calgary alone. I could go on and on. I can't wait to school them in estimates tomorrow. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Hoffman: They like announcements, but they only funded one, Mr. Speaker.

Given that I could have kept going – the list of communities that the UCP is ignoring in Calgary is long, and it's growing – and given that this year alone Calgary Catholic and public schools have 8,000 new students and given that the UCP's fake pre-election budget only funds one construction of a school, that's 900 students, it's clear that Calgary families are being left behind by the UCP. So where does the minister want to bus the 7,100 students who have chosen public, Catholic, and francophone education? Let me guess: private schools?

Member LaGrange: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite doesn't even recognize or know that private schools only get 70 per cent funding and no dollars for capital, which is not what she wrote in a letter recently.

I'm going to quote Laura Hack, the CBE chair.

On behalf of CBE students and their families, we thank the Government of Alberta for the capital plan announcement. These extraordinary and timely investments in infrastructure are vital to support student learning opportunities within our system.

Calgary Catholic, the Calgary board of trustees, is grateful for the capital projects announced in the Calgary Catholic school division, which includes full funding for a K to 9 school in Nolan to serve these rapidly growing . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Energy Company Liability

Member Irwin: Lately I've door-knocked in Red Deer, Camrose, Beaumont, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, all over Edmonton and Calgary, and I can tell you that Albertans everywhere tell me they're furious about this UCP government's plans to give billions away to profitable oil and gas corporations to clean up the messes that they're already legally obligated to deal with. Governing is about priorities, and this government has their priorities all wrong. How can the Premier possibly look Albertans in the eyes at a time when so many are struggling? How can she justify giving taxpayer dollars away to her corporate cronies?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities is rising.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Companies are required to meet an annual, mandatory closure spend quota; $700 million is earmarked for this work just this year alone, and I'm pleased to report that 15,000 wells were cleaned up last year. The Minister of Energy and his department are currently exploring an additional liability management incentive program, but it's a program that's still under development, and it requires further engagement and consultation with affected groups like Indigenous, industry, financial institutions, landowners, and municipalities. We look forward to releasing additional information in the near future.

Member Irwin: Given that $20 billion is not pocket change – let's put that into perspective – $20 billion is over $13,000 that could be given to each and every Albertan; $20 billion that could fund 23 new hospitals; four-year tuition for over 900,000 students; the maintenance of Alberta parks for 232 years. Need I go on? We can see who this Premier's priority is, and it sure isn't Albertans. Will the Premier start listening to Albertans and not to the people who paid for her leadership campaign? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, no decisions have been made. There was simply consultation on an additional liability incentive program that's under way. This $20 billion number confuses me; it's not in the budget. Perhaps it's the $20 billion of investment that the NDP chased out of Alberta in a couple of years. Perhaps it's $20 billion that they took from our children and grandchildren and put in our debt for them to repay. I think the NDP are in unfamiliar territory – it's called a surplus – and they're uncomfortable. So I recommend that the members opposite support our energy industry, as we do, and we'll make sure they fulfill their legal . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Given that this $20 billion giveaway is a huge insult to the most vulnerable Albertans and that this government continues to talk a big game about standing up for domestic and sexual violence survivors, can the Premier tell me how she can give billions to her friends and insiders yet refuse to give mere millions to the organizations doing the vitally important work to support survivors? How can she possibly justify the fact that survivors face months-long, even year-long wait-lists to get any sort of supports while her pals can just say the word and get billions? Unbelievable.

Mr. Luan: This government has stood firmly. We condemn all forms of violence and hatred. There is no room for such in our province. Mr. Speaker, all Albertans, regardless of their sexual orientation, gender identity, should feel safe and welcome in this province.

Agri-processing Investment Tax Credit

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, the NDP attacked agriculture producers with their infamous Bill 6. Our government recently introduced the Alberta agri-processing investment tax credit, which provides a 12 per cent nonrefundable tax credit to entities that invest $10 million or more in Alberta's agriculture processing industry. Food manufacturing is a foundational industry in Lacombe-Ponoka and all of Alberta, and encouraging the expansion will bring further prosperity. My question for the ag minister: how significant is the food manufacturing industry within Alberta's economy?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Happy to talk about something as positive as this agri-processing tax credit. I think it's going to have a great impact for the province. We believe that it will bring in 35 per cent incremental investment. You know, this has so many great, cascading impacts from jobs to communities to doing more with the food closer to home. We're all worried about our food and where it comes from. And you're right, sir: the NDP is still spreading misinformation regarding agriculture as early as last Friday. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka is the only one with the call.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and through you to the minister. Given the already substantial economic contribution of the food manufacturing industry to Alberta and given the increasing demand for food across the world, which is only going to expand, and given Alberta's strong position to incorporate and embrace further growth in this industry, to the same minister: please tell the House how many jobs and how much economic growth this industry is projected to create for Albertans in coming years under this tax credit.

Mr. Horner: In 2021 agrifood industries employed 58,000 Albertans, with 36,000 in primary agriculture, 22,400 in food and beverage manufacturing industries. We set targets for the agrifood investment and growth strategy to create 2,000 jobs and attract $1.4 billion in new investment. We hit those targets at the midway point of the term. I can tell you that the targets, going forward, will be exponentially higher. We're talking 9,000 jobs and $5 billion in investment.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the projected growth of this industry, as just spoken about, and given its potential to create good, strong jobs for rural Albertans in particular and given the recent introduction of the agri-processing investment tax credit, can the minister tell us who should apply for it, how they should apply, and what are the parameters for them to qualify for this agrifood tax credit?

Mr. Horner: Well, first off, the bill has to be passed, so I'm hopeful that we can get that done this coming month. But companies are already reaching out to our department to ask about details, and those will be coming. A lot of excitement about what this can mean for the province. Companies are already telling us that this will be a difference maker and that it will be what lands them here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue with the remainder of the daily Routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has a statement to make.

Hearing Loss and Primary Health Care

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. World Hearing Day is held on March 3 every year to raise awareness on how to prevent hearing loss and promote ear and hearing care. Research shows that untreated hearing loss is a risk factor that contributes to isolation, loneliness, depression, and cognitive decline. The Alberta seniors population is growing at the fastest rate of any demographic. With age our hearing may decline. Ensuring that seniors have access to assessment and treatment is essential. By making ear and hearing health part of primary care, hearing loss may be detected early and treatment can be provided.

Primary care providers support the day-to-day health needs of Albertans through every stage of life and are best placed to refer patients for hearing tests. Audiologists and speech and language health professionals have specialized training to assess and treat a broad range of hearing and balance disorders and play an important role in primary care teams.

The Alberta NDP knows the importance of primary care, and that is why we created the proposal for Family Health Teams: A Plan for Modernizing Primary Care. We conducted a review of existing team-based care models in Alberta and other jurisdictions and found that they increased access, quality, and continuity of care. They decreased administrative burden and allowed doctors, nurses, and allied professionals to focus on caring for patients. At a time when our acute-care system is overwhelmed, investing in preventative services is needed. Sadly, the UCP government has instead cut funding, and 300 speech and language pathologists lost their jobs just before the pandemic began.

Since the UCP was elected, the number of speech and language pathologists and audiologists has decreased, which means more Albertans are not able to access these preventative services. This is one of the many reasons acute care is overwhelmed. The UCP has made several decisions that have created ongoing chaos in health care. Albertans can find information about hearing and hearing loss on MyHealth Alberta, and an audiologist can be found by calling Health Link at 811.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has a statement.

Recover Inc.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon is a microcosm of the entrepreneurial spirit that is Alberta today. I want to bring to the attention of this Legislature a company called Recover that speaks to our modern, environmentally responsible oil industry. Recover is working to advance the western economic corridor, and the western economic corridor was established to create jobs and attract investment through economic diversification in partnership with the county of Brazeau.

Recover is an Alberta-based clean tech company that has developed a solvent extraction technology that recycles oil-based drilling fluid used to drill modern horizontal wells in North America. When using this drilling fluid, the energy industry creates oil-based drilling waste, and despite using this fluid for over 40 years and investing hundreds of millions of dollars, industry had not yet found a viable method of recycling the waste stream until now. Recover has developed a solvent extraction technology to recover the hydrocarbons and recycle them back to the industry for continued reuse. Beyond the creation of a new recycled product, they have avoided biodegradation emissions, and they have reduced environmental liability of the waste going into class 2 landfills. Recover is also providing immediate cost savings for the operators that are using their technology.

The concept of Recover began in 2008. By 2018 the Lodgepole facility was completed and was turned over to a full-time operation in November of 2021. Since that time Recover has accepted more than 40,000 tonnes of oil-based drilling waste, recycled more than 40,000 barrels of hydrocarbons, and avoided up to 68,000 tonnes of GHG emissions. Recover is the perfect example of how Alberta's oil industry develops and uses cutting-edge technology to generate wealth while addressing the need to be environmentally responsible.

Provincial Fiscal Policies and Corporations

Mr. Barnes: I rise today to share some thoughts from the conservative heartland, concerns that are not being reflected by this government's budget. You see, Alberta's government has a dirty little secret. Despite all the talking points and press releases this government has been steadily veering into the realm of Ontario-style corporate welfare. We have been pumping billions of taxpayer dollars into risky investments, subsidies, and other forms of corporate welfare. In fact, I've been told by government partisans, folks with little real-world business experience, that this is the way the world works and that Alberta needs to get in the game.

This is exactly what various Ontario governments have been preaching for more than a decade now. How has this worked out? The price of electricity in Ontario has doubled. Most manufacturers not dependent on the government have fled, and this year Ontario will receive $421 million in equalization. Ontario's failures are taking down the national economy as well. The OECD predicts the wage growth in Canada will be dead last amongst its 40 member states for the next four decades. Simply put, Ontario is not how the world works best.

There is a much better alternative. In fact, it was tried and proven here in Alberta under Premier Ralph Klein and led to the creation of the Alberta advantage: the lowest unemployment in the country, the fastest growth, and complete elimination of provincial debt. The government got out of the business of being in business. They reduced subsidies and corporate welfare and focused on broad-based tax relief for both families and businesses. That is the proven path to success, and, Mr. Speaker, it made Alberta exceptional.

Friends, we can do it again. We can drastically raise the basic personal exemption on income taxes and give working folks a fighting chance. We can eliminate the small-business taxes and level the playing field so Main Street can compete with Bay Street. We can create an economy where families can get ahead, where success is based on what you know, not who you know. We have done it before, and we're good at it. We can make Alberta the most free and prosperous place in North America.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Bill 8, the Alberta Firearms Act, sponsored by the Minister of Justice.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings? Seeing none – oh, the Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of screenshots of e-mails sent from a hospital concerned about the change in EMS policy and the potential impact to patient care.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an e-mail written by a unit manager at the Foothills medical centre emergency department stating that starting March 15, critically ill patients will now be off-loaded by paramedics in 45 minutes or less, regardless of whether there are available health care workers on-site at the hospital to take over their care. They state this comes as a big shock. They're not sure how their unit will be able to manage this, but it has been mandated by government.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Mr. Copping, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Health Professions Act Alberta College of Paramedics 2021-22 annual report, College and Association of Respiratory Therapists of Alberta annual report 2021-2022, College of Dental Technologists of Alberta 2021 annual report.

The Speaker: Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 203

Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022

[Debate adjourned December 12: Mr. Feehan speaking]

The Speaker: Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to rise this afternoon, getting a chance to speak to more private members' business, something we don't get a whole lot of time to do in this Legislature. While we said it'd be nice if we, you know, maybe had a few more hours with which to debate private members' bills, especially if we actually got an opportunity to debate some of the opposition private members' bills – unfortunately, we haven't seen a whole lot of that, but thankfully there's more than just opposition MLAs in the House. We've got some government-side MLAs bringing forward private members' bills, so at least we'll get a chance to talk about those.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Of course, specifically, this afternoon we do get the opportunity in which to discuss Bill 203, Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022. You know, maybe I'll go out on a limb here a little bit, Madam Speaker, that I don't think there's any member of this House that has served, currently serves, or will serve in the future that doesn't think that road safety is an issue. I think there are always ways to make our roads safer, always ways to ensure that speed is left in check, and that when drivers are, shall we say, going a little bit off the rails, there are mechanisms in place with which we can deal with those situations.

Now, obviously, it's been a little bit of time since we first started to be able to debate Bill 203, so it's probably, you know, a little bit prudent to talk about some of the things that are going on here, some of which were talking about how fines are going to be dealt with with regard to excessive speed. Some of the suggestions that this makes – as we know, private members can't make any specific kind of money requests and whatnot, which, of course, this doesn't necessarily do, but at the very least it gives us the opportunity to talk about these sorts of things.

One of the things I'm always interested in hearing about – and I do realize that private members don't have the same resources that are available to them that, for instance, the government has available to them around consultation. But has the member been able to suss out, with his communications with different organizations and whatnot, around some of the changes being proposed in Bill 203 even as far as: can they even be implemented effectively? I've always said that, you know, we can come up with all the ideas, but if the individuals can't actually implement those, then they're really quite useless.

One of the things that, I guess, stood out a little bit about the bill is around stunting. It seems to be a little bit broad around what stunting is, and I believe it's British Columbia that has done a little bit more work around that. You know, perhaps once we get into committee, we'll get the opportunity to hear some further answers to questions that we'll be posing along the way here, but I'm wondering if there was any inspiration that was gained from there, because kind of comparing the two, it seems a little lacking here. I think there was an opportunity, maybe, for some duplication of the language that was a little bit more robust around stunting.

Going back to around some of the consultation end of things, I know that dealing with traffic safety can be complicated – there are a lot of variables involved – but what kind of feedback did the Member for Calgary-Falconridge get around what they heard from municipalities? You know, did they get any feedback from Calgary or Edmonton or Red Deer, Grande Prairie, things like that? I have a feeling that, you know, if the member had placed some calls, I'm sure there would have been a very big willingness to share some of that information that could be used in drafting some of the legislation. I'm wondering what's, kind of, been heard around that. Was there any contact made with the Rural Municipalities association, Alberta Municipalities association? What was the feedback there?

I think another critical stakeholder that we could have reached out to, of course: maybe some of the chiefs of police. I know there are certainly some inside routes that maybe the member could have gained access to, you know, be able to get in touch with chiefs of police, but that's another discussion entirely and not related to Bill 203 here.

Another question I'm kind of curious about, flipping through some of the language here. We've seen a threshold that was set at 80 kilometres or less instead of less than 80 kilometres. I guess, how did we land at that point? Was it just arbitrary, or was there some kind of feedback that we were hearing that, you know, the problem starts at 80 kilometres an hour, and that was what informed some of the language that's in there?

I know that currently there are provisions right now that the police do have access to around dealing with things like careless driving, street racing, again, one of the things that I had alluded to earlier in my remarks. You know, what kinds of things was the member hearing around why we need to take a more aggressive approach or a different approach other than what we have right now and making speed limit changes on highways and freeways? I certainly hear from my neighbourhood here in Edmonton plenty of street racing, I can hear going on off in the distance right in the municipalities themselves, which, again, ties back to maybe: what did you hear from some of the major municipalities, and how could that inform provincial legislation? Essentially, you know, what was the inspiration to bring this bill before us to look at this? Was there some kind of public feedback that the member was hearing about? Or it could have been from colleagues as well which prompted this type of legislation coming forward.

You know, all the other provisions in this section of the act, 88 and on, are not subject to the review provision in section 35 for the seizure or immobilization of a motor vehicle. I'm curious why the member chose to allow this new seizure provision to be subject to review. Again, I realize that we'll get a better opportunity to discuss this in Committee of the Whole, when we're able to go back and forth. I'm just trying to pose some of these questions now for the member to get the opportunity to be a little bit prepared to try to get some of these answers when we move along there.

What other inspiration were you able to garner from other jurisdictions, not only around this seizure but other aspects? Again, I made reference earlier around the definition of stunting. What B.C. offers: you know, pretty reasonable language there. Could we have implemented some of that in this bill, and maybe why did the member choose not to do such a thing?

I should refer back, because I know that in the Second Session of this Legislature there was another private member's bill that would have increased the maximum speed on highways to 120 kilometres an hour on nonurban highways. Of course, if this was adopted, transition fines, seizures would be possibly more likely, so what kind of connection is there?

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Great. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022. I'd also like to thank the Member for Calgary-Falconridge for bringing this important safety-focused bill forward. Also, thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Decore for his comments and what sounds like some fairly positive views of this bill.

I believe this private member's bill is a very thoughtful and well-reasoned and well-considered initiative, and I strongly support any move that makes our roads and our province safer for all. I'm hopeful that this bill will be unanimously supported in this Legislature. The safety of Albertans should be top of mind for all of us, Madam Speaker.

Bill 203, as was referenced, proposes that all drivers caught speeding with more than 40 kilometres per hour over the limit in a speed zone of 80 kilometres per hour or less face the same penalties as those given for stunting. Quite frankly, as we see people speeding around, the intent that they have actually is stunting. It just happens to be with their foot a little harder on the pedal. This bill also proposes a change to increase the penalties for stunting to an automatic seven-day licence suspension, a fine of up to $5,000, and a possible seven-day impound of vehicles. I think these are pretty strong measures and will act in the way that they are meant.

If passed, this bill would help to impose some of the strongest penalties and indeed deterrents, which I think is the approach we are taking here across North America – we've heard reference to some of the other initiatives in British Columbia and Ontario – but the real objective here is to aim to curb street racing, stunting, excessive speeding, and other dangerous driving habits, particularly within residential areas across the province, in urban, suburban, light commercial, and retail settings, where speed limits are typically below the 80 kilometres referenced, and to do so in a deterrent through fines, penalties, and the other measures that were referenced as well, seizures and other opportunities.

Madam Speaker, this bill would act as a material deterrent for reckless drivers, who by their actions endanger the lives of Albertans, by punishing those who continue to flaunt existing laws despite the obvious risks, dangers, and consequences. These people are flaunting existing laws, and we obviously hope that they will pay attention to the higher deterrent level that's brought in here. I wish we had made this change long ago; we could have had this conversation. Again, I thank the Member for Calgary-Falconridge for championing this, and I know it's an issue in his community, as he has referenced in some of his previous comments on this particular bill.

I'm proud to say that our province now has some of the lowest road fatality rates in Canada, but it's not good enough, Madam Speaker. Even though we have a high degree of responsible drivers across this province – and I know many of us spend hours and hours, sometimes too many, on the highways – this lower fatality rate is something we can improve upon and must work to reduce. Remember that every fatality in this province is someone's child or grandchild, sibling, parent or grandparent, and we must do all that we can do to ensure that we create deterrents for this reckless and deadly driving behaviour. Those types of behaviours on our highways and roads are not okay, and such reckless actions must be stopped, and strong deterrents as proposed by the Member for Calgary-Falconridge are indeed key to us moving forward with this.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to share some relevant statistics that highlight the impact on the lives of Albertans of the current irresponsible operations of what I think are vehicular weapons used in an egregious manner. Between 2015 and 2019 76 per cent of injury collisions and 85 per cent of property collisions occurred in urban areas, in areas typically where those speed limits are 80 kilometres or lower.

According to the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police 40 per cent of speeding drivers were between the ages of 16 and 24. Yes, they are new drivers, which means that they may not have the skills, but also there seems to be a little bit of testing of the limits in those age groups. Also, that age group is most likely to be a casualty in a collision, and 80 per cent of young adult passengers who were killed in a car crash were being driven by a similar-aged individual. That is what we hear all too often, that passengers in vehicles being driven irresponsibly become unwitting and innocent victims of this.

In 2019 22.3 per cent of fatal collisions involved drivers travelling at unsafe speeds, again referencing this deterrent, and out of 132,000 collisions, 120,000, or approximately 90 per cent, involved property damage; 11,700 nonfatal injuries; and fully 215 – yes, 215 in 2019 alone – led to fatalities. Again, that's somebody's child, grandchild, sibling, parent, grandparent.

Madam Speaker, this is why it's imperative, indeed our responsibility, I believe, in this House to pass this bill. Our youth and young adults are the most impacted by dangerous behaviour such as racing, stunting, speeding, and other bad driving habits, both inside and outside of the vehicles involved, some inside and unwittingly becoming a part of that and some being struck, obviously, on our roads and highways. We need to do everything in our power to protect our younger generations, and we will achieve this by holding the irresponsible drivers amongst them accountable for their actions and putting clear penalties in place as a deterrent to this behaviour.

With this bill we have an opportunity to make our roads safer – again, I'll reiterate that: safer – for all Albertans: children, youth, young adults, families, the drivers, passengers, pedestrians, and workers that we all have the honour of serving in this Legislature and who all, Madam Speaker, have the right to return home to their loved ones safely each and every day.

These increased penalties were suggested by the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police, right from the highest level, with the intent to save lives, so this bill should not be taken lightly when the intent of it is recommended by those that, sadly, bear witness to carnage on our streets.

In fact, I think this bill is long overdue. Other provinces have strengthened, as referenced by the Member for Edmonton-Decore, the regulations surrounding unsafe driving habits, one example being the Moving Ontarians More Safely Act, which was passed in 2021.

Further, this bill would demonstrate that this Legislature and the government of Alberta are prepared to take joint and strong action to protect young drivers, families, and vulnerable road users by introducing new, impactful, life-saving, and property-protecting legislation. It's not just lives and it's not just injuries but a lot of property damage, whether that's the vehicles themselves or that in many cases we've seen vehicles go off the roads, strike houses, and there's been not only damage, but in some cases there's been injury associated with that.

Madam Speaker, the safety of all Albertans is a priority for us in this Legislature. We should take that seriously, and we're committed to making our province safer and life better for all Albertans, and this is an opportunity for us to exercise this by voting for this bill.

Through this bill I'm confident that we can reduce the rate of accidents. I think that's one of our objectives here. Again, in addition, this bill will increase awareness of responsible driving habits, setting new standards of driving behaviour and acting, as we referenced, as a deterrent. The clear intent and value of this bill is to effectively strengthen the consequences for irresponsible, law-breaking drivers in Alberta. It is a minority, Madam Speaker – a minority – but that irresponsible behaviour must be dealt with, and we need to remind them of their accountability for their actions.

The results of adherence to this new law may have the added impact of reminding them of the importance of not only their own safety but also that of the many innocent people impacted by their reckless and lawless actions and that we support in this Legislature being tough on such deadly crimes.

Madam Speaker, I fully support the letter and intent of this bill, and I urge all members of this Chamber to join in common cause in the timely passage of Bill 203, the excessive speeding penalties act. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on Bill 203 in second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to join in debate on this Bill 203. I thank the previous speaker for some of those comments – they echo what I would like to share briefly with you all – as well as my colleague from Edmonton-Decore, who addressed this bill just prior to the previous speaker.

I wish that I was in the House for the introduction of this bill by the mover, Calgary-Falconridge, but I wasn't, and I, unfortunately, didn't take the opportunity to see the . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'll take this opportunity to remind you that we don't talk about presence or absence, even if it's yourself, in this Chamber.

Member Ceci: All right.

I wished I would have had the opportunity to review Hansard, Madam Speaker, to find out what at the time the Member for Calgary-Falconridge, when they introduced the bill, was saying. I bet there would have been some personal reflections about why this is important, because I know that, regrettably, in our home city of Calgary there have been, with far too many young people, injuries on the streets of Calgary and, regrettably, also with emergency service personnel, particularly police, who have been involved with stops of individuals on streets who have taken off and caused a loss of life.

Like the previous speaker, I do think that our roadways, where they are 80 kilometres an hour and under, or what he described as in urban areas, are the scenes of many of these stunting infractions, infractions that, regrettably, as I said, take the life of people who may not be thinking clearly about what they should be doing in the vehicle. You know, driving is a privilege in this country – it's not a right that you can drive – but if you abuse that privilege and drive at excessive speeds, speeds that call into question your judgment and speeds that, unfortunately, can have negative impacts on people in the car and on themselves as the driver as well as people outside of the vehicle, then that privilege should be suspended, and we should find ways to ensure that the legislation appropriately deals with this situation.

The way Bill 203 is talking about dealing with that, as has been mentioned earlier, is around taking the licence away, increasing the fine for that individual who was operating the vehicle. Those are two methods of increasing the current penalties that are put in place. We need to do those things because not everybody takes their responsibility in a vehicle the way they should. You know, the thing that I'm aware of that my constituents are concerned about, of course, is when speeds change on roadways and they aren't paying enough attention to the whole situation. I can remember that there are areas, in not exactly my riding but adjacent to it, where people have complained a great deal about the change from 70 kilometres to 50 kilometres, that it seems quite sudden to them. Many people, unfortunately, get tickets because they're – they used to get tickets. Once they have gotten them, they don't anymore because they're paying greater attention. But they worry and they've expressed a concern to me about situations like that, where they feel they're being unfairly targeted.

I hear people in those situations, but I don't typically show them a great deal of empathy because they have to be aware of their surroundings, what they're doing at all times when they're in, as a colleague across the way called it, a weapon that potentially could be harmful to many people if the cars and vehicles aren't operated appropriately.

The issue that my colleague and I would like to bring up and repeat and may have been brought up before is around the issue of stunting and the robustness in this bill of that definition. My concern, our concern, is that if it's not a robust, complete, comprehensive definition in the legislation as proposed, then there can be some muddiness in terms of its application. We believe there can be a better definition of stunting, a more robust definition so that problematic behaviour can be properly understood by law enforcement officers and legislated or in the courts the decision will be clear that a stunt occurred in that place.

I'm glad to hear that the Association of Chiefs of Police was part of the feedback with regard to the recommendation of changing this bill and improving it because, unfortunately, very often officers in their forces are putting their lives on the line in many cases. We know of situations where officers have been, regrettably, injured or struck down by vehicles that were stunting or trying to evade capture. The bill before us – I'll just open it up again – does have a definition of "Immediate roadside sanction: stunting." It goes on to explain how that sanction can be meted out when a stunt occurs.

When I look at the Motor Vehicle Act in the province of B.C. that is in place now, the definition of stunt is explained there. There is (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), so that's six different criteria under which a stunt can be seen to occur, and any of those six criteria, if they are, I guess, broken – not broken. If they occur, they can be the subject of action by police personnel with regard to the driver of that vehicle. I think that's something that I and my colleagues would like to see considered in this bill and will be the source of an amendment coming forward in the future when we get to that point.

The additional consultation – and I think certainly the chiefs of police are known experts in this regard, but it would have been useful to know if additional consultation took place and what the outcome of that was. As I said, I didn't have the benefit of reading Hansard on the original proposal of this bill, and it very well may have been in that. I can do that subsequent to this debate.

I think the only other thing that I wanted to address: I just agree with the focus of this bill being around the safety of people, not only the person who is driving but all of those who potentially could be impacted. We certainly need to have the privilege of being on the roadways a safe one for all drivers, and if some are not following that, their actions need to be corrected with things like this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on Bill 203 in second reading? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on Bill 203, brought forward by our colleague from Calgary-Falconridge. Thank you to that member for this.

Madam Speaker, it's an unfortunate fact that every day across Canada, including Alberta, of course, people tragically lose their lives as a result of unsafe driving. Sometimes, of course, those who perish do so as a result of their own unsafe driving, and at other times they are the victims of other people's poor decisions. I'm sure it could be a different reason for every particular case, but I'm sure that sometimes people are just not thinking; sometimes they're being reckless; sometimes, I'm sure, they might have gotten a new vehicle and want to see what it will do. Of course, as we all know, that's not what these public streets and roads are for.

This heartbreaking reality is something that we as elected officials should think about. Vehicle stunting is defined, as I understand it, as a criminal act that does not only endanger drivers but other Albertans who may be on the roadways or near the roadways. They could be walking; they could be cycling; they could be doing any number of things. But the fact is that lives are put in danger due to this behaviour.

We need to protect the people of the province from what are needless, preventable traffic collisions. I won't call them accidents because I believe that any time someone is stunting, it's not an accident; it's a bad decision. In this place, this Legislative Assembly, we have an opportunity to act, and that is why my esteemed colleague from Calgary-Falconridge brought forward Bill 203, which proposes, obviously, to strengthen the penalties for stunting in Alberta. That would be that reckless drivers are more thoroughly deterred than they are now from endangering themselves and others and they are deterred with more severe punishments than are currently in place.

Alberta, as I understand it, is in this regard lagging behind other provinces when it comes to pursuing more severe penalties for vehicle stunting. Other provinces have previously strengthened their laws and penalties around these crimes. This is an opportunity for us to follow up and make stunting a crime that has stronger deterrents in the future than it has up till now. If passed, Bill 203 would increase the maximum fine for stunting to $5,000 and introduce a seven-day licence suspension for anybody caught stunting. Now, I can tell you that there would be the option of a seven-day discretionary impound to be decided by law enforcement on a case-by-case basis.

Now, Madam Speaker, this is a deterrent that is strong. I know from my time – I've done a couple of tours now as transportation minister during my time here – that a seven-day suspension of a licence and the potential taking away of one's car is a strong deterrent. In fact, even when changes were made a couple of years ago to have more of the impaired driving offences go through administrative penalties rather than criminal penalties, Mothers Against Drunk Driving and other organizations were very much in favour of that. You might say: well, why would an organization like Mothers Against Drunk Driving want to go a penalty route that's not criminal? Well, the fact is this. It's not about making criminals out of people; it's about people being incented not to do the dangerous thing in the first place.

There's something about human beings. Many times, Madam Speaker, people like instant gratification and they dislike the opposite of gratification, instant penalties. There's something, I suppose – I don't know; I'm guessing to some degree, but I don't think I'm probably completely wrong – that makes people think that if they do something terrible but they get back home with their own vehicle that night, they can have time to think about it and maybe do better or get away with it or something. There's something about that immediacy of arriving home and having to explain to those that you live with and love that you no longer are in possession of a driver's licence that is a strong deterrent.

You might in this case maybe not be in possession of your vehicle either. That's assuming that you were stunting and didn't crash it. Now, if you crashed it, of course, you may not have your vehicle anyways, but even if your vehicle is in great condition and law enforcement caught up with you, the fact that you don't get to present yourself at home with a driver's licence and a vehicle is a strong deterrent. I expect that's why the author of the bill has included that in there, because they're trying to take this particular offence very seriously.

These things really happened. There have been high-profile incidents in both Calgary and Edmonton. Both cities, by the nature of them being large cities, are oftentimes, particularly in the summer, plagued with stunting and street racing, and that creates avoidable collisions. At the beginning of September an Albertan was killed in a single-vehicle crash that authorities believe to have been the result of a street race. More recently, in October, two vehicles crashed on the High Level Bridge in Edmonton here, two vehicles which were believed to be involved in a street race.

The saddest thing, again, about the crashes like these is that they are one hundred per cent avoidable. They cannot reasonably be described as accidents. They are the result of bad decisions, irresponsible decisions by people with driver's licences that ought to know better, probably do know better, have just made a bad choice, and those choices can have such serious consequences, which is why we're here today talking about this now as making greater penalties for those serious consequences.

One of our priorities here as elected officials is ensuring the safety of Albertans, and this bill could improve that safety across our province. I'm proud to say that despite incidents like we're talking about here, as mentioned by my colleague on this side of the House, Alberta has the lowest road fatality rate of any province in Canada. Most Albertans are committed to road safety, and they know that acting responsibly is good for not only them but those they love and those they have never even met before. Everybody is safer when people make good decisions.

