Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we all benefit from the education taxes collected. I need to be clear that the education taxes are not municipal revenue. Education taxes are very clearly collected on behalf of the province to support the education system. Those taxes are pooled in the Alberta school foundation fund, and they are distributed equally on a per-student basis to school boards throughout this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Does this 5.2 per cent, or $85 million, increase in the funds collected pay for things like new schools or renovations?

Mr. Danyluk: No, Mr. Speaker. The funds that are collected by taxation are to help cover the costs of teacher salaries, textbooks, and other classroom resources. These funds are not used for capital expenditures. At the outset I'd also like to say that it does not go towards the teachers' pension fund. This fund is used for the education of students.

Mr. Sandhu: My final question is also to the same minister. Can the minister explain how Edmonton is benefiting from the collection of these taxes?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I look at the city of Edmonton, the city of Edmonton contributes in the neighbourhood of $315 million. The increase will impact Edmonton in the neighbourhood of $3.75 a month per average household. But the important part for the city of Edmonton: they will realize $968 million that we reinvest back into the Edmonton public school system. This investment is an investment in our future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Support for Public Transit

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Investing in public transit is a good thing for the economy and a good thing for the environment. Such investment is consistently ranked at the top of possible green stimulus investment. It is one of the best ways of improving economies, setting the stage for decades of green growth. To the Minister of Transportation: how did the minister fail so badly to advocate for transit spending that Albertans will end up with only $10 million of guaranteed money going towards public transit?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, it just always amazes me how they can always pick up some unbelievable, negative point when they don't even understand what the program is to begin with. There's $10 million in this budget this year. We're just out on the second round of consultations right now. This is a pay-as-you-go situation, and no matter what would get approved, it doesn't need all the money in the first year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was $2 billion, and $2 billion could have gone a long way to improve our public transit system.

When the budgets are tight, value for money is key. What studies does the minister have to show that the value that public transit offers with its stimulus role and its emissions reduction is worth such a low commitment of $10 million?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, first of all, Green TRIP was never ever put out there to be part of a stimulus package of any kind. It was there to reduce greenhouse gases by getting rid of tailpipe emissions, and we're still going to be waiting for the proper innovation to come in and what type of public transit will work in putting bums in the seats of public transit and getting cars off the road.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are so many projects that are shovel ready. I think that with funding they could be started right away, and that will stimulate the economy, create very badly needed jobs. To the minister again: why is the minister so happy to sign long-term, multibillion-dollar P3 debt contracts building roads but completely fails to provide adequate funding for public transit?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to explain to the hon. member across there that public transit has always – always – been the responsibility of municipalities. As our great leader, our hon. Premier, announced, he has brought out $2 billion that was going to be for public transit, to help all municipalities with their transit to get rid of tailpipe emissions. We're still saying that public transit is a great thing, and we're going to help municipalities with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Support for Immigrant Seniors

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thirteen per cent of the Canadian population is 65 years of age and over, and between 20 and 25 per cent of the population are immigrants. Many of them have made contributions in the labour market as caregivers, educators, or community volunteers. However, many face challenges such as language barriers, ethnic and cultural differences. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports. As Alberta is now the third-largest immigrant-receiving province in Canada, after Ontario and British Columbia, what programs and services does the ministry have in place to respond to the needs of immigrant seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has one of the most comprehensive packages of benefits for seniors in this country. This assistance is focused on assisting those low-income seniors who are most in need regardless of where they come from. The assistance ranges from monthly payments to supplement federal benefits to help with dental work, prescription eyeglasses, and one-time or extraordinary expenses such as things like furnace and roof repairs.

Ms Woo-Paw: What is your ministry doing to help build the capacity of the seniors care sector so that the needs of the diverse ethnic and cultural communities in this province are met?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, one of my priorities as minister responsible for seniors is helping to build the supply of continuing care spaces. A few weeks ago I announced $119 million in capital funding to help build and modernize 3,000 supportive living and lodge units in communities across Alberta. These projects were approved for funding, including Oi Kwan Place in Calgary, which was approved for $3 million to help build new supportive living units and to add to and renovate an existing facility. Partnerships like Oi Kwan and Wing Kei in Calgary help us cater to the specific cultural needs of seniors.

Ms Woo-Paw: Immigrant seniors and relevant stakeholders want to ensure that their voices are heard in the development of seniors' policies in this province. Can the minister tell the Assembly what avenue is available to Alberta seniors to share their views with government?

Mrs. Jablonski: The first thing I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, is that I certainly enjoy being invited to any facility to discuss these needs with all of our seniors. I have been to Wing Kei and certainly enjoyed being shown how they cater to the cultural needs for Chinese seniors. I think it's a wonderful program.

Any senior can also speak to their local MLA and to the Seniors Advisory Council as well. We have a seniors' information line, where they can make known their concerns, and that seniors' line is 1-800-642-3853.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate any invitation any time to visit these facilities and our seniors.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses today. In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with the Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to table today with the Assembly the appropriate number of copies, five copies, of Travel Alberta's first business plan as a legislated corporation. Travel Alberta is the tourism marketing agency of the government of Alberta, and this business plan outlines the activities that the corporation will undertake over the next three years to position Alberta on the world stage as a premier tourism destination.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter dated July 10, 2008. It's a letter that I received from the Chief Electoral Officer, and it's regarding polling station No. 074 in Edmonton-Gold Bar during the March 3, 2008, election.

The second letter to be tabled is dated July 11, 2008. It's a letter that I have written to the Chief Electoral Officer regarding the conduct of the election on March 3, 2008, in Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The next tabling I have is a letter dated July 16, 2008. It is a response from the Chief Electoral Officer to some of the questions that I had raised earlier.

My final tabling is from the Government Accountability Office of the United States. It's a release that was delivered on Tuesday, March 17, 2009. It's titled Oil and Gas Leasing: Federal Oil and Gas Resource Management and Revenue Collection in Need of Comprehensive Reassessment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. I'd first like to table the appropriate number of copies of a CBC news story dated March 6, 2009, which backs up information I provided in my questions on March 19. The story describes how the U.K. established a four-hour maximum for emergency room waits. A key part of the solution was opening thousands of new long-term care beds in nursing homes to free up acute-care beds for emergency room patients.

I'd also like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from a constituent of Edmonton-Strathcona, Samara Jones. She says that Alberta is well placed to become part of the global trend towards renewal energy, if they only would, and that we should try to put people to work by building the green economy.

Finally, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. They indicate where residents were left in bed, received their meals late, and were unable to receive baths.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Evans, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation 2008 annual report.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Health Disciplines Act the Health Disciplines Board annual report January 1 to December 31, 2007, and pursuant to the Health Professions Act Alberta College of Medical Diagnostic & Therapeutic Technologists 2008 annual report and the Alberta College of Social Workers annual report 2008.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, we are in the month of April. It's the eighth day. Each month of the year has special commemorations and special days, and it's my custom, basically, when we're sitting, to alert members to this. It also assists us in advising individuals who call our offices and want to know if recognition has been given. So this is recognition for these events in the month of April.

April is Earth Month. It features Daffodil Days. It's also National Cancer Awareness Month. It's also Irritable Bowel Syndrome Awareness Month. It's also Parkinson's Awareness Month. It's International Autism Awareness Month. It's National Oral Health Month. It's National Poetry Month.

It featured, of course, April Fool's Day. April 2 was World Autism Awareness Day. April 2 was International Children's Book Day. April 3 featured the Alberta Easter Seals campaign event in Calgary. April 3 and 4 featured the National 30-hour Famine event sponsored by World Vision Canada. April 4 was International Day for Mine Awareness and Assistance in Mine Action.

April 5 was Palm Sunday. April 5 to 11 is National Wildlife Week that we've heard today. April 6 to 12 is Young Poets' week. April 7 was World Health Day. April 7 was also Unpaid Work Day. Today, April 8, at sunset begins Passover for all of our neighbours and our friends and Albertans of Jewish heritage, which will continue through to April 16 nightfall. April 9, tomorrow, is National Day of Remembrance of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. April 10, of course, is Good Friday. April 10 to 16 is World Homeopathy Awareness Week. April 11 is World Parkinson Day.

April 12, of course, is Easter Sunday. April 13 is Easter Monday. April 16 will be World Voice Day as it will be National Law Day. April 17 will be Equality Day in Canada and World Hemophilia Day. April 18 will be World Heritage Day.

April 19 is Orthodox Easter Sunday. April 19 to 25 is National Volunteer Week as it is National Dental Hygienists Week as it is Administrative Professionals Week, including Administrative Professionals Day on April 22. It also is National Medical Laboratory Professionals Week, and it also is National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week. April 19 to May 3 is March of the Living in remembrance of the Holocaust. April 20 to 25 is National Soil Conservation Week. April 20 to 26 is Global Action Week. April 21 we will commemorate Yom-ha-Shoah, the Holocaust Memorial Day. April 21 is also the birthday of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth. April 22 is Earth Day. April 23 is Canada Book Day as it is World Book and Copyright Day. April 23 to 29 is United Nations Global Road Safety Week. April 24 to 26 is Global Youth Service Day. April 25 is World T'ai Chi and Qigong Day. April 25 is also World Malaria Day.

April 25 to May 2 is National Immunization Awareness Week. April 26 is World Intellectual Property Day. April 26 to May 2 is Education Week in the province of Alberta and it also is National Victims of Crime Awareness Week and it also is International Astronomy Week. April 28 is International Workers' Memorial Day. April 29 is International Noise Awareness Day, and April 29 is International Dance Day.

At that point we ran out of time to do further research, but we'll find some more in the next number of days.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Ms Evans moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Debate adjourned April 7: Dr. Swann]

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my responsibility and privilege to rise and respond to the budget. I'm pleased to do so this afternoon on behalf of the people of Alberta and as Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, this is a budget the opposition cannot support. When last year the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, our former leader, responded to Budget 2008, his comments were that future historians may look back on the budget and say: "This is when Alberta finally lost its chance to build a sustainable future. This is when [they] failed to take advantage of their last opportunity [perhaps] to adapt to a changing world." Unfortunately for all of us, the hon. member's comments were prescient.

After years of record surpluses granted by oil and gas revenues, this administration has at last proven their utter inability beyond all doubt to transform the largest surpluses in our history within a few short months. We now have one of the largest deficits in provincial history, and in fact this administration can't tell us the true size of the deficit. A number of areas, including health budget deficits from last year, are not included in the budget this year.

No one can blame the Premier's administration for the global economic decline, but when we examine the root causes of this global decline, we find the same lack of discipline, regulation, transparency, and accountability displayed by this Conservative administration over the last 15 years. This administration has shown no long-term vision. Plans shift with the times. They've allowed the heritage fund to stagnate, and they've refused to discipline themselves and implement a savings plan. This administration has created chaos in the health system and gone into deficit to do so. They've left us more vulnerable than ever to volatile energy prices, and the only reassurance offered is the hope that things will be better next year. Rather than lead us out of this mess, the administration is counting on chance to do the job for them.

My background as a professional prepared me to do a number of things in dealing with challenges and issues that relate to the well-being of people and their communities. Surely, learning to live within one's means is a responsible goal for all of us: individuals, families, and businesses. It requires a clear vision, a plan, and the discipline to carry out the plan amidst the din of demands and needs and wants.

Yet there are times when borrowing, going into deficit or longer term debt, is appropriate for lasting values that benefit the long term, in this case the long-term public interest. I don't have an issue with deficits when they're needed, but for Alberta to be in a deficit situation is now truly a travesty of leadership and governance. This Premier's administration has mismanaged so badly that we went from the biggest boom in history to one of the largest deficits in our history within a span of less than a year. That is overwhelming evidence of leadership failure and the squandering of such opportunity. If Alberta had true leadership rather than simply a caretaker administration, there is no way we'd be talking about deficits and debt today.

As a physician my goal was healthier individuals and healthier communities. A common approach relates to budget setting. We define the problem; we gather information, the best information available; we seek the opinions of experts, consider the options, propose a diagnosis, and set a plan of action in place, a plan that is not rigid but responds to ongoing information gathered from a monitoring process, dealing with unintended consequences, side effects, of a plan that isn't quite yet there. That sort of systematic, comprehensive approach to public policy is missing in this government and, certainly, the disciplined approach to serving the public interest for the long term.

A responsible government controls its spending, saves a percentage of its nonrenewable resource wealth so that we can live off the interest rather than the principal, and plans for future generations. One could look at Alaska and Norway as examples of resource-dependent cultures who found fiscal discipline to save for the future. Both these places had a plan. They stuck to it, and this cushioned them from the ups and downs that we're experiencing today. Alberta, on the other hand, remains after decades completely at the mercy of oil and gas fluctuations.

This administration has claimed many times that Alberta is in better shape than other provinces facing this economic downturn. Simply not true. Our neighbours all across the prairies are doing better than we are. In fact, we're far more vulnerable – far more vulnerable – than the government is letting on. Our dependence on the oil and gas sector makes us inherently more vulnerable. When that one sector takes a hit, everyone suffers.

Our government's stubborn refusal to diversify or plan for the future has had predictable results. They've failed to adequately consult conventional oil and natural gas producers on royalty changes, creating anger in our oil patch, especially conventional oil and gas, including service companies and their staff. Recently this government has flip-flopped on that very regime, pleasing some players in the industry but now creating long-term uncertainty for the entire sector.

Recently the Official Opposition brought a small fraction of this administration's extravagant spending to light: millions of dollars in bonuses paid out to senior officials, even in departments that have clearly failed to deliver value for money such as health care and children's services. Only when we exposed the affair did the government do anything. A responsible government would have understood the hypocrisy of asking Albertans to tighten their belts, especially those most disadvantaged, while handing out huge bonuses to well-connected senior officials. A real leader would have halted the bonus program not because his administration was embarrassed but because it's the right thing to do.

A responsible government, for that matter, would stick to the budget, something this government has consistently failed to do since I entered the Legislature and for years before, making budgets meaningless as planning tools and helping explain why this government has been so bad at planning. How much stock can Albertans put in this budget? I'll not be surprised if the government's plans change completely by the time the first-quarter update rolls around. Albertans deserve and want a government that follows through. They need a government that is accountable and professional about managing one of the largest budgets in Canadian history.

There is another deficit here, a character deficit: the lack of fiscal discipline. They've had the greatest opportunity in history to save for Alberta's future, for our children's children's children, and they've blown it. We have spent virtually all the nonrenewable resource wealth taken from the ground in the last 16 years, and instead of saving it, we have spent it away, leaving us as well as our children profoundly vulnerable.

An Alberta Liberal government would not have failed the public. Alberta Liberals still believe that a savings plan, as we have said over and over, is essential to Alberta's future, especially during times like this. You don't stop contributing to your RRSP because of an economic slowdown. Families are more prudent than that.

This administration could use some of that prudence. Instead, we have watched the heritage fund stagnate and decline and likely will do so for a few more years.

Albertans have a right to know where their money is being spent and what the resource result is for each dollar. This administration must perform an independent value-for-money audit if it values the public fiduciary responsibility, an independent audit, not an embedded audit that purports to save $250 million by slashing benefits that were intended to help the homeless while keeping the horse-racing industry subsidies alive and well. Does this administration truly believe that Albertans place a higher value on horse racing than on helping the homeless?

For every dollar that British Columbia spends, we spend $1.28. What are we getting for that extra money? Where is the evidence of our money being spent wisely and leaving a legacy that we can be proud of for future generations? Clearly, there is waste and imprudent spending, far more than just this $250 million admitted in this budget. An independent, transparent audit, open to the people, will provide assurances and rebuild some of the lost trust that is needed in this province. We don't expect the administration to establish this independent audit. It would be too incriminating and uncomfortable. This is a government that has truly lost its way and confuses self-interest and partisan gain with the public interest.

Do we support going into debt during these extraordinary times? We need to stimulate our economy. We owe it to our working families and to others to ensure that we leave no one behind. We support limited debt financing of infrastructure when necessary, but it has to be prudent, and it has to be followed by a clear, planned timeline for repayment, with a value-for-dollar audit, after we've examined areas to improve in this province. We do not support public-private partnerships.

When I responded to the Speech from the Throne earlier this year, I said that the primary purpose of government must be to serve the long-term public interest. This administration is not serving that purpose. They've instead served up a budget that is full of unjustified optimism, short-term interests, and short on details so that Albertans can plan for their future, a more sustainable future. All we know is that the Conservative government will take "corrective action" if revenues don't rise soon, meaning either tax hikes or deep cuts to public services or both. Creative action: the new euphemism for the pain this administration is preparing to pass on to Albertans, Albertans who played no part in the bad management.

I've noted before the case of Easter Island, whose inhabitants had no vision and depended on one resource for their prosperity and harvested that resource till it was gone, whose civilization crumbled. Alberta is no island, yet this administration seems determined to act as if it were, making us a virtual island, isolated from neighbours, dependent on a single, volatile resource, finding no common ground on issues as important as climate change. Now we see where this administration's approach has led us.

A few weeks ago the finance minister said that Alberta would lose 50 jobs a day. Well, we've lost an average of 500 jobs a day: 30,000 jobs lost in two months. Government predicted that we would lose just 15,000 this entire year, and we've doubled that. Economists now forecast that Alberta's economy will decline by 2.3 per cent this year, the largest decline of all the provinces. This one statistic reveals how vulnerable Alberta really is and how rosy the picture painted by this administration: a see-saw from having the highest rate of growth to the highest rate of decline within the short span of a few months.

Where is our long-term sustainability? Where is the stability that Albertans deserve? What will happen to Albertans when the next budget comes? Already the government is cutting back on health care spending, and we haven't even seen the health deficit yet. Forget about the extra hospital capacity that our cities so desperately need. We are in serious trouble here, and our most vulnerable citizens will pay the price for this administration's failures.

Alberta's prosperity is almost completely dependent again on our fossil fuel revenues, yet no one in government seems to see this as a problem to move us into the 21st century with renewable energy efficiency as a priority, an investment stimulus package that sees this as our responsibility not only to Albertans but to the planet. This will remain a long-term valuable commodity. It cannot and must not continue to drive everything that we do in this province.

This administration created a highly inflationary economy by failing to provide leadership in our oil sands development. As we continue to pay inflated costs of development today, we are still somewhat reduced in our capacity to respond to the global recession. Now the government is scrambling for answers. They have spent on trivial interests – including bonuses, horse racing, and golf subsidies – while leaving infrastructure to corrode and collapse, that Albertans are paying through the nose to catch up on, and failed to set aside enough savings to get us through this.

Mr. Speaker, this is a time of accountability. As I mentioned earlier, the global economic downturn is not the government's fault, but this administration is responsible for the lack of preparation for a day that everyone knew was coming. Most Albertans know from past experience, and this government should too, that booms are short-lived. Unfortunately, "most Albertans" does not include members of this administration. Albertans want a government that is committed to hard work, transparency, and accountability; that measures short- and long-term risks and benefits; that invests in people, business, and the environment with a view to the future; that guides the market, does not become a slave to the market; that's balanced and responsible in its development of resources; and especially now in this economic downturn, invests in new technology, research, and opportunities for the future, including responsible bitumen upgrading here in the province, buses, light rail transit, and energy efficiency. This will serve us and our children into the future.

Where is the leadership? We are moving into a knowledge economy in the 21st century, and we are still lagging behind most of the world because of our fixation on one resource. This isn't going to be easy, but forward-thinking, imaginative leadership isn't about making easy choices. It's about making the right choices. This takes courage, entrepreneurial spirit, and a bold vision of healthy communities, which most Albertans have come to understand and participate in. They need policy and government leadership to back it up and support it for future generations.

My vision, Mr. Speaker, includes a province that has, indeed, healthy people working together, sharing the responsibilities of protecting present and future generations and including in their vision opportunities for economic, social, and environmental protection for the future. Our public institutions and programs and services all contribute to our high quality of life and our competitiveness as social beings.

Education is critical. It is the investment that we can make in future generations. Innovation and technology are part of that. Our children expect us to invest in those, not to leave them to crippling debt, especially at times when they are having difficulty getting jobs and raising the kind of income that will help them to find security.

As a physician I know from experience that good health is the result of many, many factors. As a politician I want to lead a government that recognizes and addresses these factors in creating a healthy Alberta. Healthy communities are the source of our security, our social well-being, and our future. Our mutual interdependence and our honouring of diversity will allow us to build a truly healthy Alberta. We look to government to demonstrate those kinds of collaborative, consultative, courageous aspects of leadership.

Business has played and will continue to play a huge role in our quality of life, and the freedom for business to thrive is vital. My father worked in the oil patch for decades, and I know the contributions that he and his company made to Alberta. We're deeply grateful to the many industrial and commercial sectors that have created the kinds of jobs and sustainable, safe, clean environment that we have depended upon. We call on government to stimulate and protect that legacy for future generations. Business taxes fuel our hospitals and schools, provide jobs and training, research and development. Business will be our most important partner in the crucial work of diversifying Alberta's economy, especially with regard to green technology.

Secondly, I believe in fairness to future generations. For too long governments in Alberta have embraced short-term goals, cutting programs in bad times and spending exorbitantly in the good times without a thoughtful, prudent, and courageous approach to the long term. This short-sightedness is an abdication of this generation's first duty to the next: to provide a lasting legacy and an uncompromised future for our children and our grandchildren. They have the same desire for prosperity; the same need for clean air, water, and land; and the same fundamental right to a vibrant, living democracy as well as the same need to live and grow and learn to meet their potential. Those aspirations cannot be met if we squander today's opportunities and demonstrate a lack of leadership, vision, and discipline.

So much has been lost. We think about the nonrenewable resource wealth that we have failed to invest appropriately. Our duty must be to leave a social, environmental, educational, and economic legacy that our children can grow with. The gift of fossil fuels is finite, but the legacy need not be if only we start saving now.

Alberta's interests are not served by a tired caretaker administration lacking in new ideas and lacking the courage to change the direction we've been taking. We see now what happens when career politicians, ideologically driven, are stuck in the past. What Alberta needs is courageous leadership, bold leadership that will bring a smart, hard-working, honest government to Alberta, leadership that will make the tough, ethical choices considering present and future generations and will stick to budgets that they commit to and plans they make.

Albertans are entrepreneurial, and they stand by their word. They will hold us accountable for standing by our word. We need to build a new future: leadership that believes in honesty, transparency, fair dealing, and every opportunity for democracy to thrive for every voice, Albertans with different views, and every gathering to be honoured and considered. Good leadership involves identifying the important things and helping the community to come along to share their views on what is important and where we need to move forward. Good leadership includes thoughtful, comprehensive analysis of the facts and a viewing and a balancing of public values to create the public policy that should serve us in present and future generations. We've been missing that thoughtful, comprehensive analysis in this province, and it's reflected in this budget. Leadership must truly understand that decisions we make today have very profound impacts on future generations.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta could be so much greater. With real leadership we could build a sustainable future not only for this province, not only for this country, but leadership in the world. We have the resources. We have the people. We have the infrastructure. What we need is the vision and the courage and the discipline to carry it out, a bold vision that calls on Albertans to work toward something greater than ourselves and greater than a resource-based economy of boom and bust, a vision that demands higher aspirations, a vision that transforms Alberta from stewards of oil and gas into a sustainable energy superpower and, even more, a diversified sustainable economy free of the turmoil of boom and bust, with an enviable environment, healthy and caring communities, and the best health care system, education system, and transportation system that links us, including a thriving arts and culture sector.

That leadership is on the way, Mr. Speaker. For now Albertans can only be astonished by the incredible shortcomings of this administration. Their colossal failure to anticipate and prepare for tough times shows that they are not true and faithful stewards of the public good. It shows that they do not have the wisdom, the foresight, and the character to manage this province's resources.

We will not be supporting this budget. I believe that most Albertans will also not support it. Thank you for this opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you wish to participate?

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. But I wonder if we could briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

The Speaker: With the unanimous consent of the Assembly we can do that. Will all members allow us to revert to Introduction of Guests? Anybody opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and members of the House. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Bashir Ahmed, executive director and CEO of the Somali Canadian Education and Rural Development Organization, or SCERDO. SCERDO works to promote and improve the quality of life for all Somalis and Canadians through education and community development. In 2007 SCERDO implemented a needs assessment survey of the Somali community in Edmonton. This assessment helped to determine the social, education, and health needs of Somali people who have recently moved to Alberta. I recently met with Mr. Ahmed, and I'm impressed with his commitment to a healthy and vibrant Somali community and to multiculturalism in our province. I would now ask that Mr. Ahmed rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two months ago the NDP caucus warned this House that the throne speech would fail ordinary Albertans because it had no economic focus, no plan for real job creation, and no long-term solution to end Alberta's unsustainable dependency on fossil fuels. It fundamentally failed to acknowledge the tough economic realities that many Albertan families are facing increasingly every day.

Unfortunately, yesterday's budget continued down the same misguided path. This government's economic plan is ill-conceived and fails to recognize the depth of the recession in Alberta now and in the next several years. It ignores the needs of ordinary Albertans who are worried about their jobs and how they're going to pay for their mortgages at the end of each month in the upcoming year and the years to follow.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, this is an incomplete budget. We would have thought that by delaying its introduction, the government would have had plenty of time to figure out all the numbers, but perhaps the finance minister's office needed one more all-nighter to get the job done. This budget calls for nearly a quarter of a billion dollars in further cuts in this year, and the government has no idea where to find them. Nothing causes more fear and uncertainty in the hearts and minds of working Albertans than the axe of potential job cuts looming over their necks. By not specifying where it will find this money, the government is forcing Alberta's families to prepare for the worst. This is certainly no way to encourage public confidence.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to take a moment to give credit where credit is due. I was listening when the minister talked about the AISH budget. We are pleased to see the increase of $100 per month in AISH funding that we have been calling for included in this year's budget. Certainly, this additional funding is necessary, and those who are eligible to receive it will be very appreciative.

I only wish the same could be said for Albertans in general. What ordinary Albertans wanted was a jobs budget; what we got was a welfare budget. Over 30,000 people in Alberta are turning to welfare every month, and that number is steadily growing. In December alone 4,000 new names were added to the list. Given what is in this budget, those numbers are very likely to increase.

Yesterday's budget once again begged Albertans to have confidence in this government but offered them nowhere to find it. Mr. Speaker, this government just doesn't get it. If they did, we'd have seen a far different budget, not this business-as-usual plan and cuts to the services that regular Albertans depend on. This government is almost alone in its failure to create a plan for economic stimulus. It is irresponsible of the government to deny the severity of this recession. If this government ever would just take off their rose-coloured glasses, they'd realize that beyond the shelter of this dome the situation is getting pretty desperate for many Albertan families.

Virtually every financial forecaster is telling us that we need to prepare for an ongoing and difficult recession, but the Premier and his cabinet continually spin the idea that everything is going to be just fine. The reality is that regular people who just one year ago thought they were managing all right are now beginning to fall behind. At the supermarket where they once bought meat and vegetables, they're buying more Kraft Dinner. At the bank where they once had their savings, their rainy-day funds are drying up, and they can't get a loan. In the home where families once found comfort, they are now struggling to make ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, already this year more than 30,000 Albertans have lost their jobs, and this government doesn't care. In just two months that figure doubled what this government had predicted for job losses in the entire year. These are average, hard-working people who did everything right. They showed up to their jobs on time day after day, and they worked hard to provide for themselves and their loved ones, but it wasn't enough. When they look to this government for help, they're given directions to the unemployment office and shown a budget that puts corporate interests first.

There's good reason for them to be worried. The government still needs to find nearly a quarter of a billion dollars in cuts in this year's budget and over $2 billion in next year's budget. This half-baked budget flies in the face of the Premier's commitment to openness and transparency. If this government was serious about being accountable, they would have increased funding for the Auditor General. They would have realized that given the tools, the AG can find savings like no one else. He may embarrass the government from time to time, but the outcome is better-run programs that don't waste the public's money. By eliminating the Wild Rose Foundation, the government has politicized funding of charitable organizations. It is now another tool to reward the government's friends and punish those who aren't.

Our party is the only one in this House that did any meaningful consultation with real people. The NDP invited a wide cross-section of Albertans, including small business owners, farmers, teachers, parents, health care and seniors' advocates, workers, labour organizations, energy and environmental groups to come together for a round-table on the budget to discuss their needs. We did this because our party is committed to protecting the services that people depend on.

People told us that this government must quickly catch up to the realities of the 21st century and begin by making the fundamental shift towards an economy that is based on renewable energy. This new paradigm is the transition upon which the successful long-term future of Alberta's economy is based. We know that Alberta cannot abandon our use of fossil fuels overnight. The tar sands are key to Alberta's economy in the near and medium term, but they come with many challenges. Because of this government's insistence on the lowest royalties in the world, hundreds of billions of dollars that rightfully belong to the people of Alberta are slipping through its fingers. By refusing to demand that bitumen be processed here at home, the Conservatives are ensuring that jobs will be created south of the border rather than here in Alberta. By refusing to clean up the black eye that is the toxic tailings ponds and greenhouse gases being emitted by the tar sands, this government is jeopardizing the international markets for Alberta energy that it is depending on to pull us out of recession. We need also to come up with a plan for the long run, one for a day when fossil fuels are no longer the driving force of world economies.

When we asked about the big picture, about the issues that extend beyond the dinner table, round-table participants routinely identified three areas of concern: jobs and the state of our economy, the environment and green energy, and the future of health care and seniors' care. Regular Albertans want real solutions with measurable results. They do not want $2 billion wasted on a carbon capture program that even the big oil producers in the tar sands have rejected as an ineffective expenditure. They don't want government to fund corporate tax cuts and pet projects like horse racing by axing the programs that families depend on like the natural gas rebate program for others that have jeopardized the integrity of our health care system and our education and our seniors' programs.

They demand that this government follow through on creating actual new long-term care beds that they promised and not simply replacing ones that have been eliminated from older facilities. Common sense tells them that when you move people out of general care into the long-term beds that they need, this in turn frees up space for those sleeping on stretchers in emergency room hallways or waiting up to 24 hours before they can receive treatment, which they need, in an emergency room.

Ordinary Albertans who are worried about their jobs are also concerned that this budget further shows how this government has absolutely no commitment to a serious strategy for our homeless. We know times are going to be tough, that job losses are going to mount. What we don't know is how those who are only a paycheck away from living on the street are going to cope. This budget's answers to these fears is to strip money from affordable housing programs in order to fund merely a fraction of their previous public commitments to solving the homelessness crisis in our province. Mr. Speaker, they're robbing Peter to pay Paul. Simply moving around between accounts does nothing to create the affordable housing that is going to be needed to address the growing number of Albertans without jobs. Financial experts the world over tell us that the best way to stimulate the economy and create long-term jobs is through infrastructure spending. According to CIBC World Markets every $1 billion invested in infrastructure spending has the potential to create up to 11,000 jobs.

Leading up to this budget the NDP made a number of proposals to stimulate growth through infrastructure investment. They included redirecting the funds earmarked for carbon capture and storage into energy retrofits for public buildings and homes across Alberta. Another $500 million of that money would be set aside to create a renewable energy research council based in Calgary. Finally, $6.6 billion would have been leveraged for municipal infrastructure projects that would create over 70,000 jobs.

We propose that the province pay the municipal portion of a federal proposal to match funding for infrastructure programs. By doing so, municipalities across the province will be able to get moving on countless projects they have waiting in the wings, ranging from public transportation initiatives to bridges, roadways, new public buildings, and the retrofitting of old ones. Instead, this government went 180 degrees in the wrong direction and cut a hundred million dollars to capital infrastructure grants to municipalities. At a time when the cost of building is the least expensive, this government fails to take advantage. Mr. Speaker, what a missed opportunity.

There are other examples of how smart spending can stimulate Alberta's economy, opportunities this government has overlooked. The developments of green energy, retrofitting of homes and public buildings as well as investment in universal public health care are proven methods of rebuilding our economy. The protection of Alberta's environment is inextricably linked to the revitalization of our economy. Both initiatives are long-term plans that will benefit future generations, but they need to be initiated now.

The NDP has proposed various initiatives to attain the long-term goal of making Alberta the green energy hub for North America, all of which are aimed at weaning the province off fossil fuels and beginning the transition to renewable energy. The right initiatives begun today would greatly reduce our dependency on fossil fuel sources, so much so that the Pembina Institute conservatively estimates that Alberta could transition from a 70 per cent coal-based energy economy to a 70 per cent renewable energy economy by the year 2028. Such a transition would not only reduce Alberta's carbon footprint but create a new employment incubator that would maintain Alberta's advantage for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, ordinary Albertans have also expressed concern over the future of our public health care system. This government's plan to restructure health care through the delisting of services that people need results in excluding those who are less fortunate and on fixed incomes. It also often represents false economies when incomplete treatment plans result in readmission of patients to hospitals. Universal public health care has always been highly valued by all Albertans. A system that provides services for some and suffering for others is simply not acceptable. Our health system must be protected, not dismantled and sold off in pieces to the highest bidder. Little by little services like chiropractic care are being delisted, which means that costs are skyrocketing for ordinary Albertans, leaving them unable to access the health care they need.

This government is forging ahead with an agenda that dissolves rural health services, closes long-term care beds, increases hospital wait times, and leaves multimillion-dollar facilities like the Mazankowski Heart Institute sitting empty.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's NDP will not be voting in favour of this budget. We've spoken to regular Albertans, and in good conscience we cannot support the failed direction that this government is taking us. This budget should have been all about investments to protect the future of our great province. There was an opportunity in this budget to create thousands of new jobs, and this government squandered it. There was a chance to create a real shift in our energy sector to spur on research and development in renewables, and this government missed it. There was a chance to ease the financial burden facing postsecondary students and seniors on fixed incomes, and this government missed the boat.

Alberta's NDP remains committed to standing up for these things, to representing the values and needs of ordinary Albertans, not the well-connected friends and insiders of this government. The NDP is listening to regular Albertans, Mr. Speaker, even when this government turns a deaf ear.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for anybody who wishes to comment.

Hearing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:30 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: We are debating amendment A3. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I have several amendments to Bill 18 in front of me. It would be very helpful if you could clarify which of the various amendments is actually A3.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had moved that Bill 18 be amended in section 2 by striking out subsection (7) and substituting the following: (7) Section 293.4 is repealed. That is amendment A3.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much for pointing that out.

There have been several concerns raised with regard to Bill 18, and I appreciate the hon. leader of the third party trying to do what needs to be done in terms of repairing a flawed piece of legislation.

What is asked for is adding the following clause: "Providing that a provision of this Act or a provision of a regulation made under another section of this Act does not apply in respect of extra-provincial corporations." There is a major concern that the lowest common denominator, the least worker friendly, the least municipality-responsible types of trade will occur on a cross-border basis. In other words, if the wage for a certain practice is lower in B.C., then likewise Alberta might consider adopting it.

Unfortunately, the reverse is not true. For example, B.C. has a lower driver's insurance rate because it's a public insurance, and therefore it provides a better service at a lower rate. Also, B.C. has a much stronger pharmacare program. Again, if it were an even trade-off in terms of what's the best value for Albertans and British Columbians not just in terms of trade mobility but in recognition of the rights of local municipalities, then I could be more supportive of the TILMA than I currently am.

The amendments go on to strike out clause (a) and substitute the following: (a) in clause (c) by striking out "requirements referred to in section 382 . . . from cooperatives" and substituting "matters referred to in section 382." Obviously, a tremendous amount of thought has gone into putting forward this amendment and, again, attempting to ensure that our trade mobility is beyond just strictly a labour agreement and recognizes the values and the strengths of both provinces, British Columbia and Alberta.

This bill, while debated thoroughly in the British Columbia Legislature, will not have received the debate, and where we're at in this stage is basically one step before passing a piece of legislation which does not protect local municipalities. It will not, for example, guarantee Calgary's fair wage policies, which city workers on a permanent basis receive. Again, the city of Calgary could be challenged by labour groups in British Columbia wishing to provide a similar contracted-out service to the city but at a lower rate, and therefore that undermines the credibility, the integrity, and the accountability of areas like the city of Calgary.

I'm sure the city of Edmonton and other municipalities are considering fair labour agreements, too. The fact that amongst so many other parts of the bill the government can reach back into history and erase up to three years' previous recommendations and then, again, leave it to the minister to make the final adjustments or changes to regulations without any debate in this Assembly continues to be a concern.

I support what the hon. member of the third party is attempting to do in terms of creating greater responsibility and accountability within amendment A3 to Bill 18, the Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the opportunity to participate and for your clarification of the amendment. As I say, I had several before me and was not sure which one was being debated.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Does anyone else wish to speak on the amendment?

Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We will now speak to the bill. Does anyone wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I won't prolong this because it's obviously a majority decision, as democracy should be, and beyond a doubt this piece of legislation is going to go forward. However, I hope the minister of labour and the minister of government services have some form of escape clause if B.C., for example, or organizations within B.C. challenge municipalities in court over the contracting out of services over the wages paid, over the delivery of insurances. For example, someone from B.C. could very well say: "We're offering a public insurance. We have so many millions of subscribers in British Columbia. We would like to move that form of public insurance into the province of Alberta." That is actually something that I would welcome. But it would be my hope that this government has some way other than a firewall, which is not productive, of protecting Alberta businesses, Alberta municipalities, and the rights of Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 18 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I do have an amendment and the appropriate number of copies if I could pass those out, or do I read that in first and then pass them out?

The Deputy Chair: We'll pause while they're passed out.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Chair. The amendment I am proposing is to allow the government to meet its stated goal of enhancing the current act's functionality and enforceability. To do this, problematic concessions that exempt communication initiated by a minister towards a lobbyist must be addressed. Although this was raised in the committee, I'd like to note that when the federal government eliminated a similar exemption, the reporting of bona fide lobbying increased tenfold. The amendment attempts to do just that by striking out clause (c) of the bill. That's what was passed out to my colleagues.

The Deputy Chair: Do you wish to speak to it?

Mr. Hehr: Yes, I do. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. As everyone has a copy of the amendment now, it's pretty clear what this is trying to do. It's trying to eliminate the apparent loophole that exists that allows a lobbyist who is contacted by a member of cabinet and who is then called into his office or maybe to a meeting at some other place to get advice. This is now not necessarily needed to be recorded anywhere in the record books. This is such a clear, I guess, way to get around the bill that we present this amendment. We believe that it will allow for a more easily effective bill that will allow democracy to go forward in a much more simple way. It would allow for people to still do business but allow for the government as well as the lobbyist to be accountable. People would have an idea of who is meeting with government ministers, who is giving advice, who is spending time on various projects.

We have no trouble with government trying to access and get the best information possible. In fact, it would be silly to try and stand in the way. What we are trying to balance here is the fact that sometimes in democracy some people have too much influence over government members. That's why the Premier has often stated that his goal is openness and transparency, and that's a laudable goal. To do that, this act, the Lobbyists Act, I hope will be passed and I hope will be put into place. I hope that this is just the start of more things to come toward openness and transparency in this province. One step would be to accept this amendment right now and cut off that apparent loophole.

If we look at the balance that we're trying to strike, it's a difficult one in that we want openness and transparency in our government. As well, we want equal access and opportunity for individuals to go see our government members, and that includes our cabinet. At the same time we need to ensure that no one cabinet minister or no one member of the public has too much influence. That is what this amendment is trying to do. I believe it was cut off by the federal government when they closed this loophole. I think the statistics were that lobbying incidents were reported at a 10 times greater rate. So you can see that there is a need for this. The federal government found it wise to do so. It seems that the results were more proactive, more forthcoming, that people had an ability, then, to see who was coming into cabinet ministers' offices.

That's why I put forward the amendment. I'd encourage all members to add it to what is the start of a good bill and a good era, hopefully, of openness and accountability in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair, for your time.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would encourage members not to support this amendment. This amendment would purport to remove a subsection of section 3. Section 3 of this amendment act essentially provides for some modest amendments to the section of the Lobbyists Act which outlines whom the act does not apply to, and the piece that the hon. member's amendment would remove is a piece which exempts from being lobbyists those people that a member of the House or a member of government might go out and ask for a viewpoint or an opinion on a topic.

Consultation is an essential part of what this government does. Talking to the public and asking the public to engage in consultations and seeking out views of the public is an absolutely essential part of the work that we do. That should not be confused with lobbying. The clarity that's provided in this act creates that understanding that when we go out as members of this Legislature on the government or opposition side or when we go out as members of the government to seek the viewpoint of the public and specifically do that on either a general basis or a targeted basis, that should not be considered lobbying, and it should remain exempt. It's an essential part of the public process.

To suggest that the federal government not including it in their act has made their act more effective because they've had a more massive number of registrations is actually counting the wrong things. It's not the number of registrations that makes the Lobbyists Act effective; it's a question of what disclosure of lobbying is available to the public. With all due respect, seeking views on a targeted basis or a general basis from members of the public is not lobbying, and the section that's in the act is there to clarify that purpose.

This hon. member's amendment would take out a very essential section of the act, and I'd ask members not to support it.

Mr. Chase: When I began my concerns in discussion on Bill 2, the phrase I used was that when the government comes courting, there's no reporting. That's exactly what this amendment attempts to address. It wants to take away the backdoor approach where the government initiates a particular process.

I must say that initiating is not simply going out to the public or holding a forum. This is completely different. It's a form of reverse lobbying, particularly if dollars are involved. In the interest of transparency and accountability I am surprised that the Minister of Education, the Government House Leader, would not be in favour of transparency and accountability. When we do go out into the public, when either the government or members of the opposition hold forums or have discussions, it's a very public circumstance.

I'm not suggesting that meeting with a community association or going out and discussing with a constituent is a type of lobbying, but where the line of transparency and accountability is crossed is when there are dollars involved. If the activity is initiated by a Member of the Legislative Assembly with the notion of hiring a particular individual to provide a service, then that type of expenditure directed from an MLA should be recorded. What happens now is that while we're having greater transparency on the lobbyist side of things in terms of having them report – and we've gone through the process of exempting nonprofits, exempting community associations, exempting a whole variety of public service providers from having to be caught up in the so-called professional lobbyist act. The fact that the government can do all this behind closed doors with no accounting is a great concern.

Part of the reason the original bill came forward is that we've had a series of sort of lobbying/consulting type of circumstances. Kelley Charlebois, who is a former consultant for a previous minister of health who is now our representative in Washington, received contracts totalling very close to $800,000 for advice. Sometimes it was a speech written for an individual for which $700 was paid. We had other examples of individuals very closely connected to the government, like Rod Love, riding on private planes, promoting private lobbyist interests while, at the same time, having contracts with the government, but that wasn't considered a conflict of interest.

The power of the inner circle to influence outcomes and to control budgets is something that should be transparent and accountable to all taxpayers. Whether it's the lobbyist that's being registered, which is captured in the bill, or the government that is approaching an individual with whom they have a relationship and that individual is going to benefit financially from that connection, that information has to be recorded. Otherwise, any kind of transparency, accountability – what we have, basically, is reverse influence peddling. The number of individuals who have been connected to the government and have been subsequently appointed to boards or commissions or found themselves connected with being electoral officers in certain areas – we have to account for what is described in the worst cases as patronage. We all know how strongly this government feels about appointments to the Senate as opposed to elections to the Senate, yet our Prime Minister has done just that.

If conservatism and accountability are going to stand on an equal plane, then it is extremely important that this amendment be accepted and that MLAs, whether they're on the opposition end of things or on the government side, account for the individuals with whom they are meeting who would directly benefit from a financial point or from a point of influence by meetings that are held in secret.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Chairman, just briefly. First of all, I resent the implication that I'm not in favour of openness or accountability, and I think the hon. member should retract that comment. It's absolutely unjustified. I've been a very strong proponent of open and accountable government and government consulting with the public and seeking viewpoints.

What the hon. member missed in my comments in his desire to get up and say what he was going to say anyway was that there are a number of different ways in which you consult with people with respect to public business. Some of that is, indeed, going out to community associations and public meetings, and some of it is what I would call targeted viewfinding. Going to an expert in an area to ask for a perspective should not put the person that you're going to ask for a perspective or a viewpoint in the position of being considered a lobbyist. A lobbyist by most people's definition is somebody who is coming to try and convince you of something, not somebody that you're going to seek expert advice, viewpoint, or perspective from.

A section of the act which excludes those people makes it clear that you're not a lobbyist just because I as a member of government or I as an MLA come and ask you for your view on a subject. That kind of viewpoint seeking is something that we as MLAs and we as ministers of government ought to be encouraged to do to get a wider viewpoint. In fact, I would suggest that the effect of this amendment that's being proposed would make it necessary for the Liberal opposition as I suspect that when we table a bill in the House, they do take the bill out to the people that they trust in the community for a viewpoint. I know they don't do all the work themselves. I know that they go and ask people for viewpoints on bills. The effect of this amendment would be to require them to have each and every one of the people they go and ask for a viewpoint on a bill to be registered as a lobbyist.

That's not what the lobbyist registry is about. The lobbyist registry is about making sure that the public knows, when a decision is being made in the public interest, if people are trying to affect how that decision is made in their own interest as a lobbyist or in the interest of somebody that they're paid to put a viewpoint forward for, that that is open and transparent. That's a very necessary piece of the Lobbyists Act, and that's provided for. But when we as legislators try to inform ourselves, when we as members of government, as ministers of the Crown try and get a broader perspective on issues that are before us as we craft legislation or policy, that should not be considered lobbying.

Therefore, when I go out to talk or any one of the members of government goes out to talk or any Member of the Legislative Assembly goes out to talk to somebody to seek an informed viewpoint, that should not be considered lobbying, and that's the effect of this section. The amendment that's being put forward would take that out and make all of those people lobbyists and force them to register or put them in a position where some of them would choose, quite appropriately, not to bother talking to us.

Mr. Mason: I'd like to ask the hon. Minister of Education and Government House Leader how you prevent the abuse, then, wherein by a simple device of saying that the MLA contacted the lobbyist, suddenly it's not a lobbyist anymore.

Mr. Hancock: There is no way to codify every aspect of behaviour and cover all contexts. In the context of what we do on behalf of the public, there's a certain element of trust involved that people do their jobs honourably. I know that the hon. member opposite tries often to besmirch the government's reputation, but the reality is that all of us do our jobs in an ethical and honourable manner, and that assumption has to be first and foremost.

Having said that, I think that if there was any question to be raised in any circumstance where there was a suggestion that lobbying had occurred and was inappropriate, the facts would speak for themselves as to who made the first contact and whether, in fact, it was a contact that was initiated by a member of government or by an MLA in order to seek out advice or whether it was an attempt to get around the law.

Any interpretation of the law starts from the premise that you cannot do indirectly what you cannot do directly. If the Lobbyists Act says that you must register as a lobbyist if you're going to lobby government, if you're going to lobby an MLA, you cannot in my view get around that just by saying: well, the MLA called me first, so I wasn't actually lobbying. If you're putting forward a private viewpoint, if you're putting forward a viewpoint in your best interest, I don't think that you can get around that by saying: well, the MLA called me first.

If, in fact, what is happening is that you wanted to create a position where you were lobbying for your interest, that is quite distinct and, I think, separable from the situation where, truly, we as MLAs want to reach out. I would be very surprised, hon. member, if you did not on a daily basis go out and ask people for their viewpoint on a bill or on a policy that's coming forward or on a potential budget issue. I would be very, very surprised if you wanted to register each and every one of those people that you talked to and put on them the onus to register themselves as a lobbyist.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The debate that's going on is very interesting. I would like to add my two bits as we go along. I hear the comments of the hon. House leader, yet it seems to me that the old argument of the slippery slope comes up. I understand the need for government members to get as much information as they can, to get appropriate people who have expertise on highways, on agriculture, on pesticides, on whatever it is that the government legislation or the government is going to be doing. That is fair enough.

Oftentimes the people with the knowledge, who have had 30 years of experience and 40 years of expertise in highways, have made it their private interest to know a lot about the building of highways, a lot about, you know, putting on the cement and making them run smoothly, for example. Oftentimes the reason why they've made it their 30-year career or whatever is because they've had a business connection to that, or they've worked for some company or, in fact, own some company and have done lots of work on it. You can see why they would have that expertise. In those certain cases when the government member contacts that individual for information, yes, I think that it's a tremendously slippery slope for the government member to really say: "Well, this guy has the expertise, but I'm not really contacting him about his private interest. I'm merely getting information, and he's not really a lobbyist." I think it would be naive of us to consider that that situation does not exist. In fact, I would suggest that it exists frequently for government and cabinet members.

If we look at the reverse situation of the opposition parties, we do seek expertise from time to time in looking at government bills and legislation. Sure, I think we'd have an easy time considering maybe some of these people lobbyists, but at the same point in time they know that in coming to us and getting information, we're not going to be able to reward them with a government contract or something to promote their private interest. I believe it's more so that we're merely going to advocate for an opinion that has no financial reward. At the end of it, it is merely more in the public interest.

That said, we'd feel like we would be covered by the legislation. We would register people as well. I think this is sort of one of those situations where the Caesar's wife rule applies, that for democracies to be credible, for things to run smoothly, it doesn't only have to be without evil, that it has to be – whatever that whole saying is. I've just lost my train of thought, and that often happens. I think everyone knows what I'm trying to get to.

The fact is that this system is fraught with difficulty, is fraught with situations which can come out. Let's face it. You spend $40 billion of our money a year and you're consulting with many people who come in and give you advice and there are oftentimes situations where private interests could be very easily, I guess, pursued. Nonetheless, this would be a safeguard to that process albeit a minor implication on the ability to discuss with as many people maybe as we would like.

Thank you very much for the opportunity, again, to speak to the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to make it very clear that I respect the hon. Minister of Education. I respect him in his position as the minister. I also respect his reputation as a lawyer. It is the high respect that I hold for my young colleague who drafted this amendment and my respect for lawyers in general that I appreciate . . .

An Hon. Member: Well, most lawyers.

Mr. Chase: Well, very specifically my son-in-law and my brother, but it extends beyond that to, you know, lawyers in general. If they don't follow through with their very high expectations, they're disbarred. So there is a process.

Where I get concerned: I know that the intent of Bill 2 was to cut through red tape. It was not to come down hard on community associations or individuals seeking to have a rink built in their area or a ball diamond upgraded or some type of community project. I think the line of demarcation or the line of separation is that influence peddling goes both ways, and when consultation turns into contracting, that is where the line is crossed.

I think that for MLAs to be able to report to the Ethics Commissioner in good faith, they need to signal from the very outset a meeting where the individual who is being consulted – it goes beyond information, and it goes into the possibility of having a government contract. If that is the case or if at some point later on that is a possibility, then I would think that from an ethics protection point of view an MLA would be well served to make note of those first contacts.

You know, I represent the University of Calgary, one of the powerhouses of information in this province, and I regularly approach a number of professors, most frequently, I would say, in the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy slash experiential learning because that is one of the areas where I am most in need of knowledge. But when I do go and ask someone about, for example, storing nonrenewable energy such as wind power and turning it into a form of compressed energy which can then later be drawn on for power, I'm not in a position, obviously, to award a contract.

Even if I were a government minister or an MLA on the government side, if I thought that my initial consultation and the advice I was given might lead me to offering a contract, then I would record that information because I'm operating on a public expectation. I've sworn an oath, and I've received my symbolic Mace, which indicates that I must be absolutely beholden to the laws of the land and representing my constituents in the most honest form, demonstrating the utmost of integrity.

Therefore, I cannot imagine, for my own protection as well as for the transparency and accountability of the process, not recording those types of meetings. The Minister of Education suggested that somehow this would add red tape. Well, I think we can very clearly define – and if it takes another amendment – where, as I said before, consultation turns into contract. Then the historical development of such a consultation or reverse lobbying needs to be recorded for the sake of transparency and accountability.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do other members wish to speak?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Now we're back to the bill. Are you ready for the question on the bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Sorry. I'll stand up faster if necessary. I apologize, Mr. Chair, if you didn't see me.

The lobbyist registry has gone through a terrific amount of processing. It has gone through the standing policy committee procedures. We're approximately two years, I believe, from where we were when this was first introduced, and I very much appreciate the processing of this piece of legislation. The fact remains that there are large loopholes where the government has the potential of undue influence by not recording.

The government also has somewhat limited the powers of the Ethics Commissioner to regulate who it is that has been given either a salary or tremendous power. We've previously brought up the individual in charge of Stantec who is now serving on the super-board. Never were the individual's credentials questioned, but the fact that he is allowed, as just one of many examples, to maintain shares in a company that does business with the government is a flaw that has yet to be addressed in this piece of legislation.

I would love to see the authority of the Ethics Commissioner tremendously increased, as I've stated numerous times, as well as that of the Ombudsman as well as that of the Auditor General. But this Lobbyists Act, while tremendously improved, still has about 25 per cent of the way to go before it can be considered transparent and accountable, and I appreciate having the opportunity in the Committee of the Whole to point that out.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce an amendment to the bill.

The Deputy Chair: Do you have the amendment there with you?

Mr. Mason: I do.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause for a moment while it's distributed.

Okay, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move that we amend Bill 2, the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009. I will move on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009, be amended in section 2 by striking out clause (b).

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll refer to this as amendment A2.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, I won't be long on this. I spoke originally – I believe it was at second reading – about the error that we felt was made when the government accepted a Liberal amendment which excluded spouses from the definition of associated persons. In our view, that was not the right approach to take because we think that it's very clear that a spousal relationship is a very close economic relationship, and it is impossible to separate the economic interests of two spouses. So if there is, in fact, a conflict for one, there is almost inevitably a conflict for the other.

I think that this will change that. What it will do is that if you go to section 2(b) on page 1 of the bill, currently 2(b) repeals subsection 5(a), and 5(a) reads that for the purposes of this Act, a person is associated with a person or entity if that person or entity, as applicable, is

(a) the person's spouse or adult interdependent partner.

It's very clear to us, Mr. Chairman, that by accepting the Liberal amendment on this and passing it in the bill, the government created an enormous loophole that I think will haunt this bill for its entire legislative life or legal life. Our amendment will simply strike that clause out, and as such, a spouse or an interdependent partner will remain an associated person. I think it is almost self-evident that they are.

The arguments that were put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre at the time, as I recall, weighed very heavily on the equality in relationships, in modern relationships, and so on. I would submit that that is, in fact, a red herring, and that the real issue here is to make sure that there are no loopholes that would allow the circumvention of the intention of the lobbyist registry and very clear definitions of what people's interests are. With it as it stands, that will not occur. I believe that the amendment is, in fact, critical to the success of the lobbyist registry moving forward and would urge members of the House to reconsider their position and vote for this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: We're speaking to amendment A2. Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I think what the Member for Edmonton-Centre was intending is that we're all unique individuals, whether we're married or not, but the intention was not to take away the responsibility of individuals to be accountable. With our current expectations as MLAs we put before the Ethics Commissioner not only our holdings or our joint holdings, but we also put forward the holdings and the investments, et cetera, of our spouses. I think what needs to be recognized is that while we have independently defined lives and the right to have our own bank accounts, to have our own investments, each individual requires an accounting.

Whether that individual is an MLA or the spouse of an MLA or the spouse of a lobbyist, individuals have to be recognized as such. If there's a relationship associated by marriage or by common law or by somehow a business or familial connection, then the investments of the individual's connections also need to be recognized. I don't think that it's an either/or circumstance. I believe what we're trying to accomplish here is that every individual elected or family member or lobbyist or someone connected within their business or family needs to be accounted for in this lobbyist legislation.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Hearing none, I'll call the question on amendment A2.

The Deputy Chair: We're back to the bill. Are you ready for the question on Bill 2?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Chase: Very quickly. We see this as an attempt to remove red tape to speed up the process to provide greater transparency and accountability and also to improve the business climate in which credit unions operate. For that reason we're supportive of it, just for the sake of having that recorded in Hansard.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anyone else wish to comment on the bill? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There were three questions from before. I would like to clarify them for the members opposite.

The Member for Calgary-Currie's question was: what would determine quorum? Quorum is set out in section 59 of the Credit Union Act as the lesser of 50 members or 10 per cent of the members entitled to vote at a meeting. That would entail the quorum. There was a question from the same member: does this open the door for problems with elections being seen as fair or unfair? That is not expected to. The members will determine whether or not advance polls can be used and how they are designed.

I'm not sure which member opposite asked on the reporting of committees: how will the reporting back to the credit union board be monitored to ensure that it happens? I think that was Calgary-Varsity's question. This will be monitored by the board, who will need the information to meet their responsibilities and for which some board members will sit on these committees. So there will be direct communication. The credit union's internal audit function and the external review by the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation will also be overseeing that.

One further question from the Member for Calgary-Varsity on his concern whether the forthwith comment needed to be replaced by a specific time. Credit unions are private companies, and their members vote for the board that represents them. Any mention of a time frame beyond that is normally regulated in financial institutions or any other entity. The use of the term "forthwith" gives the credit union the flexibility to set their own board governance but allows the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation to intervene if it could have the ability to impair the credit union operating properly.

I hope that clarifies the questions that were brought up by the members opposite, and I appreciate the opportunity to address those today. Thank you.

Mr. Chase: I just wish to thank the hon. member for providing those clarifications. My questions were based on the fact that the majority of my working life, 34 years, has been in public service as opposed to private operations, and therefore I appreciate those clarifications. Thank you for providing them.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question on the bill?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 8

Feeder Associations Guarantee Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I have a series of questions. If these questions have been answered, you can just simply inform me, and I'll look for it in the previous Hansard, but these are the questions that we have been asked. With specific details about what guaranteed loans may be used for being moved into regulations with this proposed legislation, there are questions such as: does the government anticipate that loans will be guaranteed exclusively for the processing and marketing of livestock products? Previously it was only for purchasing, so those are two new elements that we'd appreciate answers for if it's possible.

Another question that has arisen is: what specific cases can the minister provide where it would be necessary to extend the loan guaranteeing to processing and marketing of livestock? As I say, initially these loans were just strictly for purchasing. Can the minister provide further clarification as to how members of feeder associations will benefit from these changes?

To the minister: would you prefer that I ask these questions individually so that you have a chance to respond? My intent is not to load you up. Sorry; I'm looking in the wrong direction. Shall I stop and let you answer those three questions now? Continue? Okay. Thank you. I just wanted to give you a fair opportunity.

Can the minister, then, provide further clarification as to how members of feeder associations will benefit from these changes? In earlier discussions we talked about the difference between cow-calf operations and feeder operations. What members of feeder associations will benefit most from these changes? Will it mostly benefit the larger scale operations? We're always concerned, as I'm sure government members are, about the family farm and the survival of smaller operations that have been in families for generations.

The last of these immediate sets of questions: has the minister or department done any studies to anticipate how these changes may increase the number of defaulted loans and the cost to government as a result of guaranteeing these loans? Earlier, when we were talking about Bill 8 in second reading, I brought up the example of Rancher's Beef and the fact that we were trying to support a made-in-Alberta processing solution. Unfortunately, the organization never received the amount of slaughter capacity that it was capable of, and it went out of business. The government had provided subsidies.

I will sit down and look forward to the answers to these questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise today to address some of the questions, particularly the ones that were raised during second reading of this bill. A few members of the House expressed some concerns and questions, and I appreciate having this opportunity now to provide some clarification and further details. With members' indulgence I'll review the questions they have now and get back with answers later on. As some of the comments and questions that were raised in second reading by different members were similar, I will attempt to address those in a more collective answer rather than point-by-point responses to members on particular issues. I'm confident that with further information and understanding there will be support for this legislation, which serves to strengthen our agricultural industry and by extension Alberta's rural communities and beyond.

The livestock and meat industry is a significant sector of our agricultural industry, and it makes an important contribution to our province's economy. Preliminary estimates show that livestock and livestock products in 2008 accounted for just over 42 per cent of Alberta's farm cash receipts. Specifically, Mr. Chairman, cattle and calves were 30 per cent of farm cash receipts and estimated to have a value of just over $3 billion; that's with a B. We're, in fact, the largest cattle-producing province in Canada, and nearly two-thirds of all Canadian beef processing occurs right here in the province of Alberta. Legislation and programs that support the growth of this commerce are, of course, of great value to all Albertans.

As shared in previous readings, Mr. Chairman, Bill 8 provides a rewriting of the existing act, and there has been debate over the merits and reasoning for that. To provide some context, the current act has been amended numerous times over the years, and the language used in that text is currently outdated. As the agricultural industry has changed and grown, many of the definitions and terminology used are now limited in their capacity to accurately describe or fully capture the scope of that business activity. Updated text will bring clarity. Since these wording improvements were needed throughout the act and its amendments, legal counsel advised that we create an entirely new document rather than adding further amendments. Simply put, it is more user or, honestly, reader friendly. Let me make it clear. The new act does not introduce wholesale changes, Mr. Chairman. The fundamental principles of the act remain the same.

Another question raised concerns about what is covered by legislation versus what is covered through legislation and if more jurisdiction is being given to regulation as opposed to legislation. That's not the intent here, Mr. Chairman. In fact, the only thing being moved from the existing act to regulations is the activity for which the loan may be given. Originally the act specifically limited the program to the acquisition of livestock for growing or finishing or both by the members of a feeder association. However, as the scope of activity of feeder association members extends further into the value chain, we require legislation and regulations that reflect that extended role.

Given the rapid pace of change in the industry, Mr. Chairman, we have anticipated that we may need to update the description again in the near future. Moving the description of that activity from legislation to regulation will allow this change in a more flexible and timely manner without having to reopen the act. With the new definition of feeder association, which includes the words "otherwise deal with," the proposed act will allow regulation to specify that activity, ensuring a more current and accurate reflection of it.

On the same subject of legislation versus regulation we did in fact move one item from regulation directly into the new act itself. The requirement for a security deposit would be entrenched in the legislation, ensuring that that element of risk mitigation protection is always part of the program.

I also want to stress that as in all legislation, regulation does have an important role to play and is not something deliberately subversive. Defining and detailing all things in legislation is just not feasible or realistic or effective or allowing flexibility. The process of developing regulation is absolutely nothing new in any government.

There was also some discussion in the last reading about whether this new act is transparent and accountable. We have added section 9, which clearly articulates the powers of the minister versus the rights of individuals or businesses. This demonstrates transparency and accountability, Mr. Chairman.

Also, let me state that the new act does not change the way these loan guarantees are granted by the government in any way, shape, or form. The criteria for guaranteeing a loan to a feeder association were never written in the act before. The process for this activity remains at the regulation and policy level, with the ministers responsible – both finance and agriculture are responsible – continuing to be involved in the order in council process.

To answer the question of why we have removed the requirement to renew the act every five years, which was brought up in second reading, commonly referred to, Mr. Chairman, as the sunset clause, and the inference that this somehow means less accountability, it changes nothing about a very solid accountability of the program. Government remains responsible for ensuring that the established policies and procedures are followed. What is accomplished by removing the renewal requirement is that it strengthens the program and the security that the program will exist.

The need to renew the act has the effect of creating a degree of uncertainty among lenders and the associations themselves. Indeed, every five years when this issue came up, I got a record number of calls to my constituency office asking if we were going to get rid of the feeder association program. That's undesirable for an industry that we are trying to grow and advance. If we have learned anything from the current global economic situation, it should be that stability is critical to the financial world. Certainty is critical to the business world and those who depend on it.

In terms of who this program benefits, Mr. Chairman, there was some question of how it relates to cow-calf producers. I want to point out that the program has been serving these members in the industry for years. It has allowed these producers to effectively retain control of their calf crop for an additional 12 months. This allows them to get needed cash flow in the fall and still add value to the weaned calf by feeding home-ground feeds. The program will continue to serve cow-calf producers in this way. Nothing is changing about that. The program also supports these producers by providing a market for their calves and a link in the supply chain to the larger finishing lots.

As for who qualifies as members of a feeder association, the new regulation will establish criteria for associations to use when considering membership; however, it will be the feeder associations themselves, not government, who makes those specific decisions, and rightly so.

In response to the question of whether the proposed act focuses on processing and marketing of livestock products and not just purchasing: not at all. The program will continue to play a role in providing capital to purchase cattle. However, it will now extend to processing and marketing, allowing producers to further participate in the supply chain, giving them more power over their finished product, and adding more value to the product they grow themselves. Those who want to retain ownership of the product through to the meat retail stage will have that ability under the expanded program.

Let me provide an example of why this is desirable. Producers who are differentiating their product with special attributes such as organic production practices and so on need to create a continuous link to their customers in order to capture the higher value. Having to pay off a feeder association loan before they have sold their inventory would be an undue financial hardship and, indeed, keep them from entering themselves farther up the value chain.

Let's be really clear. Businesses that only process and market meat products would not – not – be eligible for this program, nor would the loan guarantee be transferred from one business to the next as the livestock moves through the process from cattle to meat product.

One member of this House raised the concern that the new act would allow corporations to be members of feeder associations, extending support to large operations, which would give them an advantage over smaller ones. Certainly, as with many businesses there are benefits to economies of scale; however, if the concern is for what we like to call the family farm, let me point out that a significant number of family farms are now incorporated and have grown substantially in size.

An Hon. Member: So they're not family.

Mr. Griffiths: But they're still owned by family members, and the majority of family farms now are incorporated.

It's really an emotional argument that has nothing to do with reality. Members who made these arguments should perhaps leave the city once in a while. The program simply reflects the current business model that a large number of producers have chosen, and in fact my own family and our farm chose it in 1972. [interjection] Pardon?

The Deputy Chair: Just looking at your tie. That's okay.

Mr. Griffiths: Yeah, I know I have pigs on my tie. Thank you for pointing that out, Mr. Chairman. It's an agriculture tie.

Another area of concern raised in the previous debate was whether this program and the proposed legislative or regulatory changes present a high or a higher risk to the viability of these feeder associations. Let me state for the record that this has been a highly successful program. Over the life of the program the payouts under the guarantee have amounted to only 0.06 per cent – that's 0.06 per cent – of the amount of financing provided to the industry. That is less than one-tenth of 1 per cent, an incredible success story. None of the changes proposed have any effect on that. In addition, it should be understood that there are very effective risk mitigation practices in place with this program that the feeder associations utilize.

We have done our due diligence in recognizing that we will need to adapt the mitigation procedures to be appropriately applied to any program changes, such as how they apply to corporations. As another example, feeder association members choosing to participate in the equity draw options to be defined in the regulations will be expected to use some sort of price protection mechanism to ensure that the value of the livestock is ultimately realized at the time of sale.

The cattle price insurance program, or CPIP for short, being developed by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation would be one such mechanism. As far as the liability of the program as a whole, the current maximum is set at $55 million, and there is no desire or need to increase this amount of the guarantee at this time.

Overall I would say that Alberta's tax dollars are well applied and protected under this program, and it does wonders for the beef industry.

As you know, Alberta's agricultural industry is export oriented, so we highly value our trade relationships and work to ensure that those remain on a good footing. There was a question of whether this program puts our trade relationships at risk of retaliatory action. First, there is no subsidy of interest rates under this program. Feeder associations get their financing from commercial financial institutions at negotiated rates. Also, it's worth noting that this program was included as part of a very thorough review of our beef cattle programs by the U.S. department of industry, trade, and commerce in 1998 and 1999. They deemed that it was not significant enough to be of any concern to them at this time.

To sum up, as I stated earlier, the agricultural industry makes an important contribution to our economy and our rural communities. This particular legislation and program is an appropriate support to the economic development of the province. The program has been in effect in one form or another since 1936 and has been an effective catalyst for growth. The legislation and program simply lays the foundation, Mr. Chairman, and creates a stable environment for feeder associations and financial institutions to develop a solid business relationship. They are the business units involved, not the government. Government's role is limited to providing the loan guarantees and responsible and effective oversights such as audits and inspection services to make sure that everything is working effectively.

Overall, Mr. Chairman, I would stress that they have a very strong foundation for this program. The new act will add clarity to the legislation, enable improved and new regulations that support program enhancements. Therefore, I encourage all member of the House to support Bill 8 through Committee of the Whole and at third reading, where I would be happy to answer any further questions that come out of Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I very much appreciate the clarifying answers provided from the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Let's get it officially. [interjections] Battle River-Wainwright. Sorry, I was bringing you a little closer to the Legislature. Thank you for that clarification. Among the clarifications I'm very appreciative that you addressed my concern about perceived subsidies and specifically the concerns that R-CALF or sort of territorial types down in the States might put forward.

I had an opportunity the week previous to talk with a rancher from Montana. I jokingly asked him if he was a member of the R-CALF group. While he didn't mention that, we talked to the degree that I was capable about some of the problems associated with animals crossing the border. He was saying that he ships quite a few animals north and has to go through lengthy processing experiences in trying to ship his cattle. So I'm quite sure that there is equal frustration with ours going south.

I also appreciate the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright pointing out about the need for city folks to get out into the country. Just very briefly I want to say that I did just that this past weekend. My wife and I went out to East Coulee for a music festival, that we thoroughly enjoyed. While we were there, we ran into a former Liberal candidate in the Drumheller-Stettler area, Tom Dooley, and his wife, who are both cattle producers. I'm sure they're members of the feeder group. What was interesting to me was that again my knowledge of agriculture increased tremendously.

Tom and his wife had just purchased a number of calves that had recently been weaned. The reason he did not buy them from the surrounding neighbourhood and bought them instead from a small district around Dorothy was the fact that both the mothers and the calves would be trying to get back together, and the disruption on the animals themselves, both the cows and the calves, would be such as to cause stress to the livestock. So he's having his shipped in from a greater distance so as to avoid that breakup of the family, so to speak, which is obviously part of the agricultural operation.

I thank you very much. With each sortie into the country I'm getting a better understanding. I also appreciate in your clarifications that the loans are secured, that they're guaranteed, because that was a concern we had.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Any further comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair, and thank you very much for a bit of clarification from the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright. You know, I know I've been here only a short time. I'm going to try at some point in time to get a handle on all the agricultural acts and symposiums and whatever and different programs and all that stuff that exists in this Legislature. At this time I must confess I'm having difficulties with it because I had no idea of the breadth and width and involvement of our government activities into the lives of, I guess, our farmers and our ranchers and the like.

Nonetheless, I'm glad to see that this program is one of those ones that looks like it's necessary. Maybe some of the other ones aren't. Maybe some of the other ones have to be curtailed at some time; I don't know. Nonetheless, at some point in time I hope to have a comment to be a little more ingrained and knowledgeable. I may actually even undertake to do that this summer, maybe even with the help of the hon. agriculture minister's campaign manager. I ran into him at The Metropolitan Grill last Friday night, and he offered to explain it to me sometime. Maybe I will take him up on that. I look forward to that opportunity at some time.

Thank you very much for the opportunity and the explanation.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 8?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 8 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 18, Bill 2, Bill 3, and Bill 8.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 2, Bill 3, and Bill 8. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 18. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Hon. members, before we proceed with Bill 1, may I have unanimous consent to revert to introductions?

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members of Employment and Immigration's policy team who worked tirelessly on the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009. Bill 1 is close to completing its way through the legislative process. There have been many outstanding comments from both sides of the Assembly. I think it's only appropriate that Tim Thompson, Sandra Wagenseil, and Myles Morris are here to witness their hard work become law that will in turn benefit the thousands of Alberta reservists who serve our country. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly and our thank you for the work that you have done on Bill 1.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration on behalf of the hon. the Premier.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 1, the Employment Standards (Reservist Leave) Amendment Act, 2009.

This amendment provides Canadian Forces reservists in Alberta with unpaid, job-protected leave while they're away from their civilian jobs serving our country. The amendment also provides the reservist with an additional 20 days' leave to take part in annual training.

Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate the support of members on both sides of this Assembly, and I thank all members for their thoughtful comments and discussion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to speak very briefly in third on this legislation, which is very important to me. Very quickly, the fact that I'm here at all is subject to very much good fortune. My grandfather was a British cavalry officer in the First World War and was gassed at Ypres, and the fact that he made it through was a testimony to not only his abilities but those of the unit that he was assigned to. Also, my father was a pilot during the Second World War, and in part of his instruction circumstance his plane crashed, and he was pulled out seconds before the fuel tanks ignited. Again, with very good fortune and the quick act of the ground crew he was pulled to safety and he recuperated. He re-enlisted after the Second World War, so I grew up either on or very near bases for a large part of my life.

While reservists don't have the opportunity to live on base – obviously, they do some of their training on bases – the job that they do, the sacrifices they make are as equally important as those of the regular services. Recognizing them through the protection of their employment and recognizing their need to receive the training that will not only provide them with the tools that they need but allow them to be effective members of overseas action, whether it's peacekeeping or in a war circumstance, is absolutely essential.

One of the areas that I hope this bill also covers is a type of compensation for the employer who is required by this law to hold the position. Hopefully within the bill there is some accommodation for the employer's recognizing the importance and worth of their employee.

The 20-day allowance for training is extremely important. I know, as I say, being the son of a military officer, how wearing the experience was for my mother when my dad would be away on coursework, and that is nothing in comparison to the angst associated with a person being on the front lines. So it would be my hope that future bills will extend further to make sure that the spouse of a reservist and the families of reservists are supported.

When we lived on the base, that support was easier because, for example, when we were stationed at Namao, there was shopping, there was entertainment, there were a variety of circumstances on the base to support the spouses. But in the case of reservists they're obviously not living on the base, and sometimes a reservist's family can be somewhat isolated. Living off the base, their neighbours may not realize the magnitude of the sacrifice they are making. I would hope, as I say, that in future legislation as well as honouring the job that reservists do, we take into account the effect it has on their families when they're away and provide support for them, whether it be in respite care for the spouses or membership in community associations or access, as a number of regular forces personnel have, to special discounts for recreational activities. I would like to think that the privileges that the community and the government provide for members of the regular forces be extended to the greatest extent possible to reservists.

Reservists, as I say, while they've taken a great amount of personal time off to do the training, where that training sort of meets the mat or is undertaken is when the bullets are flying on a mission outside of Kandahar or, formerly, in Cyprus and a number of areas where brave Canadian men and women have represented this country.

Beyond a doubt, I and my Liberal colleagues support this legislation. I appreciate the government members for bringing it forward. As the son of a long line of militarily involved family members I say: well done.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Although this bill now is in third reading, I have not had an opportunity to speak to it, but I, too, will be brief. Although not to the extent of my hon. colleague from Calgary-Varsity my family, too, has a bit of a military history. My grandfather was 37 years old when World War II broke out, not exactly a young man; however, he did enlist in the army. He served as a cobbler in, of all places, Halifax. He made shoes for four years. When he came back from war, he brought a nice little bag home, and that was my first hockey bag that I took to hockey when I was seven years old. It said C. Hehr on it with a little army number and all that stuff. It was a neat little memento I got from World War II. As my grandfather's experience was as a cobbler, I'm sure that possibly the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's father wore some of the shoes that my grandfather was busy making in Halifax.

But to the merits of the bill. This is essentially something that is well received by both our side of the House and the government side. It's clearly something that's long past due as many other jurisdictions, in fact maybe all other jurisdictions, have already passed this type of job protection for reservists. We all know, as has probably been belaboured in this House, that Alberta's 2,500 reservists are doing us proud both as Alberta citizens and Canadian citizens at the same time. It's the least we can do as a community to recognize their sacrifice and allow for them to have their employment opportunities back when they return from duty.

On that note, I will leave it for others if they wish to partake in the debate.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available if anyone wishes to comment or question.

Seeing none, does anyone else wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

Bill 15

Dunvegan Hydro Development Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to move third reading of Bill 15, the Dunvegan Hydro Development Act.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the act arises out of requirements in sections 9 and 10 of our own Hydro and Electric Energy Act. The passage of this bill would allow the Alberta Utilities Commission to issue authorization to construct the facility on the Peace River. It would also allow the AUC to authorize operation of the facility at the appropriate time. The bill does not in any way infringe upon the normal regulatory authority of the Alberta Utilities Commission.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my remarks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll be very quick because the Liberal caucus is very supportive of renewable energy which does not leave a dramatic footprint, and run of the river is one such form of energy. Dams aren't required. The movement of fish and, basically, animal crossings are accounted for in the way the run of the river is set up. It fits very much into our philosophy that we need to diversify not only our economy but our various sources of power, and bringing on safe renewables such as run of the river is one of those ways.

I also want to commend the government on removing the cap within the last two years on wind generation and also encouraging a variety of organizations, both industrial in terms of large senses, like in the oil sands, but also on farms, in providing cogeneration and creative ways of using animal waste to create methane, with the potential of not only using the power provided by the methane on the farm but also the potential of exporting this power to the grid.

In terms of having received a greater understanding of the information, I think most Albertans when they hear the name Brian Keating will associate it with his outreach on behalf of the Calgary Zoo. I had a chance to teach two of the family members of his brother John Keating. John Keating has been involved in numerous renewable power projects. It was basically at a parent-teacher interview where I cornered John and asked him about types of renewable power. He was a big supporter of the idea of renewable power and the river run being a part of it.

I very much appreciate the hon. Member for Peace River bringing forward this legislation. It indicates a desire by this government to diversify its energy sources along with the expenditure on the CO₂ sequestration, to have a much greener approach and more renewable, practical approach to providing energy for this province. Therefore, I want to again thank the government member for bringing this forward. It is progressive. It is maybe one more step towards our greening of our energy requirements.

As the hon. Leader of the Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, has pointed out, we will continue to rely on and be grateful for the power generated from nonrenewable resources, whether it's conventional oil and gas or the more unconventional types such as the operation, bitumen collection, in the oil sands and also the other forms of power that are being generated.

We would advise a very careful, measured, well-informed approach as the government considers other forms of energy, and of those other forms we would hope that the greatest of consultation, the greatest of information gathering, and scientific reviews would be considered before going down the line toward nuclear energy. This is one of the most controversial types of energy and, unlike the river run, has both strengths and weaknesses that have to be considered in thorough debate.

I again thank the minister from Athabasca-Peace for bringing forward this piece of legislation. [interjection] Sorry. I expanded your territory. Sorry about that.

Mr. Oberle: And raised my title while you're at it.

Mr. Chase: Well, thank you. I'm sorry that we can't provide you a bonus for extending that area, but you've done a good job so far. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?
Do you wish to close, hon. member?

Mr. Oberle: Just call the question, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 5 Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and move third reading of Bill 5, Marketing of Agricultural Products Amendment Act, 2009.

This act will amend the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. The proposed amendments are a result of a review of the existing legislation and industry consultations. In 2006 the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council began an industry governance review, including a review of the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. Consultations included the 20 agricultural boards and commissions, a survey of producers who are not actively engaged in industry organizations, and meeting with other agricultural organizations in Alberta and, indeed, across Canada. Over 400 individuals participated in the consultation process, Mr. Speaker.

No substantial changes have been made to the act since 1987, so the proposed legislation will update the act, simplify the wording, eliminate duplication, and make minor amendments to clarify regulatory powers, including moving the review and appeal process into regulations. I think we had a good discussion on this in the Committee of Supply.

In conclusion, these amendments will allow the current act to better serve the needs of our agriculture marketing boards and commissions.

I appreciate the support of the hon. members from both sides of the House and anticipate their continued support with third reading of this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Today is very much a sort of a home, home on the range type of corralling of bills.

I very much appreciate the hon. minister of agriculture's consultation, having reached out to Albertans who are most affected, having brought the clarification into this bill, basically cutting through a whole lot of bureaucracy and red tape, bringing it up to its current expedient attempt.

The reality is that agriculture was the first strong pillar upon which this province was founded, and it continues to be a very strong pillar, particularly in these times of global recession, when outside forces determine the value of our nonrenewable resources, our oil and gas. Agriculture to a large extent is determined by global markets, but there is less of a fluctuation; there is greater stability within agriculture. There is an adaptability that is part of both farming and ranching where if necessary you change the type of animal or, in the farming case, you change your approach, whether it be to go more organic and use less fertilizer, all the different types of tilling. So the marketing of agricultural products is one of the ways this province is going to climb out of the recessionary hole that we're currently faced with.

I appreciate the minister of agriculture bringing forth this bill, which will strengthen not only agriculture in this province but our economy. Thank you for doing so.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?
The hon. minister to close debate?

Mr. Groeneveld: Closed.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 4 Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 11: Ms Notley]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed an honour to get up and speak to this bill, given that it allows for many of our postsecondary institutions, such as Mount Royal College in Calgary and some other institutions up here in Edmonton, the opportunity of moving into the university stream. I think that in the future allowing this stream to exist will enable more Albertans to become graduates of universities and of university level programs to obtain the knowledge that's going to be necessary to propel Alberta and its citizens into the 21st century to be able to truly compete in the knowledge-based economy. This process will allow us to continue to do that.

I would also encourage us to look at not only making some of this existing college and university space available for this stuff. We should be really looking down the future at opportunities where we can add more university space, more college and postsecondary education space throughout the province.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I've just noticed that you've already spoken in second reading.

Mr. Hehr: My goodness. My most humble apologies. We can move on.

The Acting Speaker: You have as well, Calgary-Varsity.
Does any member wish to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 6
Protection of Children Abusing Drugs
Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a privilege to stand and speak to Bill 6, which is the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, which is a good act that I plan, I believe, on supporting. I just have a few questions and concerns with the existing parameters.

If we look at the bill in total, it's really providing parents with children who are thought to have a difficulty with drugs an opportunity where they can confine those children for up to 10 days. The amendment actually proposes increasing the length of confinement, that was previously five days, to 10 days. Primarily, this is in regard to the more difficult nature of drug abuse, a recognition that many of the drugs out there now that are available to people who are under the age of 18 are much more potent and can cause significant physical addiction to this drug that lasts longer than five days. The 10-day window I believe is fair and reasonable for parents with children who are suffering from these addictions to put them in a confined setting to try and battle their demons and get a handle on at least the physical addiction so that when they leave the facility in 10 days, they have an opportunity to go out into the world and face it with a clear mind and decide whether following that lifestyle is, indeed, in their best interests or if they maybe want a clean break and to pursue longer range solutions.

There's also the possibility of adding another five days. At that point what this amendment I believe is seeking is that it would allow for a continued confinement of up to 10 days, but it would go before a judge, and it would give the judge the ability to extend the period for a further five days if the original time for a minor wasn't long enough to detox. In general I am in favour of this change. Of course, I would wait to hear how the Child and Youth Advocate will be involved and maybe some opportunities for individuals to seek some legal counselling to see if it is in their ability to get themselves out of this situation should it be necessary and give them an opportunity to be heard in a court of law. Those things I would be interested in hearing more about at the committee stage and at third before I render my final decision.

Nevertheless, I believe this bill recognizes that our best opportunity to deal with the addiction problems that are beginning to emerge not only in Alberta but in other areas of North America and, indeed, the world happen when they're young. The best time to fight these things is when individuals are young and when they are in the custody and care of their parents and when their parents are actively involved in their lives and really wish to help their children rid themselves of the addictive process.

I believe that this bill, at least at first glance, has some tremendous attributes that will enable some children and some parents some opportunities to get off drugs, to maybe rectify their lives and go forward. When those questions are answered and when I hear further debate on this, I imagine myself being supportive of these amendments.

I thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 6 here today. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes for anyone wishing to comment or question.

Seeing none, do any other members wish to join debate?
The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to close debate?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate what has been said as I've listened intently to the debate on Bill 6 and will be prepared to answer some of the questions when we get into committee.

At this point I'd like to move second reading of Bill 6.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

Public Health Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 17: Dr. Swann]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. A large part of Bill 7 has to do with clarifying where we are with regard to the delivery of services. The point of the bill will be to strengthen the role of the chief medical officer of health, support student public health programs, expand the reporting of public health matters, and transfer some of the regulations that were formerly under the Lieutenant Governor in Council to the minister. That is where we have a degree of concern, and that concern will be discussed in much greater detail when we come to Bill 52.

What has happened is that while we support whatever we can do to increase the efficiency of our delivery of universal public health services, the accountability portion is always of concern. We've gone from consolidation of regional health authorities to a smaller group. We went from 17, I believe, to 9, and now we've arrived at a superboard with a health board chairperson, who comes highly recommended – I have heard this – from Australia. That gives me hope because in Australia he has seen a number of private P3-type operations fail and actually be recovered within the public system. So I think the individual from Australia was a wise choice, and I commend the minister and the members of the superboard for coming up with that individual. I know it was a very extensive interviewing process, and I'm remaining optimistic that this is one of the individuals who has the background that can bring and strengthen our universal public health system.

One of the concerns that I have brought up before and that occurs, if not on a daily basis, certainly on a weekly basis within my constituency is who you're going to report to. When a constituent comes to me with regard to a health-related problem and access to the health system or support from the government for a malady, be it gastroparesis, which I have brought up prior, or whether it be receiving a particular type of cancer treatment which involves chemical combinations which have been approved for other types of cancer fighting within the province but not necessarily in the chemical combination, I used to be able to address my concerns to a lady whose name, I believe, was Lynn Redford.

Mr. Liepert: You still can.

Mr. Chase: I'm pleased to hear from the minister that that local autonomy still exists because this was one of my concerns. Possibly the minister can pass on the name of the most recent contact so that I can inform my constituents. I'm pleased to hear that local authority and local autonomy. . .

Mr. Liepert: Same one. Same one.

Mr. Chase: Oh. Okay. I'd heard that Lynn's position had changed, so I'm glad to hear that in this particular, limited experience I am wrong. I appreciate the hon. minister recognizing the talents of this lady. She is an absolutely wonderful front-line individual. We could call and within two hours we would get directed.

Mr. Liepert: Good blood lines from the Attorney General.

Mr. Chase: Oh, is that right? I hadn't realized. That goes to testify to the great quality of the blood lines that are there.

The concern, as I say – and I appreciate the minister for correcting my concern here or redirecting it. There are a number of groups like, for example, Rick Lundy, who is working on advocating for patients who have suffered difficulties in the medical system. It's on record the difficulties his wife had and the embarrassment associated with a miscarriage and not being able to be admitted to a room. The notion of the control – who do you go to, and how quickly will you get a response? – the local autonomy versus the overriding powers of the health board: hopefully, in debate over Bill 7 the minister will provide greater clarification, and in so doing, will alleviate some of the fears of individuals who have experienced ever-increasing waits in waiting rooms and at emergency.

Also, hopefully, as the minister provides greater information on Bill 7 and the way the health board will be administering, individuals involved in the various levels, paramedics and health professionals, will receive a greater sense of security. Right now there is such a flux that people are concerned not only for their own jobs within the health care system, which is a major employer in Alberta and, obviously, our most costly ministry, but we have not seen overall perceivable improvements within the system. For example, while 60 per cent of seniors have benefited from reduced costs in pharmaceuticals, it appears that the 40 per cent of seniors who haven't benefited have basically had their Blue Cross rates doubled so that any advantage that they receive from health premiums being removed has now been experienced as an increase in their pharmaceuticals.

