Legislative Assembly of Alberta

3 p.m.

Tuesday, November 29, 2022

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! All rise, please.

[The Clerk read the Royal Proclamation dated October 26, 2022, summoning the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to convene on this date]

The Clerk: Please be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Ladies and gentlemen, I would now like to invite Ariana Whitlow, accompanied by the Royal Canadian Artillery Band, to lead us in the singing of O Canada.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Presentation to the Assembly of Ms Danielle Smith Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat

The Speaker: I would now like to invite the hon. the Government House Leader to proceed to the main Chamber doors.

Hon. members, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Brooks-Medicine Hat containing the results of the by-election conducted on November 8, 2022, which states that by a by-election that was held in the constituency of Brooks-Medicine Hat, the Hon. Danielle Smith was duly elected as the Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat. Would she please come forward.

[Mr. Schow escorted Ms Smith to the Mace]

Mr. Schow: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you the hon. Ms Danielle Smith, the new Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, who has taken the oath as a member of this Assembly, has inscribed the roll, and now claims the right to take her seat.

The Speaker: Let the member take her seat.

Hon. members, while we await the arrival of Her Honour, the RCA Band will now play a brief musical interlude. The RCA Band, Canada's oldest regular army band, was formed in Quebec City in 1879. It was subsequently stationed in Montreal and Halifax. It has been in service in both world wars and in Korea and has travelled across Canada and beyond our borders. Reconstituted in Edmonton in 1997, the band today is under the direction of Captain Curtis Bain. Please enjoy listening to the Royal Canadian Artillery brass band.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LLD, and His Honour Dr. Zaheer Lakhani, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

Her Honour: Please be seated.

Good afternoon, everyone. Before I deliver the Speech from the Throne, I would like to thank all elected official members of the Assembly for serving our province. Thank you for what you do, and you know that you are a very important part of our precious system of government. The decisions you make and what you do in the Assembly, in the Chamber, make a difference to the lives of all Albertans, so I want to wish you all a very successful, productive session. I hope that when you go back to your constituencies, you will thank all the community leaders in your respective constituencies for what they do to keep our communities and province moving forward.

Now, before I end, I also want to welcome our new Chief Justice of Alberta, the Hon. Ritu Khullar. Congratulations, Madam Chief Justice. We all wish you well in your new role.

I want to finish by wishing each and every one of you and your families, your loved ones all the very, very best for a peaceful, joyous, happy holiday season, and let us all look to 2023 and the future with hope and optimism.

Speech from the Throne

Introduction

Her Honour: Mr. Speaker, hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly, and fellow Albertans:

I open this Fourth Session of the 30th Legislature as His Majesty the King's representative.

I would like to begin by acknowledging the passing of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, Alberta's and Canada's longest serving monarch. Her dedication to duty and service is an example that all of us in this Chamber should aspire to emulate. Queen Elizabeth had a great affection for our province, which is shared by His Majesty King Charles

III. I am honoured to open this Legislative Assembly for the first time on His Majesty's behalf.

Today we gather on Treaty 6 territory, and I invite all hon. members to reflect upon and acknowledge the traditional territories of Alberta's First Peoples and their invaluable contribution to our province and country.

Today's Speech from the Throne will outline the commitments of His Majesty's government for the people and province of Alberta.

Hon. members, this is a challenging time for our province. Rising inflation is impacting the ability of Albertans to provide for themselves and their families, our health care system is under significant strain, and we're combatting unprecedented interference and overreach from the federal government in Ottawa. These may be harsh headwinds, but Albertans are strong. We have faced difficult challenges before, and not only have we overcome them; we have grown the stronger for it. We will do so again.

Affordability

Albertans are an independent and self-reliant people. We do not often ask the government to assist us with meeting our needs. However, during times of crisis and hardship Albertans expect their government to use our vast resource wealth to assist those in need. We must never lose sight of the fact that our natural resources are not the property of government; they are the property of the people of Alberta.

And too many Albertans are facing an inflationary crisis that is forcing them to make choices they should never have to make. Parents are choosing between food and after school activities for their children, and seniors are choosing between life-saving medication and heating their homes. Although most Albertans are feeling the financial pressure of this crisis, low- and middle-income seniors, families with children at home, and vulnerable Albertans are being hit the hardest.

This crisis is not of Alberta's making. It has been thrust upon us from elsewhere. It is the result of supply chain disruptions and war internationally, combined with antienergy policies and economic mismanagement by politicians in Ottawa.

But whatever the cause, this government has a responsibility to take immediate action to help make life more affordable for all Albertans. The new Ministry of Affordability and Utilities will lead work across government to implement a package of targeted inflation-relief measures, starting with the introduction of the Inflation Relief Act. Under this legislation households earning under $180,000 will be provided with a tax-free payment of $600 over six months, starting this January, for each senior, to parents for each dependent child under 18, and to each vulnerable Albertan collecting AISH, PDD, and income support.

The government will also index for inflation AISH, PDD, income support, the Alberta seniors' benefit, and the Alberta child and family benefit while providing additional support for food banks and expanding access to low-income transit passes. Protecting and supporting the most vulnerable among us has and always will be the Alberta way, and this government is committed to ensuring that its support for those in the most need continues to be among the most generous in all of Canada.

Although most of this government's affordability measures will target those with the most need during this inflationary crisis, all Albertans will also benefit. The majority of Albertans must drive to go to work, buy groceries, and get their families to appointments and activities. The government will provide immediate relief at the gas pumps by suspending the entire provincial fuel tax for at least six months and by making the current fuel relief program permanent thereafter.

As temperatures drop and the days shorten, Albertans pay more for electricity and heating. This government will provide increased rebates on consumer electricity bills through the winter months totalling an additional $200 per household. The government will also make the current natural gas rebate program permanent and is working with providers on a plan to flatten out spikes in winter electricity rates this winter and permanently thereafter.

And to keep the tax burden on Albertans as low as possible, the government will index personal income taxes retroactively to 2022 levels, meaning a larger rebate for each Alberta taxpayer this spring.

Together these measures will save Alberta families and businesses more than $2.4 billion over the next 18 months. Again, this is just a start. More affordability measures are in the works because every decision this government makes until this inflation crisis is over will balance affordability for Albertans with protecting our province's financial well-being and that of the next generation.

Health Care

Albertans must have access to world-class health care where and when they need it most. However, across our province critical surgeries are being delayed. Parents are waiting hours with their children to receive basic treatment in the emergency room. Ambulances are taking far too long to arrive when needed. The government must take action. More words and platitudes will not shorten wait times or free up hospital beds.

Thankfully, our doctors, nurses, paramedics, and all front-line health care professionals are the best in the world and are heroes in our midst, and they are literally the key to fixing health care. We need many more of these great Albertans on the front lines caring for patients.

To our front-line professionals: we thank you. We know you are tired, yet you soldier on to serve and love and care for all of us. We love and salute you. On behalf of all Albertans, thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

This government is here for our health care workers. That is why it is committed to supporting our public health care system and ensuring resources are directed where they are needed most, to emergency and operating rooms rather than to boardrooms and consulting companies.

Although fixing our health care challenges will take time, we will see progress on these issues immediately. The government's Health minister, Jason Copping, along with AHS Official Administrator Dr. John Cowell have initiated the health reform action plan. The plan includes instructions to Alberta Health Services to maximize the use of all surgical facilities across the province while using chartered facilities to deliver more needed surgeries more quickly for more Albertans. The government's health care reform action plan also includes reforms to decrease ambulance response times significantly by shortening patient transfer times at emergency rooms, using specialized nonemergency vehicles for interfacility transfers, and empowering our paramedics to provide on-site evaluation and treatment where medically appropriate.

The government will also bring additional health professionals into our emergency rooms to assist with treatment and triage so that those who need a simple prescription or alternative care get the assistance they need without taking a hospital bed away from those who truly need one.

And, critically, the government will continue to lead with our world-renowned treatment-first approach for Albertans with mental health and addictions challenges while expanding mental health supports for youth and children. The government understands that investing significantly in mental health saves thousands of lives and improves the lives of hundreds of thousands more in our province.

It is time to double down on our success on this issue, and the government will do so.

Jobs and Economy

The Alberta government also remains focused on its steadfast commitment to job creation and economic diversification. To achieve Alberta's full potential, the government will champion innovation while reducing the barriers of entry to entrepreneurs and innovators who want to invest in new ideas and industries in our province.

We know Alberta's greatest asset is its people. This government is committed to nurturing the best education and training programs in the world. Training the next generation will meet the needs of both traditional and emerging industries to attract the best and brightest from across the nation and around the world to our province.

The government must also support the economic sectors that have brought so much continued wealth and prosperity to our great province. Alberta's foundational industries of agriculture and energy produce what the world needs most: food and clean, dependable energy. As Albertans we will never be ashamed of feeding and powering the world.

In fact, now more than ever the world needs more Alberta energy and agriculture, and this government is going to make sure that is exactly what happens. This government will work to reduce interprovincial trade barriers, work towards new customs preclearance for agricultural exports, and expand and improve Alberta's irrigation network. It will maintain and greatly expand exportation of our natural resources to world markets, and it will contribute to lowering emissions by investing in Alberta-based environmental technology like carbon capture and hydrogen while replacing the world's reliance on coal and wood with clean and ethical Alberta LNG.

Humankind has not solved its challenges by cutting economic growth and making people more poor. That is a recipe for environmental disaster and poverty. We overcome our greatest challenges through innovation, technology, wealth creation, and economic growth, and that is exactly how Alberta intends to take on the challenge of lowering our province's and the world's emissions. It is time for our federal government to get on board with that plan and, rather than land-locking our province's energy and technology, work with us to take our clean energy and technology to all the world.

And speaking of technology and innovation, this government will work to diversify our economy. It will do that through the development of a technology and innovation strategy, a new digital media tax credit, and the expansion of high-speed rural broadband services to attract new investment and changemakers to all parts of our province. This also means continuing to lead the way when it comes to harnessing the power of our natural resources such as hydrogen, helium, liquefied natural gas, and geothermal energy while exploring new economic corridors.

All of these opportunities will help Albertans benefit from the province's economic potential, including Indigenous peoples who have always called these lands home. As a part of needed economic reconciliation this government will strengthen its partnership with Indigenous peoples by listening, learning, and ensuring that Indigenous peoples are not only participants in our economic growth but partners and owners of the developments they choose to permit on their treaty lands.

Standing Up to Ottawa

It is important to address our province's relationship with the federal government. As Albertans we have individual and provincial rights enshrined in Canada's Constitution and Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These rights underpin the very foundation of our nation and who we are as Canadians and Albertans. These include our freedoms of speech and religion; liberty; equality; the rights of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit peoples; the right of provinces to deliver health care, education, and social programs free from federal interference; and, of course, the rights of all provinces to develop our natural resources for the benefit of our people. These personal and provincial rights are not something the federal government can simply supersede when it chooses. Ottawa is not our ruler; Ottawa is our partner, and it needs to begin acting like it.

The Canadian Constitution is clear. The federal and provincial governments both have exclusive and sovereign areas of jurisdiction, and this government will no longer sit idly by as Ottawa infringes on our constitutional rights to develop our resources, develop our economy, and deliver our social programs in the manner that Albertans see fit.

That is why the first piece of legislation this government, under our new Premier, will introduce will be the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. This act is to be used as a constitutional shield to protect the personal and provincial rights of Albertans from any unconstitutional or harmful acts by the federal government taken against our province, our people, or its economy. Whether it be Ottawa restricting the use of fertilizer by our farmers or attempting to prevent us from developing the very energy resources that power our provincial and national economies, whether it be persecuting owners of legal firearms, inappropriately invoking emergency powers, or intentionally interfering in the delivery of provincial health care, education, or child care, the government will not enforce any unconstitutional federal measure or policy within the boundaries of Alberta going forward.

Let us make no mistake: Albertans are proud Canadians, and we love our country. This legislation will never be used to undermine the rule of law or the unity of our nation. Just the opposite: it will be used to uphold and restore the intent of the most foundational document of our law, the Canadian Constitution and Charter of Rights.

Alberta's voices will be heard, Albertans' rights will be respected, and the Alberta government invites every one of its fellow provinces to work with the government in ensuring that same respect is demonstrated to every single province by our nation's capital on a go-forward basis. In so doing, the government will ensure Canada becomes stronger and more unified than ever before.

Overcoming Challenges Together

Hon. members of this Legislature, whatever your party affiliation, the government asks that you work together to overcome the challenges facing this province for we are all Albertans, and we love this province deeply: our magnificent cities, our breathtaking mountainscapes, our boundless fields of grain and natural resources, and, of course, our greatest treasure of all, the indomitable and compassionate spirit of our people. Our nation and the world need Alberta to lead, and that is what the government shall do because that is the Alberta way, and Albertans must never apologize for it.

God save the King, and may God bless Alberta to be forever strong and free.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, I would now like to invite Ariana Whitlow, accompanied by the RCA Band, to lead us in the singing of God Save the King. Please remain standing at the conclusion of God Save the King.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious King,

Long live our noble King,
 God save the King!
 Send him victorious,
 Happy and glorious,
 Long to reign over us,
 God save the King!

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours, their party, and the Premier left the Chamber as a fanfare of trumpets sounded]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

[The Mace was uncovered]

[The Premier returned to the Chamber]

Statement by the Speaker

50th Anniversary of Legislative Assembly Broadcast Services and Alberta Hansard

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to provide some brief remarks about two very important anniversaries in the history of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. This year marks the 50th anniversary of both the television broadcast of the Assembly proceedings as well as Alberta Hansard.

On March 2, 1972, something special happened here at the Assembly. It was opening day of the 17th Legislature, and it was the first time that the Assembly proceedings were broadcast live on television. I can only imagine the anticipation of Albertans from corner to corner. In the throne speech that day the government announced that as part of their open government program the regular proceedings of the Assembly would be televised.

A week later, on March 9, the Assembly adopted a resolution, supported by all parties – note to members – to allow for the broadcast of proceedings by various media, including television. After preparations were made, by March 15, 1972, regular broadcasts of the Assembly's proceedings began.

In those early days only Friday question period – yes, you heard that right: Friday question period – was broadcast, and a summary of the prior week's proceedings on the following Sunday was televised. By 1978, however, CTV broadcast gavel-to-gavel coverage of the proceedings. This would later be reduced, sadly, to only Oral Question Period and certain items of the daily Routine until the advent of Alberta Assembly TV, which broadcasts proceedings from gavel to gavel once more.

Significantly, Alberta was the very first jurisdiction in Canada to have its proceedings broadcast on a permanent basis.

Nineteen seventy-two was also a very important year because on March 8, 1972, a motion was moved and passed, with the support of the entire House, to publish a complete record of Assembly proceedings retroactive to March 2. Alberta Hansard was born. By 1974 Hansard staff produced the Hansard Blues, which are the unofficial transcripts of the Assembly that are made available to all of us. Since 1972 Alberta Hansard has been relied upon extensively by members, staff, Assembly officials, media, and members of the Alberta public to know and to follow the Assembly debates, to understand and fully appreciate what their elected officials are saying in the Assembly.

Nineteen seventy-two also marked a very important date in my parents' lives, who join us today in the Assembly, as it was also their 50th anniversary just last week. Welcome to the Assembly. [applause]

To conclude, I will leave you with this thought, and I encourage, as we start a new session of the Assembly, members to choose their words wisely. It is estimated that since Alberta Hansard formed, over 50 years ago, approximately 153.7 million words are part of the permanent record of Alberta history and Alberta Hansard. I hope you will choose your words wisely, and let's look to see what the next 50 years have in store for the Alberta Assembly.

Tablings

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have the honour to table a copy of the speech graciously given by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise to add a few more words to the millions that have already been put on the record. Thank you for that wonderful history.

It is also my honour today to rise and introduce the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is designed to be a constitutional shield to protect Albertans from unconstitutional federal laws and policies that harm our province's economy or violate Alberta's provincial rights. To be clear, it was devised to be respectful of court decisions and Indigenous and treaty rights. By restoring and respecting the constitutional rights of our creative and diverse provinces, including Alberta, Canada will become stronger, more prosperous, and more unified than ever.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move first reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for first reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division]

The Speaker: I'll tell you what we'll do, hon. members. A division has been called, which is, of course, the right of members of the Assembly, however unconventional during a throne speech. A division bell will be rung. For the benefit of those seated and joining us in the galleries, it sounds a lot like a fire alarm; however, there is no fire. We will have a recorded division. What will happen is that there will be a 30-second bell. There will be a 15-minute period between that and when the actual division takes place. At 14 minutes a minute-long bell will sound again. Please don't be alarmed. To try to make this as smooth as possible, if you must leave the Chamber, I think it's reasonable to allow you the opportunity to do that. If you can remain seated to create as little disruption as possible, that's helpful, but I appreciate the fact that the delay may not be ideal for some of you.

[The division bell was rung at 3:54 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the speech of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this Assembly be taken into consideration Wednesday, November 30, 2022.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: Members and invited guests, I would like to remind all of you that you are invited to attend a reception, that is currently half being held in the Legislature rotunda, immediately following the closing ceremonies. I hope that you will join us for some light refreshments.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until Wednesday, November 30, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:13 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 30, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, please remain standing. As is our custom, we pay tribute to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since the last time we've met.

Mr. Peter Trynchy August 22, 1931, to November 21, 2022

The Speaker: Peter Trynchy was elected as the Progressive Conservative Member for Whitecourt on August 30, 1971. Mr. Trynchy won six consecutive elections in Whitecourt and two in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, serving eight terms before retiring in 2001.

During his nearly 30 years of service Mr. Trynchy was the government whip from 1975 to '79; the minister of recreation and parks from '79 to '86; the minister responsible for occupational health and safety, and Workers' Compensation Board from 1989 to 1992; the minister of transportation and utilities from '92 to '94. Before his election to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta Mr. Trynchy served his community on the Mayerthorpe town council for six years. A businessman and a farmer, he earned a reputation for taking immediate action during his time in office. Mr. Trynchy received the Queen Elizabeth II golden jubilee medal in 2002 and the Michael Luckovich award for outstanding public service by a parliamentarian of Ukraine origin in 2008. A driving force to establish the Mayerthorpe Airport, it was renamed in his honour in 2020.

Peter Trynchy passed away on November 21, 2022, at the age of 91. In a moment of silent prayer or reflection I ask you to remember Mr. Trynchy as you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Proposed Amendments to Standing Orders

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I call upon the Clerk for the daily Routine, I notice that Government Motion 9, which is on notice on the Order Paper today, is proposing to amend a number of standing orders, including amendments with respect to two items in the daily Routine: Introduction of Guests and Members' Statements.

The motion seeks, among other things, to amend Standing Order 7(3) to provide that each day members may make introductions under Introduction of Guests, that the time allotted for this item of business is to be four minutes, and that each member's introduction may not exceed 20 seconds. In addition, an amendment has been proposed to Standing Order 7(4) to reduce the number of members' statements from nine to seven each day.

I understand that two unanimous consent requests may be coming forward that would seek to give effect to these proposed amendments this afternoon. Is someone willing to make the first request? The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(3) in order to allow members to make their own introductions of guests for a period not exceeding four minutes, each introduction to not exceed 20 seconds.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Accordingly, Introduction of Guests this afternoon will follow the process I have just outlined.

Is the hon. the Government House Leader willing to make a request for unanimous consent for Members' Statements to give effect to the motion?

Mr. Schow: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to ask for unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(4) in order to allow for seven members' statements to be given today in the order outlined in the House leaders' agreement shared with all members by the Speaker.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The rotation for Members' Statements that will apply today is contained in a House leaders' agreement that I received on November 28, 2022, which has also been circulated to each member and that I will table at the appropriate time today in the Routine.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with admiration and respect there is a gratitude to members of families who have shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome the members of the Trynchy family who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your name, and remain standing until all have been introduced: daughter of Mr. Trynchy Darlene Langevin and her husband, Val; grandson Christopher and granddaughter Ashten; and son Marlin Trynchy and his wife, Janet Gervais. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two people who I can safely say I would not be here without. One of them is my father, Doug Smith, and the other is my mother, Sharon Smith. When I told them I was going to get back into this job, they said, "Are you crazy?" And I said, "Thank you for your vote of confidence." I'm so glad that they are here. Please give them the warm welcome of the Chamber.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows has a school to introduce.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and, through you, would like to introduce 80 grades 5 and 6 students of Julia Kiniski school in my riding of Edmonton-Meadows. Among them are their hard-working teachers, staff. I would like to name Mr. Dale Mandryk, Ms Crystal Jenkins, Ms Lexie Zechman, and Parminder Grewal. Please join me in welcoming all of them here.

Thank you.

Statement by the Speaker

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I know that it will take some time for us to get used to the reintroduction of Introduction of Guests, but I will remind members that those introductions are to be 20 seconds or less. I believe that we ought to set the precedent for what these introductions will look like in that I am of the belief that these introductions ought to be about the guests and less about being used as a partisan tool. That's not a reflection on the introductions that we've had already this afternoon but more that I wanted to provide that reminder and had forgotten. They will be 20 seconds, and I will be rising, as I do during question period or other speaking limits, to ensure that we can get through as many introductions as possible, and I encourage members to keep their remarks brief out of respect for others.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, seated up in the Speaker's gallery, Chase Malkin and his mother, Janell. Chase has taken a keen interest in learning about Alberta politics and spends many days learning about all of us. I have no doubt that one day he'll be seated down here on this very floor. Please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly, and stop by 323 to meet Chase after question period.

Member Ceci: Elladee Windsor is a master of social work student who is currently completing her practicum in my constituency office. Her work is focused on the Fort McMurray wildfire and the role of social workers in recovery from disasters. I'm so proud she's here today, and I can't wait to watch her career grow and develop.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of this Legislative Assembly my friends Destiny Chiasson and Brett Pearce. Please rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans' rights are sacred. They are enshrined in the Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Unfortunately, for too long our rights have been trampled on by federal actors, and for too long governments have failed to stand up and say: enough is enough. As we all know, this has grave consequences for our industry, our economy, and our workers.

Fortunately, those days are done. On Tuesday Bill 1, the long-awaited Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, was introduced in this Legislature. If passed, this act will empower our province to stand up against overreach and interference from the federal government, fight federal legislation that is unconstitutional or harmful, and defend the federal-provincial divisions of power, giving our province the right to develop policies that reflect our own unique needs.

This is not about separation. This is about strengthening and clarifying the bonds that make us a true confederation. This bill even has inspired other provinces like Saskatchewan to pass their own legislation affirming their jurisdictional authority against the federal government.

Contrary to what the opposition NDP will say, this act in no way permits cabinet to unilaterally amend legislation, but it comes as no surprise that the opposition NDP is already opposing the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act without even reading it. Their actions only serve to remind us how they sold Albertans out to Justin Trudeau and Ottawa when they were in office and how they will do that again if given the chance.

Our United Conservative team won't do that. We will always put Albertans first, we will defend Alberta's constitutional authority against overreach from Ottawa, and we will fully exercise our areas of jurisdiction granted under the Constitution. This bill is not a sword; it is a shield. Albertans expect their government to defend the province they cherish, and that is exactly what we are going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's postsecondary institutions are crucial to our economic recovery, equipping Albertans with vital skills and knowledge for now and the future. Unfortunately, college, polytechnic, and university students are struggling today because of decisions made by this UCP government. The Minister of Advanced Education has approved tuition hikes anywhere from 16 to 104 per cent and more than $10,000 in additional annual fees. This government has consistently downloaded even more costs onto the backs of students, students who are already struggling due to the countless other UCP decisions that have made life unaffordable for Albertans.

Now, at a time where people across this province are struggling, this government has just made a bad situation worse. Alongside increases to tuition, fees, student housing, and more, interest rates have steadily been on the rise as well. So what does this government do? They add an additional interest charge on student loans. This means they are cruelly profiteering off Albertans who are simply seeking higher education. This extra money that the UCP is taking out of the pockets of Albertans adds to student loan payments, one steep monthly bill during the worst affordability crisis in 40 years.

Students are facing major pressures in every aspect of their lives: increases to rent, utilities, tuition, gas, insurance, and more. The list goes on and on. Yet the average student doesn't even have access to the inadequate affordability packages offered by this government. While some folks are able to access these resources, so many students are simply left out in the cold. Single people, those without children, students: they're all impacted by the affordability crisis, too, and they're just as worthy of support, I believe.

These are our future leaders. They are facing an affordability crisis and are crying out for help. The Alberta New Democrats are listening. Should we form the next government, we will take action to ensure that education is affordable and that our young people are set up to lead into a bright economic future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Former MLA Peter Trynchy

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a heavy heart I share a member's statement today regarding the passing of Honourable Mr. Peter Trynchy. He passed away on the 21st of November at the age of 91. He was preceded by the love of his life, Lorraine. He'll be missed by his son Marlin Trynchy and his wife; by daughter Darlene and her husband; and by grandchildren Christopher, James, and Ashten as well as five great-grandchildren.

Peter Trynchy was born in Rochfort Bridge, Alberta, on August 22, 1931. Peter was a businessman, a farmer. He ran a local grain elevator for years. He served on the Mayerthorpe town council and a number of other local organizations. Peter was elected in 1971, served for 27 years. For those keeping score at home, that's eight consecutive terms. He was the minister of recreation and parks, the minister of OH and S, the WCB, public safety services, transportation and utilities. There isn't a corner of this province that didn't benefit from Mr. Trynchy's hard work over the time in office. Mr. Trynchy would often remark how exciting it was to be part of such a significant change in Alberta under the leadership of Premier Lougheed. Mr. Trynchy established the Peter Trynchy scholarship, which helps folks to obtain career education in technical trades.

I first met Mr. Trynchy when I was knee-high to a grasshopper at the Wildwood Fair. He took the time to talk to me as a kid and give me an Alberta pin. I carried that around for years, and it's one of the reasons as an MLA I do the same thing for kids in our constituency.

In 2020 we renamed the airport in Mayerthorpe after Mr. Peter Trynchy. Without him it wouldn't have been built. We made it a stop on the Alberta Air Tours. We had 20 airplanes that came along and stopped in, and it was the first time the seniors were able to get out of the homes. I had the honour of giving Mr. Trynchy an Alberta pin back and told him the story, and it made him smile.

Mr. Trynchy, you left some awfully big shoes in our constituency to fill. I'll do my utmost to fill them. I wish to thank you and your family for all your years of service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Seniors' Support

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our seniors helped lay the foundation for our great province. Because of the importance that seniors hold in our province, it is critical that they are taken care of. Today I'm honoured to stand in this House to share just one of the ways that we are taking care of seniors in my constituency of Livingstone-Macleod.

This summer I had the privilege of visiting Peaks to Pines, a new 100-unit seniors' lodge in the Crownsnest Pass. This seniors' living facility offers different levels of care: seniors can choose independent living and be self-sufficient in their own suites, or they can choose to have supportive living, where they have access to on-site health care aides, prepared meals, housekeeping, and more. These varying levels of care choices will provide seniors in my riding with the flexibility and support they need. Peaks to Pines lodge is a huge step in the right direction towards housing options for seniors.

Mr. Speaker, although this facility is a great addition in my constituency and I'm pleased to see it finally completed, it does not solve the issue of difficult living situations for seniors across our province who simply cannot afford to live in a facility like this. Investment in affordable housing and care facilities will be vital to ensure that seniors have the best care possible and will keep them close to family and friends.

Seniors in our province, especially those who live in rural communities, need more support from our government. Because of the increased costs of living and the inflation crisis, Albertans everywhere are struggling. Living on fixed incomes, our Alberta seniors are struggling to afford life. Recently our government announced that we will be increasing the benefit rate for low-income seniors by 6 per cent beginning this January. Low-income Alberta seniors will also be receiving an additional $100 a month for six months beginning in January. Mr. Speaker, the indexing of these financial assistance benefits and the additional cash is going to be critical as we address the financial pressures our older Albertans face. This added 6 per cent will have a positive impact on the lives of our seniors.

Thank you.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Mr. Sabir: Economic certainty; stable, competent government; the rule of law: all of these things are critical for the future of Alberta, and all are under threat with the introduction of the Premier's sovereignty act. This bill is unconstitutional. It completely disrespects this House, the people elected to serve in this House, and millions of Albertans who put us here.

The Premier was selected by 1 per cent of Albertans. She didn't even have the majority of support in her own party, yet she now believes she can give herself supreme power to rule outside of this House, that she can change legislation behind closed doors. She has decided her actions are not subject to public accountability. She has decided she supersedes us all.

While she may be so misguided in her own love for herself to give herself this power, her own ministers don't agree. The Finance minister called the bill a ticking time bomb. The Minister of Municipal Affairs called it the Anarchy Act. The minister of environment said that it will "create instability and chaos." I could go on and on.

Now those ministers stay silent, but Albertans are speaking out. Political scientists are calling it the most undemocratic piece of legislation this House has ever seen. Investors and businesses are reaching out to us to express serious concerns as they openly consider whether to pull out of the province altogether. This bill will kill jobs; it will stop investment; it will destroy our economic future; it will erode our democracy.

This Premier must be stopped. I call on every MLA in this House today to take a stand against this Premier. We are at a critical moment. Albertans are watching, and if you refuse to act now, you can explain to our children why you put their future at risk.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Statement by the Speaker

Rotation of Questions and Members' Statements Private Members' Business Rules and Practices of the Assembly

The Speaker: Hon. members, as this is the first regular sitting day of the Fourth Session, there's some information I wish to share with you prior to Oral Question Period. I would like to inform you that modifications have been made to the Oral Question Period and members' statement rotation based upon the House leaders agreement I mentioned in my earlier statement.

One Oral Question Period each week and one member's statement every three weeks had been assigned to the member who was the independent member during the spring, the Member for Central Peace-Notley. However, since that member is now a member of the United Conservative caucus, that question and member's statement have been allocated to the United Conservative caucus.

The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat will be entitled to question 8 on day 3, and the Member for Edmonton-South will be entitled to question 9 on day 4. Each of the independent members will continue to be allocated one member's statement every three weeks. The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is allocated a statement on Monday of week 2 of the rotation, and the Member for Edmonton-South has been allocated a statement on Monday of week 3.

With respect to private members' business there have been some modifications to the list of positions for private members' public bills and motions other than government motions drawn for the Fourth Session. As a result of recent appointments of certain private members to Executive Council and the resignation of the former Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, bills 210, 224, 231, 238, 239, 245, 246, 253, 254, and 255 and motions other than government motions 510, 515, 520, 521, 523, 526, 539, 542, 543, 551 have all been withdrawn from the list of positions for the Fourth Session of the 30th Legislature.

As I reminded you in the procedural memo sent to members on November 28, a number of parliamentary secretaries have been appointed recently. I remind you that parliamentary secretaries are private members; they are not members of Executive Council. Accordingly, they have the rights and the duties of private members, not of members of cabinet. I refer members to the rulings by Speaker Kowalski on April 16, 2008, which can be found on page 13 of Hansard for that day, and Speaker Wanner, which can be found on page 1599 of Hansard from October 30, 2017, which indicate that it is inappropriate for parliamentary secretaries to direct questions to the minister whom the parliamentary secretary is affiliated with. Accordingly, I would ask that the parliamentary secretaries refrain from posing questions to their ministers.

With respect to House leadership I would remind members that the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul is a private member. He has been appointed as the Deputy Government House Leader. Members will recall that the current Government House Leader was previously appointed the Deputy Government House Leader during the 2021 fall sitting, also when he was a private member. On October 25, 2021, I made a statement on the scope of the member's role as the Deputy Government House Leader, and I'd urge the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul and all members to review those remarks, which can be found on page 5647 of Hansard from that day.

I wish to remind members that the election of the Deputy Chair of Committees will take place immediately following the Routine.

Finally, as we embark on this session, please remember that in accordance with Standing Order 13(7) members must be in their assigned seats when speaking or voting.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by quickly congratulating the Premier on her new role.

Mr. Speaker, all Albertans – all Albertans – expect their elected officials to stand up for Alberta, no question. But yesterday we learned that the Premier's approach on sovereignty is not that but, rather, a full-throated power grab from Albertans. She's granting herself the ability to write laws in secret, behind closed doors, no reviews, no checks, no balances, just an unprecedented abuse of authority. To the Premier: why is her first act an unconstitutional, antidemocratic attack on the democratic rights of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question from the hon. member. No, it does not. It's very clear. I suppose if the opposition had stayed to actually read the bill when it was presented yesterday – I would have expected they might have read it in the meantime – they would have seen that every decision that is going to be made has to first get the validation from this Assembly. What that means is that this Assembly will pass a motion, and it will give the direction to cabinet. It will always be at the direction of the members that we will make decisions in cabinet.

Ms Notley: Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm relying on the briefing from the Deputy Minister of Justice, who does understand this legislation, unlike this Premier. In fact, this move is nothing more than a cynical political tool used to consolidate power and to undercut our much-needed economic recovery. In fact, the Calgary Chamber of commerce says that it will impede new investment, reduce business certainty, and make it harder to attract new talent. Why doesn't the Premier put Albertans first, drop this bill, and start doing some real work to protect and promote investment in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number one biggest detractor and the number one thing that has chased investment out of this province has been the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa and their undemocratic decisions and their violation of our constitutional rights in this province. That is what the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act is all about. It is about enforcing our constitutionally guaranteed rights to make our own decisions regarding the development, the conservation, and the export of our resources. I would ask the opposition to support it.

Ms Notley: Well, quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. We're seeing an alarming collision of three very rare political events: first, we have a Premier who's made more mistakes in three weeks than most make in three years; second, we have a Premier selected by less than 1 per cent of the population a mere six months before a general election; and third, that same Premier is now attempting to consolidate more power outside of the Legislature than any Premier in the history of this province. She's in over her head. Why won't she withdraw this legislation and focus on real solutions for Albertans?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm looking forward to educating the opposition in my speech later today on the sovereignty act about how our country is supposed to work and the fact that Alberta does have sovereign rights to make decisions in areas of exclusive jurisdiction. I would just ask for them to listen to the debate and to support the actions that we are taking here because we know that Albertans want us to act on this. We have a mandate, with the equalization referendum that was passed, that our people want to make sure that we stand up to Ottawa, and that's exactly what we're going to do with the sovereignty act.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Now, Mr. Speaker, I did listen to the debate. I listened to the debate of the UCP leadership candidates, and let me tell you that those folks sitting around: hypocrisy a little astounding. Not long ago they all held a joint news conference on how they would be voting against the act. The Finance minister called it an economic time bomb; the jobs minister, a fairy tale; the Municipal Affairs minister, anarchy; and the minister of trade said that it was like shooting ourselves in the foot. Yesterday all of them capitulated. Will any one of them stand up and explain why they sold out Albertans yesterday?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have had an incredible time over the last eight weeks making sure that our caucus members had a lot of input into all of our decision-making and identifying our priorities, and one of the things that we had heard loud and clear was that they want to stand up and push back against Ottawa. As they had input into the construction of this bill – we’ve gone through a cabinet policy committee process; we’ve gone through a cabinet process; we’ve gone through a caucus process – everybody became very comfortable with the fact that this is going to do exactly that: it’s going to assert our constitutional rights, and it’s going to push back against Ottawa.

Ms Notley: Well, I think everybody became really comfortable with a paycheque, Mr. Speaker.

You know, the former Premier at least had the good sense to walk away from this Dumpster fire. He once called this approach catastrophically stupid, and back then the Finance minister agreed with him. He said, quote: I believe invoking the Alberta sovereignty act would put us backwards because it would create chaos. He went on to say that the act would curtail new investment and force established businesses to leave Alberta. To the Finance minister: if you believe what you said then, why did you fail those businesses and the people working for them yesterday?

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a pleasure to rise in the House this November day. I had legitimate concerns over early renditions of the proposed sovereignty act, but I’ve had full opportunity to weigh in to the development of this bill. This bill, for my support, needed to respect the rule of law, needed to be constitutional, and needed to be implemented in a way that would not create business uncertainty. This bill does that.

Ms Notley: Well, I hope the minister can sleep well at night, because businesses certainly are not. Economists and business leaders say this approach hurts our international reputation. The former Energy minister actually described a recent international meeting with energy leaders. She said, quote, it’s already creating instability and chaos. “I had international investors concerned about their assets in Alberta asking about what was going on with the Sovereignty Act.” To the now environment minister: why are you surrendering to an approach that is undemocratic, unconstitutional – you’re a lawyer; you know it – and harmful to our economy? That’s what you said.

The Speaker: Prior to the hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas’ remarks, I’m sure she’s not asking for a legal opinion of the minister because that would be outside of the convention of what is acceptable in the House.

The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 1 is neither unconstitutional nor undemocratic. Every single thing that comes out of it will be debated in the Legislature. In the very preamble of the act it said it will be constitutional and nothing will be construed to be unconstitutional. I had some very grave concerns about the act. We went through a caucus process, and I think we addressed those concerns.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Health Care System

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans deserve to have the health care they need when they need it. Yet today health care is in chaos because of both the pandemic and the many bad decisions of the UCP. Albertans can’t find a family doctor, they’re being transported to hospitals in fire trucks, and they’re waiting 20-plus hours in ERs. In Calgary sick children are being forced to wait for care in a trailer outside the children’s hospital. Why is the Premier more obsessed with calling movie sets about vaccine mandates than helping Alberta families get the health care they need?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the health care system is in crisis, which is why I made it a priority when I got elected that we were going to make sure that we put health care reform, and Alberta Health Services reform in particular, at the forefront. It’s the reason why I have dismissed the board and thanked them for their work but put in place an official administrator, who can accelerate all of the changes that we need to make to make sure that the experience of people on the front line is going to be improved. Number one, we’re going to reduce wait times in emergency rooms. We’re going to also make sure that people don’t wait in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, that board shakeup was window dressing, absolutely nothing more. This is a Premier who has accused front-line health care workers of manufacturing a staffing shortage, she fired the chief medical officer and replaced her with a volunteer, and she’s now developing her own public health response by talking to a conspiracy theorist who believes the vaccine is a bioweapon. She promoted horse dewormer as a treatment for COVID. The Premier suggested last week she’s made some mistakes. If so, will she stand up and apologize for the ones I just described today?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We heard that we needed new leadership at the chief medical officer of health, and I’m very pleased that Dr. Mark Joffe has agreed to take on that role. We also know that the only way that you can make the kind of changes that we need to make to stabilize health care, to address the long waits of paramedics when they show up at emergency rooms, the long waits that people have when they enter an emergency room, and the surgical wait times is to make sure that we have somebody hands on, day in, day out, ensuring that they have the support that they need to push the changes through, and that’s what we’re giving. I’m delighted to work with Dr. Joffe.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have actually heard the Premier’s inside voice on health care, and it’s not pretty. She’s mused about opening unstaffed beds in hotel rooms, bringing back health care premiums, making people with, quote, catastrophic medical events pay deductibles, and paying for doctors’ visits out of a $300 spending account. These things were said and written 16 months ago, not 16 years ago. Why doesn’t the Premier apologize for those statements or, conversely, just admit she can’t be trusted to fix Albertans’ health care?

Ms Smith: I find it amazing that the Leader of the Official Opposition is opposed to health spending accounts, because the only time I’ve ever had a health spending account is when I was in elected office. I know she has a $950 health spending account paid for by taxpayers. It sounds kind of elitist to me to be accepting taxpayer money for a health spending account and then saying that Albertans shouldn’t be able to have the same thing. What we’re offering is an approach that will make sure that we’re supporting the health care decisions of all of our Albertans by paying for the things that are not paid for by Alberta health care.

Children's Health Care and Hospital Capacity

Ms Panholi: There is a crisis in our health care system, and children are now experiencing the worst of it. Both the Stollery in Edmonton and the Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary are continually exceeding 15-hour wait times. A heated trailer has been set up outside the Alberta Children's emergency department. A trailer to hold children wanting to access health care: that's where we're at. Children's surgeries are being cancelled, there's a shortage of children's medications, illnesses are moving quickly through schools, and too many kids do not have family doctors. Will the UCP government allow an emergency debate in the Legislature today to address the children's health care crisis?

Mr. Copping: Thank you to the hon. member for the question. Mr. Speaker, our emergency departments are under strain, as they are across the entire country. We're seeing an early and severe flu season, and patients coming to emergency are sicker than on average, you know, given that, often, many numbers of visits to either the emergency departments or to family doctors were put off during the pandemic. We're responding. We're responding by adding capacity across our entire system, from EMS to continuing care. At the Children's in Calgary, AHS added a new fast-track unit, and they're working to add staff to other spaces as well.

Ms Panholi: I was joined earlier today by my constituent Lindsey Kemp, whose 6-year-old son George is immunocompromised. He's had two heart transplants, and he also has Crohn's disease. Lindsey worries about what will happen if George gets sick and needs hospital care, which he does regularly. She worries for patients and parents waiting for a life-saving transplant for their child. The Minister of Health is allowing the chaos in our hospitals to continue and potentially putting life-saving surgeries and treatment for children at risk. At what point will the Minister of Health acknowledge that this is a crisis?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, my heart goes out to all parents who have sick children, and I wish that family and that individual all the best.

We are providing care. Mr. Speaker, if you need to get care, whether it be at the Stollery or the Children's hospital, it is there for you. Yes, our system is under strain, but we are dealing with that. We are investing an additional $600 million this year, $600 million next year, $600 million the year after that, because we know we need to expand capacity. We are also looking to transform our system, add more family doctors, and I can talk more about what we're doing with the AMA in a moment.

Ms Panholi: Parents across this province will say that they do not feel that they have access to health care for their children right now, and they're correct. Now, I recognize that solutions to this problem are not easy, which is why we must debate this in the Legislature today. We cannot wait until wave after wave of illness overwhelms our hospitals and the dedicated front-line workers who have done so much to care for Albertans. They deserve clear and immediate support from the members in this Chamber. Parents need to know that they can access health care for their children. For the sake of the children and our health care workers, will the UCP agree to an emergency debate today about children's hospitals and their crisis?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, we are acting and we have been acting and we are continuing to act. I spoke already about adding capacity to our system. We are spending record amounts of dollars: $22 billion this year and expanding that by another $1.2 billion over the next two years. We are also transforming the way we deliver the health care system. The Premier already spoke about appointing the administrator to drive changes to our system faster, lower EMS times, lower times in emergency departments. We are also working on expanding access to systems through adding health care staff. We have more doctors, more nurses than we ever had in the system, and we're doing more.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East has the call.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For far too long we have watched our provincial rights, granted to us under the Constitution, be infringed upon by federal actors, and for far too long governments have failed to stand up and say: enough is enough. On Tuesday Bill 1, the long-awaited Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, was introduced. Can the minister please explain how this act will be used to protect our rights, our freedoms, and the interests of our province from federal overreach?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. What this does is provide a framework for us to openly and democratically have a debate here in this Assembly to be able to discuss when there is overreach from the federal government. We know this is happening very often, and this provides us a tool, an additional tool to what we already have as a government, as a House, a tool for us to be able to continue that work and then to be able to take next steps on how we can better protect the interests of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East has the call.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. Given that no one wants to see any government grant itself extraordinary powers that could potentially be abused, like we recently saw from the federal Liberals in the use of the Emergencies Act, and given that concerns have been raised about whether this new legislation would grant Alberta's cabinet these kinds of extraordinary powers, can the minister please explain as to whether this act would allow cabinet to alter or amend legislation without legislative oversight? [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. the Minister of Justice is the one with the call.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. No. To be clear, in no way does this act permit cabinet to unilaterally amend legislation. In this framework cabinet cannot amend legislation without the specific direction provided by the MLAs in this Assembly. Cabinet can only work within those parameters. That means that the democratically elected members of the Assembly are the ones who determine . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. the Minister of Justice is the one with the call.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, that means that the democratically elected members of the Assembly are the ones who determine what actions under the act are justifiable or necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A well-informed opinion from someone who has read the bill.

Given that members of the United Conservative Party are all proud Albertans and Canadians and given that questions have been raised about whether the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act opens the door to separation from Confederation, can the minister explain whether this piece of legislation is about separation or about protecting Alberta within a united Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. No; this has nothing to do with separation. This is entirely about protecting the interests of Albertans. In fact, although they're not listening right now, I would invite the NDP to suggest opportunities for how this framework might be used in the best interests of Albertans, but of course they're not going to do that because they don't want to upset or push back against the Trudeau-NDP alliance in Ottawa.

Health Spending Accounts

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, as of today hundreds of thousands of Albertans have no family doctor. For many this is a direct result of the conflict and chaos caused by the UCP. Now the Premier wants to move forward with health spending accounts, an idea she discussed extensively, saying in June 2022 that they could act as a way to pay to see a doctor. She even said, "My view is that the entire budget for [family] practitioners should be paid for from Health [care savings] Accounts." Will the Minister of Health unequivocally condemn any suggestion that Albertans should be asked to pay out of pocket to see their family doctor, especially given that this government has made it so much harder for Albertans to see one?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The Premier has been quite clear on this, on the purpose of health spending accounts. The purpose of health spending accounts is to be able to provide coverage for services that are not covered under the Alberta health insurance act. I was very pleased that in September we reached an agreement with the AMA and that agreement was ratified, and this agreement allows us to invest more in our doctors to be able to attract and retain. We have more doctors now than we've ever had in the province. I look forward to continuing to work with them to focus particularly on family doctors, and we can retain more and get better access for . . .

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier was much less clear just a few months ago about these health spending accounts that are outlined in her mandate letter to the Minister of Health so the minister owes it to Albertans to answer to the Premier's well-documented, radical reasoning behind the proposal and given that in discussing HSAs, the Premier openly mused about forcing Albertans to pay a deductible to see a doctor and given that she had also suggested that Albertans in desperate need of care could turn to family members for donations or host a fundraiser, does the minister agree that the Premier's past suggestion that Albertans in need of medical care should be left to rely on a GoFundMe is unacceptable?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat my first answer. The purpose of the health spending account is to enable Albertans to access those services that are not covered by the Alberta health spending act. I want to be crystal clear. Often preventative care doesn't get the attention it deserves. You know, it takes steps to maintain. The health spending account, when we actually get that set up, will provide the opportunity for Albertans to focus on preventive care where they want, just like many Albertans across the province do today through their own health spending accounts through private employers. We want to provide that opportunity to all Albertans.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that this government did more damage to accessing preventative care than any in Alberta's history – and the questions I'm asking today are based on the Premier's own words from as recently as last July – and given that she clearly advocated for all visits to a family doctor to be paid from AHSAs or, if that presents a burden, Albertans in need of care could beg their employers, their family, or their communities for help and given that Albertans facing an affordability crisis not seen in 40 years shouldn't be forced to also have to pay for care, will the minister state clearly on the record that Albertans will never pay a single cent for public health care that they're currently entitled to under this government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, for a third time, just to be clear, the purpose of the health spending account is to cover those items that are not covered under the Alberta health insurance act. I want to be crystal clear about that.

Mr. Speaker, our government is focused on providing better access to family care. I was very pleased in September to announce the modernizing Alberta's primary care system, a task force to look at where we can learn from around the world to be able to improve access to primary care, access to Indigenous care, and access to rural care. We know that primary care done well will actually help our acute-care system.

Affordability Plan

Ms Renaud: People who have never struggled before are struggling now, and this Finance minister put together an affordability package that leaves out millions of Albertans. Middle-class singles and the working poor get nothing, zero help. Struggling Albertans can't afford groceries, can't afford skyrocketing insurance premiums, have less money in their pockets after years of sneaky UCP income tax increases. To our accountant Minister of Finance: why did this government leave so many Albertans out of this affordability crisis plan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While Alberta's economy has recovered strongly, we know that Albertans and their families are struggling. They are challenged every time they leave their homes to get groceries or feed their families or fill up at the gas station. So we've put together an immediate relief package, which provides an estimated $900 in relief to households with or without children, with or without seniors. In addition to that, we've also put together targeted supports to where they're needed most: to support seniors, vulnerable Albertans, and children for their health and well-being.

Ms Renaud: Given that this government walked into a $28 billion royalty windfall and couldn't come up with an affordability plan to help all Albertans and given that this government has systematically harmed disabled and vulnerable Albertans since 2019 and given that after their half-baked new plan an AISH recipient is still $3,000 worse off than they would have been under an NDP government, to the Minister of Finance: why, with record revenues, is this government still targeting the most vulnerable and people who still can't afford to buy groceries and keep a roof over their heads?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to join my colleagues in announcing the reindexing of core support programs that vulnerable Albertans rely on. These include AISH, income support . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The hon. minister was courteous enough to listen to the question. Perhaps you might do the same for the answer.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I was pleased to join my colleagues in announcing the reindexing of AISH, income support, the Alberta child and family benefit, and the Alberta seniors' benefit. We know that vulnerable Albertans and seniors need the help right now. In addition, we're providing $600 in targeted supports to recipients of those core support programs to help them get through the worst of this storm.

Ms Renaud: Band-Aid on a wound.

Given that this government is so out of touch that they came up with an affordability plan that leaves out millions and given that a recent graduate, someone just starting in their career, is getting hammered by inflation but is getting no support from this government and given that some of the wealthiest Albertans are getting a tax-free cheque while those struggling get nothing, how can this Minister of Finance stand in this House and possibly justify his plan that leaves out so many Albertans who are struggling to make ends meet?

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, individual Albertans will benefit from significant broad-based relief. They'll benefit from fuel tax savings every time they fill up. They'll benefit from the electricity rebate, for a total of up to $500 in relief. We've lowered their income tax. In addition, we just announced further bursaries for low-income students. We've announced an expansion of low-income transit. We will support students. We will support Albertans, individual or not.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose.

Health Care Workforce Supply

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Weekly I hear from individuals in the Camrose constituency that we have a shortage of nurses, and these individuals also do not have a family doctor. They indicate that they have been on a waiting list for months. The Minister of Health held an engagement session in Camrose this summer where local doctors, nurses, and elected officials attended and participated in round-table discussions. To the Minister of Advanced Education: can we have the nursing program reinstated at Augustana campus?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. Let me just say on record what an incredibly fierce advocate she is for the community of Camrose.

Mr. Speaker, in the spring we announced in Budget 2022 $171 million in new funding to create 10,000 additional spaces at our postsecondary institutions. That includes new spaces in nursing, for health care aides, and in paramedicine. I'm continuing to work, though, with the University of Alberta, in particular, with respect to the individual program.

The Speaker: The Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that our government is focused on ensuring accessible health care is available for all Albertans and given that the St. Mary's hospital team has indicated that they are a teaching hospital and given that Augustana campus provided instruction for a nursing program for many years, to the minister: how soon will the University of Alberta be advised that they can reinstate the program at Augustana Camrose?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the University of Alberta has opportunities both now and well into the future. As I mentioned, we recently created a new program to create 10,000 spaces in in-demand postsecondary programs, including in health care related programs. As per the direction provided by Premier Smith in my mandate letter, the Premier has asked us to expand that very successful targeted enrolment program specifically in areas of economic need and health care need. Just as recently as the other day I had a conversation with the president of the University of Alberta, and we're working closely together.

The Speaker: I might remind the minister that the use of proper names for any reason is unacceptable.

The hon. Member for Camrose.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that many communities in the province are currently suffering from a doctor shortage and given the limits to the volume of Alberta-trained doctors we can produce, to the minister: what is the government's long-term solution to address the shortage of health care workers?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much to the member. I will agree with my colleague that the Member for Camrose is a fierce advocate.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's health care workers are the best in the world, and we need to make sure that they have the right supports in place to retain the staff that we have now and recruit the additional staff that we need. I was, as I indicated earlier, very pleased that we reached a recent deal with the AMA with over 70 per cent support. That includes incentives to attract new doctors to our province, especially in rural and remote areas. We are also working on a plan with the Minister of Advanced Education and postsecondary institutions to expand the current number of seats for more medical grads in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is next.

Education Funding

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today with great concern about the state of Alberta's classrooms and the education that's being provided in them in turn. It's clear that under the UCP our international reputation and student outcomes are falling further and further behind. Will the Minister of Education tell Albertans why she thinks it's okay for there to be thousands and thousands and thousands of more students going to school while she provides a thousand fewer teachers to actually educate them? Her own budget proves it.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I see that the member opposite is unprepared and has not done her homework. In fact, if she had done her homework, she would have realized that we have added $700 million to the 2022-23 school budget, which actually has increased the number of teachers, over 800 new teachers and over 800 new educational assistants.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the minister's own budget shows that she has a thousand fewer teachers than when she took the office and given that the UCP cut funding from classrooms and student learning has suffered as a result of that and given that the government has now said that schools must provide in-person and online learning simultaneously, without providing any new resources for them to be able to do so, and given that staff burnout is a significant concern – and it's a reality – will the minister tell Alberta students, staff, and families why she's providing no new supports while schools are dealing with widespread chaos and absenteeism?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what fantasyland she's living in, but I can tell you that we have added $700 million to the overall budget. We actually funded the teacher contract settlement; that's an additional $205 million over three years. We have added supplemental enrolment funding. We've added fuel contingency funding, Ukrainian student supplemental funding. You know what? School board reserves, operating reserves, have gone from $264 million to $464 million.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the minister fired 20,000 education workers via a tweet at the outset of the COVID-19 pandemic and many of them were never rehired and given that education funding has been underspent by roughly a billion dollars over the last two years – those are facts from the UCP budget documents – and given that 99 per cent of Alberta teachers don't trust the minister and most were disheartened to see the current Premier decide to keep her in the position, the minister has been a failure . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the call.

Ms Hoffman: Teachers don't trust this minister. Parents don't trust this minister. Why did the Premier keep her in the job instead of shaking it up?

Member LaGrange: Again, nothing can be further from the truth. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I spent all summer, from the end of June to the beginning of October, meeting with school divisions. I met with over 70 school authorities. I actually attended all the AGMs . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Member LaGrange: . . . the Catholic School Trustees' AGM, the francophone AGM, and the Alberta School Boards AGM. You know what, Mr. Speaker? I got a standing ovation by the Alberta School Boards Association. [interjections]

Ms Ganley: The Anarchy Act. A ticking time bomb. A constitutional and economic crisis. Those are some of the ways the ministers in the government cabinet have described the sovereignty act, but I specifically want to ask the now minister of environment if she will support this economically destructive bill, which she herself said would create "instability and chaos"?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas.

Mrs. Savage: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's no doubt I had grave concerns about the sovereignty act as originally proposed, but as it's drafted now and as it's gone through a caucus process, it's addressed many of those concerns. It follows the rule of law. It's democratic. Everything before it comes before this Chamber. It does not seek to disallow or not follow court judgments. Most importantly, it respects the separation of power between the judiciary and the legislative Chamber.

Ms Ganley: Given that the Minister of Finance said that the sovereignty act is a ticking time bomb and given that it seems that all UCP MLAs will be whipped to vote in favour of this bill despite the economic chaos and destruction it will cause and given that I am hearing from businesses that are deeply concerned and considering whether they can continue to do business in Alberta if the sovereignty act is passed, will the Minister of Finance stand up against this Premier, who is threatening the economic future of this province?

Mr. Toews: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I did have legitimate concerns over some early renditions of the sovereignty act. Certainly, it's a concern of mine that we maintain a business environment of certainty and predictability, one that attracts investment. This bill has to respect the rule of law, be constitutional, and be implemented in a way that keeps a stable business environment. It will. That's why I'm supporting it.

Ms Ganley: Given that investors are looking for certainty and that they've told me that the sovereignty act creates nothing but chaos and given that I'm already hearing from chambers of commerce, energy companies, innovators, and more that this bill is already having an impact on investments, job creation, and more – and that was before it was even tabled – can the Minister of Energy admit today that if a single investor withholds investment in Alberta as a result of the sovereignty act, he will ignore the Premier's directive and defeat this harmful legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has risen.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, what's creating uncertainty today is excessive fearmongering by the members opposite. When they were in office, they raised taxes, they heaped on regulatory burden, and they sent tens of billions of dollars of capital packing and, with that, tens of thousands of jobs. We've worked hard to position Alberta's economy to be competitive, to attract investment, and to create jobs. That's why Alberta in the last year has created 28 per cent of the jobs in Canada in this province alone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Queen Elizabeth II Highway 65th Avenue Interchange in Leduc

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly a great day for Albertans and businesses in the capital region. Today the hon. Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors stood with the town of Leduc as they finally broke ground on the much-anticipated QE II and 65th Avenue interchange. Given that this project is one that many individuals and businesses will much appreciate, can the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors provide the House with some details on when we can expect to see shovels in the ground?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was a great day for the Edmonton region. I was with the Deputy Premier, from Edmonton-South West, as well as the MLA for Leduc-Beaumont, announcing this amazing Leduc intersection and interchange. Graham Construction actually won the contract, and construction is going to happen within days. It is unfortunate, though, because the provincial representatives of the NDP could have asked their leader, Jagmeet Singh, to approve this project through the national trade corridor program, but they didn't, and it got declined.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Minister. That sounds very familiar.

Given that we will see shovels in the ground in a matter of days and given that this project will improve the flow of traffic on Alberta's busiest highway and given that this project will aid businesses and individuals commuting to the Edmonton airport, can the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors please highlight the significance this project will have on Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our economic growth and our economic corridors aren't just rail and road. It's also through the air and our international airports. The Edmonton International Airport: the air cargo capacity that they do is tremendous, and to attract more businesses, more economic growth in the Edmonton region, this was such a key component to that. As well, STARS air ambulance is based on the south side of the airport, so having an additional access to the airport with this investment will just not only go for economic growth but also to help emergency services in the Edmonton region.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Minister, for the answer. This is incredible news for the capital region's economy.

Given that the interchange will improve access to the shopping centre outside of the airport and given that this project will make it easier for our province's distributors to access cargo centres at the airport and given that these improvements to the QE II will kick-start our economy, can the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors please share the economic benefits that this project will have for our province? [interjections]

Mr. Dreeshen: I hear the Edmonton MLAs from the NDP cheering this on – that's great – a $112 million announcement in the Edmonton region today. Six hundred jobs are going to be supported with this project. We'll see about a 3 per cent increase in cargo trucks every year from this. We're also bringing important services to the Edmonton region. We'll actually see international markets increase by about 4 and a half per cent every year with this announcement and about 6 million hours of commercial traffic to be saved when this project in the Edmonton region is done. So just a great day for Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirteen days ago treaty chiefs stood in an unprecedented show of solidarity to oppose this Premier's unconstitutional sovereignty act. Treaty 8's grand chief said that the sovereignty act, quote, undermines the authority and duty of the sovereign nations that entered into treaty. Chief Tony Alexis has called on this government to hold off on passing the sovereignty act until at least after the next election. To the minister: why is he supporting the UCP government forcing through the sovereignty act without any consultation, after all treaty chiefs stood in opposition?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's government is standing up for everyone in the province. Indigenous peoples have also faced economic barriers from federal institutions. This act will not change existing treaty or Aboriginal rights that are recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Feehan: Given that the sovereignty act will give the Premier and all of her ministers dictatorial power to rewrite laws behind closed doors and given that the UCP government will have power to remove Indigenous rights with as little as a stroke of a pen and that treaty land can be exploited without free and informed consent from the First Nations and given that Chief Alexis stated that this bill sets up the province to allow extraction at any rate, completely unprotected, does the minister really support the sovereignty act, which has the ability to completely erase treaty rights?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Section 2 clearly states that "nothing in this Act is to be construed as . . . abrogating or derogating from any existing aboriginal and treaty rights." That's the first thing in this bill that was put in there. I have met with several First Nation leaders, and I've heard their concerns. We will continue to work with them. We've developed such a good working relationship with them. We've got our Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation working. We're just moving forward with them at all times.

The Speaker: The hon. member, with no preamble.

Mr. Feehan: Given that every single treaty chief opposes the sovereignty act and given that your government is rushing through this piece of dictatorial legislation and ignoring the duty to consult with First Nations and given that now he supports legislation that can remove Indigenous rights and the need for free and informed consent by the whim of this Premier, to the minister: with his failure to consult First Nations on the sovereignty act and now admitting to supporting the Premier's ability to remove Indigenous rights, does he believe he's capable of continuing to be Minister of Indigenous Relations?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we work closely with our Indigenous brothers and sisters. I'm in support of standing up for all Albertans. The federal government: they need to stay in their lane. That's what this is all about. This gives us that tool that we need to defend the interests of all Albertans. This government has been working hard, like I said, with our Indigenous friends out there. A great example of that is our partners in prosperity movement, where we're working hard, and we've got our Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation working, and we've got several new projects coming forward in the new year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Organizational Vaccine Policies and Provincial Funding

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to represent Calgary-Bhullar-McCall, which during the pandemic was able to see 99 per cent vaccination rates. It was a moment of pride for our community. Now, however, it seems like the new Premier, rather than wanting to celebrate this success story, would rather call them to tell them to get in line with her thinking or forget seeing a cent of provincial money as long as she's in that chair. Can the Minister of Justice explain why vaccinated Albertans are being bullied by this Premier, and will he advise the Premier that these types of calls are inappropriate and should stop immediately?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As a government we understand that we are in an endemic phase at this point in time. We have a number of measures in place to be able to support Albertans and support getting through this particular phase in dealing with COVID-19. That includes building capacity in our hospitals. That includes, you know, asking Albertans to make the choice to get vaccinated. We're very pleased to be able to offer a number of bivalent vaccines. That also includes people making the choice about wearing masks, but that is a choice.

Mr. Sabir: Given that this Premier claims that she's standing up against vaccine mandates by claiming that she's calling businesses and withholding their grant funding if they don't cave to her claims and given that, despite her claim, the Arctic Winter Games claim that they never heard from the Premier and that they claim they got their money over two years ago, is this Premier so desperate to maintain control over the base that elected her leader in the UCP that she is inventing instances of threatening event leaders and businesses?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, this government is proud of working with partners to promote the maximum participation for Albertans who can benefit from our major sports. In terms of the Winter Games, the Premier was clear: in Alberta we do not prevent any Albertans because of their status of health choices such that they cannot participate in sports. I am proud to tell you that we worked with the organizing committee for this event. They adopted our recommendation, and they removed their obsolete ban.

Mr. Sabir: Given that, in the Premier's own words, she leveraged $2 million in provincial funding for the Arctic Winter Games in order to convince them to block their vaccine mandate but given that the Premier, who spent her first week in office apologizing for her words and actions, is still claiming she is calling film sets and other businesses to bring them in line with her whims, can the Minister of Justice confirm if the Premier is actually calling these businesses and commit to getting her to stop, or can he confirm if this is just another fantasy of the Premier?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to share with Albertans that this government strongly encouraged all Alberta employers with respect to decisions of individuals' choices for their health status. When we listened to public health orders, we consider public health as determined by Alberta Health Services and Alberta's chief medical officer. When it comes to individuals' choice for their health in terms of vaccine status, that's something between their doctors and themselves. We won't interfere with that.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland has a question.

Spinal Muscular Atrophy Treatment

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you become a parent, life as you know it is over. That may sound harsh, but I challenge anyone who has children to think that anything is more important than their children's well-being and their safety. When you have a sick child, parents, family, and friends stop at nothing to help them. One such family are the Hankis. Their little girl, Harper, has spinal muscular atrophy. Through the miracle of modern medicine and a proverbial village, a life-saving gene therapy treatment was made available for Harper last year. However, additional medications such as risdiplam or Evrysdi are now needed to maintain and further improve Harper's quality of life. To the Minister of Health: can you please advise if medicine for Harper is approved for any additional funding?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for the question. I agree with the hon. member that the health and well-being of children is the main focus of every parent, especially when they are sick. I was very pleased that Zolgensma is covered for eligible Albertans up to six months old, as of December 1, 2021. This one-dose therapy is truly a miracle of modern science, and I'm glad that we can provide it under the rare disease drug program going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister. Given that Harper has had noticeable improvements with her treatments and given that her family and the generosity of others have paid for the treatment plan to date and given that the available funds are running out and the little girl's health will slowly decline without her medication and given that there is a long review process determining potential for treatment subsidies, could the minister please explain what support is available for Harper's family, if they can continue to provide Harper with her essential treatments?

Mr. Copping: Thank you again to the member, Mr. Speaker. Right now there are three covered treatments for spinal muscular atrophy, and each has its own requirement for coverage. Currently the clinical evidence does not support the combination of these treatments. However, there is a process available for Albertans to apply for exceptional coverage through their primary care provider. If there is evidence to support the request, the exemption may be granted, and the coverage would be extended. I feel for every family experiencing these problems and hope we can find long-term solutions to SMA and other rare diseases in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. the member.

Mr. Getson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you, Minister, for the work on this. Given that the clinical evidence from Harper's doctors has been outstanding on her improvements and given that I've met this little girl and her family several times over the years and I've witnessed her progress personally and given that these treatments are approved in the United States by a number of medical plans that cover the costs, to the same minister: can you please clarify if there's a possibility of using Harper Hanki's current treatment plan perhaps in concert with the manufacturer's medication to offer critical data that could help others while also starting the process to look at this as a treatment option?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the member. The treatment of rare diseases in Alberta needs a comprehensive approach. We need a plan to help fast-track approvals of new drugs and therapies that can result in these life-changing outcomes. New research is constantly emerging, and we need to make sure our coverage reacts to the changing needs of Albertans and does this quickly. That's why we are developing a strategy for the evaluation and approval of rare disease drug treatments within the province, and I'll share more about this initiative in the near future.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period, and we will be proceeding immediately to the remainder of the members' statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Pacific NorthWest Economic Region

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past July we welcomed the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region to Alberta. PNWER's 31st Annual Summit, hosted in Calgary, was one of the organization's most successful in history. As now past president of PNWER I cherished the opportunity to showcase my city and our remarkable province to over 600 legislators, business leaders, academics, and policy-makers while highlighting local success stories and cohosting a much-heralded visit to the oil sands.

PNWER includes elected and business leaders from 10 provinces, states, and territories. I am proud to announce that all jurisdictions were represented at this year's summit, and I am grateful to have worked closely with the private sector and academics in strengthening the many long-standing relationships through PNWER.

Mr. Speaker, the United States is our closest neighbour, friend, and ally, but we must not take this all-important relationship for granted. We must work hard in finding common ground, in building trust, and on more effective and enduring engagement on issues of mutual importance.

In these times of geopolitical uncertainty we are reminded of increasingly unpredictable influences on our security and economic stability, and while short-term priorities of our nations may differ, our unique and cherished relationship as secure, friendly, and trusted trading partners, with over $1 trillion in bilateral trade in 2021, is of vital importance to all Albertans. Our commitment to North American security through NATO, NORAD, and Five Eyes also reflects our mutual concerns around continental defence and shared commitment to global peace and security.

For over 30 years PNWER has contributed to strengthening our regional economy through 19 multisectoral working groups, the enduring impact of their Legislative Energy Horizon Institute, emergent collaboration on energy security and sustainability, or just the ability to pick up the phone and call a friend across the border.

Mr. Speaker, when we reflect upon the values and vision we share with our American friends through PNWER and other organizations promoting bilateral prosperity and security, we embrace a subject that we share in this Chamber, that every Albertan is supported in achieving their best.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul and Deputy Government House Leader.

Northern Alberta Land-use Planning

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, Mr. Trudeau and the federal government are at it again. They make an agreement with the province and then find another angle to try and interfere with provincial jurisdiction.

This time it's in the form of providing federal funding to pursue a feasibility study in regard to what is called an Indigenous protected conservation area, or IPCA. There are two proposals being looked at that have northern Albertans very concerned. One, in the Wolf Lake area, covers over 11 townships of land within the MD of Bonnyville and Lakeland provincial park. That's over a thousand square kilometres. The main problem with the feasibility study is that it provides zero details as to what restrictions the IPCA could put in place. Will it restrict access for hunting and recreation, could it restrict access for some groups for traditional use, or is it just intended to interfere with oil and gas and forestry? That's the problem, Mr. Speaker. No one can provide that information.

Our government just completed extensive committee meetings with all stakeholders in the Cold Lake caribou subregion, which includes the area in question. The recommendation from that work, which includes extensive habitat restoration and protection, resulted in the Cold Lake subregional plan, which was accepted by the federal government, who then signed a section 11 agreement under the Species at Risk Act agreeing that jurisdiction remains in the hands of the provincial government.

Now the Trudeau Liberals are using the Metis Settlements General Council in an effort to further interfere with provincial jurisdiction by providing this funding. This proposed IPCA and total lack of information provided by the hired consultant group are causing a lot of concern for many people in the region and indeed all over the province. If Mr. Trudeau was really concerned about helping our Métis settlements, maybe providing funding for much-needed infrastructure, fresh drinking water, and housing would be better.

Canada's provincial Crown lands and parks must remain under the jurisdiction of the province they are located in. Alberta's Crown lands and provincial parks are public lands and will remain so. Nice try, Justin. Alberta will not give up sovereignty over provincial Crown lands or parks.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by Edmonton-Whitemud.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give oral notice of Bill 202, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022, sponsored by myself, the Member for Peace River.

Ms Pancholi: Mr. Speaker, I rise to give notice that at the appropriate time under Standing Order 42 I intend to move the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge the following: (a) Alberta is facing a crisis in children's health care that has resulted in unacceptable emergency room wait times, capacity issues, and surgical cancellations to the point that a trailer is now being established next to the Alberta Children's hospital to provide health care; (b) wait times at the Alberta Children's hospital and the Stollery children's hospital have exceeded 15 hours on multiple occasions; (c) the families of sick children impacted with COVID-19, respiratory syncytial virus, and influenza have been facing a prolonged shortage of children's pain and fever-reducing medication, which adds to the stress, discomfort, and pressure of an already difficult situation; (d) the government's reduction of funding for education programs has led to 1,000 fewer teachers and thousands fewer educational assistants being employed by Alberta schools, which has made the challenges of dealing with schoolchildren's widespread illnesses more difficult to deal with at a local level.

Be it further resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government of Alberta (a) to acknowledge the impact these delays and the lack of access to basic health care services are having on the physical, mental, and emotional well-being of children and their families and (b) to immediately table in the Legislature an action plan to address the crisis in children's health care.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a tabling.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of a letter that I sent earlier this week to Alberta school trustees outlining things that they have told me are deep concerns and things that we will do to address them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has a tabling.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three copies of an e-mail that was sent to my office and to the Minister of Education. It's just a tragic story about children catching COVID at school and passing it on to their mother, who has metastatic cancer and is not doing well as a result. This constituent is asking me to encourage the Minister of Education to read her multiple e-mails.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In a new session it's absolutely my pleasure to introduce five copies of the Leap Manifesto, of which one of the main signatories is the NDP socialist caucus.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I do have a tabling today. I rise to table six copies of the House leaders' agreement which was signed on November 28, 2022.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of hon. Mr. Toews, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, the 2022-23 mid-year fiscal update and economic statement, November 2022.

On behalf of hon. Minister LaGrange, Minister of Education, the Alberta Teachers' Association 2021 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in light of the Standing Order 42 and the possibility that unanimous consent may in fact be granted, which would set aside the regular business of the day to proceed immediately to Standing Order 42, we will now proceed to the election of the Deputy Chair of Committees.

Election of a Deputy Chair of Committees

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to section 17(1) of the Legislative Assembly Act and Standing Order 58(2) nominations are invited for the office of the Deputy Chair of Committees for the 30th Legislature. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Long: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The role of the Deputy Chair of Committees is one that serves a vital function in this Assembly as it maintains order and honours tradition and decorum. I believe that the person best suited for this role is one who is familiar with House proceedings, a member in good standing, and one who has proven to be fair to all. That's why today I am honoured to nominate the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, Roger Reid, for this role.

Over the past three years I have seen first-hand that Roger has proven attentive to every position he has held while being a mentor to those around him. Roger is respected amongst all . . .

The Speaker: The member.

Mr. Long: My apologies. The Member for Livingstone-Macleod is respected amongst all members of our caucus and many members of the opposition caucus and has a deep admiration for our parliamentary process and the historical traditions of this House. He also happens to be the representative for one of the top five most beautiful constituencies in the province.

Over the last two years this member has stepped up to fill the roles of chair and Speaker in an unofficial capacity. I'm truly confident that given his experience and dedication he would fulfill the role of Deputy Chair of Committees with dignity, confidence, and respect for all members of this Assembly. I encourage all members to support him in his quest to serve this great Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Does the member wish to accept the nomination?

Mr. Reid: I do.

The Speaker: It felt like we were getting married there.

Are there other nominations? The hon. Official Opposition House Leader has a nomination.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, all members of this Assembly. We know how important the office of the Speaker and the Speaker's team are. The Deputy Chair of Committees is an important piece of that work, managing the business that we conduct here in this Chamber, ensuring the privileges of all members are protected.

An important part of that work is maintaining a nonpartisan office of the Speaker to ensure that functioning of our Assembly, to ensure order and decorum. For that reason, we see in other parliaments and in other Legislatures a common practice of choosing members of the Speaker's team from multiple parties within the Legislature. Canada's House of Commons has frequently used that practice, in their case choosing the Deputy Speaker from the opposition caucus. Not only does this contribute to the good functioning of the House, but it also ensures nonpartisan functioning of the House. So I'm asking all members of this Assembly to set aside partisanship in considering for the nomination of Deputy Chair of Committees the MLA for Edmonton-Manning.

The MLA for Edmonton-Manning has the experience of presiding over this Assembly as its chair. In fact, this MLA served in the 29th Legislature as the Deputy Chair of Committees. She has a wealth of experience and a true desire to serve this Assembly impartially and with the considerable grace and wisdom that she has shown throughout her time as an elected official here. We have seen her ably representing our Assembly at Speakers' conferences in the past and working across the aisle in both her critic roles and in her role as the MLA for Edmonton-Manning, supporting her constituents. I know that she would add excellent qualifications to the Speaker's team and that she would serve with credit this entire Assembly. The MLA for Edmonton-Manning also comes from Alberta's capital region. I think that having regional representation within the Speaker's team is something that should be considered as we make this nomination and as we make our choice in the election of Deputy Chair of Committees.

Please consider making the office of the Speaker and the Speaker's team a little bit sweeter and voting for the MLA for Edmonton-Manning. [some applause]

The Speaker: Does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning wish to accept the nomination?

Ms Sweet: I do accept the nomination.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to declare nominations closed. Are there others?

I declare nominations closed. The nominations for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees – this is the one time in which I am officially allowed – are the Member for Edmonton-Manning, Heather Sweet, and the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, Roger Reid.

I will briefly provide the parameters in which the voting process will take place. The doors to the Chamber will remain secured during the voting process. Members will proceed from their desks to pick up a ballot here from the table officers. Members will then proceed to one of the four voting booths that will be placed on the table before me. Members will indicate their choice for Deputy Chair of Committees by printing the proper name, first and last, of the candidate whose name appears on the posted list, which will be in the voting booth. Members deposit their completed ballot in the box provided for them at the Sergeant-at-Arms' desk. Members will return to their desks after casting their vote.

Once all members have voted, the table officers will retire with the ballot box to count the ballots, accompanied by the Sergeant-at-Arms, who will act as a scrutineer. When results have been tabulated, the table officers will return to the Chamber, and the bell will be rung for one minute. During the period of time in which the table officers and the Sergeant-at-Arms are counting the ballots, members may leave the Chamber but need to return to the Chamber at the completion of the one-minute bell.

The voting process will begin immediately following the set-up of the voting booths and the ballot box.

[The lists of candidates were posted]

The Speaker: The voting process will now begin.

[Members voted from 3 p.m. to 3:07 p.m.]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Have all members who wished to cast a ballot done so?

I declare the voting process closed.

Would the Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, and table officers please count the ballots and report back to the Assembly.

[Ballots were counted from 3:07 p.m. to 3:16 p.m.]

The Clerk: Mr. Speaker, the number of ballots cast for the position of Deputy Chair of Committees, 77; the number of spoiled ballots, zero; the number of votes required to achieve the 50 per cent plus one majority, 39. The member having received the majority of the votes cast is Mr. Reid. Mr. Reid is hereby the Deputy Chair of Committees of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for the 30th Legislature.

The Speaker: Before we proceed to the remaining business of the Assembly, I would invite the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod to say a few words if he wishes. The hon. member.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am truly humbled, and through you I want to say thank you to the members of this Legislature for their confidence and their trust. I look forward to serving this House and the people of Alberta as the Deputy Chair of Committees.

Thank you.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to proceed to Standing Order 42. I understand that some members may be leaving the Chamber. Out of respect to the hon. member, please do so quickly, quietly, and promptly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Children's Health Care and Hospital Capacity

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 42 to request that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to debate a motion that is urgent and pressing and which I read out under Notices of Motions. I'd like to acknowledge that pursuant to Standing Order 42 I've provided the members of this Assembly with the appropriate number of copies, and I've provided your office notice of my intention to move this motion as well as notified the government.

Mr. Speaker, it's our duty as representatives in this Assembly to address the urgent crisis in children's health care. As the motion indicates, children and their families are experiencing significant anxiety and greater illness and pain because of the pressures in the health care system.

The spread of COVID-19, RSV, and the flu has led to significant illness among children across the province. This has caused both significant absenteeism in school and pressure on the health care system. There have continually been over 15-hour wait times at the children's hospitals in Edmonton and Calgary. A temporary trailer was just set up in Calgary to increase the room for children waiting for care. Families have been advised to go see their family doctor instead of coming to the emergency room, but hundreds of thousands of Alberta families can't find a family doctor, so they have no place to go. The increased need for emergency care has caused children's surgeries to be cancelled. Clearly, this is not what we as legislators want the state of health care to be in our province, which is why we should have a fulsome debate today about what actions we can take to relieve this pressure and support children and families.

I know health care workers and providers are doing the best they can with the support that they have, but unfortunately health care workers have too often been blamed during the pandemic. The spread of misinformation and an active combative approach of some members of the government have significantly lowered morale of health care workers. As the pressures in children's hospitals increase, more staff will be expected to work more and at times cancel planned time off over the holidays. This is already taking place in the Children's hospital in Calgary. I believe we have a duty to all health care workers to tell them that those of us elected to represent Albertans support them, that we respect them, and that we are actively working towards solutions to this urgent health care crisis.

But we, of course, have a duty as well to children and their families to have this debate. A constituent of mine named Lindsey Kemp joined me earlier today, whose son needed to go to the Stollery many times in his young life. In fact, she described it as having lived there with him, with her son, for over a year in between two heart transplants before the age of five. She knows the situation in the Children's hospital as well, and it is clear that the current situation is not okay and must be addressed. Lindsey was brave to speak out today on behalf of her son and other children in similar situations.

I sincerely hope that the government members opposite will have the courage today to debate and speak to this urgent matter. I can think of nothing more important than the health of children across the province that we represent. Addressing children's health is far more important than Bill 1, which is already ridden with controversy in the powers that this government is giving to themselves. I want all members of this Chamber to think where their priorities lie and what they want to advance today. Is it an undemocratic bill, or is it supporting children and their families? Parents in this province right now are anxious, they're stressed out, they're worried, and for many of their children they are not getting the health care they need.

As a parent, Mr. Speaker, I can say from first-hand experience that I know the fear of when my child was sick – she had a fever for eight days straight – and I'm thinking that the last thing I want to do is seek emergency health care right now because I'm worried about taking my child to a children's hospital and the wait times. No parent should be afraid to actually go access emergency health care. They should be able to know that when they need it for their child, they will get it immediately.

We know that they'll get the best care possible from our health care workers, who are fantastic and have done incredible work, but right now parents and children are not accessing the health care system because they cannot. That is a crisis that we should all take incredibly seriously, and we should have this debate. I urge the members of the government to take that to heart and to have this discussion today in this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42 allows for a member of Executive Council to respond for up to five minutes should they wish to do so. The hon. Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for raising this issue. This is a very important issue. As I've said before in this Chamber, our emergency departments are under strain, as they are across the entire country. As you read in the paper and as mentioned by the hon. member across the aisle, we are seeing an early flu season, and patients coming to emergency, as I indicated before, are sicker on average, partly because so much routine care was deferred over the last couple of years.

But we are responding. We have a plan, and we are acting on that plan, Mr. Speaker. We are spending a record $22 billion this year, the highest amount ever, for our health care expenses. In addition to that, on top of the $22 billion, there are also additional dollars for getting caught up on surgeries and for our COVID response. We're using this money to add capacity across our entire health care system.

Now, Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary is seeing a surge of patients in recent weeks, like other children's hospitals across our country, and they're responding to that surge of patients by adding capacity. That's part of the additional $600 million and that $22 billion that we are putting into health care this year. They've added a new fast-track unit to be able to do treatment and triage as well, and they're working to add staff to open up other care spaces as well. They've also added the heated trailer, as mentioned by the member opposite, so kids and families don't have to wait outside at peak times, Mr. Speaker. That's a good initiative. It's part of our overall approach to add capacity, and it's a very small part of the work that we're doing not only in the Children's hospital but across our entire health care system.

Mr. Speaker, just this morning I was at the Misericordia hospital for an event celebrating a new emergency department that will be opened next year, three times the size of the existing one. I want to thank all physicians and nurses and health care workers and professionals and volunteers for the work that they're doing to look after Alberta patients and particularly for kids in emergency and across our entire health care system. They are under strain. They need relief, and we are working to provide that. I think that they would also want me to reassure parents that the health system is there for sick kids.

The two children's hospitals are near 100 per cent occupancy overall, as are a number of our major urban hospitals at certain times when, you know, we hit the peak flu season, like we are right now. They are adding staff to be able to respond to these needs. The children's ICU is very busy, most recently under 100 per cent of normal capacity, and they have had to transfer a few patients out, but they are able to provide care to the sickest kids that need the care. Quite frankly, it's recognizing that we need to do more, but our ICUs are holding up better with less disruption than we're seeing in other provinces relative to the demands right now.

In surgery we're doing similar volumes compared to before the pandemic, and access is similar in terms of the percentage of children waiting longer than the recommended time. Now, this is still too long, Mr. Speaker, but we are continuing to be able to provide surgeries across the system, including for children. There are postponements here and there on a tactical basis, but we are providing the service. Quite frankly, even though we know we need to do better, we are doing much better than other provinces, where the national average is far worse than we have here.

It's been a tough two years, and it's going to be another tough winter, Mr. Speaker, but we are taking steps to address the challenges being faced in our emergency departments and being faced in our children's hospitals. We are funding to add additional capacity. We made the recent change in terms of appointing an official administrator, and this administrator is full-time focused on supporting our senior executives within AHS to be able to deliver the services that Albertans need, with a particular focus on emergency departments. We know this is an area of critical concern, and we will drive those times down. There are a number of initiatives as part of that in terms of not only improving triage services and improving access to – or allowing 911 operators to move people to 811 in terms of demand management but also improve the flow throughout the entire system and have other areas for alternate levels of care so we can actually treat people faster.

Mr. Speaker, we are working on this. We are investing in our health care system. We have appointed a new official administrator, who's bringing a number of initiatives in place. We have a plan. We're enacting a plan. We are going to deliver on that plan, so at this point we do not need an emergency debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42 is a request for unanimous consent.

The Speaker: We are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

2. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve into Committee of the Whole, when called, to consider certain bills on the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(a).

[Government Motion 2 carried]

Fall Sitting

4. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the 2022 fall sitting is extended until either of the following occurs, immediately after which the Assembly stands adjourned:
(a) the end of the day on December 22, 2022;
(b) the Government House Leader advises the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 3(9).

[Government Motion 4 carried]

3. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly resolve itself into Committee of Supply, when called, to consider supply to be granted to His Majesty.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(a).

[Government Motion 3 carried]

Evening Sitings

6. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 4(1) and for the duration of the 2022 fall sitting of the Fourth Session of the 30th Legislature the Assembly shall meet on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings for consideration of government business unless the Government House Leader notifies the Assembly that there shall be no evening sitting that day by providing notice under Notices of Motions in the daily Routine or at any time prior to 6 p.m.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a nondebatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 4(1).

[Government Motion 6 carried]

3:30 Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1 Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier, the President of Executive Council, and the Minister of Intergovernmental Relations.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's been quite a spectacle to return to this honoured Chamber over the last 24 hours. I don't know that I've ever seen anything like it: to have the first reading of a first bill not only voted against before it was even presented to the Legislature but to have a standing vote on division just to try to demonstrate that there was some rancour in our ranks.

Then, you know, that wasn't enough. To also then see the opposition go and clearly not read the bill when they had the opportunity to and try to get informed about it by Twitter and get so many things wrong that I'll have to correct in my speech today but then quite an unprecedented response from the Leader of the Official Opposition, to actually call upon the federal government to disallow this bill should it pass. It's quite remarkable when you hear that among the many expected things of the sovereignty act this week, even the media is outraged by this. Here's an ex-Premier who wants her job back encouraging a Prime Minister to disallow future provincial law.

I must tell you that this is exactly the reason why we're putting this law forward in the first place, because of federal intrusion into our affairs and the fact that we have to push them back into their own lane. I'm quite surprised, actually, that the members opposite have not taken a page from their namesake party in Saskatchewan, which voted in favour of a very similar bill called the Saskatchewan First Act. They are not fearmongering about it. They are recognizing that this is essentially asserting the way our country ought to operate, and I'm delighted that the Premier of Saskatchewan has acted in this regard. I think it's actually a testament to the opposition in that province that they realize that they must put their citizens first. I have to question whether this opposition puts Albertans first or whether they put the view of the leader of their federal party and the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa first. That is what is going to be decided as we move forward over these next coming months.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Since it's clear that many members of this Chamber have not read the bill, let me go through and talk about why it is that we are proposing Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. I think one of the misconceptions that had been put forward was that this had something to do with leaving Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth. What we are simply asking for is to have the same power and the same respect that Ottawa gives to Quebec. Nothing more, nothing less.

Let me go through a little bit about why it is that I believe that this is necessary. I have seen this from having travelled this province for many months. Albertans love our province, and they love this country. Canada is our home. Canadians are our family. This has nothing to do with our fellow Canadians. This has everything to do about an out-of-control federal government that does not honour the foundational documents that this country was built on. They are constantly intervening in our areas of sovereign jurisdiction. Yes, I use that term advisedly because that is how our Constitution is written. We are demanding action so that Ottawa respects Alberta's sovereign areas of provincial jurisdiction as defined by the Constitution and demanding that – and I think Albertans expect us to uphold the fact that we are signatory to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and make sure that we are upholding those as well.

Unfortunately, the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa is systematically and intentionally undermining and attempting to control all aspects of our province's economy, how we develop our resources, and even how we manage our social programs. Through equalization transfers they overtax our province massively, and then they dribble a little bit back to us with conditions over how we're supposed to spend it. On top of that, they take the rest so that they can buy votes in areas in eastern Canada where they think that they're going to have more luck in winning seats. It is a black hole, the federal bureaucracy, and Albertans have had enough of it. The continued federal attacks on our economy and province cannot be allowed to continue, and the Canadian Constitution is clear.

Let me go through and establish the framework for why it is we're putting the bill forward this way because I think it will answer some of the questions of the critics. It says:

Whereas Albertans possess a unique culture and shared identity within Canada;

Whereas it is the role of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and the Government of Alberta to preserve and promote this unique culture and shared identity;

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930 and the Constitution Act, 1982 are foundational documents that establish the rights and freedoms of Albertans and the relationship between the provincial and federal orders of government, including the division of legislative powers between them;

Whereas the Province of Alberta is granted rights and powers under the Constitution Act, 1867 . . . 1930 and . . . 1982 and is not subordinate to the Government of Canada;

Whereas actions taken by the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada have infringed on these sovereign provincial rights and powers with increasing frequency and have unfairly prejudiced Albertans;

Whereas actions taken by the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada have infringed on the rights and freedoms of Albertans enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in an unjustified and unconstitutional manner;

Whereas the people of Alberta expect the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada to respect the Constitution . . . as the governing documents of the relationship between Canada and Alberta and to abide by the division of powers and other provisions set out in those documents;

Whereas the people of Alberta expect the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada to respect the rights and freedoms of Albertans enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

Whereas it is necessary and appropriate for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to set out measures that the Lieutenant Governor in Council should consider taking in respect of actions of the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada that are unconstitutional or harmful to Albertans and for Members of the Legislative Assembly . . . to have a free vote on such measures according to their individual judgment.

There are a couple of things here that I think are important. Number one, it lays out that we are proposing to pass legislation that is in compliance with the foundational documents of our country. Voting against this is like voting against our Constitution. Asking the federal government to disallow this is like asking them to disallow and override our constitutional protections in the Constitution, and it is not appropriate.

The other thing I'd say is a word about "sovereign," because I think that's what many people are reacting to. Maybe it's because I have had the opportunity of taking the oath of office in the position I'm now in as well as the oath of office, just yesterday, as MLA for Brooks-Medicine Hat. I have given out diamond jubilee medals in honour of Her Majesty. We saw yesterday a Speech from the Throne given by the Lieutenant Governor, who is the representative of His Majesty.

When you look at even the way in which this bill is enacted, it says: "Therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, enacts as follows." This very document shows that we have a direct sovereign right that is granted to us on behalf of His Majesty. I am not and we are not seeking permission from Ottawa to exert our influence. We do not have to ask for permission from Ottawa, and it's because we have these sovereign rights.

Let me tell you a little bit about where that comes from. When NAFTA was passed, in 1993, there were a number of academic papers that were talking about the application of trade law in Canada at the time. I'd like to quote from a 1994 essay in the Canada-United States Law Journal titled Sovereignty and Federalism: The Canadian Perspective. It outlines clearly how the provinces and the federal government have equal legislating authority. Here's what they say:

The concept of sovereignty in the Canadian federalist context has more than one application. As a result of the Constitution Act, which distributes legislative powers between provincial legislatures and the federal parliament, it is appropriate to speak not only of the sovereignty of Canada, but of the separate sovereignty of each province within its sphere of legislative jurisdiction.

So this is not an unfamiliar concept. The outsized reaction to what it is that we are proposing is the only thing that is unusual here. That's why I think it's important for people to understand why it is we have to make a different approach.

Let me go through and tell you what I have observed over the last number of years, because I think that for too long what has happened is that we have allowed the federal government to interfere in our areas of jurisdiction. Maybe it was because we were a young province. Maybe we had a low population. Maybe we felt that we could use the extra hand. Maybe it was because the federal government was actually helpful at different periods through its history, but the last seven years, under the Liberal-NDP government that we now see at the federal level, have become anything but that, anything but helpful.

As we have grown in population, what we have seen is that Ottawa is actively sabotaging our economy and damaging our prospects for growth at the same time that it's overtaxing us. This is, I think, underscored by the fact that three times we have tried to do things the way we normally do them, which is polite and diplomatic and writing letters and going to conferences and begging and pleading for them to just honour our jurisdiction, and look what's occurred.

First, the Leader of the Official Opposition, when she was in this position, attempted to get social licence. How did that work out for us? We got a carbon tax, that we now can't get rid of and which is now going to grow by 300 per cent, that is underscoring the cost of every single thing every single family has to buy. I've been waiting to see the Official Opposition leader call out and object to that increase, because they care so much about affordability. We haven't seen it. But why do we have a carbon tax in the first place? It's because they paved the way for it.

We also saw an early phase-out of coal-fired electricity. I've talked to somebody in the industry. They say that that premature decision cost us $4 billion, that had to be made up in the power bills of everyday Albertans. You're wondering why we have an electricity price crisis; that's part of the reason for it. There was one plant, Keephills, that was closed within years of it being opened even though it was supposed to have a much longer time horizon. That was a decision that was made to try to get social licence.

Thirdly, a cap on our oil sands producers. Well, look at what that got us. Not only did it give a bad idea to the current environment minister; he is now proposing an aggressive target, that we certainly cannot meet, increasing the expectation that emissions will be reduced 42 per cent by 2030, eight short years. An emissions cap that aggressive without the technology able to implement it is a de facto production cap, and it is against the Constitution because it violates our foundational rights to be able to determine how we develop our own resources.

That is what we tried to do. We tried to get social licence, and what do we get instead? Well, Trudeau responded by giving us a ban on tanker traffic, Bill C-48, which is targeting our industry in particular; what we've been calling the no-more-pipelines act, Bill C-69, that really is: you can't build anything anywhere in Alberta without federal approval. It's why we are fighting it, and it's why all of the provinces have joined with us. Then we saw the cancellation of Northern Gateway, Energy East, Teck Frontier mine, and well over $100 billion of other projects. That's what happened when we tried to seek and curry favour with the federal government.

Next, the former Premier thought: "Well, maybe I'll pay a courtesy visit to Quebec. Maybe we can see if we can get some buy-in on exporting western Canadian natural gas through ports on the coast in Quebec, from LNG facilities there." Quebec initially said yes, but most recently, earlier this year, they responded by cancelling the Port Saguenay LNG project and banning future oil and natural gas development in their own province. There are Alberta-based companies that now have claims of billions of dollars against the Quebec government on the basis of those cancelled leases. That's what happened when we tried once again to seek some kind of bilateral agreement with Quebec. It failed.

Thirdly, I remember the precise moment that Albertans lost support for equalization. It was when it became clear that there was – Premier François Legault was asked the question about supporting the recommissioning of the Energy East pipeline, and he said to Alberta: we don't want your dirty oil. A couple of days later, there was extra money left over in the equalization fund, and the Finance minister at the time, Bill Morneau, gave a billion dollars to Quebec. The message to Albertans was pretty clear: we don't want you to have economic prosperity, but keep the dollars rolling. That is the reason why there was such a strong mandate to end equalization. When it went to the public, 62 per cent of the public said to end it.

The answer from the federal government – and I think we went out there hoping that this would be the final opportunity to start a constructive conversation with the federal government about how we could change our bilateral relationship, how we could work together to develop our resources. What did we get instead? We got environment minister Steven Guilbeault, who has waged an unceasing attack on our province ever since that decision. When you look at the policies that he has proposed, he wants to see an end to any fossil fuel based power on the electrical grid by 2035. This is a province where 90 per cent of our electricity grid is powered by natural gas. Almost a hundred per cent of our home heating is powered by fossil fuels. This is the approach they're taking at the federal level. Then on top of that, as I've mentioned, is the production limit cap that he wants to put on oil and natural gas.

That's not all. Now he's attacking our farmers with a similar aggressive emissions reduction proposal to reduce emissions 30 per cent in a similar time frame. It's the same problem. If you do not have the technology and you do not have a realistic time frame, an emissions cap like this operates as a production cap. It's a violation of our right under section 92A to develop our own resources.

Enough is enough. We have been a constructive province, and the response has been continued disrespect and a continued drain of our resources. Since the 1960s we have seen $600 billion leave this province to go and fund federal priorities, and this is the reason why we're putting Ottawa on notice. We are not going to do this anymore. This is not going to be the way that our province relates to the federal government. We are telling Ottawa that we intend to return to the law that governed our relationship, the Constitution. We will not enforce federal laws that violate the sovereign powers granted to us under sections 92 through 95 of the Constitution or that violate the rights and freedoms of our citizens guaranteed by the Charter.

Now, I happen to have the sections of the Constitution with me because I think maybe I spend more time reading the Constitution – Madam Speaker, maybe it helps to get to sleep at night, but I've read the Constitution quite a bit over the last number of months. Let me tell you how the distribution of legislative powers is defined in the Constitution under section 91. This is the language that is in our Constitution.

Powers of the Parliament

Legislative Authority of Parliament of Canada

91 It shall be lawful for the [King], by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces; and for greater Certainty, but not so as to restrict the Generality of the foregoing Terms of this Section, it is hereby declared that (notwithstanding anything in this Act) the exclusive Legislative Authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say . . .

I am not proposing that we take over any areas of federal jurisdiction. They have jurisdiction over, as it says here, "the Public Debt and Property" and "the Regulation of Trade and Commerce." Boy, I wish they'd do a better job at that, in getting our products to market rather than blocking them. They talk about the ability to raise money by any mode or system of taxation and the borrowing of money on the public credit – gosh, I do wish I had control over that one, too, because I can tell you that we wouldn't be having the inflation crisis that we have today – the postal service; the census and statistics; the militia, military; the fixing of and providing for the salaries of the civil service; beacons, buoys, and lighthouses; navigation; sea coast; ferries; currency, exchange, banking, and coinage; savings banks; weights and measures; interest; copyrights; bankruptcy and insolvency; and so on and so forth.

These are not things that are contemplated under this legislation because I respect the sovereign areas of federal jurisdiction. I have no desire to, for instance, go and open up passport offices although I think that's probably a job that we would do better than the federal government right now, too. We expect that the federal government – in fact, I think they might do a better job in their areas of jurisdiction if they focused on them rather than intervening in our areas of jurisdiction every chance they get.

Let me continue on, then, so that we understand the framework for how our legislation is written. We are not going to interfere with federal jurisdiction. We are just asking them to stay in their own lane and get out of our jurisdiction. What is our jurisdiction? Pretty much, well, anything else you can think of:

Such Classes of Subjects as are expressly excepted in the Enumeration of the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces.

There's that word again. That's the indicator that we do have sovereign power. It is because these powers are given to us exclusively. It says that any Matter coming within any of the Classes of Subjects enumerated in this Section shall not be deemed to come within the Class of Matters of a local or private Nature comprised in the Enumeration of Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively . . .

There it is again.

. . . to the Legislatures of the Provinces.

Here it is.

Exclusive Powers of Provincial Legislatures

Subjects of exclusive Provincial Legislation

92 In each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Matters coming within the Classes of Subjects next hereinafter enumerated; that is to say . . .

Direct taxation. The borrowing of money. We have the ability to manage the sale of public lands belonging to the province and the timber and wood thereon. We have the ability to establish and maintain prisons. We have the ability to establish and maintain hospitals and the health system. Municipal institutions fall under our jurisdiction. Shops and other licences to generate revenue fall under our jurisdiction. Local works and undertakings fall under our jurisdiction. The solemnization of marriage. Property and civil rights in the province fall under our jurisdiction, section 13. The administration of justice, including the courts. We also have "generally" – a catch-all – "all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province" are our exclusive jurisdiction.

3:50

It goes on:

Non-renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy

This is so important it has its own section in the Constitution.

92A. (1) In each province, the Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to

- (a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources in the province;
- (b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources in the province, including laws in relation to the rate of primary production therefrom; and
- (c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy.

Do you see why Bill C-69 interferes in every possible way in this foundational principle of our Constitution? That is what we are trying to return to.

We also have the right for export from our province of our resources.

(2) In each province, the legislature may make laws in relation to the export from the province to another part of Canada of the primary production from non-renewable natural resources and forestry resources . . . and the production from facilities in the province that generate electrical power. The only proviso is that we can't charge a discriminatory price to our neighbours.

So this is the framework for how our country is supposed to work.

We have a whole section on education.

Legislation respecting Education

93 In and for each province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Education . . .

There are a few provisions that that is subject to.

There's also section 94 that deals with just our friends in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick.

Section 94A gives the federal government some – it says that they may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits, including survivors' and disability benefits irrespective of age, but no such law shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to any such matter.

We have the ability to have our own laws around old age pension and supplementary benefits.

Section 95: this is concurrent powers of the legislation on agriculture and immigration.

In each Province the Legislature may make Laws in relation to Agriculture in the Province, and to Immigration into the Province; and it is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from Time to Time make Laws in relation to Agriculture in all or any of the Provinces, and to Immigration into all or any of the Provinces . . .

This, to me, I think, is also – we should take this under advisement. We have essentially abrogated our own duty, I think, to manage these areas. I think the federal government is only supposed to be there from time to time, and we've allowed them to take over the entire area.

I should also mention, because it may have been a while since folks have read the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to which we are also a signatory means that we are obliged to also protect the foundational rights and freedoms of our citizenry, and this is how it is framed:

Whereas Canada is founded upon principles that recognize the supremacy of God and the rule of law . . . the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights . . . set out in it subject to only such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

Now, I've talked to the last living signatory of this document, Brian Peckford, and he says that this is what gets violated all the time. When governments take action to violate rights, it must be demonstrably justified. They must demonstrate that it was justifiable to do, and I think that that is where the federal government fails on so many fronts when it violates our rights.

I should also mention section 2 here.

Fundamental freedoms

2 Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

- (a) freedom of conscience and religion;
- (b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;
- (c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and
- (d) freedom of association.

We also, under section 6, have right to mobility.

6(1) Every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada.

We have rights to move around and gain a livelihood.

(2) Every citizen of Canada and every person who has the status of a permanent resident of Canada has the right

- (a) to move [around] and take up residence in any province; and
- (b) to pursue the gaining of a livelihood in any province.

That's been violated so many times in the last two and half years.

We also have legal rights, the rights to life, liberty, and security of the person.

7 [Every person] has the right to life, liberty and security of the person and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice.

We've got the right against unreasonable search and seizure.

8 Everyone has the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure.

9 [We have] the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned.

And I must also underscore, of course, equality rights.

15(1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

We have an obligation as legislators here to make sure that we are upholding the rights of our citizens and that we are also exercising our powers in our areas of jurisdiction. That's what this is about. It's about pushing Ottawa back in its own lane.

So let me tell you a few things that I'm watching that I think that this legislation might have applicability for in pretty short order. First of all, I mentioned the fertilizer ban. If the federal government makes good on its policy proposal that they want to force our provinces to reduce fertilizer emissions 30 per cent, it's going to be a de facto production cut in the use of fertilizer, which has global implications for world food security. We can't allow that to happen, and I'm pleased to see that Saskatchewan Premier Scott Moe will not stand by and let that happen either.

We also have this arbitrary emissions reduction, which I've mentioned before as well. If they move on the proposal to reduce our emissions 42 per cent by 2030, it is also a de facto production cut, and it is offside with section 92A of the Constitution.

Firearms confiscation. They're rushing to amendments on Bill C-21 I think because they know that they're offside with this, and I think our Justice minister has done a great job of putting them on notice and making them be aware that they are violating the Constitution in many ways. Property and civil rights are provincial jurisdiction. Policing is provincial jurisdiction. The contract that we have with the RCMP in setting our priorities falls under our jurisdiction, and we will not be moved to go after firearms owners who purchase their firearms legally. We are interested in going after criminals, people who are smuggling firearms across the border and putting them into the hands of gangs in Calgary and Edmonton and elsewhere. That is our policing priority.

There's a fourth area, Bill C-69. Our Transportation minister has already put the federal government on notice that we want to build some new highways. If you can believe it, they have inserted themselves into our ability to build highways that are longer than 75 kilometres in length. That was never intended by the founders, to micromanage our affairs to that extent.

But there are so many others. The censorship law. As much as it's difficult at times to meet that press gallery – they're a little bit tough on me – I absolutely support the fact that they have a job to do. And if they are finding that they do not have the ability to exercise their press freedom under new onerous federal laws coming through, they should know that we will protect them here because it is an essential . . .

Mr. Madu: Hear, hear.

Ms Smith: It is. It's essential. It's the fourth estate. I come from it myself. Their job is to be a watchdog on our institutions.

The improper use of the Emergencies Act. I should mention this as well because I suspect a lot of our draconian policies that we saw over the last two and a half years come from an inappropriate direction happening from the federal level of government. I think we can see as well through the past number of weeks that the Emergencies Act was invoked improperly. As a result, this is the kind of thing that we should have been able to stand up and do as Quebec and say: "You know what? Some of those provisions: we're not going to enforce them. We're not going to freeze bank accounts of our citizens. We are not going to be targeting those who are engaged in peaceful protest." So I can see a number of different ways in which this legislation might be used.

I'm just hoping – I'm hoping – that in doing so, in passing this legislation, it creates a new, constructive relationship with the federal level of government. I mean, I have seen many of the members certainly in the Liberal caucus socially, and I think that there are some great ways in which we could potentially work together. I know that one of the members, Randy Boissonnault, just recently wrote a column – I hope I can find it here – about the ways in which we have been able to work constructively together. I do want to mention that because that is my intention: let's find a way that we can work together constructively on the things that are our priorities as well.

I'm going from memory now because I can't seem to find this column, but one of the things that we announced jointly was that we were going to be investing in a net-zero hydrogen production plant called Air Products. This, to me, is a prime example of how we can continue to support our base industry. We are a natural gas basin. We have a comparative advantage in this product. We've got the technical expertise to develop it. But it also works in sync with the federal obligations that have been signed on to in our international agreements. If we can find ways to work together like that, we will have a very constructive relationship.

I did have a chance to talk to Prime Minister Justin Trudeau when I first got elected, and I said that our industry is not offside with the carbon neutrality targets of 2050. Our industry is actively working with the adoption of carbon technology, the comparative advantage as well that we already have in capturing CO<sub>2</sub> and burying it underground, turning it into useful products, the development of hydrogen. We are going to be a hydrogen hub, particularly in the Edmonton region.

We also have the ability to help our friends and neighbours internationally by exporting clean LNG to displace more polluting fuels, whether it's coal, whether it's wood, whether it's dung. There are billions of people on the planet who still do not have access to clean energy when they're cooking their food or heating their homes; 44 million people a year die of indoor air pollution. We have an obligation not only to provide food security but to provide energy security and to alleviate global poverty. We can do that by still maintaining the objectives to reduce CO<sub>2</sub> emissions. If we can get the credit – and there is a mechanism for this in the Paris accord, a green transfer credit – we can reduce emissions elsewhere, get credit back here, and get to carbon neutrality faster. Those are the things that we want to work with the federal government on.

I should also mention as well – I'm not allowed to say his name, but he's the Minister of Culture. I almost caught myself. The Minister of Culture was just at a very successful meeting with his counterparts in the rest of the country on how we're going to address domestic violence. This was a very productive way of approaching the issues. The minister put on the table: here are the programs that we are already funding; will you match what we are doing? The federal minister agreed, so there are over $500 million that are being invested in domestic violence initiatives, and Alberta's share is going to be $53 million. But we didn't have to sacrifice; we didn't have to compromise. They came to the table and said: tell us your priorities, and we will work with you on implementing those. Those are the kinds of things we want to see.

The transportation minister, whose name I can't say, also was recently at a conference. He told his federal counterpart that there's no reason why they should be interfering in our ability to build new highways. One of the mandates I've given to the Transportation and Economic Corridors minister is: let's build that highway between Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray; let's build an economic corridor going down the east side of our province; let's make sure there's a . . .

Mr. Williams: Peace River.

Ms Smith: I hear Peace River might also need a new stretch of highway. [interjection] Not to mention a hospital in Cardston that's also needed.

These are the kinds of things that I think we can work together with our federal government on if they give us the latitude, and it sounded like, in putting that forward, they gave an early indication that they would be prepared to do that with us. That's what co-operative federalism looks like. It's when both parties recognize that we have sometimes competing but often complementary ways of getting the job done. But the federal government must always defer to us in our areas of constitutional authority because we have the sovereign jurisdiction; it's what our foundational documents actually say. That, I think, is going to be the approach that we are hoping to take on and go forward with. It's not going to be combative if it doesn't have to be, but the ball is going to be in Ottawa's court.

I think that they have managed to figure out how to have a constructive relationship with Quebec, where Quebec is able to, for instance, have its own provincial police, have its own pension, have its own immigration program, collect its own personal income taxes. Then whenever the federal government comes calling and says, "We'd like to spend money in your area of jurisdiction," Quebec says: "Well, actually, we don't want the strings attached. Just give us the envelope funding, and we'll do it our own way." And they always say yes. Why is it that Quebec is treated so differently? Because they demand to be treated differently, and we should demand to be treated just like Quebec. That is what the sovereignty act is all about. I think that what I'm seeing with our counterparts in Saskatchewan: they understand this, too. They understand that by asserting their rights under the Constitution, it will change the relationship with the rest of the country.

I should say that I think the biggest success that we had in putting this on the table, despite the ways in which it's been mischaracterized, was when our Environment and Protected Areas minister went to COP27 just a few weeks ago in Cairo, had an opportunity to talk with Steven Guilbeault and had an opportunity to meet with her counterparts in the environment as well. When the final communiqué came out, it called to reduce, eventually phase out oil and natural gas. And for anyone who didn't hear this, I have to underscore it because this is what the environment minister said. He said that he could not sign on to the final communiqué because the development of natural resources is provincial jurisdiction, and if he signed on to that, he would face a legal challenge from the provinces that Ottawa would lose. I have never seen that recognition from the federal government before. The fact that our environment minister was able to meet constructively, have a pleasant conversation, talk about shared interests: I think that we're finally getting through. But would we have gotten through if we hadn't put this on our radar, if we hadn't demanded to be treated differently, if we hadn't demanded that they followed the provisions in our foundational documents? I simply don't think so.

And you know what? The Americans are noticing, too. I'm told that John Kerry has talked with Steven Guilbeault and said: "What are you guys doing up there in Canada, specifically in Alberta? You guys are miles ahead of us on emissions reduction. We want to learn from what's going on in Alberta." That's the reason why we need to have our own ability to make decisions about the development and conservation of our resources our own way, because we'll do them differently. We'll do it way differently than Quebec. Quebec's approach is: keep it in the ground, don't develop it, and spend billions of dollars paying out private-sector investors. Our approach is: let's use technology and let's make sure that we get our cleaner fuels to market and let's work collaboratively on the development of new industry, in particular hydrogen. That is the reason why we must assert that this is our area of jurisdiction, and Ottawa can simply butt out.

Let me just say a moment, because I think it's now been pretty clearly established: there's nothing in this legislation that talks about breaking up our country. That's not what this is about at all. It's about going back to how this country was initially intended to work by our nation's founders. I think that there's a new misconception now that has developed that somehow this bill is going to give authoritarian powers to the cabinet. I think this just goes back to, again, reading what the actual legislation says. The legislation is designed so that if we find one of these violations that I've talked about, we will bring forward a motion and enumerate all of the ways in which we are going to address it, and it will be fully debated in this Chamber. Every member will have the opportunity to weigh in on it, and that will become the marching orders of cabinet. It will have to come through the Legislative Assembly first.

In addition – and I should just maybe underscore this point – powers of the Lieutenant Governor in Council has subsection (4), "Nothing in this Act abrogates any authority or power vested in the Legislative Assembly." The Legislative Assembly is the heart of this. None of this even begins unless we get approval from the Legislative Assembly. In addition, it will expire, as these kinds of things should. I mean, we hope that any time we would have to invoke this act, we would be able to work out some kind of collaborative path forward with our federal counterparts, but any of these provisions will expire two years from when the original order is set.

We have to be mindful, of course. We don't want to be using this all the time, obviously. I don't want to use it at all if it can be helped. If Ottawa stays in its lane, we won't have to use it at all, but we had to make sure that there were these legislative protections so that if we do take this kind of action, it comes back here because this is the people's Chamber, and it's the people who are going to have to decide on this. But I think the people have given us a mandate to move forward on pushing back against an increasingly out-of-control Ottawa, an out-of-control Ottawa that has no respect for the rule of law, no respect for the provinces, no respect for the fact that it shouldn't be intervening in our area of jurisdiction.

The other thing that I have to underscore and I believe one of my ministers responded: we foundationally, because we believe in these documents – I should just remind everyone what section 35 of the Constitution says. This is the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Recognition of existing aboriginal and treaty rights

35(1) The existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada are hereby recognized and affirmed . . .

(2) In this Act, "aboriginal peoples of Canada" includes the Indian, Inuit and Métis peoples of Canada.

Land claims agreements

(3) For greater certainty, in subsection (1) "treaty rights" includes rights that now exist by way of land claims agreements or may be so acquired.

And (4),

Aboriginal and treaty rights are guaranteed equally to both sexes

(4) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the aboriginal and treaty rights referred to in subsection (1) are guaranteed equally . . .

That is a foundational section of the Charter.

This document says we're going back to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution. It by definition is going to support Aboriginal and treaty rights. It says right under section 2 that nothing in this act is to be construed as

- (a) authorizing any order that would be contrary to the Constitution of Canada,
- (b) authorizing any directive to a person, other than a provincial entity, that would compel the person to act contrary to or otherwise in violation of any federal law, or
- (c) abrogating or derogating from any existing aboriginal [land] and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada that are recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

It's right there. It's right there. So this is, I think – am I coming to an end here? This is the reason why we have done what we have done.

I have given the examples of six areas that are under concern to me, but I have also done a couple of other things. I have asked our ministers to look at policies and laws that are unconstitutional or that harm Albertans and to prepare resolutions for the spring. To give examples, as I had mentioned: the fertilizer production cap, C-69, arbitrary emissions reduction cap on oil and gas, firearms confiscation, the federal law, the improper use of the Emergencies Act, the plastics ban, trespassing by federal environmental officers on private property. There's already a new law in Saskatchewan to address that. We, I think, also are going to have some concerns with excessive restrictions on building code requirements, with the federal government wanting to force us to change overnight our electricity system. That, again, violates the provision of our power under section 92(a) of the Constitution. And there are probably others.

I have also asked our deputy ministers that I want to know when the federal government is reaching in because this is the way in which they attempt to control us, through their federal spending power. They reach in at the bureaucratic level and say: "Hey, let's work together on this, that, or the other policy. We'll give you a little bit of money; just float it up the food chain to the minister, pass it." What always happens: they either only fund a fraction of what it's going to cost or they tell us to put the program in place in a way that's massively more expensive than the way we want to do it ourselves or the funding expires and then we're left implementing a program that was designed by Ottawa. We're not going to do that anymore.

Every time the federal government contacts any one of my departments, it elevates into my ministry so that I know exactly how many ways in which the federal government is trying to intervene in our affairs. As I told you, this is not going to happen anymore, Madam Speaker. From now on Alberta is not going to ask permission from Ottawa to be prosperous and free. Those days are behind us.

With that, I would move second reading of Bill 1 and ask the hon. members to support me in that. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to the second reading of Bill 1. Yesterday I along with my colleagues stood up for Alberta's economic security, stability by voting against the Premier's proposed legislation, which, in my opinion, is the most disastrous piece of legislation that I have ever seen.

The Premier cited extensively what section 92 of the Constitution does. It gives Alberta exclusive jurisdiction over certain heads of power. The Premier also mentioned a section from the Charter that sets out rights and obligations of all Canadians. Nothing in this piece of legislation does anything to change that.

In fact, this bill does not do what it says it's doing. It's not even worth the piece of paper it's written on. You cannot fool Albertans by changing the name of this disastrous piece of legislation, that is clearly an absolute recipe for disaster for our economy, for our democracy. It is dangerous, it's antidemocratic, and it will create more chaos, more costs, and more conflict. That's why we voted against its introduction yesterday.

Allow me to explain what this bill does. The first thing it does is give the Premier and cabinet unprecedented powers to change and rewrite laws behind closed doors, without approval of this House. Let me say that again. This gives the Premier and cabinet ministers unprecedented power to change the law unilaterally, without approval of this House. What it does: section 3 says that any cabinet minister can bring a motion to the resolution, ram it through, using and abusing the majority, and then go to the cabinet table. And what can they do? In section 4(a)(i): "suspend or modify the application or operation of all or part of an enactment, subject to the terms and conditions that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may prescribe." That's written in the legislation, that it can suspend or modify the application or operation of law. If somebody still, after reading this, cannot understand, there's nothing much you can do. But that's what the section does.

In sub (ii) what it says: "specify or set out provisions that apply in addition to, or instead of, any provision of an enactment." This gives cabinet power to specify or set out provisions that apply in addition to or instead of. Now, this provision gives cabinet the power to make additions to the laws or even create laws that will be applied instead of the enactment that this section applies to. Their words: it's written in section 4. I urge all members: along with their key messages, do read the legislation. It's pretty clear. I would say that Albertans didn't send me here to let cabinet decide on debate. Our role is to debate legislation. All of my colleagues are here to do that. They are here to debate legislation, not just motions giving cabinet powers to decide what they think is appropriate behind closed doors.

The UCP MLAs may want to give someone else their job. On this side of the House we are here to do our job. Let's remember that the Premier was elected by 1 per cent of Alberta voters, and now she wants to pass this draconian piece of legislation, that gives cabinet dictatorial powers. This is not right.

It doesn't matter what's in the motion presented in the Legislature when this act says that cabinet can amend whatever and however they feel like. We spoke this morning with the department officials, and they clarified that there is no requirement for the motion to be specific. Even that motion is not binding on the cabinet: that's what Justice officials are telling us. It hands total power over to the cabinet. The power they have is over everyone. The act states that it provides authority over every public and grant-receiving organization, meaning that the cabinet can dictate their will to nonprofits, school boards, municipalities, police forces, and more.

This is a massive, massive overreach. There has been no consultation with Albertans. This is undemocratic, and it's an attack on our democracy. If Albertans want to challenge the changes made under this act, the UCP has made it harder. When you ask public officials for rationale to put the standard of review as "patent unreasonableness" or decreasing the time frame for judicial review from six months to 30 days, rightfully so department officials are saying that that's a political decision for the Legislature and the government to explain, and I'm sure we won't hear anything.

The Premier also said yesterday, even though it is their first piece of business, that she hopes that this act is never used, but we now have documents from the public service and mandate letters with specific direction on how the government plans to use this act. We've got three different stories, depending on if you talk to the Premier, the minister, or the deputy minister and department officials. The Premier and the minister are either severely misinformed about what's in this legislation, or the government is misleading Albertans.

Let me share who has weighed in on this piece of legislation, what Albertans have said about this act, and I quote: there is no shred of evidence that this act will lead to economic growth; you can't tell me this is going to support economic growth and support continued economic diversification in this province. End quote. Madam Speaker, that's Deborah Yedlin, president and CEO of the Calgary Chamber of commerce. She doesn't think that there is a shred of evidence that this will lead to economic growth.

Todd Hirsch, ATB's former chief economist, believes that the Premier's piece of legislation, which would assert the province's sovereignty to overrule federal laws and policies, is dangerous. I quote: I think this would be so politically confusing and disruptive; just ask Quebec after 1976, when that province first elected a separatist Parti Québécois government, how that went for them; it was 40 years of an outflow of people and capital and corporate presence and influence, and it never returned; that same thing would happen in Alberta. End quote. That's a former chief economist with Alberta treasury branches.

Then the Premier was talking about section 35, that gives Indigenous and treaty rights constitutional status. The Premier went on at length about how this piece of legislation upholds treaty rights. She completely ignored what treaty chiefs have to say about it. All three treaty chiefs – treaties 6, 7, and 8 – spoke against this piece of legislation at a joint news conference. I quote: we must uphold the treaty; it is an international agreement and the highest law to govern the land, resources, and our people; we have never ceded this territory, nor do we ever plan to. That's treaty chief Tony Alexis of the Alexis Nakota Nation.

Another quote:

Bill 1 determines that a federal initiative is unconstitutional if it violates provincial jurisdiction or "causes or is anticipated to cause harm to Albertans." This is important because it is not about jurisdiction, it is about whether the [government] likes a federal law or not.

That's Professor Duane Bratt from Mount Royal University.

Emmett Macfarlane called it "the most unconstitutional bill in Canada's modern history." Another quote:

Upon the passing of such a resolution . . .

the resolution mentioned in this act,

. . . Bill 1 gives a free hand to the government to change any law on the books and to order "provincial entities" – which include any provincial agencies or institutions (municipalities, universities and even the police!) – to ignore or violate federal law, even criminal law.

Madam Speaker, these are considered opinions of distinguished Albertans about this piece of legislation.

Yes, Madam Speaker, there are UCP members as well who also had some choice words about this act. Not a few months ago the UCP government was repealing the extraordinary powers they gave themselves in Bill 10. That was a health-related bill. At the time the now Justice minister admitted it was excessive. He said – and I quote – that the power to modify legislation by ministerial order is unnecessary. Now, the Deputy Premier was also participating in that debate, and this is what the Deputy Premier said, the Lethbridge Deputy Premier: "No one person should be able to enact regulations without consultation."

Now all the UCP are happy to support a piece of legislation that is opposed by businesses, that is opposed by academia, that is opposed by all three treaty chiefs. They are happy to give their government excessive powers to go around the Legislature and public oversight. That's shameful.

In addition, the hypocrisy of the UCP leadership candidates sitting around the Premier is astounding. Astounding. Not long ago they all held a joint news conference and told Albertans, promised Albertans how they will be voting against the sovereignty act. The Finance minister called it an economic time bomb. That's what the Finance minister said. The jobs minister called it a fairy tale. The Municipal Affairs minister called it anarchy, and the minister of trade said that it was like shooting ourselves in the foot. Yesterday all of them forgot about what they said six weeks ago. They failed to walk the talk. They prefer their positions over principles. That's also shameful. Albertans certainly deserve better.

The UCP government is focused on legislation that will destroy jobs, chase investment away, and stifle Alberta's economy at a time when we should all be focusing on building a better and brighter future for this province. That's the consensus among the business community, among academia and Indigenous leaders.

We have an unprecedented crisis in our health care system, and this government instead is focused on destroying the economy. Tens of thousands of Albertans don't have access to a family doctor. Wait times at emergency departments of children's hospitals have been as long as 16 hours, and now with the worst of the flu season yet to come, parents are struggling to find medication necessary to treat their sick children. That should be front and centre for this government, but, unfortunately, no.

Then there is the so-called affordability plan, the UCP's affordability plan, which doesn't even come close to undoing the extra costs piled onto families by the UCP for things like car insurance, for things like school fees, for things like utilities. I urge the members to talk to ordinary Albertans. What impact these things have on their pocketbooks any ordinary Albertan will be able to tell them. I invite them, any minister, to come walk with me in my constituency. You will get to meet many Albertans who are struggling to pay insurance, who are struggling to pay utilities, who are struggling to pay school costs, all piled onto them by this UCP government. Clearly, they are focused on attempting to distract Albertans from the issues that they are facing, and the government has no interest in addressing those issues.

Instead, they are focused on creating more chaos, more conflict, and more cost for Albertans with this sovereignty act. Business leaders are telling us that it will cost jobs, that it's not good for Alberta's economy. They want stability, they want certainty, not the sovereignty. It must be stopped. Business leaders, legal experts, Indigenous leaders, and even members of the UCP's own cabinet have rejected the sovereignty act as unconstitutional and harmful to Alberta's economy. Whether this act has any legal merit or not, it's already chasing investment away from this province.

Madam Speaker, Albertans don't want this. They want leadership that is stable, responsible, honest, and focused on issues facing Albertans. In our alternative Speech from the Throne we presented a better vision. We put forward a plan for economic growth that will create jobs and that will attract investment. We'll put a cap on utility costs, freeze insurance, and reverse the UCP fee hikes on families.

In six months, Madam Speaker, Albertans can elect a new government that will focus on their . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and I rise to speak today to Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. You know, it's no secret that Alberta has long had to struggle to escape the colonialism of central Canada's Laurentian elite, well, in fact, since before this province was even a province. To put it another way, Alberta has had to struggle to be accepted and join as an equal member of the eastern Canada confederation of provinces, and the struggle seems to never end.

Canada is a confederation. What is a confederation? We need to think about that, and I did some research into it, actually. Confederation, one dictionary says, is a permanent union of countries, of self-governing peoples. The Encyclopedia Britannica online version has an article on it in which they say that it's a "permanent union of sovereign states." Another says that it's a loose alliance of political units and goes on to say that the component states retain considerable independence. The members of a confederation often delegate only a few powers to the central authority. The word originates, actually, from Latin and means "an agreement."

I think that if we're to understand anything, it's not enough just to say what it is; you also have to say what it is not. So when you're looking into what a confederation is, it's not an autocracy. It's not a dictatorship, not a subservient relationship, not a delegated position but a meeting, an agreement of equal powers with defined areas of authority. When our federal partners try to abuse this agreement called a Constitution, then they must be challenged.

This is a position, actually, that the preceding North-West Territories Legislative Assembly took in negotiating the agreement to even join the confederation of eastern provinces. On May 2, 1900, they passed what they called the autonomy motion, which is really just another word for the sovereignty of provincial jurisdiction, and they requested in that motion the fullest inquiry into the terms upon which the territories might enter Confederation. I mean, that was the very negotiation from the very beginning: what terms can we have by which we should even consider being part of this confederation? It was all about provincial jurisdiction and equal status with the pre-existing provinces that were in confederation with each other. Should . . .

Mr. Williams: Will the member give way?

Mr. Orr: Sure.

Mr. Williams: I was wondering if the member could go into a bit more detail about how Canada is set up, not like it is in the United Kingdom, where there are constituent peoples and constituencies that are subject to expression of the Mother Parliament. Instead, we're equal partners in Confederation as provinces.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. Yes, that is exactly how it is set up, and those were the exact terms upon which Alberta joined as a later signatory to those agreements, those mutual partnerships that formed the confederation. In fact, it was formed in part, a confederation, out of fears of U.S. aggression, but I won't go into all those details at this time. But those are exactly the terms upon which it was set up.

Then, interestingly enough, by May 21, 1902, every single candidate in the territorial election of the North-West Territories favoured the principle of provincial autonomy, or provincial sovereignty. They wanted, actually, to be part of Confederation but as an equal partner on fair, just, and equal terms, as the other Confederation provinces had been given. The feds continued to delay, to vastly underfund the needs of the west, so in 1903 the Assembly of the North-West Territories unanimously passed a motion demanding immediate autonomy.

This is not a new discussion in this province, my friends; this has been going on for a long, long time. To this day the fight has been carried forward by Premier after Premier after Premier, and we could argue for many, many hours about those details or delineate them. Time after time the federal government imposes rules that disproportionately affect this province and its people while Alberta continues to drive this wonderful country as its economic engine. This is a problem that has persisted for far too long.

While Alberta is subject to the unbalanced decisions of the federal government, another province enjoys a substantial amount of sovereignty within its Confederation. How is that fair and equal? Outlined in our Constitution, as the Premier has clearly detailed, there are clear rules that delineate the areas of provincial and federal jurisdiction, and they do not overlap. Despite these enshrined separations of power in our Constitution, the federal government in Ottawa has imposed laws on Alberta that instead should be decided here at home by our peoples.

Pursuing Alberta's self-determination does not weaken or threaten our commitment to this nation. Our country will in fact be made stronger when this bill becomes law because a stronger Alberta is good for all Canadians. When we are allowed to protect our energy and agricultural sectors from unfair restrictions, all of Canada will benefit from less expensive food, energy, and transportation. When we take full control of the economic development of our province, all Canadians will benefit from the job growth that we produce. Greater sovereignty within provincial jurisdiction for Alberta isn't selfishness; it is pursued because of the love we have for this country and province, with the knowledge that more prosperity for Alberta means more prosperity for all Canadians.

Many of the laws implemented by the federal government that disproportionately affect all Albertans still impact the rest of Canada. For example, restrictions on fertilizer use that could seriously harm our country's agricultural sector and eventually lead to a food crisis, especially because this will drive up costs even further: right in the midst of an inflationary cycle the feds want to do this.

The fact that Alberta has done so much for our nation but is still punished by the federal government in Ottawa sets a very dangerous precedent to the Confederation itself. If Alberta doesn't stand up, who will? This problem will only get worse, and eventually other provinces will be stuck in the same spot as us. In fact, Saskatchewan recognizes this and has already moved on it.

Sadly, even though this bill supports the strength of Canada by reinforcing the constitutional separation between provincial and federal governments, the Alberta NDP obviously are going to attack it for personal and, quite frankly, simply partisan reasons, yet just last night we heard the Saskatchewan NDP voted in favour of second reading of a very complementary, similar bill in Saskatchewan. Maybe they should talk to their Saskatchewan neighbours and find out how it is that in Saskatchewan the NDP actually supports their province and their people but that in Alberta apparently they're only interested in partisan gain.

This bill does not isolate us from our fellow Canadians but brings us closer together as we share in the bounties of an unshackled economy. The NDP will stand in opposition to this bill because, supposedly, increasing Alberta's sovereignty in the face of smothering federal economic regulations will somehow make us a worse place to do business. That could never be farther from the truth. Empowering the provincial government to stand up for our people and our businesses, for its constitutionally enshrined rights will actually help attract investment as unreasonable and burdensome economic restrictions are lifted.

This bill, in fact, comes in response to Alberta industry members begging that Alberta retain authority over our resources and not give it up by default to federal oversight. The oil and gas industry has long advocated for a made-in-Alberta TIER equivalency regulation to the federal standards. We have that, and we will keep that. Forest industry members have requested in writing – I have the letter right here – that we push back against federal incursions into Alberta regulatory space. They say: we need a strong provincial champion to clarify that Alberta will defend our interests.

When the feds threatened Quebec, the Premier of Quebec responded decisively, making it clear that he was prepared to go to court to defend his province. So will we. We are not the only province in Canada to pursue greater self-determination within Confederation. Quebec has it in many ways. Saskatchewan is moving in the same direction.

The NDP will just fearmonger over this bill, stating that it'll drive investment and economic interest out of our province. Nothing could be further from the truth. Not only is this not true; it's just purely hypocritical. Nothing scared investors in Alberta away as much as the previous NDP government. Their leadership nearly crippled this province.

Now we have a unique opportunity to defend our economy, our province, and our people from an overbearing federal government, and we must take it, despite the words of those who would spread falsehoods and frighten Albertans away from reclaiming the rights that are enshrined in our Constitution. After all, we are conservatives, not socialists. Making sure our economy thrives is what we do best.

Now is the pivotal time for Alberta to stand up for itself and not act like disenfranchised minors and be subservient to an abusive partner. It's time for that to end. This bill would ensure that this Legislature has the necessary authority to protect this province, its people and economy, from further overreach by the federal government. It would also allow us to reverse some of those rules and regulations that are unfair, unconstitutional, and abusive. We cannot allow fearmongering from the opposition to prevent this government from doing what it must do to ensure the prosperity of Albertans for years to come. Strengthening this province's constitutional position does not endanger the livelihoods and prosperity of Albertans; it protects them and encourages their unstifled growth.

That is why this bill must pass. For the good of this province and our country we must stand up. Now is the time, this is the place, and we are the people. Vote for Bill 1. Thank you.

Mr. Williams: I move, Madam Deputy Speaker, that we adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Toor moved, seconded by Ms Lovely, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my sincere honour to rise and accept the Speech from the Throne given by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. I would also like to extend my gratitude to Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor on putting forward provisions for the Legislature and the province we all enrich.

The throne speech clearly laid out the priorities our government will be pursuing this session as Alberta continues to recover, diversify, and grow. I believe these priorities align with the priorities of all Albertans, who are rightly concerned about their rising cost of living, their province, their economy, and their health care system. With record-high inflation, caused in part by record spending from the federal government, our people are being forced to choose between the necessities of life and paying their bills, this despite our province experiencing the strongest job growth in the country, high wages, and a nearly full economic recovery from the pandemic.

To help Albertans to weather this inflation storm, we announced a substantial relief plan that starts with the introduction of the inflation relief act. This multibillion-dollar package of broad-based and targeted relief will help fight inflation and make life affordable for all Albertans but particularly for our vulnerable, our disabled, and our elderly. This is real relief that will help Albertans pay for fuel, water, heat, groceries, and more of their necessities. We're doing our part to help fight this inflation crisis.

At the same time, we continue to call on our federal counterparts to get spending under control and to scrap the federal carbon tax along with the disturbing plans to increase it by 300 per cent. Our government knows that affordability is the primary challenge facing Albertans right now and that families are counting on us to take decisive action to address the rising cost of living.

We also know that our government is in a position to deliver this timely and meaningful relief because we have gotten our fiscal house in order. Alberta's strong balance sheet and this multibillion-dollar relief package for Albertans do not exist in isolation, which is why I was also so glad to hear that our government will continue to focus on creating jobs, attracting investments, opening the door for new workers, keeping taxes low, and diversifying the economy. This government has worked tirelessly to restore Alberta's economy and build a new Alberta advantage, and we're now seeing the results of that hard work.

In my riding of Calgary-Falconridge small businesses are the largest employer, whether it's the restaurant industry, retail industry, trucking industry, construction industry. It's all booming. A lot of employers are calling me. They have a problem of labour shortage. When the economy is booming, a labour shortage might be a good problem to have. My message to them is that we are happy to deal with it, and I think that many of my colleagues are dealing with the same problem.

This economic boom is what is going to be creating more jobs and going to put a roof over the heads and food on the plate for average families in each of our constituencies in Alberta. We have seen hundreds of thousands of jobs created, landmark investments across the province, a rapid growth in new industries, and a spike in people coming to Alberta in search of either a family reunion or for economic opportunity.

I was pleased to hear that we will remain committed to defending the rights and interests of Alberta, the province, as I said before, that we all cherish, from jurisdictional overreach from Ottawa. We have already introduced Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, to stand up to the federal government overreach and interference in areas of provincial jurisdiction, including in the areas of private property, natural resources, agriculture, firearms, immigration, regulation of the economy, and delivery of health care.

Albertans' rights are sacred, and they are enshrined in Canada's Constitution and Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor said, these personal and provincial rights are not something the federal government can simply supersede when it chooses.

Ottawa is not our ruler; Ottawa is our partner, and it needs to begin acting like it.

Like so many other Albertans, I'm a proud Canadian. I moved here about 25 years ago, and this country, and especially this province, has given me a lot: peace, opportunities, raising a family. Like other Albertans, I love Alberta. Our Canadian Constitution is very clear that the federal and provincial governments are equal, each with our own areas of exclusive jurisdiction, and our government will work to protect that.

We will also work to reform Alberta's health care system so that it is there for all our people when they need it. On this we have also taken immediate action by launching the health care reform plan, which nobly aims to improve EMS response times, decrease emergency room wait times, reduce wait times for surgeries, and develop long-term reforms through consultation with front-line workers, including finding solutions to restore decision-making to local health care professionals and authorities. We will not blindly throw more money at a broken system or kick the can further down the road on fixing it. We will act on behalf of health care workers, patients, and all Albertans to ensure that our system is strong and resilient for generations to come. We thank our world-class doctors, nurses, paramedics, and all front-line workers who keep our system running each and every day. They deserve a system that works, as do patients and their families. We're going to deliver that for them. We know this will take some time, but the hard work has already begun, and I have the utmost confidence that we will see measurable improvement soon.

The throne speech set our legislative agenda. It gives us a signpost that will guide our way to a more robust and affluent future. It highlights the challenges that lay before us, but it's also a call for faith and trust in the system we believe in to bring back the Alberta advantage.

After a long time I have seen that more Albertans are coming to than leaving Alberta. This is a sign that our province is back. Alberta is back, and we are moving in a direction where people want to be part of our economy. We are already leading Canada in economic growth, but I believe the legislation initiatives outlined in the throne speech will only further accentuate and enhance the momentum we are already currently seeing in our economy.

I'm proud to see our government pursuing an agenda that is attracting the best and the brightest from across Canada and all over the world to our province, as evidenced by the positive net migration numbers we continue to see. I'm also proud that our government is not shying away from doing the hard work that Albertans expect us to do. I have the utmost confidence that the work we're doing now will pay positive dividends for generations to come. We all look forward to the days ahead and to a stronger and freer future for Alberta.

As my time here comes to an end, Madam Speaker, I would like to say that it's been an honour to speak to this Legislature on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Falconridge. It's been my honour to move this thanks of accepting the throne speech from Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of our great province. After the last few difficult years we've been through as a province, I want families, the business owners, all Albertans across the province to know that we're moving forward, that better days are ahead. Our government cares about you. We will always fight for you.

The Speech from the Throne articulates a broad vision of Alberta moving forward which is inclusive and welcoming to those who come. As I said before, it can be for different economic opportunities or maybe a family union. Alberta will be that place and that beacon of hope for the rest of the country to lead forward with these values that are infused into every single Albertan and infused into our past. That has brought us to where we are today.

It may be the beginning of a new chapter in Alberta's story, I believe, but we have to understand it is one chapter in a longer book. This is the Alberta that I believe in. That is why I'm grateful to move to accept the Speech from the Throne given by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta.

God save the King, and may God bless Alberta. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose to second, and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre next.

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and second the motion to accept the Speech from the Throne given by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

The affordability crisis Albertans are facing is very serious. I've consulted with many constituents in my riding who are struggling to make ends meet, purchase essentials, and pay their bills. This is not something that any Albertan should have to deal with, especially at a time when our economy is doing so well.

I want to echo my colleague's comments regarding the federal government. The federal government has many more levers at its disposal than the provincial government when it comes to fighting inflation. The federal government has also helped fuel this inflation crisis through its record spending. We continue to urge the federal government to help make life more affordable for families by scrapping the federal fuel tax and the federal carbon tax along with any proposed plans to increase the carbon tax by 300 per cent. No elected representative who is serious about making life more affordable for families should support these taxes, especially at a time when inflation is so high.

I'm pleased our government is stepping up to act on behalf of Alberta families. The measures announced so far include but are not limited to extending the fuel tax cut; taking action on utilities, including expanding the electricity rebate to a total of up to $500; reindexing benefits like AISH, PDD, and income support as well as the Alberta seniors' benefit and the Alberta child and family benefit; providing targeted payments for children under 18, seniors 65 and older, and vulnerable Albertans with household income below $180,000; and last, providing additional support for low-income transit programs. These measures will help all Albertans, but they will provide specific support to those in need. Our government knows that affordability is the primary challenge facing Albertans right now and that families are counting on us to take decisive action to address the rising cost of living. That is why we are not hesitating to deliver this timely and meaningful support.

I'm also proud that our government is not hesitating in tackling health care reform, which is an ongoing concern in my riding and ridings across Alberta. I know this work won't be easy or fast, but I am confident that the health care reform plan, that has already been initiated, will deliver some immediate positive results for Albertans.

Finally, I'm proud we are addressing our province's relationship with the federal government. For too long we have watched as our provincial rights granted to us under the Constitution have been infringed upon by federal actors. For too long governments have failed to stand up, and enough is enough. The result is grave consequences for our industry, our economy, our workers. We are today saying that enough is enough. As Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor said:

The Canadian Constitution is clear. The federal and provincial governments both have exclusive and sovereign areas of jurisdiction, and this government will no longer sit idly by as Ottawa infringes on our constitutional rights to develop our resources, develop our economy, and deliver our social programs in the manner that Albertans see fit.

This is why I'm encouraged that the first piece of legislation under our new Premier is the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. If passed, this bill will be a constitutional shield that will protect the personal and provincial rights of Albertans from any unconstitutional or harmful acts by the federal government. Legislation like this is long overdue, and I'm glad that our government isn't hesitating to get it done for Albertans.

The people of my Camrose constituency are excited for the future again. Alberta has so many good things going on, but we need to get our arms around this inflation crisis before we can truly realize our potential. I would like to once again say that it is an honour to represent the good people of the Camrose constituency, and I am pleased to second the Speech from the Throne.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak in response to the Speech from the Throne, the first speech in this session of the Legislature, and to respond in both of my roles, as the MLA for Edmonton-City Centre and initially as the Official Opposition critic for Health. I listened to the speech yesterday, and health care took up a significant portion of the speech. Certainly, I was reflecting on the response I'd provide today, so I want to speak to some of the comments that were made in the Speech from the Throne regarding health care.

In that speech it states: "The government must take action. More words and platitudes will not shorten wait times or free up hospital beds." Madam Speaker, it's this government's words, its platitudes, its rash, incompetent actions that have left our health care system in crisis, that have led to the situation we find ourselves in today. Throughout the pandemic we saw this government drag their feet. They fell back on words and platitudes when action was needed to curb rising waves of COVID-19. As front-line health care workers were becoming increasingly exhausted, their cries for help were met with words and platitudes from the former Premier, from the UCP's ministers of Health, until the rising case counts and indeed deaths forced them to act, but repeatedly they did so reluctantly. They acted last; they acted least.

The only actions they undertook with relish, Madam Speaker, were to attack front-line health care workers. Let's consider the impacts, for example, of this government's decisive action in regard to doctors in Alberta. They tore up their agreement. They imposed a series of changes that the then Health minister insisted were essential to reform the health care system and keep spending under control, changes that they decisively acted to move forward with in the midst of a growing pandemic, changes that went on to drive doctors out of practice and out of the province, and now we have tens of thousands of Albertans who have no access to a family doctor.

Our public operating rooms are struggling to catch up on waitlists that grew while this government dragged its feet, relied on words and platitudes, and now they're unable to operate at capacity because we don't have enough anaesthesiologists because, again, this government drove them out of the province, all because of this government's decisive action, much like they claim, in the throne speech, that they are going to be taking to reform the health care system today.

And here's the irony, Madam Speaker. The throne speech makes the claim that this government is here for health care workers, committed to ensuring resources are directed to where they are needed most, to emergency and operating rooms rather than to boardrooms and consulting companies. Every one of those wrong-headed decisions made by this government, the damage that they did, were informed by their initial spending on boards, committees, and consulting companies, on carefully cherry-picked statistics from the MacKinnon report, from their carefully curated Blue Ribbon Panel on Alberta's Finances, on recommendations from their report generated by their contract with the consulting firm Ernst & Young, a report that led to plans like laying off 11,000 of the front-line health care workers that they now purport they value and thank, including potentially up to 500 full-time nurses.

That's not a record, Madam Speaker, that gives me confidence in this Premier and this government's plan to upend our public health care system in the name of reform under the direction of a single administrator in six months, at a time when this system remains in deep crisis due in good part to the neglect, the attacks, and poor decisions of ministers who still sit in this cabinet, particularly given that this Premier is on the record advocating for policy changes to – and I quote – get used to the concept of paying out of pocket, for Albertans to get used to paying out of pocket for health care. Albertans are rightly concerned that the actions they are seeing this Premier undertake now are simply going to lead to more chaos and conflict at the cost of their access to health.

Now, in contrast, Madam Speaker, in the words of former health columnist Keith Gerein, Alberta's health system enjoyed one of its most uninterrupted periods of stability under the NDP's reign. That was our record from 2015 to 2019. He noted that yearly spending hikes were reduced to about 3 per cent, which made progress in slowing the cost of physicians, pharmacists, and dental care, while columnist Don Braid noted that we "calmed down the system, made significant improvements and provided stability for health planners, professionals and workers."

That's why, as we laid out in our alternative Speech from the Throne, Madam Speaker, we as the Alberta NDP caucus, should we have the opportunity to form government, would be relentless in pursuing and proposing real solutions. In fact, we're going to do that from opposition right now. We're bringing forward legislation this very session, carried by our leader, that will ensure that public health care is protected and strengthened, that would establish health care service standards' openness and transparency to Albertans, who should be able to get an ambulance, go to the emergency room, see their doctor when they need to. They deserve to have the information on how that's progressing. It's legislation that will ensure there's accountability for the care that Albertans depend on.

We're going to introduce the first major plank of our health care platform around community-based family care, primary care, Madam Speaker, something that was not even mentioned in the Speech from the Throne as this government scrambles to deal with the crisis that it created in part by undermining access to primary care here in the province of Alberta. We recognize how important it is that we have family doctors in this province, that we are attracting them to this province, not driving them away, and that we are ensuring that Albertans have access to them. Getting to the root of the issues in the health care system: that is truly preventative care.

We're going to continue to hold this government to account in terms of its promise to somehow in the next six months end the chaos they created in hospitals, in clinics and get EMS back on track. Truly, Madam Speaker, we are only going to get there with a government that truly believes in science and believes in investing in and not undermining our public health care system.

In regard to my constituency of Edmonton-City Centre, you know, in the throne speech, Madam Speaker, it talked about protecting and supporting the most vulnerable among us. It says that that always “has and always will be the Alberta way.” Well, it wasn’t this government’s way when they deindexed AISH, income supports, and seniors’ benefits, that were received by hundreds of my constituents. It wasn’t this government’s way when they cut the additional housing support that constituents of mine depended on, pushing some of them out of their homes and onto the streets. It wasn’t this government’s way when it spent over two years refusing to partner with the city of Edmonton and the government of Canada to fund over 250 supportive housing units for those living houseless, many on the streets of my constituency.

This government brags about affordability measures, but they excluded many of my constituents who live in condos or apartments from their electricity and natural gas rebates, and it wasn’t this government’s way when they cut access to harm reduction supports in my constituency, leading to more people in my community being poisoned by a toxic street supply on the street, in our public spaces, and behind businesses and homes. This government was apparently prosperous enough to give billions away to profitable corporations and millions to an embarrassment of an energy war room but not enough to show real compassion for those most in need. Taking actions on those fronts, Madam Speaker, isn’t just the right thing to do for the people; it’s the best thing for our community and our local economy.

Now, for the past three years in my role as the MLA for Edmonton’s downtown I’ve talked with business and community leaders in and around our downtown as they asked how they could get the attention of this government to get them to take action on these issues that I’ve noted and many more. For three years, sadly, there was very little response. Then, finally, earlier this year, as part of the budget for 2022-2023, we did see the government step up in the UCP budget to provide $5 million for downtown revitalization in Edmonton and Calgary.

Now, Madam Speaker, I will say that $5 million isn’t a particularly large sum towards revitalization, but, hey, as the old adage says, never look a gift horse in the mouth. But the thing is that this is a horse that has yet to actually leave the barn. Talking with the mayor, talking with folks on the downtown revitalization task force here in Edmonton, that $5 million has not been paid. We’re only a few months from the end of the budget year, and we have not seen the dollars this government committed in its budget. If this government is truly committed to, as it says in the throne speech, “its steadfast commitment to job creation and economic diversification,” perhaps they can follow through on this promise from 10 months ago.

I also recognize that after three years of asking, just before the former Premier left office, this government did finally step forward with some funding to address some of the serious issues around housing, substance use, and mental health, issues that fall squarely under provincial responsibility but that the city of Edmonton has been bearing a disproportionate burden for. Now, I’ll be watching closely to see if those dollars flow and follow through. I’ll also note that the funding fell short of providing enough funding to cover the number of shelter beds needed this winter here in the city of Edmonton so that Edmonton city council even now is having to debate dipping into their emergency reserve to ensure that the people in my constituency will be guaranteed to be able to have a warm bed if they need one instead of sleeping on the streets in freezing weather.

The city of Edmonton has asked this government for funding for the healthy streets operation centre. That’s a collaboration between the city of Edmonton, peace officers, fire, the Bent Arrow Traditional Healing Society – their outreach workers – Homeward Trust, police officers, and the HELP unit. That is to address issues around community safety. You know, this centre was in direct response to a direct ask from leaders in the Chinese community to address concerns in Chinatown, which I also represent a portion of.

Now, my understanding is that the Minister of Culture promised them at a community meeting that that funding would be there for that operation centre, that they would make it happen. Well, presently the city has funded that operation centre for two years. They’ve sent a letter to the Minister of Justice asking for his support, and they have not received a response. This government is once again sitting on its hands, this government is not acting, and this government is not following through on its commitment to its promise to the community and failing to stand up and partner with the city of Edmonton.

They asked the Minister of Justice to consider how that centre could be supported with government of Alberta dollars, with programming or other investments that are discussed in their safety plan that was ordered by them, ordered that they provide by the Minister of Justice. [interjection] Go ahead, Minister.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Member, for accepting my intervention. I want to thank you for raising the issue of Edmonton’s Chinatown. The community has raised this issue. I also want to let you know that I was very pleased that not only myself but the minister of housing at the time and Justice and about six of us went down to Chinatown and met with the community there. Let me tell you this. Just before I changed my portfolio, we did make a public announcement in Edmonton for a $184 million comprehensive response, not only on homelessness but addiction and mental health. At that time Mayor Sohi was there. Mayor Sohi personally thanked this government for the huge action we’ve taken. You know, just as you’re on this subject, I want to update the House that this comprehensive mental health and addictions and homelessness package: I have never seen that in my career of social work. I’ve never seen that across Canada.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, forgive me for the speaker’s intervention. My apologies. Interventions are not allowed on the throne speech. It’s not a regular occurrence. Not everyone is up to speed. I apologize to the speaker and everyone in this Assembly.

Please continue with your time.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I acknowledge the dollars that this government committed. Let’s be clear. Not all of those $184 million, as I recall, were for the city of Edmonton; some of those were for Calgary as well. It was a larger package. So let’s be clear about where all those dollars are being divided.

I spoke with the mayor last week, and he is still waiting for a response on the funding for this operation centre, which this minister promised the community they would fund.

I appreciate the minister’s intervention. I appreciate the words that he has given, and I have acknowledged the dollars he has spoken of, but it still does not address the fact that it falls short of the emergency beds that are needed to ensure every person living houseless in Edmonton right now can access a warm place to stay. They still have not funded the operation centre that they promised, not to mention the fact that that was after three years of advocacy by myself, by my colleague for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, and by multiple members of Edmonton city council over the course of two consecutive councils.

Do I appreciate the government stepping up and following through? I do. Do they deserve applause for doing so, once again, last and least? Well, I’ll let the people of Edmonton decide that.

The fact is, Madam Speaker, that this government shows that it is more interested in shaking its fist at Ottawa and creating more constitutional drama and awarding more sweeping power to itself than actually addressing the concrete issues in front of us here in Alberta, doing their actual job as a government, addressing the crisis in our health care system, a crisis that they made worse at every single turn.

I can tell you that when I talk to front-line health care workers, some just yesterday, they don't trust this government. They do not take the words that are in that throne speech of thanks and support very seriously because they have seen the actions of this government. They have heard the words of this Premier, and they see what her priorities are, which is about the consolidation of power, her own form of political fearmongering, and not truly speaking to the actual roots of the issues that Albertans care about.

I'll watch this affordability act very closely because, again, Madam Speaker, so many of this government's efforts do not help my constituents. They're not eligible for the energy rebates. They're seniors or students who do not drive, so the gas tax does nothing for them.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to the throne speech reply? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments in regard to the Speech from the Throne that we heard yesterday here in the Chamber, from the Lieutenant Governor.

You know, Madam Speaker, I've heard a lot of speeches from the throne in my time in the Legislature, and I must say that this one really misses the mark from where people are at in this province, the needs that they have at this point in time, and for a government to produce a speech like this, so out of step with what's actually going on on the ground: I find it to be quite astounding.

Let's just remember as well – I've heard a number of speakers from the UCP side talking about the words of the Lieutenant Governor in their speeches yesterday. These are the words of the government that she's reading, the words of the UCP, in her throne speech, just to clarify. To suggest that they can somehow disassociate themselves with a preoccupation with their sovereignty act, with going to war with Ottawa, to tilting at the windmills that they always seem to be obsessing about – right? – those are their ideas from this UCP caucus in this Chamber. That's not the Lieutenant Governor by any means, Mr. Speaker, so just as a word of clarification on that.

What I see, again, is a real disconnection between what people are concerned about across this province and then what this document espouses here for the future, for the next few months for the province of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, we're in the worst affordability crisis in more than 40 years here in the province of Alberta. I know that there are many circumstances that have contributed to this affordability crisis, some issues that are outside of our borders, that are global issues as well, but it seems as though this UCP government has gone out of their way to only make those affordability issues worse.

We see in the midst of the very highest grocery prices moving through this province right now – you see record increases for groceries, for example. You see this government (a) not doing anything about that but (b) instead pivoting on to talking about their sovereignty act and spending most of the speech on their sovereignty act, in fact. Where are the issues that really concern people?

In my own constituency in Edmonton-North West people are suffering economically as a result of many larger issues and many specific issues that actually originate from this Chamber, Mr. Speaker. They're not something you can blame on a war with Russia. It's not something you can blame on supply chain issues. They are specific policies that this UCP government has instituted over the last three and a half years that are hurting people in Edmonton-North West, and they're hurting people right across this province as well. That's what I was hoping this Speech from the Throne would address: these affordability issues and systemic issues that are causing people to get left behind here in the province.

I don't cheer for failure for this government or any other government because at the foundational level, Mr. Speaker, we are all here to serve the people of Alberta in the best way possible. When I anticipate a Speech from the Throne at a juncture when there are so many burgeoning crises around, then suddenly I'm looking for something that we can find hope in, something that can perhaps give us some vision for the future. Unfortunately, I just don't see it in this Speech from the Throne. In Edmonton-North West people are noticing that, and certainly I travel around a lot to other constituencies around the province. I didn't hear anybody talk about the sovereignty act when I banged on their door.

I was in Edmonton-North West a lot, but I was in places in Calgary, in Leduc, in Sherwood Park, all across the province. No one said: "Yeah; you've got to do something about this sovereignty thing. That's what we need to do," right? No. They talked about their car insurance being out of control, so they had to park the car. They talked about their grocery prices. They talked about the high cost of tuition and problems associated with K to 12 education. They talked about having a lack of security in knowing that the hospital emergency ward will be there when they need it for themselves and their families within a public health system. Those are the things that people talk about every single day, not the sovereignty act, not about tilting at windmills with Ottawa and so forth, right? They need to make sure that they are secure and safe in the place that they live and they're safe and secure for their families and for the next generation, too.

A lot of governance has a lot to do, Mr. Speaker, with trust. You see this UCP government scrambling. They've changed another Premier. I've seen this so many times; it's a pattern that's played out over the last 10 years or more. They dig themselves into a corner and try to change the leadership, they clean house and get a new Premier in place, and then they claim everything is better. Well, it's not. It's not better at all. A lot of people are literally falling behind. Wages are falling behind at the highest rate in the country here in the province of Alberta. Wait times for surgeries are falling behind as well. It compromises the safety and the security of everybody for these things to happen.

We know in smaller centres, as well, these problems get even worse. You have places where hospitals and emergency care centres, response centres, are literally closing. Their doors are closed. I've talked to people at the Rural Municipalities association, for example. They talked about how it would feel if you went to your hospital – in Boyle, let's say, for example – and the door is locked because there's inadequate staffing. The staffing is not there. The doctors aren't there. The nurses are not there. This is a long problem that this UCP government started when they went to war with health care workers here in the province of Alberta.

You can't just simply fix that with a new Premier and six months left in their term – right? – and say: "Oh, yeah. Well, we've turned a corner on that. You know, we're really sorry." It takes years to build capacity for our health care system to have trained the nurses, doctors, and support staff to fill those positions, to make sure that they have a long-term, stable, secure relationship with the government so that people can go into those professions and not say: "I'm not going to be a nurse; look, they treat them like dirt in Alberta. Why should I take four years of training and take $50,000 worth of student loans when the job has been made insecure by this UCP government? Maybe that's not the way to go." That's the situation that we're facing, Mr. Speaker, right now. It's going to take an effort, and it's going to take an investment in order to turn things around.

We're in the opposition now. Hopefully, we won't be for long, but while we are, we can still bring forward motions and initiatives here during this session to make life better for Alberta people. We will introduce a health bill here in the next few days where we would expect and demand support from all MLAs to build a strong public health system that will be there when people need it for themselves and their families. Make a significant investment not just in trailers in the parking lot for people to wait for emergency but an investment to train nurses, to train LPNs, to make sure that we have nurse practitioners, doctors, regular RNs going through the system not just to deal with the next six months but to deal with the next 50 years with a generation of renewed investment in public health care. That's what we need, and that's where we can start today.

We will bring forward a bill to freeze car insurance. Car insurance has been so out of control here in the last year, two years since this government gave such a wonderful deal to the insurance companies and allowed them to increase their car insurance so much that many people have to park their car. We will introduce a bill here, which I expect everyone will consider and support, that would freeze and make car insurance affordable again here in the province of Alberta.

We'll bring forward a motion on the investigation on grocery prices, that we can use the power of this legislative body to investigate and start to turn around this dreadful profiteering that we see in our retail food industry. We know it's happening; we can investigate, and we can send a strong message to turn that around.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, it's all about trust. You see some affordability issues being addressed in this throne speech. They all have a due date around election time. That's the kind of affordability that this government suddenly steps up and takes notice of. Yeah, they're behind in the polls. Let's give some people some money up till the next election. That's not an affordability strategy; that's a sign of desperation by a government. It's an election strategy. People aren't stupid; they can read it right away. They're saying, "They're going to try to bribe us with our own money," and I'll say, "Well, I don't know," and then, boom, sure enough, they did exactly that.

You need to make sure that you find the roots in places like with car insurance, with tuition, with groceries; you need to find the root and not just give people a hundred dollars for a couple of months, until the next election, but you need to find a way to make life affordable for Albertans on an ongoing basis.

I stand here as the MLA for Edmonton-North West but also as a representative who takes seriously the responsibility for all Albertans in this province of Alberta. You know that the Official Opposition is here to do so. We're here to help and certainly to be constructively critical in all ways possible. That's my take on the Speech from the Throne.

I would move, Mr. Speaker, to adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a whole bunch of motions here we're going to move, so I'll get a glass of water here. We're going to get through these. Okay.