It's important that people that make those bad decisions are held accountable. These licence suspensions, the discretionary impounding of vehicles: it is hoped, and I believe it will be somewhat the case, that that will be a strong deterrent. It's not only a strong deterrent from the fact you won't have a driver's licence, but of course there's a social stigma about not having your driver's licence and being found guilty of really a dangerous and reckless act, really demonstrating a lack of care for other people's lives and livelihoods. The deterrence is important, Madam Speaker. Increased fines will help with the deterrence.

As said before here – I think the member across asked a question. It was a good question. He said: were the chiefs of police consulted? My notes here say that they were, that this was actually requested by the Association of Chiefs of Police. That is what I've come to believe and understand. So there's an answer to what I thought was a pretty reasonable and good question.

3:30

And, of course, who better to consult, as the hon. member across said, than those that dedicate their lives to keeping the rest of us safe, those that put themselves in harm's way, and those that, unfortunately, have to see first-hand the terrible, terrible results of bad behaviour, that have to show up at the crashes, that have to see people in pain or dying and sometimes have to go to a home of a victim and explain and announce to that victim's loved ones that the person doesn't live anymore? Not just not live there anymore but doesn't live at all anymore. I just can't think of a worse way to make a living than having to do that sometimes, and of course . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and join in debate for the first time in this session of the Legislature to debate Bill 203, the Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022.

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

Certainly, questions around speeding and bad behaviour with vehicles are something that fairly regularly cross my desk as the MLA for Edmonton-City Centre. Here in downtown there are some tempting locales, shall we say, for folks to engage in some of the kinds of behaviours that are being talked about in this bill. Of course, we have the River Valley Road, which runs just below us here at the Legislature, a nice, long, gently curving stretch of road along the river valley. It leads up to Groat Road, another nice, curving, canyonesque road, which is just outside my constituency but certainly not far from the windows of some of my constituents. And, of course, on the other side here we have 104th Avenue, which again is a multilane, nice, long stretch of road where, unfortunately, on weekends and late at night there are some drivers who like to use that as a bit of a speedway.

So it's not unusual for me to receive correspondence from my constituents raising concerns about noise late at night from street racing and other activities like that here in Edmonton-City Centre, and of course it was referenced by one of the other members earlier: the crash on the High Level Bridge. Certainly, it's not that unusual to hear of or see the pictures in the newspaper or hear on the radio of somebody who has had a crash either with another vehicle or run into a telephone pole or jumped the barrier on one of those roads. Certainly, I recognize the damage that a vehicle can do, and, you know, as has been noted by some of the other members, this isn't just about protecting other vehicles on the road; this is also protecting cyclists, pedestrians.

Mr. Speaker, I spent many years as an avid commuter cyclist. I admittedly don't cycle commute nearly as much now as I used to. I used to ride right through the winter. I did that for many years, indeed during my first term as an MLA. It's one of the things you can do, I guess, when you live in a downtown constituency and with the excellent bike network that has been built here by the city of Edmonton in the downtown and the other trails that are available. But, certainly, I spent a lot of time riding in other parts of the city, too, before that network was built, and, I can tell you, if you want to come to understand what the power and the weight of a vehicle actually is, you know, and what speed is actually like, being on a bicycle in the middle of a roadway as vehicles are zipping past you educates you on that fairly quickly. So, certainly, I came to have a healthy respect for the impact that a vehicle can have and the damage it can do, and, you know, whether on the seat of my bike or behind the wheel of my car, I have seen poor behaviour by drivers.

Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, I'm not completely innocent myself. I've had my share of tickets as I've made my way from Calgary to Edmonton and back. At times here in the city I've gotten my own share of photoradar. But, certainly, what we are talking about in this bill are not the kinds of general tickets or occasional bad behaviour that I think we all as drivers have at times endured though I will admit that my father, during his time, was an adamant respecter of speed limits. My father in his entire life never once got a speeding ticket. He was absolutely scrupulous about obeying the speed limit. Not all of us have that level of patience and integrity.

But all that to say that, certainly, what has been brought forward here by the Member for Calgary-Falconridge does resonate with me. For the reasons I've noted, I think it's reasonable to have appropriate penalties to encourage people to engage in better behaviour on our roads and have penalties that indeed reflect the potential damage that can be inflicted by choosing to engage in some of these behaviours, behaviours, again, Mr. Speaker, that we are talking about here that are beyond the pale, and indeed I think that's what we should be focusing to ensure that this bill does, that it focuses on those extreme behaviours.

Now, one of the concerns that has been raised is that we do not have a clear definition here of stunting, so I think it is important that we consider that, and I understand that one of my colleagues may be considering bringing forward an amendment to that effect just to provide clarity. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we recognize the great importance of law enforcement and the need to give them some discretion in how they do their work and to trust judgment, but at the same time we want to ensure that when we are imposing significant new penalties, we are very clear about the behaviours that may be encompassed within that.

As has been noted, there is B.C. legislation which is similar and which does talk about stunting. It talks about the occasions where, you know,

- (a) causing any or all of the motor vehicle's tires to lift from the road surface;
- (b) causing the motor vehicle to lose traction while turning the motor vehicle;

so intentional skids,

(c) driving . . . in a manner to cause the motor vehicle to spin; so your doughnuts, which I understand people were fond of doing in parking lots and that sort of thing as teenagers. I never did have that occasion. I was perhaps not quite that daring.

- (d) driving the motor vehicle in a lane intended for oncoming traffic for longer than necessary to pass another vehicle;

Certainly, I've seen that kind of behaviour. Indeed, we do have difficulties at times with people deciding that they don't want to drive around for a block, so they take a shortcut through the local bike lane.

- (e) slowing or stopping the . . . vehicle in a manner that prevents other . . . vehicles from passing or in a manner that blocks or impedes other motor vehicles;
- (f) without justification, driving as close as possible to another motor vehicle, a pedestrian, or a fixed object.

Certainly, again, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry to say, at times as a cyclist I did experience that behaviour, where drivers, frustrated that they were temporarily behind a vehicle that did not move as quickly as them, would literally drive right up behind my back tire.

Indeed, I know cyclists who have had vehicles tap them from behind, whether at a stop sign or in motion.

I think those are all very appropriate things that would be included, perhaps pieces that could be considered, then, in coming up with our own definition for an Alberta piece of legislation as to what is considered to be stunting.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, as I've said, I'm certainly in support of addressing issues with excessive speed. I know for myself, you know, I've made that trip up and down the highway between Edmonton and Calgary increasingly often as there seems to be something coming up on the horizon which seems to require more presence in the city of Calgary. Certainly, I continue to see quite regularly on those trips that there are at least one or two vehicles that feel the need to be driving 20 or 30 or 40 kilometres an hour faster than the remainder of the traffic, and we know the serious damage that can do. We've had members of this Legislature who have lost their lives on that highway.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So, certainly, I'm in support of having an additional and appropriate penalty in place for drivers, whether or not they are engaging in stunting activities, if they are in fact driving over the maximum speed limit, and in this case it is about driving 40 kilometres or more over a posted speed limit that is 80 kilometres an hour or less.

Now, I certainly do appreciate the concerns that have been raised by some other members about the potential impacts that this could have in certain areas where you do have that rapid adjustment of a speed limit, so we need to be very careful, I think, with this legislation to ensure that we are not creating a situation that would create more opportunities for what is sometimes colloquially known as fishing in an area where, say, the speed limit on a roadway, highway drops quite suddenly from a higher limit to a lower limit and then a speed trap is set just right at that line, so somebody who doesn't quite slow down in time ends up paying a fine.

Certainly, that's not the kind of behaviour that we want to incent, and we know that kind of behaviour does little to actually address the real issues around speeding. Indeed, during our time in government we worked to try to put some limits on how photoradar in particular was being used in that respect, so I think it would be worth some conversation – and perhaps we'll have that opportunity during Committee of the Whole – to look at how we can ensure that this piece of legislation would not add additional opportunities for that sort of revenue raising, shall we say.

There could be the opportunity here, I guess, for some more consultation and consideration to ensure we are covering all of the sorts of activities that might fall under stunting or that are concerns. You know, certainly . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Every day across the country people tragically lose their lives as a consequence of unsafe driving. Sometimes those who perish as a result of their own unsafe driving are some drivers testing the limits of their vehicles in attempts to impress their friends. This heartbreaking reality is something that we as elected officials should do more to prevent. Vehicle stunting is a criminal act that does not only endanger the drivers themselves but all other Albertans who use the roadways where these crimes are being committed.

In order to protect the people of this province from needless, preventable traffic accidents, we must act. Therefore, I am pleased to support the private member's Bill 203 introduced by the MLA for Calgary-Falconridge. This proposed bill would strengthen the penalties in place for stunting in Alberta so that would-be reckless drivers are more firmly deterred from endangering themselves and others while those who still violate the law are punished more severely. Alberta, quite frankly, is lagging behind other provinces when it comes to pursuing more severe penalties for vehicle stunting. Other provinces have rightfully strengthened their laws surrounding these crimes.

It is time for us to follow suit to help to prevent any more needless injuries or deaths. If passed, Bill 203 would increase the maximum fine for stunting to $5,000 and introduce an automatic seven-day licence suspension for anybody caught stunting. Additionally, there would be the option of a seven-day impound to be decided by law enforcement on a case-by-case basis.

The time to implement these more severe penalties is now. In the past few months alone there have been high-profile accidents in both Calgary and Edmonton, the two cities plagued the most by stunting and city racing, that involved avoidable collisions. At the beginning of September an Albertan was killed in a single-vehicle crash that authorities believe to have been the result of a street race. Even more recently in October two vehicles crashed on the High Level Bridge here in Edmonton, both of which were involved in a street race. The saddest thing about crashes like these is that they are entirely avoidable. They're caused by drivers there, and our top priority as an elected official is ensuring the safety of Albertans. It is my conviction that passing this bill would greatly improve road safety in our province. I'm proud to say that despite incidents like I have previously mentioned, Alberta has the lowest road fatality rate of any province in Canada.

Most Albertans are committed to road safety as they know that acting responsibly on the road keeps us all safe. A notable exception to this rule involves those who stunt, race, and otherwise drive dangerously. It is so important that these people receive the punishments they deserve when they commit these crimes. Through mandatory licence suspensions and vehicle impounding drivers who commit these needless, dangerous acts will be prevented from doing so again in the immediate future. Their friends will hear about their fines and suspensions and will think twice before ever going 40 kilometres over the limit in the city.

Deterrence is extremely important, Madam Speaker. It is much better if we prevent drivers from doing this in the first place than it is to give them serious penalties. On top of this, the increased fines will further contribute to deterrence so that these drivers will not act as dangerously again after their licences and vehicles are returned to them.

As stated earlier, this bill would bring Alberta's penalties for stunting more into alignment with other provinces. Ontario's stunting penalties are similar to the changes proposed by the bill. Additionally, these increased penalties have been requested by the police chiefs' association. Those who have committed their lives to protecting Albertans in all areas of life, not just on the road, believe that increasing the severity of these penalties will improve road safety. When organizations like the police chiefs' association make requests like this, I as an elected official do not take it lightly.

When these drivers engage in stunting, they endanger themselves and others in their silly attempts to impress their friends or show off. Albertans can be severely injured or even killed. These drivers need to learn to respect the power they have when they get behind the wheel. Without more severe penalties for acts as dangerous as stunting and street racing, these drivers may continue to take these unnecessary risks. If a driver is caught stunting and receives the penalties outlined in this bill, they will be far less likely to commit these same acts again.

Preventing the perpetration of criminal behaviour works to increase community safety and to prevent death or injury that may have occurred if the penalties were less severe. Taking every reasonable step we can to keep Albertans safe is our top priority, and these penalties will increase public safety. If these penalties were not seen as effective, then their implementation would not have been called for by the police chiefs' association. By ensuring that the penalties surrounding stunting are proportional to the crime, all Albertans will be made safer. This includes young drivers who may be tempted towards recklessness, other drivers who expect their fellow road users to behave safely, and the pedestrians who walk along our roadways.

The problem of stunting and street racing is particularly bad in and around my constituency. Calgary experiences a notably higher rate of these crimes, and my constituents deserve to be safer when using their communities' roadways. While a higher number of these crimes may be seen in my constituency, stunting is still a problem that can affect any community or roadway within this province.

Madam Speaker, I am asking my fellow members to consider my words thoughtfully. Our first duty to our constituents is to ensure their safety, and by passing this bill, we can make Alberta's roadways that much safer. I believe that the implementation of increased penalties for stunting is extremely prudent, and I would be surprised if any members in the House disagreed with the idea that stunting and street racing are dangerous crimes that may be addressed.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Members, we have three minutes before I will ask for the mover to close debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. With only three minutes, I will enter into debate very briefly on Bill 203, the Traffic Safety (Excessive Speeding Penalties) Amendment Act, 2022, and I'll be pleased to speak for a brief amount of time on this only because I know how much this has impacted Alberta families when lives have been lost due to excessive speeding, due to stunting behaviour. So often this impacts the young people involved, the age group typically impacted being 18 to 24, or innocent bystanders who are injured as a result of the excessive speeding, as a result of the behaviour that is unsafe.

We see headlines every now and then because it makes the news when someone is going 123 kilometres per hour in a 50 zone or someone is going excessively fast, whether it's on a highway or within our city streets. As some of my colleagues have talked about in this House, we all know where those streets are that tend to draw stunters, that tend to draw people speeding excessively. Just at the end of last year there were crashes on the High Level Bridge that were blamed on excessive speed.

So we know this is happening, and in this case Bill 203 seeks to limit this behaviour by putting in stronger penalties as a deterrent against these activities happening but also as a lesson that will hopefully spread through friends of those people who are fined when that does come to pass.

I am pleased to say that I will support Bill 203. However, we hope that at committee an amendment can be considered because the current Traffic Safety Act really only refers to the word "stunt" in two places, in section 115(2)(e) and (f). What we find is that when we look at comparable legislation in British Columbia, there's a great deal more detail, and I think there's something to be said about being very explicit and capturing everything . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the time has come for the hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge for up to five minutes to close debate on second reading.

Mr. Toor: I'd like to stand to close the debate.

Bill 204

Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased today to be able to rise and to speak to Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. In 2017 I had the pleasure of introducing in this Chamber Bill 210, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act. This private member's bill was patterned on the Amber Alert system and would enable a notice to be issued when a senior citizen or other adult with cognitive impairment, a mental disorder, et cetera, had gone missing. The Assembly passed the bill, and it received royal assent; however, it was never proclaimed.

Before I move on to explain why it was not proclaimed, it's perhaps important for us to look at and just review for a second what an Amber Alert is and what this was based on. When I originally introduced private member's Bill 210, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, it was an attempt to bring forward the benefits of an Amber Alert to seniors who had gone missing.

An Amber Alert is a message activated by police to alert the public when a child or an adult with a proven mental or physical disability is abducted and at risk of harm. Now, these alerts are broadcast on radio and TV stations and social media platforms, cellphones and other devices. This tool is used by police to solicit help from the public in finding the abducted individual, and an alert is issued if all four of the following criteria are met: a child or an adult with a proven mental or physical disability has been abducted, the child or adult is in danger of serious harm or death, there is enough descriptive information to enable the public to identify the individual, and there is a reasonable expectation the abductee could be returned or the abductor could be apprehended. Now, in issuing an Amber Alert, the information permitted for dissemination includes descriptions of the suspect, abductees, vehicles, et cetera; abduction details, when, where, how the abduction happened; locations, the last possible location of the suspect or the abductee; and directions the suspect may be travelling. A silver alert would follow this pattern of an Amber Alert.

However, while private member's Bill 210 was passed, it was never proclaimed, and when the United Conservative Party became the government in 2019 and I was re-elected, I then went to the minister of seniors and asked why it had never been proclaimed. It took some time, and my question went from the ministry of seniors to eventually the Ministry of Justice, where finally it was explained to me that in drafting private member's Bill 210, there was a conflict between the Missing Persons Act and private member's Bill 210 regarding the release of private information that was concerning to the Ministry of Justice.

Under the current Missing Persons Act, section 7(3), the act authorizes police to, for the purposes of furthering its investigation into the whereabouts of a missing person, release . . . the following information collected under [the Missing Persons] Act through media release or posting on a website:

- (a) the missing person's name;
- (b) a physical description of the missing person;
- (c) a photograph of the missing person;
- (d) information about any medical conditions of the missing person that might cause imminent risk;
- (e) pertinent vehicle information;
- (f) the place that the missing person was last seen;
- (g) the circumstances surrounding the disappearance of the missing person.

In section 2.1(4) of the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2017, it lists the same types of information for relief as section 7(3) of the Missing Persons Act; however, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2017, also allowed police to use information collected independently of the Missing Persons Act. This could mean that police would be disclosing information that they did not collect under the Missing Persons Act and which is not subject to the retention rules or other provisions of the MPA. This oversight was concerning enough that private member's Bill 210 was never proclaimed and therefore was unable to help missing seniors.

When I was drawn for another private member's bill, this time private member's Bill 204, I was resolved to bring forward amendments that would address the concerns of the Ministry of Justice so that a silver alert would be able to help seniors that have gone missing in our province. I started by meeting with the ministry officials, trying to decide what was the best way forward. Some felt that rather than amending the Missing Persons Act, a stand-alone bill would be the best way forward. However, after much discussion and with the help of both sides both inside and outside of the Ministry of Justice, it was determined that we would be best off with some simple amendments within the Missing Persons Act that would best address the privacy concerns.

At the same time, I held many meetings with stakeholders across the province to determine if any other amendments would make for a better bill. I met with many stakeholders from the Calgary Police Service; the Edmonton Police Service; the Alzheimer Society; Carya Calgary and the Dementia Network; the seniors' council of Edmonton; Dr. Lili Liu; Alberta Seniors Communities and Housing Association; Mr. Allan Rae, a senior with lived experience; the office of the Privacy Commissioner; and the Brenda Strafford Foundation. Based on their input, some additional amendments were added into private member's Bill 204, so Bill 204, should it be passed, will harmonize the Missing Persons Act and the silver alert amendment act and add some additional inputs that will make a senior alert an effective tool to help find seniors that have gone missing. To resolve some of the privacy and jurisdictional concerns that have been raised with the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2017, Bill 204 will address the privacy issues and add a few additional suggestions brought forward by the stakeholders that we've talked to.

Section 2.1 of the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2017, will need to be repealed by Bill 204 and integrated within the existing section 7 in the Missing Persons Act, and this will ensure that the same privacy rules will apply to police, whether they are issuing a media release or making a website post or activating a silver alert. To avoid any possibility of unintentionally constraining a police service, the new provisions being added to section 7 of the Missing Persons Act state that the power to issue a silver alert in no way limits or constrains a police service with respect to other missing persons. In other words, these powers will be additional and do not replace what already exists.

A proposed regulation-making power has been added to section 14 of the Missing Persons Act to ensure that if additional rules or processes are required for a broadcast agreement to function properly, the Lieutenant Governor in Council has the authority to put those in place.

There are some additions under definitions of seniors that give police, via the public safety ministry, the authority to issue silver alerts where there is an active investigation under the Missing Persons Act.

Finally, silver alerts are to be geospatially limited to lower the risk of alert fatigue. On the advice of stakeholders, a senior will be defined as someone who is 55 years or older in order to address the early onset of Alzheimer's.

In 2017 the original private member's Bill 210 addressed the very real problem of how we can best protect and reasonably act to protect a senior who has gone missing and is believed to be at risk. This Legislature understood at that time the need to provide police with the ability to have another tool in their belt when it comes to a missing person that is a senior. Private member's Bill 204 will address some of the pieces of this conversation that were missed and could have created some confusion regarding the private information that could be shared and now harmonizes a silver alert to the privacy of information expectations of the Missing Persons Act.

Madam Speaker, our seniors population is rapidly expanding in Alberta. In 2016 there were roughly 500,000 Albertans aged 65 and older. By 2031, as the tail end of the baby boomers reaches 65 years of age, Alberta's senior population is projected to be about 1 million people. This number will continue to grow, and by 2041 it is projected that 1 in 5 Albertans will be 65 years or older. Combine this reality with the understanding that a decline in cognitive functioning is associated with aging and that the risk of dementia doubles every five years after the age of 65, and we can now better understand why some of our seniors are at risk of going missing.

In Calgary the Alzheimer Society estimates that more than 13,000 Albertans are living with Alzheimer's disease or related dementia in that city alone. For every person diagnosed with Alzheimer's or related dementia, 10 to 12 people are directly impacted. These would be family members, friends, caregivers. In addition, the Alzheimer association indicates that 6 out of 10 people with dementia will wander at some point in time.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on Bill 204 in second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to join debate on Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. Certainly, like the member said, way back in 2017 this bill was brought forward, and it's a clear example – at that time the NDP was government, and I was the minister of seniors, and this is a clear example of a sitting government, the NDP at the time, working collaboratively with an opposition party, and certainly we worked with the member, and we did pass this bill back in 2017.

But, as the member explained, it never received proclamation, and that was due to the bill giving powers to the police that were not in accordance with the Missing Persons Act. So the bill had to go back to the UCP caucus and make sure that the drafting was corrected, and I understand now that this is what the hon. member has done, and this bill is now addressing those issues and making sure that it's in accordance with the Missing Persons Act. The UCP have done their homework, I guess, to make sure that this bill is appropriate. It's not contravening any other legislation, and it is now before the House again for members to debate and discuss.

Certainly, we in the New Democratic caucus here, now in opposition, as we did when we were government, support the silver alert bill. We think it's an important bill, that people who are aged – I guess it's 55-plus now. We've redefined what a senior is, and – guess what? – I'm a senior under that one. You know, usually our age is 65 for seniors, but this bill says 55. I'm 62, so I'm well within that range, and I can be supported if someone calls a silver alert out on me. I'm grateful for that.

Member Ceci: I'm dialing now.

Ms Sigurdson: You're dialing now. Oh, no. I may not be able to finish my debate part here.

Anyway, I guess I wouldn't mind just sharing another – besides being within the range of people who can have a silver alert put out on them, I think this would have been something my father would have benefited from, actually. My dad passed away last summer. He was 93 years old. In his later years he was diagnosed with dementia, and on more than one occasion he did come home with a police escort because he didn't know where he was and he'd lost his orientation. You know, it was usually fairly quickly, the same afternoon. Luckily, there was nothing that happened that was too egregious when Dad was confused and didn't know how to get back home.

Certainly, I think that this could support so many seniors to be well cared for, and if there is a time when they do get disoriented and don't know where they are, how to get home, those kinds of things, this legislation would indeed support them, support their communities to give them more resources to collaboratively work together to make sure that seniors in our community are safe.

Certainly, we know that currently in Alberta we have 700,000 seniors in our province. That's the fastest growing demographic, actually, in Alberta, and seniors are living longer, healthier lives than ever before. But certainly as we age, we may have cognitive decline. Sometimes we are, like my father, diagnosed with dementia, so having the supports in place for our ever-growing seniors population is extremely important. As I've said before, I stand in support of this bill and that we want to make sure that if people are out in the community and they get disoriented, don't know where they are, there are supports around them so that they can be brought home safely.

You know, I guess a question I might have for the member bringing this forward is: how come it did take almost the whole mandate of the UCP government to bring it forward? It would have been good to have it come earlier; it was 2017 when it was first introduced, so this is several years later. I think this is legislation that could have supported seniors much earlier, so I do wonder about that.

I guess another question that I have, too, is that, sadly, under the UCP government so many services for seniors have been cut or not responded to, and we know that the very first thing in 2019 the Seniors Advocate office was cut. That was something that provided advocacy, support for seniors in our province, and the UCP – that was one of the first things they cut in 2019. You know, it is troubling that there are programs that have been cut. This would seem to be a significant delay in this legislation being brought forward even though it was supported by both sides of the House.

Of course, another egregious thing that the UCP cut right away was the income support program for seniors, the Alberta seniors' benefit. They deindexed it, and of course this was at a time when we had record inflation, lots of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. Just maybe a reminder to get back on the subject matter in the short time available to members, Bill 204.

Ms Sigurdson: This is certainly about services to seniors, and, you know, certainly this bill is providing safety for seniors to make sure that they are supported. But I would say that there is also a lot of connection with the Seniors Advocate office, that it provided safety and advocacy for seniors in many areas, and seniors could be supported, too, with income support programs that met inflation. So that was a significant support for them.

We know that many programs do receive government funding that support seniors, and, you know, the grants program was also slashed by more than $2 million under the UCP government. This meant that seniors living in community – and we all know that that's such an important thing, that seniors age in community, and I think this silver alert bill does talk about supporting people to age in community. I guess, very similarly, the investment in grants to senior centres also is something else, so I feel that these are very similar, and these were cut also under the UCP watch.

We know that seniors in our province are absolutely making significant contributions to our province, to our society, and we're wanting them, for sure, to be as safe as possible, and that's why we in the NDP caucus certainly do support this bill, but we just see that there should be much more robust services around seniors. It feels like the UCP, immediately upon being elected, did actually roll back many programs that supported seniors. So, you know, I just stand in concern of that and wanting the UCP to go further down this road and reinstate the Seniors Advocate. You have now reinvested in indexing the Alberta seniors' benefit, so that's a very positive step forward.

I guess I have some questions for the member about this bill. What are the potential costs associated with the system, and how much time would be needed to assess those costs? With the existing Amber Alert system and sort of working together with the silver alert system, will there be enough support, enough infrastructure to work collaboratively and make sure that for everyone who has sort of the misfortune, really, of having to call for a silver or an Amber Alert, those programs are sufficiently resourced so that Albertans can access them? Of course, this is always in a very timely manner. These are emergency situations, when someone doesn't return at perhaps the designated time that they told their loved ones. You know, emergency services people have to work very quickly, so do we have enough support? Certainly, we know that there are many challenges in our health system, our emergency system right now, so things are overwhelmed. We want to make sure that we have those resources and that support and investment in those programs is done.

There are also certainly concerns about older adults' right to self-determination and privacy . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker. Thank you, all, for the opportunity to speak on Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, and I promise I will stay just on the topic here. We all have senior citizens in our life, and of course they are near and dear to us, and then those that we have lost far too soon. We have also all heard the sad stories about somebody's loved one wandering off from the facility, the care home, and then getting lost, and far too many have resulted in a senior being injured, particularly in this extremely cold weather and unfamiliar areas, that can easily result in frostbite setting in within a matter of minutes. In real-world scenarios there have been far too many cases of these seniors passing away and then not being found in a significant period of time, if at all.

This really breaks my heart, Madam Speaker. This is somebody's parent, grandparent, mother, father, sister, brother, husband, or wife. As recent as last week a missing 72-year-old senior not too far from my riding, Calgary-Beddington, in the Scenic Acres community was found dead after being reported missing five days prior. One can only guess that if there was a system in place to notify as many people as possible in the general public, this man could have been found and saved. Sadly, this is one of the so many sad stories where often seniors have accidentally found themselves in a state of danger.

This is why, Madam Speaker, I was pleased to hear about private member's Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, put forward by my colleague the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon. If passed in this House, Bill 204 will make a key change to 2017's Bill 210, which also would have otherwise granted police powers in disclosing information and then not connecting in accordance with the Missing Persons Act. This wasn't the intent of the original bill, and Bill 204 acts to fix it. The silver alert system created by Bill 204 creates a comparable system to the highly efficient Amber Alert, a program to quickly issue an alert to the general public when senior citizens or other adults with a medical disorder go missing.

Like the amber system, that has saved countless children from dangers, harm, death, the silver alert would broadcast alerts on the radio and television stations and social media platforms and cellular phones and all the other devices, et cetera. So when the police supports the public safety authority, there will be an active investigation under the Missing Persons Act. This will also allow for police to ensure there were agreements, whether through broadcasting or through other means, to make sure the alerts are geographically limited when applicable to prevent Albertans not in the affected area from getting a notification that doesn't apply to them. Amongst other situations, this would apply to, particularly, a localized area where the senior went missing and is considered in danger.

Madam Speaker, this is just another example of the well-thought-out legislation that our UCP private members have brought forward in the 30th Legislature, and I'm looking forward to what they bring to the table in the 31st, forming a majority United Conservative mandate in the coming spring election.

Madam Speaker, Bill 204, the Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022, follows the lead of the several jurisdictions that have already enacted similar legislation, including Manitoba, Ontario, and 37 U.S. states.

Madam Speaker, I'm proud to support my colleague the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, who I know feels very passionate about this particular issue. This is a common-sense solution to a very real problem that will no doubt save lives. Because of this, I strongly encourage all my colleagues, on both sides of this Chamber, to join me in supporting this bill as well.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on private member's Bill 204, Missing Persons (Silver Alert) Amendment Act, 2022. Bill 204 will discuss vulnerable seniors across Alberta who go missing. PMB 204 is built upon previous PMB 210, passed in 2017, but it was never proclaimed because of some discrepancies between PMB 210 and the Missing Persons Act regarding the privacy of information.

By building and amending the previous legislation, it's essential that we recognize that this bill is important for many seniors who live the awful experience of going missing and finding no help from others. We will vindicate loved ones – many have tragically lost their partners, parents, or grandparents – by giving first responders more tools to alert the public of missing seniors. It's never a great feeling to lose somebody and never find them again. This new amendment will clarify and allow first responders to finally alert the public of missing seniors.

I have a personal story to share as well. When my grandparents were still living, my grandfather woke up to find my grandmother missing from the house. She had not taken her coat or boots, and it was the middle of the night, and it was winter. He called the police, and they started a search for her. It was a very frightening time for our family. She had some health conditions, and my grandfather worried that she was disoriented. It was a few hours later that the police finally did find my grandmother at the city dump. She had wandered many miles without proper winter attire, but she was alive. That was the last day that she was at her home. A higher level of care was required for her. Thank goodness the police officers found her, but had a silver alert system been in place, there would have been many more eyes looking for her. Perhaps she would have been found much sooner, and the weather would not have taken such a toll on her.

Our family's story had a happy ending – thank goodness – but for many, there is not. Our population ages, and many wish to continue living in their own homes, but we must respond responsibly to take care of our vulnerable.

Madam Speaker, our seniors population is rapidly expanding in Alberta. In 2016 there were roughly 500,000 Albertans aged 65 and older. By 2031, as the tail end of the baby boomers reaches 65 years of age, Alberta's seniors population is projected to reach approximately 1 million people. This number will continue to grow. By 2041 it is projected that 1 in 5 Albertans will be 65 years or older.

A decline in cognitive function is associated with aging, and the risk of dementia doubles every five years after the age of 65. In Calgary the Alzheimer Society estimates that more than 50,000

Albertans are living with Alzheimer's disease or related dementia in that city alone, and for every person diagnosed with Alzheimer's or related dementia, 10 to 12 people are directly impacted. These are family members, friends, and caregivers.

In addition, the Alzheimer's association indicated that 6 out of 10 people with dementia will wander at some point. This is frightening. When individuals walk away from their homes and get lost or go missing, it can lead to increased risk of injury or death. The quicker we are able to locate these vulnerable individuals and return them home safely, the more likely we are to avoid a tragic incident.

Bill 204 will seek to address this problem by building on the Amber Alert system, which is already in place. Amber Alert is a voluntary co-operative partnership between Alberta Justice and Solicitor General, the Alberta Emergency Management Agency, participating radio and TV stations, police services, and the public.