I'll not get into the concerns over the transfer of the health records. That will come up in Bill 52. But suffice it to say that there is great concern both in the medical community and from a patient-client perception that the records might be subject to external scrutiny.

However, I look forward to the minister attempting to explain to me, as he did in the case of Lynn Redford, any other efficiencies and autonomies local authorities have kept. We may not have health regions, but according to the minister, we still have regional responsiveness. So I would look forward to the minister providing more information, and if not in this second reading stage, then providing those assurances during the Committee of the Whole stage. I do appreciate the information he provided so quickly, which did offer me a degree of reassurance.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes if anyone wishes to comment or question.

Hearing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to close debate?

Mr. Liepert: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: Any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'm sorry. I was just collaborating with my hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. If I could please be updated, I apologize for not being totally attentive to where we're at.

An Hon. Member: Bill 9.

Mr. Chase: Okay. Thank you. I do have comments that I would like to make with regard to Bill 9 if I may be permitted to do so. Thank you for that opportunity.

I've been quite collaborative this afternoon, and I have agreed with a number of bills. In general I agree with what is being intended within this bill, but I must take a small shot at the fact that it's called the Government Organization Amendment Act. By putting the words "government" and "organization" together, it comes across to me as a bit of a paradoxical oxymoron.

An Hon. Member: Yeah, like Liberal appeal.

Mr. Chase: Well, another example of an oxymoron if we're going to exchange is Progressive Conservative – okay? – if we're going to get into wordsmithing.

Mr. Hancock: It's totally unparliamentary to call me an oxymoron.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the Member for Calgary-Varsity has the floor and will address the chair.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. Who is definitely neither an ox nor a moron although we have spent a lot of time talking about beef today – okay? – related to the ox family. I just want to draw that connection.

In terms of Bill 9, the Government Organization Amendment Act, in this year 2009 one of the biggest improvements this government made in terms of its organization or reorganization is getting rid of the ministry whose acronym was RAGE, which was restructuring and government efficiency. I give the government full credit for getting rid of that ministry and returning to the various ministries the ability to conduct their own business without having a sort of overseer ministry.

This act basically brings greater efficiency into the organization of government. The intention is to get rid of red tape to improve the delivery of service to Albertans. Given these recessionary times improved organization and accountability should be praised at all levels. At this point, without belabouring it, I am supportive. So we don't miss my colleague through further discussions, I would indicate to the chair his desire to participate.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing no one, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me an opportunity to speak on Bill 9, Government Organization Amendment Act, 2009. I, too, would like to say that this looks like a good bill that will increase the accountability of our registering agencies. I think that's a good thing. For one, in their privatization in 1993 these agencies took over a great many things: the licensing of vehicles, the handing out of drivers' licences. Not only do these agencies give this stuff out, but they also hold a great deal of private, sensitive information in their databases and have access to all sorts of things. Of course, when you have the ability to issue a legal document such as a driver's licence, there's often some temptation for individuals to try and produce those documents or for people to try and get them. I think having this type of increased government oversight over our registry agents is an important step. It increases the accountability in the process and can sort of keep an eye on some of the things that maybe were creeping up in the system.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to speak to that bill. On that, we can go forward.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is also available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

5:40 Bill 10
Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act

[Adjourned debate March 11: Ms Pastoor]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Just to provide a bit of a preview as part of the tracking of the process and to assure the hon. House leader, I will be speaking to this very briefly, as will my colleagues from Calgary-Buffalo and Calgary-McCall, and the last speaker will be calling for adjournment. Thank you.

What Bill 10 purports to accomplish is the licensing and monitoring grounds for the government over supportive living facilities. The bill outlines what this legislation applies to as regards facilities. A framework is given for inspections, investigations, complaints, and offences, which is very much appreciated. What creates a degree of burden and hopefully will be addressed through amendments is the leeway left to regulation regarding what is exempt from the application of this act. There are issues concerning how a complaints officer may dismiss a complaint. However, I believe that the intention behind the bill is good, and I think with just a little bit of collaborative effort we can accomplish what the bill intends to do.

As the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has pointed out, we have a variety of different types of accommodations. We have long-term care, we have assisted living, and we have supportive living, and when working well together, they all provide homes where accredited support is provided to individuals whether they be by age placed into these institutions, whether by some addiction or behavioural difficulty in the case of group homes for youth. Also, individuals with physical or developmental disabilities find themselves in a supportive living circumstance.

It is somewhat unfortunate within this province that we have so few accessible home environments so that individuals would not have to necessarily be moved into supportive living accommodations, but time and necessity require it. As a result, it's important that these facilities be regulated. This is what, again, Bill 10 intends to accomplish.

I very much appreciate the work that was done by the member from Ponoka and also the Member for Calgary-Foothills, I believe it was – I may be wrong – who worked in conjunction with the Member for Lethbridge-East on long-term care. They toured the province after the Auditor General had pointed out some of the deficiencies of long-term care, and they made numerous recommendations, some of which have been implemented.

So I see Bill 10 doing for supportive living what previous legislation and Auditor General assessments have done for long-term care. Rather than cause confusion for the House leader, if it is all right with the House leader, I would move to adjourn debate at this time. I did not want to pre-empt speakers on his side.

Thank you very much.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

As we pray, let us also commemorate the 92nd anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917. We give thanks for the lives of the faithful men and women in our military who have defended and continue to defend the freedoms and values we cherish. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. On this day I would ask that all Members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly, all others present here, and those observing these proceedings in their homes join together as we reflect upon the lives of Canadian military personnel lost in service to their countrymen. May their souls rest in eternal peace, and may a nation be eternally grateful. God bless. Amen.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure and honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a rather large group of grade 6 students from the Woodhaven middle school, 103 visitors, who have had the opportunity to do your mock Legislature. When I was downstairs talking to them in the rotunda, they passed a bill that would allow school uniforms and as well cellphone usage in the classroom, which I know is very close to the Speaker's heart as well. These wonderful, intuitive students are accompanied by a great group of education professionals: Ms Jayna Butler, Mrs. Ashley Lyster, Ms Emily Pearce, Mrs. Deb Schellenberger, Miss Joanne Fuminger, Mrs. Dara Coles as well as parents and helpers Mrs. Shelley Gibson, Mrs. Jennifer McIntosh, Mrs. Courtney Haberjam, and Mr. Paul Snell. A large group like this I believe is in both of our galleries, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: For clarification that was to disallow cellphone use in the classroom.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon.

Mr. Rogers: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of seniors and juniors from the Leduc Family Worship Centre, located in the city of Leduc, my hometown. I actually watched the largest cross-shaped church in Canada being built across from our family home over 30 years ago. Our guests are Mrs. Pam Bakker, Mr. Josh Bakker, Mr. Harvey Bakker, Mr. Lawrence Glesman, Mrs. Linda Glesman, Mr. Jack Cathie, Mrs. Mary Cathie, Mr. Rex Stringer, Ms Clara Kuny, Ms Elsie Jabs, Ms Heidi Zerbin, Ms Violet Wilson, Mrs. Doris Rumak, and Mr. Lawrence Rumak. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly eight individuals from the 211 support network and distress centre. I'd like to introduce Nancy McCalder, the executive director of support direct; Nancy Douglas, the helpline director; Lynn Odynski, a board member; Andy Feher, a board member; Lenka Stuchlik, a board member; Mr. Paul Bartel, a program director with the distress centre in Calgary; and Mr. Tim Osborne of the United Way of the Alberta capital region. 211 is a free, nonemergency referral and information line that is available 24 hours a day to serve Edmonton and Calgary and their surrounding regions. I will be discussing 211 more later this afternoon. I would invite the group to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House and to all Albertans three people that made a presentation to rural caucus this afternoon. First of all, a constituent from Ponoka, Else Pedersen, who has been the president since 2002 of the Freehold Owners Association, a group that represents about 4,200 members and possibly up to 22,000 owners around Alberta. She's a retired businessperson from Ponoka. David Speirs, director and chairman of the Freehold Owners technical committee, is a geologist and geophysicist from Calgary. Ross Watson is a director of the Freehold Owners Association. He's a farmer and a business owner from Sylvan Lake. They have made a very compelling presentation to rural caucus this afternoon about issues and challenges facing owners of freehold minerals. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two separate introductions to make to the Assembly today. The first introduction I'd like to make is Joseph Ryan Saunders. Mr. Saunders is joining us in the public gallery. He's a constituent of the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and he is a particular advocate on behalf of grizzly bears in Alberta and is hoping that there will be strong leadership taken in the Assembly to protect grizzly bears. I would ask Mr. Saunders to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction is a really interesting program that has been launched by the Terra Centre for pregnant and parenting teens, and that is their ambassadors program. The intent of the ambassadors program is to give young mothers the opportunity to develop leadership and public speaking skills by being active members of the community and participating in special events and also developing a supportive network with each other. We have one of the Terra Centre ambassadors with us today; that's Kayla Lamouch. She's joined by Laura Slomp Booy, who is the youth leadership facilitator. I would ask them both to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you very much for coming.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

211 Community Information

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first priority as an MLA is to serve my constituents. Often we are called upon and asked to direct our constituents to one of the 19,000 charities, government, and nongovernment organizations that exist in Alberta to serve the needs of people. Edmonton, Calgary, and their surrounding regions have easy access to all 19,000 organizations via the phone number 211. 211 is a free, nonemergency referral and information line that is available 24 hours a day to help serve our constituents. When you dial 211, a person answers the phone, and the callers are able to describe the situation in their own words. 211's information and referral specialists then ask the right questions, assess the situation, and refer the caller to the programs or services best suited to meet their needs.

Currently 211 is available to 78 per cent of the American population. In Canada 211 is currently only available to about 28 per cent of our citizens. We want to join British Columbia and Ontario in expanding our 211 service to become a province-wide resource for all Albertans. 211 can help to reduce inappropriate calls to 911, avoid the fragmentation and duplication of support services, and increase our ability to serve our constituents without having to remember all 19,000 organizations that are available to them. We can do our part to help 211 be brought to all Albertans. Let's make 211 Alberta a reality.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health System Restructuring

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier rolled out his big budget deficit on Tuesday, he very carefully omitted the provincial health care deficit, which would have added over a billion dollars to an already staggering $4.7 billion shortfall. The health minister has already tried to pin this deficit on Albertans, claiming that our aging population is forcing costs in health care to rise. But Edmonton and Calgary have among the youngest populations in Canada, with median ages of under 36 years old. In fact, demographically Alberta is the youngest province in the country. Seniors are not responsible for the health care deficits; this government's mismanagement is.

The fault, again, lies with a government that fired the regional health authorities to replace them with one hand-picked superboard. No reasonable government would implement such a massive radical change without a cost-benefit analysis, but this is not a reasonable government. The former deputy minister of health admitted that no research reviews, either external or internal, recommended that the government take this course.

Now we see how well this radical gamble has worked out. The Capital health region was regarded as one of the best health administrations in the nation: highly praised for innovation, efficiency, and patient care; ranked number one in a national survey of 50 Canadian health centres. Not only have we lost a crown jewel in Alberta's public health care system; the restructuring has sown chaos and confusion among health care professionals and patients alike, with the health minister and this government unable to determine when exactly we'll start to see improvements in patient care. Perhaps worst of all is that this gamble has already caused ballooning deficits that have cost Alberta taxpayers over a billion dollars in just a few short months.

Who knows what experiments this Premier and this health minister will perform next on our public health care system? I hope privatization is not one of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Energy Efficiency Incentives

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to say that Alberta's climate change strategy includes a commitment to help Albertans be more energy efficient in their day-to-day lives. Earlier today the province, through the hon. Minister of Environment, announced that it is investing $36 million on energy efficiency rebates for consumers. The rebates encourage Albertans to reduce their daily energy use and allow them to save money at the same time. This pledge by the province encourages consumer spending on greener products and services, helping to shift the market towards greater energy efficiency. These initiatives will create an economic ripple effect that will benefit everyone across the province and help the environment at the same time.

The rebates themselves are significant, particularly to Albertans who are looking to retrofit their homes. They range from $100 to $10,000 and are available to existing homeowners who take steps to improve their energy efficiency, to new homebuyers who purchase energy efficient homes, and to taxi operators who are transitioning their fleet to hybrid vehicles. For those of us who are homeowners and are looking to make our homes greener, this program will help us to get a home energy evaluation to know what we need to do to become more energy efficient. The program will also help Albertans purchase more energy efficient washing machines, furnaces, hot water heaters, and insulation.

It's absolutely critical that all Albertans reduce their use of energy if we are to meet our greenhouse emission goals. The province's overall reduction target by 2050 is 200 megatonnes; 24 megatonnes of that will come through energy efficiency and conservation. This move towards energy efficiency demonstrates the government's commitment to building a culture of conservation in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Home-care Workers

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently spoke with a resident from Airdrie-Chestermere named Ms Grace Forsberg. Ms Forsberg has served patients as a home-care worker for 25 years. She'll be retiring soon, and she asked that I bring some awareness to the valuable role that home care plays in our health care system.

As such, I rise today to acknowledge the excellent work that is being done by Alberta's home-care workers and the critical role that they play in our health care system. Without the services provided by home-care personnel, many clients would have to live in long-term care facilities. While we have some wonderful facilities across the province, there is something to be said for being at home, sleeping in your own bed, and having your family with you to provide support.

Recognizing the desire of Albertans to age at home, the government announced additional funding for continuing care initiatives in Budget 2009. This financial support to home care and community programs is essential to keeping people healthier and safer in their homes and frees up needed space in our health care facilities. Home-care workers provide our province's patients with flexibility and support while recovering from illness. As such, home-care personnel are front-line workers in our health care system.

I would ask the Assembly to join me in recognizing the importance of home-care workers to the health of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Alberta Job Losses

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's working people are rightfully concerned about the security of their jobs, and this government's budget did absolutely nothing to calm their fears. This morning we received word that last month a net total of 15,000 more Albertans are out of work, bringing the total for the first three months of the year to more than 45,000. That number is actually skewed because it includes all the entry-level part-time jobs that replaced good-paying full-time ones. What it means, of course, is that the people who are paying for this government's gross mismanagement of our economy are the ordinary people of our province, who struggle each and every month to make ends meet, while the well-connected friends of the Conservative government are receiving fat bonuses and big raises.

Of course, the fact that the finance minister left nearly a quarter-billion dollars of cuts on the table without explaining where they're going to come from does nothing to ease workers' fears. The Premier mused about cutting a thousand nursing jobs while increasing funding for doctors. By suggesting that public-sector jobs may be cut and/or their wages slashed, this government is attempting to intimidate workers.

Mr. Speaker, workers are the backbone of Alberta's economy. It should go without saying that no sector – not oil and gas, not agriculture, not retail – can flourish in our province without a well-paid, trained workforce. That's why it's inexplicable to us why this week's budget did so little to create the real jobs that would get Alberta back on track. Instead, this government's answer was to hope that things will return to what they once were. The only ones helped by this budget, Mr. Speaker, were the government's well-connected friends and insiders while working Albertans and those who want to were ignored.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grande Prairie Storm Junior Hockey Team

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pride that I rise today to congratulate the outstanding athletes on the Grande Prairie Storm junior hockey team. Last Sunday in Grande Prairie a crowd of over 3,000 fans cheered on the Storm as they defeated the Spruce Grove Saints in double overtime to win the Enerflex Cup Alberta Junior Hockey League Championship. The Storm was not intimidated by the challenge of competing against the number one team in the league and beat Spruce Grove during the final in four straight games.

Storm coach and general manager Mike Vandekamp led the Storm in a spectacular season, with the most wins and points in team history. They had many close games throughout the season, but these athletes and their fans refused to give up, and their perseverance paid off with an outstanding victory on home ice.

The team draws players and fans from throughout the entire Grande Prairie region and is representative of Alberta's growing reputation for athletic and volunteerism excellence here at home and around the world. I congratulate all the athletes, the head coach, coaches, assistants, parents, and volunteers of the team on a job well done. They are a fine example of Albertans' courage, determination, dreams, and the spirit to achieve.

We all look forward to celebrating the Grande Prairie Storm's success as they take on the winner of the B.C. Hockey League for the Doyle Cup and their chance to advance to the Royal Bank Cup national championship. Good job and good luck.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 35, the Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009.

This is an administrative bill that will amend existing legislation and give force to a ruling of the National Energy Board. Specifically, this ruling concerned the NOVA Gas Transmission segment of the TransCanada pipeline system. Mr. Speaker, extraprovincial pipeline reliance on the NOVA Gas Transmission system resulted in TransCanada applying for and the National Energy Board recently accepting that the NOVA system is subject to federal regulation. The amendments in this act will reflect a quasi-judicial ruling.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 35 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Deficit

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier makes claims to being open, accountable, and transparent, yet he has tabled a budget which makes no reference to a looming estimated $1.3 billion in deficits, thirteen hundred million of overspending in one year by his minister. To the Premier: will the Premier at least admit, if he cannot give exact numbers, that there will be a very sizable deficit incurred in Health and Wellness this past year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe the health minister answered the question very clearly yesterday. The Health Services Board are having their March 31 year-end statements audited. Once the audit is complete, then the audited statements will be provided to the minister, and the minister will then share the information with the House.

Dr. Swann: How can the Premier claim to be open and accountable when he will only release the deficit on Health Services by June 30, when the Legislature is closed, hidden from debate and public scrutiny?

Mr. Stelmach: I don't know if we're going to be debating whatever the auditors deliver to Albertans, but this will be public information. Whatever the auditors decide, whatever figure they bring forward is not what will be debated. What we could debate when we come back next fall is: how do we further find efficiencies and savings in delivery of health in the province of Alberta?

Dr. Swann: Well, if the Premier is going to be accountable to Albertans, will he withhold the bonuses this year of the deputy minister and senior officials in Health, recognizing that they have failed their duty to the public? If not, why not?

Mr. Stelmach: We have.

Dr. Swann: For this year?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes, for this year. We clearly said that there will be no bonuses, and we're sticking with that decision. The bonuses are suspended.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Funding for Cancer Care

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Albertans and health professionals find it unacceptable that after six years of raising concerns about shortages in cancer services at the Tom Baker in Calgary, there are still delays in treatment, risking both patients and professional reputations. People want to know how we have drifted so far from the basics of health care, the most basic of medical needs, in this province. To the Premier: will the Premier tell Albertans whether there are any plans in the next three years to grant the $22 million funding request from the Tom Baker?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is a serious matter that the hon. leader raises in the House. Cancer affects every family in Alberta. We're fully aware of that. We have increased the budget for cancer drugs. In fact, the taxpayer pays for all of the drugs for cancer treatment. We're also going to be taking pressure off the Tom Baker Centre by opening radiation clinics in Red Deer and in Lethbridge as well so that people don't have to travel to Calgary. They can get some of the therapy in their own communities. We are aware of the pressures across Alberta, and we will be working with the Alberta health board to ensure that we find an appropriate way of dealing with the ever-increasing numbers of cancer patients.

Dr. Swann: This government is spending millions of dollars on administrative reshuffling in health care. Will the Premier get his act together and immediately shift back to basics now to make the number one priority the care of sick people?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it is the number one priority. We want to improve access, improve quality. We want to get better value for the dollars that are being spent in health. The health budget takes about 40 per cent of the overall budget of the province of Alberta, and we want to ensure that we can increase the number of people that are treated in the province but at the same time work with all health care providers so that we can build those efficiencies.

Dr. Swann: Adding to people's outrage is the awareness that this government sold the cancer clinic along with the Holy Cross hospital a decade ago for a song. It is now buying back space for cancer care from a private company at a premium. Where have the priorities gone? Why has cancer care taken second place to private interests?

Mr. Stelmach: It hasn't taken second place to any delivery. As I said, I'm sure every family in this province is affected by cancer. We have family members, relatives that are being treated for various cancers in various parts of the province. It is an important goal of the minister and of the Alberta Health Services Board, and we'll continue to work towards improving access for those people that are in the system.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this week through your good graces we had four young people that were in your gallery that have received considerable cancer treatment. I spent time with the families. You know, they're from different parts of the province, and it is difficult because families have to travel to a larger centre. It is a difficult time for them all. We want to put policies in place and offer a wider range of services to extend out of the two major cities so that we reduce the impact on families.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Employment Supports

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March, unfortunately, another 15,000 Alberta workers were laid off. We now have 45,000 job losses in the first three months of this year. That's three times the government's projection for the whole, entire year. The current budget shows very little leadership and does not take significant action to address these job losses through retraining programs. My first question is to the Premier. With unemployment numbers again rising today, unfortunately, showing very large job losses across the province, does the Premier finally recognize that his government's projections are completely unrealistic, inaccurate, and need to change now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our hearts go out to all those Albertans that have lost their jobs over the last number of months. There's been such a rapid change in the economy, totally unprecedented around the globe. You know, losing a job is never easy. Everybody wants to contribute to society. The budget that our minister introduced this week is going to help those families. We're going to help through retraining programs, keep investing in infrastructure, ensure that we're not laying off public-sector staff to add to the increasing roll, and we'll make sure, as we work through this year, that we put as many people as we can back to work. The 15,000 that was first estimated is an annual figure. They're using that as the figure for the whole year. There will be fluctuations from winter to summer to spring, but we hold firm on those figures.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Interesting.

Thank you. Again to the hon. Premier. Among 15- to 24-year-olds across this province the unemployment rate is 11 per cent, twice the provincial average. This government is neglecting a generation. Now, why is the government failing to train these young people to enable them to find long-term, stable, quality jobs where they can get pension benefits and afford to settle down and raise a family?

Mr. Stelmach: I wasn't quite sure if he said 11-year-olds or 11 per cent. I'd hope that at 11 years old they'd be in school and that even at 15 years of age they'd still be in school and completing their education program.

Now, of course, for those that have finished high school or finished university, we know that the oil and gas sector and forestry are two sectors that rely on sales outside the province into global markets, and those markets have been depressed. We're going to be working especially with those two sectors to see how we can help through not only provincial but federal policy to get those people back to work.

Mr. MacDonald: That response proves to me that the Premier is not listening.

Now, again to the Premier: given that funding for job creation and training and income supports is only 2 per cent higher this year compared to the forecast for last year, is it the government policy not to take additional action to support the tens of thousands of Albertans that, unfortunately, through no fault of their own have lost their jobs recently?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A hundred and sixty-four million dollars for retraining and career counselling: that is a significant amount. We'll continue to support those families in need, but most importantly the dollars that we are reinvesting in infrastructure and keeping the public-sector jobs going are going to minimize those job losses in the province. I'm happy to say that as we're entering summer, more construction jobs are starting up, especially on roads. We'll see those numbers come down.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Provincial Budget

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We've called this budget a welfare budget. We've called it half baked. It's both of those, but the simple reality is that it's a dishonest budget. This Tory government has deliberately left a health board deficit of $1.4 billion off the books. To the Premier: why are you hiding the truth from Albertans that the real deficit in this budget is actually more than $6 billion?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader, I guess, was preoccupied when I answered the very same question just a while ago. The Alberta Health Services annual statement, which ends March 31, just ended here a few days ago. It is being audited. Once the audit is complete, the results of that audit will be made public. All Albertans will know about the operations of the board, and when the information comes here, then we'll work on how we can best deliver the services.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this government knows that there's a projected $1.4 billion deficit in the health system because its own health board has told them so, but they are trying to hide it from Albertans. This government is cooking the books. To the Premier: if you can't table an honest budget, why should the taxpayers trust you with their money?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, I guess different words will be used in the Assembly, but there's a lot of input that went into the budget after considerable consultation with various sectors, charitable organizations as well, and hard-working, taxpaying Albertans. We were told to build a budget that in terms of spending was the rate of inflation plus population. We did that. They asked us to focus on education and health and support for the most vulnerable, and this is what this budget delivered.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, can you imagine what would happen to a Wall Street banker who misstated a projected deficit by a third? This government couldn't handle money in the good times, and it obviously can't in the bad. Will the Premier direct his finance minister to withdraw this phony budget and resubmit one that is transparent and exposes the fact that there's really a deficit of $6 billion in this budget?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I lauded the hon. leader for being one of the few across the way to read the budget and understand it. Maybe that was premature. The $2 billion that we're talking about is in fiscal period 2010-11, and for this year it will be $4.7 billion. We're looking at savings of $2 billion in the second year out. But we're the only jurisdiction – the only jurisdiction – that has a comprehensive three-year fiscal plan with all of the supporting documents tabled in the Legislature with the three-year budget, the only jurisdiction to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's municipalities will receive $400 million this year for capital and operating expenses through the province's municipal sustainability initiative. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. With $100 million less in funding from last year, will this not result in a reduction in infrastructure spending by the municipalities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our municipalities receive a level of support that is unmatched in this country, providing municipalities with $5.6 billion over three years, and I do want to say $400 million of MSI this year. In addition to that, I would like to say that this does not include the many projects that will be eligible under the federal program. MSI has made a very positive impact on Alberta municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also for the same minister. The AUMA issued a news release that says that the MSI funding reduction is a disincentive to its members applying for federal funding under the building Canada fund. Can the minister tell us if he feels that this, in fact, is the case?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, absolutely not. In fact, the programs complement each other. There are programs that qualify under the municipal sustainability initiative that could also qualify under the federal programs. Municipalities could end up seeing more money than they did last year. MSI criteria have also changed so that it enables municipalities to use interest as an eligible expense. So this is an opportunity for municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I understand that interest costs are now an eligible expense under MSI. How will this change benefit Albertans?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, it will give municipalities the opportunity to move forward on vital infrastructure programs. Municipalities can take advantage of the 30 per cent less cost on construction costs. That is a substantial amount of money. Muni-palities are on the front line of these projects. They will create jobs, and it will keep Alberta working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Provincial Tax Policy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This PC government's approach to budgeting for bad times reminds me of the smoker who says, "I'll quit when cigarettes hit 20 bucks a pack," or maybe Scarlett O'Hara in Gone with the Wind, whose response to crisis was: I'll think about that tomorrow. So it is that we have this line in the budget about the $2 billion fiscal correction in case the recession keeps getting deeper. We'd rather deal with that tomorrow than exercise the discipline to set things right today and hope and pray, hope to heck tomorrow never comes. To the finance minister. Perhaps I'm reading this wrong. Is the minister, in fact, already aware that her budget numbers are overly optimistic, and is she softening us all up for a $2 billion tax hike?

Ms Evans: No, Mr. Speaker. We're certainly not softening anybody up for a $2 billion tax hike. I have to compliment the hon. member. He took the time yesterday to share an experience with the Calgary chamber. There I said what I say here. There certainly are opportunities on two sides of the equation, to either figure out how we raise revenues – and that might happen for us with commodity prices – or reduce our expenditures. One thing that the Calgary papers have reported resoundingly is identify that one quick way to get $700 million is if those dollars would come home to roost that the federal government owes us for health transfers, $200 for every man, woman, and child. That would solve at least a third of our problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the finance minister: is this minister committed to not increasing income taxes?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, we indicated yesterday, both the President of Treasury Board and myself, that we couldn't leave any stone unturned. Our Premier very clearly identified, in response to a suggestion raised by the member opposite, that there would be no PST here, absolutely not, and that we would look instead at management of our budget on both sides of the equation in a way that would best help Albertans to keep on working and to keep our savings as whole as possible.

Mr. Taylor: Again to the minister: is she committed to not introducing any new taxes?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think everybody here would like to make that claim, but I want to be very honest and open with Albertans. When you have a situation where we don't know exactly how long this recession will last, we have to look at all the options. We believe it's to be a short-term decline. We believe that we'll be back into surplus budgets by 2012-13. During this period of time, however, we're going to have to look at the various options, and we want to make sure that we balance, do exactly what we did this year, make wise choices in spending, saving, and building capacity.

Travel Alberta

Mr. Webber: Mr. Speaker, Tuesday's budget highlighted $57 million for tourism marketing through Travel Alberta. My first question is to this colourful hon. member sitting beside me here, the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Now that Travel Alberta is at arm's length, how will the government know, how will we know that this money is being used effectively?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the compliment. It is spring.

Mr. Speaker, accountability is always important. I just want you to know that one week ago the lights of the Travel Alberta corporation turned on in this province, and I want to assure all members that we put in place a board with really good business expertise, so we're going to really look to this board. But under this new governance structure I will still continue to review and approve the business plan which was tabled in this Assembly yesterday. That business plan sets out how the funding will be spent. The plan is based on a research-based, market-driven model.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Webber: My second question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the regions other than the Rockies or Calgary and Edmonton see any of this funding?

Mrs. Ady: Well, as I was saying before, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General will also be looking to see that Albertans' money is well spent.

While the Rockies are iconic and people know about them all over the world and they're important to tourism, so are the other areas of this province that have wonderful things to see. I'm happy to say that $7 million has been targeted towards ensuring that the story of all Alberta gets told and that people know what there is to be offered in this province. This week alone we had a Growing Rural Tourism Conference, that was held in Camrose, that helped those partners better understand how to move people around this province.

Mr. Webber: My final question to the same minister. Tourism is vulnerable to changes in world markets, so what is being done to minimize the risks and strengthen our position as a tourism destination here in Alberta?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, Travel Alberta and the board are paying very close attention to world conditions right now. We know that it is tougher out there, so they're doing all to make sure that we are being cautious. But we think it is the wrong thing to pull out of those markets. We've spent millions of dollars promoting this province all over the world. We think the wrong thing to do is to pull back. We're going to continue to press forward, stick with the plan. We think we have a good-news story to tell.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Grizzly Bear Protection

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like Blondie in her 1980s classic the Alberta Liberals are asking Albertans to call us, call us any time regarding Budget 2009. Carl from Calgary did just that by dialing 1.888.886.2834. Carl noted that the grizzly bear is a threatened species in Alberta and is an indicator of health in our ecosystem. Accordingly, a dollar spent to save the grizzly bear is also money spent to protect other plants and animals. To the minister of SRD: why is there no line item for species . . .

The Speaker: Sorry, hon. member. You spent too much time advertising.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, what was that telephone number again?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you. That was a long advertisement, but I'll get to the heart of the matter here. Why is there no line item for species at risk and conservation in the provincial budget for grizzly bears?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that there is significant funding for species at risk and specifically for grizzly bears. I'll be happy to send those numbers over to the hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: You wouldn't happen to have those numbers handy right now?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I believe he received a rather tall pile of data yesterday, but I'll do his work for him and sort it out and send it over.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents are expressing concern about mountain pine beetle infestations in southwest Alberta, particularly as one-quarter of the area's land base is parks and protected areas, important to tourism and recreation. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is his department doing to safeguard this forested landscape?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is correct. The pine beetle does not respect map boundaries between parks and working forest or between provincial boundaries. The pine beetle represents a threat to the entire Rocky Mountain ecosystem as a whole, and that's the problem we're addressing. I'm happy to report to you and the House that we're working closely with the colourful Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, with our counterparts in British Columbia, and also with Parks Canada to co-ordinate our approach and make the selective use, the proper use of the different tools we have to fight pine beetles.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is again to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Since the public lands and provincial parks of southwest Alberta are adjacent to Banff national park, what success has his department had with getting Parks Canada to collaborate with provincial mountain pine beetle control efforts?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the hon. member is correct. Waterton, Banff, and Jasper are three major national parks on our western boundary, saddling strategic passes which potentially represent the inroads for the pine beetle from British Columbia. I'm happy to report that I visited with Parks Canada in both Jasper and Banff last summer and had a very good, close working relationship. Also, my department co-chairs a strategic directions council that sits with our counterparts in British Columbia. I can tell you and can assure you that when it comes to the pine beetle, Parks Canada and Alberta are on the same page.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the colourful Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Can she explain what measures are being taken in provincial parks to control the mountain pine beetle?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member said, we are working closely with Sustainable Resource Development on this issue. I mean, these are provincial parks which we all very much value. We are using controlled burns in the parks. We're also taking all infected trees out in a tree selection. We've seen what's happened in British Columbia, and we don't want to see it in the parks in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Continuing Care Review

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister of health pointed out that there are still long-term care beds in the capital plan for this year's budget. However, by project breakdown of the three-year capital plan only five of the total 11 continuing care projects are going ahead entirely as planned. The rest are deferred or the project scope is under review. To the Minister of Health and Wellness. For the seniors who are in the communities where continuing care facilities are under review by Alberta Health Services, when will the minister release these findings to the public?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure that there's much more that I can add that I haven't already said in the last couple of days. In each particular case where there is a project that funds have been committed to, we want to sit down with the community and make sure that what is going forward best meets the needs of that community. We would be doing that over the next short period of time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. For the facilities where the scope of the project is under review, how long will construction be delayed while at least 566 Alberta seniors wait in acute care at a huge, huge cost to the taxpayers?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'd like to emphasize again, Mr. Speaker, that one of the things that we did do in this budget was commit an extra $42 million to our continuing care programs so that we can get more home care out into the community so that many of those patients could actually be discharged from acute care if physicians are satisfied that care will be provided when they're discharged. This isn't just a matter of taking people from acute care and sticking them into long-term care.

Ms Pastoor: No, and I certainly agree with that, but most of these will have to go into some sort of care.

Will the minister tell Albertans who is doing this review? Is it Alberta Health Services or another privately contracted group? Have you any idea of what the price tag might be?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this will be done internally between Alberta Health Services and the Department of Health and Wellness. There would be no additional price tag as suggested by the member.

We also have to recognize, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of long-term care facilities in this province that are currently under construction and will be coming on stream later this year and early next year. So it's hardly like there is nothing being constructed in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alberta Job Losses

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, for three months 500 people a day have lost their jobs in Alberta, and the worst is yet to come. Real projections show the pace of job loss actually skyrocketing later this year and into next spring. Your dishonest budget said you'd support 80,000 jobs. The reality is that you haven't created one. To the minister of finance: how far out of touch can you possibly be to continue insisting to Albertans that they will only lose 15,000 jobs this year when we're on track to lose at least 12 times that many?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'm really glad that the hon. member posed the question so that I can reintroduce to this House something we've been talking about. We took an average over the 12-month period last year. There were a lot of fluctuations in where we were at, and we calculated what the number was. Then we took an average of what's projected over this year, for the full 12 months of this year. We are still projecting significant job increases for the last portion of the year. We are still projecting 15,000 jobs fewer this year than last year. I could answer the rest.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this finance minister is the only person still hanging on to that projection. Meanwhile, there's nothing new or stimulating in this budget. All of your announcements are reannouncements. If reannouncing old press releases created jobs, we'd have zero unemployment. Unfortunately, your job requires a little bit more effort than that. Now, to the minister: rather than decreasing support for infrastructure construction for municipalities, why aren't you investing to create new jobs – new jobs – and keep Albertans working?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, let's go back to our figures. Infrastructure spending in Alberta is double the Canadian average: $2,200 for every man, woman, and child. We're spending $23.2 billion over the next three years, $7.2 billion this year. For every billion dollars of work on public infrastructure 11,600 jobs are created. That doesn't even speak to the dollars that the health minister has talked about where projects were not able to be completed, which will ultimately add to the overall spending for public-sector infrastructure. We meet and beat anywhere else in the country by double.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this month Alberta almost led the country in that we posted the second-highest number of job losses across the country. While every other province is adopting new stimulus spending, this government is actually cutting back and threatening to eliminate public-sector jobs. You're making Albertans feel even more desperate, more afraid, and it's going to make things worse. To the minister: why won't you finish your budget and offer some real new spending initiatives to create new jobs?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, the only ones that are talking about this in negative terms are the members across the House. Everybody else is seeing some very positive things about the dollars that we've spent. They can't have it both ways. They can't tell us not to increase operating spending, which we did, but also expect that we're going to be able to both increase operating spending, which we have, and not add some extra supports for people. The Premier has spoken about our sorrow when we do lose jobs. We don't like to have fewer jobs. But on average we expect that to even out, and many of the major players in Alberta give us their assurance that they're still prepared to make those jobs happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Apprenticeship Training

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Apprentices are important to build Alberta's skilled workforce for today and for tomorrow. Even in these tough economic times there is still demand for skilled tradespeople throughout this province. In fact, earlier today the Prime Minister announced $2,000 apprenticeship completion grants. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What are the criteria for apprentices to qualify for this grant?

The Speaker: This comes under the federal jurisdiction or provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I could maybe enlighten the House a little bit. Apprenticeship programming comes under the provincial jurisdiction of my department. In fact, student finance is a shared responsibility of the provincial government and the federal government. However, it was an honour today to participate with the Prime Minister at the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology, where we had a number of fine apprentices who were there for the $2,000 completion grant, which is part of the red seal program that we have nation-wide, managed in Alberta by the provincial government and our apprenticeship board. The program starts July 1 of this year. Approximately 5,200 Alberta apprentices will complete their red seal, we believe, this year. That means that all of those applicants will be eligible for the grant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there's already a grant available for first- and second-year apprentices in red seal programs here in Alberta. How many apprentices have benefited from the program since it was introduced in 2006?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the confidence that is being shown by the companies in Alberta is absolutely tremendous. They continue to hire apprentices in our province. The apprenticeship incentive grant became effective in January of 2007, and from that point to February of 2009 approximately 80,000 – 80,000 – grants have been issued to all of the apprentices. That represents close to 33 per cent of all of the apprenticeship grants in Canada. It tells you the number of apprentices that we're training in this province. We are the engine of Canada's growth, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what are we doing in Alberta to help apprentices go to school and complete their training?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, over the past few years we have been, actually, ahead of the curve, if you will, in terms of what other jurisdictions are doing now in the sense that we have added a tremendous number of spaces to our postsecondary institutions because of the tremendous demand that the economy has had. We anticipate that there'll be tremendous demand on our postsecondary institutions because of some of the slowdown. Some of these students will want to come back to postsecondary. In fact, the Prime Minister today in his comments encouraged Alberta's young people or those who are looking at a second career to look to a first-class, world-class postsecondary system and come back to it. In our budget this year close to $200 million is actually going to be attributed to postsecondary apprenticeship training in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Special-needs Education Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After conducting a year of consultations, the Minister of Education's review of special-needs programming apparently has not revealed much about the needs of the most vulnerable of these children. The minister should know by now that children at risk are not getting the educational support from this administration that they deserve. Although the first two phases of the special education review have concluded, the only result to date has been to freeze funding for severe special-needs programming. To the minister: has the minister concluded that special-needs programming is adequately funded, that there is no more need for special needs?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chase: That's reassuring.

Considering that consultations are only meaningful if the views of Albertans are actually reflected in policy, what is the point of raising the hopes of parents whose children attend Calgary schools such as Emily Follensbee or Christine Meikle when the result is to freeze funding to these vulnerable populations?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we've been very open and transparent about the process that we're engaged in. In the fall of 2007 there was a review of special-needs student profiles across the province, and that review, as we've discussed in this House before, indicated a very high discrepancy between those files which qualified for funding and those files which were actually getting funding. There were more files being funded than qualified.

What it also, though, really set out was that there was a problem with the policy framework, and throwing more money into the formula wasn't going to fix the problem. So we engaged in the very thorough review, which I believe at the moment over 5,000 Albertans have participated in. That review is ongoing. There's a conference in June. I'll be getting advice from the steering committee shortly after that with respect to the policy framework, and we're going to get this right.

Mr. Chase: Part of getting it right is planning and budgeting. That money is desperately needed for special-needs children.

Since ESL programming will only see a 1 per cent increase yet over 91,000 individuals moved to Alberta last year, many of whom have English as a second language, is it the minister's policy to assume that these children should already be able to speak English? Is this minister taking a Jason Kenney approach?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would read the budget documents or, if he doesn't wish to, if he would call me, I would be able to alert him to the fact that the funding for ESL, like the funding for other students, is per capita, per student. As each of those students moves in, they get counted, and as they get counted, they get funded. The funding for the per-student grant went up 4.8 per cent, which covers the cost of teachers and the increase of the cost of teachers. As every new student is added to the student count, the funding is there.

Drinking Water Quality

Mr. Mitzel: Mr. Speaker, last week I met with a large group of community leaders from my constituency. They brought to my attention several important issues related to the provision of drinking water in their communities. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. The town of Redcliff, a community of 5,000 people, is struggling to meet constantly rising standards for drinking water with their existing plant. I agree that maintaining strict standards is absolutely critical to ensure that the health of Albertans is protected. To the minister: how can the town of Redcliff, like many other small communities around the province, meet the continually rising standards without some sort of adequate funding support?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely correct. The fact is that our drinking water standards are increasing over time, and I make no apologies for that. I don't think anyone does. Even the municipalities recognize the need to constantly be vigilant when it comes to drinking water standards. The fact does remain, though, that for small, isolated drinking water facilities, that does get more and more difficult, so we're encouraging the development of regional facilities. We're encouraging shared responsibility and partnerships among the operators of these facilities. I also want to point out that in the budget that was introduced yesterday, there is about $100 million that is available to help and assist in the development of some of these regional partnerships.

Mr. Mitzel: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. The minister indicated that regionalization of drinking water systems is a possible solution, but my understanding is that the price that would be charged to the town of Redcliff by the regional system operator is too high, higher than perhaps putting in a new plant. What is the minister doing to ensure that regional systems are affordable and cost-effective for these communities?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did mention that we do have funding, but I also want to be very clear that while $100 million a year is a substantial amount of money, it pales in comparison to the demand that's out there. Let's not be under any false illusions that somehow the problems are going to go away. It takes two to develop a partnership, and I do encourage not only the small operators, but more importantly I encourage the larger operators, that are pivotal in getting these partnerships going, to be reasonable and not take advantage of a situation.

Mr. Mitzel: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Cypress county, like many other municipalities in Alberta, is growing and as a result would like to acquire additional water licences. In the South Saskatchewan River basin no new licences are being issued by Alberta Environment. Cypress county contains many communities that are either too small or too far from a regional hub to make a regional system feasible. Could the minister tell us what he's doing to ensure that communities like Cypress county are able to acquire existing licences or portions of existing licences that are deemed not presently being used by existing leaseholders?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, therein lies the problem. If the licences are not currently being used, then transferring the licence doesn't really solve the problem of oversubscription to the water, does it? However, that being said, I should point out that there have been about 30 transfers that have taken place since the moratorium has been put in place. We're getting better at evaluating and determining whether or not these are, in fact, paper transfers or real water transfers. I'm confident that over the next months as we have the discussion on water allocation policy, these transfers will become more and more routine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Royalty Revenues

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The new royalty framework is immensely important to this government and to the economy of the whole province. It needs to strike the right balance between industry's share and the share that goes to Alberta. There was a clear target for the old royalty framework: 20 to 25 per cent of oil and gas wealth was to be collected by the Alberta government. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What's the target percentage for the new royalty framework?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would certainly agree wholeheartedly with the member opposite that the structure of royalties in the province of Alberta is extremely important for Albertans. I would say that implementing a proper royalty regime is about much more than energy revenues. The regime must ensure that the province remains an attractive place for investment. It must also create an economic spinoff opportunity and wealth generation in communities throughout the province.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, for two days now the minister has avoided committing to any performance measure on this issue. Without a performance measure Albertans are never going to know whose interests the royalty system is serving. To the same minister. Industry feels that they're getting ripped off by the new royalty framework. Has this government refused to publish the percentage take because industry is right?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's probably time that I should let Albertans and the rest of the House know – and I can't probably quote right now from my head verbatim what is stated in the business plan, but it very clearly says that that target is under review relative to the new royalty framework. It is under review, and it will be a target set out when the review is completed, as has been suggested to us by the Auditor General and by the Valentine report. That's the fact of the matter.

Dr. Taft: Well, good. Some progress. Thank you.

If there was one thing, even just one, that everybody seemed to agree on after the royalty review in 2007 – Peter Valentine, the Auditor General, the Hunter panel, the industry, the public – it was that there did need to be more accountability. This minister has said that he is conducting a review, and he has indicated that this performance measure will be made public. My question to him is: when? When will that review be made public?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, it will be made available to all the members of this House, to the public of the province of Alberta, and to the industry globally as soon as we're done with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Business Closure Protection

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone is aware of the recent world economic turmoil over the last few months. There have been quite a few stories that I've heard around my constituency, a lot of discussion about retailers all across North America going out of business. There are stories about some businesses closing their doors here in Alberta. In some cases it seems that those stores have closed suddenly, which leaves some customers who have paid for goods empty-handed, who don't have the products or services they paid for. My question is for the Minister of Service Alberta. What protections are in place, legislative or otherwise, for consumers who paid for merchandise only to find that the store has gone out of business?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are indeed a number of protections in place for consumers in this situation. For example, if someone did pay for their purchase with a credit card and did not receive any goods or services, they should contact their credit card company. In many cases the charges will be reversed. If the business has entered into bankruptcy, the consumer can contact the federal bankruptcy trustee. As well, if the business is licensed by Service Alberta and has provided monetary security, consumers may be able to file a claim through our ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, there are sometimes a lot of stories in the coffee shop. One person does lose money and doesn't receive their product or good, and by the time the story gets passed around, it's hundreds of people that have lost it. I'm wondering if the minister can explain how many people have called with actual concerns about losing money or how many actually have lost money so that we can gauge the reality of this situation.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this past year we've had 32 calls from Albertans all about store closures. Currently we are in the middle of two investigations involving business closures. Now, this may not seem like a significant number, but this is serious, and it's something we monitor very carefully, which is why we encourage consumers to contact us.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the same minister can lay out some of the exact situations where her department can and will help consumers who have found that they've paid for goods and haven't received the products or services.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Fair Trading Act there are protections in place. A retailer who is taking deposits for merchandise even though it knew or should have known it was closing or entering bankruptcy would be in violation of the Fair Trading Act. In this situation we do investigate. Charges may be laid against the company, and depending on the court proceedings, consumers can get their money back. In practice it can be very difficult to prove that a company deliberately misled a customer, but the protections are in place. Any consumer caught in this kind of situation, again, should contact Service Alberta so we can investigate under the Fair Trading Act.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses today.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's indeed my pleasure to introduce a councillor from my area. Mr. Dave Gamracy is a councillor from the county of Vermilion River. Actually, I'm very glad that they do occasionally show up and watch what goes on in here because hardly anybody would believe what we're subject to, and now I have a witness. I would ask Dave to stand and please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now we will return to the Routine.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to table five copies of the 2007 Alberta vital statistics annual review. The report is a summary of all vital events during the 2007 calendar year and contains information involving the births, stillbirths, marriages, deaths, adoptions, and changes of name that occurred in Alberta. This report is produced primarily to provide the public and health care related professionals with a resource document of provincial statistical data. Service Alberta will send the report to medical examiners, cancer boards, hospitals, health authorities, research clinics, medical associations, universities, colleges, funeral homes, and libraries.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Mason: On behalf.

The Speaker: Yes. Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I have two tablings. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the labour force survey published by Statistics Canada today. The survey shows that 15,000 jobs were lost in Alberta in March and that the unemployment rate in our province is now 5.8 per cent.

The second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate some residents had long waits before bells were answered, staff sometimes missed their breaks to try to keep up, and hazards were created when there was only one staff person available to lift patients where two staff were required.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter dated July 21, 2008, from our constituency office to the Chief Electoral Officer regarding the poll book for mobile polling station No. 075 in Edmonton-Gold Bar on March 3, 2008.

The second letter that I have to table today is dated July 29, 2008. It is a letter that I received at our constituency office from the Chief Electoral Officer regarding polling station No. 075 in Edmonton-Gold Bar on the March 3, 2008, election.

I also have a tabling today again from the United States Government Accountability Office, a report to congressional requesters dated September 2008. It is Oil and Gas Royalties: The Federal System for Collecting Oil and Gas Revenues Needs Comprehensive Reassessment. It's from the Government Accountability Office in the United States.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Minister Zwozdesky, Minister of Aboriginal Relations, First Nations development fund grant agreement, undated, unsigned, with attached blank project application, tabled during a policy field committee consideration of the estimates of the Department of Aboriginal Relations on April 8, 2009.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, responses to Written Question 1 and Written Question 3 asked for by Mr. Mason on April 6, 2009.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for the opportunity to ask the Government House Leader under Standing Order 7(6) to share with us the projected government business for the week commencing April 14.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Monday being Easter Monday, the 13th, our session resumes on the 14th of April. Under Government Bills and Orders, depending on progress today and depending on progress made through the week, we anticipate dealing with bills 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, and 19 in second reading; bills 4, 6, 7, and 9 in Committee of the Whole; bills 2, 3, 8, and 18 in third reading; and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, the 15th, depending on progress on Tuesday, we would anticipate dealing with bills 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, and 19 in second reading; Bill 10 in Committee of the Whole; bills 4, 6, 7, and 9 in third reading; and as per the Order Paper.

Ms Blakeman: Executive Council is in Committee of Supply next Wednesday.

Mr. Hancock: I am reminded that we are not doing that on Wednesday, the 15th. Actually, on Wednesday, the 15th, we're in Committee of Supply for Executive Council. Thank you for that.

So on Thursday we will be doing what I just read for Wednesday, the 15th.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to advise as well that I will be away next week.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee

11. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that a Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly be appointed consisting of the following members, namely Mr. Mitzel, chair; Mr. Lund, deputy chair; Mr. Bhullar; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Campbell; Mr. Horne; Mr. Lukaszuk; Mr. MacDonald; Mr. Marz; Ms Notley; and Mr. Webber, for the purpose of inviting applications for the position of Chief Electoral Officer and to recommend to the Assembly the applicant it considers most suitable to this position.

- (1) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most current Members' Services Committee allowances order.
- (2) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.
- (3) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department and of the staff employed by the Assembly.
- (4) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (5) When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This motion is brought forward after recommendation by the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices. Having been advised that the office of the Chief Electoral Officer is vacant, it's necessary to proceed to select a new Chief Electoral Officer. The committee that's being proposed is the same membership of that standing committee. It still leaves me to wonder that we need a special select committee when we have a Legislative Offices Committee that we should actually task to do the job, but I'm told that we need a special select committee to do the job. I would ask the Assembly to approve the motion and the membership of the committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, whenever we are discussing Government Motion 5.

Ms Blakeman: Eleven.

Mr. MacDonald: Eleven. Pardon me. Yes, my Costco glasses need cleaning, Mr. Speaker.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, Government Motion 11 certainly is interesting. I am of the view that it is unnecessary. I would rather have the former Chief Electoral Officer. I don't think he should have been let go. I think his contract should have been renewed, and he could carry on with the tasks that he started in his first term.

I was part of the previous committee, and I will serve again if this motion passes – and I can only assume that it will – on this special select committee to find a new Chief Electoral Officer. I would like to say that the former Chief Electoral Officer did a lot of good work. When we look at the recommendations, regardless of which report we refer to, the former Chief Electoral Officer had a lot of very good ideas about how to improve the election processes in this province.

Now, if we look, Mr. Speaker, at the current budget in the offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates for 2009-10, we will certainly see where there's money set aside for the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. Corporate services is $4.1 million, and for elections – I don't know whether we're having a by-election or not; I think this is routine – this time we have $465,000 set aside if there is to be a by-election in this fiscal year. So there is money set aside to operate the office.

Specifically to this motion and why it is unnecessary, I think the Chief Electoral Officer was blamed. He was fingered for many of the issues that are still surrounding the conduct of the last provincial election, which, of course, was held on March 3, 2008. There's a long list of issues, and I think those issues could have been addressed and many of them resolved if we had renewed the contract, as I said earlier, of Mr. Gibson and allowed him, along with the Legislative Offices Committee and members of this House, to implement the recommendations. There were good, solid recommendations on how to improve the voter turnout rates, the training of the various election officials, the timing, and who appoints the returning officers.

Everyone knows that it shouldn't be controlled by cabinet or by one respective minister of that cabinet. They should not be controlling the appointment of returning officers, and the enumeration process that follows the appointment of the returning officers has to be done well in advance – well in advance — of the date of the election.

The idea of having fixed election dates: now, our neighbour to the west, British Columbia, of course, is going to have an election in May, and it is a fixed election date there. [interjections] No, the B.C. elections are not fixed. I'm not so sure, hon. member, about other provinces and constituencies in other provinces. We'll probably get to that later.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please let's just stick to the motion that we have here, which has to do with appointing a Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee. That's the purpose of this. Either you're in favour of the committee or not in favour of the committee. That pretty much seems to me what the range of the debate is.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that guidance. I must say that members across the way were provoking me.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, to this motion and the need for striking this committee, there is really no need to strike this committee. As I said before, the gentleman, Mr. Gibson: his contract should have been renewed. I will clearly admit I was one of the ones after the election that had many questions about this Chief Electoral Officer and how things unfolded. But, again, if we had given this gentleman a chance to do what he had suggested needed to be done, this motion, Government Motion 11, would not be necessary.

Certainly, as all members of this Assembly know, the schedule of the committee work that is coming forward this spring is quite heavy. There's a lot of work to do.

Ms Blakeman: Is it inhumane?

Mr. MacDonald: I wouldn't call it inhumane, but it's a heavy workload, hon. member.

We are debating at this time striking a select special committee from Legislative Offices to hire another individual to operate this very, very important office. Who are we going to get? It is going to be interesting to see. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, when we do select an individual, their workload is going to be very heavy because, of course, we're looking next year at another boundaries commission and how the electoral map for this Assembly is going to be redrawn or if it's going to be changed at all. But that is another matter. That's one job that this individual is going to be tasked with almost immediately upon his or her selection.

If we had given Mr. Gibson another term to implement the recommendations not only for the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act but for the Election Act itself, who knows? Perhaps, hon. members, we would have a fixed election date in this province. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is probably going to have something to say about that.

There are many things that we sometimes overlook. When we look at the outcome of the provincial election and the long list of issues that unfolded, those issues were articulated by hon. members from both sides of the House at the public meetings that were held with the Legislative Offices Committee regarding the renewing or the extension, whatever word you want to use, of the contract of Mr. Gibson. Now, it's all there in the public record, Mr. Speaker, what was said and by whom.

In conclusion, I will remind the House that if I have an opportunity, I will work hard on this committee. If this Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee is struck and I'm a member of it, I will be watching the process, and I will be thinking of how this is going to work and what that individual, he or she, will do to improve our system.

Our system needs to be improved. We only have to look at the work that the former Chief Electoral Officer put into the issue of finances and contributions and what should or should not be done in the enforcement, Mr. Speaker, of some of our rules and our regulations, our laws surrounding contributions. There is a long list. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has brought that up in question period. The Chief Electoral Officer had one direction he wanted to pursue. Of course, that didn't happen. For some reason many of those matters were delayed or stopped by Alberta Justice. Now, hopefully that's not going to continue under the leadership of the successful applicant to become the Chief Electoral Officer.

There is a lot of work that needs to be done by this individual when they are selected. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly and citizens from across the province to follow this process very, very closely. This is a very important office, and we have to show support not only to the office of Elections Alberta but to the Chief Electoral Officer, whoever is eventually selected.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Other members to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against this motion. I think we, first of all, need to realize that this is a very, very unusual circumstance. I'm not sure that it's unprecedented in Canadian history, but it is very close, from my consultations on this. When I say that, what I mean is that we are in this position because we, the Leg. Offices Committee, refused to renew the contract of the Chief Electoral Officer. That is a very unusual circumstance. Typically if the Chief Electoral Officer wants to continue, the person is given a second job. In fact, there are jurisdictions in Canada where a second term is virtually guaranteed.

There was one interesting case in British Columbia a number of years ago where an extension of a term was not renewed, and it ended up in the courts, Mr. Speaker. There was a particular legal ruling made which was, I believe, a bit of a precedent. Instead of it being called constructive dismissal, it was called constructive nonrenewal.

I wouldn't have been surprised if Mr. Gibson had in fact taken this issue to court. I don't know and I will never know how this departure was managed. I want to make the point that we are in this position because of very regrettable circumstances. It's a very, very unusual situation. I think we have a choice. We have at least two choices here other than this motion.

I think it's important for us to understand how we got into this situation. Mr. Gibson was hired with considerable enthusiasm by the committee, was recommended after a proper search, and was given a mandate. He looked to all to be off to a great start. He took on a challenge and delivered on an initial challenge, which was to review the electoral system in Alberta and to make recommendations for its improvement. And he made those. He made a large number of recommendations. I forget the exact figure, but it was a significant number. It covered all kinds of things like setting fixed election dates, which I think is a good idea. It included a new procedure for appointing local returning officers and on and on and on. It was basically a whole cleaning up of what has become a pretty decayed electoral mechanism in Alberta. He put forward those recommendations in his report in ample time before the last general election, in fact well over a year in advance.

Every single one of them, Mr. Speaker, was ignored, every single one of them. I think that that speaks volumes to this government's disinterest in cleaning up the electoral process. We had an independent officer of this Legislature give us very serious written advice on cleaning up the elections system, and this government completely ignored it.

So the predictable sorts of things began to happen. That creaky, old election system began to fall apart because it wasn't repaired. Very obvious issues arose; for example – and this is one that got some attention – delays in appointing the local returning officers. The Chief Electoral Officer made repeated requests to the government to get the local returning officers appointed, to get the lists of names so that he could go ahead and approach these people who are, as we all know, those people who run the local elections, and there were delays and delays and all kinds of problems. Ultimately, in what is, in my view, frankly, a kind of Third World standard, he ended up dealing with a political party, with the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, to get a list of candidates to be local returning officers. That's simply wrong, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter of public record, but it's simply wrong. We should not have any political party handing over lists of candidates to fill the positions of returning officers.

At that point, of course, he was desperate because it was only months before the rumoured election. He began approaching these people, and he found that there were all kinds of problems with them, so there were further delays. In many cases, when all was said and done, Mr. Speaker, the local returning officers were not appointed until weeks and in some cases days before the writ was dropped. As a result of that and many other issues, there were serious problems with the elections process. I certainly experienced those in my constituency; I imagine we all did. Enormous lineups at polling stations; shortages of staff to work the polls; serious, serious problems with the electors list. On and on and on it went.

Then there was an immense outpouring of frustration. We received a very large number of complaints verbal and written. We compiled a large three-ring binder of those complaints, some of which were extremely serious, things like ballot boxes being opened in the middle of election day by returning officers, written complaints of witnesses saying this kind of thing – that's clearly wrong, Mr. Speaker – all kinds of other issues like that.

Whether this issue of what happened in the last election is dead or not, time will tell. But I can tell you that we're in this situation debating this motion today because rather than addressing the problems the Chief Electoral Officer raised, this government chose to shoot the messenger, Mr. Speaker, and I think that was a serious and regrettable mistake. Problems in the electoral system were exposed, solutions were proposed, the solutions were overruled, and the person who identified those problems and proposed the solutions basically had the term of their job not renewed. As I said, there is a legal term called constructive nonrenewal which may well have applied here.

To this motion, Mr. Speaker. I don't need to repeat the motion; it's a long one. I think there are two better options, myself, and that's why I'm opposing this motion. The first would be to return to Mr. Gibson and offer him the position back and give him the mandate and the leeway and the resources to actually implement the solutions that he proposed to fix up the creaky, old election machinery in Alberta. Now, that's not going to happen. I'm not sure he would take the job, and I wouldn't blame him if he didn't. But I think it would be worth a try.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, if I had thought that it would work and pass, I would have otherwise proposed an amendment to this motion, which would be to add to this motion a clause giving the new Chief Electoral Officer the mandate and the resources to enact the recommendations proposed by Mr. Gibson, the previous Chief Electoral Officer, so that we at least make a gesture at cleaning up such a failing, rotten, old system. That's not in here.

My fear, if this passes as it is, is that, first of all, the well has been poisoned. I don't know what qualified person, what top-notch electoral officer, is going to apply for a job which has been so badly damaged. As I said, I know this is a national issue in this community because I've spoken to members of this community across the country, and they were shocked and appalled at what happened to Mr. Gibson. They were dismayed at the culture around the election in Alberta, and they don't have confidence that it's going to be fixed. So the well may well be poisoned. We'll find somebody, but will that person have the abilities we need to clean up this system? I'm not at all confident of that, Mr. Speaker.

The second concern I have is that even if we get a really good person, there's no sign of any will whatsoever on the part of this government to fix the fundamental problems that led us into needing this motion in the first place. We've had a few brief comments from the Premier about allowing the Chief Electoral Officer to appoint returning officers, but when he has been pressed on it, he has backed off immediately. We've had a couple of brief comments from the Premier on the next election date, but when he is pressed on it, he has backed off immediately.

The funding to at least bring this office up to the sort of resource standards that are normal in other provinces was held back. Every sign is that there's no interest whatsoever on the part of this government to clean up the system. So we've damaged our reputation, we've poisoned the well with the pool of potential applicants, and we've shown no inclination whatsoever to bring this voting system into the 21st century.

I think this is the wrong approach. I think we need to illustrate to the new candidate that we're serious about cleaning this up. This motion doesn't do it. I'm opposed to it. I think it's a bad way to proceed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Others to participate? This is a debatable motion. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this motion. As already discussed, this seems like a procedural motion, but of course it's attached to something which is the fundamental foundation of all that we do here. It is attached to a process which gives our being here every day the legitimacy and the mandate to do what we do not only in this Assembly but also in terms of what we do for the people of the province with our legislative authority.

The very, very fundamental, foundational piece of that is the electoral process through which we get here. Of course, this motion is attached to how we establish a mechanism of oversight and administration of that electoral process. It must be a process of oversight and administration which is completely objective and without undue influence in the eyes of Albertans. For it to be anything other than that is, unfortunately, to, as I say, undermine everything that comes after that, everything that we do here. That's why I am concerned about this.

I mean, we talked about and there has been a lot of discussion about why the Chief Electoral Officer's contract or term of his position as an officer of this Legislature was not renewed. Of course, we talked about the problems of the last election, which of course have been fully canvassed. We had, you know, an embarrassing – embarrassing – turnout in our last election. There are countries which are just coming out of dictatorship mode who are having their first elections who have higher electoral turnouts than what we had in that last election, and there were a lot of reasons for it.

There is no question that one of the reasons for it was the failure of the government to fix the process through which those key players were able to be put in place to administer and oversee the election, that being the returning officers. That process was fundamentally broken. It was broken in that the names for that had historically come through the government, and it was broken in that that process was not ever properly fixed, so it was broken so that the wrong people were being appointed way, way, way too late.

Then, as a result, we had a debacle of an election process that I think all members of this House can agree created many, many problems. Of course, that problem was something that was identified by the former Chief Electoral Officer, an officer of this Legislature responsible not to the government but to each individual member of this Assembly. Unfortunately, when that problem was identified, it was identified in a very sensitive pre-election period, and it was unfortunately a requirement of the Chief Electoral Officer to identify the primary source of that problem, that being the Premier, who was at the time running for re-election. Now, that shouldn't be a problem because he was an officer of this Assembly, and regardless of the political considerations, he should have been completely free to raise those issues in a way that would fix the system upon which we all rely in a way that is objective and neutral and protected from interference and influence. So that's what he tried to do. It didn't work, unfortunately, so we had the problems we had.

In addition to that, of course, other problems were also identified by this Chief Electoral Officer. He, of course, as I mentioned, had identified the process of appointing deputy returning officers. He had also identified a number of matters that should have been prosecuted and were not followed up. I believe there were 19 of them. He also made recommendations with respect to penalty provisions within the act to more appropriately hold responsible candidates who received money from illegal sources. He made recommendations for overall financial reform. Again, the electoral financing process in the province of Alberta is very, very, you know, wild, wild-westesque, I would say, in comparison to most other jurisdictions, which have much more comprehensive rules for accountability in terms of electoral financing.

So he made those proposals, and lo and behold he did that just a few months before his contract was up for renewal. I suppose, you know, he thought he was doing the job that, in his view, was the job that all Assembly members needed to have done. But then we came to the committee, and the vote is a matter of record. All members that happen to be members of the government party voted against his reappointment, and all opposition members voted for it. The result of that has been a significant undermining of the faith that Albertans and other parliamentarians across the country have in the system that we have.

Now we are here with this motion. The motion, once again, sets up the standard search committee. The standard search committee happens to, coincidentally, consist of a majority of members who are members of the government caucus. Frankly, I would think that if I were in government, I would want to try to clean up my reputation on this, I would want to try to heal the black eye that this province has sustained through this event, and I would want, as a result, to appoint a committee that was equally represented by both opposition and government members. Say what you will, we know that in the past there has been a voting pattern. So justice must not only be done, it must be seen to be done. It must be expected to be done. If the past is any predictor, Albertans have a real need to be concerned about what the outcome will be from a committee that is, again, dominated by government members.

It's for that reason that I can't support this motion, because I don't believe that the committee is constructed in a way to best assure the faith of Albertans in the objectivity and neutrality with which it will do its job. I believe that given what has happened in the last year with respect to the Chief Electoral Officer and the role of that officer of the Legislature, we need to assure Albertans that we are going to do better.

I'm very concerned – and I've made this statement before – that this event that occurred in the last year or, I guess, over the course of 16, 18 months with respect to the Chief Electoral Officer has had a chilling effect on the sense of independence and security experienced by other officers who are accountable to all members of this Legislature. I can't blame them for that based on what has happened on the public record.

I suspect that it's too late to undo what has happened with the previous Chief Electoral Officer. But I would like to see members of this Assembly move forward in a way that is designed to change the practices of the past and to assure Albertans that a new book is being opened, a new page is being turned, and a new commitment to assuring true objectivity is demonstrated. Unfortunately, I don't see that that is demonstrated in the motion that we have before us. For that reason, I can't vote in favour of it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

Shall I call on the hon. Government House Leader to close the debate?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, interesting. The province is without a Chief Electoral Officer at the moment. It's not in my hands to revisit the discussion that the standing committee had before they determined not to renew the Chief Electoral Officer's term. The fact of the matter is that that term was not renewed, and we don't have a Chief Electoral Officer. Therefore, I would presume that every member of the House would want to pass a motion to set up a committee to hire a new Chief Electoral Officer and to make a recommendation of same to the Legislative Assembly. I'm entirely surprised that opposition members, who purport to believe in democracy, would not want an independent Chief Electoral Officer.

However, there are just a couple of things that I'd like to comment on in this process. There have been suggestions or allegations that for some reason the committee perhaps didn't renew the Chief Electoral Officer's term because of his report. I think there's no connection between the two that I can discern. I find that that kind of statement should not go unchallenged on the public record. What is on the public record – and these are not my words, but rather the words of the former Leader of the Official Opposition in Hansard from the Standing Committee on Leg. Offices, July 29, 2008:

Yes. I just wanted to inform the committee formally in the minutes that I have asked the Auditor General to investigate the operations of the Chief Electoral Officer in relation to the conduct of the last election. As this committee is the committee to whom both the Auditor General and the Chief Electoral Officer report, I thought I should just put that on the record. It's been in the media and elsewhere, so people probably know about it. That's a step I've taken, and it's based on very widespread concerns about the operation of the election in this preceding March.

Those are the words of the former Leader of the Official Opposition, Edmonton-Riverview, a person who today talked about being so disappointed that this motion was going forward and that we're appointing a new Chief Electoral Officer.

In fact, what was he affirming that was in the media? Well, what he was affirming were comments that are quoted on the editorial page of the Calgary Herald on Wednesday, July 9, 2008.

Yet, such was the chaos on March 3, that Liberal leader Kevin Taft has called for the provincial auditor general to look into it. He called it “the worst-run election ever.” The Herald having recently made it’s own assessment, has no reason to disagree.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I’m not going to get into commenting on whether the Chief Electoral Officer did his job or not. That is the role of the standing committee of the House. They did their job. They determined that the contract should not be renewed. There’s a provision in the act which calls for the term of the Chief Electoral Officer to expire one year post an election unless it’s renewed. That happened. We have a vacancy in the office. I’m not sure why it happened. I’m not a member of the committee. But I can clearly understand what the Leader of the Official Opposition was saying publicly a year ago and during the course of the last year about the last election, so far be it from me to contradict the former Leader of the Official Opposition in terms of his viewpoint.

But, really, that’s not germane to the motion at hand. The motion at hand is about: should we have a committee?

Ms Blakeman: Then why did you bring it up?

Mr. Hancock: The Member for Edmonton-Centre says, “Why did you bring it up?” I bring it up because every speaker on the opposition side to this motion today dealt with everything but the motion and put on the record of this House things which were not germane to the motion but needed to be put into a proper context, so I’m putting it into that context.

I would ask members of the House to approve this motion because we do need a Chief Electoral Officer in this province, we do need an independent process – democracy depends on it – and you should join us in voting for it.

The Speaker: I will put the question to the House, but prior to that I’ll ask the Government House Leader to slap himself on the wrist for violating the rules of the House.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 18

Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It’s certainly my pleasure to stand and request third reading of Bill 18, the Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

In this particular case, Mr. Speaker, there’s no doubt we’ve had a good, healthy debate, and I’d like to thank the hon. members for their interest and participation. I hope that as a result of the debate, there has been some further insight and answers provided to questions that have been raised.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, TILMA, has been around for some time now, and this particular bill really is pretty much a cleanup to a process that started formally a couple of years ago. There was Bill 1 of last year, and Bill 18 is this year’s bill, which is essentially nuts and bolts legislation that amends some 11 acts. Many of those amendments deal with jurisdictional provisions like residency requirements. Alberta and B.C. agreed under TILMA that residents of both provinces would be treated equally. Just because someone happened to reside in one province, they would not be barred from accessing opportunities in the other.

It is actually very clear today to those from outside of our province and most of those within our province that TILMA is groundbreaking because it is going to help Albertans and Alberta companies during this current global economic slowdown. Teachers, nurses, welders, accountants, to name only a few, are now going to be able to work in either province without having to comply with additional unnecessary requirements. In fact, as of April 1 of this year more than 100 regulated occupations and professions gained full labour mobility between Alberta and British Columbia. As well, Mr. Speaker, under TILMA businesses will have improved processes for registration and reporting, and regulations between the two provinces will be streamlined so that we are even more effective and productive.

TILMA has already served as a model for improving the pan-Canadian agreement on internal trade, labour mobility, and dispute resolution chapters. That occurred formally last December at a meeting of ministers in Ottawa and is currently being rolled out across the country by individual provinces. It was also a catalyst for an arrangement between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, which recently signed an agreement to remove provincial trade barriers.

I can tell you that it was also a catalyst for Quebec and Ontario to commence discussions that sounded TILMA-like. When I last chatted with the ministers responsible, I was led to believe that some time this year we would hear more about that. I indicated to them that I was looking forward to the opportunity to see what they had done because it was always possible that Alberta would like to join in their good work.

It was just last month, Mr. Speaker, at an unprecedented tripartite – Saskatchewan, B.C., Alberta – joint cabinet meeting that there was a commitment by our respective Premiers to pursuing a western economic partnership to continue to reduce barriers and improve trade among the three most western provinces.

The essence of all of this work, Mr. Speaker, is that Albertans are going to receive a dramatic benefit at exactly the right time. I would ask all members of this Assembly to support Bill 18 in third reading.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s a privilege once again to rise on this particular bill. I listened to the minister’s remarks, and clearly we understand that no matter what we say here, this bill is going to pass. There has been a vigorous debate, as the minister said, and at times an unusually interesting debate. A point of privilege, I believe, was brought on this and other things. It’s been healthy. I believe debate is good for bringing out new angles and new concerns, and there have been concerns expressed around this piece of legislation.

I also think that it’s worth noting that in principle co-operation between the provinces is something that I support and that in principle there are some good ideas about breaking down trade barriers and improving standards across the country. This is, in fact, something that’s going on globally. I mean, the news today is filled with information that Alberta’s standards on carbon emissions are probably going to be in effect set from Washington. My point in raising that is simply that there is a global process of integration going on.

We can look at TILMA as part of that process. Inherently it's not a bad process. The devil's always in the details, and the reason that we've debated vigorously on this is that we've been concerned with some of the details.

Frankly, we've been concerned with some of the process as well. Before this round of debate there hadn't been, in our view, adequate debates around TILMA. The initial negotiations and signing were done before there was any legislative debate in this province, which was different from what I understand occurred in British Columbia.

If we are moving in this direction and since this bill is going to pass, I'd like to reflect on some other things that we may want to address in the spirit of co-ordinating and standardizing and getting in sync with the rest of the world. I actually spent last weekend in Vancouver, and I was immediately struck by some things that I thought: gee, I wish we could line those up with Alberta. One of the first was just stepping out of the airport, hailing a taxi, and realizing that virtually every taxi in Vancouver is a hybrid. Immediately you get the impression from that that this is a society, out in B.C., that's wanting to adapt to change, not resist it. It's very different, of course, hailing a taxi in Alberta. I thought right away: gee, there's something that Alberta could learn.

I was reminded, actually – I think it's something we should all remember in these days of rapid change – of Darwin's observation in On the Origin of Species. I can't quote it verbatim, but it was to the effect that it is not to the strongest or the fastest or the fittest that survival occurs; it is to the species that adapts most readily. I have to say that I think that in some ways we need to incorporate an attitude of adapting to change a little more quickly in Alberta than we have. That might be something we could import from B.C.

In Vancouver, again, I was looking at building standards as I walked about. I spent a lot of time walking in Vancouver on the weekend. They're opening a massive new convention centre, and the building standards there were such that it has the largest turf roof in the country, if not on the continent. They're doing that as part of an environmental standard. There's a building being opened very shortly on the UBC campus which will probably be the most energy efficient large building on the planet, certainly in the country.

I find myself, then, wondering, well, if we are embracing interprovincial standards and if we are trying to bring ourselves into line with other jurisdictions, why don't we look at some of those things? Why don't we look at environmental standards? B.C. has vehicle emission standards. Why don't we adopt those? If B.C. has better building standards, why don't we adopt those? If they have better standards in other areas, why don't we adopt those? That, of course, brings me to the issue of farm safety, where B.C. has significantly better standards than Alberta. In fact, Alberta doesn't just trail B.C.; it trails the whole country.

If we're embracing interprovincial co-ordination and standardization, which I think is a great idea in principle, then let's not just do it in a cherry-picking fashion. Let's set ourselves some challenges. Let's try to meet some standards that make us uncomfortable, make us stretch a bit. That would include things like vehicle emissions, energy efficiency, building codes, farm safety, worker safety, in fact labour rights generally. Maybe we'll get, you know, TILMA the sequel, that will address some of those issues, Mr. Speaker. That would be something to get really excited about.

The last point I will make as we compare between Alberta and B.C. is that if you look at provincial expenditures per capita, B.C. delivers all of their services, which include wonderful highways, ferry service, great provincial parks – Vancouver General hospital, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is outstanding – a pharmacare program, environmental standards, for a dollar. The Alberta government spends $1.28 to deliver in many cases standards that are barely equal to and too often weaker than B.C.'s. I think there are some lessons to be learned from B.C. in terms of just government efficiency.

I would urge this government, if it's pursuing TILMA, to genuinely look at the whole spectrum of opportunities to learn from and co-ordinate with British Columbia. Certainly, they have things they could learn from us; we have a lot we could learn from them.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think I've participated in every stage of debate on this bill, and I have, clearly, some pretty strong feelings about it. I've listened carefully to the rest of my colleagues, and I appreciate the points made by the previous speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. He's putting a positive spin on this, that we could look at this as an opportunity to try to put some things in place across both provinces that would be seen as an improvement in many ways.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is fundamentally wrong, and I think it's wrong of this Legislative Assembly to support this bill. I think it's wrong because it is inappropriate for a Legislative Assembly to knowingly, willingly abdicate its responsibility to a lesser level. In this case, what is contemplated in this act is that by the passage of Bill 18 the Legislative Assembly would abdicate its ability to be the sole area where changes could be made – so what is made by the Assembly has to be unmade or changed by the Assembly – and that's what would be passed here. That's what the effect of this bill will be, that the bill abdicates the power to cabinet, to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, to be able to change legislation.

The government is very quick to say: "Oh, come on, now. Come on, now. Just trust us. Trust us. We're not going to abuse this power, but we need it in order to make all of our laws comply with the deadlines in order to not fall afoul of the regulations and standards that are in TILMA." My understanding was that there was an April 1 deadline date when all of this was to happen.

I guess I have a couple of responses to that. One, this is arguably the most powerful governing body in the country. It has 72 members. This is a one-party state. This Assembly can do anything it wants. It always gets the vote. We even have examples of where, you know, cabinet ministers are directing all-party committees on how they're supposed to behave. We had that happen at Leg. Offices, where the Treasury Board president directed the chair of that committee that the raises that were requested by various legislative officers were to be curtailed to a certain amount as dictated by the President of the Treasury Board. That's all a matter of public record.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We have an enormously powerful one-party state, which I think is very problematic because it takes those checks and balances off of things. I am seeing this as a slippery slope. These Henry VIII clauses, as they're called, have been used in the past, and they have been challenged in court, and they have been upheld. But they have been used in the past at times of extreme crisis, let me call it that. Civil insurrection, you know, world wars: I mean big stuff, not a business contract, which is essentially what we're looking at with TILMA.

But this is the problem. Everybody was able to come back to me and others that protested this and say: "You know what? This has been done before. There's precedent. Don't worry about it. It's fine." Well, there is precedent. It was used previously for circumstances where because of enormous upheaval or unrest that abdication was allowed to happen. We've taken a big step down, and now we're saying: "Well, it's okay. We'll abdicate our responsibility here to scrutinize on behalf of citizens. We'll abdicate that to cabinet in the case of an agreement on trade." We've gone from world wars to an agreement on trade as an acceptable reason by the government members in this House to abdicate their responsibility. I can't support that because I think what's at the base of this for me is that it's clearing democracy out of the way for a profit motive. It's saying: we're going to abdicate our responsibility as democratic workers here for a profit motive. To me that's just not good enough.

I find fault too many times with a government that chooses to uphold and facilitate and reward and enable the business sector as though it were the only one worthy. Frankly, half of our population is employed in the public sector, but you don't see them getting the same respect or the same support as what is given to the corporate sector. I don't feel I need to speak on behalf of the corporate sector because they do pretty darn well. That's part of my point. I think that they are given . . . [interjection] Well, there's somebody muttering over there, so I'm sure they'll be glad to get in on the debate as soon as I'm finished. If you feel that strongly, get up and put it on the record; don't heckle me from behind your hand.

What I see the effect of this bill being is that a B.C. businessperson is going to have more rights and protection in certain cases than an Albertan, and this Assembly, people that represent Alberta citizens, has said: that's okay. That's not okay with me. I think that's wrong. I think we're paid – and not too badly paid; it's not too shabby – to be here to represent the best interests of our constituents, and I don't think that compromising democracy is in the best interests of our citizens. Does that mean that I'm antibusiness? No, it doesn't. I'm very grateful for the very clever businesspeople and entrepreneurs that exist in my riding and work throughout Alberta and through the rest of Canada. They bring us products that we wish to purchase. They employ people. They're an economic driver, but they're not the only economic driver, and I think we need to work harder to balance that.

This government has taken a lot of criticism, and I think appropriately so, for the choices it has made around how it facilitates the oil sands, for example, and the kinds of tax regimes that are put in place so that that sector can flourish. Yes, the oil sands do employ a number of people in this province, and the money does trickle out somewhat, not as much as they'd like me to believe, to citizens. But were they given a number of advantages? Indeed.

On the other side of that, we have the not-for-profit sector in this province, which provides a lot of programs and services that people need and want that make this a better province to live in, that help us attract professional, knowledge-based workers to come from other places and settle here. I was told the other day by somebody in the department of health that the single-biggest problem they have in convincing professional experts to come from other places is that they don't think there's any culture here in Alberta and that they've got to be encouraged to have a look at the Winspear and the Citadel and the Epcor Centre and the Calgary Philharmonic and the Edmonton Opera and understand that we offer all of those things here and that we have a lot of them and that we're very good at it. But isn't that interesting? That's a sector that doesn't get the same kind of support as we are willing to give the corporate sector, yet it's the selling point. It's the final thing that gets the signature on that contract to bring the very people to us that are going to help make us all rich and famous.

I think this is a diminishment of this House, and it's a diminishment of the equality of all of the members of this House. So often I'm told by this government: "Just trust us. You know, really, we know what we're doing. You're raising all of these objections, and really it doesn't amount to a hill of beans. Just trust us. We'll take care of all of this." But you know what? When I look around, I don't see the reason to give that trust.

I think that the members that are appointed to cabinet have extra jobs. They may and should be the best and brightest from the government caucus, but frankly that does not make them gods. That is part of the equality of the members of this House. They are not omnipotent.

Mr. MacDonald: One or two of them must fit into that category.

Ms Blakeman: No. None of them. Sorry.

There are certain times where the Greeks can give us some very good lessons, and the lesson of hubris is one that this government consistently fails to learn. But that is, again, what's being contemplated in this because that power is being given to those members. Why the backbenchers here would knowingly give that power over there, I don't know. They must be hoping they're going to move to the other side. But you know what, guys? Most of you won't. And you will have abdicated your ability as a member of this House over to the other side, where you are never going to be.

I look again for examples of how I could trust them that this is all going to work out so well. Well, I can't. You know, I talked about the not-for-profit sector, and I should complete that analogy. Here we have the Wild Rose Foundation, which was, I'll admit, not completely nonpartisan, but it had operated fairly well with an appointed board for some 25 years. It had the respect of the community, and without one bit of consultation it was wiped out and rolled inside of the department to become even more of a partisan-driven, lottery-grant handout. I was joking, but I was serious yesterday in question period when I talked about the advantageous timing for government members to have these big cartoon cheques, that are the size of a door, for their photo op, to hand them out. But that's a perversion of a process, and I'm seeing the same thing involved in what's being contemplated here.

Mr. MacDonald: Have you been at one of those cheque presentations?

Ms Blakeman: No, I have never been at one of those cheque presentations. I've never been asked. The government loves to point out that the constituency of Edmonton-Centre is home to grand institutions like the Winspear Centre or the Citadel or the Art Gallery of Alberta. True enough, but they certainly didn't invite me to the cheque presentation. They didn't let me know about that one. I wasn't in the photo op. I didn't have the big cartoon cheque. No surprise there.

What I'm seeing in this agreement is the outcome of a one-party state. I think there's too much power that this cabinet is taking upon itself. I don't see a balance in it. I don't see a way to curtail that power. I think this is a slippery slope. We have slid to this point. What's next? That's the last piece, all of this: "Trust us. That will be okay. We will manage this on your behalf. This will all be great." But I say: "What's next? Where does the slippery slope take us next?" Where members of this Assembly will be asked to abdicate their responsibility and their democratic power to the cabinet to be able to make decisions on, what next?

The very principles of this bill I spoke against in second reading.

I spoke in support of some amendments and against some others. I actually wrote one of the amendments. They were defeated while we were in Committee of the Whole. As I speak to the anticipated effect of the bill in third reading, I cannot support it, and I have not heard arguments from the government side that have made me change my mind, clearly.

Now, I think there will be some people who will be advantaged by this, no question, and I hope that we will see an advantage from some things like a green economy. We'd get some of the good things from B.C., where they are better than us on things like a greener economy, on some of their labour laws and protections, but overall I cannot support this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes of questions and comment. Any members?

Seeing none, I would like to ask for unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests before I recognize another member.

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and all the members of the Assembly for allowing me to introduce to you and through you my very special family members: my wife, Kamal Sandhu, along with my beautiful daughter Neetu – she's pursuing second-year nursing at the University of Alberta – and my younger son, Deep Sandhu, also my sister-in-law Manpreet Sandhu.

While we're debating about TILMA, Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome my nephew Rocky Sandhu – he's working at nursing in B.C. – and his wife, Gurpreet Sandhu, who are visiting from Maple Ridge, B.C. They came here to spend time with us to know about beautiful Alberta.

I'm very proud they were able to come to visit our Assembly. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Trade, Investment and Labour Mobility Agreement Implementation Statutes Amendment Act, 2009 (continued)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise again and speak to this bill, which I believe I've spoken to a couple of times now. It's really unfortunate, as I've stated before, that it's not a bill that I support in any way, shape, or form. This is a bill, of course, that's designed to facilitate and act as a vehicle for the implementation of the TILMA agreement. I'm going to try and focus my remarks on two general areas: one, the TILMA agreement, and two, that part of this particular bill which, of course, has received some attention in the House already and which I believe represents a gross delegation of authority on the part of this Assembly should we choose to go ahead and pass this piece of legislation.

On the issue of TILMA itself, you know, one might say: well, this bill just enables TILMA, and you should simply limit your debate to the mechanisms of enabling it. But, of course, the problem is that we don't get to debate the substance of TILMA because the substance of TILMA has never come before this House for debate. We've never been given the opportunity to look at the agreement to determine what parts of the agreement are in the best interests of Alberta and what parts are not. We're told: "Take it or leave it. Either you support trade or you're antibusiness. It's one or the other." Heaven forbid that you actually look at elements of the agreement and determine whether there are parts of it that go too far or don't go far enough. I mean, that's something that is clearly beyond the capacity of the silly little heads inside this Assembly.

Nonetheless, I think that is an error on the part of the government and that, in fact, for TILMA to get support, the process through which it was reached needs to be completely revisited.

Basically, what's TILMA for? We're told by the government that they had to undertake the agreement with B.C. because the agreement on internal trade, to which all provinces are parties, has proven ineffectual at removing trade barriers. As far as I was able to tell last year, the provinces were actually able to reach an agreement to an amendment to the AIT in order to improve labour mobility in Canada, yet somehow that happened without necessarily having to go to TILMA.

So what barriers actually exist between Alberta and B.C.? The website for the agreement on internal trade shows that since the AIT came into force in 1995, three complaints have been filed concerning trade or labour mobility between Alberta and B.C. One of those complaints was resolved by a simple exchange of information between the parties, another complaint was dropped, and the third became inactive. Clearly, you know, business is burning up the phone lines with the way in which they're oppressed by the outrageous, insoluble barriers between Alberta and B.C.

Now, I would suggest, of course, that it's a myth that trade between provinces is restricted by any array of trade barriers and that there's really no evidence of that. Research conducted for the 1985 Macdonald commission concluded that interprovincial barriers cost no more than .05 per cent of the gross domestic product at the time, and relative to distance and market size Canadian provinces are far more likely to trade with each other than with American states. Since 2000 interprovincial trade has actually been growing much faster than Canada's international trade.

There was a Conference Board of Canada study that was commissioned by the B.C. government to support their claim that TILMA was very, very necessary and to suggest that TILMA would add $4.8 billion to the province's economy. Unfortunately, almost as soon as that study was released, it was very quickly challenged and shown to be very faulty. For instance, the study made no attempt to list or estimate the cost of the particular barriers between the provinces. They didn't use standard economic measurement techniques. The Conference Board, instead, relied on a very tiny survey of a couple of business organizations.