Constituency Week

5. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that Standing Order 3(6), which provides for one constituency week for every three sitting weeks, not apply to the 2022 fall sitting.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. the Government House Leader has moved Government Motion 5. This is a debatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(j). Are there any members wishing to join in the debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the hon. the Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Schow: Waive.

[Government Motion 5 carried]

Committee Referral for Conflicts of Interest Act

7. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that
- the Conflicts of Interest Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and the committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review pursuant to section 48 of that act;
  - the committee may, without leave of the Assembly, sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued; and
  - in accordance with section 48 of the Conflicts of Interest Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within one year after beginning its review and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has moved Government Motion 7. This is a debatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(j). Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate.

Mr. Schow: Waive.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a long one.

Committee Membership Appointments

8. Mr. Schow moved:

The Speaker: Hon. members, this is a debatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(h). Are there any members wishing to join in the debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Schow: Waive.

[Government Motion 8 carried]

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I also understand that this is a significant government motion to be moved. If he is agreeable, he's welcome to, in his opening remarks, move the motion as proposed on the Order Paper, and we will accept that as part of the debate, and then you can proceed with some comments regarding that. The hon. the Government House Leader.

Amendments to Standing Orders

- C. And be it further resolved that the amendments in this motion come into force on passage.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone in this Chamber knows I am very agreeable.

I do rise to move Government Motion 9 on the Order Paper. I think, Mr. Speaker, that you are okay if I do not read that out in full, as you’ve mentioned. The changes proposed in Government Motion 9 will return the process of private members’ bills to that which existed prior to May 2019. It will also return the practice of members introducing their guests but with some time parameters. We’re also proposing to remove the ban on desk thumping.

[interjections] Feel free. I guess we have to approve the motion first. Members’ statements will go to seven per sitting day. The mandates of the legislative policy committees are being changed to reflect the new government ministries, and sadly a couple of changes were needed as a result of the passing of Queen Elizabeth II. Finally, recommendations were presented to us to improve the process for private bills, and we have presented those as part of this motion.

In closing, I do want to say that the government has worked collaboratively with the Official Opposition House Leader on these proposed changes. I do want to thank her and all the members of her caucus for their participation. I’m encouraged by the amount of collaboration we’ve had going forward thus far.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. the Government House Leader has moved Government Motion 9 as per the Order Paper. This is a debatable motion. Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate?

If not, I am prepared to call on the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

5:40

Mr. Schow: Waive.

[Government Motion 9 carried]

The Speaker: Hear, hear.

The hon. the Government House Leader appears to be rising.

Mr. Schow: Man, that felt good. Mr. Speaker, thank you, and I thank all members of the Chamber this evening for your participation and bearing with me through those motions. At this time I do move that the Assembly be adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:41 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 30, 2022

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening, hon. members. Please be seated.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Toor moved, seconded by Ms Lovely, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To Her Honour the Honourable Salma Lakhani, AOE, BSc, LL.D, the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Eggen]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Member Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, as I listened to this government's Speech from the Throne, my heart sank. This is a government that doesn't understand Albertans' priorities, and it is refusing to listen to the people of this province who just don't see themselves in this government's agenda. The throne speech made it clear that this government is focused above all on the job-killing sovereignty act. They're not going to address the crisis in children's health care. They're going to generate a whole new constitutional crisis. They're not going to support Albertans facing an affordability crisis. They're going to create a made-in-the-Premier's-office economic crisis. The truth is that when this government finally introduced the full text of the job-killing sovereignty act on Tuesday, yesterday, part of me was glad because it gave Albertans the full picture of what is at stake, not just our economy but our democracy itself.

Madam Speaker, we already knew that the sovereignty act would be catastrophic for Alberta before it was introduced. We knew that because the very same UCP cabinet members who lined up to vote for it on Tuesday have spent months telling us how bad it is. The Finance minister has said that the so-called sovereignty act would create "job-killing economic chaos." The Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development said that the sovereignty act is nothing more than, quote, virtue signalling and a fiscal fairy tale that doesn't make any sense and won't work. The Minister of Environment and Protected Areas said that the sovereignty act "would create instability and chaos." The Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism said that the sovereignty act is intended to "provoke a constitutional crisis as a path to separation (as the authors of the Act seem to want)." The Minister of Municipal Affairs called it the Anarchy Act, saying that it's, quote, a false dream that will turn into a nightmare. It's not often that I agree with the UCP cabinet ministers, but I endorse every single one of those quotations.

But you know what's even more frightening? Those ministers were speaking before they knew exactly how bad the job-killing sovereignty act is. They didn't know it would include an antidemocratic, Henry VIII clause allowing the Premier and cabinet to bypass the legislative processes and unilaterally amend provincial laws. They didn't know that it would severely limit the rights of Alberta citizens to challenge the act's extraordinary powers in court. The fact is that the job-killing sovereignty act seeks to upend Canada's constitutional order. It undermines the rule of law, it undermines our democracy, and it's going to be a disaster for our economy.

Madam Speaker, I am the proud MLA for Calgary-Buffalo, a place filled with generous, open-minded people who want what's best for our province. Calgary is the engine of Alberta's economy, but this legislation is going to be a disaster for my city and for the entire province. It will interfere with our ability to attract workers because no one wants to come to a province where the Premier is trying to set herself up with virtually dictatorial powers. It will undermine the ability of our energy sector to work collaboratively with the federal government through initiatives such as the Pathways Alliance, which is currently seeking federal support for a proposed multibillion-dollar carbon capture and storage project. It will undermine new investment by creating uncertainty, and it will leave many Calgary businesses looking to set up in more stable jurisdictions, whether they are local small businesses or large companies with head offices in Calgary. As the Calgary Chamber of Commerce CEO, Deborah Yedlin, said, quote: there is no shred of evidence that this act will lead to economic growth. End quote.

Madam Speaker, we don't have to shoot ourselves in the foot with this disastrous bill. There is a better way. The Alberta NDP opposition's alternative throne speech sets out a vision of a better future for Alberta. With the help of ATB former chief economist, senior economist Todd Hirsch we will build a resilient economy with good jobs that Albertans can rely on for generations. We will release a new investment framework which will outline how we can incentivize private-sector investment, pursue innovation, and grow Alberta companies by fostering economic certainty with a competitive regulatory environment. We will bring real, sustained action to help families struggling to pay their bills, and we will bring forward legislation that ensures public health care is protected and strengthened and that establishes health care service standards.

These are the things we should be focused on. Instead, we are here, waiting to see exactly how many UCP MLAs are going to vote to undermine our democracy, our economy, and our entire province.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others wishing to join in on the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to the Speech from the Throne. I think this Speech from the Throne is in some ways emblematic of this government because it is nothing but a giant bait and switch. It's a speech that went on to talk about the things that are important to Albertans, to talk about health care, affordability, jobs, but then the very next thing this government did was turn around and introduce an act that will worsen the affordability crisis and destroy investment and jobs in this province.

You know, the Speech from the Throne was filled with some pretty words, words that even acknowledged that the Constitution covers the division of power, not an act passed by this government, but in the very next breath turns around and claims that they can create a constitutional shield. It's a Speech from the Throne, I think, that was intended to placate Albertans, and, Madam Speaker, I think that that is the worst thing this government could be doing. Albertans need real help. They need a government that is focused on solving the problem, not pretending to solve the problem or pretending that there is no problem.

This is a government that, you know, claims to care about health care but picked fights with doctors, picked fights with nurses, drove the health care system to the brink of collapse repeatedly. We have a Premier who has mused about bringing in health care spending accounts that maybe pay for other things but maybe pay for your doctor. She's been back and forth and all over the map, won't give a clear message, and it's incredibly concerning because Albertans deserve to know that those services will be there for them.

I am a parent of a child, Madam Speaker, as I know you are a parent as well. I speak to other parents, and people are worried. They are worried that their children will get sick and that they will spend hours waiting outside a hospital to get triaged because of the actions of this government. Rather than being laser focused on solving that problem, on fixing the crisis in hospitals, on giving the people of this province confidence that if their children get sick, the health care system will be there for them, that they'll be able to go to the emergency room or call an ambulance or see their family doctor, this government is focused on bringing in an act that purports to do something which it cannot do, that is clearly unconstitutional, and that will create mass uncertainty. I think that that is an enormous problem.

This is, you know, a government that came forward and talked about affordability, that pretends to be doing something about the crisis, but their measures are entirely short-term and temporary fixes. We see no attempt to solve the larger problem, which is that inflation is high and wages aren't keeping pace. We see no attempt to reverse their damaging policies. Insurance skyrocketed under this government. Electricity rates skyrocketed under this government. They may have finally chosen to reverse their tax grab, but they haven't gone back in time and fixed the problem in retrospective years for Albertans. They certainly haven't done anything about the policies of theirs which have forced property taxes up throughout the province: the cutting of MSI, the downloading of policing costs onto municipalities. These things raised people's property taxes in some rural areas with their policing thing up to $400 a household. That's a lot of money, Madam Speaker. This is a government that is all about lip service and not at all about solutions.

Albertans are looking to see their future here. They want their children to look to this province and see a future with good-paying, sustainable jobs, jobs on which they can afford to have a mortgage and pay their bills and have a reasonable lifestyle, just like we all have had in this province. Instead of doing something to build that economy in the future, to build those sustainable jobs, to ensure that we are investing in the right way, this is a government that is bringing in an act which began driving away investment before it was even tabled.

The problem is the uncertainty. The problem is that investors want to look to this province and be able to know what the laws are. That's not, I think, a huge request. We see this the world over. When there is uncertainty about what the laws in a jurisdiction are, investment flees, and that is exactly what is happening and what will continue to happen here in Alberta because this government has introduced an act that will allow them to overwrite laws, laws of this Legislature, in cabinet.

That's a huge problem. It means laws could change on a moment's notice. It means investors look to this jurisdiction and say: we can't predict what the outcome of our investment will be. That is a huge problem going forward into the future. If there is one thing that industry has been asking for consistently, it is certainty. They want to know what the rules will be so they can make investment decisions on that basis. That is not an unreasonable request. It kind of feels like in an advanced democracy the very least we can do for investors is to provide them with certainty, but this government has brought in an act that will create mass uncertainty.

It isn't just me saying that. UCP cabinet ministers, UCP members have said that about this act, have promised Albertans that they would stand up against it. Now they're turning around and trying to mislead Albertans about what the act does, and I think that that is incredibly problematic. They're trying to say: oh, I had concerns, but those concerns have been placated. Well, honestly, Madam Speaker, this act is worse than I expected it to be – and I expected it to be bad – because in addition to being an attack on the Constitution, it is also fundamentally undemocratic. It uses the same language that caused Albertans so much concern when this government passed it in Bill 10 and apparently has learned zero lessons from that.

I would say, Madam Speaker, that at the end of the day my concern with this throne speech is that it does not address the pressing issues which presently face Albertans, and they are incredibly pressing issues. We have e-mails into my office all the time of people who can't find doctors, who can't get an ambulance, who are terrified that their children will get sick and that they will be waiting outside the children's hospital. We have messages every day of people who can't keep up with the cost of living, much of which was created by decisions this government made to raise taxes, to raise insurance rates, to allow electricity rates to skyrocket, to force up tuition and interest on student loans and all sorts of costs at a time when Albertans can least afford them. Add to that the fact that wages are nowhere near keeping pace, and people are concerned about their jobs and about having jobs that can cover their mortgage. This government has chosen not to do anything about that either, to make the situation worse by creating uncertainty that will drive away investment and drive out jobs.

I would say I am incredibly concerned, Madam Speaker, about this Speech from the Throne. I would say it is an attempt to pay, at best, lip service to the real and pressing and urgent concerns of the people in this province, people that every single one of us in this room was sent here to serve. I would urge the members opposite to consider that solemn duty that has been placed in us and take some real action on the real problems that face their constituents.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Very pleased this evening to rise and speak to the throne speech and join the debate that has been started by members on my side of the House.

I'll start by talking about some of the reactions to the lead-up to the throne speech that I've heard in my constituency. They are not my adjectives, Madam Speaker; they are those words used by constituents in my riding as I was door-knocking in places that normally I wouldn't expect to have heard these adjectives, words like: nuts, crackers, whacko, dangerous. These words, along with words like "hijacked," are words used by constituents who are in their 80s and 90s, particularly women, to describe what they were hearing coming in the form of policy from the UCP government leading up to the throne speech, where we find the standing-up-to-Ottawa clause is really the skeleton upon which the throne speech is hung.

What they're asking and wondering aloud, long-term former Conservative supporters who will never vote Conservative again according to them, those women who were telling me these adjectives to describe what they felt the UCP policy was meaning to them, these seniors in particular are wondering: why? What is it all about? Why in the world do the Conservative members feel the need to come up with a policy right now in the midst of the fear that they have for their own livelihoods – why bring on this uncertainty in the attack against Ottawa at this point in time when they're worried about making ends meet? They're worried about being able to afford a bus pass or maybe having to go to the food bank for the first time in their life.

I've never, Madam Speaker, had an 80- or 90-year-old woman, former Conservative voter, declare to me that they were never going to vote Conservative again and use words like "nuts" and "whacko" and "crackers," to quote directly from them, talking about their Conservative government that they feel has been hijacked. Indeed, the tail has been wagging the dog for a while in the party that's currently making government policy right now. It seems to be the fact that the tail is actually at the front bench, and the rump of the party is making those decisions. Indeed, there seems to be some truth to the word "hijacked," in the words of the constituents I'm talking to, in terms of who is actually in control of policy-making in the party, and it's Albertans who will suffer as a result of this hijacking.

The uncertainty that the standing-up-to-Ottawa portion of the job-killing sovereignty act inclusion in the Speech from the Throne is already something that's been remarked about by organizations as important as the Calgary Chamber of commerce, who have come out saying that it's going to be a detriment to our economy.

The focus really isn't something that should be on something like the sovereignty act right now; the focus should be on looking after those seniors who are concerned about their livelihood, making sure students feel that they can have a job to go to after they graduate if they decide to go to university here in the province at all, the people who were on AISH, who now are asked to give thanks to the government for giving back what they took from them before and, in fact, leaving them $3,000 less well off than they otherwise would have been under an NDP policy. It's like drilling a hole in a boat and then asking the passengers to thank you for throwing them a life preserver. That's the analogy that comes to mind when I think of what the government has done with respect to benefits like AISH. The cruelty of it behooves me. Why indeed would the Premier decide it was a good thing to do to seek the thanks and generous goodwill of the people who are now getting AISH benefits reindexed when, in fact, they're $3,000 less well off than they otherwise would have been?

I can think of some choice words that those constituents might use at the doorsteps regarding the government policy and the sovereignty act that's going to kill jobs because of the uncertainty it creates in this province, but "Why now; what for?" is the big question I'm hearing at the doors. Standing up to Ottawa? Sure. Protection of your interests? Sure. But focus on what's going on in the province right now, whether it's the small businesses that are in my constituency hoping that this Christmas shopping season just might allow them to survive into the next year, hoping that individuals might have enough money, perhaps, to spend in their stores to allow them to hire that one extra student to work part-time, hoping that the focus of the government is going to be on making sure that the support payments that people have relied upon are not going to be yanked and then handed back on an elastic-band method of looking after people in this province.

The uncertainty that the sovereignty act, that is included in the Speech from the Throne, is creating is being heralded as the exact wrong thing for the province to be considering right now, when, in fact, we're coming out of a pandemic, Madam Speaker. We're, hopefully, going to be seeing an incidence of smaller numbers filling our emergency wards and children's emergency wards, but that's not happening right now. We have people who can't get medication for their children, children whose surgeries are being postponed. These are life-threatening issues, and what we're having the government focused on is creating a fight with Ottawa. That is something that's leaving people scratching their heads, not only the seniors in my riding but students and business owners as well, thinking: what in the world is the priority of this government doing, looking at something like picking a constitutional fight with Ottawa when, in fact, we've got some serious business at home to look after? Jobs, economy, health care, affordability: these things should be the focus of the government.

Yet the government is telling us, with respect to this sovereignty act, that indeed it doesn't do what we say it does. In fact, what it does: it gives them powers to change legislation without going back to the House. I've heard even the Premier, Madam Speaker, say that, no, that's not what it does. Well, we can read. Albertans are being taken for fools, because they can read as well, and that's exactly what this act allows the government to do. In fact, it's created quite a stir across the country because people are aghast that any government would have the audacity to try to grant these powers unto themselves, to usurp the legislative authority, to go around the course. That is alarming.

On many fronts this throne speech is an affront to Albertans, and I'm hearing that loud and clear at the doors. Madam Speaker, they're telling me that they want the election to happen sooner rather than later. They're ready. We're ready.

Let's adjourn debate, please.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

[Adjourned debate: Mr. Williams]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today and to take a few minutes to address the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, Bill 1. I think it's appropriate that we bring this into this Legislature to have this discussion.

Canada is a federal nation where the power to govern is divided between the federal government and the provincial governments across this nation. We are the second-largest nation in the world by geography, and we are a diverse people with unique languages and cultures. It is not possible to provide the government that this great nation needs and deserves by centralizing the power of government in one national body. Our founding fathers of Confederation understood this, so they crafted a constitution that recognizes this fact.

A strong federal system recognizes that national decisions need to be made by a national government and that the more local decisions must reflect the local realities and must be represented by the provincial levels of government. This federal relationship is not one of a parent-child relationship. Our federal system does not build in a power imbalance between a national government and the 10 provinces of this nation. The national government and the provinces are partners, having been given different responsibilities and different capacities to make law in the governing of our great nation.

These powers are outlined in the Canadian Constitution, primarily in sections 91 and 92, and it is the reason that we can clearly defend the statement that the powers set out in section 92 to the provinces of Canada are their sovereign powers or their rights. These rights are not, in most cases, constrained by the federal government or overseen by the federal government. They are not given to the provinces by the federal government, so they are the provinces' sovereign rights. For instance, the federal government oversees the funding and the deployment of the Canadian Armed Forces and the protection of our national sovereignty. Provinces have been derogated the power to oversee areas like education and health care. As of the passage of the Statute of Westminster in 1931, Alberta has the right to ownership and to oversee the harvesting and the deployment of our natural resources.

Albertans have a long and, at times, acrimonious relationship with the federal government when the federal government attempts to interfere in our provincial rights, that are clearly outlined and defined in the Canadian Constitution. The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act has been drafted and, should it be passed, will, firstly, protect Albertans from federal legislation or policies that are unconstitutional or harmful to our province, to our people, or to our economic prosperity. It will enforce the Canadian Constitution's division of powers in recognition of both the federal and the provincial governments' respective and exclusive and sovereign areas of constitutional jurisdiction. In other words, unlike what some people will argue, this legislation actually upholds the democratic institution of federalism in this nation.

This will provide authority to the cabinet, when authorized by this Legislative Assembly, under the act to direct provincial entities to not enforce specific federal laws or policies with regard to provincial resources. It could create opportunities for building national awareness of federal intrusion into provincial areas that are the exclusive jurisdiction of this province, and it would shift the burden to the federal government to legally challenge Alberta's refusal to enforce unconstitutional or harmful federal laws or policies instead of Alberta having to initiate legal challenges and waiting years for a decision while those same federal laws or policies harm Albertans day in and day out.

Madam Speaker, in the short time that this bill has been before the House, His Majesty's Official Opposition has exaggerated and mischaracterized this bill. It is therefore time to set aside the spurious objections of the NDP and time to address how the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, should it be passed through this Legislature, will actually function and work.

A member of the Executive Council – that is, any minister, including the Premier – would introduce a motion in the Legislative Assembly for a proposed use of the act. This motion would identify a federal initiative, like a policy or a piece of legislation, as being, in the opinion of the consensus of the Legislative Assembly, unconstitutional, contrary to the Charter, or otherwise harmful to Albertans along with the nature of that harm.

In section 2 of the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act the bill clearly states:

Nothing in this Act is to be construed as

- (a) authorizing any order that would be contrary to the Constitution of Canada.

Full stop. I hope the opposition is listening.

- (b) authorizing any directive to a person, other than a provincial entity, that would compel the person to act contrary to or otherwise in violation of any federal law.

This act is saying that no one can be forced to break the law.

- (c) abrogating or derogating from any existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada that are recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution Act.

There goes away another one of those arguments that we're taking away Canada's First Nations' rights. Hmm. Maybe they ought to read the act.

Clearly, many of the concerns of the opposition should be put to rest with this section of the bill. No action by the government of Alberta when enacting the provisions of this bill will "be contrary to the Constitution of Canada." This bill will not let the Alberta government pass legislation or enact regulations that will, unlike the actions of the federal government, intervene in an unconstitutional fashion in the rights of another level of government. This bill will not direct any person or provincial entity or business to be in violation of any federal law, and this bill recognizes and affirms Aboriginal treaty rights under section 35 of the Constitution Act. Many of the Official Opposition's concerns are either the result of not reading the bill set before this House, or they are more interested in opposing for the sake of opposing rather than doing the actual job of being in opposition.

One of the mischaracterizations of the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act is that it is undemocratic. The Saskatchewan government has also passed a bill to address their concerns regarding the federal overreach into provincial jurisdiction called the Saskatchewan First Act, with the support, by the way, of the Saskatchewan NDP. Now, this act from the province of my birth is meant to confirm its exclusive provincial authority over its natural resources. Yet there is one key difference between the two acts. Saskatchewan's act sets up a tribunal, independent from the government, to determine if a federal measure is harmful or unconstitutional, and that tribunal makes recommendations to cabinet. Well, Alberta gives that authority to the people that should actually have it, the elected Members of the Legislative Assembly, to determine if a federal measure is harmful or unconstitutional. [interjection] Sir.

Mr. McIver: I was just listening intently to the speaker, and I was just curious if you had an opinion on why the Saskatchewan NDP is so much smarter than the Alberta NDP.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, sir. I would harbour that perhaps, like many of the farmers in Saskatchewan and across this province of Alberta, they tend to be very practical people, unlike perhaps some of the NDP that inhabit Alberta, and we see that this group of people look out for the interests of the people of Saskatchewan, just as the United Conservative Party is trying to look out for the people of Alberta.

The Alberta act gives the authority to decide if something is constitutional or unconstitutional to the Members of the Legislative Assembly, and that just makes sense. We're the ones that have been elected. We're the ones that should be looking at it. We're the ones that should be deciding on the interests and on behalf of the people of Alberta whether or not this should move forward, and we should look at whether an act or a bill that's been passed through the federal Parliament is actually unconstitutional.

In order to enhance the democratic transparency of this process, the government has committed to allowing free votes of all members in the consideration of the motion brought before the Chamber. Free debate, dialogue, and consideration of constituents' concerns will be the primary consideration, not party solidarity, not party discipline, but a free vote by the members of the Legislature.

If, in the collective wisdom of the Legislature, they pass a motion that

- (a) states that the resolution is made in accordance with this Act,
- (b) states that, in the opinion of the Legislative Assembly, a federal initiative
  - (i) is unconstitutional on the basis that it
    - (A) intrudes into an area of provincial legislative jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada, or
    - (B) violates the rights and freedoms of one or more Albertans under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms,
  - or
  - (ii) causes or is anticipated to cause harm to Albertans . . .
- (d) identifies a measure or measures that the Lieutenant Governor in Council should consider taking in respect of the federal initiative . . .

So three things.

Regardless of the fearmongering surrounding this bill, it clearly states in this bill that it must have the democratic support of the Legislature. Our elected representatives must agree that the federal initiative is either unconstitutional or likely to create great harm to Albertans' rights and, finally and clearly, identify what should be done to address this federal overreach, all duly passed by this Legislature and constituting the democratic will of the people of Alberta through their elected representatives.

Mature democracies have a system of checks and balances, and the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act ensures that this happens by building in a judicial review within 30 days after the date of the decision or act. While some will suggest that 30 days is not long enough, I would argue that it is long enough and quite possible for a judicial challenge to move forward within this period of time.

Madam Speaker, to this point I've only covered what a federal system of government is and what the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act will actually do and how it will actually function. There are so many historical examples that could be used to justify the passage of this act, but today I'm only going to focus in on one example of why this act is so critical if Albertans and Canadians are going to continue to live within a federal system of government.

In its division of powers Canada's Constitution does not assign the environment to either the federal Parliament or to the provincial Legislatures. The Parliament can pass environmental law in an area of federal jurisdiction like fisheries and the provinces within their constitutional jurisdictions.

In June 2019 the federal government enacted Bill C-69, the Impact Assessment Act, or what became known in Alberta as the no-more-pipelines act. This act was passed through the House of Commons by the federal Liberal Party with the support of the federal NDP. This act established various types of federal assessments for oil and gas projects like pipelines. Alberta has argued that the Impact Assessment Act provided an effective federal veto over the development of Alberta owned and constitutionally recognized resources.

The actions of the federal government in passing this legislation have destabilized the economy of Alberta, it scared billions of dollars of capital out of the province, and it's resulted in hundreds if not thousands of businesses and individuals going bankrupt and becoming unemployed.

While the NDP were unwilling to confront this directly, the United Conservative Party government was willing to take this to the Alberta Court of Appeal and to get a ruling as to whether this federal intrusion into Alberta's constitutional right to develop its resources was actually constitutional. While the court was listening to the arguments and considering its ruling, Albertans suffered. While the court took many months, finally the Alberta Court of Appeal ruled on May 10, 2022.

What did the Court of Appeal decide? One, they found the IAA to be, in their words, a "breathtaking pre-emption of provincial legislative authority." [Mr. Smith's speaking time expired] I'm going to have to leave it there.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The sovereignty act. There is no shred of evidence that this act will lead to economic growth: that's not me; it's Deborah Yedlin, the CEO of the Calgary Chamber of commerce. She talked about how the details of this act have gone further than business even expected, so essentially the act is worse than people feared it would be.

A ticking time bomb for the UCP's future: that's the Minister of Finance. It will create a constitutional and economic crisis that will hurt Alberta: that is the former Minister of Transportation and current minister of . . .

An Hon. Member: It doesn't matter.

Ms Ganley: It doesn't matter. Okay.

The minister of economic development: it's counterproductive and harmful.

I could go on. The CEO of the Calgary Chamber of commerce referred to it as an act that would create transactional friction and cause companies to rethink their decisions to come to Alberta. She went on to say that for people wanting to come here and build a life in this province, to take advantage of the opportunities that we have, the views that are being presented right now are not necessarily supporting the attraction of talent that we need.

The current minister of environment, former Minister of Energy, said, "I can tell you for certain, that the Sovereignty Act is not the solution . . . The Sovereignty Act [will] create instability and chaos."

This act is incredibly damaging. Madam Speaker, what investment needs is to know what the rules are. People who are making investment decisions, particularly large investment decisions, particularly in projects like carbon capture and storage, which are essential to the economic future of our province, look at those investment decisions very seriously. They look to the jurisdiction they are about to invest in, and do you know what one of the first things they look at is? Whether or not the rules will continue to be the rules into the future, whether or not they can have certainty that the rules under which they make their investment decisions will continue to be the rules that govern that decision while the investment is recouped and begins producing revenues.

That is absolutely essential. We saw it when Quebec threatened to leave the country. We have seen it in other nations that have had legal and political uncertainty. Investment flees. It is a consistent and well-documented . . . [interjection] Oh, I will cede the floor.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to my colleague. We're using some very strong language right now about the chilling effect on investment of a bill that was introduced yesterday, and I know that this is because that chilling effect on investment has been in place and working for many, many months as this bill was debated throughout the UCP leadership race. That chilling effect, what we're hearing from chambers of commerce, from the energy industry, from business and investors, was one of the key reasons why the Official Opposition caucus decided to not just oppose Bill 1 at first reading but cause a standing division, to make clear our objection to this piece of legislation, which is already damaging the Alberta economy. I wondered if my hon. colleague would be able to speak a little bit to what we are hearing from business not just since the bill has been introduced but as it has already been in place for the last several months.

Ms Ganley: Yes, and thank you very much to my hon. colleague for the question. The bill has started having an effect already. What we are hearing from people in the business sector, from people in the oil and gas sector is that the impact on investment was being felt before the bill was even introduced. Now, that may seem odd, but again the problem, Madam Speaker, is the destabilizing effect, and it has that destabilizing effect regardless of what the actual impacts are. Bringing forward a bill on behalf of the government that is essentially intended to allow the government to overwrite different jurisdictions and different legislation is incredibly problematic. It gives people uncertainty as to what the rules are.

The truth is that with respect to this bill, with respect to the sovereignty act, it was never, under any circumstances, able to do what the government claimed it would do. The division of powers is set out in the Constitution. They can pass whatever act they want on the government side, and it won't change that fact. The division of powers is set out in the Constitution. Acts that federal and provincial governments undertake are illegal or they are not.

What the sovereignty act does do is create mass uncertainty. It means that people invest, and then someone can challenge the law or the government can attempt to overwrite the law and they have to sue, and they are tied up in court for years. I don't know, Madam Speaker, if you've ever been involved in a legal action, especially large commercial actions, but they can take years to make their way through the court system. In the interim that money that has been invested is not generating a return. So why would anyone ever choose to invest their money where it could be tied up in years of legal action, having no returns, while we try to sort out whether or not the government can overwrite the Constitution – they can't; that will be the answer – but that doesn't mean that it won't take an incredibly long time for this to go through the system.

That's where I'd like to begin. I'd like to also turn to the act, because, fortunately, it's incredibly short, so I've had the opportunity to read it since it was introduced, multiple times. [interjection] It's true.

The substance of the act is in section 4. What it allows the government to do is that – and these are the operative words – the Lieutenant Governor in Council, cabinet, can suspend or modify the application or operation of all or part of an enactment . . . or specify or set out provisions that apply in addition to, or instead of, any provision of an enactment.

An enactment is legislation. That means that Executive Council, i.e. cabinet, is essentially deleting and rewriting legislation – that is pretty fundamentally antidemocratic – legislation which my constituents, incidentally, sent me here to review. I think that that is incredibly concerning.

Member Ceci: Can I cut in?

Ms Ganley: Yeah. Absolutely.

Member Ceci: Thank you, Colleague. It's part 4 that I've heard described as a Henry VIII clause. I wonder if you could talk about the antidemocratic or dictatorial process that then got codified as a Henry VIII clause. That would be helpful.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much to my hon. colleague for that question. That's a delightful, legal nerd question, so I'm happy to answer it. A Henry VIII clause is titled after Henry VIII because he essentially attempted to circumvent the Parliament so as to allow himself to legislate without the Parliament or the legislative branch. And that's exactly what this does. These things are referred to as Henry VIII clauses when they make an attempt to work around the legislative branch, because in our system of democracy the Legislature serves a certain function. Now, it happens to be the case that when you have a majority government, they can normally get their legislation passed.

But I think the opposition still serves an incredibly important democratic function, regardless of who sits in opposition, because they do several things. They can propose amendments – maybe those amendments get voted down, but in this place, this room, everything we do and say is on the record. What that means is that the citizens of this province, who are governed by those laws, can listen to what we say. They can read what we say. The media can come into this place. They can hear what we say, and they can report on it. That means that the public knows what's going on in here.

The public does not know what's going on in cabinet. Those discussions occur behind closed doors. Even government private members aren't necessarily privy to the discussions that are occurring in that room, to the decisions that are being made in that room, so circumventing the Legislature is incredibly problematic for democracy because it means that laws are becoming laws before the public has had a chance to see them.

The thing about the legislative branch is that it takes a while to legislate. It takes a while for acts to pass through this House. The importance of that isn't what we all in here get to say about the acts; it's that that information gets to the public. People in the public who understand the area of law, who will be governed by these laws have the opportunity to stand up and object and say: you know, that's not going to work for the following reason. They have the opportunity to bring their values and their expertise to bear and to essentially shine sunlight on what's going on, and then other people can object. I mean, that's how democracy is supposed to work at its core, so that's incredibly problematic.

Now, as the member stated, in order for cabinet, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, to have this power, we have to pass a motion in this House. I think the important distinction here is that the motion doesn't say what the law that cabinet ultimately writes is going to do. It's just a motion that says, essentially: we think what the federal government did was bad. That's what the substance of the motion is. I mean, that doesn't tell the public what the law is going to say. That doesn't serve the same function that the legislative branch is supposed to serve. The motion is not what my constituents sent me here to debate. My constituents did not send me here to bless a motion that says, "We don't like some law of the federal government's" and then have that law rewritten behind closed doors in the privacy of a cabinet room. That is not how democracy is intended to work, and it is fundamentally antidemocratic. [interjection]

Ms Gray: Thank you to my colleague. In the debate on Bill 1 there seems to be an argument between the government and all experts and the opposition around what needs to happen in the Legislature in order to enable these things to happen. One of my main concerns is the fact that it will take only a motion passed by the majority here to enable changing of legislation.

Right now, when we make laws, as we are doing with the debate of Bill 1, bills become introduced, they are debated at multiple stages, there is a Committee of the Whole process, there is transparency, and we are all involved in that, and it's a lot of work. But a single government motion to then kick off a cabinet making changes to laws is a completely different thing, and I don't think we're talking about apples to apples. We're talking about something else entirely, and saying that the motion is sufficient strikes me as ridiculous.

Does the legislation, I ask my colleague, define how the motion needs to read?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much for the question. The legislation does in fact talk about what the motion needs to do, and I think that this is incredibly important because in legislation what the actual words say is incredibly important. In this case there is a very critical "or" in the legislation. It talks about the Assembly approving a resolution. It needs to be made in accordance with the act, and it needs to state either/or that "in the opinion of the Legislative Assembly a federal initiative is unconstitutional [because] it intrudes into provincial . . . jurisdiction" – I'm not really sure why the Legislative Assembly is having a legal opinion, but there we go – or it "violates the rights and freedoms" or – a very important "or" – "causes or is anticipated to cause harm to Albertans." Then it has to set out the harm but only if the harm was the basis of the motion.

So what it means is that there are two different paths, potentially, for this motion to come through the House, and it doesn't necessarily need to set out exactly what the problem is. It could just say that, in the opinion of the Legislative Assembly, it's unconstitutional, which, given some of the legal opinions we've been hearing in here today, is, I would say, deeply troubling.

It also talks about identifying measures that they should consider. Well, I mean, that's not helpful. Again: should consider. It doesn't in any way impede cabinet's ability to do a lot more or a lot less than that. That is highly problematic. It also – again, a motion is different than an act. An act has to be debated at multiple stages, and it's not about the number of hours of debate; it's about the number of hours that the thing is before the House.

The real democratic process isn't just occurring in here; it's occurring out there in the public. It means that reporters need to be live to the concern; they need to write stories, stories that get to the public. People talk to each other, more stories are generated, people call their MLAs, MLAs say things in the House, and it goes to more stories: that's how democracy is supposed to work. That sort of public, media portion of that is absolutely critical. So the idea that you could pass a motion in one afternoon or one evening and that it somehow serves the same function as a fulsome public debate on legislation is just absurd. It's absurd.

Now, the members also seem to like to mention this interpretation section, section 2, which I would honestly call basically the legal equivalent of an incantation, as if the government thinks that it can wave its hand over something and say, "Unconstitutional," and that somehow renders it so. That's not how it works, Madam Speaker. It's not how it works. You can't just – the way the act operates is either unconstitutional or it isn't. Simply naming it constitutional – they could've called it the constitutional act; that wouldn't have changed it either. The operation of the act is what renders it constitutional or unconstitutional. Calling it that is entirely unhelpful. I think that, you know, obviously the government is attempting – attempting – to achieve something here, but I think they're failing on the clear substance of the issue.

It's also worth talking about the judicial review provisions. I know that my hon. colleague who spoke before me was saying that 30 days is plenty of time; I would beg to differ. First of all, it's 30 days not just to file but to serve. It needs to be filed and served within 30 days, so someone has to object to the decision, get to a lawyer, get it drafted, have the legal research done, get an opinion, get it filed in the court, and then manage to serve it as well. I mean, it's a lot for 30 days, and it's going to really reduce the number of people and public agencies that are able to engage in this process.

In addition, I think one of the things that's funny about this, that's worth noting anyway, is that the government has suggested that the standard of review to be applied by the court is patent unreasonableness. The interesting thing is that in 2008 the Supreme Court did away with the three standards of review. There used to be correctness, reasonableness, and patent unreasonableness, and the court said: "You know, this is a bit silly to have these three standards. We're just going to have, like, either you're reviewing it for correctness or you're reviewing it for reasonableness."

Now, I'm not saying that the Legislature can't put that language in; they certainly can, but it's a really obvious and transparent attempt to try to oust the constitutional jurisdiction of the court as much as possible. It's essentially the government saying: we don't think our decisions would stand up to a normal standard of review, so we're going to try to impose this additional standard of review, and we're going to try to shorten the timeframe as much as possible to keep people out. All of these steps, every section of this legislation is essentially intended to oust democracy, to allow cabinet to pass laws under secrecy. This, to return to the original point, is what creates the economic chaos.

8:30

The Deputy Speaker: Are there members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is an honour for me to rise to speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. This bill will be one of the most important put forth by this government, and I am proud to speak and be a part of its review in this House.

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

To start with, I would like to read the preamble to give a sense of the purpose of the bill and the reasons for introducing this act. The preamble states:

Whereas Albertans possess a unique culture and shared identity within Canada;

I would agree.

Whereas it is the role of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and the Government of Alberta to preserve and promote this unique culture and shared identity;

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930 and the Constitution Act, 1982 are foundational documents that establish the rights and freedoms of Albertans and the relationship between the provincial and federal orders of government, including the division of legislative powers between them;

Whereas the Province of Alberta is granted rights and powers under the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930 and the Constitution Act, 1982 and is not subordinate to the Government of Canada;

Whereas actions taken by the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada have infringed on these sovereign provincial rights and powers with increasing frequency and have unfairly prejudiced Albertans;

Whereas actions taken by the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada have infringed on the rights and freedoms of Albertans enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in an unjustified and unconstitutional manner;

Whereas the people of Alberta expect the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada to respect the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930 and the Constitution Act, 1982 as the governing documents of the relationship between Canada and Alberta and to abide by the division of powers and other provisions set out in those documents;

Whereas the people of Alberta expect the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada to respect the rights and freedoms of Albertans enshrined in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and

Whereas it is necessary and appropriate for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to set out measures that the Lieutenant Governor in Council should consider taking in respect of actions of the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada that are unconstitutional or harmful to Albertans and for Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to have a free vote on such measures according to their individual judgment . . .

Now, Mr. Speaker, our government was elected to represent the interests and values of Albertans. However, when our government is prevented from exercising its full capacity to govern, it must take the necessary steps to regain its power. For too long Alberta has been a victim of federal overreach within multiple areas of our jurisdiction. As a result, our economic development and our rights have been impeded by those at the federal level of government. This means that Albertans are being held back, which is something that pains me to see.

The sovereignty act addresses this by providing a mechanism for our province to identify areas where the federal government has been reaching beyond its jurisdiction or significantly harming Albertans. From there, the House would debate resolutions and regain our rightful authority over the decision-making process. When our government has the ability to exercise itself fully, we have the ability to do what the good people of this province have entrusted us to do, and that's put Alberta first. Bill 1 allows us to fight back against unjustified mandates that rob our citizens of the right to choose their own path and follow the Alberta dream.

As the parliamentary secretary for agrifood and someone who has been heavily involved in the agricultural industry for my entire life, this bill restores my hope for the agricultural sector, a hope that has been threatened because of ill-informed and intrusive federal policy. For example, the federal government has recently vowed to reduce Canadian agriculture emissions by 30 per cent by 2030 with no clear plan to get there. In seven short years they expect to reduce agricultural emissions by 30 per cent. Mr. Speaker, to me, this is a clear display of their complete lack of understanding and, if I can be quite frank, the complete devaluation of Alberta's farming industry. In the name of reducing GHG emissions by .045 of a per cent, the federal government is supporting a project that will harm farmers and put Alberta's food supply at risk.

The price of fertilizer has already gone up due to many factors. One of them is the increasing energy costs; another is global instability in trade sanctions with Russia and the export curbs in China, two of the world's largest fertilizer exporters. But now farmers are being told that these necessary supplies are Trudeau's next target. Fertilizer use directly improves crop yield; we all know that. When agricultural production suffers, the price of food increases. This means that in addition to the financial difficulties facilitated by poor federal inflation policy and the rising cost of gas and energy, grocery bills will continue to rise. Once again, working Albertans will suffer the consequences of tone-deaf federal goals.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are exhausted from the constant war the federal government is waging on our pivotal industries. I am proud to be a part of a government that refuses to sit back and have our province's economy stripped away. That is why Bill 1 exists. It's not just farmers that the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act aims to protect. It is firearms owners. It is those who want to choose their own medical treatments. It is everyone affected by the stunting of Alberta's energy sectors, from business owners to the oil workers. It is all Albertans who are tired of being left behind, forgotten, and disregarded until, of course, it is time for the federal government to come collect their taxes.

Our government standing up for Alberta does not mean we are looking to cause major disruption. We will follow any Supreme Court rulings regarding our use of Bill 1, and it's important to note that this bill is designed to be used only when it is drastically necessary. Our provincial government is willing to work with the federal government wherever we can reasonably do so, and we have shown that through our co-operation over the years. However, when we are ordered to uphold laws and regulations that are unconstitutional or otherwise harmful, we cannot sit back at the mercy of any institution that violates the rights of our citizens.

I also want to assure Albertans that this legislation is in no way meant to cause division between our provincial government and our federal counterparts. We are actually looking to unify, not divide. However, that can only be done when Alberta is respected as a partner and a major contributor to our country, and while it is unfortunate that we must take such measures to do so, we are justified in using this legislation to demand our rightful place in this Confederation. Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members in this House are immensely proud to call Canada home. I wake up every day with gratitude for the opportunity to live, work, and be a part of history within this great country.

In allowing our provincial government to act in accordance with our constitutional jurisdiction, this act will ease the clear tensions that have been caused by federal overreach. It is with the security this act provides that we can begin to move forward as partners with, rather than subjects of, the federal government. It is because of the immense respect I have for the work that has gone into making our country what it is that I believe we should honour the Constitution that founded the country of Canada to begin with. Within this Constitution provinces are given the right to govern areas of their domain, matters of local nature, with confidence. It is through the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act that we aim to protect this right. I look forward to seeing many members here stand with me in support of this act, in support of our province, in support of Alberta and all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there members wishing to add to debate? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton . . .

Ms Pancholi: Whitemud.

The Acting Speaker: Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Come on.

The Acting Speaker: It's been a long time.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been a long time, and it's a pleasure to rise to speak today to Bill 1, which I think – let's be honest; we all know it's called the Alberta sovereignty act. We'll just leave it at that because that's what it is.

Mr. Speaker, I really struggle to know where to begin because there are so many fundamental flaws not only with the bill itself but actually with the nature of the debate that we are hearing in the Legislature today. If there is ever any proof or evidence needed as to why it is inappropriate for Members of this Legislative Assembly to be the determining body of whether or not something is unconstitutional or not, it is just the quality of debate that we're hearing tonight from the UCP members that will confirm that, because they clearly do not understand the Constitution. They do not understand the rule of law. They do not understand their role as legislators when it comes to enacting legislation and reviewing legislation. They do not understand the separation of powers between the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of our government. They do not understand federalism and division of powers. So clearly the current members of the government caucus are not qualified to be making any sort of determination about, you know, what's constitutional, what causes harm.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that, from my position, when I think about what causes and is causing harm to Albertans right now, it's perhaps this government's ignoring of a crisis in children's health care. That is causing harm to Albertans, but they don't seem to be caring about that, so I don't really trust the government's judgment when it comes to making determinations about what causes harm to Albertans when they are the ones causing harm.

Let's go back, because it's been very interesting to hear members of the government caucus pick and choose sort of the clauses of the bill that clearly they've been told to read out to show that this is a constitutional bill and it'll be fine and it's not so bad without actually getting into the meat of the bill. Now, I know that not all members of the cabinet had actually even read the bill before they declared they were going to support it. We know that the deputy-deputy Premier, co-Deputy Premier, second to the right-hand man of the right-hand man of the Premier – not entirely sure what the Member for Lethbridge-East's current title is, but he acknowledged publicly that he had not even read the bill before he decided that he was in support of it. So to help him along and any other members of the UCP caucus that haven't taken the lengthy amount of time it takes to read seven pages, Mr. Speaker, of their government Bill 1, we'll help them out because I think it's very important that all Albertans are clear about what's actually contained in this bill.

First of all, let's begin by citing out and reading out the whereas clauses. That's very flowery and very nice, but that is not actually the meat and potatoes of the act. The whereas clauses are very nice to sort of set the tone, but they are actually not legally enforceable the way Members of this Legislative Assembly on the government side would like to believe.

Similarly, simply in section 2 stating, "Don't worry; this is all constitutional; don't worry; we're not going to abrogate or derogate from any existing Aboriginal rights," does not make it so, Mr. Speaker, just like saying, "This is a lawful law," does not make it lawful. They actually have to look at the rest of the provisions of the bill and in the act and see how they would be applied, how they'd be interpreted, how they will be in operation to actually determine whether or not it's constitutional. Let's do that, because I think that's critically important.

Now, I want to highlight that the members of the government caucus would like to think that it is the NDP who are criticizing this bill, and I am not surprised that that would be very, I guess, convenient for them in terms of their understanding of the world and sort of what's happening here. It's just easy to make it political partisanship.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if you got a chance. I enjoyed watching the press conference as the Premier tried to speak to Bill 1 and her Minister of Justice, who couldn't even answer questions fundamentally about the bill, was trying to bring in his deputy minister to answer questions, who, by the way, refused to. It was very clear, from the technical briefing and from everything we've heard since, that the press, the media, political scientists, constitutional lawyers across this province, across this country have been very clear that the intent of this act, the implications of this act, and actually how it will be operationalized is not only an affront to the Constitution, but it's an affront to democracy and to the rule of law. They can try to pin this on the opposition – I understand why it might be convenient for their little zone of echo chamber – but the reality is that Albertans, experts, constitutional lawyers across this country have noted that there are significant problems with this bill not just around the unconstitutionality. [interjection] Yes, I give way.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to my hon. colleague. I just was going to suggest that, yes, there have been so many lawyers and analysts, reporters who have written stories and are doing analysis on this bill. I was just looking at one titled Danielle Smith and the War Against Ottawa Measures Act, that has nearly 9,000 comments, with the most liked comment being: "Incredibly Draconian attempt at a power grab from an embarrassing political party." This is just one of hundreds of articles and commentary pieces that lawyers and many, many others are putting out there because of how badly this impacts Alberta's ability to go forward and to be seen as a great place to do business. It is putting a chill on investment, and people are watching very, very closely the debate that is happening here in this place and the concerns that are being raised.

I simply wanted to say that I think it's important to note that.

Ms Pancholi: Yeah. I want to thank you for adding to my comments, to the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, because it's true. It is widespread concern and, frankly, outrage from Albertans and Canadians about the content of this bill. What's important, Mr. Speaker, is – I've read the sort of tortured clarification or explanation that came out from the Premier today trying to clarify how this bill will work, but none of what was clarified is actually what's in the content of the bill.

Let's be clear that the bill, in section 3, indicates that a motion may be brought forward by a cabinet member and that the Legislative Assembly may approve that motion. Contrary to what the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon said, it's not a unanimous motion that needs to be passed; it's merely by a majority. The Legislative Assembly can simply pass a motion saying we believe something is unconstitutional or we believe it "causes or is anticipated to cause harm to Albertans." They just have to claim that they're making this motion under this act, and then they can, under subsection (d), "identify a measure or measures that the Lieutenant Governor in Council should consider taking in respect of the federal initiative."

This is important, Mr. Speaker, because today we heard the Premier try to claim that in the motion any amendments that would happen to an enactment, any changes, any suspensions would be contained in the motion that is passed by the Legislative Assembly. That is, frankly, not what is in the bill. The bill actually frames it very clearly in subsection (d) that the motion that would be passed by the Legislative Assembly would be a recommendation. It would be something where they would identify "a measure or measures" – not specific legislative amendments to bills – that the cabinet should consider. "Consider" means they can choose to do otherwise. It is a recommendation, and that is all.

So this motion is not a substitute, Mr. Speaker, for the legislative process, which I would think all of the members of this House would have a vested interest in ensuring that we protect. That process is, of course – apparently, we need to remind the members on the government side how legislation is passed, but it requires three readings. There's an opportunity for amendments at Committee of the Whole. There's the time that is spent and invested in making sure that all members have the opportunity to speak at length and at three different readings about the content of the bill.

Member Irwin: Mr. Speaker?

Ms Pancholi: I'll give way.

Member Irwin: Thank you for that. You know, I had to jump up because I had the honour of sitting in while the Premier spoke to this bill on first reading earlier. You know, I should have looked at Hansard, but I was actually paying fairly close attention. She said something along the lines of being open to working with opposition and being open to discussion here on the Chamber floor. To your point, I'll be very curious because we've not heard – there are some lawyers on that side of the House as well, and we've not heard from them yet. I'm not saying they won't join debate; I'm certain they will. I am actually quite curious to see if the members on that side of the House will be open to discussion and to possible amendments from our side of the House. As it seems so far, they're not. In fact, from some of the comments we've heard tonight, they seem to be in denial of the substance of the bill.

Ms Pancholi: Well, I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for bringing that up because I actually think there should be a potential for significant amendments that would come from the government side. The reason for that is that I can imagine that there should be a lot of concern, particularly from private members of the government caucus, about the fact that their ability as legislators is being significantly hamstrung by this bill. What it is doing is that they're giving up their privileges and entitlements as private members to be able to represent their constituents in debating amendments to legislation. They're giving that up, and they're giving it to their cabinet colleagues.

Now, let's be clear. At this point in time, of the government caucus – what? – almost half, three-quarters are now part of cabinet. I don't know; it's such a large cabinet amongst all of their cabinet ministers and parliamentary secretaries. Most of them feel pretty okay about it because I guess they get to be part of that cabinet that gets to make changes to legislation without going through the Legislative Assembly. But there's still a handful, I think, a few government members that are not in cabinet, and those ones, Mr. Speaker, I think would have a vested interest in making sure that their rights as an elected member of this House and their privileges to be able to debate legislation are preserved.

This is my challenge to the government members. If they are so okay with this idea that changes to legislation can be made solely by cabinet on the recommendation, perhaps, of the Legislative Assembly, that the cabinet can then go away and suspend or modify or add to legislation by an order in council, if they are comfortable with that, I ask them to consider if they would be comfortable with that if the Alberta NDP were in government and it was an Alberta NDP cabinet.

This is precisely, this bill – I know that this government is pretty short-sighted in how it makes decisions and how it implements things and how it brings forward things, but they're bringing this forward to really centralize power in the cabinet and the Premier, Mr. Speaker. That's what this does. It allows the cabinet to make legislation and to take away the privileges of private members. If they're not concerned about it now because they are the government, I ask them to think how they will feel six months from now, when some of them are still here as opposition members and they think of the prospect of an Alberta NDP government doing the same thing.

You ask to give way?

Member Irwin: Yes. Thank you. You know, I just wanted to quickly jump in – and then we won't intervene anymore; I promise – and echo that point. It was actually our colleague from Lethbridge-West who has been quite vocal on Bill 1. I'd like to just quote her. She mentioned a very similar point, saying: "If the NDP win in May, would the UCP want us to have these grossly undemocratic and dictator-like powers? If not... why do the UCP..."

An Hon. Member: Fearmongering.

Member Irwin: "... think it's a good idea that they have them?"

Fearmongering, sure. This is the heckling that we're hearing from the other side. I'd love to hear, perhaps, you know, the Member for Lethbridge-East; he might want to weigh in. As has been noted also by my colleague for Lethbridge-West, the Deputy Premier supports the act, although he admitted he hadn't read it all, and he did mention that the Premier's office didn't tell him how to vote on it. I'd love to hear him join debate and perhaps defend his position on a bill that he's not read. Yay. Listen, I'm no lawyer. I've said that – oh, I don't know – a thousand times in this House, but even I've read the bill multiple times. Did I understand it all? Maybe not, but I've read it.

Ms Pancholi: Well, thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. You know, as I mentioned, I'm willing to maybe even read it out to the Member for Lethbridge-East. It won't take very long; it's a very short bill. It is important to note that this is the key point, I think, for the government members. We hear the minister for – I'm sorry; I'm going to forget. He was Infrastructure. I can't keep up now with all the changes.

The Member for Calgary-Currie had talked about how this is fearmongering, right? You know, that member, I believe, is also a lawyer, I understand. So I wonder, you know, what he thinks about the idea of section 4 of the bill. Subsection (1)(a) actually says:

- (a) if the Lieutenant Governor in Council is satisfied that doing so is in the public interest ...

Again, that's cabinet.

... [may] direct a Minister responsible for an enactment ... under ... the Government Organization Act to, by order,

Those two words, "by order," are carrying a lot of weight. Basically, what it says is that by an order in council the cabinet can

- (i) suspend or modify the application or operation of all or part of an enactment ...
- (ii) specify or set out provisions that apply in addition to, or instead of, any provision of an enactment.

That basically means, Mr. Speaker – we've been through this as this Legislature. This group of MLAs has been through this before. This is the same language that appeared in the Public Health Act, that granted emergency powers to cabinet to change legislation.

This is the same language of legislation that drew the outrage and ire not only generally of Albertans but particularly of members of the UCP party, Mr. Speaker, members who are on the far right, who said: this is the centralization of too much power into cabinet and into the Premier's hands. They were deeply concerned. In fact, I would have to look – and there's a whole slew of information I'd have to go through to dig it up – but I'm sure that our Premier now had commented on the Public Health Act, and I'm sure she was outraged about that granting of emergency powers in the context of public health to cabinet and the Premier because it is so extraordinary to bypass the function of the Legislative Assembly.

Those provisions: I don't need to remind this government about what happened when they tried to make those changes to the Public Health Act. We ended up having a committee and a review. They tried to reverse – and they did – most of the changes that they made because it so outraged Albertans and Canadians. So when members now of this government caucus say that we are fearmongering, this is the exact same language that caused them no end of grief.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? Honestly, I sit here and I think: I don't want to convince these members to change their minds. They clearly haven't been convinced by the law, by their constituents, by, you know, the business community, who's saying: you're absolutely creating uncertainty; you're going to be creating economic chaos; you're going to drive away investors and development and growth; there's nothing in this act that's going to actually contribute to economic growth. They're not listening to that. That's fine. I would like all of these UCP MLAs to be on the record, as they already are, in support of this bill because that is showing Albertans who they truly are.

In particular, I have to highlight the stellar cast of leadership candidates, who all went on the record to say how outrageous the sovereignty act is with the economic uncertainty, the chaos, that this was going to be for sure an election loser for them. The current Minister of Municipal Affairs, the current Minister of Finance – I can't remember – the current Minister of Jobs, Economy, and Northern Development, of trade and immigration: all those candidates stood up and talked about how bad the sovereignty act would be for Alberta, how bad it would be for their party. Yet, ooh, a title change in the name of the bill or – I don't know – maybe being given a cushy cabinet position and then not just given a cushy cabinet position but given all these powers under the sovereignty act as a cabinet member to be able to make legislative changes: well, we know how strong their principles are and how deeply they run, Mr. Speaker. Now they're on record to show Albertans.

Now, we've always in the opposition been pretty clear as to what we believed the values of this party to be, which, frankly, has been really hard to follow. They don't seem to be guided by values but by self-preservation, although, honestly, clearly they're not even very good at that because I don't think this bill is going to help them with that at all. But let's be clear about who we are, right? And I think that's actually what the UCP is doing. The Premier and every MLA and every cabinet minister are being pretty clear about who they are. They are very comfortable, Mr. Speaker, with undermining democracy, with usurping democratic institutions, with centralizing power in a cabinet, with undermining the rights of locally elected representatives to represent their constituents, to be engaged in debate on legislation, to do their jobs as legislators. They are very comfortable with all of that being thrown under the water if they think they can stick it to Ottawa. And that's fine. I think: be on the record; be on the record for who you are.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that in my constituency nobody brings this up. Nobody cares about this. Actually, I should mention, not just in my constituency. I spent a fair bit of time in constituencies all across this province, from Fort McMurray to Calgary, all over Calgary, to Lethbridge, to Medicine Hat, and I've talked to constituents all over this province. And guess what? What they care about is affordability. They care about being able to pay their bills. They care about being able to access health care for their senior parents, for their own needs, and for their children. That's what they care about. They care about a resilient jobs economy, not scaring away investment, not scaring away talent.

Mr. Speaker, if you listen to anybody in Calgary right now who is talking about the number one challenge they face in their economy, it is attracting talent. That's where it's all at. Who is going to want to come and invest their dollars, their life, their family in Alberta when they have a dictatorial provincial government who is creating incredible uncertainty and a lack of predictability? We've already seen the implications of that.

The UCP members of this Assembly want to focus on putting their name on the record for centralizing power in the growing, maybe, cabinet. That's fine, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Taber-Warner is going to add to the debate tonight.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me here tonight. I want to stand and be on the record to say that I support the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

I want to talk about this from maybe a little different perspective. I want to talk about how we actually got here. Why did Albertans ask us to introduce a bill that reminds everyone in Canada what constitutional rights we have as a province? Because our equal partner – not parent or senior partner but an equal partner – in Confederation is driving drunk. They just can't stay in their lane, Mr. Speaker, and this is the reason why this bill has come forward now.

When we take a look, when Albertans take a look at these types of legislation, I think that they need to take a look at: what is their litmus test? What's the litmus test that Albertans can use to determine which way to go on this issue? I recommend that they read or watch CBC. You heard me right, Mr. Speaker. After all, CBC, which receives 1.2 billion of Trudeau bucks every year is simply just state media. If you hear it on CBC, you can be sure that the Trudeau-NDP coalition wrote it. So my recommendation is that if you hear it on CBC, you know exactly which way you need to go in Alberta.

What we've heard here tonight, even in this Chamber, is the NDP constantly going with their leader Jagmeet Singh and his close friend and ally and coalition member Justin Trudeau to continue to stop what is the Alberta advantage. The NDP here in Alberta had four years to be able prove to Albertans whether or not they could do it better, and in 2019 a million Albertans said: no more; we won't do that again. Fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me. Mr. Speaker, they will not be fooled again.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about another reason why we are where we are here today. According to the Library of Parliament, in 2018 Alberta sent $46.7 billion of tax revenue to Ottawa. What did we receive back? Twenty-nine point five billion in expenditures into Alberta. That comes in the health transfers, social transfers. But what's the difference? Seventeen point two billion dollars stayed in Ottawa. What did they do with it? Did they take that to make a better Canada? Did they make it a better place? No, they used it to buy votes in eastern Canada. This is what's bothering Albertans and has been bothering Albertans for decades. This is the reason why we are here now talking about a piece of legislation that reminds Ottawa, reminds Justin Trudeau and his close friend Jagmeet Singh that they need to stay in their own lane.

We have enumerated constitutional rights. This Constitution shows us as equal partners in Confederation, but we have seen anything but an equal partnership. Now, in the 1950s and '60s – I'll give you an example in terms of health spending – the feds gave us back 50 per cent. In other words, we transferred money over; they gave us back 50 per cent. Well, that's terrible, you'd think, because we should get back the full 100 per cent, but we don't. They gave us back 50 per cent, but is that bad? It's bad, but you know what? It's worse today. They only give us 21.5 per cent for health transfers back into our province today. Where's the rest of the money, Mr. Speaker?

This is what's bothering Albertans – this is what bothers Albertans – to know that this money, that they work hard for, is going over to Ottawa for their own pet projects, not coming back into Alberta to make Alberta a great place to raise a family, to start a business, to be able to have prosperity. Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House the Conservatives will continue always to fight for the prosperity of Albertans. That's our first and primary responsibility in this House. Yet all we've heard tonight – and I've been listening carefully to the members opposite – is them running a block for their good friend Justin Trudeau in Ottawa.

What would the federal response be, Mr. Speaker, if we decided to move outside of our lane and go into federally protected constitutional rights? What if we went and collected our own income tax and said: "You know what? We'll cut you a cheque for what you're worth." Maybe Albertans might be okay with that, but that is not our constitutional right, and that's why we don't do it. You have never heard arguments in this House or arguments in Alberta to go into federally protected constitutional territory. But on a regular basis what we see from the federal government is moving into provincial territory.

Not only do they do that, Mr. Speaker – and I just showed you those health transfer funds – are they giving us less for the money that we send over there, but also any money that we actually do give them: there are always strings attached to it; we have to do it their way. Well, the things that are done in Alberta are different than they are done in Toronto. We need to recognize that. Our society here runs differently than it does over – maybe the NDP does the same thing as in Toronto, and maybe they should move there if they want to. But here in Alberta we'd like to be able to keep what we have, and we'd also like to be able to make sure that we have good-quality products, services, health, and education. Keeping some of that money here to be able to provide for Albertans' needs is what I'd like to see.

Mr. Speaker, you know all too well the golden rule: he who has the gold makes the rules. Unfortunately, this is what we've seen from Ottawa on a regular basis. They've got the ability to tax, they take the money, and they decide what's going to happen in Alberta, and this is what's bothering Albertans.

I want to finish with an example here. In my riding, Lantic sugar, better known as Rogers sugar, is the only place that they actually produce sugar beets to create sugar. We compete: Lantic sugar in Taber, Alberta, against cane sugar, which comes from other jurisdictions. We don't obviously produce cane here in Canada. On a regular basis, I have these guys, the owners of Lantic sugar, telling me: "You know what, sir? We are constantly asking ourselves: when the United States does not have a carbon tax, why do we do it up here in Canada, just across the border?" Mr. Speaker, as you know, my riding of Taber-Warner is right on the border. I am always seeing businesses saying: "Why wouldn't we go down over the border? They don't have a carbon tax down there." But we have a federal government that thinks the solution is to triple that carbon tax. Is that the solution to be able to keep Lantic sugar in Taber, Alberta? Is that the answer to keep businesses in Edmonton, that these members opposite are supposed to be championing? I doubt it.

We've chased too many businesses out of this province through the carbon tax, through bad policy when the NDP were in there. In fact, I think there was an interesting report that I read a few years ago that said that the NDP, when they were in power, chased billions, tens of billions of dollars out of this province through the introduction of the carbon tax and other egregious pieces of legislation. Mr. Speaker, it's rich to hear the members opposite lecturing us on a bill that's going to chase out businesses when, when they were in government, for four years they chased out tens of billions of dollars because of their poor business understanding.

Madam Speaker, I just want to finish by once again stating what I started with. It is my pleasure to be able to support the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act to hopefully hold Ottawa in their lane so that we can have a strong Canada foundation to be able to build a prosperous society for all people rather than having them dictate to us how we should do things in Alberta.

9:10

With that, Madam Speaker, I would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the Assembly be adjourned until 1:30 p.m., Thursday, December 1.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 9:11 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 1, 2022

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of God Save the King by Ms Brooklyn Elhard. Please join in in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King!
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the King!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Minister of Technology and Innovation has a school to introduce.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly the students and teachers from Heritage Hills elementary. Heritage Hills is my home. I live in that neighbourhood, and I look forward to sending my son Max to their French immersion program in a couple of years. It's an amazing school, amazing teachers, and amazing students. Given the interest these students showed on their tour so far today, I wouldn't be surprised if we have a future MLA sitting right up there. I would like to invite them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

Legislative Process and Federal-provincial Relations

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, over the past several days we have heard nonstop hysteria, both in and out of this House, as the NDP opposition, its leader, and their allies continue their desperate attempt to paint the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act as some sort of undemocratic power grab threatening the very foundation of democracy, that somehow this act gives power to cabinet to unilaterally alter legislation behind closed doors despite the fact that it does not.

It is a shameful display of fearmongering and fabrication that Albertans will remember well when they see how democratically and effectively this constitutional shield will be used in the coming months and years ahead to protect the rights and welfare of Albertans from Ottawa's continuous, unconstitutional, and harmful overreach.

But, Mr. Speaker, that's not why I'm standing today to address my fellow elected members of the Legislature. You see, as unseemly as the NDP has acted these past 72 hours, voting against a bill they hadn't even read, making accusations and statements without a shred of truth that had to be deleted from Twitter, despite it all, these sorts of antics and tactics, for better or for worse, are part of our democratic process.

In this Legislative Assembly the government proposes legislation. We debate, we argue, and we advocate our positions passionately. Then we in this Chamber each vote on the bill as duly elected members of the people of Alberta. If that vote passes with a majority, that bill becomes the binding and constitutionally enforceable law of the province of Alberta. This is how democracy works. This is the rule of law. It is the very foundation of our democracy.

Yesterday the leader of the NDP opposition spoke with the media outside this Chamber, and when told by a reporter that Prime Minister Justin Trudeau was taking no option off the table, including the potential of Mr. Trudeau unilaterally revoking and quashing the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act should it pass in this elected Assembly, the NDP leader stated, and I quote: I think if they revoke the act, that would be the right thing to do. Unquote.

The meaning of the NDP leader's words is crystal clear. This member clearly believes that her dear friend Prime Minister Justin Trudeau should unilaterally quash and override a law of Alberta because she disagrees with it, and I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my lifetime I have never heard a more undemocratic statement or thought uttered by an elected official in this province, let alone one who sees herself fit for the office of Premier. It is astounding both for its raw, undemocratic meaning and its level of pure hypocrisy. Having later realized the magnitude of her statement, this member got up on CBC and on Twitter yesterday evening to deny she had even said it when, in fact, she could not have said it more clearly.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard this member and caucus wrongfully accuse this government of attempting to subvert democracy, yet in a moment of pristine clarity this NDP leader let it slip just how little regard she has for the very Alberta democracy she seeks to lead. Is that her plan? When the NDP leader doesn't get her way in this democratically elected Assembly, will she just call up her good friend Justin Trudeau and her federal party leader, Jagmeet Singh, to direct their coalition government to quash and override the laws of our land? What sort of rule of law is this? This member and her party are quick to dig up statements from 24 months or 24 years ago to inform Albertans of my alleged positions of today. Well, how about 24 hours ago? Because 24 hours ago this member made it clear that, in her view, when the chips are down, it's Ottawa before Alberta; it's Justin and Jagmeet before the Constitution.

This member should apologize immediately for her lapse of judgment and affirm her commitment to upholding the laws of our province, whomever may have written them. As for me, let me be clear. I know I'm not perfect, but I will never apologize for defending Albertans against federal actions harmful to our province. I will never deviate from putting this province above any federal leader. My loyalty is to Albertans. I will accept their judgment of me and this government, whatever that may be, and I will never call upon any federal Prime Minister to override or strike down a law passed by this Legislative Assembly.

That's the point here. That would be the ultimate betrayal to this Assembly, of the rule of law, and of the millions of Albertans we represent here. Albertans are a proud and free people. We are not mere subjects of politicians in Ottawa able to quash the laws of this elected Assembly upon request. I'd ask this hon. member and everyone in this House to remember who we serve, because, for me, at this side of the House, there is no debate. We serve Albertans first, always.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

A member of the Official Opposition should they choose to respond. [interjections] Order. Order. [interjections] Order.

The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, that statement was both desperate and delusional. In the quote “they” referred to them, the UCP government. No one in this Chamber wants Ottawa interfering with our House, and the suggestion just now by the Premier is about as real as her phone call with the Arctic Winter Games, which we all know was not so much.

Now, this week the Premier and this government introduced a bill that was so bad in its intent and its drafting that the uproar has been immediate and loud from every corner of the province, not just from Alberta NDP allies, although that number does grow, but from everybody in the economy, from business leaders, community leaders, and, most significantly, many Indigenous leaders. This Premier’s bill creates deep economic uncertainty across Alberta. It is doing that already, inviting more chaos, cost, and conflict.

Let’s talk about why specifically. We know that investment and economic growth depend on clear, fair, and known rules of engagement, but this bill gives the Premier and her cabinet unprecedented and undemocratic power to change the law unilaterally without the approval of the Legislative Assembly and without notice to the Albertans who rely on those laws, including investors. The bill then restricts those Albertans who’ve been hurt by the change from challenging it with draconian timelines. It further constrains the ability of the courts to rule that any range of actions under the bill are unreasonable. Furthermore, it’s been argued by some that asking the Legislature to determine the constitutionality of a federal act is in and of itself unconstitutional, usurping the role of the courts.

In short, there are multiple, multiple layers of uncertainty, contradiction, and illegality that could impact almost any law in Alberta. Taken as a whole, investors are saying: “No. Thanks.” In a volatile world businesses must invest their money, grow their companies, and attract their workers to places that are stable, where the rules are reasonable, where they’re transparent. The Calgary Chamber of commerce and CAPP and others have all said so; you know, those NDP allies. Not only that, but treaty chiefs have stated that the introduction of this act, with zero meaningful consultation, runs roughshod over their treaty rights. This Legislature cannot scramble after the fact on these kinds of matters, and many of you over there know that. You must withdraw and consult first.

We are at a pivotal moment in Alberta. We need a clear plan to create good-paying jobs, build a resilient economy now and for generations to come. We need to drive investment opportunities, not drive away investors. My message today to the government is to simply withdraw this mess of a bill.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Mr. Schmidt: The new Premier and government are working hard to spin their disastrous Bill 1. We just saw the Premier try desperately again minutes ago. They’ve tried renaming it; they’ve tried gaslighting Albertans by claiming that what the bill says isn’t actually what the bill says. One Deputy Premier spent the morning trolling credible constitutional lawyers about the bill, claiming they were liars and wrong about the legislation. He then said that he may amend the bill: never a good sign. The other Deputy Premier admitted yesterday he hasn’t even read the bill but said he was briefed on it. The jobs minister, who called the bill a “bait and switch” before getting a cabinet job, now says that the bill is great, but he can’t say why.

Despite this, Albertans see the bill for exactly what it is. It’s the job-killing sovereignty act. The Calgary Chamber of commerce and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers have spoken out about the harm it will cause to investment, to jobs, and to our economic future. That’s just the tip of the iceberg. Our phones are ringing off the hook. People wanting to invest here or with investments already locked in here are terrified. They can’t get an audience with the government and specifically with the Premier, who is more focused on giving herself supreme power despite being selected by 1 per cent of Albertans.

I want to tell the people reaching out, the Albertans fearing for their jobs, fearing for the quality of life for their kids, that Alberta’s NDP is here. We’re listening. We will do everything in our power to stop this Premier. We will put forward a real plan to create good-paying jobs and build a resilient economy now and for future generations. I and all of my colleagues will stand in this House every day on behalf of our constituents, on behalf of all Albertans, and say no to the job-killing sovereignty act. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East is the one with the call.

Early Childhood Educator Wage Supplement

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Early childhood educators are the heartbeat of our child care system. They provide high-quality child care for Albertan kids, and they provide peace of mind for Albertan parents. Today our government announced that we are providing early childhood educators with a one-time payment and wage top-up to help recruit and retain staff and to help make life affordable for those important Albertans. This one-time payment and wage top-up represents an investment of over $174 million in federal and provincial funds through to the end of the 2025-2026 fiscal year.

Every dollar matters, Mr. Speaker. This fund will help child care operators recruit and retain staff and help critical workers pay their bills as we head into the Christmas season.

All employed early childhood educators who claimed hours in October and November of 2022 and worked an average of 30-plus hours per week and continue to work in December will also be eligible to receive a one-time payment of $900 while those averaging fewer than 30 hours per week will be eligible for a $450 payment. This is real inflation relief for Albertans at the most important time of the year. This also means a strong overall child care system for parents and families.

Alberta’s economy has recovered from the pandemic, and we are seen now leading the nation in job growth. A strong child care system gives parents, particularly women, the confidence they need to re-enter our workforce and participate in our growing economy. I’m pleased our government is providing this critical support, and I’m proud to know we will continue to support our early childhood educators as they continue to provide high-quality child care. Our government will continue to provide real affordability relief to Albertans in need at a challenging time. Alberta’s child care system is strong because operators and workers make it strong. We’ll be there to support them now and for years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Strathmore.

Gender-based Violence and Coercive Control Prevention

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have seen in the past week direct steps to ensure employers make responsible decisions to not discriminate against their workers with respect to vaccine mandates. In the same week, November 25, the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women, marks the beginning of 16 days of activism against gender-based violence. Thank you to all members of the Legislature for their commentary and to those who are actively doing work every single day to change the culture.

It seems only fitting that while we work to protect human rights in the workplace, it includes calls for action from organizations and individuals for the prevention and the elimination of gender-based violence. These co-occurring endeavours highlight the fact that this mandate has the capacity to be extended and leveraged so that organizations across all sectors are held responsible to address instances of gender-based human rights violations, sexual violence, domestic abuse, harassment, and coercive control. For these issues, prevention is key.

Women are 51 per cent of the population and in every field valued and resilient but are at greater risk of violence due to prevailing societal culture. This has a direct impact on our economy. A cultural shift is necessary in order to allow individuals to speak up and challenge the unabating violent attitudes and behaviours in our communities. All human rights violations, regardless of organization, level of government, or institution, as they occur are continuously being swept under the carpet. Clearly, we have the strength to address these issues, especially when it comes to occupational workplace safety. All Albertans expect us to expand the strength of pertinent issues such as gender-based violence and coercive control to our agenda.

Thank you.

Government and Official Opposition Policies

Member Ceci: Mr. Speaker, in the last week Albertans have had the opportunity to hear two fundamentally different visions for the future of Alberta. The UCP government's Speech from the Throne and job-killing sovereignty act envision an Alberta where the Premier and cabinet can unilaterally amend provincial laws, where citizens have severely curtailed rights to challenge unjust government action, and where the government will focus on endless constitutional bickering instead of on growing the economy and fixing the children's health care crisis. Thankfully, the Alberta NDP opposition's alternative Speech from the Throne sets out a different vision, a vision for a better future for Alberta.

With the help of former ATB senior economist Todd Hirsch we will build a resilient economy with good jobs that Albertans can rely on for generations. We'll release a new investment framework, which will outline how we can incentivize private-sector investment, pursue innovation, and grow Alberta companies by fostering economic certainty. We will bring sustained action to help families struggling to pay their bills, and we will bring forward legislation that ensures public health care is protected and strengthened and that establishes health care service standards. Albertans can go to www.albertasfuture.ca to read the full speech.

Mr. Speaker, I've heard from hundreds of Albertans in the past week. They don't see themselves reflected in this government's antieconomy, antidemocracy, job-killing sovereignty act. They want a government that will bring stability, not chaos. They want a government who will focus on growing the economy, not driving away investment. They want to know that when their children get sick, the public health care they need will be there. And they want to know that their Premier respects democracy. I'm glad to say that they will get all those things when they vote for an Alberta NDP government on May 29, 2023. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. members, prior to calling Oral Question Period this afternoon, I'd like to bring to your attention that the green sheets of the new standing orders pursuant to Government Motion 9, effective March 30, 2022, have been placed on each of your desks. Updated standing order packages will be delivered to you in due course.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, standing up for the rights and interests of Albertans is one of our most important jobs as elected officials, but how we do that matters, and it matters when business leaders tell the government that they got it wrong. Now, the Calgary Chamber says that the sovereignty act will introduce, quote, a very significant element of risk and uncertainty to businesses in Alberta. The question is, then: why won't the Premier take the chamber's advice? Stop, think, and dial it back.

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, we know that the only thing that is creating investor uncertainty right now is the anti-industry, anti oil and gas policies of the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa. That has chased over $100 billion of investment out of our province, and that is the reason why we need to pass the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, to draw a very clear constitutional line. They need to stay in their lane so that we can stay in our lane and create the kind of business environment that is going to attract investment into oil and natural gas and all of our other sectors.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll listen to investors when they tell me that they're uncertain.

Speaking of that, it's not just the chamber. CAPP also expressed concerns yesterday – quote: we are concerned about any government policy that has the potential to create uncertainty for investors – and there will be more. So will the Premier admit that her plan is more likely to kill jobs in the oil patch than create them and revoke her ridiculous mess of an act?

Ms Smith: Well, we know that the only thing that would create investor uncertainty is if this opposition ever formed government again. In fact, when I go back and look at the investment that fled this province once they became government, we sure don't want to repeat that again. I just saw the stats, actually. We are now at the lowest level of unemployment. We haven't seen unemployment levels this low since the members opposite formed government in 2015. I think that's a testament to the fact that people are investing in this province because they have a stable government, because they know that we will protect them against federal overreach.

The CEO of Avatar Innovations in Calgary yesterday said that the sovereignty act signals to international investors that Alberta is not a safe place to do business. He warned that this plan risks federal funding that energy companies need to continue their efforts to create jobs and cut emissions. Once again, will the Premier answer the question: why is she risking Alberta's future just to cater to her far-right, fringe, separatist base? Stop it. Think of Albertans and revoke . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: You know, the only thing that creates investor uncertainty is the kind of policies that the members opposite brought in when they were in this chair, bringing through an emissions cap on the oil sands. Where do you think the federal Liberal-NDP coalition got that idea from? Now they want to come through and bring in a 42 per cent reduction in oil and gas emissions, a 30 per cent reduction in fertilizer emissions. We know that that kind of emissions reduction is a de facto production cap. That is not in line with our Constitution. We have the right to develop our resources in our own way, and I would invite the members opposite to stand with us in supporting pushing back against Ottawa.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the serious damage this will have on our economic future, there are other reasons the act has to be withdrawn, including how it runs over the rights of Indigenous people. Yesterday the chiefs of Treaty 6 said it best, quote: we believe the proposed act is self-centred; we take this opportunity to remind Albertans that we are all treaty people, and we invite non-Indigenous people to join us in opposition to this divisive proposed legislation. We stand with the chiefs. Why is the Premier ignoring them?

Ms Smith: Now, I've been delighted to have Chief Billy Morin as part of my advisory team, and he is going to work very hard with us to make sure that the chiefs understand that this approach that we're taking in the government is to make sure that we have economic reconciliation with our First Nations partners. It's very clear in the sovereignty act that we will respect Indigenous rights, respect treaty rights. In fact, I think our approach of economic reconciliation, lending out a hand to work together on major projects going across our province and our country, is what's going to lead to the best relationship with our First Nations people.

Ms Notley: Wow. Mr. Speaker, it impacts their rights if you introduce the bill before you ever speak to the treaty chiefs. Back in July the UCP signed a relationship agreement between Treaty 6 and the GOA. It set out a formalized government-to-government relationship that was supposed to be based on collaboration, commitment, and co-operation, yet when it came to introducing the Premier's flagship bill, the chiefs say that no one spoke to them. Not one phone call. To the Premier. This is your bill. Why couldn't you pick up the phone? Why were you not focused on doing . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Well, I think the answer to the question is right in the legislation: because nothing abrogates or derogates from anything in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that protects the rights of our Indigenous citizens. Section 35 is very clear. I'm surprised after all these days that the member opposite hasn't had a chance to read the bill yet, because it says right in there that we are going to respect the rights of our Indigenous . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: We are going to respect the rights of our Indigenous people. This is about asserting the rights of Albertans under the Constitution, section 92A. We have the right to develop our resources, and we're going to continue . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, that's a lovely future-tense statement, Mr. Speaker, but the fact of the matter is that the Premier has already failed to respect the rights of Indigenous people. Treaty 8 says: Premier Danielle Smith, as parliamentary Crown representative you and your government are in dishonour of Treaty 8; treaties are essential to all people, including Albertans. As with many things related to this bill, the Premier is now scrambling after the fact to consult. So why will she not do the right thing? Withdraw the bill, do meaningful consultation, and then consider reintroducing it if necessary.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition will be aware that even if she is quoting someone else's words, it's inappropriate to use a proper name of a member of the Assembly.

The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very clear to me that the provisions we are setting out in this act are designed to make sure that we are protecting the provincial rights that are guaranteed in the Constitution. That is what this is about. It's sections 92, 92A, 93, 95, and that's what we're trying to do here. The Leader of the Official Opposition . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Members of the opposition, I'm having a real challenge hearing the Premier. She has every opportunity to answer a question, just like you have one to ask it.

The Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you. I have a very good relationship with First Nations. When I was in this position before in the Legislature, I was the critic for Indigenous affairs. I've reached out to various chiefs and various Indigenous leaders, and we're going to keep doing that as we develop the province. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. the Leader of the Opposition for her third set of questions.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have heard from no less than seven different legal experts, public servants, and constitutional lawyers who confirm a simple truth: this bill gives the Premier the so-called Henry VIII power to write laws behind closed doors with zero input from this Assembly. Now, it's parliamentary to give members a chance to correct the record, so to the Premier: can you tell us where it says that the Assembly will pass a bill after the motion, or will you admit that you're the one who misread your own bill?

Ms Smith: You know, Mr. Speaker, part of the reason why we go through this process, putting through a bill and putting it through first reading and second reading and Committee of the Whole and third reading, is so that if there are any amendments that need to be made, they can be made at that time. I on this side of the Chamber am always open to hearing feedback, and if the hon. members would like to make a couple of amendments to improve the bill, we are more than happy to work collaboratively with them. I would note that in Saskatchewan, our neighbouring province, the NDP there supported the Saskatchewan government in their effort to push back against Ottawa. They voted in favour of the Saskatchewan First Act. I'd invite them to do the same.

Ms Notley: Well, based on previous claims, I swear the Premier must be writing in invisible ink, because the things she claims are just not in the bill. On the one hand we have the Premier and her ministers saying, "Trust us; we won't abuse these extraordinary powers that don't exist," and on the other hand we have public servants, lawyers, constitutional experts, and every single person who's actually read the legislation speaking about how it overrules parliamentary tradition and attacks our democracy. So if the Premier wants to go all God mode in the Legislature, why can't she just be honest about it so we can debate what it is she is trying to do to the people of Alberta?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the Leader of the Opposition, who runs to her federal counterparts asking them to disallow bills that are debated in this Legislature, I believe in the process of this Legislature. We put bills forward, we allow them to go into reading one, reading two, Committee of the Whole, where we make amendments, and then pass in third reading, and it becomes the law of the land. I invite the Leader of the Opposition and her party to be constructive in this process. I will absolutely entertain any amendments that they put forward, and I hope that we will be able to secure their support in standing up for Albertans rather than standing up for Ottawa. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, this bill creates economic and investor uncertainty, no question. That is very well established. But you know what else creates uncertainty? Having a Premier who can't read her own laws, who won't admit when she got it wrong, who seizes power and steps on the rights of Albertans while arrogantly refusing to acknowledge that she's done it. Albertans just had a Premier like that, and – spoiler alert – he resigned this week. Does the Premier want to go down the same road? Is that the way she's headed?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This, I guess, is the problem when you prewrite your questions and don't listen to the answers. I have said very clearly that we go through a process in this Legislative Assembly. This is what democracy is: you go through a process, you put forward amendments. Look, if the NDP opposition has some proposals that they want to put forward so that we can gain their support on this legislation, I would welcome it because I would like to send a very clear message to the Liberal-NDP coalition in Ottawa that all members of this Legislature will stand up for Alberta first.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition for the fourth set of questions.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the bill is beyond fixing. It must be revoked. It's a mess.

Health Care System

Ms Notley: Meanwhile the government should be focusing on the hundreds of thousands of Albertans who cannot find a family doctor, leaving many families with nowhere to go but the ER, increasing pressure there. When that happens, it creates more delays in the EMS system and more Albertans waiting in pain. So today our party is introducing a pragmatic framework to make things better. Our bill would create a process for public health delivery standards to be set so all Albertans have high-quality care in a well-functioning system. Could the Premier consider focusing away from her mess of a bill and instead supporting our Bill 1?

Ms Smith: I'm looking forward to having more support from the members opposite on our proposal for how we're going to reform health care. We listened; we heard. We know that health care is the number one issue. It's part of the reason why we've asked the board to step aside and we've put in place Dr. John Cowell as the official administrator. And I must tell you that every single day we are going to get feedback and be able to drive changes through Alberta Health Services to make sure that we are not only addressing the long waits in emergency rooms, making sure that we have efficient drop-off for paramedics, and we're going to be reducing the surgical wait times. I'm looking forward to the NDP supporting us on that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that instead of taking accountability and showing leadership to fix health care, she's turning around and blaming everyone else, including front-line health workers, for her own government's failure. She has collapsed accountability down to one person, as she's said, and now she's having secret conversations behind closed doors with that person and who knows who else. No one seems to know. She won't tell us. Our bill would create transparency. It would create accountability. It would ensure results for Alberta patients. Why is the Premier so afraid of those principles?

Ms Smith: Every decision that we are making is putting patients first. Every decision we are making is putting our doctors and our nurses and our paramedics and other front-line health professionals first. The members opposite want to continue to support the administration doing study after study and paying consultant after consultant. That is fundamentally the problem: way too much money going into the layers of management at the top and way too little money going into the front line to make sure that we do have enough doctors in rural Alberta, we do have enough nurses on the front line when we face pressure, and we do have enough paramedics to get people efficiently to the hospital so they can be treated. That's what we support.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the problem is that she's got no plan to deal with that. Meanwhile we have wait times in our children's hospital that are going above 15, sometimes 20 hours. The Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary has had to build a temporary trailer to extend the size of the waiting room. The fact is that this can't go on, and the fixes cannot go on behind closed doors. Our approach would guarantee that those kids are treated inside a hospital, not outside, that Albertans would see how that work was done. Why is the Premier more concerned about phoning movie sets about vaccine mandates than transparently and effectively attacking the problem and the crisis . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: I know that the member opposite – her approach is: we'll just trust the experts, hands off, and we won't have any direction given to the biggest expense of our government. That approach has failed. It's part of the reason why we ended up in the situation that we're in today. We have made great progress in making sure that we're putting more money into the front line. We are giving more money to the front line, and we are making the decisions now that are finally freeing up decision-making at the local level so that we can make decisions in the best interests of Albertans, and we can make sure that we are always supporting our front-line health professionals. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan has a question.

Early Childhood Educator Wage Supplement

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's government is providing a one-time payment and wage top-up for early childhood educators. This is great news for child care workers, who are the heartbeat of our child care system, and this is great news for families who rely on these workers for quality child care. With Christmas just around the corner, can the minister please explain how this decision will improve wages for child care operators and when?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member today identified, we announced additional support measures for our front-line early childhood educators, who will not only see additional wage top-ups, but they will also see a significant one-time cash payment just before the holidays. As you know, this is one of the most expensive times of the year for families. Full-time ECEs will receive a one-time payment of $900, and part-time ECEs will receive $450. Our government will continue to support families and our child care workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for that answer. Given that our government supports parental choice in child care and education and given that our government has worked very hard to protect Alberta's diverse child care system, can the minister please explain how these wage top-ups will help both private and not-for-profit operators attract new workers and create a more viable system overall?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. By increasing wages, we are encouraging and incentivizing our current and prospective workforce to attain higher level certifications, which will spur further investment and space creation by child care entrepreneurs. These new, competitive wages will be able to attract new child care workers and ensure that with increased staffing we are able to provide more spaces and improved care. Our government will ensure that both private and not-for-profit operators will have the support that they need to continue to create a more viable system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the minister for that answer. Given that Alberta has come back strong from the pandemic and is leading the nation in job growth, creating more demand than ever for quality child care, and given that this new funding will help bolster our child care system for child care workers and the families who rely on them, can the minister explain how this funding will help get Albertans, particularly women, back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question. The majority of child care facilities in this province are in fact owned and operated by women. Our announcement this morning will support our province's amazing female entrepreneurs and their businesses and will ensure that their employees continue to be supported while incentivizing all of our child care entrepreneurs to open new facilities and increase spaces, which will also increase employment and training opportunities for all.

Thank you.

2:10 Homeless Supports and Affordable Housing

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, a homeless Albertan died yesterday due to the lack of shelter. The same thing happened the day before and the day before. The death toll is rising and entirely preventable. Cold winters in Alberta are never a surprise, yet there have been multiple cold weather related deaths, a staggering number of injuries, and an alarmingly high rate of amputation. The minister likes to brag about his funding of temporary winter shelters, which should not be temporary and, in fact, should be balanced with funding for permanent homes. Why is the UCP allowing Albertans to live in reprehensible conditions?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her advocacy and her passion on this issue. This is a personal issue for me, too. As somebody who used to work in shelters and has known many people who've lost their lives to cold weather, knowing many more who've lost their life to addiction on our streets, I am committed to working with our municipalities to make sure that we have an appropriate amount of shelter space in this province so that nobody has to face the cold this winter. Last night I'm happy to report that we had 88 per cent – I guess I'm not happy to report this, but last night we were at 88 per cent occupancy, so there was space in our shelter, and we're going to continue to work to make sure that there is enough space.

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, the government has failed to implement a winter emergency protocol and adequately support municipalities. Given that despite the responsibility to fund shelters and housing, this Premier has seen fit to abolish the housing ministry, expecting cities to step up while the UCP does nothing, and given that last night the city of Edmonton used their emergency reserve to fund 209 additional spaces and given that local leaders have been brought to tears begging for aid, can the minister explain the rationale for forcing municipalities to fill in the gaps created by this government's inaction and bad decision-making?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to report that we are taking a proactive response to addressing homelessness. This government – this government – doubled shelter space, permanent shelter space, when we took office, and now we've doubled shelter space heading into the winter so that we make sure that nobody has to face the cold. We are taking a proactive approach to making sure that we can end people's experience of homelessness. We've added $19 million in Edmonton alone this year to make sure that there are supports so that we can help people move beyond the street. In addition to that, we're investing in additional supports for mental health and addiction so we can help end people's experience of . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: The price is paid in life and limb. Given that we don't know the total number of people dying on the streets as the province does not monitor deaths and given that leaving someone unhoused costs more than housing them and given that this government may leave $1.5 billion in funding on the table for the third time while letting the Premier's petty rivalries and sovereignty act take priority over helping Albertans, Minister, what will it be? Will this government do what it takes to prevent people from freezing to death, or will he stand by the sovereignty act and leave money in Ottawa that could literally save lives?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we have an important question to ask, and I ask this sincerely: do we work towards adding more permanent shelter spaces, or do we work towards adding more solutions that are actually going to help end people's experience of homelessness? That's what we're doing. In regard to the earlier question in regard to where housing fits, I am the housing minister, and I'm taking this very seriously. We are working towards expanding housing across this province to make sure people have a place to call home. Through our stronger foundations plan we are partnering with municipalities, we are partnering with not-for-profits to leverage government resources to make the best use and make sure that we have homes for people.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, all Albertans expect their elected officials to stand up for the rights and interests of our great province, no question. But this week Albertans learned that the sovereignty act is not a defence mechanism but, rather, a full on power grab. The Premier is granting herself and her cabinet the ability to write laws in secret, in the backroom, behind closed doors. No votes, no review, no checks or balances. This is the most unprecedented abuse of cabinet authority in the history of our province. To the Premier: why does Bill 1 look like something less Albertan and more like something out of Vladimir Putin's playbook?

Mr. Shandro: Oh, come on, Mr. Speaker. We're not hearing from the NDP; we're hearing from the Anti-DP over here. This is the caucus that had their leader asking Justin Trudeau to step up and void and overrule legislation passed by the democratically elected members of this Assembly. Will this member stand in this Assembly now and apologize to Albertans for that advocacy? Just say yes. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, given that all of this dictatorial power grabbing is exactly the opposite of what our investment community is looking for and given that the Calgary Chamber, CAPP, and many more are lining up against the sovereignty act because they know it will kill jobs, drive away investment, and harm our economic future, will the Premier or perhaps one of her ministers professing to care about the economy ...

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Mr. Bilous: ... stand and explain why the Premier's push for power is more important than Alberta's economic prosperity? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

A point of order is noted at 2:16.

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, none of that is true. This begins with a process that is a resolution in this Chamber, an open, democratic process for all of us to pass and all of us to vote on. What the NDP are mad about, what they're upset about is a government that would stand up against Justin Trudeau. What they want is for us to capitulate to the Trudeau-NDP alliance in Ottawa, and it makes them angry that this is a government that is now proposing to stand up against that alliance in Ottawa.

Mr. Bilous: Given that I was proud to serve as minister of economic development – in fact, it was a highlight of my career – I'm hearing from my stakeholders that they are terrified and they're considering pulling out of Alberta altogether. To the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development: does he commit in this House here and now that if one investor pulls out of Alberta or a single job is lost as a result of this undemocratic and harmful sovereignty act, he will stand up to the Premier and help us defeat this disastrous legislation?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I think it's rich coming from the NDP, that drove out thousands of jobs, billions of dollars in economic investment. Where are we today? We're at record levels of weekly earnings for Albertans. We're at record levels of venture capital investment in Alberta. We're at record levels of so much investment in Alberta, and no thanks to the NDP. It's thanks to this government and future-looking government that stands up and sticks up for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Energy Industries

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's oil and gas industries are the leader in technology and innovation. We also exceed global environmental, human rights, and labour standards, which is why we are continuing to promote Alberta's energy in venues like the Canadian Energy Centre and events like COP 27. I also believe that it is important that we continue to create energy corridors while building partnerships with like-minded provinces, states, and countries. Alberta energy is the solution to the world's energy crisis. To the Energy minister: how do you plan to put Alberta on the map and make us the first choice when it comes to providing oil and gas?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy is rising.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's oil and gas industry is a leader in technology and innovation. We set the bar for global environmental, human rights, and labour standards, which is why we continue to promote Alberta's energy through avenues like the Canadian Energy Centre and events like COP 27. We also believe that it is important that we continue to create energy corridors while building partnerships with like-minded provinces, states, and countries. Alberta energy is the solution to the global energy crisis and powering a low-carbon world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the pilots currently under consideration is the liability management incentive program. This program is two-pronged. First, it is to encourage the cleanup of some of the oldest and most troubling wells. Second, after cleanup is complete, companies will receive a royalty credit on new production. This has the potential to be a huge win for industry, the province, and the people of Alberta. To the same minister: what policies are you working on to encourage reclamation, and how will this help Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As mentioned, the province is currently working, and under consideration is a liability management incentive program. The program is two-pronged: first, to encourage the cleanup of some of the oldest and most troubling wells, dating back decades; and second, after the cleanup is complete, companies will receive a royalty credit on new production only, creating jobs and encouraging new investment. This has the potential to be a huge win for the province, industry, and, most importantly, the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. the member.

Mr. Rowswell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the sovereignty act will get Ottawa's attention. We just so happen to have the most affordable, reliable, responsible oil and gas on the planet. This act should be a reminder to the federal government that Alberta is the rightful owner of our resources and we're serious about defending our interests. Although diversifying our energy sector is important, oil and gas is not going anywhere in the near future. By opposing Alberta, Canada is supporting dictator oil, which should be unacceptable to Canadians. What strategies are being implemented to stand up to the federal government infringing on Alberta's resources?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the sovereignty act will get Ottawa's attention. This act should be a reminder to the federal government that Alberta is the rightful owner of our resources, and we are serious about defending our interests, which just so happens to have the most responsible, reliable, and secure oil and gas on this planet. Although diversifying our energy sector is important, oil and gas is not going anywhere soon. By opposing Alberta oil in support of dictator oil, Canada is going a direction that does not align with the values of Canadians.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In an opinion piece published on August 23, 2022, the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development described the sovereignty act as "likely unconstitutional," "virtue signalling," and said that it "would create . . . worse uncertainty" for our economy and investors than anything that Ottawa had done to the economy. The minister was then trying to win the UCP leadership race, which he didn't win. Now today the jobs minister says that the act is great despite it being worse than we could have ever imagined. Can the minister explain what changed? Did he trade his own ethics for a cabinet post?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development.

Mr. Jean: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so proud to work in a government and work with a Premier that listens, unlike what I've seen from past Premiers, especially in the NDP government. We have a Premier that listens not just to caucus and cabinet but continues to listen to Albertans. That's why we've changed some things in the sovereignty act. That's why we're continuing to be open minded, to listen even to the opposition, that might come up with a good idea from time to time. But we're not going to take any lessons from the NDP, who drove our economy into a terrible place. We're going to take steps to make our economy better and to stand up for Albertans, especially stand up to Ottawa.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the Minister of Finance told Albertans to vote for him so that he could stop the sovereignty act, which he said was a ticking time bomb and was not a solution for Alberta's problems, but given that those people who believed him were blindsided by his rush to reclaim his seat at the cabinet table and now his steadfast praise of the bill, that's worse than anyone could imagine, and given that the minister's own stakeholders are slamming the bill, including the Calgary Chamber, did the Minister of Finance just sell out Alberta's economic future so he could keep his seat at cabinet?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I did have legitimate concerns over the concept of the sovereignty act. I've shared my concerns throughout the development of the bill, and those concerns have been heard. My concern was that this bill would be constitutional, my concern was that this bill would not undermine the rule of law, and my concern was that it would be implemented in a way that would provide business certainty because we've done too much to attract investment and create jobs in the economy to see it unwound. This bill will not unwind it.

Mr. Sabir: Given that the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism was a fierce critic of the sovereignty act until she got her cabinet seat under the new Premier and given that in August, while campaigning, the minister demanded a general election before it was passed so that the public could weigh in on a bill that she said provides no value to Albertans beyond thumping our chests but that today she says that her concerns were addressed when the title of the bill was changed, can the minister tell this House for the record if she has actually read the bill and what specifically changed in it and perhaps cite a section?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism.

Mrs. Sawhney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course I have read the bill. I have read it multiple times. It's no secret that I was adamantly opposed to a previous version of the sovereignty act, but to the Premier's credit she took the feedback from cabinet and caucus and made significant changes to the bill that have made it palatable. Today I was speaking to international investors who are very satisfied with Bill 1, who are excited to bring investment into Alberta.

Organizational Vaccine Policies

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Goehring: Mr. Speaker, this week many professionals in our film sector were nervous over comments made by this Premier where she claimed she and her ministers were calling groups to interfere in their business operations. One example she gave even exclaimed to have withheld government funding for a desired result. The film sector was very concerned about this. As you're aware, many Alberta projects rely on grants. Now they're fearful they will be denied the funding if they don't allow the Premier to interfere in their private business operations. Will the Premier promise this sector that she won't meddle with their business function for her own ideological stance?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture has risen.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has always worked in hand with our partners, including stakeholders, respectfully. Regarding this change of the vaccine mandate, on November 15 my department shared my concerns over the obsolete federal vaccine policy that prevented many Albertan athletes from participating in it. To my satisfaction, three days later the organizing committee publicly revoked that obsolete policy. Today Albertans have more opportunity to participate in the games, and we are very pleased about that.

Ms Goehring: Given that one of the film groups in Alberta e-mailed the Premier's office asking for clarification on her comments, saying that, quote, productions in place are now concerned about these words; it could drive away business, investment, and production and licences being signed; the mere mention of it could limit employment projects being drawn to Alberta. End quote. Given that the Premier's investment-killing sovereignty act is raising red flags across multiple industries to stay away from Alberta, will the Minister of Culture promise film groups he will not withhold funding from projects based on what they create and secure investments on?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased to be able to rise today and talk about the film industry. The film industry is investing record amounts into Alberta because they understand we're pro business, and this is an important industry for our future. But we will continue to strongly encourage all Alberta employers to respect the decision of their employees and customers as it relates to their personal health choices. Vaccines are certainly none of my business about personal choices, and it's certainly none of theirs.

Ms Goehring: Given that we have varying reports from this government on the controls their investment-killing sovereignty act will give them, one from the Justice minister telling the media it's correct that cabinet will have unilateral power to change provincial laws and another from the Premier claiming that's not true, and given that to have sustained and substantial investment in the province, especially in the creative industries, we need consistency and stability in our government, not this chaos and confusion we see on the other side, how are investors and film shops supposed to believe this government when they change tune moment to moment? They're like a really bad movie over there, Mr. Speaker, and . . .

The Speaker: I may just provide a little bit of caution. I'm having a bit of difficulty connecting the third question to the previous two questions. I appreciate tangentially they were about the film and television industry, but the connection is broad at best.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, she is right about one thing: investors want certainty. They want to have confidence in our economy, and they do right now, so much, in fact, that net migration to Alberta is at record levels. People are moving, flocking to our province because they understand they've got certainty and they've got, more importantly, a Premier and a government that is going to stand up for them, stand up for the industries. [interjections]

The Speaker: The minister has the call.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a Premier and a government that is going to stand up for the industry, stand up for the businesses, and stand up for all Albertans against Ottawa and infringement on our jurisdiction. What more could Albertans want?

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Athabasca University

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the great institutions in my constituency is Athabasca University. The university was relocated to Athabasca from Edmonton in 1984 to help create jobs and foster economic growth and opportunity in the northern region. I've heard from many constituents who are concerned that Athabasca University's move to a near-virtual model has diminished AU's physical presence in the area, as jobs leave the town, straining the region's economic outlook. To the Minister of Advanced Education: does this government share those concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I want to commend him on relaying the concerns of his constituents to me and the government more broadly.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we share those concerns, which is why our government has taken action to work with the university to create more jobs in the community. More specifically, as recently as yesterday the board of governors of Athabasca University has agreed upon a new investment management agreement that provides stipulations to increase job numbers in the community. I'm very proud that we've taken this step. When the issue was raised when the NDP was in government, they did nothing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a key factor in ensuring the development and sustainability of the Athabasca region is having physical employees in Athabasca as well as having local talent as a part of those employees and given that last night the minister announced that an investment management agreement was signed with the board of governors of the Athabasca University, to the same minister: can you provide specific details of what that agreement contains?

Mr. Nicolaides: Sure. I'd be happy to, Mr. Speaker. The investment management agreement stipulates that 44 per cent of the institution's executive team must be based in Athabasca within three years. To put that in real terms, that's 4 out of 9 executive members. It also stipulates that the university should increase the number of local employees from its current base of 252 to 277. Again, that's within three years. This is particularly important. The university has an important role to play in bringing jobs to the community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for his dedication and for his responsiveness to the concerns community members have raised.

Given that Athabasca University was originally created as a correspondence university and given that it has grown into a world leader in higher learning for those Albertans and Canadians who can't physically travel to classes in urban centres, to the same minister: how will this new agreement ensure Athabasca remains a home for the online delivery of learning and can continue to succeed into the future?

Mr. Nicolaides: Mr. Speaker, Athabasca University is a critical gem for the province of Alberta and all of Canada. As our premier online learning provider it ensures that individuals who can't physically get on to a university campus are able to access postsecondary education. I'm looking forward to working with the institution to continue to strengthen their online delivery model, with a strong base of operations in the town of Athabasca.

Wage Growth and Cost of Living

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, recent data shows that Alberta workers have the second-slowest wage growth in Canada. Alberta's average weekly earnings grew by just 2.6 per cent, far behind the rest of Canada. During a time of rising costs, this is completely unacceptable and shows that this government can't get the job done on protecting Alberta's economy. During the worst affordability crisis we've seen in generations, wages are not keeping up, and workers are falling further behind. Why does this government think it's acceptable that Alberta's wage growth is so far behind the rest of the country?

Mr. Jean: That's a good question, Mr. Speaker, but let me tell you that when you're number one, it moves a little slower than the rest, and we are. We have the highest weekly earnings in the country, and not only that – good news; I appreciate the member giving me this opportunity – we have 100,000 jobs here in Alberta that are not filled right now. So come on out to Alberta. It is the land of opportunity for individual employees and for businesses.

Ms Gray: Given that in budget estimates the Finance minister said, "We're predicting average weekly earnings to go up by well over 3 per cent... in excess of inflation" and given that clearly the Finance minister's prediction was incredibly wrong and many families are suffering from the additional costs that this government has put on them – deindexing taxes, park fees, new fees for seniors' medical exams, skyrocketing car insurance, utilities; it goes on and on, Mr. Speaker – does the Finance minister understand that his government's paltry utilities rebate isn't solving this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government inherited a fiscal and economic train wreck from the members opposite. From day one we worked hard to position this economy for competitiveness, investment attraction, job creation, and economic diversification, and our plan worked. Our economy is growing and leading the nation in economic growth. The economy is diversifying at rates I've not seen in my lifetime. In this year, since January 1, 28 per cent of the jobs in all of Canada were created in Alberta.

Ms Gray: Given, Mr. Speaker, that it's clear the Finance minister does not understand the crisis Alberta families are experiencing and given that their poorly thought-out inflation-relief measures leave out 2 million Albertans and given that prices are continuing to grow at a rate far beyond Alberta's anemic wage growth rates under this government, I know they thought a labour minister was something optional, but perhaps, as Alberta workers fall further and further behind, this Premier may want to consider actually having one of her endless array of cabinet ministers care and fight for workers.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Everyone in this Chamber has heard from their constituents about the challenges associated with record inflation and the heightened cost of living, and that's why we're pleased to come forward with immediate relief. Over $2 billion will be announced over the coming weeks to support the vast majority and, in many cases, all Albertans. This includes an estimated benefit of $900 alone to an average household, and there's more for seniors, families with children, and disabled Albertans, who we know have been hit particularly hard by the inflation and affordability crisis.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, from the day it was elected, this government's attitude towards our front-line health care workers can be summed up with two words, aggression and attack. The UCP tore up deals. They threatened pay cuts. They attacked their wages, accused them of playing politics, repeatedly chose to underfund them and the life-saving work that they do. Now front-line health care workers report that the Health minister is refusing to meet with them to talk about how they can work together to recruit and retain more colleagues to support their heroic efforts to keep our health care system going. Why is the health care minister dragging his feet on meeting with the front-line workers he claims he supports?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. His information is out of date. I have meetings scheduled with each of the leaders of the health care units to talk about that exact issue in terms of attraction and retention. I'd like to point out a few other things. We have invested more money in health care than ever in this province, $22 billion this year. We added $600 million this year, $600 million next year, $600 million the year after that. We have more doctors working in this province than ever before. We have more health nurses working in this province than ever before. We are expanding and building capacity to deliver the health care that Albertans need.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, this government has longer wait times than ever before, more Albertans than ever before who can't see a doctor. Given that while this minister is happy not meeting with Albertans on the front lines who deliver health care and the Premier is consulting with a secret group of supposed doctors and given that she publicly stated that this shadowy group of advisers was apparently eager to talk to Paul Alexander, a man who called the COVID-19 vaccine a bioweapon, can the Health minister explain why front-line health care workers are still waiting outside the building for a meeting while fringe conspiracy theorists apparently are being given a path directly to the Premier's office?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, that simply is incorrect. Over the course of the summer and also into the fall I travelled across the province, held 41 workshops to talk with health care workers and those in the continuing care sector and the primary care sector as well as health care advocates and included a number of unionized workers, AHS employees. I spoke with over 1,100 employees and representatives from across the province, getting their input. I have heard them, and I am looking forward to meeting with the unions to talk about: how do we further expand our work?

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, given that this Premier seems to support her shadow advisers arranging to meet with Paul Alexander, who encouraged the rampant spread of COVID-19 amongst children and in addition told millions of vaccinated Albertans they were infected with a bioweapon, and given that this suggests that these discredited, disturbing views are getting an audience with this Premier while credible health care professionals are told to take a hike, will the Minister of Health advise this House just who is advising the Premier when it comes to the health and safety of Albertans? Will he table the names of this advisory group of apparent fans of Paul Alexander?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our office continues to work with health care professionals from across the province. We continue to listen to health care professionals to be able to provide services to Albertans. We are working with the AMA. I was very pleased to get an agreement with the AMA and look at: how do we actually deal with the challenges together? We are working with Albertans. We are working with health care workers to be able to improve the services and ensure that Albertans get the health care services that they need.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of Members' Statements.

The hon. the Government House Leader, I believe, has a brief question to ask.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to advise the Assembly that pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) the daily Routine may continue beyond 3 p.m.

Members' Statements

Economic Indicators

Mr. Long: Mr. Speaker, when we formed government, our province was in shambles – years of economic decline, rising debts – and our future looked grim. Thank goodness we got hired, because now Alberta is on a roll with a rapidly growing and diversifying economy. We had record investments in venture capital in 2020 of $445 million, beat that record in 2021 with $561 million. In Q3 this year we are already at $509 million and continuing to increase while the rest of the country is on the downturn.

On the tech front we are seeing thousands of jobs created. Infosys and Mphasis each announced a thousand jobs in Calgary, Amazon Web Services announced a $4 billion investment and a thousand jobs in Calgary, and RBC announced a key 300 jobs. Why are those jobs key? Because we pulled those jobs right away from Toronto's Bay Street and put them where? That's right: Calgary.

We are reeling over a record year in film and television, with over a billion dollars of investment. We have had record years in agriculture and forestry. We are becoming a logistics hub with major investments in distribution centres, including little known names like Walmart and Rona-Lowe's. This is in addition to multibillion-dollar announcements in hydrogen from Air Products and an ethylene cracker and derivatives facility by Dow Chemical. Tourism is also roaring back to prepandemic levels, with a growing trajectory that I anticipate will surpass the double of revenues that we are aiming for.

All of this has led to the aviation sector flying under the radar, but I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is taking off in this province. De Havilland announced a 1500-job manufacturing facility, WestJet is moving from eastern Canada back to Alberta, Flair Airlines announced a 5,000-job growth plan, and Lynx Air is expanding by several thousand jobs as well.

Mr. Speaker, we have the hottest economy in the country. There are over a hundred thousand job openings. We balanced the budget on $70 oil, and because we have cut red tape, provided investor certainty, and lowered the corporate tax rate, we have seen a billion more dollars of corporate tax revenue than at the NDP rate of 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is back, Alberta is calling, and we're just getting started.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka has a statement.

Alberta in Canada

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past September 1 celebrated the inaugural Alberta Day in recognition of Alberta joining the existing Canadian Confederation on September 1, 1905. The champion and architect of Alberta joining Confederation was Sir Frederick Haultain, Premier of the Legislature of the North-West Territories. There's a building in his honour on these grounds, but few know of the heroic work he did in negotiating for a fair and equal status in the Confederation dream.

His endless challenge was to confront the colonial attitudes and behaviours of central Canada. The first great struggle was to gain recognition for the legislative authority of the Northwest Territories. We sit here today, so clearly that was wrested from Ottawa. The second, pressing great challenge was to gain adequate funding and budget control to provide the services needed for the rapidly growing west. This Ottawa continually refused to do, and it even limited the power of the province to raise its own funding.

One infamous act of skulduggery by Ottawa was with regard to Yukon, which was then part of the North-West Territories. When gold was discovered there, the Territories rightly expected that there would be a source of revenue. Ottawa also saw this need, though, and immediately carved out the Yukon as a separate territory as a way to ensure that all revenues from the gold rush went to Ottawa, not Alberta and Saskatchewan. They would continue to be hamstrung and kept in a begging status for an annual but minuscule allocation from Ottawa.

Equally egregious arrangements by Ottawa to hinder the west were the Dominion Lands Act and the Canadian Pacific Railway Act. Premier Haultain continued to seek a fair and equal deal. His success was always limited by delay and outright denial by the Ottawa elite. Haultain proposed a province which included the territories of Saskatchewan and Alberta united; he felt this would make for a stronger province with fewer expenses. Ottawa flatly denied that, wanting two provinces in order to keep them weaker and divided so that Ottawa could maintain control.

Thank you, Premier Haultain, for your determined resolve to enter into a fair and equal Confederation agreement and . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Child Care

Ms Pancholi: Yesterday was the National Day of Action for early learning and child care, calling for a system of early learning and child care which properly compensates early childhood educators, provides access for all families, and ensures quality. The Alberta NDP is proud to add our voices to this call; but more than that, we will act.

Albertans know which party has always been committed to affordable, quality child care to support our economy, working parents, and children's early learning, and that's the Alberta NDP. The UCP only cares about child care when they want to play games with the federal government. They waited three and a half years to finally increase educator wage top-ups while, at the same time, the Premier's throne speech calls the federal funding they're using to do it an intentional interference and an unconstitutional federal program. They're jeopardizing parents' access to affordable child care and the child care workforce with their job-killing sovereignty act.

Since we know child care is critical to economic growth, the Premier is showing once again how bad she is for Alberta's economy. We understand that a responsible government stands up for Albertans by doing the work. That means funding child care properly. An Alberta NDP government will increase provincial funding for child care, not underfund it, siphon dollars away to the war room, or wait for the feds to pay for it, like the UCP. We'll address the number one issue facing all child care providers: attracting and retaining qualified early childhood educators.

Let me be clear: we would have increased wages the day the federal deal was signed. While the UCP fails to meet their target of 10,000 new nonprofit spaces, we won't fail because we will work with operators, nonprofits, and municipalities to fund it properly and get it done. We won't play games and delay the cost-control framework for for-profit child care providers, like the UCP. We need new spaces for Alberta families now.

We will include the thousands of Alberta families who use out of school care, because all families are struggling with affordability right now. The Alberta NDP has never wavered on this. We are committed to a quality, affordable, accessible system of early learning and child care in Alberta, and we will get the job done.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Government Motion 11 in my name: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its opposition to any action taken by the government of Canada to disallow a law passed by the Legislative Assembly."

Introduction of Bills

Bill 201

Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and request leave to introduce Bill 201, the Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act.

If passed, this bill will make a real difference in the lives of Albertans who need help when they get sick or injured. This bill compels the establishment of health delivery standards and then requires the government to be held accountable on delivering on those standards. There is a crisis in health care right now. Albertans should be able to expect an ambulance to arrive within minutes, to be able to access an emergency room within a few hours, and to see a family doctor within a day or two. This legislation would require governments of any party to be transparent and held accountable to delivering those standards within public health care. I hope that all members in the Assembly will support it and allow it to be debated fully as a primary priority in this House.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for first reading lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 2:50 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 201 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to request leave to introduce Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022.

Charity is the greatest amongst all virtues. It has been the watchword of Albertans and the watermark of our province since our conception. Through every crisis, from dust bowls to wildfires, Albertans have come to their neighbours' aid through charities, and these charities are beloved institutions in need of support more now than ever. That's why I am so pleased to introduce this private member's bill today.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

The Speaker: Congratulations to all members on a first-reading bill.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, in accordance with section 4(7) of the Election Act and section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I am pleased to table the 2021-22 annual report for Elections Alberta. Pursuant to sections 19(1) and 19(5) of the Auditor General Act it is also my honour to table the required number of copies of the results report for the year ended March 31, 2022, for the office of the Auditor General.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre, I have you on my list.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Premier's policy paper in which she argues for, amongst other things, the creation of health savings accounts to help Albertans get used to the concept of paying out of pocket for health care, including currently insured services like visits to their family doctor.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings?

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is rising and moving about the Chamber. I'm not sure if she has a tabling or if she's just wandering while the Speaker is speaking.

Are there others?

Seeing none, I do have four tablings to make: the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner 2021-2022 annual report, the office of the Child and Youth Advocate 2021-2022 annual report, Public Interest Commissioner 2021-2022 annual report, the Property Rights Advocate annual report 2019-2021. That concludes my tablings.

3:10 Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Minister LaGrange, Minister of Education, College of Alberta School Superintendents 2021-22 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order, and at 2:16 the Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Schow: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I rise on a point of order, 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically the portion about using language that causes a disruption within the Chamber. The time when the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was speaking, asking his question, he said – and I do have the benefit of the Blues – the following: “To the Premier: why does Bill 1 look like something less Albertan and more like something out of Vladimir Putin’s playbook?” I do find that this kind of language absolutely causes disruption within this Chamber, comparing policies or a bill in the Alberta Legislature to something out of a brutal, dare I say, dictator out of Russia who is currently invading Ukraine, and this called by a member whose family lineage is from Ukraine. I do find this to be quite disruptive, quite inappropriate, and I would ask that that member apologize and not use further language. This is uncharacteristic for that member, and I don’t understand why he would choose to use this kind of language in this context.

The Speaker: The hon. the Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This language and this comparison were chosen because this bill is currently debating a piece of legislation that looks remarkably similar to the actions we see from dictators in other countries. Putin is a dictator who makes decisions behind closed doors, who denies evidence and says that things are one way when there is proof that they are not. True democracies debate legislation and laws in public. They don’t, quote, try something new by subverting democratic debate and transparency. In Bill 1 we see powers allowing cabinet to make decisions behind closed doors. The language chosen was deliberate. It is not a point of order. I think it is an apt comparison, and I look forward to continuing to debate Bill 1 here in the Legislature as well as in the public, in the media, where similar comparisons are being made. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The hon. the Government House Leader will come to order.

Are there others who wish to join or provide new information to the debate?

I am prepared to rule. While I would provide caution to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview – it is a very slippery slope that one heads down when making such comparisons, but for the purposes of this point of order I will quote the hon. Betty Boothroyd, the Speaker of the House of Commons in the U.K., when she said: you’ve got to ensure that the holders of an opinion, however unpopular, are allowed to get their views across. I consider this matter a matter of debate. However, I do provide some caution to the hon. member when making comparisons to such world leaders or dictators. I consider this matter dealt with and concluded.

We are at Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

[Adjourned debate November 30: Mr. Hunter]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie has risen to join in the debate.

Mrs. Allard: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my honour to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. This bill seeks to provide a clear framework outlining how Alberta will stand up to Ottawa and federal overreach and preserve our constitutional and provincial rights as Albertans. Albertans are proud to be Albertan, and we are proud to be Canadian. We love both our nation and our home province dearly. That said, Albertans are tired of having our economic prosperity obstructed and provincial jurisdiction encroached upon by federal overreach and federal politicians such as Justin Trudeau and Jagmeet Singh.

The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, if passed, will be used as a shield to protect Albertans from any federal overreach and interference in areas of Alberta’s jurisdiction, overreach, Mr. Speaker, that is costing Alberta’s economy billions of dollars each year in lost investment and is costing Alberta families untold jobs and opportunities, damaging interference in the areas of private property, natural resources, agriculture, forestry, firearms, regulation of the economy, and delivery of health, education, and other social programs. We want made-in-Alberta solutions. Through this legislation the Premier has not only shown that she listens to Albertans, but she’s also demonstrated her dedication to protecting our province and its people.

If passed, this act will address federal overreach by providing a legislative framework to protect Albertans from federal legislation or policies that are unconstitutional and/or harmful to our province, our people, or economic prosperity. It will address federal interference by enforcing the Canadian Constitution’s division of powers in recognition of both the federal and provincial governments’ respective exclusive and sovereign areas of constitutional jurisdiction. That’s both, Mr. Speaker. The act will protect our province by providing authority to the cabinet when authorized by the Legislative Assembly under the act. I’ll say that again: it will protect our province by providing authority to the cabinet, when authorized by the Legislative Assembly under the act, to direct provincial entities to not enforce specific federal laws or policies with provincial resources.

Despite these numerous benefits, the legislation introduced has been vilified by the NDP as being divisive and unconstitutional. In reality, Mr. Speaker, this bill was created to be respectful of court decisions, respectful of Indigenous and treaty rights and the constitutional rights of diverse provinces within a united Canada. It is notable, for example, that our neighbouring province of Saskatchewan has passed very similar legislation in that province. Despite dangerous and false rhetoric coming from the NDP, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act will assert provincial jurisdiction already delineated in the Canadian Constitution. Additionally, Alberta will continue to respect, not disregard, court rulings. If the Alberta government's use of the act against any federal initiative is challenged in court, the decision of the court will be respected and upheld.

While we are on the topic of disinformation, I'd like to take this time to clarify the intent of this bill. There is nothing in the act that relates in any way to the topic of separation. This is simply fearmongering from the members opposite, Mr. Speaker. The act will not be used to create an independent Alberta. Rather, it is about making Alberta more prosperous while remaining within a more unified Canada.

Speaking of fearmongering, the NDP also like to argue that the act will risk creating economic chaos. Mr. Speaker, in fact, the use of the act won't harm Alberta's economy whatsoever. Instead, it will help protect Alberta's freedoms, interests, economic growth, and prosperity from intrusive federal policies and legislation that have caused hundreds of billions of dollars – hundreds of billions of dollars – to flee Alberta to other jurisdictions over the past decade. By re-establishing the rule of constitutional law back into the Canadian legal system, businesses will be able to flourish from the resulting increase in stability and predictability here in Alberta and right across Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this government has been committed to ensuring that Alberta's voice remains strong on our priorities, our interests, and our concerns. As we continue to remain true to our word, our government is now taking action to stand up for Albertans and get a better deal for Alberta within Canada. Protecting Albertans from federal government overreach, defending Alberta's interests, and enhancing trade and investments are critical to Alberta's economic future and, by extension, the future generations of Albertans that we are here to serve. The Premier has been clear that we will respond to unconstitutional federal encroachments on areas of provincial jurisdiction and develop made-in-Alberta strategies to manage our own resources.

Mr. Speaker, this act allows us to stay true to our word, to stand up for Albertans and the future of our province, and that is why I support Bill 1, so that we can continue to focus on the meaningful work that keeps Albertans prosperous and our voice respected. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations, officially being in the chair as Deputy Chair of Committees. It's my pleasure and honour to rise to speak to Bill 1 today, the sovereignty act, and I want to start off by stating what we all know. I want to start off by stating that every legislator in this Chamber stands up for Alberta first and foremost and that Alberta's interests are our top priority. That is why we are provincial politicians and not federal politicians.

Mr. Speaker, I understand the rationale behind the Premier bringing up this bill. However, this bill is damaging and has already caused damage to Alberta's reputation. I'm not speaking just from my own words. I appreciate that members may say, "Well, that's your opinion," but we as a caucus and myself personally have talked to many business leaders across the province and have heard not just the concerns but the fact that the tabling of this bill has already caused damage to Alberta's reputation. It's caused damage because, as most members know, the business community globally looks for jurisdictions that are stable and predictable and have certainty. The very act of tabling this legislation – in fact, this uncertainty in the business community started months ago, when the current Premier was campaigning on this notion.

Now, as I started off – we have examples, and I'll talk about a few examples, Mr. Speaker, where our government, when we were government, stood up to Ottawa and stood up to Ottawa for Alberta's interests.

As you know, there has been a process for provinces to interject when the federal government overreaches into provincial boundaries. That's why we have the courts. It's decided by a separate entity. Our very democracy relies on the division of powers. This bill puts those powers directly into the hands of legislators. Quite frankly, it's dangerous. There are examples of when provinces have challenged the federal government through the courts when they've deemed an action of the federal government to be unconstitutional, and provinces have won those appeals. To say that Alberta needs this to stand up to Ottawa is false because there are mechanisms that are already in place.

Now, maybe the government doesn't like that process, but it doesn't give them the right to introduce a bill that usurps and undermines democracy. The fact that this bill allows cabinet to amend legislation without having to bring legislation through the Chamber is in and of itself undemocratic. All legislation must pass through the three readings and Committee of the Whole before receiving royal assent. This bill completely undermines the process of our Westminster system.

Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised that the current government, who claims to be allies of the business community, isn't standing up for the business community, who is ringing the alarm bells about investment. Anyone who says, "Well, this hasn't or won't impact investment coming to Alberta": they're wrong. It has. We've been in touch with companies that were looking to invest in Alberta and have said: Alberta is off the table; we need stability.

The fact that the CEO of CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, has sounded the alarm bells: if that's not a wake-up call for members on that side of the Chamber, then maybe they still have their earplugs in from the former Premier. You have the Calgary Chamber of commerce sounding the alarm bell. Mr. Speaker, I'm confident that this government will hear more businesses getting vocal about the damage that this bill has caused and will continue to cause.

Now, again, as I started my comments, I'm in favour of when Alberta needs to stand up to the federal government, whoever the federal government is. On bad decisions we should be standing up to the federal government to say: that's not in the best interest of Alberta. Again, there's a process and a mechanism for that.

I'll give you a great example, Mr. Speaker, of how, when we were government, our former Premier, the Leader of the Official Opposition, not only stood up to Ottawa but ensured that the only pipeline that is being built and that has been built in the past 30 years wasn't going to die. She forced the Prime Minister to buy the TMX to ensure that it would be built. That's standing up. That's actually getting more done for the oil and gas sector than this current government has done. In fact, I was out for a coffee with an executive from one of the largest gas-producing companies in Canada, and he said to me: your government did more for our sector than the current government has in three and a half years.

From modernizing the royalties, which meant that producers could continue to be profitable through the full life cycle of the well – I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we also engaged in a campaign to promote the need for pipelines as the safest way to transport our energy resources in Canada. It was called the Keep Canada Working campaign. [interjection] I encourage the minister to listen to this; he may learn something. Four in 10 Canadians were in support of the TMX before we launched our campaign, Keep Canada Working. The campaign was a national campaign across the country. By the end of that campaign 7 in 10 Canadians were in favour of the TMX being built. We moved the needle more effectively in our time in government than predecessors did.

In fact, I remember when former Premier Redford was in this Chamber. She continued to go on trade missions to try to sell our product, but the approach was all wrong and didn't end up moving the needle at all. As we saw – I mean, even under this government they bet $1.5 billion on Donald Trump and lost that bet. We've seen not just meaningful action, but we've seen outcomes, positive outcomes, for our energy sector and for Canadians under our government.

Under this government what we have is a bill that is creating chaos. It's creating chaos in investments. In fact, I know that investors have either moved off of Alberta – Alberta was one of the jurisdictions they were looking at investing in, and they said no. If we're lucky, at best they've pushed the pause button. The only way that this government can bring back that confidence is to scrap this bill. Start over. This bill, the way it's currently written, will continue to do damage to our economy.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am moving a referral motion. I'll just pause while it gets to you. With your approval, I'll read this referral into the record.

The Acting Speaker: Yes. If you could read it into the record, please. Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill is negatively impacting investment decisions and the Alberta economy and should not proceed in order to protect the economic well-being of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this reasoned amendment is just that. It's a reasoned amendment, and the approach that we are taking is that this bill needs to – I appreciate that earlier today the Premier talked about amendments. The problem is that the bill is so problematic that it cannot be amended to be good enough to be legislation that's passed in this Chamber, so this bill needs to not proceed. The government needs to go back to the drawing board on this.

Part of the reason that this bill is also so problematic: I know my good colleague the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has been in constant contact with many chiefs in Alberta, and our Indigenous sisters and brothers have not been consulted on this bill. They have not been contacted at all. So for the Premier or any minister to say after a bill is tabled, “We will go and consult with you,” that's not consultation. That's actually insulting, and the chiefs recognize that talking to them after legislation is already written is backwards, that the government should be consulting with Indigenous communities, Indigenous leaders before the bill is drafted so that they can have not just meaningful input but to be able to sit down and provide their insights and perspectives on the bill to ensure that there aren't unintended consequences.

Now, I don't know if the Premier and cabinet realized in their debates, when they were talking about this bill, what some of the unintended consequences are, but I know for a fact that a member cannot stand up in this House and say: oh, no, the business community thinks this is great, and I've not heard one negative thing about this bill or the chill that it has put on investment decisions. I know for a fact that every MLA has been receiving correspondence, whether phone calls or e-mails, about this bill and its impact. [interjection] I see my friend the Member for Edmonton-North West would like to say a few words.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks. I appreciate you giving way. I know that we've been out canvassing a lot, and I know you've been helping in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Thank you very much for that. In all the many kilometres that you've put in throughout Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview talking to people, has the sovereignty of Alberta ever come up at the door as a top-of-mind issue for your constituents? I certainly have not seen it, you know, and I've not just been in my own constituency. I've been in Calgary and Lethbridge and Medicine Hat, Red Deer, suburban Edmonton, Edmonton, and I've never had anybody come up and tell me about this thing. So I'm just curious if that has ever happened to you.

Mr. Bilous: Great question. The short answer is no. Now, you know, I will say that at times as I've canvassed around the province, whether door-knocking or meeting with stakeholders, people have expressed frustration with Ottawa, frustration with Ottawa's decisions. I share that frustration for some decisions that they've made. I share some of the frustrations with the current government, and I also have different opinions on policies from the federal NDs. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that, again, there is a process. If the federal government passes legislation that impacts Alberta that we believe is unconstitutional, then absolutely we will take them to court and we will fight them, and I'm confident that we will win if they are overreaching and reaching into areas of provincial jurisdiction.

But what this bill does is that it undermines our very democratic system because you have cabinet being able to amend legislation. That has never happened in Alberta in our history, that through a simple motion cabinet can go back and completely rewrite a bill that was passed by all 87 members through the process of passing legislation. If a motion in this Chamber is the exact same as a bill, which it's not, because a motion doesn't go through three readings and Committee of the Whole – so for the government to try to argue that a simple motion in the Chamber gives them the right to amend legislation, it honestly shocks me, Mr. Speaker, that members of the other side have accepted that. Members who have railed about democracy over the past eight years that they've been in this Chamber suddenly now feel that this is acceptable.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, just for the record we're referring to this amendment as RA1.

Anyone else wishing to speak to the amendment? I see the hon. Member for Lac Ste. Anne-Parkland.

Mr. Getson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member opposite. Unfortunately, he didn't accept an intervention. I think we're just getting back there. I'd love to speak to the point where he said that in all the plethora of doors – and I have a ton of respect for this member because he's literally, like, the sole person of the capitalist caucus over there. There was one other member, actually, who wanted a correction on that because he also understood business. I do respect when that member speaks.

But something I have as a bit of a quandary is that when a member of his own caucus asks if there was anybody that showed concerns about overreach from the federal government in the context of a sovereignty question or how this act was going to stand up for us, his answer was that, no, he's never heard that once. As a former minister of jobs and economy he's going to tell me in this House – like, this House is supposed to be a place of truth and sometimes, on their side, truthiness – as a moment of truth, that no one in the business community has ever experienced any issues with Ottawa overreach or bills that would harm our economy?

Mr. Bilous: That's not what I said.

Mr. Getson: Well, if he would have accepted the intervention, through you to him, maybe we could have had this dialogue, but he had his member prescribe if anyone has asked him specifically about this bill and if anyone asked him about sovereignty. So I'll give him the slippery slope and the truthiness that he likes to utilize. I'll give him the same courtesy he gave me.

With that point, he claims that no one has any concerns in this province about government overreach impacting them. He's concerned about the flight of capital from this province because of us standing up for Albertans. His own leader is convinced that she can lay prostrate and have Trudeau override what we come up with in this House, and he has the audacity to talk about democracy and the nuances of putting a motion in the House versus a bill. This is wild.

To the people out there at home who might be tuning into this on Bill 1, here's what the NDP – and they kind of act like a gang of bullies sometimes down in Ottawa, and maybe that's why Jagmeet and Trudeau are there. You know, I watch this show called Sons of Anarchy, and usually what happens is that they patch over at the other club. I'm wondering when that's going to become formal, because they basically wrote a little contract with each other to backstop them and keep going on this. They've been overreaching nonstop.

The Fair Deal Panel went around. That was one of the things that came back, and I'm sure that that member has heard that on his doors in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I have a shirttail aunt and uncle that live over there. They've had some concerns for their entire life over the overreach of Ottawa and some of the connotations that take place, and their business decisions have been impacted by a lot of that as well. Anybody in the energy sector had been impacted. Trudeau Sr. with the national energy program: that didn't affect any business? We're seeing the same methodology.

I spoke in here about economic corridors, literally a way of pulling together northwest Canada to work together and collaboratively, and that member knows full well what that means. That opposition voted against that motion. Now we have economic corridors right to the minister of transportation's door to do that. When we're talking about standing up for Albertans and what's in the context of this act, it is one hundred per cent within the Constitution. But in dealing with bullies in the schoolyard, sometimes you've got to let them know that if they keep coming across that fence, if they keep coming into your way, maybe you might bop them in the nose. We're not going to put the onus on business to do that. The government will take it on, and we'll take it on through this House. That's the concept.

Here's what the opposition is so worried about: inflammatory things, that we want to scare away business. Right from the bill:

Whereas Albertans possess a unique culture and shared identity within Canada.

Oh, my gosh.

Whereas it is the role of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and the Government of Alberta to preserve and promote this unique culture and shared identity.

Oh, my gosh. Outlandish. Oh, pack up the wagons; we're heading east.

Whereas the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930 and the Constitution Act, 1982 are foundational documents that establish the rights and freedoms of Albertans and the relationship between the provincial and federal orders of government, including the division of legislative powers between them, recognizing that our Constitution is valid, all of those constitutional acts that got us to this point.

The reason is that we're tired. Albertans are tired of it. We fight way above our weight class. We pay more. We're disproportionately allowed in the voting process. Every time it happens. Their methodology before was appeasement, kind of like Chamberlain did with the leader of Germany. Churchill had to come in and fix that because you know what? Keep giving more, and they just take it all.

Whereas the Province of Alberta is granted rights and powers under the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930 and . . .

Let me guess.

. . . the Constitution Act, 1982.

There you go. These are things that just freak them out. When they talk about democracy, they have this other construct. It's more of a socialist democracy. It's right in the way they operate.

Whereas actions taken by the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada have infringed on these sovereign provincial rights and powers with increasing frequency and have unfairly prejudiced Albertans.

I remember seeing cartoons from 1910 talking about that out west. This isn't something new. This isn't something that happened in the last year. We're not doing this on a whim. We've tried a ton of other things, and it's not working. Finally they're paying attention.

The fact that, again, their leader, when asked by CBC if she would allow Trudeau to overrule us: "Well, that's a grand idea. Oh, oh, oh. What did I say? Oh, inside voice came out. Oh, my gosh. Let's delete my tweet." But, you know, the good thing with Twitter now? Elon Musk bought it. I'm actually tempted to go and sign up on it because I might get my voice heard versus this other slanted stuff we keep hearing and hearing otherwise.

Whereas the people of Alberta expect the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada to respect the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930 and the Constitution Act, 1982 as the governing documents of the relationship between Canada and Alberta and to abide by the division of powers and other provisions set out in those documents.

Now, the opposition was heckling because I'm just reading the whereas. It's kind of the context of how it sets it up, not some fairy tale, pixie dust, Trudeau-loving, fan-waving, Jagmeet thing. Like, why don't they just call it the National Socialist Party of Canada and do us all a favour? They're all one party anyway. Like, just knock off the posing.

That's the problem when you call a bully on it. You call a bully on it, and all of a sudden they're crying, wailing, gnashing their teeth, running back to mommy. "That little kid beat me up. He said no. He wouldn't let me take his lunch money anymore." I'm tired of this.

Whereas it is necessary and appropriate for the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to set out measures that the Lieutenant Governor in Council should consider taking in respect of actions of the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada that are unconstitutional or harmful to Albertans and for Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to have a free vote . . .

Free. Imagine that. What's more free than that? Democracy. Thank goodness we're standing up for it.

. . . on such measures according to their individual judgment.

[interjection] They're heckling. I'm sure he'll get his point to intervene. I'd like to take an intervention from that fellow because, wow, can he weave a good yarn.

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

Mr. Getson: The part that they're getting tied up in is parlance of when this is being introduced into the House.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called. The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j). I've been listening to the member for a while now. He's making wild comparisons, referring to Nazis, and now attacking an hon. member personally, making fun of him. I think that if he has anything to add to the bill, he should talk about the bill, talk about the amendment that we are on, how this bill impacts the business community. The language the member is using is grossly insulting, and it should not be used in this Chamber.

The Acting Speaker: The deputy government whip.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that this is a matter of debate. I've heard no offensive language that would bring the House to any kind of disunity or discord. I would also make the point that I can't wait to hear which it is going forward, (h), (i), or (j) in 23. It's been driving me nuts for four years. I wish we could pick one of these subclauses.

The Acting Speaker: Something extra to add to the debate, hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview?

Mr. Bilous: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, you know, I appreciate differences of opinion, but the member did refer to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford as "gnarly" when he gets up and speaks. That is calling an individual member a name and is unparliamentary.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Something extra to add?

Mr. Getson: Yeah. Just clarity. You know, I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I do have the benefit of what I said. Now, how they heard it is different. I said that he could "weave a good yarn". Weave a good yarn. So if they hear "gnarly," I can't help what they hear, but what I said – and perhaps they're not picking up my Albertan accent, who stands up for the province, very well.

The Acting Speaker: All right. Hon. members, in relation to this point of order that's been called, I do want to caution members about inflammatory or disruptive language. I did say a couple of days ago, when I was running for Deputy Chair of Committees, that one of my hopes was to ensure that we do have healthy debate and decorum in this House. At this time I do not find a point of order, but I will again request of all members healthy debate and respect for one another.

Mr. Getson: I appreciate the ruling, Mr. Speaker, and bringing me back to a higher degree of decorum. I shouldn't be sinking to their level when they reference, you know, foreign leaders invading countries, as an example, and those types of things. But that's not offensive to them, only to us.

Debate Continued

Mr. Getson: Back with the amendment. They basically want to gas the whole thing – can it, send it back, everything else – instead of following the democratic process as outlined in this House itself. This is the second reading, where the amendments typically come forward on the act and we get a chance to debate it. We're all for that. We heard our new Premier say that today, but instead: fire and brimstone. We want to say that everyone is fleeing the province because – oh, my gosh – we're standing up for them and following the Constitution. Really? Really?

Mr. Speaker, as you can probably tell and those at home, I am not in favour of this amendment. I strongly encourage my fellow members to vote no to this. Let's get back to the bill. Let's do what we can to help Albertans stand up against Ottawa and the NDP, federal and provincial, Liberal alliance, against the nonstop overreach into our areas. It's time to tell the bullies that we respect the rule of law, that we know the rules of the law, that we're equals in this country. You better start treating us like it, or we're just going to tell you no.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there other members wishing to speak to amendment RA1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Welcome to the chair. I would love to have an opportunity to speak to this bill because, of course, it is quite a contentious bill, for good reason. It is rejected largely by all segments of society other than the government members, and as such it is one that we should take very, very seriously.

I know that, you know, such left-wing people as the CEO of the Calgary Chamber of commerce and the CEO of CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, have come out and said that this bill is – using words like "dangerous" and "problematic." So it's not really an issue of left versus right – is it? – when these kinds of organizations are coming out and saying that this bill is deeply problematic.

I know that constitutional scholars from across Canada have weighed in on this and have addressed the fact that, as the previous member has said: oh, we say in the bill that this doesn't actually violate the Constitution. The constitutional scholars say: you can say that, but then if you actually then go on to violate the Constitution, what you said is irrelevant. That's exactly the answer to the previous speaker as he reads out the sections early on that deny what is actually happening later on in the very same bill. It just tells us how irrelevant their earlier clauses are, where they try to set the tone in order to slide underneath that somewhat deceptive tone the reality that they're actually challenging the rule of law in Canada, that they are actually making the attempt to establish a set of laws in Alberta that will undermine the laws of Canada, that when a law is a duly established law in Canada, it will be neglected or unenforced in the province of Alberta, which is by its definition a denial of the rule of law.

So what we have is a party and a government that is actually working against the fundamentals of the democratic society. They can deny that all they want, but the people who are experts in this area, the constitutional experts, tell us that that is, in fact, what they are doing. You know, I think that that's something that they should take very seriously.

We know that many of the members opposite who are currently ministers of various ministries came out against this originally, before they got their jobs and their jobs were on the line. They said the very things that we're saying now about this bill being bad for the province of Alberta, bad for investment, bad for the economy moving forward. All of them stood up and, in fact, voted in their own little election to not have the leader come in who was going to bring in this bill. I'm assuming they all voted for themselves.

In fact, you know, the ministers of these – Treasury Board and Finance, the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism, the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development, the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas, the Minister of Municipal Affairs – all have already voted not to have this bill. Now, they have suggested that somehow there are some changes to the bill since it was originally announced and that that makes it acceptable, but they have not – not one has stood up and said: this is the specific change that has allowed me to change my opinion on this particular bill. [interjection] I see that there is a request for an intervention.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, hon. member. Yeah. I mean, my question and, I guess, the most obvious one hanging out there is:

what exactly was in there before that they changed somehow? I would be very concerned because, I mean, what we do see in here – right? – defies the division of democratic decision-making in a parliamentary Westminster system. That’s still there. I mean, Lord knows what they took out, right? You know, the very existence of the bill, I would suggest, has a chilling effect on investment and the business community and just the confidence and the reputation of our province. Even the title, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, seems like it sort of has a built-in excuse right into the title, like, oh, no, it wasn’t like the Alberta separation thing that we were thinking about before; it’s within the framework of something else. It feels like there’s an excuse for this built right into the title of the bill. Then, of course, as you flip along, sure enough, it does subvert the Westminster system.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much for that intervention. It is interesting to imagine what was in this bill that was so horrendous that the fact that a bill that has come out that is both unconstitutional and against the rule of law and defying the traditional rules of Westminster democracy – if there was something worse than that in the bill before, then that’s quite an amazing statement on the part of all of these ministers who stood up and said publicly to the citizens of the province of Alberta that this was a terrible bill. Somehow they don’t think it’s terrible now that they’re actually challenging the rule of law, challenging Westminster democracy, and challenging the right of citizens to have a voice in the construction of laws in this province.

All of that is here in this bill. We know that because constitutional scholars have looked at this bill, and they say that, yes, we understand that this government has put in statements early in the bill saying, “Don’t really listen to the rest of this bill,” but it doesn’t matter if you do that if, in fact, in the body of the bill you actually do defy the rule of law.

Let me give you one very specific example here, and that is section 2(c). Section 2(c) attempts to make the attempt to say that this does not undermine in any way treaty rights. But I just received a phone call from one of the chiefs, who went to their lawyers and said: does this protect us? And the constitutional lawyer who spoke to this treaty chief said quite clearly: no, it does not. It does not clearly say that this law is secondary to treaty agreements that have existed prior to. It says that one should not assume this law subverts, but again that clause has no standing in terms of limiting the effects of the rest of the bill.

That’s exactly what the chiefs are concerned about. You know, the chiefs have repeatedly said – for example, Chief Tony Alexis said: please have this government hold off on passing the sovereignty act at least until the next election. Why? So that there can be a discussion about what is proceeding.

The grand chief of Treaty 8 has said that this law undermines the authority and duty of the sovereign nations that entered into treaty. There are repeated statements. I can tell you that I have had more phone calls and more messages from chiefs across this province who are saying that this is a devastatingly terrible bill, and it is clear that they are concerned that this is really intended to take rights away from Indigenous people.

In speaking to one of the grand chiefs just this morning, the grand chief reminded me about Bill 1 under the previous UCP Premier, which was designed to prevent people from protesting on public lands. He then reminded me that even though this government had brought in that bill, when there was a protest at the Coutts border crossing for many, many days and, in fact, there was significant illegal activity, including the accusation of illegal arms happening at that border crossing, the government did not use that Bill 1 in order to be able to stop the terrible activities happening at the Coutts border crossing, which were destroying the economy.

I need to get to the point on this. He said: we learned at that time that that bill was written only to take rights away from Indigenous people, that it was not being used against non-Indigenous people. The bill was there, but it was not being used at the time. He said: so now we are in this position where the Bill 1 being brought in by this Premier is again saying, “Oh, no; this is about one thing,” but in fact it is designed to subvert the treaty rights of Indigenous people in this province. They know that. They say: we have learned that from the experience of this government, and we are not going to allow them to proceed in this way. The things they’re concerned about have been spoken about by this government, so they know that they’re right.

They know that what this government is concerned about is that the federal government sometimes enacts laws around issues that may affect life here in Alberta. For example, they may enact laws that protect the environment. But this government doesn’t like it because they’re afraid that if you protect the environment, you might take something away from the oil and gas economy.

What the chiefs are telling me is: “Ah, so what we’re hearing, then, is that any time the federal government wants to protect our lands, our air, and our water, this government will say that it doesn’t count in Alberta, and our lands and our air and our water will not be protected by this government.” [interjection] I see that there is a request for an intervention.

Member Loyola: Thank you, Member, for that. I just want to make it explicitly clear, and I’m hoping that you can shed some more light on this. Even though Indigenous communities are so focused on protecting our environment – the water, air, the land – as you pointed out, at the same time we can have economic development. Not only that, but at the same time I’m sure that you’re hearing from these chiefs that it’s essential that Indigenous people be treated with respect as we build that strong, resilient economy for all Albertans and that they must be included in that. Yes, it’s true, as you have been pointing out, the insights from the different chiefs that you have described already is that somehow in the past economic activity has actually left Indigenous communities out, not being able to benefit from the resources that they have a right to under treaty.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, just a kind reminder that interventions are also to come through the chair.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the intervention; thank you. I think that helps to highlight what the concerns are. The chiefs have said to me repeatedly: we are in favour of economic development; we just want to be part of it. But when they want to be part of it, they say: we approach it as a complex issue. That is, economic development must also protect the resources and the land on which that economic development is made so that we can pass on not only economic benefits to our children, but we can pass on the very land on which those economic benefits are derived. That is what the chiefs are saying. You need to be able to do both.

So if this government is creating an act that would allow them to say, “No, we’re only going to do one of two things; we’re only going to do the stuff that helps us to make money, but we’re not going to do stuff to help us protect the future of our province and the well-being of the future generations,” then the chiefs are not interested in participating. They want to be at the table, but they want to be at the table as full participants. They clearly feel that this government has found a way to undermine their rights in the future, and they’re very worried about it.

You can say what you want about me standing up in the House and talking about it, but I defy you to go and talk to the First Nations and tell them that they're wrong. They are very mad about it, all across this province. I have never seen a situation where at the AOTC all of the chiefs stood up and said: we are against this act. This has really united the First Nations in this province in a way that very little else has up until this time. As a result, this government is going to have very serious consequences moving forward. [interjection] I see that there is a request for intervention.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Member. I have much to say on this as well, but I just wanted to take a moment. Not unlike, to a different extent, the initiatives or negotiations that are happening between the provincial government and the federal government and our treaties – of course, we also have other levels of elected officials who are trying to work within this, specifically when we look at the idea of investing and economic stability. I have real concerns, somewhat laid out here in the legislation under resolutions, section 3. We see: “If, on a motion of a member of Executive Council, the Legislative Assembly approves a resolution that” – we see here under (ii) – “causes or is anticipated to cause harm to Albertans.” That’s very concerning when we consider negotiations that often happen, whether we’re talking about LRT investments, whether we’re talking about investments into housing initiatives across the province. This legislation is potentially going to have consequences.

Thank you.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Member. I think that’s an excellent point, and it happens to address exactly one of the other things one of the First Nations individuals I spoke with just this morning was saying, that this government is saying: we’re only going to use this when we feel like our interests are somehow being maligned by the federal government. The particular phrase that this person brought forward to me was the fact that this government is saying that they will be defending public interest. What she said to me was: our experience is that whenever this government says “public interest,” they do not mean First Nation interest; they mean their interest, interest of their particular group. There is no appropriate definition of what is public interest here in this act that allows them to feel comfortable that their concerns and their interests will be protected and supported.

They certainly don’t think that this government has demonstrated in the past that they care about the treaty rights and the land rights of Indigenous people. In fact, at the press conference at the AOTC, the Alberta organization of treaty chiefs, Chief Tony Alexis said that, quote, this bill sets up the province to allow extraction at any rate, completely unprotected. That’s the fear. It’s not my fear; it’s not me that’s making this point. These are the statements of the chiefs. They’re saying that nothing in this bill gives them confidence that their concerns will be protected, certainly that the concerns of a small group of people around the UCP have particular interests that they’re wanting to protect, but nothing in this bill says they’re going to protect the rights of people who are First Nations treaty people in this province.

They cannot trust this government. That is the clear and specific concern that they are bringing forward, and they are saying that they cannot support this bill. They have not been consulted on this bill, they are very upset about this bill, and there has been no attempt since they came out 14 days ago against this bill – there’s been no attempt – to resolve this issue and to withdraw the bill until the rights of treaty people have been protected in this province.

How can they have faith? Their experience with this government from the original Bill 1 under the previous Premier was that the government really isn’t very much interested in the rights of Indigenous people to protect their rights, to protest, to cause blockades. They know a bill was written that was not used against non-Indigenous people, so obviously it was simply written to be used only against Indigenous people. That’s what they’re telling me. That’s why I am standing up today and trying my best to convey the message given to me by the First Nations chiefs and many other members.

I met with elders this morning – there was a pipe ceremony this morning with elders from across the northern part of Alberta – and they all share the same thing. What they’re asking is exactly what we’re asking here in this reasoned amendment: stop this bill. Move this bill out of this Chamber, do the right work, protect the interest and the rights of treaty members of this province – we’re all treaty members; sorry – the First Nations treaty members in this province, and properly make sure that when you talk about defending the public interest here in Alberta, you actually are talking about First Nations people and not just sort of saying that, well, they’re Albertans too. They find that kind of statement very insulting. There was a specific reference made recently by one of the ministers along that line, and they were very insulted by it.

Don’t be saying: oh, yeah, we’re protecting all Albertans; oh, yeah, they’re Albertans, too. They are First Nations people with First Nations rights. They are distinct and significant in the history of Canada, and they need to be protected in a particular manner moving forward. Their own . . .

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment RA1? I see the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to speak in support of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, and against the referral amendment. One of the main reasons that we are bringing forward this bill is that we are compelled, in fact, to protect the economic well-being of Alberta.

The first recital of the act says that Alberta possesses “a unique culture and shared identity within Canada.” Mr. Speaker, what is the culture and identity of Alberta? Alberta is a land of freedom and prosperity. That is our culture and our identity. Freedom and prosperity is something the NDP will never quite understand, but freedom and prosperity is our inheritance and our heritage. Alberta is the best.

What did the NDP do to contribute to this? Mr. Speaker, they did nothing. In fact, they did damage to Alberta by referring to us as the embarrassing cousin. There are two fundamental issues with referring to Alberta as an embarrassing cousin. One is that our prosperity and freedom should be nothing ever to be ashamed of. It is part of our excellence; it is why individuals and families come from all over the world to Alberta to work, to live their lives, and to raise their families.

The other thing is that the former Premier referred to us as a cousin. That is the problem: the NDP feel that we are a cousin in this partnership when, in fact, we are an equal partner. They do not understand the fundamental relationship that we have in this country. Mr. Speaker, what is currently the greatest threat to our culture and identity, our freedom and prosperity? The morally and fiscally bankrupt socialist NDP Axis government is certainly a strong candidate. The purpose of this bill is to protect our economic well-being. Freedom and prosperity is the priority of this government, but we have to understand and remember that the federal government is inextricably connected to this, our economic well-being. It is naive to pretend otherwise, and the NDP are very naive.

It is an unfortunate necessity to protect Alberta, our freedom and prosperity, which the morally and fiscally bankrupt, hostile, socialist NDP-Trudeau Axis government seeks to undermine and attack. But, Mr. Speaker, why is the NDP against the act? Is it because Trudeau, Canada's first NDP Prime Minister, is their bosom buddy? Their BFF? They are confused. They do not understand Alberta. Socialism is an enemy to self-reliance. Socialism does not create prosperity; it undermines it. Do we honestly think that socialism attracts investment? Is that what they're trying to tell us, that socialism attracts investment? No.

The NDP occupation is proof positive. Under the NDP occupation there were fewer private sector jobs, not more.

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Point of Order

Insulting Language

Mr. Sabir: I rise under 23(j). Referring to a democratically elected government of this province as an occupation: this word has been the subject of a point of order many times before. The Speaker of the House has warned this member multiple times to not use this word, but this member is deliberately using this word to create disorder in this House. I urge you, in light of previous caution provided by the Speaker, to rule this out of order to maintain order in this Chamber.

The Acting Speaker: The deputy House leader.

Mr. Amery: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening attentively to my friend's comments here throughout the course of this debate, and he has continued to stay on topic. His comments are relevant. They are truly a matter of debate. My friend references an alleged caution but cites no source for that. This is a matter of debate, and I would ask that you find that it is not a point of order and that you allow him to continue with his on-point, relevant comments.

The Acting Speaker: Do you have something different to add?

Mr. Stephan: Absolutely. Mr. Speaker, there many different interpretations of the word "occupation." I know that many business owners and hard-working Albertans felt that they were ignored, that their rights and freedoms and prosperity, frankly, were being undermined by this very horrible government that was in power.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to rule. At this time, again, I want to step forward and raise a caution for members of the House. I believe we have had discussions around the phrase "occupation" used in this House prior, and there have been cautions issued. I'd like to once again issue that caution to all members, to choose your words wisely, and let's continue with healthy debate.

The Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Sure. Under the NDP dictates there were fewer private-sector jobs. There were. When they came into being in government, over the four-year period the population of Alberta grew, yet at the end of their four years, when Albertans kicked them out, Mr. Speaker, when they were kicked out, there were fewer private-sector jobs. They are the job killers. They are the job killers. When they stand and talk about the economy, they were absolute failures, and the record shows it.

Mr. Speaker, not only that, but they scared away investment. They chased away billions of dollars of investment. Who likes to invest in a socialist country, in a socialist province? They don't want to do that. They chased away investment, and their record shows it.

Now, what I can say is that under our government our private sector is exploding. We are bringing in jobs. We are bringing in billions of dollars in investment. We are leading the nation in economic growth. We have a huge multibillion-dollar surplus.

Under this prior awful – awful – government, socialist government, we had multibillion-dollar deficits. They were a horrible government. They did a horrible job. I went and knocked on the doors of Albertans in my constituency, and I can tell you that I saw oil and gas workers who were out of work because of them, because of their destructive NDP dictates, them making us less competitive.

Mr. Speaker, I was a tax lawyer before I had the privilege to serve in this institution.

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order

Relevance

Mr. Sabir: This time it's 23(b), "speaks to matters other than the question under discussion." The question under discussion is that this bill will negatively impact investment decisions and it should not proceed in order to protect Alberta's well-being. The member has not said a word about this amendment and has gone on to say all kinds of things that are not relevant to this debate or should not even be said in this Assembly.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, this is once again clearly not a point of order. I don't know what my learned friend was listening to, but I heard the hon. Member for Red Deer-South speaking about investment, comparing and contrasting the two different governments and the success of the UCP government in attracting private enterprise, private investment to this province and how the members opposite failed horribly in doing so. That is a matter of debate. It is relevant to the topic at hand, and I would submit to you that this is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. You're making my first day in the chair lots of fun. Thank you.

I do want to say that I do not find this to be a point of order. It is a point of debate. However, I know that with regard to Bill 1 we have chatted about phrases like "staying in our own lanes," so I would encourage all members to make sure that they are staying in their lanes and debating the amendment that's at hand.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have to say, the truth is hard to take. I don't know if this is hardly a matter of debate. In any event, they talked about chasing away investment. They were horrible. Our government is doing an excellent job.

4:20

Mr. Speaker, it is important to understand that we are succeeding not because of the federal government but in spite of it. You know, they are socialists. They are cousins to the NDP. They are part of the federal NDP socialist axis government. This act is an unfortunate necessity to protect Alberta, our freedom and prosperity, which the morally and fiscally bankrupt, hostile, socialist NDP axis government seeks to undermine and attack.

Business does not trust the NDP. The NDP does not know how to compete and excel in the real world. Socialism is a parasite. It is kryptonite to prosperity. Mr. Speaker, we must keep the NDP far away. I never did meet a business owner that thought the NDP did a good job.

The NDP need to put their straw man away and stop misrepresenting the act and then attacking the worst version of it manufactured of their misrepresentations, only existing in their imaginations. The NDP want to have us live in a universe of perpetual fear, and they want to force all of us to join them.

Why is the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act necessary? Is it because many of us are concerned we are sleepwalking towards disaster? Yes. Is it because Canada is acting like a hostile, one-trillion-plus fiscal train wreck attacking Alberta, threatening to drag us down with it? Yes. Mr. Speaker, if Alberta was not part of Canada and was invited to join this rigged partnership under the current terms, would we join? No. Are we compelled to be a host in a parasitic relationship? No.

Mr. Speaker, this is a dysfunctional partnership. That is the truth. The purpose of this act is that, by bringing accountability as a fundamental principle, we can take a dysfunctional partnership and make it an effective and competitive partnership. Alberta is the rainmaker partner. A partnership that undermines and attacks its rainmaker partner would never survive in the real world. There are also some partners that game this partnership and take from Alberta families and businesses for political gain. That is a recipe for corruption. The moral foundation of such a partnership is eroding. A partnership where work is displaced by plunder as a ruling principle will never survive. We cannot be slothful. We cannot be neglectful. We cannot sit in a thoughtless stupor, like the members opposite. That is what the NDP would say, not understanding, sticking their heads in the sand.

A fundamental principle of this act is . . .

Mr. Sabir: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Sabir: Standing Order 23(j). The member continuously uses abusive language, garbage language, rubbish language that should be beneath this House. I think you provided the member with a caution, but he thinks it's funny to say things that are abusive, that will likely create disorder in this House. That's completely a waste of this House's time, not to listen to your caution. I urge you to rule these kinds of comments out of order so the member refrains from saying this again.