The reasons vulnerable adults and seniors go missing generally differ from the circumstances that lead to missing children in Amber Alerts; hence, the approach has to be different to be effective. This silver alert system will provide a framework to enable police to send out a notice via local media when a senior citizen or adult with cognitive impairment, a mental health disorder, or a medical condition that may result in them being vulnerable goes missing. The goal is to begin the search locally unless there is evidence that the missing person is using some public or private transportation, which would necessitate a broader application of the broadcasts.

This legislation will save many lives by implementing this and using the already existing Amber Alert system to another good use. It's morally vital that we help senior Albertans that go missing. It never is great when our loved seniors disappear and we never see them again. We have seen other provinces trying to solve this issue of seniors going missing. However, our provincial approach could be proven easier to implement and a more cost-effective policy to be enforced and help law enforcement to find missing seniors, who we love so much.

Several provinces, including B.C., have partnerships with an American program called Project Lifesaver. With this program, enrolled seniors wear a small transmitter on the wrist or ankle that emits an individual frequency signal. If an enrolled client goes missing, first responders will use this frequency to locate that individual. However, the downside to this program is that the cost of the program, which includes an initial fee and a recurring monthly fee, is borne by the individual, which is why I think the silver alert program is a more sound option for providing safety to vulnerable adults. In addition, this bill makes safety procedures available to all Albertans using resources that are already in place.

In closing, passing this bill will allow for a province-wide system to be brought online, enabling vulnerable Albertans a great likelihood of returning home safely. But, again, this issue crosses political boundaries, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this bill, and I thank the member for bringing this forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think the testimony from the Member for Camrose, who just spoke on this important piece of legislation, demonstrates how important the legislation is and how close to home it is to not only members of this Legislature but to all Albertans who share the responsibility of caring for elderly parents or grandparents and loved ones who may be suffering from dementia who are 55 years of age and older, some even younger. But for the most part, of course, this legislation looks to provide an alert for those who go missing at age 55 or older who may be suffering from the effects of dementia or other cognitive dysfunction.

All of us in this Legislature know somebody who does act in the role of a caregiver for someone who is over the age of 55, myself included. As a designated caregiver I look after my mother, who's about to turn 88, and certainly I think there's no one in the Legislature who doesn't have a significant connection with a family member or relative or friend who wouldn't be concerned enough to share the value of this legislation.

Now, of course, it was brought in 2017, not proclaimed, as the member who brought forward the bill explained. Of course, it now is before the House once again with some remedies to some incongruities that were in the former Bill 210. We, of course, on this side of the House are in support of this legislation.

As we know, seniors built this province, and I now am one. I'm fully of the age of 65. I know that individuals who preceded me in generations in my family would potentially have benefited from this legislation. I know the Member for Camrose spoke eloquently about how indeed she thought it may have been very beneficial to her grandmother if indeed the legislation had been in place when she went missing. Thankfully, there was a positive outcome in that situation, but as we all know, whenever we do hear about a senior going missing either from a residence or a seniors' lodge or nursing home, it quite often has very devastating results. Whether it's winter or summer, the person can get into difficulty very quickly. Particularly in wintertime it may result in the death of a senior who's gone missing from their residence or seniors' accommodation.

We would have wished that this legislation had come forward a little bit earlier in the mandate of this UCP government. Of course, they've had plenty of time to do it, and it may have indeed been a reflection of the lack of prioritization of seniors' issues on their legislative agenda. One would hope not, but I know that we've not seen a lot of rapid action in terms of supporting a seniors mandate. In fact, we've seen cuts to seniors' services, and this seems to be one other sort of dereliction of duty towards seniors, sort of dragging their feet in getting this piece of legislation before the House in its current form. The delay, I think, could have been avoided, and seniors deserved to have it here, before the House, earlier.

We will certainly support the legislation. I do have some questions about it, Madam Speaker. Of course, we all know that when an Amber Alert is called, it gets your attention very quickly. It's broadcast widely on cellphones, on television, radio, and multiple platforms of social media. People are very much aware that an Amber Alert has been called, and I'm not certain if indeed it's absolutely clear how much the addition of a silver alert will, let's say, be diluted in comparison to an Amber Alert.

The hope is, of course, that a silver alert won't be sort of a second class of alert, because life is in danger, whether it's an Amber Alert or a silver alert. The creation of a new level of alert to warn the public and engage the public and seek the public's assistance in helping to locate the missing person, in this case an individual over the age of 55 who may have some cognitive difficulties, may result in a less intense effort to find that individual. We're hoping that that's not the case, but we want to make sure that in the communications of this silver alert, the public receives the same sense of urgency that they do when an Amber Alert is broadcast.

Of course, as has been mentioned by other speakers, the silver alert would in all likelihood be more commonly a localized alert. We know that, with our media capacities, those localized alerts can be focused in and around the area where the senior is known to have gone missing, so perhaps – and this is one question I have for the member as well who brought forward the piece of legislation – there can be some attempt made to collaborate with local agencies such as Neighbourhood Watch to engage individuals on the ground, once a silver alert is called, to assist in a localized ground search for that individual.

As others have mentioned, it is more likely with a silver alert that an automobile was not necessarily involved and that somebody may be on foot and gone missing from their home. In a larger number of cases, of course, there may be a situation where vehicles are involved and a wider silver alert call would have to be made, but there seem to be some opportunities for local collaboration in the search effort, because time is of the essence. If indeed a senior who has wandered from their place of residence, whether it be a seniors' lodge or their own home, is found quickly, of course, the results are going to be better than if the individual is missing for an extended period of time.

So that's a hope that I have, that there might be some effort to engage local neighbourhood and community groups such as Neighbourhood Watch to assist law enforcement efforts in locating those who have gone missing and given rise to a call for a silver alert.

Now, of course, we always want to make sure that the legislative efforts that are raised are costed out, and we're not sure exactly what the cost might be in relation to a silver alert compared to an Amber Alert. We don't know if there are any savings that can be achieved by somehow twinning the two systems. We're certainly hopeful that that will be the case, but we'd like to hear from the member about those possible savings and possible collaborations.

What about the rights, of course, of the older adult's self-determination and privacy as well? We know that the legislation was not proclaimed initially, when it was called Bill 210, in 2017 because there were some contradictions against the Missing Persons Act, and I'm just wondering if indeed adequate care has been taken to consider the older adult's rights to self-determination and privacy.

How much longer shall we have to wait, though, to get this in place? Is it going to be something that the government is able to implement in fairly short order, or are there other considerations that will have to be investigated in order to make sure that the bill can actually get proclaimed this time without having to be delayed once again and brought back because things were discovered that could have been changed before the actual bill was passed? Hopefully, the bases have been covered, and we'll see it pass.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Happy to rise this afternoon in support of Bill 204, as I did back in 2017 for Bill 210, which, unfortunately, tripped at the finish line, literally at the finish line. It was unfortunate that we as a Legislature weren't able to catch some of that conflicting language that prevented it from being proclaimed. Hopefully, the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has gotten some solid assurances that the language is solid, that we're not in conflict with anything else that, again, could prevent a very good idea from going forward with regard to a silver alert.

I guess, you know, just a couple of questions that I have in the brief time that I do have available here to me. I'm wondering. Hopefully, once we get into Committee of the Whole, perhaps the member might be able to provide us with some insight on if there were any discussions with the red tape reduction minister. I know there's been a very firm commitment from the government around reducing red tape and wanting to look at one in, kind of one out if we are bringing in some regulations, to make sure that this is all airtight. Will there potentially be any holdups because of that? One of the things that I've alluded to with other pieces of legislation that require regulations: will there now be a rush to try to eliminate something else in order to be able to, I guess, provide that balance, hit some kind of target, quota, or whatever? Hopefully, we'll get a chance to maybe hear some comments on that or even from the red tape minister around that.

Like my friend from Edmonton-McClung had mentioned about potential costs to the system, you know, the last thing I want to see is, again, a very good idea start to get pared back because somebody thinks that, well, maybe it's costing a little too much. I'd hate to see a price being placed on something like this and preventing it from moving forward in a fulsome way, which kind of ties a little bit into what the member was talking about, about impacting the current system. You know, is it going to be fully integrated with the Amber Alert system? Are they kind of just going in parallel? Are the two separate? If it is in conjunction with it, will the government ensure that the resources are available, with the extra volume that comes with placing these calls, to make sure they're done quickly and efficiently so that we can get that alert out as fast as possible?

It's kind of timely because I know that in north Edmonton over the last couple of months I've seen, you know, Facebook alerts around a couple of residents from north Edmonton that, unfortunately, have gone missing. Thankfully, they came to good conclusions, but maybe the system could have helped had we had the chance to see it in action. Hopefully, the timeline – I would certainly never presume the decision of this Chamber – is going in a positive direction, and we can get this passed. What will we see as the finish line, where we flip the switch and it's up and running? Hopefully, there are not several years before that's available. Maybe the member will get a chance in Committee of the Whole to chat a little bit about what the government might see around that.

Otherwise, you know, I am definitely fully in support of this legislation. I do want to see it moving forward in an expeditious manner, but at the same time I do want to see some assurances from maybe some of the ministers around their commitment to making sure that this bill will get over the finish line, that it will be implemented, and that we won't be taking any shortcuts or coming up with any excuses for paring it back or shortcutting or anything of that nature, because, again, like I said, it would be a failed opportunity if we've missed something and then have this lost again.

You know, again, private members don't get a lot of time to be able to bring forward what I've seen is some pretty good legislation in a lot of private members' business. I'd certainly like to see more robust discussion around every private member's bill. At the very least, I think this is a good piece of legislation that we'll get a chance to move forward, and I'm looking forward to seeing some of the answers that I've asked about around costs, around impacts to the current system, any kind of, I guess, pitfalls that might be coming.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt. Two clocks now strike 5 o'clock. We will conclude the business on this for today.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Seniors' Services and Benefits

503. Ms Sigurdson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government

- (a) to consider taking immediate action to reduce costs to seniors related to medical benefits, long-term care, continuing care, home care, assisted living, drivers' licence medical exams, and other basic essentials that have increased dramatically since 2019; and
- (b) to create an independent office of the Seniors Advocate, the mandate of which would include
  - (i) helping seniors navigate provincial public services,
  - (ii) providing policy and affordability recommendations related to seniors to the government, and
  - (iii) conducting reviews on providers of services to seniors to ensure seniors' needs are met.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and join debate on Motion 503. It's about seniors' affordability and the Seniors Advocate. This motion is, I think – even the previous bill, actually, the silver alert bill: I think, when I was speaking, I touched on, really, some egregious things that have happened under the UCP watch. It's just more and more burden put on seniors, and this motion actually goes some direction in supporting seniors. We know that seniors created, you know, built this province, and they deserve to age in dignity in our province of Alberta. There are 700,000 seniors in our province, and as I said before, it's the largest growing demographic in our population.

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

But, sadly, it seems to be not a very important group of people to the UCP government. As the latter part of this motion indicates, we're asking for a Seniors Advocate to be created, and that's because one of the very first things the UCP did when they came into government was to terminate the Seniors Advocate office and fire Dr. Sheree Kwong See, who was the Seniors Advocate. Really, supports for seniors in terms of that kind of advocacy disappeared.

Despite, in this Chamber, in estimates, in other public opportunities, you know, having asked the minister at the time about this position and about the Seniors Advocate and who was going to be supporting seniors in this regard – she continually assured me that there's still a Seniors Advocate; it was just housed within the Health Advocate's office. Yet when I would ask at estimates, a point of order would be called on me because I wasn't supposed to ask about the Seniors Advocate, and when I spoke about it in Health estimates, they said: well, there's nothing about the Seniors Advocate; you have to ask the seniors minister. Clearly, there was some misinformation shared by the minister.

We know that certainly there are other aspects to the Health Advocate. There's the mental health advocate, which is also housed there, and there's the patient advocate. You know, those are clear, and they're designated within the Health ministry. Nothing – nothing – about the Seniors Advocate. We know, certainly, that seniors do have concerns about the health system, and they do need help navigating it. The Health Advocate is expected to support them with that, but that was, like, not even a third of the focus and the needs of Alberta seniors. Certainly, from the annual reports from Dr. Kwong See we knew that financial issues and social services were the others, more than two-thirds. Obviously, nothing is being done to support seniors regarding that, and that certainly disturbs me, especially because it was suggested that indeed there would be those supports in place. But they weren't, so again that was misinformation shared.

You know, we've just been through a global pandemic, and according to the Ryerson institute we had the largest number of outbreaks in our continuing care system of any province in Canada. Just about 1,300 seniors died in continuing care. If this isn't a time for an advocate to speak out to support seniors regarding the issues in our continuing care system, I don't know what time is. Obviously, many, many seniors suffered greatly during that time. Many seniors lost their lives, and there was no one to speak up for them. If the Health Advocate was indeed the champion for seniors, I'm surprised that she didn't speak up.

But that's the interesting thing about the Health Advocate: the Health Advocate was appointed; it wasn't an open competition at all. It was appointed by the Health minister, who actually interfered with the process to have a legitimate candidate, through a competitive process, come forward. Janice Harrington was appointed to that position, and she was the previous executive director of the Conservative Party. It was a completely partisan appointment, so certainly she wasn't going to speak up in support of seniors, in support of people who had experienced difficulties in the health system, hold the ministers to account for some of the very egregious things that went on during the pandemic or other times during the mandate of this government. You can see how the UCP has just set this up so that, really, seniors aren't important to them and they are not looking after their best interests.

That's why an independent advocate, an office that's independent, would absolutely support some rigour and some oversight and some challenge. We know that those checks and balances are part of a good democracy. It's very sad that the UCP would choose to terminate that entire office and take away that voice, because certainly I met often with Dr. Sheree Kwong See, who was a professor at the University of Alberta, and when we hired her, she had 30 years of research focused on seniors and had done extraordinary work and certainly is very well regarded in the seniors field.

So you can just see the difference, the clear difference, and sort of the neglect, lack of care, cavaliness, perhaps even arrogance, Mr. Speaker, I would say, of the UCP government in, you know, how they treat seniors and how little regard they have for the candidate that would be in that role. I don't know. I know that many Albertans that I've spoken to are quite disturbed by that and want an independent office of the advocate. If the NDP is elected in this spring election, we have committed to creating an independent office of seniors, and you can rest assured that we will have a very well-qualified candidate in that position. It won't be a partisan person like the UCP has chosen.

Besides that, this motion also talks about other ways that the UCP has forgotten seniors and put more burden on them in terms of costs. We know that continuing care and medical benefits have all gone up for seniors under the UCP government, $44.6 million for new annual costs for continuing care under their watch. The recent budget is increasing accommodation rates in June by 2.3 per cent. It's interesting because it's June, and when is the election? The election is at the end of May, so it feels, you know, a little bit of a deception on the part of the UCP government that they do this immediately after the election. Certainly, I'll be speaking about this and will continue to speak in this House about that so that Albertans will know that this is a clear plan and it is in this most recent budget.

We know that 2.3 per cent will be the increase in June, and that comes on the heels of a 5.5 per cent increase layered on in the fall of last year. These are the continuing care accommodation rates, so those are going up for seniors. Of course, they're doing this all based on an Ernst & Young report that the UCP commissioned, and the report recommended a $44.6 million increase for annual costs of continuing care. They also recommended for home care an increase of $35.9 million. The UCP is not making this hidden, but this report that they have commissioned has encouraged them to increase all the costs to seniors, who often are on low fixed income and don't have a lot of resources to be able to access. It is certainly a concern on this side of the House.

We also know that seniors in continuing care will be paying increased fees for medication, and that's another burden because a lot of times when we age, we certainly are taking more medication, and seniors often take, you know, more than one type of medication. Another increase by the UCP is the driver's licence medical exams. This used to be all covered by the government. At 75 it's mandatory: you must have a medical exam in order to be a driver in our province. Then you must also have that same medical exam when you're 80 and then every two years after that. This used to be covered, but it's no longer covered.

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to speak to the motion? I see the hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure, and thank you for the opportunity to talk about private member's Motion 503. Thank you to the member across the Chamber for your passion and dedication to Alberta's seniors. Improving life for Albertans is the shared goal for all the members of the Legislature regardless of political stripe. We must make sure that we do not mistake the duplications of a service for the expansions of a service and not when every tax dollar must serve Albertans.

Alberta's government recently appointed Catherine Douglas as the new health and mental health advocate. The advocate will help guide Albertans through the appropriate channels to resolve the issues and then provide the information and education so that they become advocates for their own health journey and for those that they care for. Seniors are a growing segment of the population in Alberta – that's mentioned many times in the Legislature – and quite often in need of the advocate's service. It's true. Aging Albertans are also more likely to access the health care system in general. One could say that the new advocate is already in place as a resource to help them.

Mr. Speaker, please allow me to highlight all of the work Alberta's government is doing to help those who make up 15 per cent of those who use the health care system in 2021 and 2022. When a government provides the service that meets the needs, both on a daily basis and where the needs are more pressing – many people accessing the system have unique and complex needs and require a more hands-on approach. That's why the offices of the Alberta health and mental health advocate are there to assist all Albertans, especially seniors with any concerns on how to navigate the system, that can be daunting and confusing to some.

When I was the former minister of housing, I waited for a year before I terminated – not terminate, though; a switch to combine two offices, the Seniors Advocate and the Health Advocate, together. So I just want to make it clear that cutting and termination are incorrect. In effect, then, with this office, the health and seniors advocate office combined, the staff from seniors and housing brought to the new office covered it to make sure that the senior issue will be appropriately managed. The current mental health advocate is already doing the work of the Seniors Advocate. I do, you know, regularly – and my staff have been checking with the Health ministry and asking how things are going, and most of the time when seniors have an issue, an inquiry, they are health related. We actually provide a service, a one stop for seniors instead of going to a Seniors Advocate and then they end up referred to a different ministry. This government is focused on efficiency and serving our seniors appropriately.

As a part of expanding and strengthening the role of the offices of Alberta Health and the mental health advocate, in a collaboration, in a partnership with the Ministry of Seniors, Community and Social Services, how will we be there to assist them in resolving their health system related concerns and help them direct their questions to any non health related government body?

We also know that seniors are facing increasing costs at these times, and we want to help to mitigate those financial pressures. Here are the facts, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of ongoing programs that support seniors, especially low-income ones, with health costs. All seniors are eligible for coverage for seniors programs, which is to provide premium-free coverage for things like prescription drugs and home nursing care. There are more than about 680,000 seniors enrolling in this program.

Low-income seniors: let's talk about how we can help them. Also, they are eligible for up to $5,000 every year toward their basic dental service and up to $230 every three years for the purchase of prescription eyeglasses. To help with the rising costs of living – it is a concern, so the government is providing financial relief to Albertan residents in designated supportive living and in long-term care from November 1, 2022, to June 30, 2023. To support seniors, Alberta's government is investing $11 million to help fight inflationary increases around accommodation costs.

Another notable point is about the coverage for seniors programs. Assistance is available for low-income seniors for health and daily living expenses through the special needs assistance for seniors program. Funding is provided for the copayments, amount paid above the average of $45 per month for a single senior or seniors in a couple where one individual is under the age of 65 and $90 per month for seniors in couples where both individuals are age 65 or older.

The Alberta government is also making sure to consider those on a fixed income when offering affordability supports. Seniors amount to 1 million Albertans who are receiving six $100 affordability payments, and we also increased the seniors' benefit by 6 per cent.

Along with all other Albertans, seniors are many of whom who live on a fixed income and also are benefiting from additional actions this government took to help overcome the inflation crisis. The electricity rebates, the province offering tax relief in natural gas and electricity, the price protections: these are all actions we took to relieve the financial pressures that face our province. We passed private passenger vehicle insurance rates and increased it through to the end of this year. We made changes to personal income tax that will help to keep more money in the pockets of Albertans. Our government also increased funding for low-income transit pass programs to make sure that those who are most in need are not left behind.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's government has put their words into actions when it comes to supporting seniors in the province. As the former minister of seniors and housing I went through, covering almost all Albertans, and I talked to thousands and thousands of seniors myself. I was a seniors advocate.

5:20

We will continue to make sure that vulnerable – in fact, I forgot to add one thing. For all the rural areas: they were so excited to see me. They told me that they hadn't seen the minister for seniors for years or had never seen a minister before. I was just so happy to learn that and to have the support of the seniors from the rural areas. Thank you, everyone, for that comment. This government is always for you.

We will continue to make sure that vulnerable Albertans are supported in every way possible. They need a more streamlined process with less red tape to help navigate the health system. We want to do things more efficiently, not wasting taxpayer dollars. We already have the patient's advocate, so adding a secondary office would only serve to create an additional backlog for people in need. I'm also very pleased to share that the new Mental Health Patient Advocate and the team of professionals, their office is extremely qualified.

I believe it is the best for Albertans to know that they only have to go to one office for the information, assistance they need. We're there. This government is always there for our seniors. Seniors are the strength of Alberta. That's why I will not support this motion.

Thank you, Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I certainly will be supporting this motion and with good reason, because an independent Seniors Advocate is needed more than ever, and that's apparent in the current government's treatment of seniors since their election in 2019. Now, after the UCP removed the Seniors Advocate and rolled that responsibility to the Health Advocate, a partisan appointment that was direct from the executive of the UCP, one would be remiss if one doesn't question whether, in fact, that role was independent. Seniors certainly would be right in questioning whether or not that independent role had been negated by rolling the responsibility into the Health Advocate's portfolio.

Previous to that, of course, we recognized the importance of seniors when we were in government by establishing the Seniors Advocate office, and that's what we wanted to say to seniors. We wanted clearly to let seniors in this province know that they matter, they were important, they are critically important to the province, and they deserve to have a direct channel to government.

What happens, of course, as one may know as one becomes a senior and is maybe not any longer in the workforce, is that their visibility diminishes. A person with grey hair becomes invisible to many facets of society, and we didn't want them to become invisible to their government. We wanted to ensure that they knew that they mattered, and to do so, we demonstrated that by providing the Seniors Advocate position and office. Of course, when the UCP took office, that was eliminated and rolled into the Health Advocate's portfolio, thus diminishing the significance of seniors to the current government, and it's surely a reflection of what they've done to seniors since they formed government.

Former Conservative governments, Mr. Speaker, used to brag about how they showered the seniors in this province with benefits through Alberta seniors' benefits, you know, that in decades past they were developing and increasing, but now this current UCP government, the current rendition of conservatism in this province, firehoses our seniors with extra costs, extra burdens, some of which have been documented here.

Mr. Speaker, I really do stand in support of this motion because a Seniors Advocate is more necessary than ever, and this motion urges the government to do what it failed to do or to undo what it did and to actually create once again an office of the Seniors Advocate. The mandate, of course, would help seniors navigate provincial public services and would provide public policy and affordability recommendations related to seniors and to the government, and it would conduct reviews on providers of services to seniors to ensure seniors' needs are met. That's something that's indeed a laudable goal to have in this province, and it's something that we recognize, and it behooves me to comprehend why any government would want to dispense with the Seniors Advocate office, as the UCP did early in their reign. It only begs the question: was it done because they wished to avoid the criticism that might come from a Seniors Advocate once they engaged in the raft of extra cost burdens that they were placing upon seniors during the mandate that now is almost four years of cost increases to our seniors?

I will never forget, Mr. Speaker, talking to seniors on the doorstep who now discover that after age 75 they're responsible for paying for their driver's exam medical. There were some very, very volatile seniors at the doorstep talking to me about that. They were really not happy with it, and it's a big cost. It's, you know, 85 to 150 bucks, in some cases on a biannual basis, after you turn 75. This is just one example of some significant costs that the UCP government has inflicted upon seniors, adding fees and/or reducing coverage for seniors in health care.

The new fees for home care alone are burdens not only to seniors but to their families because, Mr. Speaker, quite often, of course, seniors' income is insufficient to cover the cost of home care, and there was a $35.9 million increase in new costs to seniors as a result of this UCP government's policy – that's evidenced by the Ernst & Young report on Alberta Health Services, which included recommendations to add costs on seniors in continuing care – $35.9 million in new costs onto seniors. Yet the government has seen fit to find ways of shovelling billions, like $20 billion, over to oil companies to clean up wells that they are already responsible for cleaning themselves. But, no, seniors have to fork out another $35.9 million to pay for their own lodging, and of course that means that their siblings, their younger family members are probably going to be the ones carrying the can because that senior doesn't have the adequate income to cover some of those extra costs.

Mr. Speaker, the evidence is in. It's very, very clear this government has no desire to court the favour of seniors in Alberta. In fact, they've given up on seniors. They have dispensed with that voting bloc and have taken them for granted. They do so at their own peril, because I know that not only when I'm at the doors talking about the driver's medical – and this isn't something I'd had to bring up. Believe me; that's brought up spontaneously by seniors who have just suffered the driver's medical. You run into one at the door who has had an anniversary date and has had to go and get the driver's medical, and they've had to fork out 85 to 150 bucks for it, 85 to 150 bucks they don't have extra right now – they let you know about it. That's just one example. The changes to the medical exams are certainly a sore point with seniors, and the government doesn't seem to be listening.

The Seniors Advocate program that the government has shifted over into the Health Advocate portfolio is something that seniors are going to sorely miss, Mr. Speaker. The role of the Seniors Advocate is something that granted the respect due to our seniors because it recognized them as full participants in our society. Without that recognition, by rolling it into the Health Advocate's portfolio, the government has gone backwards and is disrespecting our Alberta seniors by saying: "You don't matter. You're something that is a secondary category to us. We expect you to vote for us. We think you're going to do it regardless, and we're going to keep hacking away at your bank account by making sure we add costs onto seniors that otherwise would've been covered by the government."

The role of the advocate is to help navigate casework, and we've all seen this, Mr. Speaker, where you get seniors calling into our MLA constituency offices absolutely confounded with government programs and services, forms and applications, and believe me: it's not just because they're seniors. Seniors are from every walk of life. They are complex forms, and they're reflective of many other departments, not only those programs which affect seniors. Seniors in particular should not be denied or not be able to access programs and services they are deserving of, those which still remain available to them not cut by the UCP, because they have difficulty with the complexity of the application process. That we see every week in our offices, and indeed the programs and services that seniors are able to access should be something they get without having to go to a family lawyer to understand a process.

The Seniors Advocate is there – or would've been there under our government; no longer there because of the UCP taking it away. That's one of the big roles of the Seniors Advocate, not necessarily to bang on a counter demanding better services; just to make sure seniors can advocate and navigate to get the services they already have.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I'd like, with your approval, to move to one-minute bells.

The Acting Speaker: All right. So we're looking for unanimous consent to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-City Centre – or Edmonton-City Centre. You said you've been spending a lot of time in Calgary. I thought maybe you're running.

Mr. Shepherd: Indeed, Mr. Speaker. I've been visiting Calgary a fair amount. I haven't yet decided to move there, but I appreciate the thought.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion today, you know, advocating for the creation of an independent Seniors Advocate. I want to talk for a little bit about why that's important, an independent Seniors Advocate. Now, some of my colleagues have already made reference to the process by which this government appointed the first combined Health Advocate, mental advocate, Seniors Advocate, and it was not a very good process, Mr. Speaker.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Now, just as part of this, I want to note that the former minister of seniors spoke of this being a process of efficiency, making this better, making it more convenient for seniors to be able to access their services all in a one-stop shop. Mr. Speaker, you know, in a CBC article talking about how this government went about appointing the Seniors Advocate and Health Advocate and mental health advocate all combined in one office, it noted that in mid-September of 2019 there was a draft ready of the posting for the position, but the department was concerned that "combining health and mental health roles could draw out the process and make it difficult to find a suitable candidate."

That's just two offices, Mr. Speaker, and then they added on a third, making it difficult, in the eyes of the public service, to find a suitable candidate, somebody that could meet all of that criteria. Well, the government found a convenient way around that: they just found someone who wasn't qualified for any of the three. What happened was that as the public servants were doing their due diligence, the traditional processes that had been followed by ministers for years in making these appointments – they did their work and they had the process laid out and they had the job posting ready to go. Then suddenly the then Minister of Health, now the Minister of Justice, came to the department and said: wait a minute; just put that on hold; I'm going to have a little chat with the deputy minister.

When they came out of that chat, lo and behold, they cancelled that job posting because they didn't need it anymore because they were going to appoint the former executive director of the United Conservative Party, someone who did not have any qualifications in regard to seniors, in regard to health, or in regard to mental health. That is what the former minister of seniors considers to be convenient, helpful for seniors, a good use of taxpayer dollars, Mr. Speaker.

Lori Williams, a political scientist at Mount Royal University – here's what she had to say about that appointment.

Not only to cut short that process or to set it aside, but to instead appoint someone who is an active and rather passionate partisan makes it look like this advocacy position is really nothing more than an arm of the government doing the government's bidding.

Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to take the former minister of seniors and indeed any of these government members at their word when they say that this was about doing something better for seniors when this process – and let's be clear. We have seen this government repeat this sort of thing over and over again. Speaking of the former minister of seniors referring to good use of taxpayer dollars, certainly the embarrassment of a war room that spent a million dollars a year: that was not a good use of taxpayer dollars but also had a partisan appointment at its head, a former candidate for the United Conservative Party. Some of the Premier's recent appointments, the COVID-19 review, her former mentor, supporter Mr. Preston Manning getting a cool $250 million a year – or $250,000. Pardon me; $250,000. Sorry. My apologies. For a moment there I was thinking back to, you know, the discussion of the carbon tax in the 2019 campaign. It's $250,000 for the supporter and former mentor, or current mentor, of the Premier.

Really, we don't have a government, Mr. Speaker, that is concerned, really, about taxpayer dollars. They are more than happy to make use of them in all kinds of ways that are politically convenient and beneficial for them. Really, this is why, to return to what I was saying about the importance of an independent Seniors Advocate, when we have demonstrations of a government, like, unfortunately, many Conservative governments before, that fall into that pattern of entitlement and arrogance and cronyism, it is incredibly important that we have some protections built in.

When something is as important as a Seniors Advocate, setting that up as an independent office, that would be required, then, to go through the proper procedure of going before a legislative committee and going through due diligence of a proper job posting and process of hiring and then be brought before this House for a vote, removes the sort of situation that we have had under this government.

Now, of course, that former advocate is no longer in that role, and there has been a newer appointment. Indeed, I would note that with that newer appointment this government does seem to have learned a lesson. They did appoint somebody that does actually seem to have some of that expertise and to the best of my knowledge has not formerly even been a member of the United Conservative Party, let alone the executive director.

That said, this is an important role. I believe it is one that goes beyond simply being done off the side of a desk by someone who is wearing three hats. You know, the former minister of seniors, the MLA for Calgary-Beddington, talked about and seemed to want to brag about everything this government has done for affordability for seniors. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I represent a number of seniors here in Edmonton-City Centre, and there are a number of them that wrote to me about the fact that they are cut out of this government's utility rebate program because they happen to live in an apartment or a condominium in a building where those utilities are handled jointly as opposed to individual billing. This government has never addressed that issue. Those are many seniors, some of whom are indeed lower income, who do not get part of that utility rebate because this government couldn't be bothered to do the work and find a way.

The MLA for Calgary-Beddington talked about: well, you know, hey, we're giving seniors more money back because we reindexed income tax. Mr. Speaker, that member voted in favour of deindexing income tax and raising income tax for seniors for multiple years in the midst of a pandemic. So this government can try to applaud itself on one hand, but the fact is that this government, as my colleagues have noted, raised costs for seniors over the last few years.