Then through a simple arithmetic error the Conference Board study doubled the estimates of the TILMA benefits. Even after correcting the error, most of the so-called projected gains in that study were from industries exempt from the final agreement or from industries that barely engage in interprovincial trade. All in all, that particular study was not very convincing, and it demonstrated, to me anyway, that TILMA is really a solution in search of a problem. What TILMA does do, however, is provide a vehicle for private corporations to assert their jurisdiction and their authority over the public interest, which is otherwise reflected through acts passed in this Assembly or the Assembly in B.C., and it does that through the dispute resolution process. Failure to comply with orders of the dispute resolution panel would result in the province paying a monetary penalty of up to $5 million, potentially over and over and over again. That's not even clear.

Do we really need a quasi-judicial panel which can be triggered by a whole slew of other organizations to impose penalties on us for legislation that we have passed? Isn't that a bit like using a sledgehammer to swat flies? Basically, by giving trade issues precedence over other issues of public interest and by giving complainants the power to sue ourselves, we are giving other people the power to sue us for more stuff. When did anybody think that was a good idea? You know, this government always talks about how they are such brilliant businesspeople. What business owner would voluntarily give to other people more grounds on which they could be sued? I don't get it.

Nonetheless, by doing that, what we do is create a bill of rights, essentially, for corporations, similar to chapter 11 of the North America free trade agreement. You know, I just don't obviously see the point of that. It's interesting. With respect to that dispute resolution panel a former international and intergovernmental affairs minister was quoted at a Chamber of Commerce meeting in Richmond saying to those people: yes, this agreement gives Canadian business everything it's ever asked for. That's great, but, you know, there are a few more stakeholders, I would suggest, to which this Assembly needs to be responsible.

Now, of course, there have also been some legal opinions that have been floating around with respect to TILMA, which we've outlined in the past, and I won't get into them again. Suffice it to say that the agreement itself is open to a number of different legal challenges.

The primary problem with this specific bill that I want to talk about in the remaining time that I have is, of course, that part which gives to the minister of international and intergovernmental affairs the ability to write regulations that would overrule anything that we have done or things that we might do in the future in this Assembly.

As you know, I raised a point of privilege on this matter, and the Speaker ruled against that point of privilege. However, it's worth noting that at the time he suggested: well, I can only rule on what they may do in the House, what the Assembly may do, not what they should do. I would suggest that as members of this Assembly we should not give this kind of unprecedented level of authority to the executive of this government in order to implement an agreement which was not substantially the subject of debate in this House.

An agreement negotiated in secret that was never put to this House for vote or debate will now be allowed to take precedence over legislation that we pass in this House, and it's not emergent. As I've just outlined, there are no businesses screaming for government intervention, asking to bring down those barriers so we can keep our people employed. That is not a refrain I am seeing out there. There is no public emergency. There's no public health crisis. There's no war. There are no major disasters that would warrant this kind of authority being granted to the executive of this government. The only times when you've seen this kind of legislation used in the Commonwealth, frankly, is in those kinds of cases, and here what this government wants to do is take that kind of authority in order to implement an agreement which isn't even required on the evidence but that does give business everything it ever wanted.

That's the vision of this government, to further undermine the authority of this Assembly, which still, at least theoretically, is here to represent the public interest and the best interests of all Albertans. Yet, apparently, this minister thinks, and the government in proposing this bill thinks, that the interests . . . [A timer sounded] Oh, that's mine, so I'll keep going, I guess.

The Deputy Speaker: It's your timer. You still have time.

Ms Notley: Okay, great.

. . . of specific members of the business community in B.C. ought to override the interests of Alberta citizens and that those decisions ought to be made by a dispute resolution panel which we have no control over, which has only the most limited oversight by the judiciary. I mean, we've really set up a lovely, complicated system to ensure the enhanced rights of private-sector bodies to contest and challenge the public interest at every level. The fact that the dispute resolution committee itself can only be challenged on the most limited of judicial grounds is yet another part of this notion that we need to keep it all away from the public sector, keep it all away from debate, keep it all away from accountability, keep it all underground so we don't need to see what is or isn't happening and why our legislation is or isn't being applied or no longer is in effect.

I just think that this in an incredible step backwards. Certainly, this is a much heavier hammer than even the B.C. government used in bringing in its enabling legislation. I suspect it's probably one of the heaviest hammers used on any piece of legislation across the country. Of course, in Alberta we do like to, you know, show ourselves off by doing things that nobody else does. In the same way that we were just talking about our elections process and our 40 per cent turnout at the polls, we now are going to also be proud to demonstrate to the rest of Canada that we are also able to apparently pass one of the most undemocratic pieces of legislation in the history of the country. I certainly think this Assembly should rethink whether that is an award that they want to earn, if that's something that really is in our best interests as legislators.

For that reason, the NDP caucus will not be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who wish to join the debate on third reading of Bill 18?

Seeing none, I'll call on the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a few comments I'd like to make in reply. The thing that I find interesting about this general debate is that, once again, people not only in Canada but internationally appreciate that this is an important move that Alberta and B.C. have taken.

Just recently Canada and the EU have commenced trade liberalization discussions. The fact is that in the EU most of the barriers, certainly as they relate to trade, investment, and mobility between the 27 member states, have been essentially eliminated. In recognizing the importance of provinces within our confederation, the EU said that as a starting point they wanted to have an agreement among the provinces and territories, and we were interested in the concept of trade liberalization with the EU, and such an agreement was entered into.

There are lots of discussions with respect to the lost productivity as a result of the barriers regarding labour mobility; they're legion. The unproductive nature of Canada in so many areas is pointed to as a systemic problem. The TILMA in a small measure addresses that, and as I've indicated in previous remarks, the TILMA was the spur to the provinces, writ large, and the territories entering into a change to the agreement on internal trade with respect to labour mobility that is TILMA-like and also to dispute resolution. These are important things.

When I listen to the criticism with respect to this bill, I don't hear anything about the people who are the most obvious beneficiaries.

I noticed that Edmonton-Centre asked the question: I hope that some people are advantaged. Well, I don't know how many times I've stood and said that there are over 100 regulated occupations and professions that are impacted by this. People can move between the two jurisdictions and gain employment in the other without the barriers that previously existed. Those people would be teachers, nurses, doctors, foresters and so on. People who are advantaged. Thousands of people who are advantaged.

So they stand; they criticize; they say that they represent the people, and they miss the most obvious fact of what the TILMA is about. I must say, it's always good to see the Member for Edmonton-Centre – it's her 13th year in the Legislature, as it is mine – still arguing vigorously, in the 13th year as she did in the first, that democracy is on the verge of collapsing in the province of Alberta as a result of the heavy-handed nature of this government. Hon. member, I've got to tell you that I'm always inspired by the enthusiasm that you can bring to that retreaded argument.

Thank you so much. I will call the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General it's my pleasure to rise on her behalf and move for third reading the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2009.

This amending legislation will help enhance and strengthen the Lobbyists Act, legislation that establishes a registry for lobbyists. This will allow Albertans to see that lobbying is taking place in an open and transparent way. Mr. Speaker, Bill 2 includes amendments that strengthen and clarify the application of the prohibition against a dual role, limit the concept of associated persons so that spouses are not included, add to the list of individuals who are considered to be public office holders, allow an existing body to hear appeals from administrative penalties, give the Ethics Commissioner authority to disclose information when necessary to enforce administrative penalties, give the registrar the ability to prepare reports and investigations, and address a number of housekeeping matters. Essentially, Bill 2 will help the Lobbyists Act work more effectively for lobbyists and for government. At this time I would move third reading of this legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. member wish to speak?

Seeing none, then the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Bill 3

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2009.

The main purpose of this amendment is to give credit unions the ability to allow their members to vote for directors in advance of their annual general meeting. The Credit Union Act was amended in the spring of 2008, which, among other things, allowed for credit union member participation at meetings through electronic means. We feel that the ability to use advance polls could further credit union member participation at credit union meetings.

We are also proposing that this amendment retroactively validate those formal processes used by credit unions in the past that have counted voting done at advance polls. In doing so, we will preserve the past choices of credit union members for their board members and preserve the decisions made by boards voted for in this manner. This will also reduce the possibility that these credit unions could be exposed to legal challenges based on the premise that as their board was not appointed in accordance with the Credit Union Act, the decisions made by that board are not valid. As these challenges would have the benefit of hindsight, the uncertainty surrounding a legal challenge could paralyze a credit union. We have not received any complaints regarding any tampering or any other concerns from members of credit unions that held advance polls.

As a matter of expediency we are also proposing a minor administrative change that would give credit unions more flexibility in reporting requirements of credit union committees to their board. Credit unions have sufficient corporate governance policies in place that this can be managed by the board.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Certainly, I've listened to the debate so far on Bill 3 this afternoon. I think we forget just how large the credit union movement has grown here in the province. As of December 31, 2008, credit unions in Alberta held deposits, including accrued interest, totalling over $15 billion. That's almost $2 billion more than they held in 2007.

I know that the credit union corporation under the act does a lot of very, very good work. Their business practices are sound. But I'm a little concerned, and I would like to have this concern recorded on the record. I don't understand why it's necessary to change the rules to allow these sorts of procedures, these voting procedures, these election procedures, to occur in the electronic format. I've had constituents question recently the direction of the credit unions, certainly with the bonuses, and there was a rather large salary of over $3 million to one individual. That salary included many other disbursements, I believe. Citizens don't realize, taxpayers don't realize that through the authority of the Credit Union Act the citizens of this province, the taxpayers are responsible for each and every dollar deposited.

Citizens lately have had a very keen interest in the policies and procedures of the credit unions. I would caution the House and hon. members, please, to be very, very careful about how we develop a policy or a procedure that, in my view, is leading to less accountability. I'm in that category. I think that if an individual wants to vote or wants to participate, then they should be certainly encouraged to do so, whether it's oral or written notice. But this whole idea of allowing major decisions to be made through the electronic format: I have some concern about that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions.

Seeing none, then, does any other member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Bill 8

Feeder Associations Guarantee Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 8, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act. This is a money bill.

I'm pleased to move it, but I quickly defer to my parliamentary assistant for a couple of comments on it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to speak on third reading. I think that during Committee of the Whole I addressed most of the concerns and questions that were raised.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I'm sort of confused a bit here in my procedure. The minister moved the bill. We need the opposition to participate before I can call on you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: If the Member for Battle River-Wainwright gives me his notes, I'll happily read them. He can close debate.

I look to the Speaker: how many minutes do I have here, realistically? Do we go right till . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Six minutes.

Dr. Taft: Okay. We'll try to get the vote through before then. I won't talk it out, although I easily could.

I want to begin by thanking the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for the briefing he gave when this bill was first introduced. It was useful, and I would encourage all ministers to brief us on legislation when they can because it makes all our lives a little bit easier.

This bill is, I think, part of an ongoing restructuring of the livestock sector, the red meat sector. [interjections] My own colleagues here are talking right over me. I'm used to heckling from the other guys.

Anyways, just on a very brief but serious point, this is part of an ongoing restructuring of the red meat sector. I think it will allow some leveraging of greater resources. But there are some questions we've raised in debate about it. There are, of course, two sides to these sorts of issues or, perhaps, a number of sides.

I'm just going to make one brief point before I sit down, and that is to register with the Assembly my growing unease with the amount of money that we're putting into the livestock sector in Alberta. You know, in the last fiscal year we poured a number of hundreds of millions of dollars into the cattle industry and the red meat industry, and that's on top of hundreds and hundreds of millions over the last number of years. I've got to say that I'm starting to get uneasy about this. I can understand that in a short-term crisis like BSE or something that needs to be done, but it's beginning to feel like a bad habit.

At some point if the industry is constantly needing to be propped up, then I think we need to look at restructuring the industry. It may well be the case that there are simply too many cattle in Alberta. If we permanently lost the American market, for example, or if we're permanently struggling to get into other markets, whatever the reason, whether it's fair or not, I'm going to begin looking a little bit tougher at some of our supports for this industry because it's a lot of money. If we don't see a winding down soon, then I think we've got to revisit the very nature of some of the red meat sectors in Alberta.

With that said, I think this bill will help the sector. I don't think it's a bill that's likely to actually cost the taxpayer very much, so with some reservations I expect that we can support this, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise again. I just wanted to make a couple of comments. I understand the member expressing concern about the amount of money put into agriculture given our global challenges on trade issues quite often of recent years. But I'd like to point out that the way the feeder associations work in Alberta is not a subsidy or a program. This really just supports the banking industry to get behind local feeder associations to enhance the industry.

I appreciate the opposition's support of this legislation. I would remind everybody that this program has been running for many, many years and has been incredibly successful. This legislation isn't essentially changing anything about the way the program runs. It's mostly administrative so that it operates better on a functional basis.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members to support this bill, and I'd like to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Tuesday, April 14.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:29 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 2nd Session (2009)

Activity to April 09, 2009

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province, our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Today is the first session day of the week, so I would like to invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to celebrate Canada with us.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you 101 students from the Cardinal Leger school, which is part of the Edmonton Catholic school district. They are here with their teacher Mrs. Carmelina Stagliano, teacher Mrs. Patricia Esposito-Neri, teacher Mr. Michele Garcea, and SNTA Mrs. Leanne Junck. I'd like to ask all members of the House to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 25 students from the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods, specifically the school of Tipaskan elementary school. The group is led by their teachers, Ms Joanna Fitzgerald and Mr. Garry Ingram, and parent helpers Mrs. Vanessa Mora and Mr. Dean Bourque. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would like them to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a constituent who I first became acquainted with back in the 1970s as a Boy Scout. Apparently at that time I as a Scout leader advised Jamie to stand up when a wrong is done no matter what the cost. Today Jamie is here to stand up for a wrong that she feels has been done to her. Jamie-Lynn Garvin suffers from a gender identity disorder and was waiting for confirmation of a date for gender reassignment surgery when the budget was brought down on April 7. Jamie-Lynn has spent three years preparing for the surgery through hormone replacement therapy and was on the provincial waiting list for surgery. Now she is faced with an uncertain medical and psychological dilemma as she cannot afford to pay for the surgery on her own. I would ask Ms Garvin, who is seated in the members' gallery, to rise, and I would ask members of the Assembly to give this courageous woman the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'd like to introduce to you and through you two guests; firstly, Krista Weir. Krista is a partner at Meyers Norris Penny. She is head of human resources consulting for them across Alberta. She was originally from Whitecourt, a U of L grad, and she resides in Calgary currently. Secondly, I'd like to introduce Lanny Westersund. Now, many of us know Lanny from working here previously. Lanny is responsible for government relations at Meyers Norris Penny. I'd ask them to rise and receive a warm greeting from the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions to do today: one now, and I'll ask for us to be able to revert following question period. I have six people who are joining us in the gallery today who have come to protest the government's decision to delist gender reassignment surgery. Some of these individuals are directly affected by this decision, and others are family, friends, and supporters. I would ask the following people to please rise: Rob Wells, Cynthia Paish, Dominic Scaia, Edda Loomes, and Leslea Huber. Also joining them today is Julie Lloyd, who is a very well-known local human rights lawyer and a former member of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. I would ask those people I've named to please rise and would the Assembly please give them the warm traditional welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members a very special guest, Ms Joanne Beaton, chair of the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce. Joanne recently succeeded Mr. Patrick LaForge as chair and was sworn in at this year's Chamber of Commerce ball. Joanne is vice-president of customer solutions delivery with Telus. She joined the company in 1995 and is an acknowledged leader in areas such as customer service, credit operations, call centre marketing and sales, information systems, and project management. We're very proud of the work that Joanne and all of her colleagues do on the chamber board. I'd ask her to please stand and receive our very warm welcome.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Immigrant Access Fund

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I attended the Immigrant Access Fund luncheon earlier today to take in a speech on the contribution of new immigrants to Alberta and Canada by former Premier of Alberta, the hon. Peter Lougheed. The event was also honoured by the presence of our current Premier and the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

IAF is an organization that provides low-interest microloans to new immigrants to help them pay for accreditation and training. Since 2005 IAF has provided 305 loans under $5,000, which have helped support 42 physicians, 32 nurses, 43 engineers, 47 accountants, 12 veterinarians, and 15 pharmacists in Alberta. IAF loan capital consists of about $600,000 from individual and corporate donors as well as $50,000 of pledges. Based on the beliefs that actions must be taken now to ensure that Canada takes full advantage of the people who have already entered our country as skilled workers and that immigrants who are fully employed in their field make a substantially greater contribution to Canada's economy, IAF has offered loans to recipients who, after a short training period, have gone from earning minimum wage to over $120,000 in their profession.

Mr. Speaker, full employment of immigrants is good for our economy. Because of IAF fewer immigrants are working in survivor jobs well below their education and experience, and fewer physicians are driving taxis because they cannot afford to write their qualifying exams. The social benefits of people being able to work in their field is immeasurable.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to note that the Ministry of Employment and Immigration has identified support of the IAF as an action item in the foreign qualification recognition plan for Alberta and together with Western Economic Diversification Canada, the United Way of Calgary and area, and various corporations is a key partner in supporting the operation and loan delivery of the fund. The Immigrant Access Fund is a unique initiative that offers solutions to our province's need to fill our future labour needs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Gender Reassignment Surgery

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, given the magnitude of this administration's financial mismanagement, it comes as no surprise that Albertans are once again facing cuts to public services. Nor does it come as a surprise that this administration is picking on some of the province's most disenfranchised and vulnerable citizens to make the first sacrifice. About 20 Albertans per year find themselves in need of sexual reassignment surgery. It's an emotionally devastating choice to have to make, but at least Albertans who had to undergo this transformation knew that the cost would be covered by Alberta health care.

That all changed with Tuesday's budget. Acting with a complete lack of compassion, this administration made a cold, calculated choice to withdraw funding for a needed procedure from citizens who they hoped would not have enough public support to fight it. Albertans don't like it when their government acts in an arbitrary and unthoughtful manner. Accordingly, concerned Albertans are preparing to challenge this decision in court, and given the precedent set in Ontario, I fully expect that the administration will be forced to reverse this poorly conceived idea. I also speculate that the legal costs incurred by the government during this battle will exceed any savings made by delisting this procedure.

Mr. Speaker, given the financial situation, of course this administration needs to start spending smarter, but this is a classic case of penny wise, pound foolish. Even worse, it places an unfair amount of financial burden on one specific group of citizens. For a word, in the legal world we call it discriminatory.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Vaisakhi Day

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Remarks in Punjabi] I am standing today to honour the 310th anniversary of Khalsa, Vaisakhi

Day. Vaisakhi marks the birth of the Sikh nation and is celebrated by the Sikhs in every part of the world as the Sikhs' national day. It is an opportunity to honour the teachings of Guru Gobind Singh and to renew commitment to the path that he charted.

I am proud to be part of the Sikh community, and it is truly a great honour. It is my hope that Sikhism will continue to enjoy a strong community of members dedicated to truth and social well-being for all Canadians. The Sikh community of Canada has made a major impact in over a century in the areas of government, business, education, health care, social services, and other aspects of our society.

This historic event in the Sikh religion draws family and friends together in a spirit of goodwill, preserving our community's legacy and the cultural diversity upon which Canada is founded. May this day bring great joy and peace, and may we continue to strive for purity in everything we do.

Lastly, I would like to wish everyone a happy Vaisakhi. Myself and two other members of this Legislature, the hon. members for Calgary-Montrose and Calgary-McCall, are members of the Sikh community, and we are honoured to be here today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Video Link to International Space Station

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, on a clear night many of us have looked into the night skies and observed a satellite streaking across the heavens, wondering just how it's possible that you could travel through space. I'm thrilled today to speak to a government announcement just recently made that County Central high school in Vulcan, Alberta, will host a video link with the International Space Station this September. Students in the Palliser school district will have a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to speak live with the astronauts aboard the space station.

Astronaut Dr. Robert Thirsk, an engineer and physician, the first Canadian to spend six months in space, will answer science- and technology-related questions from participating students. This event is significant since it's Canada's first space mission this year. More importantly, it will also mark the first time a Canadian takes part in a long-duration mission.

Alberta was the first jurisdiction in Canada approached by the Canadian Space Agency to participate in this historic event. The school was selected based on the capacity of the community to integrate technology both in and outside the classroom and to create learning opportunities for students. This speaks to the quality of our Alberta educational system to be forward thinking and innovative.

The choice of County Central high school also shines a spotlight on the special relationship and dedication of the students, the parents, and the community in and throughout the county of Vulcan.

I became aware of this special project on February 26 at Vulcan when I met Marilyn Steinberg from the Canadian Space Agency and representatives from Alberta Education Kim Budd, Angie Tarasoff, Karen Andrews, and Lynda Burgess. I want to thank them for their individual efforts in making this project a reality and also to acknowledge the efforts and vision of Kevin Gietz, superintendent of Palliser Regional Schools and the Palliser school board.

Thank you, and congratulations to our communities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Workplace Health and Safety Awards

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I had the pleasure of attending the workplace health and safety awards, and I would like to congratulate the two Alberta businesses that were recognized this year for helping to make Alberta work sites safer and healthier.

The leader award was presented to Shell Chemicals Scotford for their industry leadership in creating a safe workplace through their superior health and safety management system, and the 2009 innovation award was given to PikSafe International. I'm particularly proud of this company, Mr. Speaker, because PikSafe International is from Chestermere, which is located in the constituency I represent. PikSafe developed a simple and effective plastic guard that slips over the handle of a pickaxe to protect the user from flying debris. I'm also pleased to see that these entrepreneurs have patented this innovation and are planning to take it to the market soon.

Once again, it was an honour to attend these awards and recognize the innovation and leadership of these two companies in the health and safety of Alberta workers. I would ask all members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing these two companies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

ATCO Electric Hybrid Bucket Truck

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago I had the pleasure to attend a ceremony in Nisku with my hon. colleague from Leduc-Beaumont-Devon to unveil ATCO Electric's new hybrid bucket truck. This truck is the first of its kind in Alberta and only the third one in Canada. This vehicle will service ATCO electrical lines at its permanent home in Grande Prairie. It has many eco-friendly advantages, including reduced emissions, low fuel consumption, and a much quieter engine.

Beyond the specific benefits of the hybrid truck, I was pleased to congratulate ATCO Electric on making such an environmentally responsible purchase. By choosing a hybrid vehicle, ATCO Electric has shown the kind of corporate leadership values that are becoming even more important in the 21st century. This one simple act will have a positive impact in the long term on the air Albertans breathe.

I was also happy to join ATCO Electric's president for a bird's-eye view at about 40 feet in the hybrid bucket to experience firsthand the features of this truck. ATCO explained that the diesel-electric hybrid has the potential to cut fuel consumption by 60 per cent, with a corresponding reduction of 11.2 metric tonnes of CO₂ per year.

The government of Alberta is committed to protecting our province's environment so that we can all enjoy the best possible quality of life. We support Albertans, and we support Alberta businesses as they make environmentally responsible and sustainable choices like ATCO Electric with their hybrid bucket truck, and we look forward to more of its kind across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Children's Emergency Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Speech from the Throne the Premier indicated that Albertans have had to learn to stand together as a community that looks after its most vulnerable members. Despite this promise the much-needed funding for the Stollery children's hospital emergency room expansion has been pulled. To the Premier: how can the Premier say that he is protecting Alberta's most vulnerable children when they're building temporary structures outside the hospital instead of a permanent institution?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health has rolled out a very comprehensive capital plan for all health facilities in the province. There is a good working relationship between the Stollery and the Mazankowski Heart Institute in terms of further building on both sites to accommodate more beds and more services, and the plans for both are under way. I visited both facilities earlier this year, a bit aware of the long-term plan, and unless something has changed very recently, plans are under way and continuing.

Dr. Swann: In the capital city of Alberta, one of the richest jurisdictions in the country, we have a situation where tents have been set up for emergency treatment of Alberta's children, and now the expansion is cancelled. Mr. Premier, what are your priorities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the preamble is wrong. There was no cancellation.

I did visit the emergency tent a few months ago. In fact, from the staff that were there, it was both an experiment in terms of preparing for perhaps an epidemic in the future – and the trial run was excellent – and at the same time managing to treat a number of children and others in this new way of delivering those services. So I would say that everything went very well, and the people, our health care providers, that delivered the service were very satisfied.

Dr. Swann: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the physicians are very frustrated.

Can the Premier tell Albertans when the expansion of the Stollery emergency room will show up in the provincial budget and these children can be cared for in the proper environment?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the budget is before the House, and the minister of health will be delivering his budget estimates with a complete list of the health care projects, in the billions, I might add. We're going to continue with the program. It's going to be well thought out in terms of the need for services and access and also take this opportunity, I believe, to get better value for taxpayer dollars on much of the construction.

The Deputy Speaker: Second question from the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Blue Cross Premiums

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Tory administration's health care policies are angering Albertans, and we've been hearing from them. Joyce from Calgary e-mailed with concern for herself and others about the tripling – the tripling – of Blue Cross premiums in the next year. As Joyce points out, many persons who subscribe to this plan do so because of high prescription costs, they have lower income, and they have no employer plans. To the Premier: how is this change going to do anything but squeeze Albertans who can least afford it while forcing others from coverage, which will become unaffordable?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to our ever-growing senior population in the province, we're very cognizant of the fact that we have to ensure that we deliver a program long term that is sustainable yet meets the needs of Albertans. These are, of course, very difficult but tough decisions. Once again, the minister will bring forward a pharmaceutical plan, working with Blue Cross, because we know that as we go well into the future, the baby-boomer generation, this large population that will be turning 65 within a few short years, will put additional stress on all our budgets. That's why we're working together with Albertans to find a balance.

Dr. Swann: Well, can the Premier stand here and justify a 300 per cent increase in premiums to Albertans?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the hon. leader is referring to, what specific area, but we do know that there are a number of new drugs that are coming on stream. The minister of health just approved one for cancer treatment. I know that last year, if I recall correctly, an increase in-year of well over a hundred million in terms of new drugs. These are the kind of challenges that we're facing as Albertans and, again, working together to make sure that we sustain this very good health system for future generations.

Dr. Swann: Well, this concerned Albertan heard a representative from Blue Cross indicate in the news that, quote, if people don't like it, they can go elsewhere. End of quote. As this woman points out, how can Albertans who are already taking prescriptions for pre-existing conditions just go elsewhere and obtain equivalent coverage, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health is more familiar with the program. He might be able to answer the question.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I would answer it this way. The Leader of the Opposition is well aware that when we brought forward our pharmaceutical strategy, we had not increased the premiums for Alberta nongroup coverage for some 15 years. What has happened is that we've simply fallen behind with the equivalency to employer plans. Our schedule of increases over the next two years will bring us up to more equivalency with the employer plans.

The Deputy Speaker: Third question from the Official Opposition. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Gender Reassignment Surgery

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health has cut funding for gender reassignment surgeries purportedly to save $700,000. An identical attempt in Ontario was challenged and resulted in the decision being overturned and the funding being reinstated. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the minister subjecting taxpayers to a significant court challenge with significant costs just to discriminate against a particular group?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the member is well aware that this provincial budget was a challenge relative to the fact that we needed to ensure that our expenditures more reflected the revenue stream. Each minister was required to go through their budget line by line and in the case of health care meet a budget increase of some 4.9 per cent. There's a list of some 30 or 40 different programs and grants and coverages that will not be proceeding going forward. Those are some tough decisions that have to be made.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: can the minister explain the medical reasons why gender reassignment surgery was delisted and why there was a complete lack of consultation with any medical professionals with expertise in this field?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that I just answered that question. This was not based on medical decisions. This was based on a number of programs. We had to make . . . [interjections] You know, if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood wants to ask a question, I'll be happy to listen to him, but until then I would suggest that if I have the floor, he keep quiet.

As I said earlier, there were some very tough decisions that had to be made, everything from cancelling some programs around youth suicide prevention to programs around certain surgeries. I can only say that tough decisions had to be made.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister. Wiping out a program that disproportionately affects a very specific group of people is discriminatory. This administration is discriminatory and is discriminating based on age with the new drug plan for seniors and on gender identity with these cuts to reassignment surgery. Which group is next for this government's discriminatory health care cuts?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear here. It's my understanding that there are some 26 individuals who are currently in the program. The government will fully ensure that those surgeries are followed through and funded to completion. It's also my understanding that there's a list of some 20 individuals that have been prescribed certain drugs by the medical profession but not approved for funding by government. However, it is the intention that those 20 will also be covered under the program going forward.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Delisting of Medical Services

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This health minister has been playing hide-and-seek with his plans to change Alberta's health care system. This weekend for a change he finally admitted the truth: he wants to move Alberta towards U.S.-style private health care. The minister was quoted as saying, and I quote: you want to go to physiotherapy, maybe you should go on your own. My question is to the Premier. The minister is following your directions, Mr. Premier. You've put him up to this. Why didn't you even mention the delisting of needed medical services during the last election campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the last election campaign we made a commitment to support the Canada Health Act and also to publicly funded health care delivery in the province of Alberta. We did also make a commitment during that campaign that we want to ensure that this very good system that we enjoy in the country of Canada and the province of Alberta is sustainable for the next generation. As I said before, we're going to work hard with Albertans to make sure that it stays so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I don't believe the Premier, and I don't think that most Albertans do either.

His health minister didn't mince words this weekend when he said, and I quote: you're going to see more and more Blue Cross-type plans people are going to be subscribing to. He admitted he's changing our health care system to more closely reflect the U.S.-style private system. My question is to the Premier. You're giving this guy his marching orders. Why did you keep your plans to delist services and privatize health care secret from voters during the last election? Is it because you knew Albertans wouldn't vote for you if they knew the truth?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we were very clear in the position we took as a party going into the election, and that was our commitment to the Canada Health Act and our commitment to publicly funded health care delivery and also to its sustainability. I think we have a duty as a government to the next generation to ensure that not only the next generation but the generation after that enjoys a very good publicly funded health care system.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have said time and again that they want to retain public health care, but this minister is telling them to start shopping for insurance. He said, and I quote: down the road you should be going to Blue Cross and saying, "Here are the kinds of things I want in a plan. What does it look like?" Delisting chiropractic and gender reassignment surgery is just the thin edge of the wedge. My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier accept responsibility for hiding his plans from Albertans during the election and then afterwards directing his minister to delist services and promote private health insurance?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, we were very clear in our policy going into the campaign. You know, I don't want to challenge the leader of the third party, but I think Albertans were very clear in terms of who they trusted by the size of the return of the government, and we're not going to disappoint them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. I think that to some extent they've already been answered, but just for clarification I'm going to ask them again. We currently have 26 Albertans waiting for gender reassignment surgery in Alberta. These citizens of Alberta have been undergoing medical and psychological treatment for several years, including hormone replacement and electrolysis for hair removal, most of the cost of which has been borne by the recipient. Will these 26 persons be subject to the discontinuation of gender reassignment surgery, which has been removed from the 2009-10 budget?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that there are two separate groups of individuals that the member may be referring to. My information is that there are some 26 individuals that are in some form of the surgical process. There is another list of some 20 individuals who are only on hormonal drugs as prescribed by the medical community. In both cases we will ensure that their conditions are followed through on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that clarification, Mr. Minister. My first supplemental: what is the total amount of savings in the 2009-10 budget from the discontinuation of this surgery?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this member was part of the overall discussion when we talked about what this province could realistically sell to the public relative to spending increases in this particular year. As pointed out in the budget, our budget increase this year is restricted to inflation plus growth, so there is some 3.7 per cent increase across the board. Health care was a larger portion than that, but it was still only 4.6 per cent, so some tough decisions had to be made.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister: is the minister aware if this type of surgery is funded in other provinces?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we could get into a long debate about what is funded in other provinces and what is funded in Alberta. There are a number of procedures that this particular province funds or another number of programs that this particular province funds that other provinces do not. I think that, as an example, this caucus and this Legislature just recently approved a policy around drugs for rare diseases. That is a policy that no other province funds. I'm proud of that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Provincial Sales Tax

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to go out on a bit of a limb here and predict that all this talk about messing with health care isn't really about that. This is about getting Albertans so up in arms that they're going to gut health care that when the people push back, this government can back off and say: "Okay. You don't want us to cut health care? We're going to have raise your taxes." Obviously, the minister of finance favours implementing a provincial sales tax because it continues to make the rounds. To the minister of finance: if this government is not considering a PST, then how come so many in the financial community are talking as though it is?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, that actually may have started as an April Fool's Day joke by a local columnist that suggested we were going to bring in a 10 per cent PST. The switchboard in my office lit up like Christmas.

Mr. Speaker, there's been no credibility to any remarks that we, myself or any other member of this Tory caucus, have considered a provincial sales tax. In fact, I have suggested that if we were to do such a thing, we would have to take it to Albertans in the form of a referendum. I did say that we may have to increase taxes down the road. We don't know how long the recession will last.

Mr. Taylor: All righty, Mr. Speaker. On that note, is it that she won't bring in a PST, or is it that she won't bring in a PST this year?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I listen very closely to my Premier, and our Premier has said: there will be no PST.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, why should we believe this minister's denials or the Premier's denials when the minister used to say that we were in the black, and her government used to say that deficits were illegal?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, and his point is what? His point is what? We've had such a difference in our economy that, quite frankly, people contact us and applaud us on balancing a reduction in spending, wise use of our savings, still building to capacity, and marketing ourselves to the globe. That's what we're doing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Strathcona County Health Centre

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the budget was announced, my constituents eagerly watched for a signal as to what was to happen with the Strathcona County Health Centre in Sherwood Park. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What does the budget announcement mean for Strathcona constituents?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, that's a pretty broad question. I would suggest that what this budget means for residents of the Strathcona constituency is continued provision of health care services as we have been fortunate enough to do in the past, to the extent that we've talked about in this House today. We have, as I think the member may be alluding to, a proposal for that particular region for a new health facility. The funds that were originally committed remain in the capital plan. I'll look forward to the next supplemental.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question, then, to the same minister. This talk of the scope of capital projects around the province being reviewed by Alberta Health Services has people concerned about when we'll see the results. I'm just wondering when we can expect these reviews to be complete.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, what has happened over the past couple of years is that we have allocated a certain amount of money based on the best information available, and then as we proceed down the path to construction, tenders tend to come in significantly higher than what we have allocated. We have been fortunate in the past to have budget surpluses that we would move around to try to meet some of those requirements. That's not, obviously, in the plan for the next couple of years. What we need to do is sit down with the communities impacted and ensure that, working with the MLAs and the community involved, we build going forward the facilities that meet the needs of the community.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member? All right.
The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Natural Gas Contracts

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are stuck paying vastly inflated natural gas bills because of this government's failure to protect consumers. Between this government's deregulated system and the long-term deals the government pushes consumers to sign, Albertans pay far too much for natural gas. My questions are to the Minister of Service Alberta. Why hasn't this minister prevented this abuse of Alberta consumers?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the natural gas issue it's great to talk about the role of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. That board is in place to hear from Albertans, to hear from consumers on any number of issues to make sure that consumers are not being taken advantage of and to make sure that we can solve their problems and assist them with questions they might have.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the government is allowing this practice to continue on, and consumers are getting gouged.

The government blocked consumers from advocating on their behalf by cutting funding to consumer groups. The government can claim that the Utilities Consumer Advocate would provide those advocacy services instead, but it is clear from the outrageous natural gas bills that the UCA has failed to do so. To the minister again: what kind of advocate for consumers would fail to take protective action in the face of this kind of gouging?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know there has been some conversation out there about the role of the commission and with respect to some budgetary issues. I would like to assure the House today that the Utilities Consumer Advocate is continuing to advocate on behalf of Albertans at every moment. There are ongoing interventions and meetings as we speak. Most certainly, there's a very good reason for the UCA, and we need to encourage that the board does the good work it is doing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in this caucus have long advocated that government introduce measures to allow consumers to renegotiate contracts on an annual basis. Will this government finally start acting to protect consumers from deregulation and give them the choice to walk away from expensive long-term contracts on the anniversary of signing?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to long-term contracts that have been signed these last few years and moving forward, we are very much aware of situations where consumers have signed a contract and, for whatever reasons, want out of that contract. These are ongoing situations that we monitor. Again, it's the power of the consumer, the power they have to say no. With the 10-day clause in there they can back out of the contract. Most certainly, we are monitoring all of those very carefully and working with all the individuals out there who are advocating those contracts.

Access to the Future Fund

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the access to the future fund established by this government was a forward-looking program to provide postsecondary education with certain development and funds. It provided for two funds: the innovation fund, which was designed to increase access and participation and promote innovation in postsecondary; and secondly, the renaissance fund, which provides matching grants to institutions to enhance access, quality, and affordability. Demand for matching funds, however, has far outstripped supply, and many donations are waiting in the wings. My questions are for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Could the minister advise the House on the status of the renaissance fund in view of this year's budget?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, let me begin by saying that we are very committed to continuing with the access to the future fund as the students and the institutions have shared in its unique benefits. I might add that I don't believe there's any provincial jurisdiction that has that kind of funding program in place for the postsecondaries, which directly benefits the students. It is about access. It's about quality. It's about affordability. In the coming months it's going to be my pleasure to share with Albertans some of the successes that we've seen out of that program as well as the successes we'll see in the coming months.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise the House what plans he has to maintain funding for that program in order to leverage taxpayer dollars?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the fund utilizes unbudgeted surplus dollars by legislation and is guaranteed 4 and a half per cent of the funds that have been deposited. In Budget 2009 we're providing $48.6 million to the access to the future fund, and that is 4 and a half per cent of the original billion-dollar endowment. When resources are available and other issues of priority around the government of Alberta have been taken care of, I'm sure that we'll be looking forward to adding to that commitment.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister give the House any specific examples of where the renaissance fund has improved postsecondary education in the province?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, over the past three years well over $130 million worth of grants to postsecondaries have leveraged donations that have been received by our institutions: some 45 million plus dollars in grants for facilities and for research, 30 million plus dollars for scholarships and bursaries – and these are scholarships and bursaries that help students in Alberta achieve their dreams for postsecondary because they reduce the costs that they have, part of the affordability framework – $20 million worth of endowed chairs so that we have the best and the brightest from around the world teaching our students.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Education Property Tax

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Taxes are increasing for property owners in Alberta because of the education shortfall. The property tax is the only source of revenue for municipalities, and for half of those monies collected, municipalities are really only a tax collector for the province. Because of this failure property owners are now going to have to pick up the tab. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: instead of listening to municipalities, who have for years said that they don't want to be the property tax collectors, why has the minister opted to increase the education portion of the property tax?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure exactly what the question was, but I just want to make some corrections, first of all. Yes, the municipalities do collect the taxes on behalf of the province; they do collect the education portion. The second clarification that I'd like to make is that the first comment, that the only avenue of revenue that municipalities have is through taxation, is absolutely false. The municipal sustainability initiative, infrastructure funding, the sponsorship funding – municipalities are eligible for up to 80 grants from 12 different ministries.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. To the same minister. Higher taxes and MSI cuts are not good policies during an economic downturn. Will the minister explain how tax increases and broken promises are to support the sustainability of municipalities?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the mill rate for education taxes has gone down. Let me say to you that when you look at education taxes, the only amount that it has gone up is for the real value or the real growth. The amount of taxation increase in education is 5.2 per cent, and that is the real growth in the province, so that is all the additional properties that have been built.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister on that theme. The 2004 resolution that the AUMA came out with was to phase out the education portion in its entirety. Will the minister finally listen to municipalities and remove the education tax portion from property taxes?

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I can say two comments, the first one being that education is an investment in Alberta's future. This funding provides stable funding for our world-class system. The current system provides a balance.

The second comment I need to make is that when you look at the MSI funding and look at it through the longevity of 10 years, it is in the amount that education taxes were, so in essence municipalities are receiving that funding.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair misread the list here. I would like to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and then the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The health minister wants to cut gender reassignment surgery and chiropractic care from public health care. He seems to think that he can create a political precedent for delisting by going after people and services that are most vulnerable; for instance, where there is a high level of public misunderstanding, as with gender reassignment surgery. To the minister of health. You've already admitted it in the media. Why won't you admit here today that these cuts are just one more step towards dismantling the public health system and bringing more U.S. private health care to Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I remember that before the Easter break the leader of the third party talked about – I believe his quote was “a dishonest budget.” We've heard two questions today from these two sitting in the corner, and both of them have been dishonest questions.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what he's talking about, but maybe he could raise it sometime.

A 2004 government study concluded that doctors should recommend spinal manipulation to their low-back patients as part of their medical care; in short, a medically necessary treatment. The AMA says that gender reassignment surgery is an effective treatment for people who suffer from gender identity disorder; in short, a medically necessary treatment. To the minister: why won't you protect our public health system instead of coming up with more and more ways to sell it off to your friends in the insurance industry?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, if our publicly funded health care system isn't sustainable in the future, we won't have one. We'll have exactly what these two keep talking about, and that is private-sector health care. This government is the one that is preserving our publicly funded health care system, not the status quo.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this government gives more than $700,000 to their high-paid staff in one year than they give to these people that need this treatment. The fundamental health of many transgendered Albertans hinges on gender reassignment surgery, and by denying that, this government could be complicit in raising their risk of depression and suicide. Delisting the surgery trims a tiny fraction from the health budget but slashes at the very foundation of human rights. To the minister: isn't it enough that you're already ripping apart our public health system? Why are you trampling on people's human rights while you're at it?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, again, a dishonest preamble to the question because there is nobody dismantling public health care. This government is preserving the publicly funded health care system. Unless we get a handle on expenditures, we won't have a publicly funded health care system. But I know these two. They're the status quo; they never want to change anything. They want to do the health care of the '50s. We want to do health care for the 21st century.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Gold Bar.

TILMA Benefits for Municipalities

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In July 2008 officials from Alberta and British Columbia reached an agreement that outlines the municipal obligations under the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement, TILMA. My question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how will Alberta's municipalities benefit from TILMA?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, TILMA will help municipalities meet their local priorities as well as remaining competitive. Municipalities can benefit in a number of ways. Municipalities can benefit by having the best prices and services; they can benefit in the value of local projects, also a larger pool of certified workers. As I've said many times before, strong communities are the building blocks of a strong province. We continue to work with the municipalities to help them comply with TILMA.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. We know that it is essential for local governments to make decisions about local priorities. Will TILMA restrict municipal governments from making decisions that are in the best interest of their citizens?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, no. TILMA allows local governments to continue to make local decisions and priorities. Local governments can make the land-use decisions. They can make the decisions that are in the best interests of their citizens. TILMA gives Alberta municipalities an opportunity to pursue careers, business, and investment opportunities without barriers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Final question to the same minister: were municipalities consulted in this process?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, they were. In fact, we consulted with the AUMA and with the AAMD and C, the associations that represent this province's municipalities. We consulted with individual municipalities. Those municipalities and those associations support the agreement which applied to municipalities. This is an opportunity for municipalities, and it is a good process.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mental Health Services

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his October 2008 report the Auditor General notes on page 163 that there are no mental health standards in place in Alberta. My first question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Why is the government rejecting the recommendation of the Auditor General to create provincial standards for mental health services?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we're not rejecting the Auditor General's recommendation. We are saying: thank you; however, the implementation of mental health standards is clearly in the purview of policy, and that will be determined by this government.

Mr. MacDonald: You are not adhering to the Auditor General Act, and the hon. minister knows it, clearly.

Now, the Auditor General's report in 2008 on page 164 also states that "hospitals are an expensive place to house [mental health] clients; . . . inpatient beds . . . cost between $500 and $1,500 per day. It can be economically beneficial to find patients appropriate housing in the community." Again, why is the government dismissing and brushing off the Auditor General's recommendations to provide supportive living programs so mental health clients can recover in their community?

Mr. Snelgrove: I think that maybe the hon. member ought to take some time out and read the Auditor General's responsibilities.

The Auditor General has given us some very good information as part of his ongoing look into the overall government operations. He comes up with some very good suggestions. What this government is saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the development of policy – where people should be looked after and what's best for that community or for that person are matters of public policy. This government hangs on very strongly to what we are truly responsible for, and that's the development of sound public policy.

Mr. MacDonald: The Auditor General under section 19 has clear authority not only to make recommendations but to comment on the programs and the delivery of such programs by this government.

Now, again to the minister: on page 197 of the Auditor General's October 2008 report it notes that 72 per cent of physicians disagree that access to mental health specialists in Alberta is timely, and only 17 per cent agree that mental health service delivery in Alberta has improved in the last three years. To the Treasury Board president:

why are you brushing off the sound, reasonable recommendations by our independent and impartial Auditor General?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the last thing we would do is brush off sound suggestions as we would brush off, easily, stupid questions.

The point that needs to be made is that there are a lot of organizations out there who give us help to develop public policy, including the physicians, including the nurses, including the people who work in the field of mental health. They all contribute to us, to the departments involved, to develop sound public policy. We don't reject the Auditor General's claims or suggestions. We simply say that as part of the ongoing development we will use them where it's appropriate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mobile Meat Processing Facilities

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proposed regulations to the Meat Inspection Amendment Act will transfer the authority to regulate mobile butcher meat processing facilities from Alberta Health and Wellness to Alberta Agriculture and Rural Development. Now, some of my constituents are concerned that the proposals will cause a bottleneck in the system and may increase costs. My first question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. How will these regulations affect producers, processors, and mobile butchers in this province?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, under the proposed changes Agriculture and Rural Development would now be responsible for inspecting the meat processing facility that a mobile butcher uses. We will work with these mobile butchers to ensure that there is a smooth transition from Health and Wellness so there are little or no disruptions, if we can help it, to their operations. These amendments will not affect the ability of mobile butchers to slaughter animals on private property for personal use and for personal consumption.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: the Auditor General identified gaps in the delivery of food safety programs for mobile butchers, so what effect will these regulations have on food safety?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government, certainly, is committed to continued excellency in food safety. This transfer program is an integrated approach to inspections that'll help ensure food safety as we know it. ARD works with all provincial abattoirs to ensure safe meat processing practices are in place, and we will work with the mobile butchers to ensure that the meat facility standards and food safety practices are being followed very consistently.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: will the new regulations and equipment required by mobile butchers increase their costs of doing business?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, we don't anticipate that the changes will create any financial burdens to the mobile butchers. ARD completed an assessment of mobile butcher facilities and improvements needed to further enhance the food safety practices. There, of course, is a very small percentage of facilities that will require an improvement in construction standards, and we're certainly prepared to work with these operators to meet these requirements.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health just acknowledged that his decision to eliminate gender reassignment treatment was not made on a medical basis. The truth is that his decision was made on the basis of political discrimination. Will the minister consult with medical authorities before implementing this decision?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think the member raised a good point because one of the things that we are in the early discussion stages of is whether or not going forward we need some sort of an expert panel to start to determine what is medically necessary, what is essential, what needs to be covered, what doesn't need to be covered. Part of the problem you have today is that you have something called the Canada Health Act, which isn't very clear on what should be covered or shouldn't be covered, and you have people like the NDP, who think everything has to be covered under the Canada Health Act.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with what the minister said. However, of all the hundreds and hundreds of services that could've been eliminated, why did the minister choose this one except that this government feels compelled to discriminate on the basis of gender orientation?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question earlier. This particular member is somehow suggesting this is the only program that has been covered in the past that is not going to be covered going forward, and that's clearly not the case. There are some, I believe, 130 million dollars' worth of programming that we've had to reassign, much of it to Alberta Health Services. Alberta Health Services will be making a determination going forward about what it is within their budgetary dollars that they can continue to fund and what they can't continue to fund.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just try to appeal to the minister's sense of money well spent. With that, I'll ask the minister: does he understand that an expensive court challenge is a virtual certainty in this matter?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I would not comment on something that's hypothetical.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Access to Alberta TrailNet Land

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta TrailNet has drafted a crossing agreement for adjacent landowners which requires the adjacent landowner to purchase $1 million in liability insurance payable to Alberta TrailNet. My question is to the minister of tourism. Was there any consultation done by Alberta TrailNet involving adjacent landowners prior to the drafting of this agreement?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do understand that the agreement was prepared by a stakeholder group established by Alberta TrailNet. That was called the Alberta Trail Advisory Council. That council included representatives from the Farmers' Advocate of Alberta, Western Stock Growers' Association, and the Alberta Surface Rights Federation. As well, in 2001 all known landowners that were affected were given copies of the agreement and invited to comment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This agreement can be terminated by Alberta TrailNet within 90 days, giving no assurance to the adjacent landowners. Is there anything the minister can do to protect the rights of adjacent landowners to access their lands on a more permanent basis?

Mrs. Ady: Mr. Speaker, the provincial government has not had any role in the transaction between the railway and the landowners and between Alberta TrailNet and the landowners. Under federal legislation the railways guaranteed that the farmers could get across the railway line to get to the parcels of land on either side. Alberta TrailNet is offering to continue this practice if landowners sign the agreement. I believe these issues can only be handled by the two groups, the landowners and the Alberta TrailNet, but I have offered my department to go down and mediate if it's necessary.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Cosway Adjacent Landowners group has advised me that Alberta land titles will not transfer title unless the Alberta TrailNet agreement has been signed, could the Minister of Service Alberta confirm if this is true?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A TrailNet agreement is not part of the required documentation for title transfer in Alberta, and I'm not aware of any situation where the land titles office has rejected a title transfer because a TrailNet agreement has not been signed.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre

Mr. Chase: Thank you. From 1998-1999 to 2008-2009 the Alberta adolescent recovery program, AARC, has received just over $2.8 million from the Alberta lottery fund. To the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit: how can the minister justify giving that much money to an unlicensed, unregulated, nonmedically accredited, nonresidential addictions treatment program?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, if the applicant group meets the criteria that are set out by our department and is approved, then they are set for it. If you want to ask about the specifics of their medical qualification or the necessity, then ask the minister of health that question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The minister of health, the Minister of Children and Youth Services, the minister of municipal affairs and housing have all ignored my question. I appreciate your taking it on.

Now, what oversight, what grant evaluation standards did the minister apply for the allocation of these funds? What are your criteria that recognize this institution?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. The minister does not provide the criteria. The minister does not overview or review these applications. There are staff that are hired in our department that go over that, and there's a series of criteria that is available on our website. If you want it, go and find it there.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. This government does not appear to be concerned about governance, especially of addicted, vulnerable youth. Has the minister ever visited AARC before the funds were disbursed to this program?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no. We have in some of our programs 1,550 recipients; another one, a thousand recipients. Do you honestly think that in 365 days I'd be able to go and visit every one of those applicants? Let's be serious.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, today we had 98 questions.

Before we continue on, may I have your consent to revert to introductions?

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature some special guests from the Calgary Immigrant Access Fund, which I spoke about earlier this afternoon. I would like to ask the following guests to stand as I call your names: Ms Kerry Longpré, board member of the Immigrant Access Fund; Ms Dianne Fehr, executive director, IAF; Ms Cici Yu, assistant to the IAF; Mr. Emil Sofroniev and Mr. Sergio Manrique from the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers; and last and certainly not least, the president and founding member of the Immigrant Access Fund, a long-time, very able, and inspirational leader in the immigrant-serving sector, my dear friend and my mentor, Ms Amal Umar. I'd like to ask members of the House to give them the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, your guest introduction.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for the opportunity to introduce the remainder of the guests that have joined us here to express their concerns about the elimination of funding for gender reassignment. Those that I have not introduced before, please rise as I say your names: Nathan Linfoot, Nicole Linfoot, Lois Gorzalka, Cynthia Paish, Cole Caljouw, Dominic Scaia, April Friesen, Edda Loomes, Roxana Rastegar, Leslea Huber, and Tam Gorzalka. Of course, I had introduced Julie Lloyd earlier, and in fact she was not in the gallery. Julie, would you also please rise and be welcomed and recognized in the Alberta Legislature?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you have guests to introduce?

Ms Notley: Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce a group of visitors who are also here because they oppose this government's decision to stop funding gender reassignment surgery for Albertans who are transgendered. My guests include allied persons: those who have been clinically diagnosed as transgendered, those who are undergoing hormone treatment and are preoperation, and those who have benefited from this government's policy in the past and successfully completed their operation. This is a long process that no one enters into lightly, and by cancelling this procedure, one that was considered medically necessary just a week ago, Albertans are becoming aware of this government's plan to delist and privatize essential services.

Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I call their names to receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly: Christina Hermary, Michelle Drinkell, Josephine Cross, Axcella Zelensky, and Heather Raine Edwards. Please welcome these guests.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize you to introduce your guests, hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a rare day indeed when I get to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two people from my constituency, very special people. They are my nieces Andrea Calahasen and Sheridan Sokoloski. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that Bill Pr. 1, Beverly Anne Cormier Adoption Termination Act, proceed in the Assembly; that Bill Pr. 2, the Caritas Health Group Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, proceed with amendments; and that Bill Pr. 3, Les Filles de la Sagesse Act Repeal Act, proceed with amendment.

As part of this report, Mr. Speaker, I will be tabling five copies of the recommended amendments to bills Pr. 2 and Pr. 3. I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Presenting Petitions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling 19 signatures which come from primarily the Vegreville area of Alberta and Mundare. The petition states, "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to pass legislation that will prohibit emotional bullying and psychological harassment in the workplace." Bullying isn't limited to urban playgrounds.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Bill 206

School (Enhanced Protection of Students and Teachers) Amendment Act, 2009

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce Bill 206, the School (Enhanced Protection of Students and Teachers) Amendment Act, 2009.

Bill 206 will make all schools safer and give our education system the tools it needs to stop bullying, including that which is disseminated by electronic media on and off the school grounds. Mr. Speaker, this will be a first in Canada. Additionally, it would prohibit the possession of weapons and/or drug paraphernalia.

[Motion carried; Bill 206 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of six letters expressing concern about the cancellation of public funding for gender reassignment surgery. They state that such procedures are medically necessary and that cancelling public funding is a form of discrimination. They disclose the real suffering that precedes the surgery and the greater suffering that will arise from this government's decision. They are from Kim Smith, Dr. Karen Hofmann, Chris Van Alstine, Mercedes Allen, Sarah King, and Michelle Shaw.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of tablings. The first is a tabling from the Alberta lottery fund entitled Who Benefits Report. It shows 16 grants from 1998 through to 2009, totalling $2,824,228, given to the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre.

My second tabling recognizes the third Calgary peace prize, which was awarded to the hon. Louise Arbour, CC, LLL, LLD. Louise Arbour has had a very distinguished career, including as a Supreme Court justice and a justice for the World Court in some very terrible trials resulting from Bosnia, Croatia, and Rwanda. When asked what her most important achievement was, the hon. Louise Arbour indicated her grandchildren.

My last tabling is recognizing the 30 years that the Calgary Learning Centre has operated. Changing Lives through Learning is their motto. Given the fact that 40 per cent of Albertans are functionally illiterate, they have a large job ahead of them.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it's a letter dated October 2008. It's addressed to myself, and it's from Elections Alberta. It is signed by Lorne R. Gibson, Chief Electoral Officer. It is a series of answers to many questions surrounding the March 3, 2008, election in Edmonton-

Gold Bar, specifically at poll 075. In this case it acknowledges that “movement of mobile poll within the Chinese Free Masons building (to residents’ rooms) interfered with the routine to be followed after voting was finished.”

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first concerns the cost of postsecondary education. They’re letters from Brett Lambert, Michael Bucholtz, Nieva Burns, Matthew Cadrin, Melissa Moncur, and Catherine Cunningham. All of these people express their concern with the future of Alberta and the negative effects of the high cost of postsecondary education on Alberta’s ability to face the challenges of transforming our economy.

The second tabling is a letter tabled with permission. It’s written by Wilma Korthuis to me. She expresses her concerns that chiropractic care may be delisted from our health care services. In fact, unfortunately, that’s proven to be the case.

The third tabling is letters from a number of people: Anne-Marie and David Kemp, Harry and Tina Schuld, and Fred Reckhard. They’ve each written to express their opposition to the new pharmaceutical plan for seniors and to changes in Blue Cross coverage. They make two really good points among many. One is that the proposal “unfairly penalizes and taxes the sick of Alberta.” Then they go on to say, “Surely income disparities should be addressed through taxation and not through the health care system.” I thought those were very good points.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the appropriate number of copies from 35 people from my constituency who are against the passing of Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, “until such time that public information sessions are held on the bill and public input has been done.”

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk Assistant: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mrs. Evans, Minister of Finance and Enterprise, pursuant to the Alberta Economic Development Authority Act the Alberta Economic Development Authority activity report 2008.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 17

Securities Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate March 12: Mr. Fawcett]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, whenever one looks at Bill 17, the Securities Amendment Act, 2009, at first blush one would think that this is very good, that it’s necessary, and that it’s long overdue. We look at the proposed sections here that are to be repealed and the substitutions that are to follow. Whenever we read the background around this bill, we think of just how important it is to have sound and secure, independent and impartial regulation of any type of security.

Now, the highlights of this bill, certainly as I understand it, are to harmonize the passport system that originated from the 2004 memorandum of understanding that was signed between the federal government and the provincial governments, but it’s worth noting, at least from the research that I have on this bill, that this excluded Ontario. I know the hon. member opposite who proposed this bill had some comment previously on that. But the amendments as suggested under Bill 17 will further modernize—at least, I think they will—and they will harmonize the securities law to allow for full implementation of the passport system by this summer.

The idea that we’re creating the mutual recognition of rules and registrants across the country is certainly interesting. With Bill 17 we are creating a single set of documents or fund facts, as I believe they’re called, for mutual funds and segregated funds to be given at the point of sale. Now, we’re also going to deal here with the powers of the executive director, and we are going to allow for any market participant to be reprimanded for a securities violation. Previous legislation, again as our research indicates, only called for registrants, but I think that in light of what has happened, particularly south of the border in New York City, this is welcome legislation at the appropriate time.

Now, there has been much discussion on this, but here in Alberta securities are regulated through legislation which is administered by our Alberta Securities Commission. The Alberta Securities Commission regulates individuals and entities in Alberta that advise on securities, trade in securities, or raise money through the issuing of such securities. The basic element of securities regulation always is to protect investors.

The Alberta Securities Commission’s power is with the registrants, the individuals or firms who deal with the securities. The Securities Commission will look at the policies of the dealers, their training, will put firms on notice if they need to self-police. If the Alberta Securities Commission finds any infringements, it will call the firms to stand in front of the Securities Commission if they continue to infringe on policies or established best practices and will periodically audit dealers, spot checks that are unannounced to the dealer. I have not seen any of these spot checks or periodic audits. I never thought, Mr. Speaker, that one should perhaps have a look at—I know it’s not in the Treasury Board annual report, but if it’s anywhere, it would be in the Alberta ministry of finance’s annual report. One could have a look there. I know there have been some controversial issues around the Alberta Securities Commission in the past, but it would be interesting to see what results of those audits have been made public.

Now, that being said, Mr. Speaker, I do know that whenever we look at the Auditor General’s report, all the Auditor’s work or audit projects are made public, unlike the Treasury Board across the way. Last year, hon. members would be interested to note, we spent 4 and a half million dollars on internal audits. In the interests of openness and transparency certainly the President of the Treasury Board should table all those internal audits, that taxpayers paid for with their own money, 4 and a half million dollars of their own money, here in the Assembly.

The Auditor General of Alberta makes his audits public not only through the Legislative Assembly but through the taxpayers. I don’t know about these background spot-check audits that are being conducted by the Alberta Securities Commission to protect investors, but I do know that to date—I don’t know if delinquent is a parliamentary word or not, but I’m going to try it, Mr. Speaker—the Treasury Board president is delinquent by not providing to this House the audited financial reports that are done by the Internal Audit Committee that he is in charge of.

Now, Mr. Speaker, further on in Bill 17 it should be noted that each province and territory has a similar commission, each with their own securities regulator, and these regulators work together through the Canadian securities administration. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill has certainly looked into this and has given a very good explanation as to how all this works, but we need to know what's on Canada's Department of Finance website.

The two main products traded in the securities industry in this country are fixed-income securities and equities. Fixed-income products, which include bonds, asset-backed securities, and money market instruments, are traded in dealer markets. Equity products, which include common and preferred shares, are mostly traded on stock exchanges. I think in the next year or possibly sooner there are going to be a lot more regulations, or rules, placed on these fixed-income products. I'm not so much talking about bonds here but, certainly, some of these asset-backed securities and money market instruments.

I was only looking through the advanced education budget estimates in the annual report from the previous year and many of the institutions of higher learning that report through those documents to the public through the minister of advanced education to know that one has to be very, very careful because there are some astute investment advisors working on behalf of those institutions who, unfortunately, as a result of their investment strategies or practices have cost those institutions a significant amount of money in unrealized investment income. Now, I'm certainly not blaming them in any way for what has occurred south of the border, but there were warning signs. In some cases the fact that those warning signs were not observed has cost significant loss of investment income.

Now, with that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say on the record to the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill that this is certainly, I think, appropriate legislation. It's welcome legislation at a time when it is necessary that investors, wherever they're from, whatever amount of money they do have to invest, can feel confident in the system that is there to protect their investment. At least make sure that the rules and regulations are fair for everyone and that if there is a violation of any of the rules that there's going to be a watchdog or a regulator that is going to ensure that those who broke the rules are pursued through our court system.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to another colleague. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I appreciate, as my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar noted, the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill bringing forth Bill 17, Securities Amendment Act, 2009. I don't believe when it comes to financial matters that we can underestimate the importance of security and governance. We've had incidents within this province, dating back three years, when the Auditor General was trying to take the Alberta Securities Commission, which is under the auspices of the government, to task. He requested a series of documents be provided, and it was of rather unfortunate circumstance that he had to push to such extent for one ministry of the government to provide information under the auspices of another ministry. Therefore, this whole idea of regulation, governance, and oversight is extremely important.

Today in the House I tabled another of thousands of petition signatures on bullying and the need for whistle-blower legislation. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is going to be proposing private member's Bill 206 that will look at protecting teachers and students from bullying within the school system, yet what we have seen is that individuals within the Alberta Securities Commission who came forward with very grave concerns about how securities were being handled and the management of the Alberta Securities Commission were fired. This, unfortunately, is the case for individuals in Alberta who are trying to bring accountability to their various departments or businesses. Alberta hasn't reached the point where that protection is there. We very badly need watchdogs.

When it comes to investments, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about asset-backed commercial paper. One of the organizations that Albertans, especially rural Albertans, are extremely dependent on is the Alberta Treasury Branches. It lost in the area of between $250 million and $300 million dollars because of very foolish investments in asset-backed commercial paper. Now, take those losses and compare them with the losses that the heritage trust fund lost, almost 2 and a half billion dollars, in its investment. Do we need a strong securities regulator in Alberta? Beyond a doubt.

We also need that connection that a passport system provides. Within Bill 17, unfortunately, there is very little discussion or debate about the notion of a national securities regulator. This idea has been brought forward, for example, by a former minister of finance or of the Treasury, Dr. Lyle Oberg, and he talked about the importance, at least, of the discussion about a national securities regulator. I don't believe there can be a limit to the number of regulators. The more people watching over our best interests . . .

Mr. Liepert: That sounds like a good Liberal.

Mr. Chase: Well, yes. It was noted by the minister of health that that's a good Liberal suggestion. Yes, Liberals believe in governance and good governance. They also believe in accountability and transparency, which is lacking within this House.

What this bill, unfortunately, does not address is the idea of a national securities regulator. There are currently, to explain the system that Alberta is a part of, 13 provincial and territorial securities regulators across Canada rather than a single national regulator. I'm not suggesting that I or the Liberals as policy are in favour of a single regulator, but that discussion needs to take place. Jim Flaherty, the federal Finance minister, has been quoted as saying that Canada is the only industrialized country without a single securities regulator. The Globe and Mail reported that Canada is one of only two countries in the 103-member International Organization of Securities Commissions without a national overseer.

Over the last few years all of the provinces excluding Ontario have begun implementing a passport system which mutually recognizes the rules within each provincial regulator in order to facilitate transactions across borders, such as what we're doing with the proposed TILMA regulation, a passport type of system. The federal government has been advocating for a national regulator with resistance from B.C., Alberta, and Quebec. B.C. has recently softened to the idea, but Alberta and Quebec continue to oppose the implementation of a national regulator.

As recently as January 12 of this year a federal report lead by former Tory minister Tom Hockin was released that recommended a national regulator, including provisions meant to accommodate the concerns raised in western Canada and Quebec such as regional offices being established in Vancouver, Calgary, and Montreal and a provision to allow provinces to opt in to the single regulator.

There was also a recommendation for a market participant opt-in for registrants and issuers, who could elect to be regulated by the federal regulator. Our finance minister immediately responded by threatening legal action if a national regulator is implemented, claiming that it would be an infringement on provincial jurisdictions and that a regulator centralized in Ontario would not understand the unique market circumstances within Alberta.

In the 2009 federal budget Jim Flaherty stated that he would be tabling a federal securities act for Canada later in the year. When asked about the impacts of a national securities regulator on the passport system, Finance department officials stated that the draft legislation proposed in the Hockin report was based on Alberta's current securities legislation. Also, they estimated that it would take several years to implement Flaherty's plan.

There is no doubt that we need surveillance regulation governance, and it is interesting that the Alberta model is recognized by other provinces. We need to guarantee the security of Albertans' investments, and I don't think, as I say, we can shortchange the degree to which Alberta's investments require surveillance, require regulation. We don't want to see the types of fiascos that have occurred south of the border, so the debate over a single securities regulator or the strengthening of the governance of Alberta's securities through Bill 17, the Securities Amendment Act, 2009, is of utmost importance, Mr. Speaker.

I thank you for allowing me to participate in the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity a question, please.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions. Go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. To the hon. member. I saw over the weekend a cartoon in a national newspaper where two pirates were on the deck of their ship and one noted to the other one: bankers are giving us a bad name. Now, I heard, when you were giving your remarks, the members opposite were very concerned about overregulation of the financial sector.

I would like to note to the hon. member that in the budget that was just tabled here last week it indicates that there is $2.4 billion in losses to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. That's at least a half a billion dollars more than was anticipated earlier. There is $145 million in losses in the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, $141 million in losses to the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research endowment fund, and $258 million in losses to the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund. Now, many of these losses are as a result of investments that were located in the lower 48 states and in the European financial markets, where we know there was a regulatory system that was set up that was nothing more than a casino, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity: are you surprised that the government members across the way have such a cavalier attitude toward financial regulation when we see substantial losses in this year's budget?

Mr. Chase: I would be afraid to say, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, that nothing this government does surprises me, especially when it comes to the promise of transparency and accountability that the Premier ran on. Any type of surveillance, oversight, governance is viewed by this government as an intrusion in an individual's personal business.

I would suggest that given the fact that the United States has tried to recover with trillions of dollars of reinvestment, this is not an area that Alberta wants to venture into. We've had significant losses, in the billions. The government has incurred a deficit this year alone of $4.7 billion, and that doesn't take into account the numerous references that you made to a whole series of other debts, including the debts associated with the reorganization of the health ministry. It does not take into account the billions of dollars in P3 expenses that have yet to be paid out. It doesn't take into account the $7 billion plus money that this government owes eventually to teachers to cover the unfunded portion of their assumed liability. So I'm sorry to report to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that when it comes to oversight, this government doesn't have it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other member under the five minutes of comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona?

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'm sorry; is this on the bill directly or on the questions?

The Deputy Speaker: We still have time for questions.

Ms Notley: I don't actually have any further questions for the previous member. Sorry. I will wait until the next opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other member wish to join in the debate in second reading? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona again.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak very briefly to this bill. This bill is obviously designed to amend the Securities Act and to sort of carry on supporting the work with respect to the passport system that was initially negotiated, I believe, back in 2004. The work started then. Much of the work was done to amend the Securities Act through Bill 38 in the last session. My understanding is that of the two primary amendments that we'll be talking about here today, one is not quite consequential but house-keeping, and the other is a little bit less so in terms of its relation to the ability of the Securities Commission to respond to inconsistencies in securities regulations across the country as they might arise.

Speaking from a more global point of view, our caucus has already been on the record talking about our view of the passport system as a mechanism to streamline securities regulation across the country. We have made in the past, you know, two or three major, global points. First of all, we think, obviously, that if we are going to have an effective securities regulation system, there needs to be consistency throughout the country and that by having a patchwork of systems in each province, we create a lot of duplication and also run the risk of limiting trade, to some degree, and also of creating confusion and uncertainty in the business world. For that reason we continue to advocate for one national securities regulation system across the country of which, of course, Alberta would be a part.

Now, we know, as has been stated in the past in previous debates, that there are proposals out there that such a system would be nationally created and run somewhere out of Ontario. We've been on the record saying that's not the kind of approach that we think needs to be put in place but, rather, that there needs to be more work done on the part of the provinces to create one regulatory system with one system of rules, one system of applying those rules, and one mechanism for enforcing the rules across the board but that that one mechanism and that one system would ultimately be run by the provinces collectively, thereby ensuring that it doesn't become a mechanism for provinces to lose, say, over critical economic interests, where those might arise. That's the overall view of the way we think this should unfold. It's for that reason, then, that the passport system and efforts to put the passport system in place, if it's believed that that's where the efforts stop, are things that we have some difficulty supporting.

It has already been stated by pretty much every speaker – but it is always worth stating again – that with the incredible volatility of the financial markets over the last six months I don't think that most people would suggest that less regulation is the way to go or that there isn't an opportunity for us to do a better job of regulating our financial markets. I think there is. I think the majority of Albertans would agree that that would be a good thing to promote healthy, sustainable business practices across the country and, of course, here in Alberta. That's sort of our global approach to this.

That, of course, then links back to, you know, sort of the more substantive part of this bill, which is putting in place the opportunity for the Securities Commission director, I believe it is, to revoke or vary decisions that were previously made. I appreciate that that authority is being put in there in order to allow for dealing with the challenges that arise from a pan-Canadian system with a variety of different rules and regulations from province to province and that, in fact, that authority was something that came from the efforts that were put in place to negotiate the passport system. Again, it's fine. It makes sense for what it is that it's trying to achieve. I just don't think that what it's trying to achieve is good enough. In short, I don't think that we've set the bar high enough for ourselves and for Albertans and for Canadians in terms of providing a safe and secure investment climate for all of us.

The final piece of this act, of course, relates to the issue of, I understand, simply returning the power or the ability of a purchaser of securities or mutual funds to rescind their purchase within 48 hours of the purchase. My understanding is that this is in there because the federal government was unable to act as quickly as they should to ensure that that was there and that this is a right that was already there before. I haven't had a chance yet to look at whether or not we should be in fact enhancing that right somewhat but will look into that and offer additional comment at further points of the debate.

At this point this is our overall position on this bill. Nothing that's in here seems to fly in the face of a previous bill that we've already passed. Rather, it just simply stands to support a system which we don't believe is going far enough in ensuring an open, transparent, well-regulated investment climate not only in Alberta but across the country.

Those are all of my comments at this point. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: We still have five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not too often I stand up and try to help the opposition in this Assembly, but I would like some comment from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. She made some comments earlier on in her speech about, you know, not needing duplication of regulations and all of that sort of stuff. But if I recall, just last week when we were discussing – I don't remember what bill number it was – I believe it was the trade, investment, and labour mobility agreement amendment act, she perpetuated the exact opposite. I'm sorry, but I don't understand the inconsistencies in your opinions. Maybe you could shed some light on that.

Ms Notley: I'd be happy to. I think that comprehensive, public-interest-focused regulation is something that is an absolute necessity in certain areas of public discourse and in our society. There's no need to duplicate it, but there is a need to ensure that the regulations that are put in place go through a transparent, open, and democratic mechanism of debate and oversight and that once they are put in place, they can be administered in a way that is clear and understandable and that they are enforced in a way that is consistent.

My concern around TILMA wasn't that somehow I was seeking the duplication of regulations. What I am seeking in my opposition to TILMA is that we maintain our fundamental right here in this Assembly to make the kinds of decisions that from time to time will appear to us as being necessary in the public interest. My concern with TILMA was that we were giving that away.

That's very different from what we're dealing with here with the securities regulator because all we're suggesting is that when regulations are in place, there is no reason why you can't have a consistent form of applying them. What I was maintaining was that the province of Alberta would still have a key role to play in putting those rules in place. That's why I said that we don't support one national regulator because the province and the people of Alberta, through the province and through the government and through this Assembly, need to have input into what that regulatory framework looks like.

I'm quite happy with the idea of ensuring consistency across the board in certain areas, but you have to maintain the ability for the people of Alberta to have input on that level where possible. What the bill we discussed last week did was that it removed that ability. It gave that ability to private corporations, and it gave that ability to other provinces and then, ultimately, to an appeal panel over which this Assembly has no authority and then, finally, to the executive over which this Assembly is unable to exercise any authority vis-à-vis the way those decisions might ultimately be applied. So that's the difference.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This member has talked in her speech today about the need for openness and transparency, the need for Albertans to have an impact, to have the ability to consult with the Securities Commission. I find this somewhat ambiguous with her support for a national regulator. I want to specifically ask this member what she thinks about our oil and gas sector in this province. Does she feel that a national regulator would give adequate input for this sector in securities regulation, or is it her goal to simply shut this sector of our province down?

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Actually, I suspect what might ultimately happen is that this government's inability to come up with any kind of comprehensive, believable environmental system of regulation will ultimately have a much bigger impact on the oil and gas industry.

But just to clarify, I didn't ask for a national regulator. What I said was a consistent set of rules across the nation. I was suggesting that we would reject the idea of a national regulator in favour of a single set of rules that the province played a role in setting. So I think that may be where the member was confused.

I think that kind of answers the question. I don't believe there was anything I was saying that in any way suggests that we would be looking forward to having the oil and gas industry shut down by the securities commission or whatever it was that was being implied. It wasn't very clear.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand up, figuratively speaking, of course, and speak in favour of Bill 17, the passport system. I believe it brings us further along towards a systematic set of rules and agreements where people can evaluate the various securities that are coming to market and bring them out in a reasonably fair fashion throughout this nation. What I would say is that, you know, we should be continuing along the lines of simply going to a national securities regulator. Simply put, it eliminates a fair bit of duplication, a fair bit of what I would call, basically, redundancy.

Let's face it. I think the people who are actually practising in this area, lawyers as well as people who go from various jurisdiction to jurisdiction, would appreciate a common set of rules and dealing with one regulator instead of 13. At least, that's my perspective on the issue. I believe most people who practise in the area, who actually invest in the area, believe that it would be a more common-sense approach to doing things to bring about a more fair and even and actually understood securities system than the one that currently exists. I believe that a national securities regulator could provide the oversight needed, could provide the investment climate needed, and would be able to adapt, in fact, in a quicker fashion to various issues that occur throughout the securities industry.

Those are my comments. Again, I applaud us on the direction we're going, but if we can get a national securities regulator, I believe it would be one of those ideas whose time has come.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have five minutes for comments and questions. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. As the Liberal caucus whip I just want to ask the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo if he appreciates the opportunity to speak from his heart, from his soul, from his mind freely in this Legislature on issues of great controversy.

Mr. Hehr: Well, of course I do. It's an honour and a privilege to get to do what I do here, and I'm certain that most members of this House feel exactly the same way. You know, the neat thing about it is that you get to express a whole bunch of variances of opinion and add to the debate, and sometimes – sometimes – I even think that the other side listens. That's sort of the neat thing about it.

Mr. Denis: Sorry. What was that?

Mr. Hehr: Sometimes. I didn't say all the time. Sometimes. Hey, the same thing: I think sometimes we listen.

It is truly an honour and a privilege to do what we do here in the House.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 17 read a second time]

Bill 19 Land Assembly Project Area Act

[Adjourned debate March 17: Mr. Hayden]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we have been curious about Bill 19 from the start. It's a classic piece of enabling legislation. It enables the government, the Minister of Infrastructure, and the cabinet to do what they want when they want regarding land assembly in this province.

We look back at the history of government land assembly for large tracts of land. We look at the government's track record with the acquisition of the land for the Edmonton ring road and the Calgary ring road going back 30 years ago. They're very good roads. They're needed. They're necessary. But if you add up the total bill from acquisition through to the P3 construction, they've got to be the most expensive highways in, if not in Alberta, the entire country. Certainly, if you add up the bill from when the land was purchased to the construction phase, well, it's a lot of money.

There were statutes changed to have restricted development areas going back to the mid-70s to facilitate the acquisition of this land. Some of those statutes, if one looks closely, are still in existence. For instance, the Government Organization Act, schedule 5, certainly gives the government the authority and the power that they need, in my view, to assemble land for large-scale infrastructure projects. There is also the Expropriation Act.

There are a number of needs, certainly, for infrastructure projects from time to time, but this legislation is curious, to say the least. It has caused Albertans across the province to ask a lot of questions about why, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary. If you look at the series of public meetings that have occurred in central Alberta and northern Alberta, it's perhaps one of the most interesting and controversial pieces of legislation that the government has put forward to date in this session.

Now, we heard from the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake earlier, before Orders of the Day were called, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member presented a petition on behalf, I would assume, of constituents who were concerned about Bill 19. They wanted a series of public hearings. I think that is a very good idea, and we need to have a look at that in this Assembly.

What sort of controversy has the hon. Minister of Infrastructure created with this bill? Well, I'm just looking at an invitation that I received, and I would have been delighted to attend this meeting last week. It was in Innisfail at the Legion auditorium, and it was on April 8, starting at 7 o'clock in the evening. I understand the hon. minister was going to be there to present the government's position on Bill 19. I had to remain in the city and, of course, be part of the budget debates on aboriginal affairs, so I could not attend this meeting. The opposition, as the government members know, is going to be tied up in what we're calling budget estimates debates for the next month or so. But it would have been very interesting to have an opportunity to hear the minister explain to the concerned citizens how Bill 19 was not going to be controversial.

The format of this meeting was interesting. The organizer of this meeting, Mr. Glenn Norman, thought emotions might run high over the power and control that were to be implemented by this bill. There also seemed to be a concern that affected landowners needed answers, not political spin that goes on and on, wasting time.

I don't know what happened at this meeting. Maybe the minister could enlighten the House and enlighten the public on just what exactly happened there. I'm assuming that the hon. minister did attend in the end. Again, I was disappointed that I could not, but there is only so much time in a day. This letter that I received from the government committee chair, Mr. Glenn Norman of the Pine Lake surface rights action committee, is certainly reflective of the many calls and e-mails and letters that we have received regarding this bill.

Now, it started out as what I would describe as innocent legislation, but it has turned into, again, one of the most controversial bills that has come forward in this session. The devil is in the details. The devil is in the regulations. Much of this has been cut and pasted from other acts or other schedules of various acts, from what I can see. The amendments that have been brought forward by the minister certainly are interesting. We're not even in committee stage yet. We're probably going to get there quite soon. But even before the bill was debated at second reading, there was a series of amendments floated, shall I say, by the hon. minister to see if we could sort of come to an agreement on why this legislation is necessary.

Now, I do know that the government has plans for another series of ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary, further out. I do know that the government has plans for highway 2, or the QE II. There is talk of adding an additional lane going north and an additional lane going south and possibly making those lanes dedicated to heavy truck traffic. There is the need for a utility corridor north and south. There is a need for land that possibly could be used for a high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary with a stop at the Donut Mill in Red Deer. It has to stop at the Donut Mill in Red Deer.

Now, there are also ring roads being contemplated for Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Grande Prairie. I believe Fort McMurray is on the list. Certainly, Red Deer.

Mr. Chase: St. Albert.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member from Calgary-Varsity is absolutely correct. St. Albert. There is an interesting number of projects in the 20-year strategic capital plan that are not only on the Treasury Board website, they're also on the Minister of Infrastructure's website. I hope they're not having some sort of political wrangle over who's going to control that 20-year strategic plan, but I do notice that it's on both websites. I would urge all hon. members to have a look at that 20-year strategic plan because that strategic plan is the blueprint that Bill 19 is to implement.

Why do we need this bill? We have the strategic capital plan. We have existing legislation. I don't understand why this bill is necessary at this time other than that we can quickly go about our business without the embarrassment of an incident like we had the other summer in Rimbey, when licensed private detectives were caught spying on innocent citizens who were at a regulatory hearing regarding the expansion of a transmission line.

Now, we know that the transmission lines for electricity in this province have not been upgraded in a long period of time. We know the confusion and chaos that has been created because of electricity deregulation, and no one would invest in the transmission lines. We have significant bottlenecks, and if they're not fixed, there are going to be more brownouts and more blackouts than there already have been. We're not going to have energy emergency alerts. We're just going to have to phone folks and say, "Sorry; we don't have enough power for you" unless we get this fixed. There's an urgent need for utility corridors, for roads, for rights-of-way, for high-speed rail links.

But Bill 19 so that we can acquire all of these properties very quietly without risking the fire that turned out to be the Rimbey regulatory hearings, where a private detective was spying on innocent citizens participating in what should have been a democratic process, a regulatory hearing? After the embarrassment of that, I think, we have this bill. Now, there were no public hearings. There was no discussion that I'm aware of, Mr. Speaker, regarding Bill 19. It was just dropped quietly through the usual routine here in the Legislative Assembly. I think it's time that we had public hearings on this matter.

At this point in time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move an amendment to Bill 19. I have the amendment here. It was signed by Parliamentary Counsel on March 19, 2009. I will just take my seat while it's circulated to the hon. members.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we have on the table the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. So now on the amendment, please, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 19, Land Assembly Project Area Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on the Economy in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Mr. Mason: It'll never pass.

Mr. MacDonald: It might pass. I think we're offering the government a good political lifeline here, hon. member.

He distracted me. Now, this amendment, Mr. Speaker, would move Bill 19 to the Standing Committee on the Economy. This would allow the general public and MLAs to review further the legislation. We could have a debate. We could consult on the bill at this committee. We realize that it's an extremely controversial bill. Over the summer this committee could travel, maybe even go to the legion in Innisfail. We could go to any number of places in central Alberta. We could go to a community around Lesser Slave Lake, the Peace River district. We could go to Medicine Hat. We could have hearings, perhaps, in Edmonton or Calgary. That was the purpose of the policy field committees to start with.

The hon. Premier has already talked, as I said earlier, about amending Bill 19. Clearly, the government recognizes that in its current form the bill is problematic. Our reason for this amendment is that the widespread public concerns require the detailed study of this committee, and we need as Legislative Assembly members to hear directly from those who have issues with this legislation as it's currently drafted and presented to us in the Assembly. The standing committees, again, were set up for this very reason. Our amendment would certainly take advantage of that after the budget estimates are out of the way, and we get through the long lists of bills that need to be debated, discussed here. This could be a summer project for the Standing Committee on the Economy.

Landowners are seriously concerned about this bill. Everyone is concerned about this bill, and they're not satisfied to date with the answers that they have received. The bill, again, shows that there was a lack of consultation between the government and landowners before this bill was drafted. The lack of any time limits or limits to the areas controlled and the size of the punishments or penalties all concern many people across the province.

Now, the government has already talked, as I said earlier, about amending this bill. There were amendments; there was a press release, as I understand it. This shows even before we get to committee, hon. members, how poorly this legislation was drafted in the first place, and simple amendments aren't enough. We think it needs more public discussion, and that's why we want, Mr. Speaker, to refer this bill to hearings of an all-party committee, so that all Albertans, regardless of whether they're urban or rural, which area of the province they live in, and landowners from throughout the province can bring their issues forward, and we can deal with them fairly.

This amendment is necessary. We need to have a public, transparent, accountable process regarding this bill. I don't understand why the government, certainly, wouldn't support this amendment and have a good second look at this legislation before it proceeds any further in this House. Hopefully, we can hear the concerns of the landowners, and also, Mr. Speaker, we could start to restore public confidence in the legislative process, which has been, in my view, damaged by this attempt at legislation.

In conclusion, this is a very important bill. If the government was to stand this afternoon and table the regulations that are associated with this bill, then maybe this process wouldn't be necessary. But, again, Mr. Speaker, the details are in the regulations. Everything is to be done by regulation. This is only enabling legislation, which enables the government to do what it wants when it wants regardless of any of the consequences.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to give consideration to this amendment and send this bill off to the Standing Committee on the Economy so that they can hear directly from landowners and citizens who are concerned about this throughout the summer and report back, hopefully next fall, to the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Neither myself nor the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar are in the usual habit of saving this government's bacon or keeping them from hoisting themselves with their own petard, but this is exactly what we're trying to do with this amendment today. We're setting aside partisan politics to stand up for rural landowners, who have traditionally voted Conservative over the last 40 years. The fact that this government is ignoring such basic rights as landowner familial rights seems to me to be unbelievable.

The term "Hi, Jack" is no longer a greeting for the Minister of Infrastructure. It's an expression of how rural Albertans see the intent of this legislation. They see it as robbery. The minister can be very glad that to date he has escaped the pole, the tar, and the feathers that would have been brought out in earlier Alberta history, upon which he would be ridden out of town. The minister's attempts at this point to appease the concerns of rural landowners have fallen on deaf ears. They're not convinced by these amendments.

Now, let's look at some recent history. I would call it a government-forced sleepover. We spent over 30 hours, as I recall, debating Bill 46, which also dealt with landowner rights and this government's trampling upon them. During the forced sleepover this government put forward 24 amendments, trying to turn a flawed piece of legislation into something that we could sort of hold our noses and vote for. Of course, to a man, to a woman members of both opposition parties voted against Bill 46, and I recall during our sleepover the sleepwalking standing votes over how poorly the amendments were brought forward.

It was interesting, given all the government time on the debate of Bill 46, that no time was given for either Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Liberal caucus, or the third party to put forward amendments on Bill 46. What the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has done is, as he put it, throw a lifeline. He's given this government an opportunity to say: "Guess what? Consultation is important to us. Transparency and accountability, listening to our constituents' concerns are of importance to us."

The fact that we've had a few meetings in Innisfail and some other rural areas throughout the province has not convinced any of the individuals in attendance that the amendments proposed but yet to be discussed by the government members are going to solve the problems. They still see it as something left over from the Old West, where the minister of expropriation comes riding in on his black horse with his bandana drawn over his nose and says: it's time to move, family; git. This is exactly what is being brought forward and proposed. If the government believes in consultation, if it believes in the importance of maintaining its rural power base, if the rights of landowners are of any consequence to this government, if they want to move forward in any kind of smooth transition, whether it be for the bullet train, whether it be for the development of highways, whether it be for the development of power lines, let's look at what you've exhausted. Spies don't work. ERCB hearings have limited potential. Thank heavens the citizens of Tomahawk got a reprieve from having sour gas wells drilled in close proximity to their school and their community.