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, once again not a point of order. My friend used some choice words, but let me use the synonyms for those words "thoughtless stupor": near unconsciousness or insensibility. What this means is that if my friend had used the word to call the members opposite insensible, there would be no point of order. If he said that they were near unconscious in their decision-making process, there would be no point of order. Those are the same exact words he used, albeit using different terms to refer to the members opposite. There is absolutely no point of order here. It is simply a matter of debate, and I would encourage my friends on the other side of this House to look at the thesaurus before raising points of order.

The Acting Speaker: Something additional to add?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that sometimes you're caught in a difficult position having to figure out which way to rule on particular issues. I would draw your attention to a ruling earlier this day by the Speaker during question period when the opposition was comparing the government to the dictator of Russia, Mr. Putin, a man who has arguably been the cause of thousands and thousands of deaths. So I would argue that if we're going to be making rulings about what is a point of order and where it lands, we would consider an earlier ruling of the day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I am prepared to rule. This has been a long 15-minute speech, and I don't remember any time in recent history that I've seen us rise on three points of order in one speech. I do want to . . .

Mr. Schmidt: Hey, did you forget about me?

The Acting Speaker: Oh, I forgot about the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I apologize. I will not let that happen again.

I do choose to rule this as a point of order at this point. I think we are starting to get off the rails. In the future I would encourage the hon. Member for Red Deer-South to maybe refer to his thesaurus in front of him and the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross and choose his words a bit little more wisely. I do find this a point of order, and I will ask the hon. member to continue with decorum.

Thank you.

Mr. Stephan: Sure. I rise and apologize for using the words "thoughtless stupor."

Mr. Speaker, this act holds the federal government to account for laws and actions that intrude into provincial areas of jurisdiction or attack the interests of Alberta. Doesn't Ottawa seek to do indirectly what constitutionally it is not allowed to do directly such as with Alberta's constitutional authority over its oil and gas resources? Didn't Alberta's Court of Appeal describe Trudeau's carbon tax as a sneaky "constitutional Trojan horse"? Yes. Isn't Trudeau proposing a new carbon tax or cap and trade that singles out and disproportionately punishes Alberta? Yes. Wouldn't that inflict more economic chaos, chasing out additional billions in investment and Alberta jobs with it? Yes.

How have sternly worded letters served us? Isn't the purpose of this act to assert and defend constitutional parameters that Ottawa habitually ignores and attacks? Yes. Ottawa recently released a discussion paper seeking to limit or impose additional carbon taxes on oil and gas development. Mr. Speaker, this is not an isolated incident. This is a pattern of hostile behaviour from Ottawa seeking to attack and take advantage of Alberta, holding us back. Under section 92A of the Constitution Act, Alberta has jurisdiction over its natural resources, not Ottawa. This act should be invoked to tell Ottawa to take their discussion paper and stuff it and leave Alberta and their constitutional jurisdiction alone. The unfortunate truth is that Ottawa has made itself . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, it is 4:30, and pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 on Monday afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 30th Legislature - 4th Session (2022)

Activity to Thursday, December 1, 2022

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sittings.

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 5, 2022

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Ms Brooklyn Elhard. I invite you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Page Biographies

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to proceeding to introductions today, I'd like to just briefly note that you will find a copy of the new page biographies for the 2022 fall sitting of the Fourth Session of the Legislature, which I will table at an appropriate time later today. As you read through it, you will notice that we have a record number of 18 new pages alongside nine returning pages. I would also like to mention that these biographies will be available online through OurHouse.

Hon. members, I know that it goes without saying, but I ask you to provide them with a warm welcome and that you will show this bright, young group the utmost patience as they learn the ropes of this important role. There will be a test on their names next week for each of you.

Thank you all, pages. Please, members, provide them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I am pleased to introduce a familiar face around the building. Seated in the Speaker's gallery is former Member for Lacombe-Ponoka Rod Fox. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has a school to introduce.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Welcome to the wonderful grade 6 class from Virginia Park school. They're joined by their fabulous teacher Kirsten Elliott and their wonderful EA Abdul Mohamed. Please join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to also introduce a school group to you and through you to all members of the Assembly. It's école Rio Terrace. They've brought their teacher along, Andrea Bluteau, and I know that there are about three parents who have come along, and I just welcome them also.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce grade 6 students, teachers, and staff from St. Kateri Catholic school in Edmonton-Meadows. Please join me in welcoming them into the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has an introduction.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House Mr. Ashok Gupta and Devindra Singh Tiwana, who are businessmen here in Edmonton and residents of the South West constituency here in Edmonton. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Alberta grazing lease association, Mr. Kevin Meneice and Mr. Kyle Forbes, as well as members of the Western Stock Growers' Association, Graham Overguard, Bill Newton, and Callum Sears. Last but certainly not least, the wonderful Lindsay Murfin, who keeps all of them in line. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education. The hon. the Minister of Education, do you have an introduction?

Member LaGrange: We didn't get any today. Sorry.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. member – my list actually isn't up to date. The hon. Member for Camrose is rising.

Affordability Plan

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our United Conservative government knows that affordability is a primary challenge facing Albertans right now and that families are counting on us to take decisive action to address rising costs of living. That is why we are not hesitating to deliver timely and meaningful inflation relief for Alberta families and businesses: relief for fuel, relief for utilities, relief for seniors and our most vulnerable. Our government is in a position to provide this relief to Alberta because of our balanced budget and strong fiscal position.

We recently delivered the second-quarter fiscal update, which showed that not only is our economy strong but that it has momentum. Despite global uncertainty our province is on track for a projected surplus of $12.3 billion and repayment of $13.3 billion. The restored strength of Alberta's economy is in stark contrast to the disastrous economic policies we saw Rachel Notley and the NDP put in place. The NDP's ideological policies and tax hikes chased hundreds of thousands of jobs and billions of dollars of investment out of our province. This also wreaked havoc on our budget.

Shockingly, the NDP is now attacking the inflation relief we are providing Albertans even though they have no alternative plan. We are focused, however, on keeping Alberta's economy strong and delivering timely relief to Albertans. We have already committed $2.8 billion over three years to help Albertans with cost-of-living concerns and are committed to $1.3 billion in new funding to help make life more affordable, but as we have said, there will be more help coming. Our commitment to fiscal discipline and economic growth is allowing us to pay down our debt, lower our burden, and save for the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose will be well aware that the use of proper names under any circumstance would be inappropriate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning is rising.

Industrial Heartland Investment and Alberta Sovereignty Act

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In September I had the pleasure of attending Alberta's Industrial Heartland Association conference. I heard presentations from several companies that talked about their plan to reduce emissions and achieve net zero in their operations as well as produce energy such as hydrogen that will help our province achieve its emission-reduction goals.

There are currently several large-scale projects being considered in the Industrial Heartland. Dow is proposing to build a net-zero facility that will produce 3.2 million metric tonnes of polyethylene and ethylene derivatives. Suncor and ATCO have partnered to build a hydrogen production facility capable of producing 300,000 tonnes of hydrogen annually. Inter Pipeline has proposed blue ammonia and blue methane facilities that will support the transportation of hydrogen.

These projects represent billions of dollars in investment and will create thousands of good-paying jobs; however, none of them have reached a final investment decision. This is a pivotal moment for the heartland and for Alberta's entire economy. The government, rather than embracing investor certainty and economic stability, have chosen to introduce their job-killing, undemocratic sovereignty act, a piece of legislation that has been panned by venture capitalists, investors, the Calgary Chamber, the Canadian chamber, and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. It is the exact opposite of what we need right now. It will create uncertainty and drive away investment. We need to scrap the sovereignty act so that we can attract investment into the Industrial Heartland, build a more resilient economy, create jobs now and for future generations.

I won't vote for the job-killing sovereignty act. I ask every member in this House to think about what voting for this bill could mean for workers, for future generations. I and my colleagues are proud to stand in this House each day in support of Alberta's rural economic future, in support of the Industrial Heartland, and in support of a future for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Paramedic Dallas Boyko

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's member's statement is in honour of Dallas Lee Boyko, a long-time paramedic who lived in my riding and died in the line of duty while working to save others. On Saturday, September 10, paramedics across Canada, Alberta as well as residents in my home of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain were deeply saddened and mourn the loss of such a tremendous life gone too soon.

Throughout her distinguished 25-year career Dallas treated thousands of patients with tremendous courage, compassion, and skill. Dallas mentored and trained hundreds of students and new staff and made a massive impact on the paramedic community across the province. In recognition of her tremendous dedication and service Dallas was awarded the 12-year provincial service medal in addition to countless commendations from patients, families, peers, and supervisors.

Paramedics are a selfless breed. I believe it takes a very special kind of person to not only do the job but to excel in such a vigorous and demanding career. Being a paramedic isn't like the TV shows. It isn't always fast-paced lights and sirens that we like to see. Sometimes there are car accidents, explosions, and heroics, but most of the time it's the complete opposite. It's twisted ankles, toothaches, fevers, and coughs. Sometimes it's literally just having a conversation with someone about their life while you take them to the hospital or making sure a child has their favourite teddy bear to comfort them on a dark day.

Paramedics have played a big role in our society. They are those individuals who sacrifice a lot in order to help residents in our communities. We cannot pay back the goodness and the services that paramedics offer to us. The only thing that we can give them is our full respect that they are modern-day heroes.

Dallas was one of those heroes, and her loss will be felt for a very long time. May she rest in peace. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

Financial Literacy Education

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government recognized November as Financial Literacy Month to remind Albertans about the importance of personal finance and to highlight government programs that help keep money in their pockets. No one is too young to learn about saving, budgeting, spending, and investing in today's world. With rising interest rates and inflation due in large part to poor federal policy it has never been more important for us to ensure young people are learning financial literacy skills.

Junior Achievement of Southern Alberta does a tremendous job of teaching financial literacy skills to young Albertans. As a proud former Junior Achievement alumnus myself, as are several of my colleagues, I know first-hand how valuable financial literacy, career readiness, and entrepreneurship skills are for our students and how engaging JA programming is for young people. I have such gratitude to organizations like Junior Achievement. They have a legacy spanning 60 years of teaching young Albertans about budgeting, saving, and investments.

During Financial Literacy Month they provided over 10,000 youths in our province with financial literacy education. They expect to achieve the same for 75,000 Albertan youths within this school year. Mr. Speaker, that is 75,000 young minds that will grow up to become contributors to our province's economy, patrons in their community, and adults holding the tools necessary to become financially responsible.

I'm proud that we have committed funding to Junior Achievement and other organizations, and our government has also shown that we recognize the value of financial literacy lessons by implementing them into our K to 9 curriculum. Fiscal responsibility is not only something we talk about; we act on it. We are choosing to put budget surplus towards paying off provincial debt instead of continuing to borrow and spend beyond our means. Thank you to this government for continuing to support financial literacy. The progress we make in empowering Albertans, including our students, women and girls, and our newcomers, will lead to financially prosperous lives.

Persons with Disabilities

Ms Renaud: Transformative Solutions for Inclusive Development: the Role of Innovation in Fueling an Accessible and Equitable World. That statement is this year's theme for International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Since '92, for 30 years, we've marked this day by talking about wonderful people we know, new innovative programs, and a few stories that make it to the newspaper or social media. What we continue to fail to do is to make real progress towards inclusion for all in all areas of life: child care, early learning, K to 12, postsecondary, employment, health care, built environment, communication, and more.

These last three and a half years have been a crash course on how to make it exponentially more difficult for inclusion to flourish in Alberta. The UCP is directly responsible for deindexing benefits of disabled, senior, and low-income Albertans. Sure, they reindexed benefits six months before an election, with a projected surplus of $13 billion, but that does nothing to undo the damage of three years of growing poverty. This government has systematically ignored exploding wait lists for disability supports and affordable, accessible housing while patting themselves on the back for recent announcements after months of arrogantly claiming all was well.

Here's an excerpt from a letter from a disabled friend of mine.

I need decision-makers to hear about the pain they caused by deindexing benefits. Just indexing is not enough. We lost three years. How can you boast about making your books look better on the backs of disabled Albertans who can't afford to buy food? Health care keeps me alive. I can't fund raise extra dollars to pay for health care, and I certainly don't want to beg for money. The disability community has been left behind by the UCP. You're hurting us every day. Our families, our communities know of the hurt and are working hard to make change and have a Premier who hears us in 2023.

Change is coming, friends. Given the opportunity to form government, we will establish real-time goals and measure inclusion and access so that we can meaningfully celebrate the success on International Day of Persons with Disabilities in the future. We will get that done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has a statement.

Affordability Plan

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have proven time and time again that they are resilient. We can overcome any obstacle that is thrown our way, and we can stick together. We have seen this over the past couple of years: the 2014 oil price crash, four years of NDP tax hikes, and most recently the COVID-19 pandemic.

Now, Albertans have been tested once again. Dealing with record-high inflation, families are struggling to provide for their basic needs, and we are faced with deciding whether to fill up on gas or put food on the table. No parent should ever have to make those decisions. The rise of rent, groceries, and gas is taking a toll on Albertans. While Alberta is trying to mitigate the situation, Ottawa continues to ignore the rising cost of living and has even decided to triple the carbon tax.

Our government understands the struggles of Albertans. We have provided many initiatives to ensure that this life is more affordable for Albertans. Some of the major affordability measures we are enacting consist of providing $600 over six months to parents for each child under 18 and seniors; $600 over six months to AISH, income support, and PDD recipients; suspension of the entire provincial fuel tax for at least six months; indexing of provincial tax brackets; and $200 to pay home and electricity rebates. I am thrilled that the natural gas rebate program will continue to help Albertans, especially as we are heading into the colder winter months. The indexing of AISH, PDD, seniors' benefits, Alberta's child and family benefit, and income support program will begin as early as January, Mr. Speaker. Our government is also investing in Alberta's food banks and low-income transit passes.

We realize that affordability is a challenge many of us are currently facing, and our government is working hard to provide substantial relief for all Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Taxation and Provincial Autonomy

Mr. Barnes: Albertans are optimistic about the direction our new Premier is taking when it comes to greater autonomy within Canada, just like Quebec has sought and received for years. Autonomy is a concept that has deep meaning throughout our history. It is an idea that focuses on maintaining a decentralized federation which respects the constitutional rights of provinces, thereby strengthening national unity by respecting regional diversity.

Ottawa has continuously taken more from Alberta than it has returned, leading to a deep feeling of alienation towards our federal government amongst Albertans. It's time we did something. Taxation has long been a flashpoint when it comes to federal-provincial relations as Ottawa collects most of our tax revenue and passes it out conditionally through several transfer programs like equalization. Ottawa's overreach and interference have harmed the ability of Albertans to provide for their families.

On the other hand, Quebec has a long history of effectively fighting for autonomy of its citizens. In fact, during the 2019 federal election campaign the Conservative Party of Canada agreed with a unanimous motion from the Quebec National Assembly for the implementation of a single tax return system administered by Quebec and all federal and provincial taxes collected by Quebec.

In fact, I served on the Fair Deal Panel, and thousands of Albertans expressed their desire to receive a more equitable, decentralized deal with Ottawa. Recently Alberta's Premier has said, "That means establishing a tax department so we can collect our own taxes and make it completely transparent how much we collect for our own provincial needs and how much we send to Ottawa." I now urge this government to strengthen provincial autonomy. Follow Quebec's lead in advocating for the creation of a single provincial tax collection agency for all the taxes that Albertans pay.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I know that every member of this House will always step up to protect our province. Today our disagreement is in how we do that. Now, last week the Premier claimed ignorance when we challenged her about the undemocratic powers buried in her job-killing sovereignty act. First she said that we were wrong. Then she claimed that we didn't read the bill. Then she called us fearmongers. Now she admits that there are problems while her caucus demands amendments. To the Premier. She's lost people's trust with this bumbling and stumbling, so now her bill is beyond saving. Why won't she just withdraw it?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, first the Leader of the Opposition didn't even want to read the bill, voted against it on first reading. Then she asked her friend in Ottawa, Justin Trudeau, to quash the bill, and now she's said that she doesn't even want to propose any amendments. I don't think that the Leader of the Opposition is approaching this in good faith. My caucus is. My caucus identified some issues that they wanted to address – they wanted to seek some clarity – and that's the kind of leader I am. I want to make sure that we get this bill right, and I'm grateful that my caucus is going to propose amendments to do that.

Ms Notley: “The worst piece of legislation introduced in Alberta since the Social Credit bills of the 1930s”: that's Don Braid, the Premier's ex-colleague. Mr. Speaker, when Albertans pointed out this blatant power grab, the Premier claimed that they just didn't understand the bill, just like she did right there. Now she's kind of changing her tune. Here's the thing: she either got caught in her attempt to seize power and is now desperately scrambling to cover that up, or she literally didn't know what was in her bill and very possibly still doesn't. So which is it?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition may want to quote a journalist, but let me quote former Canadian Supreme Court Justice John Major saying that he doesn't find this bill particularly alarming. In fact, he says: what's so terrible about the province saying if you want to impose on us, you'd better be sure you're doing it constitutionally? Geoffrey Sigalek as well, University of British Columbia, centre for constitutional law, says that it's totally constitutional. I will take my advice from the constitutional scholars who are looking at this bill and saying that it is the right thing to do.

Ms Notley: Well, those particular scholars, Mr. Speaker, are very much in the minority. Meanwhile the Premier is ignoring the many voices worried about the impact on our economy. CAPP has concerns, the Calgary Chamber has concerns, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce said that businesses are caught in the middle and uncertainty is now the order of the day. Meanwhile the Premier claims that she's getting quiet phone calls from CEOs who disagree. So here's the question, and it should be an easy one: can the Premier stand and name those CEOs, and if not, why not?

Ms Smith: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that neither the head of the chamber nor the head of CAPP consulted their members because I have been getting dozens of phone calls all weekend. I will just say that, in point of fact, when you look at the business investment climate and the kind of uncertainty that was created – I remember the Leader of the Opposition talking down Northern Gateway, which cost Northern Gateway; talking down Keystone XL, which cost us Keystone XL; talking down the coal industry; $4 billion is what it cost us on the early phase-out of coal. These are the kinds of things that the business community does not want to see again.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Clearly unable to name even one CEO.

Children's Health Care and Hospital Capacity

Ms Notley: Meanwhile the surge in pediatric patients arriving in ERs across the province is alarming. This weekend Albertans learned that respite care at the Rotary Flames House is being sacrificed to ensure care at the Alberta Children's hospital. This is a serious blow for some of Alberta's most medically fragile children and their families. This staff shortage was not manufactured; it is because of decisions made by this UCP government. To the Premier. These children need our help, and they deserve action from your government. What are you doing to restore these services today?

Ms Smith: The crisis that we're seeing in health care right now is a crisis that's taking place across the province and across the country. We see in British Columbia as well that they've called a code orange alert. In Toronto they are also taking additional measures. We know that we need to have additional staff onboard. In fact, I'm going to give some credit to the UNA boss, Heather Smith – she's been working very collaboratively with Alberta Health Services – because we know the way the nurses' contract is written is that they have to sign off on any redeployment of staff. She's been excellent to work with, and I hope that we'll be able to continue doing that.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, in B.C. we heard for hours today from the chief medical officer of health trying to find ways to keep children safe. In Alberta we have a volunteer chief medical officer of health who is silent. Meanwhile Dr. Sam Wong says that the surge in pediatric care is having a severe impact on areas like in-patient and emergency care, and right now they're just trying to keep surgeries happening. To the Premier: what specifically is she going to do to prevent surgeries for children from being cancelled today?

Ms Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we already know that the wait in emergency rooms is way too long. It's part of the reason why I appointed Dr. John Cowell to take over as official administrator, so that we could be making some of these decisions in a very rapid way. We also know that one of the issues we're facing across the country is the shortage of children's Tylenol, the shortage of children's ibuprofen, the shortage of other children's medication. [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: I may have something more to say on that very soon. [interjections] Yeah, maybe as soon as tomorrow.

This is the thing that we need to do. We need to make sure that children are getting the medications that they need so that parents can take care of their kids at home.

Ms Notley: We're not talking about Tylenol; we're talking about palliative care for children.

Now, the Premier perhaps should have read about Amanda Weger, an Airdrie mother who had to drive into Calgary when her 23-month-old daughter needed emergency respiratory care. She arrived to a packed ER full of sick children, some in heated trailers. Mr. Speaker, this is a crisis, and it is real, and it is urgent. The silence from this Premier since we last raised this issue in the House has been deafening. We must have an emergency debate today. Will the Premier commit to ensuring that this debate proceeds?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition knows what's going on in the country, that we do have a shortage of children's medication. As a result, when children get high fevers, they're going to the hospitals, and it's happening all across the country. It's the reason why we've been working collaboratively with the federal government to try to address this need for urgent medications, so that people can get the care that they need in their home. We are also working with Dr. John Cowell, the chief administrator, to make sure that we are addressing the issue in the emergency rooms, and that includes children's services. I'm glad that the union is working with us on doing that.

Ms Ganley: Today I stand for Alberta's economic future, for new investment and good-paying jobs. One of the major job-creation projects under our NDP government was the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, which to date has led to nearly 30,000 jobs. This game-changing project runs through British Columbia to tidewater. Imagine the scenario where B.C. put in their own sovereignty act: no more Trans Mountain expansion, no access to tidewater. How exactly does the Premier expect us to get our products to market if she cuts Alberta off from the rest of the country?

Ms Smith: You know, Mr. Speaker, I want to work collaboratively with the federal government. I wish that they had worked with us on approving Northern Gateway, but the Leader of the Official Opposition opposed that. I wish that they had stood up for us when the Americans cancelled Keystone XL, but that was another project that the Leader of the Opposition opposed as well. The reason why business investment is leaving our province is because of decisions being made by the federal government that are supported by the NDP and the Liberal-NDP coalition that continues to chase investment out of our country. The reason why we need to put up a shield is so that we can attract that investment back.

Ms Ganley: The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, the Calgary Chamber of commerce, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, venture capitalists: the list of groups and investors speaking out against the job-killing sovereignty act grows longer by the hour. Rather than addressing their concerns, the Premier decided to go on national television and call them liars. Can the Premier explain why she thinks it's a good strategy to insult the very Albertans and international investors who drive our economic growth?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I was at such an exciting event this morning. I don't understand why the NDP keeps on talking down our economy and keeps on talking down our business community, because WestJet has just announced the expansion of their direct flights: Barcelona, Rome, Paris, London, Dublin. This is the thing that is going to not only give us access to the world, but they're looking forward to using that as an access for the international community for investment here. One of the biggest things that they've done is that they've now launched a direct flight to Tokyo. I talked to the consul general; he's really excited about ways in which we can have partnership to have more investment here.

Ms Ganley: Those aren't my words, Premier; they're the chamber of commerce's.

Long-time Calgary Herald columnist Don Braid wrote this morning that the sovereignty act might be "the worst piece of legislation" seen in this House since 1930. That was when the government of the day moved to imprison people who spoke out against them. This is generationally bad legislation, but this government wants us to trust them to use it judiciously. If this Premier wants to claim, contrary to the business community, that her act won't cost jobs, it is on her to prove it. Release the economic impact analysis today.

Ms Smith: Well, if we're just going to be trading quotes, let me give another quote. Keith Wilson said that he has reviewed Bill 1. "Bill 1 is moderate in scope and goals." You guys just quoted Don Braid, for heaven's sakes. Keith Wilson is at least a lawyer. "The truth is [Danielle Smith is] standing up to Ottawa's anti-Alberta policies [and it] will encourage investment and more jobs in Alberta." The real issue here is Ottawa. I'm wondering when the Official Opposition is going to stand against Ottawa and start standing up for Albertans. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has the call.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I sat down with Treaty 8 chiefs and staff who are deeply concerned about the job-killing, undemocratic sovereignty act. They asked me to relay their questions and concerns to the Premier directly. To the Premier. Grand Chief Noskey wants to know: since this act gives your government the power to circumvent the federal government, the courts, and, by extension, treaty rights when the government deems it in the, quote, public interest, what guarantee do First Nations have that she will not bowl over their inherent rights for what she sees as public interest, because it's clear that her definition of public interest does not include First Nations?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Indigenous affairs minister has been fielding calls from chiefs who are concerned. The reason they're concerned: I think he's alleviated that. When you look at the bill, the bill asserts that everything we are going to do does not abrogate or derogate from anything, any rights, that is enumerated in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If you read section 25 of the Charter of Rights and ... [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. The Premier has the right to answer the question just as you have the right to ask it.

The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: If you read section 25 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it's very clear that Aboriginal and treaty rights, not even just existing treaty rights but future land claims, are fully protected under the law. This is not about abrogating anyone else's rights; it's about asserting Alberta's.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chief Rupert Meneen of Tallcree First Nation is well aware that this Premier is ignorant to the fact that First Nations are sovereign. From the extensive history of treaty signings with the British monarch to today, these treaties are essential, and they're why Canada is a country. First Nations are not a subset of the Alberta government or just another stakeholder but stewards of their own land. This means that the Premier needs to seek consent when developing resources on First Nations land or changing the environmental standards protecting their hunting and fishing rights. What will the Premier do when First Nations inevitably push back on her heavy-handed overreach?

Ms Smith: The hon. member is absolutely right. I mean, I don't think that there's going to be a single project that proceeds in this province anymore without an Indigenous partner. It's part of the reason why we have the Indigenous opportunities agency. It's part of the reason why specifically in the bill, in contemplating it, it said that it does not abrogate or take away from the Charter rights represented in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I know that we are going to have a partnership of economic reconciliation with our First Nations, and as soon as we assert that we have the right to develop our resources, we're going to do that in partnership with our First Nations communities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Grand Chief Arthur Noskey pointed out that the sovereignty act is the second UCP bill that directly attacks First Nations. First was the Critical Infrastructure Defence Act, which was passed in retaliation to First Nations' protests fighting for their treaty rights but never once used on the Coutts blockade. To the Premier from Grand Chief Noskey: do you have enough resources to arrest everyone in Treaty 8 using the critical infrastructure act when they oppose the utilization of the sovereignty act?

Ms Smith: Well, once again, the sovereignty act is about affirming First Nations' rights, affirming Alberta's rights under the Constitution, and affirming the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If you look at the throne speech and you look at all of my statements that I have made on economic corridors, it begins with reaching out a . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: Our approach begins with reaching out a hand to our partners in the First Nations communities. We know that all of our future development is going to take place in partnership with First Nations. I commit to doing that, and I'm looking forward to meeting with all of the chiefs to make that point.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington is next.

Affordability Plan

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Calgary-Beddington families, seniors, and individuals on a fixed income are struggling due to inflation, but Justin Trudeau continues to double down on inflationary spending and his carbon tax increase rather than simply supporting everyday working Canadians. To the Minister of Affordability and Utilities: what is the government of Alberta doing to help everyday Albertans afford their heat and gas and put food on the table?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we can't stop inflation, we can offer substantial relief thanks to our strong fiscal position. Our affordability action plan provides households up to $900 in broad-based relief, including extended electricity rebates, protection from utility spikes this winter, 13.6 cents a litre off gas or diesel from January to June 2023, and additional targeted support, $600 over six months, to families for each child, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans. Unlike the federal government and the members opposite, who support increasing costs on families, we are making life more affordable.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Given that the affordability crisis has increased the cost of virtually all basic needs, including food, utilities, and more, and given that thousands of Albertans rely on the social benefits such as AISH and the seniors' benefit and given that Alberta's government announced this week that they will index these supports, increasing them by 6 per cent, can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services tell the House what this increase will do to help those who rely on these programs?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About seven years ago I had the opportunity of meeting with a mother in our community named Leah, who's the proud mother of Taisa, and seven years ago we sat down and talked about some of the challenges facing the disability community. Leah has sacrificed so much for her daughter, to be able to be there for her, and one of the challenges that she brought up was slowly watching things become more and more unaffordable as AISH payments were not keeping up with inflation. This announcement is going to have a great impact on not just Leah and Taisa but so many others in the community so that they can make sure that they can pay their bills, and that support is ongoing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Given that there are many Albertans struggling to afford today's inflated costs, especially those on fixed incomes, and given that our newly elected Premier directed that this payment be increased to address the affordability crisis, can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services tell Albertans and the House about when vulnerable and low-income individuals will see this much-needed increase?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for that question. I know that she's out hitting the doors, like I am, and just seeing story after story of constituents that are struggling with increases to costs and inflation. This is urgent, and that's why I'm pleased to report for folks on AISH and income support that they will see a bump before Christmas, December 22. For our seniors they're going to see a bump coming into January. This relief is coming quick, and in addition to that, they're going to be receiving the $100 per month payment starting in January.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:10 Alberta Sovereignty Act and Fiscal Policies

Ms Phillips: In the weeks since the UCP government introduced the sovereignty act, opposition has been swift and fierce from the business community. The Calgary Chamber of commerce, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers all say that it will create uncertainty and drive away investment. When presented with this fact, the Premier lashed out and insulted the Calgary Chamber and just now CAPP as well instead of listening to them about the risks of this flawed legislation. Why is this government attacking the business community and business leaders instead of listening to them and shelving this job-killing sovereignty act?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we are always going to stand up and fight for Albertans. That's what we're here for, and that's what we're going to do. But I don't understand: last week the Leader of the Opposition applied for a job with Justin Trudeau. Now, I know that up to this time he's always been a friend of the boss of the NDP, which is Jagmeet Singh in Ottawa, but I didn't really realize that she was applying for a job with the Prime Minister. I think what she should do is think about this, stand up for Albertans, and quit following through with the Prime Minister and the Liberal Party of Canada.

Ms Phillips: Given that it isn't just the sovereignty act that the business community is opposed to and that, in fact, a recent survey by the Alberta Chambers of Commerce found that their members are also opposed to a UCP plan to demolish our Canada pension plan retirement savings and given that the government's own analysis showed that withdrawing from CPP would lead to $130 billion in unfunded liabilities – no wonder it is so deeply unpopular with Albertans of all backgrounds – why is this government pushing ahead with this risky scheme that will increase costs and, like the sovereignty act, is also opposed by the business community?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board has risen.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we're pushing ahead with is in fact doing the econometric work, the actuarial work so Albertans can make an informed decision on the opportunities and risks of an Alberta pension plan. The members opposite would have Albertans not make that choice, would have Albertans not privy to the information so they can make an informed view. An Alberta pension plan holds great promise not only for the business community but for Albertans in general. We will be pleased to provide the report.

Ms Phillips: Now, given that the chamber of commerce survey also showed that business is opposed to the UCP plan for an Alberta police force and this new tax and revenue agency that will add 5,000 public servants, grow the bureaucracy by 20 per cent, cost up to half a billion dollars, and result in all of us having to file our taxes twice – oh, goody; people will love that – will the UCP, anyone over there, commit to abandoning this ever-lengthening list of job-killing, red tape wrapping, unnecessary, embarrassing, antibusiness policies? Just commit to listening to business. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Lethbridge-West is very animated today in the House. I assert this: why would we not investigate every opportunity to strengthen Alberta within the nation of Canada? That's what this investigation is about, understanding the opportunities and risks, benefits and costs of an Alberta revenue agency. We will do the work. We will inform Albertans. We will engage Albertans. Albertans ought to know.

Grocery Prices

Ms Renaud: Albertans are struggling to keep up with the cost of groceries. CPI data shows that grocery increased 10 per cent from last year, and it's only getting worse. According to the food price guide 2022 groceries will increase almost an additional $1,000 for a family of four. With Alberta being the second-worst province for wage growth, more and more Albertans are being forced to use their savings, credit cards they can't afford, or predatory lenders just to buy food. To the Premier. Later today I'm tabling a motion that will help us make an Alberta-based solution for grocery prices. Simple question: will you support this motion?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that families are being hit hard by inflation and especially the increase of the cost of groceries. The average family of four will pay approximately $15,000 in groceries over the next year. That's why we'll be providing $100 per month per child under 18 to families to help off-set the increase in the cost of groceries and other costs facing Albertans due to high inflation.

Ms Renaud: Given that Food Price Report showed that Albertans are facing the worst price increases in the country and given that Alberta's grocery sector is arguably the least competitive in all of Canada, with only two large corporate grocers and the smallest per capita number of independent grocers, will the Premier support our call for a study into how to increase competition in the grocery industry in Alberta? This is something real we can do. We can help lower costs for Alberta families today. Will the Premier do this? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member is quite aware, at least she should be, the Competition Bureau announced in October that they're currently investigating that. In fact, they're accepting submissions up until December 16. I would encourage the hon. member to use her time valuably in the Legislative Assembly and focus on things that are important to Albertans, like affordability. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Renaud: Perhaps the minister should focus on the question, and that is that people can't afford food.

Given that the increased cost of food hurts those living in poverty the most and given that increases are pricing out many essential and nutritious items like pasta, up 45 per cent; margarine, up 40 per cent; rice, up 14 per cent; soup, 18 per cent – they're pricing it so that vulnerable Albertans are just missing meals. They can't afford food. Given that the large grocers are reporting massive earnings increases, including Loblaws, that is reporting $556 million in earnings and a 29 per cent increase from last year, Premier, will you support the motion?

Mr. Jones: We know that vulnerable Albertans and those on lower and often fixed incomes are being hit particularly hard by inflation and the increased cost of living. That's why we moved quickly to announce the indexing of core support programs that vulnerable Albertans rely on and the Alberta seniors' benefit. We also included all vulnerable Albertans and the vast majority of seniors on targeted inflation relief payments, which will provide $600 over the next six months to help off-set the increased costs due to inflation.

Tax Policies

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, in 2018 United Conservative Party members passed a policy to restore a flat rate to provincial income taxes. Prior to this, from 2001 to 2015, our 10 per cent provincial flat tax provided a fair method of taxing income while, in turn, maintaining Alberta's position as the most free and prosperous province. To the Premier: do you agree that it's your government's duty to reflect democratically expressed wishes of UCP members to restore the Alberta advantage and continue to grow economic opportunities for all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no doubt that low taxes attract Canadians to the province of Alberta. I'm pleased to report that right now Alberta is leading the nation on net interprovincial migration. That's a good sign for the province, a good sign for our economy. Tax review and tax reform should be ongoing. When the members opposite took office and led the government in 2015, they raised taxes on corporations and individuals, sent billions of dollars of investment packing along with thousands of Albertans.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the Alberta government's annual oil and gas royalties are now projected at $28 billion and given that historically Alberta's flat tax increased our province's competitiveness and domestic investment and given that the flat tax also attracted hundreds of thousands of people through international and interprovincial migration and given that Albertans are looking to restore our status as the freest and most prosperous place to live, again to the Premier: when are you going to recognize that Albertans own the revenue from oil and gas resources and need more financial freedom and financial opportunity?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government does recognize that Albertans own the resource; that's reflected in our policy to suspend the fuel tax when energy prices rise. Our revenues as a province are not compromised. Albertans can benefit from an owned resource, but it's important to periodically review the appropriateness and efficiency of our revenue structure. I would suggest that time is coming near. Income taxes are a detriment, are a disincentive to productivity. They should be as low as possible.

Mr. Barnes: Given that implementing a flat tax results in less legal tax avoidance and better tax planning outcomes for Alberta families and given that UCP members as far back as 2018 have asked for a flat tax to be implemented to make Alberta the freest and most prosperous place in Canada and now given the Fraser Institute reports that Alberta has dropped from first to 47th place on the North American economic freedom index since the removal of our flat tax, again to the Premier: is there actually a plan to reduce taxes and give Albertans more financial freedom?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I appreciate the questioning, the assertion of the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and the importance of keeping taxes as low as possible. Again, on the record I'm in favour of a review of our revenue structure to ensure that it's most efficient, most appropriate. That time is coming very soon.

I want to tell the House a story. When the members opposite, the NDP, took office, they jacked up corporate income tax rates and collected less. Mr. Speaker, we dropped those corporate rates by one-third, and we're collecting billions more per year. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, the firefighters who battled the 2016 Horse River wildfire in Fort McMurray are true Alberta heroes. Day after day they worked in Fort McMurray to protect homes and infrastructure, in many cases without the necessary protective equipment or access to showers. They did this work from evacuation to re-entry. Now these same heroes are fighting to receive coverage for injuries they sustained, including recent cancer diagnosis. Will the minister responsible for WCB please tell this Assembly if they support ensuring these heroes get the compensation they deserve?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a leader in the country on presumptive care under WCB. The NDP don't seem to understand how presumptive coverage currently works in Alberta. The firefighters that worked for us and continue to work for us to save Fort McMurray and other places on a day-to-day basis already qualify for presumptive coverage on job-related cancers and presumptive coverage on mental health. How it works is that it's a fast track. When we find the evidence that backs it up, we cover it, and that's what we're here for, to make sure that Albertans and Alberta firefighters and EMS have the coverage they need.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, given that I don't think the minister understands how latency period works, given that I don't think the minister is aware that there is a Leduc firefighter currently going through the appeal process because he fought in Fort McMurray, has cancer, and is now not able to get the coverage he needs and given that earlier I was proud to stand with the Leader of the Official Opposition at the Alberta Professional Fire Fighters & Paramedics Association to commit to increasing presumptive cancer coverage and removing the latency period for firefighters who fought in the Horse River fires, does the minister support the commitment made by the Leader of the Official Opposition today?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it's just like the NDP to promise things that have already been done and been done by this government. I'm proud of the work this government has done, but in this particular case if there's an issue, I would be happy to hear from the member in relation to that and sit down with her and talk about that, because clearly this is an issue that has to be based on evidence. It has to be based on what's best for the firefighters, for the emergency service personnel, and for the people of Alberta.

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, given that it's incumbent on this minister to listen, Alberta does not have the most forward-thinking presumptive coverage anymore. It used to under the NDP; it doesn't under the UCP. Given university studies on 1,200 firefighters have shown chronic issues and given that without changes to presumptive coverage, removing those latency periods, firefighters not only will have to fight cancer; they will have to fight for health, will the minister of jobs join the NDP in committing to providing peace of mind to the Fort McMurray firefighters and all of the firefighters across Alberta who fought in that wildfire and help them now?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the member was listening, but if she has a particular case that she wants to talk to me about, a number of cases that she wants to talk about, I'm more than happy to. My office door is always open. But there is a balance. As we find more evidence that suggests that cancers are caused by this fire or other fires or other happenings on the job, we will cover those. It's evidence based, and it must be evidence based because that's in the best interest of firefighters and emergency personnel. It's also in the best interest of Albertans.

Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Member Loyola: The new Premier has stated that she is, quote, open to revisiting construction of the Springbank dam. That dam is the solution to preventing another catastrophic flood in Calgary, when the last one caused $5 billion in damages, killed five people, and resulted in the evacuation of 80,000 residents. It's absurd to suggest that such a complex project should go back to square one. To the Premier's new adjutant, the backbencher who is now Deputy Premier and Minister of Infrastructure: has the boss been briefed yet, and is she still in favour of revisiting the Springbank project?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the solution that we need for flood protection in Calgary is on the Bow River. I think that the ministers and the government did a good job of getting to the finish line, finally, on the Springbank dam. It might not have been my first option, but it's now at a point where it's too far gone to retract. I think the bigger issue now is: how do we make sure that we get greater flood protection on the Bow so that we can not only do water management and irrigation but also hydroelectric power and new recreation opportunities? That's what I'll be looking at.

Member Loyola: Given that it's impossible to know where this government stands – they say one thing one day, something else the next – and given that the Premier went on at length about how the Springbank dam was a missed opportunity and the wrong project to protect Calgary because she talked to someone on a radio show and given that flood protection is critical for the economic security of Calgary and downstream communities, can the Deputy Premier, the Premier's most trusted adviser, please explain exactly what his boss thinks is wrong with the Springbank project and why Calgary doesn't deserve flood protection right now?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a little rich coming from the NDP, saying that it's impossible to know what this government is doing with Springbank. Construction is already under way. They're working on it right now. I'd encourage the member to actually go down to Calgary to see it with his own eyes. This is a very important project for the city of Calgary. We're committed to making sure that flood mitigation for the city of Calgary is in place so we will never see the repeat of a 2013 flood incident like we did around Calgary.

Member Loyola: Thanks for demonstrating you're not listening.

Given that the Springbank dam is a huge and complex project already under construction and given that this project was subject to both provincial and federal reviews over eight years, through three governments and given that this project was deemed essential and in the public interest, to the Premier's most essential ally, the Deputy Premier and Minister of Infrastructure: has he explained to his boss why she was wrong and why the project is essential to protect Calgary?

Mr. Dreeshen: I'll slow it down, Mr. Speaker. I will assure the member that I was listening to his question, but it's just a little absurd. There are about 3,700 acres near Calgary that are for the Springbank dam. All the money is committed to the Springbank dam. We are committed to building it. We are building it currently, right now. The fact that the member is again doing the classic NDP fear and smear to say that something isn't happening when it actually is, I would say: go there and see it with your own eyes.

Crime Rate in Northeast Calgary

Mr. Toor: Mr. Speaker, according to the data gathered by the city of Calgary, my constituents in Calgary-Falconridge have been suffering from a high crime rate when compared to the rest of the city. This problem extends throughout the rest of northeast Calgary as well. To the minister: what are the main factors that contribute to this high level of crime, and what steps are your department taking to ensure public safety at and around Calgary northeast?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister of public safety.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for that question. You know, there are a number of contributing factors, of course, that people face when it comes to crime. I can tell you that substance use disorder is certainly one of those. Unfortunately, when you have an addiction, it makes people do things that they don't normally do. That's why this government has taken unprecedented action in helping people with substance use disorders. That includes the 8,000 spaces, and that includes no fees for people in order to get the help that they need. This government is taking action, and we're proud of the work that we're doing.

Mr. Toor: Thank you, Minister. Given the high levels of crime that have impact on my constituents, it is clear that more people are being pushed towards committing criminal activity for a variety of reasons. For example, gun violence in Calgary is on the rise. In the first four months of 2020 alone there were 54 shootings in the city, and 26 happened in Calgary northeast. Can the minister explain why these kinds of criminal acts of gun violence are increasing in Calgary northeast?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to statistics from, actually, the Calgary Police Service, thefts, break and enters, and assaults are consistently the top three crimes committed, and this is a trend that is consistent actually in northeast Calgary. You know, we're going to continue to work with our law enforcement community. We're going to partner with them. We're going to ensure that communities are protected. We're going to make sure that they have the resources that they need. And we're diligently working to protect Albertans when it comes to public safety.

Thank you.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Falconridge.

Mr. Toor: Thank you to the minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the factors that are behind this increase in crime and given the nature of the crimes that are being committed more and more and given that the negative economic conditions when combined with increased crimes make the lives of my constituents more difficult, to the same minister: what strategy is in place to ensure public safety and lower crime rates in northeast Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to that member for that question. You know, we've made significant steps to improve public safety. I can tell you that there's been a $15 million increase over five years to ALERT to address organized crime, serious crimes, including gang violence, drug trafficking, child exploitation. We, of course, had the additional 8,000 addiction treatment spaces, which is a step forward to addressing people with substance use disorders, and also $20 million over four years to expand drug treatment courts. These are just some of the steps that we're taking to help reduce crime within the city of Calgary.

Thank you.

Women's Issues

Member Irwin: A lot has happened lately in this province, and it's sure hard to follow all the wild things this UCP government has done. In fact, it's easy to forget, but the women of this province won't forget. They won't forget that it was only three months ago that the UCP awarded a prize to an explicitly racist and sexist essay. They won't forget that it's women who've been disproportionately impacted by the pandemic and that it's women-dominated professions, like nursing and teaching, that have been attacked by the UCP time and time again. So to the Premier: why do you feel that the women of Alberta don't deserve a voice? Why was one of your first moves to eliminate the status of women ministry? Asking for 2 million or so Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, thank you for that question. This government is committed to support women in this province. We're proud. Women in this province excel everywhere, including economic recovery. Despite that we don't have an associate minister for that, my ministry has the full mandate for that. On top of that, we have a leader in our caucus, the Hon. Fir, that is also the parliamentary secretary for status of women. We have a team working on this.

Member Irwin: Wow. Given that Alberta women were intrigued, to say the least, that it was this man who holds the position, the Minister of Culture, who represented all of us women at the meeting of status of women ministers in Nova Scotia last month and given that the priorities discussed at the meeting included addressing violence against Indigenous women, girls, and 2SLGBTQ-plus people, a COVID-19 recovery plan, and women's leadership, can the minister outline the next steps his government will be taking to address these key issues related to women in Alberta? Please be very specific.

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, I was very proud to be the minister in charge of status of women attending the national conference. [interjections]

The Speaker: The member asked a question, which I could hear, and I'm hoping to be able to hear the answer.

The hon. the minister.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very proud to attend the national conference for the status of women. As one of the few male ministers let me tell you this. We have arrived to a best practices recognition that nowadays not only do we need women to help women; we need boys and men to defend women in our province. I was a very proud participant in that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Irwin: Given that historically one of the key roles of a status of women ministry is to ensure that sexual violence, harassment, and discrimination of all forms is addressed and that action plans are put into place and we as legislators have a role to call this out even when it's related to other politicians and given that Calgary city councillor Sean Chu has engaged in deeply troubling behaviour on multiple fronts and there is authority under the act to remove him from office, will the Minister of Culture today demand the removal of Sean Chu? And if he won't, will anyone over there stand up and do the right thing?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Schulz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I do want to say that violence of all kinds, especially violence against women and most especially sexual violence against a minor, is both unacceptable and against the law. These are exceptionally serious allegations. What I can tell this House is that the mayor has made a formal request to review this case, which, because of its nature, has been directed to the ministries of Justice and public safety. They will review the 1997 Calgary Police Commission's complaint file review to determine whether any further action should be taken.

Coutts Border Crossing Protester Conspiracy Charges

Mr. Sabir: Southern Alberta was held hostage earlier this year by an illegal blockade that cost our economy millions and disrupted Albertans' lives. The Member for Taber-Warner even went to that illegal blockade. For months these blockaders trained and stockpiled weapons and ammunition to fulfill an evil plot to murder members of law enforcement. Will the Premier join me today in publicly condemning that evil plot and thanking the RCMP for their work in ending it?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. I will just say this, that any sort of illegal blockade is not accepted. It is something that should not and will not be tolerated. I can tell you that this government is committed to working with our local law enforcement officers to make sure that we keep the public safe.

Mr. Sabir: Given that this group had two pipe bombs, 36,000 rounds of ammunition, gas masks, and firearms for their plot to murder the members of the RCMP and given that these plotters made horrible claims and statements about how they believed that the members of the police should die, with one of the plotters being described as a hitman, will the Premier join me in condemning that illegal blockade and its violent nature?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Public Safety and Emergency Services.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure as the member knows, I mean, this is a matter that is currently before the courts right now in the Lethbridge area. I can tell you that we've been in contact with folks in the RCMP and the local municipalities in the Lethbridge area to make sure that they have the necessary resources and supports for our law enforcement community to make sure that justice is being served throughout the courts.

Mr. Sabir: Given that there have been groups advocating for the amnesty and forgiveness of those charged with violating public health orders during the pandemic, with the Premier being one of them, and given that the serious nature of the crime of those arrested, with explosives and firearms, plotting the murder of members of law enforcement, means they should not be included in any discussion of any amnesty, will the Premier join me today in condemning these plotters, those who supported their plans, and say unequivocally that they should face the full consequences of their actions?

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I think the member opposite should take yes for an answer. We do not support criminal behaviour. I can tell you that those individuals have been charged. That is currently going through the court process, and we will allow the courts to take place. This is a matter before the courts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Health Care System

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Congratulations to the Minister of Health on recently ratifying a four-year agreement with Alberta doctors. This will bring about improved comprehensive care, greater efficiency of the health care system, reduction in surgical wait times, and increased access to timely emergency medical services, among many other benefits to Albertans. To the Minister of Health. Please tell the House what other initiatives you will be implementing over the coming months to ensure a more sustainable, efficient, and stable public health care system right here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I am extremely proud of the Alberta Medical Association agreement that was reached, and it was reached with an overwhelming percentage of support on this agreement. This agreement provides doctors with stable and predictable funding while recognizing their dedicated service to Albertans. This agreement does help stabilize the health care system and will assist us to focus on other areas of concern, like attracting and retaining more doctors right here in Alberta. I'm looking forward to more announcements on how we will accomplish this in the coming weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Mr. Walker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that our government is dedicated to improving access to health care and increased efficiency and given that our government appointed an administrator to AHS to ensure this happens as swiftly as possible, can the Minister of Health please tell this House how this administrator is already improving the efficiency and stability of our health care system?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thanks again to the hon. member for the question, Mr. Speaker. In November the Premier and I appointed a full-time administrator, Dr. John Cowell, replacing a part-time board, and asked him to focus on key issues facing Alberta Health Services. As the official administrator Dr. Cowell's efficient, effective, and decisive leadership will be focused on improving EMS response times, decreasing emergency room wait times, reducing surgical wait times, and developing long-term reforms through consultation with front-line workers and other key stakeholders to drive decision-making. I'll be looking forward to providing the results of that in the coming weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Walker: Thank you. Given that demand for health care services in Alberta continues to grow and given that the creation of more IV therapy rooms would help provide better and more timely services for Albertans, can the Minister of Health please update the House on the status of the $1.5 million IV therapy room investment in the Strathcona community hospital, and what is the estimated timeline of construction?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member opposite. His continued focus on representing his constituents is greatly appreciated. The current designated space in the Strathcona community hospital administered nearly 10,000 treatments in 2021 alone, so I'm happy to report to this House that the construction of a new dedicated space is set for early 2023, with an estimated completion date near the end of next year. The Strathcona Community Hospital Foundation is currently undergoing a campaign to raise $250,000 to support this project. My understanding is that they're well on their way, and I look forward to it being open next year.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the Routine.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our committee chair and as deputy chair of the Select Special Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee I'm honoured to table the committee's final report recommending the appointment of Kevin Brezinski as both the Ombudsman and the Public Interest Commissioner for a five-year term commencing on December 30 of this year.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Government Motion 12, sponsored by myself.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly (a) concur in the report of the Select Special Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee, tabled on December 5, 2022, Sessional Paper 17/2022, and (b) recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Kevin Brezinski be appointed as Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner for the province of Alberta for a five-year term commencing on December 30, 2022.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, do you have another motion to table?

Mr. Schow: Indeed, I do, Mr. Speaker. I also rise to give oral notice of Government Motion 13, sponsored by myself.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-City Centre has a notice of motion.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that at the appropriate time under Standing Order 42 I intend to move the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly (a) acknowledge the adverse impact on families with children receiving pediatric respite health care services at the Rotary Flames House by pausing care in an attempt to meet the rising unmet patient needs at Alberta Children's hospital and (b) urge the government to immediately table an action plan that will in an expeditious manner ensure that these pediatric respite health care services are fully resumed at the Rotary Flames House.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, which proposes to amend three different pieces of legislation under Justice and Service Alberta to abolish adverse possession.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Copping: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022, for first reading this afternoon.

First and foremost, I want to sincerely thank Alberta's physicians and all health care providers for the tremendous and tireless work that they're doing, particularly through the pandemic over the last two and a half years. Alberta's health care system is under unprecedented pressure, and I acknowledge the stress that physicians have been facing. I am confident that our new agreement with the Alberta Medical Association will stabilize the health system, target areas of concern, and support Albertans' health care needs. Part of this new agreement is the government's commitment to repeal section 40.2 of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. This section of the act allows the government to terminate compensation-related agreements. If it passes, Bill 4 will repeal the government's ability to terminate its agreement with the Alberta Medical Association.

With that, I move first reading of Bill 4. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to table the requisite number of copies of the playbill from the very first running of a play at the Roxy Theatre, which has reopened. Thank goodness we were able to fund that project when we were in government. One of the things from the playbill that I think is of particular interest to members of this House is that Ian Jackson, who is usually the photographer who stands in that corner on important legislative days, is the production designer for the play. It's a gorgeous play. You should all take a chance to see it. There are six days left in the run.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of an article written by Don Braid. The title of the article is Dictatorial, Unworkable Sovereignty Act May Be Worst Legislation in Alberta History. I think it's summarized well by its conclusion: "This bill is a complete mess that makes Alberta look ridiculous. It seriously erodes Albertans' own democratic rights with little prospect of doing any good."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a document from the Globe and Mail entitled Sovereignty Act Is a Silly Political Dare, Written in Crayon. The article goes on to wonder if the amendments will make the bill simply "bizarre and unconstitutional [rather than] bizarre, unconstitutional and outrageously undemocratic."

The Speaker: Are there others? Do you have a tabling?

Mr. van Dijken: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Barrhead-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Upon returning home last weekend, I found in my mail a letter from the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association with concerns over food shortages caused from fertilizer emissions reductions. The Trudeau government has committed Canada to reduce its fertilizer emissions by 30 per cent. "Agriculture is the cornerstone of food security in Canada. And arbitrary reductions in emissions will come at the cost of reduced output of food and higher prices," which "could lead to extreme unintended consequences": not my words but words from the Western Canadian Wheat Growers. I would encourage all members to read and enjoy.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I do have six copies of the page biographies for the fall sitting 2022, the Fourth Session of the 30th Legislature.

Thank you.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the appropriate time the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre rose on a Standing Order 42. He has up to five minutes to speak to the motion.

2:50 Children's Hospice and Palliative Care in Calgary

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to SO 42 to request that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to debate a motion that is urgent and pressing and which I read under Notices of Motions. I'd like to acknowledge that pursuant to SO 42 I have provided the members of this Assembly with the appropriate number of copies, and I provided your office notice of my intention to move this motion as well as notified the government.

Mr. Speaker, it's our duty as representatives in this Assembly to address the urgent crisis in children's health care, which is now even worse because of the children's hospice, the Rotary Flames House, needing to pause some of its essential services. I can think of nothing more urgent or of no greater emergency that the province is facing at this moment compared to the state of children's health care. News broke about the Rotary Flames House on Friday, and I have been hearing from families about the impact of this since then. The hospice provides palliative care services for children with life-limiting illnesses. They also provide grief and bereavement support for parents and siblings. Rotary Flames House is an important place for families who are facing such difficult circumstances, and it's absolutely tragic that staff and services are being diverted as we near the holidays.

We should not be in a place where staff and resources are being pulled away from a children's hospice. This should be the most urgent matter not only of the Premier and the Health minister but of every single member in this Chamber. What are we doing here if we are not even providing children of this province with stable health care? The past president of the Canadian Medical Association, Katharine Smart, has said: this state of children's care shows the entirety of our health care system is on a knife's edge.

The Speaker: My apologies, Member. If we can just grab the copies – quickly pass them to the pages – they'll distribute. My apologies for the interruption.

Mr. Shepherd: No trouble, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Edward Les has been with the Alberta Children's hospital as an emergency physician since 2004 and says that he has never seen the situation this bad.

Last week the UCP refused to debate my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud's emergency motion to address children's health following a shortage of pediatric medication and the building of a trailer to extend the size of the Alberta Children's hospital's waiting room. We were joined by a mother whose child has needed to spend significant amounts of time at the Edmonton Stollery due to needing two heart transplants, and she said that she has heard how playrooms are being used as patient rooms, elective surgeries are being cancelled, kids needing cardiac care are waiting for transfer, and teens needing ICU care are most likely going to adult care. I wondered then why the UCP did not see the urgency of this issue, and I was, frankly, angered when I heard about this pausing of services at the Rotary Flames House. Nothing is more important than children's health.

Yet the UCP are far more focused on an economically destructive sovereignty act or, as the Minister of Finance outlined today, spending time, dollars, and resources on forcing Albertans to accept policies they don't even want. I hope the UCP spent some time over the weekend thinking about what Albertans actually want and learning more about the children's health crisis and maybe speaking to some of these families who are impacted by it.

Columnist Don Braid wrote that the sovereignty act is a complete mess that makes Alberta look ridiculous. It seriously erodes Albertans' own democratic rights with little prospect of doing any good.

The Premier and her cabinet should ditch [that act] and turn their full attention to the things that really need it – the children's health [care] crisis, for one.

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree with Mr. Braid more. I hope all of the members of this Chamber will agree with me on the need for this problem to be addressed and for this government to provide a clear plan of specific action on how service at the children's hospice and the Rotary Flames House will be fully resumed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42 allots up to five minutes for a member of Executive Council to respond to the request. It seems to me that the Minister of Health is rising.

Mr. Copping: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for raising this important issue. As I indicated last week, our government recognizes that there are challenges in our health care system, and we recognize there are challenges in our pediatric health care system. This is a challenge that is not unique to Alberta. As noted earlier today, you know, there are similar challenges being faced at SickKids hospitals across the entire country. The SickKids in Toronto recently ramped down surgery by 40 per cent. SickKids and others are redeploying staff internally, just like what we're doing in the Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary. The CHEO in Hamilton has called nurses from the Red Cross, and the BC Children's hospital in Vancouver recently called a code orange, a disaster alert, to allow measures like reassigning staff as needed.

Mr. Speaker, we are taking action. It's a challenging time as we're going through the flu season. We have COVID, we have RSV, and that is why AHS made the difficult decision to be able to temporarily pause the Rotary Flames House respite care in Calgary to reassign some of those nurses and other staff to take care of very sick kids who are being admitted through emergency at the Alberta Children's hospital. Just to be clear, all other services at RFH are continuing, including the end-of-life care, bereavement support, and also the assist program. AHS is taking these steps for the same reasons as other children's hospitals across Canada, all struggling to cope.

But, Mr. Speaker, we do have a plan, and, as I indicated last week, we are implementing that plan. Now, that plan includes improving access across the entire system. We are spending a record $22 billion on our Health budget this year, the highest level ever. COVID response and surgeries are on top of that, and we're adding another $1.2 billion over the next two years.

Mr. Speaker, we are rebuilding our health care workforce. AHS is hiring people and expanding their workforce: 1,800 more RNs than before COVID, 300 more paramedics. We also have over a hundred more nurse practitioners working in Alberta today, and quite frankly we also have 400 more physicians when we look from December 31, 2019, to September 30 of this year.

We have new collective agreements with competitive pay for all the major staff groups. As I spoke about earlier, Mr. Speaker, we have a new AMA agreement, which actually provides stability, partnership, and innovation to attract and retain doctors. We have more internationally trained nurses and doctors working to get their licences and come into the province. We're investing for the long term, over $30 million announced in May to add 2,600 seats in training programs for nurses, paramedics, and other allied health professionals.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are taking action. We're also adding capacity across the system from EMS to emergency to continuing care to improve the flow. We recently appointed an official administrator to focus specifically on the issues of access times in emergency departments, including in terms of the children's hospital. As an example of this, most recently at the Alberta Children's hospital we have added additional capacity for treatment. They've opened a new fast-track area for patients with less serious conditions, and they're working with staff in other areas on care times and to get the rest of the patients, to be able to build capacity through the entire system. The heated trailer at Alberta Children's hospital emergency department is a proactive step, and it will allow for a safe, warm place for patients who don't require immediate care to wait.

Mr. Speaker, we're doing all of this. We are taking action, and we will continue to take more action. I look forward to announcing more of what we're doing in the weeks ahead.

Mr. Speaker, at this time we do not need an emergency debate. We are focused on this issue. We've put the resources behind to solve this issue, and we will continue to work on this to be able to provide Albertans with the care they need when they need it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 42 is a request for unanimous consent to set aside the daily business of the Assembly to proceed immediately to the moved motion, in this case by the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre. It being a request for unanimous consent, I will ask only one question. Is there anyone opposed to providing unanimous consent? If so, indicate now.

The Speaker: Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201

Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Notwithstanding that very disappointing decision by the government members to downplay the significance of the crisis being felt here in Alberta and to negate the opportunity for all members to have a wide-ranging discussion about the nature of that emergency, I am pleased to be able to rise to speak at second reading to Bill 201, Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act, as it is, of course, quite timely in relation to the crisis that we were just discussing. I will say that it can be a crisis even if there are things going on in other provinces, strangely. It doesn't negate the level of crisis and emergency being experienced by the parents of young children here in Alberta, particularly when there is so much silence and lack of guidance coming from this government in both the public health and education sectors.

Anyway, there is a crisis across the province, and Bill 201 is designed – I'm very proud that it is our first bill as an opposition caucus – to address, to start the work of addressing this crisis and to establish standards so that Albertans can have clear expectations of their health care system and can have a line of sight to what is or isn't happening and to hold their elected representatives accountable. It requires the government to meet these standards and is guided by the principle of Albertans having a fundamental right to access public health care. Delivery standards, as described in the bill, would be established by the Health Quality Council of Alberta as a result of consultation with patients, health care providers, postsecondary institutions, Indigenous communities, and others.

To make my point on why this bill is needed and why I was motivated to write it, I just want to speak a little bit about the current state of health care, and I thank the Member for Edmonton-City Centre for trying so valiantly to give all members of this House the opportunity to engage in that conversation. When it comes to primary care, Mr. Speaker, hundreds of thousands of Albertans do not have access to a family doctor or any primary care provider right now. Those who do have a doctor still find it too difficult to even access that doctor; they phone, and it still takes months in order to get an appointment. In fact, Angus Reid recently did polling that said that 30 per cent of Albertans who have a doctor still struggle with getting access to that doctor.

These problems in primary care are significantly worse now because of this UCP government's combative approach with doctors. Now, I know the UCP are trying to give themselves and the government is trying to give itself a pat on the back for the fact that they finally introduced a piece of legislation that theoretically will keep them from ever tearing up a master agreement with doctors again. But, of course, that's as easy as passing a new piece of legislation after the election, just like what happened last time, when they promised to respect everybody, respect public health care, and then one of the first things they did was that they passed legislation that allowed them to arbitrarily rip up the deal with doctors.

To be clear, you know, in case they aren't already aware, this particular bill is not restoring a whole bunch of trust amongst physicians. Nonetheless, the fact that that happened, that we have that very, very toxic history with the physicians in the province of Alberta, as generated by this government's behaviour towards them over the last three and a half years, has taken a challenge with accessing primary care and amped it up and elevated it considerably across the province, and Alberta families are paying the price.

Bill 201 names primary care as a place where the health delivery standards need to be named, identified, and then tracked. Public data on primary care right now is very limited in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and it is clear that there needs to be a plan in primary care to address the harm of the UCP's war on doctors. For instance, Ontario's Health Quality council reports the percentage of patients who are attached to a primary care provider, and they also report the percentage of people who can get a day-of or next-day appointment with said primary care provider. This kind of reporting and accountability, that is being proposed by the Alberta Official Opposition NDP's first bill of this session, takes good ideas from other jurisdictions and puts them into place on behalf of the people of Alberta who are so desperately looking for improvements to their health care.

I'd also like to talk about another area that the bill would cover and address in terms of ensuring improvements. It would also ensure that we have greater reporting around standards and the meeting of standards within emergency departments and emergency care. Now, obviously, getting timely access to emergency care in and of itself is critically important for all Albertans. Even if you're not one of those people rushing off to the ER, I don't think there's a person in this room who doesn't know somebody who has had to rush to the ER at one point or another, and you are deeply grateful that that ER was there and the service was there when they needed it. But even and above that, the ER is kind of the canary in the coal mine. We are at this desperate state of affairs with respect to our emergency room health care provision, and it demonstrates other challenges that exist in this system as led by the UCP.

Now, I've already, of course, identified the challenge with respect to access to primary care, but we also have challenges with respect to mental health care, and really we do not have any kind of substantive efforts on the part of this government to expand public access. Rather, mental health care continues to reside primarily in the privately funded field, and as a result, most Albertans cannot access it when and where they need it. That's why our caucus has a proposal to remedy that problem.

It also shows where public preventative health is falling short. That's another thing that comes up in our ERs when we fail to get the job done. As I mentioned in question period today, Madam Speaker, we just saw, you know, the chief medical officer of health and her assistant or specialist in pediatric care speaking to the media for about an hour or more this morning, talking about the value of getting pediatric vaccines and also talking about the value of masking in certain areas, not mandating in any way, shape, or form but just giving good, solid public education. Meanwhile, what do we have here in Alberta? We have a voluntary chief medical officer of health, and we have a vaccine-hostile Premier, and we also, apparently, have the highest COVID infections in the country. This all comes together. Where do we see that manifesting itself? In the crisis in our emergency rooms right now.

Those are just some of the examples of where, in our ERs, you can see when other parts of the system are starting to fall apart. It shows up within the emergency room, and that's why we need to bring into effect this bill, which would clarify not only the standards that need to be reported but also the accountability of the government for addressing and reducing wait times and increasing the ability of our health system to meet those standards.

What we know right now, as we've already talked about, is that the Alberta Children's hospital has had to add a temporary trailer to the hospital to extend the size of the waiting room. The minister talked about that as a good thing; I would argue that it's probably not. We know that staff from the Rotary Flames House, a pediatric hospice, had to be redeployed to the Alberta Children's hospital. You know, we know that respite patients have had to be discharged, which we know is deeply heartbreaking and destabilizing for families and very, very medically fragile children.

We know that emergency rooms all across the province are experiencing longer wait times. Many Albertans are waiting over 20 hours to get into the ER, sometimes lying on the floor while they do so. These pressures also mean that care sometimes has to take place in the hallway, in the ambulance bay, or in the parking lot. On April 25 we saw 14 ambulances waiting outside the hospital in Red Deer to off-load patients. Parking lot medicine is not acceptable, and this must be a call to action from this government. Madam Speaker, I remember raising these issues 18 months ago, and at that point the answer of the then Health minister was to tell us there was no problem. We cannot be in a situation where the depth and breadth of the emergency is exploding onto the front pages of our media before the government feels remotely compelled to do anything about it. It is clear that emergency rooms are not working and that the government needs to provide Albertans with a clear set of directions and actions on how they are going to react to this in the long term.

Albertans continue to reach out to me and my colleagues in the NDP about the state of emergency rooms each day. They want to see action. Health care workers in emergency departments are doing all they can right now, and my heart and my gratitude go out to them, but they actually need a government that will work with them so that they have the resources necessary to get the job done.

Now, emergency medical services is another area where we are looking for more detailed reporting in terms of the health care delivery standards that Albertans can rely on. I know all members of this Chamber know the current strain on EMS. This is another area where some data is tracked and reported, and it shows that the length in response times has increased, but there are actually also other crucial pieces of information which are not reported publicly as a standard way of doing business. The only reason we know about them and the only reason they are part of the public conversation on this is because it's been FOIPed by members of the opposition or journalists. That's not the way we should be managing these things. These include instances of red alerts, where no ambulances are available to respond to a call. Red alerts have increased by 10 times in the cities of Calgary and Edmonton from January 2019 to January of 2022. Ten times, Madam Speaker. No wonder the UCP wanted to keep that data away from the public, but that doesn't help Albertans, keeping it secret. Sooner or later we talk amongst ourselves, and we know our government needs to do better.

Instances of urgent disconnect, where call volumes are so high that the dispatcher cannot stay on the line, have also increased significantly from 2019 to 2022. In July 2019 they had 88 urgent disconnects, while in July 2021, Madam Speaker, 696; that is almost a 10-fold increase. This means that when someone has dialed 911 and is explaining an emergency, the call is just cut off with no explanation.

This means that we're seeing ambulances also spending more time out of their communities and being drawn into Edmonton and Calgary. I know that there are many MLAs in this room who are not necessarily members of our caucus but who are proud representatives of rural Alberta, and they must be hearing from their own citizens about the frustrations that this practice causes. Why aren't we having a more open and democratic conversation about that?

Surgeries. Pressures on the health system have led to significant delays in surgeries, and there, too, we need better reporting and better through lines of accountability. I know the UCP came up with their Alberta surgical initiative, which is, you know, their plan to increase the number of private surgical locations. At this point I think they're at about a 50 per cent increase. But the fact of the matter is that what we're really seeing from that online data is that more and more surgeries are not happening in the appropriate time frames. For instance, the percentage of cancer surgeries being done in target time frames has dropped by 10 per cent since the Alberta surgical initiative was formed, and through a FOIP we've learned that the UCP are missing surgery targets within the public system by 37,000 surgeries in one given year. Why did we have to FOIP that, Madam Speaker?

The delay is not inevitable, but at a time when you have a crisis in front-line health care providers and human resources, creating a whole second system and then pulling people out of one system to put them into another system is the exact opposite of effective. There is a straight line from the delay in essential surgeries to the lagging and private procurement practices of this government. They're expanding the private system while their mismanagement of health care is causing the public system to not be used to its full capacity. That's why Bill 201 also sets out principles of public health care, to guide both the setting of delivery standards as well as the funding of them.

Now, I've discussed how primary care, emergency rooms, emergency medical services, and surgeries could be impacted by this piece of legislation. These are places in the health system that the UCP have claimed are important to address, so I really hope they'll consider supporting this bill. Obviously, the bill is written – I have read it, just so you know. It is in fact written to ensure that additional areas can be tracked and can be added by the Health Quality Council based on consultations that they do under the authority given to them in this bill.

Now, expecting more can be done and better things can be done in our health care system: it's not adequate to just ask health care workers to do more with less. Both patients and the health care workforce should have a clear understanding of what expectations of the health system are and have confidence that the government is held accountable for providing them with the resources to do the job.

This bill would not only track the standards, but it would track the delivery of the standards and there would be a through line of accountability with respect to the appropriate amount of resources. This bill would also give the Health Quality Council of Alberta back a lot of the authority that this government took away from it when they were first elected. I think that that is valuable because I was here when the HQCA was first established, and I think that getting advice from independent, science-based experts is helpful, particularly in the area of health care.

As I conclude, I want to shift attention to the purposes and principles that are written out in this act. Section 2 lays out the principles of all Albertans having consistent, reliable, and timely access to high-quality public health care. They should have delivery standards that are independent, that are transparent, and hold the government to account to meet them. Albertans' lives and quality of life should not be unnecessarily put at risk due to a lack of transparency, Madam Speaker. I do hope that all members in this House agree with these principles.

Section 6, as I said, specifically talks about ensuring that there are adequate resources. This is important, Madam Speaker, because when one looks at the health care budget under this UCP government and one pulls out the extra, discretionary, unpredictable – no one ever knows if it's coming or if it's not coming – money that came around COVID, the actual planned resources to our health care system, taking into account population and inflation, are about $1.6 billion less than where they were in the 2018-2019 budget. So it's hardly surprising that we are finding that people are struggling to get the health care service that they need, and this is the kind of thing that the government, no matter which government, whether it's the UCP government, an NDP government, or some other party that's yet to be created, we should all be held accountable for those standards.

Voting in favour of this bill will show that the UCP is willing to be held accountable on health care. Voting against the bill shows that they are not willing to be held accountable to independently established standards and the responsibility for putting them in place that flows from it. Let me just say as well that voting to delay it or somehow defer their obligation to make a decision on it: well, that just shows that we're too close to an election and no one wants to be a hundred per cent clear on where they stand on these principles.

Nonetheless, I ask all members of this House to think about their communities. As of this morning there are partial and full hospital closures in communities including High Level, Fort Vermilion, Manning, Peace River, Grimshaw, Fairview, Spirit River, Beaverlodge, Grande Prairie, McLennan, Slave Lake, Boyle, Lac La Biche, Cold Lake, Whitecourt, Barrhead, Westlock, St. Paul, Two Hills, Rimbey, Rocky Mountain House, Daysland, Hardisty, Tofield, Wainwright, Consort, Sundre, Three Hills, Drumheller, Hanna, and Bassano. I sincerely hope that members who represent these communities reflect on where their priorities lie. The UCP is prioritizing a different piece of legislation with the job-killing sovereignty act. I would argue that this is not what Albertans want them to be spending their time on. They want them to be spending their time on the kinds of objectives that are outlined in this bill.

Finally, given the Premier's specific history of very recently writing and speaking in tremendous detail about her desire to privately fund massive elements of what is currently publicly funded in our health care system, I would argue that it behooves all members of the UCP to stand up and vote in favour of our bill, because right now the record is that which has been articulated by this caucus's current leader. Let me tell you that it is a record which disturbs and concerns hundreds of thousands of Albertans and which does not reflect the values that Albertans hold when it comes to the delivery of adequate, high-quality, publicly funded and publicly delivered health care, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join in on the debate? The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition, who has tabled their plan to address health care in the form of this private member's bill. I thank you for your work on this. This is an important topic, and we need to discuss it.

The hon. member is quite right. Our health care system is facing real challenges, as it is in other provinces. Health care is under strain here, in the rest of the provinces in Canada, as it is around the world, due to the global health crisis over the past two and a half years. Unlike what is suggested by the opposition, that this is the result of policies of this government, in fact, Madam Speaker, that is not the case. We see this across the country; we see this around the world. It's a result of the strains put on the system by the pandemic, some of that direct, that we've seen in terms of the use of resources over the last couple of years and continues to use resources in our system, and some is indirect in terms of the toll that it's taken on our health care professionals. I want to thank them for all that work. But to suggest that this is somehow the result of the policies taken by this government is absurd in the extreme. This is something that is affecting the entire First World and across the entire country, strains on emergency departments and EMS.

Madam Speaker, we are moving forward. We have put in place a plan, and we're executing on that plan. We're spending a record $22 billion this year and increasing it by another $600 million each year for the next two years. The government of Alberta is forecast to spend $2 billion more this year than in 2018 according to the latest national data from CIHI, and that's net of COVID response funds, which represent another $400 million plus that's going to be spent this year. This year's budget also includes a $64 million increase for emergency medical services and a 6 per cent increase for continuing care, which is essential to increasing our capacity in our health care system overall. We're adding capacity across the entire health care system. That includes putting 19 new ambulances on the streets in Edmonton and Calgary as well as funding 1,500 new continuing care spaces and a million more hours of home care, to take just a few highlights of what we announced in Budget 2022.

In order to keep on adding capacity, we're building up our health care workforce, Madam Speaker. We have 1,800 more RNs and 300 more paramedics than in 2020, before COVID, and with this year's budget increase AHS is adding more than 1,000 front-line staff. We supported AHS in signing new collective agreements this year with all major groups and health care staff, including RNs, LPNs, paramedics, and other allied health professionals. Those agreements include competitive pay and benefits, and they're the foundation we need to build on, as we move forward, to enhance recruitment and retention. Of course, as mentioned earlier today, we've reached an agreement with the Alberta Medical Association.

We're sending a message that Alberta is the place to work in health care. It's still a great career in spite of the strains on the system, which has faced challenges over the past two and a half years and is still facing them now, and Alberta is the best place to build your health care career. Young people are judging that for themselves, and quite frankly, Madam Speaker, it's true. I was very pleased to read recently that the nursing program at U of A saw a 20 per cent increase in applications this past fall. Alberta historically has been the best place in Canada to work in health care, and we're working hard to keep it that way. Earlier this year our government announced over $30 million to add new seats in our postsecondary training programs for nurses and other health professionals, and we're planning further increases, including more seats in our medical schools, that I look forward to announcing in the coming weeks.

We promised Albertans a stronger publicly funded health system, with better access to care. We stand by that promise, and we're making progress on delivering on it.

I just want to take a quick look at cancer care. We're doing more cancer care surgery than before the pandemic and giving patients better access than they had before. It's not as good as we want, but it's heading in the right direction. We're also moving forward with research and new treatments. AHS recently launched a new screening program for lung cancer using CT scans. It means more CTs, but we can do it because our overall CT volume is actually 20 per cent higher than it was in 2018-19, before the pandemic. Earlier this year I was also very proud to enjoy the announcement of the stunning results we've seen with the CAR T-cell therapy. Of course, we're looking to take another huge step forward in terms of opening the Calgary cancer centre.

We're also making progress in diagnostic imaging, with more CT scans and MRIs than ever before, and in surgery, with more surgeries than before the pandemic and a shorter wait time for cataract surgery than any time since 2015. Madam Speaker, that is a direct result of leveraging chartered surgical facilities to be able to deliver the service.

But the reality is that our health care system remains under significant strain, and that's why I appointed an official administrator in AHS, to replace the part-time board with a full-time leader focused on driving improvements in access with the ability to move faster than we normally could. All of these are examples of action we're taking to address the challenges in the system.

Now I'd like to turn to Bill 201. Addressing the issues in the system takes money and planning and hard work, so I think the question is: how does this bill advance the work on these issues in any of these respects? In terms of money, I've already commented on our budget. Now, the opposition bill suggests that health care providers should be, quote, unquote, adequately funded to deliver services, but it doesn't say what that means. It doesn't actually suggest a dollar of additional funding beyond what we're providing. In fact, the bill acknowledges that health care funding is, quote, unquote, limited and finite, which seems to contradict the entire suggestion in the bill that the funding must be sufficient to meet access standards.

In terms of planning, the bill proposes a new set of access standards and public reporting of actual performance against those standards, but, Madam Speaker, we already have extensive and detailed standards for access for everything from time to see a doctor in emergency to the time to receive different surgeries to when an ambulance should be dispatched and when it should arrive. I appreciate the desire to report performance and measure it and assure Albertans that there are evidence-based standards that we need to meet. They exist, and we already report on them. In that respect it's not clear to me how the bill would advance this work.

The issue is not standards; the issue facing Alberta and every other province in Canada is the hard work that's supporting the system to cope with the strain of the pandemic and move forward. Again, we made Albertans a promise: a stronger publicly funded health system. More specifically, we promised Albertans that every Albertan who needed scheduled surgery would receive it within a clinically appropriate wait time. We don't need to define what that means; it's already out there. We already have evidence-based targets, and we're working towards them. What we need is a plan to get there. Bill 201 doesn't provide the plan, but that's what's important. We already have a plan, and we're acting on it.

The Alberta surgical initiative, as mentioned by the Leader of the Official Opposition, is part of that plan. The opposition bill seems to suggest, actually, as to the comments that she just made, that – you know what? – we are not going to fund chartered surgical facilities. Madam Speaker, that would eliminate a significant portion, approximately 20 per cent, of the surgeries we're doing right now. We've already had success with cataract surgeries in terms of being able to catch up in this regard, to get the wait times down in those surgeries, and we're doing more. If this is what this bill actually proposes, actually eliminating chartered surgical facilities, there's no way we can support it, besides which it is the wrong approach because the reality is that we can make a difference using chartered surgical facilities. It is public health care, it's publicly funded, and it's publicly administrated.

We need to keep doing the hard work to support our health system, Madam Speaker, and meet the challenges we faced, but I'm afraid I don't see, on this initial review of Bill 201, that it will actually improve substantially on that type of work. It talks about metrics, it talks about principles, but it doesn't actually talk about the plan, and that is actually what we need to be able to move forward on this basis. We have a plan, and we're working on it.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, at this time I wish to move the following motion:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 8(8) the Legislative Assembly defer further consideration of Bill 201, Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act, at second reading until December 21, 2022, or until the first day for consideration of private members' business after that date.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, having heard that motion – it is not debatable – we will vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:27 p.m.]

Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise to move second reading of my private member's bill, Bill 202. It is the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022.

Madam Speaker, charity is the greatest amongst all virtues – I believe that – and it's the watchword of every Albertan and the watermark of our province since our conception. Charity is not just charity as a noun, as a place you give money; it is an act. It is something you do. Acts of charity are incredibly important to us and our society.

We, happily, have come to a spot now where we have institutionalized this, importantly, institutionalized it in these big, important charities that we know in our lives day to day, in our faith communities, in the United Way, in the Cancer Foundation, in the Kidney Foundation, in the Calgary and Edmonton chambers of voluntary organizations, and, underneath those and amongst those, thousands upon thousands of others, that are registered charities with the Canada Revenue Agency.

That brings up the second part of the institutionalization. It's an institution for us to be able as a government and as a society say: we're going to incentivize this; we're going to do a paired giving, effectively, where we match the gift or more sometimes when it comes to charitable donations, because we know how important that is. We know how important the act of charity is itself on the soul and the virtue of that acting it out. But, importantly, in government, the lens through which we see it, without functioning charities we'd be at a couple of billion dollars less in services in this province. That's tough to put into numbers, but we all know those stories, Madam Speaker. Every single one of us on both sides of the aisle, no matter who we are, whether you're a giver or not, has received from a charity. You absolutely have or your family has. I encourage every member, as you rise to speak to this bill, to think of those stories and tell this Chamber and tell Albertans on the record those stories and ways that charities have affected your lives, have affected your family, have saved a life, perhaps, in your neighbourhood, in your community, and where you come from.

Madam Speaker, what I'm proposing to do in this private member's bill is not spend money but cut money. It's to cut taxes from Albertans, but we do it in a unique way. The way that it currently works with our set-up for nonrefundable charitable tax receipts is that the province and the federal government together will give a certain percentage amount of your dollar donation that you can get refunded if you're owing taxes at the end of the year according to how much you donated. Currently in Alberta that's 10 per cent of your first $200 that at the end of the year gets refunded to you, and the federal government has it at 15 per cent. That makes it a combined 25 per cent.

The proposal of what the substance of what this bill is doing is effectively taking that Alberta portion and moving it from 10 up to 60 per cent, so a combined 75 per cent refund if you're owing taxes at the end of the year for your first $200. The reason that that number was chosen is because if you look at other tax incentives for nonrefundable tax receipts that the province has on offer, the only other one that I know of that's comparable in any way would be the political tax refund for donating to political bodies, nominations, parties such as the ones that many of us represent here in the Chamber, all sorts of different activities politically. That refund is a 75 per cent refund for your first $200.

I think, Madam Speaker, it's at least as fair to say that we should have as much interest in a successful, thriving charitable sector as we do in a thriving political sector in our society. It's good for us to be supporting people getting engaged in politics, making sure that this Chamber can continue to have very motivated members of all sorts of political beliefs advocating for it. The good news is that this issue, I believe, is nonpartisan. This issue is not something where it matters what side of the aisle you're on. Like I said before, every one of us has a charity that's touched our heart, that has saved a family member's life, that has made a difference and talked someone down from a ledge or provided support when they were in their most vulnerable, dire moments. Happily, we can support at least those first $200 and incentivize them to the same degree that we do our politics.

If we look at the current state of the charitable sector across Canada, we can see that there's a decline in donations. Well, it's a little more complicated than that, Madam Speaker. There is a decline in Alberta, for example, over the last 10 years, from 2009 to 2019, in the number of households that are registering charitable donations when they do their taxes. That decline is approximately 22 per cent; 22.1 per cent of households fewer now, at least in 2019, than in 2009 are registering charitable donations. Now, that doesn't necessarily mean that the total dollar amount to charities has gone down. In fact, we've seen two things go up over these two years. The average dollar amount of donations has gone up over that same period of time, keeping many charities, not all of the organizations but many of the charitable organizations, close to whole. Also, we've seen the average age go up.

I was speaking to a relatively large charitable organization out of Calgary, the Calgary Cancer Foundation, and their average donor, I believe, is somewhere in their 70s as far as age. Now, this change has not come overnight. This change of the average age of donor and the total dollar amount and the drop in the number of households registering donations has not just happened over the last two years of the pandemic. Yes, the pandemic has made this more acute – that is without question – and charities can tell you it's been reflected in the way that they're trying to fund raise now, but it's been generational.

It's generational from before, where there was a generation that would give as an act of duty, responsibility immediately, and they'd been trained into it. I was not a part of that generation. Happily, since I started making my own income, talking to my parents and seeing what they did, it's something that has become part of a regular yearly activity with me and my wife and our household, to make sure that we're picking our charities and donating to those institutions we think are most important. But there are fewer and fewer of those who are my age, millennials, that are doing it. It's even less common in younger generations as they get into what used to be normal donating demographics, when you get into your early 20s and start having income that's appreciable after your education, when you're in the workforce. So we see this continuing on.

What happens to us as a society if those donations do dry up? What happens if that 22 per cent drop over a decade of number of households that are registering donations – what happens when that increases to 30, 40 per cent? What happens when the 78-year-old average age of donation for some of these charities is now 88 or 98? It becomes more and more difficult for them to continue to do the work that they do, and the consequences there cannot be clear enough, Madam Speaker.

I'm not just talking about dollars and cents. What these charities do is offer services that government doesn't – and if we did, we wouldn't do it as well, and that's not a contentious statement. All of these charities: many of them are supported by government as well, but they heavily, heavily rely on donations as part of their operational budget. That's a good thing. We should continue to support them, and anything we can do to do that would be great.

As a government we have a public interest. The common good is seeing charities thrive. It's so essential to our common life as Albertans to have these charities, the big names of the Stollery hospital, of course, and the Children's hospital but also the food bank that I visited in Peace River. I know that every one of us has been donating to it and visiting and talking about it, especially in the midst of this affordability crunch.

These charities offer services that otherwise Albertans wouldn't have, and those services are often dire. Those services are acts of charity and love. It's a different thing to actually go out and deliver the service than it is just to talk about it, to have government deliver it, to have somebody with the passion, like I met this weekend at the Peace River Salvation Army food bank; they care so deeply about those families. There are now 230 Christmas hampers, that has gone up at about 35 per cent from last year, that they deliver. It's so important to see those charities continue.

So to make that happen not just after COVID, which was difficult for families of all sorts, but particularly right now, this key moment where we see the affordability crunch happening – where average families have a variable-rate mortgage going up year over year, let's say a couple hundred dollars on their house; they have a couple of kids in that house, so they have grocery bills at $300 or $400 above what it was year over year; they have all sorts of difficulties when it comes to insurance prices going up; utility cost itself going up plus the distribution transmission taxing us, effectively, to a spot where we're paying more for the transmission than for the actual utility itself; all of this continuing on, add on top of it a carbon tax. Inflation is causing real harm.

That's why sound fiscal management really matters. That's why making life more affordable in practical ways really matters to Albertans, matters in what we do in this Chamber. The tax cut that's been proposed in this bill would be a real relief for families. The sooner we can get it passed, the better. There's a sense of urgency in this, Madam Speaker, that we get it as soon as absolutely possible so that these households, many of whom are donating or want to donate, know that they're going to get $150 back per individual, maybe $300 for a household, come tax season rather than just the $50 each. That's a meaningful difference.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others that wish to join the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this bill. I would say in general that we're supportive of the bill. What it essentially does is that it changes a section of the tax code to make A 60 per cent. A is currently "the specified percentage for the year," which, as near as I can tell, remains at 10 per cent, as it was set in section 4 of the tax act in 2001. So it is a significant increase, obviously, on that point. Based on some analysis found on Twitter – so take that with a grain of salt – by Trevor Tombe, who is very good at this sort of thing, it would appear that, you know, a sort of rough estimate, assuming this doesn't impact behaviour directly: the cost of this would be about $20 million. That's what we're looking at.

There are a lot of charities, and there are certainly a lot in my riding that I deal with regularly who do incredibly good work. I definitely agree with that. One of the concerns I have with what the member said when he was moving this bill was his talk about the need to increase the charitable tax donation to increase people donating because, you know, these charities provide services that wouldn't otherwise be available. I don't disagree on that point – they are services that wouldn't otherwise be available – but what I would like to point out is that some of the services that aren't available are not available because of decisions that that member and his colleagues made.

For instance, many of the people involved in the increased utilization of food banks are people who are on AISH. Now, this government has – well, they've suggested that they're going to reindex AISH; they haven't actually done it yet despite having supported it when we did it originally. But that will still leave people $3,000 farther behind than they were at a time of rapidly increasing inflation.

I don't disagree with the policy in this bill. What I don't love about it is – we should support charities. We absolutely should. I don't think what we're doing in the bill is bad. What I don't love is the number of people who are having to go out and seek that charity who would otherwise have been entitled to government benefits. I guess I feel that people should be entitled to eat without having to rely on charity for that. I think that, you know, government has a role to play. I think that benefits like AISH and the Alberta seniors' benefit and the income support benefits – like, for instance, in the course of our government we cut child poverty in half by changing the way the child tax benefit worked. Now, admittedly, that was work that was done at both the federal and provincial levels simultaneously, but that's a big change. I believe that children should be entitled to eat, and I don't think that that should necessarily be reliant on donations being made to a charity in order for that to happen.

I guess what I'm saying about this act is: yes, and? I'm saying that we are supportive of this act, but when we talk about the incredibly important work that charities do and have done for a long time, we do need to recognize that the member who is proposing the bill and his colleagues are, in part, responsible for the increased draw on those charities and responsible for the fact that people need to rely on that.

I would ask the members that while they contemplate the important changes being made in this bill, they also contemplate the importance of supporting Albertans generally. They are the government. They don't have to do this by indirect means; they can do it directly.

Mr. Williams: I'm not the government.

Ms Ganley: They are government private members, some of them. That is correct.

This could also be done directly. I think overall I would say the $20 million, at a time when we see this much revenue coming into government, is not that big a shift. I think I'm sort of supportive of the intent of this bill. I think we'll probably support it. I do hope that it comes with some other measures that are specifically aimed at alleviating some of the underlying problems therein.

I think other than that, that's pretty much all I have to say about it, just that I think this can be a question of: yes, and. I think it can be a question of saying: yes, this support for charities is incredibly important, but also let us consider the impact that disproportionate inflation while wages, particularly in this province, are stagnating is having on Albertans. Let us consider the impact that deindexing tax brackets or deindexing AISH, seniors' benefits, child tax benefits, those sorts of benefits, had on Albertans, and let us also solve those problems.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other members that wish to join the debate? The hon. Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak today to Bill 202. I do want to say thanks to the Member for Peace River for bringing this forward. When I think back to when I first got involved in politics in 2008, I remember that I did campaign on this very thing. I remember thinking at the time and hearing the leader of the party at the time talk about this disparity between donating to a charity that may feed the hungry, take care of the homeless and the disparity between donating to organizations like that compared to donating to a politician. You know, the first $200: you get 75 per cent back when donating to a politician, and of course when it comes to other charities, it's far less than that.

Again, this actually takes me back a long ways when it comes to really believing that this is a good thing. It's a good thing for Alberta, and I think this is one of the things that can make Alberta a better place. In fact, in the leadership race I did talk about this on numerous occasions as I travelled across Alberta. Again, it's great to see this opportunity come forward where the Member for Peace River has brought this forward for us here today. I appreciate that.

There are so many people in need, and there are many people that want to help out. This bill will give an opportunity for those to come together. When we look at how much difference this could make, there are a lot of people that might be willing to just give $25. Well, with this bill they could give $100, and they'd get $75 back. It'll be a $25 net donation out of their pocket, but they'll help $100 worth when it comes to the amount of difference it'll make to the people that they're donating to.

I think we have all received something or we know somebody that's received something. I know my family has. I often talk here about my grandson Ezra, who has cerebral palsy. His family for the first six months of his life was in a hospital, staying at Ronald McDonald House, another good charity that helped out. There was an organization close to home called Lila's Angels that helped the travel back and forth for the family, travelling from home to the hospital in Edmonton for those six months. I believe it was the Rainbow Society that gave him a wish, too.

When we look at the good work that these organizations do, I think it's incumbent on us to be able to help out where we can and help people donate and be able to have some money come back in the tax benefit for that. I know locally we have a group of people that put on a local golf tournament to raise money for different organizations. They do a hockey tournament in the wintertime. These are all good organizations that are doing their best to help the people of Alberta and help the people in need.

I think we have to realize, too, that a lot of these charities are very efficient with the work that they do for the people of Alberta. They leverage volunteer work so that they can get a lot done, and a lot of times these organizations are right in the community that they're trying to help or if not right in the community, they know the community that they serve very well.

I think taking this opportunity to give the people that donate to these organizations a good tax benefit, that's equal to what political donations are, is good for us, good for Alberta, and it will make a difference in the long run. We know this will be a net negative to the Alberta budget, but I think it will be a net positive to Albertans as we go forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I always appreciate the opportunity to rise in this House, speak to various pieces of legislation that are brought forward, especially when it comes to private members' business. As we know, private members don't get a whole lot of legislative calendar time to be able to bring their topics forward, so I'm always excited when we get a chance to talk about those. It seems, you know, that some members get even less time, especially if they seem to be sitting in the opposition caucus. I would have loved to provide some comments a little bit earlier around Bill 201, but that has sadly been pushed to the bottom of the list.

At least I get the opportunity to talk this afternoon about Bill 202, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) – I just wanted to highlight that, and I'll come back around for that – Amendment Act, 2022. We're proposing a change here to kind of up the claim amount for the first $200 for somebody making a charitable donation. You know, quite frankly, I actually would have loved to have seen this change a lot sooner than this, but, hey, at least we're here. We get the opportunity now to talk about this.

I'm certainly supportive of moving this legislation forward. I think this is a good job, but I will have to highlight just a couple of things. I mean, we've certainly seen over the course of the 30th Legislature changes that the UCP government has made that do make life much more difficult for people, and they are then having to rely on all of these charities to be able to make ends meet. I mean, we've seen things like personal income taxes being raised. Insurance costs have definitely gone up for people. Utility costs are another big-ticket item now on people's drain of their bank account. You know, fees to go to parks, things like that.

For a long time we saw members swearing up and down that no deindexing was occurring for people on AISH, yet of course now we're hearing that that's going to be changed. Well, if that's going to be changed, then that meant that it actually happened, which brings a whole other conversation that we won't be having today because we need to talk about private members' business and Bill 202 here specifically.

But when you have these kinds of pressures on people, forcing them to go to the charities for that, that means there are a lot of pressures put on these charities to try to help. We have unfortunately seen changes which have made things more difficult for charities to be able to provide those services. Quite honestly, it kind of feels like, you know, we're trying to put that even further on the backs of Albertans.

We've certainly seen a decline in charitable donations from Albertans. Perhaps, you know, I'm a little biased here. I think Albertans are some of the most giving of all Canadians in the country, but when you just simply don't have it to give, you might have to rethink some of those steps so that they're able to. Again, while I'm certainly in favour of more significant tax relief with those donations, perhaps we shouldn't have put all of these cost pressures on Albertans so they could have continued to donate in the ways that they used to. It's not because they didn't want to. I know that for a fact.

I think when we have an opportunity to – and I think that the member previous spoke to this. Maybe, you know, creating a little balance, or when we've seen donations go to political parties, maybe balancing that out a little bit: I'm certainly not against that kind of change. As I said, I would've loved to have seen that a little bit sooner, but at least we are here.

I did want to come back because I made a little highlight around the title of the bill, which made mention to other gifts. One of the things I'm curious about is, say, for instance, you know, a parent wanting to donate to their child's soccer club. I'm wondering if this might be captured under Bill 202, or is the government going to start to possibly, I think the famous line is, pick winners and losers out of this? I would be interested to know if something like that might be captured under Bill 202.

I wouldn't mind hearing from the Finance minister, actually, on this bill a little bit. As we all know, private members can't make money bills. They can suggest changes. Ultimately, there is probably a cost to the province. My understanding is that it's probably in the $20 million range maybe, which, again, I have absolutely no issues with, especially since the government deems it necessary to do things like, well, I don't know, fund a war room that goes out and chases cartoon characters at the cost of $30 million per year – so, you know, I think the money is there – or, I don't know, betting a billion dollars plus on an election south of the border. There's money that we could have provided to Albertans so they weren't necessarily having to put the pressures on the charities that they are.

My hope is that this incentive, you know, might work, but again, no matter how big the incentive is, if you just physically don't have the money to take out of your pocket and be able to give to that charity, that incentive just kind of sits there. So I'm hoping that this might be a little bit of a motivator for the government to act in some of the other areas in term of reversing some of these pressures that we've seen forcing people to go to charities. I would certainly be in favour of things such as that.

I know the government loves to go on at length about things like the gas tax on vehicles' fuel, which is all fine and dandy. Again,

I'm not necessarily against that, but if you've had to park your car because your insurance is too high, that doesn't do anything.

Mr. Nally: The carbon tax.

Mr. Nielsen: But it's still the same thing, Minister. When you can't drive your car because you can't afford your insurance, how are you going to take advantage of that? It doesn't matter about a carbon tax. You're not driving your vehicle, so you're not even getting the opportunity to take advantage of that. Again, we're talking about cost pressures here.

Again, you know, I don't want to sound like I'm against Bill 202 because I'm not. I'm fully ready to support it here in second reading. I want to see it go on, hopefully, maybe even quickly. I would love to see government and government-side caucus members maybe give that same consideration to Bill 201 because, again, I love talking about private members' business. We don't get enough of an opportunity to be able to do that. I mean – you know what they say – sometimes members will go their entire careers in this Legislature without being able to bring forth a private member's bill.

Certainly, the changes that I'm seeing here I'm not against. I would like to see those reciprocal changes, which I think will enhance this bill so that people can take advantage of it and maybe even reduce some of those pressures that are on the charities so that they can serve the clients that they need in as many ways that they possibly can.

I know there are a lot of people that want to also add their comments to this bill, so I won't take up too much time. I'll certainly be participating later on as the debate goes, but as of right at this moment I'm very much in favour of Bill 202 through second reading, and I hope we pass it fairly soon.

Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: Good timing.

The hon. Member for Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate being recognized here today to speak to this bill. I want to thank the hon. Member for Peace River for bringing forward this bill. I think it's a very well-thought-out bill. It's always difficult to be able to find good private members' bills, and I think this meets that litmus test.

One of the things that I wanted to talk about, Madam Speaker – and the reason why I'm in favour of this is because of a principle that I have, which is that decision-making closer to the problem versus farther away from it will net a good result versus having a decision being made so far away. We see that happen on a regular basis where decisions that are being made in Ottawa affect Alberta in an adverse way because they're so far away from, you know, the trenches where things are actually happening. The same thing happens even here when decisions are made so far away. I'm always in favour of local decision-making.

The same principle can be applied here for this bill because when we talk about trying to be able to fix some of our societal problems that we have, I really believe that those people who are dealing in the trenches with these problems have really 20/20 vision. They can see what the problems are a lot better than, say, a bureaucrat in Edmonton or in Ottawa.

You know, I was very impressed with an organization, the Mustard Seed. A couple of our members actually have their father, that started that organization. I was impressed with that organization because the president or CEO of that organization actually came from the streets. He knew what the problem was. He's got an amazing story, Madam Speaker, and it's awe inspiring when you think about what he was able to do in building up the Mustard Seed in Calgary and surrounding area. That's an example of when you actually strengthen those charitable organizations that are in the trenches and give them that ability to lift people. That's when you really see success.

Really, what we should be in this room doing is looking for those greatest successes that we can have. I think that by giving people the ability to give to their charitable decision – giving more money back to them so they can give more to the charitable organizations of their choice is a good thing. It's only going to be able to help our society and build our society.

So that principle, the principle of allowing local decision-making to happen, allowing charities to be able to fix the problems: I think that's really where the success of this bill comes in. I think that the Member for Peace River has really got onto something here, that we can empower the people and the organizations within our society here, the compassionate people, that have the best interests and are so close to the issues in the province that they can know how to be able to actually inject small amounts of money to be able to have great effect and great outcomes. That's really, in my opinion, what this bill is going to do, and this is why I'm in favour of this bill.

Madam Speaker, again I thank the member for his thoughtful private member's bill that he's brought forward, and I hope that all people, all members of this Chamber will support Bill 202, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022. First of all, let me just premise my brief comments by saying that I certainly do support any move that encourages donations like this. I think it's a good idea. I think, you know, a couple of people have said that it's probably long overdue, and I would agree with that, so I am ready to support this.

But I also want to clarify a couple of other comments. Certainly, not-for-profits, nonprofits, registered charities, societies: there are all different levels. They do terrific work. They do all kinds of work. They do – I'm thinking about the community that I represent – everything from, of course, food banks, so dealing with food insecurity, to affordable, accessible housing that they're trying to create. There's Stop Abuse in Families, so there are organizations that offer free counselling for people that are experiencing domestic violence. There are all kinds of charities.

There's one in particular that I want to make reference to, and it's the seniors association in St. Albert that's actually, really struggling for donations. I've heard members talking about: over the pandemic, you know, charities have felt a loss, and that loss has been of their regular donation levels. That certainly is true, and as a result they're having to cut services.

Now, for those of you that maybe know St. Albert, it's just outside of Edmonton, but people have to commute, so if you're reliant on public transportation, you're kind of out of luck. There is a commuter bus, and there is a bus, sort of a handibus, for people with disabilities and seniors, low-income folks that goes to a few stops in Edmonton, but other than that it's pretty tough. This organization, this seniors' group, is able to do that. They have drivers. They have volunteer drivers. They fund raise to reimburse for gas, for mileage, all of those things. And these are for really important appointments. You can imagine that seniors having to go to the Cross regularly for treatment or having to go to whatever other specialist they might have or even just to see friends: that's important. This is a real-time example of the loss of revenue in terms of fundraising.

But I really want to underline what my colleague said a little bit earlier: one thing that we cannot forget when we're talking about nonprofit societies and registered charities in Alberta is that what we've seen, a progression over, I would say – I don't know – the last 20 years even, is that there has been an erosion of the public service, an erosion of the ability of government to deliver very, very important services. Those have been privatized, and those have turned into charities, many of them. As a result, these charities more and more are being required to fund raise to meet their needs, their programming needs.

Maybe there are people in here that don't know that the vast majority of disability supports for children and for people that are over 18 are delivered by nonprofits and by registered charities. Now, what has happened over the last little while is that they have systematically had their funding reduced. Systematically had their funding reduced. Every year that things are increased to capture growth, that's a reduction, and it requires these charities to fund raise more and more.

Let me give you an example of the one charity that I did work at. Some of the fundraising goals were very, very simple. They were about, "Let's fund raise to offer rent supplement," because people couldn't afford rent, because a hundred per cent of the people that we supported there were AISH recipients. Of course, when you live on AISH, you don't have a lot of money. Organizations are fund raising to cover things like rent and utilities, common costs, auditor fees, insurance, all of these things, all of these really, really functional things.

Of course, I support a bill that's going to encourage donors, that's going to give donors a tax break, encouraging them to donate more. Of course, I support that. What I don't support is this government's systematic chipping away of supports that people require to survive. It is the role of government to meet those needs, and I'm talking specifically in this case about disability supports. This government systematically cut AISH, and I can tell you that probably close to a hundred per cent of the people that receive PDD supports are also on AISH, so they're making do with a lot less money over the last three years that they have. It's charities that work with them that have had to step up to provide assistance. Charities have stepped up to provide assistance: buying bus passes, supplementing groceries, helping with rent, all of those things.

While I do support this bill, Madam Speaker, it is really important to understand that while we can express thanks and appreciation and gratitude for the incredible nonprofit sector in Alberta, we have to recognize the incredible amount of pressure that we have continued to add to them when we don't fund essential services properly. Every time that we do that – we chip away, we don't recognize the growth, we don't fund the growth – we are adding more pressure to the nonprofit sector. Government members can stand up all they like and say: you know, we support nonprofits; they're essential. Yeah, I agree with that. They are essential. They are very, very important. This bill, hopefully, will make a big difference and will help. But the biggest problem, Madam Speaker, is that this government has failed to do its job, and that is to properly support all of the services, all of the programming that this nonprofit sector is involved in.

Now, let me just say one more thing about food banks because that seems to be the popular example that people are using today. Are food banks essential right now? Absolutely, a hundred per cent. They are so important right now. Even in the community of St. Albert, which is typically, you know, a little bit more well off than some other communities, they are struggling. They're breaking records. They can't keep up with demand. The pressure is huge. Now, yes, this government did stand up and announce I think it was $20 million, but let's be clear: it was $5 million a year. Let's be clear: there are six months till an election. Let's also be clear:

there's a matching component to that. So what sounded like a big, fancy announcement – "Oh, yeah, we're going to immediately support food banks" – well, is a little less than it sounded. What this government needs to do is recognize that food banks are in crisis and step up with the money right now that they need to function. It's a lot more than $5 million, and they don't have the time to raise the money to match it. They need to be funded immediately.

I'm going to take my seat. I support this bill because I think it's important right now. Actually, I think it's always been important, but it's also important for us to recognize that it's not always the job of nonprofits and charities to do the work that this government, all of us were elected to do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I stand to support Bill 202, Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act, 2022. I'm excited. This is an outstanding idea, and I'd like to give credit to my colleague for this great idea. It's also great to see the members opposite supporting this positive initiative, you know, and perhaps we can unite together to ensure speedy passage of something towards Christmas as well that will encourage and support Albertans that give to the many great charitable organizations. While we don't agree on everything, it's great to see that perhaps we can agree on something that is so positive in our community.

One of the reasons I'm really excited about this bill is that charitable support, I believe, is part of Alberta's culture and identity. I think it's something that we excel at. There's actually – I remember reading a StatsCan report in 2020 that reported that Alberta had the highest average donation in Canada. Out of all the provinces and territories in the country, in Alberta we reported the highest average donation. I think that speaks to the many great families and individuals in Alberta that we all have the honour to serve in this Legislature.

One of the things that Alberta has is that we actually have the most competitive tax support for Albertans currently when they donate over $200 to registered charities, and combined with the federal rate Albertans who donate over $200 actually get back, in terms of tax shelter, 50 cents on the dollar. When you think about that, that's a really powerful incentive and support that this government – and, you know, credit goes to previous Legislatures. I believe it was Premier Stelmach that actually, under his government, brought in the enhanced charitable tax credit for charitable donations to 21 per cent in Alberta. By far Alberta is the leader. It is the best jurisdiction in Canada supporting charitable support for over $200.

But for donations up to $200 perhaps there are Albertans that want to give but, perhaps based on their circumstances – perhaps they have lower income – are less able or less in a position to give as much as they would like to give.

For these lower income Albertans, the current Alberta donation credit is 10 per cent. Combined with the federal rate, the donation credit is about 25 per cent, so it's actually about half of the rate.

4:30

That 25 per cent credit rate puts us in the middle. You know, we're kind of the middle. We're average, right? But, Madam Speaker, being average is not the Alberta way. Alberta is a meritocracy, and we are the best. This bill makes us the best. Bill 202 seeks to make us be the best, supporting Albertans, especially, in my perspective, those who perhaps have lower income, less able to give as much. It makes us the best in supporting them. This amendment increases the Alberta credit from 10 per cent to 60 per cent, and combined with the federal rate, this will bring the charitable donation rate up to 75 per cent.

When you think about that, isn't that a wonderful thing, that if an individual of modest means says, "You know, I'd like to donate to a charity that I feel strongly about" and they donate $200 to that charity, with this proposed bill they can get tax shelter that actually will return to them 75 cents on the dollar, 150 cents on the dollar reduced from Alberta taxes? I think that is a beautiful, wonderful thing.

The great thing about this rate selection, to me, is that the bill achieves parity with the provincial donation tax credit that we provide in Alberta. Currently, as we know, when an individual donates to the UCP Party or to the NDP Party, on the first $200 of their donation they receive $150 back, or 75 cents on the dollar. I think it's a wonderful, symbolic thing that we would elevate – while it's important for us to participate in our political institutions and in the political process by donating to political causes, there is much more to that. Being in Alberta, there are many great charitable organizations whose work is just as important, and some would argue more important. It's important to incent and encourage those Albertans by elevating the tax shelter that they get on charitable donations to 70 per cent.

Madam Speaker, just in closing, because I don't want to take too much time, this policy is to support charitable organizations. During these challenging times and indeed in the past couple of years our charitable organizations – many did great work. Many of these individuals who serve in charitable organizations serve out of love. There are many great charitable organizations where most of their workforce is volunteers who really are serving because they have a strong inward belief in the good work that the organization is doing and they want to love and serve their neighbours.

Just in closing, I really support Bill 202. I think it aligns well with the Alberta culture of excellence, being the best, a culture where Albertans are the most generous in the entire country in supporting our wonderful charitable organizations. I would encourage all members of this Legislature to join together in a common-good cause and support the speedy acceleration and process of this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to rise to speak to the private member's bill this afternoon. I, too, will be voting in favour of this measure, but rather than a "Yes, and," I'll give it a "Yes, but," because I know that while charities will certainly be appreciating the extra dollars that will flow to them as a result of this – and I expect the uptake from Albertans will probably be to the maximum, which will impact the treasury to the tune of about 20 more million dollars as a result of this increase in the amount of the tax break on the first $200 that are donated to charity – what it invites is a question as to the direction and movement towards a reliance on charity for things that governments typically have been expected to undertake themselves. I think other speakers have said the same thing that I'll repeat now, that it invites charities to fill gaps that are not being properly filled by government.

[Mr. Smith in the chair]

One example that I think is a prime example of that gap, that is now widely assumed to be something that is a part of the hardware of our charitable network, is food banks. Food banks not very long ago, Mr. Speaker, did not exist. In fact, the incidence of food banks, I think, is something that came up in the 1980s, and previous to that, of course, it was expected that government supports would allow individuals to purchase food from that government support that would satisfy their family's needs. Yet now, of course, it's food bank reliance that our society and others world-wide are looking to to fill that need, and it really shouldn't be something that the government is relieved of, its responsibility to provide essential public services to its citizens.

I know that this bill purports to allow Albertans to express themselves, even at this time of year or whenever, to support the charities of their choice to a larger degree than they otherwise might have by having the incentive increased. However, I'm concerned about the direction, I guess, of the bill, where it looks to perhaps replace the government's responsibility to support its citizens, and that's something I really hope is not the intent of the underlying legislation.

Now, one thing that many people don't realize – and I think, Mr. Speaker, you as a former teacher will – is that the schools throughout the province, generally speaking, are actually identified as being charitable organizations. One can make a donation to a school and receive a tax receipt for it. I'm not certain if this type of a donation to a school will be covered by the act in its entirety. I'm not sure if the member contemplated Bill 202 covering those charitable donations, but in the title of the bill, where it states "Alberta Personal Income Tax (Charitable and Other Gifts) Amendment Act," I'm wondering if those other gifts would include gifts to schools throughout the province.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I know, in attending many of the parent-teacher council meetings, of course, that one of the major things that they do is attempt to raise money by various means, whether it be chocolate sales or a rummage sale of some kind or any type of thing to raise money. Of course, they are also able to solicit donations and issue tax receipts. So I'm wondering if indeed the member had this in mind when Bill 202 was being drafted, because it may be something that schools might benefit from if the public was more widely aware of the option to donate to schools. But I also in the same breath want to caution that we don't end up using this as sort of a voucher system for school funding by having individuals donate to their particular school in a more affluent neighbourhood to a larger degree than other parents might be able to do in less affluent neighbourhoods.

I know that in the scheme of things, Madam Speaker, this is a bill with good intent, and I intend to support it, but I certainly do not want to see the government being relieved of its responsibility to provide essential public services to populations in need.

With that, I'll end my remarks and listen for further comment from others.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join in the debate?

Seeing none, I will ask the hon. Member for Peace River to close.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate every member's contribution and the ability for us to be able to be debating what is, I think, an important piece of private member's legislation that is impactful for average Albertans. Again, I encourage and I'm happy so far to hear the stories of all the different ways that charities have affected our lives as members and all the ways, if passing this bill were to come to fruition, that charities could continue with more sustainability, with more support from government.

I heard many of the concerns from the opposition, and I can tell you the intent is simply for – the only way for a private member to support charities in terms of the dollar amount is through increasing the nonrefundable tax credit, so that's why I've taken this route. Obviously, there's nothing beyond a very sincere hope to see charities thrive in Alberta.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will close debate.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert has the call.

Investigation of Grocery Prices

501. Ms Renaud moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to

- (a) immediately investigate the recent increases in grocery prices and lack of competition in the grocery market in Alberta and report its findings to the Assembly no later than January 15, 2023; and
- (b) amend the Consumer Protection Act to clarify that the practice of price gouging is unfair and as such is subject to investigation by Service Alberta's consumer investigations unit.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and move Motion Other than Government Motion 501. As you know, Albertans are struggling. They're facing an affordability crisis not seen in 40 years, so I'm proud to stand here in support of making life more affordable for Alberta families. They've seen prices skyrocket on everything from gas prices, utilities, and housing, but nothing hits them on a more daily basis than just how expensive things have gotten at the grocery store.

October's consumer price index data was released, showing Canada's inflation rate at 6.8 per cent, a staggering number that will continue to hammer household budgets. Food prices have shot well above that, to 10.1 per cent, compared to a year ago. The numbers are even worse when looking at price increases on essential items; for example, margarine is up 40.4 per cent from last year, dry pasta has increased by 27.2 per cent, fresh fruit is up 8.9 per cent, fresh vegetables are up 11 per cent, and coffee and tea has increased by 13.1 per cent.

While grocery prices continue to rise, everyone is still dealing with other inflationary pressures. The UCP is adding to inflation by forcing Albertans to pay more in income taxes, property taxes, utility fees, school fees, tuition, interest on student debt, and park fees.

On top of skyrocketing prices, wages in Alberta haven't kept pace with inflation. According to Statistics Canada data Alberta workers had the second-slowest wage growth in Canada. Because of the slow wage growth Albertans are now forced to use their savings or rely on credit cards just to afford groceries. We also know that the increased cost of food hurts those closest to poverty the most. Every dollar increase pushes more and more Albertans into food insecurity.

The consumer debt index showed that in April half of Albertans were just $200 away from not being able to pay their bills at the end of the month, the highest level in the country. This is something everyone in this place should be alarmed about. That means that hundreds of thousands of Albertans won't afford a balanced diet or are worrying about running out of food before they have money to buy more. Some are going hungry, missing meals. Some may not eat for a few days, and certainly many have forgone important medications.

In fact, in a new Canada-wide survey released today, the majority of respondents said that they're using coupons or hunting for sales to cope with increasing food costs. Nearly 20 per cent were also reducing meal size or skipping meals altogether in order to save money. Now, keep in mind, there are people living in poverty that don't have access to vehicles to be able to drive around to get the best prices. In fact, they live in places where these things that I'm telling you about that have gone up aren't even available to them.

I've been hearing from food banks that are seeing an alarming increase in usage, and Alberta is seeing a 34 per cent increase in food bank usage year over year. Nearly 58,000 kids relied on the food bank in March 2022, and we know the issue is getting worse. Albertans living on income support, like AISH, are facing a crisis, a true crisis. They already were using the food bank to supplement; now they're dependent on it. They're also limited to visit numbers. Ever since the UCP deindexed income support, AISH recipients have watched the real dollar value fall month over month. That means that nutrient-rich food, like eggs, meat, dairy, is being replaced by low-cost, highly-produced items just so that they can fill their stomachs.

While Albertans struggle, large corporate grocers are reporting massive revenues. Loblaws reported in Q3 earnings of $556 million, up 29 per cent from last year. Over the last three quarters Loblaws has spent over $1 billion in stock buybacks to boost its own stock price and benefit stakeholders.

That's why I urge everyone in this House to support this motion, and I expect this House to take motion. The motion will urge the government to do two things. First, it will call on the government to investigate grocery store prices and see how the lack of competition in Alberta is inflating those prices and propose recommendations on increasing competitiveness in Alberta if needed. This will work alongside the Competition Bureau of Canada's study but provide local, Alberta-specific solutions. Alberta arguably has the least competitive grocery sector, with the lowest share of independent grocery retailers, and only two of the three large corporate grocers, who control the highest concentration of retailers in any province.

Second, we are calling for clarification within the Consumer Protection Act so Albertans can report grocers who appear to be price gouging. During COVID-19 the government expanded what can be investigated for price gouging through the state of emergency. It's not clearly defined that concerned Albertans can contact the consumer investigations unit to investigate possible grocer price gouging without a state of emergency. Skyrocketing prices due to inflation – Albertans deserve to be certain that they aren't being taken advantage of and the price that they're paying is fair, not simply padding the profits of already profitable grocers. That's why I'm asking this House to support this motion.

Earlier today, during question period, Mr. Speaker, I heard the minister of service Alberta essentially say: you know we can't do that; doesn't the member know that's not something we can do? Well, I would suggest that if this government thinks they can change the Constitution of Canada with a bill, they can investigate price gouging. They can investigate the skyrocketing prices of groceries.

We know it's a crisis, a crisis that has been caused by a number of things. We know that. I'm not saying that it's all the fault of the government. There are a number of contributing factors. What I am saying is that our role here is to protect Albertans – to protect Albertans – and one of the most basic things Albertans need is nutritious food. So let's use every tool that we have in this place before putting up our hands and giving up. Let's use every tool in this place to ensure that every Albertan is getting fair value for their money and that there is no price gouging. And once we can reassure all Albertans that's the case, we will have done our job.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Motion Other than Government Motion 501 is for debate. I see the hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction has risen.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Member for St. Albert for confirming what we've long suspected, that the NDP is full of sound and fury, signifying nothing. The reason I say that is that I sat here listening intently, waiting for some empirical evidence, some research – even a well-thought-out argument would have sufficed – but instead we did not get that. It became abundantly clear that that entire caucus gets all of their information from Twitter and Facebook.

Mr. Speaker, I did something that the Member for St. Albert should have done. I did some research. Now, I will be tabling this with the Chamber, but it's a white paper by the Canadian Federation of Independent Grocers. The average grocery retail margins are 2 per cent. I'm not suggesting that they don't have higher margin areas such as pharmaceutical, health, and beauty, because they do, but the food in the grocery store has razor-thin margins, to the point that the average grocer in this country has 2 per cent margins.

Now, Dalhousie University – and I'll be tabling this as well, Mr. Speaker – actually did a study to determine if grocery stores were price gouging. And you know what? They confirmed that there were a lot of reasons for the higher prices that we're seeing on shelves, and one of them was not gouging on behalf of the grocers. I'll be tabling that as well.

Now, I have to say that this motion – and please let me say that I am empathetic, as we all are on this side of the House, with any Albertan that is struggling with the higher cost of everything due to the inflation, to the carbon tax, Mr. Speaker, but I encourage the Member for St. Albert to use the time wisely. This particular motion: quite frankly, it's as ridiculous as it is redundant. Let me tell you why.

The first piece of the motion is to encourage the investigation of the recent increases in grocery prices and lack of competition in the grocery market. Well, Mr. Speaker, that's already happening. The Member for St. Albert should be aware that the Competition Bureau is doing that work now. In fact, they're accepting submissions up until December 16, and I would encourage the Member for St.

Albert, if she has an example of price gouging, to include that submission with the Competition Bureau. But redoing that work that is already going on is redundant, and we certainly don't support that on this side of the House.

Now, the second piece of that motion was to amend the Consumer Protection Act to clarify that the practice of price gouging is unfair. Well, Mr. Speaker, it already does that, and I will refer the Member for St. Albert to part 2, division 1, section 6(2)(d). It clearly shows that exactly what the Member for St. Albert is asking for is articulated in the act, and I would refer the member to read that accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's economy has recovered strongly, but we know that many Albertans are still struggling to heat their homes and feed their families. We know that many Albertans are concerned about the rising cost of groceries and many other goods and services due to increased costs and rising inflation. In fact, Canada's Food Price Report 2023, which I'll be tabling with the House, predicts that Canadian families will spend up to an average $1,065 more on food next year than this year. But we also know that this is not an Alberta-specific problem. In fact, the inflation crisis is affecting all Canadians, no matter what province they live in.

This is a national problem that was created by the disastrous economic policies of the Liberal-NDP alliance in Ottawa. Since 2015 the federal government has brought in a number of fiscal policies that have contributed to high inflation and have resulted in higher borrowing costs for households. This is exactly why our government has been standing up to Ottawa since 2019, because only our government has the best interests of all Albertans in everything that we do.

If the NDP were really concerned with the high cost of groceries and continually rising inflation, they would call on their friends in Ottawa and they'd demand that they cancel the carbon tax. But do you know what we get from the NDP, Mr. Speaker? Crickets. When it comes to the carbon tax and their overlords in Ottawa, they say nothing. Instead, the NDP will support the more than tripling of the carbon tax between now and 2030, which will continue to add fuel to the inflation crisis, adding unnecessary costs to families heating their homes and driving to work.

Our government understands that the price of goods is reflective of national and international supply chains, which are part of a complex system that impacts all Canadians. The Member for St. Albert has proposed an unsophisticated solution to a very complex problem, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the grocery industry is one of the lowest margin sectors in the entire country. This industry is now facing a range of unusual inflationary forces, everything from extreme flooding in B.C. to drought in parts of western Canada. We're seeing COVID-19 supply chains, labour disruptions that are impacting the port, and let's not forget the geopolitical events in Europe, particularly the war in Ukraine.

Mr. Speaker, Ukraine is the world's largest producer of sunflower oil. They are the fourth-largest exporter of corn. Of course it's going to have an impact on what people are paying on the shelf. Let's not blame the retailers. Many of these grocery stores are good community citizens which give back to the communities they serve.

It's unfortunate that the Member for St. Albert doesn't actually live in St. Albert because if she did, she would know that these local grocers live in the communities, Mr. Speaker. Their children play hockey in the local arenas. They get their coffee from the local Tim Hortons. They contribute to the food banks, and they donate to children's charities. Let me just say that these local grocers deserve better than to be vilified by the members opposite.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I say this motion is ridiculous and redundant. You know, two years ago these grocery workers were essential workers that we relied on to get food on the shelves during COVID-19, and now they have the audacity to vilify these same people. Shame on them. Shame on the Member for St. Albert.

The Competition Bureau is one of Canada's most prominent watchdog groups, with a proven track record of investigating anticompetitive practices that serve to push up prices for consumers, including things like deceptive marketing, price-fixing, and even outright fraud. The bureau is examining how governments could act to combat grocery price increases by way of greater competition in this industry and expects to publish the results of the study in a public report, which will include recommendations to government authorities as appropriate.

I would also like to point out that the Competition Bureau will look at this complex issue over an eight-month period, Mr. Speaker, whereas the opposition motion is calling for a report back in as little as less than a month's time. That's clearly not enough time to look at this complex issue. We look forward to the completion of the Competition Bureau's review and taking appropriate action as required.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, this NDP motion is about nothing more than window dressing and scoring cheap political points. I say to the NDP and to the Member for St. Albert: shame on you for wasting valuable legislative time in the middle of an affordability crisis. While the NDP continue to waste this House's valuable time, Albertans can count on our government to deliver affordability measures for all Albertans. [interjections] Listen, they're lighting their hair on fire right now. They're so upset by the truth. They can't handle what they're hearing right now. Well, you know what? I would encourage the members: put your cellphones down. Stop looking at your shoes and look up here because this is a serious matter that is on Albertans' minds. Albertans deserve better than to have our legislators waste their time like this.

We know that Alberta cannot solve this inflation crisis on our own, but due to our strong fiscal position and balanced budget we can offer substantial relief to Albertans, and that's exactly what we plan on doing, Mr. Speaker. In fact, our government has taken a number of affordability measures totalling $2.4 billion. That's how we're going to have Albertans' backs, by stepping up with $2.4 billion worth of supports, not with ridiculous, redundant motions.

Mr. Speaker, I will be supporting this motion, and the reason I will be supporting this motion is that I'm not against these activities. We're doing them now. It's redundant. We don't need to put the motion forward. It's a waste of legislative time. But I am not against doing these activities. As I said, we're doing them right now, and for that reason I will be supporting the motion.

But, Mr. Speaker, I can't say loud and clear enough that the Member for St. Albert is wasting legislative time on redundant motions when we should be focusing on the real work at hand, which is having Albertans' backs during an affordability crisis. My message to the NDP and to the Member for St. Albert is to do better, to be better.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise in the House to speak on Motion Other than Government Motion 501, to speak in support of this motion and also to, you know, share the feedback and concern from my own constituents in the riding. Albertans are struggling with inflation and the affordability crisis.

First of all, I just wanted to congratulate my colleague the Member for St. Albert for bringing this motion to the House and providing the members an opportunity to address this very issue that the majority of Albertans are struggling with and expecting better from their elected representatives in the House. It was surprising to actually hear from the minister of affordability this afternoon when answering a question during the question period to his own caucus member and stating that, you know, addressing inflation and addressing the affordability issue is not actually the responsibility of any government. It is further saddening and sad, discouraging and shameful to hear what I just heard, actually, from the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction. That was a totally unreasonable and irresponsible speech I have ever heard during this very situation, the historic crisis that Albertans have been facing.

I'm just – I don't know. I'm trying to put together what I should call – I don't know where the minister actually lives. The minister said that my hon. colleague doesn't live in her own riding and doesn't know about issues in the riding. I wonder where the minister lives. Does he really live in this province? If he does, does he just go back to his constituents, or does he only have opportunity to speak with the corporate managers or the corporate owners?

I would just like to speak, for the sake of the record, about two corporations in this province. Loblaw's have reported quarter 3 earnings of $556 million, over half a billion dollars. That is up 29 per cent from the last year, the same time from the last year. Similarly, the other company, Empire, reported earnings of $187 million in their last reporting quarter. The number of people, Albertans, relying on the food banks in this province is unprecedentedly high, and 58,000 kids, only kids, are depending on the food banks these days to survive, in order to just, you know, get fed, not really having the food of their choice but just being able to survive and get fed. They are relying on food banks.

I was on a radio talk show last month. The stories people are sharing: the people who have been the donors for the food banks in the past many years ended up actually relying on the food banks for their survival. For the very first time in Alberta history they're calling out.

I'm not sure how many of the government caucus members actually have the opportunity or the responsibility as ordinary citizens, Albertans, of going home and helping their families with regular jobs, going to shop for groceries and help their family purchase food from the local stores. From the speech I was hearing from the minister, it doesn't seem like it. If he would win as a responsible family member, whatever – I don't know his family circumstances. It is not very hard to find out what is going on: the prices that you were paying, like, six months ago and the prices you are paying now and the prices you were paying last year and the prices you paid six months ago versus the prices you are paying now.

The consumer price index we discuss here is not even really affecting all Albertans equally because the average increase in the numbers of inflation we're discussing is usually averaged. Like, in some cases inflation has jumped the prices of the items and quality over 200 per cent, particularly with vegetables. The Member for Calgary-Falconridge – I don't know if he's aware. I know of his constituents going to stores and posting on Facebook the price gouging: a $2 piece of cauliflower jumping to $10.99. I've seen that sitting in Edmonton looking at that post.

There has been – I don't know – a lack of sensitivity in where the minister was coming from. It was very sad to see what kind of – and, you know, you can easily even figure it out, why, coming back to the House, the government put forward the very first bill as the sovereignty act, not anything else. They debated six months, during their leadership debate, all the issues related to the health crisis, education. Affordability was number top. One of their leadership contenders campaigned on indexing a lot of benefits they had deindexed during these three and a half years, but all of a sudden, when they came back to the House, it seems like their agenda has been changed. There have been their constituents or stakeholders, and I'm surprised to understand: where do they live?

I've been on the radio stations. I've been meeting with stakeholders. Definitely, the profit margin of local businesses, local grocery stores, or the independent grocery-store owners has been going down as the rate of their rents, utility bills, and other inflation factors, their costs, have increased, and that has eroded their profits big time. But the bigger corporations, corporations like Loblaw's, corporations like Empire, have a capacity to manipulate the market. They don't. They don't have the same capacity.

In my concluding remarks – I won't take very long. I know many of my colleagues want to be on the record, want to speak in favour of this motion because this is very important, and this is very important to my constituents. Many Albertans actually are struggling with this historic crisis of inflation. Every member of the House should support this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Motion Other than Government Motion 501: are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore, followed by Edmonton-City Centre.

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, you know, Alberta's government is committed to making sure that when grocery shopping, Albertans receive fair and ethical treatment. Affordability is the primary challenge facing most on a daily basis, and too often soaring costs are forcing people into difficult decisions to make ends meet. Far too many people are now having to choose what daily essentials they can live without: people on fixed incomes such as families, seniors, Albertans with disabilities, and those out of work. These Albertans tend to be squeezed hardest and endure the lion's share of the hardship.

That's why we're supporting food banks with $20 million in new funding over the next few years. This is the first time the government has funded food banks. That's why we launched our $600 million electricity rebate program, that's why we reinstated indexing of financial benefits for Albertans with disabilities, seniors, and those out of work, and that's why we're making targeted payments for families for each child under 18, seniors 65 and up, and vulnerable Albertans with household incomes below $180,000. We're serious about our commitment to deliver immediate cost-of-living inflation relief that will help people manage this economic storm, serious to the tune of $2.4 billion.

Unfortunately, it would seem the opposition takes things less seriously given the grandstanding nature of this motion. I hope we can all agree that the root causes of global inflation extend far beyond the borders of our province, and while we will do everything we can to temper its effects, we are fresh out of magic wands to wave to make inflation disappear. However, Mr. Speaker, performing magic sounds a lot like what my colleague across the aisle is suggesting, that we investigate for barely more than a month and then – poof – we'll have all the answers and make prices come down, and it'll be the same everywhere.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a global problem, a serious global and national problem, not simply an Alberta problem with an Alberta solution. The grocery sector is concentrated in all parts of the country. Canadians generally buy their groceries from retail chains operated by one of three companies. The prices reflect national and international supply chains, comprising part of a complex system encompassing all Canadians.

The Competition Bureau of Canada already has an active study under way, and I think this is well known by most in this Chamber.

They're looking into the competitive dynamics of the industry and developing recommendations for governments to promote competition. It would be naive to think an Alberta-focused review would have value for a national, interconnected problem. The Competition Bureau is one of Canada's most prominent consumer watchdog groups. It's got a proven track record of investigating anticompetitive practices that push up prices. The bureau is spending eight months looking into this complex issue. Not a month but eight months.

It's flattering that the opposition thinks we might do the same in little more than a month, which is their called-for timeline, flattering and actually ridiculous. The bureau expects to publish its results in a public report which will include recommendations to government authorities. We are fully prepared to consider and potentially act on the bureau's findings, and we look forward to the release of the report.

The federal standing committee on agriculture is also now undertaking a similar study, yet the opposition thinks a third review is needed. Clearly, this is another example of the opposition playing political games with their federal counterparts. The federal NDP demanded Parliament investigate grocery prices earlier this year.

Conversely, we are taking serious and sincere approaches to making sure that Albertans have food on their tables, a roof over their heads, and money in their pockets. We refuse to play political reindeer games that are a waste of the trust invested in us by Alberta voters.

5:30

As to price gouging, that's covered by Alberta's Consumer Protection Act, and I think most in this Chamber know that. It's defined as individual businesses charging grossly excessive prices on individual grocery items. The consumer investigations unit is responsible for following up on consumer-reported claims. Anyone who suspects unfair practices, including pricing without explanation on grocery items that grossly exceeds the price of similar items, should contact the report a rip-off line.

Given that the Competition Bureau's market study is under way, the proposal to amend the Consumer Protection Act is wildly premature. The bureau's recommendations will likely include changes around consumer protections for all governments.

It's also worth noting, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition had four years to amend the definition of price gouging in the act and failed to do so. That suggests to me that their priorities are elsewhere and today's motion is little more than a political show.

Mr. Speaker, our government has the backs of Albertans at the grocery store, at the pumps, and when they are paying their utility bills. They are counting on their government, and they rightly expect us to address the challenges they are facing with our full attention and action.

This motion will do nothing that isn't already being done and done much more thoughtfully on a much larger scale. I hope that members of this House recognize how unnecessary this motion is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre is next.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this motion. It's entertaining to hear members of this government stand and rail about wasting valuable legislative time. The number of times we have seen these members bring forward frivolous motions in this House to debate and yell and scream, to create political hay, both during the time they were in opposition and during the time that they are in government, using government motions to do so, is countless. This is clearly the pot calling the kettle black.

Political games, Mr. Speaker? This government just introduced one of the worst written pieces of legislation, with incredibly far-reaching powers for cabinet, simply for the sole purpose of playing political games to generate an endless series of motions in the spring session, to rail against Ottawa and campaign against Justin Trudeau.

Mr. Speaker, this government has no grounds to make accusations to anyone else. This is a government that has proven it is entirely unserious in dealing with the real priorities of Albertans, as we just saw today, as they shut down debate on a bill proposed for a positive change in health care, more accountability and clear service standards to support Albertans. They voted against the emergency motion to debate children's health, a crisis in this province, and they voted to be able to close debate on their embarrassment of a sovereignty act.

Speaking of magic wands, Mr. Speaker, as noted by the member there that was just speaking, that's rich coming from a party sitting with a Premier who has repeatedly spread misinformation and conspiracy theories about COVID-19, about COVID vaccines.

Mr. Rutherford: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is called. The hon. the chief government whip.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Rutherford: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to use 23(b)(i), speaks to a question other than what is under discussion. We are on Motion 501. I'm sure the member has plenty to say on affordability, maybe about grocery prices. There has been lots of debate so far. He seems to be wildly off topic.

Ms Gray: Simply to say, Mr. Speaker, that I don't believe this is a point of order. I believe we are maybe a minute and a half into the member's response, and he has been responding directly to arguments that we've heard in this Chamber during Motion 501. I look forward to your ruling.

The Speaker: More like two minutes, but it is noted.

I hesitate to rule on relevance at this point in time in the member's remarks. That said, I'm sure he's tying it to the motion that's before the Assembly.

Debate Continued

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will conclude my beginning remarks by noting that this Premier has also repeatedly offered incredibly simplistic and counterfactual claims about the crisis in our health care system and ridiculously embarrassing attempts at solutions. This government has no grounds to stand and complain about the opposition bringing this motion forward today, a motion that I'm happy to speak to now.

Now, we have heard some vigorous defence of grocery chains, large grocery corporations from the minister, the Member for Morinville-St. Albert. Interesting. Now, we do know, Mr. Speaker, factually what has happened with large grocery chains in Alberta in the not-so-distant past. Indeed, for at least 14 years large grocery chains, including Loblaws, Metro, Walmart, and Sobeys, all participated in an industry-wide arrangement to slowly and artificially jack up the price of bread, gouging customers billions of dollars. Now, the minister would be outraged to hear me say that and hear me accuse local grocers of gouging Albertans. That is not what I am doing. I am speaking of the large grocery chains, for which indeed local owners may be franchisees, but those local owners, to the best of my understanding, are not setting the prices; they are taking the prices from their head office.

So let's be clear. We know on the record, factually, that large grocery chains in Canada conspired together to gouge consumers on the price of bread, again, costing billions of dollars. Indeed, that led to a class-action suit on behalf of Canadian consumers who bought packaged bread, and that class-action was against them, and indeed that was found in favour of them and that indeed led to the distribution of $25 gift cards to many Canadians. So it's not out of the pale, Mr. Speaker, for these corporations to take advantage. That is the record. That is the historical record, and noting that and noting that it could indeed to some extent be the case now is not necessarily any impugment of the character of any individual grocery store owner.

Now, indeed, here in my constituency of Edmonton-City Centre, Mr. Speaker, we don't really have local grocery stores. Indeed, we've had a real paucity of grocery stores. It has been a challenge for our constituency for some time. I will say that I attended the opening of a Loblaws City Market at the Ice District just a few weeks ago. I was there because I was happy to see it, because the fact is that folks in Edmonton's downtown have been without a grocery store in the central part of our city for quite some time.

Now, the challenge, of course, Mr. Speaker, is that the kinds of grocery stores that we tend to get in the downtown and urban areas, or indeed even if they are the same in other places, often will have higher prices. If I go to a City Market here in Edmonton-City Centre, I may actually be able to find cheaper prices at another City Market in another part of the city or at a Superstore, which is the same chain but a different variation of, and that is because they know, to some extent, that they have a captive audience, as it were.

Folks are going to pay for convenience in being able to go to that grocery store here in their community, which is okay for individuals like myself, you know, who earn a good income. Indeed, sure, it is more convenient for me at times to go and pick up a few groceries at the City Market down the street from my house in the Brewery district than it is to drive further to the Superstore on Kingsway Avenue, but that is not necessarily true for folks who have less mobility, Mr. Speaker, that being seniors, that being many of the individuals who have a disability who also live here in Edmonton-City Centre and also have had considerably less income during some very difficult years because of decisions by this government.

Now, I've heard the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services heckle several times about the carbon tax, Mr. Speaker. Now, the fact is that those constituents of mine who are on reduced income get a rebate on that carbon tax. They have not gotten a rebate and they are not getting made up all of the dollars that were taken away from them because this government chose to deindex AISH or income support or seniors' benefits. They won't get a single dollar of that back while this government spent hundreds of millions on their embarrassment of an energy war room and other government priorities that were, frankly, political games, political grandstanding. This government did that on their backs. So when we stand up today and talk about the price of groceries, it's in part because it really matters for these folks who lost income because of the decisions of this government.

This government wants to pat itself on the back about affordability. It talks about the utility rebate, which they do not offer to a significant number of my constituents who live in apartments and condos. Now, they said they intend to perhaps fix that with their new affordability bill. I'm certainly looking forward to that being the case. Their gas tax, Mr. Speaker, does not benefit the seniors, the students, the others, many folks who have a disability in my constituency who do not drive. Again, I recognize that they are moving forward with providing an extra $100 a month for each of those individuals – now, of course, not for students or for a number of other people who might work at a low-income job, at minimum wage. They are excluded from this because, frankly, this government doesn't see their votes being particularly valuable coming up in next May.

What I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that we will continue to stand up for affordability for Albertans on all fronts, we will continue to stand up for government support for individuals who need it, and we will continue to stand up for justice economically, in social areas, in all things that affect Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the hon. Member for St. Albert to close debate.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and close debate on Motion 501. Just a couple of things. Obviously, the minister for Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction is a little angry. Sadly, he accused me of wasting time, so what I would like to say is that there are many constituents of mine that have written to me, that have called, that have talked to me about grocery prices, not to mention that as a critic I deal with hundreds of people all the time, every week, that are letting me know that things aren't just bad or difficult; they're horrible. They're in crisis. So it is a problem.

You know, this was not an attempt to vilify grocers or anybody that worked for grocers. It's not an attempt at all. What it is is an attempt to do everything in our power – I understand that there's some federal work going on, but this is about here at home in Alberta. It's about doing everything that we can to ensure that Albertans are paying fair prices for groceries.

Now, certainly, the member was angry. He went on and on about, you know: we don't know anything. Yes, we understand that there are outside influences on the prices. We understand that climate change will continue to be a massive, massive problem. We understand that climate change will continue and will continue to impact all things groceries. We understand that. We understand that the war has certainly created a lot of cost pressures. We understand those things. We're not ridiculous. We read the news. I mean, we understand just like the member does. So to stand up and just mostly try to insult is a little bit disrespectful.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that this particular motion, which, oddly enough, it sounds like they're going to support, is not an attempt to say that the federal work is unimportant or won't do anything; it's an attempt, once more, to identify and understand the uniqueness of Alberta and the unique challenges that we're faced with here in Alberta, not to just rely on the feds and on Ottawa. You know, it seems to me this government is pretty happy when they're saying those very things. Now, suddenly, it's the opposite: oh, just let the feds do it. I'm saying we need a plan here in Alberta. I'm also saying that it's kind of weird that they think that they can amend the Constitution of our country with a bill, yet they're unwilling to look at: are there tools, maybe that they're unaware of, or things we can amend to actually do the work properly here at home?

For all of these reasons – we have a crisis right now. People can't afford their food. They can't. So people that were struggling are in crisis now. Let's all support this motion and do everything we can to ensure Albertans are getting a fair price for very basic essentials like food. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 501 lost]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 5, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Mr. Bilous moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill is negatively impacting investment decisions and the Alberta economy and should not proceed in order to protect the economic well-being of Albertans.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment December 1: Mr. Stephan speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South has four minutes remaining should he choose to use it.

Hon. members, amendment RA1. Are there others? The Leader of the Opposition has risen.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak, I believe, in favour of the motion as part of our overall position that we are very much opposed to Bill 1, as I believe members of the government have since become aware of.

I think I have a fair amount of time to talk about this tonight. We'll see how long it takes. Let's start with what it was, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier claimed was driving the introduction of this bill. I think that if you go far enough back, it's probably the case that you can actually find some areas of common interest between the government and the Official Opposition. In particular, the Premier identified the fact that there are occasions where the federal government oversteps its jurisdiction or, in other cases, even acting within its jurisdiction does things that many people in the province of Alberta disagree with. I think that we can all agree that that does sometimes happen.

Now, I'm not going to go through a long analysis or critique of the so-called history that the Premier reviewed when she first spoke to Bill 1, mostly because it was a particularly revisionist version of history and one that I know she has sort of unwound on her talk show over many years but not one, I think, that is particularly connected to what actually happened, at least not in most cases.

However, in some cases there is definitely commonality. The Premier often talks right now about two issues, which I think do definitely stand to serve to be a source of friction in some cases between some Albertans and/or the provincial government and the federal government. One relates to the conversation that is going on right now about the proposed emissions cap in the oil and gas sector, and the other relates to, I think, some long-standing concerns that both the current government and the previous government, that being the one that I led, had with what at the time was called Bill C-69, which is the federal government's environment protection act. I think it is fair to say that there is some common concern shared there.

I would, however, also argue that the behaviour of this UCP government since they've been elected doesn't actually align with the behaviour you would expect to see from a government that was truly pursuing solutions. Rather, it is behaviour that you expect to see from a government that is using an external target of anger as a means of distracting from the many, many, many things that they are failing to get right and to fix and to work on in their own backyard. That is the pattern that we have seen. An example for that, actually, I would argue, could be applied to the conversation that we are currently having about the proposed or the draft emissions cap.

Now, there was an emissions cap that our government had proposed with the climate leadership plan, which was considerably higher than the one that is currently being put forward by the federal government. Now, it is actually true that if the provincial government had maintained provincial jurisdiction in the matter that is a shared jurisdiction around environmental protection and the way in which efforts to reduce emissions impacted the oil and gas sector, if they had maintained a sense of ownership and responsibility with respect to those issues, the odds are very good that the conversations and the collaboration between the government and industry and ultimately, through that, in relation to the federal government would have resulted in a resolution that met common objectives on both sides of the argument, both ensuring that the outcomes were reasonable for the oil and gas industry and were actually achievable in a way that did not negate production and didn't negate the jobs of hard-working Albertans and at the same time pushed the oil and gas sector to truly invest aggressively in those kinds of innovations that would bring about the kind of important emissions reductions that all of us in Alberta as well as across Canada and across the world need to see.

We could have gotten there, and through that we would also have eliminated the uncertainty that currently exists and is percolating around right now on this topic. But, you see, we're not at that point, Mr. Speaker, and we're not at that point because this government decided instead to engage in a whole series of statutory and regulatory and communications-based temper tantrums not to achieve an outcome but, rather, to speak to and maintain support amongst a certain base within Alberta. Their audience was always Alberta voters; it was never the people who we should have been working with in order to achieve an outcome that would give greater certainty and better outcomes for industry as well as our environment. So they didn't do the job, and they abandoned the space.

I agree that we are now in a position where we have a federal government offering up a draft emissions cap which is problematic for the industry and problematic for Albertans, but what I will say – and I will speak more about how this act does absolutely nothing to address that issue, but at the same time I will also say that there were better tools at the disposal of this UCP government to address this problem, and they did not do it. As a result, we are instead working with a bill that is purported to achieve one objective but, in fact, is exceptionally distant from that objective.

Now, the other one that the members talk about, of course, is, you know, responding to the elements of the environmental legislation that were amended as a result of Bill C-69, and on that there were common positions again between the UCP government and our government. Indeed, we did detailed submissions to the federal government and to the Senate about why that bill should not go ahead, and ultimately, I believe, this UCP government adopted our submissions once they were elected. Now, obviously, that was not successful and the matter has gone to court, and we will see where that ultimately lands once the Supreme Court of Canada has a chance to adjudicate on that matter, and likely we'll get some version of an answer next fall.

But this act does not in any way, shape, or form appear to provide any tools to Albertans or those people impacted by that piece of federal legislation. So, once again, it is completely disconnected from the purported objective, and once again I would argue that the purported objective is almost entirely political and it is really designed to stoke anger and then therefore sort of a backhanded kind of support for a flailing UCP government. That's entirely what it's for and nothing more.

That being sort of the setting for why or how we got to it and why people bothered to bring this act in, you know, what do people think about it at its sort of outset, almost even before it was – what about the principle of this act? What do most people think about it? Well, we just got a poll a few days ago that suggests that 53 per cent of Albertans do object to the statement that this act is an important tool for standing up for Albertans' interests, and only 32 per cent of Albertans agree with the statement that this act is an important tool for supporting Albertans' interests. So, clearly, this government is not actually focused on representing the desires or the wants of Albertans. That's not what's going on here.

We also, of course, heard a lot about this act from members of the government caucus in the course of their leadership contest. At that time, you know – I guess leadership contests invite people to use their inside voice and/or their slightly more accountable and transparent voice. Let's just do a little walk down memory lane in terms of what members of the UCP now cabinet or in some cases backbenches had to say about the concept of a sovereignty act.

The Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development said that the sovereignty act is nothing more than, quote, virtue signalling, a fiscal fairy tale, end quote, that doesn't make any sense and won't work.

The Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism said that the sovereignty act will create “an unconstitutional delusion that will lead the United Conservative Party and Alberta down a dangerous path.”

The minister in charge of Municipal Affairs called it the Anarchy Act, quote, a false dream that will turn into a nightmare. End quote.

The Minister of Finance said that the sovereignty act would take us backwards because it would create chaos, and he also shared a graphic that called the legislation a, quote, ticking time bomb. End quote.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre called it, quote, very problematic and went on to say that it would break the law, spook the markets, and would be impossible to deliver on.

Finally, the current environment minister said that the act “would create instability and chaos. It is already doing that. I had international investors concerned about their assets in Alberta asking . . . what was going on with [it].”

That was the conversation that preceded the introduction of the act. Just to be clear, you know, in terms of the members of the Legislature who ran to lead the government caucus, it did turn out that I believe it was 48 point something per cent of the government party's membership ultimately voted for every other single candidate than the person who ultimately won.

It's one thing to win a leadership with 52 per cent on the first ballot or the second ballot, but to have to go till you're the last one on the ballot to scrape through 52 per cent: I'm telling you that that says to me that about 48 per cent of even the members of the government party were not in favour of the concept of the sovereignty act. That didn't work out very well for folks. It's a bit of a mess, and how has it been since then?

Well, of course, the act was introduced, Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday. It was introduced last Tuesday, and debate on it began last Wednesday. Interestingly, by Wednesday, not even 24 hours after it was actually introduced, immediately following the reading of the throne speech, the government caucus was rushing out to provide, quote, unquote, clarification. Well, that ought to make the folks over there feel super confident about how well this puppy was thought through. What I will tell you is that it certainly did not make investors or Albertans feel confident about it.

Obviously, that day and the subsequent day members of the opposition raised several concerns about the act. The first thing that we raised was, of course, the fact that the act included this concept, this provision, that is often referred to as the Henry VIII clause, Mr. Speaker. I know that the Speaker as a fellow political nerd fully knows the history of the Henry VIII provision and why we call it that. In broad terms, it relates back to a time in parliamentary history in the U.K. where the sovereign, frustrated that the democratic House was limiting his ability to do whatever he wanted, came up with a new and creative way to take for himself the ability to make laws and undo laws off the floor of the democratic House. It was a thing that created great conflict in the history of England, and ultimately I think it took close to a century before eventually the House of Lords and the courts determined that this simply could not go on because it was such an incredible affront to the principles of democracy and an unprecedented overreach in terms of power that was being grasped at by the unelected sovereign.

Anyhoo, fast-forward several hundred years, and here we are in Edmonton, Alberta, looking at the brand new Premier's number one, Bill 1 – woo-hoo – and that is where she decided to kick off her tenure. Interesting choice. But what was even more interesting about that choice, Mr. Speaker, and what followed was the profound level of either, on one hand, confusion or, on the other hand, disturbingly thoughtful efforts to lead this Assembly to believe a state of facts which did not align with the language of the act that she was introducing.

In fact, I asked her today. One of two things just happened there. Either she was intentionally trying to slide that Henry VIII clause right past members of this Assembly without us knowing – “Nothing to see here. Don't worry. I'm just going to make assurances one or two times, tell you that you don't know what you're reading. It's not in the act. You know that black-and-white stuff? Black and white are awkward colours. Just ignore them. Blur your vision. Read into it what it is that I meant. Trust me. Do not read the actual words that appear in the legislation.” That's what she said. Was she saying that because she wanted us to not notice that she was doing an unprecedented, undemocratic power grab and undemocratic overreach? Was that it?

Or – and here's the thing, Mr. Speaker. I've been sort of sitting around watching and thinking about this – and I'm only speculating – but I actually believe it was the second thing. I think she literally didn't read her signature bill, flagship bill. I literally think somebody in her office briefed her on it, and she literally didn't read it. She didn't understand what she was introducing, yet she was perfectly comfortable to come into this Legislature and also go out and speak to the media and make confident, arrogant assertions that we didn't understand what the letters . . .

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: A point of order is called.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. McIver: The person speaking just made allegations against another member, not against a party but against an individual member, under 23(h), “makes allegations against another Member”; (i), “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member”; and (j), “uses abusive or insulting language.” I know the hon. member is having a good time revising history, forgetting about the fact that she had a minister walk in here with a five-page bill and come in a couple of days later with an eight-page amendment. But I would just be happy if you would just direct the member to stop making unavowed accusations against another member of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it’s not a point of order. The hon. member was just going through how a person won the leadership, what they wanted the bill to look like, what they tried to do initially. Now they’re agreeing to change that bill. That’s all part of the public record and a matter of debate. I think that earlier the government even clarified that they will be making changes, so we are just talking about things that are on the public record, and all these things like that are public debate.

The Speaker: I’m prepared to rule if there are no other comments to be added.

What I would say is that while I’m not going to find this a point of order, I would say that the member is being as creative as possible to imply that the Premier was doing something that you’re not allowed to do in this House. She knows that you can’t do indirectly what you can’t do directly. I would just provide some caution there as well as on the use of what some people might consider direct personal attacks in terms of saying statements like “she arrogantly” or otherwise. It certainly sounds directed at the Premier and not through the Speaker. There are a few areas of caution that I’m sure the Leader of the Opposition will heed and proceed.

Debate Continued

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just allow me, then, to clarify. And my apologies. I certainly meant only to recount the history when I asked the Premier why it was that this type of clause appeared in the act. The Premier stood up and told me that it did not appear in the act and then accused me of not having read the act. Some people might have characterized that as arrogant. We’ll leave that to people outside of this building.

I will simply say that what we have since seen is that having heard the Premier on multiple fronts outside of this building accuse me of not having read the act and accusing me of fearmongering, I now see that the Premier is acknowledging that all the things that we identified about the act – not all the things but the things about the King Henry VIII clause – were, in fact, correct and that she is now looking at considering amendments with respect to that.

Mr. Speaker, while I don’t want to be in any way specifically insulting to an individual member, what I will say is that this whole saga, from last Tuesday to today, has engendered a considerable amount of concern amongst a range of opinion leaders and stakeholders across this province as well as across the country about the overall competence of the people upon whom members of the government caucus are relying in order to draft their bills, secure the intentions they claim to be achieving, and to explain to those members what exactly it is that is appearing in the legislation that they introduced in this House last Tuesday.

That in and of itself, that flip-flop, that failure to acknowledge the provision, Mr. Speaker, in and of itself, separate entirely from the substance itself, is the kind of thing that generates uncertainty and concern. I believe people mentioned it today in the House on two or three different occasions. We had one national columnist in a national newspaper suggest that the bill had been written in crayon. That does not engender confidence, not amongst Albertans, not amongst investors, not amongst people across the country.

So that’s how we got here. The first thing that we have talked about, sort of the overarching thing that we have talked about when we talk about this bill, is that as much as we share some of the concerns that allegedly originally drove the introduction of this bill, concerns about where certain federal acts may undermine or hurt economic growth and job security for many Albertans – unfortunately, the cure is worse than the illness in this case because what’s happening now is that we have a bill that is creating massive economic uncertainty across the country, internationally, and certainly across the province.

Now, the first ground for that uncertainty, of course, exists by way of the history that I just outlined, the fact that there was such a clear inability of members opposite to describe what it was that they were asking the people of this province to give them the authority to do by way of this legislation, the fact that they seemed unaware of what appeared in the legislation, Mr. Speaker. When you have folks talking about rewriting federal laws arbitrarily in our province relative to the rest of the country, you definitely want to know that you have confidence that those folks know what they’re doing, and that certainly is not what we’ve heard thus far.

Now, since then we’ve heard from numerous opinion leaders that suggest that this piece of legislation is driving an unacceptable amount of economic uncertainty across the province and outside. We’ve heard from the Calgary Chamber of commerce, we’ve heard from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, we’ve heard from CAPP, we’ve heard from the mayor of Calgary, we’ve heard from venture capitalists, and, very importantly, we have heard from chiefs from Treaty 6 and Treaty 8, who are saying unequivocally that this legislation jeopardizes their fundamental, foundational rights.

Anybody in this House who has been following the long and winding road of getting major economic projects of any type built and concluded in this country understands that the failure to begin every effort and initiative by speaking with and gaining consent from Indigenous leadership and respecting treaty rights has to understand that that is a recipe for profound economic uncertainty. Yet once again with Bill 1, the Premier’s first bill, what does she do? She manages to somehow generate full-throated opposition from leadership in both Treaty 6 and Treaty 8, and that is wrong in principle, just because, obviously, of the principle that we should all be respecting treaty rights, and it also adds to this concern that I’m identifying around economic uncertainty.

Now, we also, of course, get uncertainty arising from the questionable nature of the legality of this piece of legislation. Now I’m moving off the King Henry VIII clause, and I’m moving on to the rest of the act. I want to talk just a bit about how much uncertainty is spawned by the fact that there are so many opinions out there with respect to whether it is legal or constitutional.

We’ve heard that there are a number of constitutional scholars who have primarily identified that they believe at first glance that this is going to run into trouble in the courts. Now, there are a couple of exceptions to that rule. The Premier herself has identified them. Former Supreme Court Justice Jack Major, in a very sort of two-paragraph interview with CBC, said: oh, you know, I don’t know; it might not be too bad. Of course, another constitutional scholar, from UBC, suggested: oh, well, maybe it’ll be okay. Then, of course, the lawyer for the convoy protesters thinks it’s absolutely constitutional, so there you go there. That’s certainly a source you want to be dining out on.

But there are a number of other constitutional scholars who object to those assertions, and I think we’re going to see more and more detailed analyses of exactly why that is. I'm not saying that what I'm about to outline is absolutely accurate, Mr. Speaker; it's just one of several opinions that I've heard from well-known constitutional scholars.

I want to just sort of walk you through one of the concerns that has been relayed to me by a constitutional scholar. Essentially, he argues that this whole concept of inviting the Legislature to make a determination of constitutionality is in and of itself a breach of section 96 of the Constitution. Section 96 is the clause which has had a tremendous amount of common-law consideration by the courts and essentially sets out that the responsibility is divided between the federal government and the provincial government and that the job of determining which is which rests with the courts. That's what's in section 96, and by calling upon this Legislature to suddenly say, "No, we're not going to wait for the courts; we are going to make a decision in place of the courts," we are in effect running into some constitutional problems.

Now, obviously, a government implicitly makes the determination that their own legislation is constitutional. But for one level of government to offer up opinion about another level of government's constitutionality: that's where, I am told, we run into problems, and that's where we start to run into questions around the rule of law. "Well, how does that happen?" you ask. I know you're asking. You're fully engaged in this conversation; I can tell. How does that happen? Well, the rule of law essentially says that all people are equal under the law – individuals are equal under the law; governments are equal under the law; organizations are equal under the law – and what that means is that if one organization impinges upon the legal rights of another organization, that second organization or person or level of government must go to the courts in order to have it resolved. That is, in effect, the rule of law.

Let's put it another way. If you have two business owners and one business owner breaches a legal contract, the person whose legal contract has been breached has to go to court to get a remedy. That's called the rule of law, Mr. Speaker. Now, vigilante law is the opposite of the rule of law. What happens there is that one person says: oh, you breached my contract; I'm going to come to your house and take your car, and if you don't like that I took your car, you can take me to court. That's vigilante law. That is in opposition to the rule of law, and that is essentially what this legislation may well be purporting to do on behalf of the government of Alberta. This is a view of this legislation that has been described to me by a couple of different constitutional scholars.

Mr. McIver: Journalists.

Ms Notley: Constitutional scholars.

The problem here is that not only are – so we've got this potential constitutional problem, Mr. Speaker. But not only do we have that; we also have the uncertainty that arises from directing agencies to ignore federal laws. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have this idea that this act allows the provincial government to direct a whole series of organizations to just ignore federal laws so that we'd be in a situation where federal laws apply in the other nine provinces, in the other three territories but not in Alberta. Well, nothing says certainty to a potential international investor than that kind of ridiculousness. Nothing. Nothing. We have laws that apply elsewhere, but maybe they don't apply here. Well, who don't they apply to? Well, it's only a really small group. Is it? Well, not really, because the legislation is written in such a vague way that it may well be that if you actually just give an organization a grant, the provincial government now has the authority to direct that organization to ignore the law. So the question then becomes, you know: who is it that this government will be directing to ignore federal law?