I've certainly had seniors reach out to my office when they pushed a number of those seniors' dependants and partners off the seniors drug benefit program, again raising costs for those seniors. I had seniors reach out to me with real concerns when this government moved to make changes to the insulin pump therapy program, which would have forced some of those seniors potentially to have to pay out of pocket for a technology that's incredibly important for them in maintaining health, particularly in their later years.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is no high horse for this government to climb on. What we have here from the MLA for Edmonton-Riverview is, I think, an important step forward, not only giving seniors back their own separate advocate – and, I can tell you that many, many seniors in my constituency have written to me calling for just that. They want their advocate back. They want to have that lone voice that is there for them. Much as we have a disability advocate – and let's be clear. Probably many people who write in with concerns with the disability advocate are also talking about health care, but that doesn't mean that we tell them to go and talk to the Health Advocate.

Seniors want to have representation in their voice. Not only is it important to bring that voice back but to do it in a way where that advocate is empowered to act independently, to look into serious issues that come up that affect seniors, and indeed is protected from the kinds of partisanship we saw from the government in their earlier appointment for the advocate in this position. So I will be happy, Mr. Speaker, to vote in support of this motion, and I will be happy, should we have the opportunity to form government, to vote in favour of the legislation that will in fact take this step and form a new independent office of the Seniors Advocate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Motions Other than Government Motions. Is there anyone? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity this afternoon to provide some comments around Motion 503, a motion that I am very happy to also support. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-City Centre bringing us down a little bit of history of why this motion has now come forward and how we have an advocate for seniors that – the voice has been watered down. The reason I say that: it kind of reminds me of back in the days when I used to work for Lucerne ice cream.

The plant was situated in between two of the Macdonalds Consolidated warehouses. The decision, of course, was made, you know, long before I was ever there, to bargain at the same time because of the location. Now, having participated in a couple of different negotiating sessions, one of the things I noticed during that time – and do I think anybody was doing it on purpose? No. It was just simply a reality that when you had all these warehouses and all these employees and the ice cream plant with 30, it was very, very difficult to get our points of what we needed to see changed or added or deleted from a contract based on everything else that was going along.

I lost count of the number of times that I would tell the negotiator from the other side: “You know, that’s great language. That’s going to work in the warehouse where they’re picking orders, but I don’t pick orders at ice cream. I palletize it, and then we put it onto a truck. End of story.” I’d eventually have the negotiator from the company saying: “Oh, yeah. I guess you’re right. Maybe we need to do something different for you guys.” You think?

The whole purpose of bringing forward the Seniors Advocate was to provide that voice for seniors, specifically for seniors’ issues. I get it. Health issues affect seniors. I get it. But there are so many other things.

You know, like my friend from Edmonton-City Centre who has had a lot of contact with seniors, because of some of the organizations that I have in Edmonton-Decore, I have a significant interaction with seniors in north Edmonton, not just in my own riding of Edmonton-Decore but from others across north Edmonton, and I did not hear one senior tell me over the course of my years that we need to come up with a way to water down voices for seniors. If anything, it’s been the opposite. We need a stronger voice for seniors. We need a clearer voice for seniors.

Like my friend from Edmonton-City Centre said, now we’ve got somebody who’s wearing three hats, and that is simply getting watered down. I’m not going to reiterate the whole point that he made around the partisanship appointment.

You know, it also kind of reminds me of Sobeys coming in and taking over Canada Safeway. They never did like the Safeway brand. They were always competing. And – surprise, surprise – over the course of the time I’ve seen the Safeway stores disappearing or becoming FreshCo.

They’re trying to get rid – so, you know, how do you go about it? Well, you simply water down the whole situation, and that’s what we have; hence, why we’re here with Motion 503, to try to bring the voices of seniors, the ones that built the province – we’re all benefiting from that, every single person in this House – and bringing those voices to the forefront because not only do they deserve it; they have earned it. We have done them a disservice back in 2019 by removing that specific voice and rolling it in with the Health Advocate and then adding another thing and, as my friend from Edmonton-City Centre said, made it almost impossible to find somebody with all those qualifications.

Perhaps that was actually the intention, just as I was alluding to with Safeway and FreshCo stores. You create a situation so that you can just simply say: “Well, this whole process isn’t working. We can’t possibly find anybody; we’ll just appoint someone.” Now all of a sudden we have an opportunity to start making partisan appointments in a position that should not be. It should be a stand-alone office that reports to the people of Alberta, presents a report, just like we have with other offices.

I get it, all the red tape reduction and everything like that, but at what point do you start making reductions to the disadvantage of people? That’s exactly what occurred in 2019, trying to be more efficient: oh, a one-stop shop. It’s done a disservice to our seniors.

You know, I must admit, Mr. Speaker, I was a little frustrated listening to the former minister of seniors patting herself on the back and the government on the back for all the work that they’ve done for seniors. If everything has been so rosy, why, when I’m talking with seniors or they’re coming to my office, are they showing me how their lives have gotten more difficult? Their insurance costs have gone up, their property taxes have gone up, their utilities have gone up, making life more difficult. But now they’re on a fixed income at the same time.

5:50

As was mentioned earlier, you know, making changes so that going to get an exam for the driver’s licence – that’s one of the biggest things I hear. I’m so grateful we’ve gotten to a place where people are living longer, they’re able to stay at home longer, be independent, but having a vehicle: that is really, really true independence. I’ve heard a lot of stories – it breaks my heart – where, unfortunately, a doctor has to tell someone: it’s no longer safe for you to drive. It’s absolutely heartbreaking. But here we are telling people who aren’t in that situation: well, you have to pay for that. You’ve raised their costs so much that now $85 or $150 is now becoming a barrier, and a Seniors Advocate would have told you that very clearly.

Mr. Nally: They would’ve told us that the carbon tax is a bigger barrier.

Mr. Nielsen: I’m happy to see the minister of red tape get up and participate in this discussion rather than just chirping on the other side. Maybe you should start advocating for your seniors and stop having them pay to get their driver’s licence exams.

Mr. Nally: Join us in pushing back on the carbon tax.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we need to have a Seniors Advocate despite the minister of red tape thinking he has all the answers and a bag of chips.

I’m voting in favour of Motion 503. The seniors of Edmonton-Decore deserve it, the seniors of north Edmonton deserve it, and I’m going to bet dollars to doughnuts that the seniors in Alberta deserve it. If not, well, maybe there’ll be a change, then, on May 29 and they’ll elect a government that will bring in a Seniors Advocate, that will make their voices a priority, that will say: you deserve to have a stand-alone voice to help advocate to make your lives better.

I certainly look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Motion Other than Government Motion 503. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has approximately three minutes.

Member Irwin: Oh, my goodness. Okay. Well, I better pack a lot into that three minutes.

You know, I did pause there for a minute because, as everyone in this Chamber is aware, there has been a whole heck of a lot of heckling from the other side yet a lack of willingness from said members, like the minister for red tape and Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, to name a few, to actually join debate. As my colleague from Edmonton-Decore so aptly stated, it would be nice, you know, if they are that concerned about seniors in their constituencies – that they’d stand up and speak for them.

I can tell you, speaking of seniors in other constituencies, I was actually door-knocking – I know the members opposite love when I tell door-knocking stories – in Red Deer just two weeks ago in a seniors’ complex, one with external entrances; we weren’t going indoors. I was a little concerned when they said that’s where we were going. I thought: okay; this will be interesting, a Red Deer seniors’ complex. I can tell you that it was really overwhelming, the support that we were getting, people who were identifying as long-time conservatives expressing their concern about this government's plans for health care. [interjection] Again, for those folks watching at home, I'm being heckled relentlessly here by Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland, so it would be nice if maybe he stood up and joined debate for once.

The point being that we are hearing from seniors all across this province who are fed up with this UCP government for so many reasons, but I can tell you – health care, long-term care, lack of affordability measures, as my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre so aptly pointed out. He's heard from seniors who are being left out of this government's affordability plans. I've heard from seniors as well. I've got a number of seniors' complexes in my own riding of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and I'm not kidding when I say that those seniors are absolutely, absolutely fed up with this government.

That's why I'm so proud to support my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview's motion, seniors affordability and Seniors Advocate. You know, she talked a little bit about the work that she did in government.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of the motion other than government motion to close debate, I invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to do such now.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, of course, encourage all of the members in this Legislature to vote in support of Motion 503, seniors affordability and Seniors Advocate. Certainly, I've been very thankful to my colleagues on this side of the House for the thoughtful arguments and comments they've made and why indeed it is such a significant – why it is so important that seniors do have an advocate, because they are being absolutely left behind by this government.

I must say that I was kind of – incredulous, I think, is the most polite word I can give you for what the former minister of seniors and housing shared, the Member for Calgary-Beddington. She just repeated the same misinformation she has throughout, even though I demonstrated in my comments earlier that what she said was not accurate. She proclaimed very profoundly that she was the Seniors Advocate.

I just want to perhaps do some education here. Political science 101: in a constitutional democracy you have checks and balances. The fundamental elements of a constitutional democracy prevent the unconstrained exercise of power. That's meant to improve decision-making and ensure that mechanisms exist for preventing or penalizing unethical behaviour. It helps the public maintain confidence in the political system, and the government has a responsibility to uphold them. Checks and balances distribute power, preventing any one institution or individual from exercising undue control.

So the minister proclaiming that she is the Seniors Advocate, of course, puts all the power in the position of one, and that is completely against what a constitutional democracy says. This is poli-sci 101 for the minister, just to help her. She cannot be the Seniors Advocate. An independent office is meant to... [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order.

Ms Sigurdson: An independent office, in this case the Seniors Advocate, actually oversees, maybe challenges, questions, helps make better decisions about what is in the best interests of seniors. So, you know, I just would like the now Member for Calgary-Beddington to perhaps do a little bit of her own homework so she understands what a constitutional democracy is. She cannot be the Seniors Advocate. That flies in the face of what this role, this office is all about.

I guess just another thing that's completely obvious, I'm sure, to anybody who's watching today or anybody who knows anything: the public confidence is so important to having a good democratic process where people are engaged, they care about the institutions that govern them, there's high voter turnout, all those things. But the UCP doesn't seem to understand that the decisions that they make erode the public confidence, like the termination of this office, like appointing a partisan, Janice Harrington, to that position, someone who has absolutely no qualifications. It's disgusting. The UCP just is cavalier, and they don't seem to respect and understand this at all, and for me that is disturbing.

That is absolutely why this motion should be passed, because there's no respect on the other side. They don't see this as an important issue. They just think they can do what they want, when they want, and they cannot. So I do commend all members of this House to have some level of respect for this institution and actually vote in favour of a motion that's going to strengthen our democracy, not further erode it like the UCP does each time they make bad decision after bad decision. An independent office of the Seniors Advocate would go a long way to mitigate some of the things the UCP has done to denigrate – denigrate – this institution. I'm sorry that the former minister, the Member for Calgary-Beddington, is completely ignorant of this element...

Mr. Rutherford: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is called. The hon. the government whip.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), and (j) this is language that is going to create disorder. It's been pretty borderline for the last few minutes, but to call another member ignorant, I think, absolutely requires an apology and a retraction.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was listening with great interest because it was obviously a lot of passion, and I don't believe that the member was calling another member ignorant but was talking about knowledge of a specific issue. That is what I was hearing as she kept reiterating democracy 101 and trying to make the point that a Seniors Advocate is critical for this province and for moving forward. But I leave it to your good judgment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order. If I needed your help, I would ask for it.

I am of the opinion – and while it was difficult to know what the remainder of the sentence may have been, it is very apparent that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview said that the now Member for Calgary-Beddington is ignorant. It's possible she could have provided some clarifying statements about content. I would say that that language is always likely to create disorder, and as such she can apologize and withdraw.

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

There are 15 seconds remaining.

Debate Continued

Ms Sigurdson: I just want to ask again all my colleagues in the House to vote in favour of this motion. Of course, we want to support seniors in our province, and voting positively on this motion would go a long way to doing that.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, March 7, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, this morning I had the privilege to meet with a very special guest who now joins us in the Speaker's gallery. Please welcome the consul general of Japan, Mr. Watabe; his wife, Mrs. Watabe; Mr. Wakasugi, the consul, economics, consulate of Japan; and the honorary consul general of Japan in Edmonton, Dr. Bilash. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has a school to introduce.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to all members of the Legislature some of the smartest and hardest working school students in the entire province of Alberta, those being the students from Clara Tyner elementary school, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. I ask them, if they're in the galleries, to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you, Mr. Speaker, students from Garneau school, situated in the fabulous riding of Edmonton-Strathcona. Many of them have already written letters to my office and to others this year advocating for specific changes to make their school an even better place, and I'm sure that they're learning lots about advocacy while they're here this week. Please rise, students from Garneau, and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the other members of this House an amazing school from the best riding in this province. That's Morinville-St. Albert. It's the grade 6 kids from Lois E. Hole elementary school. Please rise and receive the welcome of the House.

Budget 2023 and Calgary

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, as a proud Calgarian I know that this province's largest city is a wonderful place to live, full of ambitious, forward-looking people. But I also know that they've faced some tough times recently. Today our schools are bursting at the seams, and our downtown office vacancy rate stands at 32.6 per cent. Here's what troubles me: 21 UCP MLAs represent Calgary constituencies, nearly half of the Premier's cabinet are from Calgary, but with 8,000 new students expected this fall, how many Calgary schools does this government plan to build? One. And with a budget swelled by massive royalty revenues, what have they found for Calgary's downtown? Nothing whatsoever. Zero dollars. An insult.

Mr. Speaker, this budget is a betrayal of Calgary, but the truth is that we already know that this Premier doesn't care about Calgary. In fact, her Finance minister is on record saying that the UCP government should do nothing to support Calgary's downtown. No, what really troubles me is this: silence, silence from Calgary UCP MLAs while this Premier speculates about moves that will effectively cancel the green line, silence from Calgary's entire UCP caucus while the Premier does nothing to address our desperate need for schools, and silence from the UCP cabinet ministers in Calgary while the Premier neglects Calgary's downtown. Did they not notice, or do they just not care?

I'm glad to say that Alberta's NDP caucus does have an ambitious plan to build schools in our city and to support Calgary's downtown. Our plan is freely available on albertasfuture.ca. That's a plan we'll offer to Calgarians in just a few short weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Child and Youth Mental Health Supports

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I was pleased to join the Premier, the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction, and the Minister of Technology and Innovation for an announcement to partner with CASA Mental Health to significantly expand youth mental health supports. CASA Mental Health is an important organization within the Sherwood Park community, and they are leaders in delivering child and youth centred mental health services. They have the experience, expertise, and passion needed to truly make a difference in the lives of children, youth, and their families.

Mr. Speaker, if passed, Budget 2023 will provide record-level funding to the Ministry of Mental Health and Addiction. This includes a proposed $92 million over three years for CASA Mental Health to provide critical mental health supports for children and youth. This proposed investment would allow for CASA Mental Health to expand four programs, helping more than 700 additional young Albertans every year and making a monumental impact on the lives of children from right across our province.

Mr. Speaker, everyone in Alberta, including our children and youth, deserves the opportunity to access mental health supports and treatment, pursue recovery, and live a healthy life. We know that with the right support and care recovery is possible for everyone. I am pleased that Alberta's government has identified Sherwood Park's CASA Mental Health as a leader in this field, and I am extremely confident that the work they do will play an important role as our government continues to build a recovery-oriented system of care, where everyone struggling with mental health is supported in their pursuit of recovery.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm seeing two in one. The hon. Member for Sherwood Park has a statement to make.

Alberta-Japan Relations

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to recognize and celebrate Alberta-Japan relations. The relationship is strong and will only grow stronger. Formally, diplomatic relations between Canada and Japan began in 1929, and a Japanese consulate has been in Alberta since 1967. The Alberta government's oldest international office is in Tokyo and opened in 1970. As well, Alberta has had a vibrant sister province relationship with Hokkaido since 1980, and many Alberta municipalities have sister city relations with Japanese municipalities.

Beyond formal ties, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta-Japan relationship is robust, with many Alberta educational institutions having relations with Japanese institutions, including the U of A, the U of C, and the U of L as well as secondary schools. As well, thousands of Albertans are of Japanese ancestry. Economically Japan is Alberta's third-largest trading partner, with energy, agriculture, and forestry products being the top commodities. Culturally Alberta and Hokkaido's associations maintain close ties.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta-Japan relationship prospers due to durable foundations, shared interests and values. On energy and food security we are perfect partners, Alberta as a supplier of reliable, high-quality products and Japan as a market and investor in these important sectors. Make no mistake: both Alberta and Japan have condemned Russia's unlawful invasion of Ukraine, which has made energy and food security even more salient for Japan. Alberta can and should be Japan's reliable provider of these products.

Alberta and Japan are both open societies, too, committed to democracy, human rights, and the rule of law as well as a stable world order that includes a free and open Indo-Pacific region. Mr. Speaker, Alberta and Japan have had relations for more than a century. It is a relationship built on shared interests, values, and friendship. I look forward to the next 100 years of this beautiful relationship.

[Remarks in Japanese]

Health Care System

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, this UCP government and Premier are desperate to convince Albertans that there is no crisis in health care. They are desperate to convince Albertans that somehow they have solved the crisis that took them four years to create in just 90 days. But I have some sad news for the members opposite: there is a crisis in health care, and while you try to spin it, Albertans are living with it.

Albertans are living with the consequences of calling for an ambulance, only to be told that either they don't need one or that one isn't coming. They are faced with spending days sitting in ER rooms waiting for medical attention. Albertans are faced with long waits for cancer treatment, with people waiting months in fear and pain just to see the oncologist. These are just some of the experiences Albertans are living with, and while the Premier might not accept them, the Albertans experiencing them deserve to be listened to.

But while the Premier plans to unfurl the mission accomplished banner rather than hearing what Albertans are experiencing, our caucus heard Albertans, did the work, and put forward a real solution, a real plan for 1 million Albertans to get access to a family doctor and a family health team. We're ready to get moving on this right away and start hiring family health team members into existing clinics. Albertans will soon get to choose a government with a real plan to get their family the care they need, when they need it, right near home.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North has risen.

Support for Türkiye and Syria

Mr. Yaseen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past several weeks multiple earthquakes and tremors have devastated parts of Türkiye and Syria. To date these earthquakes have resulted in the loss of more than 50,000 lives, and the number is growing as recovery efforts continue. Complete city blocks have been levelled, and key infrastructure has been rendered useless. As the people of Türkiye and Syria try to move on from this devastating tragedy, they find themselves in a humanitarian crisis. People are without food, water, medical supplies, hygiene products, and other essentials that are needed to recover from natural disasters such as this one.

The people of Türkiye and Syria, Mr. Speaker, need our help. I am proud to see that our government has stepped up and responded to the urgent need for humanitarian aid in Türkiye and Syria. Yesterday a joint news release was sent out notifying the public that Alberta's government will be matching donations to the Red Cross of up to $1 million to help the people of Türkiye and Syria. Albertans are caring and giving people. We rally to help our neighbours down the street or complete strangers on the other side of the globe. Albertans rallied together when Calgary and other communities flooded in 2013. We rallied when flood waters washed through a third of Pakistan in 2022. We rallied when fire ripped through Fort McMurray and surrounding areas in 2016, and we answered the call for help when a deadly explosion occurred in a port in Beirut in 2020.

It is in our blood to help, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are very giving and caring people, with huge compassion for others. I encourage all Albertans to help the people of Türkiye and Syria by donating to the Canadian Red Cross. Please visit redcross.ca to donate generously.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Canada Pension Plan

Ms Phillips: The UCP Finance minister recently told the news media there will be a referendum about gambling away Albertans' retirement savings in 2024. Well, I've got news for him: there's a little event between then and now; it's called an election. That's when Albertans get to vote on the UCP scheme to gamble with your CPP pension. All those contributions made to your pension since your first jobs as teenagers are at stake on May 29, 2023. Will that money, that is yours, still be there for you, or will it be gambled and wasted by an untrustworthy Premier?

On May 29 it'll be Albertans, not the UCP Premier, that will decide whether they can count on the money they saved in CPP contributions to help them retire in dignity. On May 29 it'll be Alberta employers that decide whether they want to pay higher premiums to bankroll the Premier's separatist fever dreams. On May 29 it'll be Alberta's seniors who decide whether they want to hand over the management of their monthly CPP cheque to a Premier whose lapses in judgment are well known, including that time she looked straight into a camera just a few months ago and argued that we should all pay to see a family doctor.

Albertans do not trust the UCP to mess around with their CPP, yet the Premier presses on. She said that some of our CPP could be used to pay for her UCP police force or for a new UCP tax collection agency so that we can all file our taxes twice. Let me be crystal clear for Albertans: the Alberta NDP will defend your retirement security. Your retirement savings are yours. They don't belong to any politician. Albertans can count on the Alberta NDP to protect their CPP.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has a statement to make.

UCP and NDP Government Records

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the UCP's first of many terms in government nears its end, a balanced 2023 budget is evidence of this government's success on behalf of Albertans. In the wake of unprecedented global events Alberta has emerged in an extremely strong position. Our economy is flourishing. We have more than replaced the 183,000 jobs driven out of Alberta by the NDP when they were in government. Diversification is real under the UCP government, with several sectors blossoming, including IT, film and television, agricultural processing, and aeronautics. Calgary is now attracting talent from across Canada and beyond to a diverse and thriving job-creating environment. The NDP once had a minister advise Albertans to go to B.C. to find a job.

Our government and our budget exemplify the strong position Alberta is in right now. Allocations to support those still struggling and incentives to bring even more business and investment to our province are included. While the NDP pays lip service to struggling Alberta families, it was they who did more than anyone to cause the problems. They partnered with Justin Trudeau to crush our largest industry and drive out a hundred billion dollars in investment. They helped Trudeau kill Energy East and Northern Gateway, which could now be providing responsible energy to Europe rather than our allies being held hostage by Putin's war machine.

Campaign NDP talks about making life affordable for Albertans. They want us to forget that government NDP raised electricity costs from 3 cents to somehow bragging about 6.8 cents, and now it's over 10. Albertans know this UCP government has helped replace the jobs lost, bring back the industries crushed, and brought responsible money management back to Alberta. Albertans know that staying warm in the winter is not a bad thing, as the NDP made it seem. They know that driving to work to support their family is a contribution to Alberta and Canada, not an assault on the environment. This government encourages expansion of transit but will not tell rural Albertans to take a bus that doesn't exist.

Albertans will not be fooled. After four years of the NDP making life worse, they have a very stark choice, with a government that cares about them and their families.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies as chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This is the appropriate number of copies for the 2022 annual report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and with this, I'd also like to pass on my thanks to all the staff who supported the Public Accounts Committee for the last four years and all the various deputy chairs, including the hon. members for Livingstone-Macleod, Calgary-Fish Creek, and Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship I'm pleased to present on behalf of the committee the appropriate number of copies of the committee's report on a presentation by southern Alberta alternative energy partnership and Energy Futures Lab on February 2, 2023.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, sponsored by the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Bill 8 Alberta Firearms Act

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, Bill 8, being the Alberta Firearms Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time is now 1:50, and that makes it Oral Question Period. The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Budget 2023 and Calgary Sexual Assault Services Funding

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it is all of our jobs to make sure that Calgary's economic future is secure. Revitalizing the downtown is a top priority, and my team has put forward a bold plan taking the best ideas from the mayor, the Chamber, and many others. The UCP, however, seems to have stopped opening their mail. Yesterday the Premier said that she didn't receive a priority list from the mayor for the downtown, but the mayor says that she sent it in November. To the Premier: on what date did she receive that list, when did she first read it, and why did she make that unfounded claim yesterday?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The letter wasn't brought to my attention, but it was forwarded to the Minister of Finance, and I'm pleased to see that many of the items that were recommended by the city of Calgary were included in our budget such as increased funding for FCSS; $541 million for LRT projects, including an amount that will allow us to extend the line to the airport; $282 million for the Springbank off-stream reservoir project; $15 million for the Repsol sport centre; $59.2 million for the Glenbow Museum revitalization; and, of course, year-over-year increase in MSI funding that will take it up to $258.6 million by '25-26. I'm delighted to work more with the mayor.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, more than half of the items they keep listing for Calgary are projects that we started, so one party in this Assembly has Calgary's interests in mind.

Now, yesterday the Premier also claimed that Alberta sexual assault centres refused – her word – a $4.2 million investment, a strange story. Later we learned they didn't actually refuse it; they just didn't think it was enough. Now, while this budget has $30 million for a war room, can the Premier please tell us why it was her who actually refused to fully fund supports for survivors of sexual assault, not them refusing to take the money?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the $17.1 million this year is going to be spent on sexual assault centres. That's a 25 per cent increase over the past five years. Now, our government did offer $4.2 million in additional funding, which was not accepted by the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. If they've changed their mind, we'd be more than happy to have them contact our minister of social services so that we can cut the cheque and we can get started on making sure that services are given to the women as they need them.

Ms Notley: Doubling down, I guess.

You know, in one press conference yesterday the Premier intentionally provided inaccurate information to Albertans twice. That's a light day for her. She did receive a priority list from Calgary, and she declined to support the downtown. Advocates for survivors of sexual assault did not refuse funding; rather, she walked away when they told her it wasn't enough. Will the Premier admit that her statements yesterday were not accurate, that her statement today was not accurate, apologize to this House, and then reverse both of those decisions?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, we stand ready to give the $4.2 million to the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services. If they'd like to contact the minister, we'd be happy to cut the cheque for them.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her second set of questions.

Emergency Medical Services

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, yesterday we discussed an e-mail about an off-loading policy for paramedics in ERs, one that staff described as unsafe. Today the Parkland Institute released a report with descriptions from paramedics describing the hardship it causes. "I've seen nurses that I've known for years cry because they don't know what they're gonna do . . . People have died in the waiting rooms . . . They need somebody to be there taking care of them." So to the Premier: is moral injury the new mandate in EMS? Yes or no?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're delighted the Parkland Institute is catching up with us four months after the fact when we already began the process of making changes back on November 17. We knew that the issues were as acute as had been described because of the great work that the MLA for Highwood had done, going all over this province, talking to front-line workers, developing 98 recommendations for how we needed to implement and make change. We've released both of the reports publicly, and we've begun the process of making sure that we have more efficient off-load. As a result of that, we expect by the end of March that we're going to be reaching the 45-minute drop-off target.

Ms Notley: Every time she answers this question, her answer changes, and it's so confusing because the front-line staff are clearly under the impression that what's going to happen is that they're going to be mandated to do this, and they believe that all across Calgary. Now, it's my job to be their voice in this House.

She claims it's not a mandate; it's a target, but maybe it isn't a target. She claims she's hiring hundreds of nurses, all in just eight days. These folks deserve clarity. Will the Premier commit that there will be no changes to off-loading until every single nurse she claims she can hire in eight days is hired, trained, and on-site in the ER?

Ms Smith: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's incumbent in this Chamber for all of us to give true information to the public so that they are not made fearful by misinformation and false allegations. I'm quite happy to say that I have had a conversation with Dr. John Cowell, and the e-mail in question is patently untrue. It is irresponsible of the Leader of the Opposition to continue pretending it is true. There are 114 full-time equivalent nursing staff being hired as we speak who'll be stationed in all 16 of our acute-care hospitals. There will never be a case of a person being dropped off without care.

Ms Notley: Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? Dr. Cowell's so-called solutions are never always what they claim to be. For instance, AHS recently touted funding for 19 new ambulances. However, in a recent media story Calgary-area paramedics told us that staff are actually being told to park the old ambulances and then take out the new ones. "On paper, we can say every day the new ambulances were staffed, but they're actively dropping [trucks] . . . off the board." Can the Premier please explain how Dr. Cowell asking staff to switch trucks somehow puts more trucks onto the road?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are going to judge the performance of the system by their experience in it. Last January we had over a thousand incidents in Edmonton where we were on the red alert, where there were not ambulances available. This year, after all the reforms that we have so far made, that was down to about 80. That's a 90 per cent reduction, and we had similar success in Calgary. Year over year the number of red alerts are down 60 per cent. That is a sign of a system that is working, because we're empowering paramedics on the front line so that they can treat on-site and also make sure that we have effective drop-off.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is next.

Energy Company Liability

Ms Ganley: Twenty billion dollars: it's roughly the entire health care budget, also the amount that this Premier plans to give away to companies to clean up their own liabilities. Yesterday I visited Airdrie and Red Deer. Residents in these cities are facing ER closures, ambulance shortages, and can't get the medical care they deserve. Why is this Premier more focused on giving away billions of dollars of Albertans' money instead of addressing the real issues facing the people of this province?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that information is just, quite frankly, false. Our Energy minister is consulting on a number of different initiatives for us to address the outstanding liability to clean up inactive well sites. We know that that amount has now gone up to $30 billion, and it's why our government took action. The members opposite didn't take action when they were in the position. We are now cleaning up every single year $740 million – $740 million – in existing liability that comes out of the companies' own profits.

Ms Ganley: I'd love to know when the people of Alberta are going to see these other projects.

The Premier claims that her giveaway is only a pilot program worth $100 million, likely a down payment on the $20 billion, but coincidentally that's the same amount Calgary requested in the budget to support its struggling downtown. But they got nothing. Meanwhile Calgary has the highest office vacancy rate in the country, and the number of head offices has gone down under the UCP. Why is this Premier ignoring Calgary while giving billions of dollars to her friends?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the members opposite have any credibility when they're talking about hollowing out the downtown office core in Calgary. We had 13 consecutive quarters where people left this province, and their Energy minister at the time said that their job-creation plan was: go get a job in British Columbia. We only had $30 million worth of venture capital investment; we're up to $729 million a year. And a lot of those head offices and those expansions are happening where? In Calgary. An 8 per cent corporate income tax is to credit for that.

Ms Ganley: Let's talk about credibility, Mr. Speaker. This Premier tries to claim that her $20 billion giveaway is just a pilot project and that no decisions have been made until after the election. But the organizers for this scam: one of them runs a third-party attack ad on the NDP, another one campaigned for the Premier during her leadership contest and now works in her office, and the third is the Premier herself. Why is the Premier hiding the details of her giveaway? Is it because she knows it makes Tory land look like Disneyland?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I will not hide the fact that I believe it's a priority for this government to clean up the $30 billion of liability that have been created over the years because of inactive wells, and we are going to take every measure to make sure that we do it. We have $740 million being cleaned up this year, and part of the reason companies have the ability to do that is because we reduced the corporate income tax rate down to 8 per cent. They increased it: 12 per cent. So when they're talking about caring about Calgary, I can tell you that's no way to attract businesses into downtown Calgary. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

2:00 Budget 2023 and Lethbridge

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, imagine the mayor of Lethbridge's surprise last week when he told the media that he thought there was a page missing from the budget. People in Lethbridge could not believe our city got nothing in the budget. My question is simple. To the Premier: why is there $20 billion for friends and insiders but nothing for families in Lethbridge?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is hilarious to hear this from the member opposite when, in fact, if she had looked at the budget, she'd realize that just capital spending alone, just this budget: $70.6 million on top of previous years' $165 million of just capital spending, not to mention that just yesterday I had the honour of spending the day with the minister of seniors and community services announcing $355 million in programming for the disability and homeless sector. More than proud to stand up for Lethbridge, more than proud to stand up for our government.

Thank you.