But what this government doesn't seem to get is the idea of negotiation versus a steamrolling attitude. For 40 years this government has had it good, but part of that goodness has been connected with the support and the listening, somewhat limited listening, I would suggest, to the will of the electorate. Now, keep in mind that on March 3, 2008, only 21 per cent of Alberta's eligible voters put this government into power, and the majority of those Albertans, of that 21 per cent, came from the rural base. So if the government is set on alienating rural voters, if there is some new policy of "we know best; we're omnipotent; we're omniscient; we'll tell you landowners how you should behave and how quickly you should pack your bag," if this is the new version of the Alberta civil war and the government is taking on the role of the carpetbaggers, then you'll reject this amendment, and you'll proceed at your peril.

It is given to you as a gift. It lets you off the hook. It allows you to do what is absolutely necessary, and that is to conduct hearings and not only conduct them but actually listen because to date you haven't been listening. It's a gift. You can reject it, but you reject it at your own peril.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to oppose what's being proposed here. We've had excellent input from Albertans over the past few months. We have tabled proposed amendments, that have been available to all members of this House, and I hope they took the opportunity to look at them. They, of course, are amendments that are aimed at looking after the concerns with respect to clarity, that people had spoken to us about, to provide greater certainty for landowners, and we're certain that they will address their main concerns.

I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, to state that Bill 19 does not create additional land acquisition powers for government. It improves the process that was used to assemble land for the ring roads in the past. The important features, of course, are that compensation can be triggered by the landowners with options for them that are much fairer. The main change in this legislation is to make public consultation mandatory, and to consult about making consultation with landowners mandatory is not a good use of this House's time.

I ask members to defeat this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be very brief. I believe that we ought to reject this amendment proposed by the Member for Calgary-Varsity. The minister and many members of caucus, in fact, have bent over backwards to consult with Albertans, particularly rural Albertans, and constituents with respect to this matter. They've attended many, many meetings throughout the province. I believe the minister has listened to the criticisms, and I think that if the hon. members who are opposed to the bill or are critical of the bill and who support the amendment would be patient and wait till the matter goes to Committee of the Whole, some positive developments may be forthcoming, and perhaps the criticisms could be dealt with.

I do want also, Mr. Speaker, to refresh the memory of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity with respect to what he termed the forced sleepover. That was not due to the members of the government caucus. In fact, it was the former Member for Calgary-Elbow and the Member for Calgary-Currie who stood in this House repeatedly and refused unanimous consent to abbreviate and truncate the ringing of the bells in this House, as a consequence of which we spent at least four to five hours listening to bells ring and waiting to have votes on numerous amendments. It certainly wasn't the members of government caucus that were to blame for an all-night session over Bill 46.

Those are my comments, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a great opportunity to rise and speak to this amendment, and I speak in favour of this amendment.

I just do have to respond to that last comment because, of course, the reason we were here overnight was because this government, effectively, brought in closure and time limited that debate. That's why we were here overnight: because there was a decision to limit debate by the government.

Anyway, that's not what I'm talking about. I'm here to talk about this proposal to send Bill 19 to committee for consideration. I think that it's quite a reasonable proposal. The Minister of Infrastructure has outlined some of the objectives which he seeks to achieve through this bill in terms of the public interest, which is ultimately served through the acquisition of certain land rights with respect to certain projects. Of course, there is a public interest to the acquisition of certain land rights with respect to certain projects, whether we're talking about transportation or municipal growth or whatever the case may be, but that always has to be balanced against the individual rights of people whose rights would be negated or diminished through the pursuit of the public rights.

I find it ironic that I'm in this position, advocating this, because the government has decided to adopt a position of being big government and just sort of wholeheartedly sweeping in and taking what they need with limited consultation or negotiation with those from whom they take it.

This bill is an interesting bill in that it really has very effectively united people of all ends and places, even in the middle, on the political spectrum. It's really quite remarkable how many Albertans this minister has managed to anger through this particular piece of legislation. One of the reasons I think that this happened – and I suspect or I'm almost sure, in fact, that the government was more than a little surprised by the outcry which this legislation created. I would suggest that the reason for that is directly linked to the motion that we are dealing with right now, which is that there was really nowhere near the kind of consultation that should have been undertaken with respect to this piece of legislation.

You know, we have claims that there was consultation with municipalities and that there was consultation with the cities in particular as well as with the overall municipal boards. I understand that as far as the AUMA goes, not everybody there felt that it was sufficiently consulted, and that may have something to do with the internal process of the AUMA. I don't know. Certainly, we've heard that members of the AUMA don't believe that they were fully consulted.

Then, of course, landowner groups themselves were shocked to discover that this piece of legislation was going through, and it didn't appear as though there was any consultation with them as well.

As well, environmental groups are expressing a great deal of concern about this legislation and the way in which it would effectively allow this government, which, let's face it, has historically been likely to make decisions that favour very large projects in lieu of local people that are working to try and protect the sanctity and the sustainability of their community, of their land, of their place of residence – in that way there's also concern that this is yet another tool in the tool belt of the government to override environmental concerns that can sometimes come into play with respect to proposed development.

Going back to the question of whether or not it would be valuable for this particular piece of legislation to be referred to a committee and subject to the kind of consultation and consideration that would occur in that setting, you know, government speakers have talked about the fact that several amendments were presented by the minister. Maybe they've been tabled; I can't remember now. Certainly, amendments to the legislation have been put out publicly by the minister as things that he would support. But I think that when you consider that the bill was introduced and that then there was this completely surprising outcry from Albertans and that then suddenly we have – I'm not exactly sure how many – I believe four amendments appear from the minister, it's sort of like governance on the back of a napkin. It's sort of like: "We put this piece of legislation out there. We were overwhelmed by how many different people we managed to anger, so we will quickly, very quickly craft four more amendments, and hopefully that will settle the waters enough to get this thing through."

I have to say that I'm very concerned that those amendments may well have been crafted with the same thought and the same planning and the same level of consultation and the same analysis that the original bill was crafted with. I can't imagine that there wouldn't be, actually, people within the ministry itself who would agree that further consultation and further analysis are actually required in order to do the best job possible for all Albertans.

I'll also say, of course, that the proposed amendments that have been put forward don't really address the majority of the concerns that we've heard in our NDP caucus from Albertans about this piece of legislation. Landowners whose lands are a part of a project area still wouldn't get any form of compensation for the development restrictions being placed on their land. There is still no limit on how long the land can be placed under a project area order, and the government can cancel the project area order at any time without penalty. It's ironic that this is supposed to be a piece of legislation that will facilitate consultation, yet there is a real resistance to consulting at this point. There have been only half measures with respect to consulting prior to its introduction, and now the government is talking about trying to avoid consultation through the committee process, yet ironically we're told that this legislation is about enabling consultation. So, yeah, somewhere something is missing.

I would suggest that even though it may theoretically be to enable consultation, we know that with the act as it now sits, notwithstanding any amendments that might come forward from what we've heard from the minister, the details of the consultation process are still left to regulation, so we have no idea what level of transparency we will or will not end up with at the end of this. The minister still has the power to choose which appeal body will hear an appeal of an enforcement order on a case-by-case basis. We still have the ability of the government to seek an injunction for someone who appears to be "about" to commit an offence, which is one of the most entertaining penalties or sections I've ever come across. I'm not exactly sure how one would analyze that from a legal perspective. I imagine some rather entertaining and humorous representations being made in those hearings.

As we've suggested, ultimately those amendments that have been put forward really don't address the primary concerns that have been articulated by landowners to our caucus and as well, I know, to the government. I don't think they go far enough. I think there's an opportunity for us to do a better job on this bill or, alternatively, to realize that it's not fixable and start over. In any event, we can't know until there's an opportunity for us to meet with people who are directly impacted and get much more comprehensive advice about the rationale behind it and how to address the concerns that have been rightly raised by landowners across the province.

You know, in the House the leader of the third party has talked about the wide-ranging penalty options that this bill would give the government with respect to someone who may well appear to be about to breach the legislation. I'm not sure – I haven't had a chance to read it that closely – if the person who appears to be about to be in contravention of the legislation is subject to or eligible for up to two years of imprisonment. That just sounds quite outrageous to me, frankly. In any event, even if the person who appears to be about to be in contravention of the act isn't necessarily the one that is eligible for imprisonment of up to two years or a fine of $100,000, then certainly other people who haven't been consulted with respect to the use of their land and the significant impact on the value of their land that this legislation would put into place are still subject to penalties that, frankly, it doesn't appear to me that large companies repeatedly exploiting our environment are subject to.

The penalties here would be greater than they would be if you were, for instance, to repeatedly lie to the ministry or dump toxic waste into a river, all those kinds of things. I believe that it may well be the case, the two-year imprisonment. I'm not sure if there is the capacity for us to imprison people for repeatedly dumping toxic chemicals into our water system and not reporting, but it does appear that we could imprison somebody who appears to be about to act in some way that might possibly be in breach of this legislation.

This is why we think that proceeding to have this piece of legislation referred to a committee for more thorough and comprehensive consideration of the many very significant implications that it brings to bear on property rights in the province is a good thing, and it is for that reason that I would support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on the amendment.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise in support of the amendment to Bill 19. Enough has been said about Bill 19. There are government amendments coming. If it was such a good bill, you know, we wouldn't need to have any amendments come forward. I think it was just hastily done and put forward.

Sure, you know, there is a lot of development that has to go. We need the ring roads. We need the utility corridors. We need the rights-of-way. We cannot stop the progress, but we have to do everything in such a way that it is kind of a win-win situation for all of the stakeholders. There's no doubt that we need better utility transportation corridors in Alberta, and we have to have better planning for growth and development. All these utility corridors, ring roads, highways, even the bullet train, if we get it some day, between Calgary and Edmonton, are going to play a key role in the progress of our province and, in turn, in Canada.

This bill is going to have a lot of impact on landowners, on the rights-of-way. If land is currently being used for agricultural purposes and we want to put a highway through it, it's going to have a big impact on the farmer. If a transmission tower is going up, to build a transmission tower, it may not have that big of an impact. There are so many ways that landowners are, you know, being affected by this bill.

This has become an extremely controversial bill, like Bill 46, where the rights of the landowners were being trampled on. You know, it was just like taking control of their land. This will provide limitless government restriction on privately held land for the purpose of future development. I think, you know, there was no time limit when it was going to be done. Let's say that if a person was living in a house and the government was acquiring their land four years down the road and they put the control order in, then their life is put on hold. They may not be able to do anything to the property. They may not get any offers. Then four or five years down the road the government says: "No. We don't need your land." There's a big stigma attached to the property.

The same goes for a business. If somebody owns a business on the land and then four, five years down the road the government says, "No, we don't need it," those poor people's lives have been on hold, and they could have probably, you know, done better things had they got out in time, sold their property on time.

There are so many issues with Bill 19. I think that had it been very well thought out to begin with, the minister wouldn't need to bring any amendments to the bill. This amendment, I think, is going further to let cooler heads prevail. Over the summer let's do the consultation with the stakeholders. And all those amendments coming up: you know, we can have discussions on those amendments, too. Government can put forward their position with the landowners, saying: "Okay. This is what we are doing to improve that bill further." That will pacify their concerns, too, on the bill. It is very important that this bill should be taken to Albertans for a full consultation. That will help a long way to correct what has been hastily put together.

For those reasons I support the amendment put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think we should all support the amendment and send this bill to the Standing Committee on the Economy in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to this amendment to Bill 19. As I understand it, the amendment will also have the effect of closing debate on second reading of the bill itself, so I'm going to take the opportunity to address myself to the bill generally as well.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 19, in my view, is one of the most ill-advised pieces of legislation that this government has brought forward in the time that I've been here. The bill broadly gives the government, in my view, too much control over land at the expense of the rights of landowners in this province. I find it ironic in a way that it's the

New Democrat opposition that is standing up and has stood up from the beginning for the rights of property owners in this province against a Conservative government whose alleged ideology is strongly in defence of property rights. But you wouldn't know that from this bill.

I want to indicate that I think it's interesting that previous governments, Conservative governments and Social Credit governments, have been able to manage periods of rapid economic growth in this province without this type of legislation. They've been able to make it work, and this government has not. Their answer is to give themselves more power, and I don't think that that's warranted in this particular case. I want to deal with the amendments that the government has brought forward as well because the government has made the claim that these amendments have essentially drawn the teeth of the bill and made it into a very docile and somewhat warm and fuzzy piece of legislation that people don't have to be worried about.

I'd like to deal a little bit with the government amendments. They have placed an emphasis on consultation provisions, and I think that this particular change is laughable. All the government is proposing to do is take the same provisions about consultation – and the wording even is identical except for the addition of the second amendment, which is a bit different – and put them in their own section with their own title. This is just a matter of optics, and it involves no legislative change. The main problem with this section remains, which is that though it requires landowner consultation, there are no details given about how that consultation will take place, and that issue is not addressed by this change.

Secondly, there is a time limit for the government to approve a project area, and that would place a two-year limit on the government to complete consultations and make a decision on whether to approve the project area. That amendment requires the government to diligently pursue a project and limits the period of uncertainty for affected landowners while the government decides whether to approve a proposed project area. It may be an improvement because it keeps the consultation process from dragging on too long, although two years is a very long time, and keeps people whose land is being considered for a project from being up in the air for more than two years. However, it's not the time limit that landowners have been asking for.

People want a time limit on how long an area of land can be designated as a project area before the government actually goes ahead with their project. The limit on the consultation period, Mr. Speaker, is fine, but it allows the government to continue to freeze the land indefinitely with no guarantee of when the development will happen or if it will happen at all. The government can cancel the project at any time without consequence. The government may try to say that this amendment addresses people's concerns about the lack of timelines in the bill, but it does not.

The third point in terms of government amendments that I'd like to address is the purchase of land provisions. That would require the government to enter into negotiation to purchase a landowner's land in an approved project at the request of the landowner, and the compensation will be based on market value. Now, this proposed amendment does address a problem in the original bill, so this amendment would be a positive change. The ministry has insisted that it would be prepared to buy any land that was part of a project from day one, but this was never enshrined in the legislation. This amendment will change that, and it will guarantee that landowners are always able to sell their land at any point in the process, so that's a positive thing.

The fourth is the removal of section 13. The government has said that section 13 has been misinterpreted to mean that Bill 19 overrides the Expropriation Act. To eliminate the confusion, the government has suggested that they would remove that. This is really just a question of clarification. The removal of section 13, however, is a matter of optics and doesn't change anything in the legislation.

There are a number of things that the government amendments have not addressed. Landowners whose land is part of a project area still do not get any form of compensation for the development restrictions placed on their land. There is no limit on how long land can be under a project order, and the government can cancel a project order at any time without penalty. The details of the consultation processes are still left to regulation, belying the government's claim that this increases transparency. The minister still has the power to choose which appeal body will hear an appeal of an enforcement order, giving him inappropriate influence over the hearing and ruling on the appeal. An injunction can still be sought for someone who "appears" to be "about" to commit an offence. Finally, these proposed changes do not remedy the fact that no landowners were consulted in drafting the bill. These amendments do not address the concerns of Alberta landowners or of the NDP caucus.

Mr. Speaker, if I can turn to the amendment, I suggest that the amendment by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is appropriate and timely. We have established these standing committees so that we can consult with the public on pieces of legislation, particularly where there are a number of issues that need to be resolved. This particular piece of legislation, I think, fits that intention to a T. There's a great deal of concern about this bill and the provisions in it, and I do not believe that these have been assuaged entirely by the government's amendments or by their propaganda campaign among landowners in the province.

I think that an all-party committee which could hold public hearings on the act and identify concerns and identify ways that these concerns can be addressed is a very appropriate thing, so I will be supporting the amendment that has been proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I think it's a good suggestion and that we could all benefit by some consultation with the people of this province on this issue. I would further suggest that very serious concerns among a great many Alberta landowners and others remain. I think that the committee could do some good work with respect to that, and I encourage members to support it.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I just want to say that I'm surprised that the government requires this power and requires this authority in order to make this province work. I do not see the difficulties in the face of any competent government in making sure that there's timely development of this province economically, agriculturally, and in any other way. If the government had enough foresight and ability to plan and was as transparent as it would like Albertans to believe, I think we could make this province work for all of us without resorting to draconian legislation that tramples on the rights of property owners in this province.

I'm proud to say that Alberta's NDP will stand up for people's legitimate property rights against the excesses of a government that wants to develop the province often in ways that the people of the province don't wish. We can look at the terrible black eye in the tar sands. We could look at the development potential of nuclear power or attempts to foist power lines on people without appropriate consultation and, in fact, the government's agencies using spying to undermine the legitimate activities of people who dissent from the government's direction. These are not things that I think the government should be proud of. They're not democratic, and they are certainly not transparent or open. They, in fact, smack of a government that, in my view, is becoming increasingly not only secretive but authoritarian as well and less tolerant of dissent and unwilling to brook any disagreement with its plans in order to advance the interests of its friends, whether they be a power company, a nuclear power company, an oil company, or whatever. That's the crowd the government runs with, Mr. Speaker, and people have to be very careful about getting in their way.

I think we would learn a great deal by passing this motion, by having public hearings with respect to this bill, and I suspect that we would end up with a much better, stronger, open, and democratic bill than what is before us today, Mr. Speaker, so I'd urge all members to support the amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 19 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We shall now go back to the debate on second reading of Bill 19. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I believe that everyone has spoken.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, we have some procedure. Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, do you wish to speak?

Mr. Chase: I wish to speak to Bill 19, yes, if I may be permitted to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Chase: I'll be brief and look forward to answers or responses from the Minister of Infrastructure.

We did our best in terms of putting forward an amendment, which was very much shot down by all government members present, which clearly indicates to landowners where this government stands, the speed that they believe this bill necessitates, the rush to expropriate. Basically, the race is on.

I do not understand why it's more important to get something done fast rather than get something done well. I do recall with regard to Bill 46 attending public hearings, one out in Ponoka and another in Camrose. There was a mood of unrest, particularly in Ponoka, where I accompanied the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Landowners were extremely concerned about the government's ignoring of surface rights and perceiving what they saw was in the interests of power companies, or you could substitute any other industrial private enterprise.

I remember the number of people who asked the representative for Ponoka to justify the reasoning behind the bill. I also remember driving down the highway and seeing the very large signs that had been erected along the way: kill Bill 46. So I don't understand why the government is wishing to rush ahead with such limited consultation on a bill that is going to impact, as the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall explained, the progress of this province. We want a mechanism that does things right, a mechanism that sort of balances consultation with collaboration. Right now we have neither.

The consultation, what little there has been, has been very unsatisfactory. From the reports of the few meetings that have been held, there was tremendous anger demonstrated towards the government. In Camrose similar concerns were expressed over Bill 46: that the government wasn't listening, that the government had their own agenda. There have been so many circumstances where the government has taken more land than they required and then basically flipped the land. Having purchased the land at a large cost in terms of taxpayer dollars, they then flipped it, and instead of traditional real estate practices and getting an increase on their initial investment, they sold it considerably below market value frequently around ring roads to individuals who then subdivided the land and made tremendous profit at the expense of taxpayers.

Now, Bill 19 seeks to move forward and create a balance between individual rights and collective rights. You know, we don't live in a world where everything is always wonderful, where everybody comes to agreement, but what Bill 19 proposes to do as a resolutionary process does not protect individuals. It puts the government in a position of basically being a bully, dictating how the rules are going to be applied. It doesn't matter whether the family has lived on the land for generations. That's not taken into consideration. If the government has their eyes on a piece of land, according to Bill 19 they're going to get it one way or another. The various ways the government has allowed, whether it be the spying or the refusal to hold hearings, is not only a concern to members of the opposition, but it's a concern to all Albertans that they won't have a fair hearing process.

I referenced, when talking about the amendment, what happened in the little village of Tomahawk and the fact that the evacuation in case of a sour gas well blowout would have compromised any of the safety services because the evacuation area included within it the fire department. Now, eventually, much to the relief of the citizens of Tomahawk, especially those whose children were attending the school, the company itself backed away. It wasn't an ERCB ruling, as I recall, but it was the company's choice. I appreciate the fact that the company was being a good citizen and basically cutting their losses.

We experienced in Calgary a lengthy hearing with Compton, and the CEO of Compton said that the chances of a sour gas well blowout were the square root of zero. The government is showing similar arrogance by believing that they know best. This government, on one hand, will get after us for talking about governance, about oversight, about stewardship, yet, on the other hand, they will be very overpowering in their desire to dictate to Albertans, to landowners how limited their actual rights are.

The business of holding the land for two years as opposed to four years before some resolution is required is only a slight improvement. As the hon. leader of the third party and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, the idea of putting people's lives on hold for an indeterminate time or a determinate time in the case of two years is not acceptable. If the government inconveniences the landowner and then chooses an alternate route, within Bill 19 I don't see any clauses offering a significant amount of the equivalent of damages or compensation for the inconvenience and the sleepless nights the landowners have faced as the government's shadow approached nearer and nearer to their land.

Bill 19 is flawed. It's unfortunate for the 36 members of the government who are on record today as supporting what would be looked at as speed as opposed to a thoughtful procedure; it must be very disheartening. If the government in its wisdom or lack thereof decides to hold another rural consultation or public forum, I'm sure that similar types of anger will be shown as what bubbled up over Bill 46. I think there was an accusation of a senior taking a swat at one of the ERCB officials, and the hearings in that particular case were cancelled because there was a perceived danger for the government regulators, the participants.

I would like to think that there would be a peaceful, collaborative, collegial conclusion to Bill 19. I for one have stood up in this Legislature and praised the notion of the rapid rail and reducing the carnage on highway 2. Of course, anyone who's representing a southern locale also has vested interests in making this highway more secure, and that's what the rapid rail project would accomplish.

The government has a couple of choices in terms of using the CP right-of-way or making deals with landowners along the way. Regardless of the route they eventually choose – and the residents of Red Deer would hope that they would choose the route that goes by the airport as they've already acquired land for the building of the railroad station there; obviously, that is their preference – hopefully they do choose sooner rather than later to build this rapid rail system as maybe an extension of the Green TRIP, which, unfortunately, has got stalled if not completely cancelled.

We're here as representatives of a democratic system of government where no matter who you are, if you have landed immigrant status, if you're over 18 years of age, you have the right to express an opinion, but Bill 19, like its predecessor Bill 46, very much diminishes your right as a landowning individual to have your say. The government holds all the cards. The government directs the hearing process, the government sets the rules in regulation as opposed to legislation, and the government dictates as opposed to collaborates, and this, unfortunately, is the way more and more legislation is going in this House. We see things moving from discussion, from legislation, into regulation. What's the point of us being here as 83 elected members if there's a predetermined result? What's happened to democracy in Alberta? Bill 19 denies it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, would you like to close debate before I call the vote, hon. minister?

Mr. Hayden: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, in closing debate. Thank you very much. I want to thank the hon. members for their interest and their comments. There has been a lot of discussion in the Legislature and throughout Alberta. My colleagues and I have been listening to Albertans and speaking with them all across the province.

I was very pleased that just a couple of weeks ago the association that represents all of the rural municipalities in the province invited me to speak to their membership because of the inaccuracies and the misrepresentations that have been made around the province with respect to this bill that indeed, Mr. Speaker, have frightened landowners. They had before them a resolution to delay this bill, but after they had the opportunity to ask questions – and they asked questions until all the questions were asked – and the presentation was made, they overwhelmingly rejected the idea that we should delay moving forward with a bill that mandates consultation with landowners, writes out very plainly that there are a number of options with respect to compensation, and puts clarity and plain language in the need for this province to plan ahead and do these processes properly.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is about protecting Alberta property owners. It's about involving them in the system and consulting them, and I'm very proud to have been a part of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 6 Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to provide the committee with information on Bill 6, the Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009. The amendments to the PCHAD legislation build on the program's positive performance over the past two and a half years and are based on input from stakeholders. These stakeholders range from children who have been through the program to their parents and guardians, AADAC staff, protective safe house staff, police forces, court services staff, and children's services.

The amendments address six key areas: lengthening the maximum confinement period from five to 10 days with authority for the court to further extend the confinement period for an additional five days when warranted; addressing discharge issues, including discharge for the purpose of transferring a child from PCHAD into a voluntary program where appropriate; clarifying the role of parents and guardians in better supporting families; easing police transportation pressures; broadening the process for reviewing PCHAD court orders; and providing for the expiry of PCHAD orders.

The PCHAD legislation came into effect on July 1, 2006. Since its introduction more than 1,500 children have been through the program. The amendments seek to better support children and their families, which is why an information process is being introduced. Over the course of this program's operation it has become apparent that some parents and guardians are accessing PCHAD court orders as a first step in addressing a child's drug use problems. These parents and guardians are not always aware of the other programs and supports available to assist their child and their family.

In response, the amendments require that before an application can be made for a PCHAD order, the applicant must attend an information session that will explain what PCHAD does and what it does not do, help parents and guardians determine whether this is the right program for their child, and provide parents and guardians with information on other programs and services that may be better suited to their needs or that may provide additional support.

The proposed amendments are also designed to make the court process more accessible. For example, a child, the parent or guardian of the child, or the PCHAD co-ordinator will be able to apply to the court for a review of the order. The review may be about the appropriateness of the order or the need to further extend the program for up to five additional days. The court will be authorized to permit evidence to be heard by telephone, audio-visually, or by means satisfactory to the court. Greater flexibility in hearing evidence will enable the participation of all interested persons. It improves access to the court and enables the court to hear from all sides before reaching a decision. It is a practical step in improving access and guarding the rights of the child.

Another practical measure is the amendment addressing police assistance with transportation of a child. In some cases undue pressure was being placed on some police services to apprehend and convey a child to a protective safe house. While police involvement may be required in some cases, it is not always necessary. To alleviate pressure on police forces and still properly support families, provision is made for police to assist the family, which will not always require full apprehension and conveyance. This is important on a number of fronts. It is necessary to ensure police services are available when required, but it also tailors police assistance to what is actually required. Providing for police support when necessary and tailoring the support to specific circumstances maintains important and appropriate support for families. The moderate use of police services is also important in providing a measured response to children who enter PCHAD.

During second reading there was a concern raised regarding the confinement period only being extended to 10 days or possibly 15 days. There was a suggestion that the confinement period should be much longer. In response, I can advise that the 10- to 15-day time period aligns the PCHAD program with other youth treatment programs offered by AADAC. The amendments propose a five- to 10-day extension to the confinement period so that children in the program can be provided with more stabilized services. Experiences with other addiction programs for youth indicate that the proposed time period is appropriate. Furthermore, PCHAD is a specialized program, and it is important to balance program objectives with the rights and interests of the children involved. The confinement period must be kept to a reasonable period.

There was also concern about whether children in the PCHAD program are or will be referred to treatment programs that are not accredited or that are operated by untrained staff. The bill does not contemplate that approach, nor has that approach been part of the program. Under PCHAD assessment, detoxification, and stabilization services are provided by trained AADAC staff. Residential services are specifically contracted through AADAC to youth facilities that are accredited to provide custodial care and supervision. The program is regulated under the PCHAD legislation, which specifically obliges the PCHAD co-ordinator to provide these services.

With regard to comments claiming that there are insufficient programs for PCHAD youth to access, PCHAD youth and their family members are accessing AADAC treatment services post-PCHAD at a higher rate than children and families who attend voluntary youth programs. Youth can continue with voluntary detoxification and residential treatment programs that best suit their needs. These programs may include therapeutic wilderness programs, residential addiction and mental health care programs, intensive day treatment programs, or outpatient services.

Some suggestions were made in second reading that the number of youth services beds has been reduced. However, there were 68 beds for youth in July 2006, and there are 69 today. Further, the integration of AADAC into Alberta Health Services will provide stronger addiction and mental health programming. The move will make more facilities and a larger pool of qualified health professionals available to support youth addiction and overall mental health programming.

I am confident that these amendments coupled with Alberta Health Services' province-wide health services mandate and this government's commitment to addiction and mental health programming as outlined in the children's mental health plan will result in improved youth addiction services. As I noted during second reading, this is a specialized initiative that is designed to improve the safety, security, and well-being of children and families in Alberta. It speaks to the responsibility of families, communities, and this Assembly to help children in need overcome significant alcohol and drug abuse. These amendments reinforce this initiative and will better support children and their families in the program, ease undue pressure on police forces, and better facilitate the court process.

I ask all members to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate, as I stated in second reading, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek bringing forward Bill 6, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009, PCADAA. I want this thing to work every bit as much as the minister wants it to work. Because I believe there have to be facilities available and that there has to be a reporting as to the success of the program, I am putting forward an amendment, which I would ask the pages to deliver to your desk, Mr. Chair, and to then distribute to all members. I'll wait for that distribution to take place before speaking to the amendment.

The Acting Chair: We'll just give the pages a moment to circulate that amendment. We'll refer to this amendment as A1.

You may proceed.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. What I am proposing under amendment A1 to Bill 6, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009, is as follows. I am moving that Bill 6, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009, be amended in section 11, in the proposed section 10, by adding the following after subsection (2):

- (3) On or before April 1 each year, the Co-ordinator shall prepare and submit an annual report to the Minister respecting;
 - (a) the exercise of the duties and functions of the Co-ordinator, and

- (b) the availability of treatment programs and services, and the level of staffing to support such programs and services, for children who are subject to protection orders under this Act.
- (4) Within 14 days of receiving a report under subsection (3), the Minister shall table it in the Assembly if it is then sitting, or if it is not then sitting, within 14 days of the next sitting, at which time the report automatically stands referred to the appropriate Policy Field Committee established by the Legislative Assembly.
- (5) When a report is referred under subsection (4), the Policy Field Committee shall promptly consider it and report back to the Assembly within 3 months.

What I am hoping to achieve by what I hope is interpreted as a friendly amendment is to put some operating dates and some co-ordinating details to this bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek and myself and anyone who has any kind of connection to children, particularly those suffering the vulnerability to addictions, want whatever the intervention is to be successful. My concern is that extending a five- to a 10-day program is the equivalent of almost a catch-and-release circumstance. We recognize the addiction problems, we bring the addicted individual and their family into a resolution, but at the end of that 10-day period, if there is no program to which we then would refer the individual for further treatment, then I don't believe the intervention has any chance of being successful.

The main part of this amendment in section (3)(b) talks about "the availability of treatment programs and services, and the level of staffing to support such programs and services, for children who are subject to protection orders under this Act." Unless we have a professionally accredited institution or service to which we refer these children, then our best laid intentions are not going to account for much. If we simply catch them but we don't treat them, this five- to 10-day period, I'm assuming, is an entry into treatment.

What I'm requiring or suggesting is that there are reporting periods, there is a report card for the program, there are conditions to make the program successful. I've suggested April 1 because under normal circumstances the Legislature is on at that time. I've recognized the importance of the minister, who will receive the report first and, you know, will have two weeks to look over the report before tabling it.

I've also asked that besides the minister having reviewed the report, to recognize that there are treatment facilities to whom the children can be referred, and I'm talking about accredited, clinically staffed, educated individuals looking after the treatment beds.

If all of those conditions can be fulfilled, I'm asking for another layer of oversight, and that's the Legislative Assembly. I'm also asking that a judgment be made not only by the minister but that members of the Legislature have a chance to look at the document. If they see concerns, if they think things are going well or if they have concerns, then within the standing policy field committees that have been established, all-party representation, within a three-month period there is an actual review.

I believe that this is a very soft, nonintrusive amendment which is asking for structure. It's attempting to guarantee that the reasons for apprehending the children, intervening in their lives in the first place, will meet with success. Just simply having a bill but not having the programs of referral is not going to achieve the outcomes that either the mover of the bill or other members had in mind, whether they have similar concerns as I do, having been a teacher previously or in my role in Children and Youth Services. I believe that we all want the best for children, and through this amendment I'm attempting to structure that referral process.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to introduce the amendment. I look forward to discussion with regard to it.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I've listened very intently to the mover of the amendment, and I can honestly say without any question whatsoever that we as a government are not prepared to accept this amendment. What the member is recommending is redundant and very elusive to the fact, which I find very fascinating, over the last several weeks about this uncredited treatment centre. I know that he is referring to AARC, the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre.

You know, I promised the minister that I wasn't going to get into a great deal of debate about this particular issue, but I think it's important to realize the fact that the information that this particular member has gotten has been on a documentary that CBC put forward on a Friday night. I had actually decided to watch that particular documentary on CBC, and I've never ever in my life seen anything so blatantly one sided and cruel and vicious and mean as that particular documentary was on AARC.

Now, you know, Mr. Chairman, I can tell you that I and many members in this Assembly have been supporters of AARC over the last I don't know how long. I can't even count how many graduations I've been to at AARC. I always say when I go to another graduation at AARC that I'm not going to cry, and I end up crying anyhow because of listening to not only the child that's been through the program but the parents, the siblings, and the whole family involved in the process of healing.

I will share with the Assembly an incident that happened to my best friend's son. In coming over to talk to my husband and me and trying to explain to us why they haven't kept in touch with us and dealing with a very addicted son at that time, we spoke for hours. I said, "Well, what can we do for you?" And she said, "How about giving us a hug?" Their son went through AARC. That was probably a 10-month period, and I can only tell you what that particular place did for their son and their family.

So, Mr. Chair, I wish the hon. member. . .

The Acting Chair: If I could remind the member that we are speaking on amendment A1.

Mrs. Forsyth: I am speaking on the amendment, only I'm speaking to the amendment honestly instead of elusively like this particular member. The answer is, Mr. Chairman, that the government is not prepared to accept this amendment.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I listened to that refusal, if I could call it that, with interest, to say the least.

Certainly, dealing directly with amendment A1, this amendment to Bill 6, one has to look at these changes to the drug abuse program that had been described earlier by previous speakers. These potential amendments will force young adults with addictions into safe houses for up to two weeks and a day. I think that in light of what we've heard initially with this discussion and initially with the bill, this seems to be a work-in-progress. It's a positive step. I know there are issues around rights, but I think that in light of what has gone on in communities across this province, this legislation was needed.

Specifically to this amendment. Now, why would we have on or before April 1 of each year the co-ordinator preparing and submitting an annual report to the minister respecting “the exercise of the duties and functions of the Co-ordinator” and looking at “the availability of treatment programs and services, and the level of staffing to support such programs and services, for children who are subject to protection orders under this Act”? Well, I think we should support this amendment if for no other reason than the past behaviours of some children’s authorities and the minister of children’s services.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona can perhaps correct me if my memory is deficient, but up in the northwest corner of the province I think there were issues around timely reporting of information that was almost a statutory obligation that that information be provided. It wasn’t done in a timely fashion. In my recollection certainly it was not done in a timely fashion. There had been some issues that had been overlooked.

Now, for the hon. Member for Fish Creek to suggest that there’s some sort of conspiracy by the Member for Calgary-Varsity in proposing this amendment is, I think, to put it politely, Mr. Chairman, ridiculous. I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has – in light of what happened in other departments, with other children’s authorities, this is another rung in the ladder of accountability. I think it is a very good and sound and reasoned amendment, and it should be supported by all hon. members of this House.

In conclusion, I would like to remind all hon. members of the various annual reports from the department of children’s services and the fact that some of the authorities pass their budgets, their allocation from our government estimates, in a timely fashion. Sometimes they do it in advance of the tabling of the government estimates here, sometimes two to three weeks later, but in some cases, Mr. Chairman, it’s not done for months. In two cases in the last five years it wasn’t done at all. So there’s not a strong track record here of one authority and one department following what should be routine budget practices.

This amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity would certainly help Bill 6, Protection of Children Abusing Drugs Amendment Act, 2009, in the process so that the minister could follow through on what the intent is of this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there others that wish to speak on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It’s a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to amendment A1. This is an interesting amendment, one that I only just had the opportunity to look at when it was distributed a few minutes ago. I think it’s an amendment that’s worth considering because, when I look at the amendment, there is certainly one portion, or piece, to the amendment which I think gets to the heart of some of the criticisms around Bill 6.

To be clear, that doesn’t negate the fact that there is value to Bill 6 and value to the scheme that it purports to amend, but of course just because there is value to something doesn’t mean that it can’t also be improved. I think this amendment gets to the heart of where improvement is required.

I’d like to start just for a moment to comment on some of the suggestions made by the member from I believe it was Calgary-Fish Creek. In looking through this, I am not clear on how this amendment, actually, is being somehow directed towards the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre. Frankly, I do think that that facility and the approach that this government has taken to that facility warrants an open and less emotive debate in this House than it has gotten to this point. I certainly have spoken to people who’ve been involved in that program, well beyond those who were featured on the program that the member mentions, who suggest that there are some concerns there. I’ve also spoken to parents who are deeply appreciative of what that facility has offered to their family.

I would suggest, however, that even if one accepts only those testimonies, the measure of the quality is in the exception to the rule, and the somewhat, I would suggest, emotive and defensive unwillingness on the part of the government to discuss whether or not there are mechanisms in place to protect against the exception to the rule, frankly, surprises me. I remain very confused by the reaction that we get when this particular program is raised.

Notwithstanding that, I don’t think that’s what this amendment is actually about. I think it’s about what the member who proposed it suggested it was about and to get back to the point that I thought really gets to the heart of the matter, which is section (3)(b): “The availability of treatment programs and services, and the level of staffing to support such programs and services, for children who are subject to protection orders under this Act.” I think that we like to be able to fix problems with a statutory wave of the wand, with the granting of authority here or the granting of a right there. Certainly, there’s no question that that’s one of the least expensive ways to resolve the problem, but often it’s not really the most effective nor the way at all to solve a problem.

Now, in this case this act is a tool, I think, in the tool chest for communities, families, caregivers to address the problem associated with child addiction to drugs and alcohol, but I would suggest that it’s only one tool. Of course, the other tool is the financial and resource commitment to that effort. I think that section (3)(b), in particular, gets to that issue and whether or not that issue is really being properly addressed through this bill or through the actions of this government.

I’m happy to be corrected on this by any member opposite, but I have in my head from having read any one of copious, copious piles and piles of paper in the last month or so – and I can’t remember the source of it – that it was just announced that the High Prairie centre was closing. I have nods here that, in fact, it is closing. I’m not sure if this centre would be a place where children covered under this act would go. I may be incorrect. But if it is a place where they would go, I think what we’re actually seeing is a reduction in the number of beds that are available to receive these children and to provide the kind of comprehensive services that are contemplated, I think, by everybody, at least with respect to their best intentions. So that’s a problem.

I think that, you know, the Auditor General has commented on it. External experts have commented on it. People who work within the system have commented on the deficits in our system in terms of providing for children’s mental health and addiction services across the province. Whether they’re children’s mental health or addiction services that are provided through court order, through involuntary means, or, frankly, whether they’re even provided through voluntary means, there is an incredible – incredible – deficit of services across this province that simply is not going to be fixed through this particular mechanism because the problem is not in many cases the fact that people won’t stay there. The problem is finding a place that’s appropriate for them to stay.

Now, I’m not saying that that’s the only problem. There are times when this kind of authority is required. You know, I’ve also talked to parents who’ve been in that situation. I feel for their situation. I know they appreciate the authority in some part that comes through this amendment. But, really, I think we could be doing a lot more in terms of finding a more comprehensive voluntary program and, ultimately, involuntary program.

I'm concerned that the number of beds that are available is not enough. I'm also concerned that this is one of these things where children whose guardians or parents have the wherewithal to go to court to do this, you know, will then get the beds, and children whose guardians or parents do not have the wherewithal to do this don't get that benefit. Again, it speaks to the fact that this is only dealing with a small piece of the pie.

Going back to this amendment, what I like about this amendment is that it talks about giving us a very clear and regular assessment on the availability of treatment programs and services, where those spaces are, and what the programs look like. I think that's something we need more information about. I don't believe we have enough information about that right now. I think that this would help both, you know, the minister as well as this Assembly.

Whether it ultimately needs to come directly here – you know, as I said, I've barely had a chance to look at this amendment. Ultimately, what it's getting at in terms of identifying the shortage of service is something that I think is valuable in this amendment. It's for that reason that I support the principle that's being reflected here, which is the idea that we need to look less at granting rights – and that's fine – but to do it without an associative or corresponding dedication of resources is really to get a lot of good public attention but to not ultimately make a serious impact on the problem that has been identified.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there others?

Are you ready for the question on amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: May I close the debate or discussion on this amendment before a vote is taken?

The Acting Chair: You can go ahead and speak.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I'll be very quick. I offered this, I guess, rather naively, in good faith. In the process the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek has basically sullied my reputation, has accused me of being elusive and having ulterior motives. She has somehow connected this amendment to the Alberta Adolescent Recovery Centre, and the only thing I can potentially see that has any connection to that is that I'm asking for a level of staffing; I'm talking about programs and services. I didn't even mention residential treatment centres. I didn't even mention regulation or accreditation. These are things that I believe every program that deals with human beings, addicted adolescents in this case, should have.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek went off on a tangent with regard to the AARC program. I was initially concerned about the program by CBC's The Fifth Estate. I do agree that there were sensationalistic tactics used, including a discussion in the parking lot, where Dr. Vause was filmed without his knowledge. However, my concerns with regard to AARC go way beyond anything that is intended or included in this amendment. To set the record straight, I've met with Dr. Vause. I've attended the program and spent about three and a half hours there. A very good friend of mine, who is the principal of the alternative high school that a number of students who are about to graduate from the program attend, is supportive of the intent of the program, as I am supportive of the intent of the program.

If the hon. member has some concern about redundancy, I would like her to demonstrate in future discussions where the referral and the length of the referral and the fact that a place with treatment beds and accredited workers is built into this bill is because I have not seen that. I want children who are apprehended to meet with success. I want the addictions situation to be broken, and without providing specific dates and details, without having services to refer children to, without some type of transparent, accountable reporting program, the intent to have an impact on children's lives will not be met.

I am sorry that the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek does not believe that I am sincere in wanting to see children being well treated, their addictions broken. I can't change her opinion of me, but that's the least of my concerns. I am standing up for children. I want them to have successful intervention treatment.

Mr. Liepert: Standing up for the CBC.

Mr. Chase: This goes way beyond CBC, minister of health. CBC touched on a program which you have chosen to ignore.

The Acting Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. Chase: Sorry. Through the chair.

I have spoken to Inspector Slater of the sexual crimes unit of the police. He is continuing his investigation, an investigation that was undertaken two years ago and was welcomed, I might add, by Dr. Vause and the AARC and the individuals associated with it. I have also talked to the deputy fire chief, who has expressed concerns about fixed, barred windows, none of which comes into this amendment. Okay? You made the connection, Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. [interjection] Through the chair. You made this ulterior motive, this "elusive" connection. I needed to deal with it.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, I believe, tried to bring in a 90-day treatment program for kids suffering from crystal meth. That was reduced to five days. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek is taking the five days to 10 days, and there it stops. Without a referral program, without a reporting, this becomes window dressing as opposed to actual intervention.

Thank you for the opportunity. I hope some members will see beyond the prejudice and recognize the needs of children. That's the intent of this amendment. I hope you'll support the amendment regardless of the individual who is proposing it.

The Acting Chair: Are there others who wish to speak on amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:46 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Acting Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report progress.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 6. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the report by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, do you concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Those opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly do now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:59 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 15, 2009

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and the peace we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of children from Clive public school. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Christine Howe, and teaching assistants Mrs. Carrie Knight and Mrs. Jackie Healing and parent helpers Adam Schedlosky, Mrs. Hanne Giles, and Mrs. Jamie Hodgkinson. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it gives me great pleasure and is my honour to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House visitors from my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. There are 44 students in the members' gallery from Northmount elementary school, who are joined by teachers Miss Jill Sharun and Miss Krystal Mah, teacher assistant Mrs. Deana Gates, parent helpers Mrs. Monique Pomeranz and Mrs. April Monkman. I would now ask that the students of Northmount elementary school, their teachers, teacher assistant, and parent helpers rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly some crackerjack students from Edmonton-Riverview, Our Lady of Victories school. I spoke with them before we entered the Assembly, and I can tell you that not only are they very bright and well educated; I think a handful of them might well end up being members of this Assembly some day. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Mike Marr, Mrs. Laura Blythe, and Mrs. Therese Savard and parent helper Doreen Sasseville. They're in both galleries. I'd ask them to rise, and let's give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce a very special guest this afternoon. His name is Andrew Halliday. He is my new constituency assistant, who has recently arrived in Alberta from Prince Edward Island. I met Andrew some time ago. We share a common passion for politics. Despite his youth he has a deep understanding of this country and the important role of the Legislature and governments. He worked extensively in the Leader of the Opposition's office in Prince Edward Island. I am very pleased that he has been able to join us today. I'd ask him to rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Francis Damberger, a U of A graduate and a producer and associate director of the Canadian war epic Passchendaele. Also joining us today, seated in the members' gallery, are location sound recordist Garrell Clark and costume designer Wendy Partridge.

Alongside his work on Passchendaele Mr. Damberger is a respected award-winning filmmaker whose credits include On the Edge, Due South, Solitaire, and North of 60, just to name a few. He is a true Renaissance man of the screen, with multiple writing, directing, and acting credits to his name. It is truly an honour to have such a talented and unique man with us today. I want to applaud his efforts and the efforts of the entire crew of Passchendaele for helping to create an opportunity to tell an Alberta-based story at home and abroad, not to mention the six awards that they won at the recent Genies, that I was lucky to be able to be part of, in Ottawa a couple of weeks ago. Passchendaele is no ordinary project, Mr. Speaker. It was a centennial-funded project that tells an important part of Alberta's history and is a memorial to our country's veterans and the sacrifices they made in the First World War. The entire film was shot in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that the three individuals rise and receive the warm reception of this House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly four people from Angel Flight Alberta. Organized in 2006, Angel Flight Alberta is a charitable organization that provides free and accessible air transportation for people who must travel for medical purposes. There are many individuals who need to travel to centralized medical facilities in Edmonton and Calgary who do not always have the financial means to pay. Angel Flight Alberta exists to serve Albertans in need. I'll be discussing this organization further in a member's statement, but for now I would like to introduce Dr. Kerry Pawluski, the founder; Mr. Ernest Pawluski, founder; Mrs. Mary Ellen Pawluski, who we affectionately now refer to as the mom of Angel Flights; and Mr. Peter Moloney, the director of Angel Flights. I would ask all four of them, who are seated in the members' gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm greetings of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 25 truck operators in the gravel hauling business. They are all sitting in the members' gallery. Many of these visitors live in my beautiful constituency of Edmonton-Manning. They are hard-working people, like all other Albertans. I would like to thank each and every one of them for taking time out of their busy schedules to be here today. It was a great honour that the hon. Minister of Transportation was able to come and meet these truck operators as well. They are here today to thank our government for working with them to allow for common-sense change to hauling for loose loads of gravel. I would ask these fine gentlemen to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much.

Members' Statements

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Vehicular Axle Weight Restrictions

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced some truck operators from the Edmonton area who are sitting in the members' gallery today. I now rise today to speak about an issue that is important to my constituents and many other Albertans in the gravel trucking business.

When I was door-knocking last year, I met lots of truck operators who raised the issue of axle weight restrictions. That's why I had proposed Motion 610 urging the government to amend the Traffic Safety Act to allow for the shifting of loose loads during transportation. These truck drivers must follow the laws about the weights that they can haul, both for gross vehicle weight and also for limitations placed on each vehicle's axle. Truck drivers were being fined if their load shifted, making the load too heavy on one axle, even if the load was balanced at first but moved while driving.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that Department of Transportation officers are working with the truck drivers by generously providing for a 10 per cent weight allowance on an axle. I am very proud that this government has acted on this issue that was the subject of my first motion, being as it was very important to me and to my constituents. Overall, Mr. Speaker, these allowances are a demonstration of how the province is co-operating with Albertans on a common-sense issue.

I would also like to thank the hon. Minister of Transportation, the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations, from Edmonton-Mill Creek, who started working on this issue one year ago, and the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for their work on this file.

Mr. Speaker, this was my first victory as MLA for Edmonton-Manning. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we have another person celebrating a special day today, and that is the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. Please join me in wishing him the very best.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Budget Criticism

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If this government's depression-recession recovery plan A is awful and there's no plan B backup, what can Albertans do to break their budgetary blunder blues? The traumatic duo of Red I and Pink Lloyd have made it too expensive to drown your sorrows, and you're too broke to smoke. If their boom-bust budget gives you a pain in the neck or lower extremities, you're out of luck because chiropractic services are no longer covered.

If you can't see your name on a cataract surgery list, it could be (a) your growing glaucoma, (b) the lack of publicly funded/staffed operating rooms, or (c) the exceeded budget for privately contracted services.

Forty per cent of single-coverage seniors have been double Blue Crossed by this government into covering the costs of the other 60 per cent. With the critical shortage of long-term care beds lucky senior lottery winners get first dibs on acute-care beds while the losers get hospital hallways.

Depending on how you spell it, superboard or superbored either refers to the centralized oversight of health services delivery or the perpetual state of mind of 80,000 and rising jobless Albertans unable to find work.

The once popular catchphrase Alberta advantage has now become a historical reference reserved only for Conservative cabinet ministers, who awarded themselves a 35 per cent raise last year and bonused their deputies and top-ranking officials to the tune of 40 million taxpayer dollars this year. The government ministers responsible for these excesses shouldn't be in charge of selecting new mottos for Alberta licence plates. They should be behind bars manufacturing them.

Whether you're one of the 21 per cent of eligible Albertans who mistakenly voted for these tired Tories or you're one of the 79 per cent that didn't, your opinion counts. Visit our Alberta Liberal caucus website at www.budget2009.ca or call us at 1.888.886.budg.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Angel Flight Alberta

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dr. Kerry Pawluski, founder of Angel Flight, has been flying for 21 years. In those 21 years he has used the Edmonton City Centre Airport extensively. It has afforded him the opportunity to commute between Grande Prairie and Two Hills, where he has provided medical locum tenens services in the past. It has also enabled him to bring patients into Edmonton for admission to the Stollery or Royal Alexandra hospital for timely care. Dr. Pawluski is able to take in-patients from the Royal Alex hospital back to High Level or Stony Rapids, Saskatchewan, thus freeing up critical bed space in a timely fashion.

One of the major issues that Angel Flight sees on a daily basis deals with health care accessibility for rural Albertans. Angel Flight believes that without the Edmonton City Centre Airport, this issue of accessibility could worsen. This organization strives to ease the burden that individuals in need of health care face by utilizing a network of volunteer pilots, aircraft owners, and ground support.

Angel Flight Alberta is modelled after Angel Flight Vancouver Island, which serves a population one-quarter the size of Alberta's, with a geographic area one-tenth the size of this province. Angel Flight Vancouver has been in operation for the last seven years and consistently provides about 150 flights per year. This is the number which Angel Flight Alberta anticipates reaching in the near future.

Angel Flight's objective is to transport ambulatory patients whose medical and/or financial situations make it difficult or impossible for them to travel by conventional means. The service that Angel Flight Alberta provides to Albertans in need is truly commendable. They are one of the many organizations that rely on the Edmonton City Centre Airport. While Angel Flight Alberta operates from my constituency of Edmonton-Calder, it affects each and every one of your constituencies, both rural and urban. It is important to keep organizations like this one alive and well for all Albertans in need.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Education Awards

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary board of education's Barbara Bannon, principal of Olympic Heights elementary school, was recognized as a woman of vision by Global TV for her efforts in actively engaging and inspiring good deeds and hard work in her students, staff, and greater community.

Under Ms Bannon's leadership Olympic Heights has dedicated itself to creating an environment of peace in the school and surrounding community as a member of Peaceful Schools International. Barbara's vision has motivated students, parents, and staff at Olympic Heights to take on many humanitarian endeavours such as Children Changing the World. With the co-operation of her students and community they have contributed to the construction of 15 water wells in rural India and raised funds to help build schools for children in Africa.

Barbara has also championed environmental stewardship at her school. Through a partnership with Enmax and the Calgary board of education Olympic Heights became the pilot school for the Gen E program. The program gives students and teachers the opportunity to explore the environmental benefits of reducing greenhouse gases. Through this stewardship Barbara continuously promotes environmental responsibility and encourages staff and students to reduce their own environmental footprints.

Continuing on the environmental stewardship front, the Calgary board of education is being recognized as the first school board in western Canada to receive the EcoLogo environmental stewardship award. The CBE received the award for choosing environmentally preferable cleaning chemicals that help protect the environment as well as the health of staff and students. The CBE was nominated by Avmor Ltd. to receive this award, an award that recognizes organizations for their commitment to environmental protection through green purchasing. CBE received this recognition as it has successfully rolled out a comprehensive Clean for Health program.

I congratulate the Calgary board of education and Ms Bannon for receiving these awards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Royal Tyrrell Museum Education Award

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to inform this Assembly that Alberta's Royal Tyrrell Museum recently won a national award from the Canadian Museums Association. Each year the association presents awards to celebrate and encourage excellence within the Canadian museum sector. In January the Royal Tyrrell Museum's distant learning program was selected for an award for outstanding achievement in the education category. This is the second straight year that the Tyrrell has won an award for its efforts in educational programming. The museum received its award at the Canadian Museums Association annual conference in the month of March. Using video conferencing equipment in conjunction with the Alberta SuperNet, the Tyrrell has delivered 475 programs to over 12,800 students in Alberta, Canada, the United States, and abroad.

Mr. Speaker, this award is a testament to the high quality of educational programming at our province's museums and historic sites. The Tyrrell has also helped to meet one of the four key points of our province's cultural policy by ensuring that Albertans have greater access to our culture, in this case to education programs at our museums and historical sites.

Special heartfelt congratulations to all of the staff of the Royal Tyrrell Museum for their continued pursuit of educational excellence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health System Restructuring

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This administration continues to shoot itself in the hip as it dismantles Alberta's most cherished public health care system. What Albertans want is a careful, honest analysis of evidence, respect for public values, and a planned approach to change in the health care system itself. Instead, what we get resembles a car careening along the road and lurching into the right ditch. To the minister of health: what evidence did the minister use to create the Alberta Health Services Board?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, it seems like there's a little competition over there between the two opposition parties as to who can be the most outrageous in their preambles to the questions. I know that there's . . .

An Hon. Member: Who's winning?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I think they're both losing if you want to know the truth.

Mr. Speaker, I've answered that question on several occasions in this House. There were a number of reasons for the creation of the Alberta Health Services Board, and those reasons are going to continually become more obvious as we move forward. I would say that the most recent one is the fact that without one health services board it would have been very difficult to integrate emergency medical services into the health care system. I think that's the most recent one.

Dr. Swann: Again to the minister: what benefits can Albertans see right now from the creation of this Alberta Health Services Board?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I just answered that question. Over the next year we will lay out in conjunction with Alberta Health Services Board some performance measurements that we will hold the board and the management team of Alberta Health Services accountable for. I would suggest and I have said publicly that I think that anyone — only the Liberals and the Calgary Herald would have expected that we would have seen efficiencies during the administrative changeover. This is the test year.

Dr. Swann: Again to the minister: what is the health budget based on if a major decision like delisting 40 services isn't included?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I know that the Leader of the Opposition hasn't had much experience in drafting budgets, Mr. Speaker, but there is an incredible amount of input that goes into the drafting of a budget. I could go through all of those details, but it would seem to me that that would be an appropriate question to ask during estimates, when I can take all the time, up to three hours, to explain that to the hon. leader.

The Acting Speaker: Second question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has given this health minister an axe to perform complex surgery to our health care system. Yesterday in this House the minister admitted that the decision to cut gender reassignment surgery was not based on medical advice. To the minister: is the minister of health going to create an expert panel to advise on which health services to delist? Yes or no?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Member for Calgary-Buffalo asked me a similar question, and I can repeat what I believe is in Hansard. One of the things that we have discussed is the need to create – for lack of a better term let's call it an expert panel. This expert panel would operate in a similar way that the one on drugs does. It operates very well and gives good, independent advice to government on what should be covered under publicly funded health care and what shouldn't be.

Dr. Swann: Well, yesterday the minister said that "there's a list of some 30 or 40 different programs and grants and coverages that will not be proceeding." If the minister already has a list of 40 programs he's going to cut, will this expert panel simply be a rubber stamp for his decisions?

Mr. Liepert: Well, the expert panel, Mr. Speaker, would be one that would be more designed to look forward as new technologies and new procedures come into the marketplace and determine whether or not they should be publicly funded. I would hope that this panel, once up and running, would also have the ability to have the independency to take a look at what currently is covered under publicly funded health care and make recommendations to government.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister table the list of 30 or 40 services that he's planning to delist? If not, why not in the interests of transparency?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, what we have found is that through our department we funded a number of programs and grants for a number of things and that there were some duplications in the previous health regions and sometimes in other departments. Now that we have one delivery arm of health care in this province, what we have decided to do is go through our budget and, appropriately so, send those delivery programs to Alberta Health Services. It will be up to Alberta Health Services to decide which programs are duplicative in nature and which ones should continue. What we need to ensure is that we're not, as I say, duplicating services but, most importantly, having the right arm delivering the services.

The Acting Speaker: Third Official Opposition question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Nurses' Contract

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Health and Wellness stated recently that he feels that the nurses contract in Alberta is a horrible deal, and in order to address the inefficiencies that deal caused, he doesn't mind pushing for contract changes even if it "creates some angst among the union leadership." To the minister: why is the minister punishing nurses when it was he and his government who created the inefficiencies in the first place? You guys signed the deal that you say is so bad.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody's punishing anybody. We have a contract with United Nurses in this province which the government – I must correct the member – did not sign. The contract with the United Nurses of Alberta is with the former regional association. Any new contract will be negotiated with Alberta Health Services. We are in a different environment than we were when the last contract was signed.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dodged that bullet.

The nurses union has said that the solution is to hire more nurses because right now you don't have enough part-time nurses in the system to cover the workload without running up a huge overtime bill. Why wasn't this recognized back when the deal was signed?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we can debate whether hiring more nurses or having more nurses that work part-time work full-time is going to help solve the issue around the delivery of health care, but what this government is committed to do is ensure that we have a more efficient, more accessible health care system than we currently have today.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That, of course, involves having enough bodies to deliver the services that the front-line patients need.

Given that this minister feels that front-line nurses should be taking the fall for the government's failures, will the minister also be decreasing his own salary to reflect his own failures in the management of the public health care system in the province of Alberta?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as is so typical of this particular member, he's saying things that have never been said. Nobody is saying that anybody should be taking a pay cut, and I think that's what he's alluding to. Again, this is one of the issues we have in dealing with this particular opposition continuing to fearmonger out there and, quite frankly, not tell the truth in most cases.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Delisting of Medical Services

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the smiling mask of our Premier has finally slipped, and Albertans are seeing the grim privatization visage of Ralph Klein. The Premier hid his plans to privatize health care during the election, but last week he revealed his plans to delist services. It doesn't matter if you call it a two-tier system, the third way, or private health care, it all means the same thing: Albertans won't get the health care that they need. My question is to the Premier. Why won't you admit that you're taking advantage of this recession to do what you've always wanted: bring in U.S. two-tier health care?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there have been perhaps two parties that talked about privatized two-tier American health care system; that has been the NDP and the Liberals.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there's one party that doesn't talk about it but keeps trying to do it.

Alberta's delisted health services now include chiropractic care, gender reassignment surgery, eye care, seniors' drug coverage. Lab services are next, and physiotherapy is in the government's sights. This government is systematically dismantling public health care in Alberta, leaving Albertans of modest means out in the cold. To the Premier: why didn't you tell Albertans during the last election about your plans to resurrect the third way and to dismantle our public health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the leader of the third party is wrong. We were very clear in the commitment we made to Albertans during the last election, and that is that we support a publicly funded health care system. We're also going to ensure that the system that we enjoy today will be sustained well into the future not only for our children but for our grandchildren.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the Premier would like Albertans to believe that, but in actual fact they don't want to end up sitting broke in wheelchairs, wracked with pain because they can't get the necessary services that they want because they can't afford them. The delisting of essential medical services will send more people to hospitals, increase wait times, and make health care more expensive. My question is to the Premier. When will you realize that the only way to maintain a healthy population is through a publicly funded and publicly delivered system, not the third way, not the fourth way, and certainly not the American way?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I agree with him. We're all together in supporting a publicly funded health system, and we're going to ensure that health care is delivered in a timely and accessible fashion, that the system is effective, that it's accessible to all Albertans. We're going to work with all of the health care providers in this province to build in the efficiencies and the effectiveness and, most importantly, the sustainability for the next generation.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Deficit

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that my constituents, like most Albertans, understand that the province is facing some economic challenges related to the global financial situation. They understand that we are in a deficit position for the first time in well over a decade, and they do want to understand this government's plan to deal with that. My first question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. Can the minister assure Albertans with regard to the government's plan to deal with the current deficit situation?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm actually very pleased to answer this and to give an accolade to the hon. member asking the question for his work with grade 6 students in his constituency to make sure they understand what we're doing. With that in mind, I'm going to just say that the sustainability fund is our government's plan to deal with the deficit. It's part of our savings for emergencies, part of the way we protect ourselves when revenue drops. So when we don't have enough money to meet our expenses, it's like taking money from our savings account and putting it into our chequing account so that we can cover those expenses. This year we will spend $4.7 billion to cover that deficit.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: will that drawdown affect the Alberta heritage savings trust fund in any way?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with those children in the town of Strathmore in mind that we're saving for the future. The heritage savings trust fund does just that. We have no intent to touch any portion of that fund. We will use the funds from the sustainability fund next year. Anticipating that this period of recession will continue, we'll use some $2.8 billion to help, again, top up our chequing account. In the third and final year of what we expect to be a deficit situation, we'll use $1.8 billion, expecting to return to a surplus situation in 2012.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you. The third question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. In the report on the budget there has been some combining of the capital and sustainability funds. Can the minister provide some clarity with regard to the future of those funds and what role they'll play into the future?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We understand that over the longer term there will be always some volatility in a very energy-rich province like we are, so we have protected for the shorter term savings in the sustainability fund, funds to make sure that we follow through with the capital commitments, with our carbon capture and storage commitments, with our commitments for the public transit through Green TRIP. In one entire account of $17 billion we will be able to accommodate these expenditures during this period of a deficit. In short, when we get surplus funds, we will replenish this account so that we build it back up to roughly $10 billion, at least to that level, before we put any other savings elsewhere.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1992 there have been 11 deputy ministers of health. We have gone from 17 health regions to nine health regions to now one supermess. While this government spends lavishly on bureaucratic reorganization, salaries, and multimillion dollar severances for senior executives and hand-picked advisers, it cuts core public health care services. My first question is to the minister of health. Why won't the minister of health just admit that it is this government's mismanagement, total mismanagement, of the public health care system that is the disease?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, what I will admit is what I said yesterday in this House. It's these two parties who want to stay with the status quo. The status quo is not sustainable. If we stay with the status quo, we will have exactly what they say this government is trying to do, and that is more private health care because we won't be able to continue to afford to provide what we are today. So today we are making some very tough decisions to ensure that the publicly funded health care is here for generations to come.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that this minister and this government are willingly dismantling our public health care system.

Now, an access to information request shows that an $1,800-a-day consultant to the Alberta Health Services Board was allowed to charge thousands of dollars more to the taxpayers than his contract stated. In six months this consulting contract realized over $240,000. Again to the minister of health: how can the minister of health fail in basic contract accounting and then cut public health care services to try to make up for his own mistakes?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what he's talking about. If he wants to supply me with the information, I'd be happy to answer the question, and if he wants to show up at estimates in a couple of weeks, that would be an appropriate question to ask.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister knows exactly what I'm talking about.

Again to the hon. minister. When the Alberta Health Services Board, that this minister controls and hand-picks, fired its executive operating officer after just eight months, Albertans were left on the hook for potentially over a million dollar severance package for one executive. How can the minister of health now turn to vulnerable Albertans such as sick Albertans and senior citizens and take away their services in order to pay for your own mismanagement?

Mr. Liepert: Let's make sure we have it on the record. In this particular budget that we've just brought forward, Alberta Health Services has an additional $550 million to deliver services to Albertans. This particular government, Mr. Speaker, is ensuring that out of all of the departments health care received the largest increase in expenditures. We are committed to a publicly funded health care system.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

First Nations Consultation Capacity

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all for the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. First Nations receive numerous consultation requests, very often from industry, regarding everything from clearing of trees, building of roads, bridging creeks, oil and gas wells, and so on, and I think that a lot of the times they don't have the capacity to respond as quickly or as thoroughly as everyone would hope. I have some concerns about this capacity issue, and I'm wondering if the minister can advise what he's doing to make sure that the First Nations can respond to these requests.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Thank you, hon. member, for the question. It's a very serious issue. Consultation is something we take very seriously, and I know industry does, too. Obviously, First Nations are critical partners. We do a lot to help them through a program called the consultation capacity investment program. In fact, this year, hon. member, we'll be providing another $6.6 million to help facilitate that consultation capacity. In central Alberta, around the area where the hon. member serves, we provided over a quarter of a million dollars just recently to help facilitate consultations in that area. We also have the important traditional use studies program.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. Yes. Regarding the traditional use studies, I know they yield critical information that's needed, and I understand that they're living documents, that they don't necessarily get done once and come to an end. I'm wondering what the minister's intention is in terms of continuing the support for this program so that that information is readily available.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that was a three-year program that was scheduled to end March 31 of this year, but I'm happy to inform the House and this hon. member in particular that we were successful in getting that program continued. We'll be adding 1.7 million new dollars into that traditional use studies program because it does yield that critical information. That'll bring our total investment over the past six years up to over $12 million for traditional use studies, a very important consultation piece.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question relates to the other side of the coin, which is the need for industry to have certainty and predictability. I'm wondering, from an industry perspective, what specific steps are being taken to ensure that within the existing consultation process they are receiving that kind of timely information and help.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are several initiatives that the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations provides and has under way at the moment. For example, we are going to be reviewing the 2005 First Nations consultation policy and guidelines. We'll also be looking at the aboriginal policy framework. We also are developing a trilateral process involving First Nations, industry, the government of Alberta. At the same time we also have the new protocol agreement signed by our Premier, the grand chiefs, and myself, and that ensures and guarantees annual meetings, at least three per year, that will help with the particular issue at hand.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The cardiovascular intensive care unit at the Mazankowski heart centre, according to the Alberta Health Services website, is "a 20-bed dynamic, fast-paced unit providing care to patients pre and post open-heart surgery." The website also lists its hours of operation: zero. In fact, the hours of operation for the cardiac rehab program, the cardiology in-patient unit, and almost every other program at the Mazankowski are listed as zero. Things are better for the lost and found, which has been open for one hour. Maybe the minister of health should go there to look for his lost credibility. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: a year after the official opening why does the Mazankowski stand empty?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that there have been some issues around commissioning this particular facility. It is a highly technical facility. I will say that it's important for this member to recognize that it was not the government of Alberta that had the official opening. It was the former Capital health region that had the official opening. What we want to ensure is that when patients are in that facility, there are no safety issues. If the member wants to stand here and say, "Open the building before you're satisfied that it's safe," then have him do so.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks. The fact that the Mazankowski institute stands empty a year after it was officially opened is a testament to this government's inability to manage a public health care system. Staff and patients are furious, Mr. Speaker. They rightly believe that this government and this minister are not competent to run the health care system. Will the Minister of Health and Wellness admit that the construction of the Mazankowski institute has been brutally bungled by this government?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reality of it is that this government is not managing the construction of the Mazankowski Heart Institute. It started out under the Capital health region and is currently being managed by Alberta Health Services. Now, I have recently been in contact with the new CEO of Alberta Health Services. He assures me that . . . [interjections] I don't know if the yipper over here wants the floor or not, but if he wants it, he can have it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Cardiac intensive care unit hours of operation, zero; echocardiography lab, zero; ECG-Holter monitoring lab, zero; cardiovascular surgery in-patient unit, zero; and on and on the list goes. Given that the Minister of Health and Wellness has misled his Premier, who thought that facility was fully operating, and has misled this Assembly about the functioning of the Mazankowski, will he at least give this Assembly a list of the commissioning and engineering problems that have led to this delay?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, cardiac patients in this province today receive some of the best care in the world. For this particular member to stand here and say what he's saying is an insult to the medical community of this province.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dirt Fill for Anthony Henday Drive

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The contract for the north-west leg of the Anthony Henday ring road was let in August of last year, and I continue to be amazed at the progress that they're making adjacent to St. Albert. The amount of earth that has been moved and the progress on several of the overpass structures has been beyond expectations. In the open houses held last year, residents were advised that several tree stands within the transportation and utility corridor would be preserved. Now it appears that these tree stands have been removed in order to accommodate excess excavation. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Why did trees have to be removed to stockpile excess dirt?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the trees were recently cleared so that we could permanently store excess dirt removed from the interchange at St. Albert Trail. The reason we have all this surplus material is due to the fact that we've excavated Anthony Henday Drive below St. Albert Trail. It's been dug down to reduce the noise and visual impact of the interchange, and the surplus material has been placed along the outside edge of the roadway.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the same minister: is it not customary in road design to balance the cuts and fills in order to optimize haulage distances and avoid having to either borrow or waste dirt from offsite?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, we typically balance all the cuts and fills. In fact, to a large degree that's what's being done there. The excess dirt from St. Albert Trail is being hauled to other interchanges where the dirt is needed. For example, it's being hauled to the bridges at Yellowhead Trail and 137th Avenue, but unfortunately there's so much extra dirt that we've needed to store it near that interchange.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: in view of the fact that there is excess material, can this material be used to construct and landscape berms in order to reduce traffic noise from the completed freeway? Also, can some of the trees that have been removed be replaced?

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we can and we will be landscaping the excess dirt. We'll be shaping the mounds and seeding them with grass. The mounds of excess dirt will be wide and flat and about two and a half metres high. For nearby residents that will help to provide some visual screening from the road. Although the excess dirt was not designed for noise attenuation, it will help reduce noise, I'm sure, from the roadway.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Blue Cross Premiums

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of Health has said that his justification for tripling the cost of premiums for nongroup participants was to bring Blue Cross more in line with employer and private insurance plans. Is it not a contradiction for a minister of a public health system to feel that his top priority is to make our public health care compete with private insurance plans? To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister clarify if he was referring to the cost of the coverage or the services being covered when he said yesterday in this House that it was necessary to bring Blue Cross up to the equivalency with the employer plans?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta offers through Blue Cross a government program for some hundred thousand Albertans for supplemental insurance. The premiums for that particular plan have not increased since 1993. The government of Alberta was subsidizing a hundred thousand Albertans to a significant degree with their supplemental insurance, to the point where we were having employees of corporations or employer plans drop off those particular plans and subscribe to the government-run plan. If the Liberal opposition wants us to subsidize an insurance plan for some hundred thousand Albertans, then say so.

Ms Pastoor: That was a bit of a reach.

The most recent financial statements from Blue Cross show that it has positive net assets and even ran a surplus. Why was it necessary to increase the premiums, or is this the first step to privatizing Blue Cross for profit?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the question shows how naive this particular opposition is about how this particular program runs, so let me explain it to them. Blue Cross is a not-for-profit corporation. They do, however, on behalf of the government of Alberta administer our government plan. The government plan has absolutely nothing to do with the profits or lack of profits that Blue Cross makes on its private insurance plans. I hope it's clear to the member.

Mr. MacDonald: It's like crop insurance.

Ms Pastoor: Yeah. Exactly.

One of the questions we've received for Budget 2009 is from Victor in Edmonton. "My wife and I, both seniors, live on pensions. Both being cardiac patients, we spend almost $600 a month on prescription drugs. The proposed government drug plan starting in 2010 will mean our paying several thousand dollars before benefits kick in. My question: barring selling our home or going back to work, where do we get the money to pay for this?"

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let me assure Victor, as I have assured the Member for Lethbridge-East, that we have heard from seniors that in light of a changed economic environment there are some issues around the seniors drug plan that we announced last December. I have been very clear in this House on probably more occasions than I'd like to remember that we are reviewing this particular program, and I hope that within the near future we can be in a position to bring something forward that would more reflect the economic times we're in.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Ms Notley: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, physiotherapy is a preventative service that reduces the overall health costs of ailments like breast cancer, cerebral palsy, spinal cord and brain injuries, and arthritis. Albertans who use physio are trying to do what this minister keeps telling them to do: take the time to take personal responsibility for their health. To the minister of health: why won't you admit that delisting services like physiotherapy means that we'll pay more and we'll pay later for the more expensive acute care that physio could have prevented?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday in response to the question I said that it was a dishonest question, and I'll explain why I said that. Nobody has delisted physiotherapy, so the preamble to the question is dishonest.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the minister is going to get up and commit right now to not delisting physio, I'm quite happy to hear it, but until then, delisting physio doesn't make the costs go away. It just transfers them directly to the sick. The wealthy will line the pockets of insurance companies in a bid to get care, the price of services will increase, and regular Albertans will do without. To the minister of health: why won't you stop this political drive to hand over our health care system to insurance companies and, instead, right now commit to not delisting and admit that prevention services like physio keep people healthy, out of the hospitals, and on the job?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, what this government will commit to is what Albertans want us to commit to, and that is to a publicly funded health care system that is sustainable into the future for our children and our grandchildren. I know that the particular member of the opposition doesn't like that because that goes against what she believes in, and that is that we should tax everybody to death, that the Crown should own everything, that we should pay for everything, and it goes on and on and on.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, this plan, this policy has nothing to do with sustainability and has nothing to do with the bottom line because his plan is going to hurt Albertans' bottom line, and he knows it. These people are struggling just to hang onto their jobs, and you want to dismantle health care, and you want to burden them with higher health care costs. How will you explain to Albertans who need physiotherapy, chiropractic therapy, that this government is no longer interested in helping them get healthy and back on the job?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of anyone who needs physiotherapy today that isn't going to get physiotherapy the same way they did yesterday, so the question is irrelevant.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Victims Restitution and Compensation

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to hitting organized crime and gangs where it hurts the most, the wallet. The Victims Restitution and Compensation Payment Act is a good example of this. Can the Minister of Justice provide this Assembly with an update on the effectiveness of this legislation?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question, hon. member. I'm pleased to say that we've now had almost four months of success with this legislation. The key message that we have been trying to communicate – and I think the public are helping us to do that – is that we need to ensure that if people are committing criminal activity, we are hitting them where it counts, that we are able to take property that has been either purchased as a result of criminal activity or is property that will be used in the commission of a crime. We think it's very important, as we proceed through this, that we highlight the successes that we've had. I think members of the public who watch the news will have seen in the last two months tremendous seizures of property, applications with respect to forfeiture that deal with vehicles, houses, and property used to steal fuel.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Recently the federal government announced some legislative changes to the Criminal Code aimed at gangsters. While due justice is an important value, my constituents believe that we must tackle the issue of gang activity and violence through a multipronged approach which seriously diminishes the lucrative lifestyle of organized crime. Will the minister inform this Assembly of any additional work her department is doing to accomplish this objective?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier announced the safe communities initiative, he was very clear that we need to deal with the immediate issues facing this community. We have to deal with enforcement. We had to deal with prosecution. The safe communities plan is a three-year plan. We need to accomplish a lot in those three years. But what we have to do, most importantly, now that we've dealt with enhanced policing and enhanced prosecutions, is look to the root causes of crime. We have to get involved in education and awareness. We're hosting a gang summit in June. The Premier will be speaking at that. What he will be doing at that is announcing a long-term gang prevention strategy that will include education and awareness and making sure that people don't end up in lives of crime.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister. At this time of year many Albertans are feeling a sense of frustration as they're preparing and submitting their 2008 tax forms to Revenue Canada. Can the Minister of Justice inform this Assembly on any work or initiatives she is undertaking with our federal government to link law enforcement and Justice officials with Revenue Canada to ensure that appropriate resources are directed at investigating the assets and proceeds of criminal gangsters, not law-abiding taxpayers?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important piece of the work that we're now able to do under this legislation. We have to work closely with the federal government, but one of the reasons we introduced this legislation is that we need to target the property that's involved in crime. We have civil forfeiture officers in our police services that are new this year that are working with our prosecutors. One of the things that they do is work with the RCMP's integrated proceeds of crime unit to identify opportunities where we may see property that has been purchased as a result of criminal activity that we may be able to make applications to seize.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Public Education Exemptions

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit has been musing aloud recently about a proposal to entrench parents with a legal right to prevent their children from receiving education on any subject or issue that these parents regard as unacceptable from a religious perspective. There are a number of unanswered questions and long-ranging consequences from such a legislative change. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Will any parameters be placed on this parental opt-out? For example, can parents remove children from a classroom if a non-Christian-based religion is being taught?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, when I was asked by a member of the media about parental rights, it was in response to the hon. Minister of Education, who in this House answered that particular question, and I said that the United Nations has it entrenched in its particular charter. It was a comment at the time. We haven't made any decisions as a caucus on human rights legislation on the whole. When we have something to report, we'll bring that to this House.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much. One of the questions that keeps coming up is around sexual orientation. Back to the same minister: can the minister explain where in the curriculum sexual orientation is taught? Is there a module for gay 101 or some sort of course that they take that a parent could remove a child from? Could you explain that, please?

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, I don't understand where the member is going here. I'm not the Minister of Education. As far as I know, sexual orientation, as far as I can see with my own kids in the educational system, isn't there, so I don't see what the point of the question is.

Ms Blakeman: Excellent response.

Back to the same minister: why is the minister contemplating changing the human rights act when the ultimate goal of this administration is to give direction to the school board and to the curriculum, which is exactly what the minister has noted? So why the human rights act?

Mr. Blackett: Well, funnily enough, Mr. Speaker, I was in here from the first day, I think, some time over 12 months ago and had nothing from the opposition – on the human rights act, if you look at Hansard, they have asked no question but about having sexual orientation included and having it done immediately.

Ms Blakeman: What? Are you crazy?

Mr. Blackett: Am I crazy? Look at Hansard. You're a one-trick pony. Are you kidding: am I crazy?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

East Calgary Health Centre

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over a year ago the then Minister of Health and Wellness together with myself and the hon. Member for Calgary-East broke ground for the construction of the east Calgary health centre. Recently I heard that the building construction has been completed but that the inside was put on hold. This is unacceptable to my colleagues in the area. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. What is going on with this project, Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, actually, that's maybe the toughest question I've had all day, Mr. Speaker. I guess one of the anomalies that was discovered as we move from various regions to one health region was that in the case of the facility in east Calgary the building was built, but no money was set aside to do leasehold improvements. So we've had a building sitting there for quite some time that has not been usable. I'm pleased to say that in the capital plan that we released with this budget, we have included some $13 million for leasehold improvements for that particular facility.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's good news.

Now, given that the construction will be going on, my question is: what kind of service will be delivered through that health centre?

Mr. Liepert: Well, it will be a full-service facility, including healthy living promotion, chronic disease management, mental health services, a whole host of services. It'll be a nice complement, Mr. Speaker, when the quarter-billion-dollar expansion of the Peter Lougheed comes on at the end of August, which between the two facilities will significantly enhance the service to the residents of east Calgary.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: when can the constituents of Calgary-Fort and Calgary-Montrose and Calgary-East expect the opening of the centre?

Mr. Liepert: I'm told by Alberta Health Services that they are in the accelerated stage of getting a contract finalized and that they're hopeful that construction can begin almost immediately. It's probably going to take somewhere between five, six, eight months to get completed. Hopefully, it would be nice if that facility was up and running by Christmastime, hon. member.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Sand and Gravel Royalties

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his October 2008 report the Auditor General noted that sand and gravel royalties have not changed since 1991. Further, the Auditor was unable to find any evidence of a royalty review since that time. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why did the government not review the royalty framework for over 17 years?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, our ministry does have responsibility for sand and gravel under the lands department. The question of gravel rates is reviewed from time to time internally, and it's been determined that as it stands, it's appropriate.

Mr. Hehr: The Auditor General also reported that the ministry lacks the control to ensure that all revenues from sand and gravel are recorded and that due to the Limitations Act the ministry may never be able to fully collect these royalties. To the same minister: how does the minister justify this mismanagement to Albertans?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that those recommendations from the Auditor General have been acted upon, and that'll be reflected in future reports.

Mr. Hehr: The Auditor further notes that usage amounts for sand and gravel are self-assessed by companies and that the ministry is at least one year behind on many of the reviews of these assessments. The largest gravel mine needs to be reviewed back to 1990. To the same minister: if we've acted on all of these assessments, has this assessment back to 1990 on the largest gravel producer now been completed?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the exact answer to that question, but I can say that, particularly in these times of economic hardship, our view in regulation is not to hire lots of civil servants to run around and monitor everything but to put in place outcome-based regulation, where we get the results at a reasonable price.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Research and Innovation Funding

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The development of a knowledge-based economy is critical to Alberta's future success. To the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. My constituents of Edmonton-Mill Woods are wondering: how is this government fostering the growth of businesses that conduct research and development in this province?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question. Over the years this government has maintained a policy of very, very low tax rates for our businesses, which has obviously been a huge benefit to the people of Alberta given the amount of people who are employed in our province today. In addition to that, last year we announced a platform of programs for the knowledge-based economy of the future which included a science and research experimental development tax credit, which makes us even more competitive amongst other jurisdictions. That credit is a 10 per cent research and development credit on up to $4 million in research, so up to a $400,000 credit. It is certainly having the desired effect in that companies are looking to Alberta to come and do research and development here.

Mr. Benito: My first supplemental to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise: what is the anticipated net economic effect of the Alberta scientific research and experimental development tax credit?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Ms Evans: Yes. While we're still in the early stages, we see this refundable tax credit as a fairly significant incentive. I know that both the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology and our own department receive a number of questions. Because it is a refundable credit, companies will benefit even if they don't yet pay income tax. It is a refundable credit available to them. It's important for early-stage companies as well as for those emerging technology companies that might be more advanced in their thinking but have new opportunities because of the tax credit.

Mr. Benito: My second supplementary to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise: how will this tax credit help new technology companies who might not earn enough income to pay tax?

Ms Evans: That credit remains, so it's still there when they at some point in time will have to pay tax, and then they will be able to draw on that credit. We expect that the annual benefit of the credit to Alberta companies will be in the neighbourhood of $60 million. Mr. Speaker, I've always felt that the best news story would be that we had paid out tax credits of a hundred million, maybe $200 million. It would speak clearly and eloquently to the number of companies that are emerging to do good business and to expand their businesses here in Alberta. That's exactly what we want: the creation of jobs and the creation of opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Parks and Wildlife Preservation

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Tourism, Parks and Recreation business plan notes that the ministry will be going forward with creating "more campgrounds that accommodate larger trailers." The government's 2008 Survey of Albertans'

Priorities for Provincial Parks notes that 61.3 per cent of Albertans want to protect more natural land and leave it undisturbed. Why is the minister continuing a policy, as Joni Mitchell would say, of paving paradise and putting up a parking lot?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that's correct at all. I think that our ministry will be reflecting in the park plan, which will be announced sometime next week, a balance between conservation and recreation. This is a very big province with lots of opportunities, and this government is actually very proud of its record of creation of new parks.

Mr. Chase: Yes, it is a delicate balance between concrete and conservation, but you're losing the fight.

The business plan also highlights policy to build more trails for all-terrain vehicles, yet the government's own survey of Albertans' priorities again shows that 71 per cent of Albertans are opposed to increased off-road vehicle infrastructure. Why is the minister going forward with a policy that will further disturb and destroy what's left of our natural protected areas?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to disagree with the hon. member. I've said before in this House that we want a well-managed trail system in this province. We can either let the problem manage us, or we can manage it. We've got the hon. member across the way heading up a committee to bring back to us recommendations that help us manage this issue.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. You didn't manage it at Indian Graves two years ago. You didn't manage it at McLean Creek last year. I can hardly wait till this year.

Why doesn't the minister and this government support a policy which sees funding going towards park and wildlife preservation as opposed to ripping up and paving over vast tracts of provincial parklands?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, this government has a really good track record when it comes to increasing parks, and I can of course go over that with you. The OH Ranch, that we brought in this year, brought us some 20,000 acres of grassland ecology. We had the Eagle Point provincial park and recreation area, another great example. We've got the Lois Hole centennial park, the river valley park. Oh, I could go on and on. I would say to the hon. member that he's not correct. This government has done a good job.

Supportive Living Units in Bonnyville-Cold Lake

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure this afternoon to speak to an aspect of Budget 2009 that will greatly affect the people in my constituency and all Albertans. Seniors make up a large part of my constituency, and currently there is no assisted-living facility in Bonnyville-Cold Lake and the MD of Bonnyville. Through Budget 2009 Seniors and Community Supports will be providing capital funding in the form of $150 million over the next three years for affordable supportive living initiatives, or ASLI. This is in addition to the $84.4 million in ASLI funding for the 2008-09 fiscal year.

Some of the recent funding given through this program to Cold Lake will help build an assisted-living complex called Points West Living. This facility plans to meet the needs of seniors in the Cold Lake community by developing 24 DAL suites, 21 supportive living apartments, and 21 life lease apartments. Mr. Speaker, this is a total of 84 suites for the residents in need. This housing is affordable and intended to give seniors choice, support while maintaining their dignity and quality of life. I am so excited to see this funding being utilized in a way that benefits the people in my constituency.

I would like to thank the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports for this increased support, support that many Albertans need. This reflects the Alberta government's long-term commitment to supportive living. Since 1999 the government has provided $365 million in funding to support the development or modernization of close to 8,000 supportive living units. Our province is committed to seniors aging in the right place, and through actions in my constituency and across Alberta it is becoming a reality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Before we move on, may we revert to Introduction of Guests?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to introduce to you and through you to the rest of this particular Assembly three individuals from my constituency. They've travelled quite a few miles to be with us today. These three individuals are Ryan Gauthier and his brother Brett, accompanied by their mother, Rhonda Clarke-Gauthier. These individuals have been extremely involved in the parliamentary process and have been to the Legislature a few times and have been able to debate legislation through some of the programs that are offered through the province of Alberta. As well, this family is very, very keen on 4-H and are active members of 4-H clubs, and the mom is actually a leader of the 4-H club in the Donnelly community. I would like the Assembly to officially welcome them by offering them the traditional warm welcome. Please rise if you can.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly – and I'm sure she's not new to anyone here – my assistant, Hana Marinkovic, and her friend, who are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they both stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Bills

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Bill 205

Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure (Third Party Advertising) Amendment Act, 2009.

Bill 205 would clarify the parameters of third-party election advertising during provincial elections.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. As requested by the minister of health, I have a number of tablings today regarding questions on the agenda. The first tabling I have is an invoice from J.L. Saunders & Associates Inc. It is for work done from November 1 through to the 27th of 2008, plus a contract cancellation fee. It's a total invoice for $47,000.

I have another invoice here from J.L. Saunders & Associates Inc. from October 1 through to the 31st, 2008, and it's for 43,800 and some-odd dollars.