Go back to the emissions cap and C-69. As I said before, we agree; both of these are problems for Alberta industry and for many people in our province who are looking for a strong economy and for strong job growth. But what I'm trying to figure out is exactly: how do we get to the point where this piece of legislation has any impact on either of those two issues? The bodies that are subject to those two issues – let's say Suncor, for example, hypothetically – are not provincial agencies under the act. I don't know. Unless there's some real nefarious stuff going on in the background in terms of people's intentions – I don't know – how is it that they are impacted by this? I don't see it. I'm trying to see how you actually get to a place where this act does anything with respect to the problems that it is claiming to fix. Or is it because Suncor got a royalty credit? Are they now somebody that the government can direct to ignore federal laws? Is that what the act means? I don't know. It's very, very hard to tell. That kind of uncertainty is very, very worrisome.

You know, we just had an announcement – and I think the members opposite were very happy to see that announcement – about a joint project that was introduced or going ahead in the Industrial Heartland. It was a transformative project that was focused on net zero and hydrogen development, very exciting, $1.3 billion with Air Products and the Industrial Heartland; $300 million of that came from the federal government, more than double what the provincial government put in.

So my question is: if I'm Air Products or if I'm another international investor looking to set up shop in the Industrial Heartland, looking to get a joint subsidy from the federal government and the provincial government to attract me to come to the Industrial Heartland, to invest billions of dollars, to grow the economy, to hire thousands of Albertans, am I going to do that now with the Sovereign Alberta in a United Whatever Act in play, that we may or may not think is legal or not legal, which may or may not be constitutional, which may or may not run afoul of treaty rights, which may or may not direct that very investor to break federal laws with one of the partners they're hoping to get support from? I don't know. To me, that is the recipe for why this so foundationally undermines economic certainty here in this province. [interjection] Sorry.

Mr. Jones: Just to intervene if you'd allow it.

Ms Notley: Oh, I see.

Mr. Williams: Welcome to the Chamber. It's a thing we've been doing here.

Mr. McIver: She's new here.

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Notley: I'm good. I'm good.

Anyhoo, the other thing: when we talk about how we're not sure about who this applies to and how it would apply, we've heard the Premier talk a lot about the gross injustice of the federal government trying to give Albertans hundreds of millions and over a billion and in some cases multiple billions of dollars to support child care. Now, I'm sure members opposite, you know, will recall that, in my view, properly funded, accessible, high-quality, affordable child care is probably the singularly most effective economic stimulus any government could ever do anywhere. Now suddenly we have the Premier suggesting that the federal child care agreement is a horrific intrusion into Alberta jurisdiction. Oh, my Lord, it's awful. The sky is falling. The pearls are clutching. It's awful, Mr. Speaker.

Indeed, this may be a place where it will be necessary for the government to use this new act to show the federal government who's boss. Well, what that likely says to me is that we're going to see some delay in rolling out a critically important program that helps regular Alberta families deal with out-of-control affordability costs as well as ensuring that investors see Alberta as a place where they can bring their investment dollars and also their employees because they have a high quality of life and they can get affordable child care. Now suddenly that is at risk according to the Premier's own description of why it is that we need this act. Now, I don't exactly see how it's going to work. Again, we all over here remain very unsure about how this act is actually supposed to work, but since the Premier herself has talked about child care, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that it's very concerning.

Bottom line is: who does this act apply to? The answer is not clear. The lack of clarity creates uncertainty. Uncertainty freezes investment dollars. Freezing investment dollars slows economic recovery. Therefore, this act and its wide-ranging scope of uncertainty is the exact opposite of what Albertans and the Alberta economy need right now.

Now, let's just talk about this act from the perspective of some of our friends in other parts of the country. It has shocked me, Mr. Speaker, the tunnel vision with which the conversation around this act has occurred throughout the leadership contest that we saw with the members opposite and when they were debating with each other as well as the ultimate successful candidate, the now Premier, when she was talking about it. There seemed to be this complete failure to understand that we are one of 10 provinces and three territories and, presumably, if we succeed in doing this thing with this act, presumably other provinces will do it, too.

We are a landlocked province. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you from personal experience that there were times when, if somebody had suggested to the government directly west of us that this was a legitimate tool in their tool box, they may well have used it, and we would not be 10 months away from the TMX pipeline, the first pipeline to tidewater in over 40 years from Alberta, being completed.

Indeed, there was a time, Mr. Speaker, where the then minister of environment for the B.C. government actually started publicly talking about actively refusing to give permits for TMX as it was going forward. I specifically remember getting on the phone with a few of the people on that side of the border and walking them through the unconstitutionality of that action, that they literally could not do that, that if they wanted to resist the TMX pipeline being built once the federal government had gone through all the processes that it needed to go through by way of its jurisdictional authority, then the only way they could do that by respecting the rule of law was to go to the courts and ask if they were able to do that.

I remember there being a rather heated three-week period where we were backing and forthing with them and sending them our legal opinions and telling them over and over and over again that they had overstepped and that this was not actually a tool in the so-called tool box. Thankfully, they ultimately got the same legal advice that we had been sending over there, you know, and having all our flurried, sometimes rather heated conversations over, and instead they determined that they would take the matter to the courts, which they did. The court said: "Yeah. Alberta is right. You cannot refuse to issue permits. This has been done lawfully, and the pipeline will go ahead."

If they'd had their version of this act, we would not be 11 months away from having that pipeline built. We would probably be 36 to 48 months away from having that pipeline built, and the investment that was needed and attracted by seeing the successful determination of that pipeline being built would not be with us right now.

It shocks me that nobody over there seems to understand the consequences of doing this and creating the uncertainty not only here but encouraging other provinces to do the same if we don't have consensus about how to do big projects that cross borders. Yet not a word over there. Not a word. Nobody seems to remember that conversation. Nobody seems to remember that debate. It is so incredibly poorly thought out.

I'm getting close to wrapping up, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure folks over there will be very pleased. I just want to summarize. The bottom line is this: this is a bill that is – well, I won't quote all the extremely critical things that have been said by so many of the scholars who have described it. Members opposite: their own former Premier called it catastrophically stupid, and that's kind of a good short version. It is probably unconstitutional. It is, without question, deeply unclear, and it has already marinated in five or six days of very clearly demonstrated incompetence.

All three of those features, Mr. Speaker, undermine the confidence of investors: the confidence of investors in Calgary, the confidence of investors in Toronto, the confidence of investors in New York, the confidence of investors in London. It makes us look ridiculous, and it also undermines our ability to kick-start that economic growth which so many Albertans are counting on. It doesn't help business; it hurts business. We've already reviewed the fact that most Albertans do not believe this is a necessary or advisable tool to use to defend Albertans' interests, so Albertans are not behind it.

And, Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I haven't had a chance to fully talk about too much yet but I will touch on very briefly: all the time that we spend talking about this ridiculous act is time that we do not spend talking about the real crises that are facing Albertans. Last week we tried to have an emergency debate about the crisis in children's health care. Today, after hearing over the weekend about a children's hospice that took care of palliative patients and took care of exceptionally medically fragile children and gave respite to their exhausted parents, how the staff working there were redirected to deal with the crisis that is occurring in our hospitals, the Minister of Health got up and said: oh, it's not so bad; it's just as bad everywhere else. Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, it's not just as bad everywhere else.

Also, on top of it, he then went on to say that we're not going to talk about it, and also we're not going to talk about your bill, your Bill 1, that, rather than engaging in all this economic chicanery, would actually engage us all in a thoughtful conversation about how to come together to make our health care system better for people not only in downtown Calgary and downtown Edmonton but also people in northern Alberta and southern Alberta, in Lethbridge, in Medicine Hat, in the Bow Valley, in Red Deer, in communities all between. That's what we should be talking about, Mr. Speaker. That is what our bill would have allowed us to do.

Instead, members opposite decided to use their majority, in a way I've never seen before, to completely undermine the rights of private members who are not part of the government caucus and to avoid speaking about that issue. That is relevant to this bill because we are spending so much time talking about this bill, which is an attack on our economy, and we are not spending our time talking about the things that Albertans are desperate to hear us focus on.

We have a volunteer chief medical officer of health. We have school boards being told that they can't keep their kids safe. We have teachers who are overwhelmed by class sizes and illnesses. We have affordability crises that are hurting Alberta families and a complete failure to engage in any long-term solutions with respect to those. We have very serious concerns, Mr. Speaker. Also, we have an economy that is in desperate need of thoughtful efforts to diversify and to innovate and to grow long-term, sustainable, resilient jobs.

Instead, what are we doing? We're ignoring the health care crisis. We're ignoring the crisis in education. We're ignoring the number of kids that are getting sick right now. We're ignoring the affordability crisis. We are ignoring our obligation to grow the economy. Instead, what we are doing – what is it? Fifteen thousand jobs lost last month, I think? Yeah. Instead, what are we doing? We are spending all our time fighting about a poorly written, incompetently written, unconstitutional, unclear, economy-upending piece of legislation that has been characterized by many as the worst piece of legislation introduced in this House in 90 years, Mr. Speaker.

For that reason, there is no way that we can support this bill. I would urge members opposite – urge them – to take it back to the drawing board, to restore a semblance of good governance, to listen to Indigenous leaders, who so desperately want their treaty rights to be respected, to listen to business folks who want the chaos to stop, and instead to focus on the issues that Albertans really care about, Mr. Speaker. The time is long past for that to be the work that this government does instead of spending time with this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On amendment RA1, are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning would like to join in the debate.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise and speak to the referral amendment, that this bill not be read a second time as it negatively impacts investment decisions and Alberta's economy "and should not proceed in order to protect the economic well-being of Albertans."

Now, we've had many discussions over the last few days in regard to what we're hearing on this side of the House about this piece of legislation. It's only been a couple of days, yet we've seen investor after investor, business owners, whether it be big business, small business, international investors, coming forward and saying that this bill is creating such uncertainty in the future of Alberta and the future of our economy that they're concerned about being able to bring investment into the province. You know, I find it very interesting when I look at some of the commentary that's come forward from people that, as the Premier had said in one of her questions, are not typical allies of the NDP, yet they agree with what we're saying because ultimately it is just common sense.

To continue to have this debate, to continue to try to encourage the government to recognize that a mistake was made – and it's good to come back and say: "You know what? We made a mistake. We should throw this bill out, and we should really focus on what matters to Albertans." It would be a step probably in the right direction for this government. But over the last I would say three and a half years – and it doesn't matter if you have a new leader or an old leader; the behaviour hasn't changed – the government continues to push forward on their agenda, ignoring the issues that really matter to the very people of this province.

We've been talking about, on this side of the House, the affordability crisis, talking about the concerns around health care, asking the government to support Albertans when it comes to trying to pay their bills for a year and a half. I have videos – my staff lovingly just posted throwbacks for me this week – of me asking at budget last year, flagging the fact that we were seeing an inflationary crisis happening, seeing the fact that natural gas prices were going up, that gas was going up, looking at the fact that electricity costs were going up, yet this government did nothing.

So an opportunity presents itself: new leader, new session; let's introduce new pieces of legislation. What does the government do? Introduces a piece of legislation that creates economic uncertainty and completely ignores the issues that Albertans are talking about. How do I pay my bills? How do I have a good-paying job? Is the economy stable? And who's taking care of my children at the local hospital? None of that is in here.

In fact, we even heard today – and I'm going to quote this, Mr. Speaker – from a former comms director for the hon. Prime Minister Harper as well as campaign director for the current Premier in Ontario.

Well, I know this was part of a leadership campaign commitment and playing to a portion of the conservative base in Alberta, but, you know, there are a few challenges. One, it's not broadly supported by Albertans, so it baffles me as a campaign manager why they would put this as Bill 1 and put it so front and centre in an election campaign, a re-election campaign that is just around the corner. This is so off topic, and I don't know how you can fix this bill or why you would want to because it's fundamentally unconservative. You're trying to pass a piece of legislation to make another level of government respect the Constitution more by doing something that is profoundly unconstitutional in itself. Like, I don't know how you square that circle. I think the UCP and Albertans are on the right track in saying the federal government is overreaching on a number of issues around the resource sector, but where they're acting in an unconstitutional way, that's heavy-handed. But the solution to unconstitutionality is not more unconstitutionality, like you know. I think this is going to go down in history as one of the most ill-conceived pieces of policy and legislation, and frankly as a conservative I find this profoundly unconservative.

[The Speaker in the chair]

From many of your lovely colleagues who find it very unconservative . . . [interjections] It's a quote, and it's a quote from the hon. comms director for former Prime Minister Harper. Pretty interesting quote, I would say.

I think the government is having a crisis, and maybe we could even say that it might be an identity crisis: don't quite know where they belong. Even their own entrenched people who have had long histories of working within the conservative movement are calling this piece of legislation unconservative. As a libertarian, for those who are libertarians on that side, I don't know how you understand this piece of legislation and that it even resonates with your fundamental beliefs. It is such a significant overreach. So there's that piece: there is an identity crisis that I think that this current government is having.

Now, on top of that, though, I have spent since this bill was introduced – calling stakeholders, long conversations – a great weekend, really, having a lovely chat about where people think they're headed, what's going to happen with their future investments, what they're concerned about. You know, I haven't heard a single person say that they're okay with this piece of legislation. In fact, all I've heard is: "There's so much uncertainty." "I don't know what this means." "I don't know if this is going to impact my international trade." "I don't know if this is going to impact my export markets.” “I don’t know if this is going to have a serious impact on me being able to attract more investment into the sector.”

In fact, it actually will impact the competitiveness between Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba when it comes to our agriculture industry. Why would investors come to Alberta when they see a government choosing to continue to talk about the what-ifs or we-don’t-agree when they can go to Manitoba and not have to worry about two governments who are deciding that they’re going to fight with each other?

One of the best quotes I actually heard, or one of the best things that was said to me by one of my stakeholders today, actually, was: the best thing for our economy is a stable economy and a stable democracy. [interjection] It’s not stable, Minister. I appreciate that it’s a great quote. Actually, I totally agree. To have a great, strong economy, we need to have a stable economy, and we need to have a stable democracy. This does not incite a stable democracy – it doesn’t – and because it doesn’t encourage and show the investment community that we have a stable democracy in this province, it creates economic uncertainty. It just naturally does.

We saw the same thing happen with Quebec, and the minister might want to cheer that on, too. If you look at their bonds and what happened with their bonds when they started to get into the whole sovereignty discussion, Ontario bonds were at 10; Quebec’s had to go up to 17, and it took forever for their bonds to drop back down. There were significant economic impacts that were happening in the jurisdiction of Quebec during the discussion around what they were planning on doing. Small businesses were impacted. Local markets were impacted in Quebec because they didn’t know if they were going to be able to get to their markets outside of the province. They didn’t have the same relationships around who they were going to be exporting to even from an interprovincial perspective because their local markets started to shrink because nobody knew what was going to happen to the local economy.

Mr. Eggen: Uncertainty.

Ms Sweet: There was a ton of uncertainty.

Would you like to interject? Go ahead.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. I was using that keyword to catch your attention.

My concern is about the specific clauses of this potential law but just really the concept. I’m glad that you were speaking about other jurisdictions that went through this process. I know that, of course, initially people would say: well, Quebec was trying to separate. But, you know, the sovereignty law that they did bring forward in 1976 – right? – was a precursor to that continuum, towards a referendum on separation. Now, we’re not necessarily saying that that’s happening here, although I have my doubts, but just the word, putting a sovereignty act into place, triggers a whole series of decisions that businesses will make, and once that moves, then something else moves. It’s almost like a glacier melting. I’m just wondering if in the agriculture sector you’ve reflected on how that might affect that industry.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, hon. member, for the question. You know, in relation to the agriculture industry I think one of the things that – and I wish we had heard from the minister in regard to this piece of legislation, which we haven’t as of yet, and maybe he will be able to speak to it at some point. Specific to agriculture is that it’s so intertwined with the federal government. There are many regulations and policies that overlap. A lot of the investment that comes into Alberta comes through federal grants and supports. The irrigation project, which this government continues to reannounce and reannounce about doing more irrigation and saying that it was them, was actually funded primarily by the federal government. There are many projects and many relationships that exist between the province and the federal government.

When we start looking at even trying to champion our international markets, we know that when there is volatility in our democracy, when things are said out of context, our international partners will shut down their trade borders. We’ve seen it with pulses. We’ve seen it with our beef market. We’ve seen it with our pork exports. When we are not working in collaboration between all levels of government, we will impact those international markets.

Again, I haven’t heard from the minister as to how he’s planning on protecting those international markets, how he’s ensuring that those relationships will continue, and how he will continue to champion the agriculture sector when it comes to things about our food safety. CFIA currently is the one that is required to ensure that our food is inspected. It is a federally regulated program. It requires and works in collaboration across interprovincial jurisdictions so that we can sell our product to other markets, whether it be B.C., whether it be Ontario, and whether it be international.

The reason that those systems work is because there is an understanding, both nationally and internationally, about what our products do and how they’re regulated and how they are monitored and how we ensure that our food is safe. Now, we’ve seen already in the letter from the Premier to the minister talking about looking at different mechanisms around food quality and monitoring and also in the mandate letter a direction where we should be looking at trying to get preclearance for exports. That’s going to require some relationship building. That’s going to require the minister to work in collaboration with federal counterparts to be able to develop those things.

Now, does that create economic uncertainty, when we see a government saying, “Well, we don’t want to work on those things” or “We don’t want to work in collaboration”? Does that create a stable democracy? Absolutely not. It does not. It also makes it very difficult to have adult conversations and to try to get things done. In agriculture and forestry, for that matter, when we start looking at the softwood lumber dispute and looking at our trade agreements with the United States, those things have to be done across intergovernmental relationships. They have to be.

You know, have we heard that CAPP is not happy about this bill? Yes, we have. Have we heard the chambers of commerce say the same thing, whether it be the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or the Calgary Chamber of commerce? We absolutely have. But what we’re waiting for and what I hope to hear from this government is: how are they protecting our border in the sense of making sure that our markets are open, that our products are not going to be impacted by the decisions that this government is making under this piece of legislation, that motions that are being drafted, according to the Premier, by ministers aren’t somehow going to prevent the market and our products to get to market through the international markets or even our local markets?

It’s complicated. It’s not as simple as saying: well, we disagree; we don’t like what you’re doing, and therefore we’re going to stop it. We know that doesn’t work for dairy. It doesn’t work for chicken. It doesn’t work for beef. It doesn’t work for pork. Now, when we’re trying to look at value-add with the agrifood industry, trying to encourage investment to come to Alberta and not Saskatchewan and not Manitoba, it is going to become a struggle if we continue to see this piece of legislation the way that it is.

I won’t support it, Mr. Speaker, because I actually believe that there are going to be significant economic impacts that none of the ministers have been able to mitigate and have been able to explain to the rest of us in this House how that’s not going to impact the economic investment opportunities that we've been working so hard to make sure are coming to Alberta. I believe in a diversified economy. I believe in diversifying our ag sector in that value-add and that agri-processing. [interjection] Member?

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you for accepting the intervention, Member. I know that over the summertime you did an extensive consultation, going to many rural communities, meeting with many rural stakeholders, both economic, agricultural producers. You really reached out to so many of them, and I want to applaud you for that work because I know it's a considerable investment of your time – right? – and you did it gracefully by connecting with so many. I mean, you alluded to this already in your statements, but I was hoping that you could discuss a little bit further about the impacts this bill will have on those communities, those stakeholders, and the people that we're supposed to be here representing.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Member. You know, one of the things that I enjoy most about my job is being able to go outside of Edmonton and go into rural communities. I think part of it is that I come from a small town, so I'm really passionate about making sure that our smaller communities have a strong and vibrant economy.

Now, what do we know about Alberta? Well, most of our smaller economies are driven by our resource sector, whether it be oil and gas, whether it be forestry, and whether it be agriculture. We need to ensure that those economies continue to thrive and that those economies continue to be able to be good-paying jobs for our local, smaller communities. I won't lie. I'm worried about what it's going to do. If we don't see the investment coming into those communities, if we don't see the value-added processing, if we don't see oil and gas companies investing, if we don't see our green tech companies investing, greenhouses, for that matter, looking at expanding their businesses in these local economies, we're going to see a retraction, and I don't want to see a retraction in the smaller communities. I believe that supporting smaller towns, where people can grow up, raise their kids, and continue to work there, is what we should be doing. You know, I think this act has a significant issue in sending the wrong signal when it comes to that piece.

Now, as, you know, my leader also mentioned, I do think it also ignores a major conversation that's also happening. I think all members of this Chamber will acknowledge that no matter what community you come from, health care is a problem. Rural Alberta health care is a significant issue. We can't recruit doctors, get nurses out there. We're hearing of emergency rooms being shut down. We just had the recent story of the individual from Lac La Biche that had to come down into Edmonton for dialysis because the dialysis clinic is full.

So there is a significant problem that needs to be addressed, and that should be the fundamental priority for this government, not a bill that actually doesn't do anything for the people that elected us to be here, doesn't drive our economy, and sure doesn't address health care and really doesn't address the affordability issue. It ignores all of those things. It is a sad Bill 1, and it's kind of a mess. I would really encourage the government to retract it and to refocus and make their Bill 1 about fixing health care, make their Bill 1 about the affordability mechanisms that they're telling us they're going to do, figure something else out that actually speaks to the people of this province because right now the majority of Albertans do not support this bill, and I think that is the fundamental issue here, that the government is offside with the rest of Albertans.

The Speaker: I might just take this opportunity to remind members that we are on amendment RA1 and that they ought to be speaking to the amendment and not the main motion.

It looks like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is rising.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much. I want to take this opportunity to provide this Legislature and all the members within it, of course, through you, Mr. Speaker, just a caution. Now, I know that it's not the intention of anybody in this House to encourage Albertans to break the rule of law. I know it's not the intention of the members in this House to do so, but I want to draw people's attention back to, at the federal level, what were Conservative policies that did – maybe it wasn't the intention of the people who actually brought those policies into Parliament to encourage people to do damage and hurt people and ultimately kill people, but when the niqab ban was presented, when the barbaric cultural practices hotline was presented, they were presented as ideas.

So the word of caution that I want us to really consider when it comes to the sovereignty act – and we've already seen it, Mr. Speaker, at the Coutts border. Now, I know that none of the members on the other side, again, would actually encourage Albertans to break the law – I know that – never mind actually commit a crime that would lead to the death of an individual, but what we did see there were people that were armed and were actually going to make a move towards being violent.

Now, you're asking: okay; well, why am I bringing up the niqab ban? Why am I bringing up the barbaric cultural practices again? Because what I'm getting at here, Mr. Speaker, is that the policies and ideas that we present within Legislatures and parliaments have a particular impact on the general population. So just a word of caution there. The rhetoric that gets espoused inside of the Legislature could potentially lead to acts that we – of course, we by no means are intending for those things to happen. I'm bringing this up because when the London family was killed, I gave a caution at that time. I said that it's the rhetoric that happens inside of the House, the political rhetoric, that then has an impact on the general population, and then they go out and they act on particular ideas of their own. Now, this, to me, is what I would consider that we be concerned about when we debate regarding Bill 1, because that's in the back of my head. I'll admit that it is a concern of mine.

But getting more to the point and to the reasoned amendment and why I do not support Bill 1, I would say that – and it's nothing new, Mr. Speaker, because we've seen it with a number of pieces of legislation that have been brought inside of the House, that this government, whether it be under the previous leader – and now we're seeing the same thing with the current leader – is concentrating more power in the hands of ministers, and that I find is very concerning because that action in itself is antidemocratic. It's an action that is actually eroding democratic principles, our democratic values that we have here in Alberta by actually putting more and more power in the hands of ministers.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the act allows a member of cabinet to bring a resolution to the Assembly that states that "a federal initiative is unconstitutional . . . or causes [harm] or is anticipated to cause harm." Of course, the Leader of the Opposition spoke briefly about this particular aspect, and that is something that is decided by the courts. You know, whenever I have the chance to go and visit schools, we always cover, especially for the grade 6 students, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial, all those different levels and how they all work together actually to make sure that our democracy functions properly, making sure that the rule of law is observed and especially that we're all equal under the law.

Now, I know that we have a long way to go. There are a number of issues with our judicial system. Some people get more representation than others. You know, I'm sure that members of this House, when it comes to actually seeing the experience of Indigenous people – now, I'm going to get a little bit more into that with this particular bill – they don't necessarily have equal representation under the law.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, this particular bill, when it was being put together – Indigenous people weren't even consulted on this particular bill. We've heard extensively from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who's been contacted by members of Treaty 6 and Treaty 8 about how that consultation process never took place, and it's my understanding that the Minister of Justice doesn't want to even entertain the idea that this is something that should happen when it comes to this particular bill. So when it comes to the Minister of Indigenous Relations, I'm asking myself: well, is he advocating on behalf of Indigenous people when it comes to this particular bill so that it truly can be more democratic?

Correct me if I'm wrong, Mr. Speaker, but we should be learning from the mistakes that we've made in the past and the reality that we've gone through a process of truth and reconciliation. I'll remind members of the House that the whole process of truth and reconciliation is that you have to face the truth. You have to face the truth of what has happened in the history of Canada. You have to face it, and if you really want to make a change . . . [interjection] Sure, I'll cede to the member from the other side. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. deputy government whip.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Facing the truth. I would like to understand the member's position on section 2, interpretation.

Nothing in this Act [shall] be construed as

- (a) authorizing any order that would be contrary to the Constitution of Canada,
- (b) authorizing any directive to a person, other than a provincial entity, that would compel the person to act contrary to or otherwise in violation of any federal law, or
- (c) abrogating or derogating from any existing aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada that are recognized and affirmed by section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

Looking for constructive criticism here. That is, like, point blank clear in terms of what this act should be interpreted as. What is the constructive criticism, facing the truth, that you'd like to see other than absolute black-and-white, clear print that this will be constitutional and it will not abrogate or derogate from the rights of those individuals in section 35? [interjection]

8:50

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, just to point out that behind you as well the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is rising.

Member Loyola: Go ahead.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you. I'd just like to take an opportunity to intervene in the conversation because I know that you are very concerned about responding to the question that was just asked, and it gives me a good opportunity to . . .

Mr. Williams: Answer the question for him?

Mr. Feehan: I'm sorry?

. . . reiterate some of the things that we have discussed about the fact that Chief Tony Alexis, for example, has consulted with his lawyers, and they have very clearly said that section 2(c) does not in fact eliminate everything else that happens in the act. I think you know that, but I feel it's important to be able to respond to the question. The section in 2(c) talks about the desire for people not to assume that that's what's going to happen, but then when you go on to actually do something, it doesn't matter if you say, "Oh, I'm not trying to insult you, sir" if you go on to then insult them. You know, we see this happening all the time in our normal dialogue, and I know that you know that this is what is being told to the chiefs, that the act itself belies the thing that is being said in 2(c).

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford for sharing the particular response of an Indigenous leader to the bill.

Mr. Williams: How about your response?

Member Loyola: My response is the fact that the bill itself says one thing in one place but doesn't necessarily address it further on.

Mr. Speaker, this is characteristically the attitude of mainly Conservative governments throughout several jurisdictions in this country when it comes to dealing with First Nations communities and leaders. They think that they know it all, so there's no need to consult with Indigenous leaders at all. They know it all, so they're just going to move forward the way that they like without even consulting Indigenous leaders. Now, if they would have consulted with Indigenous leaders, Mr. Speaker, then perhaps we'd have a bill that at least you could say: okay; well, they consulted with Indigenous leaders. But we don't even have that, right?

Again I go back to the whole issue at hand. We see, and I'm reminded that, yeah, members on the other side when this bill was actually presented – we were saying: hey, this allows the Premier herself to go behind closed doors with her cabinet and actually make legislation and not even have to bring it into the House. Then the members on the others side: oh, well, they're claiming that we didn't even read the bill. Now we have members on the other side, including the Premier herself, saying: okay; yeah, we're going to have to introduce some amendments here in order to make this change. But the whole idea, Mr. Speaker, the whole idea of this bill gives no confidence to the people of Alberta that this government knows what they're doing and how it's actually going to impact communities when it comes to the rule of law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, several members on this side of the House have spoken to stakeholders that have spoken out against the sovereignty act already. You know, there's the Calgary Chamber president and CEO, Deborah Yedlin, who said in an interview: there's no shred of evidence that this act will lead to economic growth; you can't tell me this is going to support economic growth and support continued economic diversification in this province. The CEO, Lisa Baiton, of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers: we are concerned about any government policy that has the potential to create uncertainty for investors. And this is, in fact, creating uncertainty.

Now, the members on the other side know just as well as I do that when it comes to venture capitalists, when it comes to attracting capital to the province of Alberta, they're looking at the strength of our economy. They're looking at a policy that will actually make it more of a secure investment for them. They want it to be as much of a sure thing as possible, and this particular bill doesn't do any of that. It doesn't do any of that, because at the end of the day, you know, you want a piece of legislation that is going to, a policy that is going to encourage the industry to be lucrative and productive.

And, yes, here I am talking about oil and gas. You know, like, the members on the other side of the House like to talk about how we're not supporters of oil and gas when we were the ones who advocated very firmly, Mr. Speaker – advocated very firmly – for the Trans Mountain pipeline, trying to bring all stakeholders to the table in order to make the Trans Mountain pipeline a reality. And very early on – very early on – our leader of the Alberta NDP requested Indigenous people, First Nations communities, representatives, leaders, environmentalists, CEOs in the petroleum industry, all to come together and sit down and be like: okay; how can we get this thing done? The magic word there is “co-operation,” is bringing all the stakeholders together and having them co-operate. How can we make this a reality? How can we get the Trans Mountain pipeline done?

What I've seen over the last three years, Mr. Speaker, is a government that rather than creating the conditions for co-operation between different levels of government, between different stakeholders, between different Indigenous communities, rather than creating co-operation, they're creating division. We should be working towards unity. [interjection] Oh. I see that I have the Member for Edmonton-West Henday who would like to make an intervention, which I will accept.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Whether it's, you know, members of this side of the House raising the issue, whether it's the many constitutional experts or investors who have come forward, as the member was just speaking to, again and again beyond ensuring that we are creating an environment where there are incentives to be here, whether it's through taxation, whether it's through grants and otherwise, the fact is that we need the rule of law to prevail. Unfortunately, going back to what the member on the other side of the House – looking under interpretation, what we see in here in section 2, that “nothing in this Act can be construed as (a) authorizing any order that would be contrary to the Constitution of Canada.” Again I would go back to the idea that just because you write it here does not make it so.

Going further to page 7 in section 8, that “no cause of action lies against and no action or proceeding may be commenced against” – and it goes on to talk about Crowns or agencies that are within this act that may take action that might be contrary to the Constitution because of a decision that was made through motion . . . [Mr. Carson's speaking time expired] Oh. Didn't quite get there, but how important that is.

Member Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Member for Edmonton-West Henday. You know, I think that the best way to answer that would be to actually quote Emmett Macfarlane, who called it “the most unconstitutional bill in Canada's modern history.” You know, economics prof Trevor Tombe also pointed to legislation under Bill Aberhart to disagree. Modern history in the constitutional context means that upon the passing of such a resolution, Bill 1 gives a free hand to the government to change any law on the books and to order “provincial entities” – which include any provincial agencies or institutions (municipalities, universities and even the police!) – to ignore or violate federal law, even criminal law.

Again I go back to my opening statement providing to this Legislature and all the members within it, through you, of course, Mr. Speaker, that we need to be careful. We need to be absolutely careful in our debate and what we are suggesting. Your intention may not be that, but there are particular individuals in our society that will hear one thing and they'll go out and they'll act on it, and they will erode our rule of law.

The Speaker: On amendment RA1 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join the debate on Bill 1. Of course, we're on amendment RA1, a reasoned amendment, and I'll be speaking in support of this amendment.

Certainly, you know, we've heard far and wide from the business community, Indigenous leaders, academics, journalists, and even elected representatives from the governing party that the sovereignty act is legislation that will hurt Albertans. Even members of their own caucus, the UCP, who presented this bill, have spoken publicly denouncing it. Besides hurting our business sector by creating significant uncertainty, which has already been created – we've created some fear amongst investors. We've already heard from investors saying that with this kind of legislation that creates instability – and, of course, we know that businesses thrive when there's stability. So I'm kind of confused by the UCP, who declare themselves champions for business, that they would actually move to create this instability in the economy and the business community. And it's not just us that are saying it; it's business leaders themselves, chambers of commerce, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. It is illogical, really, Mr. Speaker. It's hard to understand why.

The Official Opposition, I just want to highlight, did something we rarely do when bills are introduced, and that is that we voted against the first reading. By convention we generally vote in favour of first reading of bills. We, however, did not do this in our first reading because we knew this bill was so deeply flawed. We voted against it. Since doing so, the Albertans, Canadians that I've just mentioned at the outset have spoken far and wide supporting that action. You know, people across this country see how deeply flawed this bill is and how it needs to not pass. That, of course, is why I'm speaking in support of the reasoned amendment.

Just for a bit of history, I thought it'd be interesting to share with the Legislature that we've voted against first reading of two other bills during this 30th session of the Legislative Assembly. The first one was Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act. Just to remind members of the Assembly, in short, Bill 9 imposed a delay on wage talks for front-line workers who took pay freezes in the first years of their contracts and then had the right to reopen pay negotiations with arbitration, if needed, in 2019. Because of this egregious betrayal that the UCP levelled against AUPE members employed at Alberta Health Services, the government of Alberta, postsecondary education, boards and agencies, the NDP caucus voted against first reading of Bill 9, just like we're doing today, because, again, it was a deeply flawed, deeply troubling bill. We stood together that that shouldn't even go in front of the Legislature at all.

Just to remind you some more about Bill 9, to add salt to the wound of this significant betrayal of workers, Premier Kenney at the time handed out earplugs to the members of his caucus during the debate in the Legislature. You know, many things were said about that, but one of the things I want to say: it was just a very stunning show of disrespect.

Well, here we are all these years later, and Jason Kenney is no longer the Premier. Despite his profession that he wanted legislative decorum, he stoked disrespect of the public discourses, saying one thing and doing another. Certainly, there is a word that we all know for this type of behaviour. That is another situation when we voted against first reading, like we have done for Bill 1. Again, I just want to reiterate that that's why I think it's important that we support the reasoned amendment.

I did say that we had done it two previous times. Then the second time we did it before was when we voted against first reading in this 30th Legislature on Bill 22, Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019. The key concern we had with this bill was that the bill terminated the contract of Alberta's Election Commissioner, Lorne Gibson. He was in the midst of an investigation into allegations of illegal donations in the 2017 UCP leadership race. We were assured by Premier Kenney that the investigation would continue, but what actually happened is that everything went dark. In fact, some members may remember that the Leader of the Official Opposition was removed from this Chamber because she accused the government of obstructing justice by firing the Election Commissioner.

These are two very significant examples of our NDP caucus voting against previous legislation in this 30th Legislature because those bills were so egregious, and I absolutely stand with the decisions of my caucus regarding that. We have done that again. We did that on throne speech day, which was November 29 – yes? – against this sovereignty act, Bill 1.

It's hard to sort of top some of what I've just articulated, but this Bill 1 is going to create much more havoc and much more distress although these bills obviously created significant difficulties for workers, really a deep betrayal of an agreement the government had with members of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, just created new legislation to override that, and then, of course, the second one is, you know, an investigation into their own allegations of improper donations, taking out the person who was doing the investigation, taking away their job. These are pretty significant things that Albertans should be definitely very concerned about. Sadly, this government is continuing to do things that are hurting our province, are hurting Albertans, so that is why our caucus stood so strongly and voted extraordinarily against the first reading of Bill 1.

I must say that also a significant concern of mine, as has been shared by my previous colleagues, is: why would this be Bill 1 in this Legislative Assembly? There are so many significant issues going on in Alberta. We know that our health care system is in crisis, and sadly it seems the decisions being made by the UCP government are only making it worse: you know, accusing AHS of manufacturing an issue with staffing, firing the board, and putting in sort of a UCP supporter to be an administrator. I'm sure that he won't have much power in his position but will be doing exactly what the cabinet tells him to. There are so many key issues that need to be addressed, so that is definitely why I think it's very important for us to support this reasoned amendment. [interjection] Yes, sir.

Mr. Eggen: Would you accept an intervention from myself?

Ms Sigurdson: Yes, I will from you.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. Yeah, absolutely. I really appreciate your comments generally, and it's, I think, constructive to look at the history of using, you know, a choice to vote on first reading of potential laws that affect Albertans.

I know you have particular expertise in regard to seniors and housing – and I don't, quite frankly, but I'd be very interested to learn more – and I know that many of those projects that we look for in perhaps Infrastructure but specifically focused and pointed to seniors and housing would be a joint venture between the provincial government and the federal government. I'm sure you've kind of thought about, you know, how this antagonistic and arbitrary Bill 1 would potentially affect housing projects going down in the future for Albertans. What can we do to mitigate that besides, of course, killing the bill?

Ms Sigurdson: Right. Thank you very much for the intervention. Certainly, yes, that is a concern. Of course, we know that in the throne speech, at sort of the end of the last page or so, the UCP did talk about some programs that they thought the federal government had too much interference in, you know, in the provincial jurisdiction. They identify health care. They identify child care. They identify education. These are just three examples. They don't say housing, but it could easily be housing.

I mean, one of the major concerns I have, certainly, as the former minister of seniors and housing is just the lack of investment, lack of action on that file at all. I have met with stakeholders across the province and people needing affordable housing, and you know the province is just missing in action. There's no investment. They did do a report, but nothing has really happened. Nothing has changed, so people are going ahead without the province because the province isn't there.

Municipalities, different nonprofits are working directly with the federal partners. Will that be outlawed by this bill? Will that be not allowed? If that means projects won't go ahead and we know that Alberta has – you know, we don't even have average access to affordable housing. Across Canada it's about 4.3 per cent, but in Alberta we only have 2.9 per cent of affordable housing. We need so much more. This bill could really jeopardize and put us even further behind, and I'm hoping the minister is thinking about these questions and addressing them with his colleagues, with the cabinet because we need investment in these areas. Will this bill mean that the UCP is going to tell people who are wanting to work with the federal government, "No, you can't do that because they shouldn't be mucking around in our stuff" or whatever? That is a huge issue. I mean, this is just one scenario and one of the reasons why we should support this reasoned amendment and make sure that this bill does not go ahead.

My colleague, when he asked me the question about, for example, housing, seniors' housing maybe more particularly, sort of led me to look at, you know, the three key issues, I think, with this bill. My colleagues have spoken at length about the issues, but I'll just do a quick summary and highlight some of the things that I've seen and they've articulated as well.

We already know about the Henry VIII clause, which is actually section 4 of the act, and this gives extraordinary powers to Executive Council. If the Legislative Assembly approves a resolution brought forward by a minister, the Executive Council then has the powers to suspend or amend that legislation. This limits democracy, which I've heard the members opposite say on so many occasions is of utmost importance to them, so that behind closed doors in Executive Council they'll be making decisions that really should be made in this Chamber with all members who are elected, 87 of us, who represent our diverse communities. Instead, this legislation really has this extraordinary power to let the cabinet make those decisions. That, of course, is one egregious mistake.

The second was that this legislation is too wide ranging. It confers powers to defy federal law when the UCP feels offended by the federal government, so they just define – like, a federal initiative is a "law, program, policy, agreement or action." As I was saying, in the throne speech they do list federal programs such as provincial health care, child care, education, and I just spoke briefly about, "What does that mean for housing?" and sort of shared some ramifications about that.

Then the third . . . [interjection] Yes, hon. member. Go ahead.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much. I know that you do a lot of door-knocking in your constituency and then in other constituencies across the province, because you lend a hand in others as well. Particularly when it comes to affordable child health care, I was hoping that you could share a little bit about that regarding the door-knocking that you've done and what you've heard from Albertans and how important that is.

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder to all members that on interventions it's a super excellent practice to speak through the chair at all times.

The hon. member.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you. Thanks for that reminder, Madam Speaker. Absolutely, child care is a key issue for families. We know it is expensive, high-quality child care, and we know that without that we don't have full employment. A lot of times women, because they tend to be the primary caregivers – not always, but still largely women more than men do stay home with kids; it becomes prohibitive for them to actually go out and work even if they want to, even if they're wanting to, you know, get back within their profession or whatever work they did previous to having children – feel that they can't do that because it is so extraordinarily expensive.

The federal program, that invested significant, significant funds in a program, has been a real game changer for so many families. You know, I have three sons of my own. All of them are adults now, but certainly when I was a young mom and working and a single mom at times, I struggled. It was hard. It was like a mortgage payment. Sometimes it's been referred to as a mortgage payment. I did my best to make ends meet. It still made sense for me to work in terms of the kind of job I had, but it was very difficult. The federal government has really stepped up. The affordable child care program is so key, and I know it's a really important program. Will this be one of the initiatives where the UCP will say, "Well, they're mucking around in our stuff, and we want it this way or that way"? It's hard to know what this is. That's why it is too wide ranging. That's sort of the second critique of this legislation.

Then a third one is that it's completely impractical. It's so broad in scope. Provincial entities that the UCP could say: okay; you have to defy federal law. Like, one of those federal initiatives: it could be a law, it could be a program, it could be a service. But provincial entities – and this is a big, broad definition – include almost any body that receives provincial funding, including municipalities, school boards, universities, and police forces. You know, they could be ordered to defy federal laws. This certainly throws a lot of chaos into the Alberta community.

Frankly, this bill really makes Alberta look ridiculous. It's kind of a bit of a laughingstock. If you've seen any of the media in the last while, Alberta is really taking a step in a direction that others, constitutional scholars . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on the reasoned amendment on Bill 1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a privilege to rise this evening to speak to Bill 1, more specifically the amendment before us. Again, just looking at it: that this act "be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill is negatively impacting investment decisions and the Alberta economy and should not proceed in order to protect the economic well-being of Albertans."

Now, we've heard quite a fulsome discussion this evening. Not nearly enough, I don't think, Madam Speaker; I think that we still have some more conversations to have this evening and into the future. But specifically on this reasoned amendment and why it would be so important to move forward with it and not read this a second time and not have this legislation proceed, I think that there are several arguments for that, and a few that have been made: one, of course, the economic argument and the uncertainty that this legislation is creating in the business environment when it comes to investors being concerned about what the future of relations between the federal and provincial government looks like and what, you know, potentially arbitrary decisions that this provincial government might be trying to make in the future, whether a variety of issues that might come up in the near future. Again, through discussions or press conferences that this government and the Premier and these ministers have come forward with, unfortunately there hasn't been much further clarity since it was introduced.

Again, a number of concerns. The massive amount of power that this government is trying to give itself and this cabinet is trying to give itself: you know, we saw this play out in regard to Bill 10, and there was a massive uproar from a variety of different experts on the left, on the right, academics and constitutional experts. A variety of people came forward and shared their concerns about Bill 10 and the additional powers that that was going to authorize under the Alberta Public Health Act.

Eventually the UCP came back, and the Premier at the time, Jason Kenney – I believe I can use his name now; correct me if I'm wrong, Madam Speaker – came forward after that legislation was in the past and said:

Over the past year it has become clear that this power . . .

The power provided by Bill 10.

. . . is not necessary . . . I've always been uncomfortable with this idea of the executive part of government being able to modify legislation. That's the power that belongs exclusively with the elected representatives of Albertans in the legislative assembly.

I am sure, Madam Speaker, that at the time of Bill 10 and the caucus meetings that happened following that, many members in the government and that continue to be in the government raised concerns about the amount of power that this cabinet was giving themselves.

Now, I'm sure that when we reflect back on Bill 1 and the time that has passed since then and the massive amount of new people who've been added to cabinet, there are probably fewer private members that are concerned about giving the cabinet more power since there are so many of them now. But I sure hope that there are still at least a few private members that are raising concerns about the power that this government is once again trying to give themselves. I hope that, with all the disagreements that I've had with the prior Premier, Jason Kenney, they might feel the clarity there and might vote against this legislation and support this reasoned amendment. We will wait and see, Madam Speaker.

Of course, I'm not sure, based on the amount of, you know, backtracking that a number of leadership contestants at the time, now cabinet ministers, have done – of course, the now Deputy Premier took it one step further and said: I'm sure there are safeguards in place – and this is in reference to the Member for Lethbridge-East, I believe. That Deputy Premier said: I believe safeguards are in place to ensure that this type of power isn't abused.

Now, I might be getting my quote wrong, Madam Speaker, but at that same time the Deputy Premier said that they hadn't actually read the legislation. You know, these are the types of concerns that I have when ministers are speaking on behalf of the Crown and on behalf of the government and saying: "Don't worry about this legislation. It doesn't do what you're saying it's going to do, but I actually haven't read it. Just take my word for it." I mean, that's very concerning. I think that no matter who you are, what side of the political spectrum you're from, that should be concerning. So it was interesting that that member and the Deputy Premier had a moment of clarity there and decided to share that they had not actually read the legislation a few days, at least, after it had been introduced.

Now, again, other leadership contestants that we've seen: the now Finance minister called this legislation a time bomb; the jobs minister, who was earlier today defending this legislation, called Bill 1 a fairy tale at the time; further, the Municipal Affairs minister, another leadership contestant, called this legislation anarchy. The list goes on and on. Unfortunately, since that leadership contest, as we've seen and heard, all of these members have chosen to not follow through with their convictions and instead have stepped aside to let the Premier draft this legislation and put it forward.

I would refer to an article from Global News from December 5, Madam Speaker, which happens to be today, where the Premier stated: you never get things one hundred per cent right all the time. They might have misquoted, but "You never get things right a hundred per cent of the time" is what the Premier stated to Global News. Unfortunately, when we're talking about the flagship bill of a government, for them to bring it forward and not have it right is incredibly unfortunate, to say the least. It reminds me of another saying in the construction industry – it's been a few years since I was there – measure twice; cut once. Of course, the consequences of cutting a two-by-four too short or too long in the construction industry are not necessarily as consequential as fundamentally altering the ability of cabinet and fundamentally altering democracy in the province.

Again, going back to the idea of uncertainty and the changes that are being proposed in this legislation and the concerns that the business community and investors are bringing forward, I had raised through an intervention, Madam Speaker – well, a member opposite brought forward the idea, through an intervention, regarding section 2 that "nothing in this Act is to be construed as," and they were specifically looking at 2(c) there. But this entire section:

- 2 Nothing in this Act is to be construed as
 (a) authorizing any order that would be contrary to the Constitution of Canada.

I mean, this is absolutely ridiculous, Madam Speaker. If we had the ability to just write it into legislation and for it to become true, then why wouldn't we just put this in everything? Just because you say that your act is not against the Constitution or not unconstitutional doesn't make it so.

Further, to create more confusion for investors and, again, businesses that are looking to work within a province or a jurisdiction that is able to follow the rule of law and the rule of the land, on page 7 look under section 8:

- No cause of action lies against and no action or proceeding may be commenced against . . .

Further into (a) there:

- . . . in respect of any act or thing done or omitted to be done under or in relation to this Act or a resolution or order under this Act, including, without limitation, any failure to do something when that person has discretionary authority to do something but does not do it, or . . .

And it goes on. Again, a piece of legislation that's saying, "Nothing in this act is unconstitutional" but further saying, "If somebody acts and it is potentially to be considered unconstitutional, no course of action should be taken against them." [interjection] I think I see an intervention here, which I will take.

Thank you.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, hon. member. I appreciate your analysis thus far. Further to what you were just talking about, again, where one part of the bill seems to affirm or try to reassure people that, "Oh, we wouldn't do something like that," then another part of the bill, in fact, enables a cabinet to make arbitrary kinds of decisions without bringing laws or bills or alterations for debate in the Legislature.

You know, perhaps the best illustration of that duplicity that I've seen in the last 72 hours – this is all unfolding very quickly; it's like watching a car crash in slow motion, right? – is where I heard the Premier say that, oh, you know, we would maybe never even use this legislation, right? Remember that, Madam Speaker, where she said, "Oh, well, we'll probably, hopefully – God forbid we would ever have to use this legislation"? Yet she instructed all of her cabinet ministers to find places to use . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member.
 Please proceed.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and I do appreciate that interjection. Indeed, this government seems to be and this Premier seems to be saying one thing and then, you know, sometimes from day to day, hour to hour instructing ministers and her cabinet to do something differently.

Again, just looking at this section and no cause of action, that is concerning in and of itself, asking potentially, as described in the definitions of this legislation and as sort of laid out through the legislation, school boards or municipal governments or anyone affected by the Education Act or the Post-secondary Learning Act to make decisions that are potentially contrary to federal law and then telling them that – well, I mean, the legislation lays out, which in and of itself seems like: well, I'm not sure if it's constitutional itself – they can't be held accountable, nor can the ministers be held accountable for the decisions that they're making that might be in contravention of federal law.

I mean, Madam Speaker, if it wasn't so dangerous and so concerning to the business community in terms of the uncertainty that it raises between the relationship between not only the federal government and, of course, our municipal governments and our school boards, duly elected representatives on several different levels across the province, that might be caught in a constitutional battle because the provincial government is upset about a certain decision or funding agreement that may or may not have been put forward . . . [interjection] I see another intervention, Madam Speaker, so I will take that.

Thank you.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, hon. member. I'm curious to know the member's thoughts on: if other provinces across the country decided to introduce a similar act, how would Alberta, which is a landlocked province, get our resources to tidewater? I'm a big proponent of LNG. I think there is significant opportunity for Alberta to export LNG globally. I think there's a huge need, that has been exacerbated by Russia's invasion of Ukraine, and a need for ethically sourced energy. Alberta is bringing in a sovereignty act because Alberta doesn't want to use the mechanisms that are already in place to dispute any kind of federal overreach. I'm curious to hear, Madam Speaker, the member's thoughts on: what would happen to the future of Alberta if every province brought in their own sovereignty act, where they could, effectively, unilaterally halt a project that would be in the best interests of the whole country?

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for that interjection as well. Of course, that would be very concerning, and I think that many members have brought forward that if it was the NDP in government bringing forward this legislation, talking about, you know, giving extreme power to cabinet – and, I mean, I thought there were libertarians. I think the Member for Edmonton-Manning brought this issue or this point forward, but I thought there were libertarians left in the Conservative caucus, but their silence on this issue proves otherwise, or the fact that they, you know, have been promoted to the front bench and now have become silent, so many of them.

But specific to that issue, Madam Speaker, I think it's important, again, further in the legislation, looking at judicial review. I mean, if the province makes a decision and, you know, somebody wants to bring forward a judicial review, which, of course, is their right – again, looking at Bill 1, reducing the normal period of seeking that review from six months to 30 days. So somebody concerned about the constitutionality of something, whether it be a funding agreement that potentially the provincial government has backed out of because they're upset with the federal government or a policy regarding energy or agriculture or emissions, whatever it might be – that somebody concerned about the constitutionality of it is now also, from this government, in Bill 1, having the period to gather all of their legal documents and put forward their legal team going from six months to 30 days. Again, these are changes that do not support the idea of strengthening the rule of law. If anything, they are attacking it, and again and again stakeholders from all sides of the political spectrum have said that this, at the end of the day, is going to hurt economic opportunities within our province.

Madam Speaker, I just do want to take one more moment to, again, recognize that we are on a reasoned amendment, that this legislation “be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill is negatively impacting investment.” I am supporting this motion.

How much time do I have, Madam Speaker, if you don't mind?

The Deputy Speaker: Just over a minute.

Mr. Carson: Just over a minute. Wonderful. Thank you.

You know, there are many issues that are going to arise in the near future. One of them that this Premier has sort of mused over is changes to health care premiums, changes to very small health spending accounts, which would not even cover, in many cases, you know, general practitioner or physician visits, and there are many Albertans concerned about that.

Another large concern when we talk about stability in our province is making sure that we are staying within the legislative framework of things like the Canada Health Act. I think that there are a lot more considerations to be made around how this legislation could affect some potential battle in the future. Of course, Madam Speaker, that's hypothetical, but with this Premier and this legislation we're just left completely unsure. Again, we look at the instability that this legislation has created and the uncertainty that through several press conferences and through discussions in the Legislature . . . [Mr. Carson's speaking time expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there members wishing to speak to amendment RA1? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to start by commenting tonight on what a reasoned amendment is supposed to be. A reasoned amendment is a course of action that the Legislature can take that asks for the Legislature to consider a bill that's under consideration in the House. It's used to try and stop the progress of a bill because they will argue, they will reason that it's a bill that is outside of the scope, or their arguments are that they must use arguments that say that the bill is – what is the bill about? What is it supposed to be about? They're supposed to deal with the bill – what is it about; what is it trying to do? – and that the reasoned amendment, the reasons that they use must stay within the scope of that bill. They must address exactly what that bill is doing and why they would have reasons for not moving forward with that bill based on what is within the bill. Then they must come forward, and they must be able to show that their reasons are fatal to the bill. In other words, it can't just raise a series of objections that could be dealt with by submitting amendments at the committee stage or in the reporting stage but that their reasons point out that there are so many serious flaws in the bill that it just shouldn't go forward.

It must be more than simply a direct negation of the whole principle of the bill. If the reasoned amendment is agreed to, the bill can't make any more progress. We're really talking about reasons that show that there are serious, serious flaws within the bill. As I've been listening tonight, I just don't hear that coming from the opposition. They're not making the case. Bill 1: the primary purpose of this bill is to enforce the Canadian Constitution's division of powers. That's its primary purpose, to ensure that the federal actions, the federal laws passed by the federal government do not encroach on provincial constitutional rights. It shifts the burden. Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, shifts the burden to the federal government to legally challenge Alberta's refusal to enforce unconstitutional or harmful federal legislation.

If the federal government is passing unconstitutional legislation, we would then, through a motion in the House, refuse to enforce that unconstitutional law. Now, I've heard a lot of arguments and reasons provided by the opposition tonight and earlier for why we shouldn't proceed with this bill. They talk about it being dictatorial; they talk about it being undemocratic; they talk about it being unconstitutional; they talk about a whole series of reasons that sometimes they give, but I'm not sure that there's any real evidence to support their allegations.

If we take a look at one of the arguments that I heard from the Leader of the Official Opposition, it was that the cure is worse than the illness; we're creating massive economic instability with this. Let's be clear. The thing that is creating massive economic instability, as we've seen through Bill C-69, which has scared billions and billions of dollars out of this province, which has created an economic situation where many of the businesses in my constituency that are involved in oil and gas have gone under in the last three or four years because we're locked – our access to tidewater is not there because of Bill C-69, Bill C-48.

We can't seem to get our resources out of this province. That's what's created the massive economic instability, and Bill 1 is our response to those unconstitutional laws. We know that the Alberta courts have ruled that Bill C-69 is indeed unconstitutional. If you were going to move forward with the reasoned amendment and your reason is that it's unconstitutional or that, in this case with this argument, it's creating intense economic pressure on the economy . . . [interjection] No. I'm going to finish my points. Thank you.

. . . well, it's just not there. The original passage of an unconstitutional law which interferes with Alberta's rights to be able to own and harvest our natural resources and to send them to markets so that we can produce wealth and generate wealth in this province: it's that unconstitutional federal law that's creating the economic disturbance within this province.

I've been doing some reading about whether it's unconstitutional. Here are some quotes that I'd like to read. This one comes from Eric Adams at the University of Alberta: no province has ever tested whether the constitutional authority exists for a Legislature to order entities within the province, which would include police forces, cities and towns, provincial public agencies, not to comply with federal laws.

Did you hear what it said? This is a professor at the University of Alberta: no province has ever tested whether the constitutional authority exists for a Legislature to order entities within the province, which would include police forces, cities and towns, provincial public agencies, not to comply with federal laws. Hmm; hasn't been tested yet. I would suggest that Bill 1 is just a very creative way of trying to defend and create a shield for Albertans to be able to use to protect our economy and to protect us from a federal government that has often overreached in the passage of its federal laws.

He continues. Adams suggested that there would be a stronger argument for a province to refuse to enforce unconstitutional federal legislation. There are times when a provincial or a municipal jurisdiction has set priorities and ignored federal or existing laws. For example, in the 1970s Quebec stopped prosecuting Henry Morgentaler for what was at the time performing illegal abortions, and the Vancouver police force has also said at times that it would stop charging for possession of marijuana. Hmm. It would appear that we have a situation where their reasoned amendment is that they should stop the bill because it's unconstitutional, yet here there's a professor from the University of Alberta who is saying: oh, that's not particularly unconstitutional; lots of provinces have chosen to co-operate with the federal government or not co-operate with the federal government and either enforce or not enforce federal legislation.

Here's another one, Geoffrey Sigalet, University of B.C. He's the director of the UBC Centre for Constitutional Law and Legal Studies. In its meat, that is, in the meat of Bill 1, it doesn't empower any provincial officials to disobey judicial decisions. Instead, it enables the province via these motions to set conditions or not to co-operate with the federal government in relation to certain federal law the province deems unconstitutional, Sigalet said, and that's totally constitutional. So if the argument for this reasoned amendment is that we've got a bill here that isn't constitutional, well, here's the director of the UBC Centre for Constitutional Law and Legal Studies who is saying: "Oh, guess what? Hmm. That's totally constitutional."

The province didn't say that they're the final arbiter. They didn't say that the courts had nothing over this. They didn't say you can disobey a judge. It's not saying, "We're not going to listen to you, courts, and we're not going to listen to the federal government," he said. It's saying that the federal government has its jurisdiction and we have ours. That sounds pretty constitutional, so the reasoned amendment, I would suggest, doesn't have a leg to stand on.

Tristan Hopper from the National Post from December 5 . . . [interjection] Maybe a little later.

Provinces aren't allowed to break federal law, but they've always been able to pick and choose which parts of it they feel like taking seriously . . .

"The provinces can decide to nullify a new enactment simply by refusing to prosecute cases brought under this law," Alan Young, an associate professor at Osgoode Hall Law School . . .

Then he says again:

After the Trudeau government announced a series of 11th hour amendments that would effectively criminalize most types of semi-automatic rifles . . . Saskatchewan Firearms Act, a bill asserting jurisdiction over firearms enforcement.

Hmm. It seems like there are other provinces out there that are trying to set up shields that would protect them from overreach by the federal government, and it's not deemed unconstitutional.

Madam Speaker, if you're going to go and argue for a reasoned amendment and if that reasoned amendment has to stay within the scope of the bill and it has to show that the reasons for not going forward show that the bill is fatally flawed, in other words that it can't just raise a series of objections that could be dealt with by submitting amendments at the committee stage, then my argument would be that this bill needs to be rejected by this House as a reasoned amendment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to speak to the reasoned amendment RA1, that was introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. It says to move that the motion for Second Reading of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill is negatively impacting investment decisions and the Alberta economy and should not proceed in order to protect the economic well-being of Albertans.

While we got a rather interesting definition of what a reasoned amendment is, I find it baffling that members of the government can stand up and deny that this bill is completely creating chaos within industry, within our economic investors. We've heard from so many across the province and across the nation about the concerns with this piece of legislation. While the leadership review was going on, we had members of this now current cabinet that spoke quite openly about their concerns and the devastation and the impact that this would negatively have on Alberta's economy, yet here we are in the Chamber speaking to Bill 1, and there's been nothing that has created a sense of stability, a sense of confidence that would explain why we should proceed with this piece of legislation.

I'm in full support of this reasoned amendment. I do believe that we should stop this piece of legislation from going forward and send a clear and direct message to future investors that it's not going forward. There's an opportunity to regain some sort of stability in the province. We're hearing loud and clear that we are losing investment opportunities. We're hearing concerns . . . [interjection] Absolutely. Go ahead, please.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I appreciate your perspective.

What I'm curious about: I just want to bring it back to, of course, the amendment and the scope of the amendment. It's to protect the economic well-being of Albertans and negatively impacting investment decisions and the Alberta economy. I know you've been following the Culture ministry closely over this last number of years. There are a number of areas within the Culture ministry that have a significant contribution to our economy, right? Madam Speaker, we have, for example, the film and television industry, which is a burgeoning industry; it's growing quite quickly. But I know from experience as Culture minister that it can move and it can go to one place and then leave very quickly. If circumstances change in the film and television industry, they can just simply pack up and leave.

Ms Goehring: Thank you to the hon. member for that contribution. I wholeheartedly agree that there are so many potential projects that are at risk because of this piece of this legislation. There are so many investments that come from film and television from outside of the province that employ directly individuals from the province. We have crews; we have lighting; we have costumes. There are so many things that happen once a big production decides to come to Alberta.

When this piece of legislation is signalling to investors that there's chaos, uncertainty, and it's not stable, it creates a space where investors simply might not want to come here when they can go next door to a province that has no sovereignty act before its Legislature. They're not going to sit around and wait to see what if, what happens. The very fact that this piece of legislation was introduced despite outcry from Albertans, from business leaders, from industries, saying that the mere introduction of the legislation, of the Alberta sovereignty act – it needs to stop. We know that international investors saw the introduction of this bill, Bill 1. It signalled that Alberta has simply a different set of rules than the rest of Canada. There's no amount of tweaking, if you will, that could happen that will change that perception.

Regardless of how you change it or add to it or remove it, like some of the members would like you to believe when asked about their flip of stance from being vehemently opposed to it prior to the leadership review to now being in cabinet and agreeing with it – you know, we heard things like: well, there are things that are different; some of the stuff is different. “Things” and “stuff” is not very reassuring language. But the language that this bill has has already signalled significant concern to investors, and the only way, Madam Speaker, that you're going to instill investor confidence is to kill this bill. It's to support this amendment and let it die.

We can't continue to live in a province with so much chaos and so much instability in so many areas caused by this government, to now pile onto that with the introduction of the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. I'm just baffled by why this government isn't listening to some of the business leaders, the industry leaders, economic leaders telling them that it's going to destroy jobs, chase away investment, and stifle Alberta's economy.

People are struggling in this province with their everyday lives. The cost of groceries has gone up, insurance rates, tuition. People are accessing the food bank at record numbers, Madam Speaker, and the very first piece of legislation that this government introduces completely creates more chaos, more instability to investors when we're trying to draw investment into this province. It's hard to argue that a company should come here and invest here when there's this type of chaos happening. The result is going to be that people are not only not going to come and invest here, but people are going to leave.

We've seen it in health care. We saw what happened when this government interfered with doctors and nurses during a health crisis. It continues, Madam Speaker. We've heard from so many health care professionals across the province telling us that they were leaving. They didn't feel supported; they didn't feel like this government was making decisions that were in the best interests of Albertans. Here we are again with Bill 1, talking about legislation that is scaring investors, that is creating instability. [interjection] Yes. I'll give way to the member.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, hon. member. You know, we're talking about not having this bill be read. I'm just curious if you could maybe talk about some of the important things about why this shouldn't be Bill 1. I know you're connected with the children's Stollery. Maybe from your experience in working with some of the families there that have had children in emergency and things like that, are those some of the things that maybe you're hearing about happening within Calgary and Edmonton, and maybe that should be the priority right now versus the sovereignty act?

Ms Goehring: Thank you very much to the hon. member. She knows first-hand what it's like to work with some of our most vulnerable. We worked together in children's services for almost a decade. When you have direct front-line experience, you know how devastating some of the changes that this government has made are, the impact that it's had.

She made reference to a personal connection to the Stollery. I have a few. My son, my youngest, when he was born, he lived at the Stollery. I lived there with him. He was a very, very sick baby. Through the immediate reaction of our pediatrician at the time we were able to have him admitted, and they were able to find a place for me to be able to stay with him. Now, that was almost 19 years ago. My baby will be 19 on December 12. When I look at the state of what the Stollery was then and the care that we received as a family compared to the heartbreaking stories that are happening not just at the children's Stollery but at the Calgary Children's hospital, I can't imagine what the parents are going through right now, Madam Speaker.

10:00

To have this absolute crisis in children's health care is absolutely unacceptable, and for the very first piece of legislation that this government introduces amongst this crisis to be the sovereignty act is so out of touch. It is creating more and more chaos and stress, and I can tell you that those parents that are sitting, perhaps in a trailer, waiting 15, 20 hours for their child to see an emergency doctor are outraged, absolutely outraged, with the complete disregard from this government. We are hearing absolutely devastating stories on this side of the House, and I know that members of government are also hearing these stories.

You can't understand what's going on and support this as Bill 1. It just makes absolutely no sense while there is so much chaos and crisis happening in the province for so many Albertans. Why create Bill 1 as a piece of legislation that contributes so much to that instability and crisis? It needs to stop. It needs to not move forward, and people of this Legislature need to support Bill 1 and vote yes for our amendment. We can't in good conscience know what's happening in the province with our children that are requiring emergency health care and proceed on this piece of legislation. Our opposition made two attempts in this very Chamber to discuss the crisis because we knew it wasn't going to be addressed in their first bill, that this is clearly not a government priority, so we brought forward two attempts to discuss children's medical in this Chamber. Both of them were voted down.

We know that there are kids that are sick all across the province. We know that schools are suffering with lack of attendance because of illness. Teachers are stressed out. They're burned out. They're asking for support. The solution was for staff to be pulled from the Rotary Flames House in an attempt to meet the rising unmet patient needs at the Alberta Children's hospital. For those that don't know what the Rotary Flames House does, they provide children and families with respite care. These are kids that are really, really sick, and instead of talking about alternative solutions to how we can support the absolutely harmful wait times of children in this province, this government chose not to debate it. Didn't see it as a priority, and instead we're debating Bill 1. For a health care system that's been broken by this government and a government that's doing nothing to repair it, we're here talking about a piece of legislation that creates so much chaos for our economy.

It just simply does not make sense, Madam Speaker, why when we've heard from leaders across the province saying that this is absolutely not a piece of legislation that should go forward. It gives way too much power to the UCP. It's going to create too much stress and discomfort and harmful intentions to those that are possibly looking at coming to Alberta to invest. Why would this government continue to want to put this forward and risk that? I just don't understand. They talk about, you know, the NDP standing up and creating chaos. Well, a lot of this isn't our words. If you turn on the national news, people are talking about the chaos in Alberta. Why? Because of the introduction of this legislation. The majority of Albertans do not support this legislation, yet here we are debating a bill that this Premier is insisting go ahead despite not understanding it when it was introduced and saying that we were inaccurate and then changing some of her language to say: oh, no; we didn't intend that. It's too late. The damage is already done. This bill was introduced. Investors are worried.

That is not the type of Alberta that we want to draw attraction to. We want people to look to our province and be able to see a stable government. We want them to be able to see that legislation that's going forward is truly in the best interest of Albertans. This government is so out of touch when it comes to what is truly important to Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to the reasoned amendment on Bill 1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in regard to this reasoned amendment, which says, in essence, that the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act not be read a second time because of the negative impacts on investment decisions and the Alberta economy, not proceed in order to protect the Alberta economic well-being. As I listened with interest to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon talking about the Constitution, I mean, I think that there are constitutional problems with this Alberta sovereignty act, but this particular reasoned amendment is talking about economic impacts specifically.

I've asked a number of speakers during this evening about their own ministerial or critic areas that they are responsible for, to speculate on how this Alberta sovereignty act might have a negative impact on that particular part of the Alberta economy. The area that I know something about, Madam Speaker, is in regard to postsecondary education. Our 26 colleges, universities, polytechnics spread around the province are an incredible asset that will help us to build the economy for now and for the future, to help to build citizens and to build a quality of life for now and the future here in the province of Alberta. Those postsecondaries are almost entirely a joint venture between the provincial government and the federal government. The federal government makes quite a lot of investments and a lot of decisions around postsecondaries here in the province and right across the country as well. Indeed, the investment is essential for particularly research in our postsecondaries here in the province of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, that research work, as diverse as it might be and, you know, through various academic pursuits and scientific and technological pursuits, has real, dramatic, and demonstrable, I should say, effects on our economy here in the province of Alberta. Any time you are compromising that by somehow suggesting that you will put a bill or a law in between the normal course of choices that postsecondaries and academics will make in regard to research and development in a particular institution or somehow directing or redirecting through law the partnerships that exist between provincial and federal government in postsecondary institutions: that's a real impact on potentially the economy of our province. This is a long-standing way by which our colleges, universities, and polytechnics have been founded over many decades, right? Really, since the beginning of Confederation. To somehow interfere with that process with a false sense of a sovereignty act, I think, is a real problem. [interjection] I will certainly give way to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for allowing me to provide a little bit of an intervention. Of course, when I got up to speak on this reasoned amendment, I was giving the House a bit of a warning. I think that this is another example of a very important warning in terms of the implications that this particular bill not only will have on the immediate economy, but now we're seeing that, well, it could potentially impact our postsecondary institutions. When you're talking about postsecondary institutions and impacts of legislation that they'll have, these impacts are going to go on from generation to generation, down the road. I'm hoping that, Member, you wouldn't mind speaking to what could potentially be some of those implications that perhaps members on the other side of the House aren't really thinking about at this moment when it comes to actually introducing this sovereignty act.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thanks, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Indeed, you know, it doesn't have to be a generational change. In fact, things can move quite quickly, right? When people make choices around investment – really, grants and choices that are made around postsecondary: it's an investment, too, sometimes tens or even hundreds of millions of dollars. Look at the nanotechnology that the federal government has put into the University of Alberta here, for example. I mean, that has tangible, long-term consequences in a positive way, but by compromising the integrity of the relationship between the federal government and the provincial government, it can have a pretty fast effect on students choosing to study here in the province of Alberta if they feel like there's some element of instability. I see students all of the time in my life, my own professional life, my own personal life. They're pretty mobile, right? They can move from one place to another or choose an acceptance to a department or study for a postsecondary degree all over the world at this point in time. You know, we respect that choice, but we want them to have a top-quality, world-class choice right here in the province of Alberta if they want to do that.

While perhaps it takes generations or a long time to build up the reputation of a postsecondary institution, you could lose that in a matter of months, even, if something like the sovereignty act, you know, rears its ugly head and you find that people are having to second-guess about Alberta and Alberta's commitment to the provincial-federal relationship that has helped to build what a wonderful place that we have to live here today and wonderful postsecondary institutions that we have to study in here today as well. Those are the kinds of things you've got to think about. It's not just what the individual content of this particular sovereignty act is but the very idea of having a bill around sovereignty, as well, that really has an actual effect.

As I said briefly in comments, interventions here earlier this evening, I know that there are substantive differences between sovereignty legislation that was enacted in the province of Quebec from 1976 onwards to even, from time to time, this present day under different circumstances than Alberta. But just the idea of sovereignty legislation, period, is enough for people to vote with their feet. Once one thing moves, then other things start to move, too, right? Let's say – again, this is an example from Quebec – Sun Life decided to close their headquarters in the city of Montreal 40-some years ago. People took that as a signal, and then suddenly you saw other institutions, financial institutions and railways, and then people started to move on real estate as well because they thought, you know – it's like one thing moves and then everything starts to move, like what I said before, like when a glacier melts.

You know, we have an opportunity to nip it in the bud here, but we also have to recognize the gravity of the situation when you bring up the concept of a sovereignty act, whether people see it for what is in it substantively or they see a trend or a movement and a direction. And I can say, in my judgment and in the judgment of investors and of researchers in postsecondary institutions, in real estate investment, in technology investment, in the oil and gas industry, I think it's demonstrably and almost universally viewed as a negative choice, right?

Let's nip it in the bud now. I think it's not such a bad thing to do – right? – to recognize when you need to change direction. I know it's awkward because, of course, this was the flagship bill of a new Premier and government and so forth, but, you know, when you look at not just the nuts and the bolts but the overall concept and direction, I think there are lots of better ways in which we can move at this juncture in the history of our province.

We have unprecedented inflation, right? This is a 40-year high for a lack of affordability that reaches right through each sector of our society. You know, I mean, we are MLAs. We make good money, but you can see the difference, I'm sure, in the last few months, that everything is much more expensive. Just imagine someone who is earning a third or a quarter or a fifth of the salary that you might have, and just imagine how difficult that is. Imagine having a young child in grade school right now with, really, an unprecedented flu season just getting started and already literally flooding our hospitals and our emergency rooms and our capacity to deal with severe flu symptoms, right? Again, just two examples of something that's literally happening by the minute, in real time, all around us.

We need to deal with using this legislative power and the power of the government of Alberta to mitigate the affordability crisis in this province, to look for ways to build capacity in our public health system in order to reassure public confidence in this government to be able to deal with issues like that. Does it instill confidence in a government when you are faced with two obvious crises right in front of your eyes and then you choose to have this as your first bill? I think not. [interjection] I would gladly give way to the member.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you for the opportunity to intervene. I'm very interested in your perspective on, you know, what is important versus what is not important in terms of the government's time. I know that you are one of the longest serving MLAs in this House at the present time, and you certainly would have some perspective on what happens when a government totally ignores the important issues of the day and focuses on things that are important to them and how that affects the belief of the people of Alberta that their government serves them well. What's the long-term consequence of having a government that doesn't listen to its own people, and how does that cast all of us who serve in this Legislature in a negative light? I'd certainly love to hear your thoughts about sort of the implications of acting in this way, where you ignore serious issues for nonserious ones.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. Yeah, I mean, it might seem contradictory, then, why we would be dwelling on Bill 1 when, of course, we're bringing up these issues that are – you know, it's like a house on fire, right? Why would you be dwelling on Bill 1? Let's just move past it. But you have to deal with what's before you, and hopefully we can recalibrate what is most important here this evening, to move back to what Albertans are really concerned about.

Certainly, I know that everyone is outreaching to their constituents and to Albertans around the province. I've certainly been doing that as well in the last few months, and, you know, it's self-evident what the concerns are for people in regard to health care, in regard to affordability, which extends to education and so forth. When you see something that might interfere with the timely action on those important issues, like debating the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act – right? – at this moment, then you have to deal with that, too, so that you can move past and find what's really most important and what gives best value back to Albertans and Alberta society as well.

You know, I appreciate this amendment. I think that talking about the economic impacts is self-evident, and I've seen lots of people say, with a very quick analysis but a very decisive analysis, that, yeah, it can literally shake markets when you start talking about sovereignty, right?

It doesn't matter if you say: oh, well, it's sovereignty within a happy, stable Canadian environment, and everything is going to be okay. You'll say: well, why are they making excuses so fast, right in the title of the bill? Obviously, something seems fishy. When you have investments, it's not just investment capital but also, as I said, investment in research and technology and human investment – right? – people making choices about whether they would, let's say, move to a research facility and contribute to medical technology or whatever it is they're doing. Then should they move to Alberta, or should they move that to another place that might provide more stability and long-term certainty around being able to work together with provincial funding and federal funding as well? I mean, all of those things work together, right?

We live in a very sophisticated society that we should all be proud of, and we should invest in those strengths every step of the way, right? The fundamental strength, Madam Speaker, is when we work together in the broadest possible way. We work within Confederation. Of course, you know, there are things, issues that the federal government does that we have to push back against, right? I'm no fan of the Liberals, Lord knows, and I certainly have my concerns about federal intrusion, but there are ways by which you can deal with those without bringing up sovereignty, either as a concept or quite specifically, and using it especially as a threat. I mean, that's an antagonistic approach that bears no productive fruit.

Honestly, what we need to do at this juncture in our history is to start to deal with making life more affordable for Albertans, making public health care there when you need it for yourself and your family, to provide the safety and the security that those two things allow: affordability and a safe place with good health care to raise a family, to put down roots, and long-term stability to know that there's a stable government here to deliver for all of those things and other issues as they come forward.

As the Alberta New Democrats that is what we seek to do: to provide stability, to provide a stable government. This Alberta sovereignty act simply does not fit into that model, and thus we would suggest for all Albertans and for this House to vote for this amendment, which would refer this bill to not be read at this time.

Thanks a lot.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on amendment RA1 on Bill 1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will be speaking in favour of this amendment, that essentially is asking that this bill not be read a second time because this bill will “negatively [impact] investment decisions and the Alberta economy and should not proceed . . . to protect the economic well-being of Albertans.”

There are a few things that I will touch on. First and foremost, the majority of Albertans do not support this piece of legislation. It’s not a priority for them because there are many other issues that are front and centre for them. First, the cost of living across this province has gone up because of inflation and the UCP policies. Albertans want them to address that.

The second thing is that Alberta’s health care is in crisis, and in Calgary the government’s solution is to put trailers outside children’s hospitals to provide care. That’s where our health system stands right now. This government is pushing ahead with this piece of legislation that will not help us with the cost of living crisis, that will not fix a thing in our health system, and that will result in economic uncertainty and job loss across this province. This bill is giving the Premier and cabinet unprecedented powers to modify the application of laws, to suspend the application of provincial laws as they see fit, and not just that; to rewrite those laws behind closed doors, that power to amend by regulation a statute passed by the Legislature, commonly referred to as the Henry VIII clause. When we pointed that out, the government’s key message was that we were fearmongering, that we didn’t read the bill. It turned out that when they read the bill, they found that clause there, and now they’re trying to work around that. We haven’t seen anything yet, but that’s what they are saying.

The second thing is that when we talk about the uncertainty it creates, we are telling this government that the business community has concerns about this piece of legislation. They are reaching out to us. They are speaking out publicly as well; for instance, the Calgary Chamber of commerce. The Calgary Chamber of commerce CEO said:

There is no shred of evidence that this act will lead to economic growth. You can’t tell me this is going to support economic growth and support continued economic diversification in this province.

She is a hundred per cent right about it because, as the Leader of the Official Opposition mentioned earlier, this bill is designed to stoke anger, and it does nothing to help Albertans.

[Mr. Orr in the chair]

That’s why a majority of Albertans don’t believe that this bill will do anything to resolve the grievances they have against Ottawa.

The third thing. Not just the Calgary Chamber of commerce, but we also have heard concerns from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, for the energy industry is very critical to creating jobs, creating wealth, creating prosperity. The windfall surplus that we enjoyed this year: that’s because of our energy sectors. And leaders, stakeholders in that sector are warning this government that this job-killing sovereignty act will not help their industry. It’s scaring investment away. It’s scaring investors away. But, again, the government still refuses to listen.

Three treaty chiefs – 6, 7, and 8 – spoke out against this bill, and the best the government could do to address their concern is to point to a clause in this piece of legislation as if those chiefs didn’t read that clause. And if the government thinks that that clause is enough to address their concerns, then I would suggest that their joint presser they did, the concern that it raised, clearly shows how Indigenous communities don’t trust this government. They fundamentally lack any trust, any faith in this government. Instead of engaging with them respectfully, meaningfully, they’re trying to read them the provision of the law like that will fix everything for them. That is very disrespectful.

A lot has been talked about the constitutionality of this piece of legislation, and many have written who are not even constitutional scholars. Many constitutional scholars have written as well. I also have a group of friends who are lawyers; they had a lively debate about it as well. But I think one thing is clear, that section 96 of the Constitution gives the federal government authority to appoint judges, superior court judges. The same section was interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada that this section also gives jurisdiction to those superior courts to decide constitutional issues, and that’s in the Constitution of Canada.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Here we have a piece of legislation that gives this Legislature authority to make opinions about the constitutionality of Parliament’s legislation. I think that section 96 would dictate that neither Parliament nor any Legislature can pronounce and decide on the constitutionality of any enactment. That role has been reserved for the courts, not for the Legislature. That’s in the Constitution, section 96, and I urge members to look up its interpretation by the Supreme Court of Canada.

So people are questioning the government’s intention of bringing forward this bill, and the reason for that is that it doesn’t do anything to help address, for instance, issues that we have with any federal piece of legislation. When we were in government, Bill C-69 – we made submissions. We tried to make a case, and when in 2019 the UCP became the government, they adopted and endorsed our submissions. That’s one way of doing things.

When we were in government, we started working on TMX. At that time 3 in 10 Canadians were in favour of that. The then Premier, now the Leader of the Official Opposition, went all across Canada to make a case about that pipeline, about our energy sector. At the end of that tour, 7 in 10 Canadians were in favour of that project. When B.C. and some other groups tried to throw roadblocks, we were able to push the federal government to buy that pipeline, and now we are a few months away from that project to be completed. That will be the first pipeline to tidewater in 40 years. Conservatives were in this province for 44 years. They had the federal government for 10 years. They were not able to build a single pipeline to tidewater. The lack of energy infrastructure that is creating issues for us is the direct result of successive Conservative government failures. They failed to stand up for the sector, and now they’re coming up with this unconstitutional and completely absurd piece of legislation that will not do anything to help us.

Madam Speaker, there is another pretty interesting thing about this bill. This bill gives 30 days for anyone to challenge government decisions in court. That’s usually six months, but they decreased it to 30 days. When courts review government decisions, the default standard is reasonableness. If there is an error of law, they will review decisions based on correctness standards. But what this government did was they inserted a standard of how they want to be reviewed by the courts, and that’s patent unreasonableness.

Albertans expect their government to make decisions that are rational, that are reasonable, that are well thought out, and we’ve got a government that sets standards for themselves of patent unreasonableness.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to speak to amendment RA1 on Bill 1?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment RA1 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment RA1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:39 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion on amendment RA1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We are back on the main bill, Bill 1, in second reading. Are there members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise tonight to speak to the main bill, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. I'm disappointed that it was not supported, our motion. I thought that it was quite good in the fact that it represented what Albertans are asking for, that this bill die. I'm hopeful that as we move through debate tonight, the government will do the right thing and perhaps support us in another amendment.

We've already been able to articulate many reasons why this bill is not what Alberta needs. We talked about the importance of having a stable and reliable government, and unfortunately this bill has signalled to so many international investors that Alberta is not a stable place to bring investment, and that's quite concerning. We've heard from the three treaty chiefs that this bill cannot proceed, yet this government is not listening to so many that are coming forward, talking about the concerns that this bill brings simply in its title, never mind the overreach and the gross powers that this government has put into this bill, many things that are alarming to Albertans, to investors, to international investors, to business communities. There is an endless list of people who have come out and spoken against this bill proceeding, and the opposition is listening. We attempted to put forward a reasoned amendment that, unfortunately, was just defeated, Madam Speaker.

I would like to move an amendment, and I have it here with the copies and the original. I will wait until you have it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this will be known as amendment RA2.

Hon. member, please proceed to read it into the record.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government has failed to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the potential risks this bill presents to federal funding for their projects, including critical infrastructure and housing initiatives.

Madam Speaker, it may come as a surprise to members of the UCP caucus and perhaps even members of the cabinet, but consultation didn't happen prior to the introduction of this bill. We shouldn't be surprised that, based on reports, even after introduction many of the members of cabinet hadn't read the bill. Clearly, there wasn't adequate consultation with the members of the government caucus, so it should come as no surprise that municipal leaders and nonprofit organizations were not consulted with. However, municipal and nonprofit leaders have been loud and clear that they have grave, grave concerns.

Now, I encourage members of this Assembly to look into who is listed as a provincial entity under 1(e): a municipal authority, "an entity that receives a grant or other public funds from the Government that are contingent on the provision of a public service." For each member across the aisle, how many of you have an entity in your riding that fits this? Did you talk to them before standing in full support of this bill?

Let me provide you another quote, Madam Speaker: "issue directives to a provincial entity and its members, officers and agents . . . in respect of [a] federal initiative." When these entities are reading this, they are obviously concerned. There is no clarity on the intention of these directives, and no one has received assurances that the UCP government will not put federal funding at risk; federal funding for affordable housing, federal funding to support newcomers, federal funding to pay their early childhood educators, to build playgrounds, ice arenas, music venues, all a part of every community. When these organizations highlight concerns with the sovereignty act, the Premier tells them that they need to do more internal consulting. It's pretty rich.

With this amendment the members of the UCP have an opportunity to do better, to represent the constituents in their ridings, to prove to Albertans that they are listening. We had members of this cabinet, prior to becoming cabinet members, speak out against this bill. They talked about how concerned they were. They were all together in coming up with comments that said that this bill absolutely will not improve the economy of Alberta. It's nothing more than virtue signalling, a fiscal fairy tale that doesn't make any sense and won't work. Those comments came from a minister that sits in this Chamber, who now has changed their tune, who is now singing the praises of this piece of legislation. So I'm just very concerned that they're not listening to their constituents, that they're not listening to Albertans.

There are some significant concerns with proceeding with this bill. Again, the opposition is speaking on behalf of Albertans and speaking on behalf of business investors, speaking on behalf of national investors and asking the government to not proceed with this piece of legislation. We're asking that it not be read. There's nothing that is happening within this piece of legislation right now that is signalling that it should be something that goes forward.

[The Speaker in the chair]

There are so many nonprofits across this province that should have voice. These are individuals that are relying on grants. They're relying on support from their government. They're relying on stability. The nonprofits in Alberta, I would argue, have been here prior to even the making of the province. These are people that volunteer their time, that work with people in every capacity across every constituency in this province. They work in the sports community. They work in arts. They work in religion. They work in food safety. They work in food security. They are working with the most vulnerable populations and doing the very best that they can to support Albertans right now, and having the information that they have not been consulted is very, very concerning. Our municipal leaders, elected officials across this province, have not been consulted with. I would argue that they have a lot at stake when it comes to the passing of this legislation. How can we, in good faith, move forward with a piece of legislation that has not been consulted on?

We've seen over the past few days the government argue that we were wrong about the interpretation of this bill. We heard ministers come forward, after they said that this bill would destroy the economy, change their tune, but couldn't articulate why and what was better. We heard a Premier say that we were wrong and then backpedal and say: well, we're going to change some things.

We've heard loud and clear from Albertans, from industry that the very introduction of this bill is dangerous. It does not benefit the economy. So there's absolutely nothing that could be introduced that would fix it. The damage is done. The only way, Mr. Speaker, that this government can show that they've been listening to Albertans is to stop this piece of legislation, to support the amendment that I've just introduced and not let this piece of legislation proceed. It should not be read a second time when we know that consultation didn't even happen with their own cabinet. That's concerning. We have a Premier that's putting forward legislation that she clearly didn't completely understand, members of her caucus didn't understand, and for some reason members of her cabinet were opposed to but now suddenly agree with. I think the fact that our municipal leaders and our nonprofit sector have not been consulted with is deeply, deeply concerning.

This gives the government an opportunity to stop the chaos, to stop. We need to be able to look to international investors and to small businesses and say: "We heard you. We value the insight that you bring to this table, the expertise that you bring to this table. We've heard you loud and clear, and we are not going to proceed with the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act." That is the only solution in this mess that was created by this government. It should not be read a second time. I would plead with members of government to vote in support of this reasoned amendment and show Albertans that they're listening, that they want to see success in Alberta, that they want to see an economy thrive. At this point, Mr. Speaker, it's the only way to do that and to signal to international investors and to anybody considering coming to Alberta that they heard them.

This is something that's deeply concerning, that this is the very first piece of legislation that's coming forward from this government when there's so much chaos already happening in the province, and to add to that chaos simply doesn't make sense. The only way to stop is to not proceed with reading this bill a second time. The very first piece of legislation from this government should address what Albertans need support with: health care, housing, affordability. All of that is what Albertans are talking about, not asking a government to create more chaos and to disrupt potential investors from coming here.

There are so many projects that are in the process right now of coming to Alberta. I would be curious to know how many are paused because of this act. How many investors are looking at what's happening in the province and not even remotely considering coming to Alberta? How many investors are being scared away because of the simple introduction of this piece of legislation? And that damage can't be undone if we proceed with this piece of legislation. No matter how they want to reframe it or introduce amendments, it's not possible. The mere introduction of this legislation is the damage.

When investors look to where they want to put their hard-earned money and their families, that are going to come to support their business here, when they see a government that is in chaos and is putting forward legislation that gives such sweeping powers to them and disregarding the economic impact, why would they invest in Alberta? Why would they come here? There are so many other options for them. And it's simple. All this government has to do is not have this bill read a second time. Support what Albertans are asking for, support what investors are asking for and not proceed with this bill.

It just boggles my mind that we have so many people that want to be part of the economic conversation and so many that are coming forward saying, "Please, we have ideas; we have solutions," and this wasn't one of them. Creating chaos and instability cannot be the right answer. I would please request that everyone in this Chamber support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On amendment RA2, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I smile because I heard from the other side that someone would love to call the question. I could talk about this bill all night. And, in fact, when it moves to committee, I will, and I hope the minister will be in the Chamber because I will talk your ear off, through the Speaker, of course. That's a trait that I have passed on to my daughter, where she's also quite chatty.

Regardless, I'm standing here to support this reasoned amendment, and I may go through, Mr. Speaker, and outline my reasons for it. As I said to my good friend the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, I was itching to get up and intervene on his speech, and I appreciate his comments and I appreciate his concerns. What I'm going to do is try to address some of those and others and the reason that I'm supporting this reasoned amendment and why I don't support this bill. Quite frankly, it comes down to investor confidence. All of the arguments I'm going to lay out in the next 13 and a half minutes have to do with investor confidence.

It's not about the constitutionality of this bill, and I appreciate the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon outlining some of his rebuttals behind that argument. I appreciate that, and I mean that sincerely. I think too often in this Chamber as of late we've gotten away from debating policy and giving arguments as to why we accept or refute the other side's opinion and points, and we've gotten into a name-calling, hyperpartisan discussion, and quite frankly I don't think Albertans have the appetite for it. I think they're tired of it. I think rightly so. I didn't get into this job to call people names. It's about building.

So the reason that I support this amendment to stop this bill is not about the constitutionality of it. I appreciate – this is how lawyers make their bread and butter, and no offence to the lawyers in the room, but they can debate this until the cows come home and interpret law. For me, the challenge with this bill – and regardless, Mr. Speaker, if the government and the Premier bring in amendments to fix some of the more challenging sections of the bill, that’s not the issue I have with it. The issue I have with it is that the province of Alberta putting forward a sovereignty act to be able to have two different sets of rules to play by is going to be a deterrent to investors coming to Alberta.

When they look at Canada and they look at the different provinces, investors want certainty. They want stability. They want predictability. When you have one order of government bringing forward a bill that challenges the authority of another order of government in name, that’s a red flag. I don’t expect our international investors to go through the bill and read it and understand the nuances and translate it. They’re going to see – and, rightly or wrongly, the media has covered this bill enough that international investors understand that Alberta has brought forward a bill to challenge a federal government. The challenge with that is that that will be a deterrent.

Now, we all know that provinces have the ability to challenge the federal government through the courts. We’ve always had. We need that. We absolutely need that. We need to be able to hold the federal government to account. We need to be able to ensure that they don’t overreach. There have been times and many times in Alberta’s history where we’ve challenged the federal government and we’ve been successful, as we should. We need to protect Alberta’s interests. We need to stand up for the province. All of us in this Chamber agree with that. The question here is: what is the best mechanism to do that?

My concern, even when, you know, the Premier has said that there will be amendments coming forward – and I’ll talk about the cabinet process. Having been a cabinet minister, I have serious concerns with where we’re at governmentwise. But the point is that even if the government neuters this bill and takes out any kind of teeth, which is what’s one of the concerns of international investors, you still have a sovereignty act that is questioning and putting questions into the minds of investors of the two different orders of government having two different sets of rules. Every international investor I’ve talked to wants simplicity, they want predictability, and they want stability. When you say to an international investor, “We’re going to have two different sets of rules; one is going to be for this province with the federal government, but much of the rest of the country” – and I’m going to carve out a caveat right now on Quebec; I will talk about Quebec. That will deter investors from selecting Alberta. It will. Investors want to know that there’s stability.

Let me give you an example, okay? There are lots of energy companies that, when Donald Trump came into power, talked about how he was going to reverse all of the climate policies and allow coal to continue under his government in perpetuity. Do you think the companies opened a whole bunch of coal mines and continued down that path? No. You know why? Because they recognize that that kind of investment is a 50-year investment, and Donald Trump will be long gone. It’s not even about Donald Trump; I’m not attacking him. Any politician will be long gone over a 50-year span. These companies are looking at: what is the long-term investment? [interjections] My point is – when I’m on a roll, just let me roll. I appreciate the chirps that are going on over there.

Listen, folks, 15 minutes is not enough time. My daughter would tell you that 15 minutes is not enough time. The point is that the predictability and stability investors are looking for go far beyond an individual political party or a four-year mandate. In fact, that’s probably the biggest concern that they have. So, for me, even if this bill is, you know, amended or potentially improved, the risk still exists that you have a piece of legislation called the Alberta sovereignty act. I can tell you and I know that very few people that I’m looking at in this Chamber have spoken to international investors in the whites of their eyes in their home country. I mean, largely in part this is not an attack on the government. COVID has inhibited them from travelling internationally. Investors will tell you that they’re not about to read the legislation. They’re about to see that the current provincial government is trying to establish a separate set of rules from the Canadian government, and that’s problematic.

Now, I’m not saying the spirit behind this bill, to give Alberta additional tools to stand up to a federal government – and, quite frankly, I would argue that it doesn’t matter if it’s Liberal or Conservative. I can tell you that there are Conservative governments in Canada who have acted against the province of Alberta. I’ll give the minister, who loves to chirp when I speak, a great example. Which government initiated the regulations to phase out coal in this country? It was Jason Kenney and Stephen Harper. If you shake your head, go and look at the federal Hansard. They initiated that six out of 18 coal-fired plants were to be phased out . . .

Speaker’s Ruling Relevance

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt my good friend from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. However, we are on amendment RA2, which very specifically speaks to: “the Assembly is of the view that the government has failed to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the potential risks of this bill.” It goes on. It says very little about any of the topics which he has discussed up to this point. I provided a pretty wide latitude. However, the hon. the learned member, who’s been in this House for, oh, more than a decade, will know that at no point in time during his tenure has a caucus moved two reasoned amendments to a piece of legislation. While it is within the right of the members to do so, I think it’s reasonable to expect that the relevancy of their remarks will be specific to the amendment.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My point in this is that governments have a significant influence over the investments that come to a province.

Debate Continued

Mr. Bilous: I see that I have a colleague of mine who is interested in intervention. I’ll give way.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Member. I appreciate the opportunity to ask you a little bit. I noticed that you were talking earlier about the fact that Quebec has over the years made a number of moves in this particular direction, but one of the things that we’ve learned in the evaluation of Quebec is that they really haven’t recovered properly from their sovereignty attempts in this country. As a result, they are quite a bit further behind economically than they would have been otherwise. I’m wondering if you might have some further comments about the ultimate consequence of taking this kind of a sovereignty approach.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, colleague. Mr. Speaker, do you, sir, know roughly how much time I have left in this . . .

The Speaker: Four minutes and 37 seconds, approximately.

Mr. Bilous: Four minutes, 37. Okay. I can't wait until this bill goes into Committee of the Whole, in which case, bring your pyjamas.

I want to thank the member for referencing Quebec because here is a very important example of what happened. The members talk about Quebec and how Quebec has stood up for their sovereignty. Are the members aware – the Minister of Finance is looking at me, and I appreciate that he will know this – that Montreal and Quebec used to be the headquarters of all of the major financial institutions of Canada? All of them were in Quebec until they brought in a bill like this, and all of the headquarters moved out of Quebec and into Toronto. How many have moved back? None. How many are going to move back? None. They're going to stay in Toronto. [interjection] I'll give way in a moment, Member. The concern is that a bill like this could have long-term, long-reaching effects, where we know that Alberta and Calgary is the home, is the number two city, for headquarters for our financial sector. A bill like this could chase them out of Alberta.

I'll give way.

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Member, for giving way. Your premise of the speech is that if there is one set of rules for the province and another for the federal government, it will cause confusion, and investment will flee. I don't accept that premise. I think that's factually wrong. But if we give that to you and we say that this bill is not amendable and we say that it's not about the constitutionality – and this isn't a partisan question; it's purely pragmatic about investment. I think that as evidence I will posit the historical record of the NDP government in 2015. I remember in Peace River you guys brought forward your first budget, and the day after Shell pulled out of the Carmon Creek investment, a $12 billion megaproject gone. No more investment came in afterwards.

So whatever hypothetical you think is true here, how do you justify, if it's purely practical and it has nothing to do with partisan politics, not coming to this side of the Chamber and disavowing your role in the last government for the factual flee of capital out of this province, so much more devastating than any hypothetical that you could dream up that may or may not happen from this? It's practical, hon. member. Please answer.

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, well, first of all, the member is factually incorrect. Second of all, as I've said, I've spoken with a number of executives from some of the largest oil and gas companies in Alberta and Canada who have said that the Alberta NDP did more for the oil and gas sector than the current UCP government has in the last three and a half years. [interjections] No, laugh it up, because you've drunk the Kool-Aid.

Look at the royalty review. Can any member in this Chamber tell me what the royalty structure was before 2015? I bet you you'd have to struggle to get it, and I'm even looking at former ministers. We modernized through the royalty review, where we incentivized oil and gas companies to continue through the life of the well when productivity declined. Previous to our royalty modernization most companies sealed off wells because they paid the same royalty level when the well was producing 100 per cent as when it was producing as it tailed off, so they capped it. We modernized it. We listened to the oil and gas sector. Let me tell you: there were lots of New Democrat members who were quite frustrated with us because they thought we were giving too many breaks to the energy sector. What we did was that we charted a course that was fair to our oil and gas producers but also ensured that they would continue through the life of the well, which was also a boon for Alberta taxpayers.

I can tell you that this bill in its current state, regardless of what's written in it, has chilled investment. I appreciate that the Member for Peace River respectfully disagrees, but this is where I will say to the Member for Peace River: are you talking to the international investment community the way that we are? I'm not trying to pull a card. I'm saying that as the former minister of economic development and trade I'm speaking to international investors that I spoke to when we were a government, and they are scared. The sovereignty act has just placed question marks into the viability of investing in Alberta, and even that questioning of, "Is Alberta a predictable place to invest in?" has chilled investment.

Therefore, our government – I won't give way this time, Member. This is why we brought forward a second reasoned amendment, because no matter what amendments the government brings, the chill on investment will not end until this bill is repealed.

I'm all for having a conversation on: what other tools can we come up with to ensure that Alberta and Albertans are a priority? I don't disagree that there have been times where Ottawa has overreached and we need to stand up for Alberta, but the bill, this tool or mechanism, is not the way to stand up for Alberta. My fear is that, like Quebec, it's going to have long-term consequences on Alberta. All of the financial headquarters of Canada moved out of Montreal. Quebec has been reeling from the impacts of their bill for 40 years.

I love this province. I'm an Albertan. I'm born and raised here. I do not want our province to suffer for decades because of a bill that maybe was good intentioned but is not going to deliver the outcomes that the current government thinks it's going to. The unintended consequences far outweigh the benefits that this government may think this bill is going to deliver for Alberta.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I'm supporting this reasoned amendment and cannot support this bill moving forward.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on amendment RA2 I see the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon is on his feet, which I will call momentarily, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but I do want to reiterate, members of the Assembly, that it is not the convention of the Assembly to continue to propose reasoned amendments and then speak to the main bill. So it will be a requirement of members that if they want to propose multiple reasoned amendments, they speak specifically to the amendment, not broadly speaking, as we just saw from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, about the main motion. There will be plenty of time for that in the future.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon should he choose to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't take long, but I would like to speak to the reasoned amendment here. As you rightly have pointed out, the reasoned amendment here is dealing with the potential risks this bill presents to federal funding for projects, including critical infrastructure and housing initiatives. I believe that in this reasoned amendment the argument that they're making is that this bill is going to impact our relationship with the federal government and that it's going to affect things like critical infrastructure and housing, and therefore we should vote in favour of this reasoned amendment to stop the bill from going forward.

Yeah. I believe that the previous member – I appreciated the comments that he had to say. It's true that when governments make decisions, there are potential consequences to those decisions and to the legislation that they pass. I can remember when I got elected the first time in 2015. This young social studies teacher, or younger social studies teacher, went from being in his classroom on the day the election was called in 2015 to a month later being in his constituency office. Within the first two, three months I think I had five oil and gas company CEOs coming into my office, and I'm going: why are these important people coming to see a little MLA like me? Every one of them had the same message, that the decisions that governments make do have consequences.

Every business in the oil and gas industry, at least the five that came through my constituency office, said: you know, every time we make a decision about how we spend money, we do a risk analysis. Then they went on to proceed to talk about royalty reviews and carbon taxes and increasing corporate tax rates and all of the things that the Alberta government under the New Democratic Party was starting to do. Their message was very simple to me: we can spend our money anywhere in the world, and we're choosing not to spend it in Alberta. So I agree with the member that was speaking just before me here when he says that predictability and stability are important things to have and that the decisions of government can make a huge impact.

Obviously, in this amendment they're worried about federal funding for projects, including critical infrastructure and housing. Yet I would draw to their attention that Bill 1, we've said very clearly, is about creating a shield, that this is about protecting Alberta, that we have had a history over many, many, many years of the federal government passing legislation that has overreach to the point where it's affecting Alberta in very significant ways, passing legislation that even the Alberta courts have ruled is unconstitutional. This is not a sword. Bill 1 is not a sword; it's a shield. It's about protecting Albertans from the overreach of a federal government that has refused to recognize that it has certain constitutional lanes that it has to stay in, and then when it doesn't – you're right – it does affect the predictability and the stability.

So we've had to come in, and, yeah, we had to be a little creative, but we brought before the people in this Legislature Bill 1, that will allow us to create a shield that will protect the citizens and the economy of Alberta from the unpredictability that comes when a federal government begins to overstep its constitutional boundaries as it passes legislation. This bill is allowing us to be able to say: if you are going to do that, if you are going to pass legislation that's going to threaten the economy of Alberta, that's going to create instability, that's not going to allow for businesses to have predictability, then we as the Legislature of Alberta will use this act to protect us and to protect the citizens and the businesses and the constitutional rights of Albertans.

Member Loyola: How?

Mr. Smith: Through debate and motions in this Legislature. We will bring forward motions that will deal with the individual indiscretions of the federal government as they pass legislation that is outside of their constitutional boundaries.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the member, but what is fair for the goose, in fact, is fair for the gander, and I'm having a hard time understanding how your comments specifically relate to RA2, which very specifically discusses about consultation with nonprofit organizations, municipalities, the potential risks that the bill presents. If the member wants to speak to the main bill, he's welcome to do so. If he wants to speak to the amendment, particularly now that we're moving into additional reasoned amendments, he ought to be speaking specifically to the amendment.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize if I've strayed into the indiscretions of other members earlier today.

My point was this, that in creating a shield in Bill 1, it is that; it's a shield. It's there to try not to create a situation where federal funding for projects, like critical infrastructure and housing initiatives, will be threatened but will keep the federal government in their constitutional lane, and when we each stick to our constitutional lanes, then the discussions about how we are going to fund critical infrastructure or highways, et cetera, then the funding discussions between the federal government and the provincial government on housing initiatives and where that money is going to come from are productive discussions. But if we can't have a shield that protects Albertans from the indiscretions of a federal government passing legislation that overreaches their constitutional boundaries, it's then that we begin to get relationships between the federal and the provincial governments that threaten productive conversations on the kinds of critical infrastructure and housing initiatives that are important for all of us to be able to benefit from across this country.

With those comments, I thank this House, and I thank the Speaker for your attention. We will continue the debate through other people. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will try to stick to the amendment that is currently in front of us. You know, I believe that it's important that this be supported in the House, and part of that is the consultation with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the potential risks that this bill presents to federal funding for their projects, including the infrastructure and the housing initiatives. If we look at the section that it's referencing, it actually speaks to section 1(e), which includes municipal authorities and "an entity that receives a grant or . . . public funds from the Government that are contingent on the provision of a public service," which is what this referral is speaking to.

Now, the reason that I feel like this is very important is that I've been, again, like I said earlier today, since this bill has been introduced, speaking to my stakeholders, and my stakeholders have been clear that they don't understand how this is going to have an impact on their sector in relation to the partnership with the federal government. They haven't been consulted. They haven't had those conversations.

You know, it's a pretty significant piece when we look specifically just at the ag societies alone, which would fit under this section of the act and have not been consulted. The very funding that they receive would include the Canada-Alberta job grant. They receive the energy savings grant. They get funded by FarmSafe. They get funded for local festival grants. They get community anniversary grants. They get Canada greener homes grants. Many of those grants are partnerships between the province and the federal government.

Now, we've heard from the Premier in recent weeks about mandate letters that have been sent to ministers, and she spoke, even in this House during question period, about encouraging her ministers to come up with motions that would speak specifically under this act that could be addressed. Well, when that happens and we look at the grant funding that is being offered to many of these nonprofits that are under the minister's purview, it raises questions around what is going to happen with that partnership with the federal government and the provincial government when it comes to securing those grants.

Now, again, because the industry hasn't been consulted – we are talking about critical infrastructure. We can look at the irrigation partnership that is being funded under the CAP program; 60 per cent of that is federal, 40 per cent of that is provincial, with a little bit of the municipalities' partnerships. That is a direct partnership and relationship between the federal government and the provincial government.

Those projects, those planning grants, all of the things that are associated with the irrigation network specifically, as one example, could be something that should be discussed with the irrigation networks prior to looking at this act, explaining to the irrigation networks what this means for the partnership that the minister is going to have to have with the federal government. Is this going to be a motion that he may have to bring forward into the House to talk about area management agreements, land management, the partnership that the federal government has around endangered species or looking at invasive species?

Those issues directly relate to the partnership with irrigation networks, which directly relates to the grant money, that directly relates to this specific amendment saying that those consultations never occurred. I'd be curious from the minister if he sat down and had a conversation with the irrigation networks about the potential impacts of the sovereignty act and what that means for their investment. That's just one example.

We could look at, if we want to go back to the annual report for agriculture and forestry, the fact that $42 million was given through the CAP funds invested in 2021-22, and that was $42 million for sector capacity, industry growth, risk management for multiple key objectives, including the outcomes of the actual areas of farm efficiency, environmental management, growth and value-add, public trust but doesn't include the administration fee, and then the modernization and streamlining of programs such as service delivery standards, including transparency of the industry, which goes back to my earlier remarks that I made in regard to how this act is going to impede, potentially, the reputation of the agriculture industry at our international markets. How are we going to ensure, from the conversations that are happening when we're working with CFIA around our food inspection, that our export markets, our international partners believe that Alberta is still standing up and doing the appropriate things?

Many of those things are partnerships. Many of those individuals are producer groups that are going to be significantly impacted if the government chooses to start using motions in this House and start creating disagreements with the federal government. This is a significant amount of investment money.

I do want to acknowledge, though, that because of all the money that was transferred, maybe the minister is not as concerned because he actually didn't use the full federal transfer budget last year, left some money on the table. It's in your report, Minister, that there was a shortfall. It didn't actually all get spent.

Now, under CAP we saw $3 billion of federal, provincial, and territorial funding investment into agriculture and the agrifood sector. That was effective April 1, '18, to 2023. Now, more than $400 million of that will be invested over the five-year period for agrifood- and agriproduct-based industries, but again 60 per cent of that funding is coming from the feds; 40 per cent of that is coming from provincial governments.

Again, working closely with our producer groups, as indicated within the annual report, the minister will continue to work closely with the industry to support growth and diversification using that federal dollar transfer. So was the consultation happening? What is going to guarantee these organizations, that are currently going to be receiving that amount of money through their grant transfers, that they're going to continue to have that? Has that guarantee, has that conversation happened with those producer groups?

Now, they receive grants, so they qualify under this amendment. That was part of the consultation piece. When I talk to stakeholders, they haven't had those conversations. They're not aware of all these different impacts that are going to happen.

Of course, we could talk about AgriStability and AgriRecovery and the partnerships that happen with that and the fact that, you know, 322 producers had to sign up due to the severe drought and that $1.5 million was paid out in the 2021 program year. We could also talk about the Canadian federal-provincial-territorial agreement that happened on the reference margins, also significant federal transfers that impact direct producers. We could also talk about the $9.28 million that was required, that was used to help with the livestock producers, crop and forage producers, beekeepers, and mixed farmers, all of which should have been consulted with under this legislation before it was introduced.

Now, of course, $400 million was also allotted from the federal government for AgriRecovery specific to livestock feed, the initiative which, I believe, the minister just put some more money into. Thank you for that. But, again, that is a grant program that is administered by the livestock feed association through a grant, which is dependent on the relationship between the federal government and the province.

Now, of course, when we had a severe drought, $352 million was provided under phase 1 and then phase 2 of the CALFA, which covers about 2 million animals in the province, also the beekeepers, with $1.9 million to help with drought-caused low forage. Those are significant things that impact many of the minister's stakeholders.

Now, on top of that, there's also federal funding to support farm smart, which includes vegetation management, prescribed fire, FireSmart planning, and general wildfire prevention projects with Indigenous communities. We've already heard from many of our colleagues here that the Indigenous communities are not feeling like they've been consulted on this piece of legislation. In fact, that is a significant investment, $1.3 million to work with Indigenous communities on fire – significant – yet clearly from my colleague it was mentioned that the Indigenous community doesn't feel like they were consulted. Those conversations didn't happen. They don't know what's going to happen with their FireSmart grant and how that's going to work with the Indigenous partnerships that were created through the federal government.

And, of course, my favourite, the mountain pine beetle: also significant funding that comes from the federal government. One million dollars was allotted to help control – oh, sorry. It was $60 million. It was a cost share with the federal-provincial agreement to enhance the mountain pine beetle management program, with additional funds also being obtained by $1 million from our lovely colleagues in Saskatchewan because they don't want the mountain pine beetle.

So what does that look like? How do those partnerships, not just with the federal government but with our interprovincial partnerships that we have with B.C. and Saskatchewan – money transfers back and forth between governments all the time to ensure that we are protecting our environmental sustainability.

Mr. Williams: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is noted. The hon. Member for Peace River.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Williams: I rise under Standing Order 23(b), speaking to a question other than under discussion. I've yet to hear anything about the second reasoned amendment, Mr. Speaker, and I'd be very happy to hear more about it.

The Speaker: I'm not convinced you're listening, then, because largely all of her remarks have been on the reasoned amendment.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Sort of like reading the bill. Yeah, just like reading the bill. Clearly not paying attention.

Debate Continued

Ms Sweet: Again, as I'm speaking to this, there are significant transfers that are happening between the different provinces.

Now, the other thing that I think is significant that we need to look at is that the revenue from the government of Canada was $270 million more than budgeted in the last budget by the minister, and part of that was because of the fact that we had such a significant drought in the last season, so there was increase of another $253 million for agriculture income supports for the Canada-Alberta livestock feed assistance program in response to the province-wide drought, increased funding of $22 million for AgriInsurance due to increased commodity prices and insured acres.

Now, additional funding of $2 million was also provided due to increased wildfire activity on federal land, so the feds helped us out. That's good. It's their land. These increases were partly off-set by lower funding on the pine beetle. So there were actually significant changes from the 2021 actuals. The revenue from the government of Canada was actually increased to the province by $236 million, mostly due, again, to the Canada-Alberta livestock feed assistance program, significant transfers from the federal government. [interjection] Go ahead, Member.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning. You know, on what you've been describing in regard to the federal grant funding and whether it has the potential risk for this funding to be gone using this new sovereignty act, I would like to just ask two things or put two things out. Do we have perhaps an aggregate of how much money is at stake in the agriculture industry from federal – I mean, you don't have to do the math now. But I see a pattern, for example in postsecondary, where it's almost as though this provincial government has been taking this sovereignty act out for a test drive for years now, leaving money at the table because of not matching grants that come from the federal government to fund postsecondary, child care, a whole range of things, where literally those programs and that money that was meant for Alberta families was left on the table because this government was failing to put forward the matching funds, right? So it's almost like trying a sovereignty act soft version of it, and here we are today.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, hon. member. Actually, I do have the numbers. The total budget for the federal transfers was $46.8 million. It was not fully spent. To give the minister some leeway, it was due to supply chain disruptions that were experienced by many of the grant recipients, partly because of COVID. So I'll give you that. So $42 million was spent, and there was $46.8 million in total that was transferred. COVID got in the way, supply chains got in the way, but all of that is grant funding. That is a significant amount of money.

Now, on top of that, we also have the Alberta employment training funding program. The Canada-Alberta job grant is a federal-provincial partnership under which Alberta employers and the government share the cost of training new and existing employees, and the program contributes up to about $15,000 per trainee, per employee; again, a partnership that exists for agriculture and other jurisdictions in regard to supporting new employment growth in the province.

On top of that is the Alberta jobs now program, which is about $370 million to private, nonprofit businesses – just so the member is aware, I'm talking about nonprofits – to support much-needed jobs for underemployed and unemployed Albertans across the province. Employers will be able to apply for the grant, that covers 25 per cent of an employee's salary or training costs up to a maximum of $25,000 per employee. The second applicant intake for this program is actually at the end of the month.

So those are a couple of other grant programs that have significant impact for our nonprofits. They help get people into the workforce, yet nobody was consulted on that.

Now, we look at the federal transfers that also exist. The accelerated investment incentive: another one. The accelerated investment incentive was introduced in 2018 as a means to encourage investment in capital assets. This incentive was to enhance first-year allowance for certain property that is subject to capital cost allowance rules – I'm sure the Minister of Finance thinks that's good – manufacturing and processing machinery and equipment acquired. It was available from 2018 until 2024 and up to use till 2028. This would encourage any property that would allow businesses to immediately write off the full cost of machinery and equipment used for manufacturing or processing of goods, and these measures are scheduled to be phased out between 2024 and 2027. Again, for those who are looking at agrifood, any of those investment companies, any of our producer groups that are trying to look at trying to set up greenhouses, any of our horticultural industries, any of those things – and I have many, many, many more, but I see I am running out of time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others on amendment RA2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this referral amendment. I quite enjoyed the speech just given by the Member for Edmonton-Manning, and I intend to take some of my time to kind of follow up on what she said. She clearly has given numerous examples of federal initiatives that are in jeopardy when we look at what could potentially happen with this act and clearly has outlined in depth many reasons why this bill should not proceed forward, as it threatens institutions here in the province of Alberta.

I want to speak about the underlying fundamental argument that is inherent in the extremely well-articulated set of examples that were given by the member, because it is a concern that is expressed across a number of different groups of people, whether they be stakeholders or whether they be First Nations or whether they be nonprofit institutions here in the province of Alberta, that the intent of this act is to, as the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon says, be a shield for the province of Alberta.

However, in the actual construction of the bill it is clear that it's only a shield for a very select few people. For everyone else it's a sword. For everyone else the outcome is likely to be that they will find themselves at the losing end of this situation, and the reason why is because the bill talks about the fact that they will only use it to protect the public interest here in Alberta. But what it doesn't do is that it doesn't clearly outline what public interest means. I'm not asking for a definition of public interest. What I'm saying is that the nonprofits and the First Nations and the farmers and other groups in the province of Alberta have learned quite clearly that often, when the public interest is raised as a reason for some kind of action on the part of the government, it turns out it is not, in fact, the wider public interest but the interest of a very narrow or select few within the public.

This government has been really consistent on that, consistently moving money from the poor to the rich, moving power from the collective to individuals within government. And that has made people nervous. You know, I had a chance earlier in the House today to talk about Grand Chief Arthur Noskey saying that they learned from the first bill brought in by this government that the bills were not written for First Nations. They know that because the bill was intended to stop protesters who were trying to protect treaty rights. He said: we can see that it wasn't written for non-Indigenous people because they certainly didn't use it at the Coutts border crossing. He said: given that experience with this government we understand that we do not fit into public interest when the bill suggests that. This is the underlying issue that all of these organizations have, and they've seen it in many other places.

We've heard the Member for Edmonton-Manning articulate many examples when the current government has failed to work co-operatively with the federal government to bring dollars into this province. I can tell you that I've certainly heard that, too, when I go around the province, that this government has made the decision not to accept federal dollars because they want to stand off from them, and the consequence is that people here in this province lose out.

I know, for example, that this provincial government is one of the very last governments in this country to accept any kind of a deal at all on child care, which meant for months, even up to a year, people who could have had their child care subsidized did not get it subsidized. They lost money. They personally lost money. And then when it was brought into the province, the intent of the federal legislation was undermined because this government had a different idea of how child care should be funded.

One of the consequences, when I went and visited, for example, the Metis Calgary Family Services, was that their lowest income participants in their child care were actually charged more money under the Alberta program than they were previously to the Alberta program coming in, so the very poorest of the poor were the ones who ended up paying more. They did not feel like they were part of the public interest at that time, and that's the reason for this amendment. The amendment is that this government has not consulted appropriately with a wide range of Albertans to ask how they might understand public interest to include that wide range of Albertans.

As such, the fear across nonprofits and across First Nations, across institutions in the province of Alberta is that this government isn't really interested in the broader public interest but only the interests of a few within the public. If the government can't understand that, they simply need to go to the communities out there that have been telling us over and over again that that is the problem. We know, for example, that in the First Nations community they have articulated deep concerns about how this might affect their treaty rights. We know that section 2(c) was an attempt to say that it won't affect treaty rights, but we also know that that doesn't hold any sway when the rest of the bill actually does affect treaty rights. They're saying that that's what concerns them. That's what is going to be the reason why they are standing up repeatedly to ask that this bill be stopped.

Chief Tony Alexis from the Alexis First Nations, for example, has said: please at least stop the bill until the time of an election. What he's asking for is a broad consultation about how this will affect the interests of the public. Whose public interest? That's the question that they're all asking. Whose interests are involved in the public interest? It certainly isn't the First Nations, and it certainly isn't the nonprofit societies, which is why we are asking this bill to be returned and to be stopped at this particular time. [interjection] I see that there is an intervention, and I will cede my time for a moment.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I like the way that you are contextualizing this, through the Speaker, of course, because if it's not for so many people that you just described – and immediately your description made me think about: to what degree is it for postsecondary, for students, for support staff, for research professors, for endowment contributors to postsecondary institutions? Again, you see this insidious reach by this UCP government over the last three years of dictating, you know, where people make their money and how they would tolerate quite serious cuts without ever talking to the actual people who were affected by those decisions.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much, Member. I appreciate the intervention. I think it's important that we recognize that there is a wide range of institutions in this province, and postsecondary clearly is one set of interests in this province, but those interests are unique to postsecondary. They aren't necessarily the same interests that would be of concern to, for example, nonprofit societies or may not be the same as the interests of, for example, people who are wishing to make investments in the province from a profit motive.

The point is that there are multiple interests. Each group has different concerns that they need to protect, and each group will have to live with the consequences of this government deciding on their behalf what public interests are. And what we've seen with this government is that they don't have the same values around postsecondary, for example, that the postsecondary institutions have. The postsecondary institutions have seen massive, serious cuts in this province. The University of Alberta has lost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $700 million under this government's control, and they clearly do not feel like that has been doing anything for the benefit of their faculty, of their students, or of their staff. But they have no control because this government has decided what's in the public interest and has not allowed the people who actually know the most about education at the postsecondary level to make the decision about what public interest is. They have taken that power and brought it into the government, where it should rest in the community, and that's exactly the fundamental issue inherent in this bill.

This government is continually taking powers and moving it into the government. We've seen them do this repeatedly over the last almost four years now, and each time we stand up and say that this is antidemocratic. You are giving the power to ministers to make decisions about things that should be in the public sphere, especially in a Westminster democracy. It should be brought into this House. It should be debated in this House. It should reflect the concerns and the desires of people in the community. But this government has continually made the decision: "No. We're not going to do that. We're not going to involve the people in the decision-making. We're going to bring it in-house. We're going to make the decision in our cabinet room." In this bill they're actually attempting to do that without any reference to the Westminster democracy, of which we're all a part. They've been caught on that, and apparently there is a possibility that we might see some changes to the bill over the next little while, but of course we haven't seen any yet, so we can't really think that that is actually going to happen until it does. No evidence of it so far.

I think that all we can go on, then, is: what is the government's previous behaviour? The best predictor of future behaviour is past behaviour. In this case we've seen a government that has undermined community values. [interjection] I see that there's an intervention.

12:10

Member Loyola: Thank you very much, Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. Through you, Mr. Speaker, to him, I'd just like to highlight the fact that, again, this is not new with this government. Over the last three years we've seen a number of bills being proposed in this House where it's the centralization of decision-making. Power is put directly in the hands of ministers, and I would like your opinion. Like, I mean, the only reason why I would think that this government would do that is because they're so focused on their own ideology and implementing their ideological approach in changing Alberta to fit what they believe is the only way. I believe that that just reeks of arrogance, and it needs to be challenged.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you for that intervention.

I think, you know, we've certainly laid out the argument for this referral amendment, that inherent in the referral amendment is a plea to go back to the community, to speak to the community about how it is that they will be affected and to not make decisions that ultimately are negative for the community. We've seen time and time again, as the Member for Edmonton-Manning articulated extremely well, as the people at the Metis Calgary Family Services told me about the child care, as the city of Edmonton experienced with regard to the province not co-operating with getting federal dollars for housing at a time when we are experiencing some of the worst housing crisis in this province. We can go on and on and on and talk about the examples of when this government has really failed to understand that although they have an agenda, it does not reflect the agenda of the vast majority of the population in the province of Alberta.

The polls that we see coming out right now are telling us quite clearly that that is true. You know, it's funny. We're in this House, and we're quite used in the House to having debates where we have this sort of both sides kind of argument going on, where both sides introduce their experts and their commentators and say: well, our guy says this. But we're in a very funny situation here on this particular bill because for the first time in my life I'm standing up and instead of saying, "My guy says this," I'm starting to say; your guys say this; your conservative commentators are saying things. I mean, it's interesting that, for example, Kory Teneycke, who was the Conservative strategist for the 2022 Ontario PC election, was a campaign manager, said that, quote, it's fundamentally unconservative. He said that, quote, the solution to unconstitutionality is not more unconstitutionality.

Here we are saying this over and over again. We list the people who are conservatives in every other aspect saying that this is not reflective of who we are. However you define public interest, it is not reflecting the conservative values or understanding of what public interest is. So if the left is saying that this is not public interest, if the First Nations are saying that this is not public interest, and the conservative community is saying that this is not public interest, whose interest is it? It's a very narrow, ideological group of people that are having their interests being put forward, and that's the fundamental problem here in this particular case.

I mean, we did see minister after minister come out against this particular bill. We saw the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance come out against it. We saw the Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism come out against it. We saw the Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development come out against it. We saw the Minister of Environment and Protected Areas come out against it. We saw the Minister of Municipal Affairs come out against it.

We know all of them voted against the person who was going to bring this in. They tried to stop it, and not one of them has stood up and told us what specifically is different about this bill than the one that they voted against.

We know that the CEO of the Calgary Chamber of commerce has come out against it. We know that the CEO of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has come out against it. We know that the CEO of CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, has come out against it. Now we have the very successful campaign manager of the 2022 PC campaign in Ontario coming out against it. I mean, we literally have a list of all the people who should have been part of their community, who should have been saying that this is the right way to go. They are asking you to do exactly what we are asking you to do right now, and that is to stop this bill, to refer this bill out of the Legislature, to seek to end this bill at this particular time and bring it back at another time, after we've had some proper consultation.

I know, for example, the Minister of Indigenous Relations has suggested that some consultation is going on, yet I have literally been on the phone for days now talking to chiefs across this province who are telling me that they haven't received a phone call. They haven't heard from the minister, so if there's consultation going on, it has not had time to go very deeply into the community and, as such, does not reflect the community's interests.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On amendment RA2, are there others? The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment. There's been a lot of discussion over the last few hours. It's hard to remember where we started, but in regard to this amendment and needing to consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities, a lot was said previously about agriculture specifically.

[Mr. Walker in the chair]

I can say that, you know, 70 different industry groups – one of the groups that was mentioned previously, the irrigation districts: I actually spoke to them today. They were so concerned that they brought it up zero times while we went through a laundry list of things that they were concerned about, that we're working towards.

Much was brought up about the relationship with the federal government and the provincial government in regard to the CAP program, which, going forward, will be the SCAP program. I can assure the opposition; I know they're very concerned. I think they believe, they misunderstand, or they think that money was left on the table. That's not the case. It's a five-year program. It was signed on to by an NDP agriculture minister, and it rolls year to year. We'll be very sure to use all the money right up until the end of March, before the next program starts. I hope that provides a little clarity to how that actually works.

The 60-40 relationship: it's an important one between the federal government and the provincial government. It touches on a lot of things. It touches on, you know, things that they want to see moving forward, maybe protections on the environment, maybe efficiencies in irrigation, but also the business risk management suite, which we're all very concerned about and want to ensure is very robust for our producers and can kind of answer changing landscapes economically for farmers in every different part of the sector.

Something I did in a big way before I went to Saskatoon, and eventually after a lot of, I would say, hard-fought negotiation on behalf of the province, was consult with all of those industry groups about the federal-provincial relationship and that agreement specifically. We held our own round-tables during the Calgary Stampede where they begged me: don't even sign it if it's a bad deal; please tell us that you're able to go there and dig your feet in the ground and don't let them back you into a bad deal.

It was usually around the idea that the federal government was going to push their emission and environmental goals to the point of making the things that are most important to our producers, the production insurance, the AgriStability program, that will keep them in business when we get those bad years. They wanted to ensure that the federal government kept out of those programs so they were actually still actuarially sound and made sense. That was the commentary and feedback that I heard in what I would call extensive consultations.

We did go to Saskatoon. We did sign another five-year deal. I think there was a lot of give-and-take. In fact, on the side of the road, over a Zoom call, I spoke to all of those industry groups again to just explain to them the rationale behind why we said yes to the things we did, what we gained on, what were our hills to die on, so to speak, and how we came to an agreement. In the end, the program was substantially increased; it hadn't seen an increase in over a decade, certainly not during the time when the NDP signed an agreement. We were able to see the money increased, we were able to use it well, and we came to some real compromise. I think that should be the goal of our relationship with the federal government.

If you're going to sit there and say that all of those things are in jeopardy because the province of Alberta uses this act like a shield and then these things will be in jeopardy, well, then, I'd say that we probably have a bigger problem to talk about, because we're talking about a federal government supporting the agriculture sector across the country. If we have to worry about a five-year agreement that we signed on to in good faith to deal with all of these things, from production insurance to the environment and these pursuits that both of us share, if those are truly in jeopardy: what are we talking about here? I think we have a far bigger problem.

I would say that I didn't hear from any of those groups that they were concerned about this jeopardizing that. If that is what those members are saying, I think maybe they should phone Jagmeet on the mother ship and say: what the heck is going on, boss? Unless that's your intention. If that's what you're saying, then come out and say it. But all I would say is that this amendment is silly. This bill has been talked about. We're here to stick up for Alberta, we're here to treat it like a shield, and if any of those things are in jeopardy, we have a far bigger problem.

The Speaker: Are there others on amendment RA2? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday on the amendment.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise early in the morning in the Legislative Assembly here to speak to the amendment before us, the reasoned amendment, again, stating that Bill 1, [the] Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government has failed to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the potential risks this bill presents to federal funding for their projects, including critical infrastructure and housing initiatives.

I didn't plan on reading all of that, but I did.

You know, there are a few pieces within this reasoned amendment that I plan on supporting for a number of reasons. One of the topics that stands out here and that has been discussed to some extent at length is the relationship with the municipalities. We see, even in Edmonton here, that my councillor has been vocal about their concerns regarding Bill 1, kind of relating it back to: imagine if we gave these types of powers to – obviously, municipal governments are a little bit different – the current mayor or the next mayor, what kind of concerns that might raise.

Again, we have our own municipal partners raising concerns. It's not only this battle that this government is considering taking up with the federal government. But whether it's an innocent bystander or not, Mr. Speaker, our municipalities are going to be stuck right in the middle of this. We talk about – and I think that the Member for Edmonton-Manning, as did many other members, spoke to several important programs that are potentially going to be put at risk or stakeholders that might be concerned about the changes being proposed in Bill 1.

Just looking back to some of the decisions that this government has made, the previous member made an important point about housing, that the city of Edmonton is now having to fund for themselves because the provincial government is not willing to take up their role as a partner. At that time, when those discussions have been happening over the last weeks, the Finance minister – the only thing that they could put together was that there might be more funding in the next budget, which is obviously an inadequate answer considering we are losing lives right now.

This relates back to our relationship with municipalities and the need to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations. Again, when we look back to the relationship that this UCP government has had with the federal government over the last several years and especially through the pandemic, obviously, coming from very different directions, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford made the very clear point that this UCP government, I think, makes many decisions that are not generally popular with the majority of Albertans and are making decisions, whether it's about funding, whether it's about legislation that they're putting forward, that clearly are not supported by the majority of Albertans.

In this case, through the pandemic, we saw money left on the table. A report at the time – I believe it was January 2021 – showed that the provincial government left more than $675 million in federal money on the table for a number of programs: essential worker wage top-ups, job training in hard-hit sectors, rapid housing initiatives, long-term care supports as well as help for early childhood educators. I'm sure that list isn't extensive, but again, when we look at the decision of this government to not support the city of Edmonton in ensuring that there are adequate shelters and adequate funding for potentially temporary housing, they had an opportunity to fix this. There were federal dollars on the table through the pandemic specifically earmarked for rapid housing initiatives, but I think that in this instance the provincial government didn't have an adequate plan in place to access the entirety of those funds. The minister of housing can correct me if I'm wrong. Maybe he wants to make clear how many federal dollars were actually left on the table. Again looking at the report, it does say that it was because there wasn't an adequate plan in place to access those additional dollars.

So when we look at the relationship between the federal and provincial governments and how it relates to Bill 1 as well as, of course, how that is going to affect our municipalities, who have to bear much of the cost of the unhoused population, I think it's important to point out that the provincial government had an opportunity to work with the federal government but, for one reason or another, did not access those tens of millions if not hundreds of millions of dollars for, specifically in this case, rapid housing initiatives, and now we find ourselves in a situation where municipalities are having to fund that themselves.

When we look at the issue around affordable housing or shelter space or, even further, when we talk about, you know, rehabilitation and the direction that this government has taken, I have grave concerns, if the federal government is putting money on the table, that because of a disagreement about who should be able to accept that money, the type of person, whether they are trying to get out of addiction, whether they are just at the front end of that process, there are so many questions left to be answered about what this government, again, in section 3 under resolutions, describes as “anticipated to cause harm to Albertans.” I mean, again, it is such a general concept or general subsection that they’ve included in here, and beyond that, of course, Mr. Speaker . . . [interjection] I see an interjection, that I’m happy to take.

Thank you.

Member Loyola: I want to thank, Mr. Speaker, through you, the Member for Edmonton-West Henday. I’d like to express my gratitude, really, to all the members who have gotten up and spoken to this reasoned amendment, highlighting the implications of Bill 1 and how it could have a really drastic impact on individuals within our own province here. You know, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was expressing how, well, it’s not in the interest of Indigenous people, it’s not in the interest of the nonprofit organizations, and now the Member for Edmonton-West Henday is talking about the most marginalized people in our society, people that need access to housing now. I don’t think this government has given it enough thought about the implications that this sovereignty act and the relationship that we have with the federal government – I just find it astounding that hundreds of millions of dollars are being left on the table by this government.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you for that, Member. I really do appreciate that. I truly and completely agree with that point, that there really seem to be many unintended consequences, not only when we look at the economic consequences but the consequences of our relationship with nonprofit organizations, municipalities as listed in this reasoned amendment. Of course, again, that’s not an extensive list, but these are some of the organizations and stakeholders who could be dramatically impacted by the fight that potentially could take place because of this legislation.

Again, looking back at the idea that this government and this cabinet wants to give itself such extraordinary powers, specifically under the resolutions clauses: “anticipated to cause harm to Albertans.” How do you quantify that, Mr. Speaker? “Anticipated to.” We’re talking about changes that the federal government not only in this legislation clearly shows that they have already taken – that’s one thing, of course – but that they are anticipated to take. We don’t even know that they’re planning to do it. We haven’t seen the legislation that the cabinet and provincial UCP is saying that they might be doing. I mean, it seems quite absurd, and to threaten our relationship with stakeholders and other partners and levels of government is just a recipe for disaster.

Again, looking at the concerns around rapid housing initiatives and ensuring that, especially as things get colder and colder here – we’ve seen a drastic drop – we should all be working together to ensure that things like housing initiatives are moving forward and not held back because of a difference in opinion based on, you know, this current government’s direction compared to the federal government, compared to previous provincial governments or municipalities.

It’s quite clear, through the discussions that we’ve had on Bill 1 this evening and previously, that this government and this Premier have not adequately consulted with municipalities. That has become very clear from the comments that have been made by municipal leaders in Edmonton and across the province. This government has not been able to show adequate evidence that nonprofit organizations have been consulted on this. It seems quite clear that they haven’t been. Again, beyond municipalities that are potentially going to be affected by this, as previous members have said, nonprofit organizations have a lot to lose in this fight that this current UCP government wants to start as well.

Again, I understand, as previous members have, that there are grievances that we have with the federal government. By no means do I agree with many of the decisions that they make, but the fact is that when we talk about leaving money on the table, this government, well, has done quite an exceptional job of that, again looking at the figure of $675 million through the pandemic that this government left on the table in federal funding. For what, Mr. Speaker? Because they have a difference in opinion on whether essential workers should be getting a wage top-up? I mean, these are decisions that have drastic impacts on the people in our community.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the idea of the early childhood educators and the $10-a-day child care funding agreement has come up as well. For one, that it took so long for this provincial government to get that agreement in place has impacts on Alberta families as well as nonprofit organizations in our communities.

Beyond some of those issues that I’ve brought up, I know that the issue of climate change and taking action, whether it be lowering emissions or lowering our electricity bills because of the extensive growth of our bills across the city and across the province because of this government’s unwillingness to take meaningful action, whether it’s community leagues, whether it’s nonprofits from various sectors, you know, looking to access federal funding for green initiatives, again, if we have a provincial government that’s saying, “Well, we don’t agree with your, you know, decisions around emissions” or “We don’t agree with your decisions around how you’re funding green initiatives in our community, so we are not going to match those funding agreements,” that is going to have a negative impact on our community as well.

So it really goes back to the priorities of this government, that they aren’t willing to adequately consult. The fact is that it seems quite clear that the Premier – definitely the Deputy Premier, because they made the statement that they had not even read the legislation to a journalist at the time. That was the Deputy Premier from Lethbridge-East, I believe, Mr. Speaker. But many, many of the government members and the cabinet members who at one point completely disagreed with this legislation are now willing to put federal funding at risk for important projects in our community, are willing to put their relationships with municipalities and their relationships with nonprofits in jeopardy because they aren’t willing to stand up to this rather draconian piece of legislation.

So again I ask all members in the House this evening, or this morning, to please consider supporting this reasoned amendment because the fact is that it’s very clear over the weeks that we’ve been discussing this legislation that this government has not adequately consulted with nonprofit organizations, with municipalities, and that there is grave concern about critical infrastructure and housing initiatives across this province.

We’ve seen previously – I think that we had a little bit of clarity this afternoon in question period from the Premier that there isn’t a plan to go back on the Springbank dam project, but, you know, that, apparently, was only cleared up today, and there are many other initiatives, whether we’re talking about the green line in Calgary, the funding around that, in Edmonton the valley line west LRT, where we had committed the provincial funding to match the federal funding under our time in government. There was a moment where there was some concern around that because of decisions and comments that the minister, the UCP minister, at the time was making. So, again, when we look at these important infrastructure projects that could be put in jeopardy because of a disagreement between the federal and provincial governments, that is very concerning to me and should be very concerning to all Albertans.

I think from the push-back that we've seen, again, from all sides, not simply from progressives – you know, we have seen many conservatives very concerned with this as well about what it might do or what it will do to our economic environment, the stability, ensuring that the rule of law is upheld in our province, that it is not going to have a negative impact on our relationships between stakeholders, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others on amendment RA2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to join the debate on RA2, which indicates that we should not now read a second time Bill 1 because the Assembly is of the view that the government has failed to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the potential risks this bill presents to federal funding for their projects, including critical infrastructure and housing initiatives.

To even go more broadly than this amendment, I just wanted to go right back to the legislation as it relates to the RA2 amendment. It describes a provincial entity in quite a bit of detail, you know, and the reasoned amendment is indicating how nonprofits, of course, are impacted, municipalities are impacted, but it's also even broader than what we're suggesting here.

It's talking about

- (i) a public agency as defined in the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act,
- (ii) a Crown-controlled organization as defined in the Financial Administration Act,
- (iii) an entity that carries out a power, duty or function under an enactment,
- (iv) an entity that receives a grant or other public funds from the Government that are contingent on the provision of a public service,
- (v) a regional health authority . . .

I'm not even half done.

This list is extensive. It is so broad ranging. I am very curious and perhaps concerned also whether the government can actually manage all of this, to understand what provincial entities – they've created legislation that is so unwieldy that it's going to be impossible to implement or even to understand.

The other piece that is, again, extremely wide ranging is that "federal initiative" means a federal law, program, policy, agreement or action, or a proposed or anticipated federal law, program, policy, agreement or action." These are the things that this legislation is supposed to regulate and that are extremely – I don't know. Really, a very broad ranging, significant number of organizations in this province would be impacted. Of course, as many of my colleagues have spoken about already, so many federal initiatives, based on the definition I just read, are, you know, intersecting with all of these organizations that serve Albertans.

If we even just look at one area, let's look at affordable housing, the annual report of seniors and housing 2021-22. It talks about federal money that they get. It talks about the Canada infrastructure program, the Canada housing benefit – for people who don't know, that's the rent supplement program – capital grants from the national housing strategy, and the social housing agreement. These programs in one year alone invested from the federal government $91 million approximately. So we're not talking about just a little bit of money; we're talking about a significant amount of money that is fundamental to Alberta's affordable housing in our province that serves vulnerable Albertans. This legislation really shakes that all up and makes those bodies that receive that funding very concerned.

We already have difficulties, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the provincial government being willing to work with the federal government on these programs. You know, one of the things that the UCP did when they first came into government was that they cut the rent supplement program by about $16 million. Of course, we have matching funds with the federal, so if we cut it here, then we're not going to get the federal money.

I've heard time and time again from so many stakeholders that the province is missing in action. They actually are going directly to the federal government, working with their local municipalities. I hear this from so many housing management bodies, nonprofits all across this province. They say that the province is missing in action. They're not investing. What did they do since they've become government? They wrote a report – that's about all they've done – and they talked about privatizing affordable housing and selling off a whole bunch of our assets, doing a real estate review to see where they can get rid of assets. And then they say – this is back to Bill 78 – that that will go back into affordable housing, yet the legislation, of course, never indicated that, so that was an amendment that we brought forward for that, to support affordable housing in our province.

Regardless, this government has really dropped the ball on housing. I mean, I suppose it seems kind of ridiculous for me to say this, but it perhaps indicates how little this government cares about affordable housing. They've even just amalgamated a whole bunch of stuff into one ministry. Seniors and housing are all in Seniors, Community and Social Services. Housing doesn't even have a title anymore in a ministry. You know, it used to be with seniors and housing, which gave it some – our government gave it some importance, of course, by having a ministry that was specifically focused on those two aspects. But this government has just amalgamated a tremendous amount of very important supports for vulnerable Albertans into one ministry.

I'm sure it's overwhelming for the minister because it's untenable. How can he be able to manage all of that? Really, I have heard hardly anything from him since he's come into office except for his own personal sharing of his experience working in the nonprofit sector. No investments in affordable housing. No movement on that area.

These investments we receive from the federal government are not trivial, and I think the housing sector has every right to be, you know, extremely concerned about this legislation. That's why this amendment to Bill 1, RA2, is so important, and I urge all the people in this Legislature to vote in favour of it because we really haven't given a voice to those housing management bodies, to nonprofits in the sector.

You know, I've said this many times in the House: we know that we have less affordable housing than is needed in our province. We have less than the national average; about 4.3 per cent of housing is affordable. Here in Alberta it's only 2.9 per cent. We're behind. We need to invest significantly, but sadly this government has not chosen to. If they're not going to work with the federal government and their robust programs like the ones I've indicated to you here – the Canada housing benefit, capital grants from the national housing strategy, and the social housing agreement – we're not going to have the housing we need, and indeed that's our situation at the moment.

Municipalities are doing the best they can. I mean, we know we're in a crisis. I don't know. What did someone say to me? Like, with the wind chill and everything it's, you know, more than minus 30 below today or something like that this evening. I know that people are living rough out in the community in the Edmonton area, and they need that housing. They need permanent supportive housing because we know that vulnerable people with mental health and addiction issues – providing them just with the bricks and mortar of a building is not enough. We must provide them wraparound services.

The city of Edmonton has been crying, honestly, literally, for a long time, trying to move this government to see the importance, and their asks haven't even been that significant. You know, I think it was about $9 million they looked for for operating these wraparound services for permanent supportive housing. This government has kept turning away, turning a blind eye. Literally, people are dying in our city, and we know that people are losing limbs because of being frozen. Horrific things are happening in our community, and this investment in affordable housing is so key to making sure that people are safe and that they live with dignity.

So that's why RA2, voting in favour of that, is so important. We need every dollar we can get. We need the province to step up, but for some reason they haven't decided that this is an important part. Even though we have a significant surplus, it's not an important part of what they see as key for helping our city, our province. We know that, you know, it costs more for someone to live rough. It costs us as the public more than to give them affordable housing. Anyway, there are just a million arguments. There are human rights, economic arguments to having enough housing for people. Of course, we want to work very closely with the federal government to ensure that happens, and if this sovereignty act isn't willing to work with the federal government, which it certainly seems to indicate it won't, we think: whoa; we need to slow down, and we need to make sure that we understand the consequences of this very significant legislation.

Has the UCP consulted with the housing management bodies? We have the Greater Edmonton Foundation here, that serves seniors. About 4,000 seniors live in lodges across the greater Edmonton area. In Calgary we have Silvera, which does amazing work serving seniors in keeping them well housed and supported. We also have sort of our affordable housing partners like Sevita and the Calgary Housing Company. These are the big four, we call them, that do significant work to support Albertans who are vulnerable. Has the UCP spoken to them about any concerns that they might have regarding how this legislation will impact the receipt of dollars?

Also, not long ago I was at the grand opening of a facility in Calgary, and it was kind of a unique joint venture between HomeSpace and Inn from the Cold. The city of Calgary put in millions of dollars, the feds put in millions of dollars, and the province put in very minimal. People are overcompensating for the province instead of the province stepping up.

You know, some of what this bill could create, even more difficulty in the sector, seems to be already manifesting. It's not only in this area but in other nonprofits that certainly do tremendous work, certainly nonprofits that work with vulnerable Albertans that use drugs, Jasper Place Wellness Centre, some of the inner-city agencies like Boyle community services, Bissell Centre, those places. Those are also nonprofits that are so important to making sure that vulnerable Albertans are supported.

We know that because of the UCP's very narrow view of what needs to happen for people who use substances, use drugs – of course, we know that evidence shows that we need a continuum of services. We certainly do need to have detox centres. We need to have residential treatment. We need all sorts of the things that the UCP likes to call recovery.

But we need harm reduction services, too, and that's one area that the UCP wants to cut back in and has already, so much so that we already know that they have cut federal funding or have not received federal funding or they have received federal funding that they have rejected. That's already happened. We know that the different harm reduction programs – or they've delayed harm reduction programs because of their very narrow ideological view on what people who are using drugs need. But we know – I mean, one of the things that we certainly say is: how can anybody go into recovery if they're dead? We need to support people where they're at, so harm reduction services are fundamental. Right now we really continue to be in a significant crisis, so working with the federal government to make sure that there is a significant investment in that area is important.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn the Assembly until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon, December 6.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:54 a.m. on Tuesday]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 6, 2022

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King, to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood has an introduction on the Speaker's behalf. The hon. member.

Mr. Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you it is my honour today to announce two special guests. Today we have joining us Jayme Erickson, an Airdrie medic with Airdrie EMS. As well, we have Richie Reed, a medic with HALO here in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Technology and Innovation.

Mr. Glubish: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly six outstanding members of the Strathcona professional firefighters' association. I along with my colleagues and all Albertans am truly grateful for the dedication and service of our first responders. I want to thank Elliot Davis, Eric Lowe, Tyler Brady, Ryan Woodland, and Robert Russell for their service and for all that they have taught me these last three years. I invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you three IAFF members who have joined us here today in the Chamber all the way from Lethbridge. They are Brent Nunweiler, Brendan Pyne, and Patrick Misura. I ask, to honour and recognize their tremendous contribution to the city of Lethbridge, that the House extend to these dedicated public servants a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly five honourable guests from Red Deer firefighters' association local 1190. We're delighted to welcome here today Stephen Belich, Dan Henschel, Kevin Bettsworth, Lyle Wesner, and Billy Kamp. On behalf of all the Assembly we want to thank you for the tremendous work you do, and God bless you all so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce five amazing members of the St. Albert firefighters' integrated service with the EMS. They are Greg Harvey, Al Zimmerman, Dean Dumbeck, Sean Richards, and Noel Johnstone. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mr. Guthrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly guests from X-energy Canada: Katherine Moshonas Cole, Rosemary Yeremian, and Monifa Miller. Please rise and get the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Please join me in welcoming Steve Westlake of the Canmore Firefighters Association, who has joined us here today. Thank you, Steve.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I invite all members of the Legislature to join me in welcoming members of the Alberta Professional Fire Fighters & Paramedics Association executive, including President Matt Osborne and Secretary-Treasurer Jamie Blayne. They represent the APFFPA, over 75 per cent of Alberta's population through representing firefighters.

Mr. Copping: It is with pleasure that I rise to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly my guests from the Calgary Firefighters Association. Joining us today is Jean-Pierre LeBlanc, vice-president, and Codey McIntyre, acting vice-president. I want to sincerely thank them for all the work they do representing firefighters, working with their families, and saving Calgarians.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly – please join me in welcoming members from the Spruce Grove firefighters local 3021 who have joined us here today: Jordan Hanratty, Joel McKay, Justin Jaeger, and Cole Hoeber.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Capital Projects

Member Loyola: Mr. Speaker, international investment is essential for creating good jobs for Albertans. Large-scale infrastructure projects in our energy sector and other emerging spaces put people to work and allow them to put food on their table, pay their bills, and put a little bit away for that well-deserved vacation. I was proud to serve in a government that delivered on getting our resources to tidewater with the expansion of the Trans Mountain pipeline, which has put nearly 30,000 people to work and will be completed next year. I'm proud to stand in this House on behalf of skilled tradespeople every day, and I was so proud to see our leader commit to fund training centres should we form the next government.

Sadly, so much of our construction industry is watching in horror right now as the Premier attempts to ram through her undemocratic, job-killing sovereignty act, a deeply flawed piece of legislation. Sometimes national economic challenges require national solutions, and I'm proud to live in a country where provinces and different levels of government can come together to develop those solutions. There would be no Trans Mountain in a world with sovereignty acts. That's tens of thousands of Alberta jobs lost. But it gets worse. There are very real and very serious concerns about what this horrible bill could mean for federal housing funding, for large-scale investments in transit projects, and more.

We know that this Premier has already mused about pulling out of the Springbank dam and abandoning Calgary's long-awaited green line. Again, more good-paying jobs lost, and those jobs are needed now more than ever as this government's economic plan has been a disaster. Alberta has the second-lowest wage growth in all of Canada, and inflation has outpaced wage growth by four times. My constituents and so many others are working harder and harder and falling farther and farther behind.

The job-killing, wage-killing sovereignty act is the last thing we need. We need more infrastructure projects. We need more jobs, not less. Pull this legislation now, and let's build a better future for Alberta workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Children's Pain Medication

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across Canada we have a shortage of children's pain medication. Supply chain issues and increased demand have put pressures on hospitals and physicians' offices as parents seek out alternative sources from their local pharmacy, whose shelves are empty. This is the scene playing out from Victoria to St. John's, and this is a major concern for Alberta parents and this government as the health and well-being of our children is so important. I myself have heard many stories from parents from Calgary-Hays, and it's a growing concern and something that must be dealt with. Our 635,000 children need relief, and they need it now.

That's why our government has taken action to support families and ease the strain on our health care system. Just this morning the Premier and Health minister announced that this Alberta government has acquired at minimum 5 million bottles of acetaminophen and ibuprofen from Atabay pharmaceuticals. As soon as it arrives, it will be sent out to pharmacies across Alberta. I want to thank the efforts of this government as well as the efforts of Alberta Health Services in identifying and connecting with the manufacturer to get this much-needed medicine so swiftly.

With 5 million doses being the minimum amount we are receiving from the manufacturer, Albertans can be assured there will be a constant supply while the issues facing the national importation process are worked out. As the Health minister said earlier this morning, as soon as Health Canada completes the expedited approval process, the first 10 shipments will be sent to Alberta. Once here it will be mere days before pharmacy shelves will be stocked with acetaminophen and ibuprofen for Alberta's children. I have been told that actions speak louder than words. Well, Mr. Speaker, with 5 million bottles worth of action, that is strong medicine for Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan.

33rd Anniversary of l'École Polytechnique Shootings

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-three years ago, on December 6, 1989, 14 women were murdered in the école Polytechnique massacre in Montreal. Today we honour their memory. Today we remember 14 women whose lives were full of hope, love, and potential: Geneviève Bergeron, Hélène Colgan, Nathalie Croteau, Barbara Daignault, Anne-Marie Edward, Maud Haviernick, Maryse Laganière, Maryse Leclair, Anne-Marie Lemay, Sonia Pelletier, Michèle Richard, Annie St-Arneault, Annie Turcotte, Barbara Klucznik-Widajewicz.

Our government is invested in a future where women, girls, and gender-diverse people live without fear of violence. This means shifting to a culture of consent, engaging men and boys, improving our response to gender-based violence, and supporting survivors. Today we take action for those who have experienced gender-based violence and take time to remember those who we have lost to it. Today we remember the 14 women who were killed in the Polytechnique massacre simply because they were women. We are committed to acknowledgement, education, action, and support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Renaud: This morning I and my colleagues met with representatives from the Alberta Professional Fire Fighters & Paramedics Association to learn about the issues that are facing their members as part of the fall Legislature conference. The APFFPA are fierce advocates for issues facing firefighters and paramedics across the province, and opposition caucus has actively met with them over the 30th Legislature to listen, support, and bring their issues to this Assembly.

That is why yesterday our leader committed that an NDP government will ensure that all firefighters that worked in the Fort McMurray fires be eligible for catastrophic traumatic exposure presumptive WCB coverage, and these members would not have to meet the latency periods of up to 15 years of exposure for cancers. Unfortunately, when asked if the UCP minister of jobs would support this, his reply was that government had already done this. What a slap in the face to the firefighters who gathered from across the province, who are with us today in the gallery, and who've reached out to members of all parties to highlight their issues, members like the St. Albert firefighters, who are deeply concerned about a number of issues facing integrated services like St. Albert's that have been made so much worse by decisions that are negatively impacting their ability to serve the city.

Alberta's professional firefighters and paramedics have many issues that they need us to know about and act on: issues related to system improvement that will lessen their difficulty recruiting, issues about safe staffing levels, more regional autonomy, and so much more. What I've learned from the extraordinary St. Albert firefighters, all 126 of them, is that governments will continue to get it wrong until they directly consult with them.

Mr. Speaker, the APFFPA has already lost members who fought in the Fort McMurray fire. Other young members are fighting cancer and WCB and wondering what will happen to their families when they're gone in a few years. I hope the UCP will listen and join the NDP in ending the uncertainty for hundreds of Alberta firefighters that worked so tirelessly to save Fort McMurray.

Thank you.

Montana Erickson

Mr. Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, I stand before you and the Assembly today with a heavy heart. At any given time a paramedic working in their community can be faced with a situation that many of us cannot ever imagine. On November 15 Jayme Erickson arrived at the scene of a crash on an icy stretch of Alberta highway. She didn't know it at the time, but she was responding to an accident involving her own 15-year-old daughter. It is every parent's worst nightmare to lose their child, but I can't comprehend the intense trauma of attending to one's own child.

To honour and memorialize the beautiful life of Montana Erickson, it's important to celebrate the amazing person that she was. I want the Assembly to know how much she meant to her family and how much she meant to so many countless others. Montana had a kind and graceful spirit that left a lasting impression on everyone who had the privilege of knowing her. She was a firecracker, a dedicated friend who would always stand up for the right thing. Montana was an athlete that finished fifth at the Canadian national swimming junior championships. She was dedicated to helping people, which is why in her final hours she donated her organs, saving the lives of so many others. Montana is a hero. She meant so much to so many, and her presence will have a lasting impression on our communities and in Alberta.

May Jayme, her husband, Sean, their friends, families, and members of the EMS community find peace through this tough time. In honour of Montana and the daily sacrifice of our medics, let this serve as a reminder of the support and healing needed for our medics across this province. I promise to hold that dear to my heart and start that healing.

Our thoughts and prayers are with you. [Standing ovation]

Gender-based Violence Prevention

Member Irwin: Today, December 6, is the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women. I ask this Assembly to take a moment with me and remember the lives of 14 brilliant young women who in 1989 were killed at an attack at l'école Polytechnique de Montréal, an attack fuelled by antifeminist violence and misogyny. These women were killed because they were women.

In the year since we last marked this day, roughly 170 women and 2SLGBTQ-plus people have died in Canada due to gender-based violence, a number that has risen in the past three years. We know that Indigenous women, girls, and two-spirit people are 12 times more likely to face gender-based violence than non-Indigenous people. Gender-based violence must stop.

Women, girls, two-spirit, nonbinary, and transgender people should be safe in all aspects of their lives. They should be safe in their homes, in their workplaces, in their communities, on their walks, and in their schools. They have every right to be safe here, yet we cannot stand in this House and say that they are when Alberta has the second-highest number of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls and two-spirit people in the country and 1 in 3 women in Canada will face gender-based violence in their lifetime.

This government cannot continue to mark the anniversary of l'école Polytechnique by saying "never again" without action. Words are simply not enough. The women of this province need tangible and immediate action. Their lives depend on it.

Health Spending Accounts

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, not every Albertan interacts with the health care system in the same way. Many Albertans seek different kinds of care outside of the traditional doctor's office. Currently Albertans are paying out of pocket for services not covered by Alberta health insurance, things like the dentist, the chiropractor, counsellors, and other needed health professionals. Some Albertans desperately need these services to deal with chronic pain, additional medications, mental health, and other treatments, and our government has a solution.

Imagine for a moment a family of four with an extra $1,200 to spend on these alternative services. Little Johnny needs braces; the family is able to use this extra $1,200 to off-set the cost. Imagine that Johnny doesn't need the braces, but his little sister Sally requires orthotics. In any circumstance the family is able to pay for things that they need to make life more comfortable.

Recently our Premier has proposed putting a health spending account into action for all Albertans to use to pay for health expenses that are not covered by Alberta health insurance. We will invest $300 a year into these accounts, and we will also incentivize and encourage employers to contribute to these accounts as well.

Mr. Speaker, this money would be beneficial for all Albertans. Anyone with compassion for those who are struggling financially in this province can see how important this extra money will be, yet the leader of the NDP continues to call this idea incredibly radical and extremely damaging. I don't know about you, but those are not the terms that I would use to describe this health spending account that falls in line with the Canada Health Act. This spending account will enhance our health care system rather than damage it, like the NDP have told Albertans it will. Our government is here to stand up for Albertans, and we will continue to be creative in solutions for all Albertans.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition has the call.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it is important for all of us as elected officials to stand up for Alberta. The difference is that my party knows we can do that without upending the Constitution, eroding democracy, and hurting investor certainty, and Albertans agree. According to a recent poll by Leger more than two-thirds of Albertans disagree with the act, and that was before this Premier made such a mess of it. No amendments can save this bill, so why doesn't the Premier admit that her bill doesn't need clarification, that what it needs is to just be quashed?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition quoted Don Braid. Well, I see your Don Braid, and I raise you a Rex Murphy. Rex Murphy disagreed with the sovereignty act and my characterization of it yesterday as well. You know why he disagreed with the sovereignty act and my characterization of it? Because he said that Alberta has not been ignored. He said, "I must go all caps and exclamation mark. You could only wish in your sweetest dreams Alberta was ignored. In your deepest prayers you could only have hoped that Alberta and its energy industry had been ignored." This is the reason we need the sovereignty act.