Ms Phillips: Well, the budget has no details for expansion of cardiology services in Lethbridge. The project has been on AHS's radar since 2018, when we committed to it. Several years later, with advocacy from physicians and the city council, Lethbridge still got nothing. One cannot find a family doctor accepting new patients, and there's no plan to address that either. Why is the Premier ignoring access to health care, any kind of health care, really, from primary care to advanced cardiac care? Is it because she would just rather that we pay to see a doctor?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Again thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If the member opposite had done her homework, she'd realize that Alberta Health Services south zone didn't even put the cath lab on the capital list until 2022, let alone that it was never put on the priority list, so the Minister of Health never received that. Hard to fund a project that was never asked for in the first place. I'd like to see – what did that member do when she had four years in government to invest in health care in Lethbridge? Absolutely nothing.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The hon. members will come to order.

Ms Phillips: I guess we'll have to see what kind of documents actually exist for that.

The city and county of Lethbridge identified a number of critical investments in water and waste water, the replacement of highway 3 bridge, new investments in housing, yet nothing. Let's see: nothing for infrastructure despite having the Infrastructure minister in the city, nothing for health care despite having one of the worst health care crises in the province, nothing for housing despite homelessness doubling since 2019. To the Deputy Premier and the Infrastructure minister. He does realize that it's his job to be the voice for Lethbridge in government, not to just seal-clap for government talking points in Lethbridge. He does realize that, right?

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, if they'd done their homework, they'd realize that capital investment in this budget: $70.6 million, new projects, new schools, new gymnasium for a school, but she couldn't get that gym done in 20 years. We authored $25 million additional spending for health care, surgical initiatives, the renal dialysis program, which was a priority put forward by the Alberta Health Services south zone. On top of that, more infrastructure, the agrifood tax credit, which will be a huge benefit to the south as that's where we not only grow food but we process it and ship it all over the world. More than happy with this budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Child and Youth Mental Health Supports

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. CASA Mental Health is a vital part of the Edmonton region and a leader in delivering youth mental health services across the province, and that is why I was pleased to see our government partner with them to expand mental health treatment for youth across Alberta. To the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction: could you please inform the House about the government's partnership with CASA Mental Health and the impact that this announcement has on families here in this region?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member, of course, for that very important question. You know, every person in Alberta certainly deserves the opportunity to access mental health supports, access and pursue recovery, and live a happy and healthy life. If passed, Budget 2023 will invest $92 million over three years to provide critical mental health supports for children and youth across Alberta in partnership with CASA Mental Health. This is an enormous investment in children's mental health, and on this side of the House we support.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for his answer. Given that CASA House is based in Sherwood Park and has proven results providing youth mental health services and given that no child should go without the help and support they need to live healthy and happy lives regardless of where they live in the province and given that Alberta's government is dramatically expanding services to support more young Albertans in their pursuit of recovery, can the minister please elaborate on the government's plan to expand CASA House programming to other cities here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member again for the question. As part of the $92 million investment into CASA Mental Health, $25 million is going to go towards capital projects in Fort McMurray and in Calgary to expand CASA House services to those cities. CASA House is a live-in program for youth, for grades 7 to 12, where their parents and caregivers can activate and participate in treatment. It's all-inclusive, and it's something that CASA is very proud of, the work that they have been doing in expansion to help more young Albertans with complex mental health needs. It's something that's very important on this side of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Budget 2023 includes record-level investments for the newly established Ministry of Mental Health and Addiction and given that provincial funding for this ministry has more than doubled since the members opposite were in power and given that the $92 million investment to expand CASA Mental Health services will make life-changing impacts on young Albertans right across the province, can the minister please inform this House how yesterday's announcement fits into the province's recovery-oriented system of care?

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much. You know, of course, this is unprecedented, the amount of money that we're spending to support children with mental health issues, Mr. Speaker. The funding alongside this record-setting $275 million investment to the Ministry of Mental Health and Addiction builds on an ongoing effort to remove barriers and make high-quality mental health care accessible to everyone. On this side of House it's about ensuring that we have mental health supports that are accessible and affordable for all Albertans.

Thank you.

Health Care System Capacity

Mr. Shepherd: The Premier's recent claim that our health care system is not in crisis was an insult to every health care worker in our province who's been mistreated and unsupported by this government, and they were quick to say so. Dr. Neeja Bakshi said: "I woke up to [over] 120% capacity for internal medicine for the 18th month in a row and [that's] dangerously close to saying we can no longer safely admit patients – but sure. It's no longer in crisis." She says: "Morale is very, very low . . . The front liners can tell [this Premier], that things have not changed, things are exactly the same." To her: who should Albertans trust, the workers on the front lines saving lives or a Premier desperate to save her job?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We know that we have challenges in health care. That's why I am so pleased that part of this budget, Budget 2023 – we are investing nearly another billion dollars, the record amount ever, to be able to expand capacity within our health care system and hire more people to support the delivery of health care services. We are making progress in getting the times down. I was very pleased to be standing with Dr. Cowell and our Premier to make the announcement of the 90-day report, getting wait times down in terms of EMS, emergency departments, and I'll talk more about that in a second.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, given that regarding wait times, Mr. Speaker – Sheila Ethier is a nurse advocating for her husband, who has stage 4 lung cancer. She's on a mission to get Brian treated as quickly as possible, but given that Sheila has worked the phones daily since his diagnosis but recently sent us a note saying that they're resigned to the wait, that there's nothing they can do about the backlog in Edmonton and Calgary due to the severe staff shortages caused in good part by the UCP, will the Premier or this minister apologize to Sheila and Brian and all Albertans who are waiting for treatment for their failure to be truthful about what Albertans are experiencing in our health care system?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, my heart goes out to all Albertans who are sitting on the wait list and many of them who are waiting in pain. There are levels of uncertainty. This is a problem in Alberta. This is a problem, quite frankly, across the entire country and most of the First World. COVID demonstrated the cracks that already existed in our system. Unfortunately, patients were waiting far too long even under the previous government, but we are taking action to address that. You know, very pleased, again, that as part of the 90-day report our surgery wait-list is coming down. In November it was 39,246, and as of January 2023: 35,595 waiting at a time. That is still too high, but we are making investments to be able to get that number . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that this government hammered on the cracks until they split wide open and given that in her president's letter to Alberta Medical Association members on March 3 Dr. Rinaldi wrote:

It's . . . important to note the crisis is far from over. Members are seeing unchanged pressures in the ER and ER closures continue at various rural sites. In my own practice, I have noticed no change in the lengthy wait to see a specialist and many Albertans are still unable to find a family physician.

Given that there are dozens of hospitals partially closed due to staff shortages, will this Premier, this minister take some responsibility, admit they were wrong, acknowledge the very real crisis in health care in Alberta?

2:10

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I noted, there are challenges in our health care system. As part of Budget 2022 we allocated an additional $600 million in that budget year; $1.8 billion over three years; this budget year, as I already indicated, nearly an addition billion dollars on top of that. We know we have challenges in our system, and we are addressing them. Again, very pleased, as part of the 90-day report, that the trend lines are heading in the right direction in terms of surgery wait-lists, EMS wait times, and ED wait times, but I recognize we need to do more. We have a plan to do it, and we're delivering on that plan.

Child Care Cost-control Framework

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, last month the UCP quietly released their cost-control framework for child care, but when asked about it at a press conference, not one of the three UCP ministers there wanted to or could answer questions about it. Why? Because they don't want Alberta parents to know that under their plan parents won't ever be paying only $10 a day for child care. Parents will be paying extra fees for, quote, enhanced services. What's an enhanced service? Well, food – snacks and meals – language and inclusion supports, a puppet performance, an art class, things that should be part of every early childhood program. Will the minister admit he wants to nickel and dime Alberta parents at the expense of their kids' early learning?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, I am incredibly proud about the progress that we made with respect to the cost-control framework, and we're working diligently with our federal counterparts to make sure that parents in this province have the choice of what type of daycare they want to provide for their children. This cost-control framework program will allow all daycare operators to flourish in this province while keeping daycare in this province affordable for all parents as well.

Thank you.

Ms Pancholi: Given that the UCP's plan means children of parents who can't afford to pay these so-called extras will be left out of meals, field trips, activities, which is heartbreaking and callous, and given that for-profit and nonprofit child care operators are all saying that this goes against everything they know about early childhood education and that it isn't even practical to separate kids from each other because of staffing requirements, how does the minister plan to implement this framework in April since he hasn't consulted with operators or been up front with parents? Or is he waiting until after the election so we have to clean up his mess for him?

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, we're doing exactly that. We're taking our time to get this right, unlike the failed program of the NDP, the $25-a-day pilot program, which was an incredible failure. We're taking the opportunity to get it right by consulting and engaging with all stakeholders in this province, including our daycare providers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Pancholi: Given that working parents using out of school care are currently paying more for one to two hours of child care than some parents using full-day child care and given that since Budget 2023 doesn't include even a dollar more from the province for child care, the UCP is continuing to exclude these parents from affordable child care and given that the Alberta NDP has been clear that we will include out of school care – we will not ask parents to pay more for quality child care, and we will consult and value all operators and educators. Three UCP ministers have failed Alberta families on child care, but Albertans will get to make a different choice soon. Is the minister ready to admit that the NDP is the party to make affordable quality child care . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, the mere thought of an NDP government with respect to our daycare providers in this province strikes fear in all of our providers. Their failed program was proof positive that they cannot manage the daycare program in this province. This government is providing affordable daycare. This government is providing a sustainable daycare model for our providers in this province, and we'll continue to do so into the next election and beyond. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore is next.

Budget 2023 and Calgary

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a Calgarian and the owner of a family business in downtown Calgary for 32 years, I've seen downtown Calgary both struggle and grow. Today Calgary is coming back as investments pour back into the city. In fact, according to a recent Avison Young report vacancy rates in downtown Calgary are dropping for the first time in years. To the Minister of Finance: why was the situation in downtown Calgary so dire under the previous government, and what is this government doing to turn things around?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs has risen.

Ms Schulz: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We'll take a walk down memory lane to when the NDP jacked up the business tax, refused to defend our energy industry, emptied out the downtown core, chased 183,000 jobs out of Alberta, and then told Albertans to go to B.C. if they wanted a job. We have taken many steps to diversify our economy, encourage investment, and create jobs. We accelerated the job-creation tax cut. We implemented the innovation employment grant. We created Invest Alberta. We recapitalized the Alberta Enterprise Corporation. We've cut almost 30 per cent of red tape. We're investing additional funds to Alberta . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our government has restored the Alberta advantage and has just introduced our second balanced budget in a row and given that Alberta's economy is strong and leading the nation in economic growth, meaning that we can invest in projects that matter to Calgary families, can the Minister of Municipal Affairs explain what the 2023 budget for Calgary projects is and how those projects will help our beloved city continue to grow and prosper?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, the long list of capital investments in Calgary is so long that I can never seem to make it through the entire list. We are investing nearly $3 billion in capital investments in three years. So what I'm going to start with is the new projects and initiatives in this year's budget: $59 million for the University of Calgary vet med expansion, $41 million for SAIT John Ware redevelopment, $38 million for the office of the Chief Medical Examiner that's in Calgary, $22 million for a new interchange at Stoney Trail and Airport Trail N.E., $20 million towards the Repsol sport centre, $5 million for the Calgary Stampede Foundation . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Calgary's downtown economy is growing and diversifying, with industries like film and television, technology, and the arts all booming, and given that the members across the aisle, particularly the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, seem to have a preoccupation with festivals as a component of downtown vitality, can the Minister of Culture tell us what the single largest festival in Alberta is and what impact it has on downtown Calgary's economy?

Mr. Luan: Thank you, hon. member, for that great question. Unlike the NDP, who don't even know how to read the budget – let me tell you this. In Budget 2023 we invest $5.8 million to the Calgary Stampede. That will yield $540 million in economic impact for Calgary alone. Mr. Speaker, we have 1.2 million people participating in the Calgary Stampede. We're not done yet. The Glenbow Museum: a $40 million investment for the grand opening, targeted for 2025. I'm looking forward to . . .

South Edmonton Hospital Construction Project

Mr. Dach: The budget tabled by the UCP last week was their fifth budget, and for the fifth time in a row the UCP have failed to deliver the critically needed south Edmonton hospital. The only thing they manage to do time and time again is delay this vitally needed hospital, that would serve growing communities in south Edmonton. Instead of a hospital under construction, Alberta families have an empty field. Why does this government refuse to build the south Edmonton hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure and the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This budget has $630 million for that very hospital.

I'd like to point out the fact that in 2017, while the NDP were in government, they did a very high-level, pathetic, superficial needs assessment. They did no business case, they did no clinical service plan, they did no functional plan and then just picked a number out of the sky and put that towards the hospital. Very difficult to build anything without a plan. Maybe they should go back and learn to do that work before they announce big, grandiose numbers.

Mr. Dach: Empty fields, empty promises.

Given that after four years and five budgets the best the UCP could muster is talking about how they're planning and doing site work, which anybody who's actually been to the site knows is not true, and given that the Infrastructure minister was unable to answer the question about when construction would start on this hospital when asked before the budget, let's try again. Can the Infrastructure minister tell this House on what date construction of the south Edmonton hospital will actually begin?

Mr. Neudorf: On the date that we finally fix the mess that the NDP left us. It's interesting that the NDP, when they picked the site for the south Edmonton hospital, picked a piece of land under which an active pipeline is. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it's very difficult to negotiate how you build a hospital on top of an active pipeline. It's really great that they left us another mess with no business case, no clinical service plan, no functional plan, and just a number picked out of the sky. Once we fix all of their problems, we'll actually start.

Mr. Dach: More empty fields, more empty promises, Mr. Speaker.

Given that our government ended decades of Conservative flip-flopping to get the Calgary cancer centre built but given that the UCP made it their mission to delay the south Edmonton hospital as long as possible, showing that when it comes to the health of the Edmonton region and the surrounding area, this government simply doesn't care, can the minister state categorically on the record what date the south Edmonton hospital will open? Or, like the rest of the province, is he waiting for an NDP government to come back into office to get the project built?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will start this project. We have started this project, but we're still fixing their messes. Not only did they pick a site with an active pipeline underneath it; they had no plan, no business case, and no clinical services planned. We are working on building that, we have dedicated money for that, and when we figure out the best way to meet those services and the needs of people in Edmonton, we can start designing this. We want to build this, we've set money aside for it, and we're continuing to move in the right direction even though they didn't do any of that in their four years in government.

Support for Ukrainian Refugees

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, roughly 20,000 Ukrainian refugees have come to Alberta in the last year. I'm proud to be from a country that has opened its doors to help Ukrainians. That's also a reason I'm so deeply disappointed to hear that the UCP is forcing Ukrainian refugees to jump through unnecessary hoops and verify their assets before qualifying for provincial aid. Timely access to financial aid for refugees is crucial, and this government is making it harder than need be. To the minister: does this government seriously think that Ukrainian refugees can phone their banks to verify their assets, assets that may have already been destroyed?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for that question. Certainly, we want to make sure that Ukrainian evacuees that are in Alberta are getting the support that they need. That's why we've recently announced the expansion of the income support program, got rid of the six-month deadline, to make sure that people could access the supports. So if people are still falling through the cracks and not getting that support, I'd love to work with the member as well as the community, as we have been, and our great parliamentary secretary for Ukrainian supports to make sure that we're meeting the needs. I look forward to talking more afterwards.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many Ukrainians cannot access financial aid because of the asset verification requirement, an issue the government, I've been told, has been made aware of multiple times yet has still not addressed, and given that the government has a duty to ensure refugees have the support they need to live in dignity, how can Ukrainian refugees trust the government has their best interests at heart when Ukrainian refugees are living in this province right now without access to vital financial support because of this bad policy?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Again, Mr. Speaker, thank you to the member for bringing this to my attention. It has been my direction – of course, we can't use assets that are locked up in Ukraine against individuals that have had to evacuate to Alberta. That is not our policy. If that is what's happening on the front line, I will get that fixed. I want to make sure that people who have had to evacuate their country because of this unjust, terrible war get the appropriate supports here in Alberta. I think we all can agree that that is of utmost importance, and I'm so thankful for that member bringing it to my attention. I will get on this right away to make sure that we deal with this shortsightedness.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Ukrainian refugees have endured trauma, left and lost loved ones, and are now faced with the immense challenge of resettling in a new and unfamiliar place, we need to make the situation as easy as possible for them. So I will hold the minister to his words. I appreciate his willingness to work with us and the Ukrainian organizations that are helping refugees settle and would urge the minister to act with diligence and speed.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for his advocacy on this issue. He certainly has my commitment and the commitment of this government to make sure that all Ukrainians that end up in Alberta are getting the support, that they know this is a warm and welcoming place for them to be able to land. Of course, working across this government, we're going to do that. Thank you again for bringing this to my attention. That's my commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River has a question.

Crop Insurance

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A quiet drama has been unfolding in the ag file outside of this Chamber, and I wanted to bring the question right here to the Legislature. The other day, listening to 630 CHED, I heard a member of the opposition, the critic for agriculture, claiming that when we look at crop insurance premiums, they're going to be going up by 60 per cent. Now, that's a big number, and it ran a shock down my spine. I wanted to hear the truth in this Chamber and give the minister an opportunity. Is the NDP right? Is it going up 60 per cent, Minister?

Mr. Horner: Of course, they're not right, no. I can assure everyone in this House that crop insurance premiums are definitely not increasing by 60 per cent. You would think, if the members opposite were confused by the fiscal plan or the budget, they would ask a question of me, my ministry, the department, or maybe AFSC as opposed to calling a press conference to spread misinformation and attempt to incite panic. The programs in our business risk management suite should never be politicized; they're too important to the ag community. More questions, fewer memes. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that that's embarrassing for the members opposite and given that farmers are working hard to keep up with the challenge of rising costs, never mind the Trudeau and NDP carbon tax that is continuing to drive up costs for farmers, and given that insurance coverage needs to be adjusted to the market conditions, what growth coverage should Albertan farmers expect in this year, 2023?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The crop insurance coverage in Alberta has increased substantially over the last two years, by an order of magnitude. We've seen the aggregated coverage double, from $4.8 billion to almost $10 billion. Now, much of that increase we saw last year. We will still see increases in this year, with year-over-year changes in hard red spring wheat at 17 per cent, feed barley at 9 per cent, canola at 12 per cent, yellow field peas at 2 to 3 per cent. The increase in premiums to individuals in this year will align closely with the change in the value of the specific crops they're growing.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the clarity of the answer here in the people's Chamber so that farmers can hear the honest truth.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that members opposite, including the Leader of the Opposition, have social media accounts with memes propagating this sort of misinformation, given that not one question came to this Chamber or to the minister's office and given the importance of focusing on the truth in this Chamber if nowhere else, could the minister please let us know what he is doing . . .

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

Mr. Williams: . . . to address the misinformation and speak to the honest truth about what Alberta farmers can expect from this government? [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

A point of order is noted at 2:27.

The minister.

Mr. Horner: Yeah. It feels a little like Groundhog Day in here. I told the NDP critic last year that you can't just bust out your crayons and mess with this formula. The formula is set; it's the same formula that was here under the NDP. It's part of an agreement between the federal government and the provinces. The funds that move are statutory. The formula encompasses your area rate, your historical yield data, the premium rate, your level of coverage, and your crop type. I would suggest that the next time you feel like bebopping outside of the Anthony Henday, you know what the heck you're talking about.

Digital Media Tax Credit Policy

Ms Goehring: In the UCP's first budget the Finance minister declared economic diversification to be a luxury and proceeded to cut several tax credits, including the interactive digital media tax credit. As a result, Alberta lost jobs as companies hired out of province. One tech CEO said that he moved his company to Calgary because of the tax credit, and if he had known that the rug would have been pulled out like this, he never would have moved to Alberta. The tech sector has been asking for the digital media tax credit to be reinstated for three and a half years, but the UCP keeps letting them down. Minister, where's the tax credit?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. Yes, it is true. The Premier did ask me to look into bringing forward a proposal on what a tax credit for the digital media space could look like, and we are continuing that important work. The key thing here is, though, that we need to find a balance between representing the interests of all Albertans and Alberta taxpayers and the interests of the digital media industry. If we're going to introduce a program that's going to cost tens of millions if not hundreds of millions of dollars over the long term, we owe it to Albertans to make sure that we've done our homework on the economic analysis and the cost benefit. That's exactly what we're going to do, and it's going to take a little time.

Ms Goehring: Given that in November the minister said that a digital media tax credit was, quote, a priority and given that in her mandate letter the Premier asked the Minister of Tech and Innovation to develop a tax credit proposal for the video game, digital media industry to be competitive with Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia, attract investment, and create jobs and given that the tax credit wasn't in the budget, why has this minister failed to deliver on this?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to remind the members opposite that I have an obligation to all Albertans and to Alberta taxpayers to make sure that whatever programs I recommend that our government proceed with are a responsible use of taxpayer dollars. I am still committed to following up on the Premier's direction to explore proposals for a digital media tax credit, but we've got to do it in a responsible way that respects all Albertans, as I said, finding that balance between the needs and priorities of all Albertans and the needs and priorities of the digital . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Given that one tech CEO whose company started in Alberta thanks to the digital media tax credit said that he was getting ready to reinvest in the province with the expectation that the tax credit was coming back and given that this snub in the budget means that those investment plans and jobs will die in Alberta and thrive in other provinces and given that B.C. just extended their digital media tax credit for another five years, why is this government okay with losing Alberta jobs to other provinces?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we remain committed to exploring policy proposals for a digital media tax credit, but we have to do it in a responsible and sustainable way that relies on good, sound economic analysis. We need to do a proper cost-benefit analysis of this. Other provinces that have these programs have a PST, which is a major economic disadvantage to their entire economy, but that's partly how they fund these. We do not have a PST, and we're proud of not having a PST. That is why we are taking a little bit more of a cautious approach as we are evaluating . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert is next.

Food Bank Funding

Ms Renaud: Mr. Speaker, food banks are struggling to keep up with demand. It's gotten so bad that they're actually cutting the size of food hampers here in Edmonton, saving some of the amount that they give families. The cost of living and the price of food are too high, and this government has done very little to address this problem. The UCP's inaction has hurt nonprofits and the hard-working people of this province. They deserve better. This UCP government announced that $20 million would be going out the door to help food banks in Alberta, yet the two biggest food banks, that are feeder food banks – they're huge – in Edmonton and Calgary, only got a combined about half a million dollars. Why is that, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm proud to be able to stand up today and say that this government has put money behind food banks, which has not happened before in Alberta's history, because we know how important food security is. We were happy to be able to partner with not-for-profits across this province and not only support food banks but also support community and cultural organizations across the province because they have great reach into our communities. They know where the need is. They can help meet that need, and we can usually leverage our limited dollars with their great volunteer and community support. We are committed to addressing food scarcity and promoting food security.

Ms Renaud: Given that food banks serve a significant portion of Alberta's population, with the province's biggest food bank serving over 30,000 visitors a month, and given that government's so-called support for food banks has only provided Alberta's food banks enough money to cover one month of food supply in these biggest food banks, will the minister admit that this government is not and has never really been invested in supporting people in this province? Over the last four years you made poverty worse. Now we're close to an election, and it's: money, money, money for you; here, we're going to fix this problem. You made the problem worse. Explain how you're going to fix it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

I just might provide some caution to the member that making an accusation like, "You made the problem worse," and not speaking through the chair are certainly not likely to create an environment where decorum is moving in the right direction.

The hon. the minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has demonstrated a serious commitment to addressing challenges within our community, not just food scarcity issues, through our historic investment into food banks but also partnering with not-for-profits across the board. We've increased funding for homeless supports. We've increased funding for mental health and addictions supports.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: We've increased money for affordable housing, significant increases for affordable housing. Our affordability minister has done fantastic work expanding supports as well. We are very committed to helping our most vulnerable. We indexed AISH, seniors' benefits, and other supports as well. Mr. Speaker, we're committed to addressing these issues.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:35.

Ms Renaud: Given that we've seen four years of cuts that have made poverty worse in this province – we've seen it all over the place, four years of cuts, Mr. Speaker – and given that this minister now is standing up and trying to boast about helping the food banks when actually this government created the problem and given that many people in this province were ineligible for the affordability payments despite the fact that they desperately needed support, it's clear that the government actions lack any substance, so will this government stand up today and admit that they actually missed the point, that they only really got money to a tiny fraction of the population?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of what we've been able to do to help care for our most vulnerable in our community. I'm committed to continuing to work with our not-for-profit sector to make sure that we are addressing these needs, these great needs, that are in our community. During the last election when I was going door to door, there was a lot of hurt door to door, a lot of people who had lost their jobs, talking to people in their mid-50s who weren't ready to retire but were worried about how they were going to survive and talking to parents whose kids were leaving the province because they couldn't find work here in Alberta. Now as I'm door-knocking in my constituency, my constituents are working. That's how we're addressing the challenges in our community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Immigration Nominations and Settlement Supports

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Strategic immigration is key to any jurisdiction's success. Immigration helps economies to grow. When newcomers move to Alberta's communities, they spend their money in Alberta and help continue Alberta's economic momentum. Immigrants bring new skills and talents with them, and when they arrive in Alberta, they help our province fill any labour shortage. To the minister of immigration: was Alberta able to receive an increase in immigration nominations, and if so, what were the new nomination numbers?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that question. After my conversation with the federal minister of immigration, Minister Sean Fraser, we were able to secure an increase in nomination certificates for Alberta. The Alberta advantage immigration program will be able to award 9,750 nominations in 2023. This is a significant increase from our 2022 number of 6,500, and we expect to receive more than 10,000 nominations in 2024 and almost 11,000 nominations in 2025. This is ...

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that Alberta has received a substantial increase to nomination numbers and given that Alberta's government has made it a top priority to increase immigration to our province and given that this government has stated that Alberta is facing a labour shortage in key sectors, to the same minister: what key sectors are facing labour shortages, and what is the Alberta government's plan to address these labour shortages using immigration?

Thank you.

Mrs. Sawhney: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is currently facing labour shortages in technology, tourism, service industries, health care, and more. AAIP will help us attract and retain skilled newcomers that bring skills and talents that will help fill these labour shortages. I am working closely with the Ministry of Health to create a stream within AAIP that will attract needed health care workers to the province. We are also working hard to ensure that Alberta streamlines the process of foreign credential recognition to help get all newcomers into the jobs that they are qualified for. AAIP also has a rural immigration stream that will help with rejuvenating rural economies.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that Alberta will be welcoming a large number of immigrants in the coming years and given that through the economic focus of the Alberta advantage immigration program our province will be able to nominate newcomers with skills needed to fill labour shortages and given that many newcomers will find themselves in our province, where they will be faced with language barriers, can the minister of immigration tell the members and Albertans how this government will support newcomers settling in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to attract newcomers to the province, it is paramount that we set them up for success. We are fighting racism to ensure newcomers feel safe and welcome in Alberta's communities. We are prioritizing newcomers with close family connections in the province to ensure that they have family support systems. We are supporting language and settlement services to help newcomers learn English and settle into their communities, yet – yet – Alberta still needs more help from the federal government to support these newcomers. I've called on the federal government to ensure they provide funding to help with these settlement services.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Madu, Deputy Premier and Minister of Skilled Trades and Professions, pursuant to the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta annual report 2021.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At 2:27 the hon. the Opposition House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We rise under 23(h), (i), and (j) but specifically around the practices of this Chamber around the use of terms like "lying" and "misinformation."

The Member for Peace River was speaking and, through his question, both question 1, supplemental 1, and supplemental 2, repeatedly accused the opposition, the Leader of the Official Opposition of lying and spreading misinformation, ironically, about a topic where on page 70 of the fiscal plan it is printed, “The increase in 2023-24 is due mainly to: $99 million for a 60% rise in agriculture insurance premium rates necessary to replenish the crop insurance fund” in black and white. This was the item under debate. He then accused the opposition of misinformation and lying and of creating memes to that effect. He also accused the opposition of being unable to confirm information or ask questions when the 60 per cent increase and the cause for it and the direct impact of it were confirmed during technical briefings with the government’s officials.

This is a point of order, and it speaks against your rulings, Mr. Speaker, including rulings made on June 7, 2021, and others around the use of “lying” and “misinformation.”

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don’t have the benefit of the Blues, so I would not be able to confirm what was or was not said by the hon. Member for Peace River and the government deputy whip. It is a long-standing tradition in this House that we do not identify specific members and use the words “lying” or “misleading.” If that was in fact the case, it would be unparliamentary and would require an apology and a withdrawal.

But I do not have the benefit of the Blues, I did not hear the remark, so I leave it in your capable hands, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I do have the benefit of the Blues, and what I can confirm – and I might just note to the Opposition House Leader that it’s almost like you are continuing debate in a dispute of the facts on: was it or wasn’t it? That’s what we do here on a general basis, and points of order are not to be used for such things.

With respect to the Blues: “Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the clarity of the answer here.” It sounds like a bit of a preamble; I might just provide some caution. The member goes on to say: “Given, Mr. Speaker, that members opposite, including the Leader of the Opposition, have social media accounts with memes propagating this sort of misinformation.” While I can appreciate that it does get close to the line of “misled” or “lying” – it certainly didn’t use either of those terms today in the Chamber – I also will point the hon. Opposition House Leader to the majority of those decisions; there was a period of time that led up to those decisions where I referenced previous cases.

I anticipate that it’s going to be a very robust month of debate here in the Assembly, and I provide caution to all members, including to the Member for Peace River, but this is not a point of order at this point in time. I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Hon. members, at 2:35 the Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Gestures

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under 23(j). Though it doesn’t explicitly say here, I suspect, to “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder” I would add in there gestures. At the time noted for the point of order, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud clearly gave me the middle finger in the middle of this Chamber. There is precedent for this in the Chamber before, on a member on our side of the House. That was pointed out, and that member apologized. I believe that such actions and decorum are not worthy of this Chamber and certainly don’t represent the good people of Alberta, that we represent. I would encourage the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to apologize for that gesture and refrain from using that kind of activity and making those kinds of gestures in this Chamber going forward.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Apologies, Mr. Speaker. As the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud sits behind me, I am not aware of any gestures that may have been done in this House, so I cannot weigh in on this particular point of order.

The Speaker: I will accept the member’s argument on its merits. I can speak specifically to situations in the past where this accusation, allegation, and activity has taken place in the Assembly. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood of the day certainly had used an inappropriate gesture, including the middle finger, directed at members of the opposition at that time. While the member denied it at the time, members of the Assembly came to believe that it was true, with some confirmation by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and that member subsequently apologized. I hope that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud will be reflective. If she did use those sorts of gestures, she ought to apologize to this Assembly; if she didn’t, I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Orders of the Day, Ordres du jour. And I can assure members that those orders will continue in committee.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b) and the 2023-24 main estimates schedule the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30. The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for the consideration of main estimates. This afternoon at 3:30 the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Education in the Rocky Mountain Room, and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Indigenous Relations in the Grassland Room. Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Alberta’s Economic Future will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Technology and Innovation in the Grassland Room, starting at 8; the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will consider the main estimates for the Ministry of Health in the Rocky Mountain Room, starting at 9; and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the main estimates for the Ministry of Transportation and Economic Corridors in the Grassland Room; starting at 10:15.

Hon. members, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 1:30 pm.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:48 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 8, 2023

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon.