The third invoice I have is also from J.L. Saunders & Associates Inc., and it's for a period of time from September 1 to the 30th. It's for consulting fees, and it's for $42,360.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, is it your intent to read all of those sheets?

Mr. MacDonald: That was the end of it, Mr. Speaker. I have other tablings as well. The minister of health challenged me to provide this information, and I think for the House I should.

This is an agreement, copies of the agreement for consulting between J.L. Saunders & Associates Inc. and East Central health.

The last tabling I have is from July 22, 2008. It's a letter to the hon. minister of health from Charlotte Robb, interim chief executive officer, regarding the employment letter of Paddy Meade.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of information from the Canadian Physiotherapy Association. These benefits were referred to today in question period by my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Also, I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters expressing concern about the cancellation of public funding for gender reassignment surgery. They state that such procedures are medically necessary and that cancelling public funding will cost the government more in the long run. The letters are from Marcus Peterson and Nicole Hankel.

Thank you very much.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, response to Written Question 5, asked for by Mr. Mason on April 6, 2009.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, you rose on a point of order. You caught my eye. Do you wish to speak?

Point of Order

Members' Statements

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We do have a rule in this House that there are no points of order allowed during a member's statement, but that rule is based on a certain self-control being exhibited by the members. I did not hear that in the member's statement, so I did believe that I needed to draw that to the attention of the House. I apologize for taking up the time of the House.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. The hon. member is correct. There are no points of order during members' statements. Since 1993, when Members' Statements was first introduced, the agreement was that all of the statements would be on something that is happening within your constituency, to bring something to light that is a positive to the benefit of your constituency. On that point, it sort of has deviated a little bit from that once in a while. I think that taking into account, certainly, perhaps the notoriety that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has gained with some of his waxing eloquent, there was no malicious intent involved in this. The ruling is that there is no point of order on this.

Orders of the Day

Committee of Supply

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if we could have unanimous consent to just recess for about three or four minutes.

[The committee adjourned from 2:54 p.m. to 2:58 p.m.]

The Chair: Let's call it 3 o'clock now. I would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Main Estimates 2009-10

Executive Council

The Chair: I would like to call on our Premier to move the estimates.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and hon. members. I'm pleased to appear before this committee to move and discuss the 2009-10 Executive Council budget estimates and also the '09-12 business plan. Executive Council is a vital part of government operations, with staff serving Albertans in a number of ways, from promoting good governance of government agencies to facilitating two-way communication with Albertans.

I'd like to first introduce the staff of my office who are with me today. On the floor we have my chief of staff, Ron Glen; Brian Manning, Deputy Minister of Executive Council; Grant Robertson, deputy secretary to cabinet; Steve MacDonald, deputy chief of policy co-ordination; Roxanna Benoit, managing director of the Public Affairs Bureau; and Elaine Dougan, who is the executive director of corporate services. Some of staff are also up in the gallery, including Elan MacDonald, deputy chief of staff; Jordon Copping, my executive assistant; George Samoil, executive director of House procedures and legislative affairs; Bob Fessenden, deputy minister of the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy; Peggy Hartman, assistant deputy minister of the Agency Governance Secretariat; Paul Stanway, my director of communications; and Tom Olsen, director of media relations.

Mr. Chairman, my remarks today will include a brief fiscal overview for 2009-10, followed by some details on upcoming initiatives from the business plan. Executive Council spending for '09-10 is forecast at $35.8 million, an increase of $5.8 million over last year. The increase is attributed to the following initiatives: $1 million is budgeted to cover the costs of convening the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, bringing the council's total budget to $2 million, and $5 million will be dedicated to implement the Alberta brand campaign, bringing the campaign's '09-10 budget to $10 million. Budget changes also reflect the standard increases for salary settlements and the removal of funding for achievement bonuses this fiscal year.

I'd like to offer a quick review of Executive Council's program areas and priorities as outlined in the business plan. Executive Council includes my offices here in the Legislative Assembly, including communications and correspondence, and in McDougall Centre in Calgary; and the deputy minister's office, which provides advice and support to me on policy and organizational issues and leadership to the Alberta public service. We also have cabinet co-ordination and support, the policy co-ordination office, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, the Agency Governance Secretariat, the protocol office, administrative support for the office of the Lieutenant Governor, the Alberta Order of Excellence Council, and the Public Affairs Bureau.

Executive Council has outlined a number of strategic priorities in the '09-12 business plan, including strengthening agency governance, enhancing policy capacity, continuing the establishment of the Council for Economic Strategy, implementing the Alberta branding initiative, continuing implementation of a strategic communications plan across government, and utilizing social media technology to enhance communications. These priorities reflect my government's commitment to be financially responsible, open, and accountable as well as to ensure that Alberta maintains a strong position nationally and internationally.

One strategy to achieve this goal is to convene the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. Council members will represent a broad range of senior-level experience with the major economic sectors of importance to Alberta and will be tasked with providing advice and strategies to ensure a high quality of life for Albertans. Last year the council was in the developmental stage. This year it'll begin its work. The additional $1 million will cover remuneration for council members, travel and other costs associated with meetings, and fees for consultation, advice, and support from experts in the field.

I'd now like to briefly mention some of the other work that Executive Council will be undertaking. The policy co-ordination office will continue to support policy development across government and to improve the transparency, accountability, and governance of government agencies. The Agency Governance Secretariat will continue to support the implementation of policies outlined in the Public Agencies Governance Framework.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just talk a bit about Alberta's brand campaign. In this time of economic uncertainty it is vital that we promote our province, that we protect our markets and our ability to attract investment and tourism. We want to ensure that Alberta remains a place of opportunity, a place of prosperity and quality of life. We have a very good story to tell, and we're going to tell it. The budget for the brand initiative is $25 million over three years, with $10 million allocated for '09-10, this fiscal period. This is an increase of $5 million from last year.

This year's budget will primarily be dedicated to implementing the brand campaign in local, national, and international markets and to directly advocate Alberta's interests in those markets. As the brand is open and available, funds will also support the development of high-quality promotional materials for both government and others who are promoting the province to use. Those others could be from universities to school boards to whoever wants to use the Alberta branding initiative. The funds will be used prudently. In fact, $1 million of last year's budget, $5 million, 20 per cent of the total budget, was returned to Treasury. Brand implementation is being led by the Public Affairs Bureau, which facilitates two-way communication between Albertans and their government.

The bureau is also working to strengthen communication with Albertans, Canadians, and the world through emerging web technologies such as webcasts, blogs, and two-way conferencing.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this concludes my introductory comments. I welcome members to ask any questions that they might have. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to address the Premier and his staff on issues relating to Executive Council, the estimates briefing summary in particular. I approach issues of budget, as I think the Premier has articulated, as comparable to managing a household budget, in which one wants to look carefully at what the plan is, where we're going, where we're saving appropriately for the future, where we're spending, and how we're getting value for those dollars. I'm sure that's not a surprise to anyone here.

Some of the questions that I'll be asking will relate fundamentally to: if there is an increase, why is there an increase? If we're spending more in one area, what are the measurement tools that we would use to assess whether we're getting value for money? If we've chosen not to increase, what were the decisions around that? It's not simply around increases, but it's about where we are going. I think an important question to be asking the Premier and his particular Executive Council is how he models within the Executive Council the direction and the vision of this government and how this expenditure of public dollars is reflected in that conscientious approach to establishing a vision, establishing a plan, clarifying how we're going to spend those dollars, and then the discipline with which we actually follow the plan.

In summary, then, the total budget for Executive Council is $36 million, for the record, for 2009-10, an increase of $6 million from $30 million, amounting to roughly a 20 per cent increase. The reasons given for the increase are the provincial branding initiative and the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy.

I'm wondering if the Premier would agree to going through one phase of this for the hour and, over the several phases of this budget, asking for the Premier's response as we deal with them. In that context, then, we've talked about the branding initiative to improve the image of Alberta and the rest of Canada internationally and the Council for Economic Strategy to provide advice to the Premier on economic strategies that would ensure a high quality of life for Albertans and make Alberta a good place to live, work, visit, and invest.

Well, first to the Public Affairs Bureau, Mr. Premier. Here we don't see substantial increases but a significant expenditure of public dollars that I think most Albertans would assume would be operating in the public interest and communicating to the public on behalf of the government of Alberta, so questions continue to be raised in my jurisdiction about how that money is being spent, why it's so much different from other provinces, why that bureau is reporting to the Premier instead of to the government, and some of the concerns around partisan reporting and influencing of the kinds of messaging that Albertans are hearing about the activities of the government.

The need for independence, I guess, is what I'm alluding to. I know the Premier has alluded to some of that in the past, that he would be examining that whole question of independence of reporting. I would like to hear the Premier comment on the role of the Public Affairs Bureau and the extent to which Albertans can have confidence that it's reflecting the objective results that the government is getting for spending its dollars and how it's serving all parties, I guess I would say, all perspectives on the development of this province. It supports government ministries. It helps to inform Albertans about programs and policies, and it co-ordinates communications across the government initiatives.

Today we spoke in the press about the substantial increase in communications spending across all government departments and the surprise, frankly, that there was a 55 per cent increase in communications from this government, taking all of the departments into consideration. One has to wonder how that is being co-ordinated by the Public Affairs Bureau, why the substantial increase in these departments, to what extent there may be duplication, and especially when we see the very high number of public dollars going into the Public Affairs Bureau, how it could be justified that this government needs so much to communicate to Albertans that it's doing a good job. Those are fundamental questions that I'm being asked and that I have also.

The Premier needs also to address the question of how it is that in his department 40 per cent of the entire budget is allocated to the Public Affairs Bureau. Including the branding campaign, of course, that comes up to $25 million. With respect to the total amount going through other government ministries on communications, we identified $15.5 million, which does not include the Executive Council, does not include housing, Municipal Affairs, and Service Alberta. So the total, then, for communications, including Executive Council, is $38,600,000, clearly a staggering fee for communicating to Albertans about the day-to-day activities of their government.

In the two years 2007-08 to 2009-10 the communications throughout government increased 55 per cent, as I indicated, and throughout the rest of government ministries a total of at least $15 million is spent on communications, according to the line items in 2009-2010 government estimates. How does the Premier explain the need to be spending a total, then, of $39 million on communications which in many cases must be duplicating some of what's happening in his Public Affairs Bureau? On the other hand, addressing the office of the Premier, only $11 million assisting in policy planning and development. There seems to be an imbalance there. One has to raise the question about whether image becomes more important than substance when so much is dedicated to public communications. Has the Premier considered or done a value-for-money audit in the Public Affairs Bureau?

We could maybe leave those questions and ask for your responses before we move on to the other changes.

The Chair: Hon. member, do you wish to combine the 10 minutes of yours with 10 minutes of our Premier's, 20 minutes together between the two?

Dr. Swann: Yes, please.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you. There's no doubt that the role of this Legislature is to carefully examine the budgets of all the ministries. These are public dollars, and I can assure the taxpaying public that we will apply discipline to spending all the money that comes to a vote before this House very prudently and carefully.

With respect to the comparison, I think, made by the hon. leader to other provinces, the province of British Columbia has $28.8 million in their Public Affairs Bureau – I believe that was last year's figure – and the FTE count is 223.

The increase that was mentioned by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition – I think he talked about a 50 per cent increase. I have a copy of the government of Alberta communications budget that was put out by the director of communications for the Alberta Liberal caucus. Well, if you look at the PAB communications budget – now, this is excluding the branding initiative; just take the branding initiative out – the '07-08 actuals were $12,528,000. The '08-09 forecast was $13,083,000. That was an increase of $555,000, which is a 4.4 per cent increase. The '08-09 forecast was $13,083,000, and the '09-10 estimate is $13,051,000, which is actually a decrease of 0.2 per cent. So we're relatively holding our own. Again, that's excluding the branding initiative.

With the government communications budget, excluding the branding initiative, '07-08 actuals were $24,867,000. The '08-09 forecast was $27,747,000, which is an increase of $2.8 million, an 11.6 per cent increase. Now, for this coming budget the estimate is $28,622,000. The '08-09 forecast was $27,747,000, which is an increase of $875,000, which is actually a 3.2 per cent increase. This is keeping in line with what was established as the increase in budget through consultation with various business, community, not-for-profit agencies, Albertans that said, "Keep your increases to the rate of inflation plus growth in population," which is about that 3.7 per cent.

The majority of the increase is in the branding initiative. That's an additional $5 million for this year. We are going to pursue getting Alberta's story out, as I said before, not only within Alberta but within Canada and the North American continent, and we will do it internationally. We depend on exports of our products to other countries, and we've got to get the correct information, talk about what Alberta has in advantage and the fact that we want to do business with as many countries as we can.

Of all of that Albertans produce, 60 per cent of it is exported outside of Alberta. Ninety per cent of that goes to one country. We do a lot of business with the United States. Given the fact that the Americans are really reeling from this economic downturn, we have to do whatever we can to find new markets. I don't want to tie the future of this province to one country in terms of trade, even though we have a very, very good trade agreement with the United States. As a matter of fact, the state of California is our largest trading partner within the United States, and of course that state is going through some exceptional economic issues given just a huge budget deficit. I think it's something like $85 billion. So some of our markets are at stake, and we've got to get the correct information out.

Is there a lot to communicate? Yes, there is. We have been very active as a government since December '06. This Legislature has worked very hard. We've made a lot of policy changes. A lot of bills went through the House. New programs were introduced. Whenever there's a new program introduced, whether it be for seniors, whether it be for a school board, for any Albertan, the onus is on government to get the information out through media, whether it be regular media, mail-outs to those parties that benefit from a program change. It's important to have that two-way communication.

This year we will expand our communication to new technologies. I firmly believe, this government believes, that we have to communicate through a lot of the social media because a lot of Albertans are getting their information from, you know, maybe blogging, Twitter, Flickr, and whatever else is out there. That's an important demographic of Albertans, and this is one way of communicating with them.

That, I think, will capture the increase in this budget. Once again, I will not apologize nor will I back down from the need to further extend our branding initiative internationally. The world is changing. Most economists are saying that the GDP of the United States will decrease compared to the world GDP. If that's the general trend, then let's not just sit back here and hope that things will recover. We've got to be aggressive and seek those international markets, really, for all sectors – energy, agriculture, forestry – and invite people to visit our province in tourism and also invite people from around the world to invest in this great province of Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Council for Economic Strategy stated that one of the main reasons for the $6 million increase for the fiscal plan included $5 million for the branding initiative. I'd be very interested to hear what the minister is receiving in terms of economic planning, counsel, and support. Who's being hired to do what? What kind of deliverables? Why, in fact, are they needed beyond the existing ministries that support our planning in this government, at a very hefty price tag; that is, including those related to the ministries of Finance, Treasury Board, and Executive Council itself? How does value for money get translated there?

Especially when we're in a time of real economic constraint, I think Albertans want to know that we're using every means possible within the resources we've already been given to provide the leadership, the planning, and the initiatives that we have begun and have committed to. So if the Premier could enlighten us a bit about who's on the council, something about what the fees are that are being provided, and what kind of deliverables we can expect from that, that would be helpful.

Just jumping back briefly to the branding initiative, it would be interesting to know whether we're using provincial resources, provincial staff, provincial companies to do the branding initiatives, if you could enhance our understanding of that, and what kinds of communication we're going to be seeing from that branding initiative, where the money is actually going in terms of communicating through the Internet, television, what modalities that money is going to, and how, ultimately, we'll measure the impact of that branding initiative.

People who are losing their jobs, people who are finding their medical services delisted, people who are struggling are really raising important questions about whether we're managing their resources in the public interest or whether there are some other agendas that are influencing our spending decisions and that, in fact, it will be very difficult to measure the impacts of this branding within this administration's time frame and, therefore, hold them accountable. Some indicators of success would be welcome.

I'll take my seat and allow the Premier to speak.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. With respect to trying to find a balance in government on the expenditure side, health, education, research, technology, innovation are very important as we move to a knowledge-based economy. Will it happen over 10 years? No. Will we get there in 20? We'll be closer to achieving our goals in 20 years. Certainly, in 30 years, together with the city of Edmonton, the city of Calgary, other municipalities, our universities, that is the goal: to be leading edge in technology and research not only in Canada or in the United States or on the North American continent but in the world. That's the overall goal.

Many have said, you know, that there'll be a transition from fossil fuel to a knowledge-based economy. We know that. Will fossil fuel be around for the next 30 years? Yes. Will it be around for the next 50? Yes. There will be technologies introduced in terms of reducing carbon and dealing with some of the other issues tied to the environment. At the same time, while we move to a knowledge-based economy, we have to constantly create wealth. You don't pay for health or education just by reaching deeper in a pocket or running larger deficits or huge debt that at some time the country of Canada and various provinces have to pay for. That's not the way to go. So we are being affirmative, we're being proactive, and we are putting together, as I said before, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy in conjunction with the branding initiative.

Now, the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. As I said in my opening remarks, the first year was just working towards putting together the council. What we did was we had three committees. These were committees convened of city of Edmonton and area based people, Calgary and area based people, and then a committee of Albertans living in Grande Prairie to Lethbridge to other communities. They came from all walks of life – business, education, academic – obviously those that have a lot of experience internationally, that have rubbed shoulders with some of the world's brightest, not only in research and technology but in business, and have put a list together.

We're now working off of that list and inviting people to join the committee. There are over, well, 60 Albertans that . . .

The Chair: We've just completed the first 20-minute segment. Should we continue on with the second 20 minutes?

Mr. Stelmach: Okay.

These are, you know, 60 Albertans that got together and talked about: what areas of expertise should we concentrate on? This is all focused on the future, which is very important for our province. We are now in the recruiting phase. I'm pleasantly surprised that as of today we will have some of the world's leading experts in many areas that, when asked to join the committee, just jumped on the opportunity to work with and give Alberta advice. Once all of the candidates are called, then we will make the announcement, but at this time we're just working through it. There are a few more candidates to call. Sometimes it's difficult to reach them because they are in different corners of the world. They're very, very busy people. But I can tell you that they're going to bring tremendous expertise, counsel, and experience to the province of Alberta, again, setting the direction.

It will require some research dollars, some support. We're looking, probably, at two meetings a year, and then the information will come forward to the Premier. Then we'll work through our ministries with Albertans in terms of implementing the long-term plan.

I'm still pleasantly surprised that so many leading international experts know of Alberta. They want to help us and are fully aware of the growth in Alberta, our technology, and the investment that we've made. The candidates will dedicate a considerable amount of time because we're going to be asking some very tough questions leading to seeing how we can position Alberta in a relatively short period of time and transition it to a knowledge-based economy.

The council will consist of 12 members. We have Bob Fessenden, who is the deputy minister, and two staff members, and that's just the three people dedicated. We are looking at a balance between some Alberta born and raised and presently working in Alberta, looking across Canada, the North American continent, and also around the world. We're trying for, you know, maybe four, four, and four, whatever works out. We'd like to have a good contingent, a sample of people that have done very well in different countries, different businesses, especially in high tech, those that have even brought major companies from near bankruptcy to doing very well in the world using technology, investing in research and innovation.

The additional funding requested for remuneration for council members: we haven't decided what it will be; you know, so much per meeting. Most of the costs would be, I assume, in travel because many will be travelling some great distance to do work here in Alberta. It is fees for consultation, advice, and support. The remuneration for council members will follow the guidelines that we laid out in the public agencies governance framework, which is a framework that was supported here in the House.

With respect to the brand campaign there were questions raised on the purpose of the brand campaign and the timing. You know, if you're in business and if your revenue stream is diminished, then some people pull back. Of course, good business leaders look at how they can grow their revenue stream and grow their business at a time when many would look at it as a disincentive. In this particular case we're looking at it as a tremendous opportunity.

The opening comments that I delivered covered the intent, but with respect to the website the brand belongs to Albertans, and it's albertabrand.com. The site provides tools to Albertans so that they, too, can help tell Alberta's story around the world. Now, in the first two weeks following the launch of the brand, there were nearly 40,000 visits. Actually, updated as of March 26, there have been 47,000 visits to albertabrand.com, 11,000 viewings of the video, which is quite outstanding. In fact, this morning the Edmonton Real Estate Forum ran the video twice, and we had guests here from different parts of Canada. There were five Alberta stories selected to be posted on the site, 55 Alberta photos posted, and 37 requests to sign up as ambassadors. Seventy per cent of visitors to albertabrand.com were within Canada, 20 per cent from the United States, and 10 per cent were from outside of North America. The site has had visits from 111 countries.

The government of Alberta website stats. The websites are increasingly used by Albertans, Canadians, and international audiences to find information. In '08-09 the main website had 7.6 million visits, up from 6.3 million in '07-08. That's almost 21,000 visits per day. Satisfaction with the main website is at about 65 per cent, and usefulness of the information is at 85.4 per cent, and those are '07-08 figures.

Now, I made some comments with respect to social media and some of the stats. Use of social media continues to grow in Alberta but also amongst Canadians. We know that men and women use the Internet equally. Alberta at 85 per cent has the third-highest Internet penetration in Canada, just behind B.C. at 90 per cent and Ontario at 89 per cent, and the source for this, of course, is Ipsos-Reid. Two-thirds of online Canadians now have high-speed Internet access, and an additional 1 in 5 have high-speed light service. Dial-up users continue to decline, now accounting for only about 12 per cent of online Canadians.

Since 2006 there has been an upward trend of the older generation of Canadians, 55-plus years old, getting online, with the average age being 51 years old. Sixty-five per cent of online Canadians have visited Facebook, 47 per cent have visited Wikipedia, more than have visited the Yellow Pages. I didn't even know that myself. Maybe the book is too heavy to hold. Thirty-five per cent have visited Canoe, 32 per cent have visited CTV, 24 per cent have visited CBC, and 20 per cent have visited the Canwest news site. Again, the sources are not the government but comScore Media Metrix and others that follow these sorts of things.

I think that gives us a bit of an idea of the value of the social media and how it is growing in popularity, and it's incumbent that we do use the social media.

Now, with respect to the branding initiative and using the advertising, in the last week of March we ran a TV, radio, print, and online advertising campaign across Alberta to show Albertans the brand and how it will be used to promote the province. The cost of that campaign was about $460,000. It's all part of the overall budget for Public Affairs. As I said before, we'll continue to do whatever we can to get Alberta's story out internationally.

The Chair: Hon. member, before I recognize you to speak further, may I just take a moment here to refresh our memory about the new process here. All members should be reminded that the vote on the estimates will be deferred until we are in Committee of Supply on May 7. Any amendment moved during the committee consideration of the estimates will also be deferred until we are in Committee of Supply on that date.

Also, the process today is that any member who wishes to speak has 10 minutes, but if you want to combine the 10 minutes with the Premier, you have 20 minutes in total. There's a minimum two hours of debate on the estimates of Executive Council.

With that, I would say that we can proceed. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Well, clearly, the devil is in the details. It's very hard to get details on some of the spending decisions, and it's certainly difficult to get evaluative frameworks reported. I'm wondering if the Premier will be giving details about this economic council: who is on it and the kinds of salaries they're getting and some of the specifics of the deliverables that are being expected. Albertans want to know that we're getting value for money. That's an increasingly pressing concern in these times.

I'll move on to bonuses and ask the Premier a number of questions around this through Executive Council. For the 2008-09 fiscal year the government will pay out $40 million in bonuses to senior-level ministry officials. We do know that the $40 million pool for bonuses is allocated to 6,100 civil servants. We want to make sure that our emphasis is not on all of those civil servants but on the high-level ministry officials – deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers – those who are receiving substantial bonuses.

Will the Premier tell Albertans what role the Deputy Minister of Executive Council plays in determining the bonuses given out in the 2008-09 fiscal year? Will he tell us what role the Premier's office played in evaluating the deputy ministers and the bonuses they received? Will the Premier provide and table the criteria used for determining bonuses for deputy ministers and other senior officials?

Page 10 of the fiscal plan states that there were $215 million found through a value review. Will the Premier give details of what that entailed? Will he acknowledge that by cutting executive bonuses, that would have made a significant impact, roughly 20 per cent of that amount?

Mr. Stelmach: On the achievement bonuses the budget that was allocated was $40 million. This is a process that was started a number of years ago. It was a three-member committee that brought recommendations to the Premier of the day, my predecessor, and we have followed that process to this last fiscal year, that ended March 31 of '09. From April 1 of '09 on the bonuses have been suspended, and it's, again, in keeping with the fact that our revenue has diminished dramatically and that we're starting a new fiscal year and that it's, you know, roughly $40 million that can go to other needs within the budget.

For the previous year we're being fair with all, whether it be out of scope, which is those that are not in a union, in management positions, or those in a union. We've pretty well served notice that next year we're going to work together and see how we can ensure that within our three-year business plan, the deficit budget that we rolled out this year and into next year, the money that we have set aside in a savings account, the $17 billion, we can stretch it out and meet the needs of Albertans yet ensure that on the operational side, not on the capital side but on the operational side, we don't go to the bank to borrow.

I'm proud. We're the only jurisdiction in North America that has set this much money aside for times such as these. You know, we learned from the past. The last time that we had a serious recession, Alberta was really the whipping province during that time. We had high interest rates. Oil and gas prices diminished dramatically. We had a federal government policy that was hostile to Alberta, to western Canada. Times are different. We have historically low interest rates. We have international trade agreements that are allowing us more trade with other countries. We have, you know, our free trade agreement with the United States, which has really served us well over the period of time. We also have two emerging economies, China and India, that were not there in the early '80s, that even with depressed economic growth are still estimating their growth at about 5 per cent. So that's good news for the province of Alberta.

The other is that Alberta is recognized internationally now more than ever, especially with respect to our expertise in energy technology. We've attracted some of the world's best to our universities, and that in itself has created a good ambassador program for us. Of course, as I said, the program has been suspended. We will work through, you know, the difficult decisions over the next year, but we will look to constantly finding additional dollars in the budget without significantly disrupting any of the programs.

Now, with respect to the bonus, just for the record, the '08-09 budget, the previous budget, was around $40 million. These bonuses are taxable income. They're not pensionable earnings. There are nearly 27,000 employees in the Alberta public service. The management group – that means all levels – is around 4,000, and then the opted out and excluded employees number about 2,100, so, as the hon. leader said, about 6,100 individuals.

Key numbers from the corporate demographics report: average age of the Alberta public service employee is 46; average age of the entire management group is 50. Now, ministers' executive assistants were also eligible for the achievement bonus, and that as well has been terminated. The median achievement bonus provided last year, for '07-08, was around $5,300 individually. There was a formula that was used.

How was the bonus established? A minister sits down with the deputy of the Executive Council. The minister has, you know, looked at whatever the mandate for the deputy and for the management is. How did they perform? Was the departmental budget in line? Was it balanced? How did the deputy minister and his staff – you know, the ADMs and executive directors – move public policy, the decisions that were made in this House? All that goes into deciding what the bonus was.

Where are we compared to others? My chief deputy has completed all performance appraisals of all deputy ministers for fiscal '08-09, reviewing the targets that they achieved in their individual performance bonuses. The achievement bonus: of the 10 provinces in Canada eight other provinces offer an achievement bonus program, four are awarding the full allocation, one reduced allocation, and three provinces have not yet made the determination.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the Premier. I wonder if it would be possible for the Premier to table some of the evaluative comments about these individuals. Clearly, one would be surprised if the deputy minister of health received a bonus, given the chaos that our health system is in. One would have to wonder if Albertans would support that kind of decision. What is the evidence that we're actually following these guidelines? I think Albertans have a right to know where $40 million is going and that these were objective evaluations.

The Chair: We are now on the last 20-minute period for the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple of other questions come through the '07-08 annual report of Executive Council and relate to page 10 of the annual report, showing that there were 68 trade missions made. I guess the question around that is: how much money was spent on these 68 trade missions, and how would Albertans evaluate that this was money well spent? Do we have measures of evaluation of these trade missions? Can we look at details of where the money was spent? That's obviously a big issue for Albertans, to know on individual trips where the money went. We've heard lots of rumours about high-flying spending and side trips. I think Albertans need to know more about the details of that kind of activity.

Page 29 of the report shows that accommodation costs of the Public Affairs Bureau were $488,000 for the year ended March 31, '08, an increase of almost $170,000 from 2007, a 53 per cent, in fact, increase. Perhaps the Premier could comment on that further, those two issues.

Mr. Stelmach: Sure. In keeping with openness and transparency, every time a minister or an MLA on the government side that may be asked to represent a minister travels, the purpose of the trip, the expenses are posted online. There's also a report at the end of every mission in terms of the accomplishments, whom the minister talked to, what meetings were held. We will continue to be in the face of many decision-makers not only on this continent but around the world as often as we can.

I'll give you an example. You know, we talk about transparency. On the one little, quick jaunt to Houston, Texas, I was there with two other Premiers: Premier Gary Doer, Premier Brad Wall, and myself. Very clearly in the news release we said that we were going to cohost – cohost – a luncheon at NAPE, which is a large North American petroleum congress, where Premier Wall and I spoke. Premier Wall spoke just before me. I believe they signed their declaration a few minutes before we did, incorporating the province of Alberta in 1905, although I believe they held their parade three days later. But he spoke first; I followed. There were about 1,200 people in the audience.

Coming back to Alberta, I find that the cost of the cohosting of that luncheon was attached to my plane flight. Talk about stories.

Sure. One TV station in the middle of this province said, “Whoa, man, he must have flown executive class,” you know, just supposition. Just ask for the information if you couldn’t understand, which was clearly stated, that we actually cohosted a luncheon.

Is it necessary? You bet it’s necessary. The state of Texas, the province of Alberta, and the province of Saskatchewan are very similar: Alberta and Texas, major energy producers. By the way, a number of other similarities: Texas is the number one producer of wind energy in the United States; we are the number one wind energy producer in Canada, unsubsidized – okay? – which is also very important. We’re not going to hide the true cost of wind energy in the next generation’s bill. We pay for it today.

So is there transparency? Yes. Every trip is posted with all the expenses. How do you measure it? Well, I can tell you how I measure it. We went to the Western Governors’ conference. The Western Governors’ conference is held in perhaps an auditorium about as big as this, at least, in Jackson Hole, Wyoming. The media and the lobbyists, 250 people, sitting in the audience. In public, well, yeah, we’re all going to be joining the western climate change initiatives; we’re all partners. We pat each other on the back. Yeah, we’re all friends. Behind closed doors all of a sudden, oh, hmm, a little different story. Carbon footprint? Yeah, well, we do have real issues with carbon from coal-fired electricity generation. Oh, by the way, we’ll be partners. We’ll sign on the western climate change initiative, but just exclude our domestic coal-fired, and we’re partners. We’ll join this big, you know, initiative across the North American continent.

That’s the kind of information you don’t get from the media. You’ve got to be there in the room at the table. Unless we continue to build those relationships, we’re going to lose out in the clean energy dialogue. That’s why it’s imperative that we’re there – we will be on two committees – especially when it comes to a smart grid and also on carbon capture and storage. We’ve got to get there to make sure that the correct information goes to the decision-makers in the United States.

Whatever you may hear from those who want to detract from Alberta, the big issue for us in Alberta is that coal-fired electro-generation is the major – major – producer of carbon. If we don’t get a fair agreement with the Americans, you know what’s going to happen? You and I are going to be paying more for electricity. It’s going to diminish global competitiveness, which leads to less manufacturing and less jobs. That’s the story we’ve got to get out. That’s why we’ve got to be there, and we will continue to be there no matter how we issue in terms of performance. I tell you, performance is how we’re going to get our place at the table to ensure that we protect Alberta’s interests not only today but well into the future. And that’s a role of the Premier.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. That was quite a speech from a government that first denied climate change, then ridiculed it, and now pretends to be acting seriously on climate change. If this government was serious about climate change, of course, the next coal-fired power plant would have carbon capture required for it, the Keephills 3. Instead, they’ve permitted it without any carbon capture and storage. That’s clearly a government that’s waiting to be dragged into the 21st century on energy and environmental initiatives.

Shifting gears, then, to Executive Council’s responsibility through strategies 1.2 and 1.3, to assist policy development. Can the Premier explain what’s happened in the health care system and how his ministry has influenced some of the policy changes in the health care system, including the kinds of quality and access and cost-effectiveness questions that have been raised for over a decade now? In a ministry that continues to restructure as opposed to actually addressing the fundamental imbalance in the health system, focusing on high-tech, specialized medicine and neglecting primary care, family physicians, nursing care in the home, prevention, is it any wonder that our system is in such chaos when we have neglected the very foundations of the health system and primary care? I’d be very interested in hearing the Premier’s comments on how his Executive Council has guided or influenced the health ministry throughout this chaotic restructuring.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Chairman, I do have to push back a bit on the opening comments made in this last exchange by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. I think it is absolutely ridiculous for a fellow Albertan to get up in this most public Assembly and accuse the government of denying climate change, dragging its feet, and not doing anything about it to protect the future health of the next generation. That is absolutely ridiculous. In fact, Alberta was the first jurisdiction to put legislation in, not just the year before but in the very early ’90s, to prepare for what was coming – the only jurisdiction to do it. Secondly, first jurisdiction in North America and I believe the only one today to actually put legislation in place that limits carbon production out of major industrial emitters. We actually were the first to put a fee, a levy, on carbon; the one and only in North America and in the world to make such a sizable investment in carbon capture and storage, $2 billion for three and a half million people. That is an investment in the future, and it’s happening here in Alberta.

When people say, “Well, why are you spending that much money on branding?” well, what are we working against? We’re working the very same good news that Alberta has to share with other people around the world right here in this Assembly – right here. So we will do whatever we can. I can tell you that we will represent Albertans extremely well, not hiding behind, saying: oh, you know, maybe next year we’ll do something or the year after. We’re going to be very aggressive and get on top of this policy initiative and work with the federal government and with the Americans to get it right. Just to say that, you know, you could pollute the same amount – just pollute the same amount – but by the way, send a little money to the next country; send it overseas; we’ll be okay: what nonsense. Albertans realize that. By the way, they also realize the nonsense of giving these credits, money, to the very same group of bandits that got us into this international economic situation. A lack of transparency. They want to go down that same path. Yes, we do have to spend a lot of money to get the correct information out, and we will work very hard to do it, Mr. Chairman.

Now, with respect to health, as we said in the last campaign, just completed in March of last year, we are going to be working with all health care providers to find the efficiencies and the effectiveness in the system. I agree. Many times the hon. leader has said: “We have enough money in health. We don’t need any more. We’re spending a lot. How can we use that money more effectively?” He’s correct. We want to work with health care providers. How can we make every dollar count?

Secondly, how can we sustain the system for the next generation? It is a good system. You know, this afternoon one of the MLAs, the leader of the third party, asked me a question about the value of publicly funded health care. Well, I think we all, depending on our age, have stories of how families were affected prior to the Canada Health Act, prior to when the public, the taxpayer, paid for a lot of the services. How many people suffering from cancer had to leave the province? Actually, some even went to the Mayo Clinic to receive help. In our community some even put their land up for sale to pay for their loved one to be treated. We're not going back there, but neither do we want to put the next generation in that same predicament. That's why we have to work together. We have something we can cherish. We value it. Rather than pointing fingers at each other and accusing each other, let's work together.

This is the time to do it. Our medical profession realizes that there's new technology coming, new drugs. There's such pressure. Yes, we need more family docs. You know, we have to show a kind of respect for the nurses, for all health care providers, everybody in the system because they are working hard. There's no doubt about it. As technology increases, costs are going to go up. How do you look someone in the eye, perhaps someone with a rare disease, and say: well, yeah, technology is here, but you won't get that drug because we're not going to pay for it. I don't think anybody wants to deliver that kind of a life sentence. That's why we have to work collectively. It's clearly identified in the position we took as a party going into the last election. We hold true to what we said there, and we'll continue to work together.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Page 180 of the budget documents indicates that under communications for Alberta Environment there was a 100 per cent increase this year. I guess one has to wonder what this was related to and how it connects to the Public Affairs Bureau's communications budget. How does the public make sense of all these individual expenditures on communications? How do we understand the value of this, and how can we be reassured that we're not getting tremendous redundancy in all these communications budgets? Can the Premier give us some reassurance about that?

Mr. Stelmach: Communication is important. With respect to Environment we have done a lot over the last couple of years. A lot has happened in the province of Alberta. There's a lot of communication to be made with respect to the issue of climate change, the issue of studies that we're doing in Alberta, cumulative environmental impacts. In fact, that's another first. We still continue to be the only jurisdiction in Canada to do that, both in Fort McMurray and in the Fort Saskatchewan area, the Industrial Heartland. All of these require a considerable amount of communication. Again, it's with respect to environment. In terms of redundancy I need clarification because this is all environment-related, anything to do with environment. We won't be spending, you know, dollars in communication in Education to communicate an environmental issue.

I'd say that we've also made some structural changes, and Public Affairs has taken on a lot of the additional work, the correspondence in many of the ministries, especially Environment. There was just a lot of action over the last couple of years, and we've got a lot more to do in that department. Just to step back, even the land-use framework: again, the only jurisdiction to put that in place. The bill will be going before this House. Albertans said: "We want a plan. We want to protect our rich black soil. We want to ensure that we grow up instead of, you know, urban sprawl." All of those issues of transit corridors for transportation, especially light rail or high-speed rail. We are working on that plan. We are listening to Albertans very clearly, and we're developing.

I know there's a lot to communicate, and every time you communicate, you have to buy space. You either buy it in a paper or on TV. All of that has gotten to be pretty expensive, but it's the only way of getting the information out to those that value it the most or benefit from it.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you. Just in summing up then, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of Albertans, I guess there are unanswered questions about why at a critical economic time in our history this government is spending 55 per cent more on communications than it was last year. When real people are losing jobs, when real people are raising basic questions about what's happening to their public dollars, when basic services are being cut, how are Albertans to interpret a government that invests 55 per cent more across the board in communications instead of providing basic services? I'd like to hear the Premier's comments on that.

Mr. Stelmach: Again, I don't want to read into the record the actual increases because I gave the increase for PAB and government of Alberta communications, excluding the branding. For this coming year it'll be a decrease of 0.2 per cent, excluding the branding initiative. The government of Alberta communications budgets, excluding the branding initiative, will be 3.2 per cent on, let's say, a $27.7 million budget. It's an increase of $875,000, which is roughly a 3.2 per cent increase.

As I said, our goal was to keep the overall government expenditures below 3.7 per cent. Some ministries got a zero per cent increase, some a modest increase of 2 to 3 per cent, and Health got the largest increase, at 4.6 per cent.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I guess Albertans would like to know that the Premier is committed to doing an audit of our communications in Alberta since we're spending so many public dollars on communicating this government's message to the people. Will the Premier commit to doing a value-for-money audit of communications across the different ministries, including the Public Affairs Bureau?

The Chair: We have concluded the first hour for the Official Opposition.

Now I would like to recognize the leader of the third party. You have a choice of 10 minutes or 20 minutes combined with our Premier.

Mr. Mason: I would hope we can just go back and forth.

The Chair: So we'll take 20 minutes in combination?

Mr. Mason: Yes. If the Premier can answer the questions in a relatively concise form, I think that would work very well.

The Chair: Mr. Premier, would you agree with the 20 minutes?

Mr. Stelmach: Yes.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, to the Premier: I'd like to get back to just exchanging a little bit of information and so on. I promise at the end I'll make a bit of a rousing speech so he can make a bit of a rousing speech back, but right now I'd really just like to pick his brain a little bit about some matters.

The first question I have is about the new brand. I don't know if I actually got fond of the Alberta Advantage as a slogan for the province. It used to drive me a little crazy, but I sort of got used to it. I'm just wondering why the government decided that this was the right time. What was it about the old brand, or the Alberta advantage, that was no longer meeting the needs of the province? What kind of thinking went into the decision to move towards a new brand? What objectives does the Premier feel we will be able to meet through the new brand?

Mr. Stelmach: I believe I gave a fairly detailed answer earlier. Now more than ever, as I said before in my opening comments, it's important that we promote Alberta. Yes, for a period of time the Alberta advantage was a nice little slogan to use, but this is more than a slogan. This is about promoting Alberta, the many advantages that we have in Alberta: quality of life, technology, health, education, the entrepreneurial attitude, the diversity of Alberta.

In the last five years we've seen Alberta grow by 350,000. We have people coming here from many corners of the world. We have, I believe, the most diverse caucus in government of any province in Canada, and that speaks well for the people of Alberta. It also speaks well for those that have come to the province of Alberta and have worked through, established businesses, done well in education and so many other fields and become important members of their community and have won the respect of their constituents and have the distinct honour of sitting in this House. That's a good-news story. That's what we'd like to tell.

You know, sometimes in the past we've heard that, well, Alberta has no culture. In fact, we have a very good culture policy. If you compare, as I do, with other Premiers, they are surprised to hear what we have to offer.

I'm just very passionate about the province of Alberta. The government is passionate, Albertans are passionate, and we have a good story to tell. We have a responsibility to tell it and not allow others, perhaps, to tell something about Alberta that is wrong, misleading. That's why we're going to be very, very aggressive.

Is this the time to do it? Absolutely. The opportunity is here. Many people around the world are looking for investment opportunities. They want to know more about Alberta. In fact, the few missions that I've taken to Europe clearly identified that we have a lot of work to do.

You know, it's interesting. We were in London, met with a number of decision-makers, and then were in The Hague. We had a half-hour meeting with the Prime Minister of the Netherlands, which was quite outstanding simply because usually Prime Ministers meet with Prime Ministers. But Prime Minister Jan Balkenende was here in Alberta and learned a lot about our province. We reciprocated the visit, and we had a good discussion.

When we were in Munich, we had a meeting with five very high-profile ministers in the Bavarian government. It is interesting that most of the questions – it was quite a long meeting; it was about two hours – centred on Alberta's quality of education and our very outstanding achievement levels in secondary and postsecondary, but especially in secondary, and the fact that we're competing with the world's best. What is it that we do in Alberta that we stand either at or above many of the other jurisdictions? That tells us that there is a real hunger, a thirst for more information, and that's the kind of information we have to get out there. As we move to a knowledge-based economy, we do want to attract the world's best. We want to partner with the world's best universities and their research and technology and attract the people here.

Another visit was to the Richard E. Smalley institute in Houston, a nanotechnology institute, and I can tell you that I shared a lot of pride with our contingent when the professor at Richard E. Smalley institute at Rice University spoke so highly of Alberta, recognizing Alberta for leading-edge technology in nanotechnology. The world's most powerful microscope is here in Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, he said. That tells us, again, that we have this opportunity to work together and slowly start to remove these barriers to information, to just work together. It's really towards one common goal, and that's improving the quality of life not only for this generation but generations to come. That's why the branding initiative.

I know that for a while there, you know, the opposition said: it's all got to do with the oil sands. Well, there's more to Alberta than the oil sands although the oil sands, we found out now, are very important, integral to the overall engine of Canada's prosperity.

There is more good news, especially in health, education, and R and D. That's why we're going to again continue with the branding initiative to get the word out. I know that our school boards are excited, that our universities are excited. We have so many people inquiring as to how they can use the new brand in their letterheads, in their communication with their staff, with their business partners and other countries, so that speaks well for the pride that we all share as Albertans.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, if the Premier is going to provide responses of that length to all my questions, I'm certainly not going to get through them. So I'm just going to list my questions, and the Premier can respond in the remaining time or provide me later with the answers in written form.

I'd like to know a little bit more about the Public Affairs Bureau, which is identified in the budget documents as having 118 full-time equivalents. I'd like to know what other communications personnel in the government are attached to individual departments in addition to that and what that has been over the last year as well as this budget year. I'd like to know about the polling activities of the Public Affairs Bureau. I would like to know what polls the Public Affairs Bureau has undertaken in the last year, what the firms were. I would like that to include information with respect to other forms of public opinion research – for example, focus groups, that sort of thing – as well as other forms of public consultation, what the subjects of these polls were, and the amounts that were paid to the firms that did them.

I would like to know about the budget for the Lieutenant Governor. The budget documents indicate that the Lieutenant Governor's administration and communications are handled by Executive Council, so I would like to know in more detail what that is, how much the amounts are, and what the changes are from last year. I would also like to know the status of the Lieutenant Governor's residence and what the government intends to do with respect to that.

If the Premier can respond to those questions, I would appreciate it. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stelmach: Sure. Okay. Where did we leave off? A hundred and eighteen FTEs: they're remaining the same. We're not growing the FTEs in Executive Council. We'll get a breakdown for every one; we'll put that in a letter for you. It's 118 FTEs, 72 professional communications staff to communications branches in the departments. Some departments choose to augment the number of professional staff to meet additional communications needs, but 72 of the 118 are assigned.

Now, the Lieutenant Governor's budget for '08-09 was $517,000, for '09-10 is $511,000, so it's a $6,000 reduction. Four FTEs are assigned to the Lieutenant Governor, three support and one communications.

Okay. We'll break down the Public Affairs Bureau. Of the 118 FTEs, 87 FTEs are corporate communications staff. That's to plan and implement communications initiatives, provide a range of communications services in ministries, co-ordinate government communications for major initiatives and during public emergencies, support internal government communications, and provide advertising and corporate identity co-ordination. Fifteen are communications support services, who provide website management, media monitoring, news release distribution, news conference technical support, and IT co-ordination services. Thirteen of the 118 are corporate services staff managing human resources, finance, administrative, business planning, annual reports, records management, and FOIP, including the managing director's office. Three FTEs are assigned to the branding initiative.

Public opinion research is important. It's part of a two-way dialogue with the government and Albertans. It's important to listen to Albertans, understand their views. It helps plan the programs and set the priorities of the province's people. It also provides feedback. It helps us to gauge awareness, to see how well we're communicating, if the message is getting through to our citizens to ensure that they know what programs are available, how they can get in contact with service providers for various needs, again, as I say, whether they're in the seniors' department or children's services. It's really with respect to any department that's offering services.

We also post our research findings on the government of Alberta website. It's important that Albertans see what others are saying about specific issues, and that really improves the two-way dialogue with Albertans. That's one way of gauging how the programs are responding to needs and whether we're communicating enough so that all people are aware of what programs are important to them.

We are setting up a quarterly trending study, which will help avoid duplication or overlap in research. This study is estimated to cost about $250,000 in '09-10. We've also asked various individuals about the budget. There was an expenditure there of $64,000 just to gauge how people are responding, if it's meeting some of the many priorities of Albertans in different walks of life. Now, the research firms that are selected are selected through a very open, fair, transparent process. Again, it has to comply with the government's purchasing guidelines, and we will always continue to do that.

I think there was a question there on focus groups. Focus groups are really part of the opinion. You know, you just select Albertans at random, put them into a setting, a room really, and ask them certain questions. That really gives us kind of a general trend to see if we are communicating the right way, if the message is getting through, and if we are responding to Albertans' priorities.

That's as short and concise an answer as I can give since he was criticizing me that I was too long in my answers.

Mr. Mason: No offence, Mr. Chairman, but the first answer was pretty long.

The next question I have is: to what degree have functions of the Public Affairs Bureau that have previously been done in-house been contracted out, and what are the number and extent of the contracts that have been let? I'd like to know as well which firms have received contracts for that. I hope the Premier would correct me if I'm wrong, but I'm assuming that the line item for the Public Affairs Bureau does include those contracts. If not, then I'd like to know where we could find it.

I'll just end with the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy. Now, in last year's estimates debate we heard that there would be two new full-time equivalent positions established related to the Council for Economic Strategy, but it doesn't have a line item in the budget. There will probably be some repetition with the questions of the Leader of the Official Opposition, but my questions are: what's the specific budget for the council, and who sits on the council? I'd like to know whether or not people from the Legislature, MLAs, will sit on the council.

If the Premier can answer those questions and I have a little bit of time left over, I'll try and get things heated up a little bit, and we can have a little debate.

Mr. Stelmach: With respect to anybody that has a contract, people or a firm hired by Public Affairs, we'll get that to the hon. member. We don't have it itemized in the briefing notes here, but we will definitely get that. All hiring is done according to the government process. It has to be fair and transparent. I believe also that the Auditor has reviewed the purchasing process. The standing contract for media buy: these are legal tender ads. They're also recruitment ads for people. That goes through a tendering process, and we try to get the best value.

If it's any contract over $10,000, it's in the blue book, and of course we've now put that blue book online. You don't have to wait till year-end. I don't know whether the blue book is blue, but I do remember that before I was elected into this Legislature, it was something that a lot of people brought with themselves to the local coffee shop to see if their neighbour was in the blue book and maybe got a fuel tax rebate – at that time I think we had the Crow offset program – you know, different things.

The budget for the Premier's Council for Economic Strategy, of course, in '08-09 was $1 million. This year, because we're actually working with the council on implementation, the budget is $2 million for '09-10, and it's two full-time equivalents.

The Lieutenant Governor's residence: those costs are in Infrastructure's budget.

The Chair: Well, that finishes the period for the opposition. Now we go back and forth with other members. I would like to first recognize the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Premier in one of his responses to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition alluded to the increased role that the social media are playing and are likely to play even more in the future. The Premier also referred to the fact that much of the wealth and many of the jobs in the province of Alberta are a direct result of the fact that we export so much of what we produce. I think those two observations are spot-on.

We do see communications changing, particularly with respect to younger people, who are now increasingly turning away from the old, traditional media, the newspapers. Even what we used to consider as the modern and most effective way of communicating, the television, is changing and becoming less and less important in the delivery of news and content. We see that old, established, and famous newspapers like Chicago Tribune, Los Angeles Times, and whatnot are bordering on the edge of failure. Our National Post is losing money. I think that we can see, Premier, as you alluded to, the fact that the media are changing. Here in Canada we have Canwest Global media also in some financial trouble.

At the same time, we see exponential growth in the social media and the use of the Internet as ways of communicating and disseminating information. I wonder whether the Premier could elaborate on how the government might use some of these new communication technologies to get Alberta's message out there to Albertans and also to those that are beyond the borders who might influence exports that we need so critically to maintain our lifestyle and our economy here in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Excellent question. We've realized over the last year or two that we weren't communicating clearly about some of the challenges that Alberta has faced, especially – and I'll just pick a topic – on the environment. When you go to the schools, when you went on a few speaking engagements in Toronto and Montreal, the misinformation that is out there is astounding. Surprised to hear that it's younger people, those that don't take a lot of time to read a paper or, you know, watch the news at 6 o'clock or at 11 o'clock. They've got a gadget that they carry with themselves, and they just within seconds get the news whenever they have a few spare moments, hopefully not while they're driving on an Alberta highway. It is the social media, especially Twitter and Flickr.

I will confess that on some of the issues with respect to environment that happened, those people that were giving the incorrect message managed to get that message right around the world. There wasn't a lot of it in the papers, you know, the national papers or international papers; it was done through the social media. If we're going to get the correct message out there and correct the misinformation, we're going to have to use the same media. We're going to put a huge effort into that.

I know that last year I believe it was Sustainable Resource Development that set up a page of their own. They've actually managed to get information out to Albertans that were really interested in the changes in land use, with respect to watersheds, all of those things that the minister has undertaken to do.

Culture is another area. You know, perhaps we're not getting enough of the message out in terms of how culturally diverse we are: the various shows, the festivals in Alberta in every community. So many weren't aware of that because many of those that are interested, again, weren't picking it up in the news or in advertising in the paper.

Tourism. A lot of people go online. They'll spend days researching, listening to others that maybe have blogged about a really good experience, let's say, in the Fairmont hotel in Jasper or, you know, something that they found, some unique place in Alberta. That seems to really get across. We found out that a lot of the travel plans, especially from people from Britain, are based on either watching Alberta-based movies, the scenery, or through the social media. So we are going to pursue – again, I mentioned Flickr and Twitter, but there's YouTube and the government blog. I'm interested to see how it proceeds, being careful, of course, how we use it, but I think it's one excellent medium of getting the correct information out and dealing with some of the misinformation.

To give you an example, in working with various business communities but especially when we were in Toronto and in Montreal, when you are sitting down with the public there and you listen to them, the information that they got was misleading. It was totally wrong. We found out that they'd picked something up in a blog or perhaps the other social media, and we were absent from that. We weren't participating. Face to face, well, of course, you can correct some of the misinformation, but you can't meet face to face with everybody, nor does anybody have the time to do that, yet I know that through the proper use of blogging and more involvement in the social media, we will be able to communicate with a much broader, wider, range of Albertans.

The other reason, I firmly believe, is that we can encourage more participation in democracy by hearing more, generally, about what younger Albertans have to say about what we're doing in the province of Alberta. Is the government on the right track; what are our policies? Did our policies align with their priorities, their values? You get, perhaps, the most honest answer through the social media, in many ways other than just letters to the editor. So we'll continue to do that.

Now, the government of Alberta blog is Your Alberta Blog, and I think that Environment is – what? – One Simple Act on Facebook and on YouTube. So we've started the process, and I encourage all Albertans to get involved.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Brown: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just one follow-up question, if I could, to the Premier through the chair. With respect to the social media you mentioned counteracting some of the misinformation out there. I know that we are constantly encountering misinformation regarding the environmental impact of our oil sands, in particular. I wonder whether there is any way that we can tap into some of those groups that are specifically dealing with environmental issues and put our message out there and whether it could be co-ordinated with our rebranding effort in terms of showing that we are responsible environmentally with respect to our development of the oil sands and so on.

Mr. Stelmach: There is a tremendous opportunity to do that. In fact, I'll give you an example. When we were in London and met with a number of investment groups, I also met with The Economist. I think we had five or six editors in the room, and they were working off one set of information. Where they got it I don't know. It certainly wasn't from the Alberta government but, probably, from various groups, perhaps NGOs, that are very adept at getting their information out to not only their followers but out to people that may be just interested in what they have to say. The oil sands, for instance: 140,000 square kilometres of oil sands in the province of Alberta. Only 500 square kilometres are accessible through open pit mining. The rest will be all in situ. But they thought that all of this landscape will be disturbed and mined. You know, these are well-educated people. That's just one small sample of the misinformation.

The other was with respect to monitoring air quality. We monitor air quality in Fort McMurray 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Well, I can tell you that some of the groups had completely wrong information. When I told them that 98 per cent of the time the air quality in Fort McMurray was better than or equal to any major Canadian city, you know, there was a little bit of a surprise: "Well, we didn't know that you did that."

They didn't know that we've been monitoring water quality in the Athabasca River since 1971. Again, it's the information shared.

I have to share this with everyone. There's no doubt that in this economic downturn all Canadians – all Canadians – no matter where they live, now know the value of the economic contribution of Alberta's oil sands. But when we were in Montreal, there was an article in one of the papers that said that the Alberta oil sands threaten to pollute the Great Lakes. If you speak to Quebecers today, most of them think that maybe there's Alberta oil coming to Quebec. Well, not a drop of oil comes from Alberta. In fact, only about a third of Ontario's needs are met through Alberta production. Where do some of the refineries buy their oil from? Well, from Venezuela, Algeria, Nigeria. People that write editorials – okay? – stating opinions, didn't know this. That's how important it is, again, whether it be the branding initiative, through visits face to face, but especially working through the social media.

It's not only Alberta's economy but Canada's economy that's focused on how well we can find that balance between energy production and the environment and the economy. Again, this economy that we've built in Alberta is supporting the rest of the Canadian economy. In fact, it was so nice to hear a visitor to Edmonton, that spoke at the Edmonton Real Estate Forum, thank Alberta for our contribution to equalization. Ontario now just became a have-not province and will be getting about $358 million from equalization. That just gives you an idea of how quickly things have changed across the face of the country.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Premier for his detailed responses. I know that there are quite a number of other members that wish to take the floor, and I will yield my place to other members at this time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the Premier's participation here.

The Chair: Hon. member, would you like to share the 20 minutes?

Dr. Taft: Yes. I hope so. I'm assuming that we can be a bit conversational here. I'm also intending to keep my questions really brief so that we can cover quite a lot of material, and I hope that the Premier works with us all on that.

I have questions initially about the Public Affairs Bureau and their role in writing questions for question period for government members to ask and ministers to respond to. I'm wondering if the Public Affairs Bureau actually has a role in that process. I'm also wondering if the Public Affairs Bureau has a role in preparing all of the speaking notes that the government members bring to the committee meetings we have, like the standing policy committees, the Public Accounts Committee, and so on. I know that under the former Premier this came up, and I'm sure it's still the practice. I'm wondering: what's the role of the Public Affairs Bureau? How extensive are the resources they commit to that process? How is it handled?

Thank you.

Mr. Stelmach: Within the government caucus it's no different than in the Liberal caucus. We have research dollars assigned to each caucus based on the number of members in our caucus, and we use the capability of government caucus research, the department, to write speeches for individual members, provide research information, statistics that individual members can use.

Do Public Affairs Bureau members, especially directors of communication, spend time with ministers? Yes, they do because it's their role to communicate public policy, programs to Albertans. We've got to get that information out: changes in, let's say, benefits for a seniors' program or changes in health, whatever delivery program. We've made some changes in transportation. All those things have to be communicated to the individual citizen that requires that information. It is a difficult job, but we will continue to follow a process where we have research capabilities within individual caucuses.

Now, if there are major announcements, it would be like today. We did a major announcement on the community spirit program. It was done at the YMCA. There the Public Affairs Bureau person, a staff member or the director, would be working with the minister providing information, maybe ideas in terms of the kind of questions that may be asked of the minister specific to their program. That's the involvement of the Public Affairs Bureau and also the involvement of a complete and separate department, which is our research branch within the government caucus.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the Premier's comments on that. I must express my concern with a process in which the Public Affairs Bureau and the Premier's office are so tightly and extensively integrated into, for example, the question-and-answer process even among government's own members, but it's a different approach.

Earlier the Premier referred to the line in the budget about 118 FTEs in the Public Affairs Bureau. I just sent over the staff lists to the Premier and his staff, and this is the government's own list dated January 30, 2009. It's titled communications branch staff and ministries, includes both PAB and ministry staff, and I'd think that there are about 220 names on this list. Well, frankly, I'm concerned when it comes to budgeting that the Public Affairs Bureau budget grossly understates the reach and resources of the Public Affairs Bureau because if I understand the situation correctly, Public Affairs Bureau staff are assigned out to each department; the department then pays for the staff, who report to that Public Affairs Bureau officer. So the expenditure on those staff is concealed in each department's budget, but in effect they are resources for the Public Affairs Bureau.

My concern as somebody debating a budget is that this budget may – maybe it doesn't, but my concern is that it may – disguise or, in fact, deliberately understate the size of the Public Affairs Bureau.

So would the Premier speak to the question, since he's in charge of the Public Affairs Bureau, of about how many Public Affairs Bureau staff are assigned to each department? Is it one or two per department? Is it most of these 221? How many people from the Public Affairs Bureau are assigned out to the departments?

Mr. Stelmach: In my previous answers I gave a full accounting of the 118 full-time equivalents. I also said that every department, any ministry, can supplement communications staff, some for, you know, just maintaining the website, some for publications from various ministries, because there is a lot of communication coming out of some departments, much more in Seniors, Health, Education, than, let's say, the Department of Transportation. Transportation will do something with respect to safe driving; maybe a weekend coming up and we want to do some advertising with respect to promoting safety on Alberta highways. But the staff that is assigned, as I said, to departments out of the 118 FTEs is 72, and that's a matter of record. The list that the member has sent over here said that most departments supplement their communications staff with people that are paid directly from the ministry, and those ministries' budgets are debated, brought forward to the House during the estimates, and also give a full listing of the full-time equivalents.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to bring forward a couple of amendments on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition. I'll read them into the record, and then I guess they can get passed along. As I understand, there's no particular debate on this; these come forward. The first one says: Dr. Swann to move that the estimates for public affairs, strategic communications, under reference 2.0.2 at page 196 of the 2009-2010 main estimates of the Department of Executive Council be reduced by $7,400,000 so that the amount to be voted at page 193 is $28,480,000.

The intent of this is to cut the Public Affairs Bureau budget in half. Thank you.

The second motion reads as follows: Dr. Swann to move that the estimates for office of the Premier, Executive Council under reference 1.0.1 at page 196 of the 2009-2010 main estimates be reduced by $16,000 so that the amount to be voted at page 193 is $35,864,000.

Mr. Chairman, the intent of this is to reduce hosting expenses as a demonstration of leaner times in this province. Those are now for the record and, I expect, will come forward shortly.

A tremendous number of issues I need to raise. I'm going to just focus on two. First of all is the role of the Public Affairs Bureau in preparing the annual reports of departments. I'm deeply, deeply concerned that the annual report of the Department of Energy from last year was grossly misleading about royalties and the government's own take and review of royalties and had indicated in writing repeatedly that there had been reviews of the royalty system and all was well and so on. If that sort of document had been filed in the private sector as a corporate annual report, there would have been, probably, criminal charges laid because, in fact, as we discovered, there was internal information that said the opposite. So I'm very concerned and interested in the role of the Public Affairs Bureau in the departments preparing their annual reports. My question, I guess, to the Premier or his staff is: what is the role of the Public Affairs Bureau in the departments preparing their annual reports, and does the Public Affairs Bureau, in fact, have the last word in what goes into annual reports? It's a very, very important question.

My second issue I'd like to raise concerns a former very senior and important contractor for the Public Affairs Bureau, and that's Highwood Communications. Now, probably people are aware that Highwood Communications ended up stiffing most of the rural media in this province and in many of the urban ones for some millions of dollars – I think it was $5.3 million in bad debts – and the creditors ultimately were able to obtain about 36 cents on the dollar. This happened. Highwood was the agency of record for the Public Affairs Bureau, so Highwood was the buyer. Then it turned out that Highwood on behalf of the government bought millions of dollars worth of advertising, but when the media went to collect, the money was gone. Millions of dollars were gone.

This went through a bankruptcy process. I've got the bankruptcy report here, the report of the trustee. My initial question to the Premier on Highwood. There is some curious phrasing in the trustee's report which suggests that there may be, despite this problem, a continuing relationship between Highwood or Barry Styles or some variation of those and the Public Affairs Bureau. So my question would be: is there still any relationship whatsoever between Highwood or Barry Styles or some variation on those people with the Public Affairs Bureau?

I hope the Premier and his staff are able to follow my questions. If they can't answer verbally, I'd take a written answer.

Thanks.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Yeah. Very easily answered because this is, of course, an annual question from the very same member. I'm happy to hear that he's still interested in the Public Affairs Bureau.

The Public Affairs Bureau is, of course, involved in the annual report format in terms of what the booklet will look like, but each department prepares its own content. Whatever is in the report, each department prepares it on its own. I think the question was: is there any other work that the PAB does? The answer is clearly no.

With respect to Highwood Communications, Highwood Communications was at one time the government's agency of record for media buying. It has gone out of business. Some media outlets that ran government ads had not been paid by Highwood. The Auditor General will audit the system used by the Public Affairs Bureau to monitor advertising contracts starting in mid-April.

Contrary to media reports – again, contrary to media reports – he is not auditing the entire Public Affairs Bureau, nor is the Highwood audit on hold due to Auditor General budget constraints. Again I'm going to read that into the record: contrary to the media reports, he's not auditing the entire Public Affairs Bureau, nor is anything on hold with respect to Highwood because of Auditor General budget constraints.

We welcome any recommendations from the Auditor General. These recommendations that he may make, we'll certainly undertake to improve new contracts. But we've already taken steps under the new contract to further improve internal processes. While it is always unfortunate when a business has financial difficulties, there is a process in place to deal with those matters. Government records show that we fulfilled our payment obligations to Highwood. Taxpayers can't be expected to pay twice.

The government hires an agency of record through an open, competitive process. Highwood held the media buying contract for 12 years. In June 2008 a new agency, DDB Canada, was awarded the contract. That's about all I can say. We'll await the report from the Auditor when it is complete. He's going to audit the process and any other issues tied to Highwood.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I just want to review quickly with the Premier, and then somebody else can take a question. First of all, if I understand the Premier correctly, he said that the Public Affairs Bureau has nothing whatsoever to do with the preparation of the government departments' annual reports. Maybe I misunderstood, but I'd just like to be very clear on that.

The second thing is that, again, he didn't really answer my question on Highwood. My question was: is there any lingering relationship at all with Barry Styles, who was a very, very prominent Conservative, or Highwood or any variation? The reason I ask this is because there's a curious clause on page 4 of the trustee's agreement which states: "For those affected creditors" – in other words, those who are losing money – "which are media suppliers, the company," i.e. Highwood, "will continue to have media buys directed to these suppliers through a third party media buyer." Now, one way of interpreting that is that Highwood is still influencing how contracts are channelled and directed, and I'd like to know if there is any role, any relationship at all remaining with Highwood or with Barry Styles.

Those are my two questions: annual reports and Highwood. Thank you.

Mr. Stelmach: To my knowledge – and again, the hon. member can ask the receiver what those words mean – there is no relationship between the government and Highwood Communications. I haven't seen the text of the receiver's comments, but certainly I'm sure that we'd be able to ask exactly what those words mean or why he put it into the report.

Again, for clarity, because sometimes, you know, you've got to repeat it a few times, in terms of preparing the annual reports, it's the format. The content – the content – of individual minister's annual reports is produced by the individual ministries. Public Affairs collates it, bundles it up in a format – I don't have one of the reports here with me – that is compiled and then goes out to the public.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Does the collating and bundling up involve, for example, editing or any changes to text?

Mr. Stelmach: If it's text, if it's spelling, grammar. But I talked about content, content in terms of statistics. The information that's presented, that's the responsibility of the individual ministers.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: That's fine. I'll let somebody else ask some questions, and we'll come back later. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Dallas: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real privilege today to participate in the discussion on the estimates. In particular, I guess, I would say that the discussion that we've had around the importance of our government communicating and also the hon. Premier's very extensive working knowledge of the logistics of how we communicate and the changes that are happening in communication in Alberta have been very interesting this afternoon.

There's another area that I think is of considerable interest to Albertans, and it is in the area of governance. Back in February of 2008, Mr. Chairman, the agency governance framework was announced. My question is this: what is the role that the Agency Governance Secretariat is playing in terms of how we're implementing that framework?

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member raises a very important issue that we dealt with over the last number of years. A very large amount, in fact, a major amount of taxpayer dollars that go through the public for various services go through a lot of different agencies. These could be social agencies. They could be boards. They could be a few Crown corporations as well. They ensured that there was full transparency and accountability. After putting together a committee of all private-sector individuals that were very knowledgeable in governance and transparency who brought forward a report, we implemented the recommendations of that report.

As a result, we have an act before the House, and it's the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. I believe it's Bill 32. This act is going through discussion in the House. It is continuing to demonstrate the principles of good governance, transparency, and accountability through a number of actions. We will ensure that agencies have the right people for the job. Again, that's by requiring competence-based recruitment and appointments. We will also encourage agencies to improve their effectiveness by providing orientation, evaluation, and training of new board members. That's very important, and it's one of the key co-ordinating roles for the Agency Governance Secretariat. The secretariat will work with ministries to ensure that agencies have a written statement of their mandate, their roles, their responsibilities, codes of conduct, clearly stating the responsibility of agencies and ministries.

The relationships and accountabilities between government and agencies, including policy-making and information, will be clarified between the boards, agencies, and the government. We will require periodic reviews of all agencies to ensure that they are operating as effectively as possible. There is a role in ensuring that the public knows what steps are being taken to promote agency effectiveness both through legislating these principles and, of course, having someone to monitor, especially through information about agencies. The public needs that information. It's also another area of accountability, information that we can share with the public.

We are making progress on implementation. It will require a lot of work, but I think that this is really what Albertans wanted to see, that transparency. We will improve the effectiveness of all of our agencies, boards, and corporations.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That's very helpful.

Back to the hon. Premier if I could. The legislation is both progressive but also very extensive. I wonder if the Premier could share with us the status of the implementation of that framework, where exactly we're at in terms of what work is left to do to fully implement and complete the directive of that legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Overall, we are making progress on implementation. It took a while for the committee to meet with all of the ABCs – agencies, boards, and commissions – to get feedback from the agencies, get a better idea of what we need to work on to improve the effectiveness, and how we incorporate what we heard into legislation.

I covered the fact that the legislation is now here, being debated. I'm not quite sure what stage it's at, but it's working through the process in the House. Once the bill is passed, it will be proclaimed, and we will work on implementing the legislation. For example, 90 per cent of agencies will be required to have a mandate and roles document; at the moment 90 per cent are in that stage. It's clearly identifying the roles and the purpose of the agency.

Competency-based appointments. These processes are in place for a large majority of agencies. In fact, we're asking the various boards: "What are the kind of skill components that you require? You know, do you need a chartered accountant, do you need someone that knows governance very well, or do you need some legal skills on the board?" That is the competency-based advertising that we're going to do for board positions. That is important, to have a good mix of skill sets.

As the bill is working through, the secretariat has also engaged in discussions with the Ethics Commissioner because the Ethics Commissioner office will be involved. Again, it's going to support the secretariat in terms of the kind of codes of conduct that we require.

Some of the agencies play very, very important roles. You know, the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, for instance, is a big corporation. We have corporations down to some that provide social services, like AADAC, for instance. So there's a variant degree of different skill sets that are required.

We're working with the Ethics Commissioner. That process is in place, and it's moving forward.

We are going to lead through the secretariat a very comprehensive review of director remuneration practices to develop a more consistent approach to ensure that people are compensated for the kind of skills that they bring to a board or an agency. It is important to be clear on that. We'll involve the Auditor General's system of audit of agency and CEO selection, making sure that a person that's in a chief executive officer position is qualified for that particular role. Again, competence-based evaluations and compensation practices will also be discussed with the Auditor.

We've been asked to collaborate with corporate human resources and the Treasury Board to review current practices and, really, develop a more consistent government-wide approach.

Mr. Chairman, these are just a few of the highlights of a huge amount of work that we've undertaken in this particular area. I know that at the end of the day through training and orientation of public-sector governance, enhancing a database to inventory basic information in all public agencies, sharing ideas, good practices and good evaluation processes, and preparing checklists, templates for departments to use in developing standard approaches to agency creation, this will all help, again, with openness and transparency. The public will have much more information with respect to the large number of public agencies that actually handle a huge amount of the taxpayer funds that go to various causes.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That was a very thorough explanation and much appreciated.

At this time, then, I know that there are other members who have been patiently waiting for the opportunity to raise questions, and I'll yield to them.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: Do you wish to take 20 minutes?

Mr. Taylor: Twenty minutes combined?

The Chair: Right.

Mr. Taylor: I think it's a pleasure to be able to engage the Premier in some back and forth, some question and answer about the estimates for Executive Council this year. I look forward to the next 20 minutes. I beg the Premier's indulgence. I hope I don't go over any ground that has already been gone over, but I do have a couple of areas of particular interest that I would like to cover off, and it may be necessary to reference issues that have come up before in order to do that.

I'm looking here at the breakdown of the estimates for the office of the Premier and Executive Council, and I'm seeing roughly $11 million going into the Premier's office and roughly $25 million being spent in one form or another on communications and advertising, whether that's the branding initiative, whether that's the activities of the Public Affairs Bureau. But more than twice as much is being spent on flogging the message than there is on developing, I think, the substance behind that message. It says to me that we're looking here at a government more concerned with image than substance.

Now, I'm always prepared to admit that I could be seeing some of this wrong.

An Hon. Member: It's highly unlikely.

Mr. Taylor: It's highly unlikely, I agree. I agree with the hon. member, but it does happen from time to time.

I'm proceeding on the basis that the Premier's office and Executive Council have a very specific role to play in strategic planning and policy development that essentially is supposed to give, I think, coherence, consistency, an overarching vision to everything that the government of Alberta does.

It would seem to me that even though we live in an era of communications and marketing and spin and messaging and everybody trying to make their voices heard over the clamour of the consumer-driven society that we live in, where all kinds of people have messages and all kinds of people are trying very hard to sell those messages – I'm not advocating here that the government of Alberta not do any advertising – the real job of government is to get the policy right, not to get the message right. You want to try to do both, obviously, but if you've got to make a choice as to where to spend your money, especially in tough times, I think it's more important to be engaged in strategic planning and policy development than it is in making sure that you get a new logo to replace the old logo and that the colour scheme on the website all goes together.

I mean, I was on the government website today, and it kind of looks like I'm standing in a Benjamin Moore paint store in front of all of the colour palettes. It goes very well together in a kind of pastel version of the old Canadian Alliance party colours – you know, it's kind of like Alliance Lite – but I hope you didn't spend too many millions on that, really. You could have got a colour co-ordinator from, I think, the aforementioned paint store, if not from that one then from another, for a couple of hundred dollars to kind of do the same job for you.

Really, what I'm coming down to – and full disclosure. The Premier knows very well what I used to do for a living before I got elected into this House. He knows very well that commercials paid my mortgage, that commercials put my two kids through university, and that I have a soft spot in my heart for the private sector and the broadcasting business. Lord knows, government advertising is always a very important part of the revenue stream of any private radio or television station or newspaper – no question about that – so I would be a little hypocritical to stand here and just grind incessantly on the Public Affairs Bureau given that the Public Affairs Bureau has helped me pay my mortgage, I'm sure, to make a couple of mortgage payments from time to time.

That said, you are spending $25 million this year on communications and advertising, you are spending $11 million on the office of the Premier, from whence should come strategic planning and policy development, and I would like to focus on that to a certain extent. I refer you to page 132 of the Executive Council business plan for 2009-2012. Core business 1 for Executive Council is to "support strategic planning, policy development and decision-making for the Government of Alberta," and under that I see that it means that the decision-makers, the deciders, need comprehensive and coordinated policy and planning advice and analysis in order to make strategic decisions. Ministries need analytical and coordination support to ensure that initiatives align with government priorities. Achieving this goal ensures that decision-makers and ministries are provided with the appropriate context and support to meet overall government vision and goals.

That says to me – and, again, I might be getting this wrong, and I'm sure that if I am, the Premier will set me straight – that the vision emanates from the big office, from the Premier's office, that the co-ordination of government policy and planning, the support for strategic planning, policy development, and decision-making, comes out of the Premier's office, out of Executive Council, for all government departments, all government ministries so that we make sure that the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations and the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development and the ministry of food and agriculture and the Ministry of Energy and the ministry of finance and so on and so forth are all singing from the same song sheet and, hopefully, singing in, as it says here, a co-ordinated and effective way. So that must mean that Executive Council and the Premier have had some role to play, some part in the development of policy for health care over these last 12 months and over the next 12 months going forward.

Strategy 1.2 says, "Provide advice and analysis to support policy development and ensure decision makers have the best possible information on which to make decisions." Strategy 1.3 says, "Strengthen policy support to government and facilitate enhanced policy development capacity in the public service." So if it is Executive Council's responsibility through strategies 1.2 and 1.3 to assist policy development across ministries, how can the Premier explain the mess, the turmoil, the horrible situation that Alberta's health care is in right now?

If I may, Mr. Chairman, if I need to reference something else that's very current and germane to what we're talking about, I would refer the Premier to Calgary Herald columnist Don Braid's blog on the Calgary Herald website right now in which he's writing in real time about . . .

Mr. Denis: Table it.

Mr. Taylor: I would if I had my computer here, but I checked this just before I came over from my office a few minutes ago.

He's writing, blogging in real time about the experience that his wife is going through. I believe she is now in her fifth or sixth hour of waiting in emergency today in hospital in Calgary, this being the third day and the third attempt to get some help for a very serious medical problem. He describes it as hell. He describes the situation in our emergency waiting rooms in Calgary, in Alberta, under the health minister's reorganization, restructuring of health care, as hell. So I would like the Premier to take a whack at explaining some of this if he would, please.

Mr. Stelmach: Sure. The first time we got together, the hon. member was sitting behind a microphone asking me questions about the Canadian Wheat Board when I was minister of agriculture. That was a few years ago. Since then, a lot of water has travelled under a lot of bridges – let's put it that way – and most of it is in Saskatchewan today.

However, you know, the hon. member makes a good point. It's important to communicate. It's important to communicate policy direction, communicate what services are available, changes in services, changes in funding, support for Albertans no matter what program they may benefit from. So $25 million out of a $38 million budget is, I think, really pennies spent on communication. Remember that there are a number of roles played out of that budget that are involved around communication. It is policy co-ordination and, again, working with ministries to ensure that policy is going through the process and being developed, you know, listening to Albertans, taking that input.

I think the member did acknowledge that $10 million of that is in the branding. I continue and will continue to stand committed to the branding initiative. We will fulfill our commitment that we made to ensure that we get the correct information to investors, to other people living in different corners of the world, and I covered a lot of that earlier.

The Public Affairs Bureau dollars cross government departments, and it's not just Executive Council. The other is that in the budget $11 million is the Premier's office and Executive Council, $14.8 million is the Public Affairs budget, and $10 million of the overall budget is in the branding.

With respect to co-ordinating policy and getting the correct information out, it is difficult because, as the hon. member said, we're competing. We're competing for time because people are busy. We're competing for space, either in the paper or on a talk show that some Albertans listen to, trying to get a message out in the regular media. You know, he does accuse the government of – he used the word "spin." Well, a program is a program. It's clearly articulated in terms of what dollars are going into it, what income threshold or whatever it is that goes into the policy. But in a regular article it's very difficult to get all of that information out without buying the advertising.

I know that all media certainly are going through very difficult times, but it goes to show how important the economy is even to the media. We've seen tremendous layoffs in the media. Maybe the hon. member is happy to be here because I'm sure everybody is fighting for ratings. To fight for ratings, what do you say to get the attention of the public? You pull at those heartstrings that will get people excited: emotion, fear. Correct information? You know, you can always word it a little bit to get the attention, and maybe at the end of the program you never do get the correct information out, but the more callers the more advertising. It's a game. I'm sure the member will agree, if he's honest with me and this House, that every person in that media is competing with somebody else, especially when you see the value of shares. You know that Canwest, all of the papers are suffering. They're fighting for ads. Again, a picture of the economy.

That's why I could never figure out why people would be so negative about the economy and keep driving this fear and reducing the size of the economy. The economy really is 65 per cent consumer spending. If you put fear in the public, they don't spend the money. They don't buy a sofa. They may not buy a suit. They might not buy a car. They might not change the windows in their house. The business that offers that service or that product does not advertise because nobody comes through their door anymore. That's the cycle. We're going to be going through the cycle, and I've got to think that because of the lack of private-sector advertising, some of the media has actually increased public advertising, which is good. It's part of corporate citizenry. We did get some public service ads out there reasonably priced and also in some cases gratis, which is good. It's a good relationship. I hope it continues.

Now, with respect to policy, first of all the policy co-ordination office. I'll just go through some of the statistics, and then I'll tackle the issue that the member has raised about health. The policy co-ordination office is a very small, service-oriented unit that works across government, staffed in large measure through secondment in order to build policy capacity throughout government. The office exists to promote a corporate cross-ministry approach to policy development that is aligned with government priorities, supports the identification and implementation of government priorities, supports decision-makers by ensuring that they have the best possible information to make decisions, co-ordinates the government strategic planning process, supports the development of the government strategic plan, and strengthens policy development capacity, which really is important in the public service.

I will say that in this area the Alberta public service is very, very strong. They are recognized by other provincial jurisdictions for the capacity that we have in Alberta. There were new ideas, new policy introduced over the many years. I remember from when I served on municipal council or ran a business in this province. I know that starting in the early '70s with former Premier Peter Lougheed, an investment that we made in the public service is outstanding, and it has paid off huge benefits for Alberta.

With respect to health and policy development in government I'm proud to say that we have the most participation in policy development from our caucus. We have various policy committees. All ministerial recommendations come forward for thorough discussion. We seek advice as caucus members and as ministers from various organizations, hear from them, set the priorities, and respond.

Health is a complex issue. It's complicated by the fact that we do see new technologies emerging, new drugs. In fact, a substantial increase in year in our drug budget is because there were just new drugs both for cancer and Alzheimer's. The other is that we are doing more. We are doing more open-heart surgeries. We are doing more knee and hip replacements. All of these are happening because people are spending less time in a hospital. They're recuperating much quicker because of the other allied health care providers from not only nursing to therapists. Home care has seen a huge increase.

During a period of time when our revenue is diminishing not only in Alberta but across the country, Alberta's substantial contribution to Canada will be diminished. Those provinces that rely on contributions from equalization will not see the same amount of net contribution from Albertans. So we're going to have this huge issue in Canada, and all I ask is that we work together as health care providers, as government, as opposition, work collectively, not tear at each others' throats and just slow down the policy development but actually have good, positive input.

Earlier I talked about our commitment to publicly funded health care. It remains there. We're adamant that we have such a good system. In fact, just coming back from Texas, the questions that were asked in terms of the public health system that we enjoy were: "How does it work? How do you govern it? Who pays for what?" All these questions because, as you know, the Americans have undertaken a move towards public health. What we have today, let's cherish. Let's work together and not use it for political purposes.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've actually been looking forward to asking the Premier a number of questions, so if it's okay with you and if it is okay with the Premier, we'll just go back and forth for the 20 minutes that we do have. Is that permissible?

The Chair: Twenty minutes, yes. You choose.

Mr. Rodney: Yes, indeed. Thank you, sir.

I do have to make a comment that might be just a little surprising. I have to say that I find one thing unfortunate about today's proceedings, and that's simply this: that not all Albertans are aware of what's happening today and/or are not able to tune in, because so many people are so interested in what this Premier is doing and what his department is doing. This is just a fabulous opportunity to learn exactly who is in control, who has the leadership, and what exactly is happening. Hopefully, the word does get out through Hansard and perhaps through media, but that's beyond our control.

My first question, Mr. Chair, has to do with our experiences in Washington. I was quite interested to hear the number: 90 per cent of our trade is with our American friends. I've been fortunate to go down to the States many, many times. One of the times was to visit our minister councillor. That, indeed, is the title, if I have it correctly. That was the first title given to a former hon. member and minister here, Murray Smith. I was able to witness his activities one day as I tagged along and learned all sorts of invaluable lessons. It was certainly proof to me that we really, really need that representation. Curiously enough, of course, we're the only province in the country that has representation as we do down there, first with Murray Smith and now with former minister the hon. Gary Mar.

My question to the Premier is: with the ever-capable Murray Smith handing the reins over to the equally capable Gary Mar – some constituents have asked this question – why is it that we would need additional advisers or consultants, be they Canadian or American? Perhaps the Premier can comment on the additional assistance that is, you know, being utilized from this point forward.

The Chair: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you. It is a good question and one that I know is important for Alberta, especially at a time when the countries Canada, the United States, and Mexico are entering into clean energy dialogue and some of the possible implications it may have for Alberta.

Energy is a massive contributor to our economy, and we'll need to make every effort to ensure that we get the correct information to decision-makers in the United States, that we're informed very well of the day-to-day developments. It's not only in Washington, the state capital, but it's in state Legislatures, working with governors. I believe, just off the top of my head, there are about 6,000 pieces of legislation that are passed every year in the United States. We have of course monitored where Congress is going on some of the issues.

The reason I say that is simply this. There was so much attention paid by various groups as soon as the new President was elected that: "The President will move very quickly. He's going to impose these penalties on the oil sands. You know, you've got to move. If you don't move, you're going to get left in the dust. You'll pay a penalty. Nobody will buy your oil. Oh, and by the way, carbon capture is a big waste; you shouldn't be doing that." All kinds of advice, and most, frankly, coming from some of the columnists that the previous member talked about. Quite frankly, if I listened to their advice, I wouldn't be here.

Let's put it this way. The major contributor to our carbon footprint is electrical coal-fired generation. It's the same in much of the United States. In fact, to reach the goals that the President has established will require a 50 per cent reduction in energy demand – 50 per cent. Can you imagine the cost of electricity if we reduce generation by 50 per cent on this continent? It would further diminish our global competitiveness, would further increase the number of jobless on the North American continent, and it would also put us in the position where we would lose even more of the global competitiveness in countries like India and China.

Now that the President has visited with our Prime Minister, they have decided to enter into a dialogue and see how we can work together on the North American continent so that we don't lose this advantage that we have. We may lose it forever to Asia if we're not careful. How do we grow jobs, find the balance between producing energy and also the economy and the environment?

With respect to the two firms that have been hired, it's $40,000 a month. The value of the firms there is to monitor policy, to give this government advice on where some of the state Legislatures are going with respect to policy and legislation, to work with their contacts in the Obama administration, to make sure that we're not only getting the correct information from the state Legislatures and Congress but that we also have a better idea of which states are supporting what legislation, what states may be opposing the proposed legislation in Washington, and who we do work with to build alliances.

A lot of this has to be face to face, and the two companies that we've hired have extensive experience. The first, of course, is a former ambassador to Canada with very good contacts with the Obama administration. He is a Democrat, so the politics align very well. The second is a former minister of public works that worked in Washington and the Canadian embassy for many years. Again, very extensive contacts.

This work that the two lobbyist organizations will do, the two firms, will complement what Gary Mar is doing in Washington. He cannot be in every state every day, nor can he monitor, as I said, a little more than 6,000 pieces of legislation that are going forward. To give you an example of what he has accomplished in a very short period of time, as you know, a lot of work was being done in anticipation of quick decision-making by President Obama and his administration. I think that now that they're in government, they're probably realizing that this is an overwhelming task and that he really does have to work with state governors and find the balance without really increasing the cost of energy even more and putting more pressure on the economy.

Gary has worked in two states, one in Maryland, where he worked diligently to ensure that the state of Maryland removed its anti-oil sands bill. They've done that. He testified in Minnesota on the state's low carbon fuel standard and was able to garner support for the oil sands. He is working very closely with the state of California. You know, the state of California is quite ironical. Everybody talks about Alberta's heavy oil, yet the – what? – 450,000 to 500,000 barrels a day of production in California nobody pays attention to. It's just another example of how much work we have to do, but we are working very closely through both the Washington office and the two lobbyist firms.

I do have good news to share with respect to Alberta and the relationship with the federal government and some of the state governors. With respect to the federal government we've been asked to participate on two committees, one on carbon capture and storage, which we made a very substantial investment in, and the other on the electrical smart grid. This is more on a technical side so that we can get, again, facts, good engineering, good comprehensive information so that we can build the policy on this.

I know that in Alberta many people focus on the oil sands and think that that's the major contributor to the carbon footprint. It's not. It's coal-fired electrical generation. The fact that many of the plants are close to some of the existing oil fields and gas fields gives us an opportunity to capture the carbon, inject it in the oil fields. Not only will it reduce the level of carbon, but we will also enhance oil recovery. It may be quite sizable in terms of the volume of enhanced oil recovery, which, again, will pay back quite a sizable return on the royalties that we'll collect extracting oil from established fields. The other important point is that we will not have to disturb more land. The established fields are there. We'll use the same roads – we don't have to drill new wells; again, less disturbance on our land – and use the same infrastructure that has been in place for a number of years. So it is a good-news story.