1:50

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Murphy is going to Murphy.

Meanwhile others actually agree with us. Columnist Robyn Urback wrote that it seems like this legislation was "written in crayon." Rob Breakenridge said that the confusions and reversals are hurting public confidence. Long-time Harper strategist Kory Teneycke said that this will, quote, go down as one of the most ill-conceived pieces of legislation ever written. End quote. He then went on to call it un-Conservative. To the Premier: is she really saying that she's the only one that's right and everyone else is wrong?

Ms Smith: Well, Jack Major, who's a former Canadian Supreme Court justice – I think he knows a thing or two about the Constitution. What's so terrible about the province saying that if you want to impose on us, you'd better make sure you're doing it constitutionally?

Let me just continue with what Rex Murphy had to say. He said:

Madam Premier, you could only hope that Alberta was ignored.

The truth is it had the mean attention and been the unrelenting object of every global warming obsessive in the entire world.

And, during the last seven years, of which the leader opposite was Premier, your national government was either gently on side with the critics, gave a nod to their furious indictments, and [almost] certainly gave . . . no defence whatsoever.

And that goes . . .

The Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, today a Calgary city solicitor said that the best case scenario is that the bill be withdrawn, and this morning two Alberta constitutional experts, people that are still writing about constitutional law, Martin Olszynski and Nigel Bankes, wrote that separate and apart from the Premier's undemocratic power grab there are still other sections that render the bill unconstitutional. "Amendments will do nothing to address our most significant concerns." Why won't the Premier admit that her flagship bill is sinking and withdraw it today?

Ms Smith: I've quoted Jack Major, a former Canadian Supreme Court justice. I've quoted Geoffrey Sigalet, University of B.C. centre for constitutional law. Jesse Hartery, constitutional lawyer:

The federal government has its own executive branch to implement and enforce its laws. The provinces are free to assist in that implementation if they wish. But if they have different enforcement priorities, they have . . .

Listen to this word.

. . . the sovereign right to decline enforcement of federal laws and require the federal government to do so itself, with its own funds.

We know that this is a constitutional act, and we look forward to testing that.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Respiratory Illness in Children

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago our party asked the Premier to address the shortage of over-the-counter children's medication, and we are very pleased to see progress announced today. However, this does not address the recent surge in pediatric respiratory illnesses in our ERs. In other provinces the chief medical officers of health are educating the public about what they can do to protect their children and stop the spread. Yet here? Crickets. To the Premier: is this total absence of public health leadership happening at her direction, and if so, why?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the chief medical officer of health routinely offers press releases and routinely gives direction to those who seek his advice. That's the role of the chief medical officer of health. It is the role of our Health minister and the role of Alberta Health Services to make sure that if children get sick, they have not only the medication that the parents need to be able to treat them, and that was what the children's acetaminophen announcement was about today. We've been working on this for weeks, and the fact of the matter is that Alberta Health Services did a terrific job of seeking out and finding supplies so that we can help.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, right now Alberta children are being hit with the public health triple whammy of COVID, influenza, and RSV. Recent reports show that Alberta has the highest rate of influenza in Canada and one of the lowest rates of immunization amongst children. Now, the Premier fired the former CMOH, and now we have a volunteer in charge of public health. To make matters worse, though, will the Premier confirm today that both deputy CMOHs have now resigned as well under her leadership?

Ms Smith: Dr. Mark Joffe has the respect of our Health minister and myself. He is not filling the role as a volunteer. He is filling the role as our chief medical officer of health . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: . . . and he is giving advice to those who are seeking it. The most important thing we can do right now is make sure that when a child gets sick, they have the medication that they need. That was the reason why we put all of our effort into securing a supply of 5 million bottles of acetaminophen and ibuprofen. It's going to make sure that families are protected.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I asked the Premier was whether or not our volunteer CMOH is getting the support of the two deputy chief medical officers of health that we understand have resigned. She hasn't given us an answer. Meanwhile nobody is speaking up to give appropriate information to our families. Will the Premier, as a result, stand and encourage – not mandate but encourage – vaccines as an important tool in preventing the public health crisis currently overtaking our ERs and threatening the safety of children, and if not, why not?

Ms Smith: The Leader of the Opposition knows that RSV is the most common childhood illness and that there is not vaccine for it. I think we all wish that there was a silver bullet, and I think that what we actually need to have is to ensure that people have the medication they need. I spoke with a pharmacist today, and the number one most important thing when somebody gets ill is that if they have a high fever, they need that fever to break. If they don't have the fever . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. the Premier has the call. It would be helpful if the Assembly could hear her.

Ms Smith: The most important thing is getting the medication to the families because this is what is going on. When you have a high fever, if you can't get the medication, then parents are going the only place they know, which is the emergency room. We're addressing that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. I just caution members, whether they're making on the record or off the record comments that may be unparliamentary, that if the Speaker can hear them, they certainly would be that.

Mr. Sabir: For days now the Premier and the Minister of Justice have tried to convince Albertans that Bill 1 was not the undemocratic power grab that constitutional experts, lawyers, journalists, business leaders, and Albertans knew that it was. That's ignoring the fact that the sovereignty act will give this cabinet the power to unilaterally modify, suspend, and rewrite laws. That was the power that the Premier and the Justice minister wanted. Can the Premier explain why she wanted these almost dictatorial powers and who advised her that this was the way to go?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the act has always been very clear. Rex Murphy understands it. He says:

Your sovereignty act is a good thing. Why would I say so?

It is very simple, though perhaps not obvious [to everyone].

The act is not a constitutional challenge. It is not a matter of jurisdictional measures. Those are its surface points.

What it really carries is a demand for respect and fairness.

Albertans have been disrespected and they feel it on a personal level.

The impulse behind the act is an overdue call that Alberta receive the respect that is . . . its due. That the federal Liberals wake up to the fact that Canada is a Confederation, and that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: The Justice minister told the media yesterday that he provides legal opinion to the cabinet and described his role as being counsel to the Executive Council. This bill was a poorly drafted attempt at giving extreme power to the cabinet at the expense of the democratic rights of Albertans, and Albertans deserve to know how such a disaster was created. Will the Premier today authorize the Justice minister to speak to the public about the legal opinion he provided about this disastrous, undemocratic piece of legislation she tried to force onto Albertans?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I've been very open about the legal advice that we have received. All the legal advice that we have received has been how we craft this legislation so that it respects the rights of our Aboriginal citizens, so that it respects the Charter, and so that it enforces the fact that we are going to defend our constitutional rights under sections 92 through 95 of the act. All of our legal advice has been crafted in order to make sure it falls within those parameters. We made a couple of amendments based on the advice we got back from our caucus, and we're going to go forward with the amended bill. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Sabir: The Justice minister and the Premier spent their days following the tabling of this act insulting business leaders and Albertans who warned about the consequences it would have on our economy and democracy. We deserve to hear from the legal advice provided to cabinet and know why the minister signed off on this terrible piece of legislation. Will the Premier sanction the release of the legal opinion the Justice minister provided to cabinet on Bill 1? If she won't, can she explain how she expects anyone to trust her or her government on pretty much anything?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Yeah. Everything is on the table. The reason why we're putting this legislation forward is to make sure that we are enforcing our rights under the Constitution. That is the beginning and the end of it. When you look at Saskatchewan and the Saskatchewan First Act, the only difference that we did in this province is that rather than have an independent appointed tribunal as the starting point for any motion that we would put forward, we made sure that it was this Assembly. Any time we take a motion under the sovereignty act, we want to assert that MLAs begin the process because they are the duly elected members representing Albertans, and I encourage the NDP to support the bill just like their counterparts in . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Health Care Services in Southern Alberta

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I am hearing directly from health care workers and patients in Lethbridge that the Chinook regional hospital could be on the cusp of capacity issues due to staffing shortages. This is the predictable outcome of three years of UCP war on front-line health care workers and a refusal of the UCP government to take responsibility and show leadership on our city's most important issue. People in Lethbridge do not want to hear excuses for our multiple and overlapping health care crises. Will the Minister of Health stand today and explain the full extent of the situation in Lethbridge and provide details on what he will do to address it, not more excuses?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has the call.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. We are seeing a high volume of patients at the Chinook regional hospital both in the ICU and the emergency department. Now, as of right now, just to be clear, no in-house patients have been transferred due to capacity and no incoming patients have been diverted. That has not happened. Hospitals across the globe are dealing with challenges. We understand that depending on the volumes that are coming in, we have, as we've done pre-COVID and we're doing now, transferred patients on an as-needed basis, but that's not happening right now. We're providing the services to Lethbridge patients.

Ms Phillips: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons the volume might be high in the ER is because 40,000 people don't have a family doctor.

Now, a few weeks ago I raised the alarm of Lethbridge only having one full-time obstetrician and gynecologist to support pregnant women. Month after month it has been the NDP opposition raising the alarm about the challenges to health care in southern Alberta. Not a word from any UCP MLA. I guess the Deputy Premier can't be bothered to read about that either. On the ob-gyn crisis, what is the Minister of Health doing to ensure women in Lethbridge can deliver babies in our own city?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are working very hard on recruiting physicians across the entire province, including in Lethbridge. I'm pleased to say that 17 family medicine physicians have committed to the community of Lethbridge, 13 of which are awaiting their CPSA practice readiness. We already have a number started. We're looking forward to have the remainder start over the next number of months. This is a challenge that's not only being faced in Lethbridge but, quite frankly, across the province and around first-world nations in the world, but we are working very hard to be able to recruit and retain physicians, and we're going to continue to do so.

Ms Phillips: Now, Mr. Speaker, the UCP is far more concerned about the job-killing sovereignty act than fixing health care in Lethbridge, but let's see if we can get a local perspective here. Will the Deputy Premier from Lethbridge-East please explain about his priorities and what his plan is for – and he can take his pick of any of the multiple overlapping crises that his government has authored, whether it's capacity staffing issues, family doctors, EMS, ob-gyn shortage. What's the plan on any of these crises that the UCP has authored?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, we're very pleased about the plan that we're putting forward to address the challenges that health care is facing here in our province and, quite frankly, that provinces across the country are facing at the same time. We are investing more money than we ever had before: $22 billion this year, an additional $600 million next year, $600 million the year after that. We have put in place an official administrator to help speed up the changes through AHS, and that includes working on key issues such as EMS, emergency departments, getting caught up on surgeries, and driving decision-making down. We have a plan recruiting, training, and bringing more health care workers into . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East is next.

Children's Pain Medication

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been speaking with many of my constituents, and the recent wave of the flu and other respiratory illnesses has been a hot topic, especially access to children's cold medication like Tylenol and Advil. Across the country, pharmacy shelves are empty, and parents don't have over-the-counter meds they need for their sick kids. Ottawa is seemingly doing very little to provide a long-term solution. Would the Minister of Health be able to tell this Assembly and concerned parents across Alberta what our government might be able to do to help?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Today there is great news for parents throughout Alberta. The Premier and I were able to make an announcement that, in order to combat the shortage of children's pain medication, the government is working to acquire 5 million retail units of acetaminophen and ibuprofen. We've been working with AHS to find a manufacturer who can provide the medication, and I'm pleased to say that Atabay pharmaceuticals will be able to provide a steady supply for our province. Once Health Canada gives their final approvals, Alberta's parents will once again have access to the much-needed pain medications they need for their children.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. That's fantastic news for Alberta parents. Given that these parents need these medications as soon as possible so that they can alleviate the fevers and teething pain affecting thousands of Albertan kids and given that this is a province-wide issue and parents in rural and remote areas of Alberta need these medications, too, can the minister tell us what the plan is to ensure that units of children's Tylenol and Advil are distributed to pharmacies all across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the member for the question. We know that parents across our entire province need access to these essential pain medications, and they need it quickly. That's why AHS will be using the pharmaceutical distributor McKesson to ensure every pharmacy in Alberta gets prompt and efficient shipment as needed. Now, McKesson is the same company that already is contracted to distribute vaccines to pharmacies throughout the province, and I'm glad that Alberta families will soon have access to these needed medications to alleviate their children's pain and their worries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks, Minister. Given that Albertans are concerned about the rising costs and the current inflation crisis and given that many of my constituents are seeing rising costs on all essentials, everything from ground beef to lettuce, and given that families are having to make difficult choices on how they spend their hard-earned money, can the minister tell Albertans what steps are being taken to ensure that prices for these medications remain affordable for Alberta families?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thanks again for the question, Mr. Speaker. We know that many Albertans are under financial strain because of the rising cost of essentials like medication and groceries due to inflation. That's why we will ensure that parents will be able to pay approximately the same retail prices as listed now, which is about $12 per bottle on average. Many Albertans are facing significant strain on their finances, especially families with children, so I'm pleased that we can take steps to ensure that everyone can afford to buy the pain medication that their children need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre is next.

Health Care System

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, there is an EMS crisis in Alberta. In Ponoka the mayor called on this government to step up and do more following a number of recent incidents, including one where volunteer firefighters were forced to take a pedestrian hit by a car to the hospital in the back of a pickup because they could wait no longer for an ambulance. Albertans deserve to know that an ambulance is coming when they call, but for far too many since the UCP formed government, it's simply not the case. Will the Minister of Health stand today, take responsibility for the crisis we're seeing in our system, and apologize to the first responders forced to take action because of the pressures added by the UCP?

Mr. Copping: I will take this opportunity, first off, to thank all of our paramedics and our first responders for providing services to Albertans, much-needed services, during these challenging times. Mr. Speaker, as you know, call volumes have upped 30 per cent since last summer, and we have made significant investments to be able to address the challenges. As part of Budget 2022 we invested $64 million, thus putting more ambulances on the streets in Calgary and Edmonton as well as putting ambulances in rural areas. We also put in place a 10-point plan, and I'd like to talk more about that in a moment.

Mr. Shepherd: Given that there's another crisis, Minister – yesterday this minister tabled Bill 4, claimed that it would, quote, ensure stable funding for Alberta's doctors. End quote. Given that what it actually does is undo the catastrophic decision made by the Justice minister when he was in Health to let this government unilaterally tear up their agreement with doctors, something supported by every member of this government – now, given that that decision launched their war on doctors in the midst of a pandemic, devastated primary care, made it impossible for many to see a family doctor, and so much more, rather than pat himself on the back, will this minister apologize to physicians for supporting that awful policy?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, that is simply not the case. We are seeing challenges in Alberta in regard to family physicians like challenges are being seen across the entire country. It has nothing to do with the policy; it has everything to do with the challenges of the pandemic. That said, I am very pleased and proud of the work that our government has done working with the AMA to reach this tremendous agreement, that was supported by more than 70 per cent of doctors. This agreement is focused on partnership. This agreement is focused on stability. This agreement is focused on innovation. It will help us attract and retain doctors to this province.

Mr. Shepherd: Given, Mr. Speaker, that that agreement is mostly about cleaning up the mess made by the minister to his left and given that Albertans are coping with long wait times for ambulances and emergency rooms and for family doctors and given that this government has stated that they're supposedly focused on addressing the health care crisis but given that in order to actually address it, they need to take ownership for their failures and commit to real change, will the Health minister stand today and admit that when it comes to Alberta's EMS, hospital, and primary care system, he and his predecessor got it wrong and apologize for those that are caught in the wake of their legacy of failure?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to change. We are committed to change, and we are putting money where our mouths are. As part of Budget 2022 we are spending $22 billion, the most ever, and on top of that, to be able to address challenges with COVID and get caught up on surgeries, there's more money allocated this year. We are putting another $1.2 billion into the system, and we know we need to transform the system. That is why in September we announced MAPS, modernizing Alberta's primary care system. I'm looking forward to the presentation coming forward on that so we can move on that quickly as well as work in terms of expanding capacity across our entire system.

Racism and Hate Crime Prevention

Mr. Deol: Mr. Speaker, words matter. This fall the Premier said inaccurate ones, that unvaccinated people, quote, have been the most discriminated against group that I've ever witnessed in my lifetime. End quote. The Premier has yet to apologize for what she said. Hate crimes are on the rise, and her comments negate the experience of racialized and marginalized Albertans. Will the Premier stand up and offer a formal apology for her harmful words? Will she acknowledge the very real racism, discrimination, and violence that people face in this province?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, this government stands strongly supporting all efforts against any sort of racism. We support every work from the community stakeholders for actions taken against any sort of antiracism work. I myself stood on the steps with community leaders to fight for antiracist remarks and actions in this province. We are committed to continuing that work. I'm pleased to work with others who are sharing our passion on this part.

Mr. Deol: Given that during COVID Canada saw a steep rise in anti-Asian hate, with a 700 per cent rise in some areas, and given that half of Chinese Canadians experienced some form of hate in relation to COVID-19 and given that anti-Muslim hate crimes have skyrocketed in Alberta, with Muslim hijabi women being the primary targets, can the Premier explain why she said that the unvaccinated are the most discriminated against because they couldn't go to a restaurant when many racialized Albertans have been subjected to real violence during the pandemic?

Mr. Luan: Mr. Speaker, our government took actions, and we created a first-of-its-kind action plan that shows that this government is committed to working with marginalized communities to address racism in Alberta. This antiracism action plan will help combat racism and ensure marginalized Albertans have equal access to information, resources, services, and opportunities. I myself come from an ethnocultural minority. I can tell you that it hasn't been lost that we need to have the voices of all the marginal communities to be fair and to be . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Given that the answer is no and given that racialized and marginalized Albertans have spoken out against the Premier's harmful comments, expressing that they are upset over the wilful neglect of their lived experience of discrimination, and given that the Premier or any of her cabinet ministers seem unable to offer a sincere apology for the harm she has caused, can the Premier explain what her government plans to do to protect racialized and marginalized Albertans from the very real and oftentimes violent discrimination they face in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to work with all that share this vision here. I invite the opposition to join us to fight for antiracism. Myself, I have grown from a community that experienced that. This issue is across all political stipes here, and we're committed to taking action there. I invite the opposition to join us to do more work in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Education Concerns

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My riding of Spruce Grove-Stony Plain is full of young families and students who are eager to make this school year a great one, one that offers educational choices, learning opportunities, and unique experiences in top-tier facilities. To achieve these goals for students, our teachers and front-line staff must be supported in order to give our students the education and school year they deserve. To the Minister of Education: what have you done to support our teachers and front-line education workers, who have dedicated themselves to supporting our students?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We are committed to supporting our teachers and front-line workers in the best manner possible. Budget 2022 provides an education funding increase of more than $700 million over the next three years, including $142 million for the '22-23 fiscal year to support and hire teachers. Eight hundred more teachers and principals have been hired this school year as well as an additional 800 educational assistants. We're continuing to support our schools and making sure they have what they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for her answer. Given that our public schools are currently facing challenges related to this year's flu season and the cyclical wave of respiratory viruses and given that many students have had to miss classes as a result of these seasonal illnesses, to the same minister: what are you doing in terms of supporting school boards as they tackle this year's wave of viruses?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to supporting school boards, parents, teachers, and staff members by being responsive and providing clarity and leadership. School boards wanted clarity, and we provided much-needed clarity last week, with new regulatory changes. As the Minister of Health shared yesterday in the House, the spike that we saw is going down. We will continue to work with Health and school boards to ensure that the kids can learn safely in our schools and in our classrooms.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Given that countless schools in Alberta are in desperate need of capital improvements such as Spruce Grove composite high school and given that this school is bursting at the seams, with more students on the way, and given that renewing schools such as this one creates vibrant communities and a fantastic place for our children to learn, to the Minister of Education: what are you doing to follow through on the commitment to building and renewing our school infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to building and renewing infrastructure and revitalizing communities. That's why we've committed to building 66 school projects since we got elected, at a cost of over $2 billion. I have to add: that's more than the members opposite did. Although I cannot comment on capital projects that may be considered for Budget 2023, we are committed to continuing to build more schools in communities that need them the most, as is evident by my mandate letter. We are supporting enrolment growth in growing communities, preserving and modernizing existing facilities, and revitalizing communities right across this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South is next.

Children's Health Care

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Children in Alberta are in crisis. Parents in Edmonton-South are losing sleep after finding nothing but empty shelves when they go looking for medication. Family doctors are moving away from Alberta, and any who are left aren't accepting new patients. ER wait times are stretching longer than a business day. This government's response has been unjust and hurts our communities. My question for the Minister of Health is simple. Will he stand up today and commit to prioritizing Alberta's children and invest public dollars in reducing wait times and sourcing supplies for pediatric care?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has the call.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I was very pleased today to announce with the Premier to address one of the issues raised by the hon. member, and that is the purchase of 5 million bottles of ibuprofen and acetaminophen, because the shelves are empty, and we know that that's a hardship not only on Alberta parents, but it's also a hardship on our children's hospitals because parents can't treat their children at home. With this announcement, we are moving forward with bringing 5 million bottles into the province once we get Health Canada approval, which I'm very hopeful we can do in the next few weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that that's not enough because the current state of our system is so bad that hospitals have been forced to pause respite services and given that this crisis was preventable from the very beginning – children are getting sick from preventable illnesses, and we know the solutions that are needed to keep them healthy and well – will the minister take the responsibility and apologize to this House and all Albertans for failing our children and neglecting their needs in favour of his political games?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to appoint Dr. Joffe as the chief medical officer of health, and I was very pleased when he put out guidance to Alberta parents. We are in flu season. There are respiratory viruses that are circulating, so Dr. Joffe put out guidance to parents, and first and foremost in that was: go get your flu shot. I'm very pleased that we are actually running a flu campaign. Perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-South got the text – I know I got it on my phone – to go get your flu shot. We also asked parents to make the choice to get all the shots that are available for them so they can protect themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that at least one minister is willing to tell Albertans to get their flu shot and given that he's previously known that Alberta's pediatric care is under strain and given that doctors and medical professionals across this province have stated that this government's Band-Aid solutions are simply not enough, will the minister commit to funding an expedited completion of the Edmonton south hospital so that my constituents can finally see some current measures to assist in health care?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are taking action to be able to support our hospital system and to support strictly our system targeted at children. We've made a number of changes to be able to get staff where they're needed, and what we're doing is that we're expanding capacity, capacity across the entire spectrum, not only in hospital beds but also in the emergency departments. We have put in place, for example, in the Alberta Children's hospital a fast-track system so we can actually treat people immediately and allow them to go home, and as I already said, we're bringing in Tylenol.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The recent ATA pulse survey shows the devastating impact of the current UCP government on students, staff, and families in Alberta schools. Challenging class sizes, growing complexity of students, and a lack of resources are just some of the issues that have resulted in unacceptable levels of stress. More than 90 per cent of teachers have said that they are exhausted at the end of each day, and more than half of them plan to leave the profession within five years. Will the Minister of Education apologize for driving teachers from the profession?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I just want to share with the whole House that 1,253 teachers took part in the survey. There are over 46,000 teachers in the ATA. As well, there are other teachers that teach outside of the ATA. That being said, it is of prime concern for me to address the issues that are happening within our school authorities. Yes, we've been working on all these issues, including class size, and I've invited the ATA president and his executive to meet with me.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, given that the government is forcing school staff to work double duty by requiring school boards to ensure that all students have both in-person and online learning when there are large numbers of kids sick without providing any new supports – we need more staff in schools is the answer – and given that many schools have seen an average of 10 per cent absenteeism among students and the CBE reported last week that 122 teaching jobs were unfilled, 54 support staff jobs weren't filled, will the Minister of Education finally wake up and listen to the students, staff, and families and what they've been telling her? They need help to deliver quality public education.

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, if the member opposite took the time to actually listen to parents, she'd know that they want stability in their school system. If she took the time to listen to school boards, she would know that they want that clarity. In fact, what we provided was clarity to the school authority. The member opposite's old school board – she was a board chair for Edmonton public school division. The new chair, Trisha Estabrooks, said recently, and I quote: all Albertans now understand that it's not within the jurisdiction, nor should it ever have been within the jurisdiction, of individual school boards to make decisions that belong to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Given that the ATA survey revealed that the majority of teachers are using their personal funds to purchase resources necessary to help them deliver the UCP's disastrous curriculum and given that 84 per cent of teachers report students having huge gaps in their learning and not being able to understand the UCP curriculum, will the Minister of Education admit what educators have already been telling her for more than two years, that students deserve better than her disastrous curriculum, which is hurting our international reputation and Alberta students?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, what students deserve is less fearmongering from the other side. That's what they deserve. In fact, the curriculum is being implemented and is going extremely well. In fact, I met with every single school division, and you know what they didn't raise? They didn't raise the curriculum. They didn't raise curriculum implementation. No, they didn't. In fact, they raised transportation issues, mental health and wellness issues, and capital issues, but curriculum was not on it. In fact, I can go back to the fact that we had teachers piloting the curriculum through the pandemic who saw outstanding outcomes. [interjections]

Ms Issik: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have been struggling to receive consistent, quality health care for far too long. I'm hearing concerns from my constituents that our health care system is unable to meet the current and growing demand. Their concerns are not unique, however. Across the province Albertans are demanding that Alberta Health take action and make the necessary changes to address the ongoing issues. Alberta Health Services is under reform and as a first step has seen appointed an official administrator, Dr. John Cowell. Can the Minister of Health please explain why replacing an 11-person board with a sole administrator was deemed the best solution for our health care crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for her question. We know that the health system is under strain here in Alberta. This is similar across the entire country, in all provinces across the country. The part-time AHS board did great work, but we need full-time leadership to provide urgent, efficient, effective, timely, and decisive leadership to improve productivity and health care outcomes. The appointment of Dr. John Cowell as the official administrator fills that need perfectly, and I am looking forward to seeing the changes that he'll be making over the coming weeks. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore has the call.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's government has acknowledged that the current system was not working and that there's an overdue need for responsible health care and has since committed to making Alberta Health its number one priority and given that Albertans can no longer continue to accept increasing wait times and are eager to start seeing prompt changes in their health care system, can the Minister of Health outline what next steps will be taken to address the issues of our health care system? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks once again to the hon. member. Dr. Cowell has hit the ground running, and we have identified four areas that need his swift attention: first, to improve EMS response times; second, to decrease emergency room wait times; third, to reduce wait times for surgery; and finally, to develop long-term reforms through consultation with front-line workers and others to drive down decision-making. We need quick action on these goals, and I'm confident that he and AHS will make the changes necessary to alleviate the strain on our health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Issik: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that Alberta Health Services is actively working towards operating at its fullest potential and aims to have reforms completed as soon as possible and given that Dr. Cowell has been entrusted to work closely with health partners and drive the necessary changes promised to Alberta families and given that immediate action is vital to ensuring Alberta families have access to the first-class health care they deserve, can the minister outline how Albertans will be assured that the official administrator is successfully effecting change?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks once again to the hon. member. We all know that you manage what you measure. That is why we have actually put in place a number of measurements to be able to track the progress that AHS is making. These indicators include reduced response time from an emergency call to ambulance arrival, reduced waiting times in Alberta's emergency rooms, reduced surgery wait times within clinically acceptable wait times, the number of calls appropriately stepped down from 911 to Health Link. These are just a few of the measures that we'll be using to track progress, and we are taking the steps needed to make sure that right changes are being made to strengthen our health care system.

Kananaskis Conservation Pass

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, since June 2021 Albertans have been forced to pay to visit Kananaskis. The government's K pass program has raked in $50 million, dollars that should never have been taken from the hard-working people of this province. Even worse, $2 million of that went to a security firm to enforce the pass. This government cost Albertans millions and lied about where that money went, all while this government operates on a surplus. Can the minister please explain to Albertans why they continue to pay for this pass? Can't we all just enjoy Kananaskis for free, the way Peter Lougheed intended?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much for that question, my very first of this session. I'd like to talk about our parks here. I like to promote them everywhere. As for the K pass, it's under review with a new Premier and a new crew. We want to ensure it's fair and good and accomplishing all that it should. Viewing a mountain, its peaks like a steeple, it's a fact that parks are for people.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that there once was a man from Nantucket . . .

The Speaker: No preambles.

Mr. Schmidt: Many people in Alberta want to spend their time off enjoying Alberta's mountains, but given the cost-of-living crisis, the government's absurd K pass program has made a trip to the mountains infeasible for many Albertans and given that the Premier herself has described the K pass program as ridiculous and said that she was in agreement with the NDP that this pass should not continue, can the minister tell us when Albertans will not have to pay the K pass any longer?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thanks again for the question. I'm resisting the urge to go into Dr. Seuss rhyme again.

This government is focused on the concerns of Albertans. We're concerned on affordability, health care, and dealing with an obstructionist federal government. However, we can walk and chew gum at the same time, so we are working on other issues, too, including the K pass, and making sure that our parks are serving the needs of Albertans and our visitors and, of course, increasing tourism. The K pass is one of those things we are reviewing and working on.

Thank you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Schmidt: Given that many people choose to live in Alberta because of our unique access to outdoor landscapes and given that the usage of Alberta's parks has hit record numbers during the pandemic, with provincial parks seeing around a 48 per cent increase in visitors since 2020, and given that Albertans' budgets are simply stretched too thin at the moment, why is the minister still reviewing this when he knows full well that this would help Albertans visit Kananaskis Country today? Don't wait for a review; just repeal the K pass today. Why can't he commit to that?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thanks again for the question. It's always interesting to hear the NDP talk about cost and how things are costing Albertans. Of course, the NDP brought in a carbon tax that they didn't campaign on, and that increased the cost of everything for all Albertans. Now, we know that they're supporting their comrades in Ottawa regarding the tripling of the carbon tax. Maybe it's a news flash to them, but in order to travel and enjoy the parks like Kananaskis, the people of Alberta have to pay for gas and increased carbon tax fees. If they want to do something for Albertans . . .

WCB Cancer Coverage for Firefighters

Ms Gray: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the minister of jobs if he would echo the Official Opposition's pledge to support firefighters who responded to the Horse River wildfire in Fort McMurray. Nearly 2,500 structures were destroyed, and firefighters were exposed to massive amounts of toxins and carcinogens for days without the ability to decontaminate. The minister declined and instead suggested individual cases should come to him. Why won't this government do the right thing, commit to extending presumptive cancer coverage to these heroes? They should not have to reach out to the minister individually on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, that's not what I said, but I would like to acknowledge right now that firefighters have a very demanding job. We need to have their back when it's necessary, and it's necessary now. That's why Alberta was one of the first jurisdictions in Canada to put forward presumptive coverage. Every single firefighter in Fort McMurray or otherwise in Alberta has that ability to be presumed and have presumptive coverage. But what I need to say right now is that with this experienced higher risks for firefighters – and that's on a continual basis; not just the Fort McMurray firefighters – why didn't the NDP, when they were in government, do something about it?

Ms Gray: Given a Fort McMurray firefighter with 10 years of service fought the Horse River wildfire and was subsequently diagnosed with kidney cancer, given this Fort McMurray wildfire firefighter and his family were denied coverage when he didn't meet the cancer latency period – he has since passed, and his family is still appealing four years later – given a Leduc firefighter who fought the same wildfire is currently going through the appeals process after being denied coverage for the same reason and given the minister stated these firefighters already qualify for presumptive coverage when they do not, will the minister meet with the APFFPA and other firefighters?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we're always monitoring these complex issues. They're evidence based. If the evidence proves that this is caused as a result of their service, it's included in the list. We're constantly updating it. But would I meet with firefighters? I've been in politics for almost 20 years, and I'll meet with anybody any time, especially those people that serve Albertans.

Ms Gray: Given that yesterday the minister was unaware that Alberta is no longer the leader in the country in presumptive cancer coverage, given that Yukon, B.C., Manitoba, Ontario, and Newfoundland are now covering cancers Alberta does not, like penile, pancreatic, and thyroid, given that Alberta firefighters are being denied coverage for those cancers and given we have new research like that from the International Agency for Research on Cancer, will this minister and government commit, like the Official Opposition has, to updating presumptive cancer coverage based on the latest science?

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, that party was in power just three years ago, and what did they do for the firefighters and for this? Nothing. We are working on it. It's a complex matter. It's evidence based, and we're working to balance what's in the best interest of firefighters and the best interest of Albertans because they work together.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Taber-Warner.

Highway 3 Twinning

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 25 of this year a decades-long-awaited announcement was provided to southern Albertans. The Premier along with the transportation and Infrastructure ministers joined me in Medicine Hat to announce the twinning of not only the stretch of highway between Taber and Burdett but also the twinning of the whole of highway 3. To the Premier or the minister of transportation: why was it so important to announce this critical piece of infrastructure now?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. member for his advocacy for twinning highway 3. I was proud to stand beside him, the Premier, and the Deputy Premier to announce that we are twinning highway 3, and that'll be a four-lane highway from Medicine Hat all the way to the B.C. border. It'll safely keep up to the economic growth in southern Alberta, especially when we're seeing huge gains in the agriculture and oil and gas industries down there. As a government we will attract investment, secure jobs, and protect communities all across this province.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Minister. Given many in southern Alberta have been waiting for a long time for this announcement and given that the corridor between Lethbridge and Medicine Hat has become a major agrifood processing corridor in Canada, can the minister tell us what this important twinning project will do to grow the agrifood processing corridor in this area?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the hon. Member for Taber-Warner has not only advocated to twin highway 3 but has also helped to bring in investment all across southern Alberta. This government has helped to create a game changer investment to expand 200,000 more irrigated acres in southern Alberta, and that's attracted ready-to-eat potato product processors, sugar beet processors, expanded our livestock sector, so these types of investments that the government is doing really do help job creators in this province, which have strong families and strong communities all across the province.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that I mentioned in my earlier question that the stretch of highway between Taber and Burdett is to be twinned and given the fact that this stretch of road will be the first of eight sections to be twinned, can the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors please provide this House with more information about when shovels will be in the ground on this first section?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question: next spring, but not if, though, Alberta had federal NDP representatives as their provincial government. Now, the NDP want to bring in restrictive contract arrangements that will actually spark labour wars here in the province of Alberta. Look what the NDP just did in B.C. They increased the cost of provincial construction projects about 20 to 30 per cent. The NDP drastically reduced the number of bidders on these projects, cutting the number of eligible contractors, although if they are friends of the NDP with their big union bosses, they do get to bid on the contracts, but we're never going to see that here in the province of Alberta with this government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period. In 30 seconds or less we will return to the remainder of the daily Routine.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice of Government Motion 14, sponsored by myself.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, is resumed, no more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

I also rise to give oral notice of Government Motion 15, sponsored by myself.

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, is resumed, no more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Introduction of Bills

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

Mr. Shandro: Mr. Speaker, I ask for leave for first reading of I guess it would be Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2).

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader has a tabling.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Official Opposition met with members of the APFFPA, the Alberta Professional Fire Fighters & Paramedics Association. I am tabling five copies of their three lobby papers: Addressing the Crisis in EMS and Pre-hospital Care; Government of Alberta Restriction on Alberta Pension Services; and Presumptive Cancer Coverages – Firefighter in Alberta Cancer Registry – Catastrophic Traumatic Exposures.

The Speaker: Are there other tablings? The hon. the Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is a white paper by the Canadian Federation of Independent Grocers showing that grocers make 2 per cent margins. I have the five requisite copies here.

The second one I have is a report by Dalhousie University showing that there are many reasons for the higher prices we're seeing on grocery store shelves, but one of them is not gouging from grocery retailers. I have the five requisite copies as well.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 3

Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice has the call.

Mr. Shandro: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm more prepared for this one, so thank you very much. I'm pleased to rise to move second reading of Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Albertans value their land. They work hard for it. They work hard to maintain it. They work hard to improve it. It's their home. It's their place of relaxation and recreation. And for some folks, like our farmers and ranchers, the land is also their livelihood. Given how hard Albertans work for their land and how important it is to them, Alberta's laws should be there to protect property rights for the owners of this land. However, under current provincial law it's possible for Albertans to have their land taken away from them through adverse possession. Now, this means that someone who has been squatting upon privately owned land can go to court and potentially claim ownership if they've been occupying the land for 10 years.

As it stands now, adverse possessors can't try to claim public land or municipal land or land in irrigation districts. This proposed legislation wants to make this the same for privately held land. Allowing squatters to take land away from hard-working Albertans, who are the rightful landowners, is unfair. It creates stress for landowners because they have to constantly police the property and to protect it from adverse possession; for example, by monitoring property lines and continually fixing fences. Someone who has inherited or paid for the land and is the registered owner shouldn't have to face a constant and nebulous threat of losing it. The Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, proposes changes which will remove this threat and give private landowners the same protections that are currently in place for public land.

Bill 3 proposes to amend three existing pieces of legislation: first, the Law of Property Act; second, the Land Titles Act; and, third, the Limitations Act. Amendments to the Law of Property Act would abolish adverse possession. Amendments to section 69 of this act include additional core powers to resolve any disputes that could arise.

The Land Titles Act is being amended to permit a court order issued under the new section 69 of the Law of Property Act to be registered at the land titles office once the office is certain there will be no appeal of the court's decision. Amendments to the Land Titles Act will also protect titles that are already existing when these have been issued on the basis of a court order finding adverse possession.

The Limitations Act is being amended to remove limitation periods for a claim to recover possession of real property and for a claim respecting lasting improvements or encroachments under the Law of Property Act. Specifically, when a registered owner starts an action to recover possession of land, the adverse possessor will not be able to use a defence of adverse possession. Amendments would also keep in place a 10-year limitation period to recover possession of real property for an adverse possession claim that begins before adverse possession is abolished.

If these changes pass, folks will no longer be able to go to court to claim adverse possession of land that they are on, and if someone is possessing land that they are not the registered owner of, registered owners can get a court order to get the land back at any time. Now, Mr. Speaker, make no mistake: these proposed changes are dearly sought by Albertans. This fact is based on consultations and recommendations from various interested groups. Back in 2016 the Property Rights Advocate recommended abolishing adverse possession in their annual report, and in 2020 the Alberta Law Reform Institute also recommended abolishing adverse possession here in Alberta.

A number of hon. members as well, hon. members of this Assembly, led consultations with stakeholders and the public over several months in 2021 and '22 as members of the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights. Now, part of this committee's mandate was to consider whether the law of adverse possession should be abolished. During their consultations the committee received many heartfelt pleas and requests from Albertans, farmers, landowners to abolish it and recommended as much in their final report. I want to thank this committee for listening to Albertans and making this recommendation on their behalf. The work of the committee along with the recommendations of expert groups send a strong message that adverse possession should be abolished.

Now, before I finish, I also want to give a shout-out to Mr. Ken Allred, who is the former Member for St. Albert, a former professional land surveyor, and who has had concerns about adverse possession for over 50 years. In fact, 10 years ago, in 2012, he had a private member's bill proposing to abolish adverse possession in this province. Unfortunately, at that time, 10 years ago, that private member's bill died on the Order Paper. Now, Mr. Speaker, the question of abolishing adverse possession has been brought before this House before, and we're very happy to continue the work that was started by Mr. Ken Allred.

I'm hoping that Bill 3 will have a different output than his private member's bill and that both sides of this House will support getting rid of someone's ability to essentially steal another person's property. If passed, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, will send a clear message that squatting cannot lead to ownership. It would allow Alberta's landowners to use and to enjoy their property without the ongoing burden of making sure that no one is using it and the constant worry of potentially losing their land. It will strengthen Alberta's property rights law and bring peace of mind to landowners across the province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to move second reading of Bill 3. Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Minister of Justice has moved second reading of Bill 3. Are there are others wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak at second reading of Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. I've taken the chance to read the bill, something which I think all members of the Assembly should do before they stand up and speak and debate on a bill, actually read the bill. Sorry. I know that shouldn't have to be said, but given what we've seen from this government caucus over the last week or so, I think it's a timely reminder that one should know the bills. When they're going to speak out and make accusations about what it means, you should first understand what it means.

I've had the opportunity to look over Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act. Essentially, Mr. Speaker, I think there's pretty much consensus within the members of the – I don't want to presume for my colleagues, of course, but there does seem to be a consensus around what this bill is intended to address, which is, of course, to essentially limit or eliminate the common-law adverse possession rights.

Most people might be familiar with the idea of adverse possession, maybe not in its formal sense of the word but the idea of squatter's rights. The idea that if – we've all heard the old saying, Mr. Speaker, you know, that possession is nine-tenths of the law – you've possessed a piece of land or property for a period of time, eventually it becomes yours: that's sort of the underlying principle behind this sort of adverse possession, that if an individual has occupied an area of land for a significant period of time and has exercised use of that land, then it becomes theirs and they have a legal entitlement to that land.

Of course, there are many who would have strong objections, and we know that based on consultations that were done not only by this government through their Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights, but also there have been consultations done by numerous other bodies, including the Alberta Law Reform Institute, to really evaluate what the perception is by Albertans, particularly rural landowners, about adverse possession. Generally speaking, you know, it tends to fly in the face of what we understand is fair and right, that somebody might be able to take claim to your property simply by using it or are occupying it without your permission. That does seem to be an affront to most people's understanding of what's fair and what's right.

Now, what we do know is that the actual claim of adverse possession rights under the common law has actually been quite rare. It's not actually something that has been exercised to prove an entitlement. But, again, it goes back to this idea of principles and what is fair and what is right. So it has been, you know, sort of an issue that has not been addressed statutorily in Alberta for some time.

In fact, I note that a number of jurisdictions do already have – they've addressed through legislation, through statute rights to basically eliminate adverse possession. Unfortunately, Alberta has not followed that, and it's a little bit, you know – it seems contrary to what we kind of know about the strong sense of pride that Albertans, and particularly rural Albertans, take in their land and their property.

Of course, often on rural properties there isn't clear delineation the way we would see it in urban centres, where you have an idea of what your property line is: you've got a city, municipality comes out and assesses it, and you've got your property lines and you usually have a fence or something. Of course, in rural areas it may not be that clear, so often encroachments onto somebody else's land are not as obvious. It may be, you know, a section of a piece of land. But we do know that that concern is out there, and it is high time, I believe, that we address that through legislation.

I'm happy to see that this bill has come forward, and I know that a number of the members of our caucus as well as the government caucus sat on that select special committee on real property and heard from a number of Albertans that wanted to see adverse possession, you know, essentially limited or eliminated through legislation. I'm glad to see this come forward. One of the things that I think – of course, in second reading we're talking about things in a high level. I have read the bill, and there are a couple of questions. It seems to align with a number of the recommendations that have come forward through a number of bodies, including the Alberta Law Reform Institute.

The Alberta Law Reform Institute issued I believe it is in 2017 – they did a fulsome kind of analysis of adverse possession, and they issued a final report that sort of outlined the recommendations about the pieces of legislation that would have to be changed and amended to address these issues around adverse possession. Further to that Alberta Law Reform Institute Report, we know that, you know, our Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights went out and consulted and basically reached similar conclusions about how legislation should be amended.

One of the things that I, you know, was looking for – and I want to give credit, actually, to an article that was written on September 10, 2019, by Stella Varvis. It's sort of a blog post put on ABlawg.ca, which is a law blog. Shout-out to anybody who watched Arrested Development. Bob Loblaw's law blog. No? Okay. Anyways, it's a law blog written by University of Calgary law professors on various issues. Stella Varvis wrote a blog post about the end of adverse possession and sort of outlined a number of things that we should look for when it actually comes time to do that.

The first issue that should be addressed is that, you know, we know that in adverse possession usually there's a 10-year limitation period. An individual has to have occupied it for at least 10 years, and that occupation must be exclusive, open, notorious, and continuous. That's the sort of standard. Stella Varvis, in her blog post, was essentially saying: okay; look, if we're going to be eliminating adverse possession through statute, we need to make sure that we aren't sort of messing with – it's probably not the term she used; it's not the term she used – any adverse possession claims that had come before this law had come into force. It's basically saying that if there have been adverse possession claims that have been made prior to any amendments being made, they should be held in force, and the same should apply for any pending claims. If there are any matters before the courts at the time that this bill would, say, perhaps be proclaimed, then we would ensure that those claims could proceed under the previous common law.

I believe that that is addressed in the bill, in Bill 3. My reading of it suggests that section 1(3) of Bill 3 does seem to address that by basically saying that, you know, when this bill would come into force and that any – I'm looking at the addition of section 74.1 to the Land Titles Act and subsection (2), which says that "any successful claim to quiet title recovered under the former provision continues," which seems to suggest that, yes, any claims that happened before the act comes into effect would be continuing. That seems to address that concern as well as that any ongoing claims would also continue. So I believe that appears to be addressed.

These are the kinds of questions I'm posing with the hope that perhaps the Minister of Justice could also comment as to whether his reading is the same, that it does address these issues. I assume he is capable of reading the bill and understanding it.

Another issue that was raised in this law blog was about whether claims to recover possession of real property can be brought in at any time. Section 69 of the – and I'm going to remind myself – Law of Property Act, yes, talks about what happens when somebody who does not legally have title to land but has been occupying and using the lands for a period of time and made improvements, significant improvements to the land. In that case it would be, for example, somebody has, through a mistake, perhaps not intending to deliberately try to possess somebody else's land, occupied on land and built something. Maybe they've built a building, a farmhouse, a house, some sort of improvement . . .

Mr. Dach: A well.

Ms Pancholi: . . . a well, dug a well. There's a good example from the Member for Edmonton-McClung.

But they've actually invested and improved on the land. What happens to that person's claim to that property? Of course, there needs to be some clarity as to how that's addressed, and one of the suggestions was, of course, that we ensure that, similarly, there is no limitation on which an individual who has actually improved the land may be able to recover their title to that. Again, that limitation does seem to be removed in Bill 3, but I do seek clarification from the Minister of Justice to confirm that. It does seem to be – I'm looking on page 5 of the bill, I believe it is. Yes. It amends the Limitations Act section 3(2), which does seem to suggest that there is no limitation period on a claimant who has made improvements to the land. That, again, seems to be addressed by the bill.

The fourth issue is that the blog suggests that there should not actually be significant changes to the definitions in section 69 of the Law of Property Act, that essentially it doesn't change who is defined as somebody who has an interest and that there's no requirement that there be proof that the individual had a mistaken belief. Again, I believe that that is addressed in the bill, but I would seek confirmation from the Minister of Justice on that issue.

The next thing that I sort of looked at, Madam Speaker, was the recommendations that came out of the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights, of course, that members of both government and opposition caucus were part of, because they did come forward with a number of specific recommendations around adverse possession. When looking at this final report, which was issued in June of this year, the committee advised that it recommended adopting the Law Reform Institute recommendations that I referred to earlier and indicated that, yes, they support a recommendation that the Land Titles Act be amended to abolish any future claims of adverse possession as well as that the Law of Property Act be amended to provide that an assign does not have to prove the belief of the person who made an improvement.

That, Madam Speaker, refers to the idea that when somebody has made improvements on the land and that maybe gets passed down to somebody else, a family member, because when we're talking about this kind of possession of land, we're often talking about it going back decades and generations, it's not the responsibility of an heir or an assign to follow to actually have to prove that, you know, their parent, their grandparent, their great-grandparent had a genuine belief. They don't have to prove that; it's simply assumed because that's often an impossible thing to prove. That's what the committee recommended, that it not be required to be proved, and I believe that's reflected in the bill and that the limitation periods be addressed as discussed in that law blog that was issued. That's another recommendation that came from the committee. Once again, it appears that that has been addressed.

I outline this, Madam Speaker, only to say that, you know, those are the checks and balances that we would normally go through when we're looking at these kinds of changes. We would look at what committee work has been done, what consultation has been done, what, shockingly, the experts believe on something, and in this case – right? – the experts from the Alberta Law Reform Institute have done the analysis. I believe in following expert advice and considering that seriously. Again, that should not be a controversial statement, but it seems to be more and more controversial with this government and this Premier.

You'd look at all of those pieces. You'd look, of course, at the landowners themselves and their feedback, and I believe that was very much the work of the committee, to travel around and do that kind of analysis and listen to landowners and hear what their concerns are and then to draft legislation that meets those recommendations, legislation that has thoughtfully gone through all of the proper processes: legislative review committee, cabinet committee, all of those things, the rigours and processes that we would expect from strong legislation. That's what we'd want to see. I can say that it appears that with Bill 3 that has happened. I can't say that that's happened for all the bills that have been brought forward by this government and this Premier so far this session, but certainly in this case it does seem to reflect that.

Now, that doesn't mean that there aren't still questions for implications for, for example, the courts. If we are going to remove this common-law principle of adverse possession, are there implications for the courts, especially when removing the limitation periods for claims related to improvements that have been made on land? Has any analysis been done, you know, by the government as to whether or not there will be any implications for the court system? I think this is an important question to ask, Madam Speaker, as we know that our court systems continue to be under enormous strain with limited resources. What are the implications? Are there any? I think that's a question to ask.

The other key issue that I would raise, Madam Speaker, which – I would have to go back, and perhaps those members who were on the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights can speak to this when they have an opportunity. I'd like to know what the feedback was from Indigenous groups such as First Nations and Métis associations about what consultation was done. You know, when we're talking about adverse possession, we're usually talking about adverse possession on private land, not Crown land. There are obviously different considerations that happen on Crown land, but I would want to be satisfied that we have consulted appropriately and that there has been an opportunity for feedback and assessment of any lands where potentially Métis and First Nations may be occupying to be sure that there are no implications here that may affect their treaty rights. Again, I will put that to members of the caucus, government and opposition, who may have sat on committee, to say what feedback they would have received, because I didn't hear any reflection of those comments from the Minister of Justice when he introduced this bill for second reading.

Madam Speaker, as I mentioned, this is really a bill that I think we can fundamentally support with some questions answered. We want to bring our legislation with respect to property rights in line with what other jurisdictions have done. We know that this is an improvement over Bill 206, which was a private member's bill that was brought forward that didn't quite think through all of these pieces regarding limitation periods, and it appears that, you know, the committee's work as well as this bill are an attempt to address some of the challenges that were brought forward in that private member's bill.

You know, we think it's deeply important that we have clarity around a lot of things related to property rights, economic investment, and making sure that we know that property owners, both landowners as well as businesses, require certainty. It's a principle that we fundamentally agree with, and particularly now, when Alberta is at position, at a time of potentially great opportunity, certainty is more important than ever. That's what we hear loud and clear from the business community, from the oil and gas sector, from those who have major projects. They want to know that there is certainty. That's why we do not support any legislation that's going to bring greater chaos and uncertainty to our economy such as Bill 1 brought forward by this government.

Our principles have been pretty clear on this, Madam Speaker. We know which way the economy needs. When we talk to all of those individuals – now, I've been doing this work; I know my colleagues have as well – across the province, they want to have some certainty with respect to their rights, and they want to have certainty with respect to investments and the growth of their oil and gas sector or agriculture or forestry. Whatever the sector, we need that kind of certainty.

So this is a bill that I believe, Madam Speaker, we will or at least I can say that I will support. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to it today, and I look forward to the opportunity to speak to it again at further debate.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on second reading of Bill 3? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to rise and to speak to Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. As a member of the committee that did travel the province to do consultation on the potential changes that were going to be under what was Bill 206 and now have been drafted as Bill 3, we heard quite a bit of feedback in relation to a variety of different things that could be changed. I am pleased to see that Bill 3 does incorporate the recommendations that came out of the final report and that it looks like there will be a shift to address some of the concerns that were brought forward.

I think one of the things that I also appreciate about Bill 3 and something that all members of the Chamber can appreciate is that this was a bipartisan committee where we were able to travel the province together and do consultation together in a collaborative way and have something that was created that, I think, addresses the concerns that were brought forward. You know, the opposition and the government do have the ability to work together and to come up with something that addresses the concerns that Albertans have. My hope is that the government will choose to listen to the opposition on some other things and maybe withdraw their other bills.

[Mr. Orr in the chair]

But in relation to Bill 3 I have a couple of questions that I'm hoping at some point the minister will be able to address, and part of that was around the submission that the RMA submitted to the committee. I don't see it. In fairness, you know, I'm still going through the bill and trying to make sure that everything is in there.

One of the things that was brought up by the Rural Municipalities association was the concern around the financial compensation when it comes to the various districts that municipalities have to develop when it comes to land management and the concern that the compensation for landowners, if the regulation is changed around the impacts of private property rights or removing this land-use planning authority, could become problematic for municipalities. Now, I don't know if that is addressed in this piece of legislation, if that has been acknowledged, or if we are saying that the financial remedy component that exists in the bill would be primarily between two landowners side by side or something that has been structurally built. But we do know that there have been concerns in the past that were brought up in regard to a quarter section of land that's been used or had had a highway expansion zoned for it or an intersection potentially being built and then a dispute occurring between who actually owned that land, whether it was landowner A or landowner B, and who was going to be compensated for the loss of that section.

The question, I think, again, goes back to: how will this work in practicality when we're looking at municipalities trying to do appropriate planning? You know, there will be concerns around economic growth, looking at the fact that there are also the concerns around external impacts like noise and pollution, traffic around certain areas. How will that be addressed under these pieces of legislation to ensure that municipalities have the capacity to be able to grow and work with their REDAs and incorporate their expansion or their growth within their communities while also ensuring that we are protecting landowners' rights? I do have that question.

I do also have the question in regard to the financial compensation piece, which is the section on the Law of Property Act. Section 69 is repealed. Then we have section 69(1), lasting improvements or buildings made on wrong land. I am anticipating that this is just going to be able to grant the courts the ability to move through all three of these different components, whether it be that the order would be that the improvements be removed or abandoned, that an easement be put and limited in time, or that the improver acquire the land on which the improvements are made from the registered owner of the land in the amount and what terms the court thinks.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

As long as we are working in a way that there is an agreement by the courts that either the structure is removed – I think the example that my colleague mentioned was around whether or not it would be some form of a well or a fenceline. We could be looking at, again, if we're talking about expansion of roads – some of that is pretty permanent infrastructure; it's not as easily removed – ensuring that there is compensation that is appropriate.

I am curious. When the minister is able to respond at some point, I don't believe that there is any type and if it would be a regulation or not around what those compensation levels would look like. Is it going to just be an assessment of property value? Is there going to be impact? What will the scope be in the ability to ensure that that is happening and that the dispute is being able to be resolved? I know we heard some examples at committee of an ongoing dispute around a fenceline that was actually within city limits. It was between two homeowners, and there was a significant dispute between what side the fence was on and whose property it was on. This dispute has been going on for it sounds like a significant period of time. I think they were at, like, 10 years of trying to work with the city on getting the zoning re-evaluated and property lines reassessed. I couldn't even imagine the relationship between the two neighbours in relation to trying to live side by side while disputing whether or not the fence is on their property or someone else's property but that it was something that – it just continuously kept coming up and has been going on for a significant period of time, so it would be interesting to hear, you know, sort of the remedy of how this would work in a piece like that.

Now, I know we had some other submissions that also came in through CAPP more specific to the bill that we were currently consulting on, which was Bill 206, which, you know, dropped off the Order Paper and quickly became Bill 3. Well, not quickly; I think we spent quite a few months travelling the province. But there were some recommendations, I think, that came through that are not reflected in the bill, and I think there's fairness in the submission that some of the pieces that were submitted to the committee were outside the scope of what this piece of legislation really was intended to do.

But there were some comments made around the burdens of the AER and trying to ensure that there is no duplication of effort between what business and stakeholders have to go through and whether or not this piece of legislation would actually impede or impact any regulatory or policy shifts through some of that evaluation or regulation that needs to be done. So I'd be curious to hear from one of the ministers in relation to if there is any overlap or any potential conflict between what, let's say, for example, the oil and gas industry already has to go through in getting approval for, you know, being able to build a new well or looking at pipeline or any of those kinds of things, if this will create a second level that they will have to then work through in relation to what they're already doing with the AER.

I think we would see that similarly with our grazing lease holders, and of course some of the forestry industry may have some questions in relation to this and just how those land management agreements are going to be reflected. How does this bill interact with those pieces of legislation? Of course, we want to ensure that when we're looking at property rights – and this piece of legislation is addressing the concerns that were brought forward at committee, but also we want to make sure that it hasn't now created a second stream. Is there a way to ensure that policies or regulations are being streamlined between this piece of legislation and anything else that currently exists when it comes to working through those approval processes?

I would be curious to hear from the Minister of Justice if he consulted with his counterparts in the ministry of agriculture, in the Ministry of Energy as well as the ministry of – what is it now? – forestry and protected areas? [interjection] Oh, yes. Sorry.

Member Irwin: Yes. Thank you so much to the Member for Edmonton-Manning. I'm just blown away by her knowledge on this, and I know she was one of the committee members as well. You know, I just thought I'd jump up when she mentioned – she's been asking a lot of really important, critical questions of the Justice minister, so I am hopeful that we will hear from the Justice minister. We've got a lot of questions for him.

I'm also hopeful that we'll hear from the members opposite. You know, this is one of their bills, and they've said that many of them are quite passionate about this. They mentioned it in the opening remarks, that they're hearing from a lot of their constituents, so it's a little intriguing that so far it's only been NDP members speaking to this bill. I honestly want to learn more about it. I can admit that I'm no property rights expert, so I would love to hear from the UCP members about, you know, what the impetus is and what they're hearing from their constituents. Again, admittedly, I'm no expert on this. That would be my request.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Member.

Actually, maybe just for a point of clarity, Madam Speaker, for myself, is the chair of the committee allowed to speak if you've taken on a different role?

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. What do you mean?

Ms Sweet: Well, the member that was the chair of this committee is now, I believe, a parliamentary secretary, so are they allowed to speak to the bill? Just out of curiosity, not that I'm requesting that he does, but I can't remember what all the different rules are.

The Deputy Speaker: Yeah. Of course, he can speak as a member, just like any other member, for his allotted time frame on any number one stage of the bill or amendment.

Ms Sweet: I couldn't remember if parliamentary secretaries were allowed to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: But perhaps what you are seeking is best done in a committee stage process for more of a back and forth, and you'll get what you seek. But he can speak when he has time.

Ms Sweet: Thank you. With all the changes I wasn't quite sure who is considered a private member and who's part of executive and all the things now.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll clarify. In question period, no, that wouldn't be allowed in that relationship, but certainly in this Assembly you can do whatever you want, almost.

Ms Sweet: Oh. Well, let's see. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, that could be fun.

Anyway, going back again to some of the other questions that did come up, I do recognize that this is intertwined with a variety of different ministries in how this can be interpreted and how this can be impacted. You know, coming from being in government, I do know that you can create one piece of legislation, and then that will sometimes have trickle effects into other pieces of legislation, and sometimes it works and sometimes it doesn't.

Again, I am hoping that at some point we'll get some of the clarity around specifically, I think, some of the submissions that were provided to the committee. You know, we had some agricultural producers that also submitted to the committee asking for some clarity around the surface landowners regarding their rights when it comes to pore spaces and specifically the groundwater, expanding of property rights, the right to sell, protect, and the right of compensation, which I think is covered in here.

The pore space question, though, which came up from a variety of different stakeholders: pore space wasn't just from crop producers, but pore space came up from our Western Stock Growers', Grazing Leaseholders Association. Maybe I missed it, and I'm happy to get clarity again, but I don't know if this question was answered or if the government has a plan around that. Maybe it's something that's still in the works, or maybe it's not in the works. It is kind of an ongoing conversation, I think, when we start looking at carbon capture and what that means.

The Deputy Speaker: Other members to join the debate? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Sigurdson: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm actually really excited today to stand up in support of Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. As the member was stating previously, I was the chair of the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights. We engaged this work. We submitted, of course, the report midsummer. I was extremely excited about the opportunity to be able to be the chair of this initiative, travel around the province, and engage in this very important conversation which does surround property rights, which many of us expressed as actually being one of the foundational pillars of our freedom in our country.

Throughout that process we engaged in many different ways. You know, we had some limited capacity at times during COVID, but of course we did have the opportunity to be able to travel around to locations throughout the province – north, central, south – and allow individuals to be able to approach us and bring to us the issues that mattered to them most.

What I would say is that throughout that process adverse possession came up numerous times, and what I think I found was shocking more than anything was that Alberta was an outlier in this area. Adverse possession, this archaic law better known as squatters' rights, had been abolished in many other provinces. With that, we recognized: what was the purpose of this? Why was this still a thing in a province like Alberta, that, of course, had been so extensively surveyed that there was really no reason for this kind of archaic law to exist anymore?

With the written submissions we saw many specialists that spoke to the impacts of what can happen in adverse possession. Anecdotally, even in my own constituency I heard stories of a farmer that approached me and had mentioned, you know, his experience and how he almost lost 48 acres of land where his neighbour had rebuilt a fence. It seemed insignificant at the time, but when you consider the length of this fence – it was only off roughly just over 20 feet, but when you calculate the amount of land over the length of that fence, it equated to a substantial number of acres, which is really important for a farmer to be able to have in order to be able to sustain his farm.

You know, it was those types of stories that really brought this legislation to the top of the pile. It just was so outdated, and we kept hearing this over and over again both in the written submissions and the virtual meeting that we also had, that we hosted here in Edmonton. We had a lot of people call in and speak about adverse possession and how it needed to be removed as soon as possible. Even one individual shared stories that this isn't just a rural issue, that this practice of adverse possession has been enforced in urban situations. When I went and approached this individual, we unpacked this conversation, recognizing that he lived in an urban setting where a fence had been moved for longer than 10 years. The neighbour had claimed that land, and it actually put his own house – his own house, the house he lived in – into noncompliance, which severely would impact his evaluation of his property when he goes to sell.

When you think about these instances and you think about what the impact is on these landowners and consider that for a lot of people in Alberta, their largest investment is their home – this is where people put the bulk of their money for their entire lives. This bill, Bill 3, Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, that does abolish adverse possession, is protecting landowners, and it's protecting one of their greatest investments. I think that what we need to focus on here right now is doing that. You have to be able to protect landowners when it comes to their property.

This is a fundamentally easy change, considering the archaic nature of this bill and the fact that multiple bills, through the private member process, have actually been introduced in this Legislature. So that gave us a foundation, I believe, as a government to be able to go back to the minister and say: "You know, there have been multiple attempts on this. This is an extremely outdated piece of legislation." It protects property owners and their largest investment in many cases, which is their property.

I think this Alberta-led conversation is extremely important. With that, members opposite also partook in this engagement throughout the province. They were there to be able to see individuals come up on a variety of different issues. I consider Bill 3, you know, an important part also of our platform commitment as a UCP government. One of the things we promised Albertans we were going to do was to look at how we were going to continue to strengthen property rights and protect them, being the fact that it is one of those fundamental pillars of our freedoms, of our democracy here in Canada. With that, of course, we heard a lot of different issues. This one just presented itself and kind of rose to the top of the pile first and foremost because of how outdated it was, because of how many individuals had approached us on the situation, on the impact it would have for the loss of value of land and actually loss of land itself.

3:30

We've said it through and through. Farmers, when it comes down to it – you think about how many miles of fence that a farmer can have. It's pretty hard for him to be checking if any of those fences have been moved, and even the ability to be able to survey that is a cost to those individuals. With adverse possession in place, I mean, the amount of time and effort a person would have to put into ensuring that he's not going to lose land if fences are moved is just outrageous. We want our farmers focused on what they should be doing, which is producing high-quality products, which is what Alberta is so well known for, and putting foods on the table for not just Albertans but Canadians and the world.

This was a learning experience for me as the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights, and as the chair it was a huge learning exercise. Though this bill is simple in essence, you recognize that it has three overlapping pieces of legislation that it does affect in order to have the full protection. I have reviewed the bill and spoke to the minister directly, and I do believe he's accomplished that quite well considering the overarching legislation that currently exists in the province to be able to ensure that this practice doesn't continue. I'm really happy today to see that this is a priority here in the fall.

You know, bills like this are incredibly important for the future of Alberta. Even the thought of adverse possession, though very uncommon, when you do mention it to the average individual, they're actually, I think, blown away that this is something that still can exist in today's society considering the technology that we have to be able to survey our land, to stake our land, just the thought alone that because a fence is placed in the wrong position for a period of time, somebody can just all of a sudden gain the use of that land permanently, take it away from somebody else. So I'd like to thank the Minister of Justice for putting this as a priority in Bill 3 and bringing it to this House. I think this is going to have an incredible impact for Alberta moving forward, and I'm glad to see that archaic pieces of legislation like this are removed and that this government continues with its platform to continue to protect and strengthen property rights.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for my chance to be able to speak to this incredible bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Happy to rise this afternoon, provide some comments this afternoon around Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. You know, I do appreciate the Member for Highwood for jumping up and providing some comments. It's nice to get that back and forth a little bit, you know, because it was supposed to be a joint effort. The whole topic of property rights has certainly – let's just call it what it is. It's dragged on for far too long, you know, past this government, past the former NDP government, past that. It's been going on for a while, so it's nice to see some results that are actually happening.

Now, of course, I would be a little bit remiss, Madam Speaker – I think that, as one of the members of that committee as well, there were some missed opportunities maybe, which presented themselves a little bit more when we had the chance to do the public engagement and the on-site engagement as well. I know that there were some suggestions around maybe some acts that should be considered that, unfortunately, I think the committee didn't when thinking about its recommendations, its deliberations, and how it could better serve Albertans.

Just one quick example of one of the acts that wasn't considered was the Water Act. I know, from a couple of the engagement sessions that I attended, water came up around the property rights, potentially. I can't remember the location – it might have been Eckville – where a gravel pit was close by a property. There were concerns, of course, quality of life around the dust and whatnot. That was certainly brought up from that individual but also potential contamination of their well. You know, had we looked at giving ourselves the ability to consider that act, we would have been able to have a lot more information to be able to come to some recommendations. Certainly, water did come up several times. Now that I think about it, when we had that recent issue with a potential I think it was a feedlot near one of our lakes, certainly having to consider the Water Act might have been helpful in some of these. Again, just a missed opportunity on our part.

Now, there was one thing I did want to point out because my friend from Edmonton-Whitemud had pointed out around potential consultations with Indigenous, Métis. I guess I was dismayed that we weren't able to go do on-site consultations. I certainly know the pandemic played a very, very large part in making that extremely difficult. I really would have liked to have seen the opportunity to get that important input from those folks for us to consider in terms of recommendations that we gave to the government. Again, just kind of a little bit of a missed opportunity. I don't know. They always say that hindsight is 20/20. Could you have done something better in terms of trying to reach out, make those connections? You know, it's easy to shine that crystal ball and try and come up with an answer.

As the chair had mentioned, adverse possession did come up quite a bit. That was certain. It was definitely a fascinating experience for me. I'm certainly no expert when it comes to property rights. Some of the scenarios that people brought up during the consultation process and the in-person events were quite the learning experience, to say the least. I know one of the things that actually came up several times – I think it was the in-person meetings that I know I was able to attend; I couldn't get to all of them – was around damage to properties, I guess maybe more specifically fencelines with hunters entering onto properties to go hunt and, unfortunately, damaging the property and owners stuck with the bill to try to replace that. The chair had mentioned, you know, that trying to keep track of all of that fenceline is hard enough as it is, but when you do keep track of it and all of a sudden you have a big hole in your fence, that's certainly a problem. I would have liked to have maybe seen something in Bill 3 around that because that did come up several times from individuals and people that would write in to our offices because they knew all the members of the committee.

Also, I think it might have been Eckville again, too, where there was actually a little bit of a confrontation between one of the landowners and some hunters. That was certainly a little bit disturbing, to say the least. You know, it would have been nice if, again, we could have maybe had the opportunity to see something about that in Bill 3.

One of the other questions that's kind of popped up in my mind, because I know this now provides access to the justice system . . . [interjection] Actually, I see a member across looking for an intervention. I'm very excited to let you speak up. Please.

Mr. Hanson: I just wanted to comment. You said that you wanted to see something added into this bill. I think one of the things that I heard as part of that committee was the need to keep this adverse possession as a single, stand-alone bill. It's been introduced many, many times over the years in the province as part of an omnibus bill, and it has always failed. The number of times that it was put forward as a single, stand-alone bill by a private member, it ended up falling off the Order Paper. I would hate to see that happen again. I'd just like you to comment. I'm sure you heard that same thing from the previous MLAs that came and spoke to us at those meetings, that they were just concerned about: please, just make it a stand-alone and get it through.

Mr. Nielsen: Thanks, Madam Speaker. Great comment. Maybe I'll take that opportunity to make that plug, you know, for: maybe we could find some way to extend the ability for the House to consider more time for private members' business and hearing all private members' bills, not necessarily kind of pushing them to the bottom of the Order Paper.

You're right, yeah. We did hear, again, that focus on adverse possession, how many times, you know, it was tried and died on the Order Paper, which was unfortunate. Obviously, with a government bill we're able to address that a little bit more.

Again, as a government bill, you know, I've seen bills with not a lot of pages. I've seen bills with a huge amount of pages. Just, I guess, an opinion, maybe a missed opportunity, maybe not: at least we are dealing with, as the chair said, the one that did rise to the top of the list, which is the adverse possession. There are just opportunities, I think, where we could have expanded that.

The other thought I had was around people being able to access the court system in terms of trying to seek restitution. Hopefully, that never, you know, happens too often. We know it can be a little bit of a costly endeavour, going through the court systems, trying to get a decision.

I guess one of the questions I would have to the Justice minister is around, you know: should we see a rise in these cases heading to the justice system, what kind of pressures might that put on our courtrooms? We do know that they are a little bit strained at the moment, trying to get through things. Albertans are excited that they're finally going to be able to seek justice, to be able to get some compensation, and then it gets bogged down in the courts, and eventually we get to it, and there's yet more waiting. We want to try to reduce that waiting period. I'd be interested to see what the Justice minister has heard on that from our fantastic folks in His Majesty's court system and how, potentially, that caseload could be affected.

I think that covers most of the stuff I'm hoping to cover at this moment. Again . . . [interjections] Oh, I've never had so many intervention opportunities, Madam Speaker. I'm beside myself here. I think I saw two. Maybe I'll take advantage of both of them.

To my friend from Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to my colleague from Edmonton-Decore. I appreciate what he's added to the record on this debate, particularly given his role as a member of that Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights. I appreciate that we've heard from the chair. We heard from the Member for Edmonton-Manning. Reviewing Bill 3 in conjunction with the report on the committee, it seems clear that the committee received presentations from a number of different stakeholders, both written submissions, oral presentations from stakeholders who were particularly invited to give their perspective and also oral presentations from members of the public at public meetings. Having listened to the comments, I just was curious to know more about the member's experience travelling in Alberta and hearing from members of the public on these issues and how well canvassed they were, what people came in to stress most.

Mr. Nielsen: Yeah. Thank you for that. Certainly, there were some diverse stories that were brought forward. Some had mentioned adverse possession coming up, damage to property, you know, with some hunters, certainly not all of them, but there were cases where damage was occurring. That kind of came up a little bit.

Potential gravel pit locations: like I said, I believe I heard that at the Eckville meeting. There was concern from a property owner around the location of a gravel pit. When they first bought the property, they were under the understanding that nothing like that was going to be close by, let alone I believe it was literally across the street from them.

My comments around water. They were concerned about water contamination. I know we heard some comments around – I'm trying to remember which section it was. Maybe it was Edson. I believe we heard some comments down in that area, some of the same things again, with adverse possession and whatnot coming up.

I think we had the ability to take in those comments, and had we expanded maybe the list a little bit, it would have provided the committee a bit of an ability to be able to consider more of the comments. You know, as was discussed earlier, the attempts at trying to fix adverse possession over the course of the years failed because it was private members' business and the constraints that we have around that. It's good to see. Like I said, could we have maybe had the opportunity to add some other stuff or maybe even introduce another bill that also included some of the things that the committee heard, I think it would have been an opportunity to address the concerns of Albertans that we heard.

I'm looking forward to further debate, getting a chance maybe in Committee of the Whole. As we know, second reading is not that good for being able to jump back and forth with questions and comments. Hopefully, the minister will get a chance to also join us during Committee of the Whole, answer some of those questions, provide some of the comments, feedback, perhaps some secondary consultation.

Like I said, the committee wasn't able to consult with First Nations, Indigenous, Métis, I think, as fulsome as we could have. Perhaps the minister has had the opportunity to be able to speak with all of those communities. What kind of comments did he hear back around that? You know, are some of those addressed in Bill 3 to make sure that treaty rights aren't being either bypassed or stomped on in any way? What was the feedback, potentially, from those communities around Bill 3 and what we could have seen further had we had the opportunity to be able to hear in person from those communities?

Again, you know, with just the circumstances at the time and the situation, the committee had to ask for an extension because of the health restrictions that were in place and the concerns there. We weren't able to meet as soon as we had really hoped. That's nobody's fault. It was just the situation at the time. Hopefully, we've managed to maybe make up for some of those.

I look forward to more of the comments from members through discussion. Likely I'll jump back up as I remember things from our tour and what Albertans were looking for in terms of changes to property rights.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for your comments. It was quite enjoyable to be part of that committee and get out and meet some people and get to travel the province. We do have a beautiful province, and we did manage to get all over, I think, to just about every corner of it. I thank the chair for, you know, doing a great job. I stood in for him, I think, at Edson at one point.

I'd also like to thank all the security team that came with us to all these events and the staff that made all this possible. When you talk about attendance at these things, there's a lot that goes into organizing these town halls all over the province, and you never really know who's coming. You get a few submissions from folks that are going to show up, and then, you know, there were times where 10 minutes before the meeting was supposed to start, there was the committee and security and staff, and then finally people would start trickling in. So they were quite well attended.

But I think one of the big things about it was that we did hear quite clearly that this had to be a stand-alone bill, so I hope that the opposition understands that. The people that attended the meetings and put submissions forward to the committee understand that we're not ignoring all the other things that came up there and the importance of making sure that this was a government bill, not a private member's bill. It was a stand-alone bill so that it didn't get lost in the shuffle of a whole bunch of things. Those were the important things.

With that, you know, just some brief comments. A real property report is something where, if you bought or sold a piece of property lately, part of the process is getting a real property report. Sometimes it can be a fence that's been there for 40 years. When they do the survey, it's, like: uh-oh, this fence is out of place. Even if it's a foot or two feet, a 150-foot lot in Edmonton – some lots can be up to $100 a square foot. Now, who owns that $15,000 piece of land? That's not really of any value to anybody, but it is part of the real property report. Those are the things that happen quite often. That's why this is important, to get this thing straightened out.

It happens quite a bit out in the country, too, where even municipalities used to, you know, to the best of their abilities, build the roads on the grid line. Now they've found that some of them are maybe six metres onto a private person's property, in the wrong place, and now they've got to go back and purchase that land off them. So it is very important that we recognize those things and give municipalities, especially, and property owners as well some way of remedying those situations.

I just had those brief comments to make, and with that, Madam Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4

Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to move second reading of Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to discuss this bill. There are approximately 11,000 physicians in Alberta, who work hard each and every day to improve the lives of Albertans. Their tireless work and selfless commitment are truly appreciated. Now, since becoming Minister of Health, a top priority for me has been to focus on a collaborative relationship with physicians, looking at partnership and innovation. I have listened to physicians. I acknowledge the challenges the health system is facing and have committed to doing something about those challenges.

I was honoured to be at the negotiating table with the Alberta Medical Association, and I'm very pleased that 70 per cent of voting physicians supported the new agreement back in September. Madam Speaker, part of the new agreement outlines the government's commitment to repeal section 40.2 of the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. This section of the act allows the government to terminate compensation-related agreements, and the bill before us proposes repealing this section, thereby revoking the government's ability to terminate its agreement with the Alberta Medical Association. This legislation is no longer required given the terms of the new agreement with the AMA. Repealing this clause follows through on our promise to the AMA and to physicians and is a further step forward in building our relationship.

Now, the government's new agreement with the AMA will help stabilize our health care system, target the areas of concern, and support Albertans' health care needs. With its significant investments this agreement provides a path forward to address the current challenges and issues brought forward by physicians during our conversations, and I want to take a few moments to go over some of the highlights of this very important agreement.

Now, the agreement covers four fiscal years: April 1, 2022, to March 31, 2026. Alberta physicians will continue to be among the highest compensated in Canada, with an average increase of 4 per cent over the four-year term. The new agreement puts a strong priority on primary health care, including a sliding scale of rate increases, with the highest increases for family physicians at approximately 5.2 per cent. Lump-sum increases will be given to primary care networks of $20 million in each of 2022-23 and 2023-24, and this is to provide additional support for primary care while modernizing Alberta's primary care health system work takes place.

With additional targeted spending, including new supports for rural physician recruitment, spending on family medicine overall will increase by approximately 8 per cent over three years. About $750 million in new funding over four years is being invested to stabilize the health care system, including $260 million in targeted funding. This targeted funding is going towards physician recruitment and retention, incentives for a physician to work in rural and remote northern communities, physician support programs, and funding to assist physicians with rising business costs.

There will also be 1 per cent rate increases for physicians in each of the next three years and a 1 per cent recognition lump-sum payment for the exceptional contribution physicians have made during the pandemic. Now, this lump-sum payment is worth approximately $45 million, or roughly $4,000 per physician. It will go to the AMA by the end of the year for distribution to their members. Now, we are also working with the AMA to implement the 1 per cent rate increase for 2022-23. This increase applies to fee-for-service and alternative relationship plan rates, providing an additional $46 million to physicians. As outlined in the new agreement, the rate increase is heavily weighted to specialties facing the greatest pressure such as family medicine. We are working with the AMA to distribute these increases across and within specialties. Again, they will be effective April 1, 2022, retroactively and are expected to be finalized and be able to be paid out by March 31, 2023.

Now, the first three years of the agreement provide rate stability, with no market corrections for above or below market rates. Year 4 will see implementation of results from a comprehensive market rate review based on comparisons with Ontario-west jurisdictions. There will also be a global rate adjustment to reflect general economic and fiscal conditions at that time. There is a potential for binding arbitration for both the market rate review and the global rate adjustment should the parties not be able to agree on what's appropriate.

Additionally, there will be gainsharing in years 3 or 4, where the AMA can receive 50 per cent of any savings achieved by keeping cost growth below population and complexity. Physicians will have a shared responsibility to review compensation rates relative to market and help bring them into alignment with peer provinces. We'll be working closely with the AMA during the review process as well as during the global rate adjustment through joint committees, and we'll be working together as partners to address other key issues related to physician compensation.

Madam Speaker, I'm proud to say that our partnership even goes beyond this new agreement. We are working collaboratively with physicians on modernizing Alberta's primary health care system initiative, also known as MAPS, where Alberta's primary health care leaders and national and global experts are being brought together to identify immediate and long-term improvements to strengthen Alberta's primary care system. MAPS is about building on the strong primary health care foundation that exists in Alberta to create a system where everyone has access to a family physician or primary health care provider no matter where they live in the province. Modernizing primary health care will also help to ease pressures on our hospitals. Working closely with the Alberta Medical Association, primary care networks, and other primary care leaders across the province, three advisory panels are addressing major issues, identifying key areas for improvement, and recommending both new opportunities and ways to ramp up existing strengths in our primary health care system.

Madam Speaker, we are also working with physicians as we implement the AHS reform plan. This work includes improving EMS response times, decreasing ER wait times and wait times for surgeries, and developing long-term reforms through consultations with front-line workers, pushing down decision-making within AHS. Decision-making will be restored to the local level and local health professionals. Regional innovation will be incentivized to provide more medical services, and more health care professionals will be attracted to Alberta.

As we look to the future, Madam Speaker, Alberta's government is committed to working with physicians as partners in improving our health care system. Physicians have faced significant difficulties in the past few years, so today I especially want them to know that Alberta's government is deeply appreciative of their critical role. Their voices and leadership are crucial to our health care system, and we look forward to standing side by side with physicians in the weeks, months, and years ahead in order to provide the health care services that Albertans deserve and Albertans need.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 4, and I ask all members of this Chamber to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and respond to the minister's moving of second reading of Bill 2 – or Bill 4. Pardon me; I can't count. Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022, an innocuous name for a bill that is a sign of the failure of this government, a significant failure that has done significant harm to the Alberta health care system and Albertans' ability to access care.

I join the minister in thanking the 11,000 physicians who serve Albertans. I absolutely agree that a collaborative relationship with those physicians should be a top priority. However, it was not this government's priority when they passed Bill 21 in the fall of 2020 and awarded themselves the sweeping power to tear up the master agreement between the Alberta Medical Association and the government of Alberta.

The minister has said that he is bringing forward this bill today because that legislation that they passed that fall is no longer required. Madam Speaker, I would contend that it was never required. The government did not need that nuclear option, particularly given that the master agreement that this minister just congratulated himself and his government for signing could have easily been negotiated at the table in 2020-2021. It did not require the government tearing up a master agreement and embarking on a two-year campaign of attack against physicians in the province of Alberta, one that, again, has done significant harm to our public health care system and has hurt Albertans' ability to access care.

This government chose to press forward with an aggressive plan that certainly, to all appearances, appeared to be an attempt to break the Alberta Medical Association and pit physicians against each other, a cynical ploy, Madam Speaker, part of an overall aggressive posture which this government struck at that time and continued throughout the pandemic against health care workers and particularly the individuals that those health care workers elect to negotiate on their behalf and represent their interests.

Let's talk about how this came about, Madam Speaker. Let's look at a little bit of the history. As I said, in the fall of 2020 this government passed Bill 21, awarding themselves the power to tear up the master agreement with physicians. Shortly after that or around the same time, the then Minister of Health, now Minister of Justice, put forward 10 proposals to the Alberta Medical Association for changes that he insisted were essential to cut costs and save dollars in the health care system.

That included things like making changes to the complex care codes that allow doctors to spend more time with their patients and ending the practice of good-faith billing, which allows physicians to be able to bill for looking after a patient even if that patient does not have their Alberta health care insurance card with them or have their number. That is something that is used significantly by physicians, for example, say, at the Royal Alex hospital here in my constituency when they are dealing with individuals who are living houseless and do not have ID. They insisted they had to impose a cap on the number of services a doctor could provide a day, also known as a visit cap. They insisted that they had to end coverage for drivers' medicals for seniors.

Doctors reached out to me. They expressed a lot of concerns, particularly family doctors, Madam Speaker, about the impacts this would have on their ability to continue to provide care. Particularly, rural physicians had deep concerns with some of the other things that this government was trying to force through around charging them for facility fees and other things that would make it harder for them to be able to practise in the community and in hospital, but these were things that the government insisted were so essential that they had to pass legislation awarding themselves the power to tear up the master agreement and went ahead and did so in February of 2020.

I apologize. I've been speaking of 2020, fall of 2020, with Bill 21. It was fall of 2019. In February of 2020 they tore up the master agreement. I apologize, Madam Speaker. This was a long war, so it's easy to get confused on the dates.

They proceeded after tearing up that agreement to go on an aggressive campaign against doctors on social media, accused them of being greedy, accused them of being entitled, skated right up to the line of accusing them of engaging in fraud on their billing. There was a government website under Alberta Health making these contentions, many tweets from the then Minister of Health, who now serves as the Minister of Justice, this as we found ourselves going into a global pandemic.

As we went into the pandemic, the minister talked about how happy he was about supporting primary care and the steps he's taking. Well, you know, going into that pandemic, family doctors in Alberta were begging this government to take action on providing them with a code to be able to provide virtual care because we were locking down and individuals were not able to go and see their family doctor in person. We were at the first wave. We did not know what the parameters were. That was the situation.

So this government said, "Sure, no problem; we will give you $20 for a visit," which is half, approximately, Madam Speaker, of what doctors normally earned in-clinic. Other provinces were stepping up and providing fully funded virtual codes. This government told doctors: you can have half of what you normally make. They let that sit for weeks at the same time as they had just signed an agreement with Telus for their Babylon phone service for people to be paid full – doctors on Babylon were paid the full amount, $37 for a visit, while this government was grinding Alberta family doctors down at half that rate for the same provision, the actual doctors of the patients, who knew their histories, as opposed to an anonymous walk-in doctor through an app.

That is what we had from this government towards physicians in the province of Alberta. We had a minister that went to yell at a doctor in his driveway. The push-back was bad enough that when this government forced its new physician funding framework through in April, they ended up having to walk back portions of it on April 24 because their own MLAs pushed back so hard against their minister's wrong-headed approach and because of the feedback, the blowback they were getting from their rural constituents and rural leaders.

Multiple physicians across the province were threatening to withdraw service. You know what? A number of those physicians did end up picking up and leaving, Madam Speaker. We lost a number of family doctors across the province as this government continued with its war on physicians. They threatened the funding for physicians' benefits and support programs. They seized control of them from the Alberta Medical Association and then threatened the continuance of funding. These are for things like mental health supports for physicians in the midst of a pandemic. That is the position this government took and pushed for months, all empowered by what they passed in Bill 21 in the section that they are repealing today.

As physicians began to say, "Well, forget it; I am not going to work under these conditions," the Minister of Health, now the Minister of Justice, went to the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta to demand that they change their rules to make it harder for physicians to be able to leave an abusive relationship. That is the context for the bill that we are looking at today. It's not just family physicians, Madam Speaker. This government continued up until this year to put pressure on Alberta Health Services to force contract changes on hospitals that on more than one occasion, to my understanding, led to near job action that would have impacted the ability for Albertans to access surgeries and required the direct intervention of this Minister of Health to prevent.

Hospitals like the Red Deer regional hospital are still not able to regain the surgical capacity they had before the pandemic due to a shortage of anaesthesiologists. You know, in March 2021 I spoke with physicians at the Red Deer regional hospital. They told me they'd lost about six anaesthesiologists in the previous three months. I spoke with another anaesthesiologist here in Edmonton. Just this past June he noted that we currently have, in his estimation, about 350 FTE anaesthesiologists, so about 450 actual but some of those are part-time. He said that's about 15 per cent short of what we'd need to get back to pre-COVID capacity.

4:10

He noted that, in fact, we have continued to lose anaesthesiologists from Alberta to jurisdictions like B.C., Vancouver, Victoria. He said that it's about 12 anaesthesiologists in the previous year to year and a half. Other jurisdictions are actively headhunting those positions from Alberta, and they were leaving in part due to the chaos created by this government, by their decision to pass that element of Bill 21 and go on their extended war against physicians. Indeed, I've even heard reports that the Royal Alexandra hospital here in my constituency will be short about two anaesthesiologists through till next September.

The fact is, Madam Speaker, that the deal that this minister signed – now, I will give the minister credit. This minister did work hard. He had to because he inherited a mess. He inherited a flaming Dumpster left behind by the now Minister of Justice, former Minister of Health. This minister indeed had to spend those two years undoing that damage, and it was significant damage. I would say that that damage is yet to be fully repaired either in terms of the damage it has done to our health care system, Albertans' ability to access care, and indeed trust with physicians in this province.

To be clear, the minister talked about how happy he was about the level of support he got for this agreement. Let's not forget the agreement that was brought forward by the previous minister and was soundly rejected by physicians because they did not trust this government. Indeed, this minister was left with that mess to have to clean up. I will give him credit for getting to that 70 per cent support of the physicians that signed.

Certainly, I am happy for physicians that they are in a better position. That lump-sum payment for family doctors is certainly welcome, Madam Speaker, but it does not make up for this government grinding them down throughout the midst of a pandemic, refusing to provide them with the proper virtual code, which again was another step that I will say that this minister did move forward on and did put through on January 1 of this year, but again he was undoing the damage that his own government had done.

Now, we know we have tens of thousands if not hundreds of thousands of Albertans who are struggling to access a family doctor. The minister rose and spoke about bringing family doctors into Lethbridge today. That's wonderful. I look forward to seeing those doctors actually getting out and working in the community, but it would have been far better if they'd never been driven out in the first place.

The minister has talked about the work that he is doing with Alberta Health Services to recruit anaesthesiologists to the province of Alberta. I believe him. I believe they are in fact doing that work. Now, talking with a local anaesthesiologist, that work has been incredibly difficult and continues to be incredibly difficult, and it is because of the damage this minister and his government did before.

Again, I'm not discrediting the work that the minister is putting in. Absolutely, I believe he is working hard, and again, pretty much he has to. This government is simply making up the deficit, filling in the hole that they dug. That has cost Albertans.

Currently in the Bow Valley there is not a single doctor that is accepting new patients. We're still waiting for those physicians to get in and fill that significant, gaping deficit in Lethbridge. There are still clinics that have closed and have not reopened. We have significant challenges across our system.

Of course, we are seeing those impacts now as we see these surges in ERs across the province. We're continuing to see the challenge now because Albertans can't get to a family doctor, so then they turn to their local emergency room. Unfortunately, that leaves us in a position, then, where those emergency rooms are overcrowded. They're overflowing. We do not have the capacity because, of course, this government, through its policies during COVID-19, exhausted the health care workforce, not just doctors, nurses, and many others throughout the system, and we have a critical staffing shortage in pretty much every area.

Now, the minister, again, I'm sure if he were to rise now, would point out that this is the case in every jurisdiction across Canada, that there are critical staffing shortages, but that does not excuse the fact, Madam Speaker, that at every step this government made it worse.

The fact that other jurisdictions are also struggling to find doctors does not give this government a good reason to go on a war against them and take all of the steps that I have outlined today, that aggressive posturing, that attempt at what could be colloquially called union-busting although, of course, the Alberta Medical Association is not actually a union, though certainly the government tried to paint them that way. The fact is that, yes, other jurisdictions are struggling, but Alberta is the only jurisdiction where the government has consistently been at war with physicians and has consistently attacked other health care workers over the course of the pandemic and, indeed, the majority of its term.

The minister can stand now, and he can offer thanks. He can talk about how much he appreciates what physicians are doing. You know what, Madam Speaker? I don't even doubt that the minister means it. My understanding and certainly from what I've seen of this minister and what I've heard from his work in the negotiations is he is a decent man. He is personable. He is genuine. But he was part of the government that voted at every single step to take each of these steps that occurred. He continues to sit directly beside the minister who undertook so many of these detrimental actions, and I've never heard that minister offer any apology or acknowledgement of any of the actions that I've listed today.

They are not hyperbole, Madam Speaker. They are not political drama. They are not theatre. They are fact. You can ask any physician in the province of Alberta about that. It was a wrong-headed strategy. It was a cheap tactic, one that this government could have chosen to abandon at any point during the pandemic. Instead, they chose to press on. They chose to continue to fight. They chose to continue to belittle and pressure physicians and then have to force this minister to spend nearly two years cleaning up that mess to get us back to where we are today, where we find ourselves in the midst of a health care crisis.

Madam Speaker, you know what? Some of the steps this minister has taken on primary care I don't disagree with. Sitting down at the table, having committees of actual front-line health care workers, actual family physicians to provide recommendations on making the system better: an excellent idea. It would have been an even better idea three years ago. It would have been an even better idea to have done that before they chose to tear up the agreement with physicians in order to force through changes.

You know what, Madam Speaker? Every one of those changes I noted except for one, all of those things that they declared were absolutely essential, that they had to tear up that agreement on: the new agreement with physicians walks back every single one except they're still charging seniors for drivers' medicals. They are still happy to sort of force seniors to pay for that. Aside from that, the visit cap? Gone. Virtual codes? Addressed as of January of this year. Changes to complex care codes? Well, those got killed fairly early on because their own members rebelled so hard against their health care ministry.

There was nothing gained for two years of attacks on physicians, grinding family physicians down, forcing closures, stress and anxiety on them, their staff, their families, and not only family physicians, physicians of all types and stripes, Madam Speaker. Not a single thing gained for this government. Not a dollar saved. Not a single benefit for Albertans. It didn't help them get any better care. Nothing gained.

So will I support Bill 4? Absolutely. I will support Bill 4 because this is the right thing to do. It would have been far better if the government had never done it in the first place. I will support undoing what is, frankly, an embarrassing and ghastly mistake on the behalf of this government, one that has done incredible damage to our public health care system and to the ability of Albertans to access care. It is a black spot on the history of government relations with health care workers in this province, so I will absolutely support a bill undoing it, but I will not give this government any credit for doing so. I owe that much, I think, to all of the Albertans who've been impacted and certainly to all of the many physicians I spoke with over the last three years who've suffered – and I do mean that literally – suffered under this government, under the most difficult of circumstances and people that are absolutely essential to getting us out of the hole that we are now in with our health care system.

I certainly hope that all members – and I'm sure they will – are going to support Bill 4, and I certainly hope that this marks a shift in this government's approach. I don't trust that's necessarily the case given a lot of what I've heard from this Premier about her thoughts on primary care, but we have an election next May. I'm sure this is not going to be far from the minds of an awful lot of Albertans, the legacy and behaviour of this government.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate on Bill 4 in second reading? The hon. Minister of Health cannot speak again or it will close the bill, and I'm sure that the opposition will have something to say about that, so the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has the call.

Ms Hoffman: But, Madam Speaker, if he's so inclined and I'm so inclined, there could be an opportunity for a few one-minute interjections, so I will thank the House for giving us that opportunity through standing order changes that we collectively agreed on.

I want to begin by addressing my remarks here in second reading of Bill 4, which is currently titled the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022. Certainly, we've seen some colourful titles in the past for bills, and I would say that one that might be fitting for this could be a bill to try to undo some of the harm that we just caused not too long ago to try to hope that people will forget that we really, really, really messed with health care during this term. Because we're, of course, in a period that government and political observers refer to as the red zone, sort of that period in the runway up to the election, and we've seen significant evidence over the last three and a half years that the current government, the UCP, is not trusted with public health care in the province of Alberta and for good reason, Madam Speaker.

Maybe I'll start most recently and then work backwards. Most recently, Madam Speaker, we know that the current Premier was elected by only about 1 per cent of Albertans; 99 per cent did not vote for this Premier to be in her current role. In the six years leading up to that time, the Premier had a very, very public platform both with the radio, wrote a lot online, and participated in many blogs and other podcasts and such, and was very clear in a number of things. The biggest one is that she does not support public health care, does not support medicare in its current form in the province of Alberta. She has regularly made many comments and just in the last few months, to be precise. It's not like we're talking about decades ago. Like, she was very public in having all of these musings just over the last six years.

Some of the things that she's talked about are creating a health spending account. I have to say that the concept of a health spending account, I think, most people would probably say is good, but the way that she wants to get that money she's talked about is to take it out of the AHS allocation, the money that is given to operators of hospitals and long-term care centres, things that are covered under medicare, to take the money out of those essential urgent health care systems that we have for people in times of crisis or significant need and then to create this account that, then, individual Albertans would need to use to pay for personal visits to go and see primary care physicians, which, of course, wouldn't be sufficient.

There are many years where many Albertans might not need to see a primary care physician more than once or twice in that year, and then there are other times in your life when you would need significantly more care. That's one of the reasons why we as Canadians have pooled our resources and created medicare in its current form, to ensure that – you know, it's not your fault when you have a health crisis – we've got each other's backs. We believe in the collective nature of helping your neighbours as Canadians and as Albertans and that we will make sure that we have this social safety net of public health care, medicare, to be there for Albertans in general.

The current Premier definitely has had very different remarks in that regard, including significant remarks related to personal responsibility and as they relate to – even to go as far as to criticize cancer patients for resulting it. I will paraphrase: those who end up with stage 4 cancer could have done things in stage 1, 2, or 3 to prevent that, generally, was the statement. [interjection] Pardon me?

Mr. Madu: That's a lie.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this crosstalk is probably not helpful. The only one who has the floor right now, unless an intervention is accepted, is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks. I'd say that unparliamentary language is not super helpful either. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

I will continue by saying that those remarks in blaming individuals for their health consequences definitely aren't helpful when it comes to those who are dealing with a very personal hurt that they felt. Many cancer patients who are at various stages in their cancer journeys feel like they were being criticized for ending up in such a horrific state. I know that there probably isn't a member in this House who hasn't experienced cancer either personally for themselves or for somebody that they care deeply about, and I know that that's the case generally across Alberta. So it's very concerning when we see this as sort of the background narrative that's been at play in and around the current Premier.

This bill, as was stated – I appreciate that the Health minister talked a great deal about the actual amending agreement, but this bill essentially is just to strike sections that the government chose to put in unilaterally without actually engaging in any consultation or getting any support from the health care providers that we rely on to ensure that we all have one of the most prized Canadian services. When you interview people globally about the differences between Canada and the United States, one of the main things that we talk about as Canadians and that others know about us as Canadians is that we have universal public health care, a very different model than what many Conservative leaders and Conservative Health ministers in this province have tried to push through at various times.

What we had in 2020 was the current government under slightly different formation of the front bench but not significantly different, to be very frank. I think many were surprised that when the current Premier took her role, there weren't more signals of change among the folks who are making leadership decisions, in fact ministers in very key roles – Education, Health, Justice – staying in exactly the same portfolios. I think many people who voted for change, the 1 per cent who did actually vote for the Premier, were expecting far greater signals of change and reflection and that the government was going to set a different course, but, no, no, they haven't.

What we do have is a bill – and I think that most Albertans, if they heard the Legislature is debating a health bill, would think: “Oh. Thank goodness. We're going to be doing something about emerg wait times. We're going to do something about EMS. We're going to do something about women's health and the lack of reproductive support services throughout our province, including obstetrics and gynecology.” I think those are the kinds of things that Albertans would be hoping that we're debating today. [interjection] I'd be happy to welcome the interjection.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Member. You know, as soon you started to say that, her comment around the fact that this government really – I think what she was trying to say before I rudely interjected was that this government had an opportunity to really put forward some substantial legislation that could address, as she noted, the crisis in obstetrics. We heard from the Member for Lethbridge-West this morning just how bad it is. I've spoken about it multiple times. My colleague from Edmonton-City Centre and I have sent out multiple letters to this Health minister urging him to take action on the crisis in particular with women's and reproductive health. So, you know, we saw this as well.

I'm getting déjà vu from, for instance, I believe it was the long-term care act, where, again, we thought: “Okay. You know what?”

This government is finally taking steps to address the crisis in long-term care.” No. If you’ll recall that bill, it was a few administrative sort of changes and very little substance. So I’m hopeful, like the member mentioned earlier, that the minister will speak up as well about some of these issues.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That was one of the most polite interjections. I know that the member framed it by saying it was rude, but they are the rules that we have, and I appreciate the opportunity to elaborate slightly on this.

Yesterday we had an opportunity to consider health legislation that could have probably even been considered as a replacement bill for the health bill we’re considering here today, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022. That bill was brought forward as a private member’s bill, and it would have addressed a number of areas, including primary care, EMS, surgeries, reliable, timely access. These are the things that most Albertans are talking to us about when they say that health care is one of their number one issues, and I’m sure they’re talking to members on the other side of the House as well. We know that reliably, poll after poll after poll, when people are asked to rank the number one issue that they have, in the top three is health care. It’s usually number one or number two and it has been under the UCP leadership simultaneously as we are continuing to live through the impacts of COVID-19, now also RSV and influenza.

I was relieved today when in question period the Minister of Health did talk about the benefits of getting a flu vaccine. I’ve had mine. I imagine he’s had his, and I hope many others of this House have as well, but our numbers for immunization for influenza this year in the province of Alberta are not anywhere near where we need them to be.

Consequential to that are the impacts on our health care system and on individual families. I know I’ve been watching the reports of children in other parts of the country, even some so horrific as a child dying in British Columbia of influenza not that long ago. I think it might have even been the second child in this flu season. I don’t want us to have to deal with those types of consequences here, and I think that we could be doing far more to speak to the benefits of using evidence-based, science-driven medical decision-making, including promoting, through public awareness campaigns, the benefits of getting a flu vaccine.

I was relieved, pleasantly, on the first day of the fall sitting, or maybe it was even the throne speech day. A push notification came through to my phone, because I’ve signed up for a bunch of health notifications, to say that on behalf of the government of Alberta we’re encouraging everyone to get the flu vaccine; it’s safe; it’s scientific. I’m grateful that we’ve heard it from the Health minister. I’m grateful that I got a notification from the CPE informing me of that. I wish we would see that same kind of leadership from the chief politician currently, the Premier for the province of Alberta. I think it would go a long way to increasing awareness and reducing some of the most severe outcomes that we’re seeing as they relate to children’s health.

What we’ve seen instead is silence on these issues, and I also want to be very clear that when I was a Health minister – I know some will try to fearmonger. When I was a Health minister, we made it really clear that we weren’t going to require mandatory vaccines for children to attend school. We were going to share information, and I imagine it’s been used significantly, that when there is an outbreak at the school, the school’s list of who’s enrolled in that school gets shared with public health so public health can reach out to families and work to protect children, to either do public awareness around ways that they can protect themselves and others in their families, pull children when it’s required to do so because they don’t have the full immunization to be able to keep themselves in a congregated site safely.

At that time it was driven by the fact that there were some measles outbreaks in some pockets within Alberta. We know that MMR vaccines and education around them in the province of Alberta has not been as effective as we would like to see in terms of the collective benefits.

I do have to say that undoing some of the harm that was done not that long ago by the same government that’s still in place: I guess that’s better than some health bills that we’ve seen them bring forward to this place before, but this simply is An Act to Undo Some of the Harm that They Just Caused Two Years Ago. That is what the title should probably be. To my whip: maybe we can work on an amendment in that regard.

It definitely isn’t something that is going to resolve the issues that we’re facing currently in primary care with EMS, with surgeries, with timely access. These are areas that the government should be focused on, that we as members of this Assembly, I would hope, are focused on. Instead, what we are doing is considering repealing some of the harm that the government just imposed.

It definitely is not a step backwards, and therefore I’m inclined to support it. If there are things that I don’t think are harmful, typically I want to be a team player and get onside and try to speak and vote in support. This certainly isn’t, you know, a flagship piece of legislation. Under a new Premier the fourth priority, you would think, would be something that would address the significant issues that Albertans are saying they’re facing. Certainly, health care is one, but again this bill does nothing to actually address the root issues. [interjection] I see another interjection from my colleague, and I welcome it.

Member Irwin: Yeah. This is exactly it. You know, again, I’m hopeful, always the optimist, that the Health minister will weigh in a bit more. I know he’s introduced the bill, but he certainly has an opportunity to intervene. Even just right now I’m seeing my inbox, the absolutely heartbreaking stories from health care workers and what they’re going through, hearing from an ER nurse who’s just talking about what absolute chaos it is in the pediatrics, in the peds, unit. I would love – and perhaps even the Premier will speak to some of the priorities. I know she talked about the importance of children’s health this morning, yet we’re not seeing it in the legislation that we’re seeing. We’re seeing a lot of, like I said, administrative pieces and... [Member Irwin’s speaking time expired] Oh.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. What this morning’s announcement did highlight, though, is the fact that – and we saw that earlier in the pandemic as well – when we have one collective purchasing power, when we have one health authority that is the largest health authority of any jurisdiction anywhere in Canada, we have more significant purchasing power. I want to recognize that the Premier did acknowledge today that the AHS procurement team led the charge to make sure that we could acquire some additional capacity in terms of medications that are desperately needed right now, so hats off to that procurement team for AHS, which has been recognized as being a global leader over and over and over again. They did it earlier in the pandemic, when it came to acquiring masks and other PPE to support health care workers and other citizens. I know that we were in a position, because, again, we have that large collective purchasing power, to be able to support even other provinces. [interjection] I see a third interjection and welcome it.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm just wondering. Of course, we know the Member for Edmonton-Glenora previously served as the Minister of Health. She was just noting the excellent work that's been done by AHS on this procurement and certainly was done in many respects during the pandemic, but we know that certainly AHS has been significantly attacked by this Premier, who has talked down about many of the folks that do the very work that allowed her to make that announcement today, much in the same way as we saw this government talk down physicians and others. I was just wondering: for this member, as she has served as Minister of Health, what is her reflection of how the behaviour of government can affect the morale and the ability of these folks to be able to do this important work on our behalf?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to my colleague the critic for Health for the Official Opposition, for the NDP caucus, and the MLA for Edmonton-City Centre. I do want to speak a little bit to the morale piece, because I know that even though the minister is still the same and the CEO is still the same, under the Premier's leadership the big, revolutionary thing right out the gate that she initiated as it relates to services of health care was to fire the chief medical officer of health and subsequently or simultaneously fire the board for AHS. It's not often that I'll stand in this place and say, "You know, those really amazing, super conservative people on that board deserve to be there," but what I am going to say is that by firing a board – I believe that when we have many minds working together, we can make better collective decisions than when we try to put one person in charge of something.

This certainly does relate to the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, because those insured services that are operating within AHS: the vast majority of billing would be direct to Alberta Health. Those services within AHS, to say: "Okay. We're going to get rid of a board of 11 people working collectively. We're going to replace them with one person who thinks that he knows best or that the Premier thinks that that one person knows best."

We saw what happened when the most recent Premier decided to do that with Chris Champion when it came to curriculum. We have had a hugely discredited curriculum that clearly was driven ideologically, especially as it relates to the social studies area, driven by one person who thought that he knew best, that there was going to be, you know, this downloading of European and American knowledge that wasn't evidence based, that wasn't collaborative, that didn't engage with teachers. We were going to bring in an expert, somebody who thought he was an expert, that the Premier thought was expert, to make these decisions that would impact everybody, and they certainly have impacted everybody.

We're seeing that again now with health care. We've decided that instead of having a collective team of people who are even, for example, trained in public health there to give advice – and certainly we can ask many questions about the advice and if it was proper, but to instead say: we're going to bring in a volunteer. And I've worked with Dr. Joffe. I think Dr. Joffe brings a lot to the table. He's not an expert in public health. That's not his area of specialization. It would be like putting somebody in charge of cardiac care who was an oncologist and asking them to volunteer and do it off the side of their desk when they already have more than a full-time job to keep them busy. I will tell you: Dr. Joffe's current job is more than a full-time job.

There used to be three, a chief medical officer of health and two deputies, that collectively would advise on public health matters. As we understand, those positions are not filled; there is a volunteer assignment given to Dr. Joffe. I hope that the minister will make those public health officials available if there are any working in that area. It is so important and not just because of COVID-19, not just because of RSV, not just because of influenza but because other disasters happen that require public health expertise as well, like the Fort McMurray wildfires.

Public health played a key role in ensuring the evacuation happened but also the safe return, because many of the chemicals that were used to hamper the fire, to put the fire out, could have had negative health consequences if people went back before that was remediated. Public health had to be advising the government about re-entry plans to ensure that the residents of Fort McMurray didn't get other negative health consequences, including various types of cancer.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join in on the debate? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 4, Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022. Just, you know, thinking about going back to 2019, when we were debating this bill, this omnibus bill actually, I think it was really important at the time to think about all of the things that were thrown into this bill. There were all kinds of things that were jammed into this bill not long after the election of the UCP. They formed government.

I can remember that at the time we spent a lot of time talking about this piece of legislation, Bill 21 at the time, and trying our best to warn the government of the day what some of their decisions would do. I can remember many of my colleagues talking about the dangers that lay ahead. None of us could predict that we would have experienced the kind of pandemic that we did. We just knew that this was not how you treat a group of people, particularly physicians. This is just not how you move forward in a positive, collaborative way for such an important group of people that provide such an important service.

Now, I also want to add that this was the same piece of legislation that deindexed benefits for seniors, for low-income Albertans, and for disabled Albertans. Again, at the same time, it was jammed into this omnibus bill. We tried our best to warn of the danger that would come or the harm that would be caused. Once again, just the arrogance from the government at the time, saying: "No, no; we know best; it'll be fine. They're not going to have a problem with it. Everything is cool. It's the most generous in the country," which it is not.

You know, it's really sad that this much time has elapsed and here we are debating a piece of legislation, another – I imagine this will not be the first one that will change the disastrous work that this government has done over the last few years. [interjection] Oh, go ahead.

Member Irwin: Well, thank you to the Member for St. Albert. You know, you just started to talk a little bit about sort of our perspective, and we've talked a lot about what we've heard from our constituents when it comes to protecting public health. I know that you knock on a lot of doors in your riding. You do a lot of door-knocking in Morinville-St. Albert, and I appreciate that. I'm curious: are you hearing health care as one of the top concerns at the doors? If so, is it health care workers? Is it the general degradation of the health care system? I'll be honest: I've too knocked on many, many doors, and the issues I hear about the health care system are many, but I'm not hearing much about what Bill 4 addresses, which is a concern to me when, again, this government had an incredible opportunity to do a whole lot more.

Ms Renaud: Thank you for that. Yes, we do knock on a lot of doors, and we run into a lot of health care workers in St. Albert. You know, recently it's been fairly cold, the weather hasn't been lovely, so the lovely constituents of St. Albert will regularly invite us in if we're really shivering quite a bit, and then we often will have time for a deeper conversation.

I would say the theme – it's primarily nurses that I've had a chance to communicate with, but I think about the one physician that I did speak to. What sticks in my mind – and this goes back, you know, a few weeks, some a few months – the biggest thing that I heard from the constituents in St. Albert was just the lack of trust. Certainly, they felt that there has been enough push-back on a few issues, whether it's from the physicians themselves, from their patients, just from Albertans in general that the UCP has backtracked a little bit on a few things throughout COVID. Now, obviously, as we get closer to an election, they're trying to clean up a few messes. [interjection] Oh, go ahead.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker and to the member for accepting the interjection. I know that many health care workers live in St. Albert. I've had the opportunity to visit with many of them, and many of them work in St. Albert, but also many work in Edmonton facilities or offices. Access to an actual family physician or primary care provider: we used to say – and it used to be true – that we had way more primary care physicians per capita than any other province in the country. But I fear that we've fallen significantly off that track and also in the larger urban centres. It was Edmonton and Calgary where there were the most, but now we know that regularly people contact our offices saying that they can't get a primary care provider even in Edmonton and Calgary. I'm wondering if the Member for St. Albert can maybe talk about that and what this bill could have done instead to help address some of the crisis and the priority that could be placed on ensuring that people have access to primary care.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Just like the member just said, you know, our office gets calls, actually primarily e-mails, about this. We get e-mails talking about: I can't find a doctor. Whether it's "My doctor has retired" or "My doctor has left," people just can't find another physician. I have heard that some residents of St. Albert have had to go, sadly, because it's going to cause problems in other communities – but they have said, "I've found somebody that is accepting patients in Spruce Grove" or Sherwood Park or another smaller community where they've managed to find someone, which is terrific for them. I'm happy that they've been able to find a physician that can take them. But they're adding pressure to those communities, and I know those communities are struggling as well.

So we have to address the problem, and sadly I've heard this government say a number of times that doctors aren't leaving, it's not a problem, it's not a crisis. Well, it is. We know it is. I just had a quick look to remind myself because I wasn't sure of the numbers, but it was reported: March 24, 2022, CTV reported – and I'm sure this is coming from a report, but this is just the first news article that I found – that the number of doctors who left Alberta last year was almost equal to the number who left in the prior two years. Now, that's reporting from 2022, the two years combined, and this is according to the college. So we had 140 physicians leave in 2021. [interjection] Sure.

Mr. Copping: Madam Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: You can make an intervention.

Mr. Copping: Okay. Thank you very much to the hon. member for allowing me to intervene. First of all, I just wanted to comment: thank you for supporting the bill, to the members of the Official Opposition. That's greatly appreciated, and hopefully we can move it forward quickly.

I did want to comment because the hon. Member for St. Albert was making a comment about the loss of doctors. Quite frankly, Madam Speaker, that isn't the case. We have more doctors than ever before in the province. There always is churn, and I appreciate that doctors leave and doctors come. But, you know, if we compare this year, September 30, to last year, we have 176 more doctors in the province. We have 11,346 doctors registered, the most ever.

Madam Speaker, I just would provide a comment. While I appreciate the Official Opposition supporting the bill and I thank them for that, I don't necessarily agree with their characterization of the statements that they're making, that strains faced by the system are due to government policy. The reality is that it's due to COVID, and we are moving forward to address it.

I'll speak more.

Ms Renaud: Well, it's very timely that I said that government continues to say, "Doctors aren't leaving; it's not a problem," and the Health minister stood up and sort of said that very same thing. When we know cities like Lethbridge – we know there's a crisis. We know that you probably hear it. It's anecdotal, for sure. We hear it from all of our constituencies, that people cannot find physicians. We know there are problems. We know that emergency departments are closing. We know that people can't have their babies in their communities. There is a problem. There is a large problem. Doctors have left. Physicians have left.

What I hear from health providers, the ones that I speak to in my constituency, what they very, very clearly say is that not only was it the master agreement and all of those things and potential changes that were proposed at the time – it's not just that. It seems to be that the lingering problem I still hear about is trust, that there is zero trust in this government. You can shift, you know, chairs on the Titanic kind of thing. You can shift ministers. You can shift deputy ministers. You can shift all kinds of people and make all of those changes. You can fire boards. You can do whatever you like, but the fact remains that Albertans don't have faith. They watched this government do all kinds of things through COVID.

I actually went through, like my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre did – he sort of gave you a bit of a timeline of the activities that happened. You know, it's been a wild sort of few years with COVID. There's been so much happening that I went back to remind myself what this timeline was like.

Madam Speaker, can I get a time check?

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: You have 11 minutes.

Ms Renaud: Okay. Thank you.

I used actually a really terrific article. It was really concise, and I remember reading it at the time. I thought it was quite good. It's from September 2020. Sorry; I got that date wrong. I'm going to have to go back and correct that. They gave us a bit of a timeline about what happened, so it's a bit of a stroll down memory lane.

They talked a little bit about – and I love the way this article set up what was coming in that omnibus bill and what was coming in the changes that we saw. We know that early in September there was the MacKinnon report. We all said at the time that, you know, the UCP is going to use this report as cover. They're going to do all kinds of things, from looking at physicians' pay to nurses' duties and roles. The entire system needed to be overhauled according to this report and according to the UCP government members that stood up and defended that. Clearly, what that told us at that time is that they were on a path. They had a path, they had a goal – they were not going to reverse that goal – and then we saw them continue to do that.

We then saw that Ernst & Young released their report in February. They went a little further, talked about 70 ways to save $2 billion. You look at that report, and you can see, literally see, some of the decisions and some of the damage that was done as a result.

We know that tensions came to a head in February 2020. That was a really bad time for the then Health minister. That was the time he announced that he was ripping up the contract with doctors. You can remember. I think my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre talked about the minister sort of yelling at another physician, which was horrible. I think we've talked about that enough.

Still, the government members – I can recall at the time that nobody was sort of giving an inch. They were still saying, “No; we're right; we have to do this; we're on the right path, blah blah blah, MacKinnon panel, blah blah blah, Ernst & Young” when people were saying, “We have a blossoming problem; there is a problem; there is this pandemic that none of us really understand the parameters of.” I don't know, still, that we understand a lot of what happened, because we haven't had a chance to even go back and really examine what was happening and what we did as a result.

Then the pandemic hit full force. We had some of the proposed changes to the physicians' contracts. You know, I want to touch on the one thing, and that was with the extra long visits. I know my colleague touched on that earlier. What I heard from physicians at that time: they were saying that this is going to really cause problems for people that are complex. As you can imagine, Madam Speaker, there are a number of people in this province that have complex health issues, health concerns, not to mention coupled with disabilities or mental illnesses or whatever the case may be. But it is only because they have found physicians that can actually work with them and support them – they should be paid appropriately for it. This change was going to change that, and we heard that directly from physicians. This isn't something that we made up; this was actually from physicians.

Once again we could see that the path was outlined by the MacKinnon report, the Ernst & Young report, yet we had this pandemic coming, all of these unknown variables that none of us could know at the time, and still this government was focused on doing things that I have to think they inherently knew were going to disrupt a health care system at a time when there were a lot of unknowns coming at us. That makes me think. For an elected group of people to think that was a good decision is still, years later, an absolute head-scratcher to me. I don't get it. I do not get why they would gamble with the health care system, the wellness of Albertans, at a time when there were so many unknowns here at home, in Alberta and Canada, and around the world.

April 9. Let's not forget this: the AMA sued the province over changes to the way that doctors could bill for service. Now, that's pretty serious, when you have the AMA suing the government. You know, I would hope that the government of the day has a healthy enough relationship with the AMA, that is such a vital organization, that they would have a good enough relationship that it wouldn't come to this place, particularly when we're struggling with an unprecedented challenge in terms of a pandemic. But, no.

A little later in that very same month, on April 24, we had the Health minister announce that rural doctors would be exempt from overhead billing, for changes when seeing patients outside the clinic. Now, I don't know a lot of rural health care providers, actually, because I don't live in rural Alberta. I have met one. But what we heard at the time – we relied on social media, sadly, to hear what people were saying, and I think that rural doctors, rural physicians, were very clear about what this was going to do to them. They very clearly said, “We are going to shut down our clinic,” and I believe some did. Some physicians said, “We are going to leave this province,” and they proceeded to leave. And this government still was on this path, that had been identified in 2019, knowing what was happening. They could see all around them what was happening, and still they focused on this path.

I would say that there are a lot of people speculating: is this the ultimate goal, Madam Speaker, just to crash this health care system so that the solution is “let's privatize,” because privatizing is always the answer? Well, we know that's incorrect. I mean, let's just look at long-term care. That is not the answer.

This is a government that has continuously just surprised me to an extent that it's almost hard to describe. All of these horrible things were happening in our province. All of these professionals that work in health care, that are the front lines, that knew exactly what was going to happen, were predicting disaster. What we did see was disaster. What we continue to see is disaster. Let's remember, at the time that all of this was going on, what was happening here in Alberta. We were already approaching 100 deaths, so we already knew that it was a problem. We already knew. We saw it. Our hospitals were starting to fill, we were starting to understand the different pressures on people, and still this government continued.

July 10: AMA released a survey that found 40 per cent of all physicians were eyeing a move. They were either thinking about moving or planning on moving, and sadly many did leave. I'm sure some left for completely innocent reasons that were personal, that were not related to this government's mismanagement. But many left because there was no trust and they felt that – you know what? – there was no point in staying if they were working in a province where they could not be respected by the government of the day. They were not being respected, and they just moved elsewhere. They had that ability, and who suffers? It was Albertans.

A little later that very same month, July 29, they released a referendum of physicians, residents, and medical students. They were asked a question. I don't know the exact phrasing of the question, but the question was something along the lines of: how much faith or trust do you have in the Health minister? I think we all remember that number, very close to what the ATA had for the Education minister in terms of trust, that about 98 per cent said they had no faith, no trust. Now, I'm not saying that the current Health minister is in the same league as the last one at all, because I think he's actually quite reasonable and quite lovely to speak to.

I hope that he's hearing some of the concerns, that we're really not just standing up here to hear ourselves speak, that we actually are trying to relay. This is what I hear from people. This is the kind of e-mail that I get. These are the phone calls that I get. When I door-knock, that's what I hear. These are the problems, and we've been hearing this for years. I mean, this isn't new. This isn't new at all.

I don't think any government ever gets it right. I think that really good leadership requires people to listen and do the awkward thing sometimes and to admit mistakes – “You know what? We made a mistake, kind of screwed up, so we're going to fix it, and here's how we're going to fix it” – instead of just defending a bad bill or defending a bad decision. I don't think anyone in here is particularly more guilty than others. I think that we all in our lives can do better. But the sad reality is that the decisions that we make in this place, the decisions that this government makes in this place – let me be clear about that, the decisions that they make – the bills they pass, the regulations that they make impact people's lives directly, and we've seen that. We see it in the state of our health care system right now. It's a disaster. It's a disaster.

When I have paramedics and firefighters, even the firefighters from St. Albert, telling me about different instances when they've had to respond – one example they gave me this morning. They responded to a young boy that was drowning. He was drowning.

They intubated him. They did all of the things that, you know, EMS responders would do, advanced life support. They're an integrated service, so they can do that. They have that equipment on their truck. They did that. They had the patient stabilized for – I don't know – it was maybe an hour, 45 minutes, and then the ambulance showed up.

That's not normal. That's dangerous, and more people are going to lose their lives as a result. You know, doing health care in a parking lot or in a bay is not okay. Women not being able to give birth in their communities and having to drive long distances: that's not okay. The extraordinary wait times – I understand that there's pressure right now with influenza and all of the things that we're dealing with, but we had a weakened system after years and years of really awful decisions and years of a government literally with earplugs in their ears, not hearing from their own constituents. I'm quite sure that they heard the same thing that we did.

So here we are in 2022, in December 2022, and the government is undoing another mess that they created in 2019 with that piece of legislation, Bill 21, that did so much damage in so many areas. This is just one from this giant bill that was just, like, slash and burn.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to join the debate on Bill 4 in second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Pleased to rise this afternoon on Bill 4 to bring some comments forward from my end of the world, Edmonton-McClung, and speak about some thoughts that I have with regard to Bill 4, which is an attempt to undo some of the harm that was done when the government decided to pass the omnibus Bill 21, that some of my colleagues have alluded to.

Of course, what I sense when I'm talking to constituents and seeing media reports and looking at social media as well is that the population has really lost trust. The government was told that this would happen before they implemented the omnibus bill which brought forward the ability for the government to tear up the contract, the master agreement between doctors and the government, and they failed to heed that warning and went ahead and did tear up that contract. It is very unfortunate that the government never did heed that warning because the damage that was caused is long term, Madam Speaker. It's intergenerational, in my view. To have all of the doctors, 11,000 doctors, in this province go through a process where the government actually just unilaterally tore up their contract is a shocking thing in a democracy to witness, and I can't imagine this healing any time soon.

The government has reached an agreement with doctors, a master agreement, ultimately, under the leadership of a new minister, who managed to bring some semblance of respect back to that relationship, but the harm has been done, Madam Speaker, by the omnibus Bill 21, that included a clause to tear up the contract with the doctors.

It was a little bit surprising to hear that the justification for this tearing up of the contract was that if we're bringing forward Bill 4 now, I should say, it was no longer required given the terms of the agreement with the AMA that has now been reached.

[The Speaker in the chair]

As my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre so eloquently posited earlier today, in my view as well it was never required, never mind no longer required, and my constituents and Albertans wonder aloud to themselves, when I talk to them at the door, as to why indeed the government chose to go forward with it. [interjection] My colleague from Edmonton-City Centre wishes to intervene. Mr. Speaker, I'll accept an intervention.

The Speaker: Please do.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the thoughts the member was sharing about the process of negotiation involved here. Of course, I'd note that the Member for Edmonton-McClung spent many years working as a realtor, and of course that is a job where you have to know how to negotiate a deal. So I was wondering, you know, from his experience working as a realtor, helping so many different people to achieve their goals and, of course, negotiating things like pricing on houses, what thoughts he has on the process and the approach that the government brought to the table in trying to negotiate a fair agreement with doctors.

Mr. Dach: Well, thank you very much, Member. It's actually very interesting that you would bring up the word "negotiating," because it's on page 3 of my notes that I made to myself. The note attached to that is that this government is not very good at negotiating. Unfortunately, they have the lack of institutional knowledge that was passed down from one Premier to the next. The decision to go ahead and seek control rather than negotiate is seemingly a lesson unlearned from one Premier to another. I'm unfortunately seeing the new Premier deciding that negotiations are not her primary mode of achieving agreement and that she's looking at imposing things. You know, Bill 1, that we have before us still in the House, is another example of that, where we're looking at the House being circumvented, never mind a government contract. [interjection] I have another intervention. Go ahead.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you. You know, my friend from Edmonton-McClung has spent some time not only before becoming an elected official but, of course, during his time talking to the constituents of Edmonton-McClung, getting their feedback, and I'm just kind of curious. Thinking back to when the contract was first torn up, during your years knocking on doors, talking with constituents, hearing their feedback – what they would like to see before you were an elected official, what kind of changes they were hoping for – did tearing up the doctors' contract even make it onto the list? I know that in my time door-knocking from 2013 in Edmonton-Decore, I certainly didn't hear: gosh, I wish a Health minister would go in there, tear up that contract, and create all kinds of chaos. I'm just wondering if perhaps you might have heard those kinds of things. I didn't hear them in Edmonton-Decore. Maybe it's just simply my riding that had that lack of enthusiasm.

Mr. Dach: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Decore for that question and insight about the activity of his constituents and his riding. I can certainly attest that in Edmonton-McClung there was no hue and cry for the then Minister of Health to tear up the doctors' contract. I think most Albertans right across the province were pretty shocked because that's not the way we've had our previous governments operate. In fact, there's been a history of respect between governments and our professional bodies, including the Medical Association, over time, and to see the contract torn up was a pretty big shock.

Now, of course, Bill 4, an attempt to plug that hole, that breach in the trust and respect between the AMA and the provincial government, is just simply trying to undo some harm that they did. While certainly I'm going to support the bill that undoes the ability of the provincial government to tear up a contract, the fact remains that the trust has been broken. Our Medical Association and Albertans as well know now that at the stroke of a pen and the decision of the government they may revisit this once again and see that they'll take unto themselves the same power once again.

The institutional damage we've done, Mr. Speaker, is something that we'll be recording for decades to come. We'll always be referencing back to this omnibus Bill 21, that is now trying to be repaired by Bill 4, that's before us. It will be the hallmark of a failure by a government that saw fit to tear up a legitimate, bona fide contract and direct to doctors that they would control what they were paid unilaterally. I think it's fair to say that the Medical Association and other professional bodies will always have it in the back of their minds historically whether or not a future Conservative government will do this once again. It poisons the atmosphere. It is not helpful.

I know that in my past career, as other members have alluded to, negotiations that I've been through with house transactions, probably at my count about 800 of them, were not always easy. They were difficult in many cases, and they took quite a bit of time, sometimes over the course of a number of days. Certainly, I never had the option to stand up and impose a contract upon one party or the other, Mr. Speaker. That was something that needed to be done between the parties to negotiate a settlement between the two.

Thankfully, with this Bill 4 we'll be back to that, but indeed the tenets of conservatism, as far as I have studied them – and I've studied them – would say that laissez-faire would be the rule of the day. Let things be rather than taking control unto oneself. It did shock a lot of Albertans that the original Bill 21 measure to tear up the contract was something that would even be contemplated by a provincial government here in Alberta. People in my constituency really couldn't believe what they were hearing. It's something that I'm sure they'll be glad to see disappearing, but we'll always be fearful that it could potentially be returning once again. I know that the 11,000 physicians in the province are definitely fearful that it might be something that does happen.

Now, I know that the provincial response to the pandemic over time is something that the province has been very critical of. I know that today I think the Premier said in response to questions about the desperate pleas for meaningful, comprehensive leadership in terms of caring for children in respite care, respite care which is no longer there – her response was that Tylenol is on the way, that we have a sufficient amount of Tylenol coming to hopefully prevent this disease. Indeed, that's not what the question was all about. It was asking about care for children, pediatric care for children, and the desperate situation that children are in and their families with respite care. [interjection] I see the Member for Edmonton-City Centre rising to intervene.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member was just speaking about the Premier essentially dodging a question today about preventative measures to keep children from getting sick as opposed to just sort of chasing the problem after the fact with medication and, of course, the effects that that's having on the access to care for children at the Stollery here in Edmonton, the Alberta Children's hospital in Calgary.

It does strike me that that says a lot about what the UCP's approach has been with physicians. Indeed, where they could have acted in a way that might have been preventative of a lot of issues, they instead chose to barrel ahead and go with what they tried to do in terms of a cosmetic public approach while, in fact, making the problem so much worse. I'm just wondering what the member's thoughts on that might be.

Mr. Dach: Well, thank you, Member for Edmonton-City Centre, for that intervention. It brings to mind the recent conversations I've had with doctors in the local hospital in my riding, the Misericordia. I won't identify them, but the crux of the conversations that I have had with them is that the local hospitals are beyond the breaking point. I asked the question: what would be the straw that broke the camel's back? The response was: it's already happened; we're beyond crisis point. We are having situations at the Misericordia hospital and, I'm sure, others where people are not receiving the care they need in critical situations, and there are deaths, premature deaths, that are occurring as a result of the situation that we're in.

Pediatric care was the question of the day today that the Premier had broached to her, and the response was that Tylenol is on the way. Respite care for parents of severely ill children has been taken away so that those physicians and nursing staff can go and help people in children's pediatric care. Once again, the Premier avoided the question and said that Tylenol is on the way.

That's not what the public is wanting to hear, Mr. Speaker. They know that there's a lot of room for this government to make up in terms of trust as a result of such things as the Bill 21 decision to tear up doctors' contracts, and the Bill 4 before us today to try to rectify that by removing the ability to do that is something that is a step in the right direction.

But, certainly, the Premier's responses today to avoid dealing directly with the questions of critical care for children in our hospitals, which are overflowing into trailer waiting rooms, is not the type of response that we wanted to hear as Albertans, and it does nothing to build or rebuild a trust that has been really, really broken badly by the UCP government over the last three years and continues to be broken even further by the types of response we keep getting from the Premier regarding the leadership that we expect to see to help address some of the acute problems in our health care system and our hospitals and with the respiratory disease crisis that we've got going on now.

We end up with the situation here, where, first of all, the government in Bill 21, tearing up the doctors' contract, created all kinds of chaos and acrimony, that was not necessary, and people asking: "Why? Why are they doing it?" Now here we are in the Legislature today removing that piece of legislation that gave the ability to tear up the doctors' contract, and instead of focusing on the extreme issues of the day, that are children's health care, in particular, and respiratory diseases that are causing our hospitals to be overflowing in the emergency wards, the response we're getting is an indirect one from the Premier of this province. We're not getting real action plans that are being looked forward to by Albertans.

When we see children dying of the flu or other respiratory diseases, that affects everybody pretty deeply. We expect respectful leadership from the province, and that's not the tone that was set in 2019 with the omnibus Bill 21, that brought in the ability to ride roughshod over doctors' rights to expect that a contract would be a contract and wouldn't be torn up. But that indeed, of course, is what happened, and over the long term, Mr. Speaker, I think that we're going to find that Albertans are going to be deciding that trust is only going to be doled out in small doses to future Alberta governments, and that's a damage to our democracy.

Unfortunately, the threat to democracy is a many-pronged spear in the hands of this government, and it's not only the threat to the bona fide nature of contracts but also to the institutions of government that the current rendition of the government doesn't seem to hold it in high regard. When you see a Premier and a government focus entirely on things that are ideologically driven to control their agenda and to force, in particular in this case, doctors to accept a contract without engaging in respectful negotiations is something that I don't think will be ever a hundred per cent forgiven in this province, and it shouldn't be.

The issues that Albertans are wanting to have our government focus on are something that we are entirely focused on. There's the health care crisis, and we've come up with a plan for that ourselves. The cost of living is something that the province is struggling with. My constituents remind me of that every door I knock on. The ability of Albertans to have faith in their government, whether it's a decision to decide to go to university here, to start a business here, to engage in a nonprofit organization: all of these decisions are going to be based upon an underlying feeling about how they are able to interact with their government. There's a wound, a scab that has been placed forever on the relationship between the government of Alberta and its citizens by such legislation as Bill 21, which is now, three years later, being reversed but will forever be remembered by the people of this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others wishing to join in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was pausing there slightly because, yeah, it's intriguing to me that on a government bill that, you know, undoubtedly, their members support, they wouldn't be rising to speak to it, other than the illustrious Health minister, who I appreciate weighing in and listening and interjecting. I really do appreciate that, but I am slightly confused because I think most of us, perhaps all of us, would agree that health care is absolutely a priority for our constituents.

You know, I can say that not just from my experience in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, which, of course, I've spent many, many hours, particularly in the summer, knocking on doors. Since then I've been spending many, many hours in other ridings to support some of my MLA colleagues and some of our new candidates, including Edmonton-South West, which has been fantastic, knocking on doors there multiple times. A lot of health care workers there. A lot of health care workers there. A lot of teachers.

Ms Renaud: Lawyers.

Member Irwin: Lawyers. Yeah. Lots of working professionals. Yeah.

I can tell you that I was just knocking on doors there on Saturday – it was cold, but the reception was warm – and, yeah, health care definitely came up a lot at the doors.

As I've said in this Chamber before, you know, I'll often start my conversation with folks just saying: we're out canvassing and just curious what your top issues are. Health care almost always rises to the top, and not just here in Edmonton. I talked about Edmonton-South West, but Medicine Hat is a great example. I was talking to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat earlier about my experiences door-knocking there – we like to shoot the breeze in the back – and I just said that, yeah, it was really, really fascinating.

As many of you may know, our NDP candidate actually won in Medicine Hat proper. I was really blown away by the conversations that I had. I canvassed five times there in Medicine Hat, so, you know, I have a bit of a perspective on what folks there were saying. Certainly, there was concern about Bill 1 and the sovereignty act, education, but health care was right up there. Of course, our Premier was running there at the time, so a lot of concerns about the direction that health care might be taking under this Premier should she have won the seat. Of course, she did win the seat, so I would say to those voters that I met in Medicine Hat that their fears may have come true.

As I noted earlier when I intervened, you know, what an opportunity for this government and this Health minister to really take a lead on responding to their constituents and hearing their concerns about health care issues, that I'll get into here in a moment, but whether it's the crisis in children's health care or – I will first accept an intervention from my colleague from Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for her incredible work on the ground in her riding. Anywhere you go with her in the riding, to any event or even just on the streets meeting folks, she's known by name. That's not just by business owners or schoolchildren; that's by people who are actually on the streets.

What I wanted to ask about was those individuals who are most clearly affected by health care vulnerability and if indeed you found that there was a difficulty in maintaining the doctors who are required to treat those individuals who really don't have a family doctor – I'm talking about at the Boyle Street community centre and others – if indeed they've experienced a really difficult time maintaining staff and doctors at those centres to treat those most vulnerable people, particularly because there's a huge outbreak of a very viral disease right now on top of the pandemic.

Member Irwin: Yeah. I love that. See, this is the beauty of interventions. You can kind of have your speech sort of mapped out, as I do here very nicely, but – sorry; is that a prop? I've never actually – yeah, it's not a prop. I'm just telling you. I have a little bit of a plan here, but the member, you know, wouldn't have known my plan. I only knew my plan about two minutes ago. He wouldn't have known my plan, but one of my plans was to actually talk just about that, the impact of the crisis in health care on some of my most marginalized constituents, so thank you for that. That would be unhoused folks who I represent, and I do – I don't want to say that I have the honour, because I'll preface this, but I do. I do represent many unhoused folks, perhaps the most in the province. That's not an enviable honour; that's for sure.

Part of that, for folks who know my riding, is that we do have a concentration of social services, including, you know, the Bissell Centre and Hope Mission and Operation Friendship Seniors Society and Boyle McCauley health centre, now known as Radius health, and many, many more. I know I should never start naming because then I will miss folks, and they're all, for any of them watching at home, doing incredible work. In fact, this is my first time debating fully in the House other than intervening, and I always – you'll all recall that I always love to give a shout-out to the folks on the front lines, whether they're in health care or retail or you name it.

I can tell that member that he's exactly right. Unhoused folks in particular are sort of being bombarded from multiple angles right now, you know, and if you are unhoused, you're dealing with a lot of health care issues to begin with. As that member noted, right now in the inner city, which myself and my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre represent, the shigella outbreak has just – we don't even know the half of it, and I know the minister is aware of this crisis as well. I'm certainly no expert, but we know that one of the main reasons why shigella – why its presence increases and why it spreads is because of lack of access to sanitation, lack of access to clean water, and, of course, most predominantly, lack of access to housing, right? So they've got this public health crisis on top of the fact that we are still in the midst of a pandemic. Let us not forget that.

But it's also currently, according to my computer, minus 26. That doesn't tell me the wind chill, and I'm sure it's worse. I can tell you that last night coming home from the Legislature and then a few events in the evening – my typical route is down 96th Street, and I choose that route specifically because that's where Bissell Centre and a lot of the tents are, a lot of the encampments are. Sure enough, last night at, gosh, probably around 8 o'clock it would have been, I think, minus 40 or something like that: folks milling about, sleeping outside in this.

I thought about that this morning, too, because, gosh, I think it was minus 40 or something this morning as well as I'm driving to the Legislature. I mean, I'm always cold, though; I'll preface that. I'm always cold, but I was frozen in my car. I was shivering in my car and thinking about: holy crow, how is it that people are living in these conditions right now? They are, and I would encourage any of you to – you know, I try to stop and talk to them as much as I can, but you feel hopeless, right? You really do. [interjection] Yes. I will let the Member for Edmonton–City Centre intervene.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening to what my colleague was just saying about the challenges we know folks are facing who are living houseless in the city right now. Certainly, this is a concern I've been hearing from many in my constituency as well. Certainly, I know it has a significant impact on a lot of people here.

We have seen some deaths already in the cold here in Edmonton over the last little while, and I was just reflecting that, you know, a lot of these individuals, when they are seeking help, will go to the emergency room at the Royal Alex hospital. They will go there sometimes simply seeking warmth, but they will also go there seeking care because, of course, in many cases these individuals do experience frostbite and other things, and these individuals will not have an Alberta health care insurance card. One of the things that this government pushed through with this tearing up the agreement with physicians was to remove the ability for doctors at the Royal Alex emergency room to be able to bill for services if they treated one of those individuals with frostbite because they did not have their card. I was wondering what the member thought of that.

5:30

Member Irwin: Yeah. Again, thank you for mentioning that. I mean, it was on my list as well just to talk about what's happening at the RAH, the Royal Alexandra hospital. Of course, it's in my colleague's riding but very close to mine, so we see a heck of a lot of our constituents going there. You know, I can tell you that it's not new that that hospital deals with a lot of marginalized folks, unhoused folks.

I always tell this story. This sounds like a terrible story, but I promise it wasn't that bad. Many years ago, in 2013, I believe, I was biking. In fairness it was before I was a master cyclist, so it was mostly my fault because I was on the sidewalk. I was hit by a car, a silver BMW. We never did find that silver BMW. If you ever see a silver BMW with some damage on the side, let me know. I was hit by a car, and I was okay, but in the immediate aftermath I wasn't. I was in pain, so an ambulance came. Somebody called an ambulance, and I went to the Royal Alex. I still remember being hit by a car but, like, really not knowing if I'd broken my arm or what and having to wait quite a while, like having been low priority. I thought: oh, my goodness, I was hit by a car, and I'm that low priority. My point in saying that is that I know that the strain on that hospital is not new.

However, this is a hospital, and these are health care workers there. Both that Member for Edmonton–City Centre and I know a number of the health care workers there, and they are doing amazing work. I'd give them a shout-out if they're watching, but I know they're not watching because they are incredibly busy.

They have been, again, impacted by a whole number of issues. They're a lot of the ones that are dealing with the shigella outbreak. They're also dealing with the drug poisoning crisis – right? – a drug poisoning crisis that we've seen just skyrocket in the last few years, exacerbated by the pandemic, a drug poisoning crisis where, you know, sadly, we've not seen a lot of action, any action, in fact, from this government to address the immediate pressing issues on the front lines in our area in particular.

Okay. Oh, my goodness, I realize I haven't even got to some of the big things that I want to speak about here. I'll bring it back to Bill 4 just in case the Speaker is concerned about me going off track. I don't think he would be because he knows I always like to tie up the loose ends there. You know, I mentioned it earlier. This was an opportunity for this government to really take some profound action when it comes to many of the compounding crises we're seeing in health care.

Essentially, what this bill does is that it reverses that absolutely horrific decision that we saw from the UCP regarding tearing up the contract for doctors. I've heard my colleagues talk about this as well, that, you know, because of particularly the previous Health minister, his actions, so many Albertans do not have a family doctor. Family doctors have left this province. Family doctors have retired. Some have retired early. A big part of it is just the way that that minister engaged with them. It's been this ongoing combative approach instead of one that could be collaborative, right? That's what those health care workers in the midst of a pandemic deserved, and they didn't get it. Of course, you know, as we've said on the record here, we're happy to see that they're reversing that decision, but we didn't need to be here. We didn't need to be here when it comes to so many decisions that this UCP government has implemented, particularly when it comes to health care.

I can't stand in this Chamber and talk about health and not talk about the absolute crisis that is children's health care. You know, I've shared this on social media, too. It's hard to believe that we've come to a place where it's almost, like, acceptable that children are being denied care. The members opposite might say: well, they're not being denied care. Well, this is exactly what we see when we see the closing of RFH in Calgary, the moving of respite services. I can tell you that that was Friday night when that news broke, and admittedly I still don't have a whole lot of a social life, so I was following that story closely as it was breaking. I believe it was CBC that broke it first, so immediately I just posted about it and said that this is heartbreaking that children receiving respite services would be moved at a time when their families and them, of course, the patients themselves, are needing those supports so critically. [interjection] I'll let the Member for Edmonton–Mill Woods intervene.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to my colleague from Edmonton–Highlands–Norwood, who has been responding on Bill 4 and talking now about what we're seeing in children's hospitals and with our emergency rooms being overwhelmed and tying that into what she was talking about just before that point, the doctors leaving the province and the shortages that we're seeing in health care.

I just wanted to intervene to add my own reflection that it's really, really hard to see the news that's coming in and what's happening. I know that the Member for Edmonton–Highlands–Norwood supported our efforts to have emergency debates about these issues not once but twice in the last several days of sitting, that we were not able to have, specifically because of the urgency of what is currently happening when it comes to children's health care and particularly emergency care in light of what's happening across the province when it comes to the flu, COVID, RSV that are happening. I think it ties in really nicely to this debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Member Irwin: Thank you. You're absolutely right. The Member for Edmonton–Mill Woods is absolutely right.

You know, that was a hard thing to see yesterday. I'll take you back. I just had to double-check to make sure it was Tuesday today. That was just yesterday. Of course, it was the first opportunity we had since the news broke on Friday about Rotary Flames House. Yesterday was the first opportunity we had to really highlight that as another issue on top of the many factors that make up the crisis in children's health. Naturally, just yesterday, on Monday, the Member for Edmonton-City Centre did ask for an emergency debate on children's health care, and he was denied, which sends a pretty clear message.

Then not longer after that, moments later, in fact – moments later, in fact – our Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the leader, was denied an opportunity to debate her bill in this Chamber. In fact, it was moved down the priority list by this UCP government, that, you know, claims to want to prioritize private members' business. No; only when that private members' business is their private members'. It's about health care, you know? I feel like this Health minister – he may not have had a say in that decision – wants to be collaborative and wants to hear our ideas, like the ideas we've outlined in Bill 201, which didn't just materialize out of nowhere. Those ideas in Bill 201 came from a whole heck of a lot of consultation from our side of the House.

In the span of just a few minutes yesterday this government told us exactly what they think about health care. And let me tell you that we will continue to remind Albertans about how this government refuses to prioritize health care and children's health care every moment.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The Opposition House Leader has the call.

Member Irwin: Oh, is that one over there?

The Speaker: I think he was just rising.

The hon. member.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise to address second reading of Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022, a bill that, when you look at the contents of the bill, appears very straightforward. It is updating, based on the change in title of one of our ministries, Justice and Solicitor General, throughout the bill where that needs to happen. Then the real crux of this piece of legislation is the repealing of section 40.2, which referred to, essentially:

(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may, by order, terminate . . .

(b) the AMA Agreement, or [agreements].

It's laid out with a bit more language.

I'm not going to read that into the record, Mr. Speaker, but essentially the entirety of Bill 4 is removing from government an ability that they gave themselves in 2019 that has been incredibly controversial since the first time that it was introduced following through to when it was used in February of 2020, and now here we are in December of 2022 removing this ability because it was deemed to be so problematic and caused so many issues that moving forward, when it comes to the relationship with doctors, the absolute best thing that they could do would be to remove that and make assurances that similar powers would not be granted again in the future.

This has to do a lot with this government negotiating, bargaining with important front-line health care providers, and we've seen this government's tactics when it comes to bargaining. In the case of these powers to tear up agreements legislatively by order in council, by cabinet behind closed doors, and for cabinet behind closed doors to make those decisions, it really created a loss of trust when it came to the doctors and a toxic relationship. It was certainly characterized as bargaining in bad faith for the government not only to grant itself these powers in an attempt to strong-arm and then to use these powers.

As we debate Bill 4, I think the history of these mechanisms and why they're being repealed now are really salient and really important to the conversation that we're having, and I want to thank all of my colleagues who have spoken and reminded us, Albertans, other legislators here in the Chamber who are listening to the debate about why this happened and the history and the negative impact. I think that in the context of the Official Opposition supporting Bill 4 and supporting the removal of these powers, we need to acknowledge and put on the record the damage that was done by the creation of these powers through Bill 21 and then the use of these powers in February of 2020, because it's been a multiyear campaign against doctors that's had incredibly negative results here in our province.

I believe my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre noted that the minister used the language "no longer required" and suggested that it was never required, and I would have to agree. It would have been better for Alberta had we never gone down this path when it comes to what became quite a toxic relationship with doctors.

Member Irwin: Member?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, my colleague.

Member Irwin: Yeah. You know, I just started listening to your remarks, but I wanted to get this one out there. I know that you, like me, have knocked on a lot of doors. I've seen you door-knocking a lot in beautiful Edmonton-Mill Woods. It is beautiful. It's a long drive for me, but it is beautiful.

You know, I'm curious: when you're door-knocking, is it similar to what I've heard, that, obviously, health care is a priority? You mentioned the content here in Bill 4 about the reversal of the ridiculous decision to tear up doctors' contracts. Is that something you've heard about at the doors, or are you hearing a lot more about the crisis in health care, including the crisis in pediatric health care, the crisis that we've talked about with the impact on health care workers, which I didn't even get to in my remarks, particularly the morale issues, the burnout, the stress? Hopefully, I'll get another chance to talk about that because I have a lot of stories that I sure would like to get on the record. I imagine that in Mill Woods you talk to a lot of health care workers as well, so I'd love to hear a little bit about that from you, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Yes, when out knocking on the doors, I have heard from health care professionals as well as doctors. [An electronic device sounded]

Member Irwin: Can we just pause for a second?

The Speaker: Yes.

Ms Gray: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly have heard on the doors. When door-knocking ever since Bill 21 was first introduced in 2019, every now and then I would run across health care workers or doctors who are really attuned to this and aware of it, so I've had some good conversations about that.

But generally speaking, in Mill Woods – Mill Woods is a community designed in the '70s, and in the heart of Mill Woods is the Grey Nuns community hospital. In fact, I see it every day as I drive in and out of my own home in Mill Woods. We have so many health care workers and others who support the hospital who live in the surrounding communities. Absolutely, health care is an urgent priority for the constituents of Mill Woods and something I hear about often, particularly because in Edmonton the Grey Nuns community hospital, which is 40-plus years old, is the newest hospital in the city of Edmonton. I think that's always something really important to remember as well, because health care needs have grown and changed and population size has grown quite a bit since Mill Woods was first designed and built, beginning in the '70s, and the Grey Nuns hospital was originally created.

So, yes, I would say that there was incredibly high awareness of what was happening through Bill 21 and the dispute with doctors. The highly publicized incident of the previous Minister of Health engaging with a doctor on his driveway really hit a lot of people's radars. That story was spread far and wide because it was emblematic of the toxic relationship and the back and forth that was happening, the threatening of funding and support when it comes to doctors' ability to bill. I know I saw it characterized in many ways in places, that the AMA was of the strong opinion that they had approached the table for negotiating these agreements wanting to be productive. [interjection] Yes. Thank you.

Mr. Nielsen: Thanks. Having a very long time ago had the opportunity to live in the Mill Woods area, actually a couple of blocks from the Grey Nuns, I know, of course, that a lot of support workers do live in the area because they work there. Again, you know, I'm always a person of kudos where it's due: the Health minister trying to repair that relationship with doctors. But I'm wondering if you've had the opportunity to speak to some of the support workers, the folks that clean the hospital, things like that, because we know that that relationship did not go well. It's affected people in their jobs. During your time door-knocking in Edmonton-Mill Woods, have you heard anything about the current Health minister's work trying to repair that relationship with support workers? Is there any success, or has it gotten it worse? Has nothing happened? I'm wondering if you might be able to fill in some comments around that.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to my colleague, who I did not realize was a former resident of Mill Woods. I'd be curious to know which neighbourhoods you were in, my friend.

Certainly, the hospital is itself like a small city, the variety of people and tasks required to keep a hospital running and to provide that care. Certainly, we know we often hear the phrase "doctors and nurses," but when it comes to front-line health care, the team is so much broader and deeper than just those very front-facing roles: everyone from the cleaning staff, laundry services, the team that operates in the morgue, the teams that hand out the medications, the porters, on and on and on. Of course, during the pandemic we saw a wildcat strike, not at the Mill Woods community hospital but at other locations here in the city. So that toxic, controversial relationship has really had a negative impact in so many different ways. It's been frustrating to watch.

I realize that we're getting close to 6 p.m., Mr. Speaker, so our time to talk about Bill 4 is going to move fairly quickly on us. I want to make a few of my priority points, and one of them is around the conversation about: Bill 21, the tearing up of doctors, the very aggressive bargaining that was taking place over the last several years, which we are now backing away from, which I appreciate, have led to doctors leaving Alberta.

Now, it's certainly a matter of debate in this place as to whether there is an issue here or not, but CPSA put out updated stats for 2021 that, in my mind, show very clearly that there is an issue. It's not because doctors just started leaving Alberta this year, Mr. Speaker. Doctors have always had an influx and an outflux, but what we've seen is a trend where in 2018 there were 52 doctors who left . . . [interjection] Oh, please. Happy to.

Mr. Copping: Thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for allowing me to stand and speak. I want to speak to this one issue just for clarity in terms of doctors. My comments that I made earlier – and there's a recognition that we do have not enough doctors, right? We have more doctors than we've ever had before. The number of doctors is increasing, but we don't have enough doctors, and we don't have enough doctors in the right places. We fully appreciate that, and quite frankly we're working on this.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that I was very pleased to reach an agreement with the AMA which will assist us in addressing that issue, providing stability, partnership, innovation, ability to attract and retain. I'd like to point out that although the hon. member across the way was talking about history, that's also part of the history, our reaching an agreement that was accepted by over 70 per cent of doctors. Again I'd like to thank you for your support in moving forward. This was part of the agreement in terms of doing it, and we're looking forward, again, to passing this and continuing to focus on getting more doctors here in Alberta.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Minister. Yes, I think it is incredibly important that an agreement has now been reached. Removing the ability to tear up that agreement, through Bill 4, is a very positive step, and I think that's quite good.

Your comments around "We need more doctors," I think, are really true, but I also really just want to emphasize that many, many experts and many in the medical field feel that this government's aggressive tactics through Bill 21 and entering into what many characterized as a war on doctors, which I have seen escalate from when it began in 2019 and continue through a pandemic, which, frankly, is ridiculous, have now led to the highest number of physicians leaving Alberta that we've seen in the last five years, almost three times as many as we saw in 2018 and 2019.

When it comes to growth in the Alberta physician workforce, the minister rightly points out that the number of physicians has increased, but this year it increased only by 45. Last year it increased by 161, the year before that by 262. The number of physicians we're growing by is shrinking, and the trend line is such that it's going to be in the negatives next year if these trends continue. That's particularly concerning given where we find ourselves in the need to find doctors.

The word the minister used, "stability": agreed, incredibly important. I think that's something that we should value and continue to try to protect. Counter to that the behaviour we saw from the UCP government in 2019, 2020, carrying into 2021, when they were characterizing doctors as greedy and self-serving, when they were running public campaigns to vilify doctors in this battle that was happening between the government, when they were working to force agreements and force proposals, including the 10 proposals that the previous Minister of Health deemed essential, essentially none of which are in practice now. I think that's a record that we need to be aware of and to move away from because it's contributed to putting us in the position that we're in now, and it really has been a bit of a mess.

Kudos to the current minister. I'm glad that an agreement has been reached and that we've backed away from that extremely toxic, adversarial negotiating style, the bargaining in bad faith that we previously saw. But the issue we have today continues to exist in that we need more doctors, we need to recruit doctors, and trust has been broken. Certainly, we need to be helping people to find doctors and trying to recover from the care deficit that has been put in place.

Now, in preparing for my remarks for Bill 4, I was briefing myself up on the current state of how someone goes about to find doctors, and I was reminded. Seven and a half years ago, before I was elected, Mr. Speaker, I worked as a software consultant, an IT project manager, and one of the projects that I helped with was the albertafindadoctor.ca website, which still seems to be running and looks similar. I'm sure it's completely different in the back end and in many features from when I worked on it seven years ago – IT moves at a pretty quick pace – but being able to, as I prepared for my remarks, see that previous work brought forward really reminded me of how important it is that people be able to access that public health care and to have that doctor.

As we debate Bill 4, one of the things I mentioned briefly when my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood spoke was that when we're talking about health care in this House, the current crisis that we see in children's health care, the current crisis that we see in emergency rooms being overwhelmed, we need to find some time to make sure we're having those conversations as well. There have been some attempts to have emergency debates around that.

The other piece that I think is interesting to consider when we're talking about health care changes in second reading was the private member's bill measuring service standards, Bill 201, because when we're talking about our health care system and how it's performing, whether we're seeing what we expect out of that system, it's incredibly important that we have at our fingertips good data about what is happening, and I think that the private member's bill that was introduced but not debated is really important.

When considering Bill 4 as well as what we're seeing here today, I just want . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: There have already been three interventions. I'm sorry.

Member Irwin: Oh, we already had three? Okay.

Ms Gray: Yeah. We've had three.

Member Irwin: Okay. Sorry.

Ms Gray: No. That's okay. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: No problem.

Ms Gray: One of the challenges when I reflect on the debate that happened for Bill 21 back in 2019 – if I recall correctly, one of the government's arguments was that they were clarifying and codifying in legislation a power they believed they already had. We've seen the government make this kind of argument on multiple pieces of legislation, including Bill 10, where they were giving themselves new powers under the Public Health Act. We see that happening again, in some ways, when we talk about Bill 1 of this session, the sovereignty act. Throughout so many of these issues . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, Bill 4 is before the Assembly. Are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call on the minister to close debate.

Mr. Nielsen: Sorry.

Mr. Jones: Oh, he just said it.

Member Irwin: It's your own bill. Why aren't you speaking to it?

The Speaker: Order. Order.

I will say that it's a very late arrival to the feet by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, but I'll give it to him on this occasion.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I know we're coming in under the wire here. You know, as I'd mentioned a little bit earlier during an intervention, always willing to give kudos where it's due, and I thank the Minister of Health for bringing Bill 4 forward to fix a very serious problem that, in my opinion, was the result of – let's be frank. It was kind of a childish tirade, you know, going into negotiations, not really getting the way they wanted, and: well, let's just rip it up. That's not how negotiations work, and I'm glad that the current Minister of Health is trying to do a little better and showing a better way to negotiate. Obviously, by getting the doctors to agree, there was obviously something there that allowed them to feel like they were getting a good deal out of it.

You know, as I was listening to the course of the debate, jotting down many, many, many notes – hopefully, I'll get a chance to talk about those later in Committee of the Whole.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt but see the time for this item has expired. It is now 6 o'clock, and the House stands adjourned until this evening at 7:30.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 6, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated. As you were.

Government Motions

Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner

12. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly
- concur in the report of the Select Special Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner Search Committee tabled on December 5, 2022 (Sessional Paper 17/2022); and
  - recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Kevin Brezinski be appointed as Ombudsman and Public Interest Commissioner for the province of Alberta for a five-year term commencing on December 30, 2022.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Government House Leader has moved Government Motion 12. It is a debatable motion pursuant to Standing Order 18(1)(b). Is there anyone wishing to join in the debate?

Seeing none, I am prepared to allow the hon. the Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Schow: Waived.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

The Speaker: The hon. the Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 1

13. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in second reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, we've quite a lot of debate on Bill 1 thus far. We've heard cries from the members opposite on how Bill 1 is unconstitutional and how they don't believe it rings true for what Albertans want. As you know, our government seeks to reflect the voices of everyday Albertans, and the men and women of Alberta who elected us to represent them in government expect us to do our best possible.

We have heard feedback, and on Monday our government caucus met to discuss and propose clarifying amendments to this bill. Proposed amendments include clarifying that any legislative change to existing Alberta statutes outlined in a resolution and introduced and passed by the Legislative Assembly under the act must also be introduced and passed separately through the regular legislative process. These proposed amendments reflect feedback we have received from Albertans who want to see aspects of Bill 1 clarified and ensure it gets across the finish line. I'm pleased the voices of our MLAs and Albertans are being heard and respected, and I look forward to making sure those changes are made this evening. We've debated Bill 1 now for nine hours. That's plenty of time to discuss and debate on things that are important to Albertans, but it's time to get to the conversation about amendments.

Just as a reminder, NDP members took an unprecedented step in voting against Bill 1 in first reading, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to read from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, which has the following to say about first reading:

First reading allows a bill to be formally brought before the House, printed and made available publicly. [At this point] it is assigned a specific bill number. Passage of the motion for first reading involves no commitment on the part of the House beyond [agreeing] that the bill be made generally available for the information of Parliament and the public.