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray, hon. members. Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideals but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

International Women's Day

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, today we mark International Women's Day, a day to celebrate the collective achievements of women here in Alberta and across the world. As legislators we have an incredible opportunity to lead change and take action to drive gender equality. Women who sit in this Chamber have contributed significantly, lending their voices to this and other important issues every day. In 1917 Alberta made history when they elected the first two women to serve as representatives anywhere in the British Empire. They were Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams. From Irene Parlby, the first woman to hold a cabinet position, to Helen Hunley, the first female Lieutenant Governor, women continue to speak out and to lead change. We must continue to reinforce that women's voices are welcome and needed as we celebrate the social, economic, cultural, and political achievements that they have made.

Today, as you may have noticed, we have an all-female table as well as a group of incredible caucus staff which we have invited to join us in the galleries for this afternoon. We're also the only province with a female Premier and Leader of the Official Opposition. I want to take a moment to thank our caucus staff as well as my female caucus members in this Assembly for all of the ways you have contributed to making this province an incredible place to live.

Please join me – and stand in the galleries – as we recognize International Women's Day.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased to rise and introduce a friend, soon to join us, Ms Cynthia Moore. When Cynthia arrives, we will welcome her to the Assembly.

Also seated in the Speaker's gallery are two guests from the wonderful constituency – this is in the script – of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and I'm pleased to introduce them on behalf of the Speaker. Please welcome Mr. Greg Skoworodko and his daughter Ms Lauren Skoworodko, a grade 7 student who is currently learning about the Alberta Legislature. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. I can assure you that the Speaker would butcher your last name worse than I did.

We have a school group joining us here today. The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature the grade 6 B, D, and M classes of St. Theresa Catholic school. This school is famous for its Ukrainian bilingual program. And a special shout-out to Aubrey: I'm really good friends with her mom, Leanne. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations has a guest.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you. I'm so glad today, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two special guests in the gallery today, Bekinkanyiso Khumalo and Pinky Mathema. They live in the constituency of Maskwacis-Wetaskiwin. They've just moved there from Nunavut and are wanting to open a diabetic treatment clinic in my riding. Thank you so much for joining us. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you my friend Jennele Giong. Jennele is a former ethnic outreach co-ordinator for the UCP caucus, a former UCP nomination contestant, and is currently a business owner and a senior adviser to the Calgary Chinatown Development Foundation's important work to revitalize Calgary's historic Chinatown. Thank you, Jennele, for your tireless work for your community. Please stand and receive the warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and happy International Women's Day. I'm very happy to rise today to introduce my very dear friend Scott Silva. Mr. Silva wears two hats in our community. He's the executive director for the Strathmore Wheatland Chamber of Commerce and the director of business and development for a private real estate group in Strathmore. Thank you so much to the minister of affordability for meeting with us today, and thank you, Scott, for all of your incredible hard work in making our community what it is today. Please rise. Let's give him the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Gray: Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all of the Assembly the all-women crew who support myself, my House team, and all NDP MLAs each and every day: Jodi Learn, Annie Wachowich, Parul Kanwar, and Emma Pyke. I believe some of them may not be here yet because we asked them to finish the notes and run them in to us. But for those who are here, please rise. Welcome here on International Women's Day.

The Deputy Speaker: So great to have all of you here.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you. I'm so happy to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly just a few of the amazing women that we have in our caucus and in our offices: Catherine Harder, Laura Paquette, Ashley MacInnis, Elizabeth Strange. Please join me in welcoming them all here today on International Women's Day.

The Deputy Speaker: We love our staff.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Child Care

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. As a mother I know that safe and affordable child care is critical to ensuring women could get back to work and participate in the renewed Alberta advantage. This is a particularly important message on International Women's Day as a majority of caregivers in our province and the majority of child operators are women.

To support these women, our government has negotiated an agreement to increase accessible, affordable, and high-quality child care spaces across Alberta. We are also protecting Alberta's world-class and diverse child care system, which includes both private and not-for-profit options. Our government values choice, Madam Speaker. That is why we support the ability of Alberta parents to choose the child care provider that best meets the needs of their family, and that is why we are making sure that parents have access to thousands of more affordable, inclusive, and high-quality spaces. On behalf of our entire government I want to thank all the women who make our province's child care sector world-class. From business owners to workers, women are making Alberta's child care sector inclusive for families, and women are making our province a great place to live and work.

Going forward, our government is fully committed to supporting licensed child care operators, the majority of whom are women, as we work together to deliver child care for Alberta children. We are investing $32.8 million in new funding to help child care operators across the province with immediate relief from inflation. We're also investing more than $4 million through a one-time payment to cover the cost of mandatory benefit contribution increases for the last few months of this fiscal year. We're hearing from child care operators who've expressed how much of a world of difference this new support is for them and Alberta families.

These operators are leaders. They're integral to the social and economic fabric of our province, and on International Women's Day we say thank you to all the caregivers across the province.

Thank you so much, Madam Speaker.

Women's Equality and Government Policies

Member Irwin: Women are the backbone of our communities, our families, our city, our province. They're unrelenting agents of change. They're activists, they're community leaders, and they're the reason I'm so proud to be here today marking International Women's Day. It's pretty great to be standing here in the Legislature beside my wonderful and fierce female colleagues, before a gallery filled with women and an all-women clerk table.

Alberta is the province it is today because of the labour, energy, efforts, and advocacy of women, but the weight of this day is also not lost on me. This government has not made the last four years easy for women. They killed the ministry for status of women, a historic ministry that we created and that we can't wait to bring back. They abandoned women in budget after budget, they denied supports needed to support women experiencing domestic and sexual violence, and they've consistently failed to meet the unique needs of women and gender-diverse folks in this province.

I'm also acutely aware of all the women who aren't here today, who've lost their lives due to misogyny, anti-2SLGBTQ-plus violence, racism, and colonialism. I'm committed and we're committed to doing everything we can to make our province safe and equitable for women and gender-diverse people.

But today, despite all the challenges and the work still left to do, I feel hopeful. It's hard not to because every day I meet women who are determined, who are inspiring, who are getting stuff done. I was just part of the NDP's historic commitment to protect women's reproductive rights in this province, and I feel hopeful today that in May Albertan women will go to the polls and vote for the party that supports them, that is filled with MLAs just like them, and that wants to see them thrive, that they will vote Alberta NDP. Our promise to them and to all of you is that we will work every day as a government, just as we did the last time and just as we have as an opposition, to advance women's rights.

Happy International Women's Day.

The Deputy Speaker: The birthday girl, the hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Women's Equality

Ms Fir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As parliamentary secretary for status of women it is an honour to rise in this Chamber in celebration of International Women's Day. For 2023 the theme is Embrace Equity. We do that by celebrating, respecting, and empowering women every day, by creating opportunities and removing barriers so women can achieve their greatest potential, by championing women role models and leaders in our communities present and past, Alberta women like the Famous Five, who stood before the Supreme Court of Canada so women would be considered persons in the Constitution: Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Emily Murphy, and Irene Parlby. I remember in elementary and junior high school doing many book reports and presentations on Nellie McClung.

Madam Speaker, the Alberta dream serves as an equal opportunity for everyone to pursue financial prosperity in the best place in the world to work, play, volunteer, and raise a family. The realization of this dream is an indicator of the considerable progress we've made as a society, and in this Chamber I see many powerful, determined, accomplished women who are fighting for their values and beliefs and stand as representatives for their constituents. I'm honoured to be part of a government that has put forth initiatives that support women in all aspects of their lives.

Alberta's government is committed to empowering women and girls to succeed in a fulfilling career of their choice, including fields where their gender has traditionally been underrepresented, such as STEM fields and skilled trades. STEM – science, technology, engineering, and mathematics – are industries that push innovation, our economy, and our society forward. Alberta's government wants to empower and encourage women to pursue careers in STEM.

Alberta women bring invaluable strength and dedication to our communities and our economy. When they have opportunities to fully participate in our economy, Alberta thrives. By empowering women, Alberta continues to help create an equal and better future for women and girls.

Happy International Women's Day.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Holi

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Holi is a wonderful custom and celebration, and I extend the greetings from the government of Alberta on this colourful celebration we call Holi. The festival of Holi marks the beginning of spring and the end of the winter and the blossoming of love. It is a day to meet others, laugh, play, forget, and forgive. The festival originated in India but since has spread through the diaspora of the Indian subcontinent as well as the western world and Fiji. We understand the importance of festivals like Holi to Albertans, and we want to show our support for this beautiful festival.

Holi, also known as the Festival of Colours, is a vibrant and joyful festival celebrated world-wide. The festival is powered by a variety of colourful traditions, each with their own significance. One of the most well-known aspects of Holi is the throwing of coloured powder known as gual. The practice represents the celebration of diversity and the triumph of good over evil. During Holi people of all ages come together to play with colours, throwing them at each other and covering one another in vibrant colours. Another important tradition of Holi is the lighting of bonfires on the night before the festival.

Holi holds a special place in my heart. It is a time to celebrate the rich culture and traditions of my heritage and to come together with loved ones to embrace joy, love, and unity. The government of Alberta is proud to recognize and celebrate the diversity of our province and contributions of our community. May this festival bring joy, happiness, and prosperity to you and your families. Let us all come together to celebrate this beautiful festival and to embrace the diversity that makes our province and our country so great. Happy Holi to everyone.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Prescription Contraception Coverage

Ms Hoffman: Today is International Women's Day, and I'm so proud to be part of a caucus that's making real commitments to advance the causes of women's rights across our province. Earlier today I joined the Leader of the Opposition and the other women in our caucus in committing that an Alberta NDP government will provide universal coverage for prescription contraception. That means that Alberta women can get oral hormone pills, contraceptive injections, copper and hormonal IUDs, subdermal implants, and Plan B, all with absolutely no out-of-pocket expense. This will save Alberta women hundreds of dollars every year. For someone buying the pill every month, this program would save them up to $10,000 over their lifetime.

But, more importantly, providing free and universal access to prescription contraception keeps Alberta women in control of their own bodies, their own lives, and their economic future. In the words of our leader earlier today, this is good health policy, this is good economic policy, and it's the right thing to do. This is the kind of good government we can have when we commit to gender parity in our caucus, among our candidates, and in our cabinet, all of which the UCP have utterly failed at.

So on International Women's Day know this: Alberta's NDP will always stand up for women, with women, and for the rights of women. Alberta's NDP embraces equity. Albertans can bring that promise into government in just a few short weeks. We can elect a stable, competent, and caring government, one that's focused on good health care and affordability, and that's an Alberta NDP government.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Allergy Awareness

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My first private member's bill, Bill 201, the Protection of Students with Life-threatening Allergies Act, unanimously passed in this Assembly earlier in this 30th Legislature. As of January 1, 2021, Alberta became the first province in Canada to have Epinephrine in every school. This rollout would have not been possible without the staff at Alberta Health and Alberta Education. Because of their hard work, schools across this province have access to life-saving medicine.

I'd like to specifically thank Food Allergy Canada. They provide free online training through their allergy aware program; it covers anaphylaxis in the community, school, and child care settings. Two thousand people completed the program in 2019 and 14,500 in 2020. Programs like this are critical because there is still so much about anaphylaxis that people do not understand. Children are bullied, people are ashamed to talk about their allergies, and if you're not careful, your allergies can take your life.

Due to the luck of the draw, I have another private member's bill coming up. As many of you know, my advocacy around anaphylaxis is deeply personal and important to me. My son, my daughter, and myself all have severe allergies, and as a child my daughter almost died from a severe anaphylactic reaction. I've decided for this upcoming private member's bill to also focus on this issue. As planned, it will allow Epinephrine to be available outside of our schools in public spaces in case of emergency.

There will be no requirement to carry Epinephrine, but entities would be allowed to carry it in the case of emergency. This is currently the case in B.C., New Brunswick, and 35 of the 50 U.S. states. By reducing red tape in this area and following these many jurisdictions who have already made the change, we can ensure that Albertans across the province who suffer from anaphylaxis have the support that they deserve. Public spaces where this will be allowed would include colleges, universities, airports, and recreation centres.

My hope, with the support of all my fellow MLAs, is that this will be . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Sexual Assault Economic Costs

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to speak on International Women's Day, and I want to speak about the economy today but not in a typical way. Sexual assault, sadly, is common and the statistics overwhelming. According to StatsCan there were more than 34,200 reports of sexual assault in 2021, an 18 per cent increase from 2020 and the highest level of reported cases since 1996. Despite its increasing prevalence the economic costs associated with sexual assault continue to be either minimized or completely disregarded. The costs are well over $100,000 per person, minimum, not to mention the economic insecurity, loss of jobs, impact on schooling, and the effects of attaining any sense of stability or economics otherwise. It's time to speak out about the economic costs of sexual assault. This is not an incidental relationship, and it impacts all of us financially and professionally. This is lost human capital.

Imagine that your size or gender or sexuality leaves you vulnerable to being controlled or raped. Imagine you are a student and the perpetrator shares a campus with you even if they've been charged. Charged perpetrators in Alberta on a student or work visa are allowed to wander freely. Every time they are summoned to court, they are not required to enter a plea, and the case gets pushed down the road.

A person raped: the perpetrator is caught and charged and then given a promise to appear. Meanwhile the survivor is subjected to a rape kit, STD testing and AIDS testing, mental breakdowns, all the while being told to get over it and get back to work. The arrest and charges should matter, and where are the consequences?

Thank you to those of you on the front line for doing the work. Thank you to all of you in here who are doing their level best to help. I am tired of being told that sexual assault and rape doesn't impact the economy. It does. Safety impacts the economy. Women alone are 51 per cent of the population, Madam Speaker. We are the economy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we are very efficient today, and it is now time for Oral Question Period.

1:50 Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to kick us off.

Executive Council and Women's Equality

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very proud to have been part of Alberta's first cabinet with gender parity, and our leader has made it clear that if we form the next government, Alberta will have at least 50 per cent women sitting at the cabinet table. The member opposite can't make that same promise. More than half of Albertans are women, but under this Premier they've been governed by a cabinet where men outnumber women 4 to 1. Why did the current Premier continue with the Jason Kenney model of limiting women's voices around her cabinet table?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm delighted that we have such strong women in our cabinet. I'm delighted that we have an environment minister who is going toe to toe with the guys in Ottawa, standing up for our energy industry. I'm glad that we have a Municipal Affairs minister who is doing an incredible job of managing our relationship to improve it with Calgary and Edmonton. It wasn't all that great for a number of years. I think she's done a terrific job. I'm glad she's tackling some of the tough issues like unpaid municipal property taxes and unpaid landowner leases from our energy companies, and I fully expect that she's going to keep on driving that one forward. I'm delighted that we have an immigration and multiculturalism minister who is just . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: She named four because there are only four.

Our ministers that we had for the status of women did important work to move Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions towards gender parity, ensuring that whenever decisions are made about people's lives, half the folks around that table are women. The member opposite created the largest, most bloated, expensive cabinet in Alberta history. Albertans could probably live without a minister for red tape reduction, and we could definitely survive without two ministers who don't even have a portfolio, but why did the member opposite decide to abolish the ministry for status of women?

Ms Smith: We have two voices talking on the status of women. Our Minister of Culture represented us very well in Ottawa and managed to get us matching grants for I believe it was over $50 million worth of programming. His voice at the table was welcome because we are bringing more men into the discussion about domestic violence if we're going to solve it. Plus, I'm delighted that we have a parliamentary secretary on the status of women, who adds an additional voice and is constantly bringing issues to the table to make sure that they stay front and centre. I think that we've done a terrific job of representing women's voices.

Ms Hoffman: In Alberta's NDP we get half the seats at the big kids' table.

Alberta's NDP takes women's rights seriously, and we work to advance them every single day. I am very proud that our leader has made the commitment that an Alberta NDP government will provide free universal coverage for prescription contraception. This can save a woman who buys the pill up to $10,000 over her lifetime. But, more importantly, it keeps women in charge of their own lives, bodies, and economic destiny. To the members opposite. There's nothing like this in your fake budget, that's male dominated. Why won't the Premier fully support women's participation in the economy and every part of her cabinet?

Ms Smith: Well, Madam Speaker, the Alberta government supports protecting choice for women accessing reproductive services in Alberta. We've got coverage for many contraceptive drug and health products. It's available to Albertans who are enrolled in government-sponsored drug and supplemental health benefits. It includes oral contraceptives, injectable contraceptives, intrauterine devices, and others to support women in their reproductive health choices. The women's choice program allows Alberta women to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Prescription Contraception Coverage Policy

Member Irwin: Our Alberta NDP team is so proud to commit to Albertans that we will make prescription contraception universally available with no out-of-pocket costs. Our plan tears down barriers, it supports Albertans, it's good health policy, it's good economic policy, and it's the right thing to do. These are the good things that happen when strong, progressive women lead. My question to the Premier is simple. Why is she so opposed to universal coverage for prescription contraception?

Ms Smith: I'm not sure why the members opposite are wanting to give a subsidy to private health insurance companies, because the vast majority of prescription drugs are covered under private plans. Essentially, having the government step in and taxpayers step in would offer a subsidy to those insurance companies. We want to make sure that everybody has reasonable access to pharmaceuticals. Through a combination of private insurance and public insurance they have access to the full range of drugs. We also have supports, of course, for our most vulnerable.

Member Irwin: Well, you've got $20 billion for your friends but not a few million for millions of Alberta women.

Our neighbours in British Columbia have introduced similar policy, and this follows New Zealand, Australia, the U.K., and some Scandinavian countries as well. When B.C. announced their policy, so many Albertans reached out to me and asked if we would do the same. I told them, "Well, not with the UCP government; that's for sure," but Albertans can choose to have universal coverage for prescription contraception if they choose an Alberta NDP government in May. A whole lot of Albertans want this. Why doesn't the Premier?

Ms Smith: As I said, Madam Speaker, there is a broad range of coverage already available through public and private health plans. The experience that I have seen in watching those programs that are publicly funded is that they actually provide a narrower range of choices. We want to make sure the maximum number of choices are available for women to support their reproductive choices, and that's the reason why we continue to support a mixed system like we have.

Member Irwin: For someone buying the pill every month, this new coverage will save them up to $10,000. These are huge costs for Albertans. Our commitment for universal coverage for prescription contraception builds on our plan for family health teams as well. Our offer to women and to all Albertans is easy access to your health care professional, close to home, when you need it. That's the Alberta I want to live in, that's the Alberta we all want to live in, and that's what we're offering to Albertans. Will the Premier agree that she's offered nothing to Albertans?

Ms Smith: Well, Madam Speaker, I accept that there are probably a certain number of women that may not have coverage through some plans. We want to do everything we can to make sure someone has access to a private health plan. We also want to make sure that they have options through Alberta Blue Cross. Maybe I should just mention that we've got a nongroup plan available through Alberta Blue Cross so that people would be able, if they're not currently covered, to access that. We want to just make sure everybody has the appropriate coverage. We have that in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Wage Growth and Tax Policies

Ms Gray: Madam Speaker, Albertans are working harder and harder but falling further and further behind under the UCP. Every day I hear from Albertans who are struggling to put food on the table and keep up with their bills. Income taxes, fees, tuition, auto insurance, and utilities have all gone up dramatically under the UCP. At the same time, Alberta has some of the slowest wage growth in Canada under the UCP. Why is this government making a bad situation worse by piling on costs while Albertans' real wages shrink under the UCP?

Ms Smith: You know, Madam Speaker, I am always perplexed when the NDP talk about how concerned they are about taxes, considering that they raised taxes 97 times when they got elected. The hidden agenda as well of the members opposite: they campaigned and didn't even tell the public that they were going to implement a carbon . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Order.
The Premier.

Ms Smith: They didn't even tell the public that they were going to implement a carbon tax. Now we can't get rid of it, and their boss in Ottawa, Jagmeet Singh, who's propping up the Liberal leader – they intend to increase the carbon tax 300 per cent, which will increase the cost of everything. I also should mention, Madam Speaker, that we brought the tax rate down for corporate taxes to 8 per cent after they raised it to 12 per cent and chased investment and jobs and people out of Alberta.

2:00

Ms Gray: Under the UCP we see the slowest wage growth in Canada. Alberta had the highest wages in Canada when the UCP came into power. Now provinces like Quebec and B.C. are catching up. Last year wages in B.C. increased by 3.4 per cent and wages in Quebec increased by 4.1 per cent. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Ms Gray: Here in Alberta they barely increased 2.5 per cent, well below current inflation. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Ms Gray: And the UCP Finance minister's response? He told Albertans to get a better job. Is this really the best the UCP can offer? Or maybe it's time everyone on the government side of the House changed to a different job.

The Deputy Speaker: We were doing so well.

Ms Smith: Well, Madam Speaker, the reason why they're focusing on growth rate is because they don't want to focus on the actual level of average weekly earnings in Alberta, which is the highest in the country. It is over $1,200 per week, $65,000 per year. The reason why people are flocking to Alberta is that they know that there is opportunity here. There were 13 consecutive quarters of people leaving this province under the NDP, and their job-creation plan was: go get a job in British Columbia if you don't like it here. They're coming back, and they're coming back for the jobs.

Ms Gray: You know, Madam Speaker, Alberta had the highest average weekly earnings under the NDP as well. It is the UCP that are putting it at risk. Last election the UCP promised their corporate tax cut would fill office towers in downtown Calgary and boost wages for Albertans. Sound too good to be true? Yes, it was. Downtown office vacancy rates are the highest in the country, corporate profits are leaving the province, and we have the slowest wage growth in the country. Study after study shows that corporate handouts never reach working people. In other words, trickle-down economics do not work. They are a trick.

Ms Smith: Highest average weekly earnings in the country, and I would remind the members opposite: 183,000 jobs lost under the NDP, 13 consecutive quarters of people leaving our province. We have turned that around completely. In fact, when I had a courtesy call with Premier Doug Ford, he said he was so angry about our Alberta Is Calling campaign; he wished that we would stop it, and the reason he wished we would stop it is because it's so effective. People are coming here because of the environment we've created, there are jobs, it's affordable, and they're happy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the last set of leader's questions.

Energy Company Liability

Ms Ganley: The UCP is just full of bad ideas, and they're hiding most of the details until after the election. When will we find out about the UCP's risky plan to take us out of the Canada pension plan? After the election. When will we find out about the costly and dangerous plan to create their own police force? After the election. When will we find out more about Smith's $20 billion royalty handout? After the election. Why . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member. Order. You know as well as I do that the use of names of members is not allowed in this Chamber. Perhaps rephrase your questions. You have 11 seconds to finish.

Ms Ganley: When will we find out more about the Premier's $20 billion royalty handout? Why is the Premier trying to hide the biggest pieces of her agenda? Doesn't she know that Albertans don't support her risky ideas?

Ms Smith: Well, I'd like to know when we're going to find out about the members opposite's secret agenda to increase corporate income taxes again. They keep talking about that, saying that we're still going to maintain a competitive tax environment but don't want to rule out tax increases. I can tell you that the only place the taxes are going in this province under a UCP government is down, but I don't think that they can say the same on the other side. In fact, if they want to show how serious they are, they should phone up the boss, Jagmeet Singh, and ask him to oppose the federal increase in carbon tax, which is going to increase the tax by 300 per cent and increase the cost on everything.

Ms Ganley: Albertans hate this $20 billion royalty giveaway. They hate it because Albertans believe we should all be responsible for [interjection] cleaning up our own messes, and this is the opposite. It's irresponsible, it stinks so bad they can smell it in Saskatchewan, and there's no policy justification. The ones provided by the UCP are conflicting, inconsistent, and defy logic. The Premier's friends will benefit from this; Albertans will not. If the Premier has any evidence to disprove this, will she table it today or admit that it's a scam?

Ms Gray: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Smith: Madam Speaker, a number of years ago all of our junior oil and gas companies were distressed. I know the members opposite know it because it was Sequoia and Trident that went under after their tenure in office, leaving 9,000 wells that got handed off to the Orphan Well Association. Why is that? It's because when you have active wells and a company goes belly up, then it ends up falling to somebody else to pay for it. We believe that we've got to find a way to enable companies to clean up their liability. This is part of the reason why we've put a mandatory spend in place. They're going to have to spend $740 million to clean up.

Ms Ganley: One of the authors of the Premier's $20 billion handout now works in the Premier's office. The other instigator now runs a PAC attacking the NDP. Despite objections from economists, despite banks calling it anticapitalist, despite those inside her own cabinet being on record against it, it goes ahead. Policy this bad demands an explanation. From every single angle this looks like quid pro quo. Albertans deserve straight answers. They know this won't benefit them, so tell us, Premier: who's it really for?

Ms Smith: Madam Speaker, I would just like to fast-forward to where we are now, because a policy that was conceived three years ago under different circumstances is not the same as today. The policy that we have today is now that energy companies – we've seen an increase in oil and gas prices, we've seen an increase in profits, and that is why we are demanding that now is the time for the energy companies to address their historic liability, $30 billion of liability. It's part of the reason why we have demanded that they spend their own money this year to spend $740 million on reclamation. It's going to keep on growing up.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Support for Women

Ms Issik: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today is International Women's Day, a day to celebrate women's achievements and a day to recognize the perseverance of women around the world. We know that Indigenous women and girls suffer domestic violence, addictions, and suicide at rates disproportionately higher than levels in the rest of the population. To the Premier. Please tell this House what this government is doing to support women and families, including First Nations and Métis women in Alberta.

Ms Smith: Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. The safety and well-being of Aboriginal women is our top priority. We have a Premier's council on missing and murdered Indigenous women that I have met with, and they're giving me recommendations on what we can do to be able to address those issues. If passed, Budget 2023 includes $5 million in new funding to support Alberta's response to the ongoing missing and murdered Indigenous women, girls, and two-spirited individuals. Our government also implemented Clare's law in April of 2021, and we have since received 600 applications seeking to access information on current and former partner history of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Premier for providing those insights. Given that the work to promote the health and safety of Indigenous women is incredibly important and given that, unfortunately, domestic abuse is not just limited to Indigenous women but something experienced by women from all communities and from across the province, could the Premier please elaborate on the support available to all women across the province, including those in rural and remote communities and women from ethnic and cultural minority groups?

Ms Smith: Thank you again to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. We have increased the funding for women's shelters this year by $3.8 million, for a total of $55 million this year; $9 million for family violence prevention services; and, of course, we've got our recovery communities, first one in Red Deer, and we're going to be establishing those with half or more of the beds dedicated to supporting women. We also have $17.1 million for sexual assault centres. We provided $20 million to civil society groups. I could list off a whole range of them: the Nigerian Canadian Association of Edmonton's family wellness project, Next Step Ministries, and many more.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that Indigenous women make phenomenal contributions to our economy and bring a unique perspective to entrepreneurship and given that Indigenous women entrepreneurs make incredible contributions to our province and country as restaurant owners, artists, and oil and gas logistics providers, to just name a few, could the Premier please tell our province about the supports available to bolster Indigenous women in business and in the workforce?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This morning I had the pleasure to be at the Junior Achievement announcement, and they were making their International Women's Day event this year focus on support for Indigenous women entrepreneurs. We have appointed councils to support Indigenous women in Alberta, including the Métis women's and First Nations women's councils on economic security. In addition, we have $195,000 that we have increased to expand the next step to success program, which offers Indigenous entrepreneurs mentorship, training, and other supports. We also have the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women to help remove barriers to employment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Energy Company Municipal Tax Payment

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. The UCP is failing rural Alberta again. Yesterday we learned from the Rural Municipalities of Alberta that the amount of unpaid taxes owed to rural municipalities was $253.7 million. This is more than three times as much than in the 2019 survey. The failure of the UCP to address this problem is forcing some communities to either raise their taxes from their residents or cut services. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs explain why she has failed to address this growing issue?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, the nonpayment of taxes is absolutely unacceptable and cannot be allowed to continue. We agree with the RMA's assessment that the problem of unpaid oil and gas taxes to rural municipalities is absolutely unacceptable. We're actively looking at options to ensure taxes are paid as a condition of licence transfer. We will be in contact directly with delinquent companies reminding them of their responsibility to pay their taxes. Municipalities also continue to have the option of pursuing unpaid taxes through legal action or the insolvency process.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that in this Chamber there sit three former Municipal Affairs ministers who failed to get this done over their term despite the most recent former minister promising a hammer to address the problem and given that that same minister admitted a year ago today that his strategy failed and that it was time to try something new and given that the RMA president, Paul McLaughlin, has said that he's shocked that we're still having to discuss this issue, what does the minister say to rural voters who want to know where the money is?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, as I mentioned, we are exploring options to make sure that taxes are paid as a condition of licence transfer. That, in fact, is a request of RMA. We committed to work on that, and we are with the Minister of Energy and the AER. Now, we also implemented the special lien during fall 2021 which gives the municipalities priority over other creditors. We also provided RMA with grant funding to provide training and resources to help municipalities use this tool. We worked with the AER, strengthened the regulatory frameworks so that it has the option to consider company records for property taxes and service lease payment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Given the previous minister said that none of the tools that this current minister is using work and given that rural municipalities are owed over $200 million in unpaid taxes and given that the RMA president, Paul McLaughlin, has described this as rural municipalities being forced to "subsidize an industry in a massive boom period" and given that the Premier is pushing a massive $20 billion giveaway to pay off companies to clean up messes that are already legally obligated to clean up, is the reason the UCP is refusing to act on unpaid taxes because they're too busy planning to hand out $20 billion to their friends?

Ms Schulz: Madam Speaker, I know the member had her questions written in advance, but I'm going to just remind her that, as I said, we are exploring options to make sure that those taxes are paid, to make sure that that's a condition of licence transfer. That is, in fact, a request of the RMA, and we're working on that. More news to come on that soon. Now, our recent survey showed that payment plans or agreements with companies have already been put in place for municipalities to recoup $48 million of those unpaid taxes. There is further potential for municipalities to recoup another $28 million from companies that are still in operation. We continue to work with RMA on this issue.

School Construction in Edmonton

Ms Pancholi: Twenty twenty-seven: that's the year the high schools in Edmonton public school division, the fastest growing school district in the country, will be at 100 per cent capacity. At that point there'll be no more space for attendance for area students in Edmonton high schools, and, yes, that factors in the spaces from the high school in southeast Edmonton that opens next year. The year 2027 is four years from now, and it takes three years to build a school, but there are no construction dollars for a new high school in this year's budget. How can the UCP look the parents of Edmonton in the eyes and tell them they don't think their kids need a space in their local high school?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again the members opposite are incorrect. In fact, out of the 58 schools that we announced in Budget 2023, Edmonton is receiving nine projects. Nine projects. I have to tell you that under the NDP, during their four years, they only constructed eight projects in Edmonton. We are already way above that: 18 projects.

Ms Pancholi: It's a skill to be that arrogant and wrong at the same time.

Given that I'm proud to represent the students and families and staff of Lillian Osborne high school – shout-out to the Legends – and given that Lillian Osborne is absolutely bursting at the seams – crowded hallways, huge class sizes, and last year they had to go to a lottery for students living in the area and this will continue for the foreseeable future – and given that is why Edmonton public schools made a new high school in Glenriding their number one priority, to take the pressure off Lillian Osborne, would the UCP agree that this is an insult to southwest Edmonton families to not fund full construction of a high school this year?

Member LaGrange: Madam Speaker, again incorrect. Incorrect. Nine projects for Edmonton. We are going to be building all of the top priorities for Edmonton public school division, and I'm so glad that Edmonton public school division this year was able to prioritize areas that are growing in Edmonton. We are continuing to build. Unlike the members opposite, we are actually addressing need through an auditor-approved gated process.