I know, having just recently visited Texas, that the state of Texas and Alberta will be working on a couple of projects as well and also tying our research on the environment together, especially in nanotechnology and a carbon fibre being able to carry electrical current further without any line loss. This is a state-of-the-art technology.

Yes, a tremendous value in the Washington office. It's co-located in the Canadian embassy. We're the only jurisdiction to have an office co-located in Washington. It is reaping benefits, especially now when there is a bit of a risk of having a policy implemented that may put quite a larger onus on a very small population, 3 and a half million people in Alberta, in terms of energy cost and production.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Mr. Chair. Those are extremely valuable clarifications.

I do have a question for the Premier about the branding campaign. It does relate to my previous question having to do with our friends – and I mean our friends – in Washington, DC. We've had all sorts of feedback on the branding, and I suppose that's quite natural in that it's very near and dear to the hearts of Albertans and how we communicate with people well beyond our borders. That's the lead-up to my question. What can our hon. Premier tell us about the role that our representatives in Washington have when it comes to supporting this new brand campaign? Again, what role do our representatives in Washington have in supporting our brand campaign?

Mr. Stelmach: The branding campaign will be in partnership with our office in Washington because the logo, the video, all of the information will be able to tell Alberta's whole story to not only people in Washington, decision-makers in Washington, but also to state governors, especially the Western Governors' Association, where we'll be taking that this spring. We're also going to, again, the state of Texas. We're going to be doing some work in California. These are all important areas for getting the correct information out.

Really, the branding speaks to our values. These are values that govern our decisions about energy. They honour our decisions with respect to environment and also the economy. It is the time to do it. Alberta has such a positive story.

It's amazing that when I was in Texas and met with the governor and some of the private-sector individuals – in fact, the economists at Rice University were not aware that in the province of Alberta we have a flat tax, a 10 per cent flat tax. It doesn't matter how much you earn. They thought that only in Texas do they have a tax situation like that. That tells us that we have a lot of work to do.

We also have to clearly – clearly – articulate to U.S. decision-makers that we develop our resources responsibly, be clear on the very tough water regulations we have, pipeline regulations, how we drill wells because they just do not have that information. The only way to do it is to work with them face to face and through the branding initiative.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: I'll thank the Chair and the Premier. I understand that the leader of the third party has some urgent questions to ask, so I'll turn the floor over to him with the time remaining.

Mr. Mason: Thank you to the member. That's most gracious.

Can you tell me how many minutes I actually have? Six minutes. Okay. That's great. Thank you very much.

I wanted to ask the Premier a question about the government's assessment of the threat to Alberta's economy that is posed by the movement in the United States and other parts of the world to reduce or eliminate the purchase and consumption of heavy oil, or so-called dirty oil. I want to take the opportunity to indicate that, you know, our view is not that the tar sands, or the oil sands, should be shut down but that they should be cleaned up, that they represent a very key element to our economy and that they represent jobs for tens of thousands of workers, many of them unionized, both on the construction side and on the operations side.

It's our view that the failure to deal adequately with environmental concerns, whether it be downstream effects on the water, the tailings ponds, the failure to use dry tailings and to demand dry tailings for new projects as well as to impose hard caps on emissions has in fact represented a very serious threat, which is being exploited by various organizations, particularly in the United States as that's the major source of our oil.

In our view, the best thing to do for Alberta and for the future of that important engine of our economy is to clean up the tar sands and to present a much better image internationally, particularly in the United States, at the same time recognizing that at some point we're going to have to transition away from carbon-based fuels. Those decisions will not be made in this province but will be made internationally, so we need to prepare for that day.

I would like to ask the Premier, you know, how they assess the risk to the tar sands, to the oil sands, as a result of changes politically in the United States. Certainly, as long as George Bush was the President, Alberta had a certain umbrella, had a certain protection, and it was clear that the United States was not going to impose any legislative or regulatory changes that would harm our operations and our export of oil from Athabasca tar sands. But that has changed, particularly with respect to the new administration in Washington as well as the new Congress as well as state Legislatures as well as the activities of various environmental and other organizations. How does the government assess the threat, and do they agree that we have to clean up our own act as well in the Fort McMurray area in order to safeguard the future economy of our province?

Mr. Stelmach: Clearly, the questions that the hon. member has raised signal that we have a lot of work ahead of us to get the correct information out. Carbon: one-tenth of 1 per cent. Open-pit mining: 500 square kilometres of 140,000 square kilometres. Our participation in SAGD. Our participation in recovering all of the land that is being disturbed. Those are the rules. The money is in place. The companies have to set money aside to do that.

Unfortunately, you know, the National Geographic article wasn't that bad, but it's the pictures – okay? – that show disturbed land. Do you think they would put at least a little picture, maybe five inches by five inches, of the land that was already reclaimed? No, because you'd change the opinion. You can't do that.

Let's look at some facts. Well, the global supply of light sweet crude is declining by a rate of 1 per cent every year. There are no new fields. That's it. Compare that to world demand rising by an average of about 2 per cent. So we do need the oil sands.

Now, do the Americans want it? Of course, they want it. Do they want it discounted? Well, of course. Find some way. That's why we're spending the amount of money on the two lobbyist efforts and the Washington office. I can tell you that it will be through some scheme, some administrative instruments, in a document that's going to be this thick, that a few years from now they might sneak one on us. That's why we have to be so careful. The $10 million that we're spending on branding, the $40,000 a month we're spending for this coming year on the two lobbyists is a pittance, a small amount, in terms of the risk to the next generation and the generation after that of Albertans.

For political purposes we can argue this all day long, but the long-term decision by the two, the Prime Minister and the President, has significant implications in the province of Alberta and, indeed, to a degree, in the province of Saskatchewan.

Now, reputation of investment. Yes, they were getting to people in major investment communities, to say: well, Alberta isn't doing a good job. When you go see them, when you talk to the economist, they don't have the information. They listened to some NGO that gave them incorrect information, making billions of dollars of investment on misinformation. That's why we have to put in this effort, and we're going to continue. The $25 million, I can tell you, is a small, small investment.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the leader of the third party, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now immediately rise and report progress on the estimates of the Department of Executive Council.

I'd like to invite our staff guests to depart from the Chamber.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mrs. Leskiw: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions for the Department of Executive Council relating to the 2009-10 government estimates for the general revenue fund and lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2010, reports progress, and requests leave to sit again. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of Supply on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What an excellent afternoon of great debating of a great department. I want to congratulate our Premier on hanging in there and answering those questions so well – thank you – and all the members who participated and asked some very good questions.

I would move that we call it 6 p.m. now and adjourn until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:58 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Give us the strength to labour diligently and the courage to think and to speak with clarity, conviction, and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Speaker, the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock, I would like to introduce to you and through you 19 visitors who are registered with the Vista Virtual school, which offers grades 1 to 12 courses to Alberta residents in partnership with the Alberta Distance Learning Centre, located in Barrhead. The visiting students reside in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency as well as Edmonton-Rutherford, Bonnyville-Cold Lake, Calgary-North West, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Drayton Valley-Calmar, and Edmonton-McClung. They are accompanied this afternoon by teachers Mrs. Nadine Ruhl, Mrs. Isabel Rempel, Mr. Gary Simpson and parent helpers Tracy Ekelund, Kurt Stenberg, Audrey Karperien, Kim Van Amsterdam, Lesley Miciak, Willy Brouwer, Valerie Sorensen. I believe they are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you some gentlemen who during the warm summer season coming up would all be good to know. With us today we have some gentlemen from the brewing industry in Alberta. We have Bryan Cox from Molson's, Jeff Ryan with Labatt's, Peter Kains from Sleeman, and Greg D'Avignon from Canada's National Brewers. I think it would behoove the Assembly to give these gentlemen the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to welcome a wonderful group of 40 visitors from Calmar elementary school in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar. These 36 bright grade 6 students along with parent helpers and their teachers, Mrs. Jeanette Wilson and Mrs. Angie Podgurny, have toured our Legislature and learned a great deal about our building and our provincial government. I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me this afternoon to introduce to you and through you some members of my family. I believe this is also slightly unusual because, firstly, I have in the Assembly today four generations of strong Alberta women: my wife, Diana Knight, my daughter Shawna Iggulden, my granddaughter Noelani, and my great-granddaughter Evangelina. They are accompanied by my son-in-law Todd Iggulden, my granddaughter Desera, my grandson Hayden, and my granddaughter Falyn. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce the Glenmore Christian Academy grade 9 band, with whom I had a chance to visit before question period. Their leader is Mr. Dan Bartholomew-Poyser, and their volunteers today are Dawn Stinson and Rebekah Robertson. The band is on a four-day tour of Edmonton and area, performing modern and classical pieces at various schools and balls. Their concerts include trumpet solos, percussion features, and Canada's youngest and newest male vocal quartet, Il Quattro. They're very pleased to be at the Legislature today, and I'm very pleased that they're here as well. I'll ask them now to stand and accept the warm wishes of everyone in this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 20 international students and five instructors from Jasper Place high school's English language learner program. The challenges of immigrating to a new country are many, especially if you don't speak the local languages. At Jasper Place high school ELL students are given individual attention and encouragement to become effective communicators by developing competency in their speaking, reading, writing, listening, and viewing skills. I could have used this program when I first came to this country. My guests will be joining us shortly in the members' gallery, and I would ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise today to introduce the family and close friends of Mr. Andy Bryant, former president of Horse Racing Alberta, a great friend and Albertan who passed away earlier this year. Joining us today and seated in the members' gallery are Terrie Hudon, Andy's wife; their two children, Sean and Tessa Bryant, along with Andy's parents, Vic and Beth Bryant; Terrie's parents, Larry and Shelagh Hudon; also close family friends Sean Bryant, Tom Hudon, Sue Roberge, Dan Hudon, Lana Hudon, Matthew Hudon, Margot Cooke, Doug Cooke, Candi Fonteyne, Mary Ann Houghton, Jason Houghton, Elaine Williams Allin, and David Allin. I had the privilege of knowing Andy for over 23 years, and I know I speak for my colleagues in government when I say he was a passionate man and one dedicated to making our world a better place. I'd like the family and friends to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two people from the beautiful riding of Calgary-Hays, Tyler and Shanna Groeneveld. Tyler, of course, is the son of our minister of agriculture. I believe they're up in the Speaker's gallery. I'd like you to give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you. I'm honoured as well to introduce to you and through you to all members two members of my family: first of all, my wife, Pauline Prins, and then my son Dr. Mark Prins. Mark received his bachelor of science in environmental studies at the King's University College in 2001. He then studied nursing in Calgary for a year and then moved on to the medical program. He graduated from the U of C medical school in 2006, and I think, Mr. Speaker, you actually spoke at his graduation, so you might remember that. He finished his residency in rural medicine in Chilliwack in 2008. He's now doing locums at various practices around B.C. Later this month he'll be moving to Iqaluit and Kugluktuk for some locums this summer. Mr. Speaker, they're seated in your gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Pam Cholak. Pam is no stranger to this Legislature as she has worked in many different offices, so many, in fact, that if I were to tell them all to you, it would be more like a member's statement, and I would not do that. I would ask Pam to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am just delighted to welcome to the Assembly and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Chamber nine individuals who are joining us in the public gallery from the Adult Transition Learning Centre. Today we have joining us Mark McGinnis, Michelle Weeks, Mike Kemp, Tim Demont, Valary Howard, Martin Wilson, Robbie Auger, and Aimee Anhill. They are accompanied by their teacher and group leader, Rachel Posch. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you for coming.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Andy Bryant

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in remembrance of Mr. Andy Bryant, a good friend and champion of Alberta's horse-racing industry, who lost a courageous battle with cancer earlier this year. He was 45 years old. Andy was a fervent supporter of horse racing in our province, having served as president and CEO of Horse Racing Alberta since its inception in 2002.

Although he was born in Montreal, Andy Bryant was a proud Albertan. He began his career as a Progressive Conservative Party of Canada youth volunteer and later worked as executive assistant to Deputy Prime Minister Don Mazankowski in the early 1990s. Andy then returned home to Alberta to assist nonprofit and aboriginal groups in obtaining government funding to support their important programs and services. It was soon after that Andy's passion for horse racing began to take shape. Andy served in several management positions within the horse-racing industry, commencing with the Alberta Standardbred Horse Association and then with the Alberta Racing Corporation, which eventually became Horse Racing Alberta. He was a driving force and key proponent of the massive entertainment complex, supermall, and racetrack being built near Balzac along the QE II, just north of Calgary. I think of him each time I drive by that facility, Mr. Speaker.

On behalf of my colleagues in the Alberta government I want to recognize and pay tribute to a passionate and dedicated Albertan who worked tirelessly to not only support horse racing in our province but to make this world a better place. I know that his legacy will live on through his beautiful family and the many friends that he made along the way. God bless you, Andy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health System Restructuring

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before becoming Premier, the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville was a member of the so-called Deep Six, a group of right-wing Tories whose job was to slay the Progressive Conservative debt as fast as possible regardless of the human cost. The Deep Six accomplished their goal by blowing up hospitals, driving health care professionals out of Alberta, and letting the province's infrastructure fall into ruin.

History is repeating itself as this government embarks on a campaign to delist public health care services, starting with those that directly affect the most vulnerable or the most afflicted Albertans. The Premier's pharmaceutical strategy places a huge financial burden on seniors, seniors who have already seen their retirement savings decimated by the stock market crash and who are scrambling to pay their monthly bills and put food on the table, never mind paying for expensive prescription drugs. I can tell the Premier what this strategy will achieve: seniors will impoverish themselves paying for these drugs, or they'll do without and wind up in hospital at great taxpayer expense, far more than the pharmaceutical plan will save. This isn't a strategy. It's simple, short-sighted foolishness.

During the election the Premier promised hundreds of new long-term care beds for Alberta. That promise has been broken, and now seniors are being warehoused in acute-care beds, again costing the public purse more money than if the Premier had simply kept his promise.

This administration has made a complete mess of our public health care system. They've spent millions of dollars on restructuring and public relations while sick children are being treated in tents because our emergency rooms are overflowing. This administration doesn't value public health care. They are preparing Albertans for a move toward more and more for-profit health care. Only that can explain this administration's colossal mismanagement of one of our most important public institutions, public health care.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Inner-city Community Challenges

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about the plight of our rapidly changing urban inner-city communities, particularly those in Calgary-North Hill. Recently I've been working with several different communities in my constituency on a couple of issues that have been receiving significant attention, the operation of a youth group home in the community of Collingwood and the operation of a methadone clinic impacting the communities of Greenview and Highland Park.

Resolution to both of these issues have been achieved from the perspective of the community. However, members of these communities have some larger questions about the future livability of their neighbourhoods. They have concerns about the impact of urbanization and densification that we've seen over the last decade. These concerns are exacerbated by the new land-use framework being brought forward and by the gradual shift from a resource- to a knowledge-based economy. Many of these communities do not oppose this direction. In fact, they want to embrace it but only in a manner where they can take ownership of change in their own communities.

The two situations that I have mentioned are merely an example of the challenges that we are going to face in the future. This is not a not in my backyard issue. It is bigger than that, Mr. Speaker. If we want greater density of our inner cities, we need to make these communities livable. However, our current attitudes and processes are driving people and families out of these communities, not attracting them.

Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development speak eloquently many times about the need for a new land-use framework in this province, that our recent economic and population growth has created a situation where the status quo approach is not going to serve us well moving forward. This is true for the future of our inner-city communities.

The complexity of issues from the siting of social services, including treatment facilities, group homes, and affordable housing, to the need to upgrade and enhance the capacity of public infrastructure in these communities is evident by the number of parties, authorities, and decision-making bodies involved. For example, in the two situations that I have mentioned, there were up to 12 entities, organizations, and decision-making bodies involved either directly or indirectly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Westend Seniors Activity Centre

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton Self Starters Organization was established in 1978 under the direction of a small group of citizens led by well-known Edmonton musician Harry Farmer and members of the west end Rotary Club. Thanks to the tireless efforts of many volunteers inspired and led by executive director Janice Monfries in 2005 the organization moved to a new facility and changed their name to the Westend Seniors Activity Centre.

The activity centre is a busy and active place for seniors to come together for laughter, companionship, and learning. Their outreach program extends into the community to bring the invisible senior out of isolation from their homes and into an atmosphere of socializing and education. They have Alzheimer's programs. They have a workshop. They have a sewing club. They have a library club. Mr. Speaker, when I visited this activity centre, it looked like senior high to me.

Along with participation in the programs the centre's members are encouraged to become active volunteers. Because of these healthy lifestyle changes the number of seniors attending local emergency hospitals and clinics is greatly reduced as their active lifestyles allow them to live independently in their own homes and enjoy the golden years of their lives.

The Westend Seniors Activity Centre is now in the process of completing the basement area of the already renovated facility to offer carpet curling and other programs. In addition, in order to help cover the related costs, they are holding a fundraising event this Saturday, April 18, entitled the Silver Hair Gala event. Tickets are still available. I would encourage all hon. members to show their support by attending or sponsoring a guest. I have my tickets in my hot little hand.

Mr. Speaker, thank you so much.

Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: First question of the Official Opposition. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Facilities Capital Projects

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's uncertainty in rural Alberta about both services and the status of health care facilities. These have been promised and are now under review. To the Premier. The Barrhead health care centre, Didsbury long-term care facility, Lacombe continuing care centre, and Fort McMurray long-term care facility have all been deferred pending an Alberta Health Services review and have no funding dedicated to them in the three-year capital plan. When will these communities know what's going to happen to these?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the Health Services Board is reviewing the projects, looking at the scope of the projects, how they fit into a longer term plan for not only seniors' care but providing acute care and emergency services in rural Alberta. They're evaluating. They'll bring the plan forward to the minister. In a lot of the facilities the money that was dedicated by the province is in place. They're just looking at the scope of the project. I also know that given some of the more recent tenders coming in, many of the costs are coming down considerably from the estimated cost, so there'll be further savings on the construction side.

Dr. Swann: Will the Premier explain why the Fort Saskatchewan health centre in the Premier's riding is going full steam ahead with $46 million in funding while Barrhead, Didsbury, Lacombe, and Fort McMurray are in a hold pattern?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, because, I guess, the board decided to go with the plan for the Capital region about, I think, three years ago. I believe the foundation is in place, and the building is being constructed. You know, it's part of the overall capital plan, and it was there for the last, I think, five years.

Dr. Swann: In High Prairie, Medicine Hat, Strathmore, Strathcona, and Grande Prairie the scope of their projects is under review. When will these communities know the results?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, they will know soon. I know with respect to the Grande Prairie facility there's $250 million that's in place, and the Health Services Board is going to be reviewing the project.

Some of these projects – and the Minister of Infrastructure can give more detail – were asked to implement the LEED program, which is, you know, high energy efficiency, saving long-term dollars. It has really increased the initial cost of the facility. But now that the economy has slowed down, I think we're going to get some better tender prices and incorporate a lot of the LEED standards into the construction of our facilities.

The Deputy Speaker: Second question of the Official Opposition.
The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Accountability for Health Care System Decisions

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last two days Albertans have heard conflicting stories from the administration. First, we hear that accountability for health decisions is with the minister of health, then accountability is with the Tory caucus and the Premier, and now we hear that accountability will be with the Alberta Health Services Board. To the Premier: where does the buck stop with decisions to delist health services? Albertans need to know.

Mr. Stelmach: All policy decisions in the end are made by government. We will receive advice from the Alberta Health Services Board. The minister will be working with health care professionals. This is in keeping with the plan that we rolled out going into the campaign, when we said that we want to bring about efficiencies and effectiveness in the service by working with health care providers coming to the table, working together so that not only can we improve access but we can also sustain the system for this generation and the generation after that.

Dr. Swann: The preamble to Bill 32, Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act, states: "Ministers of the Crown are accountable to the public for the activities and performance of public agencies in their ministries." When the minister of health passes the buck, he fails to do his job. Will the Premier make very clear to the minister of health that it is this minister's responsibility for the failure of Alberta's health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, you know, the other day we had four children in the Assembly. They spent a day touring the Legislature. They spent time with the hon. Speaker, had lunch with the Speaker. They spent time with me in the office. The reason I'm bringing that forward is that we constantly hear from the opposition that it is a failing health care system. Well, we have four youth that have seen phenomenal advances in technology, in drug therapy who are overcoming the huge challenges of cancer. I didn't hear once from any one of the four children that were in the gallery saying that our system is failing them.

Dr. Swann: Yesterday the minister did not answer my question regarding the tabling of the 40 services being considered for delisting. To the Premier: will the Premier table this list of 40 services being considered for delisting?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the minister said and I reiterated to the media was that there were a number of programs and grants that the minister had under the ministry of health, and there was some duplication of services amongst the nine regional health authorities. So what he's done is that he's moved what was a department expenditure, and he's given it to Alberta Health Services Board, and they will have a look at what was given to them in terms of the grants programs. They'll be making that recommendation to the minister, and then the minister will come forward and make those recommendations to cabinet, and we'll be making the decision in the end.

The Deputy Speaker: Third question of the Official Opposition.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Provincial Sales Tax

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government already has plans to slash public health services, to raise taxes apparently, to drain the sustainability fund, and this, according to the budget, is supposed to be the year of economic recovery. The finance minister has claimed that there won't be a provincial sales tax, but one thing we've learned yet again is you can't trust anything this government tells you as these so-called fiscal hawks have quickly become fiscal chickens. To the Premier: can the Premier explain why he's even thinking about making Albertans pay for his government's mismanagement with increased taxes and cuts to the public health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the only group that's talking about changes and maybe delisting of services and some American two-tier health care system and raising taxes are the Liberals and the NDs. You have not heard me at all talk about any kind of a sales tax. [interjections] I know. Listening to the truth is hard for them. But, you know, I have not at all said that we're going to go to any kind of a provincial sales tax. In fact, that will not happen. The other is that the only area that we raised taxes was on cigarettes and on liquor. We are committed, though, to the billion dollar tax reduction in eliminating health care premiums. That's over a billion dollars that's in the pockets of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm still waiting to hear the truth, actually.

Can the Premier explain how it is that Alberta spends 23 per cent more than the national average, yet Albertans are being told to open their wallets and pay more taxes? This just shows how this government is utterly flawed in its fiscal management.

Mr. Stelmach: As I said before, the only group that's talking about raising taxes is the Liberals. The hon. member was following the minister of finance in Calgary and talking to media. He says: "Oh, yeah. I think they've got this plan. They're going to be raising taxes." We're not talking about raising taxes, but the Liberals are. I guess that if you want to raise taxes, if you want to introduce a sales tax, get up in the House and say that. But I'll tell you one thing that the government did that was very wise because you never know when they'll sneak up on you. Albertans – Albertans – will make the decision whether there is a sales tax because there is a law on the books that says that it will have to go to a provincial referendum. I know what the results will be. They're going to tell the Liberals: no to your sales tax.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I guess the finance minister and the health minister are still sneaking up on the Premier because the finance minister has said that when it comes to raising taxes, everything is on the table, and the health minister has talked about delisting services.

To the Premier my final question: can he reveal to the House today the date of the referendum on a sales tax?

Mr. Stelmach: If the hon. member wants to bring forward a motion in the House, then do so. But I can tell you about one thing that this Conservative government will not do but something that the former Liberal government did under Jean Chrétien. Remember, they had the red book? They were coming around all over Alberta saying: "We are getting rid of the GST. It's done." Guess what? The day he was elected: "Oh. Did I say I was going to get rid of it? No. I think we're going to stay with the GST." So that kind of stuff, I tell you, you're not going to hear from this government. You will hear from them. They're already talking about it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I can't let that little bit of revisionist history slip by. It was the Tory government of Brian Mulroney that brought in the GST, the Tory government.

Health Care Spending

Mr. Mason: In a recent meeting with the editorial board of a Calgary newspaper the health minister warned Albertans that public health care could only be expected to cover, quote, the necessary essentials. The minister suggested that if we had what he calls a clear policy 10 or 15 years ago, we might not be covering hip replacement surgery today. My question is to the Premier. Do you agree with your health minister that hip replacement surgery is not a necessary procedure?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister had an interview earlier today on radio, and he will of course refer to the House in terms of what he has said.

I do want to, though, before he gets too excited – yes, the GST was put in by our former federal Conservative government. But you know what? They did not go to an election and say: we are going to get rid of it. It was the Liberal Party under the leadership of Jean Chrétien that said they were going to get rid of it, and then once they were elected, they did not deliver on their commitment.

Mr. Mason: The Premier would rather talk about ancient history than this crisis in our health care system.

In the last 15 years more than 25,000 Albertans have had hip replacement surgery. The cost of this surgery runs about $20,000 a hip. Those who can't afford the price face a future of limited mobility and pain. To the Premier: given the attitude of this government towards such procedures, what other procedures are you considering delisting which could prevent our seniors from living out their lives crippled and in pain?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to answer that question, because, you know, it doesn't matter how old one gets; you learn. I learned a lesson this week: don't use examples, because when you use an example, these guys will blow it all out of proportion. All I said at the time was that we don't know what would have been covered under the Canada Health Act if we had this kind of an expert panel. Quite frankly, it is our intention to continue to cover what is under the Canada Health Act. If this hon. member wants to state in this House anything that we have done that's outside the Canada Health Act, then stand up and say so.

Mr. Mason: Wow. The Artful Dodger, Mr. Speaker.

The finance minister has suggested that $2 billion of cuts need to be found in next year's budget. The health minister, whose budget is half the total of the provincial budget, has said that you won't find $2 billion in the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. In other words, the lion's share of the cuts will have to come from Alberta health. I want to ask the Premier: is his health minister suggesting that this government will cut up to a billion dollars in health spending next year?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, playing on words. All I can say is that we have a number of goals in mind. Certainly, one is to protect the principles of the Canada Health Act and make sure that it's publicly funded, and one that's very, very important is to ensure that we sustain the system for the next generation. All provincial governments and the federal government are struggling with this issue. I just reach out to all Canadians, all Albertans, all provincial governments. Let's work on this together. We've started a good process with British Columbia and Saskatchewan in terms of looking at larger drug purchases, perhaps consolidating some treatments, just various ways of trying to improve access, improve efficiency, and also sustain the system for the future dollars.

Before I do sit down, Mr. Speaker, I just want to inform the House, to end this debate, that the current Conservative government has dropped the GST by 2 points.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Library Services

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier made an important announcement about a new vision for public libraries in Alberta. My first question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister please explain what the new vision for public libraries is?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a great day to be an Albertan, especially if you love libraries. This new focus will create seamless access to resources for all Albertans. This new vision will remove barriers and increase access to libraries for all Albertans through collaboration, innovation, and advances in technology. The vision will benefit Albertans in communities where they live, where they work, and where they read.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: does the new vision for libraries come with new funding?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is proudly investing $32 million in public libraries this year. This is a $9 million increase in funding, 39 per cent: $7 million going to local libraries and regional systems, $2 million to invest in technology and to implement the new vision. Very importantly, our commitment is to support libraries for years to come.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Education. One of the recommendations from the library report talks about colocation and student support. How can the education system under your leadership respond to their recommendations?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been very actively encouraging our school boards to work with other community organizations to co-locate, to bring services together, and to provide support for students because schools ought to be a hub in the community as libraries are. Schools and libraries also are very important with respect to literacy. There's a great opportunity for co-location. I think we should be considering student ID cards doubling as library cards, for example. There are many different ways that we can operate together to make sure that libraries serve communities 12 months of the year and schools serve communities 12 months of the year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, whether he likes it or not, the Minister of Health and Wellness is responsible for the $217 million Mazankowski Heart Institute. Yesterday when asked about the year-long delay in opening the facility, the minister said that everything from the opening ceremonies to problems with construction management is someone else's fault, but the minister is paying the bills, and he's using Albertans' money. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister admit that there are serious problems at the Mazankowski that are his responsibility?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the Mazankowski Heart Institute is a world-class facility that's going to put this province on the map for many years to come. If this particular member is suggesting that he'd like it to be removed from his constituency, I think there are about 72 others around here who would gladly take the Mazankowski Heart Institute.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Construction of the Mazankowski was announced six years ago this week. It's been plagued with problems ranging from patient room design to problems with the elevators to the helipad. Some reports say it could now be next year before it opens. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: will he make public a detailed list of the commissioning problems that have led to the delay so that the public will know what it's paying for?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I can put this member's worries to rest. I'm told by Alberta Health Services that they expect to have the Mazankowski centre starting to take patients next month.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the lead architect and engineer for the Mazankowski is Stantec. The CEO of Stantec sits on the Alberta Health Services Board, that is building the Maz. In other words, Stantec is intimately involved as both client and contractor in a case with serious performance problems and $217 million at stake. Anywhere else this would be disallowed as a conflict of interest. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: for the sake of everyone involved, including Stantec, will the minister ask the CEO of Stantec to step down from Alberta Health Services Board?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we go back to what we were dealing with earlier in the session. You know, this group stands here and smears people's reputations, and then they wonder why nobody votes for them. I mean, it's unbelievable.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I was certainly very happy to hear the announcement today on increased funding for libraries. This certainly is good news. Indeed, every day is a great day to be an Albertan. Can the minister tell us: how will the new vision ensure that seamless access is achieved between libraries?

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We want to ensure that Albertans do have access to information, resources, and services no matter where they live in Alberta. This could include a single library card, video conferencing, access to the Internet throughout Alberta, access to an electronic database, a province-wide technology plan. This vision is a result of hundreds of stakeholders who shared their ideas and their opinions to the MLA committee that went around this province to get the views of Albertans, and we're respecting those views.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. With greater collaboration and integration among Alberta's public libraries will we see information in Alberta's university and college libraries become available to more Albertans?

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, today is a great day to be an Albertan, as is any other day in the year. With resources like eCampus, Athabasca University, the Lois Hole digital library, the Taylor Family Digital Library, we provide resources to over 35 public postsecondary institutions. We look forward to this vision and being able to tie those institutions together with the libraries and, hopefully, one day having access for every Albertan across the province. Alberta is a leader in digital resourcing for our students.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Service Alberta. How many libraries in the province are currently connected to the SuperNet, and what are you doing to connect even more?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are currently more than 270 libraries connected to and using the SuperNet. In fact, there are currently at least 30 of those that are using video conferencing services on a regular basis via the SuperNet. This is great news as well. In the months ahead Service Alberta officials will be working very closely with Municipal Affairs to look for ways to get individuals to have even more access to information at libraries across Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mental Health Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our goal is to vocalize the concerns of Albertans who are unable to stand in this House and speak for themselves. We've given them the chance to do that by asking questions on their behalf. To the minister of health: Caroline from Calgary points out that the new hospital in south Calgary was initially supposed to have an entire floor dedicated to mental illness, yet it was scrapped. Many patients in crisis are put on a year-long waiting list for treatment, and a large proportion of our homeless population suffers from mental illness. Why isn't the government prepared to dedicate serious resources to dealing with mental illness?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this government takes this issue very seriously. One of the things that was in our budget was additional money for addictions, and it's part of the safe communities initiative. Just to correct the member, because this is what we seem to have to do all the time, the new south Calgary hospital is going to have a significant number of beds to deal with mental illness.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. A significantly reduced number of beds. This government's lack of support for mental health services is appalling, as can be seen with the minister of health's statement this past Tuesday that he would be "cancelling some programs around youth suicide prevention." Can the minister explain how he can so flippantly dismiss a funding initiative involving serious mental health problems with Alberta's youth?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, what has happened as a result of our budget – and I can go through this again. There are a number of programs that were either duplicative in nature or that should more appropriately be delivered by Alberta Health Services. It is those programs that we have transferred to Alberta Health Services to assess in the province-wide health delivery system, which ones need to continue to be funded and which shouldn't. Again, another example of the opposition taking this issue and blowing it completely out of proportion.

Mr. Chase: Speaking of blowing, the General hospital comes to mind.

The widespread problem of mental illness and the costs associated with it because of it being marginalized by this government will not go away just because you ignore it. Does this government not understand that by adequately supporting mental health, this government would effectively reduce the overall burden of costs on the health care system?

Mr. Liepert: Well, if the member would have been paying attention for the past year, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that he would have noticed is that we have done something that government has not done in a number of years: we brought forward a children's mental health strategy. Even though this member may believe that mental health just sort of creeps up in later years of life, that's not correct. If we can address mental health issues at early ages, we can get away from some of the issues that we've had to deal with in safe communities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods has many newcomers and job seekers in today's economy. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. How can the government support the new vision for libraries, in particular for the newcomers and job seekers in today's economy?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the funding and vision for libraries will help us expand our existing services to Albertans on careers and training so they can get back to work. We already have a number of partnerships with Calgary public libraries and Bow Valley College, where we use the library for career and employment information services. We hope to do more partnerships in the future. In addition, we know that we can make better use of libraries to promote English as a second language classes and provide information on supplement supports for newcomers and their families.

Mr. Benito: Mr. Speaker, the report calls for seamless access to library services for all Albertans, including aboriginals on reserves and on settlements. My first supplemental question is for the Minister of Aboriginal Relations. What programs are you doing to improve access to library services for First Nations and Métis people in Alberta?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've said from the outset that libraries and education in general are my number one priority, so I'm really pleased with this huge increase for public library funding because I was quite surprised to see that we only have one such library on reserve or on settlement that I can actually proudly point to. We need more, obviously. If we're going to increase literacy rates and high school completion rates and educational attainment levels in general for aboriginal people, this is a great place and a great way to start. I'm working with our two ministers of education, with the federal minister, and with aboriginal leaders to help implement this recommendation, and we're going to get it done.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. Over the last year you've talked about access to arts and culture for all Albertans. Is this just lip service, or are there ways that this new framework for libraries can help move this forward?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's more than just lip service. Libraries along with our postsecondary education facilities and our K to 12 institutions are a vital part of our cultural policy and its development and delivery. I'd like to see more Albertans using libraries to access our cultural institutions regardless of where they live through the broadband links, the SuperNet. Many of our historic sites, like the Royal Tyrrell Museum, have an incredible amount of online programming that libraries can benefit from. My department has been working with the libraries to promote Alberta Arts Days this coming September.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:20 Legislature Grounds Redevelopment

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government is again considering plans to redo the Legislature Grounds. As the local MLA I've not been kept in the loop, so I'm hoping that the Minister of Infrastructure can answer some of the questions that have been brought to me. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what is the budget and the timeline of this project?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have undertaken a study to see what possibilities exist for the grounds. I'd like to thank the hon. member because the hon. member was involved in the committee work that initially was undertaken to take a look at it. We have an opportunity with this to actually be a very core anchor piece to the Capital Boulevard. There are some amazing opportunities, but we have to study what possibilities are there, and of course we can only do what we can afford.

Ms Blakeman: This is the committee that only met three times and then paid themselves a whole bunch of money? Surely not.

To the same minister. The Royal Lawn Bowling Club, which has been on the Legislature Grounds since 1918, has not been encouraged to stay. My question to the minister is: can his department work with them to find an alternate space from other provincially owned land, and will they help them to relocate?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I'd be very happy to look into that. The statement was made that they haven't been encouraged to stay, but I haven't heard that they've been encouraged to leave, either.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given that other community leagues were consulted, I'm wondering why the Downtown Edmonton Community League, in whose boundaries the Legislature Grounds lie, was not consulted on the plans for renewal.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make sure that the member was able to be seated before I stood.

Mr. Speaker, we are undertaking a study right now that's been budgeted for, and the information was released on that. Of course, as soon as we see what possibilities exist and some of the options that are available, we'll consult with the community and with the city. I know they're very excited, and the mayor has spoken very highly of what we're undertaking.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Nuclear Power

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After months of delay the Energy minister finally released a nuclear report that was completely biased. It was a pro-nuke brochure designed as fact, full of ridiculous claims like wind turbines being worse for the environment than the radioactive waste generated at each nuclear plant every year. To the Minister of Energy: when will you stop spinning your propaganda merry-go-round and sit down for some straight talk about nuclear power with Albertans, who are worried about the environment?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, an awful lot of rhetoric here and not a lot of substance. What's happening, of course, is that we had asked for a nonbiased, factual report relative to the application of nuclear energy in the province of Alberta. That's what we have in front of us. Going forward, we have a very open and transparent process to go out and consult with Albertans as the Premier has asked me to do. In due course that's exactly what will happen.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, Bruce Power has committed $50 million to support its campaign for a nuclear plant in Alberta. Meanwhile, your website is talking about inviting a select group of Albertans to discuss the issue, but you stop short of having an open house, where all concerned Albertans can discuss the truth. To the Minister of Energy: why won't you commit today to letting all Albertans in on this debate by having nuclear consultations across the province open to anyone who wants to attend, including the media?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we're about to do. I don't believe that the Internet, that the website that we're on, that the workbooks will be restricted so that other Albertans cannot get involved. It's exactly what we are going to do. Thank you very much for the suggestion.

Ms Notley: Well, I will hold you to it, then, because right now your press release on this matter says that there will be no open public consultations. It says that select people will be invited. If you're telling me right now that your website is wrong and that you will have open consultations across the province, where anybody can attend, please confirm that now, and then you will have my thanks.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, do I have to explain it again? I am not restricting anybody from attending the website. All Albertans can attend the website. They're welcome to do it. There will be at some point in time an opportunity for people to march in front of the Legislature. If that's what they choose to do, we're not going to restrict them. They do now, on Friday afternoon, in the sunshine, go out and demonstrate in front of my office in Grande Prairie. I'm not restricting them from doing that. They can get involved in any way that they see fit.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. Sorry, Calgary-East. Correction.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know you think very highly of Calgary-Fort.

Immigrant Nominee Program

Mr. Amery: Mr. Speaker, immigration has been a key source of growth in Alberta's population. Last year the government missed its target to nominate workers under the Alberta immigrant nominee program. The target was not reduced; instead, it was doubled. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In 2008-2009 did the government nominate as many new Albertans as it planned for?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we did meet our target. Our goal was to increase the provincial nominee certificates issued to 3,000 last year, and we surpassed that, reaching over 3,400. This breaks down to over 250 families and over 3,100 employee-driven certificates. These certificates reflect over 8,500 new Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also to the same minister. For most of last year the economy was in quite a different situation than it is today. Given the current economy, are you going to reduce the number of nomination certificates targeted for this year?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is no. This year's target is to issue 4,000 provincial nominee certificates. We recognize that while the economy has slowed in the short term, immigration remains very crucial to Alberta's population and economic growth in the long term. To meet our goals, we're recruiting people in the professions where they are needed the most. We are also reviewing our provincial nominee program to ensure alignment with the federal government and changes in the economy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. With increases in the unemployment rate, what is the government doing about Albertans who are losing their jobs, and how does it work with the immigration targets?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the rising unemployment rate is concerning. Government continues to offer support and training programs to get people working again. Immigration is all about planning for the future so we are ready when the economy does pick up again. We are also working on improving our foreign qualification recognition to ensure that immigrants who are already here can put their skills to work as soon as possible.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Smoking in Vehicles Carrying Children

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 21, 2009, Ontario joined Nova Scotia in passing a ban on smoking in cars carrying children, and several other provinces are moving to pass similar legislation. To the Minister of Transportation: as many other jurisdictions are passing these laws, when will you commit to meeting your responsibilities to protecting children and move on this issue?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I think everyone knows that this government thinks children are one of the best resources we have here. They're going to be our new leaders. For this hon. member to actually think that we don't care about children makes me feel horrible. Anyway, I will say that I've said in this House many a time that there should be common sense to this, and we shouldn't need a law to make people look after their children.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I honestly don't know where this member gets it that I think his government does not care about children. I understand that you do. However, I can't for the life of me believe you haven't passed this law. Why won't you pass a law when adults continue to smoke while they're in vehicles with children in the back seat? Why don't you just pass a law saying that we're not going to tolerate this anymore?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen where we could police the issue, for one thing. I really do watch drivers in other cars now because, as you know, we're looking at bringing distracted legislation forward. I try to watch other drivers without being too distracted myself, and I really haven't seen that problem with people smoking with their children in the car.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have seen the problem happening, and also your own Solicitor General has said that we can police this if the law is passed. Just to ease your concerns on that issue, I'd have a conversation with your Solicitor General on this. As the Solicitor General, I've assured you, can police this, why not just go ahead and ban it? He will be able to look at protecting children in this province from people who are causing children damage from second-hand smoke.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I'll definitely have a chat with our Solicitor General and see what kind of resources he has, but I still say that common sense is the answer here. I think the public in general should be educating people on not smoking in their vehicles with children in them.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Municipal Sustainability Initiative

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The municipal sustainability initiative, or MSI, is an unprecedented program that assists municipalities to enhance their long-term planning and sustainability. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What are the timelines for reviewing MSI project applications?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to supporting municipalities, and municipalities decide on the projects based on their local priorities. After we receive the application from the municipalities, it takes about 10 to 12 weeks to process them. Our staff work with municipalities to ensure that the application is correct and is done correctly and reviewed as quickly as possible. MSI helps municipalities plan for the future and their needs.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second question is also for the same minister. I understand that there have been some delays in processing applications, and this can affect municipal planning and budgeting for these projects. To the minister: what is the minister's strategy to deal with any delays?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have increased the number of grant advisers, and just for information for this House we need to keep in mind that we've received over 2,200 applications, and 1,800 of those have been reviewed and accepted. We're continually trying to improve the efficiencies, but those efficiencies are improvements for municipalities. We need to make sure that those focuses and directions are right.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs as well. What can municipalities do if they are experiencing processing delays with MSI project applications?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question because municipalities can contact our ministry, and they do contact their local representatives or MLA. We look into their project, and we will tell them where that project is as far as the application or the review. We are trying to shorten those guidelines. MSI is a program that is delivered by this Premier and this government, and it's an excellent program to support municipalities.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

High-speed Rail Link

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton-Calgary corridor is one of the wealthiest regions in the world, and we need to set up a transportation system that provides for long-term sustainable growth for this region. What is the Minister of Transportation's position on the role of high-speed rail as a central part of sustainable future development of this region?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to see the hon. member is actually concerned about the great corridor that we have, and we want to be able to transport people safely in that corridor. I do believe that at some point in time we will see some sort of high-speed rail or a connection along that corridor. Today we've been analyzing a study that we just had done on ridership. I think we will probably be ready to release that at some time in the future, and I do believe that someday we will see a high-speed rail connection.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we should be planning for the high-speed train now, when the time is right. We should lay the foundation stone for that high-speed rail. To the minister again. We have heard from groups interested in high-speed rail who have pointed out that such a link would significantly reduce greenhouse gas emissions as well as accidents and congestion by taking cars off the QE II highway. Does the minister agree with this? If so, what steps has he taken in that direction?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we haven't finished completely analyzing the review yet, but I'm going to give him a little tidbit out of it. There was one part of that review that did say that if we had a high-speed rail network, in the length of time it would take us to acquire the right-of-way and the length of time it would take us to build, we would not reduce the number of cars on the road because of the type of growth we've had in Alberta. We would still have the same types of emissions and congestion because of our growth.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister received a report over a year ago on the high-speed rail. When will the minister finally release this report and let Albertans know what the government is going to do about it?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, sometime in the future for sure we will release that report. We're analyzing right now.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

AFSC Lending Limits

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It could also be argued today that this is a great day of agriculture and businesses in agriculture because agricultural businesses, just like other businesses, need to have access to capital in order to manage operations. During the economic slowdown and credit crunch necessary capital couldn't be more important to our producers. Yesterday it was announced that AFSC, or Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, is now able to offer larger loans to producers in Alberta. My first question to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: what does this mean for Alberta producers and agribusinesses?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This certainly means that producers and agribusinesses will continue to have access to some long-term, stable financing. This is another tool that will certainly help them establish, help them grow or sustain their operations, and ensure the future success of agriculture here in Alberta. AFSC will be able to provide loans to a broader base of clients and increase opportunities to partner with other financial institutions on some of the larger projects.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second question to the same minister: Minister, what are the increased spending limits?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that AFSC's lending limits have increased since 2002. The maximum loan or guarantee that can be provided has increased from $2 million to a cumulative total of $5 million. For larger scale projects limits have increased to $25 million from $10 million, so businesses and producers who take advantage of these increases will certainly still have access and the same long-term, low-interest, and flexible payment options that they've had before on other AFSC loans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Final question to the same minister: Minister, could you explain to the House why these programs are important to agriculture producers?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, it certainly is a good question because even small family farms have large expenses, Mr. Speaker. Purchasing new farm equipment alone is a huge expense today. The increased lending limits will benefit everyone in the industry, regardless of the operation's size, as they are available in all of AFSC's loan programs in existence today. The increased limits will be very useful in making it possible for Alberta's industry members to continue to be leaders and act on their innovative ideas. In fact, there's already been a lot of interest from the farm industry, and I encourage everyone who is interested to contact AFSC.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we had 96 questions and answers today. We have 30 seconds until we continue with Members' Statements.

Library Services

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great day to be an Albertan, and I had the great pleasure this morning to be present at and part of a very important announcement affecting all Albertans. It involved the Premier announcing the details of a new vision for Alberta's public library system that strengthens library services for all Albertans and includes a 39 per cent funding increase for public libraries.

This fall I had the privilege to be asked by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, a true champion for libraries, to chair the MLA committee on the Future of the Public Library Service in Alberta. Along with two of my colleagues, the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford and the MLA for Calgary-Mackay, we toured the province and listened to stakeholders. We listened to many passionate, committed Albertans and in our report brought forward their vision.

On behalf of my colleagues I want to thank the minister, his staff, and all library stakeholders for their commitment to this important initiative. Today's announcement demonstrates that the government listened to those Albertans. Autonomy has created strong local libraries and library boards. The government's role is to support that autonomy while creating an overarching library policy, supporting a province-wide public library system, promoting collaboration and innovation, and capitalizing on technology.

Today we celebrate what libraries are and, with this government's support, what they can become. With the hard work of library stakeholders and through the fantastic support for libraries that we've received from the Premier, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and all ministries, we will have a solid framework for supporting a world-class public library service that will serve Albertans well into the 21st century.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Climate Change

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For almost 40 years Earth Day has been held on April 22 to draw attention to the dangers facing the planet we share. In the midst of our focus on the global recession, it is good to take the time to once again be reminded of the water we waste, the species we risk, the air we pollute, and the future we endanger.

While there are many pressing threats to our environment, the danger of climate change is especially concerning. Fiercer fires and the mountain pine beetle will jeopardize Alberta's forests, and successive droughts will deplete our supply of fresh water. The personal and economic costs of climate change could be staggering, so governments around the world have introduced effective strategies to fight climate change that create real reductions in emissions. However, while scientists, politicians, and citizens alike agree that the time for action on the environment is now, this Conservative government's plan to fight climate change will not see any real reductions in greenhouse gas emissions until 2050. Alberta is now Canada's biggest greenhouse gas polluter, and the Conservatives are doing nothing to change this.

Responsible extraction of our province's main resource and transitioning toward a green economy can go hand in hand. The technology for dry tailings and greenhouse gas reducing measures exists. But while we take the steps we must to reduce our current carbon footprint, we can also begin the transition towards an economy based on green energy and green jobs. All that is needed to make this happen is the political will to do so. However, this Conservative government continues to pay lip service to the environment while subsidizing large oil corporations through untested and dangerous carbon capture technology.

We also need to ensure that we have enough environmental inspectors who are empowered to provide the oversight that is needed to ensure that environmental laws and regulations are upheld. It is ridiculous to expect that corporations can effectively self-monitor and provide the profit margins that investors are expecting at the same time.

On the occasion of Earth Day we have the opportunity once again to refocus our thoughts and efforts on what is arguably the most significant issue of our time. Recessions will not last forever. Economies will recover and undoubtedly boom again. The actions we take for our environment or, more importantly, the ones we don't will have significance for future generations.

The Deputy Speaker: May I have a moment? I have just been notified that our colleague the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright is married today for four years, his anniversary. He's got two children, and his wife's name is Sue. I would like to congratulate him.

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, April 20, 2009, motions for returns 2, 3, 4, 6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, and 24 will be dealt with.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters opposed to the cancellation of public funding for gender reassignment surgery. They state that the cancellation of funding unfairly targets a vulnerable group. The letters are written by Wayne Madden and Jordenne Prescott.

I'd also like to table the appropriate number of copies of documents related to the questions asked today by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. They are a column from the Calgary Sun dated April 14, 2009, a chart from the Health and Wellness website showing the number of hip replacement surgeries performed from September '07 to September '08, and an article with some statistics on the cost of hip replacement surgery in the U.S.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I have several tablings today. The first is a letter written by Joyce Burnett, who's taken the time at a very challenging point in her life to write to me to say among other things: I cannot imagine how difficult it must be for people who need sex change operations. She's obviously opposing the government's position.

The second is a letter from Reverend Brian Kiely. He first of all notes the cut to chiropractic services, but he's in fact more concerned about the cut to gender reassignment surgery, which he describes as petty, both financially and ethically, and he would like it restored.

The third is from Michelle Shaw, quite an extensive letter opposing the government's position on gender reassignment surgery.

The next is from Kelby DeLaet, who also is opposed to the government's position on gender reassignment surgery.

A letter from Nicole Hankel written to me, a very extensive one also on gender reassignment surgery, opposing the government's position.

One from Marcus Peterson opposing the government's position on gender reassignment surgery.

Another one, the second last, is from Alyssa Stryker, also opposing the government's position on gender reassignment surgery. She notes that she's not directly and personally affected by the decision. She sees it as an issue of human rights.

Finally, a letter from Krystin Prescott, who quotes the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario, which ordered that "Ontario must fund the sex reassignment surgery" and also ordered that Ontario is to "cease this contravention of the Code." Pretty blunt language.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been a busy week in the constituency office for Edmonton-Centre, so I've just prepared a report, which I'll table today. Essentially, it covers the top issues that we've heard about in the office, particularly the seniors' pharmaceutical plan, with constituents like Garry and Dolores Acres and Keith Ali writing in – and I've given some excerpts from their e-mails there – a great deal of mail on the delisting of gender reassignment surgery, and also telephone calls, e-mails, and mail on the disbanding of the Wild Rose Foundation.

Other issues that were raised: a number of AISH recipients were pleased that the monthly AISH benefit was increased but also noting that it should be a cost-of-living increase that's indexed rather than increasing at the whim of the government, some support for this member's Bill 204, and some additional correspondence on housing and homelessness. I'll highlight Lisa Budney writing in support of the province's plan to end homelessness and hoping that the plan is appropriately funded.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, just table the report.

2:50 Projected Government Business

The Deputy Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Under Standing Order 7(6) I would ask the Government House Leader to share with us the projected House business commencing the week of Monday, April 20, government business commencing on the 21st.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next week will be a busy week. Commencing on the 21st of April under government business, depending on what's completed this afternoon, in committee we'll be dealing with bills 4, 19, and 17 as well as bills 6, 7, and 9; second reading of bills 23, 24, 26, and 30.

On Wednesday, April 22, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders again bills 4, 6, 7, and 9, depending on progress; third reading of bills 17 and 19 and second reading of bills 20, 25, 27, 28, and 32 and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, April 23, depending on progress, bills 4, 6, 7, and 9 in third reading and second reading of bills 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 29, 31, 33, and 35 and as per the Order Paper.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4

Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 4, the Post-secondary Learning Amendment Act, 2009, in Committee of the Whole. I wanted to reiterate a number of important points that have been made about this bill. It is to make two amendments to the Post-secondary Learning Act. One amendment ensures further consistency with our roles and mandate policy framework for publicly funded postsecondary institutions. The other proposal is a housekeeping matter related to clarifying delegation of powers for graduate faculty councils and faculty councils.

Mr. Chairman, during second reading a number of issues were identified. A question was raised regarding the concept of the urban campus in Calgary. Several issues related to tuition affordability and student housing were also highlighted. Finally, the issue of deferred maintenance at some of our campuses was mentioned. While these are all very important issues, they do not directly relate to either of the proposed amendments to the Post-secondary Learning Act. In fact, they're not related to them.

As such, I'd like to acknowledge a question that was raised which does relate to the amendments. That's the suggestion that if in the future Mount Royal College or Grant MacEwan College changed their name to include the term "university," their funding levels would need to increase to match those received by the comprehensive academic and research institutions. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, is about the ability of the institutions in the baccalaureate and applied studies institutions sector to be able to apply for a name change, not a change in the institutions' mandates. Therefore, the funding would not need to increase. The institutions in the comprehensive academic research institutions sector have the mandate to conduct pure research and, therefore, have a much higher degree of research intensity, while the baccalaureate and applied studies institutions sectors focus on teaching intensity. With respect to degree programs baccalaureate and applied studies institutions will be limited to undergraduate programming; therefore, research funding would not need to increase.

Currently the act restricts the use of the term “university.” The original intent of this provision was to maintain control over the use of the term, including restricting Alberta’s college system from using it, in an effort to preserve the foundation of the community college system. However, with the implementation of the roles and mandates framework it’s timely now to consider modernizing this provision to give consideration to the broader use of the word “university.” That would recognize the depth and breadth of programs offered by institutions within the baccalaureate and applied studies institutions sector category.

This bill would support those institutions who are currently offering – currently offering, I must emphasize, Mr. Chairman – baccalaureate degree programming by providing public recognition and some credibility through the option of applying for a name change to include the term “university” in their name. Other than this bill there are no mechanisms to allow these institutions to use the word “university” in their name without dissolving them and re-establishing them as a university under the comprehensive academic and research institutions category of the act.

This amendment to the act allows flexibility within the Post-secondary Learning Act as it relates to name only and does not change the mandate or the role of the institution. This amendment would not allow institutions to move from one sector to another but recognizes that baccalaureate and applied studies institutions are distinct as they offer baccalaureate programs as well as a variety of applied degrees, diplomas, certificates, transfer, and open studies programs under Campus Alberta.

The proposed bill has been intentionally restricted to baccalaureate and applied studies institutions because of that sector’s focus in the policy framework. This is not about shifting sectors or creating additional comprehensive academic and research institutions. Expanded undergraduate offerings within the baccalaureate and applied studies institutions will better position Alberta’s comprehensive academic and research institutions to accommodate more graduate students, which is a part of the vision of our tech commercialization as well as expanding the research capacity of our comprehensive universities. It’s a strong focus within the roles and mandates framework and the Alberta access planning framework.

The second amendment, Mr. Chairman – and I’ll speak to this briefly – is a housekeeping matter to ensure consistency and clarity for university processes related to the operation of their academic governance model. Stakeholders, in particular the Alberta Universities Association, have indicated that the authority to delegate is unclear in the current act other than for student discipline. In the preceding Universities Act there was an overarching delegating power that allowed any body constituted or continued by or under this act the power to delegate. With the amalgamation of the legislation into the Post-secondary Learning Act this overarching provision was not retained for the universities. This amendment would return those powers to the current act and is consistent with the request from stakeholders.

After much consultation and much discussion with all of our postsecondary leaders and stakeholders, Mr. Chairman, we bring forward these two amendments in order that our Campus Alberta can be more comprehensive and move forward into the future. I would also add that at some recent meetings of European leaders, who are coming over and talking about transferability within the European system, this type of sectoral model that we’ve put in place in Alberta is actually ahead of where Europe is even trying to go. These amendments just tidy up a couple of things.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. It’s a pleasure to speak this afternoon on the bill as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, Bill 4. Certainly, there has been comment on this bill at second reading. Bill 4, of course, will allow, as the hon. minister has indicated, postsecondary institutions in the baccalaureate and applied studies institutions sector to by order of the minister apply to use the name “university.” Also allowed under this proposed legislation is the delegation of powers by a faculty council. How that will work, as they say, time will tell.

Certainly, as we review this proposed legislation in committee, the remarks made by the hon. minister clarify a lot. It’s again nice to see the government bringing in more policies from the last election that were put forward by the Alberta Liberal Party. This legislation is a fine example of that.

It’s definitely time that we see provisions in place for baccalaureate institutions to be able to achieve university status. I understand that Mount Royal College in Calgary seeks acceptance into the AUCC, and with the provisions set out in the bill, this will happen. I would go so far as to say that students at Mount Royal with degrees, of course, will have significantly more academic recognition. I think this is what will happen, but certainly with this bill I don’t think the minister or anyone else has any intention of picking winners and losers. We have a sound postsecondary education system in this province. There is always room for improvement, but when we look specifically at Mount Royal, Mount Royal has for some time expressed an interest in being able to offer bachelor degrees and to be called a university.

Institutions will be contacted before discussions go any further, as I understand it. I don’t think any institutions have expressed any concern, that I’m aware of, regarding the delegation of powers by general faculties councils.

Mr. Horner: They asked for it.

Mr. MacDonald: I’m corrected, Mr. Chairman, by the hon. minister, who indicates that they have asked for it, and that’s something that I think is important to be on the official record of the Assembly.

With that, I do not anticipate any outstanding issues with this component of the bill, and I think we should have a further look at this bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview certainly is the representative of a constituency with the largest university in the province and the most distinguished. I’m going to say that with the threat of offending others, but it’s a very distinguished place, and he is very proud to represent the neighbourhood surrounding the University of Alberta. The hon. member has some issues that he would like to get on the record regarding Bill 4, and I will cede the floor, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This bill has been brewing for some time, of course, and parts of it I’m quite delighted about. This will facilitate something we’ve long supported, which is, for example, Mount Royal College becoming Mount Royal university, and we may see that trend elsewhere. There’s early speculation about Grant MacEwan College maybe following that route. We’ll have to wait and see.

There are some issues, I think, that need to be put on the record. One of the ones I have as a concern is around the overcentralization of services and the overcentralization of, for example, the post-secondary system. I see this as a trend across the government with health services, with the school system, with other services, and I'm concerned. I just think we need to be alert to this with post-secondary institutions. These institutions have a long history of independence, and whether it's Mount Royal College, which was established virtually a hundred years ago, or Augustana College at Camrose, that was an independent institution one time, or any number of other colleges – the list would be quite long – I think we need to understand that that kind of independence is important.

It's important for a few things. I think, first of all, it's important for ensuring that there's a diversity of voices and a range of opinions and, indeed, a range of programs. For example, you might at one time have gone to what was then Camrose Lutheran College not just for a liberal arts education but for one that had a spiritual flavour to it, a spiritual flavour that would not have been available in a publicly funded university like the University of Alberta. You might well have gone to Grant MacEwan Community College because it offered a very different experience than a standard diploma and degree-granting college. The whole spirit of the community college was to be out in the community and to offer programs so that learning was available to every citizen on a whole range of issues, not just academic issues but a whole range of interests. The idea and understanding then was that better education was part of a better quality of life.

As we centralize things and, frankly, concentrate more and more control in the office of the minister, I think we risk losing as well as gaining. I admit that we could potentially gain – although there's no guarantees of this – some efficiencies. We can gain ease of transferability.

Mr. Horner: I don't know what centralization you're talking about.

Dr. Taft: The minister is asking me questions, and what I'm doing is just expressing issues that I think need to be raised around the whole trend to Campus Alberta and a single approach to post-secondary education in this province. If the minister disagrees, I think that's healthy. You know, that'll be great. That's how these issues come up.

I understand that the move towards Campus Alberta, which this is, I think, part of – I believe even the minister said that in his opening comments – has some benefits. I'm just wanting to get on the record that we don't lose some of the advantages of a decentralized system.

There's no question that the role of the government is to ensure quality standards in universities, and the word "university" has to be protected. I know that the government is concerned about that, so for Mount Royal College, for example, to become Mount Royal university, they're going to need to meet accreditation standards. That's good, and I'm counting on the government to continue doing that. But I do think that we need to remain conscious of where postsecondary education came from, of the various streams, whether they were the faith-sponsored colleges like Camrose Lutheran College or the community colleges like Grant MacEwan College. We don't want to lose that heritage entirely by coming to a singular Campus Alberta that's run kind of like the University of California system or the University of Michigan system.

I think we need to remember that learning is important for its own sake. We need to make sure that this kind of legislation supports and encourages that. We need to remember that learning doesn't just happen within the halls and walls of universities and colleges and buildings. It can happen in communities. It can happen in the outdoors. It can happen in all kinds of ways where extension programs and community colleges support it.

I wanted to make sure that some of those sensitivities were on the record in this debate and going forward as we probably consolidate the Campus Alberta model and, I suspect, look at parallel consolidations like what might be happening with research funds, which I know has stirred up some controversy in academic circles.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. I do look forward to some response from the minister. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Chairman. First, I'd like to maybe just chat a little bit about some of the comments that were made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. The first one, I'm going to say, is that it's difficult for me to accept the comment that this was a policy put forward by the Liberals before the last election. The policy that is allowing this to happen is the roles and responsibilities, the mandate framework that was brought forward to this ministry by the stakeholders. The idea that you supporting Mount Royal being a university is somehow why this bill is here, frankly, Mr. Chairman, is absurd.

I would point the hon. member to the numerous consultations that we had with all members of our postsecondary system over the last two years to develop the roles and responsibilities framework, the six sector model, the fact that we're getting world recognition about the fact that this will allow, indeed, our postsecondary system to flourish in a small market. I just wanted to make sure that there was no misunderstanding. We're not copying anybody here. In fact, our stakeholders are creating something totally new that is being recognized around the world.

So when we talk about university status, that's an old term, Mr. Chairman. It's a very old term. In fact, it's a 12th century term. We're not using that anymore, and we're not using an AUCC acceptance because the fact is that AUCC is a faculty club. It has nothing to do with accreditation, nor does it have anything to do with a student's ability to transfer from one institution to the other. I don't know how many times I have to say that, but that's the truth of the matter. We're not picking winners and losers. I would argue that our system is not just sound, but it's great, and I think that we get students who tell us that.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview brings up some very interesting points. He mentioned that this was a bill that's been brewing for some time. In actual fact, it hasn't been brewing for some time. It's a result of something that we missed doing in our six sector model. The centralization of the system that he refers to, I guess, would be the idea that somehow Campus Alberta is going to be controlling what's going on at a university campus. It's not. In fact, this has not been driven by this minister or this ministry or this government. What this has been driven by is the postsecondary system itself. That is, the presidents, the chairs, the deans of the system have all been involved in writing this model. I think that's the success of the model.

I would suggest to the hon. member that he might want to check with the president of that very venerable institution which is in his constituency about her views as to what we're doing here. I think he'd find that she views it not as centralization, not as an attack on her independence, not as an attack on the system but, in fact, as the ability for the comprehensive academic institution to do what we want it to do, and that's to grow the graduate-to-undergraduate ratio on those campuses where basic, implied, and pure research is going to be done. The academic independence is there.

Governance is also part of Campus Alberta because we are only a market of 3 and a half million people, even less when you talk about postsecondary students. We have to ensure that there is an ability for students to take postsecondary wherever they are in the province. That's what Campus Alberta is all about. Hon. member, this is not about the institutions. We serve three clients. We serve the student, we serve the taxpayer, and we serve society. We do not serve the institutions. That's a cultural shift that has happened that I think you'll find the institutions themselves have really grabbed onto because they see where they can grow within that Campus Alberta model without threat and without thinking about: well, I have to achieve this in order to grow. That's not what this is about.

The postsecondary system has certainly come up to the plate in terms of support of this. I would hazard a guess that you would not find a president in our system that would say that they're opposed to what we're doing here. I think that when you look at some of the other systems that the hon. member mentioned, like the University of California system, this is not the University of California system. I'm very aware of what that system is. This is not the British system. This is not the Ontario system. This is the Campus Alberta system. I'm quite proud of that.

Again, I would ask the hon. member to have a chat with some of the folks in the postsecondary system to find out the kind of accolades, frankly, that they're receiving – and I give them 100 per cent credit for this – for designing a system that other jurisdictions are looking at and asking: how the heck can we get ours to that? Indeed, I think it's going to make it easier for us to collaborate with British Columbia and Saskatchewan. At the end of the day what it's all about is creating opportunities for the students.

I hope that I've kind of answered the concern about what the hon. member might have been thinking about. With that, I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I appreciate the comments from the minister. I want to repeat for the minister that we're actually supporting this bill. So if he was thinking we were opposed to it, you know, we actually are supporting it. I was simply trying to get on the record some bigger-picture issues and concerns that I have and some things I don't want us to lose. I wasn't going to raise this, but I do need to raise what to me was a genuine low point in the postsecondary system of Alberta, and that originated out of this Legislature about four years ago, when the former Premier was caught very badly plagiarizing. It was extensive, and it was well documented. I thought it would blow over. Where I think things really went badly was when a predecessor of yours – and I would hope you would never do this, Mr. Minister – leaned on the presidents of major universities, wrote letters which were widely published in the media describing the former Premier as a model student, et cetera, et cetera, when in fact well over . . .

Mr. Horner: I sure hope you're not insinuating what I think you're insinuating.

Dr. Taft: I'm not insinuating anything here. I'm just stating facts. I was not going to go there. I just want to get on the record, however, that I am concerned that universities do remain vibrant, arm's-length, independent organizations. I have tremendous respect for the University of Alberta and for other universities in this province. All I am wanting to do is make sure that that broad social and historical context for a vibrant postsecondary system is understood and recognized. It goes through highs, and sometimes it goes through lows. I really want this to move on to being a high.

At some point I'm going to ask the minister, for example, for discussion on the U of A's goal of being top 20 by 2020, which I hope it can achieve. I'd be interested to know how we as an Assembly can support the university in achieving that, but that's for a different time.

I just want to get clear with the minister that we're supporting this bill. I want to make sure that people understand that there is important context in history for Alberta's postsecondary institutions.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak?

[The clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 19

Land Assembly Project Area Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or questions or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There's been a great deal of discussion about Bill 19, and the government has been listening to Albertans. We are proposing to make amendments to the legislation based on this feedback, and I'd like to move these amendments for the consideration of the Assembly.

These amendments will make an important piece of legislation even more beneficial to Albertans. The amendments' purpose is to clarify the purpose of the bill, to create greater certainty for land-owners, and to address the main concerns that we've heard.

Amendment A is an additional amendment to draft amendments tabled in the House last month. Subsections (2), (3), and (4) in section 2 are replaced, and the amendment clarifies what types of projects Bill 19 can be used for. The legislation will only be used for projects related to the management and conservation of water such as dams and reservoirs and transportation utility corridors. It's important to note that these corridors must include a transportation component such as a road or high-speed rail to move people and goods. Utilities may also be included in these corridors where it's appropriate, as we presently do with roads, Mr. Chair. Establishment of utility routes must be approved through existing processes with organizations such as the Alberta Utilities Commission or the Energy Resources Conservation Board.

The amendment removes a discretion to designate unspecified projects as public projects, so it makes it clear that this legislation cannot be used for things like nuclear power plants or by private companies to establish routes for transmission lines or pipelines. The legislation is for water conservation projects and transportation utility corridors, period.

Amendment B sets out the mandatory consultation that has always been a centrepiece of Bill 19, but the amendment moves the consultation provision into a stand-alone clause following section 2 of the legislation. It's done to better emphasize the importance of the consultation provisions in the act. We want to ensure that landowners are well informed and can provide meaningful input into the process. Consultation is required by law. These provisions did not exist under the old legislation.

The amendment also introduces time limits on the government to go forward and make a decision. Government must complete the formal consultation and make decisions about the project area within two years. This provides ample time for government to complete meaningful consultation with landowners, and it reduces the period of uncertainty for landowners while the project is being considered. Landowners will not be left on hold.

Amendment C. The government always intended to implement a land-buying program as soon as a project area was approved, and priority is to be given, of course, to landowners who want to sell their land as soon as possible, but landowners expressed concern that this policy was not laid out explicitly enough in the legislation. The proposed amendment does just that. Section 5 of Bill 19 is replaced. The amendment requires government to enter into negotiations to purchase the land at the request of the landowner. Additional protection is incorporated to add further assurance to landowners that the negotiation process is fair. The landowner has the option to ask for an independent third party to determine the price if a negotiated settlement can't be reached. The landowner can also appeal the decision to the courts if they are still unsatisfied. The amendment provides additional certainty for landowners, and it compels the government to move forward diligently with a project.

Amendment D. The amendment proposes the removal of section 13 in its entirety. The intent of section 13 was to confirm that the government's power under the act to designate a project area did not constitute de facto expropriation. This had been recognized by the courts. Some people took it to mean that section 13 meant that Bill 19 trumped the Expropriation Act. That was never the case, but section 13 has now been removed altogether to remove any confusion that may have been caused.

Let me be clear. Expropriation is still available, but it is a last resort. Our experience with land purchases for projects like our two ring roads shows us that the majority of land will be purchased through negotiation. If an expropriation is required, all the rights and protections afforded to landowners under the Expropriation Act will still apply, and landowners will not lose any legal protection.

We also have amendment E, and this is just housekeeping. Section 15 references parts of the bill that have since been amended, so those references have been updated. The amendment brings section 15 into line with the amended legislation.

Mr. Chair, as a fourth-generation farmer and rural Albertan I know land issues can be contentious. Bill 19 strikes the right balance between landowners' rights and the need for government to move ahead on important infrastructure projects. The proposed amendments will make this important piece of legislation even stronger, and the combined effect of these amendments is to clarify the bill's language, to provide additional reassurance to landowners that their interests have been given a fair hearing in the development of this legislation, to also provide certainty to landowners that they'll be dealt with in a timely fashion, and to assure them that they'll be fairly compensated for their land and have a right to appeal.

Those, Mr. Chairman, are my comments with respect to the amendments. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you mentioned a point about severance. Is that what you want to speak to?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, please. Under Beauchesne 688 and the precedent tradition of this House I would ask that these amendments be severed for the purpose of voting.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, to be clear, you're asking that they be severed for the purpose of voting, but the whole thing can be debated as a whole. Is that what you're saying?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. It means that you can talk about anything you want, but they'd get voted on separately. So there would be five separate votes, given the divisions here, for sections A, B, C, D, and E.

The Deputy Chair: Correct.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a great honour and a privilege to rise today and join Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. This legislation clarifies the relationship between government and Albertans when land must be studied or used for transportation purposes or relating to the conservation or management of water.

Now, before I go on, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to just mention my own involvement in this process. I was privileged to be able to travel around the province and accompany many of my colleagues to a number of meetings around the province that dealt with issues surrounding Bill 19. Some of these members were the hon. members for Drayton Valley-Calmar, Livingstone-MacLeod, Wetaskiwin-Camrose, Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, and the ministers of both Infrastructure and Transportation. I attended meetings in Warburg, Ponoka, Round Hill, Ryley, and Innisfail that were billed as meetings specifically called to discuss Bill 19. I also attended a number of meetings in my own constituency where I was able to discuss Bill 19.

The meetings that were sponsored or put on by opposition parties, parties that might not be in this House here today, were generally quite different than meetings that were put on by local groups that were mostly surface rights groups. There are people out in the province, Mr. Chairman, that are really interested in misinforming and creating fear among landowners for partisan reasons. There is no doubt about this. They have a small following that showed up at numerous places, the same people travelling around the province. I believe that they are using these types of forums more to peddle their own opinions and their message than to actually inform the public.

But we did listen to the public, and we suggested to the minister how we could add clarity to the intent of the bill and how we could amend the bill. Following consultation with Albertans, the government has introduced several thoughtful amendments for this Assembly's consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I was absolutely amazed that in some of these meetings, probably in most of them, after an MLA or the minister had the opportunity to explain the purpose of the bill or clarify some misinformation, people were actually quite in favour of the intent of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the attention of the Assembly to one specific amendment, that I find particularly well thought out, following section 2. I'll only comment on the one amendment as I know that there are other hon. members that will speak to other amendments. Section 2.1(1)(a) stipulates that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may not designate an area of land as a Project Area with respect to a public project unless the Minister

- (a) has prepared a plan, in accordance with the regulations, of the proposed project.

Bill 19 clarifies that the government may not appropriate any area of land for a proposed project unless the minister has established and set forth a specific plan for the usage of that land. Thus, Albertans will be well informed of the government's proposals for any affected area of land deemed necessary for a proposed project.

To this end, section 2.1(1)(b) ensures that the government upholds its responsibility to make the plan of any proposed project available to the public in accordance with the regulations. Mr. Chairman, this provision upholds this government's dedication to providing transparent and accountable government to Albertans. Ensuring that plans are made public provides Albertans the ability to overview any proposed project and thus empowers them to offer valuable insight and feedback.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, 2.1(1)(c) ensures that government provides the registered owners of land within the proposed project area with notice of the proposed project in accordance with regulations. Not only would the government ensure that the proposed project is provided publicly – that is, for everyone, including neighbouring Albertans – but also that registered owners of land within the proposed project area are provided notice in accordance with the regulation.

Subsection 2.1(1)(d) ensures that the minister consults with registered owners of land in the proposed project area. This provision guarantees the right of landowners to be consulted by the minister in order to have their views and input heard.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the insertion of these provisions into Bill 19 will provide clarity to the rights of landowners and responsibilities of government for proposed project areas. It guarantees the right of landowners to be fully notified, informed, and, most importantly, consulted before any project that affects their land is approved by government. This is a new provision that did not exist before in the current legislation. It ensures that the ministry upholds its obligation to carry forth the necessary notifications and consultations. It is important to note that these measures weren't part of Bill 19, but they have been added for further clarification of all parties.

A further proposed amendment is the insertion of section 2.1(2), which states that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council may not designate an area of land as a project area if more than 2 years has elapsed since the plan of the proposed project was made available to the public under subsection (1)(b)." Mr. Chairman, as mentioned in subsection (1)(b), it is the responsibility of the minister to inform affected landowners of a proposed project. This amendment is absolutely critical as it prohibits the minister from designating the affected area of land of a project area if more than two years have elapsed since the date of notification. This timeline ensures that the government must proceed in a timely and orderly manner should it wish to proceed with a proposed project.

Another important amendment is section 2.1(3), which reads:

Where a project area order is amended to add land to a Project Area that does not exceed the maximum amount of land determined under the regulations, subsection 1(c) and (d) only apply to the registered owners of the land being added and of any land adjacent to the land being added.

This outlines which landowners must be consulted when land is added to a project area. Now, one may ask for an example of such an addition. Mr. Chairman, it could be that if after some years it is determined that a little more land is needed to build an intersection around, you know, a planned intersection, much like we've done on the ring road around Edmonton, only the newly affected landowners would be required to be consulted.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the proposed amendments would serve to enrich Bill 19 by providing greater clarity as to the rights and responsibilities of government and landowners. I'm proud to say that these amendments were made following careful and extensive consultation with Albertans. For these reasons, I am proud to offer my full support for the proposed amendments to Bill 19 and urge my colleagues to vote accordingly.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. That was an informative speech from the hon. member from Ponoka-Rimbey. Before I forget, I would remind the hon. member that even before this bill got to second reading, the government was making public commitments to amend it. The first amendments that were circulated publicly to my knowledge were in the middle of March, and the consultation process that the hon. member is referring to with his public meetings in Ryley among other places have occurred after that. So to say that these amendments are the result of the public consultation process is, in my view, certainly a stretch. In the time I have been a representative in this Assembly, I cannot remember – perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre can refresh my mind – where a bill, any bill, was introduced, and before it went any further in second reading, the government was providing amendments.

Without a doubt, this is an extremely controversial bill that limits landowners' rights and controls their land. The hon. member from Ponoka-Rimbey is right . . .

Mr. Prins: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. MacDonald: Lacombe-Ponoka. I apologize. It's Joe Anglin that's from Rimbey. I forgot.

An Hon. Member: Who?

Mr. MacDonald: Joe Anglin. Joe is an Albertan with an interest in property issues, whether they deal with transmission lines or with acquisition of land for government projects. He is a very knowledgeable resource on a lot of these matters, and I'm sure many members of the Progressive Conservative caucus shared the public stage with Mr. Anglin this winter in regard to this matter. He's only one of three or four or maybe five parties that have had opinions on Bill 19.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member talked about public consultations, and we in the Alberta Liberal Party thought: well, let's have some real public consultations, where people would have time to make presentations to hon. members of this Assembly and others regarding this bill over the summer. We had anticipated that the government would give this bill in its current form, before these proposed amendments – and they certainly could be part of the discussion. There's no reason why they could not. But we would have a look at this on the policy field committee that would be dealing with matters of infrastructure, which is the Economy one. Over the summer they could have a look and perhaps even go to Ryley and hear first hand.

But the hon. member across is confident now with these proposed amendments. I think we're going to refer to them as A, B, C, D, and E. This is the political fix for this legislation.

Now, I've said this before, Mr. Chairman. If this government had not been embarrassed by the shenanigans that went on in Rimbey at the regulatory hearing – it'll be two summers coming up really quickly since those regulatory hearings occurred. There was a licensed private investigator who was confronted in the washroom of the local centre in Rimbey and asked what his business was at the hearings. To the local people, to their amazement, he said: well, I'm hired here to keep an eye on folks. It's just like the chairman is keeping his eye on me and making sure that I'm speaking to the bill and to the amendments, which I am.

Now, when we think of that private investigator and his admission to those individuals and how embarrassed this government was, they decided once and for all that this was not going to happen again. I can only guess how quickly individuals not only in the Department of Infrastructure but perhaps as well in Alberta Justice began to draft a bill to ensure that this doesn't happen again, and I think this is the bill. This is the way we're going to proceed so that nothing like that can ever happen again.

Now, when we look at the government's need for this bill, Mr. Chairman, they have a lot of ideas, and they have a lot of planned projects on the go. When we look at the first amendment here and dividing up section 2, I have to make a cautionary note here regarding the emphasis on consultation provisions. Perhaps the hon. minister can explain this to me, but it's not clear to me what this amendment actually does. It certainly changes the ordering of the bill, splitting the current section 2 into two parts. I heard the claim made that this emphasizes the consultation provisions, but the problem with this bill isn't the lack of emphasis. It is the fact that the consultation provisions are not good enough. By simply changing the order of the bill, it does nothing, in my opinion, to address this, so I don't know how this is going to work. Perhaps at some point we can get further clarification on this.

We're moving some things around here, but we still need to see the regulations. There are many different proposed regulations in this, and with all due respect to the hon. members across the way I do not for one minute believe that there are not draft regulations to this proposed bill somewhere in a filing cabinet in the office of the Minister or the Deputy Minister of Infrastructure. There have to be regulations, and because this is enabling legislation, the regulations are so important. That's why if you want to restore public confidence not only in the processes that led up to this bill but in the public confidence in this legislation, then I would suggest that the regulations have to be part of this. It's nice to present these amendments, and it's very respectful of the Minister of Infrastructure to have almost a month ago made these amendments public and allowed them to be circulated. People could give feedback. People could express their concerns. But let's have a look at the regulations.

Now, when we look further at these amendments and the time limit for the government to approve a project area, we are looking here, as I understand it, at placing a two-year time limit on the government so that they only have that period after they propose a project area to be actually put in a project area order. This does make a substantial difference or a substantive change, but it doesn't address, in my view, the major concerns of landowners. In particular, it doesn't change the fact that the project area orders themselves can last for an unlimited period of time; thus, landowners face those controls on their land for all that time. Unless I'm getting this wrong, I don't see that change.

The duration of the planning process isn't as much of a concern to landowners as the duration of the project area itself. When we talk about these project areas, we have to have a look at some of the government's plans. The government has a 20-year strategic capital plan to address Alberta's infrastructure needs. I know the hon. Deputy Premier has read it. He probably wrote it. He says no, but I suspect he was involved in it.

It's on the website of the President of the Treasury Board. It's also on Alberta Infrastructure's website. It's a recent document. I think it was put out on the 29th of January, 2008, and it goes into a lot of detail here on what the infrastructure needs are now in this province and what they will be in the sort of medium term and, Mr. Chairman, also the long term. It's divided into three different sections, in my view. It is a very, very interesting document, and it's a guide to Bill 19.

Some of the medium-term plans or priorities of this government – this is where Bill 19 is going to come into play, and this is why we have to get it right with these amendments, Mr. Chairman – will include supporting new highways and expanding and upgrading existing highways, adding and upgrading interchanges on major highways to smooth the flow of traffic, completing ring roads around Calgary and Edmonton as well as planning ring roads for other major centres and outer ring roads for Calgary and Edmonton.

Now, I don't know where these outer ring roads for Calgary and Edmonton are going to be sited, but I would assume that has already been done.

Dr. Taft: Yeah. It's been sketched out.

Mr. MacDonald: I would say that it certainly has been sketched out, and I think this should be part of the debate on Bill 19. The government should let us know what they have in mind for these outer ring roads in Calgary and Edmonton and certainly for the ring roads and power lines in other parts of the province.

We know that "while Edmonton and Calgary's primary ring roads will be completed within a few years, it is critical to plan now for outer ring roads surrounding these two metro areas." This is on page 61 of the 20-year strategic plan, Mr. Chairman. In fact, "Alberta's population [is] projected to reach 5 million people by 2028." Four million of them will be Edmonton Oilers fans; 1 million will support the Calgary Flames. That's not in here. But there will be 5 million people living in this province.

Now, it's interesting to note that other urban centres such as Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Airdrie, Lloydminster, will also require primary ring roads in the foreseeable future. Planning discussions must be accelerated in order for long-term plans to be established and parcels of land acquired to implement those plans [or ideas] at the appropriate time.

It goes on to say here, Mr. Chairman, that the Government of Alberta must also determine the location of new corridors that will be required for additional roadways, irrigation requirements . . .

And get this.

. . . power lines and pipelines to accommodate future growth, and begin acquiring land parcels and rights-of-way well in advance.

So this 20-year plan is to follow Bill 19 and the amendments that we're discussing here this afternoon in committee, Mr. Chairman, and this is a significant plan. Now, when we look at all of these projects, again not only in Edmonton and Calgary but in the various cities that I mentioned and Sherwood Park as well, the government should make very clear to all landowners in those areas what their plans are and what property they have their eye on as necessary to facilitate these developments.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we talk about power lines and pipelines to accommodate further growth, that contradicts what we were told by the hon. members across the way, that Bill 19 had absolutely nothing to do with pipelines or transmission lines. I would like a clarification from the hon. minister or one of his colleagues regarding what is in the 20-year strategic plan and what was said earlier this afternoon in the House so that I can certainly understand that.

The hon. minister has been very respectful, and he has updated me, certainly, over the last month on some of the issues surrounding Bill 19, and I appreciate that. I missed his – I'm not going to call it a bear-pit – session that occurred at the AAMD and C just during the constituency break, where there was quite a discussion about this. In fact, there was an emergency resolution put to the floor by, I believe, some people in Grande Prairie. I'm not sure. They might have been from the county of Grande Prairie. But it was discussed, and they decided that they were going to stick with the minister's side of the story, essentially. We'll see how this develops as these projects develop in Alberta, Mr. Chairman.

There are certainly requests from this side of the House for information regarding this proposed legislation, but I think that it is very important that the government indicate where they are planning to site these infrastructure projects. These are the projects that we're talking about in this bill. Taxpayers are going to be funding the acquisitions, so they have every right to know what is in the details. Certainly, we should provide that.

Now, there are other projects that the government has in mind, and one of them that I find interesting is the six-lane highway on the QE II. It would be one of the largest infrastructure projects, I think, in the history of this province if we were to add an additional lane north and an additional lane south on highway 2 considered dedicated truck lanes. Bill 19 is part and parcel of that plan, Mr. Chairman.

Also, the government has a plan to purchase lands for the development of a faster and more efficient link between Edmonton and Calgary while corridor rights-of-way and options are still available. Now, I can only assume that this is the high-speed rail link that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview initially suggested in this Assembly two years ago.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, more than that.

Mr. MacDonald: I stand corrected. More than that. Four years ago.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, for sure. Five or six.

Mr. MacDonald: Five or six years ago, Mr. Chairman. They're distracting me again.

When you look at the importance of the high-speed rail link between Edmonton and Calgary – and I've been told this myself, not by engineers from Infrastructure but by other engineers – the largest cost of that rail link would be the acquisition of the rights-of-way. Mr. Chairman, I think the government also should come forward with their ideas on the acquisition of that land because, again, it's going to be the taxpayers who are going to have to fund it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. To start with, I'm sure pleased to hear that we're going to get a ring road around St. Albert. I'm not sure where it's going to go, but I guess I'd better have a little chat with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to find out.

Mr. Chairman, it's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. I would like to applaud the minister for his forward-thinking and pragmatic piece of legislation. Specifically, I would like to address the consultation processes outlined by section 2(3), which reads:

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may not designate an area of land as a Project Area with respect to a public project unless the Minister

- (a) has prepared a plan, in accordance with the regulations, of the proposed project,
- (b) has made the plan of the proposed project available to the public in accordance with the regulations,
- (c) has provided the registered owners of land within the proposed Project Area with notice of the proposed project in accordance with the regulations, and
- (d) has consulted, in accordance with the regulations, with the registered owners of land within the proposed Project Area.

In my mind, Mr. Chairman, this legislation and particularly this section is absolutely essential for the efficient and effective planning of major infrastructure projects. Bill 19 will help to improve the process by which government identifies and assembles large sections of land for major public projects.

Our friends to the left complain that through the current system we've got "the most expensive highways in, if not in Alberta, the entire country." Mr. Chairman, members of the Liberal opposition appear to favour the problems that were created with the restrictive development caveats that were placed around Edmonton and Calgary in the mid-1970s.

Mr. Chairman, this government recognizes that the 1970s legislation created some problems, and that is exactly what this legislation is attempting to avoid. By giving the public advance notice of the plans for major projects, landowners and prospective purchasers are advised of what is being planned, and they can act accordingly. They have the opportunity to engage the government in discussions for the sale of their lands, or they may continue to live on the lands until the land is required. That sounds like a process that will create fairness and equity for all.

Large public projects such as transportation utility corridors, as in the case of the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads, are important for the future development of this province. Alberta has seen dramatic growth in not only our population but also in our industrial and infrastructure needs. Mr. Chairman, to the credit of this government we have recognized that the pressures associated with this growth will require long-term infrastructure planning. For example, projects such as major transportation and utility corridors require large amounts of land and capital and extensive planning. In order to ensure that these projects are completed in an economically responsible manner, land needs to be assembled well in advance.

Just as an aside, Mr. Chairman, I was reading a 1954 article the other day written by a well-known consulting engineer of a former era, Lou Grimble, entitled Highways and the Ring Road in the Metropolitan Area. Yes, that paper was presented in 1954, 55 years ago, to the Alberta planning conference. As I was saying, these major projects need to be planned well in advance. Bill 19, section 2(1), constructs a framework that directs the government to consult with landowners and other stakeholders with regard to these long-term projects.

Mr. Chairman, land planning and zoning have been part of our history for many years. For example, in 1913 the government of Alberta passed the first planning act and in 1929 created the Town and Rural Planning Advisory Board. Part 17 of the current Municipal Government Act sets out a comprehensive planning scheme that is the envy of many jurisdictions around the world. Planning is in our blood in Alberta. This province is built on sound planning, even going back to the 1880s, when the dominion land surveyors laid out our township system in an orderly, systematic pattern of sections and townships. Planning legislation is designed to empower communities to consult with stakeholders and plan for future infrastructure needs.