For the public, Mr. Speaker. We work for Albertans. It is in their best interests that they see the legislation that we are proposing.

Sadly, the members opposite chose that that was not the best course. Every single member of the NDP decided that they felt that they knew better and that no member of the public deserved to see a copy of this bill, so I think it's rich for members opposite now to embark on a process of delaying this bill. They made amply clear, Mr. Speaker – amply clear – that they had no interest in even seeing it printed, no interest in reading the bill before even voting against it. Here the members opposite say that nine hours isn't a delay tactic or a filibuster, yet we're on the second reasoned amendment. To anyone with an ounce of parliamentary experience it smacks of delaying tactics on a bill that they have no intention of allowing to get to a vote. While I encourage healthy debate, their actions since the introduction of Bill 1 have been slightly disingenuous. There has been plenty of time for members to speak.

While I do believe debate by the opposition is important, in fact essential, Albertans have already told this government what they want to see changed, and nearly nine hours of discussion for Bill 1 is more than enough time to discuss those requests. It's time the government did what it promised Albertans it would do this fall and get things done with Bill 1. I encourage and quite enjoy healthy debate in this Chamber, but when time is used to simply delay the democratic process of passing legislation, I encourage all members of the Chamber to listen to the feedback from the voices of everyday Albertans, the people that we serve, the men and women that elected us to represent them, and move forward with the process this evening.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 21(3) a member of the opposition may respond for up to five minutes. I see the Official Opposition whip has risen.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks for the opportunity to speak to this motion this evening. Just a number of points, the first being that with this bill, it's not just any bill; it's the flagship bill of this new Premier, of this new cabinet, and so forth. There was a lot of expectation, I think, amongst the public, considering all of the issues that needed to be dealt with here in the province of Alberta with affordability, the health care crisis, and so forth. So when this Bill 1 did come forward, everybody's jaws literally dropped, not just figuratively, because here within a scant few pages was this hopeless jumble of rhetoric around freedom and so forth, you know, directly brought from some fringe element and very poorly executed – right? – with plenty of error built within it.

The very short time that we've had with the bill thus far – both the Official Opposition and the general public at large have found plenty of problems with Bill 1. Probably the best way which we could air those issues was through the debate here in the Legislature, so for the House leader to get up and suggest that, you know, delaying somehow this bill – really, what he's doing here this evening is delaying the debate that needs to take place to clear the air around Bill 1, right? Every day we learn more things about the implications of this bill on funding at different levels, its effect on the relationship with First Nations peoples, and so forth. I think that it would be wise to reconsider having closure at this juncture on Bill 1.

Again, the House leader opposite talks about first reading and how uncommon it is for someone to perhaps vote against something on first reading. I would suggest, number one, that I saw this same UCP caucus do the very same thing when we were in government not so long ago. I mean, certainly, don't talk out both sides of your mouth, as they say, Mr. Speaker. Number two, the very existence of a sovereignty act, as it sits, is enough to send disquiet amongst the markets, amongst the economy, amongst relationships with First Nations, relationships between different levels of government. Those two words are enough to trigger all kinds of concern. We've seen that in the parallels from other jurisdictions that have done this in the past. It's caused absolute chaos, so I think it's very well to set the stage, you know, to have some people voting against this bill in first reading, and we stand by it. In fact, I think it started a very strong analysis of Bill 1 that took place in the public here right across the province, and people are still, as I say, picking up their jaws off the desk as to the astounding ineptitude of this bill.

Humbly and persuasively, hopefully, I would suggest all members vote against closure here this evening. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 13 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:40 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Goehring moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government has failed to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the potential risks this bill presents to federal funding for their projects, including critical infrastructure and housing initiatives.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment December 5: Ms Sigurdson]

The Speaker: The hon. member has no time remaining, so we will proceed to the next speaker on amendment RA2. As I mentioned on a number of occasions last night, it is important that members are speaking to the amendment and not to the main motion.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and offer my thoughts on the amendment to the job-killing sovereignty act, which states that

Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government has failed to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the potential risks this bill presents to federal funding for their projects, including critical infrastructure and housing initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have to say that it is a tremendous privilege to be able to speak in this House, especially considering that Bill 1, if passed in its current form, will essentially render us completely redundant. We won't even get the opportunity to speak to legislation or even propose amendments because the bill as it's currently written condenses all of that power into the executive branch of government, bypasses the contributions of private members of the Legislature completely. We will have nothing to say. We won't even be allowed to say our piece or represent our constituents on matters of legislation because the legislation won't even have to come to the floor of the Legislature anymore for it to be created, amended, repealed. None of that will happen. So I'm very pleased to be able to speak, maybe for the last time, on a piece of legislation that comes before the House here today.

Now, of course, Mr. Speaker, recognizing your guidance, this amendment really focuses on the threat that Bill 1 poses to funding for projects, including critical infrastructure and housing initiatives, because we know that the government is, through Bill 1, giving itself the power to completely disregard the federal government and any initiative or even proposed initiative that it seems to think would be harmful to the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: I might just briefly interrupt the hon. member. My apologies for doing such. I hear a number of private conversations happening around the Chamber this evening. There's lots of space for those to happen in the lounges, in your offices. I ask that you provide, even if it's not your attention, at least your quiet to the hon. member.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that probably all of the private members are as equally concerned about their ability to speak to bills disappearing as I am, so they're getting all of their speaking in right now, all at the same time, before that power is taken away from them completely by Bill 1.

The point I was trying to make was that I'm in favour of this amendment because it threatens federal funding. I know that my colleagues here in the Official Opposition have made a lot of arguments supporting this, but I would just like to raise one issue in particular that's very important to the people of Edmonton-Gold Bar certainly but to the francophone population in Alberta broadly speaking, and that's the issue of federal funding for Campus Saint-Jean, part of the University of Alberta.

Now, Campus Saint-Jean, of course, is a faculty of the University of Alberta that provides the only French-language postsecondary instruction in western Canada. It's done so for over a century, and it's been a part of the University of Alberta for many decades. The Faculté Saint-Jean has gone through its ups and downs, but the future of that faculty has never been more at threat than it has been during the time that this government has been in power. In fact, it was only a couple of years ago that the Francophone association of Alberta launched a lawsuit against this government to get it to uphold its obligations that the government made, back when the faculty became a part of the University of Alberta, to continue to support the Faculté Saint-Jean and its operation here in the province of Alberta.

Now, that lawsuit, of course, continues to hang over the government, but in the meantime the federal government as well as the provincial government and the University of Alberta itself have come to an agreement to keep the lights on at Faculté Saint-Jean with the federal government announcing a $10 million injection of funding over the next three years. Now, this is not unusual, Mr. Speaker. It has been a long-standing practice of the federal government to fund francophone education in provinces all across the country. It, of course, is an important part of making sure that Canadians from coast to coast can exercise their constitutional rights to speak either English or French and to learn in the language of their parents. Funding the University of Alberta's Faculté Saint-Jean is an important piece of allowing francophones in Alberta to live and work and get educated in French, which is often their first language.

Now, this funding offered by the federal government has long come with the expectation that the province would match funds, but this government has decided that it wanted to leave money on the table for quite some time until it was dragged kicking and screaming to sign an agreement with the federal government in which the federal government would provide $10 million to the Faculté Saint-Jean over the next three years and then the provincial government would provide a paltry 2 and a half million dollars and the University of Alberta would kick in $500,000 of its own money.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason that this is – I'm pleased to see that Faculté Saint-Jean has at least had a three-year reprieve from the assaults that this government has launched against that faculty. I'm pleased to see that the government has decided to take a pause on attacking French postsecondary education here in the province of Alberta. But I am concerned that with Bill 1 they will give themselves the ability to completely negate those sections of the Constitution which may deal with French-language education here in the province of Alberta, because under Bill 1, of course, any federal initiative that, in the opinion of the majority of the members of the House, is harmful to the people of Alberta would be subject to cabinet's decision to suspend the operation of those provisions and provide any enactment to counteract those provisions.

So if Bill 1 is passed, what would that mean for federal funding of an institution like Faculté Saint-Jean, and what would that mean for the future of francophone education here in the province of Alberta? I can tell you that francophones here in Alberta are terrified of what this might mean for the future of French-language education in this province. They have no idea what the government's intention is with respect to respecting the constitutional right to education in the French language here in the province of Alberta. We know that this government has been hostile to French-language learners during its tenure, and they have no reason to believe that it will change its course.

I mean, on the issue of hostility towards francophone education, it was only this spring when I brought parents from Gabrielle-Roy school in my riding to come to the gallery and be introduced and observe question period, wherein I asked the Education minister why she's failing to meet the government's constitutional obligations to fund the francophone education system at a level that's equivalent to that provided to the English education system. Not only did she refuse to make the commitment to meet her constitutional obligation to fund the francophone education system appropriately; she wouldn't even take a meeting with the parents when I asked her to. She flat out refused to meet with them. It's no wonder that francophones in Alberta are terrified at what passing Bill 1 will mean.

Federal funding is an important piece of that language rights protection. [interjection] I see my friend from Edmonton-North West is rising on an intervention.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. You know, when we talk about the province interfering with a co-operative relationship between the federal government and the provincial government, I mean, you have to wonder what the purpose is, but there's quite often a dollar amount associated with that, too, right? It's one thing to try and make a political point about what have you, but, for example, with francophone education you literally end up leaving money on the table that is meant to serve the people of Alberta. When you go further down that same line of thought, it seems clear that not just this current UCP government, Mr. Speaker, but a long line of Conservative governments here in the province of Alberta have refused to openly accept French as an official second language here in the province of Alberta. They always say an "other languages" sort of thing, again, maybe making some political point but otherwise undermining French education here in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, to my friend from Edmonton-North West for that intervention. He knows full well how important it is to fund and support the francophone education system here in Alberta because he did a marvellous job at that when he was the Minister of Education. Our government has a track record of expanding and actively protecting the rights of French speakers here in the province of Alberta. We were the first government in the history of this province to create a French-language policy, a policy that has been incredibly important to francophones here in Alberta and continues to do so, but it has not lived up to its full potential, shall we say, under the current UCP government. Certainly, Bill 1 as currently written threatens to throw all of that out the window. It's completely unconstitutional and is therefore a severe threat to French-language rights here in the province of Alberta.

8:10

You know, it's incredibly frustrating to me that other critical infrastructure initiatives have continued to be unfunded because the government refuses to play ball with the federal government. I have two supportive housing units in my riding, one in Mill Creek and one in the Capilano neighbourhood, that up until very recently sat empty because the government refused to work with – the federal government had already come to the table with the city of Edmonton to provide money to make sure that those facilities were built and could operate to provide supportive housing for people in desperate need of supportive housing in the city of Edmonton. What did this provincial government do? They sat on their wallets and refused to come to the table with any money until the very last minute, and that's had significant negative results, negative impacts on people in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, my riding borders Mill Creek as well as the North Saskatchewan River, and those have turned into veritable tent cities under this government's tenure. The homelessness numbers in Edmonton have skyrocketed over the last three years, and you only need to take a quick walk through either Mill Creek ravine or the North Saskatchewan River valley to come across dozens and dozens of people living in tents, freezing to death in tents, tonight. I have no doubt that there is going to be somebody who wakes up dead tomorrow because they cannot find a house right now, and this government bears the lion's share of the blame because they haven't come to the table with money for supportive housing.

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order is raised. The hon. the Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Schow: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j), specifically the portion about using language that causes disruption within this Chamber. I recognize that there are tent cities in this city and that there are those who are going without homes, but to place the blame for the deaths of those who may be outside this evening, tragically, on this government squarely is totally inappropriate.

That kind of language is not appropriate or should be used in this Chamber. I know that member knows better; this is not his first term as an MLA, a former minister of the Crown. I would appreciate if he kept his remarks in line with the decorum of this Chamber, not making such statements that the death of homeless people on the streets this evening is the fault of the government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter of debate. This is not a point of order. I think it is a fact that all orders of government bear a certain level of responsibility as far as taking care of its citizens, and so as far as the degree to which one order of government bears that responsibility or not, that's what we debate in this Chamber all the time through budget estimates, et cetera. Although I appreciate the fact that the Government House Leader feels this is a point of order, this is a matter of debate.

The Speaker: Without the benefit of previous rulings, because I know from experience that Speaker Wanner had much to say about this particular issue and some members, perhaps of the opposition, making accusations about the government being responsible for the death of Albertans – and certainly he had much to say on this particular issue – I will provide caution to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that making statements as he's made certainly has the potential of being disruptive, and I hope that he will endeavour to keep them more broad or on the amendment at hand.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your guidance. I just want to stress that the number of people who are living rough in this city is as high as it has ever been, and those numbers have by all estimates at least doubled over the last three years. There's no question that provincial government policy has caused the number of people living outside to skyrocket. When those people experience negative effects, like I mentioned before, there is no doubt that it is policy decisions made by the government that have led to those outcomes. There is also no doubt in my mind that if the government had met with the federal government's financial commitments, we wouldn't be in this position.

I urge all members to vote in favour of keeping the federal government at the table, providing funding for these, and vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before the Assembly is amendment RA2.

I would like to provide some clarity on comments that I made at the beginning of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's speech with respect to relevance. On the amendment RA2, I would just like to say that in light of the passage of Government Motion 13 I am happy to provide a little bit more swath with respect to relevance and the amendment to members who are speaking this evening.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment, which, of course, contemplates that Bill 1 be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government has failed to adequately consult with nonprofit organizations and municipalities on the . . . risks this bill presents to federal funding for their projects.

Now, it's useful to go and have a look at what the bill actually says. It doesn't take that long to read it. What it says here is that the Legislature will bring a motion if, in the opinion of the majority of the members of the Legislature, a federal initiative is "unconstitutional," "intrudes into an area of provincial . . . jurisdiction," or "violates the rights" under the Charter, or – and this "or" is doing some pretty heavy lifting here in section 3 – "causes or is anticipated to cause harm to Albertans."

What that resolution can do, then, is direct cabinet to identify some measures that they should consider taking, and part of those directions are that the minister can "exercise a power, duty, or function . . . by making a regulation," for example, or "issue directives to a provincial entity and [their] members." Those directives can be in respect of a federal initiative.

Now, what's important here is that those provincial entities – when one goes and has a look at definitions under section 1(e) – are public agencies, Crown corporations, "an entity that carries out a power, duty or function under an enactment." So that could be pretty well anybody. There are lots of delegated authorities within the government of Alberta. "An entity that receives a grant or other public funds from the Government that are contingent on the provision of a public service." There we have contracted service providers, many of which are nonprofits. We have here public postsecondary institutions, school boards, municipal authorities, municipal and regional police services.

Mr. Speaker, what happens here is that the Legislature could take a notion, just simply have some vibes, feelings, that something causes or is anticipated to cause harm. It could be anything. They got vibes. You know, it could be any Canada Proud Facebook meme that stirs the passions and the enthusiasms. A resolution comes in, then people, nonprofits, others, are directed to refuse federal initiatives of any law, program, policy but not even just existing ones. And this is where the vibes come in, Mr. Speaker. Under 1(c): ". . . or a proposed or anticipated federal law, program, policy, agreement or action."

So people could just hear things that might be coming and interfere in the operations of municipalities, nonprofits, anyone who wants to administer a housing program, for example, anyone who wants to administer a joint federal-provincial program of various kinds. And there are many, ranging from those that have an effect on people's daily lives such as in the area of housing, or oftentimes justice programs, Indigenous programs, and so on, to the absolutely anodyne. There are fed-prov initiatives across government, and there are always the big wheels of government turning and changes perhaps anticipated. There are always nefarious actors out there spinning a yarn, Mr. Speaker, about what might be coming. Those are political determinations, and they certainly have no place in an act that contemplates based on what might happen in the future, a scare tactic, then yanking funding away from nonprofits.

That is why this bill should not be read a second time. That is why nonprofits were scandalized – and so were municipalities and others – when this bill came out. You know, many people thought – I was among them, Mr. Speaker – that perhaps this government would attenuate this deeply unpopular sovereignty act misadventure.

In fact, we can have a look at the numbers that Leger has just reported out – and, you know, their horse race numbers are probably the least important or interesting part of the polling set. They find, of course, that 29 per cent of Calgarians and 27 per cent of Edmontonians are supportive of the sovereignty act, meaning it's within the margin of error for Calgary and Edmonton. Even the rest of Alberta, the support there is only at 39 per cent; still, 61 per cent of their sample for the entire rest of Alberta outside of the municipal census districts of Edmonton and Calgary are not supportive of this legislation. And no wonder, Mr. Speaker, given the expansive nature of this piece of legislation.

It is not that any action has been taken towards anyone outside of our borders. What this piece of legislation is and why it has provoked such strong backlash from all aspects of Alberta society is that it is a war on ourselves. We're not teaching anyone a lesson; we're not standing up to anyone. We've just enumerated that we can interfere in the affairs of every nonprofit society, every municipality, postsecondary institution, police services, Crown agencies, anybody who does business with the federal and provincial governments, and not just based on existing programs or initiatives but based on rumours, based on feelings, emotional reactions.

There is no question that this is extremely ill-conceived on constitutionality. That is why it has been variously described as written in crayon, the worst legislation in Canadian history, and so on and so forth, in modern constitutional history, anyway. That is why it should not be read a second time. This introduces a level of uncertainty, particularly at a point that my hon. friend would say, describing around housing and homelessness, we need everyone to be pulling in the same direction on this issue. It is minus 30 out there tonight, and it's minus 20-something down in Lethbridge, where we, too, have tent cities. This is an urgent, urgent issue that requires a short-, medium-, and long-term solution at all orders of government: municipal, provincial, and federal.

It also requires, Mr. Speaker, very careful and thoughtful policy from municipalities and the province on how to ensure that the private sector will also invest in housing stock and expanding that housing stock, and in the affordable and accessible in particular. The province has a duty that they have entirely abrogated around accessible housing, certainly, and social housing, certainly, but there is a whole category of affordable housing where the private sector then works with other orders of government to ensure that we have that housing stock available. They cannot do this if there is so much uncertainty in how housing policy and how housing arrangements between federal and provincial levels of government and nonprofit organizations are, in fact, rolling out in this province.

So, too, this affects municipalities. There are a number of initiatives that rely, planning decisions and so on in municipalities, on federal funding. I'll just give a really small and otherwise perhaps insignificant and unremarkable example of some more active transportation grants that have come from the federal government.

I noticed the other day that there was some federal bike path funding that came through for Lethbridge and area and for the county as well. This makes people safer, and unlike Edmonton, you know, in southern Alberta and Lethbridge in particular we actually have nice weather down there and we can ride our bikes quite often. These are the kinds of arrangements that, then, communities are planned around. Oftentimes communities are planned around recreational infrastructure, community infrastructure, schools, and so on. So it goes to our property values, it goes to our decisions that developers are making, decisions that municipalities are making around their property assessment and their capital investments, all the rest of it.

Why would we be putting all of this at risk because the Legislature takes a notion that they don't like a particular anticipated federal decision? Not even one that's been made, but maybe they heard tell of something and they don't like it. That is not how we plan a province and how we build a province for more than 4 million people in the kind of sophisticated economy that we have here in Alberta.

It is utterly unnecessary. It is deeply unpopular. No one asked for this. Like, literally no one asked for this. They may have asked for some other, you know, statement of purpose or some other statement of principles, which is actually what I thought that the government might deliver, not this unconstitutional hot garbage that essentially directs any nonprofit that they cannot take federal funds anymore.

Nonprofits don't have time to navigate the morass of what the majority of the MLAs on the other side of the House might be thinking on any given day on federal programming and whether they should bother trying to seek out those funds or if they're going to be putting their provincial supports at risk when they do so. They don't have time for that. They don't have time for lengthy court battles. They don't have time for knowing the ins and outs of, you know, whether this legislation, as we have learned today, is a complete overstep on section 96 and the role of the courts. That's not nonprofits' jobs. That's not municipalities' jobs. That's why this amendment contemplates ensuring that this bill is not read a second time, on those grounds.

This bill does not address the problem that the government has laid out. It targets vast swaths of Alberta society with uncertainty, with chaos, with conflict, and ultimately what it does is that it takes all of our attention away from where it should be. We have municipalities, we have nonprofits all across this province who are saying that we have deep and worsening health care crises; that is to say, access to EMS, access to primary care. We have a nonprofit sector that has been saying to the government across the way that they need increases for their contracted social services agencies of various kinds: women's shelters, family supports, child and youth intervention services, disability supports. They're being squeezed by inflation and the cost of living. Their caseloads are higher. Issues and problems that they face and challenges that they are working through with their clients or those that they are contracted to support in some way, shape, or form: all of those issues have become more complex for whatever reason, and there are many over the last two and a half years of the pandemic.

Life has gotten a lot more difficult for people, and that's why Albertans are begging this government to focus on those issues, on the real priorities, not this. Municipalities have been begging for this. They've been saying: "Look, we have issues with attracting and retaining health care professionals. We have issues with respect to ensuring that we've got good EMS response times." The last thing that municipalities need to be in is some sort of bunfight with the provincial government over their municipal funding because they're also party to a federal initiative that may change sometime in the future. That's what this legislation forces them to do. So there is no question that it needs to be rejected. There is no question that this deeply unpopular government has brought forward a deeply unpopular piece of legislation because it opens up a front of, essentially, conflict with every aspect of Alberta society.

The French in I think it was World War I built the Maginot line, which was a big trench, and all of their guns were faced east. In World War II the Germans just went around. Turrets were east, and the Germans were west. They were pinned in; their guns were pointed the wrong way. That's a lesson. The fact is that this legislation goes to war with the wrong enemy. It is not a piece of legislation – and it's not advisable to go to war with every aspect of Alberta society, which is what happens with this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On amendment RA2 are there others? The hon. the opposition whip.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the last speaker, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, who brought a very apt comparison, I think, in regard to – I guess there has to be some kind of tactic behind the sovereignty act, but as I said from my earlier comments, it's just so poorly executed that there's no way you could amend your way out of it, quite frankly. There's a structural problem in that it undermines different levels of government – municipal, federal, provincial, and I would include nonprofit entities into that equation – because it creates conflict between each of those levels at every possible juncture when a provincial government wants to choose to pull the trigger to enact that conflict and deem it to be somehow against the sovereign interests of the province.

I guess it has a certain elegance in its trickery – right? – because it dislodges and moves sort of 130 years or more of good governance here in the province of Alberta and suddenly puts everybody on edge. It's like: okay; what's going to happen next? Are they going to invoke a sovereignty challenge against this funding that I'm trying to get for affordable housing for people in Edmonton? Does it undermine the research funding that someone wants to choose to go to do in one of our colleges or polytechnics because it somehow doesn't fit in with the ideology of the government of the province of the day? I mean, all of these things: you don't take them frivolously. You don't think that, oh, you've created such a clever trick. Aren't we clever to make something like this? It literally unravels the fabric of how we make decisions here in the province of Alberta.

Of course, you can make changes to those things, and of course you can have conflict between those things, too, right? Lord knows the federal government needs to be carefully watched at all junctures in regard to their interpretation of the power between provinces and the feds. I mean, that's part of our job, and I think we do a pretty good job here in Alberta generally. But you don't need to have this half-baked sovereignty act to suddenly cause chaos in the way by which we execute our responsibility to fight for the powers that we are entitled to here in the province of Alberta. So that's the problem, I think. Try to amend your way out of that. Good luck, right? There's only one way to do so, and that is to withdraw this bill.

Considering, again, all of the issues that are top of mind of people – and we can look at polls or we can just talk to people on the street or we knock on their door, whatever. They sure as heck are not going to tell you that, yeah, we've got to build a sovereignty act, and it's got to be a big one like Noah's ark, and we're going to sail it around and throw things at people. I mean, that's not what people want at this point in time, probably any time, really. You know, the affordability crisis has literally blown a hole in people's monthly grocery budgets. It has literally made it unaffordable for many young people to move ahead and to pay for tuition and pursue postsecondary education. The health care crisis has literally given us all pause that our security has been undermined by emergencies and admissions into hospitals that we can't count on from Red Deer to Edmonton and Calgary and all points in between, Boyle, Alberta.

So those are the things we need to deal with, and you need to have all hands on deck in dealing with those things. We can't just say: okay; let's give it a try, and we'll try a little money here and there. We need the municipalities, we need the federal government, we need our nonprofits to all be paddling in the same direction – right? – to meet a crisis head-on. We've done it in the past many times in Alberta. We're very successful in doing so. It's the absolutely worst time to cause any source of division by somehow suggesting that you could review any aspect of any initiative by any level of those governments and have it brought forward to the sovereignty tribunal to see if it meets the standards of their whatever they happen to be thinking about at the time. I mean, that's not the way to run a government. That's not the way to meet an affordability or a health crisis. It's just a recipe for chaos and disaster.

We can do better, right? You know, having a Bill 1 – I guess you've already used that name now, so you're kind of stuck. But you can have a Bill 1(a) or a new and improved Bill 1, I guess – I don't know – that deals with affordability, that deals with things that people are concerned about: the safety and security of families, that's undermined by a health care system that's tottering; safety and security around our roads and schools; making sure that postsecondary is affordable. All of those things are wide open for a beautiful new, refreshed, better Bill 1, and certainly that would be the wisest choice at this juncture for this government to pursue.

I really believe – I was glad that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned the Faculté Saint-Jean as an example of how co-operation can be held or withheld, and you can have success or just frustration, right? In some ways, you know, I'd been thinking about this last night – I had a hard time going to sleep after 1 o'clock in the morning – that this government has been sort of doing practice sovereignty act activities for the last three and a half years by seeing literally federal funding for certain projects land on their desk and just sitting there and staring at it and not using it. People have to sort of even after a while inoculate themselves from the activities of this UCP government over the last three and a half years, not putting up matching funding for critical projects such as child care or funding for Faculté Saint-Jean, of which they have a constitutional responsibility to do so.

You have to take these guys to court and drag them around and bang on their door before they decide to actually do something, right? Two and a half million dollars, I think, was the end product of all of that effort. You know, it's almost like a pattern we've seen with this government without actually having the sovereignty act in their hand, yet they had it in their head with withholding funding for matching grants for initiatives here over the last three and half years.

So here we are. It's written on paper now. Good luck trying to amend it. Quite frankly, I just believe that we all deserve better. We deserve to respect the sanctity and the responsibilities of the division of power and the different levels of government. We deserve to recognize the value of free and open debate here in this Legislative Assembly, and we need more, first and foremost, to respect the people of Alberta to (a) understand what's really written down in some of these bills and not just think you can pull the wool over their eyes, because you haven't – it's been categorically unsuccessful – and, number two, respect the needs and the responsibilities of governments to ensure the safety and security of Albertans from now and in the future as well.

I would respectfully suggest to everyone to please support this amendment as part of the rejection of Bill 1, the sovereignty act. Thanks a lot.

The Speaker: Are there others on amendment RA2?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

The Chair: Are there members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I stand today to introduce an amendment to the House, the amendment to Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

The Chair: Hon. members, this is for your records: a two-page amendment. It's three pages for me. This will be known as amendment A1.

Hon. member, please . . . [An electronic device sounded] Is there something we're doing?

Okay. Well, go ahead. See what happens.

Mr. Smith: Do you want me to read it or just pass it out or . . .

The Chair: I think that it is okay to not read the amendment in its entirety. Just wait until all members have received a copy of the amendment, and then you can proceed with your remarks.

We're good?

Okay. Please proceed.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to amendment A1. When I was a social studies teacher, I used to try to help my students to understand the process by which bills became law, and my students would often start off with a confused understanding of the parliamentary process. They would wonder why there were three readings and what a Committee of the Whole was all about, and I would try to help them to understand that, at least in theory, a bill was to be debated and that while a government bill would originate from the government, the whole Legislature, the backbenchers of the government and the opposition, all, had a vital role to play in the passing of a bill. The goal of this process was to consider the bill, even to consider how to make the bill better, and that during the Committee of the Whole there would be amendments placed before the House by either the government or the opposition with that end in mind.

The goal was, or at least it should have been, for all elected members to consider how to make a bill better, and tonight I have placed an amendment before this House which I believe will clarify this bill, Bill 1, and the intent of this bill. The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, or Bill 1, has on the government side of the House had a great deal of discussion. The Premier has listened carefully to her caucus, and the amendments set out before the House are a reflection of these conversations. The amendment before this House tonight is to help clarify that any changes to existing Alberta statutes that are outlined in a motion and introduced and passed by the Legislative Assembly under the act, under Bill 1, must also be introduced and passed separately through the regular Legislative Assembly process – that is, upon passage of a motion under Bill 1 by the Legislature – and should government determine that an enactment needs to be amended, then that amendment would be introduced into the Legislature, undergo first reading, second reading, Committee of the Whole, and third reading.

The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act has been accused of being undemocratic and unconstitutional, and often these accusations were levied before the act was even available to read. As we've debated Bill 1, we've seen many significant legal professionals identify that indeed the bill is not unconstitutional and that it is clearly democratic, for when we read within the bill, it is the elected Members of the Legislative Assembly that are debating and passing a motion that is then sent to the Executive Council.

The amendment before us tonight is simply ensuring what was the intent of the bill all along, that if a law needs to be amended in order to protect the constitutional powers or rights of Albertans . . . [An electronic device sounded] My goodness. Are we going to get control of that? I'm going to start again here. The amendment before us tonight is simply ensuring what was the intent of the bill all along, that if a law needs to be amended in order to protect the constitutional powers or rights of Albertans from a federal bill, then any amendments to a piece of legislation coming from Bill 1 would be done as part of the full democratic practice of this House.

Section 4(4) and (5) have been introduced for clarity.

(4) For greater certainty, a regulation as referred to in this section does not include an Act of the Legislative Assembly.

(5) Nothing in this Act abrogates any authority or power vested in the Legislative Assembly or the Lieutenant Governor in Council by any other enactment or by operation of law, including any authority or power of the Lieutenant Governor in Council to take action with respect to the federal initiative.

This amendment now addresses, perhaps, one of the concerns that has been expressed by some of my constituents as well as some of the people in this House. This amendment does what every good amendment should do. It helps to clarify the meaning of the bill, thereby making the bill a better bill, a bill that will better serve the people of Alberta.

The second major change in this amendment would also clarify that the harms addressed by the act are limited to federal initiatives that, in the opinion of the Legislative Assembly, are unconstitutional, affect or interfere with constitutional areas of provincial jurisdiction, or interfere or violate the Charter rights of Albertans. This is found in section 3 of the amendment when it says:

- (ii) causes or is anticipated to cause harm to Albertans on the basis that it
  - (A) affects or interferes with an area of provincial legislative jurisdiction under the Constitution of Canada, or
  - (B) interferes with the rights and freedoms of one or more Albertans under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This amendment, like many amendments to any bill, is the result of listening and careful consideration. These amendments are the result of much discussion amongst the government caucus as they listen to constituents and stakeholders across Alberta. These amendments are exactly the kind of amendments that as a teacher I helped my students to understand would be part of the passage of a bill. This amendment meets the criteria of what a good amendment should do. It is the result of listening and feedback from Albertans through their elected representatives, and it strengthens the bill.

I would encourage the House to support these amendments. I would encourage the opposition to carefully consider the wisdom of these amendments and to support these amendments and, in the process, fulfill their duty as His Majesty's Official Opposition, for their duty is not simply to oppose for the sake of opposing but to help strengthen the bill, to make it better for the people of Alberta. That is what this amendment does, so it is deserving of the support of the members of this Legislature.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment. I appreciate the previous member's words as far as the role of the Official Opposition. One of our roles is to hold the government accountable for their actions. I will speak about the fact that for Bill 1, a flagship bill of the Premier that she campaigned on to win leadership of the UCP – to bring in a bill that gave the government broad, sweeping powers, in fact the most undemocratic powers that a government could give in this history of this province, and then try to claim a mulligan is absurd.

I can speak from a position of having sat around the cabinet table. I brought forward bills through the cabinet process. I'm well acquainted with that cabinet process. Madam Chair, I find it very difficult to believe that the Premier wasn't aware of the broad, sweeping powers of the bill that was tabled and that cabinet was unaware. We have incredible men and women who serve in the civil service, who do the province great justice, who take their jobs seriously. They have chosen the life of service within the civil service, and their job is to provide the best possible advice. I find it very hard to believe that at no point in the process, where the bill was first a concept to the first draft, second draft, multiple drafts, this was not flagged to the Premier and cabinet, that there weren't a number of times where civil servants stood up and said: Premier and cabinet, what this bill does is give you broad, sweeping powers to change legislation, statutes, and regulations behind closed doors. That part: I just don't find it believable, having sat as a cabinet minister and having been a part and chaired a number of cabinet committees, that that is even possible.

You know, regardless, whether this is a case of the fact that the Premier got caught with her hand in the cookie jar and the opposition and Albertans caught this government trying to give itself, quite frankly, undemocratic powers – point being: today we have an amendment that will curb some of the powers that the Premier has given herself. Madam Chair, one of the roles of the opposition is not just to make amendments. That is true, and the previous speaker is correct in that the opposition can try to amend bills and legislation to improve them, but my position currently is that this bill, whether amended or not, has impacted and had a negative impact on international investment and the reputation of Alberta. Part of my job is to act in the best interest of Albertans and of our province. I believe, from what I've been told by international investors, that this bill is not in the best interest of the province and has put a chill on international investment.

Now, I've said this before. I spoke at a seniors' home this morning and said that I agree with the government that when the federal government overreaches into provincial jurisdiction, there needs to be a process and Alberta needs to stand up for ourselves and push back on the federal government. In areas of the development of our natural resources that is provincial jurisdiction, similar to our education or our health care system. In fact, Madam

Chair, these are the exact reasons that I decided to run for provincial politics. I never ran as a municipal councillor. I never ran in federal politics. The reason is that I believe our provinces have significant authority and jurisdiction and those three areas – the development of our natural resources, the delivery of our health care system, and the delivery of our education system – are three priorities for me, and that’s why I’m an MLA.

I agree that when the federal government overreaches, we not only need to slap their hand; there needs to be swift action. I can point to numerous examples in Alberta’s history when the government of Alberta has taken action. We have tools at our disposal, including taking the federal government to court. We have a court system, which is arm’s length from our political system, where they will make these decisions, and I trust in our judicial system. I have faith in it, that we have set up the right processes for that.

The challenge with this act, regardless of what amendments are brought forward: we still have an act that in title is the sovereignty act. Madam Chair, I have worked with international investors for a number of years now and know for a fact that they will look at this bill, and this will cause them trepidation. They will hit pause. They will look at other jurisdictions within Canada if they are looking at Canada and Canada makes their top-five list of potential areas to invest in globally. If there is a perception that the province has a different set of rules from the federal government, that immediately puts uncertainty into the decision of whether or not they should invest in Alberta. That in and of itself has already happened. It has happened since the Premier started talking about the sovereignty act.

This amendment, although within the walls of this Chamber – Albertans understand that the government is attempting to amend the unilateral powers that they granted themselves in this bill. For the international investment community you still have a piece of legislation that causes them to question the stability of investing in Alberta. That, for me, Madam Chair, is a big enough red flag. Despite this amendment addressing some real issues that the opposition and members of the public and the chambers have raised, it still doesn’t address the fact that we have a bill that is called the sovereignty act, that not only causes doubt but signals that there are different sets of rules between the province or the state and the federal government or a national body.

I know that members in this Chamber on both sides of the House understand that business is looking for not only predictability and stability but also a little regulations navigating as possible, and when there is a misalignment between the federal government, the provincial government, and municipal governments, it means layers of complexity. When a business goes back to their board of directors to advocate on which jurisdiction should get the next investment, this is a critical input to that decision.

As we’ve seen, this has already had negative consequences for Alberta’s reputation, and that’s my biggest concern. Yes, it frustrates me when the federal government sticks its nose where it doesn’t belong. Yes, there should be tools for Alberta to push back on the federal government, a hundred per cent. We are all Albertans in this Chamber first and foremost. We have those tools at our disposal.

I appreciate comments that colleagues of mine have made about the questions that this act will raise about the desperately needed federal dollars that we often leverage when it comes to housing, when it comes to major infrastructure projects. That’s a concern of mine as well. We need to work with the federal government because we want their dollars. Well, they’re our dollars that we want back to be invested in our province.

The other major concern I have with this bill, despite this amendment, is the argument that if every province brought forward a bill like this, the Trans Mountain pipeline would be killed immediately and would not move forward. Other major projects would also be at risk. Alberta is an export province. We rely on trade. We rely on exports. Putting up walls around our province is going to not only create uncertainty but potentially jeopardize future projects that we desperately need.

I appreciate that the government has brought up examples of Quebec and what they’ve done. I can tell you that for 50 years Quebec went backwards when they brought in legislation. Quebec and Montreal used to be the home to all the headquarters for major financial institutions. Montreal was the headquarters in Canada. When Quebec brought in a bill like this to declare Quebec sovereignty, all of those headquarters moved out of Montreal. Where are they? All in Toronto. Will they ever move back? Nope. I mean, I don’t know. I haven’t spoken to the CEOs, but I’m going to wager a guess that they’re unlikely.

Mr. McIver: Because they’re going to come to Alberta.

Mr. Bilous: Well, here’s the challenge. I appreciate that the minister just said: well, they’ll come to Alberta. Calgary is home – the second-largest city of headquarters of financial institutions. This bill is potentially jeopardizing that, that these institutions . . .

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Bilous: Members cannot say no unless they’ve spoken to the CEOs of all the major banks, and I don’t think – no offence to members in this Chamber – that they’ve spoken to the CEOs of the five majors. This could jeopardize – this has the potential.

Let’s talk about, in business, risk-reward. The risk of driving major financial headquarters out of our province is not worth appealing .5 per cent of Alberta’s population. That’s who this is appealing. I can tell you that when I talk to businesses, they’re not clamouring for a sovereignty act. Do they get frustrated when the federal government overreaches? A hundred per cent. Do they want to see the province stand up for Alberta? A hundred per cent. So do we. This is not the tool to do it. This is going to have significant unintended consequences.

I was asked this morning at a seniors’ residence: should the NDP form government in the spring, will you repeal this bill if the government continues with this? One hundred per cent we will, but the problem is: what damage will already be caused between today and that day? Now, we’ll have the numbers by then. We’ll know how much damage was caused. Now, I appreciate that members of the government could say, “Well, you don’t know what that number is,” and you are right. But, again, when we do a risk analysis, I don’t think the rewards of having a bill that is essentially not going to do what the government wishes it to do – but the downside of this bill is that we could see significant companies relocating their headquarters out of Alberta. We could see companies choose not to invest in Alberta.

I’m in the process of speaking to my network, that I’ve developed internationally, of investors and the impact that this bill is already having. I can tell you that companies are not translating this bill in its entirety to try to understand what it means. What they see is that Alberta has tabled some act called the sovereignty act that means that they will have a different set of rules than the federal government, and that – that – is causing concern.

For those reasons, hon. members, I struggle to support an amendment that I get addresses some of the issues that were raised within this Chamber. [interjection] We're in committee, so to the minister – well, as soon as I sit down, sir, through you, Madam Chair, the minister is welcome to get up and speak. Friends, we will be debating this bill for some time this evening and tomorrow and the next day and the next day.

It's for those reasons, I mean this in all sincerity, that – and I appreciate the opportunity to debate the amendment and this bill. My hope is that members in this Chamber will stick to debating this and not resort to name-calling and all the rest. I mean, we're talking about an act, and I'm trying to raise genuinely the concerns that I have with the act as it's currently written and the fact that Alberta has tabled a sovereignty act.

I'll bring my comments to a close, Madam Chair, but you know I'm sure that my colleagues will highlight the fact that the amendment does not address the fact of treaty rights and that our friends in treaties 6, 7, and 8 have not been consulted. Again, it's disingenuous when a bill is tabled to say: now we're going to go out and consult. I mean, if the bill is tabled, then the bill has already been written and decisions were made, and consultation is an afterthought. I know my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is constantly in contact with the treaty chiefs, and they are not happy to be an afterthought in this government's mind on this government's flagship bill, Bill 1.

You know, I'm happy to continue the conversation as far as: what is the best mechanism or mechanisms to ensure that we're standing up for Alberta first and foremost? But the conversations I'm having with the international business community are that this is not the right vehicle, and this is going to have negative consequences for the province.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is always a pleasure to stand and speak in this Chamber. I rise to express my support to the amendment to Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. I would like to commend the Premier for introducing this remarkable bill, that reaffirms provincial exclusive powers vested by Canada's Constitution and protects Albertans from federal legislations and policies that do not abide by the Constitution or would interfere in provincial jurisdiction, that will cause detrimental effects to Alberta and violate the Charter rights and freedoms of Albertans.

The amendment will settle the confusion regarding the cabinet's ability for introducing, amending, or repealing an enactment. It is not the intention of the bill to provide the law-making power to cabinet. This amendment, Madam Chair, will clarify that any legislative changes to existing Alberta statutes that are outlined in a resolution and introduced and passed by the Legislative Assembly under the act must also be introduced and passed separately through the regular Legislative Assembly process, thereby undergoing first reading, second reading, Committee of the Whole, and the third reading.

The amendment also seeks to clarify that the harms addressed by the act are limited to federal initiatives that, in the opinion of the Legislative Assembly, are unconstitutional, affect or interfere with Alberta's constitutional areas of provincial jurisdiction, or interfere or violate the Charter rights of Albertans.

I read some discussions and comments that the bill will be likely challenged, particularly on constitutionality. Madam Chair, anybody can raise that concern to any federal or provincial legislation, but they cannot just assert the constitutionality of the bill based on their own perception alone. In fact, the bill promotes and respects the Constitution Act, 1867, the Constitution Act, 1930, and the Constitution Act, 1982, as the foundational documents that establish the rights and freedoms of Albertans and the relationship between the provincial and federal orders of government, including the legislative powers between them.

It also provides in section 2(a), Madam Chair:

Nothing in this Act is to be construed as

- (a) authorizing any order that would be contrary to the Constitution of Canada.

This will prove that this bill does not permit any order that is against the Constitution. That makes me support the bill as it respects the Constitution. Likewise, the resulting orders, resolutions, or measures are needed to be constitutional, and it upholds and respects our foundational and supreme law.

Madam Chair, I immigrated to Canada with a view in mind that I will raise and support my family better and provide a healthier future to my children. Canada's respect of the rule of law and higher regard of human rights makes this nation and its citizenry prosper and live a better life as compared to some jurisdictions. I stayed for a while in Ontario until I came to participate in and attend a family event in Calgary, which made me see the great opportunity that awaits the people who work hard.

Alberta has a diverse and unique culture, surrounded by extraordinary natural creations and resources. Alberta is home to five national parks, including Canada's first national park in Banff, with amazing Rocky Mountains peaks, turquoise glacial lakes, elegant mountain towns and villages, great wildlife, and scenic drives, and it is considered the flagship of the country's park system. Canada is also third in the world for oil reserves, which are mostly located in Alberta, and the oil and gas industry is Canada's top export product. I have many things to speak of Alberta, but I don't want to go away from the amendment, Madam Chair.

These great things I just mentioned about Alberta, Madam Chair, are only a few of the reasons that make a lot of Albertans stay here, work hard, and live a happy life. However, with disturbing federal government legislation and policies Alberta has been put into a disadvantageous position, causing hundreds of billions of dollars to flee the province to other jurisdictions over the past decade.

Madam Chair, Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, will enforce the Canadian Constitution's division of powers in recognition of both the federal and provincial governments' respective, exclusive, and sovereign areas of constitutional jurisdiction. It will create opportunities for building national awareness of federal intrusion into provincial areas of exclusive jurisdiction.

We have seen the hard work of the provincial government in the recent months as we recover from the pandemic, economic stagnation, job-killing policies of the previous provincial government and their mismanagement of funds, causing the province to incur multibillion dollars of debt. Alberta's government, with a great vision and determination to recover and progress, was able to bring back more than 200,000 jobs, open new opportunities, diversify our economy, balance our provincial budget, and brought in multibillion dollars of investments with the lowering of corporate tax to 8 per cent and a lot more initiatives.

After many challenging years of economic and pandemic hardship Alberta is finally moving forward once again. The government's focused, responsible fiscal management and relentless pursuit of economic growth has put the province on a more sustainable fiscal trajectory, creating expanded financial capacity, resulting in additional government revenues. The job-creating corporate tax cut introduced by Alberta's government, Madam Chair, is proving to be the more sensible approach than the increasing of taxes imposed by the previous government. These works prove that Alberta's government's approach is working, but I know that there's more to be done.

I hear of some concerns from my constituents, including improvement on the health care system by reducing emergency wait times, making EMS response faster, and lowering surgical wait times. As we head into the recent weeks, the government appointed an administrator that will be working full-time and will be delivering the needed improvements in the health care system, both in the short and long term, so that the health services needed by Albertans are prompt and unhampered while maintaining the same high quality of care.

Madam Chair, as the provincial government continues these initiatives and works that will improve the lives of Albertans, we also know that the federal government will continue to overreach on the provincial rights and powers, as we have seen in the past, that would unfairly prejudice Albertans. It seems that the federal government has no concern and couldn't care less about the prosperity of our province by its legislation and policies that were sure to regulate and control Alberta's natural resources and economic development, like Bill C-69 and Bill C-48.

They also want to penalize our province's energy and agricultural sectors by the implementation of mandatory fertilizer cuts and arbitrary emissions reductions initiatives that would devastate Alberta's economy, not to mention the control on the delivery of health care, education, and other programs by providing so many strings attached on funding and other controlling federal policies and the confiscation of legally owned firearms, which interferes with our private property rights. The Liberal-NDP alliance would aim to raise the bars of penalizing Albertans as they heat their homes and workplaces this winter by a tremendous increase of the federal carbon tax. These are only some of the upfront attacks by the federal government on Canadian federalism, our Constitution, and Alberta's economy and Albertans.

Like I mentioned a while ago, Madam Chair, the approach of Alberta's government is working, and it's getting more Albertans working and bringing our finances back in the black. Through many provincial government initiatives we are experiencing broad-based investment, economic diversification in our province.

Amazon Web Services announced its plan to establish a second cloud computing hub in Calgary, amounting to $4.3 billion, while Infosys has recently opened its Digital Centre in Calgary and is committed to create a thousand jobs. Mphasis also opened their Canadian headquarters this year in Calgary with 200 jobs and will expand to create a thousand tech jobs. RBC has also opened a tech hub in Calgary, which will create about 300 jobs, while EY, impressed with the talented workforce, opened in September this year a new finance hub that will create about 200 jobs in Calgary.

Northern Petrochemical also announced a $2.5 billion project in the municipal district of Greenview, and Dow Chemical plans to work on a project that would be the world's first net-zero carbon emissions petrochemical plant, which is predicted to cost about $10 billion.

Another huge investment that has landed in Alberta is Lynx Air. Madam Chair, Canada's newest low-cost airline joins Flair and WestJet as Alberta-based airlines.

These are just some of many investments creating jobs in Alberta, boosting our economy, Madam Chair. As we saw the unemployment rate dip down to 5.2 per cent in October, we are also seeing the continuous entry of job creators in our province. Whether new businesses or business expansions, Alberta's government is helping employers create exciting futures for Albertans.

Madam Chair, we do not want to be stopped or pushed back by federal government legislation and policies as we continue to bring more prosperity to Alberta's economy. This bill will work to re-establish the rule of constitutional law back into the Canadian legal system and create more stability and credibility for businesses over both the short and long term. Bill 1 will help protect Alberta's freedoms, interests, economic growth, and prosperity from intrusive federal policies and legislation that have caused hundreds of billions of dollars to flee Alberta to other jurisdictions over the past decade. Furthermore, Bill 1 is intended to solidify Alberta's position in the federation. It will not cause separation from it. It is aimed to restore and respect the constitutional rights of our creative and diverse provinces, including Alberta.

The distribution of legislative power between the Parliament of Canada and provincial legislators under the Constitution is clear, but the federal government could not resist to go beyond what has been provided for them. Bill 1 proposes a legislative framework that shifts the burden to the federal government to legally challenge Alberta's refusal to enforce unconstitutional or harmful federal laws or policies instead of Alberta having to initiate legal challenges and wait years for a decision while those same federal laws or policies harm Alberta day in and day out.

Saskatchewan introduced the Saskatchewan First Act in their Legislature, Madam Chair, and it is aimed to confirm its exclusive provincial authority over its natural resources by setting up a tribunal independent from government to review whether or not a federal measure is harmful, unconstitutional, and provides recommendation to cabinet. What Bill 1 does provide is that instead of creating the same tribunal, that authority is provided to the democratically elected Members of this Legislative Assembly to determine and review federal government legislation and policies and debate recommendations for cabinet consideration.

In conclusion, Madam Chair, let me just express that the government has a clear mandate to stand for Albertans, promote their interests, and protect them from continued economic and harmful policies from the federal government. I encourage all the members of this House to support this bill as it promotes respect of our Constitution and enforces and recognizes the division of legislative powers between the federal and provincial governments.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thanks to my hon. colleague who spoke before me. Today, first of all, I rise to offer a subamendment for the amendment the government just presented to Bill 1. I have 95 copies.

The Chair: Perfect. Just wait until I get a copy, and then we will proceed. Do you have the original?

Mr. Barnes: I'm sorry. I have the original here.

The Chair: Hon. member, I'm just confirming: was this approved by Parliamentary Counsel?

Mr. Barnes: Yes, it was.

The Chair: Okay. We will proceed with this amendment. This will be known as amendment SA1. Copies will be distributed to all members. It's about a page and a half amendment.

I don't require you to read it into the record, but just give us a few moments so that every member in here has a copy before you proceed. Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. To start with, I wish to be clear that the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, Bill 1, is a bill that I personally support, as do most Albertans and many, many of the good folks of Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Now, Madam Chair, this is a relatively simple and straightforward subamendment to the government's amendment, and it is designed to clear up some of the public misconceptions regarding this proposed legislation and some of the legitimate concerns. Allow me, first, to preface my remarks by reminding this Assembly that my support for strengthening Alberta's autonomy is absolute.

I was proud to serve on the government's Fair Deal Panel, starting in 2019, and, Madam Chair, when I felt that the panel's recommendations didn't go far enough to reflect the public concerns, I publicly offered additional recommendations directly to the Premier to enhance Alberta's autonomy and to make Alberta the freest and most prosperous place.

I will also remind everyone here that I personally campaigned on the winning side of the equalization referendum even when some UCP members withheld or were quiet with their support.

Madam Chair, I then brought forward Motion 505, which was adopted by this Assembly, unanimously I believe, calling on the government to "deploy every legal, economic, and constitutional tool at the province's disposal to . . . [win] a fair deal for Alberta" and, of course, Alberta families.

In addition, in the past six months I personally supported and publicly argued in favour of a proposed sovereignty act in interviews with national media, including the CBC. My support for strengthening Alberta's autonomy has never wavered even when some members of our current cabinet attempted to play politics with this issue.

The bottom line, Madam Chair, is that I want Bill 1 to be approved by this Assembly, but more importantly I want this legislation to work for Albertans, and for that to happen, Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, needs to be widely accepted and deeply supported by the public. This will ensure that it remains in place no matter which party forms government in the future.

With all of that being said, by far – by far – the most common concern I've heard about Bill 1 is that it will grant cabinet too much power to unilaterally alter existing legislation, too much power in the hands of cabinet. While this concern may be inconvenient for the government, the fact is that this concern is not limited to just supporters of the Official Opposition. In fact, I've repeatedly heard this concern from voters that I would personally describe as lifelong conservatives, and given the events of the past three years this should not come as a surprise to anyone. Conservatives, more than any other group of Albertans, have grave concerns about the centralization of power by government within our democratic system.

To its credit this current government is committed to limiting government overreach in a number of areas. However, when it comes to this bill, so far the message has been muddled. The government has claimed that under Bill 1 no legislative changes can be made without clear direction being given by the Assembly. That is technically true – technically – but the fact is that when it comes to raising the bar on proper democratic representation, we can do much better and much better than the amendment the government just presented, which is why I presented a subamendment.

My subamendment is designed to ensure that any legislative changes proposed by cabinet, even when they are made at the Assembly's request, must ultimately be ratified again by the Assembly with a majority vote. By making this one small change, I believe we can put to rest the largest concern that most nonpartisan Albertans have about this legislation. Not only does this clear the air on some rather muddled messaging, but it will also significantly strengthen this legislation, and ultimately the purpose of the bill is to make a strong statement to Albertans, to the federal government, to Ottawa, and to all Canadians that Alberta is done with being pushed around.

So I ask you, my fellow members of the Assembly, what ultimately makes a stronger statement: an order delivered by cabinet following a closed-door meeting or the democratically expressed wishes of the people's representatives delivered in this Chamber for the whole world to see? For the whole world to see.

Madam Chair, democracy doesn't matter less when you're dealing with difficult issues like Alberta's autonomy. In fact, it matters more. So let's give the public more democracy, let's accept my subamendment to the government's amendment, and let's continue to fight for Alberta families and making Alberta the freest and most prosperous place.

Madam Chair and colleagues, my concern with the government amendment is that it left two key areas out: where for ratification, for actually using the sovereignty act, cabinet does not have to come back to the Legislature for a majority vote, majority ratification. So my subamendment in, of course, 4(a)(1) and then over to (1.1) states that a Minister may not make an order under subsection (1)(a) until each of the following occurs in successive order:

- (a) the Minister tables a copy of the order, as proposed, in the Legislative Assembly;
- (b) within 7 calendar days of the tabling made under clause (a), the Legislative Assembly approves a resolution that confirms that the proposed order is consistent with the resolution approved under section 3 to which it relates;
- (c) the Lieutenant Governor in Council approves the making of the proposed order.

The minister has oversight when it comes to implementation of the sovereignty act from the 87 representatives of Alberta. Section 4(b)(1.2):

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may not make an order under subsection (1) to direct a Minister under clause (b) or issue a directive under clause (c) until each of the following occurs in successive order:

again,

- (a) a member of the Executive Council tables a copy of the order, as proposed . . .
- (b) within 7 calendar days . . .

to this Legislature, to the 87 of us,

That's in (1.2)(b). And we have our opportunity to ratify it.

That one, Madam Chair, I feel is especially important because a directive to one of Alberta's agencies, when it comes to the sovereignty act, needs the eyes and the oversight of the 87 elected MLAs, who are tasked with speaking on behalf of Albertans. A ministerial directive to ATB, to AIMCo, to Alberta petroleum, to AFSC: I feel it's essential under the sovereignty act that that comes back to this Legislature for all the eyes of Albertans to have their final say on it before it's approved.

Madam Chair, in closing, I will just resubmit that I've been a consistent, steady supporter of Alberta being the freest and most prosperous place in Canada. To do that, we have to strive for a fair deal. Nothing moves unless it's pushed. The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act is a mechanism and a step towards that, but let's enhance democracy. Let's shine sunlight on this for all Albertans to get behind this law and make it as strong as possible for years going forward.

Thank you, all. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. It is a privilege for me to speak to the subamendment SA1 that has just been tabled by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I want to begin by thanking the member for taking a hard look at Bill 1 before this Assembly and for his interest in making sure that we get the bill right. I think that is something that all of us can agree with. But I think, if you take a careful look at the subamendment proposed by the member and his concerns, that is exactly what the amendment that we put forward seeks to address.

The concern that we heard from government caucus members and the concerns that we heard from Albertans, the confusion, with all due respect to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, is a confusion that lies in the understanding between the role of the Executive Council and that of the Legislative Assembly.

Before any act is taken pursuant to Bill 1, there is going to be a resolution passed in this Assembly. That resolution will spell out what it is that the members of Executive Council might act on or direct a cabinet minister or the Lieutenant Governor in Council, in which case the cabinet, to make an order or to deal with either by a ministerial order or by an order in council.

I think that is where the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has got it wrong. We can never confuse the role of Executive Council and the role of the Legislative Assembly. We have three branches of government. We have the Legislature, we have the executive branch, and we have the judiciary. Our system, our Constitution, our parliamentary system envisions that those distinct bodies work in a certain way. So what the member is proposing, in a nutshell, is to say . . .

Ms Sweet: That you can't just make it up and do whatever you want.

Mr. Madu: I can hear the Member for Edmonton-Manning. She had an opportunity. The members opposite had an opportunity to put forward an amendment. They chose not to.

Madam Chair, this subamendment, while I value the good intention behind it, is mistaken and misplaced because what you are seeking to do with this amendment is to say that, one, a copy of the order that is made by the Executive Council has to be then brought back to the Assembly when that particular order is made pursuant to a resolution of the Legislative Assembly, and that resolution will spell out the nature of what cabinet is to act on.

That really is the intention of your amendment. That responsibility is that of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. That power, that role, is reserved under our system to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is cabinet. The role of the Assembly is (a) under our system and under how Bill 1 is designed. Number one is to say that any resolution pursuant to Bill 1 has to be made by the Assembly. Number two, pursuant to the amendment we've made, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may not amend a statute that is meant to come before this Assembly as a bill. I think, to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the amendment that we have made and the difference between the roles of Executive Council and the Assembly have taken care of the intentions behind the amendment we have put forward.

On that particular basis, I will urge the members of this Assembly to vote against subamendment SA1. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there other members that wish to join the debate on this subamendment? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, and thanks to the hon. minister for weighing in. I guess some concerns that I have are that I don't see this as a situation where the Legislature is interfering with a cabinet decision. We're just ratifying it. In my remarks I talked a lot and the Official Opposition has been quite clear that many, many Albertans either don't support this yet or don't understand it.

To me, one of the best ways to gain support, especially five years, 10 years, 20 years from now, is to give a greater opportunity to shine some light on this, so I'm wondering why cabinet would be concerned about saying: here's the mechanism that we've decided to put in place; ratify that for us. I mean, Ottawa, the Constitution: this is a hundred-year-and-more situation, and it's a continual situation where we are consistently going to have to fight and have Albertans strive for a better deal for Alberta within a united Canada. So why would we minimize that?

When I especially think of the situation where cabinet may direct a minister to send a directive to an Alberta agency – you know, my goodness, look at how many strong, good agencies we have with hard-working people that their fingers are in every day of our lives. I mean, AFSC, ATB, Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission were just three that I mentioned when I spoke. If cabinet got part of that wrong, it could very, very much tie us up into litigation. It could cost hardship and income and careers for Albertans. So again, to the government and to you, Mr. Minister: I'm surprised why you wouldn't want that extra ratification of the 87 of us, who are in the coffee shops of Alberta, who are talking to Albertans.

Rest assured that when the sovereignty act is enacted and instructed on one part of Ottawa's overreach, all the eyes of Canada are going to be on this, so why not give Albertans, those that built this great province, those that pay taxes, those that raise the family – why not give them, through the 87 of us, the extra opportunity to do that? Why not have that extra oversight? I guess I'd say that I disagree with your remarks in the sense that I'm not suggesting that I should interfere with a cabinet decision and cabinet discussion, but I should have the opportunity to stand up and put in my yes or no and have my vote, as should all my colleagues.

I'm sorry. I'm going to ask all the MLAs and my colleagues to support my subamendment. I'm also going to ask them to support your amendment with my subamendment and the sovereignty act. Let's make Alberta the freest and most prosperous place.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any others to speak to the subamendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on subamendment SA1 as moved by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: We are back on amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and offer some thoughts on the amendments that the government has brought forward to its job-killing sovereignty act. The amendments seek to clarify the powers of Executive Council with respect to the powers of the Legislature but, in fact, do very little to clarify anything that's in the bill. I don't think that anybody should trust this Premier or this government to do what they say they're going to do with respect to this piece of legislation. More importantly, this amendment doesn't address some of the significant concerns that the bill has created.

On the issue of the power of Executive Council with respect to the power of the Legislature it's interesting, Madam Chair, to have heard the Deputy Premier give the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat a lecture on separation of powers and division of powers in the Canadian federal system while supporting a bill that upends all of those things. It boggles the mind that the Deputy Premier seems so confident in his understanding of how the Canadian democratic system works that he can lecture at length the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, who, in his defence, is trying to get this government back on the rails when it comes to Bill 1, yet his own cabinet is bringing forward this bill, that seeks to completely throw all of that out the window and consolidate judicial, legislative, and executive power as well as federal, municipal, and provincial power in the hands of the Premier and this cabinet.

This bill doesn't really address any of those concerns. Now, I've heard the government members stand up and say: well, now we've backed away from this attempt to seize legislative power and put that in the hands of the cabinet, and now we're only going to clarify that it's only regulatory power that we can exercise, which the government already has. One wonders why this section of the bill is even necessary if it's amended to reflect this wording when that is the role of Executive Council.

I want everyone watching tonight and every Albertan who has concerns about the sovereignty act to make sure that they do not rest easy because the government has passed this amendment, because we know that this government has tried and failed a couple of times to give itself unprecedented powers. We saw that in Bill 10 a couple of sessions ago. We saw it here with the original form of Bill 1, and I have no reason to believe, Madam Chair, that that's the end of it. What I think will happen: well, now we will see that instead of Executive Council being able to create, modify, or suspend any enactment, they'll just create enabling legislation here in the Legislature that's so vaguely worded, give itself all of the powers that should belong to the Legislature to itself through regulations, and subvert the power of the Legislature that way.

Imagine, if you will, the government bringing forward an act to override the federal government, and it says: this act gives the regulatory powers to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations on whatever it chooses with respect to federal legislation. That's theoretically possible. This bill won't change that possibility from happening, and no one can trust this government to not try again to consolidate legislative power in the executive branch; it's just not going to happen tonight. No one should rest easy that this government's attempts to tear down the pillars of democracy that are built upon the concept of the separation of powers are through.

What this amendment doesn't address is the consolidation of executive, legislative, and judicial powers. This amendment does nothing to remove the government's ability to act as if it were a court interpreting the constitutionality of federal legislation. It still says clear as day here in the amendment that the Legislature can pass a motion stating that any federal initiative – so widely defined that, as my friend from Lethbridge-West said, it doesn't even have to exist. It can exist only in the minds of the provincial government. If, in the opinion of a majority of the members of this Assembly, that initiative is unconstitutional, well, we'll just vote on it and it is thus. That's outrageous. That is not the role of the Legislative Assembly, nor is it the role of Executive Council to interpret federal legislation. That is properly the role of the courts.

I had to laugh when I heard the Member for Calgary-East talking about shifting the burden from the province to the federal government to take one another to court over laws that they thought were unconstitutional. Well, that's not the intent of the bill. Firstly, the intent of the bill is to circumvent the courts completely and just declare some federal initiative unconstitutional for reasons. What was also hilarious, Madam Chair, was that he suggested that that would somehow speed up the court process, that rather than going through the lengthy process of a province taking the federal government to court when they believe that something that the federal government did was unconstitutional, well, the reverse would happen. The federal government would take the province to court, and somehow that would be done more quickly. It boggles the mind, the extent to which we hear government members either misunderstand or spin what this does, what this act and this amendment do.

This issue of consolidating executive, legislative, and judicial power into the legislative branch is still an issue that remains unresolved and will cause incredible uncertainty and chaos in our economy because how is anybody in business going to know which federal laws will apply to them here in the province of Alberta? All it takes is a majority vote of the Legislative Assembly to suspend or attempt to suspend or overturn any federal initiative. That's the opposite of creating certainty.

The other part of the bill still remains, that the government is giving itself the power to direct any provincial entity broadly defined here in the act. The regulatory powers give cabinet even more ability, even broader ability to spell out who is considered a provincial entity and who isn't. It can direct those provincial entities "and its members, officers and agents, [as well as] the Crown and its Ministers and agents, in respect of the federal initiative" to disobey the federal law. Well, that goes against the concept of federalism, Madam Chair. We need to know that the federal laws will apply in Alberta just as they apply everywhere else, and more importantly, businesses and investors need to know that.

Let me remind the House about the federal laws that could be suspended, modified, or provincial agencies will be directed not to enforce. The federal government has wide powers over a whole host of areas that have significant impacts on the operation of our economy. Taxation. Will businesses working in Alberta be required to pay federal taxes? Well, we don't know because the Legislature could decide that, just by a motion of the members, those don't apply.

What currency we will use is potentially at threat. We've heard time and again members of the government caucus go on about the wonders of cryptocurrency. Could you imagine, Madam Chair – you probably can – government bringing forward a motion declaring that Bitcoin is now the official currency of the province of Alberta? [interjections] They're laughing. It's ridiculous, but that's exactly what this bill would do. The former Member for Calgary-Elbow was touting the development of an office of FTX in June this year, and then that outfit went bankrupt here just a few weeks ago. We know that this government has unbridled enthusiasm for cryptocurrency, and we can't put it past them that they would use this bill to do something as ridiculous as make it official currency of the province of Alberta.

Bankruptcy laws are the purview of the federal government, but if, in the opinion of a majority of the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, bankruptcy laws don't apply here in Alberta, well, then what will businesses do when they need to be protected from their creditors? Nobody knows.

Patents and copyrights: this is incredibly important in the postsecondary sector. Research and development: the creation and protection of intellectual property is of fundamental importance to that sector. That is federal jurisdiction until a majority of members vote by motion to suspend that here in Alberta. Then where will that leave our universities? Where will that leave our research and development projects? We don't know.

Citizenship and immigration are the purview of the federal government. We keep hearing from members opposite about labour shortages. In the past Conservative governments have turned to temporary foreign workers to fill those vacancies, but those programs are developed at the federal level. Will the government suspend that enforcement of those programs and create its own temporary foreign worker program here in the province of Alberta? We have no idea.

Even something as simple and as basic as the Criminal Code: parts of it would no longer be enforced by the police. Could you imagine what impacts that might have on the business community if, by majority vote of the members of the Legislature, we decided that fraud was no longer a crime here in the province of Alberta? Police would be directed to no longer enforce that provision of the Criminal Code.

It's incredibly concerning, Madam Chair, that the government is still giving itself the power to issue these directives to provincial entities to ignore, refuse to comply with any federal law that it wants, and that's the kind of chaos and uncertainty that is causing incredible concern in the business community. My friend from Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview has talked about the concerns that he's hearing from people in the international investment community that he knows. We certainly hear from the Calgary Chamber of commerce that they're very concerned about this. We heard just today the deputy solicitor of the city of Calgary talking about the concerns that they have about this power that the government is giving itself to direct any provincial entity, including municipalities, to ignore or not comply with federal law.

This amendment doesn't do a single thing to address any of those concerns. This amendment doesn't change those sections of Bill 1 that give cabinet the ability to "issue directives to a provincial entity and its members, officers and agents, and the Crown and its Ministers and agents, in respect of the federal initiative." We cannot support this amendment, Madam Chair, as it's written because it doesn't undo the harm that is present in Bill 1. For those reasons, I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote down this amendment and vote down the bill.

Thank you very much.

10:40

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to be able to speak today to this amendment. I honestly am a little bit flabbergasted by the last statement there by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to just completely dismiss this amendment and an opportunity to address the concerns that we've been hearing from the opposition over the last couple of days. This amendment does just that. Is it perfect? Does it address all the concerns of the opposition? No, but this does address many of the concerns that we've heard from the opposition, and this is an opportunity for us right now to improve this bill.

I think it's important to note – and the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon was talking about this earlier – the obligation of the opposition. At the end of the day, this isn't just the obligation of the opposition; this is the obligation of this House, all of us, everybody here, to work towards improving this bill to make it the best bill it possibly can be. Whether or not you vote for the bill in the end: that's beside the point. We have an amendment in front of us right now to improve this bill, to make this bill better for Albertans. To ignore that, to just say, "Oh, I don't like the overall bill; I'm going to vote against this amendment," I think is a failure to represent your constituents because, at the end of the day, take a look at the merits of this amendment. We have an obligation right now, Madam Chair, to improve this bill. This amendment does exactly just that.

Now, that just said, I just sat here and listened to all sorts of weird rabbit trails about how we're going to bring in cryptocurrency and all sorts of other nonsense, Madam Chair. Maybe we need to take a step back. It's actually the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that made a statement that resonated with me, and I think that if we can actually get back to a point where we agree on something, then maybe we can move forward from that point. I agreed with the member when he said that there is federal government overreach. There is federal government overreach. If we can agree on that, then maybe let's start there, and let's figure out how we help make this bill a bill that helps protect Albertans from federal government overreach. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for stating that, for making it clear that the federal government has stepped beyond its boundaries. We know that, and Albertans know that. Albertans have an expectation, whether or not they understand or agree with this bill. They have an expectation right now that the members of this Chamber, this Legislature, their representatives, step up and protect us Albertans from federal government overreach. We need to push back on that.

And it's not just Alberta. We are not the only province that's frustrated with federal government overreach. Right across this country provincial governments are pushing back because they're frustrated with the federal government coming in and stepping into provincial jurisdiction. These are constitutionally protected rights of provinces the federal government has started to push back on, so we have an obligation as a Legislature, as representatives of Albertans, to make sure that we are addressing that concern, the concern brought up by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview that the federal government has overreached. They have overstepped. They have pushed into provincial jurisdiction, and we members of this Legislature have an obligation to address that concern. Period. Full stop. That's our job.

So if this bill as it is written doesn't do that, then I anxiously await members of the opposition to propose ideas for how we fix this bill, how we make this bill do that, or otherwise to be able to push back on the federal government and get a better deal for Albertans, to make sure that we're standing up for Albertans. I look forward in the next election to door-knocking and telling my constituents that I'm . . .

Mr. Eggen: You'd better start now.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Oh, don't you worry. I've already started door-knocking.

I look forward to, and I have been, telling my constituents that this government is going to stand up for Albertans. Last election they sincerely believed, a lot of my constituents, that the NDP was going to stand up for them. The failure right now by the opposition to look at this bill meaningfully, just to completely dismiss it right from reading one, is shameful.

My constituents expect of me, at the very least, to read this and figure out: how do we help make this bill support Albertans as we push back on the federal government for their overreach? Again, let's go back to that point of agreement. I don't know if all the members of the opposition agree on this, but I sincerely thank Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for his stance, his recognition that the federal government has overreached.

So I challenge the opposition right now, challenge them and all government members, if this bill doesn't get it done, then we have an obligation right now to have a frank conversation, partisan politics aside, because this is too important, to talk about: how do we use this bill? How do we fix this bill? How do we build this bill to make sure that we are standing up for Albertans?

Mr. Eggen: You just introduced it. How did you break it so fast?

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: So fix it.

You guys – sorry, Madam Chair. There is a general refusal right now by the opposition to even propose sincere amendments or to look at sincere amendments to make this bill better. This is a great amendment. This amendment makes this bill better, and just to simply dismiss it I think is shameful. I think and I hope that the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar consider that as they vote in the next election.

The other thing I wanted to talk about – and the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview brought it up – is our flagship bill, that this is our flagship bill. The flagship bill of this government was Bill 1 to repeal the carbon tax because the carbon tax has been extremely harmful for Albertans, among other things, in regard to just the general increase in costs. A large part of why we are where we are is because of the carbon tax. The carbon tax has increased the cost of everything, not just for Albertans but for Canadians, the ability to fill up your tank, a $25-a-month increase for Albertans to be able to heat their homes. We're concerned about seniors who can't afford to pay their bills; $25 a month is a lot of food on the table, Madam Chair.

So again I just want to challenge the opposition at this point and remind them and all government members here that we have an obligation right now to put partisan politics aside, to take a look at this bill, to take a look at this amendment, and sincerely have a conversation right now about how we are going to improve this bill so that we can better represent Albertans, that we can make sure that Albertans' interests are kept in mind, that we can put Ottawa in its lane, because there's an agreement, at least amongst some of the members over there, that Ottawa has overreached, and make sure that Albertans are best represented.

So take a look at it. This amendment is a great amendment. I think it improves the bill, and I'm happy to be able to stand here today and support it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise and to speak to the amendment that the government has put forward in regard to their Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. Now, I just do want to follow up with some of the comments that the minister just made, actually, in regard to representation of our constituents and how there is an expectation by the people of Alberta that the government listen, that the government work in collaboration with the opposition and ensure that we are standing up for the people of this province. I don't disagree. I think that there's an opportunity to ensure that we are getting the best opportunities that we can and that the federal government is listening to the expectations from the province.

[Mr. Orr in the chair]

But what I can also say is that when the minister says, "Well, the people of Alberta expect that we listen and expect that we are standing up for them, and they expect that the government is working on their behalf," then this bill shouldn't exist because I can tell you right now, based on the polling, that there are only 30 per cent of Albertans that actually agree with this act. What that tells you is that the majority of Albertans disagree, and they disagreed with this legislation before it was ever introduced because Albertans don't agree with this tactic. They don't agree with it, Minister. You can argue across the floor with me about the reality of it, but that is what is happening.

Albertans didn't agree with this direction before this legislation was introduced. They understand that there need to be adults at the table being willing to engage in conversations, that there are mechanisms that currently exist within the way that our legislation works, within the court process and the judicial system that work, and they do not agree with a bill like this being introduced into this Chamber and this tactic that the government has decided to use as the tool. Do they agree that we need to have a different relationship with the federal government? Absolutely. I don't think anybody in this Chamber disagrees with that. But the mechanism that this government has chosen to use through the sovereignty act is not the mechanism that Albertans agree with.

So, as the minister clearly said, if we were listening to our constituents in this Chamber, if every member in this Chamber was listening to their constituents, they would say that this bill should not proceed. It should not proceed even as amended, because the reality of it is that Albertans disagreed with it before they even saw it. So what happened was that the opposition listened to Albertans, heard that they did not agree with this move, talked to the majority of Albertans, and said: "You know what? This isn't the tool that Albertans expect us to use."

Only 30 per cent of Albertans agree with this. We know that if the government actually was listening to Albertans, they would know that only 30 per cent of Albertans agree with this. The economy and the people that are trying to invest in our province disagree with this. It is creating economic uncertainty in our province. Not only are the people that are going to vote in the next election saying that this is a bad idea, this should not proceed; investors are saying the same thing within Alberta and outside of Alberta.

I would think that this week would have educated the government to say: "You know what? Well, we definitely need to amend this, but in fact maybe we should just admit we made a mistake and get rid of it." The amendment doesn't fix the concerns, because if the amendment fixed the concerns, then the bill would just not be read. That is what Albertans are telling all of us in this Chamber.

You know, we hear ministers stand up and talk about: well, when I go door-knocking, people talk to me about this. Well, I'm really curious what people are hearing, because when I'm door-knocking, I can tell you right now that people are choked about this piece of legislation. They do not like it. They don't trust this government to be open and transparent with them about what they're doing behind closed doors. That is the fundamental underlying issue related to this piece of legislation but really the government as a whole.

Albertans don't trust this government. They don't trust this Premier. They don't believe that with how this piece of legislation is written, even with the amendments, to be clear, there will be an openness and transparency to Albertans about what this government is choosing to do. What fights are they choosing to pick? How are they going to battle? There are serious questions that are associated with that.

Again, I said this last night, when we were we were speaking in second reading, that there is a substantial amount of money that comes from the federal government to support our local economies. Significant. Agriculture was a prime example that I spoke about last night, and I rattled off a whole bunch of grants, and then I ran out of time because there are that many and there's that amount of money that is being transferred. It was $48 million that supports agriculture diversification in this province from the federal government on an annual basis.

Well, let's talk about oil and gas, then, just for fun, because I decided to pull that up, too. I can't give you the full numbers, but I can tell you for sure that the grant programs include: greener home efficiency; green infrastructure phase 2; federal internal energy R and D; Impact Canada; oil spill response challenges; energy innovation programs; critical minerals research development and demonstration program; ecoenergy for renewable power; oil and gas clean tech programs; oil spill response science program; clean tech challenge; clean grown in the natural resource sector program; the office of energy research and development and other federal programs around clean energy funding and incentives; additional partnerships for innovation, technology, collaboration, and partnerships; labour; finance incentives for provinces in relation to database incentive programs; and tax savings for industry, which I think would be the favourite for the members on the opposite side.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

There is significant involvement when it comes to attracting investment into this province and, again, specifically to oil and gas under a variety of different programs. When the government starts to say, "We're going to start putting motions forward because we don't agree and we don't like this," like I said last night, two of the major things that drive investment in any jurisdiction are stable economies and stable democracies. This is not a stable democracy. This legislation does not demonstrate a stable democracy and a relationship between the crossjurisdictions. It just doesn't. [interjections] I mean, the ministers can all laugh across the floor, but the reality of it is that we just clearly heard the minister say that a court ruling from the Supreme Court of Canada wasn't a good enough response for this government, so they're going to be looking at trying to figure out a different way to deal with it. Clearly said it.

Carbon tax: Supreme Court of Canada already decided. Get it, government? You don't like it. But the minister clearly said: well, we've got a plan to get around that. Curious what that's going to be. So you're just going to ignore the Supreme Court of Canada now, create your own piece of legislation under the sovereignty act, create a motion, and then just pretend that nobody knows it happened.

Mr. Madu: Keep making stuff up.

Ms Sweet: Well, Minister, if you want to stand up and speak to me, I'm happy to have that dialogue. Calling across the floor isn't going to help you because the reality is . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I'd just remind you to speak through the chair.

Ms Sweet: Sure. I'm happy to do that.

I'm standing up for the majority of Albertans that disagree with this piece of legislation. I don't care; the government can continue to say that it's actually not doing what we say that it's doing, but the majority of Albertans agree that it is. People who are looking at investing in Alberta have come out and spoken against it. There is a significant amount of economic opportunity that is going to be lost when it comes to this piece of legislation.

You know, we really haven't heard a good rationale from this government as to why they do not want to use the current mechanisms that already exist. They've had the opportunity to bring motions into the House. They do it all the time; they used to do it significantly, like, almost weekly last session. There are court challenges that are currently happening in relation to decisions that the federal government has made that the provinces decided they don't like, yet for some reason the government has decided that that's not good enough.

So if using the tools that exist under our democracy aren't good enough, then what exactly is the plan by this government to supersede those tools? To ignore them? To ignore court rulings? To try to create new regulations that somehow find a way to go around the current court rulings? [interjections] I know it bothers the minister when I speak of these things, but those are the mechanisms that exist. They exist. That's how this bill is written. Even with the changes of this amendment, they don't fix those questions. [interjections] And the reality is that the minister wants to continue to speak over me and yell over me because he doesn't actually like what I'm saying because the truth sometimes hurts. [interjections] So here's the reality, right? We know that when governments start and we hear ministers start heckling across the floor, it's because you've hit the nerve and they don't like it.

Madam Chair, the amendment doesn't work. It doesn't fix the problems that Albertans are talking about. What would fix the problem is: the bill has got to go. Albertans don't want it. Investors don't want it. The polling tells the government this. If they actually believed this was a good bill, they would, one, be standing up and talking about all the great things that it's going to do, which we actually still haven't heard, what kind of motions would be brought forward, how the government would use the tool.

We haven't been walked through that process. If it actually worked and it was open and it was transparent and investors and Albertans could trust it, then we'd be hearing all about how great it's going to be. What's actually happening is that the government is rushing through debate. They're putting time allocation in to make sure we can't talk about it for very long because it's so bad and they're getting such a bad and negative response because of it. They don't want to talk about it anymore. When it's good: let's talk about it forever, right? But the reality of it is that they're hearing the same things that we're hearing on this side.

Mr. Nally: From CAPP.

Ms Sweet: Well, I mean, if the minister wants to mock being from CAPP, then I guess that's a problem for the minister. I don't know why that would be a fun heckle. I mean, oil and gas being upset and being concerned about investment opportunity should be a concern.

It's not just CAPP. We're hearing from chambers of commerce that are speaking about this. We're hearing from investors. We're hearing from investment capitalists. We're hearing from people who access grants through federal governments that are concerned about whether or not their grant funding is going to be removed. We're hearing from Indigenous communities that feel like they've been ignored. The government has actually managed to create allies among groups that have never been allies before. I mean, good on you. I appreciate the allyship that is coming and talking to us, but that is the reality.

Mr. Nally: Are you talking to CAPP?

Ms Sweet: When there is a reality of the fact that – I don't know why they're so fixated on CAPP.

Anyway, the reality of it is that 30 per cent of Albertans support this; the majority don't. If the government doesn't like that and they want to continue to yell over me because they feel that that is the best thing, then I would encourage them to stand up and walk Albertans through why this makes sense, why this is going to be good, because they don't think it is. The government really needs to understand, Madam Chair, that Albertans just don't trust the government. That's why they don't like this bill, because they actually don't believe that this government has had the capacity to be open and transparent throughout their whole ability as government.

I mean, we saw this under Bill 10, when there were extraordinary powers being brought forward under the health legislation that this government introduced, which was then later repealed because the government realized: oh, we made a mistake; we may have overreached on that. Bill 81 attempted to subvert the democratic process and resulted in numerous UCP caucus members speaking out against the bill and voting against it and then having their voices silenced in the Legislature. Now we've got Bill 1, significant overreach.

Mr. Nally: Which you still haven't read.

Ms Sweet: You know, we've heard from leadership contestants that spoke about the fact that they didn't like this bill – I continue to hear from one of the ministers across the way that continues to obviously have strong feelings about this piece of legislation – speaking about how it was a bad idea. But, of course, when cabinet grows, voices get quiet, and that's what we've seen happening here.

It's a quick flip-flop, which is a consistent theme that this government does, and Albertans don't believe it. They don't trust it. They don't trust the ministers. They don't trust the Premier. The reality of it is that this bill is going to hurt our economy, and it's going to create havoc and chaos for Albertans. What this government should have been focusing on is dealing with the crisis in health care, making sure our kids are taken care of when they have to go to hospital, and they should have been addressing the issues that Albertans are facing when it comes to trying to pay their bills. That should have been Bill 1, taking care of the priorities that matter to Albertans. This is not a priority. Clearly, everybody knows that. The government clearly does because they've done nothing but heckle me back, so obviously we've hit the nerve.

I would encourage the government not to, one, support the amendment but also to kill the bill.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to address this amendment and some of the comments that have been made over the course of this evening. I will clearly be speaking to not to accept this amendment, and the fundamental reason why is that it really does not address the issues that were inherent in the bill itself and it doesn't fix what needs to be fixed. Now, clearly, in reading the amendment, the government has come to accept that which they denied for the first week and a half after introducing this bill; that is, it actually does infringe on constitutionality, and this bill allowed extraordinary powers to the provincial government. Now, I understand that they didn't understand what they were doing and that after being educated by people who do understand the law, they decided that they must come back into the House and get rid of the famously known as the Henry VIII clause that would allow this provincial government to do extraordinary things outside the democratic process.

We know that they clearly didn't understand what they were doing, and they fixed that one piece, but I want to suggest that there are a variety of other things that this does not address; therefore, it's not a successful amendment. There's just too much there, so much so that I know that, in speaking with the representatives of the First Nations who have been calling me in droves over the last little while, they simply are asking this government not to proceed with this bill at all, not saying: could you please make some amendments; would you make some changes? They very clearly said publicly that they would like to see this bill removed completely from the Legislature, and because this amendment doesn't do that – we offered that to that to the House, but they didn't pick it up – we are in this position now of not being able to proceed with the things that need to actually happen with this bill; that is, put it aside to fix the multiple problems that are in the bill and then consider its return, perhaps after an election in the spring.

Let me talk about some of the particulars that are of concern here. Now, we've already talked about the fact that there is an issue of constitutionality with the bill itself; that is, can a provincial Legislature deny the laws established by a federal Legislature? That's been brought up many times, and of course the vast majority of constitutional lawyers in the country have said that indeed this bill is problematic.

Another analysis has just come out over the last day or so by Olszynski and Bankes that says that – let me just quote a little piece of it here just for our conversation. The article, by the way, is entitled Running Afoul the Separation, Division, and Delegation of Powers: The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, by Olszynski and Bankes. I will submit copies to the House in due course. The piece that I think is very important here is the section where they say:

In an entire legislative scheme that is constitutionally suspect, subsection 2(a) amounts to a constitutional fig leaf, especially when the provision is merely directed at interpretation ("nothing... is to be construed"). Subsection 2(b) is more significant: in our view, this wording clearly does contemplate something more than mere non-enforcement of federal laws and regulations, [for example], a future directive compelling provincial entities to engage in an act that would be contrary to federal law.

That's what we're hearing from the constitutional experts that are out there, that you're just doing so many things that are contrary to the democratic processes that we have established in the Westminster system over the course of hundreds of years. You're subverting democracy as we know it.

They're saying that the fact that you put in a little section that says nothing is to be construed as problematic is, in their words, just "a constitutional fig leaf." In other words, it doesn't mean anything. Just because you say, in your own words, "Well, this doesn't break the law," it doesn't mean it doesn't break the law. It does break the law. It's like when you're having an argument with someone and they say to you: well, I don't want to be insulting, but you're an idiot. You know, they can say they're not insulting you, but they are insulting you. That's exactly what all the constitutional lawyers are saying about this bill, that you're saying one thing at the beginning, but then you go on to defy your own statement for the rest of the bill, and that's why the bill has to be withdrawn.

11:10

It's not merely one section of the bill; it's multiple sections of the bill that are doing this. I'll go through a few of them here. One of them that I think continues to be of deep concern to the First Nations is this section 2 that I just referred to here. While it says that nothing is to be construed as somehow abrogating Indigenous treaty rights, we know from this interpretation that I've just read to you that that doesn't mean anything because the bill goes on to actually suggest that they will be doing that very thing, that they will be abrogating treaty rights.

I know that First Nations are very concerned about: well, what is the intention of this bill? What are the kinds of things that the federal government might do that this provincial government might suggest are somehow not in the interests of the people of the province of Alberta? The first thing that comes to mind when the First Nations are talking to me is that they're saying: it's going to be about environmental legislation, isn't it? When the federal government comes forward and says that we want to protect our air, our water, and our lands, this provincial government will take the position that: "Wait a minute. If we have to protect our air, water, and lands, we're going to lose some money, so we don't want to do that. It's not in the interests of the public." The First Nations communities are saying to me: so what you're saying, then, is that if we have interest in protecting the air and water and lands, we don't count as part of the public that you're trying to protect, that you are going to use this as a chance to undermine the environmental legislation that has been brought forward by the federal government in the protection of the lands that we are responsible for?

That's why they're concerned about it. That's why they're saying that you can't proceed with this bill, because it's not just that it's unconstitutional, but even in its intent, even if it does the things that you want it to do, you are going to be subverting the interests of the First Nations communities, and therefore they cannot stand with it. They cannot in any way say that you can modify certain clauses and proceed with this, because the fundamental intent of the bill is a contradiction of the interests of the First Nations people.

They know that you've made statements that somehow you will protect treaty rights, but they understand treaty rights very differently than this government has demonstrated an understanding of treaty rights, that treaty rights extend to the environment, extend to the land, extend to protecting that land for the benefit of future generations. If you are trying to subvert laws that protect that land because you're afraid that you will lose some money if you enact the environmental laws, then you are taking a stance against the First Nations people. They've clearly said to me over and over again that this bill is predicated on a single clause of only taking steps when it's in the public interest, but there is no clarity as to what public interest is or, more importantly, I guess, perhaps, whose public interest is being supported and protected here. They know that you'll be very interested in supporting the public interests of industries, but they do not know that you'll be interested in supporting the public interests of First Nations people.

That's the concern here. I've spoken about that a few times, and I was certainly hoping to see some changes in this amendment that would be able to address or satisfy the concerns from the Indigenous community although they have very clearly said to me: it doesn't matter what they amend; we are fundamentally against this bill, and we believe it's time for it to be withdrawn. Of course, what they're asking for is true and proper consultation, to have a chance to sit down with the government and ensure that the notion of public interest is not going to be used to defeat the collective interests of the Indigenous community. I think that's something that the government has to understand.

We know that sometimes the federal government is going to do things that make us unhappy in the province of Alberta. We get that. Nobody has ever said that that's not true on this side of the House. We know that sometimes you have to stand up to the federal government and say: we do not like what you're doing. But lo and behold, it turns out that we already have a mechanism for doing that. The mechanism is twofold. One of them, of course, is to stand up and say to the federal government: we do not like this, and we expect to be sitting down at a table with you and having a conversation about what's wrong with this bill that you're trying to enact or this regulation that you have and asking you to change that in the constructive way that parliamentarians are supposed to be able to do. Now, that would be the natural first step: you actually sit down with the federal government, and you try to fix things.

Now, we know that there have been concerns by members opposite that they haven't been successful doing that. Okay. They haven't been successful. So what have they done when they were unsuccessful? They've taken things, issues that they have with the federal government, to the courts. The courts have made decisions, and, lo and behold, sometimes the courts actually decide that the provincial government is wrong and that the federal government is well within their jurisdiction to make these kinds of decisions and has every right to proceed in the way they do.

What this provincial government is saying is that the courts only count if we win. If the courts don't allow us to win, then it doesn't count anymore. You know, I remember playing football with friends when we were in grades 7 and 8, and that's how rules were made back then: well, if I don't get my way, then we can't play; I'm going to take my ball and go home. That's not how a provincial government should be acting.

You should not create legislation merely because you have sour grapes about losing at the highest court in the land. If the highest court has said that this is a legitimate way to go, then you are left with the same process that everybody shares in this country, and that is the democratic process of trying to defeat the federal government in a democratic way, not in an unconstitutional way. The fact that you have sour grapes about having lost in the legitimate legal processes that are established in this country does not give you a right to start to undermine democracy. It's just not an acceptable thing to do, and we can't support it on this side of the House because we cannot support any bill whose actual intent is to destroy the structures of the rule of law that this country is based on, and that's what you're asking us to do.

You know, I wish this amendment had done more. I wish this amendment had been written in such a way that could actually address some of the concerns that I've expressed in my few minutes here in the House and others have expressed, but it doesn't. Furthermore, I'm very deeply concerned that it's going to set up citizens in the province of Alberta to actually engage in behaviours which are contrary to the laws of Canada, that they're actually encouraging people to deny the laws of Canada, to not follow through. In fact, it's suggesting, as in the quote I just read earlier, that it will actually "[compel] provincial entities to engage in an act that would be contrary to federal law." You're actually suggesting that citizens of the province of Alberta engage in illegal activities.

Then you go on in section 8 to say: "Don't worry. We'll protect you. That is, if you do something under this act, you won't be breaking the law in the province of Alberta." That doesn't mean you're not breaking the law in the country of Canada. What it says in section 8 is that the province of Alberta will not charge you and put you in jail, but it has no control over the federal government. The provincial legislation cannot tell the federal government: you're not allowed to charge our citizens. The Canadian law still stands, so it means that if you actually compel people – and it's not just suggest or encourage; it's actually compel – in the province of Alberta to break the law, then you're setting them up to go to jail or to pay a fine, to get a record. You actually have no control over the federal jurisdiction on these laws, and in spite of how much you might support what somebody does, what one of your institutions that you've compelled to act has done, the federal government doesn't have to listen to that. The federal government can charge people. The federal government can enforce their laws.

We are in a very dangerous place. We're in a place where the province is trying to act outside of the democratic process and the province is trying to encourage citizens to act outside of the legal process. And then they say: well, can you work with us to fix this bill? I can certainly tell you that we tried twice yesterday. Twice we introduced reasoned amendments that would have stopped this bill and go and fix it, and this government denied that. This government refused to take the time to actually fix this bill and tells me that they are not listening to the criticisms that are out there in the community and certainly not listening to the First Nations in this province, which I think is deeply, deeply problematic.

You know, I have just been kind of flabbergasted by this whole process because the government has been down this road before. With Bill 10 they tried to take on extraordinary powers, and they had to repeal that. They should have learned from that lesson. With Bill 81 they tried to subvert the democratic process, which actually resulted in some of their own people voting against their own bill, something we almost never see in this House. Yet they haven't learned that the people who are trying to overstep the bounds of their authority in this country are not the federal government. It is the provincial government. This provincial government has consistently and routinely tried to overstep its authority with regard to the democratic process and the laws in this province.

Certainly, I agree, sometimes the federal government does stuff that drives me crazy, and I don't like it. But I lived in the province of Alberta under Conservative rule for 44 years. I can tell you that they drove me crazy every single day for 44 years, but I didn't break the law. I worked hard to get myself into a place where I could write new laws through the democratic process and successfully did so. I'm very proud of the laws that we brought in.

That's the process that we have designed in democracy. If you don't like it, you fight it in the ballot box. You do not fight it by ignoring the institution of democracy and the institution of the rule of law. This is what this government is doing, this is why it's problematic, and this is why we stand here saying that you cannot fix this bill. It's not about sort of being misdirected. It's not about just simply one that needs a little tweak or a little fudge along the way. This is a bill that is trying to pervert what we have created in western democratic systems throughout the world, and as such we cannot stand here and play games of move a paragraph, change a comma, add a sentence. We can't do that. It's too fundamentally important.

I want to be able to go back and speak to the First Nations that I've talked to and say to them: look, we've done everything that we possibly can do to stop this bill. That's why we will not be supporting these amendments. That's why we will vote in no way to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to join the debate on amendment A1 regarding Bill 1, the sovereignty act. Certainly, we have, as my colleagues have shared already, heard far and wide from the business community, Indigenous leaders, academics, journalists, and even elected representatives from the governing party that the sovereignty act is legislation that will hurt Alberta. We know that Bill 1 is hurting our business sector by creating significant uncertainty, which has already created fear in investors. Investors like stability. Of course, the UCP likes to say that they're champions for business, but this legislation is not supporting business because it is creating significant uncertainty in the business sector.

This amendment to Bill 1 – of course, we know that this is the leading bill, Bill 1, of the new Premier of the UCP. She campaigned on this bill, saying that it was very important for Alberta to have a sovereignty act. She wanted to challenge the federal government because she believed they had overreached into our province, so she was going to create legislation that indeed did actually challenge the Constitution of our country.

So here it is. We have this bill before us. The Premier said at the outset, after some criticism of the bill that was pretty significant – I'd say nation-wide – and getting national press for all the wrong reasons, that she was not aware of the sweeping powers that Bill 1 gives to Executive Council. She said: no, no, no; we'd always come back to the legislative branch of government and make sure that enactments of new laws and legislation would go through that process. But this amendment says very, very loudly that that was not indeed the case, because it would not have been brought forward if the legislation, you know, did have those checks and balances.

Of course, any healthy democracy has different branches of government that have – we call them checks and balances. It's just not the executive branch – Executive Council, the ministers, the Premier – who make decisions. They must bring that information back to the Legislature for all MLAs to scrutinize and certainly speak to debate. But for some reason – I mean, the Premier herself said very clearly: no, no, no; those checks and balances are in place. But here we are, you know, a week later and we have this amendment before us indicating to us that indeed that was not the case and there was some mistake.

There has been some type of a failure here by the UCP government. It could be a failure that the Premier just didn't read the legislation and didn't understand it or that she wasn't properly briefed by people in the public service or her political staffers, people who are supposed to be obviously supporting the legislation that she wants to bring forward. So it does look like a bit of a shemuzzle, really. It's a big mess.

I mean, this amendment before us today, A1, is living proof that our concerns were valid, as the Official Opposition, that indeed this legislation was dangerous, that it eroded democracy in Alberta. I, for one, am very proud to stand with my caucus colleagues and many other Albertans who have spoken out about this legislation. I myself in my own constituency have received many calls, e-mails from really engaged, concerned constituents that this legislation is creating all sorts of havoc in our province and that it should not go ahead even with this amendment although I will give you that this amendment does make it better because, again, it restores some level of democracy to this legislation.

As the amendment does specify, section 4 of Bill 1, which has been referred to as the Henry VIII clause – of course, that's referring to a 15th-century sovereign . . .

11:30

Mr. Eggen: Sixteenth century.

Ms Sigurdson: Is it 16th century?

Mr. Eggen: Yeah.

Ms Sigurdson: Okay. A 16th-century sovereign. Thank you for that correction.

. . . that had, you know, significant sort of dictatorial ways of operating in his rulings or reigning. The amendment changed that section so that Executive Council doesn't have the sweeping powers of enactment, which is an important amendment, giving back legislative accountability to the process, restoring some level of democracy to Alberta.

[Mr. Orr in the chair]

I believe that we in the opposition have every right to really distrust this government because of this type of legislation that they've brought forward and previous ones within this mandate, this mandate that they got in 2019. Not only Bill 1 but other UCP pieces of legislation give excessive powers that we've seen here, so that's why it's so important, our role as the Official Opposition, that we bring up these concerns. We know that back in 2020 the UCP brought forward Bill 10, the Public Health (Emergency Powers) Amendment Act, 2020, and this bill gave new power to create laws without Legislative Assembly approval. Bill 10 was pushed through by the UCP in 48 hours – 48 hours; it was just rammed through this Legislature – and the bill gave cabinet ministers unilateral authority, without consultation, to impose new laws on the citizens of Alberta.

Despite the UCP's profession of, you know, wanting to create more democracy, wanting to make sure that citizens of Alberta have involvement and input into the process, this legislation – Bill 10 and Bill 1, which we see before us right now, both sort of fly in the face of that and are absolutely not creating more democracy in our province but really hindering that. Again, as Bill 1 just did, Bill 10 ignored the legislative branch of government and gave all authority to the executive branch, and as we did back then, the Official Opposition stood up against this undemocratic legislation.

It doesn't end there. I mean, there are many pieces of legislation that are really quite egregious. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford just talked about Bill 81, which also was, you know, another piece of legislation that did not give full democracy to our citizens.

One I want to talk about now is Bill 78, the Alberta Housing Amendment Act, 2021, that gave the minister power to define affordable housing. No criteria were specified in the bill. It's so the minister can designate what units are affordable or not. Again, it's just like the sweeping powers given to, well, in this case, one member of the executive branch without any kind of criteria or understanding about what that actually means.

Quite frankly, I mean, one of the things that is extremely disturbing about what is happening in housing – it doesn't really have a ministry anymore; there's no ministry with that name, but it is, I understand, within Seniors, Community and Social Services – is that even before, when it was seniors and housing, so little was done on that file. In fact, one of the major areas that it's really incumbent on the government to get involved in is social housing, and this government has not invested in social housing, really, since they've been elected, and we can see the challenges on our streets everywhere because of that. Is that because the minister is now not defining social housing as affordable housing? Was the previous minister only talking about affordable housing being a little bit below market? I mean, that seems to be the case, so it's very confusing.

This authority given to that one minister is really making it very difficult to see what positive progress is being made in that area. Frankly, there isn't any positive progress in that area. We're in a housing crisis in this province, and it is getting worse every day. You know, we see it on our streets, certainly, in the city of Edmonton. We know so many people are living in horrific conditions considering how cold it is outside, and we know that Albertans are dying. We know that there have been amputations because of being in the cold for long periods of time, and these folks need that social housing. They need that permanent supportive housing, but this government just is not stepping up to support them in that way.

I guess these are just examples of legislation that the UCP government brought in previously that, of course, are not really respecting the democratic process in our province. These are key issues. Of course, the amendment to take back some of this Henry VIII extraordinary power is a step in the right direction. However, it's not enough in terms of making this bill better. This bill still is a deeply flawed piece of legislation, and that's why we voted against it in first reading, which we know is a rare event in this House. It's not something that we took lightly, but we looked at the legislation, and we saw that this legislation did warrant because it was deeply flawed and it would hurt Albertans. So we stood up, and we're very proud of that. This amendment shows how right we were to do that because this is fundamentally flawed, and as I said, this is only one aspect of the difficulties with this bill.

You know, I think it's important for us to have some perspective on what we do. We're not just focusing on this bill, but there is a whole – well, I mean, the UCP does have a legacy a bit now, about three and a half years of governance. We can call it a legacy maybe. I don't know if that's the right word exactly. But we voted against two other pieces of legislation in first reading as well, and that was Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, and then Bill 22, the Reform of Agencies, Boards and Commissions and Government Enterprises Act, 2019. Just to help some of the members in this Assembly remember why we voted against those in first reading, like we did about Bill 1 – and we do this rarely. I guess it's been three bills in this entire three and a half years of UCP rule, but these are very egregious pieces of legislation, so that's why we decided to vote in first reading against them.

Of course, Bill 9, the Public Sector Wage Arbitration Deferral Act, imposed a delay on wage talks for front-line workers who took pay freezes in the first years of their contracts and then had the right to reopen pay negotiations with arbitration, if needed, in 2019. Of course, this bill stopped all of that. They weren't allowed to open their contracts, and this betrayed many Alberta Union of Provincial Employees' members that were employed at Alberta Health Services, the government of Alberta, postsecondary education boards, and agencies. Of course, we wanted to vote against that, and we did because this is really adding salt to the wound, this betrayal of workers. Here they have an agreement, you know, that the government is supposed to respect, but instead they bring in legislation to wipe that off so that they don't have any kind of integrity in that legislation.

I'll remind members again. There was such an air of arrogance during that debate that Premier Kenney – and I can say his name because he's no longer in the Chamber – walked around and handed out earplugs to his members so they didn't have to listen to the debate. I don't know. That's nothing to be proud of. To me, that's disgusting, but that is incumbent of a government that thinks that they don't have to listen, and they do it literally. I mean, it was, I think, kind of a nightmare for them in terms of communications afterwards because it showed just how cavalier and uncaring they were.

We knew that legislation would hurt workers deeply, just like we know that Bill 1 is hurting Alberta businesses. I know that the UCP purports to say that they do absolutely support business much more than we do. They like to say that we don't care about business, but that's not true, because this legislation does hurt business. It creates much instability in the sector, and we know that businesses want stability, so it doesn't make sort of any logical sense.

But it is, you know, based on a pretty narrow ideological view, I think, of the Premier and her supporters and the 1 or 2 per cent of Albertans that voted for her so that she could become Premier. I think it'll be really interesting to see when we do actually have an election and she faces the whole Alberta electorate and not just a small section of it. This was just a stunning show of disrespect by this UCP government, and again, as we do now, we stood up against that.

I just want to mention, too, the second one just to remind everybody, Bill 22. The key concern we had was that the bill terminated the contract of Alberta's Election Commissioner, Lorne

Gibson. And why was the UCP wanting to do that? Well, they did that because there was an investigation into the allegations of illegal donations in the 2017 UCP leadership race. We were assured that the investigation would continue by Jason Kenney at the time, but what actually happened is that everything went dark, and in fact some members may remember that the Leader of the Official Opposition was even removed from this Chamber because she accused the government of obstructing justice by firing the Election Commissioner.

These are the three bills during this mandate that we have voted against in first reading, and as I explained those three bills to this House, I feel proud of the opposition caucus that we stood up and said: no; it's not all right for these bills to go ahead. You know, the betrayal of workers, stopping an investigation into illegal donations in the UCP leadership race because you're taking away the person who's running that investigation, and now the sovereignty act, which sort of defies any kind of logic that I understand myself about: what's a way to be part of a country and serve the citizens?

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

This is creating quite a bit of instability in many sectors. Of course, we talked a lot about the business community, but I just want to talk a little bit about the nonprofit community, too, because they're very impacted by this legislation because, of course, they do receive federal money. If I talk again about housing, many nonprofits – and again a sad part of what is going on currently with the UCP government is that oftentimes federal governments, municipal governments, and people who are donating to nonprofits are working together to create housing initiatives, to create new housing, and we know that we need much more than we have, and the province is really missing in action. Those federal dollars are so important to the sector of housing, but for some reason the UCP doesn't seem to think that housing is that important.

You know, we know that when we look at their record. When they came into office, back in 2019, they cut the rental supplement by 24 per cent. That's horrific. It's such a program that should actually, really be expanded, but that's one of the first things they did, cut the rent supplement program by 24 per cent. They cut $53 million in maintenance for housing management bodies over three years, starting in the 2020 budget.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's an honour to rise this evening, almost this morning, to speak to this amendment. I will, like many of my colleagues, not be supporting it, and we'll see how much I can get on the record here. I think that my colleagues in the Official Opposition have done a great job of sharing their concerns and my concerns of why I don't plan on supporting this amendment but, further, why it is not going to fix this bill to any extent to make it something that I or the Official Opposition would be able to support.

As previous members have, I want to take a moment to look at some of the comments that were made by members who are now in cabinet, of course, at this time. Well, some of them were in cabinet, but this member in particular I do not believe was, and that would be the now Deputy Premier, the Member for Lethbridge-East, who at the time of these conversations around the idea of a sovereignty act – and I believe this quote was from when the leadership race was happening. If I'm wrong, then the member can feel free to clarify that, but at the time the Member for Lethbridge-East, now the Deputy Premier, said that no one person should be able to enact regulations without consultation. Even with the amendment that is before us, that is going to continue to be the case, so it's very interesting to see that member continue to defend this legislation and, by extension, this amendment.

You know, further to that, we again saw another comment from that member more recently, I believe, when the bill had been tabled and people were raising concerns about the King Henry VIII clause and other potentially overreaching clauses within this legislation or sections within this legislation. Again that member took the opportunity to speak to media and say: I believe safeguards are in place for this legislation. And again it was asked if they had actually looked at or read the legislation, and they said: no, I haven't.

So we have a government that continues on this pattern of, first of all, not consulting on the legislation that they're putting forward, not necessarily even reading it, and then standing up to defend it, and we see that again and again from other members of the government caucus and cabinet. It's been put on the record, but the current Finance minister during the leadership debate saying that this was a ticking time bomb, the now jobs minister saying that this legislation was a fairy tale, and I continue to wonder, you know, without seeing it at that point and still being willing to stand up against it at that time even without seeing the legislation – and now that we've seen it, I think in many cases it is worse than most people, the majority of Albertans, might have expected it to be, yet these ministers and these caucus members within the UCP government have completely flip-flopped.

When reflecting on the amendment that is being put forward, I would argue that it really doesn't fix anything within the legislation, Madam Chair, and even if we were to take it at face value, that it is going to potentially add one extra step that the government has to bring forward to the Legislature, the fact is that even with what is being amended or proposed in this amendment, there are ways to circumvent it, and we will continue to see the exact same thing that is originally proposed in the legislation, so I don't think that the issue that it's particularly trying to solve is being solved in itself.

I think the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised a very fair point that all this government needs to do is bring forward a piece of enabling legislation, something very general, you know, sovereignty against the federal government or a federal-government-is-wrong act, and all of a sudden they're able to put forward regulations and add pieces within that act without having to come before the House. So when we look at this amendment, we have to recognize that it is part of a bigger picture, and even if we were to accept this amendment and do what it is asking, even though, further, the government at the time and the Premier when bringing this forward said that there was absolutely nothing wrong with this legislation and the powers that the opposition and many Albertans are bringing forward concerns around is not a power that's actually enabled by the legislation, here we are seeing an amendment by this government.

Unfortunately, even if we were to allow this amendment to go through – of course, with the government having a majority, I would never try to, you know, foreshadow or, I guess, foresee how the government might vote on this. I'm suspecting that the government caucus, with all of the many people who have previously spoken against being able to enact regulation without consultation – I imagine that they are going to vote in favour of this amendment. Unfortunately, I will not because, again, even if this is going to be accepted and were to be accepted, the fact is that there are several other pieces within this legislation that continue to be concerning, and it really doesn't solve some of the main issues within this legislation. Whether it were to come back to the House and be debated or not is somewhat beside the point when we are talking about potentially putting forward or debating the ideas of constitutionality before this House when, as has been said again and again, that is not our job.

I continue to hear heckling throughout the debate of other speakers when the Official Opposition is speaking from members of the government saying: “Oh, you know, this isn’t unconstitutional. This isn’t how it works. We in the Legislature should have the ability to debate whether something is constitutional or not.” Of course, that is what this government is trying to move forward with here, but the fact is, as I said previously, that just because you write in the legislation that it is following the Constitution or it is not violating or intruding on the Constitution of Canada – just because you wrote it in here doesn’t make it the case.

Now, again, the main concern here, when we are discussing this, is the driving away of investment through this legislation. This amendment by no means fixes the concerns within this legislation that this Premier and this government are potentially trying to overreach.

I think that we’ve heard through the debate and through the decisions of this government yesterday – well, I guess it was today at this point. Very early this morning I had raised a point, the fact that this government has left so many dollars on the table from the federal government around, particularly, wage top-ups through the pandemic, dollars that the federal government had provided to many provinces and, in several cases, to the tune of tens of millions of dollars if not hundreds of millions of dollars. This government left that money on the table. In some situations that was – I guess I can’t speak for the government, nor would I defend their decisions, but it potentially seems like they weren’t willing to match any of that funding from the federal government to provide top-up dollars to the hard-working men and women and the heroes on the front lines of our health care system. Again, tens of millions of dollars were left on the table because of this UCP government’s indifference to either those workers or the federal government willing to try and help.

Now, going back, if this UCP government was concerned about how that money was being used, what it was going to be spent on, that is a right of theirs, and that argument can be made, absolutely. Those conversations need to take place, as I’m sure they did. But just because they aren’t happy with a decision that the federal government has made about how dollars are going to be spent in one province or another doesn’t make it unconstitutional, Madam Chair. But what this UCP government is trying to argue is that they believe they should have the power to make that decision, that the Legislative Assembly should have the ability to make that decision, which is simply not the case. As has been said again and again, we have a court system to make those decisions, and this government has tried to challenge the constitutionality of decisions that the federal government has made in the past.

I have concerns, as I’m sure many Albertans do, and investors across Canada but across all jurisdictions internationally are, I’m sure, concerned about how this legislation is going to infect – affect the investment environment. A bit of a Freudian slip there. Again, this government potentially is trying to use unconstitutional and undemocratic powers to challenge the federal government in places where they simply should not. In many cases – that was sort of a double entendre that they should not be challenging the federal government in this Legislature because, of course, that is very likely going to be unconstitutional or would not hold up in court, but they should be doing that in the courts.

When we talk about a government who is going to try and unilaterally make decisions about the constitutionality of things, you know, it’s very concerning, again, for me as a citizen and as a member of the Legislature and to investors across the world. It kind of reminds me of a situation of something that’s come up in the past: this idea of freeman on the land, that I can make decisions about whether I’m going to pay taxes or whether I’m going to follow certain rules based on something arbitrary or something that is not actually within the rule of law within the Constitution. It seems that in some cases there are some similarities between what this UCP government is trying to do and the idea of that, again, going back to the idea that just because you say it’s so, that something is constitutional or not constitutional, doesn’t necessarily make it the case.

As previous members have said, we’ve seen this government try to use their majority in this Legislature to pass draconian legislation. We saw it particularly in Bill 10. At that time it was very clear that within the government’s own conservative circles there were people pushing back on the extraordinary powers that this government was giving itself within Bill 10 and eventually came back to repeal that, but we find ourselves in a very similar situation, where this government is trying to give themselves extraordinary power to make decisions that may or may not be constitutional.

Going back to the idea that there are many potentially innocent bystanders in the crosshairs of this legislation – namely, the entities that are listed within the definitions of this legislation and how that’s going to impact their relationship not only with the provincial government but also the federal government if they find themselves in a situation where the federal government is asking them to follow through on certain initiatives and the province is telling them: “Absolutely not. We are not supporting that. In our opinion of the Legislative Assembly, which really shouldn’t be making these decisions at all, we find this to be an unconstitutional decision, that it’s within our, you know, ability to make decisions around this.”

Municipalities, among other entities that are listed here, whether it be postsecondary institutions within the Post-secondary Learning Act, whether it be police forces within the Police Act, the entities that are listed in here, again, anyone that is receiving a grant or other public funds from the government that are contingent on the provision of a public service: the list is long, and so many organizations and municipalities and other government organizations are going to be affected and are affected by the relationship between the provincial and federal government and are going to be forced to make decisions based on the powers that this UCP government is trying to give themselves.

Again, this amendment does not address those concerns by any means. Even if this amendment were to go through, we continue to see a bill that gives this UCP government extraordinary powers and this cabinet extraordinary powers, and again, I just wonder what happened to the many members of caucus in the government that were willing to speak out against this legislation. The fact is that we saw during the leadership contests with the current government and this current Premier that the Premier was barely able to get this idea across the finish line within their own party. So it’s very interesting that – again, we look back on all of the issues within Alberta – Bill 1 is what this government brought forward, because it certainly isn’t a priority for the many members that I’ve spoken to in my community, many members of the public.

12:00

Of course, they are concerned about, whether it be the amount of money that’s coming from the federal government, whether it be, you know, how that money is being spent – I think that many members have talked about this issue through this debate, but again going back to the fact that it doesn’t mean that just because we disagree with something, it is unconstitutional. I have grave concerns, and I think the business community has grave concerns that this government is trying to give themselves the power to make those decisions and to pass legislation or motions and directives that are going to affect so many entities within our community, trying to give those directions even if they may be against federal laws or the Constitution itself.

Just so many pieces within this legislation, whether it be around the judicial review section, changing timelines or changing standard of reviews, or trying to put in immunity for cabinet and for members of the Legislature in case a directive is carried out that actually was against the law. I mean, it's just ridiculous, Madam Chair, that we've gotten to a point where this government, again, with all of the libertarian tendencies that I thought were in that caucus, is willing to give themselves so much power, to create so much uncertainty within the investment environment, within the rule of law.

The list is long for reasons of why we should not be moving forward with this legislation, and of course, again, this amendment does not fix any of that. We've heard about the concerns around treaty rights, that those have not been addressed. We've heard from large organizations across the province that have business interests here that they are concerned about how this might be used and the potential consequences of this government putting forward unconstitutional changes. We have a system in place that, as has been explained again and again – I really don't understand why this government is so unwilling to just face the facts that we have a court system in place for the very issues that they might be concerned about.

All they are doing is creating uncertainty here for a bill that some members of the government profess to not even have read before they were defending it. Before even reading it, through that leadership process, just hearing the name, the idea of a sovereignty act, members of the government were willing to reject it and say that it was going to have grave consequences, yet now, when I stand here to support the points that they had brought forward at that time, they heckle me, Madam Chair. It's really unbelievable how much changes over a couple of months and a couple of cabinet promotions.

Madam Chair, this amendment should not pass. This entire piece of legislation should go back to the drawing board, or just put it in the shredder. I understand the concerns of this government when it comes to wanting to see more action from the federal government, wanting to have a better partnership with them, that potentially the federal government is not listening to their concerns. I know that many Albertans, potentially and very likely the majority of Albertans, want to see a strengthened relationship, want to see a federal government that is going to listen to the concerns of Albertans through the pandemic and through these historic levels of inflation. Unfortunately, this legislation and this amendment are not addressing those concerns and instead are creating uncertainty.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there others to join the debate? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaidis: Thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning. It's midnight, and here we are continuing this very important and lively debate about where our province is going and what the future of our province looks like. I think an important part of this debate is how we as a province are asserting our authority and how we are asserting our rights over our areas of exclusive jurisdiction and, in particular, over our ability to develop our natural resources and to exercise the powers that are given to us within the Constitution, that are clearly defined and delineated to be areas of provincial power and authority.

Earlier, Madam Chair, I went for a walk – not very far; I have to stay close by – just around the third floor here around the portraits. I found myself taking a look at some of those portraits, primarily taking a look at the portraits of our former Premiers, in particular some of the first Premiers of the province. It got me thinking and wondering: what were some of the challenges that they faced? What were some of the challenges and policy matters that they had to debate during their time? I was quite intrigued when I did a little bit more homework because I found that, interestingly, not a lot has changed since the early days of Confederation and to where we are today in our debate.

You know, of course, I'm sure as we all know, in 1905 Alberta joined Confederation. Alberta became a province in Confederation, and our first Premier, Alexander Rutherford, of course, inherited some monumental tasks with establishing the foundation of the province of Alberta. Now, I don't think he completely knew or realized at the time, but Premier Rutherford also found himself in the middle of some very challenging and difficult policy debates and questions. As an example, one of the areas where he, I believe, inadvertently realized that there was some significant policy discourse and discussion needed was around the area of the province's authority and rights over natural resources.

Now, many members of the Assembly may know or may not know that when other provinces joined Confederation, in particular British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, they were automatically given exclusive rights to their natural resources. It was automatic, an automatic condition of their entry into Confederation. However, when Alberta and Saskatchewan joined Confederation in 1905, those same rights were not afforded to those two provinces. They did not have, at that time, exclusive rights over their natural resources. So, of course, conversation started very early on about the importance of this new province having control over its natural resources.

In 1910 under Arthur Sifton, the second Premier of Alberta, the conversation heated up, and greater conversation occurred on the topic of Alberta's natural resources. Sifton stated – I'm going to quote here, Madam Chair – as follows, just to give you a window into the conversation that was happening at the time: "We should administer our mines and timber. The question is not . . . whether we would like to control our natural resources, but what is the best way to get them." It's interesting. Of course, these are comments from Premier Sifton, but if we dig a little bit deeper, we can see more comments from other parliamentarians and Members of the Legislative Assembly at the time that show the extent to which this debate was raging within Alberta.

In particular, I want to draw attention to a former Member of the Legislative Assembly, the member elected to the electoral district of Alexandra who served only one term. That's Alwyn Bramley-Moore. As I mentioned, he was elected for just one term. He was elected in 1909 and served until 1913. A year after, of course, he was no longer in the Legislative Assembly. In 1914 we saw the outbreak of World War I, and Bramley-Moore volunteered to serve in the Canadian Forces in World War I, was dispatched overseas into Europe, and unfortunately in 1916 was killed by a German sniper.

That being said, during his time as a Member of the Legislative Assembly he contributed to the debate about Alberta's exclusive right to develop its natural resources, so much so that in 1911 he published a book entitled Canada and Her Colonies; Or Home Rule for Alberta. In his book he spoke about the need to end protective tariffs that were designed to build up Canadian industries, most notably in central parts of Canada, in Quebec and Ontario, of course, and in other places. However, what's of more significance: he also called upon the federal government to grant Alberta control over its natural resources and Crown lands.

Now, as I mentioned, shortly after his tenure we saw the outbreak of World War I, and that, of course, shifted public debate not just in Alberta but across the entire country as Canadians from coast to coast took up the call to serve and fight for freedom and liberty in the First World War. Regrettably, the conversation around Alberta's right to develop its natural resources took a back seat for the next few years.

In 1920, though, Madam Chair, at the conclusion of the war, the federal government did indeed commit in principle to give Alberta exclusive rights to its natural resources, but it would take several years until that would actually be developed. It took several years of wrangling and political back and forth until that could finally be accomplished.

It wouldn't be until 1929 that a deal would be reached during the tenure of Premier John Edward Brownlee to have full authority over our natural resources. Brownlee was celebrated as a hero. In fact, when he returned to Alberta, when he arrived back at the rail station in Edmonton, over 3,000 Albertans came to greet him and welcome him and welcomed him as a hero. There are stories of fireworks, of bonfires, of live music to celebrate this important milestone in the development of this great province, the ability for us to have exclusive control and jurisdiction over our natural resources, truly critical to the development of our province and to our prosperity.

But, unfortunately, Madam Chair, as we see here tonight, the conversation continues. Despite the success of so many of these great Albertans, questions around our ability to develop our natural resources continue to remain at the very top of debate, as we're seeing here today, which, of course, is the foundational premise of the bill that we're discussing, which is to assert Alberta's jurisdiction over our ability to develop our natural resources and our exclusive rights on other areas that are outlined in the Constitution.

Now, the conversation has changed a little bit, of course, over these decades, and although today the powers to develop our natural resources are indeed clearly enshrined and delineated within legislation, the federal government, unfortunately, continues to intrude on our ability to develop those resources. What good is it if we have exclusive jurisdiction over our natural resources but cannot get those resources to market, cannot develop them?

The federal government has made it very clear what their intention is and what they would like to see happen in Alberta. The federal government has made it very clear that they want to phase out the oil sands. It wants to phase out and limit our ability to develop our resources, but, Madam Chair, of course, actions always speak louder than words.

So it's important for us to reflect on some of the more recent actions that have taken place over the last few decades, including – for example, we're all aware of the national energy policy in the 1980s under the leadership of Pierre Trudeau, who tried to nationalize our energy sector, intruding on our ability, on our exclusive jurisdiction to develop our resources. We've seen more recent examples with Bill C-69, the no-more-pipelines law, again, which restricts our ability to develop our natural resources; other pieces of legislation and federal government policy, including the tanker ban on the west coast; and the recent proposals from the federal government this past summer to impose an emissions cap on Alberta. All of these measures are designed to limit our ability to develop our resources.

Here we are, 117 years later from the beginning of Alberta's entry into Confederation, and we continue to have many of the same conversations that we had back then. I think it's important, Madam Chair, for us to recognize these important historical pieces. I believe it's truly important for us to understand where we've been, where we were in order to understand how we move forward. From its very inception, as I have just articulated, Alberta, from the very beginning, has had to fight just to be treated equally. While other provinces automatically enjoyed the right to develop their natural resources upon entry into Confederation, those rights weren't granted to Alberta and Saskatchewan. Those rights had to be fought for over the course of several decades just to have equal standing in Confederation.

It's a question that I continue to hear every day from my constituents. They don't believe we are treated fairly in Confederation. They don't believe the equalization rules are fair. They don't believe the interests of Alberta are taken seriously at the national level. So it's critical, Madam Chair, as is represented through the bill, that we continue to defend Alberta's interests, that we not waver in our commitment to defend Alberta's interests, and that we continue to fight for the priorities of our province, which are etched right above the Speaker's chair, the words "Fortis et Liber," strong and free, the true representation of the province of Alberta. We must keep these words alive as we continue to have this debate to ensure that Alberta remains strong and free for all of its citizens, continues to have exclusive control over its resources, continues to have authority to develop those resources and benefit from the prosperity that is provided through those resources.

I'll end because I know the House leader doesn't want me to go on for too long. I'll end quickly here. Madam Chair, perhaps I'll just end with a comment from a member who stood in this very Legislature a hundred years ago. I mentioned earlier the member for the district of Alexandra, MLA Bramley-Moore, who wrote a book. I've just ordered it on Amazon. I'll be happy to give the House an update when it arrives and I've had an opportunity to sit down and read that book from 1911 from cover to cover. Perhaps there may be some more interesting insights, but one of the things that the member said, which I found quite interesting, which I think I'll leave the Assembly with, was a very simple comment, a very simple statement: Alberta first, last, and forever.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to speak to amendment A1 regarding the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

12:20

You know, we've been talking about this bill, and Albertans are talking about this bill, and unfortunately it doesn't matter what type of amendments are proposed by this government. The mere introduction of this piece of legislation is signalling to international investors that Alberta has a different set of rules than the rest of Canada. That is very troubling and is chasing away investment, out of Alberta. I'm confused why, when the Official Opposition put forward two amendments, two reasoned amendments in the last two days, they were both voted down. We were speaking on behalf of so many Albertans that are concerned, whether it's business leaders, economists, lawyers, Indigenous communities. There's an amount of resources that we've been able to tap into to talk about the devastating impacts on the economy of this piece of legislation, yet here we are debating a bill with an introduction that, frankly, doesn't do anything. The only clear solution to proceed with this piece of legislation is to kill the bill.

But we're here to talk about amendment A1, so I'm going to do that, Madam Chair. We've been hearing from Albertans that this is a piece of legislation that is quite concerning. We know from a recent poll that it's only 32 per cent of Albertans that support this piece of legislation. Thirty-two per cent. We are sitting in front of a government where their own members were in disagreement with this legislation before it even came to light.

So I just am puzzled that we're here today debating this government's flagship bill, Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, and it's still moving forward. It's been loud and clear that this piece of legislation creates chaos and instability. It is signalling to investors that Alberta is an unstable economic place and there's uncertainty whether or not they should be investing in Alberta. We know that businesses thrive when there are some simple things, Madam Chair: the rules and regulations are reasonable and transparent. Unfortunately, this piece of legislation has not been transparent.

We have asked the government to provide the legal opinion that was provided by the Minister of Justice, and unfortunately that hasn't been disclosed. We're curious because so many members of this government have spoken out against this piece of legislation, yet all of a sudden they have changed their tune. So we're curious about what's happened to change that. When we look at this amendment, it just is not enough. It is not signalling to business and investors that this is a safe place to invest right now. What's happening is that it is creating absolute chaos. When we look at the potential of funding and grants being left off the table from the federal government, we're talking about things that Albertans need right now, things like affordable housing, things like support for newcomers.

We know that federal funding can support so many things, and we haven't heard that so many Albertan organizations, nonprofits, charities are confident that that's going to remain. We have a province that has people that are struggling, people that are hurting. The health care system is in crisis. This piece of legislation is not going to bring forward a sense of stability. It's going to do the exact opposite. Not only is it going to scare away future investment; we're worried about what people are saying about the current status of what it's doing.

When you have a province that is struggling and the people are hurting and they are pleading for supports and resources, the very first piece of legislation shouldn't be a bill that does the exact opposite to support Albertans. This is not something Albertans want; 32 per cent agree. That's a staggeringly low number to put forward a piece of legislation as the flagship.

We haven't heard who this government has consulted with. Who have they talked to? Who is asking for this piece of legislation? We've heard loud and clear from members of their government, their cabinet what their thoughts were regarding this legislation. I would ask the government, as we're in Committee of the Whole: who did they consult with? Who was it that said that this is what Alberta needs right now, in the middle of this absolute affordability crisis? I think it's a fair question. Who is asking for this?

What is it projecting for our economic impact? Has a study been done? When we're listening to people talk about the economy, they're saying that this is completely disruptive. It is not going to drive investment into the province. So I would like to hear who was saying that this is the right step, that this is what Alberta needs right now to create economic stability, because when we listen to Albertans and we listen to the experts all around the province, this is not it. The only thing that we can do to signal to business, to signal to investment, to signal to nonprofits, to health care is to stop this piece of legislation, to not proceed.

I think business leaders have talked about what their needs are. We've been listening to what they want. They need stability. They need a government that is drawing investment in. What does that government look like? I've said it: stable, transparent. When a company is considering investing in a province, they need to know that where they're investing is going to be a wonderful place not just for their business or their organization but for the people that they employ and are asking to come and move to this province to invest in their dream. When you have a government that is creating absolute chaos, it's going to be a really hard sell for those considering investing here to find employees that want to come and live here.

We have a health care system right now with children's health care absolutely in dire straits. We have children's hospitals setting up trailers, 15- to 20-hour waits for kids. I can't imagine a CEO talking to their potential employees to come and saying: this is what's happening in the province of Alberta. Not only is the economic impact of this piece of legislation frightening, but everything else that this government is simply ignoring is frightening. It's scary. And it's just really concerning that this is what we're here talking about today.

So I will not be supporting this amendment A1, and I would really urge the rest of the members in this Chamber to not support it either.

With that, Madam Chair, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report progress on Bill 1.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Stony Plain.

12:30

Mr. Turton: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. That is carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We've had some wonderful debate this evening. I appreciate everyone's participation, but at this time I move that we adjourn the Assembly until tomorrow at 1.30 p.m., Wednesday, December 7, 2022.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:31 a.m. on Wednesday]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 7, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Let us pray.

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King and his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of power and responsibility the guidance of Your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interests and prejudices, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's my pleasure to introduce two groups of guests to us today: my very good friend and former president of Olds College, the current president of the Red Deer Polytechnic, Stuart Cullum, and he is joined by the vice-president of external relations at Red Deer Polytechnic, Richard Longtin. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

I would also like to introduce to all members a group of Legislative Assembly Office employees who have joined the Legislative Assembly Office over the past year and are undergoing their orientation at the Assembly today. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The hon. Member for Camrose has a school to introduce.

Ms Lovely: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to introduce to you the amazing teacher Brent Anderson and his hard-working students from the New Norway school. Welcome, everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly my three guests from the University of Calgary Students' Union: Mike Brown, external communication; Nicole Schmidt, president; and Mateusz Salmassi, external vice-president. I'm glad that you were able to join us here today. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce friends and family of Sebastian Heemskerk, who are here to witness the tabling of a petition and listen to the member's statement that I'm going to be making about him. I'd like to introduce to the Assembly Avalon Heemskerk, Tim Heemskerk, Shaylene Cerezke-Riemer, Sherilee Crawley, Shiloh Skiffington, Hope Johnson, Lorna Thomas, Petra Schult, Jessica Williams, Holly Thomson, Carmen Nicholson, and Mariska Macklin. If they could all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Education.

Member LaGrange: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly representatives from Aspen View school board. We're delighted to welcome here today Neil O'Shea, Aimee Hirtle, Donna Cherniwchan, Anne Karczmarczyk, Elohe Chizawsky, April Bauer, and Dennis MacNeil. On behalf of all members of the Assembly, thank you for being here today, and welcome.

The Speaker: The Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to welcome a number of guests that are here to participate in The Nonprofit Vote coalition's and the Alberta Nonprofit Network's day at the Legislature. These incredible individuals are leaders in the not-for-profit sector, and I would like to thank them for the incredible work that they do in our communities. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Ms Hoffman: Please join me in welcoming Patricia Paradis, Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee medal recipient. Her record of service includes executive director at the Centre for Constitutional Studies at the University of Alberta as well as national chair of the Women's Legal Education and Action Fund, LEAF. Thank you, Pat, for being here as well as Dana Beresh, your guest. Please rise and receive our warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. the Deputy Premier has an introduction.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly the amazing people from Team Lethbridge. Team Lethbridge is a group of community leaders and organizations raising awareness about the city of Lethbridge's tremendous contributions to the province and how government representatives can work with them to support long-term success for all of Alberta. I ask that everyone please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to welcome provincial representatives from the Schizophrenia Society of Alberta. Many of us know friends and families impacted by schizophrenia. The society operates across Alberta, supporting individuals living with schizophrenia and their families. Please rise and receive a warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East has a statement to make.

100th Birthday of Pramukh Swami Maharaj

Mr. Singh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm proud to rise in the House to celebrate and pay tribute to His Holiness Pramukh Swami Maharaj. His Holiness is a spiritual leader of the BAPS Swaminarayan Sanstha community that brought kindness, leadership, and joy to his community. On behalf of the hon. minister of multiculturalism I would like to read a declaration being passed down from the minister's office in celebration of His Holiness' birthday.

Whereas, Dec. 7th is the 100th birthday of His Holiness Pramukh Swami Maharaj, the spiritual leader and Guru of the BAPS Swaminarayan Sanstha, a worldwide Hindu organization dedicated to promoting harmony between individuals, families and diverse communities; and whereas, A simple, humble and spiritual personality, Pramukh Swami Maharaj was the fifth spiritual successor of Bhagwan Swaminarayan, and whereas, Pramukh Swami Maharaj followed a spiritual path from an early age, seeking purity, renouncing material possessions, and possessing humility, saintliness, and a desire to help the people around him; and whereas, His Holiness Pramukh Swami Maharaj spread his unique message to the world, saying that “In the joy of others, lies our own”; words that were thoughtful, meaningful and consoling, coming from a depth of profound experience and deep compassion; and . . .

whereas, when individuals who have contributed to the benefit of their community and the people around them in moral, ethical and spiritual matters, and have done it without asking for personal gain . . .

therefore, on behalf of the minister of multiculturalism I hereby declare December 7, 2022, a day in commemoration of the 100th birthday of Pramukh Swami Maharaj.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Opioid-related Deaths and Treatment

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure to rise today and honour the life of Sebastian Heemskerk, who tragically passed away on June 2, 2021, in Grande Prairie due to the drug poisoning crisis. Many of Sebastian’s family, friends, and people supporting his family are in the gallery today because Sebastian’s older sister Avalon has been collecting signatures for a petition to urge the government to declare a state of public health emergency in response to the ongoing opioid crisis and to seek possible solutions through increased Alberta health and social programs assistance along with a public awareness campaign. I’ll be presenting this petition later, which has over a thousand signatures, many of them from northern Alberta, near Grande Prairie.

This call for action is purposely broad so that it can have broad support. It’s no secret that the opposition and government have disagreements on this topic, but I hope the experience of the Heemskerk family can ground all of us to move forward on this emergency with compassion and empathy. The UCP government has championed recovery, and – let me be clear – having options and capacity for people to enter recovery that’s appropriate for their circumstances when they are ready is fundamentally important, but it is also important to recognize the increased toxicity of the drug supply and the need for harm reduction measures which are based on evidence. The mandate letter from the Premier to the new Minister of Mental Health and Addiction doesn’t mention either, which is a significant policy gap in the response to this emergency.

Those who join me today in the gallery have made significant efforts to reach out to this government, to share their experiences, and advocate for solutions. I really hope that the members who represent Grande Prairie and the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction can connect with them and make time to meet. I’m honoured to have met the Heemskerk family, and I’m inspired by their advocacy so that fewer people will die preventable deaths in the midst of this opioid crisis. I hope all members in this Chamber feel that inspiration as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Canada Pension Plan

Mr. Stephan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is a young, most prosperous province. Each year CPP contributions by Alberta businesses and workers will exceed benefits to retirees by over $4 billion. Since 2019 Trudeau has been jacking up the CPP over 36 per cent, forcing Alberta businesses and workers to disproportionately pay for his tax increase.

1:40

But, Mr. Speaker, what about inflation? CPP costs exploded more than 10 per cent from last year. Next year CPP maximum will increase 7 per cent more, to $7,500 for each Alberta employee. Do we want to get serious about confronting affordability for out-of-control inflation on a federal program?

Under an Alberta pension plan each year contribution costs for each Alberta worker of an Alberta business can be thousands lower. That is the truth. Some do not want an APP for Albertans. Are we supposed to be surprised? If Alberta saves billions, CPP costs would increase for the rest of the country. Mr. Speaker, an APP will increase take-home pay for each Alberta worker and reduce costs for Alberta businesses to provide jobs.

The great thing about this opportunity is that there is no net cost to Alberta. It is paid by avoiding transferring billions every year to everyone else. Trudeau and the NDP want to fearmonger about an APP, hiding and distorting the truth. Mr. Speaker, let’s focus on the truth informing us with the facts. An APP is a game-changing competitive advantage.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Camrose is next.

Rural Crime

Ms Lovely: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently attended, at the invitation of the Forestburg community, a rural crime engagement session with an exceptional turnout. During this session residents of the town and surrounding area shared their experiences where they have been robbed repeatedly. These robbery instances have left community members frightened, and they know the robbers are members of their own community and continue to live amongst them.

In one instance a baby was in the car when it was stolen. Thankfully, the vehicle was returned and the child unharmed. I also heard several community members share their concerns for school-aged students who are afraid to walk to school given the threatening behaviour of one of the residents. Response from local law enforcement is slow, leaving residents feeling vulnerable. Drug use made these perpetrators – is causing even more concern.

Mr. Speaker, these folks are frightened, they are angry, and they are frustrated. They have asked for sting operations so these perpetrators can be proactively arrested. What is most frustrating for not only the residents but the local police is the fact that once these criminals are arrested, they are turned loose again, only to reoffend against the same people that they have just robbed and threatened. That’s why I as their MLA will stand up, take note, and take action. I know this government is putting additional effort and resources into reducing rural crime, but more needs to be done. We need to do better for the residents of Forestburg and the entire province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Team Lethbridge

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I rise in the Assembly today to recognize the work of Team Lethbridge, a collaborative group of key organizations, including businesses, entrepreneurs, economic leaders, postsecondary institutions, school boards and local government, social services, arts, community development, and tourism organizations.

Team Lethbridge is working hard to recruit doctors to the community and address the health challenges, a task that would be much easier if the UCP government did not declare war on doctors during a pandemic and drive them out of the community. For families to move and stay in Lethbridge, they need to have certainty they have access to basic health care. Those who are trying to attract and retain skilled labour professionals or investment tell me that lack of primary care is one of our biggest reputational challenges.

Team Lethbridge is also working on affordable housing and housing solutions more generally. There is significant concern about homelessness and public safety in Lethbridge. I share those concerns. These organizations are working hard to create solutions, but again there is a missing partner at the table, and that is the UCP government.

I will conclude with thoughts on the economy. Economic development has great solutions for innovation, investment, and entrepreneur support and how to diversify our economy. We in the NDP opposition appreciate this work and have developed thoughtful policy as part of our Alberta's Future initiative, including in areas of agriculture, technology, hydrogen. When we were in government, Lethbridge welcomed over $1 billion in new private- and public-sector investment, but with the job-killing sovereignty act the UCP seems adamant that that will not happen under their watch.

I will look forward to what an NDP government could do by listening carefully to Team Lethbridge to create jobs in the community and create a more resilient economy for Alberta's future. Unfortunately, there's an empty seat around the table, and that's the folks with the funding and the ability to set a strategic direction. Right now that's the UCP government.

With political change in 2023 we'll be able to accomplish so much for Team Lethbridge and southern Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Nonprofit and Charitable Organizations

Mr. Williams: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Christmastide is the season of giving, and I believe that showing our gratitude as elected officials towards those who donate their time and resources to help Albertans in need highlights the essential importance of the not-for-profit and charitable sector in our society.

For many Albertans this season will be particularly difficult. We are going through a serious affordability crisis, and many people in our province are struggling to afford food, let alone the gifts they would normally be sharing with their family and friends. When Albertans find themselves in this position, I'm deeply grateful that there are so many great organizations like those that we have here today, amongst many others represented by them, who step in to selflessly help Albertans and their families enjoy the holiday and provide services year-round.

Considering the extensive generosity shown by these organizations, it makes me extremely pleased to know that a delegation from The Nonprofit Vote coalition is in the House today and visiting many different government organizations. The members of this delegation are committing to supporting the nonprofit and charitable sector. They understand how crucial this sector is to our province and the difficult time that they have had over these last two years and with the affordability crisis to keep the doors open. These nonprofits need to hear from elected representatives and know that we care and desire the flourishing sector of that part of our economy and the services they provide.

That is in part why I introduced Bill 202 with the hope that incentivizing more charitable gifts and donations can bolster a tax credit and incentivize more Albertans to give and more Albertans to give more deeply. I'm deeply humbled by the support of many different folks in this sector for the bill that we're bringing forward, and hopefully we can pass it in this Chamber sooner rather than later.

Anything we can do as elected representatives to support these institutions must be pursued. The charity virtue is essential. It's the watermark of our province since our inception, and I stand together with the charitable sector and with this House in supporting charities and not-for-profits.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Food Banks

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Christmas is only 18 days away. It's been a tough year for many families. Inflation is at an all-time high. The cost of living and raising a family is through the roof. Demands on our food banks this year are at some of the highest levels ever seen.

Our government recognizes the fantastic work that our local food banks do all year every year. We have increased funding to support our food banks so they can help more Alberta families get through these tough times of high inflation and uncertainty. Our local communities, businesses, schools, and, most importantly, our grocery store owners have stepped up, recognizing the need and the great value our food banks provide.

But we recently discovered that with Christmas just around the corner, the Grinch is alive and well and working for the Canada Revenue Agency in Ottawa. The CRA last week sent a notice to one of my local food banks that due to a filing issue they would be shutting that food bank down on December 16, just nine days before Christmas. Mr. Speaker, you would have to be as cuddly as a cactus and have garlic in your soul to do such a thing. Not only would your heart have to be three sizes too small; your brain would have to be nonexistent. The CRA obviously needs to invest in some calendars for their working-at-home employees.

My local food bank's group of dedicated workers applied for an extension so they could have a chance to be in compliance with the CRA and get through Christmas but were denied. Unbelievable. No, Mr. Speaker, this isn't happening in Whoville; this is happening in Canada. Even Dr. Seuss couldn't make this stuff up. I reached out to my local MP because this is a federal issue, and I'd like to thank MP Stubbs and her assistant Tina for helping me to get to the bottom of this and at least provide this group an extension to get them through the busiest season of the year.

I ask everybody in Alberta to please step up and support your local food bank so we can all have a merry Christmas. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of His Majesty's Opposition.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, today I stood with the former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. David Dodge. Mr. Dodge very articulately impressed upon Albertans how the Premier's sovereignty act, amended or not, will harm our economy. He said that it sends an international signal that investing capital dollars in Alberta carries greater risk than other jurisdictions. In a world where capital moves fast and certainty is a fundamental requirement to build big projects, Alberta will fall behind. Will the Premier admit that her bill is a threat to Alberta's prosperity and withdraw it?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me get this straight: we have a Liberal appointee to the Bank of Canada who is not even from Alberta, who didn't read the bill, who didn't read the amendments – quite frankly, the Bank of Canada increased interest rates .5 per cent again today, which actually has a dampening effect on investment – coming to Alberta to tell us how to run our affairs. You know, I'm wondering who this opposition leader is going to have at her next press conference. Maybe she should just invite Justin Trudeau.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Dodge served numerous Conservative governments, including that of former Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

Now, he explained how this act fails to meet the challenges of a modern economy, including changes to technology and business practices. Quote: whatever its final form, the act is a signal to the world that we don't know what we're doing, and if we can't get the fundamentals right, investors will look elsewhere. End quote. Why won't the Premier admit that she doesn't know what she's doing and that her bill is simply beyond saving?

Ms Smith: Now, Mr. Speaker, I've been waiting for the last couple of days for the Leader of the Official Opposition to retract her comment that CAPP opposed this bill, because they contacted my office and told me that that was not the case, that they neither supported nor rejected the bill, and they've asked the NDP to retract their statement on that. [interjections] Oh, I'd be happy to share it with you, the e-mail from them. In fact, I can tell you what I'm seeing with the oil sands producers. Today Canada oil sands producers are set to open their wallets and direct more capital toward their growth plans in 2023 after several years of relative frugality. That does not sound like chasing business . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that neither CAPP nor the Calgary Herald, where those comments were reported, have retracted the statements, and the Premier should stop suggesting otherwise on Twitter. It does not help her credibility. Meanwhile we have so many folks who are outlining that her bill undermines the rule of law, creates a constitutional crisis, chases away investment, makes inflation last longer, kills jobs, and divides Canadians against their province. Will the Premier admit she is more concerned with catering to her base than protecting or, heaven forbid, growing investment in Alberta?

Ms Smith: Let me continue in telling you what exactly the oil sands companies are doing. Over the past week four of the country's largest oil sands producers have unveiled bigger capital programs for 2023, with Cenovus Energy announcing Tuesday that it will spend between $4 billion and $4.5 billion this year. That's four oil sands companies within the last week. In fact, when asked directly about the sovereignty act, Alex Pourbaix – he is the president and CEO of Cenovus – said: I suspect those initial comments about the bill were directed at ensuring legislation maintains investor confidence; I have not heard anything from investors worrying about it at this point.

The Speaker: The hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Ms Notley: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier can't name one investor who's actually in support of her bill.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Ms Notley: Today an emergency resolution will hit the floor of the Assembly of First Nations calling for the bill to be rejected, amendments and all. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Notley: It is expected that it will pass with fierce support. Chiefs from both Alberta and Saskatchewan are rightfully protecting their treaty rights, which they assert are under threat because of this Premier. The Premier can deny it all she wants, but this government has done zero consultation with Indigenous communities on these matters. None. Zilch. Will she apologize and withdraw her bill?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, I asked Chief Billy Morin to be my adviser on my transition team, and all the way through this process he has been giving me feedback. It's part of the reason why asserting the rights of our Indigenous communities is central to the legislation. It's right there in the opening statements of it. We recognize the treaty rights of our First Nations. In fact, we have done so much to support true economic reconciliation. Just look at the Aboriginal Indigenous Opportunities Corporation: a $1.1 billion deal signed by 23 First Nations to take a partnership interest in seven pipelines. That's what real reconciliation looks like. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Notley: Wow. That's not consultation, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday the Indigenous Relations minister actually claimed to the media that he spoke to the chiefs and they want these amendments. But I want the Premier and the minister to listen to Chief Tony Alexis speaking on behalf of Treaty 6. Quote: we are not looking for changes or amendments to this bill; we want it withdrawn; it is beyond concerning that there has been absolutely no consultation or dialogue with First Nations people; it displays a gross lack of transparency that runs against the ideals of respectful relations and reconciliation. To the Premier: why did your minister make a claim that contradicts the chiefs themselves?

Mr. Wilson: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been several chiefs that have approached me to look at amendments, and that's all that I said. But I have just wrapped up calls with Chief Ivan Sawan from Loon River and Chief Allan Adam, and of course they do have concerns around this. I have committed to sit and talk with them about their concerns. This bill contains explicit language surrounding the protection of treaty rights. Let me be clear: this government has no intention in any way of infringing on the rights of First Nation people. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Notley: By passing the bill today, before the Premier speaks with the treaty chiefs, you are infringing on their treaty rights. Chief Darcy Dixon said, quote, it is being said that Bill 1 is just part of a political game . . .

Mr. Schow: Point of order.

Ms Notley: . . . that may be true, but we see in it a disguised attempt to disregard treaty; we reject Alberta's Bill 1 and find that no amendments would be enough to repair it; it must be withdrawn. Can the Premier explain how irreparably damaging Alberta's relationship with Indigenous people is somehow a strategy for job growth? When will she stop denying her failure to respect treaty through this bill?

The Speaker: A point of order is noted at 1:56.

Ms Smith: The Alberta Indigenous Opportunities Corporation supports First Nations with loan guarantees of up to a billion dollars per project, and we've had amazing success stories on it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order. Order.

Ms Smith: This is what reconciliation looks like, and this is what we're committed to. It's part of the reason why we put this bill forward. We know that there are 100 First Nations that have oil and gas development. We know that they want to work with us on getting their product to market. The only way we can make sure that we get our products to market is to make sure that we're asserting our rights under the Constitution. That's what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Chief Tony Alexis and Chief Darcy Dixon stood up today to call on this government to scrap their unconstitutional sovereignty act. Both chiefs confirmed that the UCP government failed to uphold its legal duty to consult with First Nations. Chief Tony Alexis said, quote: we have had no conversations with any minister; only after we did a press conference there was an idea of consultation, but still to this day there is none. To the Premier. This is her flagship piece of legislation. Who's at fault for not fulfilling this government's legal duty to consult, her or her minister?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I have met with multiple Indigenous groups and have heard their concerns regarding this bill, that there was not enough consultation, and that is regrettable. That's why I am committed to continue to engage in consultation with First Nation leaders and strengthen our relationship with them as I met with several Indigenous groups this . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The minister has the right to answer a question just like you have the right to ask one.

The hon. the minister.

Mr. Wilson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are concerns out there, and I am listening to them. They have agreed to sit and talk with me about these. As early as tomorrow we'll be meeting.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Feehan: From the comments of the Alberta First Nations chief it is clear why they chose not to consult. Chief Alexis says, quote: let's be honest; this all comes down to land and resources; we are yet again the inconvenient Indian, standing in the way of unprotected resource extraction and other exploitation of treaty lands. And Chief Dixon says, quote: this is a warning to Canadians; if you care about these lands, if you care about your country, you should care about this bill; it is not a First Nations issue; this impacts us all. To the Premier: why is she forcing her job-killing, chaotic bill through the House when there is clear opposition from Indigenous communities?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I understand their concerns, and I speak with them on a regular basis. We are working towards some sort of resolution. When I talked to Chief Sawan this morning, his concerns were that it might infringe upon how they interact with the federal government around Children's Services. I made it clear to him that that is not the case and that our minister will be reaching out to him to discuss how we can work further, moving forward, for them to take control and look after their children.

Mr. Feehan: Not only will the sovereignty act put First Nations' inherent and treaty rights in jeopardy; it will damage First Nations' ability to attract investment and grow their economy. Chief Alexis said, quote: the act puts a lot of uncertainty in investment; if you have a provincial government fighting with the federal government who is not including our First Nation, it will not be easy to bring investment to this environment; it will hurt the economic fabric of our commerce in all regions. To the Premier. Indigenous leaders are saying that the sovereignty act will hurt Indigenous economic prosperity. Are you really going to stand in this House and call them liars? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Ms Smith: I know that there has been a lot of scaremongering and fearmongering on the other side, and I can understand why it is that people have a misunderstanding of the bill. They bring forward validators . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The Premier.

Ms Smith: I think I would encourage the members opposite to read my mandate letter to the minister of Indigenous affairs and my mandate letter to the Minister of Children's Services. I have been a supporter of Jordan's principle from the moment that it was first declared. We should be lending a hand to our First Nations to partner with them on areas where we have expertise and then work with them on economic reconciliation. I'm looking forward to doing that.

Chief Medical Officer of Health Vaccination Policies

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the Premier a simple question that should have prompted a simple answer. We know the Premier fired Dr. Hinshaw as Alberta's chief medical officer of health. Now, there were two deputies in that office as well. We've heard that both have left their roles. Can the Premier confirm that both deputy chief medical officers of health are no longer in their roles?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I can confirm that both deputy chief medical officers of health have submitted their resignation. They are still continuing to work at this point in time. We are in the process of actually looking to fill those roles and support Dr. Joffe in terms of his role as the chief medical officer of health with all the support that he needs to be able to fulfill his function. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday will come to order.

The Member for Edmonton-City Centre has the call.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, Albertans are concerned about the state of health care in our province. They are concerned about the reports of day-long waits outside the children's hospital, ambulances that may not ever arrive, the sheer lack of information shared by this government about this crisis, and that list goes on and on. The Premier has resorted to having her staff screen the questions she gets at press conferences, so many Albertans are looking to the chief medical officer of health, who is now unsupported, to provide an unbiased, objective update on widespread outbreaks of illnesses that are impacting Alberta families, namely Alberta children. Can the Premier tell us why we haven't heard a public briefing from the interim chief medical officer of health? Is there a gag order, and is it from . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, that simply is not the case. Dr. Joffe, who is an experienced physician, has taken on the role of the chief medical officer of health. He has actually provided advice and updates to Albertans. Initially, when he first came in, a press release was sent out in regard to dealing with the flu. As I mentioned in this House yesterday, he provided a letter to all parents urging, you know, parents to keep their children home, if they're sick, from schools, to be able to make the choice to go get vaccinated, and it's his department that is leading the flu vaccine awareness program.

Mr. Shepherd: A letter, Mr. Speaker.

We are calling for a public briefing directly to Albertans because we're in a crisis, a crisis impacting children, a crisis that I know is terrifying families who are worried they might be left awake countless hours in an emergency room with their sick child. Yesterday the Premier was asked to advocate for vaccines, not mandate them, to simply advocate for people to get their flu shot and get their COVID-19 vaccine. That's pretty standard practice for Premiers and public officials. Will the Premier just simply stand right now – no dodging, no ducking the question – in this House and encourage Albertans to get their flu shot and the COVID-19 vaccine?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government is advocating for the flu vaccine. I don't know if the members opposite received a text message like I did last week urging people to make the choice to get the flu vaccine. We are continuing to make flu vaccines and COVID vaccines available, urging individuals to make the choice to get their vaccines done, as we know that it can help them protect themselves from the various viruses that are circulating right now, and we are continuing to build capacity in our entire health care system to make sure Albertans get the health care where they need it and when they need it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Affordability Plan

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been meeting with many constituents, and consistently I hear that their biggest concern is affordability. They often bring up the fact that they feel uneasy when they go to the grocery store, particularly because of the amount they have to spend for just a few items. We know this challenge is not unique to our province, but my constituents want to know: what is Alberta's government doing to help alleviate some of the pressure being felt from today's inflation and high cost of living?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our affordability action plan and inflation relief act provides up to an estimated $900 or more in broad-based relief to Alberta households. This includes $500 alone in electricity rebates, hundreds in additional potential savings on gas and diesel through fuel tax relief, and continued natural gas price protection. From January to June eligible seniors and families will receive targeted monthly relief payments of $100 for a total of $600 per senior or child. Targeted relief payments will also be made to vulnerable Albertans collecting AISH, PDD, and income support. We will support Albertans through this affordability crisis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Given that inflation has increased the cost of living, making it difficult for many Albertans to meet their basic needs, especially those on fixed incomes, and given that those living with disabilities as well as seniors and unemployed Albertans rely on social benefit programs, can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services please tell the House what an increase in AISH, seniors' benefits, and income support will do to help vulnerable Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for her ongoing advocacy. For those listening, she's been a relentless advocate for the disability community and for seniors in her community. Reindexing AISH is going to have a huge impact, not only for today. With the folks on AISH it will be $100-a-month increase, roughly, in their payments; for income support, roughly $50 a month.

This is going to have an impact for folks today to be able to help so they don't get forced to choose between meals and rent, but it's also going to help ongoing so that we can make sure that the cost of living goes . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. It's not even an opposition question and I can't hear the answer.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. Given that the affordability crisis is hurting thousands of Albertans and their families and the Premier has given direction to increase social benefit programs and also to help strengthen Alberta's food bank network, can the same minister inform the House about the other measures his ministry is taking to respond to these concerns, specifically those of affordability?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since I was placed in this portfolio, I've been able to meet with many organizations that serve our most vulnerable. A big part of what we're doing is working alongside our charities, housing providers, and others to make sure that they're also resourced. We have a major challenge, especially in our social sector, when it comes to workforce, so right now I'm working with the sector to make sure that we're addressing workforce challenges, turnover to make sure that those who care for our most vulnerable are cared for. We also announced recently $20 million in additional funding for the next two years for food banks to make sure that people who are in an immediate crisis of food shortage don't go hungry this Christmas.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Health Care Services in Lethbridge

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, there is a significant shortage of health care capacity in Lethbridge, especially in ICU. Yesterday the Minister of Health tried to reassure us that the situation is fine since diversions have not started and diversions are common; however, people in Lethbridge are worried about where else there is to go. The children's hospital in Calgary is stretched so thin that services at the Rotary Flames House hospice have been closed, and there are dozens of hospital closures across the province. Will the Minister of Health release an action plan today to ensure people in Lethbridge and across southern Alberta can continue to access emergency and acute care?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health has risen.

Mr. Copping: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. Just to clarify in terms of the comments made yesterday, the system is under strain, and that includes the hospital in Lethbridge and a number of hospitals across our entire health care system. We know that a number of the challenges are brought in by what we're experiencing with the flu, RSV, and COVID, which is impacting not only putting pressures in terms of more people coming to the hospital but also staff. Absenteeism rates are higher.

Mr. Speaker, we do have a plan, and we are increasing capacity across our entire health care system. I was very pleased that we actually had added ICU capacity as part of our plan for Budget 2022, 50 additional beds across the entire system, of which a number of beds are also in Lethbridge. We continue to recruit staff in Lethbridge in particular, more doctors and more nurses. We are working on this, and we will ensure that Albertans have the health care that they need when they need it.

Ms Phillips: Given that beds are not staff and given that there were no resources behind that plan and given that when I asked the Deputy Premier to commit to supporting Lethbridge's health care system yesterday, he did not answer and given that Lethbridge's ICU is at capacity, that 40,000 people in the community do not have a family doctor, and that there's only one ob-gyn to support pregnant women, will the Deputy Premier from Lethbridge-East please stand and commit to ensuring that this government's top priority should be fixing health care in Lethbridge and across this province, not the job-killing sovereignty act or waging war on AHS?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, one of our government's top priorities is addressing health care. We are actually doing that. The comments made by the member opposite, that there are no resources being put towards this, are simply incorrect. We've invested $22 billion, the highest amount ever in the province, into health care. By the way, the response to COVID and the response to getting caught up on surgeries is in addition to the $22 billion. We are increasing that by $600 million next year, $600 million the year after that, and dollars have actually gone to Lethbridge as well to be able to improve the capacity there. I'll speak more about what we're doing for doctors . . .

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the UCP would not even debate Bill 201, the Public Health Care Delivery Standards Act, and they refused to debate the children's health crisis twice, all within one week, will the Deputy Premier commit to an emergency debate about the state of health care in Lethbridge today? If not, will he please explain why health care in Lethbridge is not a priority for him? Why hasn't he answered a single question about this since becoming a minister? Why won't he defend Lethbridge?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Lethbridge for the tremendous work that he is doing, working with me to assist in dealing with the problems in health care. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

Mr. Copping: I would also like to thank AHS, the Chinook PCN, community stakeholders, and the members from the city of Lethbridge for working collaboratively with our government to bring more doctors into Lethbridge. I was very pleased to comment yesterday, but I'll comment again today. We have 17 new doctors, family doctors in the queue that should be working in Lethbridge in the coming weeks.

Affordability Plan (continued)

Mr. Nielsen: Albertans are facing an unprecedented affordability crisis. The rising cost in groceries, housing, insurance, utilities, child care, interest rates, education has left most Albertans struggling and living paycheque to paycheque. While the affordability crisis is impacting over 4 million Albertans, this government's affordability plan leaves half of them without a cent. To the Minister of Finance: why did this government abandon so many Albertans during this affordability crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our affordability response has been both broad based and targeted. We're providing relief to every Albertan with the fuel tax suspension program. [interjections]

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I'll say it again because they weren't listening. We're providing relief to every Albertan and every Alberta family through the fuel tax suspension program, electricity rebates, broad as well as targeted support. We're acting.