The Deputy Speaker: With great respect to not using preambles, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Ms Pancholi: Given that I'm also proud to represent the students, families, and staff of Riverbend junior high school – shout-out to the Centurions – and given that I invite any UCP minister to drive by the school and see how it has become a sea of portables in an effort to fit all their students, the highest enrolment of junior high students in the city, and given that in their four years in government the UCP has only fully funded and built one school for Edmonton public, while the NDP completed 13 and began six more, and after shutting down Edmonton public out of their budget cycles for two years, can we agree that having a UCP MLA in southwest Edmonton has been a waste of time for Edmonton students and families?

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order noted at 2:17.

Member LaGrange: Madam Speaker, it is obvious the members opposite do not know how the capital plan works. The school divisions actually put forward their top asks. We have actually committed to building 58 schools across this province, nine of which will be in Edmonton. All of the top asks for both Edmonton public and Edmonton Catholic – and in fact, as I said, the NDP only built eight when we're building 18.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Women's Workforce Participation

Ms Pon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Today is International Women's Day, and we are celebrating women across Alberta who contribute the skills, creativities, and innovation to help our communities and economies thrive. Can the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development highlight for this Assembly some of the efforts of our UCP government to support Alberta women in skilled job training to pursue meaningful careers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very happy to share some of the work that we do to get Alberta women trained for their careers of the future. Through Alberta's workforce strategy grants we support projects to help ensure women enjoy economic prosperity. For example, we are very proud to sponsor and partner Higher Landing to deliver employment support services for women professionals, including coaching, workshops, and practice clinics. We also work with Canadian Women in Communications and Technology to help retain and advance women in Alberta's tech industry and create more inclusive workspaces.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.
2:20

Ms Pon: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you, Minister. I'm happy to hear that we're investing in the training opportunities for women given that we see ambitions of women are moving beyond being an employee in industry. Can the same minister highlight some of the efforts that our UCP government is making to support Alberta women assert their skills to start their own business or lead their current companies?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Alberta's government is supporting projects that help ensure women continue to lead in Alberta's economy. Projects like the Hyper Drive: Women in Business Summit, led by Community Futures Grande Prairie, which connects women employers with experts to attract and diversify talent to their companies. We support Chic Geek Society, which runs a women in technology talent connector event to connect women in tech to Alberta tech companies, or the Community Futures Peace Country's Women in the North Conference, a series of events that bring training and networking opportunity to women business leaders in Alberta's north.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pon: Thank you to the minister through you, Madam Speaker. It is good to know how amazing it is that our government is taking steps to help support women succeed in business as leaders and employers given that women make up the majority of Alberta's population and the majority of our postsecondary graduates. Can the same minister highlight for this Assembly why Alberta women are so successful?

Mrs. Savage: Alberta women are so successful because they're contributing their skills and talent to fuel the renewed Alberta advantage. They benefit from our low taxes, no sales tax, and our business-friendly investment environment. But they also benefit and help ensure that Alberta has a young, vibrant, hard-working, world-class workforce. Alberta's women are taking the lead in making our province a wonderful place to live, grow a business, build a career, and raise a family. On International Women's Day I salute them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mental Health Services

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yesterday I had the special privilege of standing with Karen Gosbee, the co-chair of Calgary's mental health and addictions community strategy, when she endorsed our family health teams policy. This strategy will ensure that 1 million more Albertans will have a family doctor and will ensure that patients' mental health needs are met, and it will address the stigma faced by those dealing with mental health. Will the minister of mental health join with Albertans like Karen Gosbee and agree that the Alberta NDP plan is the path forward to ensuring that Albertans will have the mental health support they need?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise in this House and set the record straight with regard to what we're dealing with under my ministry. If passed, Budget 2023 will actually give $275 million. Now, that is a massive increase of over 200 per cent of what was $87 million back in 2019 when the opposition was in power. This is an area of the work that we are doing as a government that is fixing a problem and a mistake that was made by the previous government, prior to us. They woefully underfunded this area, and we're fixing their mistakes.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that protecting and improving the mental health of Albertans is critical and given that every single Albertan should be able to access care when and where they need it, without exception, something that our policy addresses, and given that Karen Gosbee said when endorsing our plan that "increasing mental health... support through primary care will allow entire... families to be able to access [primary] care," will the minister get out of the way and support our plan?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak. If we want to talk about individuals and the views that they have with regard to what our government is doing with regard to access for mental health and addiction, I would say: “We are pleased that Alberta’s government [continues] to make youth mental health a priority in this budget,” Bonnie Blakley; “We are pleased that in Budget 2023, the government has continued to place an emphasis on supporting the mental health of [all] Albertans,” Robbie Babins-Wagner; “The provincial budget demonstrates a commitment to help support vulnerable people who are struggling with mental health and addiction on their journey to housing and recovery,” Sandra Clarkson from the Calgary Drop-In Centre. And take a look at . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sigurdson: Given that our family health teams announcement builds on our commitment to provide Albertans with five insured mental health sessions, a simple and powerful policy move that this government has ignored, given that a survey conducted by the Alberta Medical Association found that 77 per cent of parents reported that the mental health of their children was worse now than before the pandemic and given that this is a crisis this province needs to tackle and requires all Albertans to come together to ensure that no one is left behind, will the minister acknowledge the mental health crisis and endorse our strategy, ensuring Albertans get . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise to speak on this topic, and I’m very pleased that the members opposite fully endorse our government’s approach to team-based care in primary care. You know, we reached an agreement with the AMA, and I was very pleased to do so through last summer. Part of that was actually putting models of compensation in place to be able to enhance team-based care. So not only family physicians but also others: nurse practitioners, assistant physicians, and mental health supports as well. We also helped support this through our PCNs, and we’ll continue to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Government Spending and Provincial Debt

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the 2019 provincial election the UCP promised to control government spending, but since taking office, this UCP government has seen fit to increase total spending by $12 billion annually. Given that the UCP has also increased government’s total debt by $15 billion and given the UCP plans to continue increasing spending to more than $71 billion annually by 2025-26, to the Finance minister: would you care to retract your 2019 promise to control spending?

Mr. Toews: Madam Speaker, it’s really easy to give advice when you don’t have the accountability of being in leadership. We’ve delivered on bringing Alberta’s spending under control. We set a fiscal anchor back in 2019 to align our per capita spending with that of comparator provinces. We’ve delivered on that commitment, and we’ve delivered two balanced budgets right through the fiscal plan.

Mr. Barnes: Madam Speaker, given this government has a spending problem, just like the last government, and failure to control spending will hit our youth the hardest, given that total debt-servicing costs have risen by one-third since 2019 and are poised to rise by more than $3 billion in the coming years and given that the recent budget requires $16 billion in resource revenue to balance the books and given the 10-year average for resource revenue is $8.7 billion, again to the Finance minister: will you admit that your unsustainable spending plan is a recipe for more debt, more taxes, and hardship for our youth?

Mr. Toews: Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House have put the Alberta government’s fiscal house in order. We have brought our spending to a sustainable trajectory, and with last year’s surplus we’ve paid down over $14 billion of debt – over $14 billion – reducing debt-service costs of $560 million a year, year after year after year, funding that can be used for health care, for education, or reinvestment in the heritage savings trust fund.

Mr. Barnes: Given, for the sake of argument, let’s assume that through the magic of wishing this government’s pie-in-the-sky revenue projections do hold true, given that increasing spending could only further drive inflation and given that Albertans are already struggling with the rising cost of groceries and heat and electricity and fuel and virtually every other consumer product, again to the Finance minister: why are you budgeting billions in new and inflationary spending rather than providing broad-based income tax relief for hard-working Alberta families?

Mr. Toews: Madam Speaker, we have brought taxes down in this province, unlike the members opposite. In fact, today Albertans have a $20 billion tax advantage doing business and operating their households in this province relative to the next lowest tax jurisdiction in Canada, and we’re committed to ensuring that taxes remain low in this province. We’ve brought down per capita spending approximately $700 per person. I would suggest the member opposite consider CPI and population growth and take a look as an economist would . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

2:30 Private Child Care Operators

Mrs. Allard: When the federal-provincial child care funding agreement was signed in November ’21, daycare costs were cut roughly in half. While I recognize this effort, it is critical that our made-in-Alberta plan provides fair and equitable inclusion of private child care operators based on our province’s unique mixed-market system, particularly since 67 per cent of child care centres are privately operated, accounting for roughly 80,000 spaces across the province. Alberta is on pace to lose over 80,000 for-profit child care spaces that do not currently qualify for funding. To the minister: when will this agreement include all private operators, that make up the majority of our child care spaces?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I am always proud to talk about our government’s child care agreement, where we worked very hard to make sure that private operators, 70 per cent of spaces, that the members opposite, the NDP, were going to leave out – we fought for that. Instead of picking winners and losers, we fought for parent choice.

Madam Speaker, in the most recent agreement signed with the federal government, we’ve secured up to 22,500 additional licensed, affordable, and quality child care spaces in private child care facilities, which would provide employment opportunities for thousands more entrepreneurs, often female, who open up these spaces and the amazing early childhood educators who work in those spaces to support families.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the minister, through you, for her answer. Given that it is, in fact, International Women's Day and given that the majority of private child care operators are women entrepreneurs and further given that subsidies will be extended to all private, for-profit daycares once Alberta's cost control framework is established, again to the Minister of Children's Services: can your ministry provide a specific timeline for the release of the cost control framework and how it will affect these private operators?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, we announced this cost control framework with the federal government just a couple of months ago. Right now our government is engaging with operators to determine the details of what that is going to look like, but I can tell this House that it will be implemented in 2023-24. We will continue to engage with child care operators. We need to hear their voices. We need to make sure that they understand the changes and support the changes that we're making and make sure that they continue to be viable options in our child care spaces given the support for the families that they serve. Further details will be shared in the coming months.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie.

Mrs. Allard: Thank you, Madam Speaker and, through you, to the minister. Given that some privately operated daycare programs in my constituency of Grande Prairie have expressed concerns and also that they will be closing as soon as June 1 if things do not change and given that the children on their wait-lists will now wait even longer for the flexible, accessible, and affordable child care that our government promised, not to mention the children that are served in those centres that may be closing, to the Minister of Children's Services: what is our government doing to provide support to families in my constituency and across Alberta and the centres that serve them while we wait for the $45 million in new federal funding to be released?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, a number of those questions are coming because under the NDP 70 per cent of those spaces and private operators were completely left out. That happened in the province over to our west, also an NDP province, that had plans to phase out private operators. That is what has Alberta child care operators in the private space nervous.

Madam Speaker, to help more families access affordable, quality child care, Alberta is working towards creating 68,700 additional spaces, 42,500 in nonprofit programs, more than 2,600 in private, and these will be open by 2026.

Cardiac Care in Lethbridge

Ms Phillips: Yesterday the people of Alberta were subjected to watching the Infrastructure minister explain why he can't build infrastructure. He blamed me. He blamed cities. He blamed some doctors. He even blamed pipelines. That was a new one. It was a hot mess express and an embarrassing mix of incompetence and flailing. He said: Lethbridge's need for expanded cardiac care was a new thing. That's funny. Here's a report, that I will table after question period, from late 2018 on the topic. To the Deputy Premier: why won't he be honest with the people of Lethbridge about his failure to build health care infrastructure?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Very happy to be honest with all Albertans and share with them that the NDP in 2017 approved a number in their budget for the Edmonton south hospital that was plucked out of thin air. They did no business case. They had no details, no needs assessment, and no functional plan, all needed steps before anything can be designed and built in this province. That's the order and why it's done. Not only that, but the site that the NDP picked had a pipeline underneath it. They didn't happen to work on any negotiations or on how they were going to build a building around a pipeline.

Ms Phillips: Given that yesterday the Infrastructure minister claimed that 2022 was the first time anyone had mentioned the expansion of cardiac care in Lethbridge but given that that is not true, that what the minister has said is not true at all, and given that our government committed to the work that needed to be done to move this forward and given that there's public record of that fact back to 2018 – here's another article that I will table; it's right here, Madam Speaker – where is the Deputy Premier getting his facts? Why doesn't he give answers based in reality?

Mr. Neudorf: I have given answers based in reality. I've talked to the regional director of Alberta Health Services south. Not until 2022 did the cath lab in Lethbridge become a capital ask of Alberta Health Services. Yes, as a concept it was talked about from 2018 onward, but until Alberta Health Services south zone elevates that and puts it on the capital plan, which they did not do until 2022, we can't act upon that.

Ms Phillips: Well, given that it's now 2023 and nothing has happened and given that I just provided the Deputy Premier with evidence that this issue has been researched and studied by AHS and advocated by Dr. Sayeh Zielke, a Lethbridge cardiologist – I know the hon. member knows her – and given that the evidence dates back five years, yet the Infrastructure minister keeps saying that he's never really heard of it, and given that our government agreed to this project after the reports came out in late 2018, yet it's all a complete surprise to the Member for Lethbridge-East, why can't this minister just pull himself together and answer this question truthfully? Why don't we have expanded cardiac services in Lethbridge in Budget 2023?

Mr. Neudorf: So very interesting to hear that this idea came up in 2018, when they were in government, and they did absolutely nothing with it. Now, as it comes on the list in 2022, I have been advocating with the Minister of Health for that. I've had many conversations with him, and he works through the chain of command as well, elevating it from Alberta Health Services south zone to the executive leadership team of Alberta Health Services Edmonton, and it's being treated with every serious consideration, like every capital ask. We're doing the job properly, something the NDP has always failed to do.

Digital Media Tax Credit Policy

Ms Goehring: Yesterday I asked the Minister of Technology and Innovation why a digital media tax credit was not in the budget. He said that they need to do an economic analysis and ensure it's good value for taxpayers. Of course we need to spend taxpayer money wisely, but Ontario, B.C., and Quebec all think it's good value. Digital Alberta, the industry association for digital media, thinks it's a good idea. It's year 4. Why hasn't the UCP gotten their homework done?

Mr. Glubish: Madam Speaker, of course the NDP don't care about proper process and doing homework. That's why they're over there and we're over here. I have made it very clear to all of our stakeholders in this space and I've made it very clear to the opposition and to the public that before we implement any kind of a proposal to give tens of millions if not hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars to a specific industry, we need to make sure that it would be financially responsible and in the best interests of all Alberta taxpayers. The NDP don't have any evidence that that is true and that that would be the case, but we want to assure Albertans that we will prove that before we act.

Ms Goehring: Given that today in estimates the minister said that he needs to conduct an economic analysis before moving forward on a digital media tax credit and given that there was no analysis conducted on the UCP gambling away $1.3 billion on Donald Trump's re-election or tens of millions on their failed war room and given that we have not yet seen any analysis around the UCP's $20 billion giveaway to the Premier's friends, we know a digital media tax credit will support our economy. Why the double standard?

Mr. Glubish: Madam Speaker, I have been very clear about what our plan would be as it relates to a digital media tax credit concept, but what I want to point all members of this Assembly to is the fact that Alberta's tech sector is on fire. We are seeing record levels of investment coming to Alberta without a tax credit. We saw $729 million last year, which was a massive increase over the previous year and an exponential increase over whatever was invested while the NDP were in power. Our policies are working. Our approach to invest in the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, which is bringing five dollars into Alberta for every dollar they invest . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Goehring: Given that the UCP has strung the digital media sector along for the last three and a half years by promising to bring back the tax credit and failing to do so and given that the minister even had it in his mandate letter and said last fall that it was still a priority and given that the minister is stalling and throwing up more roadblocks despite clear evidence that a digital media tax credit will attract jobs and investment, will the minister stop playing games and just admit he has broken his promise to bring back a digital media tax credit?

Mr. Glubish: Madam Speaker, I don't know how many more ways to say it, but we have promised to Albertans that if we are going to bring in something that costs hundreds of millions of dollars over the next number of years, it has to be done responsibly. The NDP say that just because it's done somewhere else, it's a responsible use of taxpayer dollars. That is false. We need to do the economic analysis to demonstrate that this would be a good investment for every Alberta taxpayer, not just for the folks who would be recipients of these programs. I have committed that we will do that homework, and we will take the time to do it right instead of rushing blindly in and throwing taxpayer dollars around, as the NDP are wont to do.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes Oral Question Period. We have also concluded Members' Statements, so I might ask for your indulgence to hang around for a few more minutes while we complete today's ceremony.

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Good to see you in the chair.

I rise to give oral notice of Bill 10, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, 2023, sponsored by the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 9

Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023

Mr. Nally: Madam Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 9, the Red Tape Reduction Statutes Amendment Act, 2023.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have two documents to table. One is from October 5, 2018, indicating that "AHS report shows need for better cardiac services outside of Calgary, Edmonton," and one document, dated October 1, 2018, is headlined: "Lethbridge doctors hope life-saving cardiac treatment comes to their hospital soon."

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Mr. Shandro, Minister of Justice, "Abridged version of the speech delivered by Canada-Ukraine Foundation Board member and Ukrainian-Canadian community activist, Bohdan Romaniuk on February 24, 2023 at the Calgary Vigil commemorating the first anniversary of the War in Ukraine"; and pursuant to the Statutes Repeal Act a report entitled Statutes Repeal Act – 2023 List.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. There were two points of order called today, the first point of order at 2:05.

The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. At 2:05, while the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was asking questions, the Member for Calgary-Hays was heckling, yelling, shouting, booming, "You're making it up." And he did so multiple times. I waited until the member's question was fully asked before I raised this point of order because this is clearly counter to 23(h), (i), and (j) as well as the practices of this House. In multiple rulings, including November 16, 2021, and June 11, 2020, the Speakers have been extremely clear that shouting, "You're making it up" is unparliamentary. It is a form of calling a member a liar, and you cannot do indirectly what you cannot do directly.

Madam Speaker, I think this is a clear point of order, and I rise for your assistance. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would argue that this is not a point of order, that it is a matter of debate. Whether or not what the member opposite was saying is or is not factual is for the people to decide and for the members on this side to answer those questions. I don't find this a point of order. Some might agree – in fact, many might agree – that what that Member for Calgary-Mountain View was saying was made up. I encourage, you know, members, of course, to maintain the highest level of decorum in this Chamber, but this is not a point of order; it's a matter of debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there are a lot of notes here, a lot of things that were said during this session. I was hoping that on International Women's Day things would go so smoothly for your Madam Speaker here. However, here we are.

I did not hear the heckle in question, so unfortunately I could not make a ruling. As such, if those words were heckled, there has been previous ruling in which that would be a point of order, and the member would stand up and apologize in this Chamber. So this is a learning opportunity. We'll take this moving forward. Let's watch our heckles. If the Speaker does hear it, that will be the ruling at that time. I do not find a point of order because I did not hear it.

Let's move on to the second point of order. The Government House Leader.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, if members on this side of the Chamber had said something that was unparliamentary, I would expect that they would apologize, unlike members opposite who do things that are unparliamentary and don't apologize, be it off the record.

But I do have something on the record today, Madam Speaker. At the point noted, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, in what was a preamble, which is in itself a point of order, said the following, and I do have the benefit of the Blues: "It's a skill to be that arrogant and wrong at the same time." Now, the member went on here, as I have the Blues, to go on and ramble about other matters, but of course being out of order as a preamble.

This is certainly contravention of Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j). This is not the first time that member has said these kinds of things in the Chamber that are unparliamentary, whether it's on the record or off the record. I could certainly go in the big green book and find lots of precedents where this is a point of order. I would suggest that that member, with it not being the first day on the job, should recognize that she is doing her constituents a grave disservice by acting in such a poor and disrespectful manner. I ask that that member apologize herself in this Chamber to all members for being so disrespectful both to us as members of this Chamber and to her constituents and all Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Government House Leader can make demands, but I'm afraid it is not his decision, and I would argue to you that this is not a point of order. The member did not say "the minister is." The member did not say "she is." The member did not say "you is" or "you are." She would never say "you is"; that was my error.

In fact, Madam Speaker, using the term "arrogant" has been found to not be a point of order on numerous occasions in this House, including December 5, 2022, and June 7, 2021. Other Speakers have found this not to be a point of order but have issued cautions. I do not think that this is a point of order, and I look forward to your ruling.

The Deputy Speaker: Maybe a new Speaker makes new rulings. No; that's just a Speaker joke. Oops. Don't make the joke. Don't sing the song. Don't wear the hat. Okay.

Hon. members, this certainly is different than the previous point of order, which has been dealt with and concluded, but you brought it up, and these words are on the record. While certainly not helpful language in this Chamber and I would really caution members to refrain from this kind of language in the future, I don't find this to be a point of order.

This matter is dealt with and concluded.

Mr. Schow: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: You can't call a point of order . . .

Mr. Schow: On Standing Order 13(2). Yes, absolutely.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, okay.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Schow: Madam Speaker, I don't believe that the explanation you've given is sufficient, with all due respect. I feel that this is a point of order. While the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud did not specifically say "the Minister of Education" or "you" or "that member" or whatever poor language that was used, it was clearly directed at the Minister of Education, and I will say that it was in the middle of a preamble.

2:50

The Deputy Speaker: My apologies, hon. member. Standing Order 13(2) is used to clarify, to ask for clarification of the Speaker's ruling. I did provide my remarks on why I made such a ruling. I think it is not helpful language in this Chamber. It wasn't specifically pointed. While in a loose way I would argue that it is – and it will not be tolerated in the future – it is not considered insulting language directed at a member in this Chamber, and that's why it is not a point of order at this time.

Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded.

Pursuant to Standing Order 59.01 the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30. The legislative policy committees will convene this afternoon and tomorrow morning for the consideration of main estimates. This afternoon the Standing Committee on Families and Communities will continue consideration of the estimates for the Ministry of Health in the Rocky Mountain Room, and the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation in the Grassland Room. Tomorrow morning the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Environment and Protected Areas in the Grassland Room, and the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for the Ministry of Advanced Education in the Rocky Mountain Room.

The Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:52 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, March 9, 2023

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all. Amen.

Hon. members, as is the tradition of the Assembly, we take time to pay tribute to members and former members of the Assembly who have passed away.

Mr. Milton Pahl October 30, 1943, to March 1, 2023

The Speaker: Milton Pahl was elected as a Progressive Conservative Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on March 14, 1979, and was re-elected November 2, 1982. On November 19, 1982, he was named to cabinet as the minister responsible for native affairs, a position which he held until 1986.

Born in Hanna, Alberta, Mr. Pahl was a boxer in his youth, winning many Canadian and U.S. championships. He gave up his boxing gloves for school after his last match in the division trials to compete in the 1964 Tokyo Olympics. Mr. Pahl completed two degrees at the University of Alberta, a bachelor of arts in economics and a master of business administration. This set the stage for his successful career in business, involving management consulting and ownership of oil field related businesses. In 1992 Mr. Pahl received the 125th anniversary of the Confederation of Canada medal, which honours those who have made a significant contribution to their community. Mr. Pahl passed away March 1, 2023, at the age of 79.

In a moment of silent prayer and reflection I ask that you remember Milton Pahl each as you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of God Save the King by the hon. the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,

Members' Statements

New Democratic Party Policies

Ms Renaud: Yesterday the St. Albert business community hosted the leader of the Alberta New Democrats at a chamber luncheon. I was excited for local business leaders to hear about our vision for a better future. What they heard, in brief, Mr. Speaker, was that an Alberta NDP government has a vision for the future, an Alberta where we can support communities by giving them the resources and tools they need to properly support local economies and infrastructure, where we build a resilient jobs economy that is securely built on a diverse foundation.

An Alberta NDP government will create good-paying industrial jobs while targeting growth in emerging industrial sectors. St. Albert business leaders also heard our leader's commitment to an exciting project, the development of the Lakeview business district. The success of St. Albert's three existing light industrial and commercial business districts supports the creation of a fourth, the Lakeview business district. An NDP government will work with the city of St. Albert right away with the goal of bringing this new district online for development by 2024. This would unlock 7,000 jobs and new growth for employers in advanced manufacturing, agribusiness, clean tech, health sciences, and more.

This is great news for the city of St. Albert, and we're just getting started. Stable, predictable funding to municipalities isn't just a talking point; it'll be a commitment. An NDP government will put a stop to the cuts. No more cuts. No more downloading of expenses to municipalities. We will trust science and facts when we make decisions on investment to rebuild our public health care system. An Alberta NDP government will rebuild our public system so that nobody has to pay to see their family doctor, so that we can all access public health care when and where we need it.

There's a lot at stake this May. So, Mr. Speaker, St. Albertans can rest assured that an Alberta NDP government will always be focused on them and what's important to them. There is a better way forward. Join us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East has a statement.

Affordable Housing

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we approach the end of the UCP's first of many terms in government, more Albertans are taking pride in the ability to unlock doors to their very own homes. I'm proud to be standing here today to talk about affordable housing. Affordable housing does more for individuals and families than simply provide a place to sleep. Affordable housing serves a variety of Albertans, whether they be seniors, low-income families, individuals in recovery or transitioning out of homelessness, women and mothers fleeing domestic violence, and the list goes on and on.

Affordable housing often serves as a place for an individual or a family to have a fresh start, and we are proud to be providing that. I am honoured to serve as the MLA for Airdrie-East, and today our government made an investment in our community. Today it was announced that Alberta's government is providing $54 million to support an increase of more than 600 affordable housing units right across Alberta. I'm so glad to see that $5.5 million of that funding is supporting projects right in Airdrie.

Mr. Speaker, you have to ask yourself: how is this different than when the NDP were in office? Well, let me tell you. When the NDP were government, they made imaginary announcements that had no impact on Albertans except for negative ones. The difference between us and them? Not only are we announcing the money for housing, but we're actually building it, too.

1:40

Our government is cleaning up the mess made by the NDP as they increased the wait-list for affordable housing by 76 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that's a huge increase, but our government is fixing it. Albertans do not trust the NDP to build housing that meets their needs. That's why they elected our government. Over $1 billion in support for housing over the next three years is getting the job done.

Canadian Culture

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, the debate about multiculturalism is complex. Canada is growing with people who are looking for a fresh start in this amazing nation. Immigration is at an all-time high. The investments to support multiculturalism are substantial. If I could focus on one aspect, though, it would be on Canadian culture. There's a culture here, and it's an amazing one. The people that built the foundations of culture did it in times when the world was very segregated, when there were no jet planes that could move people across the world. It was a time when exposure to other cultures amounted to words in a book.

So to the woke mobs, people who claim to be so enlightened that they feel empowered to tear down statues of Sir John A. Macdonald, who rename streets like Dundas, and who denounce Christmas because it may offend a non-Christian: you're doing it wrong. My parents came to Canada after leaving postwar Japan and Philippines. They came to a country that had a culture of peace and tolerance, of freedom of the individual, and an environment where anyone could succeed if they put in the effort. They didn't expect to see much of the cultures that they left and came with an attitude of when in Rome, dress like a Roman, an attitude most people should take when they visit any nation out of respect for local cultures.

Recently I was made aware of things that happened at a recent election from another culture. There was active stalking of voting stations for a democratic election, with supporters who would whisper in the ears of voters to support a particular candidate. It's an act that's usually discouraged here in Canada, where people are supposed to be able to approach a voting booth with no fear of reprisal or undue influence.

I also discovered that another foreign act is to make promises of government contracts in return for support. At first I said that no one would dare do that here, but then we heard that a Liberal MP did just that. No wonder we see that trickling down to our local levels. The role models are there in this federal Liberal government. I do not wish to see a Canada where corrupt practices like immoral influencing of elections takes place. That is Justin Trudeau's version of Canada, not mine.

So to the woke mob out there: wake up.

Social Workers

Ms Sigurdson: March is National Social Work Month in Canada. It is a time to celebrate the social work profession and recognize its significant contributions to making a positive difference in the lives of Albertans. The Alberta NDP caucus not only recognizes social workers; we are social workers. The members for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall, Calgary-Buffalo, Edmonton-Castle Downs, Edmonton-Rutherford, Edmonton-Manning, and myself, Edmonton-Riverview: we're all social workers. We've attained our credentials and worked in the profession.

The theme in 2023, social work is essential, highlights the challenges we have faced as we come out of the global pandemic.

Social workers are more essential than ever as we witness the hardships, pain, and suffering of individuals and communities during this time. We are essential to navigating systems such as those in health, education, and social services. We are essential to advocacy, which includes celebrating diversity and antiracism. Social workers collectively work towards a just and equitable society united by diversity and strengthened by our goals for inclusion and allyship. Every day social workers support people in navigating complex systems. We are uniquely positioned to identify and address systemic gaps, provide key services and programs, and strengthen communities.

Albertans have an opportunity this spring to elect a government that is committed to lifting up our communities. As a proud social worker and New Democrat I will be working to elect a government that will protect public health care, make life more affordable, create good-paying jobs, and ensure integrity in leadership. Happy social work month to my colleagues and friends.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Bail and Sentencing

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to be part of a team that accomplished what it promised. Despite challenges, we managed to take care of emergencies, dealt with a financial crash, and succeeded in getting Alberta back on track. Alberta gives hope in Canada and lives up to its motto of being the place for the strong and free. We have a caring people with grit and determination, a robust economy, a balanced budget, plenty of jobs, and we'll skirt by a recession simply because of determination and intestinal fortitude.

However, there is a frustration in knowing that despite all we can do, we can never do enough on the files that are managed by the feds. As an MLA we lobby our ministers, who, in turn, work with their colleagues to lobby the federal ministers, which may have some effect.

However, when it comes to crime, it's no surprise that the Liberal government has a serious disconnect with reality. The catch-and-release system they have created by way of sentencing and bail terms is having serious consequences. Mr. Speaker, it's utterly appalling. A constituent of mine's daughter, 30 years old, was abducted on her way on the highway going to work. Two masked individuals forced her to the side of the road, assaulted her, dragged her into the car, and literally tried to kidnap her. She managed to stick her leg out as the assailants slammed her leg in the door repeatedly, and she managed to fight her way out and get back to her truck.

Another constituent, driving his 15-year-old daughter on the way home, was pursued and struck repeatedly from behind by another vehicle. The offending vehicle was stolen and was driven by a person who has been known to police, a frequent flyer, if you would. The father pulled off the highway. The suspect continued ramming into their car, got out and attempted to assault the man with a hammer, tried to abduct his daughter, and then tried to assault the daughter. The daughter had to jump out of the moving vehicle. The individual was caught, bail set at a zero value, and released the next day.

Good folks in Alberta are paying the price for a system that consistently favours criminals. We must look at what we can do to protect ourselves because the justice system managed by the federal government, where ideology rarely meets reality, is simply not cutting it. Albertans, Canadians deserve better. Stay vigilant, watch out for each other, and vote in somebody else who can take care of business.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Spruce Grove-Stony Plain Constituency Update

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last four years it has been my absolute honour to serve and represent the constituency of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain as a Member of the Legislative Assembly. As my first term is coming to an end, I would like to take this opportunity to reflect on some of our government's major accomplishments in my riding.

In terms of funding and investment, I am very proud of what we have been able to contribute and the incredible differences made in the area that almost 60,000 people call home. An $18 million grant to the city of Spruce Grove for the new events centre; over $6 million in grants and investments for the Meridian Housing Foundation; over $15 million in transportation infrastructure expansion investments, to name a few. Over $65 million in school projects or upgrades, including the development and completion of the Stony Plain central replacement school project, the completed modernization of the Woodhaven school project, and a recently completed new francophone school right in the heart of Stony Plain.