Over the years we have continually strengthened this consultation process. But to truly understand how our land tenure system has changed, we need to step back and look at how the land tenure system in Canada has evolved. Land ownership in Canada descends from English feudal times. Historically, English monarchs were the direct owners of all lands in their nation. Rather than ruling these lands directly, they would assign them to nobles, who would, in turn, pay taxes and/or agree to perform feudal duties, including infantry or ecclesiastical services, for the king as compensation. In turn, these nobles would divide up their lands and let them out to the people, who would work on them, in turn, providing food or services to the noble, thus allowing the noble to fulfill his obligation to the monarch. In this system, Mr. Chairman, the monarch technically retained ownership of the land and had the right to tax, regulate, and even remove any parties from the property. These actions were undertaken without consultation or consideration of the affected landowners.

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to say that we have come a long way from that early feudal system. We have a government that recognizes the value of consultation and the benefits of long-term planning with public input. Nevertheless, we retain remnants of that early feudal system. Land in Canada is still held as a tenancy from the Crown. The Crown retains certain rights to govern and regulate lands for the greater public interest.

Section 2.1 is further evidence of this recognition and has within it several measures that enhance the consultation process, recognizing the rights of landowners. For example, section 2.1 states that not only is consultation with affected landowners desirable; it is mandatory. The government must consult with both the public and affected landowners before any land is set aside for a project or development. Simply put, landowners will be informed of development projects, and they will have the opportunity to provide input. Furthermore, Mr. Chair, the Crown will not take land without due compensation, which will be determined by market forces.

I applaud the government for introducing Bill 19, not only for its foresight, dedicated future planning but for the commitment to public involvement and consultation. We must re-establish a due planning process that will enable us to plan and complete major infrastructure programs efficiently and effectively, with due consideration to the rights of all private landowners.

Therefore, Mr. Chair, I will be standing in support of Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, and these amendments and urge all members to join with me in doing so.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to speak to the amendment that's being proposed by the minister. Actually, I'd look to the minister for some back and forth here because I'm trying to understand what we achieve through this amendment. I'm particularly focused on amendment A. [interjection] Okay. Thank you. I'm quite genuinely wanting to engage the minister so I can understand amendment A more clearly because when I read it, frankly, I don't know what it achieves. I know the minister spoke a bit about this in his opening comments, but I need some further explanation. Frankly, I think the public is going to as well because we all know this has been a controversial bill.

Amendment A amends section 2. I don't want to read the whole section; that will take too long, and I like to be efficient, Mr. Chairman. What amendment A does, first of all, is strike subsections (3) and (4) under section 2. So in subsection (3) what's being pulled out is "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may not designate an area of land as a Project Area with respect to a public project" unless the minister has done the following, and there are four sentences there under subsection (3). Is the minister with me?

Mr. Hayden: Yeah.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Subsection (3). It strikes that out. What that subsection seems to do, to me, is actually curtail, put some boundaries around, what the Lieutenant Governor in Council can do. So I'm not sure what we achieve by getting rid of that.

The amendment as well leaves in a couple of things that are, I think, the subject of some real concern, from what I've heard. It says – and I'm quoting here now from the amendment – that Section 2 is amended and subsection (2) will read as follows:

- (2) For the purpose of this Act and the regulations, a project is a public project if the project is
 - (a) a project related to the transportation of people or goods, which may also include as part of that project a corridor of land for pipelines, pipes or other conduits, poles, towers, wires, cables, conductors or other devices, including any ancillary structures, or
 - (b) a project related to the conservation or management of water.

I guess my simple question to the minister is: tell me what the heck this achieves, because I don't see it achieving anything right now.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the hon. member for the question because it offers us an opportunity to clarify. In a way you are correct. When you look at it, the protections were already in place. But what we found in speaking to Albertans all across the province is that there was a concern. Because subsections (2)(a) and (b) were separate, with the reference in (a) to transportation of people and goods and then (b) as a separate heading, talking about pipelines, pipes, conduits, poles, towers, there was a concern and a fear that a project could be set aside for one or the other. In discussions with Albertans we saw that the intent was clear. I think that you understood the intent, but a lot of people, because of the confusion, were more comfortable to have it plainly stated that, first and foremost, this was for transportation of people and goods but that these other things could be part of that. First and foremost, it was transportation of people and goods.

By combining (a) and (b), that satisfied the concerns of people. They see that it means that it's transportation, and then, like other roadways, there could be power lines or high-speed fibre optics, distribution gas lines. Those sorts of things could be in a transportation utility corridor. It just solidified the fact that this cannot be used for pipelines or power lines, which is plain, anyway, when we say that it's for public projects. These are private undertakings when we talk about transmission lines and major pipelines. So that's with respect to (a) and (b).

With respect to (d), the change that's made in the amendment, there were concerns, and people were uncomfortable that "a project designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council," which, as you know, is cabinet, "as a public project" left open too much discretion. I trust cabinet's decisions, but at the same time, I understand people's concerns with that particular clause. It really didn't add anything to what we were trying to do. We are trying to acquire land for transportation utility corridors, similar to the Anthony Henday and the Calgary ring road. Having clause (d) in there really didn't enhance the purpose of the bill. So that's the explanation to it. It's just for clarification. I'm glad that the hon. member was comfortable with it the way it was, but I think this makes it more clear for the public.

If I could, for a moment, just respond to the other questions with respect to regulation. Of course, the bill guides the regulation. I feel that we can have regulation ready fairly early in the fall once we have the bill through. The bill guides the regulation, gives the direction, but much of the regulation, of course, will still go back to the land acquisitions practices that we did under the RDA. The main components here, the things that have been added to what has been done in the past are mandatory consultation, mandatory triggering of purchase of the land by the landowner, and a set time period by which a landowner will know with certainty when the project goes ahead.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I appreciate the minister's comments. That helps me a bit. It still feels a bit broad.

Could he also, then, elaborate on why in this amendment we are striking out subsection (3) of section 2? I think his previous comments, if I've followed them, were just dealing with subsection (2). So just elaborate on subsection (3) again for me, please.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As I mentioned at the start of my remarks, the consultation portion of Bill 19 was deemed to be important enough that now under the new numbering system for it section 2 will deal strictly with the consultation portion with the landowner. So there will be renumbering.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I think I see that now. There we go. All right.

My next comments and questions relate to the regulations. I am concerned that, whether we're talking about the amendments or the rest of the bill, the regulations are so terribly important to this. Really, it's in the regulations, as the minister knows, that the meat and potatoes, the real action, occurs and the real decisions are made. I am of course concerned that the penalties under the act talk about the regulations – and there are some extraordinary powers here relating to the regulations – yet we don't know what the regulations are. That debate will probably occur more extensively once we're through the amendments, but to the extent that the regulations will relate to the amendments, I think we need to be very, very concerned about this.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I'll turn to my other colleagues for a second while I prepare my thoughts on the next amendment.

Thank you. I do appreciate your comments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much. This is one of these bills that I wanted to see the principle of succeed because I think the government does need to plan, and they do need to prepare. I'm one of those people that has urged the government all the way along to carefully lay these sorts of things out. As a citizen in this province I look around at too many projects where I think: that should have happened, and it should have happened a long time ago. But because there was a lack of planning around it and a lack of consultation, projects got derailed and delayed by quite a bit. So I was looking forward to some mechanism that the government could bring forward that would allow it to move some of these larger projects along.

For example, I would really like to see a high-speed rail plan start to come into place. Clearly, we're not going to pay for it now. We're not going to pay for it this year or next year or probably the year after. But I'm also thinking that those are huge projects, and if you don't start planning them and implementing them and getting all your ducks in a row on those kinds of things, we'll be here 10 years from now and we still won't even have started into this. So I wanted to see those processes start to move forward.

I think what we needed and what the public wanted to see was a secure, transparent model that could be used to assemble, acquire land for these kinds of large projects. Expropriation is and should be a last-ditch, a last – what's the word I'm looking for?

An Hon. Member: Last resort.

Ms Blakeman: A last resort – thank you – for dealing with these kinds of projects. Clearly, I don't think anybody enjoys that process. Certainly, the government doesn't, the taxpayers that have to pay for the court bills don't, and the landowners don't. We need a process that works better than that. Expropriation is still there for a reason. If government needs to move ahead with it, and we've got a landowner holding a project hostage, the government needs the tools to be able to move forward, and they certainly have that.

But I think the government got itself in a bit of trouble with this one. What I've seen is a long progression – and I've talked about it lots of time in this Assembly – of the government bringing forward shell bills in which essentially it says: the minister can decide to do whatever they want, and everything else will be decided under regulations. Thank you very much. On it goes. We complained at the time, and we raised the issues at the time. We said, "This is where you're going to get into trouble on this." "No, no, no," said the government. "Just trust us." Well, it got you into trouble this time because people that thought they would have a direct interest in this looked at this bill and said: "I don't think I'm going to be well served by this. The truth is that I can't tell if I'm going to be well served or not because there are no details in this bill." I think it overreached itself and got a lot of people very upset about what the government was capable of doing. With more detail, more transparency, more accountability the government wouldn't have dug the hole they're in quite so deep, but they did, so we ended up with an amendment.

Okay. Well, points to the minister for going: I've got to stop digging here and do something, build a ladder to climb out of this one. I think he's made some wise moves in making the idea of the amendments available, although he couldn't make the specific amendments available some time ago, to try and deal with this. Goodo.

When I look at these amendments, I think: "Okay. Is this going to solve the problems that have been identified?" On the surface, on the face of it, on the first skim reading you go: "Well, yeah." It's addressing a lot of the areas that were brought up over and over again: lack of consultation, lack of a timeline, the definition of acquiring that land and holding it to one side, which I have just lost the exact terminology for. But when you start to get into it and go, "Okay; really, what does this mean?" once again we're looking at – and almost every single phrase has this.

Under section A, for example, subsection (2) is "for the purpose of this Act and the regulations," and then it goes on setting it out; section B, “the Lieutenant Governor in Council” yada yada “in accordance with the regulations, of the proposed project.” You keep going on to the next section, (b), “has made the plan of the proposed project available to the public in accordance with the regulations,” and to (c), “has provided the registered owners of land within the proposed Project Area with notice of the proposed project in accordance with the regulations.”

Well, guess what? We don’t have the regulations. There’s an ancient saying about buying a pig in a poke, which I think was about buying livestock in a bag. Basically, you couldn’t see what you were purchasing. That’s what’s in these regulations, so the government has made the same mistake again. It is borne largely out of this being a one-party state, out of the government having so many members and being able to get its way so easily in almost everything so that it doesn’t have those built-in checks and balances, and the same mistake is made here. People cannot see the specifics of what’s in here. To say to people, “We’re going to consult with you,” the first thing I do is say: “How? How are you going to consult with me? What are the specifics of that consultation?”

That’s going to lead me into something that I am seeing, themes that I’m seeing repeated several times in important legislation that’s before this Assembly this spring. I’m starting to call it the 3Cs. We’ve got control, compensation, and consultation.

I just want to talk about consultation right now. This government has tried very hard over the years to try and perfect the system of consulting under a very controlled situation. Some years back we had the round-tables when the government was sort of trying to reorganize itself. Interestingly, those round-tables, which were sector specific, actually excluded professionals that worked in the field. So when we had health round-tables, no doctors and nurses were allowed to sit at the table. It was a very interesting choice.

Then we moved into the summits, so we had the growth summit and the justice summit, and I went to a gambling summit in Medicine Hat at one point. Then we ended up with the Future Summit, which was, I think, supposed to be the be-all and end-all of consultation. But people catch on to all of these different very controlled consultations, and they know when they go to these things what’s pinned up on the board, what everybody has discussed. When they look at what the government actually starts to implement and say: “But this isn’t what we talked about. Where’s the thing that was up on the board that was so important to me?” they say: “Oh, well, yes. That’s number 79 on the list, and we’re picking other things.”

It puts that whole idea of consultation – people question it and say: “Well, then you really didn’t consult with us. You really didn’t listen to what was going on.” I argue that the government has embarked on yet another round – maybe this is the new millennium version – of consultation. What I’m seeing the government do is consult very widely but very generally and very vaguely on a concept, and then once they implement the final version of what the government wants to do, there is no consultation on the specifics because everyone just refers back to that big general consultation and says: “That was it. You had your chance. Why didn’t you tell us what you were worried about then? Now we’ve made our decision. We’ve passed the act. No more consultation.” I think that is what this government is up to and what we will see roll out over the next three to five years.

I know that my colleague is eager to get back up again, so I will cede the floor to him and look for another opportunity to speak at another occasion.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I wanted to seize the opportunity of the minister being here to now move down through the amendments, and I’m on amendment B now. I’m looking at B, and it proposes to add a number of paragraphs after section 2. One of those, subsection (2), reads, “The Lieutenant Governor in Council may not designate an area of land as a project area if more than 2 years has elapsed since the plan of the proposed project was made available to the public.” I’d be interested to hear the minister’s comments on why that amendment is there. I can see that it gives some reassurance, I guess, to landowners who might be affected and don’t want it to go on forever and ever.

You know, the time frames of many of these things will be measured in decades, I’m sure. The land for the Anthony Henday Drive was assembled 30 years ago, and we’re assembling land now for an outer ring road that could be built in 30 more years. First of all, can you talk to the purpose of that amendment and, secondly, talk to how the minister ended up with two years as the right time frame?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Yes, I’m pleased to speak to that for the hon. member. The two-year period does not put a restriction on the land during that first two-year period, and I think that the member understands that. The restriction would not happen until after cabinet goes forward with the project. The concern for landowners was that a decision to actually go forward with the project could draw out and could have implications because of possible restrictions that their land could be facing in the future. Time certainty was what landowners told us they wanted. They wanted time certainty on a period of time so that it was a sufficient amount of time for proper consultation to take place, not only with respect to how the project . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I hate to interrupt, but it is 4:25, and we will rise and report progress.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 4. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 19. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the committee concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, sir. In light of the hour I would move that we call it 4:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, April 20.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 2nd Session (2009)

Activity to April 16, 2009

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned a chapter number until the conclusion of the fall sittings.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome back. Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Hon. members, I am now going to invite Colleen Vogel of the Legislative Assembly Office of Alberta to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. I would invite all, those who are present in our galleries as well, to participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's such a privilege today to be able to stand before you and introduce a school that has made the trek from my constituency to the Legislature every year for the last eight years. It's the Trinity Christian school. They have with them today their teacher, Miss Cheryl Barnard, and 13 parents, who drove these kids up and shepherded them so that they could come and learn what happens in the Legislature. I'd ask if they would all rise and if we could give a warm welcome to this group.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today a group of people from the Rimbey elementary school. They're spending a few days learning about the workings of government at School at the Legislature. There are 24 students, two teachers, and seven parent helpers. I'd like to introduce to you the teachers, Mrs. Vanessa Howey and Mrs. Fiona Martel, and parent helpers Mrs. Connie Fonstad, Mrs. Emily Breton, Mrs. Kim Woodliffe, Mrs. Dana Franklin, Mrs. Rae Ann Rallison, Mrs. Tresa Lowe, and Mr. Dallas Mannix. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some hard-working staff members from my department's community spirit program. Program director Pam Boutilier is a familiar face and friend to many in this Assembly. Joining her today are Erin Collins, Lynn Ziegler, Darlene Christopher, along with Tom Thackeray, the assistant deputy minister responsible for the community and voluntary services division. Missing is Julie MacLean, who couldn't be with us today. These individuals are the heart and soul behind the community spirit program, have worked hard day and night to ensure that over 1,496 organizations were recipients of some $19 million.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure today to introduce someone to you whom I have often called a hero, a friend, and a dad. My dad, Keith Griffiths, seated in your gallery, is the man that raised me and made me who I am, so he often gets credit for a lot of things I do, but he often gets a lot of blame for when I act like an idiot. On the balance, however, I think he's fairly proud of me. I'd ask him to rise in your gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 15 fine people from Red Deer and surrounding area that are here today. I'll begin with my constituency assistant, Brenda Johnson, and her husband, Ken. If you could rise. They have brought along with them brothers, sisters-in-law, and friends. Also, a very special guest, Rustom Vazifdar, who is our Rotary International youth exchange student from Mumbai, India, is with us today. Joining this group are Don and Norma Bonham, Frank and Carol Bonham, Don and Ruby Johnson, June and Terry Rollinson, Don Côté, Al and Lorraine Coker, and a name you may recognize, Al Delmage, who formerly was the skip numerous times at the Canadian Brier, representing Northwest Territories-Yukon. Please join me in welcoming our guests from Red Deer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you today and through you to all members of the House three dedicated individuals from the town of High Level. There's probably no community in Alberta that's as heavily impacted by the downturn in the forest industry as the town of High Level, yet despite those hardships we've got with us today some big believers in the future of that town. Could I introduce to you and all hon. members the acting mayor, Crystal McAteer, councillor Jerry Chomiak, and the chief administrative officer, Dean Krause. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and to all members today two guests, Reverend Bob Kimmerly and Isabel Golightly, who are here from Kirk United church in Edmonton. They are here to represent many Albertans who have signed a petition, that I will be presenting later, organized by the Reverend Syd Bell regarding seniors' issues. They want to witness me making that presentation. I would ask them to please rise. They're in the public gallery. Please give them a warm reception.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Organ Donation

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize organ donor week, which is April 19 to 26 this year. Organ donation has always been an important issue for me. That is why I introduced Motion 528, urging the government to require Albertans to make an election regarding organ donation on the back of their Alberta health card.

In the April 5 Edmonton Journal there was an article about organ and tissue donations. This article said that Canada has more than 4,000 people waiting for transplants; 600 of these people were in Alberta alone. Last year, sadly, 51 people died while on the waiting list for transplants at the University of Alberta. This article said that one donor could help as many as 80 people.

It is not difficult to become an organ donor. All you need to do is carry an organ donor card in your wallet. It is also very important to discuss your wishes with your family. Once we are no longer living, organ donation is one last chance to help people, to give people another chance at life or at living in a normal way. There are so many people who have died while waiting for transplants, and this does not have to be the case. I urge all members of this Assembly and, indeed, all Albertans to discuss organ donation with their family and to sign their health card and let others know of their decision and explain the benefit of this life-changing decision.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Equality and Human Rights

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on national Equality Day. I was invited by Erin Woods elementary school through the Dominion Institute's passage to Canada initiative to speak to the grades 4 to 6 students on April 17 on the subjects of immigration, discrimination, and racism. It was certainly encouraging to have educators taking proactive steps to introduce topics that many adults find difficult to discuss.

Each April 17 we celebrate Equality Day as a way to recognize the equality provisions, sections 15 and 28, that were signed into the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the historic activism of Canadian women. These provisions have been significant in the progress we as Canadians have made towards equality in our society. In our province it is the role of the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission to ensure that all persons are treated equally regardless of race, religious belief, gender, physical or mental disabilities, age, or other factors outlined in the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, 94 per cent of Albertans feel that an environment free of discrimination is important to their overall quality of life in communities, and 88 per cent believe that human rights are well protected in Alberta. Budget 2009 announced that Alberta's human rights system would be receiving an additional $1.7 million, an increase of 26 per cent, to protect human rights, promote fairness and access, and support the inclusion of all Albertans. This includes increasing awareness of Alberta's human rights legislation; resolving and adjudicating human rights complaints; and providing education, information, and consultative services that support human rights.

Equality Day recognizes the formal steps the Canadian government has taken to ensure that all of our rights are protected under law, but we also need our institutions and citizens from east to west, north to south to have the capacity and share the commitment to be ambassadors of equality in our everyday lives.

Thank you.

Calgary Civic Camp

Mr. Hehr: This Saturday along with 165 other Calgarians I attended the first Civic Camp, an event organized by Sustainable Calgary and the Better Calgary campaign. The initiative pulled together artists, small-business owners, urban planners, activists, municipal and provincial decision-makers, and partners in the nonprofit sector to brainstorm around the simple question: how do we build the kind of city we want for ourselves and our children?

Together we explored urban issues like improving and expanding public transportation, creating green and vibrant public spaces, and encouraging good governance in our city. It was an inspiring day, and like all participants I can say that I came away from Civic Camp with a renewed and energized sense of Calgary's huge potential as an urban community. Expect to hear a lot more from this core group of Civic Camp-ers in the days and weeks ahead.

This amazing event was made possible by a number of individuals committed to improving the quality of life of all Calgarians: Cheri Macauley, Bob McInnis, Byron Miller, Chris Turner, Noel Keough, David Winkler, Donna Zwicker, Nahed Nenshi, Peter Rishaug, Richard Parker, Bob Morrison, Natalia Zoldak, Dave Robertson, Annalise Van Ham, Allard Losier, Bridget Warner, Nancy Jacklin, J'Val Shuster, Sarah Kopjar, Randy Kopjar, Colleen Doylend, Sherrie Dutton, Rona Fluney, Don Cockerton, Patricia Merkel, Juliet Burgess, Tegan Forbes, Ashley Bristowe, Chris Johnston, Jennifer Devine, Neil Devine, Rich Rawlyk. I'd like to commend them all for starting this great initiative.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Dr. Grant Gall

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Grant Gall. He passed away on Saturday, April 18, 2009, in Jamaica with his wife, Lori, at his side. He was 68 years young. Grant Gall not only left his mark in health care in Alberta; he made people's lives better around the world.

Born in Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Grant grew up on a farm just outside Acme, Alberta. He completed his medical degree from the University of Alberta in 1965, with subsequent internship and residency in Vancouver, Toronto, and Boston. Grant was a research investigator and physician in gastroenterology at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto and later joined the university in 1979. He was a dedicated physician and an internationally renowned researcher.

In 1997 he was appointed dean of medicine after serving as associate dean of research and head of pediatrics. Dr. Gall's decade as dean was transformational for the medical school and the university. Under his strong leadership the Faculty of Medicine created the O'Brien Centre for the bachelor of health sciences program and established a Faculty of Veterinary Medicine. Grant was also instrumental in the development of the new Alberta Children's hospital.

A passionate learner and traveller, Grant fostered international health programs in Laos, Chile, and the Philippines that have provided immeasurable health benefits for the people in those countries as well as life-changing experiences for U of C undergraduates, medical students, and faculty. He was inspirational to all he touched, and he touched so many.

Our hearts and prayers go out to his beloved wife of 49 years, Laurie, and the children and the grandchildren he loved. Alberta has lost a great public servant. He will be missed, and we thank him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Plan for Parks

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was honoured to emcee a media conference this morning as our Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation unveiled Alberta's 10-year plan for parks. The event was held at one of the gems of our provincial parks system, Fish Creek provincial park. This urban park is much loved and often frequented by individuals and groups from Calgary-Lougheed as well as constituents from across the city and far beyond.

The plan for parks represents a milestone for the minister. After extensive consultation across Alberta, it delivers on her mandate from the Premier to develop a plan to ensure Alberta's parks and recreation areas remain protected yet accessible to Alberta's growing population. It balances conservation and recreation activities while illustrating the important role that our provincial parks play in meeting the environmental, economic, and social needs of Albertans. The plan for parks is aligned with the land-use framework as it shares the same desired outcomes and geographical regions. The plan also identifies the need to develop a clear process for Albertans to nominate new parks, a process that will ensure local communities and citizens play a key role in decisions about parks in their region.

Alberta's parks inspire people to discover, value, protect, and enjoy the natural world and the benefits it provides for current and future generations. Public input regarding future decisions will help to literally shape our province's landscape. Mr. Speaker, I encourage all Albertans to read this plan and to act on these new opportunities to participate in and provide input on our invaluable parks system. For much more information Albertans can call 1.866.427.3582 or contact ParkNews@gov.ab.ca.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

National Oral Health Month

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you may know, April is Oral Health Month. This week in particular celebrates the many men and women across the country that work as dental hygienists. As of January 1, 2009, there were more than 2,400 dental hygienists registered at practice in Alberta. Their contribution to the continued health of Albertans is beyond measure.

Dental hygienists are highly trained professionals with considerable training and knowledge in the areas of clinical practice, decision-making, and critical thinking as well as in the assessment, diagnosis, planning, implementation, and evaluation of care provided to clients. Dental hygienists have been providing oral health services to Albertans through dental practices and community health settings since 1951 and have been self-regulated since 1990. Since October 31, 2006, dental hygienists have been regulated under the Health Professions Act.

The College of Registered Dental Hygienists of Alberta, the CRDHA, is the professional body responsible for the registration and annual professional certification of all dental hygienists in Alberta. The CRDHA, through authority delegated by the government of Alberta, grants the registered dental hygienist designation and authorizes a dental hygienist to legally practise in Alberta. The CRDHA is governed by a council of eight elected registered dental hygienists and three members of the public, appointed by the minister. The CRDHA ensures that dental hygienists have the educational qualifications and competence to perform and ensure that Albertans receive safe, high-quality dental hygiene care.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Precision Drilling Corporation

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it was announced that AIMCo, which manages Alberta's public savings, has taken a 15 per cent stake in Precision Drilling. This deal is worth almost $300 million. To the minister of finance: will the minister confirm to the Assembly that there was no contact between any cabinet member or government staff and AIMCo or Precision Drilling before close of business on Friday?

Ms Evans: I will confirm that, Mr. Speaker. AIMCo has been created deliberately as an arm's-length Crown corporation, unfettered by attention or influence by the political or the appointed part of our government. There was absolutely no contact with myself or with the deputy minister relative to this decision. The due diligence done by AIMCo and their staff relative to this is exactly a process that's approved by a very sophisticated board that believed that this type of investment was appropriate within the policy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's necessary to manage the stakes so that Albertans get a proper return on their investment. It's also important to ensure that this is an investment and not a bailout of a debt-burdened company. Again to the minister: will AIMCo be taking a position on Precision Drilling's board?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is not something that has ever been even suggested to me. I would agree with the hon. member: the mission of AIMCo is to get the very best possible return within the boundaries of policy that this government has relative to the kinds of risks and liabilities and the type of reward that is sought. So they have done everything according to policy. They have not involved the politician. They have a very sophisticated form of due diligence and analysis, and there has been absolutely no suggestion by the CEO or the CFO, the financial officer, that they have any intention of being more involved in Precision Drilling than they currently are as an investor.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a difficulty here. The Alberta government manages the oil and gas resource in this province on behalf of Albertans, collecting royalties on development. The government is currently providing incentives for drilling companies by cutting royalties those companies pay. Now the government owns a large stake in one of those companies. To the minister: how will this government manage this conflict?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, again there is some suggestion by the opposition of conflict of interest, and there seems to be a lack of recognition of the arm's-length role and responsibility of AIMCo. AIMCo invests money not only on behalf of this government but on behalf of the pension fund, some 70 billion dollars that they manage, roughly half of which is the total responsibility of the government, roughly half, in part, for the pension administration. We're proud of the work they do. To suggest that there's any wrongdoing in that would be to suggest also that in the Thames waterworks in the U.K. or Puget Sound in Washington state they were not qualified.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. In the Auditor General's October '08 report there were serious concerns raised about mental health services. The government's response in their 2009 fiscal plan was to recommend: "Over the next three years, the Department of Health and Wellness and AHS will identify and develop standards for mental health services." To the minister. The Auditor General clearly called for standards. Will the minister table any standards or evidence towards standards that have been created since this 2008 report?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is correct when he said that in our response to the Auditor General we indicated that we would be developing those standards over the next three years, and we intend to hold to that commitment.

Dr. Swann: I gather there has been no progress, then.

Again to the minister. By spending money wisely up front on social and health programs, long-term costs are deferred or eliminated. When will we see this minister set up and strengthen the community support services for mental health?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta has funded mental health significantly over the last number of years to the tune of some 600 million dollars annually. In addition to that, we've had a strong part in the safe communities initiative. I think the total dollars over a three-year period are in excess of a hundred million dollars for mental health and addictions. I guess I would just remind the hon. leader that one of the key parts of our action plan last year was to release a children's mental health strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister be releasing a new provincial mental health plan considering the changes that have been introduced with Alberta Health Services and the elimination of the Mental Health Board?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's something that we would always be looking at, whether or not the plan, that was released several years ago, would need revision. If so, we'd certainly be open to that.

I think the important thing, however, is that we have put a lot of emphasis during the past year in the development of the children's mental health strategy. We believe very strongly that we need to identify at a young age those who have mental illnesses and put in place treatment programs for them so that they can grow up to be strong contributors to society.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

All-terrain Vehicle Safety

Mr. Chase: Today we had the sad news of another tragic death of a child while using an ATV. For some years now we have been encouraging the government to take action on this issue. To the Minister of Transportation: when will the minister bring in helmet laws for children using ATVs?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have to say that that was a very, very horrible tragedy this weekend, and my heart goes out to the father. I can't imagine. That would be your worst nightmare, to find your own son in that position. That said, we don't have the information to even know if it was a helmet that created that problem or what actually happened there. But I will say that we try all the time to make sure that we have safe laws in Alberta. We've been working on helmet legislation, which I do think will be coming forward within the next year. I still tell people that they have to use common sense and to please supervise their children when they're on ATVs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when will the minister introduce limits on the power of ATVs that children can operate?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, any manual you ever read for any one of those ATVs that you purchase – there are safety standards all along the fenders of most of these that come from the manufacturer. We have to take responsibility ourselves and for our children, and we have to do that within ourselves and train them on the safety features of these vehicles.

Mr. Chase: The government has taken a stance on seat belts. The government has taken a stance on bicycle helmets. To the same minister: when will there be mandatory licensing for all-terrain vehicles and their drivers?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we only have jurisdiction on Crown land and on public lands under the highway Traffic Safety Act. Under the highway Traffic Safety Act we try to look after all of that Crown land. On private land I don't have jurisdiction as the Minister of Transportation. I'm not so sure that all people, whether they vote for our party, which most of them do, or these other two really want us interfering on their private rights on their private land.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's mental health system has been in crisis for decades, and a balanced approach, with more medical and housing services at the community level, would go a long way towards improving things. At least that's what a report commissioned by this government concluded over two years ago. Their own steering committee on mental health approved the report before it was turned into a state secret by this government. My question is for the minister of health. Why are you covering up this government's mental health failures, and why did your ministry hide this report from the public?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's probably no department that tables more reports in this Legislative Assembly than the Department of Health and Wellness. As a department you commission reports periodically, from time to time. Some of them you table; some of them you don't. They become advice to the department or the minister. The recommendations from these reports find their way into policy, and that's exactly what has happened here.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing in this report that the public shouldn't have seen.

In 2002 to 2003 over 2 and a quarter million doctors' visits in Alberta were for mental health issues, which represents nearly 40 per cent of general practitioner billings. Covering up this report and ignoring its findings costs our economy over $5 billion a year, and this minister's inaction contributes to higher health care costs. To the minister: when will you admit that implementing the report would not only help thousands and thousands of people get better but could actually help control health care costs in our province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll just repeat what I replied earlier in the House to the Leader of the Opposition, that this government has committed some 600 million dollars annually to mental health. We have been a strong participant in the safe communities initiative, where, again, over a three-year period some 100 million dollars is going towards new beds for treatment facilities. So I would suggest that this government has taken this issue very seriously and will continue to take it seriously.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the government might as well be pushing mentally ill people into the cracks of the system. They've known for decades that it's broken. They got a viable road map to fix it two years ago, but they buried it, and in October, when the Auditor General said the system was in trouble, they cut his funding. My question is to the minister of health. When will you stop ignoring this silent epidemic and hiding the truth from Albertans, that you're failing our people with mental illness and that you don't want the good advice that the . . .

The Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the only people who are ignoring is the particular member here, who hasn't been listening to any of the answers that I've been providing.

You know, in the last year through the safe communities program we've opened up some 80 new residential beds, and in this particular budget, that was just introduced in this House a couple of weeks ago, there is some additional 42 million dollars allocated through our department through safe communities. We anticipate an equal number of beds that'll be opened. We treat this matter very seriously, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Plan for Parks

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation released Alberta's plan for parks, and I'd like to congratulate her on this achievement. Recently I've been reading articles that suggest specific percentages of land should be set aside for parks. My question to the minister:

does the plan for parks propose a set percentage of land for parks in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is right: we were able to announce the plan for parks. We've been in consultation for a long time, and I was very pleased to be able to bring forward a plan that I think balances conservation with the idea of people being able to enjoy or have access to those parks.

As to numbers, some were asking if we were putting formulas or specific percentages. We're not. We're going out to regional planning. We're going to be asking those communities and taking a look at it from that direction. Really, if you were to look at the parks in this province, 4 per cent of the land base is already protected under provincial parks. As well as the federal parks it's 13 per cent of the system, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: can the minister tell me how new parks will be created under this plan?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, we're going out into these regional plans. There's an opportunity to nominate parks, and it's going to be done at a community level. The hon. member, of course, has a great example in her community, where we had all the various groups get together and sit down, even those that were opposed to activity. They came forward with a wonderful plan for the Eagle Point provincial park and the Blue Rapids provincial recreation area, a great example and one that we're going to use as a prototype as we go out into the community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. The land-use framework released at the end of last year mentioned the development of a plan for parks as a priority action. How does the plan for parks fit within the land-use framework?

Mrs. Ady: This is very important, Mr. Speaker, because the land-use framework is now divided into seven regions, and they're going out and they're using the watersheds of this province. We will be going out with the land-use framework with the park plan. We will look at those same regions. We are using the same criteria that they are using, and in the end we want to achieve the goal of sustainable, responsible land use in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Federal Health Transfer Payments

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the government's latest PR spin to distract attention away from the crisis in health care and the embarrassing multibillion-dollar deficit is to blame Ottawa and the federal government for all its problems. This blame game always comes up when they know they're in trouble, and it is disingenuous and, quite frankly, a tired tactic. To the President of the Treasury Board: when will this government stop blaming Ottawa for its own fiscal mismanagement and take ownership of the fact that after collecting multibillion dollars in resource revenue, they're now scrambling to get $700 million from their federal cousins?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that what this government has done historically and will continue to do into the future is stand up for the rights of Albertans. When it comes to health care, I don't think anyone in Alberta is any less important than anyone who lives anywhere else in Canada. There may be other equations they want to use to equalize the wealth that we share as Canadians, but from strictly a point of health care I think all Canadians should be treated the same.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a historic moment when the President of the Treasury Board argues for the return of a program, the equalization of health transfers, that the Paul Martin Liberals suggested and the Harper Conservatives took away.

Since there has been quite a bit of revisionist history going on, does the President of the Treasury Board understand the fact that by demanding $700 million of health transfers, this government is asking that their federal cousins follow through with the policy of their Liberal predecessors?

Mr. Snelgrove: Like most Albertans, Mr. Speaker, we try on a daily basis to forget how wonderful our federal Liberal cousins were to us. We try daily. We're not arguing with our federal cousins. We've entered into a very constructive debate about how we're going to fund health care. If the hon. members don't think that's a responsible move, then they can say so. We're debating about funding health care on an equitable basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe I can get the President of the Treasury Board to enter into a debate with Ross from Stony Plain, one of the people who has brought his questions to us because Albertans are clearly angry about this budget. Ross would like to know if the President of the Treasury Board understands the fact that if our unprecedented wealth had been properly managed over the last 20 years, we would be facing this economic downturn in much better shape than we are now.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we have used the tremendous wealth that has come from our resources and other industries in Alberta to build a province that is virtually the envy of the world. I don't understand what they think is wrong with having world-class universities, world-class health facilities, an education system that leads the world, and people that are healthier, wealthier, and, thank goodness, wiser than most of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Buffalo Housing First Program

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have an excellent program in Red Deer for homeless people. The former Buffalo Hotel was renovated two years ago to rehouse homeless people and provide them with the right services to address their homelessness. Last year Housing and Urban Affairs provided $465,000 in operating funding. My first question is for the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs. Can the minister tell us if provincial funding will continue in the next fiscal year?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Member for Red Deer-South has advocated for and supports this program, which began as a pilot project two years ago. It is a good program, hon. member. It's a program that's a public-private partnership. It's funded by all three levels of government. It aligns with our Housing First model. I can tell you that given the success of this program the member will be pleased to know that we are committed to providing a further $584,000 for it to continue to operate this year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you. My second question is for the same minister. Can the minister explain the difference between the Buffalo Housing First program for the homeless and affordable housing?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, too, having served on the task force for the 10-year plan for Red Deer, housing is quite different for the homeless than affordable housing. Housing for the homeless is smaller in size, about 400 square feet, has single occupancy, and also is based on an individual's ability to pay whereas affordable housing is more modest in size and amenities, is standard in the community that it's located in, and is for individuals as well as seniors and families and people with special needs. Rents are based on 10 per cent below the municipality's market value.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Dallas: Thank you. This program, I believe, has shown great results. My question for the minister: what would she consider the supporting evidence that the Buffalo Housing First program is working?

Mrs. Fritz: Mr. Speaker, as the member said, this program does work extremely well. They've housed successfully 40 people that have been chronically homeless, along with support services. In fact, the administration received a very prestigious award last week, that the hon. member is aware of, for their outstanding work. The Canadian Mental Health Association and Potter's Hands Developments were honoured with the Robert Hale Jr. memorial award from the Canadian Housing and Renewal Association. That shows you that Housing First does work for our homeless.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

2:10 Government Information Technology Security

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his report from last year the Auditor General highlighted very serious concerns about information technology security. Footprints were found from international hackers on government systems. To the Minister of Service Alberta: given the growing sophistication of international hackers, what specific steps are being taken to combat this threat to Albertans' personal information?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the Auditor General's report of last year Service Alberta did indeed accept all of his recommendations. We take the security of Albertans' information very seriously. We have made a number of changes in areas. The first one we've done is that we have a chief security officer that's responsible for all information, all government departments resident in Service Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How has the minister improved the design and administration of government websites?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll add some other comments as well on this. We review information security policies with input from all ministries through the CIO Council, that meets on a regular basis with the deputy ministers. We've been tightening security of all government web applications and put in place technical controls to further protect the government network from cyberattacks, and we are working with the Department of Infrastructure to address the physical security of data facilities across the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the registries are responsible for health care insurance information as of April 1, 2009, how will that information be protected since the ministry hasn't fully implemented the Auditor General's recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently there are 20 registry offices across Alberta and a pilot project that we're doing jointly with Alberta Health and Wellness, where Albertans can come and register and get their new Alberta health card, whether they're new residents or whether they have to make a change of information. This is viewed as an excellent measure in giving Albertans access to services. Most certainly, under the registry system the security approaches we take are there within the CARS system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Residential Tenancy Disputes

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My office is getting some calls about a program that the government has introduced which allows landlords and tenants to resolve disputes without going to court, not that there's anything wrong with going to court. The residential tenancy dispute resolution service has apparently been quite successful, and I understand that there's funding in this year's budget to take it province-wide. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why isn't this program available yet to all Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The residential tenancy dispute resolution service, or RTDRS, has been very successful. This is a unique program because it's faster and less expensive for tenants to resolve their disputes, and you're not going through the law system. In Edmonton and Calgary it has significantly reduced the amount of time the courts have to spend on landlord and tenant disputes. The service is currently available in Calgary, Edmonton, and northern Alberta. We are planning to have it available province-wide as soon as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if the funding is now available, what is the holdup? Why can't the program be expanded province-wide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are moving as quickly as possible to make this service available to all Albertans because of the good work that it does. In northern Alberta we've made the program available also through teleconferencing, and we're looking at that approach in other parts of the province as well. Funding is a key part of the equation, but we also need to have staff and office space available. We're working hard on all these fronts to get the offices up and running.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister: does this program arbitrate all types of disputes, and is the program final, or is there a right of appeal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The disputes that are dealt with through the RTDRS are disputes over eviction, unpaid rent, unpaid utilities, security deposits, damages, repairs, and other common disagreements. Disputes are heard by an officer who makes a decision that is binding on both parties. Decisions can be appealed to the courts in some cases, but this is rare.

This is an excellent program, an example of the great work that our government is doing. As well, the satisfaction rate is going up on a regular basis, up into the high 80s, and continues to go up.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the province's plan for parks has finally been released, Albertans are still left with a number of questions. The plan for parks says that involving Albertans is its number 1 strategy, yet the plan seems to have ignored Albertans' calls in a provincial survey for the creation of new parks, with no new specific commitments for parks in the plan. To the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation: was the minister serious about taking the concerns of Albertans into account, or was the survey merely a publicity stunt to give the illusion of Albertans actually being able to have a say?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I mean, the hon. member makes a good point. The Praxis report did ask for us to develop new parks, but it also asked for us to make them accessible, so we're doing both. We're going in on a regional basis and giving Albertans a voice for the first time in the development of the parks in their region. We haven't always done that, but we're doing it in the future. I'd say to the hon. member that he should read the entire Praxis report. It covered all areas, and I think this park plan captures it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Will the minister be establishing Andy Russell I'tai Sah Kôp north of Waterton national park as a protected park, something which Albertans have been advocating for several years?

Mrs. Ady: Mr. Speaker, as to specific parks, again, we have a regional process that's going out there. We're going to be joining the Minister of SRD and the land-use framework. When we get to that region, we'll take a look at that area.

Mr. Chase: Can the minister explain why there is no commitment this year for either the capital region river valley park or the Glenbow Ranch provincial park on Calgary's western doorstep? How can you claim to have a vision for provincial parks when the ones you've already committed to appear to be shelved or getting no additional support?

Mrs. Ady: Well, I don't know where the hon. member is getting his information from, Mr. Speaker. Some 50 million dollars went to the river valley park last year as they prepare to get ready to build that park. That is going to take a few years, but it's going to be fabulous.

As for the Glenbow, we are well in the process of planning that today. It's very complex because it's between Cochrane and Calgary. We want to get it right, we will get it right, and it'll be a good thing when it's ready.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Carbon Pricing

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy produced a report last week that called for a cap and trade system to meet greenhouse gas reduction targets. The CEOs of Suncor, the Royal Bank, and Manulife were quick to endorse the report. They realize that this is the best way to satisfy the main customer of our natural resources, the U.S. To the Environment minister: why won't the minister admit that his stubborn reliance on intensity targets isn't fooling anyone, is isolating Alberta from our best customer, and will ultimately lead to fewer and fewer markets for our natural resources?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I remind the member once again that as of today Alberta is the only jurisdiction in North America that has any regulation. The report of the national round-table is a good report. It talks about the need for a price on carbon. Alberta is comfortable with that. In fact, we've been saying all along that we need a carbon price. There are a number of initiatives that this round-table committee has come out with and discussed that we are in agreement with. The one that we remain concerned with is the emphasis within this report on international carbon trading. We are not going to be paying for someone else to solve their problem while we do not solve ours.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister and his staff from the Public Affairs Bureau are the only ones that believe the spin on intensity targets. Now, last week the U.S. EPA released a report that increases the likelihood that Congress will pass legislation later this year designed to cut CO₂ levels with a hard cap and trade system. However, this government is heading in exactly the opposite direction, refusing to implement regulations that will bring us in line with the rest of the world. Why won't you admit that your intensity targets are nothing more than a laughable smokescreen that nobody is going to buy except your staff and that does nothing to address climate change?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, intensity targets are the tool that is used to get to hard caps. Without dealing with the individual emitters, we're not going to get to the hard caps. What this member and so many others fail to accept is that you need to start somewhere. You could have all the grandiose promises and aspirational goals in the world, but unless you have a road to get there, you'll never get there. We have a road to get there.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this minister has never given us a day or a deadline for hard caps in this province. The fact of the matter is that Alberta's energy future is at a crossroads that we can't deny. Our natural resources could very well sustain us through a transition to a green economy, but it will take this government to wake up to today's international political and environmental realities. Now, you can choose whether to ignore the international warnings to clean up our tar sands and risk having our trading partners wedge us out of the market, or you can choose to clean up your act and abandon once and for all your reliance on the myth of intensity targets. Which will it be?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the day that we adopt hard caps will be the same day that our competitors adopt hard caps. They're not there, and we're not there, but we're getting there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Anthony Henday Drive

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the hon. Minister of Transportation announced construction of the overpass at the Anthony Henday in my constituency. That's good news. At the recent annual general meeting of the La Perle Community League Wes Ursulak and other constituents expressed concerns about the Easter weekend tree removal along Stony Plain Road at the Anthony Henday intersection. My first question to the Minister of Transportation: did anyone from the ministry notify my residents and constituents about the removal of these wooded areas, and if so, when and how?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ouellette: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to let the hon. member know that the contractor notified residents that were backing onto Anthony Henday Drive of the planned tree removal. More than 120 construction bulletins were delivered to residents on April 3 in the communities of Aldergrove and La Perle. The bulletins were delivered on the east side of Anthony Henday Drive between Whitemud Drive and 100th Avenue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. My constituents are concerned about what the future of the Henday will look like in their backyards. Can the minister tell us: are there plans for reforestation or construction of a berm?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, when completed, there will be stormwater ponds with wetland features on the northeast and southeast corners of the interchange. The remaining areas will only be seeded to grass. These trees will not be replanted as they would need to be removed for the ultimate configuration of the interchange and the installation of utilities that may be needed at a later date. It's important to remember that this area is part of the transportation and utility corridor that was identified in the late '70s, and it was not ever designated as parkland.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental question is to the same minister. After hearing the minister's response and the concerns of my constituents, I sincerely believe that there was a communication issue with the perception of what the area was going to look like. Will the minister commit to a process whereby department representatives will meet with the La Perle Community League representatives in order to discuss the respective concerns and issues?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, if I heard the question right, he's asking: will we communicate with them? They have; I have already. Actually, the hon. member there called me one night from a community league meeting, and I said that I would look into it and make sure. Since then, I understand that over the weekend some in my department have spoken with the community league leaders. I will try to make sure that the construction people keep them informed on what's happening during that project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2007 the government commissioned the Jaccard report, which modelled the effect carbon charges would have on reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Although the minister adopted some of the recommendations, they were watered down to such an extent that many questioned whether success was possible. The Auditor General warned that without a plan "Alberta could spend a lot of money but not achieve emissions [intensity] targets." To the Minister of Environment: how much money is the minister willing to risk for a strategy that is more about PR than about climate change?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of climate change and greenhouse gas reductions is very much part of the discussions that are currently under way not only here in Alberta but nationally and internationally. With the advent of the Obama administration south of the Canada-U.S. border, we're now starting to get to a point where I believe we are truly going to be able to see some significant and real progress because Alberta will no longer be acting alone but will be acting in concert with all of the rest of North America.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: why has the minister set emissions intensity targets without a real plan to achieve them?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really take exception to the suggestion that there is no plan to achieve targets. The fact of the matter is that we have legislation in place, and we are achieving those targets. There are compliance mechanisms that are the law in Alberta. One is to have reductions of intensity, real reductions in CO₂. Two is to have an Alberta-based offset. Three is to invest in the technology that will lead to large, grand-scale reductions, through implementation of technology such as CCS.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the Minister of Environment has admitted that the carbon charge is too low, can the minister tell us if this administration will adjust the charge by a larger amount now or whether it will be following B.C.'s lead in instituting smaller yearly increases?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the price for carbon, the compliance mechanism, the contribution to the technology fund, is set at $15 a tonne as we speak. There is no reason for us to believe that it will not increase over time. We also believe very firmly that there is that balance that needs to be maintained between economic activity and environmental protection. That balance is based upon ensuring that we don't get so far ahead of our competitors that we cease to do business at all. The fact is that as the rest of North America comes onside – and I have every reason to believe that they will – I fully expect that $15 price to rise quite considerably.

Grande Prairie Young Offender Centre

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, some of my constituents recently came to me with concerns about the closure of the Grande Prairie Young Offender Centre. They have many concerns about the impact that the closure will have on them and the community of Grande Prairie. My questions are to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. Can the minister explain to my constituents why the centre is being closed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to start off by saying that this decision was certainly not taken lightly. We understood the impact on the community and the offenders and their families and staff. However, the centre has been underutilized for a number of years. It has a capacity for 32 young offenders and last year averaged only 11. We need to ensure that we are using our taxpayers' dollars wisely, and that means running the most effective corrections system we can.

Mr. Drysdale: To the same minister: how will the young offenders be reintegrated into the community when they are placed in a young offender centre hundreds of kilometres from their home?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, under the Youth Justice Act all young offenders released from custody must be supervised by a probation officer for a period of time in their communities. We have a strong network of probation officers across the province who provide support and supervision of these young offenders. Probation officers also work very closely with local agencies to refer these young offenders to community programs and services that can further support their efforts to reintegrate back into society. Closing the Grande Prairie Young Offender Centre will not change this.

Mr. Drysdale: Again to the same minister: will the closure of the young offender centre result in a facility sitting unused for months or years?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, when we made the decision to close this facility, I directed my staff to begin exploring options with other government departments to utilize this facility. We are continuing to explore all those options. I want to assure the member that this facility will not remain empty for very long, and I also want to reassure the member that all staff who were employed at that facility will have the opportunity to be redeployed within the ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:30 Municipal Sustainability Initiative

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The municipal sustainability initiative was an election promise to address the critical need for financial support of infrastructure projects. Two years later and a $600 million promise made for this year falls $200 million short. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Contrary to the original news release the 10-year MSI funding has not proven to be the predictable and sustainable revenue source that it was promised to be. Can the minister tell us how many projects across Alberta will be indefinitely deferred because of this $200 million broken promise?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I need to say to you and this House that the municipal sustainability initiative was created to help municipalities with sustainability and with predictability of funding. In the guidelines it very specifically talks about that if revenue drops, so would the municipal sustainability initiative. In this particular budget and at this particular time revenue has dropped. We have had continuous meetings with the associations, with municipalities about the impact that it may have on municipalities.

Ms Pastoor: Given that the minister has reneged on this year's promise of MSI funding levels, next year's promise of $1.4 billion seems like a pipe dream. How are municipalities supposed to plan for the future and cope with downloaded responsibilities without the dollars to pay for it when the administration doesn't follow through on promises?

Mr. Danyluk: This government is committed to municipalities. If the opposition would look at the three-year plan, $1.2 million dollars plus is allocated. As well, I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we have worked with those municipalities to discuss the challenges not only that they have had in the last couple of years but also with this budget. We need to maximize the stimulus program that the federal government talks about. We're working with those municipalities to help maximize that program.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. Some of that conversation would assume that the minister intends to fulfill the $1.4 billion promise in the MSI funding for next year. Where will those funds come from if oil and gas prices don't turn around as quickly or to the degree that is optimistically predicted by our finance minister?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can see that the member from the opposition has never done a budget. What did take place is that we have worked with the municipalities to ensure that we can help support the municipalities to the greatest degree possible. Working with the municipalities, working with the federal government, and working with this government, we can ensure that we will support the municipalities into the future. The MSI program is a good program. It is a program that is going to carry municipalities into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Edmonton Public Library Mill Woods Branch

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Mill Woods branch of the Edmonton public library, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie, is relocating from its current location at Mill Woods Town Centre to a larger space. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs please explain what funding is available to support the public libraries?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, libraries are the cornerstones of our communities. We support new and existing libraries in many ways. First of all, last week we announced an increase of $9 million, to $32 million, to help support the operational libraries. MSI is available for capital. Lottery grants are available from Culture and Community Spirit. This increased support will help strengthen libraries in Alberta, including Edmonton.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister: how much funding from this $32 million is specifically for the Mill Woods library, please?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Mill Woods library is moving from a 10,000-square foot facility to a 25,000 square foot facility. The city spends, I believe, approximately $98 million to $100 million on library funding, of which $40 million is MSI funding. The city has applied for $24 million specifically for the Mill Woods library. The question was: what support does the government give? Well, the government gives $40 million through MSI towards libraries and $24 million to the library in Mill Woods.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you.

Sand and Gravel Royalties

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy's annual report notes that audits of industry reporting on oil and gas royalties result in annual adjustments of $39.8 million in the Crown's favour. This is a lot of money for Albertans. Previously the Auditor General has indicated that Sustainable Resource Development is behind on its audits of gravel royalties. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why is your department failing to effectively audit gravel royalties owing to this province?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we're not failing to audit gravel taken from here. I explained last week that various types of audits are done. The difference is that we measure post the taking of the gravel the quantity of gravel taken versus receipts. That way audits are done, and we believe – and we've spoken with the Auditor General about that – that that gives us an adequate monitoring of the situation.

Mr. Hehr: As evidenced by the Department of Energy's reviews, audits performed by hard-working civil servants result in more money coming to the Alberta taxpayer. When the government fails to provide the necessary resources to audit these companies, Albertans are being shortchanged from collecting the amount due and owing to them. To the same minister: how many people in your department are actually auditing gravel royalties?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is barking up the wrong tree. Our gravel prices are actually higher than several of the neighbouring provinces. Albertans are getting a completely fair return on their gravel resource. Do you want the cost of highways and home construction and everything to go up? Is it your goal to have the highest gravel prices in western Canada?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only reason I'm asking these questions is that I want to know how many people are actually performing audits and if these audits are resulting in upticks and more money coming into the coffers compared to what the companies are reporting. Let's get some auditors working on what the companies actually say they are doing.

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is new to this Assembly, but he clearly subscribes to the old Liberal theory that the best way to stimulate employment in the province is to expand the public service. We happen to disagree with that. We think that the private sector creates jobs, not the public sector.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Rural Extension and Industry Development

Mr. Prins: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. When the Alberta livestock and meat strategy was announced last year, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development asked for an internal review to ensure that the department was aligned to assist the livestock industry with the transformation and revitalization. As a result of the review, the ministry reinforced its focus on rural communities. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Can you please update us on the progress of the department following the review?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, our department has strategically restructured its program and service delivery to focus on key priorities to better serve our agriculture industry. Since last October hub offices are now up and running in 13 locations across Alberta, which was long overdue. Alberta's agriculture industry is now better able to access the wealth of specialist knowledge that we have out there, the research and the business development expertise that resides in our department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The next question is to the same minister. Since this review was announced last year and the focus on rural communities is ongoing, why is it so critical to adjust the rural extension programs at this time?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, we can all agree, I think, that our province is built on a rich history of rural communities and agriculture, and their success is important to the overall success of Alberta. Rural extension certainly is one of the most effective ways for our industry to access the expert knowledge and research on everything from farm safety to business management that exists within our department. Providing this support through hub offices helps ensure the prosperity and the vitality and the success of the ag industry. It encourages strong communities, one of this government's priorities.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. There must be many other programs out there. What are these programs, and how do they assist rural Albertans?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, our staff certainly is working closely with the provincial executive of the ag service boards that we have out there and the Association of Alberta Ag Fieldmen to develop an extension model that'll work in all 69 municipalities across the province. Ministry key contacts will be identified for each of the 69 ag service boards. Their role will be to provide support to our agriculture partners and will allow us to sustain our industry and encourage the development of rural communities. In addition, the Ag-Info Centre is available toll-free at 310-FARM to answer questions and direct producers and rural Albertans to additional resources.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 106 questions and responses. In 30 seconds from now we'll move on.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm doing this in the presence of some of our guests, Reverend Bob Kimmerly and Isabel Golightly. I rise today to present a petition signed by 167 citizens who are opposed to the proposals of the government which downgrade health care and cause hardships to Albertans. I'll just read the very brief opening into the record.

We the undersigned are strongly opposed to the proposals of the Government which will downgrade Health Care and cause hardship to millions of Albertans.

We urge the Government of Alberta

- (1) to desist from all plans which will lead to further privatization of our Health Care System,
- (2) to refrain from any plans to reduce the number of Long Term [care] Beds, [and]
- (3) to abandon plans which will require additional costs for drugs to Seniors based on a "means test."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope the government pays attention.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the first instance, I'd like to introduce Bill 37, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009. This being a money bill, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has suggested:

Honourable Members of the Legislative Assembly:

It is my pleasure to recommend for your consideration the annexed bill, being the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

Dated April 20 and signed by the Administrator. I request leave to introduce this bill.

The Speaker: Actually, there is a correct form, and it's: "This being a money bill, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly."

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

Bill 38
Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009.

The Speaker: The number for that bill is Bill 38.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a first time]

Bill 39
Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009, Bill 39.

[Motion carried; Bill 39 read a first time]

Bill 40
Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 40, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009.

The proposed amendments ensure that Alberta's dividend tax credit and tuition credit are administered in accordance with existing Alberta government policy and that they will be consistent with changes to federal legislation.

[Motion carried; Bill 40 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 40 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of the list of 1,496 Alberta not-for-profit and charitable organizations that will share $90 million in donation grants in the first year of the community spirit program. Broken down alphabetically by community, this 33-page document showcases the breadth and scope of organizations that will benefit from the community spirit program.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to table five copies of the statistical breakdown of the donation grant distribution across the province. Launched in 2008 this donor-driven program is made up of two components: the donation grant and the enhanced charitable tax credit. The goal is to help increase charitable donations by individual Albertans to Alberta's not-for-profit and charitable organizations. Whether it's $25,000 for Camp Health, Hope & Happiness, near Stony Plain, to support summer camp experiences, or $9,202 to the Lac Ste. Anne Foundation for the purchase of library, audio visual, and exercise equipment for seniors programs, or $9,423 to the Central Alberta Theatre Society in Red Deer, to help with lobby and theatre renovations, these grants will help nonprofit and charitable organizations continue their important work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That sounds to me, hon. minister, like a ministerial statement, which might be the venue followed in the future. This is tablings right now.

The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly five copies of the Alberta Plan for Parks. This plan is a blueprint for the development of provincial parks over the next 10 years. Under this plan Albertans are invited to become involved in shaping the future of our parks system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat in his capacity as chair of the Legislative Offices Committee.

Mr. Mitzel: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I'd like to table five copies of the report of the Auditor General of Alberta dated April 2009. Copies of the report are being distributed to all members today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling two documents today. On Thursday, April 16, 2009, I attended Kirkness school's 25th anniversary program. It was a great time, with many great memories shared, and I'm sure everyone who attended really enjoyed it. I'm tabling five copies.

Second, in my member's statement today I referenced an Edmonton Journal article from April 5 about organ donations. Five copies. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter that I received today, April 20, 2009, from the office of the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, indicating that they are rejecting my request for information regarding hosting events and expenses under $600.

My second tabling is the government hosting expenses $600 and over as obtained from the Alberta Gazette for the years 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, and so far for the calendar year 2008 through to the date of April 15, 2009. This indicates that in the last five years hosting expenses by this government have increased from $483,000 . . .

The Speaker: Okay. But this is tablings right now. I look forward to you doing a member's statement on this matter.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the five documents that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview previously referred to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of six letters and e-mails from Albertans opposed to the termination of the Wild Rose Foundation. They say that the Wild Rose Foundation has played a valuable role in supporting volunteer organizations and should be allowed to continue. The letters are from Margaret Holliston, executive director of Camrose and District Support Services; Heather McPherson, executive director of the Alberta Council for Global Cooperation; Joanne Moffat; Cecily Mills; Laura Kennedy; and Christa Jubinville. Thank you.

Orders of the Day Motions for Returns

Assisted Living Facilities

- M2. Ms Notley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all reports or plans prepared between January 1, 2007, and February 10, 2009, regarding the future creation or expansion of assisted living facilities.

[Debate adjourned April 6: Ms Notley speaking]

The Speaker: Hon. member, it has already been moved. We're in the adjourned portion of it. There are nine minutes left to participate if one wanted to. You adjourned the debate, hon. member. Do you want to continue?

Ms Notley: No. I think I have already debated it two Mondays ago, so I'm good. Thanks.

The Speaker: So we should call the vote, then?

Ms Notley: Yes.

[Motion for a Return 2 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

- M3. Ms Notley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all letters received by the Ministry of Health and Wellness, the Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports, and the Premier between October 1, 2008, and February 10, 2009, regarding the province's new pharmaceutical plan for seniors.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This pharmaceutical plan has been very controversial, and we've heard a very extensive public outcry from people who oppose the higher amounts that middle-income ill seniors have to bear and who see this as a blow to the universality of our health care system. It appears as though the plan was conceived with little or no consultation with the people who have been affected by the change. We have, certainly, ourselves been receiving a great number of letters from seniors and other citizens who are outraged by the proposed changes to the pharmaceutical plan, and we ourselves are very gravely concerned about the negative impact this will have on our health care system overall from a preventative basis as well as on an overall cost-savings basis. As noted previously, we're also very concerned about the attack this represents on universality.

As a result of that, we are looking to see what it was that the ministry had been hearing from Alberta citizens regarding this change. Had they not been receiving the same kind of letters outlining the sorts of concerns that we have articulated? It's for these reasons that we are asking to have this information provided to members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister of health I wish to advise the House that the government wishes to reject this motion for a return. When individuals write letters to either ministers or to the Premier, they do not expect that information to be broadly shared. If the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood would like this information, there is a proper channel, and that is through a FOIP request, in which case a third-party consultation would be conducted with each individual person who wrote, to obtain their permission to share the letter.

I urge all members to vote against this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on this point.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Specifically referencing Motion for a Return 3, the concern expressed here has been the numbers of seniors who have been appealing to this government to take into account the contributions they have made throughout their lives. Those in the higher income brackets have paid taxes for all of their years of employment to this government with the hope that in their retirement years their contributions would be recognized. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, the whole notion of universality is being called into question in this motion for a return.

Now, the government thankfully did a little bit of an about-face with regard to transgendered individuals. They realized that not only the initial 26 but the other 21 who had begun the programming should receive funding. Unfortunately, at that point they slammed the door for future transgendered operations. The government has already slammed the door on further contracting out of cataract surgery, which, obviously, affects seniors directly. It has cut funding for chiropractic services. It has cut funding for podiatry services. So it's no wonder that we as Albertans are trying to get a sense of where the government is headed with regard to the pharmaceutical plan. At this point all seniors and Albertans know is that the individual coverage for Blue Cross has been tripled. That cost is considerably more than what seniors were previously paying for health care premiums. It seems as though the government gives with its right hand and takes away with its left.

Albertan seniors are extremely concerned. Approximately 200 of them appeared outside the minister of health's office this past Friday in Calgary to register their concerns. The idea of a means test, as I say, goes directly against the idea of universality. Seniors deserve better, and that's what Motion for a Return 3 is calling for.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to speak in support of this. Certainly, there has been a public outcry. I'm sure that every MLA sitting in this House is more than aware of that. Phones have been ringing. Letters have been written. E-mails, by the hundreds, actually, have been coming in.

Clearly, I live in a riding with lots of seniors. Beside the fact that it will cost them more money, one of the things that they're concerned about is that the means test also, in their mind, will affect their privacy. They're not used to having to share a lot of that kind of information. That was one of the things that they wanted me to speak about.

My usual question, of course, would be: how was this decision arrived at? Was it a ministerial decision? Was it a board decision? Was there any medical input into it? That's why I think this motion is very important, that we get the answers for that. Yes, of course, we could FOIP it, but we all know how expensive FOIP is. It's probably expensive for a reason: so that nobody will FOIP it and actually find out what's going on.

The Speaker: Are there others, or should I call the vote?
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate?

Ms Notley: No. You can call the question.

[Motion for a Return 3 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Public Affairs Bureau Job Descriptions

M4. Ms Notley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the current job descriptions for all positions in the Public Affairs Bureau.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The budget for the Public Affairs Bureau for 2008-2009 is $20 million. We would like to know the variety of duties performed by members of the Public Affairs Bureau. We have questions and concerns about the relationship between the Public Affairs Bureau and the government. We've argued in the past that it appears as though the bureau sometimes operates in a partisan way. For example, in question period we sometimes see on the government side that questions and answers are sometimes scripted, when the purpose of QP is for private members to hold the ministers to account. [interjection] Indeed, it appears that way, surprisingly.

Alberta NDP policy is to replace the Public Affairs Bureau with a smaller group of communications professionals who report directly to the ministers and not through the Premier's office. Nonetheless, we believe that there would be value in understanding in more detail the number of people and the resources that we are getting for that $20 million.

That is the basic reason behind why we are seeking this information. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I wish to propose an amendment to this motion for a return. I believe that copies of the amendment have already been circulated. The amendment would strike "all positions in the Public Affairs Bureau" and substitute "the following positions in the Public Affairs Bureau: directors, directors of communications, executive directors, and the managing director."

Mr. Speaker, the motion is being amended to include only job descriptions at the director level and above. They cover each of the bureau's areas of responsibility. In addition, I need to point out to all members that only one job description describes the role of all communications directors who are assigned to the various ministries.

Positions below the director are managers and professional communications staff who support directors in positions that are technical or administrative in nature. This would include the ACN co-ordinator, administrative assistant, financial administrator, human resource assistant, human resource manager, information technology supervisor, internal communications manager, Internet systems developer, public affairs officer, records management assistant, senior graphic designer, systems analyst, and technical support specialist. I would advise all members that the job descriptions for these various levels of communications careers within the Public Affairs Bureau are outlined on the website, which can be found though the government link on the home page.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Speaking very specifically to the amendment, I appreciate the hon. deputy House leader's comments with regard to the job descriptions of individuals below being included on the website. The specific job positions of the individuals who are most likely in receipt of this last year's bonusing will provide part of that information. We also realize that the people who are farther down the chain of command, the actual public servants, are probably less likely to have qualified for the bonusing although in their job description I would hope that that information would be included.

One of the reasons, I'm assuming, for asking for this information has to do with, as the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona pointed out, the growing budget connected with the Public Affairs Bureau. When Premier Klein decided to bring the Public Affairs Bureau directly under his wing, a tremendous amount of control was then exercised within the Premier's office. Premier Stelmach, obviously . . .

The Speaker: No, no, no. That's about the fourth time.

Mr. Chase: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I should know better.

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Chase: The Premier followed through with our former Premier Klein's mandate and has direct control over the Public Affairs Bureau, which, again, is becoming more and more costly to Albertans and delivering a service that is questionable. Therefore, having these positions not only spelled out but the amount of money that goes to these positions, which I would hope would be part of the job description, and the eligibility for bonusing is extremely important.

As our new Premier has indicated, transparency and accountability are foremost in his mind. For that follow-through, then, these positions, the qualifications expected for the positions, the type of job description required, the remuneration, the potentials for bonusing, all these details need to be brought out to Albertans. I'm sure that Albertans, whether through the website that the hon. Minister of Environment pointed out or in combination with Motion for a Return 4, would like to know how many individuals are employed within the Public Affairs Bureau. As has been noted, it is taking several millions of Alberta taxpayers' dollars to deliver this information.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again I apologize for the name transgression.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do note the information provided by the deputy House leader with respect to some of the job descriptions being available on the website. However, it is my understanding that we don't have a clear description of some of the following positions: senior communications manager; manager, communications planning; manager, internal communications; brand initiative manager; advertising consultant or advertising co-ordinator; or corporate identity consultant, which sounds like a very unique little term for a position. It seems to me that there's no reason why these job descriptions should not be publicly available.

As we've already noted, with a budget of $20 million, Albertans have a right to know the details of this Public Affairs budget and where it is that we're paying for people and where they actually are. Again, although we appreciate that some of the information is forthcoming through this amendment, we don't believe that it gives as much information as we are seeking at this point. For that reason we can't support it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others on this amendment? Then I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: On the motion as amended, additional speakers?

Shall I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate, or should I just call the question?

Ms Notley: Question.

[Motion for a Return 4 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Health System Restructuring

M6. Ms Notley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the results, data, and analyses of all public opinion polls, focus groups, surveys, and questionnaires undertaken by or on behalf of the Ministry of Health and Wellness between January 1, 2007, and February 10, 2009, regarding the elimination or replacement of regional health boards with the Alberta Health Services Board.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, this replacement, this decision, is another change that the minister of health has made to our health care system that involved no apparent public consultation. The public at least has a right to know what information the ministry took into account before deciding to make this change.

It's particularly important given that the decision was taken mere months after a provincial general election where there was absolutely no discussion of this type of change to our health care system and, certainly, no discussion or consultation in a number of the smaller regions throughout the province, which stand to lose significant services and, indeed, which we've already discovered since the creation of this board will lose significant services and facilities. There was no discussion with voters, Albertans, in these regions during the provincial general election, so we are very interested in finding out what type of public consultation this government chose to undertake before proceeding with this initiative. Certainly, we know that they have copious dollars at their disposal for polling and that their polling happens quite regularly as do focus groups and other surveys. It would seem appropriate that Albertans be given the opportunity to learn what the ultimate consensus was of voters on these issues, were there any kind of public consultation.

Going back to the issue in general, through the transition time, when the Alberta Health Services Board has been replacing the regional health boards, there has without question been evidence that health care problems have been worsening quite significantly. We've only just recently talked about the issue of increasing bed shortages and waiting lists for surgeries in the area of Calgary.

We've heard the recent comments by the president of the Calgary & Area Physicians' Association, who claims that the province has probably lost at least a year of potential progress because of the administrative upheaval.

The question that we're asking here, of course, refers not only to the information that preceded the decision but also any kind of polling or focus groups or surveying or information that the government has collected on its own behalf since this decision was taken, up to February 10, 2009. Once again, I believe that because this is such an incredibly critical and important issue to Albertans across the province, it only makes sense that they be given access to the information that the government not only made its initial decision on but also is premising its decision to stay the course and carry on, notwithstanding the many, many problems that we have observed over the course of the last nine months.

It is with this background in mind that we are pursuing this information, and I certainly call on my colleagues here in the Legislature on behalf of Albertans who are interested in these issues to support my motion to have this information tabled and made public in the interests of full democratic discussion and transparency.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister of health I wish to urge members to reject this motion. The rationale is really quite simple. There were no public opinion polls, focus groups, surveys, or questionnaires undertaken by or on behalf of the Ministry of Health and Wellness between January 1, 2007, and February 10, 2009, regarding the elimination or replacement of regional health boards with the Alberta Health Services Board. Therefore, there is nothing to provide to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on this point.

Ms Pastoor: There really aren't many points left, I think, after what the hon. member has just said previous to this. However, it certainly opens up the question of why weren't any of these things done, and this is probably where the original question came from.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

Ms Notley: Question.

[Motion for a Return 6 lost]

The Speaker: The motion is defeated, but the question has been answered.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Working Conditions for Temporary Foreign Workers

M10. Ms Notley moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing, for the period January 1, 2005, to December 31, 2008, a copy of all complaints filed on behalf of temporary foreign workers with the Ministry of Employment and Immigration regarding working conditions.

Ms Notley: Thank you. As has been discussed at some length within this Legislature over the last year, certainly since I've been here, anyway, Alberta has brought in unprecedentedly large numbers of temporary foreign workers. We have had very few controls or protections in place to ensure that their working conditions are of a level and a standard that we would expect for all Albertans. We have no doubt that these individuals are very deeply vulnerable to exploitation.

We want to know how many temporary foreign workers are having problems with working conditions and what type of problems they are having and how they are being solved. We are looking for this information from the government although we will start out by saying that we know, because of the way in which the system works, there are probably a great number of concerns that are never actually forwarded to the government because of concerns about retaliation and a lack of knowledge about the available assistance that may be at their disposal.

Nonetheless, with that in mind, I know that in April of '07 the Alberta Federation of Labour had decided to launch a temporary foreign worker advocate program to offer free services to temporary foreign workers needing assistance with work-related problems, and in six months the advocate had received more than 1,400 calls. So we know that there are problems, and we would like to know how many the government has actually been dealing with and how they've been dealing with them. It's important as well for Albertans to have this information made public.

These temporary foreign workers are coming into our province, and a good deal of the economic prosperity which we have until very recently been enjoying has taken place on their backs. It is our responsibility, I would suggest, that we have a very clear insight not only in terms of the nature and the frequency and the volume of complaints that have been levied by these temporary foreign workers but also for us to have some piece of information on how they are resolved and if they are resolved and whether or not we're doing an adequate job of ensuring that there is some form of protection at their disposal.

I believe that there may be an amendment coming, and I will speak to it at that time. Those are the primary reasons behind our call for this information. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I would like to propose an amendment to the motion. I believe that copies of such amendment have been circulated. The intent of the amendment is to change the date from January 1, 2005, to December 1, 2006. The reason for this is that we do not have documents dating back that far, so the change of the date to December 1, 2006, will facilitate the actual release of documents that exist.

Secondly, there is a proposal within the amendment to strike out the word "copy" and substitute "summary report." The reason for this is that workers making complaints do so in confidence, and we must be careful not to compromise their rights under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and, therefore, would propose to provide a summary of complaints rather than copies of the individual complaints.

Mr. Speaker, the motion as amended would now read that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing "for the period December 1, 2006, to December 31, 2008, a summary report of all complaints filed on behalf of temporary foreign workers with the Ministry of Employment and Immigration regarding working conditions."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms. Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I appreciate the intentions of the Minister of Employment and Immigration in coming forward to answer at least part of our question with respect to this – I think some of this information will be valuable, or I hope it will – the concern that I have is simply that I'm not sure what a summary of complaints will look like. Will it just say: March, 20 complaints? Will it say: March, 20 complaints, broken down by type? Will it be complaints broken down by region? Will it be complaints broken down by detailed cause of action? Or will it just simply be complaints with identifying information removed? I would suggest that the latter would be the way in which to ensure we get the full picture of the extent and breadth and nature of the complaints received while at the same time ensuring the privacy of the individuals involved. That is the way I would rather see this amendment proceed.

I am quite concerned that this information being simply provided in summary form will result in our not receiving the kind of detailed information that we need to have in order to truly assess whether or not we are at this point doing a good job protecting these people, whether we have done any kind of good job in the past protecting them, and, in particular, whether the problem is of such a breadth that it further supports our need to do a better job to protect these people as they are here now. I've certainly found in my previous life that it's very possible for summaries of complaints to become so generalized that the value of the information they provide is negligible.

Unfortunately, then, we can't support this amendment unless we're able to see from some other member in support of the amendment some information about it that outlines exactly what the summary would look like. Otherwise, we unfortunately have to see this as something that would not provide the kind of information that we need while still preserving the privacy of those as required under the law. I do believe it is certainly possible to do that, but I don't think it's necessary to reduce the scope of the information received by members of the House to the extent which would occur were this amendment to our motion to go forward.

It is for that reason that I cannot support the amendment. However, I do hope that members of the House will go forward and support our original proposal because we do absolutely need to receive this information in a more comprehensive fashion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the amendment.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. In speaking to the amendment, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, the Minister of Environment, said that the government, for whatever reason, did not track – or it appears from his comments – complaints received from temporary foreign workers for the year January 1, 2005, to December 31, 2005, and again it appears that for a second year running, January 1, 2006, until, we'll say, December 1, 2006, noted here on the amendment, it didn't collect information.

I find that hard to believe, that either the information wasn't collected or that there weren't any complaints over a two-year period. My understanding is that in the 2008-2009 year we had between 50,000 and 60,000 temporary foreign workers working in this province. I know that Gil McGowan, the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour, along with the two opposition parties championed concerns with regard to temporary foreign workers.

Another statistic that is missing through this amendment is the whole idea that we as a province want to encourage immigration. We have been trying to accomplish that in sort of a bit-by-bit approach through our provincial nominee program. I recall just recently the Minister of Employment and Immigration talking about having exceeded the 2008-2009 limits. I think there were approximately 3,500 individuals who were nominated, and he upped the target for the 2009-2010 year to in excess of 4,000. I commend the government for upping the process whereby temporary foreign workers with particular skill sets get a fast track through the provincial nominee program towards permanent citizenship.

However, if you look at last year's numbers and the proposal for next year's numbers, we're talking less than 8,000 people, yet we have currently employed and quickly returning to their country of origin, unfortunately, due to this recession approximately 60,000 people. The fact that for whatever reason the government has encouraged them to come to Alberta and take on jobs that not only help them personally but help the overall Alberta economy, that we don't have statistics for them makes me wonder about our immigration processes along with the federal government.

Yes, the temporary foreign worker program is initiated by the federal government, but once they get within the confines of our provincial borders, there is an expectation that there would be tracking associated with it. The amendment that wants to just simply erase two years of temporary foreign worker history is a great concern to me.

Now, my second concern is with the other part of the amendment, where it is striking out "copy" and substituting "summary report." I fully understand the need for the government to maintain the security of individuals. They do that quite frequently through the FOIPing process by crossing out the names but providing the specific details. Unfortunately, the FOIP process is a very lengthy one. It's also a very expensive one, whether it's members of the opposition seeking that information or media or a private Albertan. What the hon. member has asked for in this particular Motion for a Return 10 is to cut through all the red tape associated with it and give us a sense as to the working conditions of temporary foreign workers.

I would think that this would be in not only the government's best interest but in the province of Alberta as a whole's best interest to investigate the number of complaints, the types of complaints, the regions from which the complaints were taken, and specific examples as opposed to précis or generic summaries. I cannot believe that even though we're in a recession, and we don't know how long that recession is going to take place, we wouldn't want to say to the world: Alberta is a number one destination, whether you're coming here on a temporary visa to work or whether you're seeking to immigrate to this wonderful province.

Cutting back the request to a generic summary and eliminating two entire years of Alberta's history sends a message to any individuals who would be considering immigrating to Alberta that everything is not above board, information is scrutinized, information is highly regulated. We'll never get a sense of the small number of temporary foreign workers who felt brave enough to go either to the AFL or report to the hon. NDP caucus or Alberta's Official Opposition, who are, I am sure, just a small, tiny, tip-of-the-iceberg consideration to those who felt that they would lose their jobs and didn't report. Without numbers, without details any notion of transparency and accountability, any attempt on Alberta's part to bring in immigration, whether on a temporary basis or for full-time immigration status through the provincial nominee program, gets lost.

It's for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, in the name of transparency and accountability and a desire to show the world that we are the destination of choice, that I would ask members to support the motion prior to its amendment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Listening to this member, I'm a little confused. I'm wondering if this member's intention is to protect our foreign workers. If you were to look through the Hansard and not only the Hansard but also the mass media, you will find that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the Liberal opposition has been harping for the last few months in favour of packing these workers' bags right now and shipping them back wherever they came from. Whether they're in the midst of a contract or not, just get rid of them because the economy has slowed down a little.

As a matter of fact, their position on foreign workers is no different, Mr. Speaker, than you going to a local outlet and renting a tool from Fasco, renting a tool only for when you need it and when you no longer need it, disposing of it as if it had no value and shipping it back home. That is, clearly, a well-elaborated Liberal position on foreign workers. We needed them when we wanted cheap labour. We needed them when we wanted some work done. Now that we no longer need them, when the job at Tim Hortons perhaps looks somewhat desirable to locals, get rid of them, ship them back home, and break any and all contracts that we may have.

For this member to now stand up and tell us that he really, honestly cares for foreign workers and that he wants information and longitudinal studies on how well they're doing in their places of employment is nothing, Mr. Speaker, other than shameful.

3:30

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity has already spoken on the amendment.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. I'll just be very brief. That was an interesting interpretation of what actually has transpired from this side of the table. I don't recall saying: send them home. I think part of the conversation was: make sure that they have the opportunity to be citizens, but also make sure that the ones that we are bringing over are fulfilling a need.

One of the reasons that I would stand up against this amendment is because I, too, like my colleague from Calgary-Varsity, am amazed that there is no documentation since December 1 of '06. I would have to ask why that would be occurring. I can't believe that these stats aren't being kept on a regular basis.

One of the reasons that I think this information is important is because there have been, certainly, many instances that came through my office of temporary foreign workers who have had to and been lucky enough to hook up with an immigration centre or citizens that actually are willing to help them. Sometimes things are going on, and the only way that they are being told what's going on is through their interpreter. Often they're at the mercy of the interpreter, who is paid for by the employer from whom they are either trying to understand what they're supposed to be doing or whom they actually lodge that complaint against.

I think that having this information is very necessary because I believe that, certainly, in the future we will always have temporary foreign workers. I think the province will pick up over the next number of years, and we will still need some temporary foreign workers because the rest of the country will also start to pick up. We do know that we've already lost some who wanted to fulfill their heart's desire and returned to the Atlantic provinces.

I think it's very important that we have this information so that we can go forward and have the full protection for our temporary foreign workers.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: We now can have further debate on the motion as amended, or we can call the question on the motion as amended.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity first, on the motion as amended.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just to be brief and have an opportunity to respond to the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, the Hansard that he so eloquently referenced will also show the number of times that we as the Official Opposition have stood up and urged the government to improve and increase its provincial nomination program so that these people, who were enticed not by the Liberal opposition to fulfill jobs but by the government, which made various promises to these individuals that Alberta was a land of milk and honey and opportunity – those short-term contracts were not signed by members of the Official Opposition. They were signed by the government.

The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is correct. Throughout the time period we have said – and we're on record, and I don't deny that record – that jobs are for Albertans first, whether they be unemployed farm labourers, whether they be First Nations individuals, whether they be members of unionized organizations or non-unionized organizations. We have submitted petitions along that line, saying: first Alberta, second Canada, third North America. Then if there is a need and when that need is recognized, we go global, and we honour the individuals' contributions with a reward of citizenship for work well done as opposed to the use and abuse that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs attributed to the Liberal Party.

In terms of speaking to the motion for a return, we're in favour of citizenship. We're in favour of a provincial nominee program because there are rights and protections within citizenship that are not awarded or recognized or regulated for temporary foreign workers. If we're going to improve our Alberta fabric, then we have to give these people stability, and a temporary foreign work program does not achieve that.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 10 as amended carried]

Wildlife Population Data

M11. Ms Notley moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all reports, briefing notes, backgrounders, and memoranda regarding grizzly bear, wolf, and woodland caribou populations in Alberta prepared by or for the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development between January 1, 2004, and February 10, 2009.

Ms Notley: The reason we are seeking this information, again, is because it's important for us to know the state of our wildlife and what protections are being put in place to protect Alberta's wild animals or not, as the case may be. The woodland caribou is an endangered species, and in response to this situation the government implemented a wolf cull. It was a controversial plan to kill wolf pups and sterilize their parents in order to strengthen populations near Jasper national park in 2006. A number of conservationists pointed out that there were other factors contributing to the decline of the woodland caribou, mostly increased industrial development. The wolf cull was implemented again in 2008 near Rocky Mountain House in order to protect the elk populations.

We also believe that grizzly bears should have the classification of endangered because of their dwindling population. Studies have shown that since 2002 grizzly bear populations have dwindled from about 1,000 to less than 500 today. [interjections] One of the biggest threats to the population is the density of access roads that penetrate habitat.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Anyway, I hear from the opposite side that it's not true, but of course the most effective way to resolve the question one way would be to provide members of this House with copies of all reports, briefing notes, backgrounders, and memorandums regarding the populations throughout the province, not just selected memoranda but, indeed, everything that the minister has had given to him between January 1, '04, and February 10, 2009.

I see that it already manages to get a few members opposite engaged ever so briefly, so it clearly is one of those issues that warrants full distribution of information so that we can engage in a well-informed debate. It is for that reason that I am seeking to have that information made available to all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I would like to propose an amendment to Motion for a Return 11, the intent of which would be to result in the motion reading:

Copies of all reports and associated backgrounders containing analysis done on such reports regarding grizzly bear, wolf, and woodland caribou populations in Alberta prepared by or for the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development between January 1, 2004, and February 10, 2009.

This amendment is based on the following reasons, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the request in the originally worded motion is far too broad and consists of a large volume of records that could be quite overwhelming. Secondly, the department wants to provide the member with a reasonable amount of meaningful material respecting the intent of the request.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate the concern that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has about my ability to manage copious amounts of information. Yes. Much appreciated. However, it appears to me, when I read through the amendment, that what it would do is that we would be losing, through the amendment, briefing notes and memorandums within the ministry on this issue. I mean, I've read a lot of memos and a lot of briefing notes, and they actually tend to be shorter than reports and backgrounders. I would suspect that, really, the concern that the minister has with respect to my ability or my caucus's ability to read and digest this information is probably overdone and that we probably are quite capable of reviewing and distilling that information if it were provided to us. Indeed, I'm quite sure that other members of the House would also be quite capable of reviewing and distilling that information.

Of course, now I can't help but wonder exactly which briefing note or which memorandum includes information that the minister would rather we not have. Had it not been for those two slight changes, I would have thought that reading the reports and the backgrounders would have been more than adequate, but now the absence of the briefing notes and the memorandums leads me to query whether in fact the information is quite as black and white as we've been led to believe.

Notwithstanding the concerns about the copious amounts of paper, I do believe that we are equipped to review not only the reports and the backgrounders but also the briefing notes and the memoranda on this issue, and it would be of value, again, to all members of the Assembly to be able to have the full story put before us so that we could evaluate and make the best decisions on behalf of Albertans and also on behalf of the goal of protecting and preserving our wildlife populations.

Unfortunately, I am unable to completely support the amendment because it would appear to exempt two smaller sources of information from our review. I'm always a sort of more-information-is-good kind of person, so I would prefer to see all the information come forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This is an unusual position where I find myself. I see myself somewhere in between the government's position and the NDP position. [interjections] I find it a very comfortable place to be, actually.

An Hon. Member: On the fence.

Mr. Chase: No, dedicated in the trenches rather than on the fence is where I would find myself.

Anyway, to the Speaker and through the Speaker. I understand the government's sensitivity with regard to briefing notes. Briefing notes are considered, basically, the belonging, the possession of the minister. While I don't necessarily agree with that, I understand the sensitivity associated with it. However, the backgrounders and memoranda are extremely important because this government has participated in initiatives, on one hand, to save wolves and reintroduce them into Yellowstone.

I just want to very briefly indicate my thanks to a great Alberta songwriter and singer, and that's Ian Tyson, who together with his group wrote Yellowhead to Yellowstone, which tells the story of the wolves that were taken from Alberta, and it personifies the struggle they had as they encountered local wolves and tried to create a larger pack and survive.

Anyway, that's my tribute to Ian Tyson. That particular song, Yellowhead to Yellowstone, was performed by a group that consisted of a number of backup musicians from Ian Tyson's band who performed at the East Coulee music festival the first week in April.

An Hon. Member: Relevance.

Mr. Chase: The relevance is wolves and information on wolves.

As I said, this government's attitude towards wolves changes. Wolves were good enough to re-establish in packs in Montana and to re-establish in packs in Wyoming, but they weren't good enough to have an existence as part of the food chain in Alberta.

The government tried to blame wolves for the disappearance of woodland caribou. The government completely negated the effect of seismic and resource extraction roads that have turned woodland caribou habitat into a man-made criss-cross. They blamed the wolves. They targeted the wolves through aerial attack from helicopter, they targeted the wolves through poisoning. It was only when public outcry was such that they basically changed their aerial targets from wolves to deer in southeast Alberta in an attempt to get a handle on CWD. Yet this government has been supportive of importing elk and commercializing deer so that CWD, that has been detected in Saskatchewan, is also showing up in Alberta. Instead of testing the deer and the elk, the government would rather shoot the wild ones.