Mr. Nielsen: Broad and targeted, missing half of Albertans.

Given that car insurance has shot up 30 per cent or more for some Albertans and given that Albertans rely on their vehicles to go to and from work, pick up their kids from school, and go to the grocery store, where they're also getting hosed, and given that insurance lobbyists have been key campaign staff for the UCP for as long as I can remember, will the minister admit that he won't give Albertans a break on car insurance because it would cut into the profits made by his wealthy political buddies?

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to remind this House of two case studies. When the NDP were in office, they brought in a blunt rate cap to deal with insurance. In 2018, after they brought in the rate cap, insurance premiums went up by 5 per cent. We brought in Bill 41 to deal with the systemic issues that are driving up premiums. In the last 24 months . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: No, no, no. It's only the minister with the call.

Mr. Toews: Mr. Speaker, in the last 12 months – pardon me – insurance rates have gone up 2.4 per cent at a time when inflation is over 6. You tell me which plan was beneficial.

Mr. Nielsen: Insurance skyrocketed under your watch.

Given that the Condominium Owners Forum Society of Alberta has urged government to open up the regulations so that hundreds of thousands of condo owners that are not eligible for the rebates might see some support, given that for months our caucus raised concerns about this situation, which, described by condo owner Phil Rosenzweig, has created two classes of condo owners, leaving, quote, many shocked and disappointed, end quote, will the minister correct this failure from his predecessor so condo owners can finally get some support?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Albertans across our province are struggling with high electricity prices, and we are going to make every effort to ensure that all Albertans, including those in submetered units, can participate in electricity rebates. To the member opposite's earlier points: they're incorrect. The vast majority – in fact, some measures are for all Albertans, with additional targeted measures to those with higher need, but all Albertans will benefit from our affordability relief package.

Thank you.

Alberta in Canada

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, time and time again Ottawa flaunts its provincial biases. Even now as Alberta fights back against the federal government's imperious and unbalanced laws harder than ever, Ottawa still mocks us. The recent news surrounding Quebec's special deal regarding carbon tax rates means they pay less than any other province, and that's blatant favouritism. I ask the government to help tell the House why Quebec only pays nine cents per litre of carbon tax on gas while Albertans have to pay 14 cents for carbon tax, a 55 per cent premium, and that's on top of the $19 billion a year in unequalization payments.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal carbon tax is unfairly applied across the country and during a time of inflation is applied unfairly to every Albertan and every Canadian. That's why while we're providing tax relief in this province to Albertans, we're calling on the feds to suspend, better yet eliminate, the carbon tax for Albertans and all Canadians.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, given the preferential treatment of Quebec coming out of Ottawa and considering the seriously disproportionate carbon taxes Albertans and their businesses pay due to the nature of our economy and given the federal government's resistance in making any reasonable concessions to our province whatsoever, I ask the government to tell the House: what will their response be to Ottawa in relation to this prejudicial special exemption made for Quebec?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The federal government's preferential treatment of Quebec is a source of continued frustration for Albertans. We've seen billions of dollars of investment chased from our province because of the federal government's policies, only for the same government to turn around and give handout after handout to Quebec. Albertans have made it clear, their frustration to the federal government, and it's time that Alberta stood up to end this unfair arrangement.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, given the fact that this unfair treatment is nothing new – it's a century old, actually – and given the fact that this bias coming out of Ottawa continues to get more and more obvious and given this government's commitment to ensuring a fair deal for Alberta despite the stubborn resistance of the Laurentian elite, I ask the government to tell the House: what are we doing here in Alberta to fight back against unbalanced laws that favour other provinces at our expense?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we're not going to do is ask another person from Ottawa what we should be thinking here in Alberta, like the NDP keeps on doing. Last week our government introduced Bill 1 as a way to ensure that unconstitutional federal overreach has an additional tool to be addressed while we're here in Alberta, and we're not going to allow the bureaucrats in Ottawa to continue to interfere in our affairs. It's none of their business. Bill 1 means more support for our industries and less pursuit of wide-eyed, nonsensical policies from the federal government in Ottawa.

2:20 Alberta Sovereignty Act and Agriculture

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, agriculture regulations are strongly intertwined at both the federal and provincial level, from food safety, international trade, export markets, interprovincial markets, and the labour force. All are dependent on a stable economy and a stable democracy. In fact, we have seen when relationships are damaged how markets can quickly be closed to our ag exports. Before the minister of agriculture stands and gives us some nonsense rhetoric, can he inform the House if he assessed the potential economic impacts to agricultural trade that may occur when his boss inevitably rams through the job-killing sovereignty act?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Agriculture and Irrigation.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would normally thank the member for the question, but that was, frankly, just a terrible question. The arm's-length agencies that the agriculture department uses federally: CFIA, PMRA, and Health. Look at what we've had to deal with just over the last year: front-of-package labelling on our ground beef products, the banning of common products needed to control insects, to control fungicide in our row cropping. [interjection] What do you want?

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister clearly did not do an economic assessment and given that Albertans pride themselves on the reputation of our world-class agriculture and given that the job-killing sovereignty act has caused nothing but reputational harm and given that we're seeing national headlines now claiming that the law is undemocratic, incompetent, and was written in crayon, can the minister explain to this House why he wants to sacrifice the reputation of our agriculture sector to play along with his leader's political games?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, come on. Through you to her: come on. There's only one order of government that is jeopardizing this province's agricultural reputation. We punch above our weight. We produce more than we can consume. We are a proud exporter. Countries and companies come to Alberta saying: how can I get more not just of your commodities, of your people, of your technology, of your best management practices? That's what we will continue to support through research, through programming, through the business risk management suite. We're here for the province.

Ms Sweet: Well, given that, again, most of that funding comes from the federal government and given that no one in the government cabinet can get it straight on what the job-killing sovereignty act actually does and given that the political climate shift in the past has led to the closure of critical export markets in China and India, can the minister inform this House if he has talked to our international offices and apologized to them for this disastrous mess that they're causing with our international partners?

Mr. Horner: The only apology needed is from the opposition to Alberta's agriculture producers to sit in the House and pretend to care. The making-food-unaffordable carbon tax that's going to $170, that they continue to support: phone the mother ship, phone Jagmeet Singh, say that we've had a change of heart. All we know is that Alberta is punching above its weight. We'll continue to. We're creating jobs. We're bringing investment. We're leading the country. We're leading the world.

Social Supports Funding and Provincial Grants

Ms Goehring: Albertans are struggling right now with a cost-of-living crisis that is making it harder for families to put food on the table, keep the lights on, and heat their homes. I want to firstly thank the volunteers and staff of Alberta's nonprofits, who every day go above and beyond to serve the less fortunate. The very last thing that these organizations need, though, Mr. Speaker, is the uncertainty and chaos caused by this government's job-killing sovereignty act. Can the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services commit today that not a single cent of funding support that Alberta's nonprofits rely on will be jeopardized by his support of the sovereignty act?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for that question. I'm so thankful for Alberta's not-for-profits and the incredible work that they do in our community. They're key as well, not just the employees but the people who volunteer, the people that donate and are involved with that. They're so critical to our communities. This government will continue to work with and support, partner with our not-for-profits to make sure that they have the resources and the tools to do the amazing work, the critical work that they do in our community.

Ms Goehring: Given that we know that many nonprofits rely on funding from the other levels of government, funds, I might add, that often off-set the horrifying cuts imposed by the UCP government, and given that we know that the city of Calgary is concerned with the prospect of what the job-killing sovereignty act could mean for its affordable housing strategy, will the minister commit to backfilling any lost funding and investment that the sovereignty act could drive from Alberta's nonprofits, or does he wash his hands of any responsibility for the consequences of his actions?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to say that that's not what this bill is about. This bill does not put at risk the federal funding. This bill is about protecting Albertans, defending Albertans, and making sure that the federal government does stay in its lane. In regard to the federal funding, because I've heard a few comments over the past couple of weeks about us not taking full advantage of the federal funding, I'm happy to set the record straight: we are using every single federal dollar available to us as we speak, and we will continue to work with our federal partners as well as provinces across this country to make sure that our federal strategy matches our provincial . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Given that we know that the Premier has directed her ministers to call organizations to threaten their funding when they do things that the Premier doesn't agree with, including protecting their workers, and given that the list of activities that this Premier disagrees with runs large and she's made it clear that she's got no qualms threatening to withhold grant funding as a punishment, a threat that is only intensified with the undemocratic power she's trying to give herself with the sovereignty act, will the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services join me in condemning the Premier's threats to withhold funding for the nonprofits that she doesn't agree with?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me get the record straight here. Not only do we defend Alberta's interests, but we also collaborate with additional resources the federal government can provide for us. I went to the national conference for territorial, provincial, and federal ministers. Let me tell you this. I give them credit that we had a very candid dialogue. Not only do they support local priorities; they also have additional resources coming to us. I'm looking forward to having more resources coming to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Deerfoot Trail

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A lot of time has passed since the expansion of Deerfoot Trail has been needed. I know that many constituents of Calgary-Hays are tired of a long commute on a road that should be four lanes but in some places gets choked down to two lanes. This causes unneeded backups and delays. To the minister of transportation: when will we be seeing smoke and dust fly on this project, which means when will construction begin?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to say that this spring construction will happen; we'll see dust flying on Deerfoot. I know there's lots of discussion in this Chamber about staying in your lanes constitutionally, but on the Deerfoot in Calgary we're going to be adding new lanes, both sides going north and south, and there'll be seven new bridges, there'll be seven new kilometres of lanes in Calgary. That's just this government helping Calgarians improve their lives just a little bit by being able to get home 15 per cent faster, going home at night, and then 22 per cent faster . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: That was a good answer, Minister. Now, given that the conditions on Deerfoot Trail that I've been hearing the very most about are on the section between Anderson Road and Glenmore Trail and given that these concerns not only include the backups and delays but the real safety hazards, especially during the winter, to the minister: what can be done right now to improve the safety on this particular section of Deerfoot that I think we all agree needs help?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. I'm happy to say that 180,000 vehicles pass through this area every day, and that's something that we provide about $9 million in winter maintenance for, that's been allocated to the Deerfoot. Carmax, the maintenance contractor for the Deerfoot, works hard all winter to ensure that snow and ice are plowed and that the Deerfoot is safe for winter driving for Calgarians and all Albertans that drive on the Deerfoot.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that the minister has just confirmed that this project is going to go ahead and given that this expansion will benefit hundreds of thousands of Calgarians and visitors to Calgary every single day, to the minister – this is the question people want to know despite your previous answer and on top of that – when will construction be complete to the point where Albertans will be able to enjoy the newly repaired and expanded Deerfoot Trail?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to say that, within a year, from 64th Avenue to McKnight will be completed, and Calgarians will get the benefits of this expansion.

Let's just contrast that, Mr. Speaker, with how the NDP views provincial construction projects. They want to bring in restrictive contract arrangements just to start a labour war in Alberta, just to appease their big union bosses. We've seen what that has done in B.C. with the NDP. That adds about 20 to 30 per cent higher construction costs, longer construction delays, and fewer bidders on projects in the province. That's something we'll never see here in Alberta with this government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

2:30 Postsecondary Tuition

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The students' union at the University of Calgary recently forced administration to delay voting on a fourth consecutive tuition fee increase. The university had failed to consult with students or even make them aware of the coming tuition and fee increases. Once student leaders were finally made aware of the tuition proposal, one of the administrators said that the university is not obligated to consult students. This minister must set and enforce standards for tuition consultation. Has the minister spoken to the U of C to compel them to consult and come clean on what is driving these unaffordable increases?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, tuition increases are a matter that is within the purview of the board of governors for them to consider. Of course, it is the expectation of government, but apart from just an expectation it's actually enshrined in regulation that the university has an obligation to consult with students. I met, just as recently as this morning, with the students' union from the University of Calgary to get a better understanding of what more robust consultation can look like, but we leave that with the university.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that according to the Alberta tuition and fees regulation, postsecondary institutions are required to provide a four-year tuition outlook and specific information on where their student fees go, especially when this government has been jacking those fees up so much, and given that it wasn't until the students' union went to the media that the university hastily provided some information – it was your unprecedented cuts that forced these record increases. How can students be expected to keep up with the impact of ever-increasing costs to their ability to get an education here in the province of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There continues to remain a cap on the maximum allowable tuition increases. That cap, of course, exists in legislation. In addition, as I mentioned a moment ago, all universities and colleges have an obligation, which is enshrined in regulation, to consult with student associations and student bodies. I'm happy to continue to consult and work with student leaders to see if there's more that we can do from a government standpoint to make those requirements around student consultation a little bit more robust and clear. It's important that students are involved in that decision.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that tuition hikes are, sadly, a constant under this UCP government and this minister and given that they come as a direct result of generational cuts to postsecondary funding by this UCP government and given as well that this minister has failed to stand up for students and affordable postsecondary education during his entire tenure in office, can the minister now tell the House what it will take for him to do his job and build a coherent plan and stop jacking up fees for Alberta's students?

Mr. Nicolaides: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a coherent plan. We've developed, for the first time in over a decade, a 10-year strategic plan for postsecondary education, something that never existed when the members opposite were in government. I'm happy, as I mentioned, to consult regularly with our student leaders, as I did as recently as this morning and yesterday as well, to find out what more there is that government can do to help and support students. I call on the members opposite, though, to help take action by calling on the federal government, calling on the mother ship, to repeal the carbon tax and make life more affordable for students.

Child and Youth Advocate Recommendations

Ms Pancholi: The Child and Youth Advocate has reported that since April, 56 children and youth who received child intervention services within the last two years have died. Fifty-six. This year is on track to be much worse than even last year, which was horrific. In this same period the UCP has had three different Children's Services ministers, but despite years of alarms being raised by front-line workers, the Child and Youth Advocate, and the opposition, outcomes for children and youth in Alberta are getting worse. Will the Minister of Children's Services commit to implement all 11 outstanding recommendations from the Child and Youth Advocate and finally take some action on this crisis?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The death of any young person is a terrible tragedy, and our hearts go out to any of the families grieving these losses. I am proud of the work that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate is doing, and I am certainly committed to implementing all of the recommendations in those reports. We are pleased to report that the vast majority of those recommendations have been implemented, and many more are simply awaiting confirmation.

Ms Pancholi: Eleven recommendations remain outstanding.

Given that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate saw a 62 per cent increase last year in the number of deaths that triggered a mandatory review and now needs a budget increase to manage all these additional reviews and given that the ministry's own report on deaths of young people in care from this spring notes that opioid deaths are disproportionately higher for young people in care and given that the advocate has repeatedly called for a specific and co-ordinated youth opioid strategy, not one-off announcements, will the minister commit to developing and putting into action a fulsome youth opioid strategy immediately? It is long overdue.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Mental Health and Addiction.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. We have heard from many professionals that, of course, improving mental health wellness is a top priority for our government. With regard to the opioid crisis and the addictions crisis that we are facing, our jurisdiction is no different than the other jurisdictions across Canada. We are working with professionals in order to build out a recovery-oriented system of care and focusing on ensuring that all kids, all individuals who are looking for the supports they need can get them.

Ms Pancholi: So that's a no. No youth opioid strategy coming from this government.

Given that the Premier's mandate letter to the Minister of Children's Services makes no mention of added resources for kinship care, which keeps children and youth connected to their culture and their family, and given that the UCP repeatedly refuses the advocate's recommendations for government ministries to report publicly on their work to support youth and children in care and given that this government is failing to act not only on this child intervention crisis but the youth opioid crisis and now the crisis in children's health care, how can this minister or any member of this government expect Albertans to believe that they are actually committed to protecting the children of this province?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Children's Services.

Mr. Amery: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that the hon. member heard any of the responses from this side of the House when we gave those answers earlier. We are absolutely committed to not only the safety but the well-being of children in this province. As long as I am Minister of Children's Services, I will make that my absolute number one priority, no mandate bullet point needed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Children's Medication Supply and Health Care

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Across my riding for well over a month now, parents have been trying to deal with the growing shortages of children's medications like Tylenol and Advil. Late last month over 1 million doses of medicine arrived for all of Canada, with only an offer of 500 expected within the coming weeks. In light of that, to the Minister of Health: can you confirm that you have secured five times what Ottawa could find and that 5 million doses are on the way to help Albertan parents access these critical medications?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I'm happy to confirm that we are securing 5 million doses of acetaminophen and ibuprofen from Atabay pharmaceuticals. Currently we're in the midst of Health Canada's expedited approval process to allow Atabay to send us the 10 shipments of the children's medication. This process is expected to take two to four weeks, and I'm thankful to Health Canada and the federal government for expediting it. Once Health Canada gives their final approvals, the shipments will be on the move and soon be filling Alberta pharmacy shelves. The same distributor which distributed the vaccines will also be distributing the medications.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Beddington.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister. Given that parents are desperate for the medications but want insurance that the quality of this medicine is entirely safe and given that you found the source from abroad, again to the same minister: can you assure parents that the medication is as good as any generic medication they would give to their sick children?

Mr. Copping: Thanks again to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'm happy to reassure the member, this House, and all Alberta parents that the medication that we are securing is held to the same high standards as all medication in Canada. What we're doing with these 5 million bottles of children's medication is answering a need for Albertans, and we made sure that we had both the quantity and the quality for those shipments of medication. Atabay already exports raw materials for their pharmaceutical products to Canada, and they also export retail products to other countries around the world. Right now supplies of acetaminophen and ibuprofen are running low, but very soon the shelves will be stocked.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that in April of this year Canada's Prime Minister called for the Prime Minister to provide predictable and sustainable federal health care funding, and as with the children's Tylenol – given the Prime Minister did very little in responding to this cause, again to the same minister: what is the government of Alberta doing to provide predictable and sustainable funding to our health care system?

Mr. Copping: Thanks once again to the hon. member for the question, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to providing sustainable system funding for health care. As talked about many times in this House, we have done that by increasing funding to the highest levels we've ever seen, with commitment to increase more. We're working with my colleagues in other provinces and territories, who are doing the same thing, responding to the challenges that are being faced, quite frankly, across the country and asking the federal government to step up to do their share to be able to provide funding to assist our ability and all provinces to deliver the health care that Canadians deserve.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that concludes the time allotted for Oral Question Period, and in 30 seconds or less we will continue to the remainder of the daily Routine. But before you go, I'm sure you'll join me in wishing a very happy birthday to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the call.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and present a petition with a total of 1,068 signatures. The signatories petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to declare a state of public health emergency in response to the ongoing opioid crisis and to seek possible solutions through increased Alberta Health and social programs assistance along with a public awareness campaign.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice that at the appropriate time under Standing Order 42 I intend to move the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge the current lack of access to health care in Lethbridge, including the local intensive care unit at Chinook regional hospital being near capacity, potentially resulting in some new patients being diverted to other communities that are facing similar capacity challenges, the chronic shortage of family doctors accepting new patients, resulting in an estimated 40,000 people who do not have access to primary care and are reliant on emergency care, and reduced access to obstetric and birthing care due to only having one full-time obstetrician and gynecologist working in the community; express its concern about the negative impact on residents in Lethbridge resulting from the severe lack of access to health care; and urge the government to make public as soon as possible a plan to increase access to health care in Lethbridge.

Mr. Speaker, I have the requisite copies here.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Our province's economy has recovered strongly, yet Albertans are struggling under record inflation and high cost of living to make ends meet. Families are eating less and less nutritious food and wondering if they can keep their children in activities. Seniors and vulnerable Albertans, generally on low and often fixed incomes, are being forced to make increasingly difficult budget decisions. Inflation is causing Albertans hardship across the board. They feel it in their groceries, gas, utilities, and more. We are experiencing an affordability crisis.

Providing relief from runaway inflation is a top priority not just for this government but for all Albertans. That's why we are providing the largest relief package in Canada, enabled through this legislation and supporting regulations. If passed, this bill will enable us to deliver both broad-based cost-of-living supports and targeted relief for families, seniors, and our most vulnerable when and where they need it. This legislation will also provide utility relief, protection, and stability this winter. It will index the Alberta child and family benefit and personal income taxes and suspend the full provincial fuel tax from January to June next year. In short, this bill provides real relief. It is my honour as the Minister of Affordability and Utilities to deliver critical broad-based inflation relief to all Albertans and additional targeted supports for families, seniors, and our most vulnerable.

Mr. Speaker, I hereby move first reading of the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022.

The Speaker: I will refer the hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities to the Minister of Justice's introduction of a bill yesterday for future introductions.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Are there tablings? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of survey results that I referred to in my question yesterday in question period, the Alberta classroom pulse research, which shows that 85 per cent of teachers have seen a dramatic increase in the complexity and diversity of student needs in their classrooms this year, among other things. I think it's interesting, and I encourage all members to read it.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with section 19(5) of the Auditor General Act as chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I am pleased to table the report of the Auditor General of Alberta, November 2022. Just for everybody's note, electronic copies of this report will be provided to all members.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the five requisite copies of a paper referenced in debate yesterday called Running Afoul the Separation, Division, and Delegation of Powers: The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, written by Martin Olszynski and Nigel Bankes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Red Tape Reduction.

Mr. Nally: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the 2021 report An Act to End Predatory Lending. This report provides information on the status of the payday loan industry in Alberta. I have the requisite five copies.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of hon. Mr. Copping, Minister of Health, pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act Alberta Health Services 2021-22 annual report; pursuant to the Health Professions Act College of Alberta Psychologists 2021-22 annual report, College of Acupuncturists of Alberta annual report 2021-22, College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta 2021 annual report, College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta 2021 annual report, Physiotherapy Alberta College + Association 2021 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are at points of order. At 1:56 the hon. the Government House Leader rose on a point of order.

Point of Order Questions about Legislation

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do rise about a point of order today that was called against the Leader of the Opposition while she was asking a question to the hon. Premier. At the time, mentioned by you, Mr. Speaker, it says “By passing the bill today, before the Premier speaks with the treaty chiefs, you are infringing on their treaty rights.”

Mr. Speaker, it is contempt of House of Commons Procedure and Practice to presuppose the outcome of a bill. I’m not sure why the member opposite would do such a thing. This is not her first kick at the can nor her first rodeo. I would ask that going forward, the member opposite, the Leader of the Opposition, refrain from presupposing the outcome of bills in this Chamber and allow us as Members of the Legislative Assembly to do our job, robustly debate these bills, and vote on them according to the will of our constituents and what’s best for Alberta.

2:50

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader is not sure why the Leader of the Official Opposition may make such a statement when on Monday they introduced a closure motion, a time allocation motion, and they used it on Tuesday. On Tuesday they introduced two more time allocation motions. They’re probably going to use those today. That is the thinking. That is the pattern we’ve seen from this government.

That being said, conversations about this topic, which at the time of this point of order we were debating the sovereignty act putting First Nation inherent and treaty rights in jeopardy as well as damaging First Nations’ ability to attract investment – I believe tempers were hot. Certainly, we would not want to presuppose the actions of this government. That being said, I think we can all guess what’s about to happen. We certainly would be happy to withdraw the comment if the Speaker would like us to do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else that would like to provide any additional comments with respect to the point of order before the Assembly?

I am prepared to rule. I’m curious to know from the Government House Leader’s perspective what is the citation which he speaks to. Of course, there are parliamentary requirements with respect to privilege in terms of showing documents that are the Assembly’s or advertising outside of the Assembly that would presuppose a decision inside the Assembly. I’m not sure that a member can’t opine upon what the Assembly may or may not do.

Of course, it would be inappropriate of the Speaker to presuppose a decision of the Assembly or the government to, and I know that this has happened on numerous occasions. I’m sure members of the opposition will be aware and some members who’ve been around long enough will also be aware of times in which the government has done that externally and exposed dollars based upon a decision that may come of the Assembly.

I’m not convinced that there’s a point of order. Perhaps I’m happy to be educated. The Speaker is not infallible as well. With respect to this I don’t believe it’s a point of order. If there’s a requirement for a clarifying statement tomorrow, I will be happy to provide one. This is not a point of order, and I consider the matter dealt with and concluded.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: At the appropriate time the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West rose on Standing Order 42. She has up to five minutes to convince the Assembly of its merits.

Health Care Services in Lethbridge

Ms Phillips:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly acknowledge the current lack of access to health care in Lethbridge, including the local intensive care unit at Chinook regional hospital being near capacity, potentially resulting in some new patients being diverted to other communities that are facing similar capacity challenges, the chronic shortage of family doctors accepting new patients, resulting in an estimated 40,000 people who do not have access to primary care and are reliant on emergency care, and reduced access to obstetric and birthing care due to only having one full-time obstetrician and gynecologist working in the community; express its concern about the negative impact on residents in Lethbridge resulting from the severe lack of access to health care; and urge the government to make public as soon as possible as plan to increase access to health care in Lethbridge.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise pursuant to Standing Order 42 to request that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to debate a motion that is urgent and pressing and which I read out under Notices of Motions. I would like to acknowledge that pursuant to SO 42 I’ve provided the members of this Assembly with the appropriate number of copies.

Mr. Speaker, the reason why this is a pressing and urgent matter is that as the representative for Lethbridge-West I am urging all members of this Assembly to show the people of Lethbridge and of southern Alberta more broadly that addressing the health challenges there is a key priority for all of us here.

I will note that Team Lethbridge comes to Edmonton every year. They all dutifully file onto buses every year, a wide group of business leaders, entrepreneurs, leaders in community and social services agencies, school boards, local government representatives, arts organizations, tourism organizations, the Sport Council, you name it. They come here to ensure that Lethbridge is heard because, in their experience and, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, in mine, too, if we do not advocate for southern Alberta and for Lethbridge, we will get ignored.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, when we hear of such a pressing and urgent limitation at the Chinook regional hospital, we must grapple with it here in this Chamber. Lethbridge is facing multiple and overlapping challenges in health care which have now culminated in capacity constraints at the Chinook regional hospital. This affects more than just the 100,000 of Lethbridge but, rather, all of the communities in southern Alberta that rely on Chinook regional. I would argue, too, that it affects the people of Medicine Hat and more broadly because those communities are anchors for access to acute care, emergency services, primary care, and so much more specialist care throughout the region.

Yesterday we heard new information, Mr. Speaker, about how stretched the intensive care unit is. The Chinook regional hospital was over 100 per cent capacity over the weekend. It was at the point that if any more people came in, patients would have to start being diverted to other communities. This is due to a number of factors, not the least of which is staffing shortages that come as a culmination of a three-year UCP war on front-line health care workers during a pandemic. It is deeply concerning since communities across the province are also having capacity issues, so if we have capacity issues, there is nowhere else to go. Our health care system is at the point where the Rotary Flames House, a children’s hospice, is needing to pause services to move more staff to Alberta Children’s hospital in Calgary. Children in Lethbridge and surrounding areas also rely on those services and that hospital.

The situation is dire, and the people of Lethbridge and all across the province deserve to hear directly from us today on what is being done, a specific resourcing and staff recruitment and retention plan. Beds are not people, Mr. Speaker, and intensive care and all of those sorts of services require staffing. There are no robots for this work.

Lethbridge also has an extreme lack of access to pregnancy and birthing care. In October I stood with the Leader of the Official Opposition and a local health care provider, Vicki Todd, highlighting how concerning this is. Families need to have certainty that they can have a baby in their own community. Doctors specializing in maternity are also fundamentally important for high-risk births. Lethbridge only has one full-time obstetrician gynecologist right now, and aside from pregnancy and childbirth women do not have access to a range of women's health and reproductive health care services. It is not just women of birthing age; older and elderly women and menopausal women need access to ob-gyns quite often, and they do not have that access in southern Alberta. The UCP needs to highlight the importance of this and display that they are taking it seriously. Hundreds of thousands of people rely on it.

Finally, there has got to be some sort of action on access to primary care. We are still without appropriate access to walk-in clinics. We still don't have family doctors that can send lab results anywhere; rather, patients that can have lab results sent to a family doctor. Without adequate access to primary care people are more reliant on the emergency room, but we have already talked about that.

We need this debate, Mr. Speaker. We need a plan. Thank you.

The Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 42 a member of Executive Council does have up to five minutes to respond to the matter of urgent and pressing necessity of the motion.

I would just like to provide a very brief comment before calling upon what appears to be the Minister of Health that over the recent days we have heard during discussions of Standing Order 42 that this is a request for an emergency debate. I want to be clear that Standing Order 42 is not a request for an emergency debate; it is a motion, available to members under the standing orders, Standing Order 42, of urgent and pressing manner, which is different than a Standing Order 30, which, of course, is an emergency debate. I think it's important that we provide some clarity around those things and encourage members to speak directly to the appropriate motion.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, or the Minister of Finance, has up to five minutes to respond to the urgent and pressing matter.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the elevation to the position of Minister of Finance. That's greatly appreciated.

The Speaker: No. No.

Mr. Copping: Yes. That's not a problem.

I want to thank the hon. member for raising the issues of the challenges that our health care system is facing, particularly in Lethbridge, and I want to thank – I see some members in the gallery from Team Lethbridge are here, and I want to thank them for the work that they're doing in representing the city of Lethbridge. As well, I just take the opportunity to thank my colleague for the work that he is doing as well in representing Lethbridge. I understand that the Member for Lethbridge-West suggested that government isn't listening to Lethbridge and that they, you know, have to come here and there's a need, an urgent need, for this particular debate.

I can tell you that we are indeed listening, not only through my colleague and the representations that he is making to me, but quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I was able to go to Lethbridge earlier this year, held a workshop. We had many of the members – the Lethbridge mayor, Lethbridge city councillors; we had doctors; we had AHS employees – to talk about, you know, the challenges facing our health care system: what's working, what's not working, and things we can do to improve, to make it better.

3:00

Mr. Speaker, I can say that we are listening. One of the biggest items highlighted by the doctors in Lethbridge was looking at, you know: how do we make it easier for changing the system of pay so that doctors and family physicians could see more patients? We heard that feedback, and we acted on it. Actually, that action showed up in the AMA agreement we reached, that was ratified in September by over 70 per cent, and we have implemented that already in terms of being able to improve access to family physicians.

We appreciate that this has been a challenge in Lethbridge in terms of access to family physicians, and we have taken action. As I indicated in this House earlier, Mr. Speaker, there are 17 family physicians who have accepted positions in Lethbridge. A number of them are going through the various certification processes with the CPSA. Some of them have already started practising, and more are on the way.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in this House during question period, we are taking action and investing in expanding capacity across our entire system, including in Lethbridge. We have added 50 additional ICU beds across the entire province, and a number of those beds we put in Lethbridge, and we put the money behind that to staff those up. In addition, we are adding resources to be able to hire more. We are hiring more across the entire AHS system, including in Lethbridge, and there are ongoing searches for staff where they are short right now. I can tell you, you know, that I'm very pleased that AHS, the chamber and city council of Lethbridge are all working together to attract and retain not only doctors but other health care professionals, and we are actually having progress in that regard.

We're going to continue to do more because we know that there is a shortage of health care professionals. We're not only seeing it in Alberta, but this is what we're seeing across the entire country. That is why, Mr. Speaker, you know, our government has invested in expanding seats in postsecondary education across the entire province, to get more nurses, to get more allied health professionals because we know we need them. We have hired them. Quite frankly, we have more nurses, more doctors than ever before working in this province, and we are going to continue to focus on recruitment, training, attraction, and retention to be able to get the people where they need it.

Now, the hon. member across the way spoke of the challenge that we have in our health care system, and these are challenges being faced, again, right across the country. Part of that challenge is in regard to absenteeism because RSV, flu, and COVID are circulating, and that impacts our health care staff as well. We haven't had to transfer out any patients from Lethbridge, but that's the beauty of our system, that when we need to do that, we can do that, and we have done that on occasion in the past. Now, we're looking to build capacity so we don't need to do that in the future. I am hopeful, when we look at the overall rates of flu and COVID circulating in the province – and it looks like we've peaked on flu initially. That will be coming down.

We are continuing to add capacity, and for that reason, Mr. Speaker, you know, we have a plan, we're acting on our plan, and we don't need a special debate on this matter.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: Ordres du jour.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 5

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Shandro: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't prepared for first reading of this. I can advise that I'm now more prepared for moving second reading. I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2).

Mr. Speaker, Albertans look to government to improve their day-to-day lives. They look to government to reduce red tape. They also look to us to increase access to the justice system and to feel safe and secure when they visit the Legislature Grounds. This omnibus bill will do all of the above and more. It will reduce red tape, it will increase access to the justice system, and it will allow legislative security to carry firearms.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which proposes to change a number of laws. Specifically, there would be changes to the Legislative Assembly Act, to the Provincial Court Act, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, the Referendum Act, the Sale of Goods Act, and the Trustee Act.

I'll begin by addressing the amendments to the Legislative Assembly Act. Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, following the tragic 2014 shooting on Parliament Hill and the high-profile event that occurred here at the Legislature Grounds in 2019, the Sergeant-at-Arms and your office initiated a security review. Since that review, we've also seen other incidents throughout the world, like the attacks on Congress on January 6, 2021, and now the review has concluded that the Legislative Assembly security service should be allowed to carry firearms in the Legislature Building and surrounding precinct as a preventative measure. With more and more Albertans enjoying the Legislature and its grounds, we're taking these steps to make sure that they can continue to enjoy it in a safe and peaceful setting. The Legislative Assembly security service protects our democracy, and they do that by ensuring the security of the Legislature, the safety and security of those who are in this Chamber and come to visit the precinct.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Changes to the Legislative Assembly Act would allow Legislative Assembly security to be treated as peace officers under the Criminal Code. This means they would have the authority to carry firearms. The security personnel would receive the necessary training to equip them with firearms and secure the Legislature Building and grounds of the legislative precinct if ever needed. Providing these officers with the tools that they need, including firearms, to protect all of those in this building – staff, visitors, and themselves and their fellow officers, Madam Speaker – is a top priority for our government. This change will bring Alberta as well in line with many other jurisdictions.

It's also been pointed out to me, Madam Speaker, that we have an obligation as employers to ensure the health, the safety, and the welfare of employees and to provide them with the right tools and the personal protective equipment to ensure their safety and to ensure the safety of other employees here within the precinct.

I think it's also worth noting that all of our LAS officers currently are former members of the Edmonton Police Service, and many if not most have specialized training, and many have served on the tac team of EPS. As I said before, Madam Speaker, these are folks who come to work every day to protect democracy.

Next I'll address the proposed changes to the Provincial Court Act. Madam Speaker, these changes would lay the groundwork to expand the civil claims that can be filed through the Provincial Court, which we have now renamed the Alberta court of justice. Currently this limit for what many call the small claims court but what is called officially the civil claims division of the Alberta court of justice is $50,000. There is concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of King's Bench as opposed to other jurisdictions like Quebec, who have distinctions in the jurisdiction between those two courts. We have concurrent jurisdiction, and people have a choice here in Alberta whether they want to take their claim to have final resolution in the Alberta court of justice or in the Court of King's Bench.

Now, the amendments that are proposed here in Bill 5 will permit government to adjust the limit, an ability that they've always had, by regulation up to a maximum of $200,000. This would give more Albertans the option to resolve their civil legal disputes by filing a claim in the Alberta court of justice. This court for Albertans is easier to navigate, which means that more Albertans could represent themselves, which saves legal costs. Madam Speaker, at the same time it would free up the time and the resources in the Court of King's Bench to focus on more complex matters. Ultimately, this makes the justice system more accessible to all.

We're also proposing changes to the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act to make it easier for Albertans to collect child and spousal support payments. Specifically, this is earmarked for families living in different parts of the country from their former partners and former spouses. All we're doing is allowing in legislation the electronic transfer of certified family support documents between reciprocating Canadian jurisdictions. British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia all already have completed comparable legislative amendments in support of a transition like what's being proposed in this bill. The remaining provinces are working towards completing their own changes, and this amendment will greatly reduce the time needed to collect, to exchange, and to process information and to improve family support enforcement here in Alberta for those who are often going to be the most vulnerable.

The next piece of legislation we're adjusting is the Referendum Act, Madam Speaker. Amendments to this act will strengthen democracy by ensuring that Albertans have a direct say on important matters. We're simply making it clear that only constitutional questions require a resolution be made in the Legislature.

Next we'll amend the Sale of Goods Act. Changes to the Sale of Goods Act will eliminate unnecessary record-keeping requirements for buyers when grain is sold and delivered at a grain elevator. They would also make the language in Alberta's Sale of Goods Act the same as the federal legislation, which is the Canada Grain Act, just to help avoid any confusion.

Then, last, being the proposed amendment to the Trustee Act. This change would make it clear that a trust would not fail if there is temporarily no trustee. The proposed change would remove the transfer of trust property to the court, allowing the trust property to move directly to the new trustee once appointed.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, all of these changes will improve the experience of Albertans when dealing with the legal or court processes or if they're visiting or working in the Legislature. With that, I move second reading of Bill 5.

The Deputy Speaker: Other members wishing to join the debate on Bill 5 in second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in second reading of Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). I appreciate that some of the changes that have been made in this act are intended to expand access to justice for Albertans, which, of course, is something that I think we're all committed to. I appreciate many of the changes. I mean, we have some questions as well, but I think overall there are some changes here that we can certainly be supportive of. For the sake of those Albertans who may be watching this scintillating debate on Bill 5, I would like to go over a little bit of what the bill contains and the various pieces of legislation that they amend.

I thank the Minister of Justice for reading his bill and for understanding it and speaking to it today in the Legislature. He's not batting a hundred on that in the House so far this session, but certainly on this one it appears he is familiar with the content of the bill, so that's fantastic. I will review some of the provisions and the various enactments that are amended by this legislation just to summarize sort of why they may be important.

The first piece, of course, is the amendment to the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. While that sounds like a very fancy term, Madam Speaker, it essentially means that when there is a family law support order, some kind of, you know, dispute in another jurisdiction – we know that when there are arrangements as well as agreements and orders that are in place that affect, for example, custody as well as child support payments, families don't stay in the jurisdiction in which their children were born or even where they lived. We know that, of course, people move around, and one of the challenges that has existed for some time is that if a family support order is in place in one province, in Alberta there has been a sort of onerous process by which that parent can seek to enforce that order when in Alberta.

I actually had to deal with this a little bit myself, Madam Speaker, in my prepolitical life. I did a lot of work for school boards who were regularly dealing with parents who may have different custody arrangements and different orders in place and the challenges of ensuring that the proper documentation was there to enforce their rights as guardians and parents here in Alberta. Of course, under education law here in Alberta and under our statutes and regulations parents and guardians have very specific rights and responsibilities, but it has to be clear as to who is the legal guardian and who is the parent in order to access, for example, their child's personal information, to be able to access student information. Certainly, one can particularly imagine challenges around, you know, who can pick up the child after school if that child is seeing a counsellor or something like that. There are certainly a lot of privacy provisions.

I dealt with and supported many school boards who would be faced with a parent producing an order that was from another jurisdiction, and unfortunately, due to sort of the stringent requirements that we currently have in Alberta around those documents being sworn and certificated within Alberta in order to be valid, it caused, honestly, some significant confusion and challenges, both with guardians and with school boards and teachers and, frankly, of course, the implication that that had on the student.

I'm certain that there are people in this Assembly and Albertans who are dealing with it on a more regular basis, but I can just say that I appreciate how challenging that was, to not have those orders recognized properly in Alberta without going through, quite honestly, a number of significant, you know, hoops in order to prove that.

Mr. Dach: Intervention, Member?

Ms Pancholi: Oh, certainly.

The Deputy Speaker: No. Sorry. Interventions aren't allowed at this stage of the bill.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-McClung for seeking to intervene.

As I understand it – this actually was new to me; I was not aware of this – you know, Alberta is a little bit of an outlier in terms of requiring those strict requirements, so if the changes as proposed in Bill 5 will actually make it easier and bring Alberta more in line with other jurisdictions, I think that's definitely a positive step.

The specifics in Bill 5 are, you know, that it removes the need for documents that are produced by a guardian to be sworn documents, meaning that they don't have to be sworn by a notary or a commissioner, removing the need for certified documents and providing a little bit more flexibility. One key change in Bill 5 around this, which I think is important, is allowing for documents to be sent in either by e-mail or telephone transmission of documents.

I want to pause on that point just to note that there are opportunities from the pandemic where we have learned in terms of how to facilitate access to justice in a time when, of course, people couldn't physically attend courthouses. We saw that there was a lot of flexibility in terms of how, you know, documents could be provided and, of course, how testimony could be provided, and I certainly hope that some of that can be carried over not only in contentious sort of family law disputes such as this bill refers to – a bit of a tangent, Madam Speaker, but I'm recalling conversations that I had in my visits and discussions with folks at the Zebra centre, which is a fantastic organization, a child advocacy centre here in Edmonton.

Of course, there are many across the province that support children who have been abused and who are often having to give very sensitive testimony, and they do remarkable work at the Zebra centre to really support those children and wrap them in love and security so that they can feel comfortable talking about things that are really challenging. One of the things that I know the Zebra centre has advocated for is that during the pandemic children were allowed to testify remotely, from kind of the comfort of being in a place that was familiar, at the centre, with people around them that they knew and, of course, the support of fantastic support dogs at Zebra centre. They sort of certainly hoped that that kind of ability for children, in particular, to be able to provide testimony in more comfortable settings, where they feel safe and it's not as scary as being in a courtroom, they hope that can continue.

I just want to pause and say that we think about access to justice. This bill certainly opens up some avenues for increased access, but certainly there is lots we can do and lessons that we have learned from the pandemic to really support individuals who may be particularly vulnerable in being able to have their story heard, to present their evidence in a safe environment. Certainly, I hope this will pave the way for consideration of other amendments.

With respect to the other legislative changes in Bill 5, as the Minister of Justice noted, you know, there were some changes, of course, to the Legislative Assembly Act, which does provide, for example – I think there are a number of changes within the bill, but one of them is that it does allow the Speaker to, I guess, authorize Legislative Assembly security staff to be able to have weapons. I think that's certainly something that I'd like to know a little bit more about. I know that the Minister of Justice gave some examples of situations, both in 2014, that happened at Parliament, but also many of the members in this Assembly will be very familiar with the situation of what took place in 2019, where many of us were present when – it's very unfortunate that a man committed suicide right outside our building. I guess I'd like a little bit more information as to how weapons in that case or arming the LAS could have affected or changed or in any way altered the course of events that took place that day or certainly how they anticipate that it could going forward. I just have some questions about that piece, and hopefully we will get some clarification on that.

I do note that Bill 5 also makes changes to the Provincial Court Act which increase the threshold amount for which a claim, a civil claim, can go to the Provincial Court for resolution. The Provincial Court civil claim process is a lot more – I don't want to say informal because, of course, it is still a court process, but it is far less stringent than, say, going to the Court of King's Bench. I just want to note that's the first time I've actually said it out loud, and I said, "Court of King's Bench." I'm very happy that I caught that.

Rather than going to the Court of King's Bench, which can be, of course, a very intimidating process – we know that it's heavy on procedure as well as the requirement to have legal representation. For many years, of course, we have had this threshold where we're saying that civil claims can go to the Provincial Court if the claim is for an amount less than $50,000. That's basically, like, a small claim sort of idea – right? – addressing those claims in a more informal setting to provide more access to justice for claimants.

I understand that under Bill 5 the threshold would change from $50,000 to up to $200,000. Again, increasing access to justice is really important, and it's an important thread. Certainly, I know it underlines many other challenges in the court system around access to justice, but I guess I'd support the idea of more people being able to resolve issues and legal claims in a more informal process that doesn't require being able to afford a lawyer to be able to have your matter heard and resolved.

I'm curious as to why $200,000 is the threshold. What thinking went into that? Was it looking at the kinds of claims that have come forward, obviously potentially looking at the Court of King's Bench claims and seeing, you know, what difference it would make if the threshold was raised to $200,000? Does that mean that a number of those claims would be moved, and what are those numbers? I'm hoping some assessment was done as to what that would mean. While that may relieve pressure, for example, on the Court of King's Bench – perhaps it will; perhaps it won't – if it relieves pressure, are there the corresponding resources available to the Provincial Court in order to accommodate what would likely be an expanded caseload?

As we know, our court systems are very strained, under enormous pressure, and we're seeing long delays in terms of cases being heard, so while it's important to provide access to justice, I would appreciate hearing sort of an assessment or any analysis that was done by the Minister of Justice or the government to determine whether our court system has the capacity to handle those increased claims. You know, if it's still going to be a very, very long delay, as they say, justice delayed is justice denied. We have to be cognizant of the additional pressures.

On that note, you know, when we talk about access to justice, Madam Speaker, I'm struck, of course, by the ongoing dispute – "dispute" is probably not even the proper word for it – the challenges right now around individuals being able to access justice through having a legal aid lawyer assigned to them. We know that right now the funding model that has been presented by government is unsatisfactory. We know that many Albertans are being denied their procedural and, frankly, constitutional rights to have a criminal matter heard and to be able to defend themselves by having a lack of access to legal aid.

I would certainly like to hear some significant steps being taken by this government to address that, to ensure that all Albertans, particularly those, when we're talking about the criminal justice system – failure to have proper representation could mean that somebody loses their liberty and is actually in jail. We need to make sure that those individuals have access to proper representation. It's a core, honestly, of both our criminal justice as well as our democratic systems, protecting those procedural rights. I encourage the government to consider those issues as well.

One other change that has been made within Bill 5 is that we know that it makes changes to – I think these ones, I mean, are relatively noncontroversial – the Sale of Goods Act. I understand that section 25 of the act has been changed to align with what I understand is federal legislation, to remove the need to keep a record of the vehicle and registration that delivered the grain to an elevator and changes "track buyer" to "grain dealer." It seems to be a small – I will defer to anybody else who may have more expertise in this area to comment on the significance of that, but it does seem to be aligning with federal legislation and is something that, generally speaking, would be noncontroversial.

Another piece of legislation amended by Bill 5 is the Trustee Act. You know, we had the Trustee Act come before us I believe a couple of times in this session of the Legislature. I'm looking at my colleague the Member for St. Albert because I know she's very familiar with the Trustee Act as many individuals with disabilities and their families often rely upon that act for governing the estates and property of persons with disabilities.

I appreciate that in, you know, previous sessions – and forgive me, Madam Speaker; I can't remember exactly which one it was – we did have Bill 12 come forward, which made changes to the Trustee Act. I believe, if I recall correctly, those changes were really meant to reflect some work that had been done over a period of time, maybe even by I want to say the Alberta Law Reform Institute, but I'm not entirely sure that that's accurate. I know that there had been a lot of substantive legal assessment as to the changes that needed to be made to the Trustee Act to bring it up, to modernize it, to make it more reflective of the needs of individuals.

I believe this change in Bill 5 to the Trustee Act is really meant to clarify something that was put into Bill 12, because there was really concern that the changes would apply additional pressures onto the court system. As I understand it, Bill 5 would amend the Trustee Act to ensure that where there is no trustee in place, the trust will not fail. This is only when there is no trustee in place temporarily. Typically what would happen is that if there was not a trustee in place, the trust would essentially fail and would go back to the courts, and then the courts would have to, you know, appoint a new trustee. Really, that process of going back to the courts was adding additional pressure onto the court system.

The idea here, as I understand it, is that if a trustee is just temporarily not available or not named, rather than it going back to the courts, it could be held until such time as a new trustee is appointed without having to go back to the courts. Again, while I support removing pressure from the court system, I go back to: how does this align and how does this work with changes around the threshold for civil claims to go to the Provincial Court? Have we addressed those challenges in the court system?

I do want to mention, too, going back a little bit to the Provincial Court changes, that those changes around access to the civil claims system are often used in landlord and residential disputes. Not solely, of course, because we also do have the landlord-tenant residential dispute system. I totally misnamed that: the residential tenancy dispute system. Anyway, I got the name wrong. Simply put, this is where more significant matters that fall outside of that residential resolution dispute service lie. Again, what are the pressures, what are the implications for the Provincial Court system, and are they going to be significant?

Member Irwin: The residential tenancy dispute resolution service.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you. Residential tenancy dispute resolution service. I could remember the acronym RTDRS.

Member Irwin: You did well.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you very much. I got sort of all the words but in the wrong order. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for that.

The last change that Bill 5 makes is to the Referendum Act. As many in this Assembly will recall, we, of course, saw the Referendum Act come before us. I believe that the intention of the amendment would be to clarify that bringing a resolution to this Assembly prior to a referendum would only happen in the case of a constitutional referendum. I guess my question on that is that it's hard not to think about these changes, Madam Speaker, without the context of what we have been sort of struggling with over the last few weeks, which is sort of a confused understanding, whether it be deliberately trying to circumvent democracy or whether it's simply members of the government cabinet not understanding the bills that they drafted and voted on or that they just simply didn't care. But, you know, it's hard to not think about the fact that there is a lack of understanding around when things do and do not come back to the Legislature from the government caucus.

Certainly, if we're talking about a motion from the Legislative Assembly to authorize a constitutional referendum, my question would be: why wouldn't we have a motion from the Assembly to authorize any referendum?

As we know, referendums require a significant amount of investment to do properly, to actually, you know, properly frame the question, to do public education campaigns to make sure that the public is aware. Of course, then there are the administrative costs related to actually having an election and having a referendum through the normal election process, maybe sometimes outside of an election process, too. That's entirely possible. So why wouldn't this Assembly get a chance to weigh in on a motion to approve any referendum that's going forward?

Those are certainly some of the questions that we have. I'm looking forward to a spirited and thoughtful debate by the members of the Assembly on Bill 5. A number of questions that we've asked related to, you know, the effect of changing some of the provisions around access to the provincial court system, around the referendums, why we shouldn't have a motion for all referendums that are brought forward, and really just sort of understanding the decisions that were made and providing clarity as I think we should all hold the government to account on those kinds of questions.

With that, Madam Speaker, I will cede my time, and I look forward to the debate in the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Other members wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate this afternoon on Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). I thank the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for much of her learned input regarding the various pieces of this bill. I think that most of the questions that members might have had were partly raised in debate by her, but I hope to bring a couple of little pieces of new elements that occurred to me to seek some clarification on myself.

The bill itself, of course, according to the Justice minister, was seeking to improve the day-to-day lives of Albertans. Of course, the day-to-day lives of Albertans right now are impacted by many, many things, not many of which are actually covered by this Bill 5, Madam Speaker, because indeed we're looking at the day-to-day lives being completely unaffordable. There are some of these elements of this bill, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2), that might actually make things more expensive to Albertans. Of course, by practice of, perhaps, sins of omission, the real things that could have been done to make life a little easier financially for Albertans were omitted or avoided.

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud herself alluded to one that occurred to me. Of course, it's the legal aid funding model, that is in great dispute right now between the legal aid lawyers and the province. It reached an unprecedented boiling point where, in fact, the legal aid lawyers and their organizations were in the streets protesting in absolute desperation for their clients, who they serve, to be served by a legal aid system that actually functions because they've been able to attract legal aid lawyers to the system because they're paying them enough. I mean, the funding model is outdated. The legal aid lawyers have been making representations incessantly to the government without result and finally ended up on the streets. Indeed, there were the stated terms of the Minister of Justice that this legislation was seeking to improve the day-to-day lives and improve access to justice, then, in fact, this would seem to be a very natural aim of the bill, to address the legal aid funding model that is acutely affecting access to justice in Alberta today.

I served as a court intake worker, a volunteer, in the Solicitor General's department when I was going to university. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, some of the same problems then in terms of underfunding of the legal aid system are still current now. I'd never seen it get to the breaking point that it has been now. To see legal aid lawyers in the streets should have told the government that this needed to be urgently and immediately dealt with, and it's not happening. [interjection] Madam Speaker, an intervention. Go ahead.

Member Irwin: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-McClung. I was very curious to just learn a little bit more, and perhaps you were going there, about your own work. I mean, you, like me, well – you're not a lawyer, but you did have some experience working with legal aid, and you started to say that, interestingly enough, some of the challenges remain the same. So I would just be curious to hear a little bit about what some of those challenges were. I don't know if you said when that was; I'm guessing it was a couple of years ago. Just what some of those challenges were.

I would imagine, as my colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud pointed out, we know that there are incredible challenges currently with legal aid that we're not seeing addressed by this government. I know I've heard from a number of lawyers who are certainly concerned about some of the significant challenges that folks across Alberta, including many of my constituents in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, are encountering when it comes to the system of legal aid. So I would ask the member to elaborate a little bit more on that and to talk about some of those challenges because, again, as we've seen – I'm not getting cut off here – we're not seeing a whole lot of action. I think that's what it was . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The buzzer's not working.

This is just a great place for the Speaker to intervene and provide some caution in the remarks for the speaker to come, that they are relevant to the second reading of Bill 5. The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I do see the relevance myself, because what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was indeed speaking about was the omission of the legal aid funding model amendments that we were hoping to see in any Justice Statutes Amendment Act, and it's a glaring omission from this piece of legislation that I speak to this afternoon.

Now, the member mentioned that she wanted to hear a little bit about what my experience was in the court systems. It was a few years ago; it was in the middle '80s. Nonetheless, my role as a volunteer court intake worker was to sit in courts of first appearance, courtrooms 63 and 65, and be present so that if indeed the judge presiding decided to pass a sentence of probation, I was there to ensure that the individual sentenced to probation did not leave the courtroom prior to signing probation orders and prior to me assigning that individual to a probation officer.

That time that I spent – and it was two, three days a week over the course of over two years, Madam Speaker, while attending university. It was morning courtrooms, and in that time frame, after hearing dozens and dozens of cases, what I witnessed time and time again was that many of the accused would attempt right in front of the judge, sometimes without duty counsel – because they hadn't taken the time or weren't aware that duty counsel or legal aid lawyers, as they were referred to, were available to discuss their situation with them, and even if they were, they had only moments to do so prior to the accused taking the stand and their case coming before the judge.

What would happen in many cases: just to be expedient, the accused would simply try to plead guilty, and that is no service to justice, for an individual to suffer consequences that were perhaps entirely avoidable by putting in a not-guilty plea and going to trial and perhaps having their case heard in a much broader light and having consequences which would have been much different than the judge would have available to him or her in sentencing if indeed the guilty plea was accepted. In many cases the judge would caution the individual about the guilty plea and arrange for the individual accused to speak to duty counsel and advise that they were going to be having that individual reserve their plea rather than going straight to a guilty plea, which would have life-changing consequences for that individual should they have that guilty plea accepted and have that indictment, a charge on their record for life. The opportunity has been missed in Bill 5, I think, to address a very acute justice issue, and that is the legal aid funding model in this province.

I was disappointed to see that, Madam Speaker, and perhaps the Minister of Justice in the near future will see fit to address this model. It has been not loud in the news lately. I hope to learn that the Minister of Justice is really intently negotiating and in fair negotiations with the legal aid lawyers' representatives to reach a resolution, a long-term resolution, which will satisfy the need for legal aid lawyers to be properly compensated and for them to be able to attract more individuals to the profession of serving in a legal aid capacity.

It certainly is a fundamental first entry right of individuals who are in the justice system who have no capacity to hire their own lawyer to have a legal aid lawyer appointed for them and to them and available to them right at the first appearance and ongoing throughout their case so that they actually do have access to justice, which was the minister's stated goal in bringing forward Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). That is one element that I wanted to expound upon a little bit. It was an omission by the Justice minister in Bill 5.

Something else that caught my attention with respect to this bill was the Sale of Goods Act amendment that was required by the minister's changes that were made to align with federal legislation under section 25, which removes the need to keep a record of the vehicle and registration to deliver grain to an elevator and changes "track buyer" to "grain dealer" in terms of definitions.

I imagine, Madam Speaker, that the point at which the legislation was made to actually require that a record of the vehicle and the registration used to deliver the grain to elevator was implemented that there was a reason behind that. At the moment I'm only speculating upon it, but I had been, in the past, a critic for Agriculture, and I know that one of the things that I heard from producers is that indeed the fairness of the weighing of their grain is something that was in dispute. There were complaints about them being potentially cheated out of the weight. [interjection] I have another intervention.

Member Irwin: I know. I didn't actually want to interrupt, so I was going to sit back down, but you took the words out of my mouth. I was thinking, you know – as the critic for Agriculture I was going to ask you what your speculation was. As I was looking through this bill, I must admit I know very little about the Sale of Goods Act, but why would it be that it would remove the need to keep a record of the vehicle? I'm curious. I know there are a few farmers in this Chamber, but there are many UCP MLAs who represent a whole heck of a lot of farmers. I'm just hopeful. I'm having memories from yesterday of government members not speaking to their own bills. I'm hopeful that some of them will stand up and weigh in on some of these. Perhaps they could answer some of our questions. They could ask their own questions if they've all read the bill.

I would ask the Member for Edmonton-McClung to speculate a little bit more because, honestly, I'm curious, in a bill like this, justice statutes, why that piece would be included in there. I would love to learn a little bit more.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Member, and I certainly do hope to learn more myself. The nature of my comments regarding this section are interrogative more than declarative. I hope to learn exactly what the reasoning is to remove the requirement to keep a record of the vehicle and registration that delivered grain to the elevator. It doesn't seem to be a huge load of red tape to unpack. The Minister of Justice seems to think that this is a red tape item that will smooth things out for farmers, but I can think of a couple of reasons myself why indeed even today one might want to continue recording the vehicle and registration that delivered grain to the elevator perhaps. If there was ever a dispute about the weight of that grain, Madam Speaker, and the payment to the farmer who delivered it, an important piece of the argument could rely upon the weight of the vehicle that actually delivered that grain, because, of course, as you weigh grain on the scales, you're looking at the GVW, or gross vehicle weight, of the vehicle, the empty weight versus the weight of the vehicle when it's loaded with grain. Of course, you subtract, and you end up with the weight of the actual load of grain.

Indeed, if there is a dispute over the weight, it would be very good to have, I would think, a record of the vehicle and the registration of that vehicle that delivered the grain to the elevator. That makes me wonder: are we losing an opportunity here to maintain the integrity of the weight or the ability of a farmer to dispute a payment on the basis of an inaccurate weight, removing the ability of that farmer, that producer to verify indeed that the weight was incorrect based partly upon the weight of the vehicle that was used to deliver that grain and that sat on the scales to actually ascertain the weight of the grain in that truck?

I'd like to really hear more detail on that, Madam Speaker. I'd like to hear who actually was asking for this. Of course, if something like this has changed in legislation in the Sale of Goods Act under Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2), in all likelihood it didn't come while the minister was brushing his teeth. It probably came as a result of some lobby group, farmers, an agricultural organization. It could be the grain buyers. I'm not sure who actually came up with this idea to ask the minister to make this change, but it would be very informative to see from what end of the grain world this came. That I hope to learn.

Also, there's another aspect to this, Madam Speaker. As the critic for transportation I'm very interested in the improvement and the maintenance of our roads, particularly our rural roads. As you may know – you’re from a rural area – I have rural backgrounds as well, and I know that the country roads that serve our agricultural producers are fairly soft, especially in the spring. But in the fall, when a lot of the loads are being delivered to the elevator, they still have maximum load limits on those rural roads, on the county roads, and even on our highways.

I’m wondering if section 25, the removal of the need to keep a record of the vehicle and the registration that delivered the grain to the elevator, indeed limits the ability to enforce – or an opportunity, at least, at that point to enforce – the legal load limits that a truck might carry. It’s certainly an opportunity to see if somebody is trying to sort of double up on their load and make one or two fewer trips to get their grain to the elevator by overloading the truck beyond what the weight limits of the roads leading to the elevator might be. It’s one way of certainly ascertaining that somebody was carrying too heavy a load for the roads. That’s a question that I have as well: have we lost an enforcement tool to protect our rural roads by not requiring that the vehicle that delivered the grain to the elevator record the registry and the type of vehicle that delivered the grain? So questions that I have that occurred to me as I was reading through the legislation. [interjection] Go ahead, Member.

Member Irwin: My final intervention. Yeah, I just wanted to get on the record here, too, because I was perusing how the Sale of Goods Act was amended there. You know, there’s a little bit more in the bill itself, but again it talks about presently that “the buyer acquires a good title to the grain” and “keeps a record [of] the kind of vehicle,” that sort of thing. Again, being someone who’s from a rural area as well and who’s lived in various parts of rural Alberta, I’d be curious and wanted to put on the record my appreciation for your speculation around the impact on rural roads. That’s something that – oh, man, some of those rural Albertans get pretty fired up about the roads, as they should because some of those rural back roads in particular are quite hard to navigate.

Again, I’d like to ask the government members to let us know, because we’re quite curious, particularly around section 25 and the amendments there. I just would love to know some of the background there, and again perhaps some of those members from rural areas will be able to give us a little bit more information so that we, I and the Member for Edmonton-McClung, aren’t left to speculate.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Member. I think that’s the purpose of the debate this afternoon, to seek clarifying answers to questions we have about the legislation brought forward. Of course, we’re all intent on protecting the integrity and safety of our roadbeds, whether they be rural or major highways, and the weight restrictions are there for a reason.

It makes me wonder if indeed we are, as I said, giving up an enforcement opportunity to confirm that overweight vehicles are not travelling on our rural roads, particularly the ones that are leading from farm to elevator, in many cases where they are gravel roads, or we used to call them macadam roads, which are of a softer roadbed and more prone to damage from overweight vehicles. Of course, that’s why we have load limits and road limits in the spring, to protect the roads.

In the fall heavy loads are travelling on grain trucks going to elevators to allow farmers to get their grain to market. We all, as a community of producers in Alberta, want to make sure the roads are protected and that nobody is breaking the rules and putting the roads at risk. This would be one way of, I think, keeping a record of overweight vehicles or determining if overweight vehicles were actually coming to the elevator. I’m wondering if that element of the question was being considered by the Justice minister when he indeed formulated this change to the act to remove the need to keep a record of the vehicle and the registration that delivered the grain to the elevator.

Hopefully, there will be some answers forthcoming to those questions. I hesitate to find how this bill in fact will, quote, unquote, improve the day-to-day lives of Albertans. The Minister of Justice had that as his head goal or leading outcome that he wanted to achieve by this bill. Many of the items here are housekeeping items. I know that the changes that were brought forward . . . [Mr. Dach’s speaking time expired] I will continue my thoughts later.

The Deputy Speaker: We’re having some buzzer problems today, so forgive me if my interjections are a little bit odd.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre on second reading of Bill 5.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). Now, as my colleagues have been noting, there are a number of different changes that are put forward in this act, a relatively brief bill covering a few different things. One that stood out to me, of interest, as I was taking a look through things is some of the changes to the Legislative Assembly Act, changes to bring Alberta in line with some other jurisdictions in terms of allowing for the arming of security personnel that are under the purview of the Speaker.

Now, certainly, we’re aware of some of the history of this place. We’ve all been over at the gold elevator at the front of the building, where we, in fact, have a bullet hole from an individual many years ago who was able to sneak a weapon into the Legislature and get off a shot. Certainly, we’re aware of the challenges that have arisen over the last few years. We’ve seen the changes to security here around the Legislature Grounds, a reinforcement of the gate arms at the gatehouse to the east of the Legislature, and some of the other changes that have been brought in. Certainly, we deeply appreciate the consideration of the safety of members, those that are visiting here at the Legislature, and we certainly appreciate the important work that all of our sheriffs do.

Certainly, I’m looking forward to reading a bit more and better understanding some of these changes, how it’s operating in other jurisdictions, and will be taking the opportunity to delve into that a bit more, but one thing that also stood out to me as part of this provision is that what’s included here in these changes is that the Speaker will be responsible for investigations of wrongdoings by officers, but that will be clarified in changes to the Police Act for increased civilian oversight of law enforcement personnel. Now, the reason that stood out to me, Madam Speaker, is because we are still waiting to see those changes to the Police Act.

Now, this is a process that began during our time in government, broad stakeholder engagement on the future of policing that began in June 2018 and began to move forward since then, and this is a process that has been going on ever since on a very important issue, Madam Speaker. This is regarding how we set up our civilian oversight of policing services and the discipline process for officers of the law. Of course, we have had a great deal of discussion as a society about this issue, again noting that this is something that is included here as part of this bill, noting that a future piece of this bill is going to be adjusting for those changes to the Police Act. This is a process that is still in place and is still ongoing under this government.

I know that it has moved forward, Madam Speaker. Again, it began in 2018 and sort of moved on up through the election, where in that time they gathered perspectives from Albertans to determine some of the critical areas of the Police Act, the police service regulation, and Alberta provincial policing standards that needed to be amended or reformed, looking specifically to hear from folks about how we go about modernizing policing, how we ensure Albertans feel safe and confident that justice is being done and ensure that police are accountable to the communities that they protect, much as it discusses in the bill here that for the current time the Speaker will be responsible for investigations of wrongdoings by officers, but that will be clarified when there are changes to the Police Act, of which I am speaking now.

Now, Albertans shared their thoughts on policing under this government, so under the new ministers of Justice, through an online survey from December 3, 2020, to January 4, 2021. According to the information online from the GOA, in that period the Alberta government held 13 engagement sessions that were attended by approximately 200 different organizations representing law enforcement, health and social services sectors, municipalities, and Indigenous communities, and I would imagine, perhaps, that some of the Alberta sheriffs were indeed involved in those conversations as well.

In addition, there were about 15,000 Albertans that completed a public survey that covered several topics related to law enforcement such as the role of police in the community, processes for handling complaints from the public, and officer discipline, which, again, I noted is being discussed in the act here, in this case where officers would see discipline should there be concern of wrongdoing, first an investigation that would be undertaken by the Speaker, of course to later be clarified by changes to the Police Act for increased civilian oversight, which I'm speaking of here.

Now, as of February 23, 2021, the then Minister of Justice, now minister of— and I forget the exact title because we've had a number of changes— essentially labour under a different name, appointed Dr. Temitope Oriola, an associate professor of criminology at the University of Alberta, who has been appointed for a six-month term. He was appointed for a six-month term on February 23, 2021, to provide independent advice to the government as it weighed those policy options raised in the ongoing stakeholder discussions that had begun the previous fall. Now, Madam Speaker, that six-month term, of course, ended last year. The report from Dr. Oriola was delivered to the minister, so that has been on the minister's desk. I would certainly hope there has been some progress made, but so far we have not seen any further movement or any further action from the government regarding these important reforms, which again relate directly . . . [interjection] Yes.

Member Irwin: Thank you for allowing me to intervene there. I know you were on quite a roll there. I really appreciate your digging into the Police Act a little bit. You know, the Member for Edmonton-McClung dug into some of the other aspects of the bill. Again, I'm hoping that some of the members in the Chamber will be able to weigh in, especially on the Police Act piece.

You, the Member for Edmonton-City Centre, have done so much consultation, obviously, with your race-based data bill and pieces like that. You've heard from a lot of community members, and I know you've consulted with Dr. Oriola as well. I'm just sort of curious if you can expand a little bit on what you're hearing from folks in the community. You know, like you said, there's really not been any action from this government to date when it comes to what we're seeing right now, actually, in Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). So if the member could expand a little bit on some of those pieces, which, of course, Madam Speaker, are relevant to the bill in front of us.

I'm not sure if the timer is working again, but I will pass it back to the Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for that question and those comments. Certainly, I will touch on what she was talking about in terms of what I'm hearing from the public in regard to this. Again, we are talking about Bill 5 here, this provision under Bill 5 where the Speaker will be responsible for investigations of wrongdoings by officers to later be clarified by changes in the Police Act for increased civilian oversight of law enforcement personnel, which has been part of this ongoing review with government. Indeed, as the member noted, there has not been significant action or movement or, indeed, announcement from government in some time.

I can understand, Madam Speaker, perhaps why that is. We know the government has been wrapped up in a considerable amount of its own drama and intrigue, which led to the leadership race and the installation of a new Premier and, of course, now an interesting preoccupation with the job-killing sovereignty act, and all of that internal turmoil and rancour, frankly, has led to some distraction of the government from perhaps some of the more important issues, which we're of course discussing here around Bill 5 and that review of the Police Act. What we do know is indeed that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. I hesitate to draw the correlation between the Police Act and Bill 5, which is the bill we're debating right now. Maybe it's time to course correct here. I'll give you the opportunity to do as such, but I'm having a hard time finding the relevance. Please continue with your debate.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will attempt to continue to show relevance. Of course, we are talking about Bill 5 here. Under Bill 5 the provision that they are making changes to bring Alberta in line with other jurisdictions which allow for the arming of security personnel under the purview of the Speaker and within this bill, again, a new section is clarifying that the Speaker is responsible for the security of the Assembly and, allowing for the continuation of the current system where both sheriffs and legislative security have jurisdiction in different areas as per agreement with the minister of public safety, that the legislative security personnel powers and duties will align with those of peace officers and officers not put under the act to maintain the independence and the jurisdiction of the Speaker, and of course, again, the connection, then, with the Police Act, which I've been discussing, which is that the Speaker will be responsible for investigations of wrongdoings by officers, but that will later be clarified by changes to the Police Act for increased civilian oversight of law enforcement personnel.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Of course, the Speaker is currently responsible for investigations of wrongdoings by officers, or at least that is what this legislation is proposing. What I am discussing is if indeed this is perhaps the correct approach. Is this the way we should go? We are still awaiting that review from the Minister of Justice or perhaps the minister of public safety. I'm not quite sure how the two are correlating or how their duties are divided on this particular issue. There, again, has been a bit of confusion as we've had the new alignment of ministries and certainly nearly two-thirds of the current government caucus appointed as either ministers or parliamentary secretaries.

That said, as I was discussing, there certainly has been robust public discussion since 2020 and the unfortunate murder of George Floyd about the role of police in some aspects of public interaction, particularly when we're talking about things like wellness checks for individuals in mental distress, which we know that at times our officers, the sheriffs, here at the Legislature have in fact had to deal with. These are real challenges that we know that we need to consider.

With that, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is asking what I've been hearing from the community. Certainly, we've seen that there has been growing discussion about how public dollars are allocated to promote the safety of individuals in the public, whether that should be better allocated to police or to other community organizations on those particular aspects of the work and how those two can interact. Of course, that's a portion that we would perhaps consider, certainly recognizing that the officers here at the Legislature would be in a bit of a different position in terms of their interaction in that regard. We recognize that that debate has become quite heated. Certainly, at times it has become a very divisive debate. Certainly, I have seen that here in my position as the MLA for Edmonton-City Centre and some of the discussions with city council and the Edmonton Police Service, and I have heard from constituents about this.

I think one way that we could certainly help defuse some of that tension is by looking at some of these reforms, which, again, are noted here as we're looking at the Speaker sort of temporarily taking on the responsibility for these investigations of wrongdoings by officers but which may shift in the future with these changes to the Police Act, recognizing that this is something where law enforcement and the public and those calling for reform are pretty much in agreement. These are pieces where the police themselves, to the best of my understanding, and most law enforcement bodies no longer want to be responsible for these areas of oversight. They would like to see some form of independent body in existence to be able to review when there is an accusation of wrongdoing against an officer of the law and indeed to consider how that discipline should go forward. In this case, of course, we know we are taking about, under Bill 5, the Speaker being responsible for those investigations of the wrongdoings by officers, but that may be future clarified when we see the completion of the review of the Police Act.

It's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that the level of distraction, the level of drama, that has gone on under the government over the last year and a half has put us in a position where some of these important things to the people of Alberta are getting put off. I had really hoped to see those changes come forward in this legislative session. Instead, what we have is Bill 5, where we have it briefly touched upon as we consider how yourself as the Speaker would be responsible for investigations of wrongdoings by officers, but looking at how that may change under the future changes of the Police Act, we do not have those pieces of the Police Act here for consideration in this Assembly. [interjection] Yes, Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-City Centre. I just wanted to thank him for clearly making that connection between what we see in Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, and the connection to the Police Act.

I think he's posing to this Chamber some very important questions. You know, why is it that we still have not yet heard from the review? Again, I would really love if the minister responsible for – I may get his title wrong – public safety, perhaps other things, could give us an update. As the Member for Edmonton-City Centre has noted, he's heard from a lot of his constituents. I have as well, similarly conversations with municipal leaders, too. It's a little bit interesting that there has been radio silence, but as that member noted, we can imagine, with the great deal of chaos inherent in this government, that there's been no action.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood for those comments. It occurs to me as well, you know, that this is a power that is being awarded, Mr. Speaker, and certainly I respect the work that Speakers of the Legislature have done and certainly recognize that they assume many of these responsibilities in terms of essentially being a de facto head of HR or sort of responsible for all the staff of the Legislative Assembly as well and sort of take on some of that role and quite a bit of authority and responsibility with that. Certainly, it is a significant new responsibility to ask that the Speaker would be responsible for investigations of wrongdoings by officers at the Legislature.

Now, I certainly believe that the Speaker would be able to avail themselves, I'm sure, of many resources and expertise and other things should that be the case and should they have to undertake such an investigation. I imagine that has occurred in the past when there have been other requests for investigations or concerns that have been raised about staff at the Legislative Assembly. But I would say that this takes on another level of responsibility for the Speaker in so doing.

I think that moving forward with that review of the Police Act, in that context, would be very helpful as well in providing that clarity and perhaps being able to provide an alternative in line with what we will hopefully see for other police forces, other law enforcement bodies in the province of Alberta where we will see increased civilian oversight though, again, recognizing that the legislative area is somewhat different from, you know, regular policing, that sort of thing, in terms of public interaction, some of those other aspects, but then, again, recognizing that, of course, our sheriffs here at the Legislature – the Legislature is here in the heart of our city, in the middle of Edmonton-City Centre, where we have seen an increased number of individuals who live houseless, where we have seen great impacts from the ongoing drug poisoning crisis. Certainly, I'm sure those are issues that have impacted not just across the downtown of our city but also here on the Legislature Grounds. So, certainly, we want to be able to ensure that as part of all of these conversations we are being able to provide the best support we can for the important work that our sheriffs do and do very well, I will say. I've certainly appreciated them in all their interactions. [interjection] Yes, the Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

4:10

Mr. Deol: Well, thank you, hon. member, for giving me the opportunity to add some comments and for providing the information. As you recall, hon. member, we were invited to the event in Calgary during the past month – actually, the month of October. Similarly, what I was hearing in my riding – and I believe you have had many, many meetings, actually, into the similar stakeholders' concerns – they are concerned about the cuts to the Human Rights Commission, particularly cuts to human rights education funding. Particularly what had happened, the process of appointments of the Human Rights Commission itself really actually impacted not only their ability to seek justice in a situation but also the way they were frightened. They were afraid.

Thank you.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, I appreciate the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Meadows. I certainly recognize the Alberta Human Rights Commission would be another one of those independent bodies which is providing oversight, to the best of my knowledge has perhaps less involvement when it comes to law enforcement but certainly is an important part of protecting the rights of Albertans in many areas. Ultimately, what we are talking about here is a question of public safety.

The provision in this, again, I understand is that this is something that has been done in other jurisdictions, brings Alberta in line with other jurisdictions to allow for the arming for security personnel under the purview of the Speaker. Certainly, I will be undertaking the opportunity, then, to review some of these other jurisdictions. Having just received the bill recently, I haven't had the chance to delve into that yet, but I'll certainly be interested to see how that has come into practice in other jurisdictions, what steps might have been taken.

Certainly, you know, this puts me back in mind, I suppose, of the gentleman that made his way into the Parliament building back in I believe it was 2014, under the time of Prime Minister Harper. I remember the concerns that were raised there. Indeed, I remember visiting the Parliament that fall for the first time, in September of 2014. I believe that was the year because that was when I took the trip. I recall sort of considering and just for the first time really experiencing that level of security and how things were protected and indeed being warned as I, in taking pictures, wandered a little too closely to the doors of the Chamber.

I certainly recognize the importance of this in the current atmosphere, where we find, unfortunately, increasingly heated political rhetoric, both from politicians and from individuals, certainly, as with the events that we saw, unfortunately, during the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic, where some have chosen to fan the flames of conspiracy and, unfortunately, continue to do so, and that can put us in a position, unfortunately then, where that does impact the safety of legislators and potentially all of us here at the Legislative Assembly. So this is an item worthy of consideration, and I appreciate it being brought forward as part of Bill 5.

I look forward to the opportunity to delve a bit deeper into this act and some of the other provisions that are put forward and get a better sense perhaps as we do of where the government's next steps will be in regard to that review of the Police Act and its importance to Albertans.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House and speak to Bill 5, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). This bill actually makes quite a few changes. Some are minor, some are important, and some are really worth paying attention to because even if they seem a step in the right direction, that needs still a lot of explanation how its implementation or lack of implementation is going to impact the people of the province.

Section 1 of this bill makes changes to actually speed up the process to bring child support orders in line with most of the other provinces, I believe. It says the other provinces, but it doesn't say, like, all the other provinces or most of the provinces. It removes some of the requirements in place right now so the support can be in place in a speedy process. It removes the need for sworn documents, and it removes the need of certified documents to provide flexibility for certification.

Also, the section allows that – you know, definitely, it's important these days that people can transmit their documents electronically via e-mail or also confirm and testify via telephone. It removes the requirement of statutory certified copies and provides a designated authority the ability to require certified copies if determined as necessary.

It clarifies section 19, the court's ability to set aside an order, and it provides the ability to determine if an order is not authentic and parameters for doing so.

It makes changes, as I heard from my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, our former critic, as well, for Agriculture, who raised some questions around this change, in section 25 that remove the need to keep a record of the vehicle and registration that delivers the grain to the elevator and changes "track buyer" to "grain dealer". We understand this change as we read it, but it would have been really helpful . . . [interjection] Yeah. Go ahead, Member.

Member Irwin: Sorry to cut you off mid-phrase there. You know, of course, the member, for those opposite not paying attention, was referring to the Sale of Goods Act, section 25, and some changes around grain being delivered to elevators.

I noted earlier that, you know, the Member for Edmonton-McClung was left speculating as to why those changes would be needed in this Justice Statutes Amendment Act. I can honestly admit that I can't quite figure it out. Without referring to the presence or absence of members, there are some new folks in this Chamber who most certainly represent rural Albertans, many of them, in fact. So I would just again urge these government members to weigh in on their own pieces of legislation and perhaps answer some of the questions that not just folks like me and members of the NDP have but the public as well, your stakeholders, your key stakeholders, in fact.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Member. You know, well said. That was my concern and question around this change to section 25.

You know, it's good to learn, and I think the members of the government caucus have a great opportunity as well as I'll be happy to learn and listen more from the Minister of Justice on how this change actually helps and who gets help, like, who needs help from this, and how it's going to change the process. Who were the stakeholders? What was the consultation around this? Who, basically, requested this change in this piece of legislation we are discussing here?

We just understand that the requirements to keep the records have been waived. The question around this to members like us is that we do not know the specific questions, concerns, or the advocacy behind this, what this change is going to exactly do – help the dealer or help the registered owner? – or actually where this demand was coming from.

Also, this bill makes changes to the new Trustee Act in section 26. This act removes the need for a trust to be transferred to the courts if there is no trustee and clarifies that in these situations the trust remains intact until a new trustee is appointed. I don't see, like, much of the concern as also being a trustee of some of the accounts. [interjection] Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Go ahead. Yeah, I'll take your intervention.

Ms Gray: Yeah. Well, thank you to my colleague from Edmonton-Meadows. I appreciate the comments he's putting on the record on Bill 5, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2022 (No. 2). I know that as I'm looking through Bill 5, I see much that I am certainly supportive of.

He was talking about the Trustee Act changes. One of the things that I think is really positive is that the proposed change is intended to make sure that a trust won't fail if there is temporarily no trustee. In listening to the member, I know, I think, I'm supportive of this. I think that's a really important move and something that has needed some clarity. In looking at Bill 5 overall and seeing some very positive things, this Trustee Act change to ensure there will not be a failure when there is temporarily no trustee strikes me as a very positive change. I was curious if the Member for Edmonton-Meadows might agree with that and have any thoughts from his constituents.

Thank you.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, for asking your question. Yeah. You know, as I said, I do have a situation where I am the trustee of an account. By saying this, that is a very kind of comprehensive and complex process that takes, actually, time. It takes months and months to get established and get through the process. Definitely, actually, this change, I recall, was from Bill 12 from the spring session. This change certainly is helpful if in the situation where the trustee expires or the trustee is no longer there to deliver his responsibilities. For the new trustee the same whole process is going to start again, so it's a bit of help to bring the new trustee in with a smooth or kind of a fast process, I would say. So I definitely support this actual amendment and the change in this piece of legislation.

Also, as I said, this legislation impacts, actually, a number of sections in the law. One of them makes it clear about the nonconstitutional referendums and constitutional referendums. It says in section 3 of this piece of legislation in clarification that a constitutional referendum requires the passage of a motion by the Legislative Assembly prior to being ordered. Some of them also clarify that nonconstitutional referendums do not require a motion to be passed by the Assembly first. Yeah. On this it would also be quite helpful to know where this change is coming from and who demanded this, who was actually working for it, and why this minister or the government House members, like – anyone who has better knowledge on this is most welcome to step up. [interjection] Thank you. I'll give it to you once again, Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ms Gray: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Meadows, who's going through and doing quite a thorough discussion about Bill 5. Certainly, the change to the Referendum Act is a piece that also caught my eye because a referendum is such an expensive and wide-impacting thing to have happen in the province, and the change that we see in Bill 5, which I'm not opposed to, essentially means that there will not be a role for this Assembly, this Chamber, when it comes to determining types of referendums unless, of course, if I've understood this correctly, it's around a constitutional referendum, so making clear that only constitutional questions require a resolution to be made in the Legislature. I'm surprised by this one but looking forward to the discussion at Committee of the Whole in particular. Prior to this for referendums there needed to be a discussion here in the Chamber and MLAs needed to be part of that.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Member, once again. Yeah. That was exactly the kind of question I was, you know, putting forward and would love to hear. I know we will have an opportunity to discuss this bill probably in the next coming days as well, but I would love to have clarity on this because this is a very important change in this piece of legislation. That is concerning because a referendum itself – you know, with the name “referendum” kind of you can understand the impression and impact it will put forward in society when it says “nonconstitutional.” It probably seems like nonconstitutional is not something very important, but it affects the society, actually, in many different ways.

Why would somebody put forward the referendum if it is not going to affect anything? You know, who can bring this kind of referendum forward? Who is going to decide the authenticity or ethical behaviour behind this lobby or the referendum that is going to be called without it being discussed in the House by the representatives in this House, the legislative members? These kinds of behaviours are, to my understanding – I don't know. I really need to learn. People can choose these kinds of opportunities to just – I don't know – impact or set narratives or change narratives. Maybe it wouldn't do much directly changing or challenging the Constitution, but also it will definitely impact the society and the popular narrative in the society. So why would somebody do it? Like, where exactly is this coming from? It will be very, very helpful if – I will be able to provide much better feedback on this if we know this. What was the reason behind these sort of changes?

Another change that is really concerning – you know, I can't really say exactly good or bad itself – that it says is that what is being purported in sections 3 and 5 changes the responsibility to the Minister of Justice, and section 9 allows cabinet actually to increase the maximum decision under civil courts from $50 K to $200 K. This would be the highest level in the country, so that is concerning, what really triggered this government to do this, because this is not common practice. This is not common practice, but I would love to hear more around these concerns from the minister in the coming days or from any government House members.

With this, I will conclude my remarks and also move to adjourn debate on this one. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 4

Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022

[Debated adjourned December 6: Mr. Nielsen speaking]

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak at second reading of Bill 4, the Alberta Health Care Insurance Amendment Act, 2022. I paused a little bit to allow some time for government members to potentially rise and speak on Bill 4. We've heard repeatedly from members of this Assembly how important they claim health care is to them now. It's not Bill 1 – Bill 1 is, of course, the sovereignty act – but certainly we've heard talk at least from the Minister of Health that he cares deeply about health care, so I thought for sure these government members would be eager to speak to addressing Bill 4, which is an attempt, I believe, by the government to amend for the years of chaos that they have initiated and which we are all suffering as a result of in this province.

It began with the legislative change that Bill 4 is seeking to amend, so it's quite a shock to me that none of them would, like, perhaps want to stand up and apologize to Albertans for their decision to allow a provision, Mr. Speaker, that gave the government of Alberta the sole authority to terminate unilaterally a contract with doctors. Of course, they introduced that in fall of 2019 and then quickly exercised that authority to end the contract. Simply on their own volition, with no input, they unilaterally ended that contract. I can't remember the precise timing of when they exercised that and how far before the onslaught of the pandemic it was. I believe maybe a month or two. [interjection] February 2020.

Oh, that's a time that many of us will remember as the time when a global health crisis came and affected all Albertans, whether it be their health, their business, their schools, their kids – everybody was affected – and that mere weeks before, when, of course, many of us knew the writing was on the wall with respect to this pandemic as well, many experts had said was coming: that's when the United Conservative Party government decided that they would begin a war with doctors.

Now, I just want, for the context of the Assembly, to read again what that provision was in the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act and that was in Bill 21. In fall of 2019 the government introduced section 40.2 to the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act. That provision, subsection (2), allowed the Lieutenant Governor in Council by order to terminate an agreement, the AMA agreement, which would be the Alberta Medical Association agreement, or any other agreement between the Crown in right of Alberta and the Alberta Medical Association or any other person respecting compensation matters. That's really what it did. It allowed them to just tear up that bill.

Now, what's interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that I decided to go down what ended up being a very dark path of reviewing the debate on Bill 21 in the fall of 2019, multiple days of debate on Bill 21, as some of the members may remember. Actually, they may not remember, but I'll get to that next. This was actually an omnibus piece of legislation. It contained many of the most egregious changes that this government brought in early in their mandate. There were many more egregious decisions to come, of course, but this was one of the first bills of some really outrageous decisions by the government, who decided to, for example, balance our budget or seek to try to balance the budget because they also actually had increased the debt significantly and lost 50,000 jobs by this time.

But they sought to balance the budget on the backs of people with AISH, for example. Bill 21 took me down that dark path of remembering the hypocrisy of the members in this Legislature on the government side who had just previously, a year prior, when they were in opposition, stood in favour of indexing AISH and spoken about the need for compassion for those individuals who are on AISH and then, in Bill 21, decided in one fell swoop to deindex AISH.

Now, what was remarkable to me, Mr. Speaker, as I was looking back on the Bill 21 debate to see if I could find some statements made by government members on why they thought being able to unilaterally terminate the AMA agreement was so important – as I went down that path of reading the Bill 21 debate, it was remarkable. Oh, gosh, there were at least 12, 13 days of debate on this bill. Not one single government member other than the Minister of Finance when he introduced these egregious bills, who, of course, smoothed over . . .

Member Irwin: Not one.

Ms Pancholi: But not one single member . . . [interjection] Yes. I'll give way.

Member Irwin: Thank you for giving way to me, to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Is it déjà vu? It's just incredibly intriguing that this government, that these UCP members, who I know – and I talked about this at great length yesterday. I know they are hearing about health care from their constituents because I've talked to their constituents. I've talked to their constituents in Edmonton-South West, in Medicine Hat – oh, my goodness, where else? – Sherwood Park, in many ridings in Calgary, in St. Albert and Morinville because I've knocked on doors. And the fact that this . . .

Ms Pancholi: Leduc.

Member Irwin: Leduc. The list goes on. I've been all over this province. The list goes on.

The point is that you are hearing about health care. Spruce Grove-Stony Plain: I'm getting CCed on a number of e-mails to Spruce Grove-Stony Plain. Listen, the point is that health care is a concern to all of your constituents, and the fact that these UCP MLAs refuse to speak up and either support or, you know, not even try to defend their bills is quite alarming to me. I just had to get that on the record.

Ms Pancholi: Well, thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I agree. It seems to be that this is a pattern of behaviour. They couldn't stand up and say why they thought it was okay to deindex AISH and why it was okay for them to be able to unilaterally end the agreement with doctors, which started the war on doctors and our health care systems and our health care professionals at a time of a pandemic. They didn't want to speak about it then, and they don't want to speak about it now. They don't want to say: I'm sorry; we were wrong; we were wrong to do that. But the thing, I believe, Mr. Speaker, is that Albertans know that they were wrong, and they do know they were wrong, because this is why they're trying to sneak this in. I notice, too, by the way, that there is very little eye contact being made right now, many, many members avoiding looking up and acknowledging that they thought it was fine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud, in Edmonton-Whitemud, to represent a constituency that actually has a lot of physicians, has a lot of doctors, a lot of nurses, a lot of respiratory therapists, a lot of OTs and SLPs, like, a lot of health care workers. You know, as I door-knock in my constituency, there has been a consistent theme that I've seen. First of all, we know – and we've heard these stories, and I've heard it first-hand from my constituents – of doctors who said: "You know what? I could not go on practising under this government. It was an affront to everything that I have done as a medical professional." They chose to retire early.

Just a couple of weeks ago I was door-knocking, and I came across a doctor who said: "You know what? I would love to vote for you in the spring; however, I'm moving. I'm moving to B.C. I don't want to practise medicine in this province anymore." By the way, B.C. is undergoing a massive recruitment campaign, which will be taking Alberta health care professionals because – guess what – health care professionals do not want to work in Alberta given the circumstances of this government and the complete disrespect. I can't recall how many pieces of commentary I heard that said that the decision of this government to go to war on Alberta doctors and health care professionals during a pandemic was quite possibly one of the most foolish decisions ever.

That is probably why, when we saw that, we saw approval levels for this government and the former Premier be the lowest in the country. I mean, that, of course, and there's the Best Summer Ever and the extremely high numbers of people who died in Alberta per capita from COVID due to this government's lack of action or delayed action. That had real implications for people's lives, Mr. Speaker.

But that decision to not veer away, to not take a step back and think about what the province was actually experiencing but to pursue doggedly an ideological agenda absent evidence and fact – well, actually, we're seeing a repeat of that behaviour. We see it with the introduction of Bill 1, the sovereignty act. These folks just don't seem to learn. They don't seem to even take responsibility for their actions. None of them seem to be standing up to be able to say: we made a mistake. It's all fine and good that they want to bring forward this Bill 4 and remove the ability to do what they should have never empowered themselves to be able to do in the first place.

I've reviewed the debate on Bill 21 and saw speaker after speaker from the opposition stand up and speak out against both the deindexing of AISH as well as the decision to unilaterally end, be able to terminate, the contract with doctors. In fact, I want to give credit to my colleague the Member for Edmonton-City Centre for his very clear conviction, during debates on Bill 21, about the impact this would have on the trust and the relationship. Mr. Speaker, when we look at the health care challenges that our province faces right now, they all revolve around trust and value and respect. It's why we have an incredible shortage of health care workers. [interjection] Yes. I'll give way.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Member. I'm pleased to intervene to ask a quick question involving trust and the trust that is dissolving faster every day in light of the government's inability to actually paint a clear picture of what's happening to the number of doctors in the province. Of course, we in the opposition point out that doctors are leaving the province. The government responds by saying: oh, no; we've got more doctors in the province than we've ever had before. In fact, the number of doctors supposedly should be increasing as we increase in population. I'm wondering indeed, since there is simply a real huge doctor shortage, because many, many people can't find a family doctor, what the government's picture is lacking, in your estimation, in terms of describing the real picture about doctors in the province and the numbers that are here and those that are leaving and why there's still a shortage.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the member for the question. You know, actually, when I think about what the challenges are in terms of the trust in the relationship, I think about just a few minutes ago. When I mentioned that I'm proud to represent a constituency that has a lot of doctors and health care professionals who work in it, some government member over there scoffed about that and made a little noise like: oh, of course, they do.

That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly the problem. This government has disdain for the professionals who are on the front lines of our health care system. They express it in every way, and they expressed it legislatively in Bill 21 back in 2019. What they said was: we don't care about your working conditions. Let's not forget that it wasn't just the ending of the contracts, right? Of course, there was all the billing codes and the Minister of Health at the time, who was on driveways screaming at doctors or going after doctors and finding their personal phone numbers and calling them up to berate them.

Then it was, you know, just the idea that we currently have a Premier who talks about the fact that the health care shortage was manufactured, which completely flies in the face of the everyday lived experience of health care professionals, not even just during the pandemic, Mr. Speaker. These health care professionals are strained. They have not had a break. They haven't had a break, and it is continuing, one public health crisis piled on top of the other. It's happening right now with children's health care.

We have a government that has disdain for science and for medical expertise. We have a Premier who won't even stand up and encourage Albertans to get a flu shot. She sends her Minister of Health to say it because he'll say it – that's great to hear – but the Premier won't. The Premier has been given multiple opportunities to stand up and encourage Albertans to get a flu shot, and she won't do it. What she's saying to health care professionals is: "I don't care if more people get sick. What I'll do is that I'll make sure that there's medication. That's a key issue."

Mr. Rutherford: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been called.

Point of Order Relevance Imputing Motives

Mr. Rutherford: On 23(b) – we are not on topic; I think we are very far off it – and also on 23(i). To say that the Premier doesn't care if people get sick, I think, is a comment that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud should apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On 23(b) I have to disagree. I've been listening to the member. It has been related to Bill 4 but also the events that have led up to Bill 4, which, yes, can get broad, but we are at second reading. I think it's all been in order. That having been said, I did not actually hear the comment under 23(i) that the member is referring to, that specific language, so I will have to defer to you, Mr. Speaker, if there was a point of order. I would suggest likely not, but I will leave it to you.

The Speaker: The Speaker is prepared to rule unless there are any other submissions. I agree with respect to the matter around relevance, and I – without the benefit of the Blues I'm not a hundred per cent sure exactly what the member said. If she did say that, it probably is a point of order. Certainly, she has made a number of statements specifically directed at a member of the Assembly that could be construed as accusations about a member, and it's . . . [interjections] Order.

This always moves us down a trail of language that's likely to create disorder, and if the hon. member would like to make references to the government or others, it certainly depersonalizes the debate and I would encourage her to do so.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the government does not send a message to Albertans about encouraging them to take preventative health care actions that are very clear actions that can be taken to relieve pressure off the health care system, the message that the government and the leader of the government are sending to health care workers is that we are not interested in alleviating the work and the stress and the strain that you're experiencing. Instead, we've heard a government take a position of wanting to increase capacity. Their focus is always on more sick Albertans, and their frustration is that we don't have capacity for more sick Albertans. What I can tell you is that not only is that not comforting as a parent or as an Albertan, that my government wants to see more people sick rather than address the core issues that would actually minimize illness, but it also sends a message to health care workers that we think that you will just keep on going, that you will keep on handling the enormous strain.

We have all heard messages in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker, from health care workers, front-line health care workers, who are talking to us about how burned out they are, about working doubles, about not finding somebody who is able to take over and they continue on in the shift. We're seeing horrific stories out of children's hospitals right now, stories that are a parent's nightmare. The idea of not being able to access the health care, not just not being able to access but the quality – I am terrified as a parent in this province right now of something happening to my child that requires me to go to a children's hospital because I don't know the conditions and how long they'll be waiting. I know that the staff have been working far too hard for two and a half years to compensate for the lack of judgment from this government, from disdain from this government, from disrespect for the working conditions and continuing to layer on more and more challenges onto our health care system.

It began with this, Mr. Speaker. It began with what Bill 4 is attempting to address. Of course the government is now able to stand up and say that they'll repeal the ability to unilaterally terminate a contract with the Alberta Medical Association because they already exercised it. They did what they wanted to do. They didn't have the courage to speak to that when they did it, and they don't have the courage to speak to it now when they're trying to atone for it. I can say that that means it's not much of an apology – is it? – when they won't even say the words. If it's no longer necessary for this provision to be there, they should explain why they thought it was necessary in the first place, because this has been two and a half years of an attack on our health care system which began with this provision, which began with a Minister of Health who was disdainful towards the very professionals which our Albertans and our health care system have relied on during a public health crisis that we hadn't seen in a generation. [interjection] I give way.

Member Irwin: You know, sorry to interrupt, but probably good for you to take a short break because you are – and I'm not even being facetious – very passionate about this. You and the Member for Edmonton-City Centre in particular have been incredibly vocal on children's health in particular, and I know many Albertans appreciate that so, so much.

I just think back only, oh, gosh, 24, 48 hours ago, Monday, our first opportunity to speak about the discharging of folks from Rotary Flames House – of kids; I shouldn't say folks – receiving respite services. Of course, at our earliest opportunity we put forward an SO, a standing order, for an emergency debate on children's health, and it was denied by this government. Moments later our leader put forward a private member's bill to address the crisis in health care. It was denied by this government, the same government members who right now refuse to stand up and speak to and defend their actions on health care. Says a lot.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I agree. I think this is a pattern, right? We don't see an actual acknowledgement of the wrong that was done here, and then it's pretty much impossible without that for Albertans to actually think that this government has learned any lessons or is changing course at all.

While I have certainly remained frustrated that this is the health care bill that's brought in, that we're not seeing an action plan, which is what hospitals and what health care professionals are asking for, to actually address, for example, the most pressing health care crisis that we have right now, around children's health, although it's by no means the only health care crisis because we know continuing care and individuals who are seeking surgical treatments and procedures are also still delayed – but we're not seeing any acknowledgement that any of the actions taken so far by this government on these issues are failing. What we have seen is more chaos.

This Bill 4 is meant to address the chaos that began in 2019, but we are seeing the escalation of that chaos: firing the chief medical officer of health, firing the entire AHS board, now we hear that the deputy chief officers of health have also resigned. This is not the picture of a government that either (a) is able to handle the crisis that they're facing right now or (b) is even aware of the fact that they are contributing exponentially to the chaos in our health care system.

No lessons have been learned, Mr. Speaker, and I think all Albertans can't move forward unless we actually hear that, until we actually hear that they understand that they were wrong then and they continue to be wrong now. Until we have a Premier who is also willing to lead on actually taking the actions that our health care system needs by encouraging Albertans to go out and get their flu shots – let me do that. I encourage all Albertans to go out and get their flu shot for our kids and for our public health, to make sure that we are not putting more pressure on our health care professionals, whom we rely on desperately and whom we are very, very grateful for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question or have the minister to close debate.

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, just so I can know, how much time could I have to close debate?

The Speaker: Fifteen minutes.

Mr. Copping: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much, colleagues, for the debate. Happy to move to close debate on Bill 4. First of all, I want to say to members across the aisle: thank you for supporting this bill. It is greatly appreciated. You know, I've had the opportunity to hear much of the debate that has gone on in this Chamber over the last few days since we introduced this bill, and I just wanted to make comments on two key facts.

First, although I appreciate the fact that the members of the opposition are willing to support the bill, I've also heard some of their concerns. They're suggesting that the challenges being faced in our health care system at this point in time, which are real, Mr. Speaker, are a result of past actions and past policies that were taken by this party earlier on in our mandate. I just want to comment that, if we look around the country, the same challenges are being faced by other provinces at the same time, for the same reasons, COVID. That belies the assertion that it was caused by past policy choices; it, rather, is because of the significant challenges that have been posed by COVID and the impact that it's had on our health care system and on our health care human resources. I would suggest that that assertion being made by the other side, quite frankly, is not correct.

The other general comment that I've heard from the other side on this is what's not in the bill even though they may agree to removing the one aspect of 40.2 in the Alberta health insurance act. What the concern is is what's not in the bill and suggesting, quite frankly, that the challenges that we're facing in Alberta in terms of strains on our health care system and lack of staff in certain areas of the province can be fixed by legislation. A member earlier just commented that the private member's bill would address these crises in health care. Mr. Speaker, the ways to address these issues in health care that we're facing and every other province in the country is facing are not necessarily through legislation that's simply going to say, "We're going to measure," which is in essence what we already do; it is through concrete actions and concrete plans that our government is already taking to address these challenges.

Mr. Speaker, you know, we talk about building capacity in our health care system. We are spending more money than we've ever spent before, $22 billion this year. We're increasing that amount. There are additional amounts on top to deal with COVID and to get caught up on surgeries. We are actually investing this money in every part of our health care system.

We are focusing on prevention. I am very pleased that we announced MAPS, modernizing Alberta's primary care. We know that we need to focus on primary care to keep people out of the hospitals when they're the sickest, and we can learn from other countries on how we can be more effective doing this. I'm very much looking forward to their interim recommendations on what we can do as quick hits to be able to improve access to primary care but in addition their longer term vision, because we know we need to migrate towards that. We need to look at a model, quite frankly, of primary care, community-based care, home-based care. Mr. Speaker, we need to look at prevention.

I was very pleased not only that, you know, we talk about prevention. The hon. member across the way just recently mentioned this in terms of one thing is getting your flu shot. We are running a campaign. Our government is running a campaign right now. Text messages have recently come out on this asking people to make the choice to get their flu shot to protect themselves, especially as we're going through a challenging flu season this year, having not had, basically, a flu season prior to last spring for a number of years.

We know, Mr. Speaker – and this brings it back to Bill 4 – that retention and attraction of health care professionals is a challenge. It's a challenge being faced here in Alberta, particularly in rural areas. It's a challenge being faced across the entire country. You know, we are having some successes on this. We have more doctors, we have more nurses than ever before in this province. Now, quite frankly, they're not enough, but this bill delivers on a commitment that our government made in agreement with the AMA, and that agreement follows three key themes.

It's about partnership, working with the AMA. We know we need to work together to provide the services that Albertans need to be able to attract and retain doctors in this province. Even though we have more doctors than ever before, we still know we need more, and we need them in the right places, in the right specialties.

Secondly, it's about stability. This agreement adds approximately 750 million additional dollars over the next number of years to be able to attract and retain doctors.

Quite frankly, third, it's about innovation. We know that different methods of pay need to be put in place, and we need to work jointly with doctors. The fee-for-service model may work good for some specialties, but for others it doesn't promote allied health professionals working together. It doesn't promote dealing with patients particularly who need complex care and seniors. Changing that method of pay: there's an commitment in this agreement to work on that.

Once again, I'm very pleased that we reached this agreement with the AMA, with over 70 per cent ratification rate, and that this can help form the foundation for retention and attraction of doctors. Once again I want to thank the hon. members on the other side of the aisle for agreeing to support this bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 3

Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022

[Adjourned debate December 6: Mr. Hanson]

The Speaker: Is there anyone else wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for St. Albert has risen.

5:00

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak at second reading to Bill 3, Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. I'm surprised, actually, that none of the government members jumped to their feet. I have heard for many years now in this Chamber how important these issues are, so it's a little bit disappointing that no members have decided to jump up and weigh in. In any event, I'm going to do my best to go through this piece of legislation and offer some thoughts. Actually, I have a few questions, so hopefully at later stages we'll be able to get some clarification or some answers.

Bill 3 is really sort of not a correction but, I guess, the next step of Bill 206. People will probably remember that Bill 206 was, I think, originally introduced by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and then I think there was unanimous consent to change the member, and it became Brooks-Medicine Hat. All of that happened in 2020. The UCP at that time brought forward that piece of legislation, which, sadly, at the time actually failed to address a number of the issues related to property rights that Albertans had been calling for for quite some time. So, as we have said previously, we support this legislation to bring property rights and remedies in line with legislation in other provinces in the country.

In fact, what happened with Bill 206 – there were a number of issues that were identified in Bill 206. I can't remember exactly what happened at the time and didn't have a chance to read through Hansard, but ultimately it did get referred to the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights, which issued a report in June of 2022. I was not on that committee, so it was quite helpful to have the report to look at and to see. It was actually quite interesting, Mr. Speaker. I think the report sort of lays out in detail the consultation that was involved, which is terrific, and I will talk a little bit about the various consultation processes that have impacted or resulted in what we see today with Bill 3.

What Bill 3 does is that it provides some clear rules within and across jurisdictions that can help create some economic certainty and good relations, actually, between neighbours and businesses. My colleague from Edmonton-Whitemud yesterday, I think, did a really good job about sort of putting on her lawyer hat and telling us, giving us a little bit of background about why this was essential and where some of the confusion would come up under property rights, and that was quite helpful. It's easy to understand why there would be some confusion or potential conflict between neighbours and businesses. Clear rules that are created as a result of extensive consultation on this subject, consultation with subject experts, with people that are requesting these changes, is really important.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, you know, strangely enough, what will likely happen tonight as it relates to Bill 1 is that the government, who are unwilling, clearly, to hear more about why Bill 1 is just a disaster and needs to go, is shutting down debate, and they haven't done their homework in terms of consultation. Now, they've likely talked to their friends and insiders and Rebel media or whatever they talk to, but they have not done a good job in consultation. My colleague the critic for Indigenous affairs, I think, has been very clear about: we have a duty to consult before we bring this legislation forward, before we start having these debates and voting. Clearly, that has not been done. Now, members opposite have said the opposite and said, you know, "Yeah, we picked up the phone" or "Someone called me" or "We did this," but there's no clear consultation process.

A meaningful consultation process requires time and effort, as you'll hear a little later in this bill debate. That has not happened with Bill 1, and that's unfortunate, because I think most of us can agree that when we take the time to actually speak to the correct people – and putting political parties aside or alliances aside, when you actually take the time to identify who the subject experts are, who are the people that will be impacted by the legislation, when you take the time to speak to them and hear their ideas, you just create better legislation. Obviously, that was not done with Bill 1, as Bill 1 is more of a political game, I would say.

In any event, this bill, the property rights amendment act, is an example of a bill drafted after consultation, after receiving advice from communities and stakeholders and experts, one of those experts being the Alberta Law Reform Institute. We know the bill was the subject of public consultation as discussed by a legislative committee over several weeks. As such, the bill provides an example to the UCP, as I mentioned, about what is an appropriate and lawful process for powers of the legislative branch.

The bill acknowledges the role that the courts and the judicial branch must play to arbitrate disputes and provide remedies between parties. In short, the bill and the process to draft it run absolutely contrary to the UCP's Bill 1. It's not lost on me that this particular bill, that took a whole lot longer to develop than Bill 1, is actually in line with our jobs. That's our job as legislators, to create legislation and to debate legislation but to create legislation by using a process. So for us to sit in this place and think that we have the answers for all things and to develop legislation without actually speaking to the people who are impacted, you have to know that it's not going to be the best piece of legislation possible.

In contrast to Bill 1, which received no public consultation and, in fact, will have very little debate time because this government is clearly a government not onside with enhancing democracy or letting democracy flourish in any way, as we see for the framework of Bill 1 but also the work that they did creating Bill 1 – their lack of consultation and all of that was not drafted on the advice of constitutional law experts, obviously, and it does not respect the separation of powers. I would just like to again add to the record that Bill 1 is such a good contrast to this particular piece of legislation.

I don't mind saying that I am quite happy that Bill 3 came with as much work as it did. I think for those of you that have not had a look at the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights final report that was issued in June 2022, I would encourage you to do that. [interjection] Go ahead.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much to my colleague. I think the contrast between Bill 3 and Bill 1 is an excellent one, particularly given when you look at the public report from the select special committee and you see how many public members were able to come and make presentations, when you're able to see how many submissions were received and, really, the in-depth process. Now, of course, we know Bill 3: these issues have been introduced into the Legislature repeatedly, often through private members' bills of various forms, so in the end we have a piece of legislation that has been incredibly well canvassed and has multiple perspectives reflected in it. I really just wanted to comment that I think the line of comparison between Bill 3 and Bill 1 is quite stark. We have within the caucus now a bill in Bill 3 that we can support.

Ms Renaud: Thank you to the member. That is an excellent point. I think the differences between Bill 1, which is the job-killing sovereignty act, and this bill, Bill 3, are just very stark. One took a long time to develop, and I think, as the member noted, that it came through private member bills and it has been debated, actually, over a number of years. Then to have the special select committee take a deep dive and, you know, do the road show like they did, I think, was a really terrific idea to make sure that everybody had a chance to weigh in.

But, you know, this . . . [interjections] Hope I'm not interrupting you over there. The bill is an example of the government realizing that it got it wrong in its 2020 bill, and it went back and did some significant consultation and committee work to correct the bill, which I actually do appreciate. You know, Madam Speaker, I would say that none of us always gets it right, for sure. Nobody's perfect. We all make mistakes. Sometimes we forget steps in a process that we need to take. That's completely normal. It happens. I think it takes a big person or a big government – that's odd, that I'm saying that. You guys are a big government. It takes a mature government, maybe let's say, to realize: "You know what? We can make this better. We can stop and really consult and make it better."

I wish, Madam Speaker, that those would be sort of the tools that would be used for other bills because so many times we have seen things arrive here and then get jammed through with time allocation. You know, time is cut off, we're not able to debate as long as we'd like to, and things just go ahead, and then these unanticipated consequences, and then harm continues, and it's really, really difficult to undo that damage. [interjection] Go ahead.

Member Irwin: Thank you to the Member for St. Albert for letting me interject. I just wanted to point out, you know, the mention of the fact, from the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods as well, which was a very apt point, about the level of consultation. I know some of our members have spoken to this bill and talked about the committee work and the deep level of consultation, of course, all coming through private members' bills. I just can't help but again point out on the record that there have been some really important private members' bills. There's been bipartisan support on some of those bills but not for our bills, not for opposition bills. Just on Monday Bill 201 from our leader, from Edmonton-Strathcona, was shot down, right? So it's frustrating to hear this government's talk about the importance of consultation, the importance of getting their legislation right when they're not even willing to allow for opposition members to have the same opportunity to get their legislation right. They don't even get the chance to debate it.

Ms Renaud: Thank you to the member for those comments. She's, you know, quite right. There are very different standards for government members and for opposition members. Rarely are the bills that we bring forward given the same treatment that private member bills from the government side are, which is, again, not great. I am quite thankful that there was a bit of a change, that our bills will not go to committee, but then again we saw the shenanigans that happened the other day when our bill, our first private member bill, was introduced and then got shoved down to the bottom of the Order Paper, so we're never going to be able to debate it. So once again you see a government that is really – they don't seem to be really big supporters of democracy, let's just say.

In any event, you know, I did want to put something on the record. Again, I am giving props to the government for taking their time and doing their work and doing the best job that they can to get this right. It's really important to Albertans. Property rights, obviously, are essential. You want to get it right. But I so wish – and you're probably hearing a theme between the people standing up and asking questions or sharing comments, and that is that there is stark contrast between this, which obviously seems to be important to the government, and other pieces of legislation, that are very important to Albertans but don't get the same treatment.

I want to take you back a little bit to contrast with Bill 21, that we saw in 2019. There was – and perhaps I'm wrong, and the government can correct me. I don't think there was any consultation there, and that was the bill, the omnibus bill, if members will remember, that included pretty much everything but the kitchen sink, and it was a lot of damage.

One of the damaging changes that was contained in that omnibus bill was deindexation of benefits, and not just AISH; that was deindexation of benefits for low-income seniors. Yes, I'm contrasting with this bill, Madam Speaker. That particular piece of legislation is unlike this. What we tried to say at that time was: "What you're doing here is going to harm people. We know this. It's going to add pressure to food banks. We know this. It's going to contribute to homelessness. We know this." And now three years later we see it has happened. I hope that, like Bill 3, we will all have an ability to – when we are saying, "Look, this is a problem; this is going to harm a lot of people," the government will listen and actually do their jobs and consult and find out: "Are we correct? Is that correct? Is that information correct? Can we actually prove or say with certainty that this bill will not harm Albertans?" That has not been the case.

We urge the government to use its own Bill 3 as an example of how the legislative process can and should work. For example, when the landowners have a dispute, they can refer to the clarified guidelines. Clarification is always very good and appreciated. When the courts . . . [interjection] Oh, go ahead.

Ms Pancholi: Thank you to the member. I just wanted to ask. I don't want to cut you off before you go down this too much, but I think that in terms of clarification, you know, as the member said, this bill is a way to really clarify and take responsive action to consultation – right? – to really engage with people, and to hear what would be clear. As you mentioned, this is not something we have seen happen very often with some other government member bills. In fact, when you talk about a clear process and clarification that is happening under Bill 3, I'm wondering if you can contrast that to – for example, there was a very unclear process under the government's Bill 1, which was introduced in this very same session, which actually provided a lot of uncertainty and chaos and continues to do so whereas this bill seems very much focused on trying to actually make it clear to Albertans how to exercise their rights and how to seek that guidance from the courts where necessary but also how to resolve matters themselves. So is there a contrast here that you see between those two?

The Deputy Speaker: I'm just going to take the opportunity to intervene here. While interventions may be broadly about anything, the debate on the bill must be about the debate on the bill.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, I mean, it couldn't be more clear, stark with this particular piece of legislation. Actually, there was a lot of thought put into it, there was a lot of consultation, and I wish we could say that about other pieces of legislation, particularly Bill 1. I think that Albertans will recognize when somebody – I mean, when you're having a conversation with someone, when you're talking to someone and they're trying to shut you up, there's a reason. That's what it feels like, that this government has introduced a piece of legislation and doesn't want to talk about it very much. So it's been a few days of, you know, a lot of opposition, a lot of comments in the public, a lot of concerns, a lot of questions with no answers, and it is very confusing. Now we find out that likely we're not going to have much more time to debate. But, in any event, Bill 3 is not that. I am grateful for that.

Now, there are three concerns that we as a caucus do have. I'm really hopeful that at later stages we'll get some answers from the government side. I'm not hugely optimistic because their MO seems to be: say nothing; don't make eye contact; run away.

The three concerns that we have. First of all, we would like the Assembly to be exceedingly clear that Indigenous and treaty rights will be respected, are respected in the context proposed in this legislation. That would include First Nations, Métis, and Inuit right holders. Will the government make clear on the record its intent with respect to Indigenous rights holders; for example, with respect to exercising treaty rights and traditional activities?

A question for the government: did the government consult Indigenous communities on the legislation? It's a really easy answer, and it would be very disappointing if we heard again from the minister responsible for Indigenous affairs that – you know, we ask about consultation. We get things like, "Well, yeah, you know, I contacted a couple of people" or "They called me up." That's not consultation; those are phone calls. Consultation is a process. It's a well-thought-out process that looks at: who are the stakeholders, and who will be impacted? It usually takes time, often costs money, but it's really important and essential. We want to know what happened. What was that like with First Nations, with Métis people, and with Inuit right holders? What was that consultation like, and can you tell us what the result was? Are they happy with this piece of legislation?

The second concern. The Alberta Law Reform Institute in their blog from August 2021 – that was Stella Varvis – has proposed that a tribunal, ombudsman, or alternate dispute resolution should be considered along with the legislative amendment so that it doesn't create unnecessary capacity issues for the courts. Now, obviously, we often hear this when we are debating legislation: let's not inadvertently add pressure to systems that are already overwhelmed; let's not inadvertently create more difficulties. It can be very difficult and expensive to go through the courts. You know, did the government do all of the work they needed to do to ensure that that wouldn't happen? One of the concerns we have is that it will add pressure to the courts.

Also, another question that we have, that hopefully the government members or somebody will answer in later stages, is: can the minister and the government outline the planned steps that they're taking to address additional capacity issues in the courts if, in fact, that ends up being the vehicle or the direction that they go?

The Deputy Speaker: Are there other members wishing to join the debate on Bill 3 in second reading? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. You know, since being elected to this Legislature in 2015, I represent a rural riding. While I haven't had a great number of constituents come into my office to discuss this issue, I have had some, so I wanted to stand up and speak this afternoon to Bill 3, which I think is a bill worthy of support.

In many of these cases, when I've had a constituent come into my office, they're concerned about a property line that maybe has been misdrawn, a fencing line, or it's perhaps a neighbour who has, in putting in a driveway to their farmyard, gone across a property line, often not knowing they've done that but having had that occur.

In many of the cases the issues had been created many years prior to the constituent coming into my office. You know, it often happened when the land was being cleared or the farmyard was being graded and the farmhouse was being put on the property and it was discovered, maybe even many years later, that the offending landowner had crossed a property line.

They were reluctant now to move that fence or they were reluctant to move that driveway, sometimes at great expense. Sometimes the offending landowner would then come back on the registered landowner and claim that they should be able to keep the property because of adverse possession rights.

Of course, the constituent that would come into my office would be a little frustrated, maybe a great deal frustrated because in many cases they had never even heard of adverse land rights, or squatter's rights, as sometimes they call it in my neck of the woods.

Bill 3, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, is designed to stop people from taking ownership of someone else's land. The Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, will ensure that the registered owners of a piece of property are protected from the individuals who claim ownership through adverse possession, or squatter's rights; that is, if they've occupied the property for at least 10 years.

Interestingly, adverse possession claims can only be made against private landowners. Public land, municipal land, irrigation districts: they're all exempted from adverse possession. It's the private landowner that has sometimes had a problem with a neighbour that has claimed adverse possession rights.

Now, if passed, the Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, will update the Law of Property Act, the Land Titles Act, and the Limitations Act in order to eliminate claims of adverse possession. It will remove the burden from registered property owners to be continually monitoring their land in order to prevent people from taking possession and over a period of time claiming squatter's rights.

This legislation, should it be passed, will allow registered property owners to get a court order at any time to regain possession of their property from someone who illegally occupies it. It's providing a legal capacity or a road to be able to redress what is obviously an issue.

In a country that has a strong rule of law, we believe in the right to own property and to be able to purchase property and to be able to maintain a capacity to decide how that property will be used and by whom that property will be used. This bill, Bill 3, moves us forward in helping private property landowners to be able to protect themselves and their property.

The Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act will abolish the ability of squatters to make a claim, and it will give private landowners the same protections that were once reserved only for the government of this province. If someone is possessing land for which they are not the registered owner, the registered owner can go to court to regain possession at any time.

Over the last 10 years advocates and past governments have pushed to abolish adverse possession. For instance, in 2016 the Property Rights Advocate office recommended abolishing adverse possession. In 2021 this government created the Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights. This committee was formed, and it travelled across the province speaking to stakeholders. The MLA Select Special Committee on Real Property Rights did extensive public consultation in 2021, and it received multiple requests to abolish adverse possession.

Now, the Alberta Law Reform Institute identified nine cases in the eight years leading up to 2020 where adverse possession had become an issue in the province of Alberta. In April 2020 they provided the government with seven recommendations to end squatter's rights. These recommendations were and have been placed into the report and placed into the law or the legislation, the bill that we are looking at today. The committee tabled its final report in June 2020, and in its final report they recommended the abolishment of adverse possession.

Other provinces and territories like Saskatchewan and New Brunswick and Yukon Territory have had to address the issue of adverse possession, and they've done so by passing laws banning squatter's rights. Property rights advocates like Farmers' and Property Rights Advocate Peter J. Dobbie are in support of this bill.

Removing adverse possession will bring some peace of mind to registered landowners and ensure that they can use and enjoy their registered property. I know that for the constituents that have come into my office, they will be supporting and want me to support this bill. This bill would have helped them five or six years ago, when they were coming into my office. This doesn't happen very often, but I know that the constituents that I have met with were absolutely at their wits' end trying to address the issue over squatter's rights on what should have been their land.

Madam Speaker, I believe that this is a good bill. I believe it addresses an issue that for some constituents and people across this province has become an issue. For this reason, I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Pleased to rise to speak to Bill 3, Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022. As this House well knows, I'm a former real estate agent of 30 years. As such, I have a great interest in any legislation which touches upon property rights and real estate in this province. I know that in my career, of course, I have had situations personally where there were incidents of defined adverse possession that occurred on properties that I had listed or was intending to sell to a buyer.

5:30

Often, Madam Speaker, these adverse possession issues are not cases of negligent behaviour or intentional behaviour on the part of landowners but, most often, innocent errors. I would say that it's really not, of course, defined as a rural issue although primarily, in the public's mind, those are the cases that they think of, where somebody will have built a cabin on rural property that's in a wooded area and lives on it for a while and takes possession in hopes of taking over the land in a malicious way from the legitimate owner by relying upon adverse possession claims. Of course, we're very pleased, or I'm very pleased as a former realtor, to see this property rights amendment act come forward to address adverse possession and abolish it.

Of course, there are some concerns that I still have that linger around the remaining assets that may be on lands that were subject to adverse possession claims and the satisfaction of disputes over those improvements between the former claimant of adverse possession or somebody who's built something on somebody else's land and now wants to be compensated for it following the rules and regulations contained in Bill 3, the property rights amendment act. Of course, Madam Speaker, we all know that in business time is of the essence. Whether it's a piece of rural property between farmers or agricultural producers or somebody owns a recreational tree lot for hunting purposes or just simply recreation purposes or whether it's a downtown parcel of land in Calgary or Edmonton where someone has inadvertently built across a property line and is now seeking compensation, there are other remedies that may be available in law.

But in the case of an adverse possession claim where there are improvements that are situated on a property, this legislation attempts to address how indeed those disputes will be settled, how the individual who has built improvements on the land, whether it be a well or whether it be a house or a building or any type of structure, may get compensated for the improvements that they put on the land that they, in fact, didn't own. I wonder and I want to seek real clarification, Madam Speaker – and I'm sure all members of the Alberta Real Estate Association would be interested in hearing this as well – as to how the process is really going to work, because if it indeed does not incent an individual who is seeking compensation for improvements on land that is not theirs, if it does not incent them to be seeking that compensation in a timely manner – in other words, if they are able to draw out the whole process and drag their feet, it may be in their best interests to do so.

I'm hoping that the remedies in this act to allow that individual to gain compensation for improvements that will remain with the land and the rightful owner are such that they have to act in a timely fashion or they end up losing their rights to compensation, because to add insult to injury, if this bill, you know, goes ahead and abolishes adverse possession but, in fact, allows the landowner to be, over a long period of time, suffering the effects of a foot-dragging former holder of that land because they see it's in their best interests not to settle, then, of course, the full remedy to that landowner has not been effected. That's a fairly significant concern that I have.

But I think this whole property rights amendment act and the concept of property rights speak to the real importance, Madam Speaker, of maintaining the publicly housed and administered land titles registry office. There was an attempt earlier by this government to sell off the land titles registry. That was abruptly halted. I fear that they will make another run at this and try it again. But I think it's pretty good evidence,

Madam Speaker, about the importance of maintaining the sacrosanct nature of public ownership and operation and having that data bank housed under the dome, let's say, of a public registry, because people in business need to have absolute confidence in the land titles registry system.

There are other systems in operation, even in Canada, which are less reliable. I know that you'll have a title deeds system, which goes back to the parish set-up in Quebec, which necessitates people to search a title in successive searches to chain one piece of title and ownership to another.

That also happens in the United States, where you have title deed companies, private corporations which can charge a lot of money for somebody to search and verify title, but indeed you're relying upon corporate paper to verify your ownership whereas here in the province we have a system of land registration which is guaranteed by the province. There's an assurance fund which will take care of compensating individuals for mistakes made on title, but they are very rare indeed. That is something, Madam Speaker, that in this particular case, where we see cases of adverse possession and the lingering improvements that are being compensated for over time, the real landowner can rely upon. [interjection] I'll yield to the intervention.

Member Irwin: Thank you. I really, truly hated to interrupt the Member for Edmonton-McClung because, of course, as a – do I say former realtor?

Mr. Dach: Former realtor.

Member Irwin: Former. Okay. I guess teachers – we like to not say “former” because you're, like, always a teacher.

Anyways, as a former realtor he's got a very in-depth understanding, and I actually was learning a little bit there with his reference to the parish system in Quebec and whatnot. That's all news to me. You know, I especially appreciated his comments around land titles because I do know – admittedly, I don't hear a lot about property rights in my own riding, but I have heard a little bit about some of the delays with land titles claims. I know that a lot of Albertans are struggling with some of that, and Service Alberta was planning to try to address some of those big concerns. I would appreciate the member to just continue talking about some of the connections there with land titles and what we see in the property rights amendment act because, as always, I learn a great deal from my former realtor counterpart, the Member for Edmonton-McClung. I must say as well, you know, that I'm appreciative of the member. Sorry. Go ahead.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I must say that even though technically I'm no longer a realtor, because I gave up my real estate licence to avoid any conflict of interest once I was elected, I'm always, as many realtors are, a realtor at heart. I take a very strong interest in issues regarding real estate matters, and this is no exception.

Yeah, the land titles office is really at the heart of the issue of property rights because that is what people rely upon in this province to verify their ownership and title. It's a simple matter of pulling your title and looking at it and saying: there's your name. The government of Alberta guarantees and assures that that title is correct. In many jurisdictions in Canada and around the world it's not so clear as to who actually owns land. You have to paper together your verification of ownership, and the disputes over that are many. It's a costly thing to actually verify title, and you have to buy insurance.

Insurance is available here, too, but that insurance is more widely used now than it used to be because our land titles operation in the province has been understaffed now. A lot of people were laid off, and they haven't been hired back, so we have real estate lawyers in this province now clamouring for the government to get rid of the backlog of registrations, now measured in months, not days or weeks. It is damaging to the economy of this province, and I don't understand why indeed they're looking at a property rights amendment act. They weren't at the same time looking at making sure that the number of people required to be hired at land titles to get the processing time to a normal period of operation very quickly. As I mentioned with respect to this Bill 3, time is of the essence, and we're worried about how much time it might take to satisfy a dispute between the rightful owner and the former adverse possession claimant in satisfying issues of the cost of improvements and compensation for those improvements.

Time is of the essence in every business transaction, including real estate transactions, Madam Speaker, and right now land titles, which used to be a proud operation of Alberta's government – and it used to operate in, you know, carbon paper style down at the Brownlee Building, and it actually worked pretty well. It's updated to a certain extent, but now you can't even go to get counter service. I had an individual at my office a couple of days ago who tried because she wanted to go back to her maiden name, after going through a divorce, on a land title and was unable to have anybody do anything at the Brownlee Building at the land titles office because everything is now online. She had to make an online submission to even gain access. She couldn't talk to anybody. That's a little bit disturbing, as a side issue.

With respect to the bill before us, the property rights amendment act and its relation to the land titles, I mean, for us to do anything that would diminish the faith that the public has in our land titles registration system would be a shameful thing to do. I'm hoping that – while the government's intent is of course supported by me and, I think, most members of the public to get rid of adverse possession and to ensure that the compensation for improvements that are on those lands is settled out and sorted out in a timely fashion, there are many more things that the government needs to be doing with respect to the proper transaction of land titles in the registry in the province of Alberta.

We have a government here that talks about being a strong supporter of business and economic development, yet we've got a land titles system – one of the fundamental activities of business is the transaction of land, and it's being held up. Lawyers are actually at their wits' end, Madam Speaker. I spoke to a gentleman who I used to do real estate transactions with regularly who's a real estate lawyer in town, and I found that they are no longer able to extend insurance and reassurances between themselves to allow transactions to close. They're at the capacity of the insurance limitations between themselves, even using western protocol, and they don't know where they're going to go beyond this.

The answer, of course, is to get land titles up to speed and hire the people that need to be hired. I know that the minister suggested that they were going to have the individuals who were being trained right now do the simple stuff and then continue on with the training for those that needed to be trained further for more complex matters, but it's not working, and it's really taking way too long. I mean, the legal community once again is screaming loud and clear, but the government is responding really slowly, whether it happens to be legal aid lawyers or lawyers operating in business, not only just real estate transactions for residential houses, but we're talking about multimillion-dollar transactions that are holding up construction of a major building, holding up development of land. That is a cost, a huge cost, to our Alberta economy.

I'd like to see more attention paid to that, Madam Speaker, quick and rapid attention so that our land titles office doesn't lose the integrity that it's enjoyed over decades. That would be a very damaging thing to have happen. It's suffering. The reputation of Alberta's land titles registration system is suffering under this government, and that's something that they would be remiss not to pay strong attention to and consult widely and listen to those individuals who are stakeholders in the area of transacting real estate in the province, particularly the lawyers who represent their clients and buyers and sellers in transacting real estate. Listen to the paralegals who work for them, who will tell you how difficult it is and how frustrating it is to have buyers and sellers not get a deal done. [interjection] I'll wait.

Member Irwin: Oh, my goodness. Again, I hate – the member is still giving a very eloquent discussion about land titles. Again, obviously, a clear connection to the bill in front of us. Without referring to the presence or absence of members, if the minister of service Alberta were able to weigh in a little bit on some of these changes, I'd be very curious to hear. In particular, we've heard from – I was cut off earlier, but I started to commend the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon for weighing in on this. You know, I asked him, actually, as I came back in the Chamber. I said, "Don't your members care about this topic?" And he said, "Damn right, and I'm going to talk about it right away," which was great, and I gave him a thumbs-up. So I would love if other members would weigh in because, as I've noted multiple times, I know that members on the government side hear about property rights, hear about squatters' rights. I'm sure the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has heard about this lots from his constituents.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for that intervention and for pointing out the sort of lack of interest on the government members' parts to participate in this debate. One would have thought, given how critically important it is to the business community in this province to have anything that is a detriment to the transaction of real estate act as an impediment to business, it would be something that would draw the attention of the members of the government caucus and would attract them to join in the debate to express their support for business in this province.

We're happy to do so on their behalf, to let it be known that the caucus on this side of the House, our NDP caucus, is a huge supporter of our businesses in this province, small and large. Of course, we know that small businesses are responsible for about 75 per cent of the economic development activity in the province.

The land titles registry and the office that is under the public domain right now has been proudly operating for many decades in this province and is something that we hope will be continuing to be operating as a publicly housed and administrated body so that business can have confidence in the land titles, not only when we talk about Bill 3 and adverse possession and the transaction of sales of land that has been subject to an adverse possession claim but also right throughout the province, Madam Speaker, in land transactions of every size and type that land titles, of course, must process.

The legal community has been very, very vociferous and clear, and they're expressing their extreme frustration with this government over the length of times it's taking to get the bottleneck at land titles fixed. The biggest problem, of course, is that there were a number of people who were fired, let go, at the land titles office, and they haven't been replaced. I know that the minister responsible is looking to train up people, but it's taking a long time and is costing our businesses a fortune.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there others to join the debate? Seeing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House and be able to add my comments to the bill, Bill 3, Property Rights Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, on behalf of my constituents and also concerned Albertans. I'm happy to see that this bill is actually being debated, and there seems to be agreement on both sides of the House on this bill being discussed.

This bill is also an outcome of the Alberta Law Reform Institute summary recommendation report. I also understand this is also fixing some of the problems of the bill that we debated a few years ago in this House that was presented by the government, Bill 206. I was looking in this report of the Alberta Law Reform Institute, the summary, where it concludes that adverse possession awards deliberate trespassers and penalizes registered owners, who are forced to give up some of their title lands without any compensation. This continues to persist despite the fact that successful cases are relatively rare.

I understand that the stakeholders advocated for this, and there was a report that was conducted. I also understand that this is what should have been done, generally speaking. Also, you know, this bill particularly reminds me how important it is to be open-minded, because things change over time. What is important today might not be interpreted into the same context after some time.

When I was looking at the squatters' law, I remembered those days, my childhood days, and conflicts and contradictions around these laws. There was pressure from the public, and also there was reaction. We hoped this bill would bring economic certainty; that is true. It is important. But when these bills were being introduced, particularly by the nonsocialist countries or then developing countries, they were aimed at bringing economic equality. So it's very interesting to see after 50 years that things have changed, and now I am standing in the House, and I'm speaking in favour of something that I was looking at very differently 30, 40 years ago.

The squatters' law or many, actually, laws, a line of those land ceiling acts: I remember that that was to stop, you know, unethical storing of public lands or residential properties and addressing the issue with those people. They would never be able to come up with such an amount to put up down payments to purchase properties due to given situations and their jobs. In the majority of cases there was only one family member in the household that would take care of the whole family. They lived years and years and decades and decades on properties and, you know, basically paid off those properties for the landlords but never had been able in their lifetimes to see such a house for themselves being able to be built.

I think it was also their way to address the housing issues. I also saw these laws being abused in my lifetime. You know, that happened too often to absentee landlords, public servants, or people moving, being transferred from one place to another, then ending up really renting their own properties and living on rent in different cities, a different part of the country, and then getting into trouble. [interjection] Definitely, I will give it to my colleague. Yeah.

Member Irwin: Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Meadows. I hesitate to interrupt, because he's also drawing on his own experience working, obviously, in insurance and a number of fields, you know, where he's dealing with landowners and whatnot. I am curious – I was genuine when I said earlier that this isn't a topic that I've heard at the doors in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, but I am absolutely certain many folks have in other ridings – if the member has heard anything specifically about the property rights amendment act. Could be, like the Member for Edmonton-McClung, land titles is something that you've heard a little bit about. I would just love to hear if this is something that your constituents are reaching out about, and if so, what is the nature of their feedback, of their concerns? Admittedly, it's a topic I would certainly love to hear more about, to learn more about, to speak more about. I'm happy to do that, and of course any opportunity that we get to share our constituents' feedback is a good one.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, hon. member, for the question. You know, definitely, as this report says, you know – I'll just refer to this report once again. It says that despite the facts successful cases are relatively very rare. It seems like the issue is not very prominent, but as I said, it's a privilege and an honour to participate in an act that will really help the concerns of the citizens in this way.

Part of this legislation we are discussing is that the stakeholders, the people that the government have heard from, or the Law Reform Institute summary was mandated to do. The people who they heard from: this is the outcome of this. I really wanted to relate it to – you know, I know that I have a very limited time today. I won't be able to actually expand on this. It's in my mind given that we do not have enough time in this evening, but I will look forward to speak more about this.

This is also because it's really allowed me to look into how history changes, how things change over time, why we need to be open-minded and, you know, willing to work together to address these very issues that belong to our constituents and the people of this province and where that has been ignored. We have another piece of legislation where the government could have learned in the same manner, but I see there's a lack of intent there. I'm referring to Bill 1, particularly.

Thank you.

Member Irwin: Yeah, absolutely. You know what? That's a really good segue from the member. Obviously, the focus here is on Bill 1, but the serious contrast between the lack of consultation on that bill, which sounds like it's going to be rammed through tonight, and this bill, which you've got to give the members of the committee props for the work that they did; they consulted – I don't know if it's thousands; don't quote me on that – a whole heck of a lot of Albertans. [interjection] Yeah, I'm quoted on that. It is Hansard. Good point. But they consulted a lot of Albertans – right? – from all corners of this province. I know they went to Hanna. They went to a number of other communities. It is intriguing, to say the least, this government's inconsistency when it comes to consultation on their bills. You know, we are supportive of this because, of course, we had our members weigh in on it as well, but contrast that with Bill 1, where we've seen, we've heard from multiple folks, including the treaty chiefs, that they haven't been appropriately consulted. That says a lot.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, hon. member, once again for your insights and for your question. Definitely, you know, I became very passionate about this piece of legislation when I saw this, the squatter and adverse possessions law . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the clock now strikes 6, and the House is adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 7, 2022

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

The Deputy Chair: The Committee of the Whole has under consideration government amendment A1 under the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this amendment? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the amendment on Bill 1. You know, when I was a kid, my dad had a favourite joke he used to like to tell us. This was one of a couple of jokes that he told us that he had learned growing up in Trinidad. This is a joke called wisdom pie.

The way it goes is that there was a man who didn't have much. He lived on the streets. He was forced to use his wits to survive. One day he had an idea. He managed to scrape together enough coins – begged, found – to get a little bit of butter, flour, and an egg, whipped up a sort of pie crust. He filled that pie crust with a substance that was in, shall we say, copious supply in a nearby cow pasture. He mixed it in with a little bit of cocoa that he found, covered it with a bit of cane sugar, and he baked it over an open fire. He took that pie, and he went out and knocked on a door in the community. When the homeowner came to answer, the man declared: "Hey, this is your lucky day, sir. You have a chance to be the first to try my special recipe, wisdom pie." The homeowner said: "Oh, wisdom pie. Well, what's that?" The poor man said: "Ah. Well, it's the most wonderful thing. You know, it's a magical pie. It's made from the freshest natural ingredients. It's guaranteed to give you a tremendous burst of energy, to raise your awareness, and to give you a long memory, and all this from a single bite."

Well, the homeowner was impressed. He thought it sounded like a wonderful thing, so he haggled with the seller for a few minutes before they settled on a price for the pie, and the seller quickly hurried off with his money. The homeowner went inside to sample this amazing purchase. He cut a slice, and he took a bite. As soon as he tasted what was in that pie, he instantly sat up and ran out the door to chase that seller down. He found the seller a few streets over, and he started giving him a pretty good chewing out, saying, you know, that he'd been cruelly tricked. The seller said: "No, no, no. Not at all. You see, clearly, one bite of that pie gave you a tremendous burst of energy that allowed you to run here so quickly, you're clearly far more aware than you were before, and I'm sure this is a memory that will last the rest of your life."

Mr. Chair, what we have before us in Bill 1 is a heaping serving of wisdom pie. The fact is that, yes, the bill has been amended, but – you know what? – no amount of cinnamon and spice and extra sugar changes what is at the heart of this bill. It does not change what is at the heart of that wisdom pie.

You know, I think back, Mr. Chair, to this spring, when I had the honour of introducing a private member's bill. I remember at that time being told my bill was not worthy of debate, being told that I had not consulted enough, in particular that I had not consulted enough with racialized communities, including Indigenous communities. I remember being told by one of the ministers, indeed the minister of what is essentially now labour, and his comments were:

Mr. Speaker . . . a bill of this nature requires a great deal of consultation, not just from the activist class or from the academic class but from a wide range of cultural communities.

The minister went to say:

Rather than taking into consultation different communities, they propose an unwieldy bill that would make it harder for government departments to function.

"A political football," he called it, Mr. Chair, and said that on that side of the aisle they were not interested in party and foolish politics.

That minister, Mr. Chair, has been one of the chief people stumping for this hot mess of a job-killing bill, an embarrassment of an act that did not see a single bit of consultation with Indigenous communities, who are owed the duty to consult under treaty rights. This minister stands in favour of that. If my bill was not worthy of debate, then this bill was not even worthy of ever being introduced. Far more thought and care went into that bill than has been spent in any of this bill that we have sent here. This bill is an embarrassment, is going to be incredibly damaging to our economy, and the government should be ashamed of ever having brought it into this House.

You know, we've been down this road before. Now, the bill is being amended, and the amendment is removing sweeping powers that this government chose to award to itself. The minister, of course, tried to deny this multiple times on social media, but the fact is that they are now essentially admitting it is true because they are amending to take it out. Now, of course, this just goes to show either how little thought the government put into this bill and that they failed to recognize the incredibly sweeping powers they were giving to themselves and are now amending out of existence, or they intended to do so and just got caught.

You know, I think back, Mr. Chair. Again, this is a government that is very fond of awarding itself extraordinary powers. We have another bill in front of this House right now, Bill 4, with which this government is taking back a power. When they brought in Bill 21, they said, "Well, we're just clarifying a power that we always feel we had," this being a government that is pretty presumptive, arrogant, entitled. I think those are appropriate words.

I think back to Bill 10, Mr. Chair. I remember the debate on Bill 10, where they expanded the powers that they had that were similar to this under the Public Health Act, going even beyond what they've tried to award themselves here in Bill 1, going so far as to allow themselves to create entirely new legislation without ever setting foot in the Legislature. Now, at least then that was within the context of a public health emergency, so at least there were some boundaries on it there. As embarrassing as that was and as much as they, in the end, then had to go and walk that entire thing back, strike an entire legislative committee, spend weeks with multiple MLAs to undo that bit of arrogance that they refused to listen when we were debating it here in the Chamber and we told them exactly what they were doing. But it blew back on them from their own supporters.

What we have in front of us now, we have clearly seen over the last week, is receiving incredible blowback from many in the community, to the point that we are now here debating this amendment to the bill today, an amendment which certainly removes a problematic portion of the bill, but ultimately, Mr. Chair, this bill at its core is wisdom pie. There is nothing to redeem here. There is nothing of value in this act. This amendment does not go far enough. The only amendment that would be appropriate would be an amendment that removed every single clause in every single portion of this bill.

Speaking back to consultation, Mr. Chair, we saw clearly today that the chiefs from the Assembly of First Nations spoke very clearly about what they think about this bill. Let's be clear. The duty to consult is not a duty to appoint someone to maybe go and talk to a few people after you've already introduced the legislation. It is not a duty to say that we'll send someone over to explain that to you because you don't understand what we're talking about. It is not a duty to say, "We'll pass the legislation; we'll put it in place; we'll put a little clause in saying that we promise to be nice to you; just trust us" and that's good enough.

The duty to consult means that you sit down with dignity and respect with Indigenous leaders, with First Nations, and you talk to them about what you are thinking of doing or what you are intending to do. You genuinely listen to their feedback in a way that allows them to actually participate in the process before you attempt to move legislation that affects them.

This government did none of those things because this government was in such a rush to bring in this flagship bill. It's clear that they barely even sat down and thought it through. They were so desperate to try to fulfill this radical promise of the Premier that she was going to give Alberta the power to never have to listen to anything the federal government ever said again, taken from a cockeyed idea from Alberta separatists who intentionally wanted to pick a political fight, a constitutional fight, who said: "Yeah. Absolutely, this legislation is one hundred per cent unconstitutional, and that's the point."

So the Premier had to try to find a way in a few short weeks to adapt that hot mess into this hot mess, into something that she could somehow get past all of the leadership candidates who now sit in her cabinet who spoke out against the very concept and idea of this bill repeatedly, on the record, talked about how destructive it would be for Alberta, how destructive it would be for our economy, the chaos it would cause.

What we have before us, Mr. Chair, is not a bill that's intended to do things better for Albertans. This is not a bill that is intended to improve our economy. It will not even improve things for our energy industry. It is here because it was a campaign promise for this Premier. It is about her political fortunes. It is about this government's intent to play political games in desperate hopes of re-election next May.

You know, again speaking of that consultation piece, Mr. Chair, as we look at this amendment, as this government tries to make a bad bill better and fails miserably because there is no redeeming it, one of the reasons that we have had so many challenges getting pipelines to tidewater built is because Conservative governments have done such a terrible job on the duty to consult. The fact is that we saw this repeatedly under Conservative federal governments. We saw that happen with Northern Gateway. It was killed because they tried to do a runaround on the duty to consult, to do it shorthand, find a shortcut, skip their homework, and they got called out by the courts.

And you know what? Even the Liberal government, when they came in and were working at getting TMX through, had to go back and backtrack and make sure they did that consultation. Now, of course, they were having to work on the poor foundation that had been laid before them, but the fact is that it still came down to the only reason that we have a pipeline to tidewater that will be in operation next year is because the Liberal government sat down and redid that consultation.

Our current mayor here in the city of Edmonton, actually, Mayor Amarjeet Sohi, in his role as the Minister of Natural Resources sat down and redid that consultation and made sure it was done thoroughly and before the facts, and that got the approval to allow that pipeline to be built. Well, that, of course, and the advocacy of the Leader of the Official Opposition, the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona, who was relentless in holding the Prime Minister to account to ensure that pipeline was funded and built. She did it, Mr. Chair, without a grandstanding hot mess of a piece of legislation that threatens to potentially scuttle any further energy infrastructure ever being built for the province of Alberta.

So we have here this amendment today which is removing some of the sweeping powers this government awarded itself. Again, that was certainly the largest concern that was raised, but it's not the only one, and multiple constitutional scholars have spoken out with concerns. Now, of course, this government has dug deep and spent days working to find the 1 in 10 dentists that will say that sugar does not cause cavities. They've managed to find a handful of those, but we know that the vast majority of constitutional scholars, lawyers, individuals have spoken out and said what we are saying: this bill is a hot mess. It's something that never should've seen the light of day in the Legislature, and it's something that will cause untold headaches and costs for Albertans and potential damage to our economy.

In the words of Ian Holloway, dean of the law school at the University of Calgary: "If I was grading one of my first-year law students on the actual writing of the bill, I'd give them a C minus at best. It's so poorly drafted, so riddled with internal contradictions. It's trying to thread a needle that's very hard to be threaded. To my mind, this is about as clearly an unconstitutional gambit as I have ever seen in my professional lifetime. The Premier is engaging in a game of political chicken. This is not really about asserting greater sovereignty for Alberta but, rather, winning the election and goading the federal government into saying or doing something intemperate."

Mr. Chair, this is what this government makes its Bill 1. It's what it's obsessed with. It is what it's pouring all its energy into at a time when we have real problems here in the province of Alberta: a health care crisis, a health care crisis for children. On that, this Premier has next to nothing to say other than: perhaps we'll get you some Tylenol in four to six weeks. But they have all the time in the world, all the power, all the resources to pour into this hot mess, this steaming wisdom pie.

Even with removing the sweeping powers that the government awarded itself in this bill and then attempted to say that it was not in fact actually awarding itself and then said, "Well, maybe," and then said, "Oh, oops, sorry; we'll pull that out" – even without that, there are several legal problems that remain that make it very likely that this bill is utterly unconstitutional, including trying to award powers to the Legislature which belong to the courts.

Now, I find that incredibly presumptive, Mr. Chair. I'm not a lawyer. I'm not a constitutional scholar. I do not believe that I have the personal ability as an elected legislator to determine what is and is not constitutional. Neither does any member on that side of the House or this side of the House. Even those that are lawyers do not have that ability. Now, each of us may have an opinion. Certainly, we're all allowed to have one of those. You know what the saying is: everyone has an opinion. But that is far, far different than saying that our opinion should carry the weight of the rule of law.

Now, of course, we as legislators are given enormous power to indeed introduce, debate, and to pass laws. For that, there is no requirement. There is no IQ test. There is no experience requirement because, of course, we want people of all experience, knowledge, skill sets to have the opportunity to represent the people of this province. But it is a far, far different thing, Mr. Chair, to say that anyone elected to this Legislature has the skill, the knowledge to be able to determine at the same level as our Supreme Court what is constitutional or that they should.

Now, I get it. It can be really frustrating, really aggravating when someone else does something you don't like. It can be absolutely frustrating when you feel that you do not have the power to retaliate or that the means of, I guess, pushing back take time, take effort, that you can't have instant satisfaction. But that is simply the reality of life, Mr. Chair. That is what it means to be an adult.

We have a system in place. If there is an issue of constitutionality, if we question whether or not something is constitutional, then we go to the courts, and the folks that are appointed to do that work, who have decades, in some cases, of experience, knowledge, training in making these: a group of them together will make that determination.

What we have here is a government that is insisting they have the right to throw a temper tantrum when something happens that they don't like, that because they don't like the time it would take to go through the courts – and let's be clear, Mr. Chair. This is a government that is happy to put that burden on other people. This is not a government that's been ashamed to trample on potentially labour rights and say: "Hey, if you don't like what we did, go to the court. In the meantime we're going to do what we like." They certainly weren't ashamed to do that in terms of taking away, again, with what we were debating . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, any other members looking to add – I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Thank you, Chair. I appreciate the acknowledgement and the chance to speak on the amendment to Bill 1 and just a couple of things that occurred to me when we saw this introduced last night. First of all, I was astonished to see that this amendment was almost half the size of the entire act, right? A very similar amount of rhetoric and talk, legalese and so forth, and similarly jumbled and well paired with the original bill as it was brought forward to us in its contradictions and its sort of vague associations from one thing to another.

Again, when we're looking for clues, like Sherlock Holmes, to see how this whole thing was made up, we can see that's it's been very haphazard and sort of glued together in the very quickest sort of way to satisfy some kind of need for – I don't know – internal problems that this UCP government might have or internal problems within their caucus. Whatever. But here it is, foisted upon the people of Alberta. We have to deal with this here in the Legislature.

You know, I've learned over the years as a legislator that you only really have two most valuable commodities available to you. You have time, and the time is rapidly ticking down on this government, I can tell you, right? It's slipping away to a matter of months to do something effective to deal with what Albertans actually want their government to deal with at this moment, this juncture in history: a 40-year high of unaffordable cost of living in all sort of ways possible, a public health system that is not there when you need it for yourself and your family, and all of the insecurity that is associated with those two immediate emergencies that need to be dealt with. And here we are burning time – right? – the very limited time that this government has left, discussing something that really needs to be dealt with in other ways.

Yes, of course, a government has to step up to Ottawa. I mean, provinces do it all the time. It's an important thing. We did it as government, and we will continue to do so again when we form the government again. But to put up these half-baked bills – they're more like a call to arms to I don't know what; some fringe group of our society – is a terrible waste of time.

The other thing, the other commodity that we have, I believe, as legislators – again, this government is burning through it like, you know, gambling in Las Vegas – is integrity. If people don't believe that your integrity is intact and that you're serving the people of this province, then it doesn't matter what you bring forward. Once your integrity is gone, they simply won't believe you. This is a huge dose of integrity compromise, Bill 1, and this amendment does nothing to fix that. It feels like, you know, you're trying to bail out the boat with a cup somehow – right? – and it just keeps on getting worse, and it's just not working. Yes, indeed.

I have categorical problems – I've said it before, right? – of the very existence of a sovereignty act being brought forward into this Legislature. Those very words cause turmoil. They cause issues around integrity, of course, but also around – people are just not sure what's going to happen next, right? The implications and the responsibility of this provincial body extend to postsecondary institutions, to nonprofits, to all of the associations we have with the federal government and the funding of important programs that we are responsible for. It puts all of those things into question. People have to sort of say: okay; are they going to bring forward some sovereignty tribunal to look and see whether they should build that affordable housing in Lethbridge, or should they, you know, think twice? It's not governance; it's just somehow subverting the whole notion of governance.

People don't like it, right? I mean, maybe, sure, they say: well, Ottawa is encroaching on our province. You know, sometimes we have a right to think that, for sure, and we need to fight back on it, but this is not fighting back. This is a lazy way by which to make people angry or try to make people angry, but – you know what? – they're getting angry for the wrong reasons, and I'm getting angry about the issue of Ottawa. They're getting angry with the government not doing their job. That's what they're angry about.

You know, I always am happy to give free advice. My advice to this government now is to pull back on this now. We can see in Saskatchewan that they're doing the same thing, right? Their Saskatchewan First Act, or whatever, is not even in the same league as this one in terms of offensive breaches of constitutionality and so forth. Their watered-down version of Saskatchewan first: they're backing off on it. They're saying, "Maybe we're not going to do this right now" because they can see similar backlash from groups like just what's happening here in Alberta.

The AFN, for example, Assembly of First Nations, spoke out in the most clear terms possible that this Bill 1, the sovereignty act, in Alberta and the Saskatchewan First Act need to be dumped immediately. They're illegal. They breach the terms of treaties across this country and in Alberta and Saskatchewan specifically. It's an insult, quite frankly, to the premise of treaties and the agreements signed therein.

We know that investors are shaken by this as well, and we know that all of the institutions that are under the purview of this provincial body are also shaken and wondering as well. They're coming to me from the postsecondary sector. They're saying: what on earth can they overrule? Are they going to overrule on research? Are they going to overrule on expansion? Are they going to determine, you know, what we have to teach and otherwise pull back on those things?

In some ways I think that this UCP government has been practising for the sovereignty act over the last three and a half years – right? – with all of this leaving money on the table with the federal government, dictating which courses need to be taught at postsecondary institutions, you know, backing off on so many promises and responsibilities. It almost feels like it's just been kind of a warm-up to this bill that we have before us today.

Certainly, Mr. Chair, I believe that this amendment that has been brought forward, again, is equal only in the sense that it is equally as incompetent as the original bill that we have been given a few days ago.

Just as one more, a couple of words – and I certainly will speak on it again. I mean, it just seems to show a lack of understanding of the separation of powers. It makes the legislative body and the cabinet judge, jury, and executioner for a whole range of initiatives that we need to deal with in the normal way that the Westminster system does lay out over a period of 120 years here and probably 400 years throughout the world.

With that, I'll leave it. You know, the committee is a good chance for us to have different speakers in different circumstances, and I'm glad to continue the debate here this evening.

The Deputy Chair: Other members wishing to add to debate tonight? I see the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I am pleased to be able to rise to speak on this matter in Committee of the Whole and to speak as well about the relevance, the impact, the import of the amendment to Bill 1 that is being put forward by this government.

Let me start from the overarching position to just review relatively quickly why it is that this act as a whole is a bad idea and why as a whole it is quite unfixable. In essence, this act, Mr. Chair, generates an unprecedented amount of uncertainty in the province relative to the rule of law, and it does so in a way that undermines investor certainty not only here in Alberta but outside of Alberta, in the rest of Canada, and indeed outside of Canada amongst investors internationally.

It does so through a number of different means. First of all, quite honestly, the whole rollout of this Premier's flagship bill is a lesson in legislative incompetence. We had the Premier introduce the bill on throne speech day, and within an hour or so we'd all had a chance to look at it, and we understood that this Premier was attempting to take for herself unprecedented antidemocratic powers in a broad-ranging way outside of an emergency, in a way that we'd never seen in a proposed piece of legislation in the province of Alberta before.

Then we had the Premier and various and sundry agents of the Premier insist that what the bill said was not what the bill said. They claimed we hadn't read the bill, Mr. Chair, and they claimed we didn't understand the bill. They claimed that it didn't say what it said. So that was very surprising. It became increasingly clear to those Albertans who really pay attention to these things that the Premier herself had either not read her own bill or, alternatively, was incredibly poorly briefed on her bill, which makes us question the capacity of the folks who are around her, or actually did know what was in the bill and was just deciding to say something else. That in and of itself is deeply troubling.

That whole drama, for lack of a better term, around the impact of the King Henry VIII clause – what it meant, the fact that it was there – leading up to last night, when the government finally introduced an amendment, which we are discussing today, that in part included the elimination of that clause, does not generate confidence in any way, shape, or form. I have heard that from so many folks across the province over the course of the last seven days. They truly worry about who is at the helm and what they know about the job they've been asked to do by the 1 per cent of the population that selected the Premier to lead the government caucus last month. That display in and of itself drives a tremendously deep level of uncertainty across this province.

Now, there are also, of course, things in the legislation that created a tremendous amount of lack of clarity: this whole issue of who it is the government can direct, the language around anyone with a fiscal relationship with the government. It's actually not clear to us how far and deep into the private sector the government would purport to go with this bill. Once again, of course, that creates a lack of clarity. The consequences of this government declaring that federal laws are not applicable or not enforceable here in Alberta, of course, creates a tremendous lack of just clarity in terms of what the bill is intended to do.

Then, of course, uncertainty also is driven by the likely unconstitutionality of elements of this legislation. The Member for Edmonton-City Centre as well as the Member for Edmonton-North West were just outlining those points again today even. I will say – and I'll talk in just a moment – that there is nothing in these amendments that appears to undo the primary concerns around the constitutionality of this piece of legislation.

And then, finally, it is very clear to us that we have a very, very serious problem embedded within this legislation as it relates to treaty rights in this province. That also creates a tremendous amount of uncertainty.

Now, Mr. Chair, this is not me sitting around, coming up with fun, exciting ways to suggest that this bill creates uncertainty. This is me listening to Albertans. We have heard from the head of CAPP that any bill that creates uncertainty for investors is a bill that is a bad idea for the province.

We have heard from the Calgary Chamber of commerce that this bill creates uncertainty for many members, a range of members within the Calgary Chamber of commerce. I understand that the Premier likes to talk about those anonymous folks who allegedly called her one day and said that they don't agree with the head of the chamber, but I will say that, you know, we dispatched three of our MLAs to go to a chamber function a couple of days ago and they spoke to a multiplicity of chamber members at that function, and, actually, they all kind of agreed with the head of the Calgary Chamber of commerce and said that, yeah, this is very, very concerning and it creates a lot of economic and investor uncertainty. They spoke actually to investors, in fact. We also heard from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, who also said that this bill creates tremendous economic uncertainty.

Then today we were pleased to stand with a former governor of the Bank of Canada, David Dodge, who outlined in great detail the means through which this legislation created uncertainty, essentially saying that the incompatibility of this legislation with provincial and federal laws and the inability of international investors to predict which laws would apply to the investment that they might or might not make would inevitably lead to those folks choosing other jurisdictions and that that was a huge problem because we are in a place right now where everybody is competing for international investment dollars and we are only one jurisdiction and we are doing the exact opposite of delivering a message that this is the place where those dollars should come. That came from the former Bank of Canada governor David Dodge, someone who, just to review, served under former Prime Minister Stephen Harper.

The final problem with this bill as a whole, of course – and it has, again, been touched on by other members of my caucus – is that it is to a large degree diverting this government's attention from the issues that actually do matter to Albertans. There have been now multiple polls that have been both publicly and quietly published on this issue. I know members opposite get access to some of those private, nonpublished polls that we do that reinforce the fact that this is absolutely not what the people of this province want to hear their government talking about right now, yet that's what they are doing.