Serving as an MLA has also given me the opportunity to meet thousands of residents and hundreds of business owners, an aspect of my job that I will always cherish. The residents, business owners, community organizers, and volunteers in Spruce Grove-Stony Plain truly have an unparalleled commitment to their communities. This commitment has resulted in millions in community facility enhancement and improvement funding for organizations across the riding, which will benefit future generations of residents in the area.

Personally, I've been honoured to advocate for and support children in finding their forever homes and to push for extended producer responsibility on behalf of municipalities, environmental groups, and all Albertans. I'm extremely grateful for my 13 years of elected service at both the municipal and provincial levels and for what we have been able to accomplish thus far.

Looking forward, I'm optimistic for the future. I'm excited for the opportunity to continue serving the fine residents of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain and trying to make our area the best place in the province to live, work, and play.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Energy Company Municipal Tax Payment

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's rural municipalities are owed over $268 million in unpaid taxes. Municipalities can't take on debt, so when they're faced with a shortfall, they only have two options. They're either forced to pass this burden on to their citizens through property tax increases, or they have to cut services.

Mr. Speaker, that's just not fair. But you don't have to take my word for it. Rural municipalities are saying it themselves. The RMA president, Paul McLauchlin, said: "Ignoring property taxes doesn't just hurt the municipality, it hurts rural communities and places an unfair burden on other rural businesses and residents."

This government has had over three years to do something about these unpaid taxes. However, under their watch the debt has tripled. When I asked the government about their failure, their response was: we're actively looking at options. I am embarrassed for the members opposite who represent those rural communities and have to return to their town councillors, their Reeves, their constituents with that type of response, yet another cost that this government would put on the feet of rural Albertans.

But it gets worse. Rather than solving the crisis growing under their watch, this government came up with a different plan, to give $20 billion to the Premier's friends. This debt is a black eye on the UCP, and their $20 billion giveaway is an insult to rural Albertans. Every member of this Chamber knows it, and if the members opposite feel that my statement is unfair, then I might suggest that what they want to do is what they're forcing their constituents to do: wait for an Alberta NDP government to solve yet another UCP rural Alberta failure.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has question 1.

Health Care System Capacity

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the current Premier thinks she can talk her way out of the health care crisis that she and the UCP created, Dr. Fabreau, a front-line doctor at the Peter Lougheed Centre, tells the truth. He says that "the UCP's new health-care slogan 'Help is On the Way' feels insulting." He goes on to say that one of his colleagues recently told him that "help is not coming, so we have to help each other." Can the member opposite tell health care workers the truth, that under the UCP his help is nowhere near on the way, that it's just more chaos?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, thanks to the hon. member for the question. Help is on the way, and it's coming, and it's coming now. In part of Budget 2022 we increased the budget by $600 million, with a commitment for $1.8 billion over three years. In part of Budget 2023 – I'm hopeful the other side will help pass this – is an additional $960 million, almost $1 billion, for Health. We are investing in capacity in our health care system. We are ensuring that Albertans get the health care where they need it and when they need it. We're getting results, and I'm happy to talk about that in the next answer.

Ms Hoffman: Dr. Fabreau writes: "Our progressively shattered army of nurses, physicians and staff are giving up. We've lost waves of exceptional nurses." This is the real harm that the UCP has done to Alberta families by chasing away the front-line health care workers, that we all rely on. There are 34 Alberta hospitals partially closed due to staffing shortages today. Some of those have been closed for three years. Pregnant mothers are being forced to drive for hours in winter in labour to give birth far from their home. How can the member opposite tell those expecting parents that there is no crisis?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I indicated previously that we're getting results. I want to make one comment about the question that the hon. member made, saying that, you know, we are driving staff away. That simply is not the case. We have more doctors, more nurses, more paramedics, more health care workers in this province than ever before. If we even just look at doctors, Q4 of last year in comparison with Q4 of the year previous, an additional 254 doctors. Our investments in human resources and the investment of money is getting results, driving down EMS response times, emergency department . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: It's doctors and nurses who are saying it, Mr. Speaker, and I know who I trust when it comes to the UCP or actual doctors.

Thanks to the UCP war on health care workers, there are entire cities in Alberta where you can't find a family doctor accepting patients. No laughing matter. Families in Red Deer, Lethbridge, and the entire Bow Valley have nowhere to turn but an overwhelmed emergency room. I'm looking forward to an Alberta NDP government connecting a million Albertans with family doctors and a family health team, and that's when the UCP chaos in health care will finally end. But for the moment does the member opposite still want to say to the families in Red Deer, Lethbridge, and the Bow Valley that there's no crisis?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, we fully appreciate the challenges in terms of recruiting staff. These are not only challenges that we're facing here in Alberta, but in fact it's being faced by jurisdictions around the entire country and in the first world. But there is hope. I'm very pleased, given the work being done by AHS and working with the colleges, that 17 family medicine physicians have committed to the community of Lethbridge. As of March 9, 10 physicians have begun practising, and as they work through their CPSA practice readiness assessment, it is anticipated that three will begin in March and April and the remaining between May and later this year. We are making progress. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the call.

Prescription Contraception Coverage Policy

Member Irwin: Yesterday the Alberta NDP made a historic announcement that we will provide universal coverage for prescription contraception. Sadly, the Premier and the UCP think Albertans should continue to pay out of pocket for the health care that they need. After our announcement I heard from so many women about how this policy would be life-changing. Vicki wrote to me to say, "I literally had a hysterectomy because it was free and my prescription for an IUD was [500] dollars out of pocket." Does the Premier want to tell Vicki that she thinks this is an acceptable choice for Albertans to be forced to make?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. We all agree that Albertans and Albertan women need access to contraceptives. The issue at hand here is simply a policy disagreement with how best to approach that. We believe that we should remove barriers to access, like ensuring that low- and fixed-income Albertans have access under their government-sponsored health benefits. In fact, because of public and private health care coverage, most Albertans have access to coverage for prescription contraceptives. We approve of this approach, and we approve of the need, and we're delivering.

Member Irwin: I would suggest the minister listen to some of the Albertans who've reached out to me, like Cassandra, who wrote to me saying that "while it [might] be hard to believe for some" – like the Health minister – "health insurance is a luxury many people just can't afford." Cassandra went on to say that universal access to contraception will absolutely change lives. We know this Premier and, clearly, this Health minister want Albertans to get used to paying for the health care that they need. On this side of the House we could not disagree more. I have countless stories to share with the Premier, the Health minister about how this policy will change lives. Are you willing to listen?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We fully agree that there should not be a barrier. Income should not be a barrier for Alberta women to be able to access contraception. In fact, we have a number of programs in place to be able to support low-income Albertans in this regard. Contraception is listed in the Alberta drug benefit plan, and we have a number of low-income plans, including the Alberta adult health benefit, the Alberta child health benefit, the assured income for the severely handicapped, income support. We will continue to support these plans and ensure that low-income Albertans have access to contraceptives.

Member Irwin: The minister just isn't listening to me or to the countless Albertans who've reached out. Aimee from Calgary wrote to me saying that she "spent . . . over [$6,000] on hormonal birth control alone." These costs are overwhelming to Albertans already struggling with affordability, but the Premier thinks this is a sign of the system working, and clearly the Health minister does, too, and they have no problem forcing people to pay out of pocket for essential medical services. Does the minister really think it's okay for Aimee to pay $6,000 just to meet her basic health care needs?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, as I've already indicated to the hon. member, we fully support and we agree that Albertans need access to prescription contraceptives. The difference is that while on that side of the House they want to actually pay for everything, even including for people who can afford it and people who have private plans already in place to do that, on this side of the House we want to ensure that everyone has access. We will support the low-income individuals to do that, so with the additional funding that we have, we can actually continue to fund the expansion of our health care system and make sure that Albertans get the services that they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Industrial Development in St. Albert

Ms Renaud: Yesterday we promised that an Alberta NDP government will break ground on a new business industrial park in St. Albert next year, which will support local business development and create 7,000 new jobs. We'll partner with the city of St. Albert to service the Lakeview business district near Ray Gibbon Drive, preparing the area for development and new business growth. Why didn't the government support this important job-creating initiative for the businesses of St. Albert?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of northern development.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I did listen to that announcement, and I thank the member for the question. I was kind of surprised because it sounded a lot like corporate welfare based on the announcement. You know, I'm surprised there's any air left in this place with the sucking and blowing coming from the NDP. I did have a chance to sit down with that group, and I talked to them specifically in relation to how we can remove regulatory burdens and how this government can help to assist and keep the best interests of Albertans in mind, because, of course, there's only one taxpayer, and that's Albertans. We have to manage their money properly and fairly, and we'll do just that.

Ms Renaud: Oh, that member's view of corporate welfare is weird.

The city of St. Albert has made servicing the Lakeview business district one of their top priorities for economic development. However, the district was not funded in the government's budget despite the project potentially accounting for half of the city's new jobs that will be created over the next decade. This UCP government has ignored the economic centres of cities and towns across the province. If the UCP really cared about jobs and investment in St. Albert, why didn't they fund this project in their budget?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I remember four years of the NDP being in power in this province. Now, I don't know if you remember it, Mr. Speaker, but they brought in 97 tax increases, and then – surprise – they brought along a carbon tax, a tax on everything. They're not here to help businesses; they're here to shut down businesses. That's why we lost 183,000 jobs in their four years of government. That's why we saw net migration numbers flee Alberta. That's not happening under this government. In the last 14 months: over 100,000 new jobs, net migration at record numbers. We're not going to take any lessons on how to govern this economy from them.

Ms Renaud: Storytime is over. Now for fact. Ray Gibbon Drive was actually funded by an NDP government because we recognized what it would open, the corridors and opportunities that it would open. And you know what? Investment in the Lakeview business district is critical for this community. The best part is the proof of concept. It's already there in St. Albert. Three light industrial and commercial business districts have been a roaring success, and we need to get to work on the next one. If we already know this project will create jobs and St. Albert has been asking for it, instead of the rhetoric and storytime, why didn't you simply fund it?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it's so refreshing to hear the NDP talk about creating jobs, but I don't know what they thought they were doing when they added $51 billion in debt. That's what they did in their four years. Our Finance minister just put forward a budget to pay off $13 billion after $51 billion from them. I can't imagine a better way to go for businesses than to reduce their taxes and reduce their obstructions.

Mr. Speaker, we're going to work with St. Albert. We're going to work with any jurisdiction that comes forward with a good plan. And you know what? It is a good plan, and we're going to help them with their regulatory approval and anything else we can help, because after four years of NDP rule they need something different, that's for sure.

Digital Media Tax Credit Policy

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Leader of the Official Opposition promised that, if elected, an Alberta NDP government will reinstate the interactive digital media tax credit, that was cancelled by this UCP government. At the announcement Scott Nye from Digital Alberta said that jobs in the sector doubled in just a short period time when we had the right incentives in place in Alberta, which included an interactive digital media tax credit. But the UCP continues to drag their feet and break their promises. Why has the Premier abandoned this sector?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that under our leadership the Alberta tech sector is on fire. We are seeing exponential growth in investment in Alberta's tech sector, no thanks to the NDP. Last year alone we had $729 million invested into Alberta tech companies. It was an absolute record-smashing year, and that is because of the actions that we have taken as a government to make Alberta the most competitive jurisdiction in the country and one of the most competitive in North America. Businesses and investors and innovators are choosing in record numbers to come and make Alberta their home, and we are proud of our track record.

Mr. Carson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that Mr. Nye also said that Quebec, Ontario, and B.C. dominate the sector – they do so by aggressively courting companies, emboldened through tax policy choices that attract companies and talent to their tech ecosystem. He went on to say that without a digital media tax incentive, we are simply not competitive enough, and in fact without these incentives, jobs are leaving Alberta. The industry is saying that we aren't competitive in this sector under the UCP and we are losing jobs. Why is the Premier okay with this?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, apparently Quebec, Ontario, and B.C. don't know how to create jobs without subsidizing them, but in Alberta we do things different. We create conditions that make Alberta the most attractive place to put your capital to work, to grow your business, to hire people, and to attract people from all around the world to come and call Alberta home. We're proud of that track record. That's why we're seeing record levels of investment in every sector in the economy, including the technology sector.

By contrast, let's look at the year 2017. Under the NDP there was only $37 million invested in technology; under our leadership $729 million last year alone. I wonder which plan . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Carson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister keeps saying that he needs to conduct an analysis of the tax credit, but just a few days before the budget the Premier said on her radio show that it's good for jobs and would support downtown Calgary. She broke that promise only 72 hours later, when the budget came out. Even the minister has talked about the importance of the digital media tax credit when they endorsed the Premier in her leadership campaign. But without action, it's just words, and the UCP has failed to act: four years of empty talk. Why has the Premier repeatedly broken her promises to this sector?

Mr. Glubish: Mr. Speaker, talk about a failure: let's look at the four years under the NDP, where 183,000 Albertans lost their jobs because of their disastrous policies, taxing everything that moved, bringing in a carbon tax on everything, that made life more expensive for everything. Our track record is clear. Hundreds of thousands of jobs are being created because of our policies and because of our responsible management of Alberta's economy. Hundreds of millions and, actually, billions of dollars across the entire economy are being invested right here in Alberta because of our leadership. The choice for Albertans in the next election is clear. If they want growth, vote . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain has the call.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today our government announced a whopping $54 million in affordable housing projects across the province, 17 projects that will benefit low-income families, seniors, women fleeing violence, and many more Albertans in need of support. Now, given that I represent a constituency with a large, growing population, can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services talk about this investment in affordable housing and what type of impact it will have on the constituents of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to that member for the question as well as his advocacy. This announcement today of $54 million means that 600 new units of housing are going to be built across Alberta. That means 600 more families, individuals, seniors, individuals with disabilities, and many more are going to be able to unlock their door for the first time. These are shovel-ready projects, which means that people are going to be in their new home very, very soon. This means for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain, with this $14.7 million investment, that more people in Spruce Grove-Stony Plain are going to be able to stay in their communities where they've built their lives and their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and a big thank you to the minister. Given that under the NDP we received nothing but empty promises when it came to affordable housing and given that our government has taken real action to address the needs for communities large and small in Alberta and given that my constituents would like to hear about how our plan to build affordable housing today is different from the NDP's plan when they were in government, to the minister: why is your plan effective in providing affordable housing options for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think probably the best word to describe why this plan is working is "partnerships." We're working with the federal government, municipal governments, but we're also working with the not-for-profit sector and many other community partners to get more housing built. These partners have been successful, and that's why it's working. Under the previous government housing needs went up by 76 per cent. It's going down under this government. Our plan is working.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for his answer. Given that we're seeing a critical demand for affordable housing across the whole province, especially as a result of the 76 per cent wait-list increase under the NDP, as mentioned, and given the number of individuals and families still waiting for housing, could the same minister please tell the Chamber about the progress being made and what we're spending for Albertans in need of housing supports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are investing in housing. Not only have we built housing, but we're building housing. There are more units to come. Our budget represents a billion dollars over the next three years to address this need, to increase the supply. Our stronger foundations program announces 25,000 affordable housing units and supports for people across this province so that those who can't afford a house will have a home, a place that they can call home and be safe in and have dignity and respect. This is great news for Albertans.

Red Deer Regional Hospital

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, for the past week Albertans have watched this Infrastructure minister make all kinds of excuses for his failure to get anything built. But yesterday Red Deer doctors reported that the situation at their hospital has deteriorated. A transition plan is needed to protect patient care. Now, the Alberta NDP has committed to delivering the Red Deer hospital, but the UCP's failure to get any progress on this project is taking its toll. So I have a simple question for the Infrastructure minister, and the people of Red Deer would appreciate it if he could answer rather than making excuses. Will construction of the Red Deer regional hospital begin this year? Yes or no?

Mr. Neudorf: Very happy to report to this House that, yes, construction will begin this year. The RFP for design is going to be complete by the end of March. Design is the first step in construction. That is coming together with a functional plan to be designed and built to meet the needs of the people in Red Deer and central Alberta. I'm very glad that we've put this capital project back on the plan after the NDP removed it, and we are going to get this hospital built. We've got the money in the budget. We've got the plan in progress. We're looking forward to that design.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that construction will start when there's a shovel in the ground and given that surgical facilities are sitting unused due to staffing shortages and central Albertans are being sent elsewhere for surgeries because of critical shortages in local OR support staff and given that these shortages are the direct result of the UCP's war on front-line health workers and given that this government seems obsessed with pillaging public hospitals for the staff to work in private, for-profit clinics, will the Health minister stop spinning and simply tell the people of Red Deer: will their hospital be fully staffed this year? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As we've chatted numerous times in this House, there is a challenge in terms of recruiting health care workers across Alberta and, quite frankly, across the country and much of the First World, but we are having success. I indicated earlier that we have 254 more doctors in Alberta in Q4 last year compared to Q4 the year previous. We have a health action plan to be able to attract and retain doctors and nurses and health care professionals across the entire province, and we're working on that.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, given that the Health minister admitted yesterday that there's been no progress in increasing anaesthesiologists in this province and given that after four years of failures and driving the system into a crisis that we are still in the midst of, Albertans know they simply can't trust this government with their health care and given that there are no family doctors accepting new patients in Red Deer, not enough staff in their hospital – and apparently we're not sure if we're going to see actual shovels in the ground on the hospital this year – who is willing to take responsibility for the UCP's utter failure to provide the health care needed for families in Red Deer and across central Alberta?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of our government's record in terms of investing in health care and increasing the resources for health care: in Budget 2022 an additional $600 million in that year, with $1.8 billion over three years; an additional $1 billion in Budget 2023 to expand health care. We have more staff than ever: we have more doctors, we have more nurses, we have more paramedics. Now, I recognize that we still need more staff and the system is still under strain, but we're working with Dr. John Cowell as part of our health care action plan. We're getting results, times are coming down, and we'll keep working at that.

Misericordia Community Hospital CT Scanner

Mr. Dach: Imagine being rushed to a hospital in the middle of the night in critical condition and, when you get there, the CT scanner is out of service. Well, this is a recurring reality at the Misericordia hospital in my riding of Edmonton-McClung. Since February 25 it's been out of service again. The hospital had a stroke patient who had to wait more than eight hours for a CT scan that would have been available if that CT scanner was not out of service again, only to be transferred to a different site. Another patient waited more than eight hours to be transferred to a different site for a CT scan for a bowel obstruction. How can the minister justify this lack of critical, essential equipment?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government understands that we need infrastructure and health infrastructure to be able to provide services for Albertans. That's why I'm very pleased that as part of Budget 2023 over three years we are investing $4.2 billion for health care related infrastructure to replace, expand, modernize health care facilities and equipment across the entire province. There's an increase of $120 million in new funding for the Alberta surgical initiative capital program for additional surgical capacity in AHS facilities. That includes an additional $105 million in new funding for the continuing care capital program. And we continue to invest.

Mr. Dach: Given that the medical staff are feeling hopeless, day by day watching patients sit in a waiting room chair or even lying on the floor for hours before being comprehensively checked because the equipment is not working, and given that things are as bad as they've ever been, not getting better, as the Premier would like to boast, can the minister confirm when the CT scanner at the Misericordia will be replaced, and can he guarantee that they won't be forced in this situation again? Look right in the camera, Minister. The ER doctors over at the Misericordia are watching right now.

Mr. Copping: Again I thank the hon. member for the question. I know our government is expending record amounts in terms of capital for the health infrastructure. In regard to the specific question about the scanner in the Misericordia I'll have to actually get back to the hon. member, which I'm pleased to do. I know that, you know, we are investing additional dollars to make sure that the capital and the tools are there for our fantastic health care workers to provide the services that they need to Albertans. On the question on the Misericordia I will get back to you. But we do have funding for the budget, and we expect that as we give the funding back to AHS, they'll make the investments they need to keep the system running.

Mr. Dach: I'll take the minister at his word, Mr. Speaker.

Now, given that Albertans at the Mis are seeing shortages of specialists, surgical backlogs, and ambulance crews stretched so thin that they might have to leave patients in the waiting room to respond to another life-saving call and given that the least this government can do is ensure that hospitals like the Misericordia have equipment that works and stays working, can the minister explain to Albertans how he can claim with a straight face that there is no crisis in health care? Will he apologize to these patients who are being impacted by these ongoing UCP failures and immediately order a new CT scanner for the Misericordia? Twenty billion bucks to oil companies; we need a couple million for a CT scanner.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said to the hon. member, my office will get back to him directly in terms of the capital plan for the Misericordia because I don't have that on me right now, but I am very pleased at the progress that we're making on our health care action plan. As you know, we appointed Dr. John Cowell as our official administrator to focus on EMS wait times, reducing the surgery list, and reducing emergency department wait times. Our 90-day report, which we released a couple of weeks ago, is showing progress. We've had a decrease in EMS wait times, for example, from 21.8 minutes in November 2022 down to 17 minutes in January 2023, and we're continuing to make . . .

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Last year in this House the minister learned about the Fort McMurray firefighter who fought the catastrophic Horse River wildfire and was then denied WCB coverage when he developed kidney cancer. He has since passed, and the family is still appealing to the WCB four years later. The minister also heard about a Leduc firefighter who fought the Fort McMurray wildfire and who had to go through the appeals process after being denied coverage for their cancer. Since we know the minister is aware of these cases, can he explain why presumptive coverage is only on a go-forward basis in Bill 9 and won't apply to these heroes and their families?

Mr. Jean: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the firefighters and other emergency services personnel that continue to help us every day and did fight the Fort McMurray fire. We are the first province in Canada to offer event-specific presumptive coverage. We were the leader in Canada, and – it's true – other provinces have tried to catch up. We are again going to be the leader, and there's more good news to come. We have just recently announced that we have done away with and, first of all, accelerated the WCB, the Workers' Compensation Board, application process for all of the firefighters in Fort McMurray. Firefighters don't need to prove the cancer was job related to apply.

Ms Gray: Not all of them, Mr. Speaker. Given that presumptive WCB coverage proposed in Bill 9 will only apply to the current list of cancers in the firefighters' primary site cancer regulation and given that this regulation was last updated when I was the labour minister, and we made sure that Alberta had the most up-to-date and comprehensive coverage in Canada, and given that Yukon, B.C., Manitoba, Ontario, and Newfoundland are now covering several cancers that Alberta does not, why hasn't this minister listened to firefighters, listened to the latest science, listened to the Official Opposition, who have made this commitment, and ensured that Alberta firefighters have the coverage they deserve?

Mr. Jean: It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP were in power during this fire and subsequent years and they did nothing on it. We are doing something, but what we're doing is on an ongoing basis. We have to make sure the science backs up all of the applications and make sure that WCB is going to cover those applications that are necessary. Nothing is more important than those emergency services personnel that continue to serve us. This is an ongoing file, and as I mentioned in the previous answer, there will be some more good news coming forward in the near weeks.

Ms Gray: Given that cancer is the number one cause of firefighter line-of-duty deaths and given that some firefighters who fought the catastrophic Horse River wildfire in Fort McMurray were exposed to a career's worth of toxins in a single week and given that firefighters are proud to serve and protect their fellow citizens and deserve not to have to fight the WCB for support while they're fighting cancer, will the minister commit, like the Official Opposition has, to expanding presumptive cancer coverage for firefighters and ensuring all firefighters who have been diagnosed with cancer since the Fort McMurray wildfire are covered?

Mr. Jean: As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, there's more good news to come in the near future. The member is going to have to be patient. Frankly, they never got it done during their tenure in government. We are getting it done, but we're getting it done on a couple of bases. We're making sure, first of all, that firefighters are going to be covered when and if they need to be covered by WCB, and we're making sure that we have the scientific evidence to back it up. Finally, we're going to be the number one jurisdiction in Canada again. That is my word on that file.

Budget 2023 and Calgary

Mr. Sabir: Mr. Speaker, the UCP is only funding the construction of one new school in Calgary. This is an insult to students and parents across the city but also to the people of northeast Calgary, who badly needed this investment. As a direct result of this failure to invest, parents from northeast Calgary will be sending their children on longer bus rides to schools far outside of their communities. Why did this UCP government abandon families in Calgary and, in particular, in northeast Calgary?

Mr. Nicolaidis: Mr. Speaker, I can't understand the concern of the member opposite. You know, under the work being done by the Minister of Education, we are providing more schools in Calgary than the members opposite did when they were in government, okay? Those are the clear, objective pieces of information. In addition to that, we are also providing more funding to education than the members opposite did and, in fact, at any other time in Alberta history. Over $8 billion in funding to education priorities.

Mr. Sabir: Given that my constituents have also been hammered with the high cost of living and especially the high cost of groceries, insurance, and utilities – and it's really taking its toll on family budgets – and given that this government has ignored the Official Opposition's call to investigate high grocery prices, insurance, and utility costs and given that Alberta is leading the country in food insecurity right now, can the government explain why they're ignoring this cost-of-living crisis and my constituents?

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 2:22.

The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are proud to come forward to support Albertans at this time of great inflation, increased cost of living, with the largest, broad-based, and targeted support program in Canada, and that includes supports in all the areas that the member opposite highlighted. Utilities: we came forward with over a billion dollars in electricity rebates, providing up to $500 per household, to 2 million homes, farms, and small businesses. We suspended the fuel tax, saving drivers 13.6 cents per litre, including GST, on every litre of gas and diesel until June. We've done even more for our seniors, parents with children, and the most vulnerable: $100 a month for six months to off-set inflation.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the UCP's affordability program is clearly focused on a looming election and is going to expire in June, meaning that the UCP is planning to abandon these Albertans right after the election, and given that despite inflation and the cost of living remaining far too high, the budget did not lay out any new support measures or a real plan to address it, will the minister explain to Albertans why this government is comfortable abandoning these families right after the election?

Mr. Jones: Despite fearmongering from the members opposite, the affordability initiatives continue well past June. Our fuel tax relief: Albertans will continue to save up to 13.6 cents per litre on gasoline and diesel whenever oil prices are high. Natural gas price protection has become permanent. Whenever gas exceeds $6.50 per gigajoule, they'll get a dollar-for-dollar credit on their natural gas. AISH, income support, the Alberta seniors' benefit, the Alberta child and family benefit have been indexed annually. They will increase with the cost of living. Personal income taxes have been indexed. That'll continue, rising with the cost of living. Alberta parents will continue to benefit from affordable child care.

Thank you.

Energy Company Liability

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, this UCP government is refusing to tell the truth about the full details of the Premier's plan to dole out $20 billion to her friends and insiders. The Premier is desperate to push this $20 billion giveaway despite criticism from Scotiabank, Rural Municipalities of Alberta, landowners, health care workers, and, well, Albertans across this province. Will the environment minister, who opposed R-star, do what the Premier is afraid to do and tell Albertans why this $20 billion gift to her friends and insiders is a horrible plan?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of the environment.

Mrs. Savage: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is out for consultation a proposed program which is very different from the former R-star program. I'm not involved in those consultations. They're under development. In the meantime nothing is in the budget to spend any money – not a single cent of money – on that program or any others related to an R-star program. It's under development. They're making something out of absolutely nothing.

Mr. Nielsen: Twenty billion is hardly nothing.

Given that the environment minister expressed opposition to the Premier's flagrant abuse of power with her desire to give her friends and insiders $20 billion and given that the Premier is planning to take public money, hand it over to the oil companies to do the work they're already legally obligated to do, and she's doing it at a time of high oil prices, and given that Mark Dorin, director of Polluter Pay Federation, views the Premier's R-star program as being, and I quote, against the law, does the environment minister believe that R-star violates the polluter-pay principle?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities has risen.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta energy companies are required to meet annual mandatory closure spends, and it's working.

Police report that 15,000 wells were cleaned up last year alone. This year $700 million is earmarked for this important work, a 60 per cent increase over last year, and it's on its way to $1 billion in industry-wide targets for 2027. We will continue to support our world-class and responsible energy sector while also ensuring that they continue to fulfill their reclamation obligations.

Mr. Nielsen: Given that there are 170,000 unreclaimed sites throughout Alberta that need to be cleaned up and Daryl Bennett of Action Surface Rights said, "It's . . . regrettable that the taxpayer is left to fund these programs and that royalties . . . be reduced," and given that the Premier's R-star program violates the polluter-pay principle, will do damage to the reputation of Alberta's energy sector, and will see her friends and insiders pocket $20 billion, will the former Energy minister tell the Premier to do the right and honourable thing and abandon this scam?

The Speaker: The hon. member will know that the use of such language with respect to a scam or otherwise implying that somebody may be breaking the law is unparliamentary, and I would expect him to govern himself accordingly in the future.

The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the members opposite are in unfamiliar territory; it's called a surplus. On one side they say that the only reason we're in surplus is because of our world-class energy sector, but the problem for them is they've also made it clear that they want to shut that sector down. You can't have it both ways. You can't say that Alberta thrives and provides world-class health care and education because of our energy sector and then want to shut that same sector down.

In terms of $20 billion, perhaps that's the $20 billion of investment they chased out of our province in a couple of years, or it's the $20 billion of debt they added to our balance sheet in a couple of years. That's actually in budgets. The $20 billion you're talking about doesn't exist. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. the Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Affordability Plan

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Making life affordable for Albertans continues to be a top priority for our government. We will continue to aid Albertans in achieving financial security by a variety of means. Our affordability action plan has already provided support to seniors, AISH recipients, and families who are struggling with inflation and affordability. To the minister: please provide an update on the progress of the implementation of this plan.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The affordability action plan supports all Albertans, especially those with low and middle incomes, through a suite of measures designed to provide both targeted and broad-based relief. Low- and middle-income households are eligible for an estimated $900 in broad-based relief, with additional targeted supports of $600 over six months for low-income families, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans. For Albertans with the lowest incomes we've also recently provided increased support to food banks and low-income transit programs, and our plan is working. According to economists inflation in Alberta is easing more than elsewhere as a result of our affordability measures, including the suspension of the fuel tax and our electricity rebates.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that the affordability action plan includes measures to support Alberta homes, farms, and small businesses, can the minister elaborate more on how these measures are going to have a positive impact on small businesses, which have been particularly hard hit by the inflation and related economic challenges?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small businesses are receiving support through the affordability action plan. Many small or home-based businesses and farms are receiving up to $500 in electricity rebates. Businesses and their staff continue to save 13.6 cents per litre, including GST, through our fuel tax relief, and their suppliers are also benefiting from this relief, which helps literally drive costs down. The Speaker: The hon. the member.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that the action plan also includes initiatives aimed at improving access to affordable housing and supporting vulnerable populations, including Indigenous communities, can the minister provide an update on the progress of these initiatives, including any plan or ongoing collaboration with local governments and community organizations?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Today is a good day for Albertans as we just announced 600 new units of affordable housing here in Alberta. That was a $54 million investment. It's great news for Albertans. We've also recently announced $14 million in regard to Indigenous housing and partnerships with Indigenous communities and organizations to improve access for Indigenous Albertans to affordable housing. We are investing in housing. We have built housing, we are building housing, and we will continue to build housing going into the future. That's demonstrated by a billion-dollar investment in affordable housing over the next three years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

South Edmonton Hospital Construction Project

Member Loyola: The most recent budget tabled by the UCP did the same as every single budget by this government has done: it failed communities desperately in need of a hospital. The south Edmonton hospital is critical to the health and well-being of families in my community. Unfortunately, when asked about the project, all we heard from this Minister of Infrastructure is excuse after excuse after excuse. To the minister: why does this government refuse to support families in south Edmonton and build a hospital? What's the excuse this time, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure and the Deputy Premier.