What does that mean? Well, it means that in the midst of the probably single most damaging flu, COVID, RSV epidemic impacting children in decades in this province, we have a Premier who, on one hand, is unwilling to stand and recommend that children get the flu vaccine and, on the other hand, was unable to answer the question I asked her yesterday about the resignation of the two deputy chief medical officers of health. Why? Probably because she was spending so much time trying to finally understand what the bill she had introduced meant after she finally decided to read it.

The point is that what she wasn't doing was finding out or being briefed on the fact that actually the top three public health positions in this province right now are vacant. I mean, yeah, we have someone who is theoretically called the chief medical officer of health, but he's got a full-time job already. Really, he's doing this literally off the side of his desk without an extra cent, so he's a volunteer. Then now the other two positions: we have resignations with both of them. And we have a Premier who apparently didn't know that that was happening at a time when our emergency rooms are overwhelmed with far too many children desperate for medical care. That's what happens when the government is diverted from the issues they should be dealing with.

Now we have a government that has introduced amendments. Let me be perfectly clear about the consequences of these amendments. I will say on the first matter that, no question, the amendments now effectively eliminate the Henry VIII clause. It now clarifies that we are no longer dealing with statutes, pieces of legislation. Rather, we are dealing with regulations, and that is fine. That is good, a good step forward. I don't know why we needed to be subjected to so many arrogant insults from the Premier.

I wish that on the first day, when we had pointed out what she had done, she would have risen, apologized, thanked us for pointing out the mistake, and just indicated right then that she would fix it, but no. Apparently, she did not quite learn the lessons she claims to have learned from former Premier Ralph Klein. Nonetheless, that's the first thing that this amendment does, and that is good. It does not, however, for all the reasons I've just outlined, address the much bigger problems embedded in this bill.

The second thing that this amendment does is that it attempts to limit the lack of clarity in one element of the bill by more directly defining what amounts to harmful. I thought what they had done, actually, when I'd first heard about these amendments, Mr. Chair, was eliminate reference to "harmful" altogether and otherwise just said, you know, that this would be a matter that is brought before the House when, in the opinion of the House, we think that there's been an unconstitutional act on the part of the federal government, but no. It turns out that, nope, that's actually not what they did.

They didn't actually even do that either. They kept the possibility of passing a resolution if it is harmful, and then they went on to say that harmful means that the range of actions that are covered by this piece of legislation, that the federal government may take, affect something that's in provincial jurisdiction. That's all that has to happen; then it's harmful. It affects – that's what the legislation says. Just want you to be clear. It doesn't have to hurt something that's in provincial jurisdiction. It doesn't have to diminish something that's in provincial jurisdiction. It just needs to affect it.

And if it affects something that's in provincial jurisdiction, then it is officially harmful.

Let's walk down the list of things that would fall under that definition, Mr. Chair. Well, we had a very good-news announcement on the part of the government a little over a month ago in the Industrial Heartland, where a new project – $1.2 billion, $1.3 billion – was announced by Air Products, and that particular project, an excellent project, is a project focused on developing hydrogen, reducing emissions while still taking advantage of our energy resources here, a very good project. In that project – I think it was about $1.2 billion, so $1.2 billion, $1.4 billion – $140 million was committed by the provincial government through what is now the successor to our original PDP program, and $300 million was committed by the federal government.

Well, pretty sure that amounts to an initiative on the part of the federal government that affects a matter that is within provincial jurisdiction. Yep. Sure does. It does, Mr. Chair. But that is how they have changed the definition to include "harmful" or "to be harmful." In fact, they've not limited the scope of this word "harmful" at all. In fact, it still could even relate to things that the Premier has articulated her extreme displeasure with, like, for instance, the billions of dollars that the provincial government is receiving in order to support young families across this province through finally bringing in a robust child care program.

So the second amendment, then, Mr. Chair, does nothing to effectively limit the definition of "harmful," and it does not eliminate the provision which actually is at the heart of what is one of the two most unconstitutional elements of this bill, which is the belief that the Legislature can step into the shoes of the courts and make a determination about the constitutionality of a federal action or a federal initiative or a federal act. As a result of that still being in there, they have not actually touched one bit, not by one iota, the most offending part of this legislation as it relates to that particular head of unconstitutionality. There is no change here. They still allow themselves the ability to make a motion that says that in the brilliant opinion of this UCP majority government, the folks who literally spent seven days telling us that what was written in their bill was not written in their bill, that with their brilliant guidance we're going to determine what is now unconstitutional on the part of the federal government, and then we're going to do a range of things that we don't really describe to a range of people who we can't really identify.

It's this kind of thing, Mr. Chair, that drives investors to say: yeah, you know, I could open my tech company or my digital media company in Calgary, or I could just go to B.C., where they're a little less close to diving off the deep end and where I've got a better sense of what the laws are. That, I'm afraid, is what one of the consequences of this horrible piece of legislation is going to be.

Now, the other thing that is critically important about this bill and the reason why it must be rejected out of hand, which is completely unaffected by the amendments brought forward last night, in the dark of night, by this government, is the fact that we do not address the fundamentally flawed approach taken by this government when it comes to addressing the rights of Indigenous people in this province.

We have a legal obligation to acknowledge treaty rights. That's not done here. We have a moral obligation to pursue genuine reconciliation. By refusing to speak to a single one of the grand chiefs of the treaties here in Alberta, the Premier has failed to demonstrate any modicum of reconciliation. By repeatedly claiming that she has one person that she's spoken to and then at the same time failing to apologize for the fact that her minister claimed to have spoken to the actual representatives of the treaties, failing to apologize for the fact that he claimed to do that when he had not, that is the opposite of reconciliation.

Finally, this government also has a practical obligation to acknowledge the treaty rights of Indigenous people, because that is the only way you can actually build a genuine partnership in economic growth and development. Acknowledging treaty rights and pursuing reconciliation does not mean that you say to Indigenous Albertans: we'll give you this one-time opportunity to partner with us on this one economic deal that we picked. That is not reconciliation. That is not treaty rights. They have an opportunity to partner, yes, but they have a right to choose not to and instead to ask that they be treated as the treaty leaders that they are. This government failed to do that.

They have now picked a fight with Indigenous leaders and treaty chiefs across this country, and they have injected a higher level of legal instability into our whole regulatory regime than had existed for years. So they have really messed this up, Mr. Chair. The fact of the matter is that it is not at all touched on by the amendments, and to pursue the objective of passing this legislation today, tonight, tomorrow, without pulling back and engaging in meaningful consultation is to ensure that this will be challenged in moments and that it will be found to be unconstitutional and is to absolutely torch the critically important nation-to-nation relationship that should exist between this Premier and the leaders of the treaties. [Ms Notley's speaking time expired] All right.

The Deputy Chair: Other members looking to add to debate tonight? I see the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment on Bill 1, the hot mess express that is Bill 1. I'm going to speak first about the separation of powers a little bit and usurping of the role of the courts, which is what this legislation does and the amendment does not touch, and then I would like to make a few comments about the democratic implications of such a project and the bad-faith conduct, essentially, that is characterized by both the introduction of this bill, the amendment process, and ultimately the time allocation and so on of this bill.

Why is this happening right now? Why does this legislation take the form that it does? I would argue that this is happening by design of usurping of the role of the courts and a politicization of the courts by certain elements of the far right who have now adhered themselves to the UCP electoral coalition and have made themselves much more prominent by the election of this particular leader.

This bill – when one looks at the free Alberta strategy, one can just read what they have said, which is that the federally appointed judges are accused in that strategy of “blatant judicial activism [and] bias against the constitutionally enshrined jurisdictional rights of Alberta,” which is, I guess, an odd thing to say about a Supreme Court that remains majority appointed by Stephen Harper, but here we are. The fact of the matter is that this bill has its provenance out of a wing of the conservative movement that has become more prominent, that has in fact taken over the conservative movement in this country, and that has no regard for the rule of law, for the separation of powers, and for our institutions of liberal democracy. In fact, it is sui generis to this movement that they undermine those aspects of what makes for a good life for all of us at every available turn.

Here in this bill – and the Leader of the Official Opposition just spoke to many of its implications in terms of investment and so on. I want to do something that probably she wishes that she could, because I know her well enough by now, which is that I'm going to get into a little bit of detail about separation of powers. Let's buckle up here.

One of the core functions of any liberal democracy and any place that grounds itself in the rule of law is that the judiciary is independent, and in Canada, of course – of course – it's not just judicial independence for the purposes of staying away from the sort of feckless and reckless flightiness of elected Legislatures. No. It's also intimately bound up in the concept of jurisdiction since Confederation. So the court's concerns for protecting that independence is not just to protect us all from decisions that might target one group of individuals or one region or so on and upset the balance in that way, that balance of our own individual security of the person and various collective rights; it also has to do with intrusion from provincial Legislatures over the years into the levels of the federal judiciary.

Bankes and Olszynski, which my friend from Edmonton-Rutherford tabled earlier this afternoon, go into some detail on this, and I'll quote from it. “Grounded in the judicature provisions of the Constitution Act, 1867” – and just as, you know, to open a bracket here, we've heard the Premier variously go on and on about the founders, as if we live in America, and the integrity of our foundational documents, which is, of course, the Constitution Act of 1982 brought in by Pierre Elliott Trudeau, but she overlooks that because the rhetorical flourish makes, I guess, her feel better about what she's about to do – “both legislative and executive bodies are incapable of intruding upon the core jurisdiction of superior courts or infringing upon the independence of the judiciary.”

One of the reasons for this is, of course, that concern of federalism, which is always integral to everything that we do in this giant place we often call a country, but it's also because then it avoids the development of a shadow court system, a parallel court system; that is to say, there is only one place where decisions get made. So, for example, if you are the parent of two teenage boys, there is only one place where the decisions get made, and that is mom. In a liberal democracy there is only one place where those decisions get made in a final instance, and that is the courts. You can't go around making yourself a parallel system of justice. That doesn't work for anyone.

The rules apply to everyone, and they apply in the same way, and that's how they protect us all. That's the entire jurisprudence of what's called section 96 of the Constitution, and there are a number of Supreme Court decisions laying out all of the various ins and outs of this. One of those decisions was, in fact, around one of the Supreme Court justices writing for, in fact, the dissent in the carbon tax reference, wherein Suzanne Côté wrote that the “infringing upon the independence of the judiciary . . . includes the duty to maintain the rule of law and protect citizens from arbitrary action by supervising state action.” That is to say, there is a final arbiter on any capriciousness that may come out of the Legislature, as we are seeing right now.

Now, “Bill 1 may not remove a core jurisdiction,” as Bankes and Olszynski write, “from a section 96 court.” What it does is that it “contemplates the creation of a parallel court,” because in this Legislature, apparently, we will decide what is constitutional and what is not, and the entire Bill 1 then derives from that original trigger. I would argue that this attack on the judiciary, as I quoted that so-called free Alberta strategy, is, in fact, a feature and not a bug. This is of a piece of the entire – it's not even an ideology. It is a grab bag of ideas, but insofar as it is an ideology, it involves the attack on collective knowledge, on the rule of law, on liberal democratic institutions, and ultimately on trust, which is what our entire system runs on. From property rights to security of the person to traffic laws, our entire system runs on trust.

This is of a piece, and you know that because all you have to do is listen to this Premier. She has variously attacked science, public health, our national security establishment – oh, just asking questions about Ukraine, you know – flood mitigation, amnesty for people who broke the law. That’s not a thing in Canada, just so that we’re all clear. She’s just asking questions, just kicking down the foundations of everything that has led to the longevity, equality, individual liberties, protected us from reckless or feckless decisions by those in power, that protect our security of the person, our section 7 Charter rights, our property rights, all of it.

This is, too, an attack on every aspect of civil society. That amount remains unamended in this legislation. How do you know that? You look at section 1 of this bill. This is not a war with Ottawa. This is going to war with ourselves. It disrupts the activities of nonprofits, Crown agencies, housing authorities, municipalities, delegated authorities, police services. No wonder it’s so deeply unpopular. That’s just the politics of it, not even the constitutionality of it.

I asked one of my friends the other day – he’s a senior lawyer in Calgary, corporate and commercial. I said, “What do you think about this thing?” He said, “It’s ridiculous and it makes us look ridiculous.” I asked another friend of mine, a businessman in Calgary. I said, “What do you think about this?” And he said: “Don’t worry. May is coming, and that’s how we’ll deal with it.”

You know, I guess ultimately on the one hand this is very bad for democracy, and I will use a quote to talk about that from a member from across the way. Quote: to present to Albertans in any way that there is some magical solution that the Legislature could pass tomorrow that would somehow make all these problems – that is to say, fed-prov relations – go away is not factual. That person also suggested that the sovereignty bill would not only lead to uncertainty for business investment but also foster bad blood with party members and voters by promising something that can’t be fulfilled. Quote: the number one way to make Albertans mad at us would be to promise that you can do things with certain legislation that you cannot do and then not deliver; that will make them very upset. I would caution anyone who wants to lead the UCP to make sure they have all their ducks in a row.

That person also went on to say: I would be surprised if a bill as described would pass inside the Legislature; it would be calling for the breaking of the law, which is just not something the Legislature would do. Well, maybe not that member, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who said those words during the campaign, but certainly, apparently, the Legislature will do it, and everyone will just get in line.

The proposal is no different, by the way. What those members were responding to and was actually put before us: there’s no difference. Ultimately, this is bad for democracy in the ways that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – and I cannot believe I am saying this: I agree with him – describes here . . .

An Hon. Member: Whoa. Whoa.

Ms Phillips: Yeah. Yeah. Everybody just hold on.

. . . because the fact of the matter is that it does make people mad to promise something that you can’t deliver. That is exactly what has happened, to try to do some sort of trickery to people that is bad for democracy. That is what’s happening here.

But I guess in terms of – I will go back to the feedback that I heard from many other people, which is, you know, democracy will speak in May. If the publicly available data set – folks were in the field from Leger between November 24 to 28 – is anything to go by, before the bill was introduced to much hue and cry and exhortation everywhere, I think that the numbers will only be reduced at that time. Here we are: statistically insignificant difference between voters in Edmonton and Calgary at over 60 per cent, both of them, disagreeing with this bill.

There is no question that the amendment or set of amendments or whatever these several pages are do not save the fundamental unconstitutionality of this bill. It does not save the overpromising by the Premier. It does not save the fact that this is just a continuation of grievance politics by a fringe of the far right that has now adhered itself to the conservative movement in this province.

There is no question that this bill remains a fundamental attack on institutions and groups of people and decision-makers within the boundaries of Alberta, not outside. Ottawa is unmoved by this particular appearance of clown shoes on the floor of the Alberta Legislature. However, municipalities, Crown agencies, any contracted service provider: they are not unmoved. They are nervous. They have a lot of questions about the priorities of this government. They have not, obviously, been listened to, as the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has gone on and described at some length in terms of treaty rights. I think Albertans are noticing just what a devastating error this was, both an error in judgment, an error of priorities, an error in law, that this bill is and remains with the introduction of the amendment.

I will conclude with one observation, which is that there is a continuing sort of insistence from the government side within the context of this amendment but, of course, within the bill itself as well: oh, well, we said that we’re not doing anything illegal, and we won’t do anything unconstitutional; therefore, it’s not. This is the equivalent – and I think it was my very erudite friend from Calgary-Mountain View who said this – of driving down the highway at 200 kilometres an hour and saying: I’m not breaking the law. Well, now we have the amendment. We got rid of the Henry VIII clause, so now we’re driving down the highway at 190 kilometres an hour saying the same thing. It doesn’t matter that you say, “Oh, it’s not unconstitutional,” when it goes on to detail a number of ways in which it is unconstitutional. It does not save it. It matters what the bill actually does, just as in this life it matters what you do a little more than what you say.

What this bill does is distract us fundamentally from the really pressing concerns of our time. We face 40-year-high inflation. We just had another rate hike from the Bank of Canada. This is going to profoundly affect people’s bottom line right before Christmas and afterwards. We are going into a global recession. We don’t know what that means for the price of oil and so on and all of the geopolitical instability, the European Union’s price cap on Russian oil and how or if that is going to make any difference to global oil markets given that as it is, it’s not a question of supply or demand but whether Lloyd’s of London actually insures tankers, and they won’t over 60 bucks a barrel. It’s all very complicated.

We don’t know what the future holds, and Albertans are feeling that uncertainty in all of those headlines that swirl in the business news and in the reporting out of Russia and Ukraine and so on. What we know is that life is getting more complicated, that people have been to hell and back, many people have, during the pandemic through jobs and health and kids being home and all of these challenges. They feel like they are bearing down on us, and what is our government doing? I mean, you can’t even explain it to people. People say to you, “Like, what is happening over there?” And you say: “Oh, never mind. Like, tell me about your concerns about health care, about affordability, about economic development. Tell me about your ideas because I cannot even – you know, do you have a half an hour to go through the days of our lives of this particular bill?”

It is so far removed from ordinary people's lives. All they see is that once again we're into year 3-plus of this, a government that should be just focused on doing the business of health care and education, social services. All that's hard enough, folks. You can just stick to your knitting and do the hard things because running those systems is a big deal, and it matters to people. We have a government who won't do that. They're just wandering around all the time looking at their own drama, focused on themselves, talking about their own jobs instead of people's jobs, talking about, you know, their own weird ideas about health care rather than what we know in public health matters and what people are looking for and what doctors and experts and others are telling us.

It is for that reason – I mean, amend away this hot mess express, as I began my comments. It does not save it unless this bill is entirely pulled. Pass as many motions as you like, you know, government motions saying mean things about various people outside of the Legislature. If that's how you want to spend your time, that's also fine. That is completely within our role as legislators. When it comes time to really stand up to Ottawa, do that, too; also completely within the ambit of this Legislature. It's been done on both sides of the House.

But ultimately what needs to happen is that this bill needs to be pulled because it is not an appropriate signal to anyone that government is working for them, that democracy can actually solve problems in their lives, that our liberal democratic institutions matter, that the rule of law matters and, within that, the separation of powers matters, that treaty rights matter, section 35 of the Constitution matters. Let's focus on that, the really hard stuff, which is health care, education, keeping people healthy, helping. You know, I always say that the people's money is for little babies and old people. Let's focus on the really, really hard stuff, the important stuff that people are asking us to do, not this stuff that undermines the fabric of who we are and goes to war with our own institutions and our own ways of making sure that we are building a good life for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I move that we rise and report progress on Bill 1.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 1.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

8:40

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 1

14. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, I rose in this House earlier this week to share how much time and effort has been put into this bill this fall session. I now rise again to highlight once again the fact that the opposition members continue to filibuster a bill that they made amply clear they had no interest in even seeing printed. Didn't want Albertans to see the bill. As a reminder, the Official Opposition also made it abundantly clear they had no interest in reading the bill before they voted against it. Members of the opposition have decided to prolong the legislative process on Bill 1, continuing debate over 14 hours. How much time do they need when they already announced that they would not support any amendments that the government put forward? If the opposition has no amendments to put forward in Committee of the Whole, then we are going to stop wasting the time of the Assembly and move on with the people's business of the province.

The Acting Speaker: Anyone else wishing to speak to the motion? Seeing none, I'm prepared to call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 14 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:42 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

For the motion:

Copping	Lovely	Shandro
Dreeshen	Luan	Smith, Mark
Ellis	Madu	Turton
Fir	Nixon, Jason	Walker
Guthrie	Pon	Williams
Hanson	Rehn	Wilson
Hunter	Rowswell	Yao
Jones	Schow	Yaseen
LaGrange

Against the motion:

Carson	Eggen	Notley
Dach	Feehan	Phillips
Deol	Irwin	Sweet

Totals:	For – 25	Against – 9

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

The Deputy Chair: The committee has under consideration amendment A1. Anyone wishing to add to debate tonight? I see the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I will try not to take very much time, but I was not quite finished when I last spoke to the many challenges that are embedded in the fact that this government is jamming forward this legislation this evening notwithstanding the clear opposition of the grand chiefs of the treaties here in Alberta and treaty leadership.

In particular, the minister himself acknowledged today: perhaps we didn't consult enough. Now, the answer to that obvious failure is to wait and to refer this to committee and then take the time to actually engage in meaningful consultation. Anybody who knows anything about engaging in meaningful consultation understands that there must be a little bit of back and forth. Perhaps you don't ultimately agree on everything, but it is not a mere notification process, nor is it a: we'll talk to you after we've done the thing we've already decided on and passed the legislation. That was the point I was trying to make.

Before I got a chance to make that point, the members opposite decided to engage in the motion of time allocation, limiting our ability to talk about this issue to a further one hour. Rather unprecedented. This bill was only introduced last Tuesday. Second reading began on Wednesday. We are now Wednesday night, and it will be jammed through all stages. That's incredibly unnecessary, particularly given the call from the treaty chiefs today contradicting the assurances made by the minister and by the Premier around whether they were ever consulted and asking that this bill be withdrawn.

So I would just like to take this moment. Given that instead of doing that, we are rushing forward at an unprecedented, unwarranted, accelerated speed to jam through this incredibly unconstitutional, disrespectful piece of legislation, I would like to take the opportunity to read into the record the quotes from several treaty leaders from today.

Chief Tony Alexis, who has been designated to speak on behalf of Treaty 6 as a whole, says: let's be honest; this all comes down to land and resources; we are yet again the inconvenient Indian standing in the way of unprotected resource extraction and other exploitation of treaty lands. End quote. He went on to say: the act puts a lot of uncertainty in investment; if you have a provincial government fighting with the federal government who is not including our First Nation, with a lot of disrespect within, it will not be easy to bring investment to this environment; it will hurt the economic fabric of our commerce in all regions.

A portion of Bears paw First Nation. Chief Darcy Dixon from Bears paw First Nation said this about the act, quote: this is a warning to Canadians; if you care about these lands, if you care about your country, you should care about this bill; it is not a First Nations issue; this impacts us all. End quote. He went on to say: Bill 1 is just part of a political game; that may be true, but we see in it a disguised attempt to disregard treaty and as a way to gain unlawful access to our lands without restrictions, similar to what they have attempted already with the Alberta Police Act, to overreach and attempt to gain access in jurisdictions where they do not belong and therefore cause more harm to communities.

We understand that the vast majority of treaty rights have, in practice, been honoured through the actions of the federal government. Today we have an uncertain declaration that this government will unlawfully interfere with any range of undetermined actions on the part of the federal government. They have done this without engaging with treaty chiefs. They have done this without consulting. They have now taken that error, and rather than trying to apologize and putting things off – say, for instance, like in Saskatchewan, where the whole matter has been deferred until March – instead what we have is this group trying to jam it through through time allocation motions at 5 after 9 on Wednesday night, seven days after this bill first was introduced for second reading.

This is an incredible affront. It will spark an incredible deterioration in relations between the government of Alberta and treaty leadership across this province. It is a black mark on the record of this government with a government that actually has a lot of black marks on the record, but this one is pretty darn historic. I would once again ask members of the government opposite to vote with their conscience, to think about what the long-standing legacy of the relationship is with treaty leadership in this province and vote against this bill in committee.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Other members wishing to add to debate tonight? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung has the floor.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm glad to rise in Committee of the Whole to speak this evening to Bill 1. What we've just witnessed is something that is pretty shocking and disappointing to most Albertans, who have a respect for these institutions that we serve, particularly here in the Legislature or our judicial system or our court system.

I know that traditionally, Mr. Chair, Alberta students in grade 6 will be invited to come to the Legislature to spend time here, to do the School at the Legislature to understand the workings of our parliamentary system, our Westminster system. Part of that day that they may spend here is spent in study of that Westminster system, and one of the guides they use used to be called The Citizen's Guide – now it's published by the Legislative Assembly – but part of that is now called the parliamentary education guide, and there's a PDF on the Legislative Assembly website which is quite instructive.

I wish that the members opposite, the government of the day, including the Premier, would've availed themselves of it because grade 6 students learn about this and our system of government and the separation of powers when they're here for the day. It would've been helpful as a guide, I think, for the Premier and her government, when they were drafting Bill 1, to follow, because they may have decided not to go through with it at all.

It's fairly elementary, Mr. Chair, because it is designed for elementary students to read, and it's an introductory system to our Westminster system of government, which goes on to say that in the Westminster system there's a style of government with an executive branch (Premier and Ministers), a legislative body (made up of elected officials), a judicial branch (an impartial court system), and a ceremonial head of state (Lieutenant Governor). The name derives from the Palace of Westminster in London, England, where Parliament developed and remains today.

That's what our grade 6 students are taught about our Westminster system of government.

The next element of the guide. It goes on to talk about the separation of powers in Alberta. Of course, they outline and delineate the executive branch, the legislative branch, and the judicial branch and the various responsibilities laden upon each of those branches of our parliamentary system.

In grade 6, Mr. Chair, we expect our students to grasp these tenets of our parliamentary democracy, yet our government doesn't seem to have them nailed down as the government of Alberta. Had they taken the time to even read the grade 6 parliamentary guide that's available on our Legislative Assembly website – I'll table it for them tomorrow if indeed they would like to read it. If indeed they'd followed it, they probably would not have gone through with the legislation that they are now trying to salvage by amending it.

Albertans are ashamed and embarrassed about it. There may be an element of support for the legislation, but that's found in the fairly far extreme right wings of the UCP support for their party. I used to describe that transition that's taken place, Mr. Chair, as now the tail wagging the dog in just trying to describe how the party has been hijacked by the extreme right wing of their political caucus, of their political membership. In fact, I think I need to amend that analogy and suggest that now the tail has become the dog. In fact, if you look at the front benches to see who's closest to the Premier and the new arrangement of the deck chairs on the UCP Titanic, those closest to the Premier are, not surprisingly, the most extreme right flank of the former party known as Conservatives. Indeed, the deck chairs on the UCP Titanic have been rearranged, and what we have as a result of the leadership being taken over by an extreme right-wing flank is legislation such as Bill 1.

9:10

Fortunately, part of it has been walked back. Now we're looking at another potential amendment, but the bill itself is critically flawed. On this side of the House we are urging all members of the government to reflect on what even a grade 6 student might say to them in analyzing what they've come up with as a piece of legislation, as their flagship piece of legislation, and to simply withdraw the bill instead of going to the extremes of limiting the debate on the legislation.

The time allocation that we've just seen imposed upon this Legislature of Bill 1, accusing the opposition of misusing the time of the House and therefore justifying time allocation: totally to the contrary, Mr. Chair. Indeed, it's a primary responsibility of all of us as legislators to protect our Charter of Rights and our constitutional rights and the rights we stand guardian for for our constituents. The government is acting with a total disregard for our Constitution because it suits their own political ideological agenda.

Cabinet was about to give themselves the right to make laws unto themselves without further passage by the Legislature of the pieces of legislation that were referred to cabinet for consideration. Indeed, they were given law-making abilities that were the prerogative of this Legislature. That, thankfully, has been amended and brought back, so the so-called Henry VIII clause was no more part of this bill, but it doesn't make it palatable, Mr. Chair, to have this legislation still contain elements which disregard the courts. That is one of the elements of our fundamental democracy, our Westminster system, the separation of powers that we expect a grade 6 student to understand.

Indeed, Mr. Chair, the power of the courts is still being circumvented by this piece of legislation, which, in the opinion of legal scholars such as Martin Olszynski and Nigel Bankes, there are still serious and persistent legal problems with the bill. Therefore, the bill remains unconstitutional and, as such, should be referred to the Alberta Court of Appeal to rule on the constitutionality of the bill. Why, in fact, would the government not be willing to do this? Why are we looking at imposing time allocation on such an important, fundamental piece of legislation? To the government, they see no need to proceed with caution. They see no need to refer it to the Alberta Court of Appeal to rule on the constitutionality of the bill, perhaps because they are trying to give the right to themselves in cabinet to determine what is constitutional and what is not.

We, in fact, as legislators here are not expected to be the court. We are a separate branch of government, Mr. Chair; we're the legislative branch. There is another branch of government, under our separation of powers in the Westminster system, that is the judicial branch, and that's our Alberta Court of Appeal, which is a supreme court in Alberta, the Court of King's Bench, the Alberta Provincial Court, which I think is called the Alberta court of justice, which needs to be updated on this website.

In any case, Mr. Chair, the courts exist for a reason, and to circumvent the courts or attempt to do so to fulfill the political agenda that you have because it's inconvenient to do otherwise is a very sad commentary on the dedication or commitment to our parliamentary system, our Westminster system, that this government has. In fact, it's a total disregard for it.

I don't know, indeed, what, say, students coming to do their one-day tour of the Legislature tomorrow are going to face when those tour guides and those instructors and the teachers that are along with them are trying to explain what's happening in the Legislature now as they go to the parliamentary education guide and talk about our separations of powers in Alberta and they try to explain to students: "Well, you know what? This is the way it's supposed to work. This is the way it's laid out, but currently we have a government right now that's kind of mixing them up and looking at maybe giving this power of judicial oversight to themselves so that they can determine what indeed will become law without further oversight by the courts." That's something that a grade 6 student will probably scratch their head at, Mr. Chair, and wonder: well, how can they actually do that? Well, the fact is that it probably will be found not to be able to do that and that courts will actually be asked to rule.

This legislation is going to be held up in court for a long time, and I don't know if the government will be granted, if this legislation actually passes, the opportunity to have and continue while indeed the court passes judgment on it. But what it does create, Mr. Chair, not only in the minds of the grade 6 students trying to understand exactly what their government is doing in contrast to what the separation of powers the government's own website suggests should be done – listen to the comments of people most recently that I heard at the Piper law event recently, the Piper law winter reception.

I was there a little bit later on in the reception, which was held a few days ago at a local hotel. The Premier had given her speech and left, and I was in the wake of the Premier, listening to some comments about what folks who had listened to her had said. They were construction people at high levels; they were lawyers, fairly high-powered lawyers, investors, project stakeholders. The room had been packed when the Premier was there because they, of course, want to hear what's going on with such a devastating blow to democracy in the works. In fact, what people were saying to me is that it's up to the Premier to convince this crowd. This is the crowd that they have to convince. Well, I beg to differ slightly with that; I think the whole population of the province needs to be convinced.

But this crowd of lawyers, high-powered lawyers, project stakeholders, construction people, investors were waiting to be convinced that what the Premier was up to was in fact going to be useful and productive. They were not convinced, Mr. Chair. That room full of folks who went there hoping to have the Premier convince them remained skeptical and concerned. The people that I spoke to directly weren't of the opinion that their questions were answered and their fears were allayed. They're going to be continuing to look for more answers from this Premier and from this government which won't be found in the legislation that we have before us, even as amended.

Mr. Chair, the concerns of all of the province and, of course, the business leaders in the province are still out there. The fear is, of course, that it's going to be very difficult to make business decisions that will affect projects and that long-term projects may be delayed or postponed while this type of legislation is in the books because it's still unclear, even in its amended form, what the effect will be on legislation that might affect their project or their company or their industry. You can't have that type of uncertainty and go ahead with multimillion-dollar projects.

Now, certainly, not everything in the province is going to stop, but there are lots of things, Mr. Chair, which can be postponed, and when you have a situation where a major project is being contemplated by investors who are seeking multimillion-dollar loans and financing for that project, the lawyers and the investors and the project stakeholders are all sitting on tenterhooks wondering whether or not the legislation that's before us is actually going to put the kibosh to their project, whether the court challenge is going to be the result of the intrusion by the province into the judicial process. That in and of itself has sent a chill down the spine of the business community in this province notwithstanding the reassurances of the Premier and other ministers who try to get up and say: "Nah, don't worry. They're okay with it; no problem whatsoever."

We've got the former governor of the Bank of Canada expressing concerns about this. You know, the government is trying to shoot the messenger on it, but the fact is that Mr. David Dodge was appointed and served under Conservative Prime Ministers as well, and his reputation is pretty unsullied. To have a former governor of the Bank of Canada tell the public and be willing to stand and say publicly that this is damaging to the economy, that it creates uncertainty, I think has to be taken pretty seriously.

Mr. Chair, I'm pretty concerned even about the legislation as it stands before us today in its amended form. I hope that the government still sees fit to pull it from the Order Paper and perhaps do as the government of Saskatchewan has done: take a time out and really address what the feelings of the population of the province are for real and respect indeed the opinions of legal scholars, of constitutional experts who are saying that this is going to be very, very damaging legislation. The government of Saskatchewan has seen fit to do that; perhaps they will back it out of the public view later on. Right now they've suspended their legislation until the spring.

I invite the government to do the same thing, and perhaps they can just simply let it die on the Order Paper or realize and respect the province's population that says, "This is not what we want; this is not what we expect" at a time when we have an unprecedented number of people occupying our emergency rooms, particularly children, when families are scared about having to make ends meet on a day-to-day basis, when the Indigenous population in particular is saying: "You're trampling all over our constitutional rights. You have failed to consult with us. It's a constitutional right we have; it's a treaty right that we have." The government is trying to explain that they did, but in fact the Indigenous population and leadership is saying: uh-uh, this didn't happen at all.

The fact that they're saying so in the face of denial by the current minister doesn't look very good for this government, Mr. Chair. The public knows who they're going to believe. For the Indigenous leadership of this province to have to once again come back and gear up for a fight with this provincial government after the provincial government, the UCP government, has tried to claim that they were making amends and following a path of reconciliation is pretty disappointing. It's evidence that they haven't learned a thing.

[Mrs. Pitt in the chair]

You can hear them talking about the relationship that they think they have with First Nations leadership and populations in the province when they announce partnerships on project A or project B, but those one-off projects, Madam Chair, are not reconciliation; those are business partnerships. Indeed, overarching all of that you have to have a consultation process that is respectful, and that means an open dialogue and a back-and-forth exchange. We have a government here telling us that after the fact they're going to actually speak to Indigenous leadership. They're saying that tomorrow, maybe tomorrow afternoon, we'll go ahead and have deeper consultations.

In fact, if we add up the number of hours of debate that we might have left here, Madam Chair, there could maybe be total passage of this Bill 1 before the end of the night if the government decides to keep on talking tonight. That consultation is not going to happen. I can only imagine the legal battles and the money that's going to be spent, the wasted dollars on both the part of the Indigenous leadership and their organizations and in the government in trying to defend this foolhardy legislation. That's totally unnecessary. Absolutely unnecessary.

There's no way in the world that Albertans are looking at this government with respect and saying: this is what we needed right now. They're looking at their wallets, and they're saying: I can't afford rent. They're looking at their children and thinking: holy smokes, I hope to God one of my kids doesn't get sick and end up in the hospital, because there's, like, a 20-hour wait and potentially no bed for them to go into, into care. Children's hospitals are overflowing, the emergency wards. There's a trailer being used as a waiting room in one of our emergency wards in this province. It's unprecedented. It doesn't matter where you go in the province.

The government will say: well, goodness gracious, that's all over the country; that's all over the world. Well, tell you what: this government is responsible for what's happening in their part of the world – it's called Alberta – and they have to take responsibility and take action that's meaningful.

The Chair: Are there others wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadows.

Mr. Deol: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is my pleasure to rise in the House and have the opportunity to speak to the bill, Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, on behalf of my constituents as well as concerned Albertans, particularly racialized Albertans. I will not be taking very much time as the government has imposed the time limit on this debate after avoiding spotlights for the full last week.

The government understands – like, for the past whole week I see this bill is not being debated at all during the day, because the government was avoiding facing the controversies and the questions and concerns and the opposition against this bill not only from opposition but the large majority of Albertans as well as from experts, economists, journalists, and business organizations. Sticking to and being so – I'm just trying to word it – stubborn to get this bill through this last phase shows, actually reflects, the lack of vision this UCP government basically has. Not only this; also, it reflects their lack of ability, actually, to, you know, have a vision at all.

This bill is being opposed by – we were discussing this morning, and my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-McClung mentioned the former governor of the Canadian bank David Dodge and the former senior economist with ATB. The biggest thing – the majority of the UCP leadership contenders did not only oppose it but got together, rallied together against this narrative and the Premier's leadership mandate to oppose this during the leadership debate. Not only this; this Premier, I hope, if she has the decency, would understand that she was not elected on this mandate. Not only this; during the race, when I'm looking at the first ballot, not even the UCP members, kindly we'll say, voted for this issue. The majority of the UCP members in the race actually voted against the Premier on this issue. It is a surprise to see that the UCP is not willing to learn from their past experience. They're so intent to, you know, keep carrying their legacy as they have been in the past in this province, changing their leaders during their term. In the past four or five terms, I believe since 2012, they don't even have one single term where their leader actually completed his full term as the leader of the party or the Premier of the province.

Whatever their vision is, whatever they are trying to do in this House after being elected, it is not helping the majority of Albertans. Due to this, their popularity in the province sank, and every time there is, you know, pressure to leave the position. The same thing happened in this province not long ago. It was quite surprising to see some of these UCP leadership contenders sitting on Executive Council being tone deaf for the last three and a half years by not touching those issues that were important in the province during the leadership race. As soon as they came back to the cabinet table, they changed their minds again. They were discussing the issue of affordability. They were discussing the issues of health care, education, and as soon as they're back at the cabinet table, they seem to have changed their minds. They totally forgot their own weight, their own positions on this bill, and they're not speaking up.

This bill basically is not going to help Albertans. What I wanted to say is that it will not of course help the United Conservative Party and the government caucus members because Albertans are very upset, and they're waiting for May 2023 or maybe any time before. When they have an opportunity, they will definitely give their answer. That is what I'm hearing in my community, in my riding from my constituents.

The Premier is talking about sovereignty – and sovereignty, I would say, in inverted commas – within a united country. Sovereignty within a united country, similar to what the Minister of Finance said this afternoon: broad but targeted and focused. So with the surprising terms they are coming up with, it seems like they are not understanding what they are saying or what they are trying to do. You're talking about sovereignty of the province; that is not really what this bill is proposing. At the same time, you are not able to understand what Albertans and communities and minorities in this province are feeling when you're making comments like, "Unvaccinated people are the most discriminated against group in this province," not being able to understand the racialized and marginalized communities facing racism in this province and living in fear in their communities when racism is rising in the province big time and failing to understand what you're saying. When you were given the opportunity in this House, you failed to recognize that. So what exactly does sovereignty mean for those very people?

Immigrants are afraid. When they move here, when they move to Canada, when they move to this country, they don't certainly move to one province. There's a lot more to do to help those individuals so that they are not being exploited, so they feel safe, so they are able to contribute to our economy in their full capacity. Instead of touching on the real issues, the United Conservative government actually came up with this I would call it a political stunt, a political gambit that is not really going to help Alberta, the Alberta economy, and people looking for jobs. We know that 15,000 jobs have been lost since this Premier came into office, two months ago, last October. So people are scared, like: what will happen to the economy?

The Conservative government did not understand what they were doing in the past three and a half years. They were just, you know, wasting taxpayers' money, and the corporations were taking their business out of the country, out of the provinces, to the east. The same thing will happen again, the Calgary business Chamber is warning, and business organizations are calling for it. But it seems to be that the government – I would say that some members actually don't have guts anymore to stand up on behalf of their constituents on what they were saying during the leadership debate, for those Albertans and those UCP members who trusted them and voted for them in that position. All of a sudden they came back to the cabinet table and they lost the whole interest in representing those views within their own party.

To be on the record, I wanted to use this opportunity in this House on behalf of my constituents, the majority of my constituents, and most of those who came to my office after seeing this bill moving forward and the people in racialized communities who are openly speaking against it. I want it to be on the record that we strongly oppose this bill. The reason for the opposition to this is that this is not helping Albertans. This is not helping the Alberta economy. It will destroy the economy, and as my colleague already said very effectively, it's against the mandate of the Westminster parliamentary process and procedures. That's what I've learned.

You know, I got the opportunity to be at the CPA, the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, seminar in London, England, with some of the UCP members and also Conservative Members of Parliament, and that's not what was being discussed. We were discussing more about how to build collaborations, coalitions with equal representations on the committees to help the society at large. But this is not what we are seeing this bill doing. On the contrary, this is actually attacking that very process, our democratic process, that took centuries and centuries to come to this.

What this bill is trying to do is replace the role of the judicial branch to interpret what is legal and what is not legal and, more than this, to give unilateral power to the 1 per cent in the House, the ministry, to write what is legal and what is not legal and what is to follow, what is not to follow, and, further, to go beyond this and direct the provincial agencies to follow what it seems to them is not legal or to the benefit of, in the best interests of the province.

This is a very dangerous move. This is not supported by anyone, particularly not by the majority of Albertans, and Indigenous leadership is not even frightened but very angry about how this bill is trying to impinge on their treaty rights. This move is very much misguided. This is not a benefit to the province. It will kill our economy; it's killing jobs already. It will not help the UCP at all.

With this, I conclude my remarks. I will request, actually, the members of this House, on both sides, to look once again at what we are debating here. It's going to change the political direction in this province for the next six months. That will be very harmful for the province and for our future generations. Think again, and oppose this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there others to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Member Irwin: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I just have to acknowledge that I'm speaking here from Treaty 6 territory. I don't typically do a treaty acknowledgement before I speak, but I think it's quite fitting given the absolute infringement on treaty rights that is happening with Bill 1, which I'll get to shortly. I usually give a shout-out to all the people tuning in at home, and usually it's just a couple, so it's a joke. You know, it's the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's mom, that sort of thing. But tonight I actually know that there are a whole heck of a lot of people tuning in because they've told me that they are, including folks from Indigenous communities, including folks who've written us as MLAs, calling on us to oppose Bill 1. I'm grateful for those people who are tuning in tonight. Like I said, I know that there are a lot of them. They're watching. Albertans are watching, and in fact people from across Canada are watching, and they're paying attention to what's happening here in Alberta.

You know, that's part of why we took the not unprecedented but rare step of voting against Bill 1, the sovereignty act, at first reading.

Ms Hoffman: Heck, yes.

Member Irwin: Yeah. You know what? The Member for Edmonton-Glenora just said, "Heck, yes." You know, I can say that there were people that right away responded to us saying: well, why would you do that? We knew – we knew – that it was going to be damaging. We knew that it was going to be dangerous. Did we know that it would be this incredibly damaging and incredibly dangerous to Albertans, to the future of our province, to investors who are speaking out, to business leaders, to chiefs, as I alluded to earlier? I don't think any of us predicted it would be just this bad.

Now, this is, in fact, my first time speaking to this bill. Gosh, it's hard to know where to begin. You'd think that in a fairly thin bill there might not be a whole lot to speak about, but there is a whole heck of a lot. For those folks watching, this is the UCP's Bill 1, so you know it's their most important, their flagship sort of bill. Gosh, I have to admit it was quite surprising to me that at a time when we are in the midst of an absolute crisis in health care, particularly in pediatric health care, in children's health care, at a time when all of us are hearing from our constituents about the affordability crisis, about people who are struggling to make ends meet, this was this government's priority.

We've asked the members opposite multiple times why they refuse to speak to the crisis that is health care. What did we see on Monday in the span of a few minutes? First of all, that was our first opportunity as the Official Opposition to address what had broken on Friday night. That was the news that Rotary Flames House, which supports children who are needing palliative care, respite services, the list goes on: those services were going to be paused, and children receiving respite services were going to be discharged. We heard that news. It broke on Friday night. People were absolutely up in arms. People were heartbroken to hear that news.

At the first opportunity we had when this Legislature sat again, Monday afternoon, our members, in fact my colleague from Edmonton-City Centre, stood up and demanded that we have an emergency debate on this absolute crisis in children's health. What did this government do? They denied it.

A few minutes later the Official Opposition leader, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, stood up with her opportunity to present Bill 201, which was her private member's bill, that would address some of the serious crises in health care. It was her opportunity as a private member to try to support and, in fact, collaborate with this government. What did they do? They killed that one, too. Absolutely. They moved it down the Order Paper. Basically, they deprioritized it, so we won't even get to that bill.

We asked the members opposite: why won't you speak about health care? Why won't you address the crisis that you are all hearing from your constituents on? They're silent, and they continue to be silent.

At a time when health care is being ignored, like I mentioned earlier, affordability is probably – probably for me, from the conversations that I've had with constituents – second to health care, people struggling right now. It would have been a great opportunity to – I don't know – address the affordability crisis, do more than just reverse the cuts that this same government already made, like the reindexing of AISH.

But, no. They chose instead to go with Bill 1, the sovereignty act. Sorry. The Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

Ms Hoffman: Sorry. The job-killing sovereignty act.

Member Irwin: Sorry. The job-killing sovereignty act, more accurately. I don't know if we've got to that amendment yet, Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

But, truly, it says a lot. It says a lot about this government's priorities. I had an opportunity the other night. I don't know. Clearly, I still don't have enough of a social life. I had the opportunity to tune into the debate that was happening in this Chamber, and some of our members were talking about Bill 1. One of the members asked another member if, you know, they were hearing about the sovereignty act at the doors. One of the members said: no, actually; to be honest, I haven't heard much about it.

I can say that – you know what? – I hadn't. Like, organically nobody would ever. I always, when I door-knock, come to a door and ask: what issues are top of mind for you? Nobody organically, prior to this bill being introduced, would have ever said: oh, you know, I'm really worried about Alberta's sovereignty. No. Not at all, and that that's the honest truth. [interjection] Exactly, right?

I can say that from not just Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. You might say: well, you're in an orange paradise there in Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. I am. You're correct. But I've door-knocked in Edmonton-South West. I've door-knocked . . .

Ms Notley: Everywhere.

Member Irwin: I've door-knocked everywhere. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for giving me a boost tonight.

I've door-knocked a lot. All over this province. That's a fact. Medicine Hat, where the Premier currently – I was going to say currently resides, but that's not true. She doesn't live there. She does represent it, though. I think she visited a couple of times during the campaign.

An Hon. Member: Has she even been there since?

Member Irwin: I don't think since she's won the election. That's unfortunate.

I can tell you that I door-knocked five times with our amazing candidate Gwendoline Dirk there and had a lot of conversations with people. Health care, education, affordability: top three issues, absolutely. The Member for Lethbridge-West: same thing. She door-knocked there. She can corroborate that.

I have one story from door-knocking in Medicine Hat that sticks with me. I'll tell you. I walked up with a volunteer, and – I can picture the house still – there was a big truck backed up into the driveway, and I thought: okay; this will be interesting. You never know. You never want to assume. I'm like: let's check this one out. Get to the door, a young guy, hat on, answers the door. I was like, "Hey," you know, do my little spiel. "We're out with Gwendoline Dirk. She's running to be your MLA here. What issues are top of mind?" I swear to you – and you can ask that volunteer. What did he say to me? He said, "You are getting our support, the NDP, because I'm an Albertan and I'm a Canadian, and it's Alberta, Canada." That was his message. And we said, "Oh, so you're talking about sovereignty." He's like, "Absolutely." And I asked him, I said, "Have you voted NDP in the past?" He said, "No, I never have." So it did come up at the doors, but not in the way that this government would hope.

I tell those stories because – you know, I can give the example of door-knocking recently in Edmonton-South West. Same thing. I had a long time . . . [interjection] The Member for Edmonton-South West is noting something as well. I had a long-time conservative who said that he's alarmed about the sovereignty act as well. And I think everybody – I see my colleagues on our side of the House nodding their heads, right? You're hearing . . . [interjection] Sorry. I'm getting some heckles, that I'm not quite hearing, from the Member for Edmonton-South West, but I'm sure he will join debate here shortly. I'm certain he will do that and share his thoughts.

Mr. Williams: No time. No time.

Member Irwin: No time. No time because this UCP government, the same UCP government that is putting forth what has been called the most undemocratic piece of legislation in Alberta's history, is also – is also – implementing time allocation, which means they're limiting debate on this very bill that countless Albertans, including that Member for Edmonton-South West's constituents, have spoken out against. So I would give this perhaps as a warning to that member and other members on that side of the House, that they might want to start listening to their constituents. If not: early retirement. [interjection] He continues to heckle me, for those folks watching at home who can't quite hear that.

It's not just long-time conservatives in that member's riding that are concerned. It's economists. It's constitutional law experts. It's the former Bank of Canada governor David Dodge, who many people have spoken about today, who shared his concerns on that bill as well. It's their own MLAs. It's their own cabinet ministers who've spoken out but have suddenly changed their minds. You know, the same cabinet ministers like the Deputy Premier, who said . . .

Ms Notley: That cabinet pay bump is very convincing. Very convincing.

Member Irwin: That cabinet pay bump, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona says, must be enough to change their minds, because one of the Deputy Premiers, which is hard enough to say, with a leader in a government that claims to care about small government – largest cabinet in history as well. The now Deputy Premier from Lethbridge-East said that no one person should be able to enact regulations without consultation. The Finance minister called it an economic time bomb. The jobs minister called it a fairy tale. The Municipal Affairs minister called it anarchy, and the minister of trade said it was like shooting ourselves in the foot. Those are just some. There are many more quotes that I could share but, again, not enough time.

Those are just some – some – of the quotes from this government's own cabinet ministers, and when asked and when pressed by us in question period about why they've changed their minds, what's changed for them, we didn't get clarity. I'd welcome the opportunity for any of those ministers to clarify for us: what changed? Don't tell me it was just the pay bump. What changed? [interjections]

It is so interesting. Again, I know the people watching at home can't quite hear everything that's going on here, but it's so interesting that you get a lot of heckling from that side of the House, but they're not willing to stand up and defend their position on this bill. I guarantee – I don't know if any of them are knocking on doors, but I guarantee you that they are going to be hearing from their constituents if they do. How could you support Bill 1? How could you sit silently, other than heckling, in that Legislature and not get on the record?

One of the things that I'm most concerned about when it comes to Bill 1, the sovereignty act, is the fact that Indigenous folks have not been adequately consulted, and that became very clear – very clear – today by noting that the Minister of Indigenous Relations has completely dropped the ball on this file. I mean, we're not totally sure if it's fully him or if it's the Premier as well, or perhaps it's other members of cabinet.

Ms Notley: It all starts at the top.

Member Irwin: It all starts at the top. As somebody who was Premier, she understands that, you know, you would apologize, and you would take a hit. We don't see that from this government.

That minister basically said that he had consulted those Treaty 6, 7, and 8 chiefs when, in fact, he hadn't. And what did we hear from Chief Alexis, who's speaking on behalf of Treaty 6? He said: "Let's be honest. This all comes down to land and resources. We are yet again the inconvenient Indian standing in the way of unprotected resource extraction and other exploitation of treaty lands." Wow. Some pretty powerful words. What else does he go on to say? "This act puts a lot of uncertainty in investment. If you have a provincial government fighting with the federal government who is not including our First Nation, with a lot of disrespect within, it will not be easy to bring investment to this environment. It will hurt the economic fabric of our commerce in all regions."

That should be alarming to these UCP members. That should be absolutely alarming. I'd love to hear the MLAs from the area that Chief Alexis represents go on the record and explain how they could possibly support a bill when the treaty chief for their area is raising the alarm. Unbelievable.

Chief Darcy Dixon is from Bearspaw First Nation. Chief Dixon says: "This is a warning to all Canadians. If you care about these lands, if you care about your country, you should care about this bill. It's not just a First Nations issue; this impacts us all." Wow. It's not just a First Nations issue; this impacts us all. He goes on to say: it's part of a political game; that may be true, but we see it as a disguised attempt to disregard treaty and see it as a way to gain unlawful access to our lands without restrictions, similar to what they have attempted with the Alberta Police Act, to overreach and attempt to gain access in jurisdictions where they do not belong and where they cause more harm to communities.

Wow. Powerful words from the chief from Bearspaw First Nation, and he's right. He's right. We'd be . . . [interjections] Yeah. Sorry. I'm getting heckled from one of the members over there, one of the same members who we never seem to hear from in this Chamber.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt so late into your speech. Just a caution to speak through the chair.

Member Irwin: Yeah. Oh, yes.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Member Irwin: Thank you for that warning, Madam Chair. I just find it so interesting that we've seen this multiple times in the few days that we've been in the Chamber. This government claims to care about so many of these issues – like health care, like sovereignty, apparently, like property rights – yet they're not standing up and defending their positions. I don't know.

Okay. I've got a few more things that I want to say on the record. I don't know how much time I have left, but I could go on for hours. Luckily, we will. Well, only for hours, unfortunately.

Ms Hoffman: One.

Member Irwin: One. That's right.

One of the other – you know, I guess I want Albertans to know, because there are a lot of Albertans watching from home who are concerned and rightly concerned about what they see in this bill. I want Albertans that are watching to know that there is hope out there and that this is, unfortunately, a short blip that we're all going to have to deal with but that change is closer than it's ever been, because Albertans are asking for stable and responsible and honest leadership. You know, we had the opportunity not long ago to present an alternate Speech from the Throne. That was our opportunity to say to Albertans . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Government Motion 14, agreed to earlier in this Assembly, I must now dispose of Bill 1 in Committee of the Whole and put the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:59 p.m.]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Any opposed? That is carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Schow: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report Bill 1.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Reid in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-East.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 1. I wish to table copies of an amendment considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur with the report? All those in favour?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise on behalf of the hon. Premier to move third reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

If passed, the act will become a tool, a shield that allows the Alberta government to push back on federal legislation, policy, or measures that are unconstitutional or harmful to our province, our people, and our economic prosperity. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of Canada provides sovereign, exclusive jurisdictional powers to the federal government and the provinces. They are called exclusive federal powers and exclusive provincial powers.

Alberta has its exclusive provincial powers that are sovereign, and the federal government is not allowed to legislate in those areas. The federal government is not allowed to hide under any pretense to intrude on exclusive provincial powers. These three foundational legal documents taken together constitute the Constitution of our country: the Constitution Act, 1867; the Constitution Act, 1930; and the Constitution Act, 1982, otherwise known as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to reiterate to our fellow citizens that the rights and powers granted to Alberta by this constitutional document are not subordinate to the government of Canada. To the contrary, exclusive provincial powers outlined in sections 92 and 92A include: “Property and Civil Rights in the Province,” laws respecting “Non-renewable Natural Resources, Forestry Resources and Electrical Energy:”

- (a) exploration for non-renewable natural resources . . .
- (b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural . . . and forestry resources . . . including laws in relation to the rate of primary production . . .
- (c) development, conservation and management of sites and facilities in the province for the generation and production of electrical energy and laws respecting exports of nonrenewable natural resources from one province to another. These are exclusive provincial jurisdictions. Of course, Mr. Speaker, section 93, that deals with education, and indeed the concurrent powers in section 95 respecting agriculture and immigration.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 is therefore constitutionally structured in a manner that gives Alberta the legislative framework and a democratic approach to affirm and defend the federal-provincial division of powers while absolutely respecting Canada’s Constitution, the court, and indeed the treaty rights that are constitutionally guaranteed. A review of Bill 1 will show clearly – and I’m going to read directly from the text of Bill 1. It affirms in section 2 that nothing in Bill 1 affects the treaty rights guaranteed in the Constitution in section 35.

For decades and despite Alberta’s best efforts to get the federal government to respect our jurisdictions and ensure equal and fair treatment to all provinces, the federal government ignores the cries and pleas of our people and government. This unfortunate state of affairs has been made worse by the current Liberal government under this Prime Minister, Justin Trudeau. As if that is not bad enough, the Trudeau Liberals now entered into an unholy alliance with the socialist federal NDP leader, Jagmeet Singh.

Mr. Speaker, this alliance has been devastating to Alberta’s economy. We have seen how total disregard of the constitutional order has harmed Albertans, our way of life and economy, from the cancellation of Energy East, Northern Gateway, and Keystone XL to the passage of bills C-69, C-48, and the imposition of the carbon tax, that has made life more expensive and less affordable. The devastation that this federal Liberal government has caused on our oil and gas sector is unimaginable.

Mr. Speaker, the opposition brags about the Trans Mountain pipeline, but I’ve got news for them. The Liberals and the NDP have effectively ended private investment in pipelines. The Trans Mountain pipeline was proposed by the private sector. All of us members of this Legislature must be worried when a government that is in the business of public services decided to chase away private investment to occupy that particular field. That is the reason why till today we are still not sure when the Trans Mountain is going to be completed. I would, rather, prefer that the government that is in the business of public services stay in its lane, allowing the private sector to do what they know how to do best.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot also forget that when Albertans voted, with a supermajority of 62 per cent, to remove the principle of equalization, the Prime Minister ignored Alberta, and to this day has never made any attempt to acknowledge, to meet, to discuss the expectations of Albertans. Instead, the Prime Minister gave us the worst and most hostile minister to Alberta, minister of environment

Steven Guilbeault, whose mission is simply to undermine the largest subsector of the Canadian economy, the oil and gas sector.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before, the previous government have tried and Albertans have been exceedingly patient. The former NDP Premier and Leader of the Opposition imposed the now infamous multibillion-dollar carbon tax on Albertans, that she and her party did not campaign for in 2015. The NDP, the former NDP leader’s excuse was to buy social licence. Instead of social licence, Alberta’s economy was devastated by that Leader of the Opposition and Justin Trudeau, her friend and ally at the federal level.

10:30

Mr. Speaker, here are a few ways that that quest for the so-called social licence has paid Alberta: 183,000 Albertans lost their jobs while the Leader of the Opposition was the Premier of Alberta; multibillions of dollars in deficit, more than $70 billion in debt, that the Kenney government inherited in 2019; collapse of commodity prices and an economy that was brought to its knees by the dangerous combination of the federal Liberal policies and the provincial NDP policies right here in Alberta. We must never allow that to happen again in this province. We must shield Alberta and say: enough is enough. The federal government must stay in their lane, as our founding fathers and the drafters of our Constitution had envisioned.

It is important that I am clear on what the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act will not do because we’ve seen a lot of fearmongering on the part of the Leader of the Opposition and indeed the NDP MLAs and their allies across the province. Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act would not do the following. It will not allow Alberta to defy Canada’s Constitution. I want to reiterate that to our viewers watching back home. Despite all of the fearmongering and all the division that the NDP has attempted to perpetuate, this bill, if it becomes law, will not defy Canada’s Constitution. It would not allow Alberta to ignore decisions of our court. It is important to reiterate that once again, but that’s one of the misinformations that we have heard from the Leader of the Opposition and her MLAs and indeed, again, their allies across the province.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will not also allow Alberta to separate from Canada. I recall, when this bill was first proposed, that they jumped on that, that this is a separation bill. It is now clear that all of that was all misinformation and fearmongering.

Mr. Speaker, this law will also not allow cabinet to issue unconstitutional orders in council. It will not allow cabinet to direct private individuals or corporations that are not provincial entities to violate federal laws.

Mr. Speaker, it is not true that this bill will chase away investors. It was the NDP, while they were in government between 2015 and 2019, that scared away investors and devastated our province. In fact, the threat that Alberta faces today is from the NDP.

So, Mr. Speaker, despite the fearmongering by the Leader of His Majesty’s Loyal Opposition and her NDP MLAs and their allies, the above remains true today, and it will also remain true tomorrow.

Premier Smith has taken onboard . . . [interjections] Apologies, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Premier has taken onboard the concerns of our caucus members and indeed the concerns of Albertans. An amendment that addresses those concerns has been put forward in this Assembly. I am glad that we took onboard the concerns of Albertans and, with that, strengthened this particular bill to achieve its original intention. To be clear, if a resolution of this Legislative Assembly identifies an amendment of a statute, it will allow the normal legislative process, and ultimately a bill will be tabled in this House by the responsible minister.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to vote to pass Bill 1 in defence of our province, in defence of Albertans, and in Alberta's best interests.

With that, I move third reading on behalf of the hon. Premier.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has risen.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm always honoured to have an opportunity to rise in this House and speak to legislation. I think that the bill we're considering is slightly less honourable. Nonetheless, we're here tonight to debate the job-killing, democracy-threatening sovereignty act.

In terms of democracy threatening, we've already seen the current government choose to bring in closure on this bill, that they know is so deeply unpopular, that they're trying to ram through. I will give, you know, the members of the cabinet a lot of credit. One of the reasons why it is so unpopular is because they spent months telling people how dangerous this bill would be if it came forward to the Legislature. Every single UCP leadership candidate other than the now Premier was very clear that this was a threat to our economic security, that this was damaging to Alberta's international and national reputation, and that it would have grave consequences for the people of Alberta. You know what? They were right. They were right, absolutely right.

And that, through you, Mr. Speaker, is one of the reasons why, when members come to this House and they say, "Well, Albertans didn't vote for blah, blah, blah, whatever it is" – Albertans certainly did not vote for this bill to come forward to this place because only 1 per cent of the actual population voted for this Premier; 99 per cent of Albertans did not endorse the plan that the current Premier has to come into this place and bring forward a piece of legislation that is killing jobs in the province of Alberta, that is hurting our economy, that is threatening our international reputation. Ninety-nine per cent of Albertans did not give you the authority to come forward into this place and bring forward a bill that's so damaging to so many Albertans.

For anyone who wants to throw around the term "sovereignty" – and we've seen the Deputy Premier do it here tonight quite successfully; thrown around the word "sovereignty" many, many times, the Premier has. It's definitely been batted about in this Chamber as well as on debates and in news conferences. When you think of the word "sovereignty," I hope that you also ponder other times in my lifetime and yours when sovereignty has been front and centre and what the economic impacts were of that debate at that time, because I can tell you that there are still downtown towers in Montreal that used to house head offices for major corporations that moved to Toronto. I can tell you that there are businesspeople in Calgary, there are businesspeople in south Edmonton, southwest Edmonton, in fact, that are deeply concerned about the impacts that this bill will have on investment that they are desperately trying to attract from the region and nationally and internationally.

I can tell you that one of the things that they are concerned about is that when we have a Premier that is such a loose cannon and a cabinet that shows no spine, when they've spent months campaigning against this very bill, come in here and all of a sudden decide that they're going to, you know, stand up multiple times to endorse and support it and, in fact, bring in closure at multiple stages to try to ram it through in the wee hours of the night or the early hours of the morning, it speaks to the kind of ambition that the current Deputy Premier, multiple Deputy Premiers, or other people around the front bench show in the lack of conviction for the words that they spouted just a few short months ago, some just a few short weeks ago.

I can say his name now. Former Premier Kenney, to his credit, just a few short hours after this bill was introduced, resigned his seat – resigned his seat – because I suspect that he didn't want to be one of the people who was forced to come into this place and stand up over and over and over again to vote for something that he knew was going to damage Alberta and Alberta's reputation. He was very clear throughout the summer and into the early fall that he felt the sovereignty act would have detrimental impacts, detrimental effects on the future of the province of Alberta and economic investment for this province, and he's right. He is right, Mr. Speaker.

I also have to say that there is a specific clause in here that gives me great pause, and that's the fact that the government wants to write in the clause, has written in the clause, and didn't amend it out – in fact, they added even more opportunities, even more leeway for themselves to be able to vote on things in here and then go behind closed doors and do what they so choose. The clauses under resolution 3(b)(ii): if a motion is passed that the members believe causes or is anticipated to cause harm, they can go into the backroom, and they can write a bill that doesn't see the light of day, and they can change the law unilaterally. Well, that is obviously very bad for democracy, Mr. Speaker, and in turn very bad for investment in the province of Alberta.

To reiterate, 99 per cent of Albertans did not vote for this Premier. There were many, many members of this caucus and, in particular, the current cabinet who campaigned very aggressively against this bill, and they should be showing that again, the courage of their convictions, to be able to stand by the words that they so eloquently spoke just a few short months ago when begging and pleading for votes around the province, when talking about the kind of threat that this would impose on our province.

I can also say that when I am spending time connecting with Albertans right across this province, many are talking about affordability, about public health care, and about the economy. This, Mr. Speaker, does nothing to support any of those three pillars, and in fact it erodes them in significant ways. The government wants to pass a bill in this place and then be able to go into the backroom. If they think something in the Canada Health Act causes harm or may possibly be perceived to cause harm, they can go into the backroom and they can rewrite legislation here and fail to impose.

When we were in the very first briefing with the media – not a briefing; actually, it was Q and A with the media – it was very clear that there were serious concerns being raised about the lack of legality that this bill would have. The sponsoring minister, the current Minister of Justice, decided to ask the deputy minister to come out from the backroom and explain his legislation, because clearly the deputy minister and the Premier either didn't understand it, couldn't explain it, or they didn't care. They wanted somebody else to be on the news, not have to carry water for their terrible bill that they were bringing forward to this place.

To the deputy's credit – I wouldn't want to be in that position. They are failing at a political press conference because they've put politics before the economy, they've put politics before democracy. They are failing, they are floundering, and they try to call the deputy in to come and defend them. Mr. Speaker, that is embarrassing. That does not give anybody a sense of confidence that the front bench knows what they're doing, that the front bench has any sense of stability, that the front bench cares about what the key issues are for Albertans right now around affordability, the economy, and public health care.

Also in that initial press conference, questions were asked about the role of the RCMP and this implication around the RCMP through this bill. It was clarified by the current Justice minister that the RCMP is seen as a contractor and that contractors would apply to this legislation. So if there are issues with contractors, the front bench can go back down the hall into a quiet room, and they can write themselves another piece of legislation that could infringe on relationships with contractors, that could break those relationships. They're a contractor, the current Justice minister said, in relation to the federal government being essentially their employer.

We know that it is hugely unpopular. Every time members of the front bench, including the current Justice minister and the former Justice minister, have talked about messing with the RCMP, Albertans aren't keen on that. Albertans know that that is a huge boondoggle economically. I can tell you that as a kid who grew up in a small community in northern Alberta, we had a lot of RCMP come in for their two years from across the country, serve their time, and go on to other communities. How would we be able to attract and retain in a model like that, Mr. Speaker? We absolutely wouldn't. We relied on those RCMP members from across the country to come and serve our community and the region in the north to make sure that we had stability in terms of policing. I imagine the Member for Lesser Slave Lake knows exactly what I'm talking about.

This bill has the potential to cause grave economic harm, and we're already seeing from many employers – the Premier has been asked day after day to name just one CEO who thinks this bill is a good idea, and the best she can come up with is that some representatives of some organizations say that they don't think it'll be that bad. But nobody says that it'll be good. Nobody says that this is going to move things forward, that this is going to help. Nobody is willing to put their business's reputation on the line for that.

Why are we here, Mr. Speaker, if not to do things to make things better? The former Member for Brooks-Medicine Hat, who in turn resigned her seat to give the Premier a seat, talked about coming to this place like we do when we go camping, that you want to leave the campsite better than the way you found it. This does not make things better for democracy than the way we found it. This erodes democracy, it hurts our economy, and it is damaging to our national and international reputation.

I call on the cabinet ministers who so eloquently campaigned against this bill all summer and into the fall to stand by the courage of their convictions, to stand by their words when they were talking about wanting to give stability back to the people of Alberta. If you won't stand by what you said just a few short months ago, you're going to have to stand on the record in this place and every single time you voted for this. I'll tell you that it's not popular. People don't like it. That's why you're trying to ram it through here in the middle of the night, because you don't have the confidence to do this in the middle of the day, in the light of the public eye. You know that this isn't right.

Earlier today, when our leader said, "You know, if this gets rammed through today before the treaty chiefs, the grand chief and other treaty chiefs, have an opportunity to engage in a meaningful way, you're doing a disservice to the treaty; you're breaking the treaty," there was a point of order called by, I think, the Government House Leader saying, "Oh, how dare you assume that we're going to pass this bill today," and here we are. Here we are at almost 11 o'clock at night, and I have a feeling that they're going to bring in closure yet again, because they've done it already multiple times, because they don't want people to stop and think about what they are trying to ram through.

But guess what. They're already thinking about it. Your Premier Jason Kenney, your front bench, many of whom are still on the front bench who were running for his job over the summer, made it very clear that everyone knows exactly where Alberta stands on this issue and that Alberta will be hurt by even considering the job-killing sovereignty act. That's why they want to do it fast. They don't want to have to stand by their vote. They don't want to have to stand up and defend what they've done and how they've rammed this through.

Congratulations on being so effective in communicating all summer and into the fall about how damaging this was. You were right. In fact, it's even worse than you said that it was going to be. It has huge dictatorial powers that have been embedded in it as well.

So please take a few moments. Stop and consider exactly what you want your record to be, because your record will be put forward to the people in just a few short months, less than six months. I remember standing in this place and saying that the second half of your term goes faster than the first half. That's my experience. In the first half of your term you feel like you've got lots of time, lots of opportunities. This is either the last or the second-last Bill 1 you'll be bringing forward to this place. And this is what you want to run on? Feel free. I can't wait. I can't wait to take this and health care and affordability and economic impacts at large to the voters of the province of Alberta, and if you can't wait either, then call the election.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Other members wishing to speak to Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act? I see the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has stood.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to third reading of Bill 1, but I do so with deep, deep disappointment that we have gotten here at all and, secondarily, that we have gotten here in this terrible way of having closure invoked continuously on each stage of the bill so that we cannot hear what people need to say about this bill.

We know that certainly people are talking about this bill out in the community. We are seeing repeated calls for this government to stop this bill from people who normally would be considered to be supporters of this style of government that is offered by our current government, people that are considered part of their community coming out repeatedly saying: "This is not good. This is bad for the province of Alberta."

The thing that I'm concerned about is that as these people come forward, people who have, you know, built reputations in this country over years for the work that they've done, the response they get from this government is not to listen to them but, rather, to disparage them. We've seen, for example, David Dodge, who was the governor of the Bank of Canada, a position that is incredibly important in this country, being described by this Premier as a Liberal appointee when, in fact, he was the governor of the Bank of Canada, and he served under Prime Minister Harper at one point. You know, to take someone who has done the work that David Dodge has done in this country and to try to find ways to disparage him because they don't happen to like what he has to say is really unacceptable to me.

We also saw this Premier make comments about the CEO of CAPP and the CEO of the Calgary Chamber, saying, "Well, they obviously haven't talked to their members," insulting them by saying that they don't know what they're talking about or that they don't represent the people they, in fact, do represent. Again today we see this Premier and other members of this cabinet and this government disparaging the leaders of the First Nations by saying to them: oh, they're only doing this because the NDP is scaremongering. That's what they said earlier today, that this is just a reaction to scaremongering, which, I can tell you, the First Nations tell me is a very insulting thing to say to them. What you're saying to them is that they're too dumb to figure it out for themselves and that they're only doing it because they're being scared by somebody on this side of the House. How can you call a whole group of people stupid by saying that they don't have a clue as to why this may be a bad bill on their own terms, in their own right?

That's what we've seen continuously in this House. We've seen the disparaging of people who have done incredibly important things in this country because they don't agree with this bill and they don't agree with it on very substantive bases. They don't agree with it because it's been demonstrated repeatedly by scholars in the area that it's unconstitutional. It's been demonstrated repeatedly by people in the community that it is an ideological bill which is not supported by the majority of people in this province because it does not address the issues that are important to the people of this province. It's about shoring up the base for people who are deeply afraid they're about to lose the next election, and that's it. So I think it's very important that we spend some time talking about what it is that all of these people, these many hundreds of thousands of people who are objecting to this bill, are actually saying.

We've had an opportunity in this House to read out some of the comments by the CEO of CAPP or the CEO of the Calgary Chamber or by David Dodge, and we've had an opportunity to hear some of the comments by some of the chiefs from treaties 6, 7, and 8 about this bill, and I think it's time that we actually stop this whole bill, that we do not move ahead in this third reading, and that we actually go back and do the consultation that should have been done.

As a result, I am bringing an amendment into the House. I'll wait a minute until I get permission from the chair.

The Acting Speaker: Just give us a moment to get the paperwork, and then I'll have you read it into the record.

Hon. members, this will be amendment RA1, and I'll ask the hon. member to read it into the record for us, please.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. I am bringing notice of this amendment on behalf of the Member for St. Albert to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a third time because the Assembly is of the view that the government has not discharged its legal duty to consult with First Nation and Indigenous peoples in respect of the potential impact the bill's provisions, if enacted, would have on their rights and treaties.

Thank you.

Now, I think it's very important that we bring forward some of the words of some of the representatives of the First Nations at this particular time so that it isn't about what I might have to say or what the NDP might have to say but that we are providing voice to the thousands of First Nations people who have been very concerned about this act and have been asking repeatedly for this act to be stopped.

We have the words of a Treaty 8 grand chief. He said, quote, the sovereignty act undermines the authority and duty of the sovereign nations that entered into treaty. We have the words of Chief Tony Alexis, who is the designated representative on this topic for Treaty 6, who says: "Let's be honest. This all comes down to land and resources. We are yet again the inconvenient Indian standing in the way of unprotected resource extraction and other extrapolation of treaty lands."

We have the words of the Chief Darcy Dixon from Bears paw First Nation, who says: "This is a warning to Canadians. If you care about these lands, if you care about your country, you should care about this bill. It is not a First Nations issue; this impacts us all." Chief Dixon goes on to say, quote: "Bill 1 is just part of a political game. That may be true, but we see in it a disguised attempt to disregard treaty and as a way to gain unlawful access to our lands without restrictions."

These are the kinds of statements that are being made. Today we saw chiefs from literally across the country gather at the Assembly of First Nations to talk about this bill and a similar one out of Saskatchewan, and we saw these chiefs, many of whom I have quoted today, and many other chiefs, including the grand chief of the Assembly of First Nations, Archibald, stand up and say that there is no fix for this bill, that this bill must be withdrawn at this time and stopped. The primary reason is that there has not been the fulfillment of the legal duty for consultation with First Nations as this is going to affect their rights.

They're very concerned that this is a backdoor way for the province to undermine treaties that have been signed in this country for over a hundred years with the Crown, currently represented by the federal government. They feel that if this government has the chance, they will rescind the work that has been accomplished by these nations through the courts over the last hundred-plus years to ensure and to enshrine their rights both in the Canadian Constitution and in practice every day in this province.

There is a lot at stake here in this debate for First Nations, and they are not concerned about this because somehow the NDP have scaremongered. They are intelligent people who have their own ideas and their own opinions and have access to significant resources in the legal field, and they have consulted those legal authorities and have determined that this bill is deeply problematic for them.

Although there are many issues, the primary issue is the total failure to consult. Now, what would they say if they were being consulted? What they'd say is that we are deeply concerned that our treaty rights are going to be undermined. Now, we know that the bill makes the attempt to say that it won't undermine treaty rights, but we also know that an analysis that's been done by Bankes and Olszynski on that refers to it as "a constitutional fig leaf"; that is, it doesn't actually protect the constitutional rights of First Nations people; it just pretends to do so. It hides what happens later in the bill with a statement earlier on in the bill that purports to protect the rights but does not within a legal framework protect the rights.

So that's where we are. We're at a place where these nations have been working for generations to ensure the well-being of themselves and their future generations – their children, their grandchildren, their great-grandchildren – and this government is finding a way to subvert that.

Now, they know that the government says, "Well, you will continue to be allowed to have hunting and trapping rights, those kinds of things that are protected under section 35 of the Constitution," but they're also concerned about the well-being of the land and the air and the water. Their concern is that the very purpose of this bill is for this government to prevent a federal government from protecting the environment. It's a primary concern that any time the federal government comes in and says, "We want to protect these waters; we want to protect these animals," this government will say, “No; we’re afraid we’re going to lose some money if we do that, so we’re not going to do that.” That’s what . . .

Mr. Madu: That’s the fearmongering.

Mr. Feehan: Here we have the chirping from across the floor where again they’re insulting the chiefs who have specifically said: when you say that we only do things because the NDP fearmonger, you’re telling us we’re too stupid to figure it out for ourselves. That is considered ultimately insulting yet is being repeated in this House minutes after I expressed that opinion by the chiefs. They’re not listening; this is proof again that they have failed to listen. They continue to not listen. The chiefs have said that there is no way forward now because you haven’t listened, because you haven’t participated in the processes that the courts say you must participate in.

Then there’s no way we can fix this. We have to stop this bill, and that’s why I brought in this amendment. This amendment does exactly what it is, what the chiefs from across Canada at the Assembly of First Nations asked us to do today, to stand up against this government and say: you are wrong, you have failed, and it is time that you took responsibility for your failure and come back into this House, withdraw this bill, and do so now, because you have a duty in the law to consult with First Nations, and you have failed to do that.

I think we should do exactly that. We should listen to the nations. We should hear them for apparently the very first time in this process of Bill 1 in this House. They haven’t been asking for anything that the courts haven’t already determined that they have a right to. They aren’t asking for anything exceptional or new. It’s already been established, all the way up to the Supreme Court of Canada, that they have a right for appropriate consultation, and the very nature of this bill is that it will be used against them.

I can tell you that they’re terrified because they know that the last time there was a Bill 1 in this House, in this Legislature, under the UCP government, the bill that was called protecting critical infrastructure act, it was designed specifically to attack the ability of First Nations to defend their rights, the ones that they had earned in the courts. Grand Chief Noskey from Treaty 8 has said: we know it was designed only to attack First Nations because it certainly wasn’t used when the infrastructure was being blocked on the Coutts border by people who are related to . . .

The Acting Speaker: I see the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Time Allocation on Bill 1

15. Mr. Schow moved:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in third reading, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Schow: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, through you to all the members of this Chamber: we have had quite a bit of time now discussing Bill 1, and I would think that nobody would argue that point. We are now coming upon 17 hours of debate for this bill. That’s plenty of time to get points across and make it clear how you feel about it.

It’s interesting. We have known the intent of the members opposite from the very beginning when they chose not even to debate it at all, voting against it in first reading, something that happens rarely and having never happened in the history of our province after a throne speech. But that is also not surprising given that this morning, as a press conference was held by the members opposite, their key adviser from Ottawa had acknowledged he hadn’t read it either – hadn’t even read the amendment – so I’m not sure how someone like that could give any educated opinion on a bill if they haven’t even seen it.

I imagine members opposite, if they had the opportunity, would actually want to debate this bill all the way up until Christmas. That’s not the kind of present that I want to give my kids, not being there. I would rather do what’s best for Albertans: get this bill through this Chamber so that we can continue on their duty and continue on their errand. I encourage healthy debate as it is an important part of this Legislature. It’s part of our job, but there comes a point when the same message gets repeated over and over, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, is a bit disingenuous. I felt this way from the moment the members opposite voted against it in first reading.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members of the opposition wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-North West.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, again my comments on the other movements to closure apply to this one. Again it’s clear that this UCP government has created a flagship bill that is consistently driving in the ditch from the very first day that it came out. Here we are several days later, and it’s continuing to flounder, not meeting the needs of Albertans, even considering what the bill purports to do or tried to do, which is, you know, to stand up to federal intrusion. It’s only through sheer incompetence it fails to do that either.

You know, really, it’s best that we clear the air about that, because I know what this government is going to try to do now is invoke closure in the middle of the night and then try to respin this whole sorry mess into something that better suits them when we need to clear the air, clearly, around all of the shortcomings of this bill. The amendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford just brought forward is just the latest development that has only more clearly shone a light on the Assembly of First Nations and their universal condemnation of both this bill and some version of it in Saskatchewan, and people need to know that.

The way by which we do those things is to use the Legislative Assembly. You know, part of the criticism of Bill 1 was the subversion of the Legislative Assembly. What double hypocrisy and irony – that’s irony, actually – of this government, that they would use the shutting down of this Assembly to debate a bill which would subvert the authority of this Assembly, right? It just goes on and on. In the strongest terms I would urge all members to not vote for this request for closure, and instead we will continue with a fulsome debate, starting with the wonderful amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford brought forward on this bill.

Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 15 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:09 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

[Government Motion 15 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 1

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there others on amendment RA1?

Seeing none, I am prepared to call the question on the amendment RA1.

[Motion on amendment RA1 lost]

The Speaker: We are on third reading of Bill 1. Is there anyone wishing to join the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to third reading of Bill 1 and the opportunity being granted to the government side to save their ship by His Majesty's Loyal Opposition. This caucus is held together by we're not sure what these days. Perhaps it's fear of loss, but indeed we have six leadership candidates, five of whom lost, and, of course, the Premier won, so five of those individual leadership candidates who are still in the UCP caucus voted with their voices against the sovereignty act as it was being proposed by the Premier during the leadership debate, yet after that vociferous and very loud condemnation of the act, here we have a situation where all five have fallen into line and are standing up to salute the new leader and supporting this version of the sovereignty act. Indeed, not much has changed since the first version came out although there has been an attempt to make the bill palatable.

However, Mr. Speaker, I've been watching politics for many, many years, and as a youngster I do even remember watching John George Diefenbaker, then Prime Minister of Canada, Conservative Prime Minister of Canada, staunchly defending one issue or another on black and white television when I was only five or six years old, and I can tell you with certainty from my own watching of that man, Mr. Diefenbaker, that he had a very, very devoted love for our parliamentary institutions and would be, I believe, a most staunch defender of those institutions that many of the people in this room, particularly on the Conservative side, might have ever seen. I believe wholeheartedly that Mr. Diefenbaker would be turning in his grave right now listening to the type of attacks that we're seeing by the Conservative Party, at least the Conservative Party in name, that sits across from us in this Legislature. They are seeking to do anything but conserve our democratic institutions.

Further to that, at a time when we're supposedly in this country seeking to fulfill our obligation to address all 96 recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, reconciliation is not what we see from the government with respect to this piece of legislation, their flagship Bill 1. It indeed is a time, Mr. Speaker, when we are discovering thousands upon thousands of graves of children that are being discovered across Canada on lands adjacent to former residential school sites. At a time when we are going through this shuddering time as a nation, we're finding that the government of the day here in Alberta is choosing to forget and turn their back on our obligations not only under TRC but in their own provincial legislation.

Once again I turn to our own Alberta government website, where we're looking at the requirement to consult with First Nations, Mr. Speaker, and indeed what's happened is that there has been no consultation. Even though the government tries to deny this, explaining that they have spoken a little bit or they're going to speak later to Indigenous organizations, it's spelled clearly out in our own legislation and the website that the Aboriginal consultation office, or ACO, has guidelines, specific guidelines, varied guidelines, huge numbers of pages of guidelines unto describing exactly the process for Aboriginal consultation that has to take place under the rules in this province that exist. Yet none of them were followed by this government when it came to bringing forward this sovereignty act.

The First Nations chiefs have come forward to protect their rights, which they feel are very much under threat. That's not any surprise, but it is really, really disappointing and shameful that at this point in time in our history, when we're going through a period of recognition of our obligations under the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, when as a nation we're looking at thousands of children's graves being discovered, the First Nations chiefs are unanimous in their opposition to this bill. They're also very upset that they had to go to this extent to protest this threat upon their rights that they see embedded in this piece of legislation. Their opposition is being met with dismissive reactions by the government, where they'll say, "We'll talk about it later" or "We'll talk with them tomorrow; we'll consult afterwards; don't worry, it'll be okay." Well, indeed, Mr. Speaker, our obligation legally, under our own laws in this province, is to consult in advance and have meaningful consultation.

There are other communities, Mr. Speaker, who feel threatened by this legislation, and one that has not been really brought forward, though, is the francophone community. La communauté francophone ici dans la province de l'Alberta a grand peur de ce projet de loi. They fear very much that any legislative gains that they have made in order to promote the French language and French language education in this province are potentially going to be under threat should the provincial government decide that indeed they don't want to support federal government directions in francophone education or supporting francophone services in Alberta. So there's great fear in the francophone community that we're hearing about as members of the opposition. That's one thing that we'll be following up with more in time to come.

There are so many holes in this boat, Mr. Speaker, that we're trying to give the government of the day an opportunity to save their leaky boat, but it doesn't seem as though they're listening. Let's give them an opportunity to take a breath and reload and perhaps think about this for a while. I therefore have an amendment that I'd like to propose.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this amendment will be referred to as HA1.

If you'd like to go ahead and proceed, you'd be welcome to do so.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll proceed with the introduction of the amendment, brought on behalf of the hon. Opposition House Leader, to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

This, as I said, will offer a life preserver to this government to save their sinking ship and to perhaps tell Albertans that they've heard them loud and clear and will be able to perhaps completely withdraw this legislation six months hence, once they've really gotten their act together within their own caucus and perhaps been able to inform their leader of caucus, the Premier, that they fear for their political lives if indeed the decision is made to go forward with this piece of legislation.

I'm not going to speak at length to the amendment. I'll leave that to other members of caucus. Suffice it to say, Mr. Speaker, that I remember times when we were in government and the opposition suggested indeed that we should look at something a little more deeply, and there were times when we should have. This is an opportunity for this government to really take a good look at what they're doing and perhaps save their leaky ship.

I'd invite them to come up and speak about the amendment we brought forward and, hopefully, support it to give themselves an opportunity to breathe some fresh air and really think about what they're doing in terms of the political liability that they're giving themselves and the economic damage that they're doing to our province by bringing forward this undemocratic legislation.

The Speaker: On amendment HA1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will speak for my full time, and that won't be long enough. First, I can say to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul that there were times in our government where we did bring in amendments to our own bill, and there were times that we admitted when we got it wrong. That's something that I'm proud of, to have the humility and the ability to be able to do that. I wish the current government would do that. What I'm about to speak to is my frustration of the members opposite and some of their level of arrogance as to the impact of this bill.

Now, I will commend the members opposite. When we were government, there were times that they warned our government of unintended consequences. That's what I'm going to focus on right now, Mr. Speaker. We can go back and forth and name all the different people that have validated the bill or have unvalidated the bill. Great. We can bring forward a list. The problem is the unintended consequences of this bill. If it does chase away international investment, I don't want to stand here in six months from now and say, "I told you so," because we, the province of Alberta, lose. I'm not opposing this bill because I don't think that Alberta should stand up for Alberta. I do. I do not believe, from the conversations I've had with international investors, that this is the right mechanism.

Here is a question for the government. Have you conducted a risk matrix by introducing this bill? Have you introduced a risk matrix? [interjection] Please don't change the subject. The answer is yes or no. If you have introduced a risk matrix, then please table it because every company that does business internationally or is thinking about doing business internationally will conduct a risk matrix. My fear and the reason – at every reading that I've spoken to this bill and I've spoken against this bill has not been because I don't believe we should stand up for Alberta. Check Hansard over the last three nights. I agree that we need to stand up for Alberta. I agree that the federal government has at times overreached. [interjection] I appreciate the Deputy Premier is chirping.

We have stood up for this province time and time again. I will get the Premier to check the fact that the first pipeline to tidewater in 50 years is being built because the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the former Premier stood up for this province. How many pipelines has your government built to tidewater? None. [interjections] Please. Please. I have the floor.

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Bilous: None. None.

Here's the biggest concern. For a government that is supposed to be conservative – and I'm saying that it's supposed to be – in their risk analysis, my friends on the other side, you are risking the future of Alberta for the next 30 years with this piece of legislation that is to appease 1 per cent of the population.

The irony in the fact that this government introduced the most undemocratic, dictatorial piece of legislation . . . [interjection] No. Please don't "come on" me. No other government introduced a piece of legislation that allows them to unilaterally change any legislation, statutes, or regulations in the province behind closed doors. If that's not undemocratic, I don't know what it is. Well, other than introducing closure, but of course when they were opposition, then they cried, and now that they're government, it's okay.

An Hon. Member: You set the precedent.

Mr. Bilous: The irony of a member saying that we set the precedent. You're right, because we've been government since 1920. Wait. No, we haven't. No. That was Conservative governments who used closure for the last 75 years.

Mr. Madu: My party built this province. In four years you destroyed it.

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Bilous: Deputy Premier, I will invite you to speak, and I'm happy to get into an exchange, sir, through you, Mr. Speaker, of course.

The issue I have with this and my frustration is that members can claim, including cabinet, that this will not risk future investment. Here's the reality: you don't know that. You don't. This is the challenge with introducing legislation having unintended consequences. The problem is that it may take six months or 12 months before we see the impact of this legislation, but what we've been told – and I get that you don't want to take our word for it. Fair enough. The international investors I've spoken to have said that they are looking at other jurisdictions, no longer looking at Alberta. Why? Because Alberta is the only jurisdiction in Canada outside of Quebec – I'll talk about the impact of Quebec. Believe me.

If we want to follow Quebec, let's just follow the headquarters of all of the major financial institutions. Members who have been in the House the last two nights have heard this. All of the major financial institutions had their headquarters in Montreal until Quebec introduced their sovereignty act, and then where did they go? They left Quebec because, they said: we're not about to play by two different sets of rules between the province and the federal government. They all went to Toronto; 40-plus years later they're all still in Toronto. They're not moving back to Quebec, and Quebec is just now starting to recover from introducing a sovereignty act.

Now, I appreciate members opposite are saying that we're fearmongering. I'd like to think that what we're doing is trying to provide caution to the government from what we've heard from the international community. You know what? If we're wrong, and this doesn't impact international investment and investment into Alberta, I'll stand up and apologize, and I'll say that I got it wrong.

Mr. Madu: I commend you for that.

Mr. Bilous: But here's the problem. If we are right . . .

Mr. Madu: You won't be right.

Mr. Bilous: The Deputy Premier keeps talking as if he is God or he has some kind of globe that can predict the future. Through you, Mr. Speaker, with all respect, you don't know, and you haven't conducted a risk matrix. If you have, table it.

The problem is that if we are correct and this bill has long-reaching implications of chasing away investment, we will find that out in the long term. But the problem is that damages will be done. I don't want to stand up and say that we were right. We're cheering for Alberta. The problem is that the risk-reward of introducing the sovereignty act – it's not going to do what the government says it's going to do. It's not going to protect Alberta any more than the avenues we already have of going through the courts.

In fact, it's about to risk the hundreds of millions of dollars the federal government has committed to housing, to municipalities, to child care, a number of initiatives. If the federal government says, "You want to play hardball, Alberta? Great; you get nothing," how are we ahead? We're not. I want to see our province prosper, but I'm worried about this, and I'm worried about this from conversations with international investors. I'm not making this up. The potential downside and risk of this bill far outweigh the benefit.

That's why the opposition has opposed this bill right from the start. Now, I get that it was unprecedented for us to vote against first reading. I'm not a fan of that tactic, but I can tell you this. We had already heard from international investors when the Premier was talking about a sovereignty act months before it was introduced. There were consequences. Companies had said: we're going to put Alberta on pause until we see what's in the sovereignty act. That was months before it was introduced. Companies are not going to wait around to make investment decisions. Boards will make their decisions, and if Alberta is deemed risky, they will go somewhere else. It's already happened.

So the fact that now we're about to enshrine a sovereignty act into legislation – I will tell you, from the investors I've talked to, that it doesn't matter what's in it. The fact that you have a bill that tells the globe that the province of Alberta has a different set of rules from the federal government is a disincentive for investment. It's an additional risk, and for all the businesspeople on that side – and I know that there are several – investments don't like risk, and they will go to the jurisdiction that has the fewest risks and the most certainty. The reason I'm opposing this bill is that it presents risk and uncertainty.

As I've said, if I'm wrong and in a year from now there has been zero investment flight and zero impact, I'll get up and say that I was wrong. The problem is that if it's true, what the investors and the international investment community are telling us, that this will be a disincentive, then we are putting Alberta at a disadvantage, and I love this province too much to support a bill that could do that. I honestly also don't believe that the bill will deliver what the government thinks it will.

Again, I'm happy to have a conversation about: what are other mechanisms or tools that Alberta can implement to stand up to the federal government when they overreach? I'm happy to have that conversation. In fact, I think we should bring together several round-tables, including members from the business community, and let's talk about that: what can we do?

But I also think that politics is all about relationships, and the fact that this bill could have other unintended consequences like risking committed federal dollars for other programs, including housing and child care, is valid. We need to be able to deliver for the people that we represent. I don't think that this bill or that the approach that this UCP government has taken over the past four years have delivered for Albertans, and I mean that sincerely. As I've stated, I'm happy to sit down and have a conversation on: how do we deliver? Is there a way for the opposition and the government to agree on initiatives where we can go together to the provincial government to say, "You need to do ABC, and here's why"? But I cannot support this bill because of the potential risks and implications that come with it. It honestly makes me nervous for where we're going to be in a year from now.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to halt this bill. Vote in favour of the hoist.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Madu: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I want to very quickly respond to the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. I must admit that I actually appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview making the comment that he's now prepared to sit down with those of us on this aisle to think about how we work together to make sure that we prevent the constant attack by the federal government, something we have not heard from the members opposite since I have been in this Assembly.

This bill, Bill 1, came about as a result of the constant, relentless attack on this province's economy, our people, our vital economic interests. For years the members opposite, rather than siding with Albertans, have always sided with their friends at the federal Liberal government and now their federal NDP leader, Jagmeet Singh. Mr. Speaker, this is at the root of why we have gathered in this Assembly tonight, to make sure that we have a tool that will allow the government of Alberta to say to the federal government: you can't be relentlessly attacking our vital economic interests and our people's overall well-being and expect us not to respond.

We saw that between 2015 and 2019, when the members opposite were in office, in government. They imposed multibillions of dollars in carbon tax that they did not even bother to run on. They did not tell Albertans that they were going to impose multibillions of dollars in carbon tax. I wasn't in this Chamber then, Mr. Speaker, but I recall the people of Alberta protesting that decision. In fact, it is the decisions of the members opposite that ultimately led me into politics. I did not envision running for public office until the members opposite formed government, in 2015. Then they began their attack on our economy, and they refused to listen to the people of Alberta.

They pursued policies that undermined our exceptional economic advantage to the point where Alberta was nearly on its knees.

Mr. Speaker, here are the facts. By the time they were done with Alberta, 183,000 of our fellow citizens were out of work. They brought in that carbon tax, that made everything so expensive and made life less affordable for the ordinary guy. They ran a deficit for every single year, in the billions of dollars, that they were in office. They took our debt, the entire provincial government debt, from $13.9 billion to over $70 billion in short order. Before they formed government, we were spending a couple of hundred million dollars to service the provincial government debt, all of our debt. By the time they were done with Alberta, we were spending $2.2 billion to service the provincial government debt.

Mr. Speaker, that is $2.2 billion we could have invested in education, in health care, in social services. Instead, we are paying out this interest to bond masters who are not even in this country. They are headquartered in Tokyo, in New York, in Paris, and in Beijing. Those of us on this side of the aisle would prefer to spend that $2.2 billion on our people right here at home to develop our communities. They didn't end there. We were constantly being downgraded by the rating agencies.

They befriended Justin Trudeau and claimed that they were going to buy social licence to be able to protect our economy. Instead, we got Bill C-69, the so-called no-more-pipelines bill. We got Bill C-48, that singularly targeted Alberta's bitumen. We then got a carbon tax. Alberta was under attack. Federal legislation after federal legislation by the Trudeau federal government was being imposed and rammed through against Alberta's economic interests. Our people were crying, pleading with the opposition to work to defend Alberta. They lifted no finger, Mr. Speaker.

We now have, in my view, my humble view, the worst environment minister in Canadian history, a radical who wants to end the largest sector of the Canadian economy, the oil and gas sector. Mr. Speaker, there were rallies by the members opposite across our province with radicals that wanted to end fossil fuels. There were photographs of members opposite . . .

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt. However, I have been personally part of a point of order in this Assembly as a member with respect to the use of the word "radical" and directing it at other members of the Assembly. I would encourage the Deputy Premier to make other choices.

Mr. Madu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to the federal environment minister, not to the members opposite.

Mr. Speaker, we are now at a point where Alberta, as a province, as a people, must defend this province's vital economic interests; hence, this critical bill. That is exactly what this bill is meant to accomplish, nothing more, nothing else.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment HA1, put forward by the members opposite, would essentially say that this bill should not proceed. That is shameful. On one hand the members opposite finally – at least I want to give credit to the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for acknowledging that there is a need for us to come together to protect our province and our people, but it is too late. What have they put forward on how they think we can make this bill better achieve that? Their intention is to ensure we have no tool whatsoever to be able to say to the federal government: you've got to stay in your lane.

They don't want to do that because that is not their interest. It has never been their interest. Otherwise, at this moment in time in our history, when we have rising inflation, high cost of living, at a rate we have never seen in a decade, you would think that their first order of business would be to call on their federal NDP leader to work with his friend Justin Trudeau to end the carbon tax or to put forward measures that will ensure that the people of this country are not being hammered by their policies. That is not the case. So, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. The bill as crafted with the amendment that has been made before the floor of this House achieves that, provides that tool for us to be able to say no to the federal government.

I also heard, you know, an argument that this violates treaty rights pursuant to section 35 of the Constitution. Nothing could be further from the truth. To the contrary, Mr. Speaker, this bill in section 2 makes it clear that the treaty rights enshrined in our Constitution are preserved. It is there in black and white. Rather than the members opposite standing with us to inform Albertans and to speak with our First Nation communities that there's nothing in this bill that impairs their treaty and Aboriginal rights, they have been fearmongering.

Mr. Speaker, let me say a word or two to our First Nation communities. I have had the honour of serving in four different ministries. I've worked closely with them. I value them, and this government values that strategic relationship. In my time that I served in those ministries, I have carefully listened to them and worked with them to move forward their agenda.

Member Irwin: On Bill 1?

Mr. Madu: There is nothing in Bill 1 – to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood: there's nothing in Bill 1 that impairs their treaty and Aboriginal rights, and it is high time you stop fearmongering. These divisive politics need to come to an end at some point for the sake of our province.

Mr. Speaker, you know, many people here don't know – I often don't talk about my own history. Our First Nation communities are so dear to my heart, the chiefs, because my own parents, both my mom and dad, are also Aboriginal chiefs from where I come from. So I understand the issues that they confront and they deal with, and all of us must have an interest in making sure that we work with them to confront them. I want to say once again to them: we hear their concerns. We hear their desire for us to work with them, but the bill currently being debated in this House, in the most respectful manner, takes into consideration the need to protect and preserve their Aboriginal and treaty rights. This government will continue to dialogue with them, work with them to ensure economic opportunity in a manner that furthers true reconciliation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to vote on this proposed amendment.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to provide a few comments on why this bill ought not be considered by this House at this time. We have had a number of conversations in the media and elsewhere. We've seen many, many people weighed in on the risks to our investment climate, certainly our economic future, our economic resilience, and there is no question that part of that is because it represents a full-throated attack on the stabilizing principles of liberal democracy, namely separation of powers and primacy of the judiciary. It's useful to consider why the centrepiece of this legislation is actually to have this Legislature take the role of the judiciary. I have indicated that, certainly, when one consults the architects of the free Alberta strategy, one sees a politicization of the federal judiciary, a distrust of the judiciary, and – it is a feature, not a bug – a co-ordinated political attack on the role of the judiciary and their independence.

Now, here's the thing: why? Why is that there? And why is this sovereignty act essentially indistinguishable from what was campaigned on and what is contained in the free Alberta strategy? In fact, it was quite interesting to me that there wasn't a pivot, as was widely anticipated a week or eight days ago. A number of people had begun to comfort themselves out in the investment community and so on that perhaps the province, given the deep unpopularity of the legislation and the fact that we know that the government and the various leadership candidates heard loud and clear from the business community that this sort of misadventure was, in fact, a deeply problematic, destabilizing proposal coming from the now Premier.

If we examine the words of the free Alberta strategy and the architects of it – architect is actually the people who wrote things down in a legal document that makes Rudy Giuliani look like a legal scholar. Barry Cooper, June 21, 2022, writes that the free Alberta strategy and the sovereignty act in particular were meant to be unconstitutional because what can flow then, from the passage of a sovereignty act whereby the Legislature takes up the role of the judiciary, is the following. Here's what they can then do. Interim measures are things like getting rid of the RCMP, an Alberta pension plan, Alberta unemployment insurance, a new Alberta banking law, and "opting out of federal programs that interfere with provincial jurisdiction, chiefly in the areas of health, education, resources and [environment]." All of those aspects are in fact enabled, emboldened, by this act.

Then Mr. Cooper goes further. Other measures that flow from the passage of a sovereignty act require the passage of this act in order to get to the following: "replacing Canada in negotiating international trade agreements... ensuring all judicial appointments in the province are made by Alberta," which is a clear section 96 violation of the Constitution right there, "expanding and enhancing Alberta's financial institutions to protect Alberta businesses"; in other words, just simply violating the Bank Act, I guess, and enabling this Alberta revenue agency to divert taxes from the federal treasury to Alberta and granting immunity from federal enforcement through the Canada Revenue Agency.

I am struggling to think of any business that would want to invest in a place where you don't know if there are health and education transfers, infrastructure transfers, what the banking laws are, where you're going to remit your taxes and how much. Given that the sovereignty act is virtually indistinguishable from the free Alberta strategy and the free Alberta strategy authors have indicated that this is the next step, it is no wonder that we have heard from business loud and clear. They need to know what the rules of the road are.

12:10

The public, I think, has come to accept that politics permeates and saturates most of life now, and there are fewer and fewer areas, slivers, within that Venn diagram upon which, in a polarized political environment, political parties can come to agreement. But I think Canadians and Albertans do not accept that what's right and wrong is political. It's not. I don't think that Albertans accept this idea, that there isn't just one set of rules for everyone. I don't think that people think that there's room for politics in that. I don't think that Albertans think the idea that we can just politicize the judiciary, usurp their role, undermine the authority of the courts, undermine basic rules of trade and commerce, of banking, of taxation – I don't think Albertans believe those things are political. They're not up to the feckless inclinations of an unelected leader. I don't think that Albertans or Canadians, but certainly Albertans, expect that we politicize the basic traffic signals of our democracy. We just don't.

These stabilizing principles are what give us the good life. I have said this many times. They're what give us equality, dignity of the person, individual liberty. They are what govern our property rights transactions, trade, and commerce. They are what govern scientific advance, development of knowledge, dissemination of knowledge, widespread literacy, even. It is the type of society that allows for people of working-class backgrounds whose parents never went to university to come and, you know, achieve a couple of university degrees and then stand in a Legislature and represent their constituents for now almost the end of two terms. They are the foundation of who we are, and they're also the foundation of who we are going to be, because this is ultimately a fool's errand that will be stopped in its tracks by Albertans.

It already has been. They didn't even need to see – the reason why we voted against first reading on Bill 1 was because we had already heard that it had driven out investment. We had already heard from Albertans that they were entirely uninterested in this particular caper. They had rejected it, in fact, and they agreed with the now Minister of Finance, who called it an economic time bomb. They agreed with the current jobs minister, who called it a fairy tale. They agreed with the now Municipal Affairs minister, who called it anarchy, and the minister of trade has said that it was like shooting ourselves in the foot. We shall see in the coming weeks from the publicly available data that comes out just how much more Albertans agree. We already know that over 60 per cent of Calgarians do not think that this is an appropriate way for the provincial government to be spending their time.

I have heard over and over again a number of excuses made, chiefly among them this idea that we should be more like Quebec. "Oh, Quebec gets to do these things. Why not us?" When the Parti Québécois began these ridiculous misadventures of separating from Canada and so on and so forth, hundreds of thousands of people left the province of Quebec. There was a capital flight unlike anything we've ever seen in the history of the country. It is only very recently, in the last four or five years, that Quebec has returned to stable economic growth. They have had some very good news coming out of, in particular, the city of Montreal in terms of attracting new investment and new industries, economic diversification, and so on, and it is only since they essentially left behind the fractious politics of federalist first and sovereigntists that had dominated the landscape for so long.

Legault made himself a coalition of centre-right parties, essentially, with the sole goal of moving beyond the cul-de-sac that the sovereigntists and separatists had driven the province into for the previous 40 years. They took power, and they rewon it.

The Parti Québécois is, I want to say, the third party, I'm pretty sure, and they compete with the Québec solidaire, after the last election that was in September, I think, for, like, fourth-party status. They are barely a ripple in Quebec politics anymore, but it took that long. It took that long. Meanwhile, as my hon. friend indicated earlier, the capital flight was staggering. It would be impressive if it wasn't so depressing for the people of Quebec and so destabilizing to the Canadian economy more generally.

We don't need that. I'm pretty sure we don't want to replicate that. When you even look at the economic performance between Alberta and Quebec per capita GDP and so on, I'm pretty sure we don't want that, because that would mean a reduction in our standard of living here in Alberta. We don't want to be like Quebec in those ways. I don't think you think what you think you think.

What we do want is to create a resilient economy for the future, where we welcome investment, where we can quite easily say: yes, the Bank Act applies here, and when you pay your taxes, you know where it's going to go. When you put in a Water Act permit, you know what's going to happen. If you're an oil sands operator, you know what the future of the joint oil sands monitoring agreement looks like. You understand your obligations under both navigable waters, federal species at risk, and the lower Athabasca regional plan, both federal and provincial. The rules are clear. The expectations are obvious. The investment climate is stable. The only way we get there is by rejecting this hot mess bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has risen.

Ms Smith: Well, thank . . .

The Speaker: My apologies. I'm sorry. You actually moved the bill, or third reading was moved on your behalf, which means you've actually already spoken. My apologies. You're unable to speak to the bill.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Well, what a delightful surprise, Mr. Speaker, to be able to likely wrap up our final opportunity to speak to this absolutely terrible piece of legislation. [interjection] If somebody just wants to send me a note if I need to – okay. Wonderful.

Mr. Speaker I've had the opportunity to sit through the majority of this debate on the job-killing sovereignty act, Bill 1, that this government put forward, a flagship . . .

The Speaker: Sorry. My apologies. We're on the hoist. Because we're on the hoist, this is possible. If we were on the actual reading, we wouldn't be allowed.

She has five minutes or whatever time she would like to take.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I can get everything in in five minutes. I understand that the members opposite have been trying to derail any discussion of this bill from the beginning. They didn't even want to read it when it was first introduced. They voted against it in first reading. Then they asked the Prime Minister to weigh in and revoke the bill, denied, of course, doing that. I think they understand why it is that people reacted so, so badly in asking for the federal government to come in and interfere in our jurisdiction, because that is exactly what they and their party leader at the federal level have been enabling with the coalition they have in Ottawa for the last number of years.

I find it so remarkable that they've been talking about investment like capital flight, saying that it has been – they're projecting that there would be unprecedented capital flight. Well, that would be hard to beat because there was unprecedented capital flight when they brought through the climate leadership plan. That was once again partnering with our enemies who want to shut down our industry to try in some flawed way to get appeasement with Ottawa. I don't know why it is they felt that they needed to suck up to Ottawa. It's not like Ottawa is a national government. The way our country works is that we are a federation of sovereign, independent jurisdictions. They are one of those signatories to the Constitution, and the rest of us are signatories to the Constitution and have a right to exercise our sovereign powers in our own area of jurisdiction.

The problem that we've seen over the last number of years – and when I talk about the loss of investment that occurred because of this failed attempt at trying to chase after federal approval. The climate leadership plan brought in a carbon tax which – three aspects: carbon tax, phase-out of coal, and an emissions cap. One of the things that occurred, of course, was that Northern Gateway ended up getting cancelled, cheered along by the members opposite.

They never supported Northern Gateway, which would have done so much to help advance our economy. Energy East, once again, also got shut down with no support from the opposition. Koch Oil announced that they had two oil sands projects that they walked away from because of the uncertainty being created by the climate leadership plan. We also had the Keephills plant, a coal plant in operation for just six months when the actions of the members opposite forced it to shut down.

We still have uncertainty in the electricity industry and in creating new generation as a result of those decisions. I was just meeting with a group of energy leaders in the retail side yesterday, talking about how in the future, after 2035, it's uncertain how we're going to develop new natural gas plants because of the new requirements being brought in at the federal level. This is again a violation of our provincial jurisdiction. And then, of course, Western Feedlots also shut down. They only reopened when the UCP formed government again.

In the year after they got elected, there were 7,200 businesses that shut down. That's what capital flight looks like. It was caused by the actions of the members opposite. So, really, they should spare me any discussion about how much they care about the investment climate, because if they cared about the investment climate, they wouldn't have started this track in the first place. The reason this track is continuing is because of their coalition at the federal level, and this is part of the reason why they keep on trotting out Ottawa-based pundits to support their view, because this is the way they think the country ought to work, that Ottawa ought to come in and tell us how to run our own affairs.

The members on this side feel the opposite. It's because of hit after hit after hit that we have taken as a result of the process they started. Bill C-48, a tanker ban on the west coast that is designed strictly to land-lock Alberta's bitumen, came in under their watch. Bill C-69, which is an historic invasion of provincial jurisdiction – we already have a court judgment telling us so. We have 10 provinces onboard with fighting it, because they inserted themselves into every area of provincial jurisdiction when it comes to creating projects. Any power plant more than 200 megawatts has to be approved by the federal government. Any stretch of highway 75 kilometres long has to be approved by the federal government. On anything that they determine is federal jurisdiction, even if it's 100 per cent within our borders, they can intercede and tell us: sorry; you can't build that. That is such a violation of provincial jurisdiction.

When you look at the fact that we had an equalization referendum, 62 per cent of Albertans voted in favour of pushing back against Ottawa, and I think that was only one aspect of us trying to start a conversation so that we could get a fair deal out of Ottawa after we did the Fair Deal Panel all across the province. What did we get instead? We got environment minister Steven Guilbeault, and what has he done since he got into the position of environment minister? Has he come with an open hand and said, "Hey, let's work together; let's try to find ways that we can export more LNG; let's find ways that we can work on carbon technology; let's find a way that we can develop the hydrogen economy; let's work together on getting more of your resources to market"? No. The exact opposite. He announced an edict that we were going to be moving to an electricity grid that does not allow for any fossil fuel based power to be on that grid after 2035.

We've got 90 per cent of our electricity in this province generated by natural gas, and the cost associated in this short period of time of trying to develop new power with carbon technology and carbon capture – just in such a short period of time to enable more of that development. This is too short a time frame to be able to achieve that. What's going to happen when we hit 2035 and they're now telling us we can't build power plants, when we talk about, as well, that they came in and said that they want to phase out combustion engine vehicles so no more can be sold after 2035? That's only 13 years away. What in the world do they think is going to happen?

Have the members opposite even talked to anybody about the impact it would have, what it is that we need to have to increase the capacity of our electricity grid to be able to accommodate . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford will come to order.

The Premier has the call.

Ms Smith: Have they even talked to anybody in the electricity business about what it would cost to upgrade the power grid in order to put a hundred per cent plug-in vehicles on the road by 2035? I was in Wainwright, and I talked to somebody who wanted to put two Teslas in his home. It would have cost $20,000 to upgrade the electricity system just to plug in those two vehicles. [interjections] Our current electricity system . . .

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Smith: . . . only allows for us to have six vehicles on a single block plugged in before, all of a sudden, we have to do a massive investment in our power grid. Are they even – how are we going to do that if the federal government is dictating to us that we're not allowed to add new power? They also began the just . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Smith: They also began the just transition task force. What is the just transition? Well, when it was applied to coal workers, it just transitioned coal workers completely out of work. They want to have a just transition, as they call it, of oil and natural gas workers completely out of the business as well. This was also started at the federal level.

In addition, what have we seen? As we were going through our leadership contest, they announced that they wanted to have an emissions cap on fertilizer of 30 per cent. They put a warning label on beef, for heaven's sake. It was only because of massive push-back on the industry that they finally relented on that and realized that they had to consult more. They've announced an emissions cap just prior to our leadership race even being over. We're right in the middle of choosing a new Premier, and on September 30 they put forward a policy consultation to put an emissions cap on our oil and natural gas emissions that would reduce emissions 42 per cent by 2030, right in the middle of our leadership contest. What disrespect for our process here. It isn't even their area of jurisdiction.

Now, of course, our Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul has spoken eloquently as well about the . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt – and I do apologize to the Premier for neglecting to recall that we were on the hoist amendment at the beginning of her remarks – but pursuant to Standing Order 21 the time allotted for this debate has concluded. I am . . . [interjections] Order. Order. Order.

I am required to put all questions to the Assembly to dispose of the items before the Assembly with respect to third reading of Bill 1, Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 8, 2022

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Lord, the God of righteousness and truth, grant to our King, to his government, to Members of the Legislative Assembly, and to all in positions of responsibility the guidance of your spirit. May they never lead the province wrongly through love of power, desire to please, or unworthy ideas but, laying aside all private interest and prejudice, keep in mind their responsibility to seek to improve the condition of all.

Hon, members, please remain standing for the singing of God Save the King.

Hon. Members:

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King!
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the King!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Queen Elizabeth II's Platinum Jubilee Medal

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee medal was awarded to only 7,000 Albertans in recognition of significant contribution to the province. This commemorative medal, designed to mark Queen Elizabeth's unprecedented 70 years of service, is even more relevant given her recent passing and the outpouring of appreciation and respect shown for her distinguished dedication to the people of the Commonwealth.

It is my great honour to present this medal to you today and thank you for your service to our province. This medal serves as a moving reminder of our responsibility to serve with the same strength and humility that was demonstrated by Queen Elizabeth herself. The front of the medal shows an effigy of the Queen and on the reverse the shield of Alberta and our provincial wild roses. The placement of the shield on the medal should be a reminder that our service is not about us but about the advancement of our province and the communities in which we serve. Just as Queen Elizabeth II served to see others lifted up, I trust that this award will renew our commitment to building our communities and improving the lives of Albertans.

Congratulations to each and every one of you.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has a visitor.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Legislature Marilyn Buffalo, the CEO of the Nechi Institute and the elder who gave blessings at the unveiling of the official portrait of the 17th Premier of Alberta today. Please rise and accept the warm greetings of the House.

Member Irwin: I'm so pleased to rise today to introduce Ray Martin, former MLA for Edmonton-Norwood, Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, former Alberta NDP leader and school board trustee. I just awarded him a platinum jubilee medal for his decades of service. I'm so proud to be his MLA. Please join me in welcoming Ray Martin.

Ms Hoffman: I am welcoming Edmonton-Glenora constituent and former MLA Alex McEachern. Alex was first elected in '86 and again in '89. His commitment to social democracy and ensuring all Alberta students get a quality public education are two of the reasons I'm so fond of him. Alex also received a platinum jubilee. Please join me in welcoming him.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier has an introduction.

Ms Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce you to some of the hardest working public servants in this province, 30 constituency assistants from each corner of Alberta. They are here today for training. I was able to join them for dinner last night, where I reminded them that every time I screw up, I know that they're the first ones to hear about it, so I thank you deeply for the work that you do. I invite you to join them and me at the tree-lighting ceremony later this afternoon, but in the meantime I ask you to rise and provide them all a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. the chief government whip.

Mr. Rutherford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three grade 6 classes from Beau Meadow school from the city of Beaumont. Thank you for being here. It's so great to see so many students back in the Assembly. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Ms Armstrong-Homeniuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize, to you and through you, the grade 6 students from l'école par élémentaire of Fort Saskatchewan and their teacher Mr. Spencer Dunn. Welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has a guest.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Welcome Jose Angeles, a Queen Elizabeth II platinum jubilee medal recipient. Please rise. His record of service includes president of the Congress of the Philippine Associations of Alberta, publisher for the Alberta Filipino Journal, and for 40 years he's co-ordinated the Philippine pavilion at Edmonton heritage days. Jose is joined by many members of his friends and family. Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Forestry, Parks and Tourism.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Sara-Lyn Quist, who hails from the second-most beautiful constituency in the province. You might know which one I'm referring to. Sara-Lyn is a community builder and an asset to many in her hometown of Three Hills. I've come to know Sara very well, and I'm glad that she could join us here today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Affordability Plan and Inflation Relief Act

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a result of increasing costs and record levels of inflation, Albertans have been struggling to heat their homes and feed their families. These are things that they should never have to worry about. This affordability crisis is one that our province can't solve on our own, but due to our balanced budget and strong fiscal position our government is able to offer significant relief to Albertans who are struggling.

To prove this, an entire ministry has been created to help weather the storm. The Ministry of Affordability and Utilities is working hard and has already taken a number of steps to make life more affordable. Through Bill 2, the Inflation Relief Statutes Amendment Act, 2022, our government is demonstrating our commitment to support Albertans. The extension of the fuel tax relief program will help Albertans save 13.6 cents per litre every time they fill up. The natural gas rebate program is providing price protection throughout the winter months so families can heat their homes with peace of mind, and the electricity rebate program will help alleviate some financial burdens we see Albertans facing until April.

Those financial burdens are the reason we are also indexing personal income taxes to the inflation rate retroactive to 2022. As a result, money is being put back into the pockets of Albertans. Furthermore, our government is providing financial assistance to food banks and other not-for-profits across Alberta. They've been experiencing increased demand, and we are ensuring they have what they need to ensure all Albertans are being supported.

Mr. Speaker, we recognize that the affordability crisis is at the forefront for every Albertan. In a time of high inflation the affordability action plan and inflation relief act will help ease the burden on people across the province. Our government is committed to providing relief for Albertans and businesses while also charting a better, more affordable path forward for future generations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, with apologies to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore because he was the first member's statement today, and it was my error.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Mr. Nielsen: I, like many Albertans, am deeply concerned about the passing of the job-killing sovereignty act in literally the dead of night, so I wanted to remind the Assembly and Albertans that there were members of the government who had been vocal opponents of the sovereignty act since its conceptualization. In fact, there are too many quotes from members of the UCP against the sovereignty act to fit in my statement today, so I have included some of my favourites.

1:40

The Minister of Trade, Immigration and Multiculturalism said, quote: there is nothing about the sovereignty act that makes sense. She also said that it was "an unconstitutional delusion." The Minister of Finance said that the act "requires Albertans and Alberta business to risk their livelihoods." The MLA for Chestermere-Strathmore said that she rejected the act because it was "abandonment of the Canadian principle of Constitutionalism." The Minister of Municipal Affairs called this, quote: the anarchy act. The Minister of Environment and Protected Areas said that this act caused "instability and chaos." The Minister of Jobs, Economy and Northern Development said: the legal, economic, and political turmoil produced would be the last thing Alberta needs. [interjections]

Why is it these members all abandoned their beliefs, abandoned their principles, and surrendered to the Premier? How can they speak out against a bill that Albertans do not want, just to turn their backs on their constituents and vote in support of the sovereignty act? These members of the UCP are afraid to stand up to the Premier, but the NDP is not afraid, and I promise we will continue this fight.

The Speaker: A reminder to members that Members' Statements are an opportunity for members of the Assembly to speak for two minutes uninterrupted, and I encourage members to ensure that they have that right.

Cost of Living and Affordability Plan

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents are struggling; in fact, many Albertans are struggling. The cost of everything has skyrocketed: $6 for a head of lettuce. One restaurant owner told me that he is concerned. He said that seniors, who make up a big population of his clients, are not coming back. They stopped coming because of COVID, and now, because of the price shock, they can't come back.

What has brought us to this point, how long is it going to last, and is there anything that can be done to lessen the pain? These are the questions that I hear most. What brought us to this point? Well, for the past 30 months governments all over the world have printed an extra $6.72 trillion and flooded the world with extra dollars. That money has to flow through the economy before we see any real softening of inflation. The other problem is supply chain issues caused by governments' COVID response. China has been chasing a zero-COVID policy for over two and a half years. Whole cities have been shut down. The unrest we are seeing in China and worldwide supply chain problems are a result of these policies.

The truth is that we are just a little fish in a big pond. We didn't create the inflationary problems, but we are privileged to be in a position to be able to help. Our government's affordability relief package is a whopping $2.4 billion. It entails a retroactive reindexation of income taxes, $600 for every person on AISH and PDD, and $600 for seniors and children in Alberta with household incomes of $180,000 or less. The fuel tax, 13.6 cents per litre, is gone for the next six months. Mr. Speaker, wouldn't it be nice if the federal Liberals and their NDP allies would get rid of their portion of the fuel tax as well instead of hiking it? Food banks are getting $15 million to help our most vulnerable. Lastly, every Albertan will see a $200 relief on their utility bills, for a total of $500 in relief since July.

That's a whole lot of Christmas cheer going around in Alberta, and Albertans could really use it.

Homelessness

Ms Sigurdson: Mr. Speaker, the other night the Government House Leader rose to interrupt one of my colleagues who was speaking passionately about the need for more housing and government support for Albertans struggling to make ends meet amid an inflationary crisis. He literally tried to claim, in this very House, that the provincial government does not bear responsibility for people dying on our streets in the freezing cold, for people whose limbs are being amputated due to extreme frostbite, for people who are dealing with addiction, who are feeling lost. These are Albertans. They're our neighbours, friends, sons, daughters, mothers, fathers.

Not the UCP's responsibility? Let's look at the facts. As of this month there are almost 3,000 people experiencing homelessness in Edmonton, half of them outdoors, sleeping rough, or using shelter spaces. There are hundreds in the Premier's riding, hundreds in Lethbridge, 2,000 in Calgary. Doctors are seeing patients with injuries that just won't heal, who are already missing fingers and limbs, and people who have exposed bones because the tissue has frozen off. Shelters are operating at or beyond capacity, and additional spaces promised haven't come through despite the UCP government's bragging about them. Shelters' highest occupancy rates are on the coldest nights of the winter. This has been brought to the UCP's attention year after year, and shelters are just one piece of the puzzle. The best solution is permanent housing.

These are the facts. None of this is a surprise. People are dying because of wilful choices by the UCP government. What is the price of human dignity? How do you measure the right to live? Each person who dies while experiencing homelessness is more than a fact, a number, a statistic. This is the responsibility of the provincial government.

I look forward to the election, where Albertans will have a chance to elect a government focused on ending homelessness, not avoiding the responsibility of dealing with it.

Job Creation

Ms Rosin: Well, Mr. Speaker, after all we've been through these past few years, I often tell myself that nothing can surprise me anymore, but the NDP have proved me wrong. They really have. This week they are now referring to this government as job killers. Job killers. Yes. The same members who are – right now the same members whose economic track record included losing 200,000 jobs, $3 billion of corporate tax revenue, and achieving an astonishing unemployment rate of 9 per cent have referred to this Conservative government as job killers.

I thought I just might take the opportunity to set the record straight on this government's job-killing record. What have we accomplished so far? Over 200,000 jobs created, 20 per cent of the country's total job creation from a province of only 4 million people; a multibillion-dollar increase in corporate activity; the highest number of employed Albertans in history; seven credit upgrades; the best year of oil production on record; a diversified economy; the fastest growing green energy market in the country; and the fastest growing tech sector in all of North America.

We have lowered income taxes. We have cut corporate taxes. We've slashed regulations. We've balanced the budget. We've invested in our communities. We have fought for our industries at the Supreme Court of Canada. We have created sector strategies for hydrogen, lithium, petrochemicals, plastics, hemp, recycling, agriculture, irrigation. We've signed forest management agreements. Mr. Speaker, we've seen the number of tech start-ups double year over year. We've ushered in the biggest Hollywood production in Canadian and HBO history, and we are now leading the country in economic and GDP growth. That is this government's economic track record.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP can call us job killers all they want, but Albertans know the truth, and deep down I think even the NDP know the truth. After three short years of a United Conservative government Alberta is the strongest and most diversified it has ever been, and we are well on our way to becoming the most attractive market in all of North America and the world for job creation. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster-Wainwright.

Nurse Education in Wainwright

Mr. Rowsell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have all heard about shortages of doctors. There is also a problem of a nursing shortage in rural Alberta. In order for the health system to operate effectively, we need a complete team working as a unit. Nurses are a critical part of these teams. The question, then, is: why is there a more pronounced shortage of nurses in rural Alberta? One of the reasons is that students need to go to major urban centres to get their nursing degree and then likely wind up staying there when they complete their program.

Yesterday our government was proud to celebrate a new four-year bachelor of nursing pilot program at the Wainwright health centre that began last year. It's the first program of its kind and a big step forward for our rural health care. This program will help people that want to become nurses but want to stay in their own community for their training and to follow their own dreams. If you want more people to work in smaller communities, the best thing you can do is train them there. This program is an excellent partnership between the University of Calgary, Alberta Health Services, our government, and the Wainwright health centre. With our continued funding the school will continue providing online courses, labs, and clinical practice in person.

Eight students started the program in September of 2021, and a second cohort of eight students began in September of 2022. The fact that both cohorts were filled easily is an indication that rural people want to join the medical field. It's just the latest step in building up the health workforce. If this pilot project is successful, this will be a great model for the rest of rural Alberta to follow.

Postsecondary Tuition and Student Loans

Mr. Eggen: Mr. Speaker, in the midst of an affordability crisis students and recent graduates are seeing their costs rise exponentially, yet this government has provided nothing, zip, zilch, in the affordability plan. Worse than that, the government of Alberta has piled costs onto students and recent graduates. Due to the cruel cuts to postsecondary by this UCP government tuition costs have reached to new heights. How are students going to make those payments? With student loans. But here, too, the government is bleeding the stone dry.

The current Alberta student loan interest rate is 6.9 per cent daily. Here's some quick math for the Chamber and folks at home. A four-year program at the University of Alberta with tuition and books is $10,000 a year, a total loan of $40,000. You'll see more than $2,000 interest added to that loan every single year, not to mention housing, food, and transportation.

The slogan Students Are Our Future may be overused, but it is definitely true, yet this government has time and time again chosen to leave them behind. With the affordability plan the government had the opportunity to provide much-needed support for Albertans seeking higher education. It is no surprise that we are seeing young people leaving our province.

So tell me, Mr. Speaker, where is the Alberta advantage? Our young people deserve better, a government that funds postsecondary education properly, that supports affordable education, listens to young people, and takes action to keep them here. That will be the focus of an NDP government come 2023. I look forward to being a part of it.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has question 1.

Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act

Ms Hoffman: Now that the job-killing sovereignty act has passed, the veil has fallen. The chief architect of the sovereignty act now says that our Constitution is broken, and he warns of an independence referendum. With this bill the Premier encourages separatist chaos, which undermines Alberta's economy and does nothing to address the affordability crisis and endangers our already under threat public health care system. The Premier has two choices. She can stand in this place and denounce the words of her flagship bill's author, or she can admit that her separatist agenda is the real heart of her job-killing sovereignty act. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Smith: Well, the name of the bill is the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. It says right in the bill that this is about being within a united Canada, and I have to tell you that it has already achieved the objective that we set out to do. We wanted to reset our relationship with the federal government. Let me tell you what Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said today in Ottawa. What he said was: we are not going to get into arguing about something that obviously is the Alberta government trying to push back on the federal government; we are going to continue to work as constructively as possible. That is exactly what we wanted to. . .

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, Barry Cooper wrote the bill, and he says it's about an independence referendum.

Mr. Speaker, last night the UCP rammed through their job-killing sovereignty act by invoking closure and shutting down debate. They passed their flagship bill last night in the dark while most Albertans were sleeping. They did this because they know that their bill undermines the rule of law, attacks treaty rights – nothing to laugh at – and it hurts jobs and investment in Alberta. Today the UCP are celebrating their own incompetence. Is the UCP seriously so cash strapped that the Premier is willing to sacrifice Alberta jobs just to raise a few bucks off her base?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act has nothing to do with leaving the country; it has everything to do with resetting the relationship. It was our Justice minister who wrote this legislation – it wasn't some outside party – and we got independent advice from constitutional lawyers to make sure that it fell within the confines of the Constitution. We have quote after quote after quote from constitutional lawyers who have said that we met that target. All it simply does is that it restates that Alberta's constitutional authority should be respected.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier conceived, introduced, and passed this bill all in bad faith just to appease her fringe base. There is no reason it had to pass last night. There was no reason to shut down debate. The Premier rammed it through because she's scared, because she wants to change the channel. The truth is that this hurts our public reputation, and it damages investor certainty. This bill will be challenged by First Nations, likely immediately upon proclamation. If the Premier is so confident that she is right, will she review the bill to the courts before it's proclaimed?

Ms Smith: Mr. Speaker, there were 18 and a half hours of debate on this bill. Nothing was rammed through. It was fully debated. The problem was that the Official Opposition was not prepared to be constructive about this. They broke convention and voted not to even read the bill. Then they asked their friend Justin Trudeau to try to revoke the bill, and then on top of that whatever they put forward in amendment was to eliminate any of the clauses in the bill. If they wanted to take part in a constructive process, we were more than happy to do that. They weren't, and that's why we're proceeding with it. It's going to preserve Alberta's constitutional rights.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bhullar-McCall.

Mr. Sabir: Last night, while most Albertans were sleeping, this government cut off debate and imposed their job-killing sovereignty act on Albertans. They did this in spite of warnings from economists, Indigenous leaders, chambers of commerce, and constitutional experts that this bill is dangerous for the economy, dangerous to democracy, and unconstitutional. Will the Premier finally agree to do the right thing and submit this bill to the courts so they can determine its constitutionality before she proclaims it?

Ms Smith: The constitutionality of this bill is not in question. Supreme Court Justice John Major looked at it, and he said that he doesn't find it alarming. What's so terrible about the province saying that if you want to impose on us, you've got to be sure to do it constitutionally? Leighton Grey, a lawyer with the Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms, said this: it is only because the federal government is violating the Constitution that the sovereignty act is even necessary; indeed, in a properly operating federation, this bill would be entirely superfluous. This is about pushing back on Ottawa, keeping them in their own lane, and it appears to be working.

Mr. Sabir: Yesterday the chiefs of Treaty 6, 7, and 8 all called for the bill to be abandoned. Not amended; abandoned. The government has a constitutional obligation to consult with Indigenous communities when bringing in legislation that could impact their treaty rights, a duty that this Premier and Indigenous Relations minister have ignored and don't care about. Indigenous Albertans deserve to be heard. Will the Premier allow the court to test the constitutionality of the bill, or will she force Indigenous leaders to take her to court?

Ms Smith: I was delighted earlier today to meet with the Kee Tas Kee Now Tribal Council and Chief Ivan Sawan from Loon River, Chief Albert Thunder from Whitefish, Chief Gilbert Okemow from Peerless Trout, Chief Billy Joe Laboucan from the Lubicon Lake, and Chief Isaac Laboucan-Avirom from the Woodland Cree. We had a very constructive conversation about how our relationship is going to be going forward. They know that I am committed to making sure that we address some of the foundational social issues in their communities but, more so, that we are committed to working with them in economic partnership, and I'm delighted to get started.

Mr. Sabir: The job-killing sovereignty act will add chaos to our economy and threaten investment. We have already seen Alberta lose 15,000 jobs last month. There are billions of dollars' worth of investment decisions for major projects in Alberta pending right now. Section 26 of the Judicature Act allows the cabinet to refer any matter to the Court of Appeal for consideration. Will the Premier take this option to protect Alberta's jobs from her failed sovereignty act, or is she now sovereign from the rule of law?

Ms Smith: We had such a great member's statement from the Member for Banff-Kananaskis. Let me remind the member opposite of what our actual record is: 200,000 jobs created in the last year, 20 per cent of the country's total job creation from a province of only 4 million; a multibillion-dollar increase in corporate activity; the highest number of employed Albertans in history; seven credit upgrades; the best year of oil production on record; a diverse economy; fastest growing green energy market; fastest growing tech sector in all of North America. I can tell you that that is a massive turnaround from the nearly 200,000 jobs lost when those guys were in office.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Indigenous Rights

Mr. Feehan: Just yesterday the Minister of Indigenous Relations said, quote: "Should we have done more consultation? Absolutely." This is a clear admission that this hon. member didn't do his job, yet the sovereignty act was passed last night. It passed after the government admitted that they did not fulfill its legal requirement to consult with First Nations. Why would the Premier support a bill to pass through this Legislature when she knows and her minister knows that they did not do their job and consult with First Nations?

Ms Smith: I consulted with my transition advisor, Chief Billy Morin, who alerted to me the fact that it was vitally important to make sure that we put in the legislation that we would respect all treaty and First Nations rights as guaranteed by the Charter. That was the reason why it was the framework for the entire bill. Any time we have to bring forward a motion, of course, we're going to consult with the First Nations communities. This just sets the framework for the kinds of things that we might be able to take forward to push back against Ottawa. There is no impact on treaty and First Nations rights. That's the truth. [interjections]

2:00

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Feehan: Not only did this government not consult with First Nations; they completely ignored their calls to scrap the bill entirely. Yesterday Onion Lake Cree Nation joined other First Nations in calling for the sovereignty act not to be passed. The letter stated, quote: we call for its immediate retraction and for you and Alberta lawmakers to consult with us before enacting legislation that attempts any reconfiguration of the sovereignty within a united Canada. Can the Premier please explain why she jammed through the unconstitutional sovereignty act when she knew full well that her government failed to properly consult and ignored First Nations calls to withdraw the act?

Ms Smith: The mischaracterization by the members opposite has continued on for a couple of weeks, and let me just set the record straight. This does not reset the constitutional relationship. It does not rewrite laws. It just affirms that we are going to vigorously defend the areas of the Constitution that have been assigned to us under sections 92 through 95, and as a signatory to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms we're also going to make sure that we put up a shield so the federal government cannot interfere in our jurisdiction or the rights of our citizens. It's affirming the Constitution, affirming the Charter, of which Aboriginal and treaty rights are essential.

Mr. Feehan: The Minister of Indigenous Relations, whose main duty is to consult with Indigenous peoples, admitted that he failed. Already this morning Mikisew First Nations condemned the actions of the government. "We will not stand by while the province goes after our Treaties and our lands . . . To add insult to injury, the government limited debate [on Bill 1]". Comments from the Mikisew alongside treaties 6, 7, and the Assembly of First Nations show a clear and utter failure of this government and this Premier. To the Premier: will she remove the minister from his role as Indigenous Relations minister since it is clear that he has failed, or will he do the right thing and resign? [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

Ms Smith: Is the member opposite kidding me? The Indigenous Relations minister is doing a fantastic job. He had a meeting with five chiefs this morning, where we talked about the Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. The focus of the discussion, actually, was working together on projects like infrastructure and transportation, the ongoing commitment we have to work with them on child welfare and education, the need to engage with First Nations on economic corridors that benefit all Albertans. This is the new, constructive relationship we have with our First Nations, and I'm so pleased by it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-City Centre.

Health Care Workforce Vaccination Policies

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our province is in the midst of a significant health crisis and Albertans deserve leadership, yet all the UCP have to offer is to throw the system into further chaos. That chaos is continuing with the resignation of the two deputy chief medical officers of health, a fact that the Premier tried to avoid this week only to have it reluctantly confirmed here yesterday by the Health minister. Can the Premier tell this House why Albertans should trust her government to protect their public health when she can't even bother to be up front when two-thirds of the public health team resign?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are up front. You know, when asked the question, we provided the answer in terms of in that regard. We are working to be able to provide the health care services that Albertans need and Albertans want. I'm very pleased to work with Dr. Joffe, and we are ensuring that he has the support that he needs to do his job and continue to – I'd like to inform this House that we are having success on our flu campaign. I spoke about it yesterday. We've had an increase in 3 and a half per cent of people who've gotten flu vaccinations. That's great. We need to do more, and we'll keep doing more.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, while this government carelessly guts the leadership of Alberta's public health team, the Children's hospital in Calgary is under huge pressure. Recently nurses at the Alberta Children's hospital have been referring to having a, quote, black Sunday. That's a day that the hospital was so overwhelmed, they were worried a child could die in the waiting room. Alberta's nurses are being put in an impossible situation. There's a worry that this situation could drive even more nurses to leave the profession, much as these deputy chiefs chose to leave their jobs. What specifically is the Premier, the leader of this government, doing today to ensure nurses have the support they need to protect the health of sick kids?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for raising this important issue. Our hospitals, particularly our children's hospitals, are under strain. We see this here in Alberta, as it is across, quite frankly, the entire country. Working diligently with AHS, which is supporting our tremendous job that's being done by our nurses and all our health care professionals in the hospitals, bringing more resources in on the short-term basis to be able to manage through the current spike of the flu. In addition, we are investing in our health care system significant dollars to hire more people to support our great front-line . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–City Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Mr. Speaker, it's clear the Premier doesn't take this seriously. She won't even speak to health care unless she's reaching out to directly interfere in it. These are, after all, the same workers who this Premier disgustingly accused of manufacturing a capacity crisis during the pandemic. Shockingly, this Premier still will not even stand and encourage Albertans simply to get vaccinated for the flu or COVID-19 to help support these workers. I'll give the Premier one more chance. Will she rise today and join me in encouraging all Albertans to simply get vaccinated to protect themselves and their children from the dangers of influenza and COVID? Premier, simply stand, recommend to Albertans to . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to be crystal clear that our Premier, who leads our government, supports our government in having kids get vaccines and flu vaccines, to have families make that choice to get vaccinated. As I said, we are actually having success on our campaign to do so. I'm sure members opposite received the text to go get your flu vaccine that our government put out. We're in the middle of running a campaign right now. I'm sure they've seen the letters put out and the press releases put out by Dr. Joffe, and I'm very pleased that we've been able to increase, over the last two weeks, flu vaccinations by 3 and a half per cent.

Affordability Plan

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, our government announced many measures to combat inflation and help Albertans through the time of adversity. It's clear that there are strong supports in place for families with children. There has been less focus in the media on the supports for couples without children and for young people. Can the Minister of Affordability and Utilities please share with the House what supports are available to couples without children and to young Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nine hundred dollars. That's the estimated support average Alberta households without children will receive through the affordability action plan and the inflation relief act. This includes up to $500 alone in electricity rebates, hundreds in potential savings on gas and diesel through the fuel tax relief program, and continued natural gas price protection. We are providing $2.8 billion in relief to make life more affordable for all Albertans while targeting families, seniors, and vulnerable Albertans hardest hit by the affordability crisis.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that inflation has negatively affected all of us in different ways and considering that the needs of seniors in care facilities are often unique from other seniors and can even differ significantly from facility to facility or between two seniors in the same facility, can the minister please inform the House of what anti-inflationary supports are available to a widow or widower residing in a care facility?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The cost-of-living crisis is particularly challenging for those on lower and often fixed incomes, including many of our seniors. In addition to significant broad-based relief, our affordability action plan includes targeted relief for seniors, providing six $100 monthly affordability payments from January to June of 2023. All seniors 65 and up with household incomes below $180,000 will be eligible. We also recently announced indexation of the Alberta seniors' benefit and other core support programs to address long-term affordability. We are focused on providing additional relief to support those most severely impacted by inflation. To our seniors: help is on the way.

Mr. Panda: Given that my constituents are telling me every day about how expensive filling up their vehicles has become and given that increases in fuel costs are also putting a significant strain on many small businesses and given that one of my constituents now has a thousand-dollar bill for fuel that used to cost him $600, can the same minister inform us of how long the fuel tax will be scrapped for and what other actions the government is taking to address fuel affordability issues?

The Speaker: The hon. the minister.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that high fuel prices are creating hardship for families, farmers, and workers. Through our fuel tax relief program Albertans are already benefiting from their own resource, saving every time they fill up. If passed, the inflation relief act will make the fuel tax relief program permanent. Beginning January 1, Albertans will save the full 13 cents per litre on gas and diesel. The estimated annual fuel tax savings for a commuter or oil field worker filling a pickup truck once a week is up to $600 or more. While NDP-Liberal policies and the carbon tax increase costs for Albertans, we are providing relief and making life more affordable.

2:10 Electric Utility Regulated Rate Payments

Ms Renaud: A pre-election utility payday loan for Albertans: that's what this UCP government included in their affordability act. It's another piece of legislation drawn up on the back of a napkin, and Albertans are going to pay the price. No Albertan on an RRO is going to save a penny, but they will be paying nearly twice as much under this UCP government than they were under the NDP, and for that privilege they get a 19-month loan. This plan is a disaster, plain and simple. Why is the minister forcing utility customers into a payday loan scheme that will have Albertans paying more in the long run?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Affordability and Utilities.

Mr. Jones: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Albertans are struggling under high electricity prices. That's why since July we've been providing monthly electricity rebates to 1.9 million homes, farms, and small businesses. In recognition of the affordability crisis and cold winter months ahead we're extending the rebates to April 2023, bringing total electricity relief through this program to $500. Customers on the RRO are facing extreme pricing and volatility. We're responding with a temporary 13 and a half cent kilowatt price relief and deferral from January to March, which will provide relief while smoothing and stabilizing bills next year. In addition, we'll be evaluating the RRO.

Ms Renaud: Clearly, this minister hasn't done his homework or even read the bill.

Given that if some Albertans get off the RRO due to high costs, the RRO pool will shrink, leaving these customers with higher costs to pay off the loans, and given that this utility payday lending scheme will leave countless Albertans holding a bag of toxic loans that will cost them a fortune and given that this scheme will result in what U of C economist Blake Shaffer described as a “death spiral” of mounting costs of utility costs in the RRO, what was this minister possibly thinking when he set up this utility payday lending scheme? It doesn’t make sense.

Mr. Jones: Customers on the regulated rate option, or RRO, are facing historically high rates, and Albertans are concerned about their ability to budget and pay their bills this winter. The proposed RRO ceiling and deferral ensures that RRO ratepayer bills are manageable by deferring electricity costs above 13 and a half cents per kilowatt hour from January to March and spreading those deferred amounts over future lower cost months. The government is also providing no-interest loans to providers . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The minister.

Mr. Jones: The government is also providing no-interest loans to providers of the RRO so that both providers and ratepayers can enjoy this relief with no interest related to the deferral.

Ms Renaud: Given that this utility payday lending scheme would result in many Albertans leaving the RRO option in April and given that those who remain in the RRO will be shouldering more and more of the loans, which will be paid through higher and higher utility bills, and given that this scheme is more of a scam, a scam that will punish Albertans for 19 months with higher and higher utility costs, and given that that looks like a borderline reverse Ponzi scheme but one that is being forced onto utility customers by an incompetent UCP government, can the minister explain to Albertans how this government managed to design such a disastrous utility payday loan scheme?

Mr. Jones: The NDP rate cap shifted additional costs from some ratepayers to all taxpayers and avoided the underlying structural volatility inherent in the RRO. By comparison, while the NDP rate cap over the same period would cost taxpayers $375 million, the net cost to government of the pricing and deferral is estimated at around $12 million. We will provide electricity relief to Albertans, particularly to those exposed to extreme volatility on the RRO. We will work with RRO providers, experts, and Albertans to improve electricity affordability and stability.

Women’s Shelters and Affordable Housing

Member Irwin: Thousands of Albertans fleeing domestic violence don’t have a place to go. A report released yesterday by the Alberta Council of Women’s Shelters showed that Alberta’s shelters had to turn away over 11,000 women and seniors and over 6,000 children because there was no space, and an additional 7,000 women and seniors and more than 3,000 children were turned away because of staffing shortages or lack of resources. This is deeply troubling, and this government needs to take action. Why won’t this government address the chronic underfunding of shelters and treat this like the absolute crisis it is?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are working to address the challenges that we’re seeing across the social sector, not just in women’s shelters but shelters and PDD and across the board. It was actually part of my mandate letter from the Premier, and I’m very thankful to see that it’s a part of it. I will continue to work with the sector to make sure that we’re addressing the challenges we’re seeing right across the social sector, specifically on women’s shelters.

I want to make sure that we know that anybody fleeing domestic violence will find the help that they need. If you are looking for help, please call the family violence number: 310.1818. [interjections] We’re here to help.

The Speaker: Order.

Member Irwin: Given that in response to the report yesterday the executive director of Alberta Council of Women’s Shelters, Jan Reimer, said shelters are, quote, under extreme strain due to chronic underfunding – she went on to say that some shelters are even considering closing their unfunded beds despite being at full capacity every single night. Front-line workers, who we should all be praising for their incredible work in the toughest of circumstances, have been urging this government to address that underfunding. Will this government finally recognize that we’ve hit a critical breaking point? Fund these shelters, do the right thing, and do your jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are funding women’s shelters. During the pandemic, as well, we did increase funding for women’s shelters because we knew there was going to be an increase in demand. I look forward to continuing to work with the social sector, with women’s shelters, to make sure we’re meeting this increased demand.

Again, I want folks to know that they can get the help that they need, today if they need it. We do have our $15 million hotel program, so if there isn’t space in a women’s shelter, we will make sure that there’s a space for you today. Please, if you need help, continue to reach out and ask for help.

Member Irwin: Given that affordable housing is desperately needed in our province and has also been underfunded by this government and that the UCP doesn’t seem to believe that they’re responsible for the Albertans who are out on the streets, for those who’ve been turned away from homeless and women’s shelters, especially rural and Indigenous women, who are disproportionately impacted, when will this government recognize that housing is an important piece in the path to keeping Albertans safe? Stop ignoring the situation, and start investing in safe, affordable housing for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Building more housing is a top priority for this government. It’s why we implemented our stronger foundations plan. It’s why yesterday I had the opportunity to be able to announce 55 million new dollars towards helping to build housing, but we haven’t just started with housing. This has been a priority of this government since we took office.

For example, $4.9 million for Swan River First Nations housing; Paul First housing, $3 million; Neoma housing, $2.5 million; Gilchrist Gardens, $30 million; YWCA Banff, $2.6 million; YWCA Calgary . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Highway 28 Capital Plan

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you are no doubt aware, I've been advocating for improvements to highway 28 since I was first elected in 2015. Highway 28 is the main highway through my constituency, a constituency that produces 30 per cent of the bitumen royalties for this province. To the minister of transportation: does the economic benefit of a region influence decisions into allocation of funding for highways and infrastructure?

Mr. Dreeshen: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul for his question, especially today, which is a very exciting day for the NDP as their coalition partner just appointed their new Liberal leader, John Roggeveen. It'll be interesting to see what deals come out when the new Liberal leader meets with his NDP counterpart. But, yes, I'd like to inform the member and his constituents that his persistent advocacy of the economic benefits of improving highway 28 has paid off, and he has made it perfectly clear how his riding contributes to Alberta's economy and why they need to have a strong road network to help . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake-St. Paul.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that highway 28 was the subject of a feasibility study in 2018 and given the study was projected to take approximately three years and was to be completed in 2021, to the minister: can you provide some detail as to the scope of the project once approved?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Transportation and Economic Corridors.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right. His constituency is more than just a vital economic corridor that's home to hard-working families; it represents a strategic military importance as well to the Cold Lake air base. Obviously, getting supplies in and out and having a safe, reliable road network for the base is all vitally important to our country. The importance of highway 28 will be considered going into budget 2023 in February, but the best I can say right now is that Christmas is 17 more sleeps away; Budget 2023 is 78 more sleeps.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you to the minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, of course, for the answers. Given that this highway is crucial to supplying our thriving oil and gas industry as well as our famous 4 Wing air base in Cold Lake and many communities on the route from Edmonton to Cold Lake, to the minister: I know that there are highways across the province in much need of repair just like highway 28, but can you commit that highway 28 will rise up the priority list, recognizing the economic benefit to the province of this very important region?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dreeshen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have completed a highway 28 study from Edmonton to Cold Lake. It recommends improvements to intersections, grade widening, safety, rest areas, and more. Albertans can't afford the risky NDP and their costly Liberal coalition. Here's just one example of why. The NDP are planning to bring in restrictive contract arrangements to block construction companies from bidding on provincial projects, and this just reduces competition, creates longer delays and increased costs to taxpayers. The NDP will always put their big union bosses ahead of Albertans. Apparently, big union bosses like Gil McGowan . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Municipal Governance and Funding

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This disdain that the UCP government has for our municipal leaders has reached a new level under this newest leader. She supports the same rejected municipal policies of the previous Premier, like a provincial police force. Only days ago the Premier made her views of municipal leaders clear when she told CBC, and I quote, municipalities get their power from the provincial government. End quote. In her mind there are only two levels of government, federal and provincial. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs explain if she shares the views of the Premier that the democratic, elected municipal leaders have no rights, powers, or standing under this government?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Finance and the President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Toews: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier stated a fact that municipal governments do get their authority from the province. But it's a government. We're going to work with municipal leaders as we have over the last three and a half years to ensure that we're bringing solutions forward for all Albertans. I know the minister is engaged, the Premier is engaged, this government is engaged.

The Speaker: The hon. the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister has also refused to rule out the ridiculous UCP policy that elected municipal leaders and councillors should be treated as lobbyists when dealing with the provincial government and given that while our party has proposed real partnership with municipalities, the UCP has rammed their job-killing sovereignty act through this House, which gives cabinet dictatorial powers to issue directives to municipalities, treating them as subordinates to be ordered around rather than as elected representatives of Alberta, can the minister explain why she wants to be the municipal dictator rather than a partner?

Mr. Shandro: Well, of course, none of that is true, Mr. Speaker. Of course municipalities are partners of ours. We have been working with them throughout our time in government, throughout the last three and a half years. We'll continue to do so. We've been consulting with municipalities throughout the last three and a half years on a number of issues that the member has raised, including whether or not to end contract policing, over the sovereignty act. We'll continue to engage municipalities individually and through the RMA and Alberta munis and will continue to do so for the remainder of this term.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has refused to adequately fund affordable housing in its entire time in office, meaning that municipalities have had to rely on the federal funding, and given that under the current text of the act municipalities could be directed to stop accessing funds used to support affordable and social housing from the federal government and given that we are tragically seeing homelessness and Albertans dying from the cold, will the minister of housing explain why he supports the sovereignty act that could jeopardize municipalities' efforts to care for some of our most vulnerable Albertans just so the Premier could have political . . .

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Seniors, Community and Social Services.

Mr. Jeremy Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to clarify again because they obviously weren't listening yesterday. Bill 1 has nothing to do with that, and it will not put at risk our housing strategies. Actually, we are working with the other provinces, the other housing ministers, and the federal housing minister to make sure that our housing strategies align, that we're working together to make sure we're addressing these issues and also working with the municipalities, the municipal leaders as well as our not-for-profits and private providers to make sure that we are expanding the supply of affordable housing, and we're making progress on that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta Sovereignty Act and Francophone Rights

Ms Renaud: Alberta is home to a diverse francophone community that's growing. Outside of Quebec Alberta has the largest number of francophones. While this should be something that a government celebrates, this government, through their sovereignty act, is creating great concern. The sovereignty act doesn't acknowledge the specific rights of francophone Albertans, which is creating some worry that this government could use the act to unilaterally override them. Why does this Premier's signature act fail to acknowledge the rights of francophone Albertans? Was this another mistake or a clear view on how the UCP views the francophone community?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Culture.

Mr. Luan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Francophone Albertans make up a very important part of our province. I was very pleased. I met with the president and CEO of the francophone association of Canada yesterday. We did exchange views about their thoughts on where we're going. Let me tell you this. They're pleased with this government. We're working together with them. We're having more meetings set up in the coming months. The report of the francophone policy committee is going to be released, the annual report. I'm looking forward to working with them.

Ms Renaud: Given that this government's disdain for francophone Albertans was seen clearly with their decision to slash funding for Campus Saint-Jean, the only French language postsecondary west of Manitoba, and given that the UCP was more willing to go to court than fund francophone education and given that now they're trying to give themselves power to ignore francophone rights in the sovereignty act, if she was more interested in respecting francophone Albertans, the Premier would apologize about the attacks to Campus Saint-Jean and commit to ensuring that they have all of the funding they need so nobody has to go back to court.

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Advanced Education has risen.

Mr. Nicolaides: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to talk about Campus Saint-Jean. As you know, and as I think I've reiterated to this House on numerous occasions, the government of Alberta provides funding to the University of Alberta, who then distributes that funding to the relevant faculties and programs, including Campus Saint-Jean. That being said . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the call.

Mr. Nicolaides: . . . the government, of course, recognizes the value of francophone education, which is why we've worked with the federal government to secure an agreement that provides direct funding to Campus Saint-Jean over the next few years to ensure their sustainability, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Renaud: Given that this government abandoned any semblance of respect for the francophone community by eliminating the position of the secrétaire parlementaire pour la Francophonie and given that now many francophone Albertans don't feel like they're being listened to by this government, something reinforced by the exclusion from consultation on this job-killing, francophone-rights-trampling sovereignty act, will the Premier admit that this was a mistake by ignoring francophone Albertans? I mean, you have so many parliamentary secretaries; why not one more?

Member LaGrange: Mr. Speaker, I find it rich coming from the other side, the opposition, when they themselves eliminated the position within my department to look after the directorate for francophones. We started the newly created French language service branch to continue to work closely with our francophone community. We added $5 million to the francophone equivalency fund. We're looking after francophone students and parents and, of course, the community as a whole.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan is next.

Calgary Cancer Centre

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the MLA for Calgary-Peigan it has been fulfilling to watch the city I call home continue to develop. Calgary has been host to a number of important infrastructure projects in 2022. The Calgary cancer centre is among them. This centre will provide increased accessibility to cancer treatment services for Calgaryans and Albertans. Can the hon. Minister of Infrastructure tell the House more about this project and the value it brings to the province?

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure and the Deputy Premier.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Building the vital public infrastructure that Albertans need, creating jobs, and attracting investment is key in our province's economic development. I'm proud to say that the $1.4 billion investment in the Calgary cancer centre will make life better for Albertans by providing comprehensive cancer care services in a first-class facility. I'm also proud to say that this project has been an economic driver in Calgary, creating over 8,000 well-paying construction and construction-related jobs throughout its duration. In fact, last summer it peaked at 1,650 workers. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order. Order.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Peigan has the call.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks, through you, to the minister for that great answer. Given the clear value of facilitating world-class cancer care in Calgary and given that such an important project has been met with much anticipation from residents, especially those struggling with cancer, can the Minister of Infrastructure inform the House of what progress has been made on the project thus far?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Neudorf: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to say that this project has reached substantial completion, meaning it is ready for AHS to take over from here and install the vital technology, furnishings, and other items they need to provide excellent care and services to Albertans. While the hospital is not ready to open its doors just yet to the public, it is a huge milestone in the construction process and a huge milestone in providing world-class cancer care right here in Alberta. I'm looking forward to joining the Minister of Health as well as others in the official ceremony to hand this centre over to AHS tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you, thank you to the minister for his dedication to improving our province. Given that the Calgary cancer centre is currently the largest government infrastructure project in Alberta and given that such projects require significant financial investment, can the hon. Minister of Health advise the House on the services we can expect to see at the centre?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Mr. Copping: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Approximately one-half of Albertans will be diagnosed with cancer some time in their lifetimes. The Calgary cancer centre will be life changing for countless Albertans in their battle with this terrible disease. From the beginning this place was deliberately designed to create an environment that encompassed the whole of cancer. From prevention, screening and early detection, research ideas and collaboration, treatment, development in clinical trials to supportive patient care and education, this world-class facility will offer cutting-edge cancer treatments and provide the services Albertans need.

Children's Health Care and Hospital Capacity Chief Medical Officer of Health

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, last year I was so privileged to become a new father, but like so many parents across Alberta, I am terrified of what might happen if my son ends up needing emergency health care. Children's hospitals have been at capacity for weeks. I know the minister will stand and explain that maybe we will see off-brand Tylenol on our shelves a month from now, maybe further, but that is not going to solve the crisis that we are seeing in the emergency departments across the province. Why does the government continue to stand by and do nothing while our hospitals are in crisis?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the new father across the way – and congratulations, by the way – and I also want to assure all Alberta parents that health care will be available when they need it. Yes, our system is under strain, but we are providing more resources to the hospitals. AHS is working incredibly hard to actually pull in the resources they need to ensure that Albertans can access them. Again, I was very pleased, with the Premier, to be able to announce 5 million bottles, a shipment of acetaminophen and ibuprofen coming in, that will help relieve the pressure on the hospitals. And I'll speak more to that . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-West Henday.

Mr. Carson: Given that Dr. Paul Parks, former head of the emergency section of the AMA, said that children's health care is in pure chaos and is in disaster mode and given that Dr. Shazma Mithani said that the government's lack of response to the crisis has been deafening and that their lack of leadership is driving down morale on the overrun front lines of our hospitals and given that it has been months since the last CMOH briefing, why aren't daily public health briefings being provided so parents can get the information they need? Can the minister explain why this government stays silent while parents and front-line health care heroes are crying out for help?

Mr. Copping: Mr. Speaker, our government hasn't stayed silent. I was very pleased that Dr. Joffe put out a news release to all Albertans about how to manage through this very challenging respiratory virus season. Dr. Joffe also put out a letter to all parents of children in terms of how to manage and urging them to make the choice to get flu shots. I'm very pleased that over the last couple of weeks, given our flu campaign and including the text messages that were sent to all of our phones, the number has increased by 3 and a half per cent, and we'll continue to do more. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Mr. Carson: Given that Alberta families deserve a Health minister that understands their file and knows whether or not important public health officials are still working through this unprecedented health care crisis and given that while the minister told the House yesterday that deputy CMOH were still working after their resignation – their voice mail said that they had stopped working nearly a month ago – and given that with a volunteer CMOH and two deputies who may or may not have stopped working several weeks ago, Albertans want to know when these important roles will be filled and why the minister's statement contradicts the timeline of the deputy CMOH.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.