The information, the backgrounds and memoranda, not only on wolves but on their relationship to woodland caribou populations is extremely relevant. If we want to stop short of briefing notes, I would think that between what has been requested, backgrounders and memoranda, we would probably get a better handle.

Now, with specific regard to grizzly bears, the government seems to prize anecdotal evidence of a hunter who during a seasonal hunting experience might have seen the evidence of a grizzly, whether it's steaming or whether it's just lying there or whether it's bits of fur on a bush, but they don't seem nearly as concerned about the reports of the scientists and environmentalists and naturalists and the studies that they've taken. They seem to put a disproportionate weight on information from anecdotal.

Now, I realize that we don't have enough conservationists, that we don't have enough scientists, but taking so much evidence on anecdotal in specific zones when you consider that the whole southeastern part of Alberta is outside the auspices of hunting for grizzlies even before the moratorium, then hunters aren't going to be reporting on grizzly evidence. Yes, they still have opportunities to go after deer and elk and moose, and occasionally they might come across a grizzly during that particular experience, but we have such a vast province that depending on anecdotal evidence of hunters who in some cases do not wish to see a moratorium – they do not wish to see a grizzly bear being declared an endangered species because they have a desire to add a grizzly to their trophy as opposed to their meat collection.

In my background I've been a meat hunter. That's the kind of experience that I learned from my father. The size of the rack was not important; the size of the paw was not important. It was the quality of the meat. This idea of trophy hunting concerns me greatly. We have a natural process which, unfortunately, has been interfered with in this province through unregulated resource roads for extraction and seismic, but to put the blame onto the animal as opposed to recognizing where the blame belongs and not providing support for the animal but just simply eradicating it is unacceptable.

The information that is being proposed in this amendment is halfway there. That's why I am trying to provide a little bit of leeway to the government and ask to find information somewhere between: keep your briefing notes to yourself if that's going to make you happy, but provide the backgrounders, provide the memoranda so that we can get an accurate indication of what our wildlife population looks like.

In Banff just recently there was an avalanche that wiped out a significant number of a herd of woodland caribou. For the government to put other caribou further in danger by not maximizing the number of resource extraction roads, using the same roads for timber as for oil and gas as for seismic, is doing not only the animals but Albertans in general a disservice.

As I say, whether being a middle-of-the-road position is considered something that this government despises, if being an individual who believes in inclusion and looking at both sides is something to be greeted in a negative fashion by this government, I make no apologies. We have a wonderful province. If it's going to continue, if my grandson is going to get to see a wolf or a grizzly bear other than in a zoo circumstance or see a woodland caribou, I want to make sure this government is taking action to preserve these species. I want to see this government taking action on wildlife corridors, Y2Y, Yukon to Yellowstone.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not quite as opposed to the amendment perhaps as the previous speakers because I really feel that this is probably better than nothing, and I do believe that we need to get this information out there. Relying on anecdotal information is never the way to go, but in order for people to really understand and be able to write letters and be able to complain and be able to get people interested, they have to know what's going on. That's why I think that the information that they would share, rather than having to dig it all out through FOIP, which would be astronomical because there are many, many, many reports and certainly briefing notes and those sorts of things – some of them, of course, are probably hidden for 15 years as of the legislation of last year anyway.

I would go on record as saying that I think the amendment probably is worthy of support because at least it would be something rather than nothing.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion on amendment carried]

[Motion for a Return 11 as amended carried]

Private-public Partnership for Building Schools

M12. Ms Notley moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the initial proposal submitted by Babcock & Brown Public Partnerships Limited to the Ministry of Education for the construction of 18 Alberta schools, the findings of the selection process that resulted in Babcock & Brown Public Partnerships Limited winning a contract, the research that concluded that $118 million would be saved by constructing schools through P3s instead of through traditional methods, and the agreement signed between the government and Babcock & Brown Public Partnerships Limited to design, build, finance, and maintain these schools.

Ms Notley: As we know, the government has an agreement with Babcock & Brown Public Partnerships Limited to design, build, finance, and maintain 18 new schools in Calgary and Edmonton projected to open sometime in 2010. The agreement is set for a 30-year term. Basically, the reason we are seeking out this information is because this deal amounts to roughly a $650 million obligation on the part of Alberta taxpayers. Yet as a result of it being financed through a public-private partnership, we, of course, have this even thicker than usual cloak of secrecy that falls over the expenditure of that money on behalf of Alberta. Frankly, it shocks me that we can look at making that kind of expenditure and have so little public accountability for how it proceeds, whether it proceeds well, effectively, whether it meets the needs of the community, whether it meets the needs of Alberta taxpayers, whether it meets the needs of our bottom line, any of those things.

Of course, the government is able to simply not proceed with providing us that information under the cloak of: oh, well, it's a public-private partnership, and we couldn't possibly make that information available because it's private information that belongs to the corporation in question. I would suggest that it is well within the capacity of this government to suggest that where private industry agrees to work with government to construct capital projects, they simply need to be prepared that more information is going to become public. That's part of the quid pro quo for successfully signing what appears to be about a $650 million contract. I hardly think that's unreasonable.

Instead, what we have are these repeated opportunities for hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars to just slip through the taxpayers' fingers into these P3 financing arrangements where we lose all oversight and all control over how that money is spent. It strikes me that above and beyond all the other policy perspectives and public policy arguments against the effectiveness and the merits of P3 development, simply as taxpayers that particular one, that one issue, ought to make people stop and say: "No, we can't accept that. We cannot agree that huge, huge portions of our tax dollars must be slipped under the table somewhere to a place where we will never see them again and will never be allowed the opportunity to assess the efficacy with which they were expended."

Our offices, of course, did a FOIP request on this issue, and we were given a very, very short document with a whole bunch of pages blanked out. More importantly, all the math was blacked out because, of course, we had asked how it is that we came up with this notion that we as taxpayers would save $118 million on a $750 million project by pursuing a P3 arrangement. You know, quite reasonably we asked for the basis for this math. Again, as people who are in this House with an obligation to represent the best interests of taxpayers, to make sure that the issue is discussed broadly, comprehensively, thoughtfully, in a well-researched, well-informed manner, we simply asked for this information to be provided so that the assumptions underlying those kinds of conclusions could be openly debated and considered, but throughout our repeated requests we have never been given access to that information.

I think that that is an overwhelming rejection of our responsibility to Alberta, to Albertans, to Alberta voters, to Alberta taxpayers. This government perceives that it is the normal course of business that we would hand out really, literally, billions and billions of dollars or what may appear to be billions of dollars, ultimately if you add up all the different P3s, to private corporations and then actively and intentionally tie our hands behind our backs so that we are simply not able to engage in any kind of cost-benefit analysis for these types of investments.

It was with this objective in mind and this concern about how well a job we are doing here in this House for the people that elected us that we thought we would bring this matter to the Legislative Assembly. As I've said, under the FOIP provisions we have been unable to have that information provided to us because the whole issue of proprietary commercial information has been used to ensure that that information not go forward.

I certainly believe that there is absolutely no reason under that particular heading that the math underlying the $118 million in alleged cost savings cannot be widely distributed to Albertans for us to analyze. I, frankly, find that very hard to believe because, presumably, that $118 million assessment was done before we actually decided who would receive the final contract. In any event, even if that wasn't the case, this Assembly has the ability to provide information and to table information to members of the Assembly if ultimately it's deemed to be in the best interests of taxpayers.

I would suggest that it's very possible to provide far more information than has been provided to date without in any way jeopardizing any sort of proprietary information that could do any sort of genuine damage to the business interests of this particular company and that, on the contrary, that particular heading under which we exclude the distribution of information to the public about the public interests is far overused and far too often relied on and that there is much more room for us to be provided with the kind of information that we as Members of the Legislative Assembly have a right and an obligation to ask for and to know and to evaluate on behalf of Albertans.

It's for that reason that we are making this motion here today, seeking once and for all this information which for two years now has been kept outside of the public sphere for Albertans to view.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure I would like to urge members to reject this motion. This motion basically requests four documents: one is the initial proposal of the successful proponent; next, the findings of the selection process; the research from the public-sector comparator; and a signed agreement between the government and the successful proponent. This is all to do with the Alberta schools alternative procurement project, or ASAP 1. Don't you love the acronyms around this place?

The minister is recommending that we reject this motion for a number of reasons. Firstly, the signed agreement is already on the Ministry of Education website. Secondly, the financial information already released is consistent with what's available for other publicly tendered construction project bids. Also, Mr. Speaker, some of the information can't be released because it does have proprietary commercial information included in it, and releasing it could take away from the competitiveness of the process. It jeopardizes the proponent's ability to do business or to competitively bid on other projects. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it may even negatively influence the bid process which is currently under way for ASAP 2.

There is a rigorous process used to evaluate the bids. We're confident that the public-sector comparator is accurate. It's based on data from our own experiences building and maintaining schools all over the province, and it includes analyses from the independent consultants, Tech-Cost, and the accounting firm of PricewaterhouseCoopers. I need to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the successful proponent and the public-sector comparator numbers are already public. They, too, are on Education's website and the news release from September of 2008.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General is initiating an audit of the ASAP 1 process, and the results of that audit are expected in October of this year.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to reject this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. This government views P3s as the greatest invention since sliced bread but will not provide the details to explain their tremendous enthusiasm. Now, the government has indicated through a series of puffball questions that Babcock & Brown just coincidentally happens to be the same name as the English subsidiary that is providing the financing now that the mother company from Australia has gone bankrupt. They've assured this House and, through this House, all Albertans that there is no problem over the next 30 years of what must have been a wonderfully sweet deal, considering that it was arranged at close to the height of the boom period. Now, the information contained on the website and the so-called public-sector comparator are far from detailed. How those figures were arrived at is not included as part of the website.

With regard to these 18 P3s the publicly elected trustees had no choice whatsoever. It was to either take a P3 or not get a school. So much for the collaborative, collegial, intergovernmental approach.

As to the proprietary nature of the information Babcock & Brown would be basically competing against itself. The sweetheart deal that they got during this boom period in order to successfully rebid for the second set of 32 schools would have to be considerably lower because the cost of steel, the cost of cement, the cost of building materials, and the cost of labour have dramatically reduced during this recessionary period. So if there is some fear on the government's behalf that Babcock & Brown's bid is somehow going to be prejudiced for the next 32 schools unless the government already has predetermined that they're going to be the recipient of the bid, then providing detail that's already out there – the contract is over in the construction sense.

What remains to be seen, of course, is the keeping up of the infrastructure over the 30 years of the contract. That is such a convoluted piece of contracting that the role of the school boards in terms of daily maintenance, cleaning, and so on, versus the role of Babcock & Brown to make sure that the buildings don't fall around the students' ears, certainly isn't clearly spelled out on the website. That's the type of information we need to have.

I was very pleased when the AG indicated that he was going to provide an analysis of the 18 contracts to date. This is something that I was asking for, and when he came ahead with it, I was extremely pleased.

We need to have a sense and Albertans need to believe that this government's idea of borrowing against the future – it's cheaper to borrow money than it is to expend the money that was set aside in either our stability fund or our capital fund. If you're going to back up those mathematical beliefs, then this Babcock & Brown would be a good first place to demonstrate the reasoning behind why it's better to borrow, particularly at a time when we had sufficient money through our royalties and our surpluses to actually build them in a traditional manner, which we have maintained all along would have been cheaper and would not have required Albertans and their children to submit themselves to a 30-year mortgage on schools.

Now, it's interesting that part of the secrecy behind the contracting is not even being revealed to the school boards as to why the government is opposed to having preschool and after-school programs in these P3 schools. Somehow that's part of the proprietary information where the contractor and the investor, Babcock & Brown, get to dictate to the public school boards, who in theory own the schools but have to submit themselves to the will of the financier, whose information is hidden by the government.

The requests are all part of the transparency and accountability that this government has prided itself on under the watch of our Premier. By not providing this information and using proprietary information as an excuse, Albertans will never know what has happened until such time as this 40-year-and-running government is forced to vacate its position, and at that point the whirring that we will be hearing will be the shredding of document information.

It's a reasonable request. It has to do with transparency. It has to do with accountability. It has to do with the 30 years that this government has sentenced Alberta's children to in terms of paying for this P3 contract. For a variety of reasons I support the hon. mover of this Motion for a Return 12, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. We, too, would like to peer inside this extremely sweet deal.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you like to close the debate, hon. member?

Ms Notley: No. Question.

[Motion for a Return 12 lost]

Carbon Capture and Storage

M14. Ms Notley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence sent to the government between January 1, 2008, and February 10, 2009, from businesses and nongovernmental organizations regarding the government's funding of carbon capture and storage technology.

Ms Notley: Of course, the reason for that is that, as you can imagine, not dissimilar from some of the previous points that we've made, this government insists on expending $2 billion of taxpayers' money on this very unproven technology. That's a huge amount of money at a time when all members in this House are aware that funds are getting a little on the tight side. One has to ask why we're going ahead and whether it's really the best use of our money. Part of having that discussion is to know what in heaven's name generated this in the first place. It does seem to be such a little bit of a Hail Mary PR stunt, frankly, that's more than a little expensive.

Since the program was first announced, of course, we've had pretty much every major player in the tar sands back away from proceeding with this technology or taking part or taking advantage of this funding pot.

Of course, we know that while right now the greatest source of greenhouse gas emissions is without question coal-fired electricity generation, we also know that the fastest growth of greenhouse gas emissions is actually occurring within the tar sands. As such, if we're going to move forward and if this government wants us to continue to plan – I believe their future energy plan anticipates us having our economy built entirely in and around the tar sands for the next 50 years, yet this carbon capture storage technology: no one there is really interested in moving forward with it right now. Moreover, most people will say that the technology does not exist at this point to have an appreciable impact on greenhouse gas emission within the tar sands. It potentially – a very slim potential – could have some impact with electricity-generating coal plants but not in this area of the economy, where the government anticipates its primary economic engine to be situated for the next 50 or 60 years.

So the question then becomes: is this really a good use of our money? We know that there have been a variety of cases across the world where in most cases the private sector has backed away from engaging in the introduction of this type of technology because they see it as being far too expensive and, more importantly, simply not the most cost-effective way to address greenhouse gas emissions. They have all determined that there are far more cost-effective ways to deal with greenhouse gas emissions. It's only here, where this government sees its primary economic engine being development of the tar sands for the next five or six decades, that they don't want to acknowledge that reality. Yet the irony is that the technology is not even there for that particular part of the sector.

All that being said, $2 billion is a lot – a lot – of money. There is a tremendous lack of clarity or openness on the part of this government in terms of how they're going to administer that money, how they're going to prioritize the expenditure of that money, how that money is going to be partnered with private money, what the measures are, what it is they expect to get for that $2 billion. I mean, it's just all pie in the sky PR spin, frankly, at this point. We think that Albertans need to know more and that one way for them to know more is to receive information that the government has received in the last 13 months regarding the efficacy of carbon capture and storage technology, both in terms of its scientific efficacy as well as its environmental efficacy, and the degree of interest being articulated within and from within the business community in Alberta.

Now, once again, of course, everyone is going to say, "Oh, well, this was correspondence to the government" and all that kind of stuff, but I think that it is still possible to go through that information and provide much more than currently has been provided while maintaining confidentiality where necessary, or where the person sending that information deems it's necessary, and in some cases they may not deem that it's even necessary that their name not be attached to it. This is something that is very critical for Albertans to have access to, this information. We have heard far too much of the issue around competitive advantage and all that kind of thing, and that's why we can never give out information to Albertans. But it seems to me that if we're going to take a $2 billion pot of money and throw it on the back of a truck and jump on in with it with a big shovel and start shovelling it out, these private corporations and interests are simply going to have to be prepared to be subjected to a more transparent level of scrutiny than we as taxpayers have had access to thus far.

It is with this background in mind that we are seeking to have this information made public, to once again create an absolutely unprecedented level of transparency for all Albertans with respect to how it is that this government came up with their $2 billion plan to throw this money out the door to a bunch of people, most of whom apparently don't seem that interested in receiving it, for reasons that the experts outside of Alberta will simply agree to disagree on with respect to how effective it ultimately will be. As Albertans we have a right to know how and why the government decided to make this project the centrepiece of its so-called efforts to immunize Alberta's abhorrent environmental record from international scrutiny. I don't, of course, think that it's going to be successful, but I am certainly interested in knowing how it was that the government came to the conclusion that they thought it might be.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's quite interesting, in fact, that the member opposite and, most certainly, other members of her party and, I'm presuming, the people that her party represents in the province of Alberta appear to know so much about carbon capture and storage, seem to be so opposed to the opportunity for Albertans to engage themselves in something that the United Nations, the International Energy Agency, the European Union, individual countries like Holland and the U.K. and Norway, certainly our own Canadian federal government, and now the new administration in the United States have been so very supportive of.

Mr. Speaker, I need to say just a word while I'm here, you know, about the situation around the Aspen award that the government of Alberta has just very recently received for our work on carbon capture and storage.

We've given consideration to this motion and the proper notification to the Assembly that we're recommending to our members that this motion be rejected. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we're seeing a trend among these motions, particularly some of the ones we're dealing with now, that could possibly be interpreted as an attempt to bypass our freedom of information route. Certainly, while that might make sense under some circumstances, I would suggest that in this specific case the FOIP process is essential. I say this because the member is not looking for the government's information per se but is requesting all public correspondence received from businesses and nongovernmental organizations related to carbon capture and storage funding. Perhaps the member is seeking information on both expressions of interest and other information that we've collected from the industrial sector or vying for a portion of the money that we have funded for CCS.

Our concern here is that it would be inappropriate for the province to release that information without permission of all third parties who have submitted it. That's why we have the FOIP process, Mr. Speaker, so the member can go through appropriate channels and obtain that permission. I'm not involved in that process whatsoever, and it's administered effectively by my department staff based on the legislation we have in place.

I might suggest one other possibility for the member. As you may or may not be aware, the Alberta Energy website has posted the names of companies who have been asked to submit full project CCS proposals. If there is an interest in more information about these projects, it would be simpler to call these companies directly.

To reiterate, Mr. Speaker, there is a process in place for the member to request the information, and I recommend that all members reject this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak on the motion?

Seeing, none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

Ms Notley: I would just rise very briefly to make the point that the companies from whom we might be requesting this information are not spending $2 billion of my money, so their obligation to give that information to me is ever so slightly different than the government's obligation to give that to me, and it appears to me that members of this government have very much lost touch with that fact.

Once again, it's $2 billion, and we'd like to know just a little bit more about it. We have not received anywhere nearly an adequate amount of information from this government, and it's for this reason that, I believe, members of the Assembly would benefit from having this information provided broadly to us all.

Nuclear Power

M15. Ms Notley on behalf of Mr. Mason moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence between Bruce Power and the government regarding proposals for nuclear power in Alberta for the time period between January 1, 2006, and February 10, 2009.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. As members of this House know from a brief exchange last week, we in the NDP caucus remain very, very concerned about the transparency with respect to the issue of nuclear power being considered for introduction into Alberta. We certainly know this.

Last week we, of course, asked for the minister to commit to open, public hearings to which any Albertan could go, that would be open for people to hear what each other has to say; for there to be an open exchange of views; if necessary, if they were interested, for the media to be there. We were told, very ironically, that people who are interested are free to "attend the website." Last time I checked with most Albertans, as much as we're all becoming increasingly tech savvy, open, well-informed, respectful exchanges of ideas and debate do not occur at the website. In fact, they occur with open meetings, where people can hear each other's exchanges and participate and learn from each other and respond to what people have to say and where people proposing a certain idea are held accountable in a public way for what it is they are proposing.

Clearly, that is something which remains elusive to the people of Alberta as it relates to the issue of nuclear power. You know, it's very concerning because meanwhile we have Bruce Power, which seems to have been able to put roughly $50 million into their whole project to get nuclear power introduced into Alberta. It seems to me they wouldn't have done that without there being just a little bit of conversation with the government beforehand.

We have a government which purports to tell us that they're just putting together a neutral panel to tell us what the facts are. Then they appoint a panel that does not include environmentalists or public health experts with experience in this area but, rather, simply includes people who are advocates for nuclear power. They create that panel. The panel comes out with a report which concludes, among other things, that the waste issues around nuclear power are nowhere near as problematic as some of the environmental hazards associated with wind power. We then move into this process where we all get to attend a website for public consultation.

Nuclear power, notwithstanding the government's very cavalier approach to it and their very dismissive approach to the concerns experienced by many, many Albertans, is both expensive and dangerous. There's nothing green about nuclear energy plants. They are not renewable sources of energy; they are a nonrenewable source of energy. They create greenhouse gas emissions. They also create, as we've discussed, waste problems, which nobody has figured out how to deal with.

Most importantly – well, not most importantly; they're all very important. But another point is that, of course, they're incredibly, incredibly expensive. So we have again another sort of panacea coming from the government. If it's not $2 billion on carbon capture and storage, well, then we're going to embark upon a plan with respect to nuclear power that has never done anything other than cost taxpayers hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars.

As I say, it seems as though the deck is stacked, and Albertans, of course, deserve the opportunity to know the degree to which the deck is stacked. It is not very easy to believe that there has been no correspondence or conversation between Bruce Power and government representatives when it comes to the issue of the advisability of investing $50 million to try and get a nuclear plant in place in Alberta. For that reason, we think there's information that we're not receiving. Once again, as is a common theme with this government, while there is information that we're not receiving, there is much more effort in ensuring that we don't receive it. It is for that reason that we would like to have the information that has been exchanged between Bruce Power and the government of Alberta made public and provided to all members of this Assembly so that we can more clearly analyze where this project is at and what the various rationales are for proceeding with this and why it is that the government has managed this issue in the way that they have to this point, to date.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I do have to rise with some comments relative to what's being said here. This is kind of a déjà vu thing again with this motion, similar to the last one. But something about this I think requires a bit of rebuttal because the member is talking here about something that happened in the House relative to question period. You know, she talks about public debate. I agree that public debate is a good forum. Public debate is one thing, but I do have to say that in certain circumstances, where public harassment and public intimidation take place, that's quite another thing.

This member has indicated that what we've done here is not give Albertans an opportunity to be involved in this process. That's wrong. She has very interestingly indicated that there would be select people that would be allowed in focus groups. There was nothing of the sort, Mr. Speaker, in any of the things that we said. We said that the people would be selected randomly by an independent third party, no select people. I think that when you imply something like that, it's unfortunate that Albertans, you know, get misled by some of those types of comments that are very seriously flawed. All Albertans will have an opportunity with respect to this particular issue, and it's another, I think, situation that can be interpreted as an attempt to use the rules of the Assembly to bypass the FOIP process. I would suggest that the same principle applies to Motion for a Return 15 as it did for 14.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a point of reiterating that the Premier has committed that we will not be developing a policy position on the topic of nuclear power until we have public input. The report from the panel is now available, and its content is fact based and neutral. I've also announced the process through which we will gather feedback from Albertans. When it comes to this specific request, again, involving third-party information, I would suggest there's a process administered by the department's FOIP office and currently available to the member. For that reason, I encourage members to reject this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Two statements. Before this government leads Alberta down the nuclear road of controversial return, I am hoping that this government will conduct a province-wide plebiscite so that each Albertan of voting age has an opportunity to state through a voting process whether they believe this is the route to go. Obviously, before we get to such a plebiscite, if we should ever arrive at such a plebiscite, it is extremely important that this government provide Albertans with the greatest amount of information so that they can make a judgment based not only on emotion but on science.

This first request is one of many that will come forward asking this government to lay their cards on the table and give Albertans a sense of the direction that they're heading and recommending.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I'll just be very brief about this. There have been a couple of times now where the requests for motions for returns or even written questions have been responded to by the government saying that members of this House have access to a FOIP process. Now, I'm certainly not an expert in House procedure, but I'm pretty sure that the process of motions for returns and written questions are ones that long preceded the freedom of information process. They are processes which members of the Legislative Assembly, through our being members of the Assembly, through our having been elected by eligible voters in the province, have access to. It's a process that we have an access to that average Albertans, unfortunately, do not have access to. Those people, unfortunately, are compelled to go through the FOIP process.

Now, as this minister well knows, pretty much every FOIP request these days comes back with a cost estimate which makes it functionally impossible for anyone trying to consistently get information out of this government to do so without a grand budget the size of – oh, I don't know – the carbon capture and storage fund or something like that.

Nonetheless, the introduction of the FOIP legislation was never done to somehow negate our rights as members of this Assembly to use procedures within the Assembly which have been ours for hundreds of years as a result of parliamentary procedure. So I have to say that I'm quite concerned that somehow there seems to be an argument evolving here that we are going to now just arbitrarily eliminate the rights of elected members of this Assembly to exercise the ability to gain information from the government through a parliamentary process. One thing has nothing to do with the other, as far as I'm concerned. It is simply, I would suggest, not a legitimate ground for suggesting that information that we request be turned down.

Again, this is not just something that impacts on this little opposition over here. All members of this Assembly have this right, and it should be quite important that all members of this Assembly, even those who are not part of the inner circle, want to maintain their ability to gain access to this information as a result of the rights that flow to them by being a member of the Assembly. So I would suggest that it's not just us that needs to be worried about this trend.

Thank you very much.

School Construction Financing Audit

M17. Ms Notley moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the independent audit of the financing method being used for the construction of schools in Calgary referred to in the Assembly by the Minister of Education during Oral Question Period on Wednesday, November 7, 2007.

Ms Notley: I appreciate that this is a somewhat old reference. Nonetheless, on November 7, 2007, the Minister of Education and the now Minister for Health and Wellness mentioned an external review that took place in the summer of 2007 which compared the traditional model for building schools to the "design, build, finance, and maintain model." The minister mentioned this external review in the House but did not table the document, and the issue is still relevant today, so it's very important that we make the audits that the minister referred to public.

Albertans need the proof that they are not being misled about the actual costs of these projects. As we mentioned with respect to debate around Motion 12, we subsequently had a roughly $650 million to $700 million announcement to proceed with a public-private financing initiative in Calgary, and I believe that that was premised on this audit, which the Minister of Education referred to in November of 2007.

Once again, for the reasons that were discussed in our debate around Motion for a Return 12, we believe that it would be of value to members of the Assembly as well as to Albertans, who elected us to be here, that we get access to this audit referred to by the Minister of Education in the House in November of 2007.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure to urge members to reject this motion. The November 7, 2007, reference by the Minister of Education during question period relates to a review by an independent project financial evaluation team, consisting of financial advisers, financial market advisers, and transactions advisers. The minister advises me that releasing this information could interfere with the government's contractual or other negotiations.

I also remind all members once again, as I did in comments to an earlier motion, that the Auditor General initiated an audit of this process in March of 2009, and that audit will include a review of the financing method. Once again, I remind members that that report is expected this October.

I would like to advise the member that upon release of the Auditor General's report, the Minister of Infrastructure would be pleased to sit down with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to answer any outstanding questions that she might have. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I recommend and urge members to reject Motion for a Return 17.

The Deputy Speaker: Does any member wish to speak on the motion for a return?

Seeing none, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close.

Ms Notley: Question.

Green Transit Incentives Program

M18. Ms Notley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all proposals, project timelines, and government objectives relating to the green transit incentives program, Green TRIP, initiative for the time period of January 1, 2008, to February 10, 2009.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. This request originated as a result of the July 2008 announcement of the government to make a $2 billion commitment to fund the expansion of local, regional, and intercity public transit across the province. At the time the plan was that the program would focus on initiatives aimed at reducing carbon emissions and the number of vehicles on Alberta roads. Unfortunately, though, in the third-quarter fiscal update in February the fund was reduced from $2 billion to $195 million. Of course, we've often been told that that was never actually reduced. I'm not sure if it's because the $2 billion was not something that we should have ever relied on or that when they said $2 billion, we should have understood that that meant $2 billion over an undetermined amount of years in the future.

Nonetheless, while this reduction has occurred from $2 billion to $195 million, the government has maintained its commitment to subsidizing carbon capture and storage technology. Our interest was in finding out some of the initiatives that had been in the government's sightline when they first announced the Green TRIP program so that we could perhaps engage in a comparison in terms of the value to the goal of reducing greenhouse gas emissions between the $2 billion carbon capture and storage experiment versus what was the $2 billion Green TRIP program. That is the rationale behind this request for information to the government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the Minister of Transportation. The member has asked for copies of all proposals, project timelines, and government objectives relating to the green transit incentives program initiative for the time period of January 1, 2008, to February 10, 2009. The minister assures me that he will have no problem providing the hon. member with plenty of information about the Green TRIP program when it is finalized.

As the member knows, this is a program that was announced last July. Since then there has been frequent consultation between both the department and stakeholders from across the province to determine exactly how the criteria should be structured. This includes consultations with municipalities about the timelines for the program and the most appropriate funding criteria. Work is now under way with all of our municipal partners to reach a consensus before any move forward to the next phase of the program.

The Minister of Transportation assures me that he would be happy to provide the hon. member with information about timelines, projects, and program goals once they have been established. But at this point the minister has not received any formal proposals from any of the regional groups that they've been working with, so it's not possible to provide the information to the hon. member.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to reject this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Just to make sure it's firmly on the record, the Alberta Liberal caucus supports the notion of carbon sequestration. While it's a large amount of money in the form of $2 billion, we hope that it will kick-start a process which over the years will be of great benefit to Albertans.

We share the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's concerns about the lack of information with regard to the Green TRIP. The Green TRIP can be put into place considerably faster than the carbon sequestration because much of the infrastructure already exists. For example, the railroad tracks from High River into Calgary or from Cochrane into Calgary already exist. The side lines for rerouting commercial traffic while passenger traffic gets a priority already exist, so it's a matter of co-ordination with the municipalities, of using existing equipment in terms of rail that we currently have and upgrading.

In terms of which project can come most quickly and provide the most immediate benefit, I would suggest that the Green TRIP will provide the immediate returns, and the carbon sequestration will provide the long-term returns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:50

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, to conclude the debate.

Ms Notley: Question.

[Motion for a Return 18 lost]

Carbon Emission Reduction

M19. Ms Notley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all government research on technologies designed to reduce carbon emissions that were conducted between January 1, 2006, and February 10, 2009.

Ms Notley: A good deal of the rationale for this request has already been discussed under other motions. However, as we have mentioned, the government has decided to make a significant $2 billion investment into carbon capture and storage. What is of interest here is the degree to which the government may have looked at other technologies which are designed to reduce carbon emissions before making this decision or, alternatively, while not designed to reduce carbon emissions, have as their consequences the reduction of carbon emissions.

We'd like to know what evidence the government has that shows that carbon capture technology is, in fact, a completely viable technology worthy of such a large investment. We, of course, know that there is, without question, some investment going on in other jurisdictions, but on a per capita basis Alberta's investment is probably close to unprecedented. It would make sense, then, that we would have a lot more information put out to us with respect to what the government had to consider before making this investment, not only the information suggesting that it's viable but also the information suggesting that it might not be viable, so that we can determine whether it was a balanced assessment, one that ultimately one supports or one that we think may have been made rashly or without thought to the financial responsibility that we have to Albertans.

As well, there is, of course, the issue of comparing it to other initiatives that could reduce greenhouse gas emissions. I would suspect that the government would have had a fair amount of information at its disposal about the most effective way to bring down the greenhouse gas emissions coming from our province, either through industry or through the public, before making this kind of prioritized investment in carbon capture and storage. This is the information that we don't have before us yet. Again, this issue is not going to go away. It's an issue that is going to continue to feature prominently in our public policy debate for years and years and decades to come. It is important, then, that we know where the government is in terms of evaluating the relative merits of different greenhouse gas emission strategies at its disposal.

Really, that is what this request is going for. It's going for: what did the government have at its fingertips in the course of making and reaching these conclusions, making these decisions to spend this money on carbon capture and storage and not, for instance, on Green TRIP or whatever other initiatives but, rather, to spend it there? What information was at the fingertips of the government when it made that decision? You know, this is not a question that's going to go away either. I suspect that because the issue is so top of mind and the science is developing, there will probably be more information that will come to the government for additional consideration a year from now or throughout the next year, and we would want to know what that information is as well.

Frankly, the position on it and the consensus as to what is the best way to address this issue is going to evolve not only because science evolves and industry evolves but also because developments in other jurisdictions evolve. So as we go through that process, it would make sense, then, that the deliberations of the government, particularly the cabinet, and the documents upon which those deliberations are premised be made available to all Albertans so that we can engage in this.

The protection of the environment is of critical importance to Albertans. The way in which that balances against our economic development is also of critical importance to Albertans. The degree to which we devote $2 billion, obviously not in one year, but that amount of money is, of course, also of critical importance to Albertans. Again, members of the Assembly, I hate to harp on it, but if we're going to really sort of do our job for the people that elected us, we should be asking for this information so that we have the opportunity to evaluate it and to involve Albertans in that discussion if they would like to be involved. It's for that reason that we are pursuing this information. We will probably continue to pursue it because I expect that to the information that would be available to us right now there would be more added a year from now, and that's fine, but we should be able to see what's there at this point.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. The motion asks for copies of all government research on technologies designed to reduce carbon emissions that was conducted between January 1, 2006, and February 10, 2009. It's widely known that Alberta has globally recognized researchers leading the development of carbon reduction technology at the Alberta Research Council, the University of Alberta, and the University of Calgary as well as a number of other research institutions throughout the province.

The government strongly supports the development of such technology through the Alberta Energy Research Institute, or AERI, and new initiatives such as the $2 billion carbon capture and storage fund, the climate change and emissions management fund, and the innovative energy technologies program. Government-supported projects have a confidentiality period to allow the project sponsors enough time to protect the new intellectual property generated by these projects, many of which are ongoing. After this confidentiality period has expired, the final reports can be obtained through the energy innovation platform of Alberta database. The website, for anyone who wishes to have a look at it, is eipa.alberta.ca.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge members to reject Motion for a Return 19.

Ms Notley: I would simply rise to say that while that information is of assistance, we weren't simply looking at information that was created or generated by the Alberta government itself but rather that which was at its disposal and which entered into its consideration or deliberations with respect to the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. So I think that we could use more information.

Thank you.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Low-speed Vehicles

505. Mr. Elniski moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to permit the use of low-speed vehicles on roads with a posted speed limit of up to 60 kilometres per hour.

Mr. Elniski: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise in this Assembly today and begin debate on Motion 505, which urges this government to permit the use of low-speed vehicles, or LSVs, on Alberta's public roads with a maximum speed limit of up to 60 kilometres an hour. While the debate on this issue is somewhat contentious, I believe it is beneficial for this Assembly to discuss what LSVs are and how they can contribute positively to the lifestyles of Albertans. These vehicles would provide an environmentally friendly transportation alternative for Albertans with short-distance, inner-city travel needs.

Mr. Speaker, low-speed vehicles are relatively new to the North American market, and as such it is probable that they are unfamiliar to some of my colleagues. In short, they are electrically powered vehicles that do not require conventional fuels. Instead, once the vehicle's battery is depleted, it is simply recharged by plugging it into a standard household outlet. A refill typically costs around 40 cents. These vehicles are powered by a rechargeable electric battery and do not produce any emissions. With a limited top speed threshold of up to 60 kilometres an hour LSVs are intended primarily for closed-course activity or lower-speed urban roadways. We cannot take these vehicles and place them on the highways alongside high-speed vehicles, and this is not what Motion 505 urges our government to do.

This technology proposes financial and environmental benefits for all Albertans and for our province. First, low-speed vehicles would provide Albertans with a significant long-term savings as they do not require gasoline or any other form of energy. Furthermore, the cost of the vehicle itself is competitive in comparison to other small vehicles. Essentially the upfront cost of the vehicle is inexpensive, and the maintenance and long-term fuel costs are nearly nonexistent as the vehicle does not utilize an engine or have a significant number of moving parts.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that these vehicles would be an ideal solution for those who commute within our cities. As most members of this Assembly know, I currently own and drive a Smart car. It is a practical, compact, and efficient means for everyday travel. It parks very well, scoots in and out of traffic, and is quite quick. Well, it's just quick enough. Although a Smart car serves a similar purpose, a more environmentally friendly option exists with the electric-powered LSV, and it would also have room for my golf clubs. This option would not only benefit me but thousands of fellow Albertans with modest transportation needs, the most prevalent, of course, being seniors. Many seniors have short-range travel needs and could save money on refueling costs.

Should this Assembly pass Motion 505, it would encourage this government to join numerous other jurisdictions within Canada and North America. In today's Edmonton Journal, Mr. Speaker, it was well identified that red tape is really the roadblock, not consumer demand.

There is hope. In June of 2006 the government of British Columbia amended its Motor Vehicle Act to include a definition for a neighbourhood zero emission vehicle, or an NZEV. The legislation permits the use of these vehicles on a highway with a posted speed limit of up to 40 kilometres an hour or less, or if authorized by the minister of transportation, up to 50 kilometres an hour. In August of 2008 the district of Oak Bay became the first British Columbia municipality to authorize the use of LSVs on its streets. Following this, Vancouver city council enacted legislation to permit the use of NZEVs on roads with speeds of up to 50 kilometres per hour, making Vancouver the first major Canadian city to do so.

Other provinces have also initiated pilot programs to test the feasibility of LSV use. In July of 2008 the Ontario government launched a five-year pilot program to help determine the appropriate safety standards for LSVs so that they may be used on Ontario roads. Due to the safety concerns associated with LSVs, the Ontario government only permits these vehicles in Ontario parks and conservation areas, which nonetheless is still a step in the right direction.

In 2008 the government of Quebec announced the launch of a three-year pilot program to study low-speed vehicles. The purpose of that program is to test the vehicles on certain public roads, develop traffic safety rules for the vehicles, and establish norms with regard to the safety equipment for LSVs. This program permits the vehicles that participate in the program to operate on roads with speed limits of up to 50 kilometres an hour. They must exceed the standards for low-speed vehicles set by Transport Canada, and the cars must include, in addition to other things, windshield wipers, a defrosting and heating system, three-point seatbelts, and a horn.

The United States has also implemented legislation for the use of LSVs in 40 states. For example, the state of Montana has legislation that permits vehicles on the roads at speeds of up to 45 miles per hour. Other states such as Wisconsin have passed legislation that permit its municipalities to govern the use of LSVs within their borders.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Alberta should join these jurisdictions in promoting the use of these vehicles. Doing so would promote Canadian business at a time of economic uncertainty. Canadian corporations are the leaders in the development of low-speed vehicles, such as the ZENN Motor Company headquartered in Toronto or Dynast motors headquartered in Vancouver.

I understand that several members have expressed their concerns with regard to the safety features of these vehicles. I cannot argue the fact nor can we legislate against physics, Mr. Speaker, that says that if an LSV is hit by an SUV, the LSV will certainly come out second best. Risk exists in any vehicle we operate, but with risk comes basic levels of protection. For a cyclist or a motorcyclist the first form of protection is the helmet; for LSVs it is the seatbelt and safety glass; for high-speed vehicles it is cabin integrity, primary and secondary restraint systems, and electronic vehicle stability control. In all cases, the universal goal is to prevent accidents from occurring. In the case that an accident does occur, features must be in place to minimize the damage to the occupants. I believe that we can work with LSV manufacturers to implement the appropriate safety standards for these vehicles in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage my colleagues to support Motion 505 because it would provide an inexpensive form of transportation for Albertans and continue to promote our dedication to a healthy environment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. I stand in support of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder and his desire to move us towards a greener transportation system. Previously in our motions for returns we talked about the government initiative of the Green TRIP. This is one way of individuals getting an opportunity to participate in a green trip experience of their own.

This past January I had an opportunity to visit a brother-in-law and sister-in-law who were leasing a wonderful spot at a golf course in Sun City in Palm Desert. It surprised me that local shopping centres in Palm Springs and Palm Desert had designated golf cart parking spots. In fact, I stopped to take pictures of these because I'd never seen anything like it off a golf course.

The technology exists, and incorporating it and, obviously, licensing, both in terms of licensing the vehicle and licensing the driver – whether it's a lower speed vehicle or not, safety has to extend beyond just the proper type of signal lights, the proper type of horn, the proper type of seat belts. We cannot lull ourselves into the thought that less road safety or training is required for these vehicles because if they can obtain speeds of up to 60 kilometres an hour, they can do a significant amount of damage to pedestrians and to property. Obviously, that licensing is going to be an important part of the conversation.

I remember in my broke high school days how the kids who were, basically, one step above the bicycle were those that drove their moped, pedal motorcycles, to school. Of course, they were shunned by the people who had the Yamaha 300s or the Honda dream bikes at that time. The moped has now transformed itself into an electrical bicycle/cycle as one of the LSV prototypes. So getting people off of a nonrenewable resource, gas and oil, and saving the gas and oil for larger concerns – transportation of goods, the heating of homes, conserving as well as preserving our environment – are both wonderful considerations that LSVs would provide.

Also when I was down in the States, I saw a variety of individuals from police officers to mailmen using this type of two-wheeled vehicle to great effect. The idea that they can be recharged potentially with the use of green power, whether it be from hydro or whether it be from wind power, whether it be from solar in the sense that the energy can be stored and recharged in battery form, is a tremendous innovation for a world that has been so reliant on oil and gas revenue and, as I say, will continue to be reliant in a number of areas. If we can conserve in this particular area, I think it would be of tremendous value.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder pointed out, there are still dangers associated with this type of vehicle. In terms of the pecking order, as he pointed out, his Smart car would win in a jousting competition between an LSV and a Smart car. Mind you, he's very well aware that his Smart car would come out second best with any regular vehicle. We have to make sure that the safety regulations, the licensing, the instruction, the expectations, from eye exams to demonstrating capabilities of operating these vehicles, must be maintained. But I commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for bringing us further into the 21st century, talking about conservation, talking about a combination of electrical vehicular transportation.

One area that I would just like to conclude with is that we would hope as the Alberta Liberal opposition to be moving the government towards the compromise between the LSVs and the gas-operated vehicles, and that is obviously the hybrid, where you rely not only on gasoline but you also have an electric component to your vehicle. I realize that technology hasn't advanced to the point where you could have, for example, a conservation officer out patrolling a forestry road miles and miles from his station, and therefore there still is a place for regular vehicles and three-quarter ton trucks to haul the equipment and so on, but this low-speed vehicle is definitely a jolt, a bolt in the right direction.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I believe that I have to try to set the record straight here a little bit. I believe that the hon. member had some very, very good intentions to urge the government to do this, but we first have to have an understanding on what LSVs are. There is a difference between an LSV [interjections] and a car that actually meets all of the national safety codes or national safety standards.

There are well over 40 regulations and standards to meet on cars to be able to be registered for the streets or the roads in Canada. Most LSVs only have three of those codes. One is a vehicle identification number. Most LSVs are glorified golf carts, Mr. Speaker. Transport Canada has done a crash test with them and found them to be very, very unsafe if you put them into traffic with regular type vehicles. We have absolutely no problem with letting people register vehicles for the road that meet all the safety standards that are required in Alberta today.

This is a motion urging the government to look at this. In fact, we have two pilot projects going on in the province of Alberta right now, one in the Jasper townsite because there are no roads in the Jasper townsite over 40 kilometres an hour. We have a test pilot going, allowing these on the road. I understand that in the winter with some of the different models, because of the type of features they have, they've had problems. As soon as they let off – I can't call it the gas – the electronic throttle, I guess, the accelerator, it locks up the back wheels, and the thing goes into spins.

The hon. member mentioned that he drove a Smart car. It may be as small as some of these LSVs, but it meets all the safety criteria required to be on the roads in Alberta. What we're saying is that you can't turn vehicles that are not designed with the safety features into the same traffic volume as the others. Some of these LSVs will go as high as 70 kilometres an hour, but for most of them the top speed is around 40 to 45, and they're just not safe in speed limits over that. They're not really safe to be mixing in with the other large traffic.

Because we're already doing the pilot project, because we're trying to look at every different situation we can to reduce greenhouse gas emissions – that's why we have Green TRIP coming forward, Mr. Speaker – I would urge this House to say, no, no, no, not till we get safety. There's no reason to have brought this forward to even look at. I would urge all the hon. members in this House to think of safety, safety for all Albertans, and defeat this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Okay. All right. I totally can understand the minister coming from the safety point of view, and certainly it's something to consider, but I would like to commend the mover of this motion to even get this discussion going. We have to think big; we have to think forward. Every time I drive in from the airport, I see that mess at 23rd Avenue, whatever it is, where they're trying to put in the interchange that probably should have been put in when they had to go out and build South Common or whatever it was. I mean, it's small, small thinking. We've got to think big.

We have to think that in the future we will have electric cars, we will have electric bicycles, we will have all these kinds of things, so why aren't we thinking ahead and looking at our transportation corridors and putting in an area where these particular vehicles would be safe? All we're doing is building roads for cars that are going to go a hundred clicks in an 80-mile-an-hour zone or you don't get where you want to go. I mean, even highway 2. I know we've got our sheriffs out, but if you still don't go 140, you're not going anywhere on highway 2. I think this is really good, forward thinking and needs to be discussed.

I don't know how many people have had the opportunity to actually travel in Europe. I have been privileged to do that. You see these little cars. Unfortunately, they do park on the sidewalks in Paris, and you have to walk around them; same in Italy. Rome is atrocious. But at least they move around.

Granted, their city streets, particularly in the older sections – well, Rome is probably about 2,000 years old, their section downtown. The streets are narrow, and they don't move as fast as we move our traffic here in North America, but they do have areas for small cars. They do have areas for bicycles. I mean, obviously, the perfect example is Holland, where at the stop signs and at the traffic lights the bicycles certainly outnumber the cars. They accommodate that sort of forward thinking.

I want to commend the member again because it is forward thinking. It is going to have to come. We've got to start thinking of our transportation corridors and how they can accommodate, clearly, what will be the environmental way of moving around safely.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a day at the Alberta Legislature: the Minister of Transportation talking about LSD and the Minister of Environment about the Green TRIP and pot-smoking advocates outside, and here we're talking about little cars. But the Member for Edmonton-Calder should be commended for the motion.

Let's face it: for those who are not familiar with the process of the Legislature, of Parliaments, motions are not binding on government. All they are is a means of instigating discussion, a conversation among elected members and the population at large. I think the time has come to look at alternative forms of transportation not only for environmental reasons, which are sound reasons, but also simply for our ability to move people through congested cities.

I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if a safe electric or any other environmentally friendly vehicle was developed, it would definitely make a great addition as a second vehicle to my family. I live at a very odd location where I cannot walk to a local grocery store. I cannot even walk to pick up a cup of coffee because I'm in suburbia. It's too far to walk, but it's really too close to drive. It's just a few minutes' drive. Individuals would be able to use such vehicles for short shopping trips, dropping off kids at a game, or whatever it is that they do within their immediate neighbourhoods. So I commend the Member for Edmonton-Calder for at least bringing this discussion forward.

There may not be a vehicle at this time on the market that meets our standards. The Minister of Transportation definitely makes some valid points. We cannot legalize vehicles on roads that simply will create carnage and put Albertans at risk and peril. But we should let the world know that Alberta is open to welcome and introduce vehicles on the road as long as they meet our environmental and our safety standards. I think Albertans are ready to at least consider it.

Mr. Speaker, I imagine that 15 years ago, if one was to sit on a Vespa and ride one through the city, there would be some chuckles and laughs. Now they have become a fashion statement, and Vespas are selling like hotcakes throughout urban Alberta. I'm not sure about rural Alberta. My colleague the minister – I guess not. Harleys are still the preference in rural Alberta, but one can be cool and respected riding a Vespa in Edmonton right now. So I think that pretty soon a safe electric, slow-moving vehicle will be acceptable in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I have a list of people who wish to speak here, so I will recognize, following this list, the hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak in support of Motion 505 on low-speed vehicles, and I commend my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for bringing this forward.

While there are some concerns over the safety of low-speed vehicles on public roads, there are possibly some restrictions that could go along with their use to alleviate these concerns so that the environmentally friendly method of travel could be a viable option. While the current motion allows for low-speed vehicles on roads with posted speed limits of 60 kilometres per hour, I would encourage the government to explore 50 kilometres an hour as a maximum speed for the vehicle itself to increase safety in addition to, perhaps, a few other limitations.

At least initially, Mr. Speaker, I would propose that the government set up a pilot project, and I'm pleased to hear that the government has set up a pilot project. I wasn't aware of that. But to pose a few further limitations, firstly, I would suggest that they only be allowed in towns with a population of, perhaps, less than 5,000 and that they only be allowed initially during daylight hours. I would also be inclined to make their use subject to municipal approval, control, and regulation. In that way, the people who are closest to the situation and who will be aware of the safety concerns and who will be able to monitor it the best will be fully in charge.

Mr. Speaker, by giving people a choice to use low-speed vehicles in such a manner, we're offering them an alternative that is both inexpensive and low in emissions without compromising safety. As people are becoming increasingly aware of the financial and environmental impact of their daily actions, I think it is important for the government to explore creative ways of offering citizens more options where they can.

Now, we're not the first jurisdiction to explore the use of low-speed vehicles on public roads, as the mover has indicated. We can learn from how it has worked in other jurisdictions to develop our own regulation and implementation system that is good for the province of Alberta and particularly our weather conditions.

I salute the hon. Minister of Transportation for setting up the pilot projects. A pilot project in a small town or a few small towns could be a good way of seeing how low-speed vehicles might work in our communities and if it can be further implemented in the whole province.

Just an aside, Mr. Speaker, speaking of glorified golf carts, around 20 years ago in a small town in southern Alberta of – I don't know – 3,000 to 4,000 my father was given special approval to use his golf cart to drive from his home to the golf course, which was about five to six blocks away. As far as I know, there were never any problems with that. I'm sure it was fairly closely monitored by the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, I have some cautionary reservations about the wholesale use of low-speed vehicles, but I do support their use in principle. It's somewhat ironic that we have heavy restrictions for four-wheeled low-speed vehicles, yet we don't have any similar restrictions on two-wheeled vehicles.

In this context I urge the government to investigate this matter further. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Motion 505, which urges the government to amend the Traffic Safety Act to permit the use of low-speed vehicles on roads with a posted limit of 60 kilometres or less. Such an amendment would be an inexpensive, zero-emission alternative method of transportation for Albertans. Essentially, low-speed vehicles are electrically powered vehicles that utilize batteries rather than a motor engine, no carbon emissions, capable of reaching speeds up to 40 kilometres an hour.

It could mean a variety of benefits for Albertans, especially for those in urban areas. Primarily these LSVs would offer consumers an affordable option for transportation. For instance, the ZENN Motor Company, mentioned earlier, a Canadian manufacturer of low-speed vehicles, offers the 2009 ZENN LSV starting at just $15,995. It sounds like I'm in my previous life here, for a second. The figure compares favourably with a number of entry-level vehicles currently listed on the market. In addition, LSVs require no gasoline or any other form of fuel, so this could mean significant savings for Albertans over the life of the vehicle.

An Hon. Member: It's the warranty.

Mr. Quest: It's the warranty.

Mr. Speaker, because LSVs do not produce any carbon emissions, they also offer an environmentally friendly alternative form of transportation.

The ongoing research and development of low-speed vehicles is also quite compelling. Advancements and improvements are being made at a very fast pace. For instance, in late '09 the ZENN Motor Company plans to introduce a city ZENN, which will utilize the revolutionary ultracapacitor battery. The battery would permit a range of 400 kilometres and a recharging time of five minutes. These advances will make the LSVs even more practical for consumers.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 505 has the transportation interests of Albertans at heart by providing an inexpensive and environmentally friendly alternative to drivers with intracity transportation needs. This government has the opportunity now to significantly expand the transportation horizons available for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta is not alone in considering the usage of LSVs on public roads. As we've heard earlier, actually, from several hon. members, several jurisdictions in Canada and the U.S. have already established legislation and pilot projects for the use of low-speed vehicles, including our own, as previously mentioned by the hon. Minister of Transportation. Similarly, in the United States approximately 40 states have established legislation which permits the use of LSVs on public roads. I'm encouraged to hear the progress being made in other jurisdictions but also believe that it's imperative that we choose a path that's right for Alberta.

Permitting the use of these vehicles deserves due consideration to ensure that appropriate action is taken. While I've highlighted some of the benefits of these vehicles, I strongly believe that it's important to consider the safety concerns expressed by Transport Canada, which does not recommend the use of LSVs on public roads. First, as outlined earlier by the hon. Minister of Transportation, low-speed vehicles are only required to meet three of the nearly 40 safety category requirements demanded of passenger vehicles in order to be eligible for importation and sale in Canada.

While these vehicles would be limited to roads of speed limits up to 60 kilometres per hour, significant damage could occur to the vehicle and the passengers in the event of an accident. The risk would be even greater in the event that the driver of the other vehicle was speeding. Indeed, Transport Canada crash tests have confirmed that significant damage can occur to these vehicles in the event of an accident. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government should proceed with caution in considering these vehicles for use on our roads and for the benefit of all Albertans.

I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for bringing forward this thoughtful motion. I'll look forward to the rest of the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to spend a few moments to join in on Motion 505, which urges the government to permit the use of low-speed vehicles on roads with a posted speed limit of up to 60 kilometres per hour.

First, I would like to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for bringing this motion forward. Motion 505 has some very strong aspects to it. It would provide Alberta's drivers with the opportunity to make a choice in their mode of transportation and therefore produce positive economic and environmental effects in those individuals' lives. The freedom to make choices that affect your own life is very important to me. This proposed motion would allow people to make positive choices in two very important aspects of their lives, economic well-being and environmental stewardship.

First, it would allow Albertans the opportunity to travel within urban areas in a cost-efficient manner. The cost of fuel can create an incredible strain on many families in Alberta. As we all know, gasoline is expensive and will most likely continue to be expensive for the foreseeable future; $300 a month to $500 a month adds up and could be money in the pockets of Albertans and Alberta families. This would create disposable income and allow Albertans the opportunity to spend their hard-earned money on anything they desire in order to improve their quality of life.

Aside from the economic benefits for everyday Albertans, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to talk about the environmental benefit that this motion touches on. One of the goals of this government is to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, so a move to reduce those emissions in daily commutes is consistent with the approach that the government is already taking.

If this Assembly would indulge me, I would like to speak about the city of Edmonton for a minute since that is the city I know the best. Mr. Speaker, I have lived in Edmonton all my adult life. I have experienced, as I am sure many of my colleagues have, the full force of rush hour traffic. All that stopping and accelerating, all the idling on red lights and traffic jams will add some amount of greenhouse gas emissions. Low-speed vehicles could be a great option for those who are environmentally conscious and want to be able to drive on urban roadways with zero or next to zero emissions.

I know there are already low-cost and low-pollution options within the city. For example, I see many people who ride their bicycles to work every day. However, that option is simply not practical in the wintertime in Alberta. Another option for commuters is using the Edmonton Transit System. I do recognize and appreciate the recent work of the city of Edmonton in expanding the LRT and incorporating more parts of the city into their bus routes, but obviously even public transit cannot reach everyone all the time. So I do believe that there is a need to examine other options for daily commuters within our communities and municipalities.

However, there are some issues with this particular type of vehicle that cannot be overlooked. I am talking about the safety issues. As we have heard, Mr. Speaker, vehicles that are classified as passenger cars must meet up to 40 safety categories in order to be eligible for importation and sale in Canada under the Canada Motor Vehicle Safety Act. The low-speed vehicles in question meet just three of those safety standards. Some notable omissions are the lack of the need for mirrors, head restraints, occupant protections, and roof intrusion protection.

Now, these vehicles can travel at a maximum of 40 kilometres per hour, maybe 50 with a stiff wind at their back. At that speed the impact of any collision would be substantially less severe than a highway collision, where vehicles continuously travel in excess of 100 kilometres per hour. It doesn't take a mathematician to figure out that if we have one low-speed vehicle travelling 40 kilometres per hour and one truck travelling 60 kilometres an hour, in a head-on collision you would be colliding at 100 kilometres an hour.

As a journeyman mechanic I have seen enough of these collisions to know that even at 40 kilometres per hour a vehicle needs head restraint and occupant protection. I have seen regular-size vehicles damaged beyond repair when they collided with a large truck or a bus. These low-speed vehicles would obviously fare far worse, and the passengers would go from suffering whiplash or a broken leg to something far more serious.

However, Mr. Speaker, the positive impact regarding personal choice and environmental protection that this motion would bring about is more than strong enough to warrant a further look from this government. Therefore, I support this motion so long as these major safety issues are addressed while the regulations are being implemented.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 505, which proposes to urge the government to amend the Traffic Safety Act to permit the use of low-speed vehicles, or LSVs, on roads with posted speed limits of 60 kilometres per hour or less.

In doing so, the government of Alberta would permit and promote an inexpensive, zero-emission alternative method of transportation for use on our roads. Because they do not have a gasoline or diesel engine, LSVs do not produce any carbon emissions. This would provide Albertans with an environmentally friendly alternative form of transportation and would fall in line with the government's priority to reduce greenhouse emissions.

Low-speed vehicles would be ideal cars for driving to the grocery store or dropping a son or daughter off at friends', movie theatres, or the mall. Mr. Speaker, having three children of my own, I can speak from my own personal experience on this point. Furthermore, the LSVs could present an inexpensive, viable alternative for drivers with inner-city transportation needs. This would alleviate some of the strain that is placed on our public transit system.

In addition, LSVs would provide an inexpensive mode of transportation to low-income families, many of whom live in Edmonton-Mill Woods, who may not be able to afford a regular car and the expensive cost of refueling. It was not too long ago that gas prices were well over $1.20 a litre. These high prices made it impossible for many low-income families in my constituency to fill up gas tanks and forced many of them to park the family car. By allowing LSVs on the road, these low-income families would be able to drive their cars for mere pennies a day.

I would like to point out that many jurisdictions in Canada and around the world have amended their traffic safety laws to allow low-speed vehicles on their roads. In June 2006 the government of British Columbia amended its Motor Vehicle Act regulations to include the definition of neighbourhood zero-emission vehicles. Municipalities are permitted at their discretion to pass bylaws to permit the use of neighbourhood zero-emission vehicles on public roads with speeds of up to 50 kilometres per hour.

Today the district of Oak Bay and the city of Vancouver have passed such bylaws, permitting these vehicles access to the vast majority of their road networks. Other jurisdictions have launched pilot programs in order to test the suitability of these vehicles on their roads and determine appropriate safety standards. In September 2006 the Ontario government announced a five-year pilot project to permit low-speed vehicles in provincial and municipal parks and conservation areas. More recently, on December 5, 2008, the Ontario government announced that new regulations and guidelines would be released over the course of the winter that would allow the use of low-speed vehicles on provincial roads. Furthermore, in 2008 the government of Quebec announced the launch of a three-year pilot project to study the use of low-speed vehicles on certain public roads and develop safe traffic rules for their use. In the United States 40 states have enacted laws that allow low-speed vehicles to be used on their highways.

Mr. Speaker, by allowing LSVs onto our roads, we would be helping the environment by encouraging alternatives to carbon-emitting vehicles and helping the Alberta government meet its own greenhouse gas reduction targets. It would assist low-income families by alleviating the cost of expensive gasoline fuel, providing more money for essentials such as groceries and clothing.

Even though there is a capacity for this initiative, there are also negatives. Transport Canada, as mentioned by our hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, does not encourage the use of LSVs on public roads as these vehicles are required to meet only three of the nearly 40 safety requirements that are met by passenger vehicles. In fact, recent Transport Canada crash tests have demonstrated that LSVs are, in fact, a safety hazard to drivers.

Even though these vehicles are legally limited to a maximum speed of 40 kilometres per hour, significant damage can be incurred to the vehicle and occupants without the necessary safety features. It is also an unfortunate fact that many drivers continue to speed on our roads, which would inflict even greater damage to the vehicle. As mentioned before, this motion would encourage the use of LSVs on roads with a maximum speed limit of 60 kilometres per hour. A vehicle travelling at 80 kilometres per hour could inflict critical damage to an LSV travelling at its maximum permitted speed of 40 kilometres per hour.

Mr. Speaker, I thank our good friend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder for bringing forward this thoughtful motion. Should LSV manufacturers incorporate increased safety standards in the future, these vehicles could prove to be a viable alternative form of transportation for our province and for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do not have a wonderful prepared speech for this, but I did want to get in with a couple of points here. First of all, I want to thank the member for bringing this motion forward and also commend the government on having moved forward with two LSV projects here in Alberta already. There are a couple of things that I would like to raise as points, though.

First of all, these vehicles, though they are small, do take an enormous amount of greenhouse gases to manufacture, and they do leave behind enormously big electrical batteries that will have to be disposed of. Even though people can feel really good about travelling along without being able to see the greenhouse gases that they are producing, there are, actually, greenhouse gases being produced. Where do we get our electricity from? It does not magically come from the world. So, you know, people can feel really good about driving around in these vehicles, even if they are heavy on the environment as most things that we do as people are.

Now, the other thing that I did want to raise was that there are no government regulations or no rules in the world that we can create which will overcome the laws of physics. If you have a big tanker truck coming down the street, and there's another SUV, which you might think is nice and big, and that tanker truck meets up with the SUV, that SUV is going to get wiped out. Similarly, if we have one of these wonderful little LSVs, and it gets hit by an SUV, well, hey, the SUV is bigger and, yeah, it's going to wipe out the LSV. There are no regulations that we can come to that will solve that problem.

At the same time, we also allow bicycles – bicycles – on our streets. We allow bicycles on those streets or motorcycles on those streets – okay? – those same streets that we allow cars and trucks on, and for some reason we seem to think that that's all right. How come all of a sudden we've got an LSV, and it's not all right to have it on that street, that same street that you have a little bicycle on? Hey, you know, we've got to get that figured out a little bit there.

All in all, I believe that this is something that we should be moving forward with. This is something that our constituents want. You know, these cars are another form of transportation, which I do believe we should be moving forward with. So I very much support the Member for Edmonton-Calder with this motion and hope that you will also support it.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members who wish to join the debate?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to close the debate.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to rise and close debate and conclude the discussion on Motion 505. First, I would very much like to thank each of you who rose today to speak to this motion, including, of course, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

I was a little nervous about the motion, I have to say. As I'd mentioned before, of course, the order of the motion is to urge the government to permit the use of the LSV, and with that, I certainly understand the need for some controls. The 60 kilometres an hour number is selfish because if I'm going to get one of these and drive it to work, I've got to have the 60 K limit, or I can't really use it.

I want to talk a little bit for a moment about a couple of the points that some of the hon. members have raised. First of all, hon. members, I'd like to assure all of you that we are not talking about modified golf carts. There is no correlation between an LSV and an electric golf cart. These go considerably faster and have . . . [interjection] No, actually, the LSV goes faster. They have considerably more technology in them than we're familiar with when we're on the golf course.

In saying that, I'll give you a couple of little stats because, you know, sometimes I'm kind of good for the technical side. Typically an electric golf cart has a battery pack capacity of somewhere between 36 and 48 volts. The smallest LSV has a battery pack of approximately 72 volts, and when you get into the high-end one, which is a car called the Tesla, it has a 200-volt battery pack and is capable of doing about 160 kilometres an hour. [interjection] Two hundred volts. Tesla, yes.

Indeed, I fully understand and I fully appreciate the concern and the discussion about the safety standards for the LSV, but I trust that everyone here will realize that the standards are somewhat a function of the number of wheels on the vehicle. If the LSV had three instead of four wheels . . .

Mr. Lukaszuk: It would be a tricycle.

Mr. Elniski: That's right. It would be a tricycle, and the majority of the CMV safety standards that apply to four-wheeled motor vehicles would not apply. In fact, in their existing form, with three wheels LSVs would be perfectly legal to drive.

Mr. Lukaszuk: It would be called Vespa.

Mr. Elniski: They would be called Vespas with side cars, actually. Yes, very much so.

I believe that LSVs will benefit Albertans with limited travel options in a number of ways. We've talked, certainly, about the savings in fuel and people's ability to use the money on other things. Because LSVs are powered by batteries, they emit no at-source greenhouse gases. We won't get into the whole generating electricity with coal thing. As has also been mentioned, you know, the car would be useful for a trip to the grocery store, to drop your kids off at the arena. For these short-distance trips, Mr. Speaker, the environmental benefits are clear. [interjection] No, I wouldn't, if I were you, hon. member, but you might.

Furthermore, I believe that LSVs would be a better option for many Albertans, certainly, than motorcycles or bicycles, both of which are currently permitted on the streets. The one thing that really motivated me to do this, Mr. Speaker, is that in my constituency I have many people who ride four-wheeled, single-seat scooters, a number of them who drive them on the streets.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that Alberta should join its neighbouring provinces of Saskatchewan, Ontario, and Quebec and explore the uses of LSVs on the road. I believe we can deal with the safety issues. If this motion passes, I want the first one.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair just wants to remind all of you here that the chair will call for the voice vote, so make sure your voice is heard.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: Before I call on the Deputy Government House Leader, I want to remind all hon. members here that this Chamber will be used tomorrow morning, so please clear the desks. Take your laptop away with you and so on.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:53 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 21, 2009

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, and welcome.

Let us pray. On the Holocaust remembrance monument located on the grounds of the Alberta Legislature are found the following words: "I swore never to be silent whenever and wherever human beings endure suffering and humiliation. We must always take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the tormented." These words were written by Elie Wiesel – survivor, poet, Nobel prize recipient. May God provide all innocent victims of racism and genocide eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, today in the Speaker's gallery, in the public gallery, and in the members' gallery are a number of special guests. The Royal Canadian Legion Alberta-NWT Command takes a keen interest in promoting Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. We're very much appreciative both of their financial support and their involvement for this annual event, which began yesterday afternoon and will conclude later this afternoon. In the Speaker's gallery are members of the Alberta-NWT Command executive council. I'll ask them to rise as I call out their names. Mr. Don Orr, the Legion's command president, accompanied by his wife, Beryl Orr; Rod Stewart, command vice-president, and his wife, Joyce Stewart; Dave Horrocks, command vice-president; and Gordon McDonald, chairman, Alberta-NWT Command.

Sixty-four students are also here with us today who are participants in the MLA for a Day program. Yesterday the participants spent time at the Royal Canadian Legion, debated a resolution, and toured the Legislature Building. This morning they were in this Chamber sitting in your chairs as we had a special seminar for them. They also visited with members in their offices, they attended the Holocaust memorial service, and they lunched with many of you prior to Oral Question Period today. These young people are seated in both galleries, and I would now ask all of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly special guests from the government of Abu Dhabi: Mr. Ghulam Wani is adviser to the chairman's office, Department of Economic Development; and Mr. Khalid Al Hosani is acting director of the contractors and consultants classification division, Department of Economic Development. Accompanying the delegation are Mr. Neil Windsor, who is the executive director of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta, and his colleague Mr. Jim Beckett, president-elect.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta and Abu Dhabi have a friendly relationship and a history of successful interaction. In particular, Alberta has a strong trade relationship with Abu Dhabi as part of our overall trade with the United Arab Emirates. Over the last three years Alberta's exports to the United Arab Emirates have averaged $175 million per year. It's important that Alberta continues to build on this relationship, which is why I led a mission to the Emirates last year. During that mission I met with government officials and business representatives in Abu Dhabi. I also had the privilege of speaking at Abu Dhabi's world-renowned International Petroleum Exhibition and Conference.

Mr. Speaker, we are very pleased that our friends are with us today, and we welcome the opportunity to strengthen our connection with Abu Dhabi. I would like our special guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a gentleman from my constituency of Stony Plain. Mr. John Rebus is here today in the House to view democracy in action and view the debate on Bill 19. He's very interested in that bill. John is in the members' gallery. I'd ask him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 28 seniors from my constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods. They are led by their group leaders, Mr. Don De La Fosse and Mrs. Joan De La Fosse. One of them told me during our picture taking in the rotunda that she has been in Edmonton, Alberta, for 50 years and that this is the first time she has visited the beautiful building of our Alberta Legislative Assembly. These good-looking seniors from Edmonton-Mill Woods are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 18 individuals seated in the public gallery who are here today to witness the Committee of the Whole proceedings on Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. I do not have a list of their names, but I would ask that they now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Community Spirit.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we recognize a very significant day in the Jewish lunar calendar. April 21 is Yom ha-Shoah, also known as Holocaust Memorial Day. The date is recognized world-wide in remembrance of the approximately 6 million Jews who died during the Holocaust as well as others who suffered and fought during the horrific events of the atrocity.

In Alberta communities and families observe this day by remembering and recalling the victims of this catastrophe. Survivors tell their stories so that their children and future generations will never forget, all in an effort to ensure that such a tragedy never happens again. Earlier today I took part in a Yom ha-Shoah ceremony organized by the Jewish Federation of Edmonton on the Alberta Legislature Grounds. I urge all Albertans to recognize this very important day and, in doing so, to reflect on our individual and collective roles in the fight against religious, racial, and other forms of hatred.

Yom ha-Shoah is a call to all people, not just the Jewish community, to fight for the common goals of societies that value diversity and protect human rights. Yom ha-Shoah was officially proclaimed Holocaust Memorial Day by the Alberta Legislature on November 16, 2000, with the passing of the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. This act proclaims the observance of Yom ha-Shoah and Holocaust Memorial Day, and annually the Alberta Legislature acknowledges the significance of the Holocaust and the importance of Holocaust education.

The proclamation itself reads:

Whereas the Holocaust was the state-sponsored, systematic persecution and annihilation of European Jewish men, women and children by the Nazis and their collaborators between 1933 and 1945, and this horrific event is part of our common history as citizens on this earth;

Whereas the Nazis and their collaborators murdered 6 million Jewish people, including more than a million children, during that time of persecution and death;

Whereas the Nazis and their collaborators also persecuted and murdered millions of other people because of their race, religion, level of physical or mental ability or sexual orientation;

Whereas, during World War II, Albertans bravely served as members of the Canadian Armed Forces, and many Albertans paid the ultimate price, their lives, to protect and preserve freedom and democracy;

Whereas "Shoah" is the Hebrew term for "Holocaust";

Whereas it is fitting and right to observe Yom ha-Shoah, the Day of the Holocaust, as a day to remember the victims and survivors of the Holocaust and to honour those who fought to defeat tyranny and genocide;

Whereas this day provides Albertans with the opportunity:

- to look within themselves, reflect on the enduring lessons of the Holocaust and educate their children, their colleagues and their fellow citizens on the perils of hatred,
- to consider other times and incidents of systematic violence, genocide, persecution, racism and hatred that call out to us from the past or continue today, and
- to reaffirm their commitment to uphold the human rights of all and to value diversity and the multicultural richness of Alberta society;

Whereas on Yom ha-Shoah we will remember, for we must never forget;

Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, enacts as follows:

Holocaust Memorial Day – Yom ha-Shoah.

1 Yom ha-Shoah, the Day of the Holocaust as determined in each year by the Jewish lunar calendar, is proclaimed as Holocaust Memorial Day.

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker. History has taught us the danger of ignorance and the result of indifference. We must ensure that a catastrophe such as the Holocaust is never seen again.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister mentioned, many of us in the Chamber here today partook in the ceremony organized by the Jewish Federation of Edmonton on the Alberta Legislature Grounds. This ceremony was an echo of the many ceremonies taking place around the world recognizing Yom ha-Shoah. It is only fitting that this ceremony takes place around the world as this was a human tragedy that affected all the people in the world.

It is traditional in this ceremony that a moment of silence is given for remembrance. We here must know that true remembrance does not happen in a moment or on a single day. True remembrance requires that we always carry with us our understanding of the crime that was the Holocaust. True remembrance requires us to pass on that understanding to future generations. It is that true remembrance that will prevent this kind of evil from happening again.

I would like to quote a short passage from the Kaddish.

May there be much peace from Heaven, and satiety, and salvation, and comfort, and saving and healing and redemption and forgiveness and atonement and relief and deliverance for us and for all.

Jamais encore. Never again.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe that on this occasion the House would provide unanimous consent for me to call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker and members of the Assembly, I appreciate being given the opportunity to rise and speak on this important day. Although it has been over 60 years since the Holocaust, the reminder of this horrific time in our history is very much present for so many in our community. It is vital that we take this time to remember those who fought, those who suffered, and the 6 million that died.

The name Yom ha-Shoah Ve Hagevurah, which literally means devastation and heroism day, is truly just that, a time of true devastation of our faith in humanity yet punctuated with acts of heroism that the world has not yet forgotten. By remembering the Holocaust and its victims, we can renew our collective commitment in the fight against anti-Semitism, discrimination, and racism because as a society our work is not yet done. We need to educate and inform. We need to pay tribute to the victims of these acts of cruelty and inhumanity and continue to build societies where dignity and respect for others are paramount.

As one historian so eloquently stated, these survivors have fought for life when there was only death, fought for good when there was only evil, and fought for the future when there was only the past. Their struggles have not only become part of our history but have shaped and prepared our future.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Anniversary of Edmonton Protocol

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ten years ago today a group of researchers from the University of Alberta completed work on a leading-edge medical procedure now known around the world as the Edmonton protocol. This procedure has dramatically improved the health and well-being of Albertans with uncontrolled type 1 diabetes and their families, not to mention so many others across Canada and around the world. The names of these six remarkable pioneers are familiar to many of us: Dr. Ray Rajotte, Dr. Garth Warnock, Dr. Norm Kneteman, Dr. Jonathan Lakey, Dr. Greg Korbitt, and Dr. James Shapiro.

The Edmonton protocol is now practised in more than 40 institutions world-wide, and an estimated 700 patients have received islet transplants over the past 10 years. Here at home the University of Alberta program has treated over 110 patients, making it the busiest and most successful pilot transplant program in the world.

Mr. Speaker, approximately 150,000 Albertans currently live with diabetes, and more than 14,000 new cases are diagnosed each year in Alberta. Of these, about 10 per cent have type 1 diabetes.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the vision and talent of the researchers we remember today, the Edmonton protocol and the many similar advances in medicine and health care delivery that took root right here in Alberta are also a testament to Alberta's success in developing one of the largest and most highly respected academic health centres in North America, in this case right here in Edmonton. These achievements are indeed an integral part of the Alberta brand, and they are a bridge to the knowledge-based economy of our future.

I would ask all members of the House to join me in congratulating the research team and to help us as we commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Edmonton protocol. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you may or may not know, March was Colorectal Cancer Awareness Month in Canada. During the month of March the Colorectal Cancer Association of Canada campaigns to raise awareness and warn against the risks associated with colorectal cancer. About 1 in 14 men and 1 in 17 women in Alberta will develop this cancer in their lifetimes. Overall colorectal cancer is the second leading cause of cancer deaths in Alberta. It also causes immense personal, family, and societal suffering.

The main risks of developing this cancer include being 50 years of age or older, having a poor diet that is high in red meat consumption and low in fibre, fruits, and vegetables, and, most importantly, getting little or no exercise. Early detection is critical in the treatment of colorectal cancer. Through screening, colonoscopy, and effective chemotherapy treatments this cancer can be treated and even prevented if detected early enough.

I would also like to highlight an option for those in the advanced stages of colorectal cancer. The drug Avastin has been successfully used in combination with chemotherapy in the treatment of advanced colorectal cancer. While Avastin is not a cure, research has shown that it can prolong life and improve the quality of life for some patients. However, this is a very expensive option, costing patients $2,000 every other week for treatment. With that in mind, I'm happy to remind everyone that as of April 1 of this year the government of Alberta has added Avastin to the list of publicly funded cancer therapies.

Earlier today in the rotunda there was an information session on colorectal cancer with the specific purpose of emphasizing the importance of early detection.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to remind members of this House and all Albertans that provincial guidelines recommend that all people between the ages of 50 and 70 be screened regularly for this cancer by booking an appointment with their family doctor for a complete history and physical exam. The key to a balanced approach in a sustainable health system is prevention through living a healthy lifestyle, early detection through screening, and effective, evidence-based treatment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Travel Alberta Holiday Cards

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like many members on the floor of this Assembly, many of our guests in our galleries, and numerous Albertans from across the province I've been fortunate to visit numerous vacation destinations around the world, and I'm very proud to say that, at least in my estimation, there is not a more beautiful place on Earth than Alberta.

That's one of the reasons why I was pleased to learn that Travel Alberta has mailed out 400,000 Travel Alberta Holiday Cards to Albertans. These cards demonstrate that Albertans can have a great holiday in numerous fabulous vacation destinations right here in our very own province. This free card offers super deals to Albertans, who are mindful of current economic realities. With families looking to minimize spending, the savings and holiday ideas are very valuable tools to taking holidays without spending too much money. The card also benefits our tourism industry as well as the more than 111,000 Albertans who make their living in this sector.

The holiday card program is a true asset both for Albertans and for our tourism industry, and I ask the members of the Assembly to join me now in thanking Travel Alberta and the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation for providing such a great opportunity for Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

AIMCo Investments

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Public concern and confusion about the AIMCo $280 million investment in Precision Drilling is building. We're getting a number of calls, many of them angry calls, from the energy sector describing the investment as a bailout for a company that was in a financial squeeze. How can the minister of finance assure Albertans that this is not a bailout?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm grateful for the question from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. It gives me an opportunity to iterate what their executive director, Leo de Bever, said today, and that is that this is a very good investment. This is an investment that the board supported. In order to find out more – and I've indicated this to people who have spoken to me outside this Assembly – about why the board believes it's a good investment, the board should be consulted. The board is giving an opportunity to address why it's a good investment. For us in this House we identify in our heritage trust fund the rails between which this fund should operate. They are operating within those rails on asset mix.

Dr. Swann: Well, that's precisely the question, Mr. Speaker. What are the guidelines for these kinds of investments?

To the minister. She herself was mistaken yesterday when she said that the deputy minister of finance was not involved in the decision. It now appears that he was not only at the meeting; he voted on the decision to invest in this company. This opens the door, clearly, to politically driven decisions with public funds. Can the minister assure Albertans that politics are not entering our investment decisions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly can. I took the opportunity to call my critic and to call the leader of the third party today to identify that I had been given the wrong information. Under the legislative framework for Alberta Investment Management Corporation approved in this House, the deputy minister by section 4(1)(b) shall be a member, so we have followed the legislative process. The deputy minister is there. He is performing his duties there as any other director.

Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting here reviewing all of the framework for approval of this particular act in 2007, Bill 22, and not once did any of Her Majesty's opposition members or the third party raise a question about the placement of a deputy minister in this corporation.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, we certainly did raise questions about tens of thousands of dollars of bonuses for those people, which we never got an answer for.

To the minister again. Given that there are other drilling companies standing by that also stand to rebound in these coming months and could use an injection of extra capital, what does the minister have to say to Precision's competitors, who may want the same treatment?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, the very purpose of establishing an arm's-length Crown corporation to deal with Alberta's investments is to keep political interference out of that. As I was starting to identify, investments in the heritage trust fund, for example, are done on a basis of an asset mix that is approved by this Legislative Assembly. We had an advisory committee where I shared those with an all-party committee. We looked at those. But we do not get into the day-to-day operations of the board, either the payment of the board members or the staff members or the bonuses. That is the board's responsibility. The board shall answer to those responsibilities.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Auditor General Recommendations

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General yesterday reported on 41 recommendations made since 1997 that have not been acted upon by the government. These are key recommendations that he called important for immediate response. The Auditor General is the main official watchdog of this government, how it spends public dollars. There has been no response to some of these audits. These were identified to save waste and inefficiency, and in this recession it's clearly critical to Albertans that we spend their dollars wisely. To the Premier: why has this government not implemented 41 key recommendations over the last 11 years to address government waste and inefficiency?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we take the recommendations from the Auditor General seriously, and all ministers are responsible to reply to the report. In fact, the Auditor General as per legislation is supposed to make one annual report. He's making two, so that means that there are more recommendations and more oversight of government operations.

Dr. Swann: What these outstanding recommendations mean to Albertans, Mr. Speaker, is billions of dollars of uncollected resource revenue. The revenue could have avoided a deficit and a devastating set of cuts coming for the health care system. Again to the Premier: why has the Premier still failed to implement the recommendations for improving royalty collections?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have. In fact, we hired a former Auditor General to review the process, and the former Auditor General reported in a very public way that the systems we have in place are being followed. Today, of course, there are many opinions expressed on the collection of royalties, especially by the opposition because they're always looking to keep raising them and raising them higher, hopefully that we may collect more royalties. Today I can tell you that it's a matter of not only the low resource prices but the fact that we've instituted a new royalty regime that shares in the rewards and high prices, but it also shares in the risks of lower prices.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, other outstanding recommendations relate to mental health services and inefficiencies in the health care delivery system that could have been improved. Why has the Premier not taken action on the recommendations for mental health services, which could have significantly reduced human suffering as well as saved the health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this is one area that the minister of health is working diligently to improve service in, both in access and support for those that do suffer from mental illness. It is one part of the area of health that Alberta is leading in so many ways in terms of new programs and access to not only mental health programs but some of those tied to addiction. We'll continue to do whatever we can to move mental health illness access to programs across the province.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Gaming Conference

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, in November 2008 the Solicitor General used tax dollars to take a trip to Las Vegas to study gaming. Unlike Kenny Rogers the minister has no idea when to hold them, when to fold them, when to walk away, or when to run. There is $1.6 million in annual funding provided to the Alberta Gaming Research Institute at the U of A to study gaming. Instead of taking a trip to Vegas, why didn't the Solicitor General save Alberta taxpayers $4,671 and take the LRT across the river?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's quite a connection between comparing. I agreed to going to a very worthwhile conference where we can learn about social responsibility from a world-wide perspective and also get updated on the latest technology in the gaming industry. I'll leave it at that.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General and his EA spent $425 a day on incidentals and miscellaneous expenses on a three-day getaway. Will the Solicitor General commit to providing this Assembly with an itemized accounting for this $12,081?

Mr. Lindsay: I think the correct number would be $1,200 extra, Mr. Speaker.

Again, this government is open and transparent, and we do put our expenses on the website every month. Yes, this particular trip, I think, was $1,200 over the estimate. That cost is basically a reflection of transportation and hotel costs.

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I found two rooms for three nights' accommodation in Vegas online today right on the strip for $852. But Alberta taxpayers paid $1,729.27 for the Solicitor General and EA. Why were these rooms so much extra dough?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, when we were down in Las Vegas, we did notice that the recession was taking effect there. We know that the recession is larger there today than it was back in November, so the cost of rooms today is a reflection of that. I'm not going to stand up here and waste this House's time by debating a hundred dollar hotel bill.

AIMCo Investments

Mr. Mason: Well, that's a good introduction to a question about gambling, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday we learned that the Alberta government had invested $280 million of Albertans' money in Precision Drilling. Investment firm Peters & Co. said in today's Financial Post that Precision Drilling remains overlevered and may have difficulty meeting its financial commitments. The government is letting AIMCo make a $280 million gamble with Albertans' pensions. My question is for the Premier. In this time of economic uncertainty, how can you let AIMCo roll the dice with Albertans' pensions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as the minister earlier reiterated, the AIMCo board, Alberta Investment Management Corporation, has the responsibility of making the investments. It is arm's length. At the end of the year they have to report to the minister in terms of the size and the growth of the assets that are held with AIMCo, I believe in that $70 billion to $75 billion amount.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The government's responsibility is greater than that.

The number of oil and gas drilling rigs operating in the U.S. fell to a six-year low just last week, Canada's rig count is the lowest it's been in 10 years, and this government is allowing a board of high rollers to gamble our pensions on an extremely risky venture. My question is to the Premier. Why are you letting AIMCo and its board gamble with Albertans' pensions?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I want to just raise a question here in this House, and that is that the hon. member of the third party knows full well that their member withdrew from sitting on the Alberta investment discussions when we had the heritage fund. I think we'd be very pleased to answer these questions. But we have very specific guidelines. We have a very specific act, Bill 22, that was passed, that gives the outline for the parameters of the director function. There are additional orders given to that board every year through the approval of the business plan, through the articulation of investment management strategies. There are other, further identified issues on investments, what they can do and what they can't do, that come from our investment department of Finance and Enterprise. I'd be very happy to entertain the minutiae of that question by going back and spending some time with the hon. member and going through the detail of how it's actually done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've been down this road before. Under the Tory government of Don Getty Alberta got heavily into the business of investing in companies, picking winners and losers, and Albertans lost billions. It appears that this government is heading down the same discredited path. To the Premier: why won't you learn from past mistakes and ensure that Albertans' investments are as secure as they can be instead of undertaking risk more appropriate to the private sector?

Mr. Stelmach: In fact, Mr. Speaker, all Albertans learned, and that is why this government has given the responsibility to an arm's-length board to make the decisions without any political interference.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Cold Lake City Status

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Faced with spiralling costs, uncertainty on future revenue-sharing agreements, a tremendous infrastructure deficit, and the determination not to burden residents with another tax increase in 2010, Cold Lake city council has proposed to dissolve the city status and form a regional government solution. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What assistance is this government going to give the city of Cold Lake to help them handle these recent events? For example, would the government consider forming a new specialized municipality in our region?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, no. There is a lot of work that needs to be done before this would be considered. We continue to discuss these challenges with the city. We do provide financial assistance through MSI and other supports and programs. We have concerns about a larger municipality potentially dissolving into a smaller one. We strongly encourage the municipalities in the region to find a co-operative solution.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that the city of Cold Lake does not have the money necessary to offer the services that residents require – in addition to this, Cold Lake has the highest urban tax of any city in the province – is there a way to relieve the financial pressure that is placed on its residents while still managing to generate financial support and stability to the city?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have talked to the mayor of the city of Cold Lake. I do understand that the city is continuing talks with the municipal district of Bonnyville about renewing their current cost-sharing agreement. Municipalities need to work together. They need to communicate together, collaborate, co-operate. We need to let these discussions proceed and unfold. If that doesn't work, our department does provide mediation services that are available to go and have discussions with those municipalities. Again, I encourage all municipalities to try to work together.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the President of the Treasury Board. What more can the city of Cold Lake do to ensure that it remains afloat? As it is a major hub of the oil industry in Alberta, Cold Lake officials have worked with the assistant deputy minister of the Oil Sands Sustainable Development Secretariat on proposals and have taken all steps that they feel are necessary to receive additional support from the province.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's true that we expanded the oil sands secretariat to areas like Cold Lake-Bonnyville because of the tremendous opportunities and the ongoing operational oil development in there. It also stretches up into the Peace Country. There are many communities that are affected positively by the oil development, but there's also a great cost that comes with it. We've seen the cost there from the Esso expansion. All I can tell the hon. member: at least we're at the table. We do not have a magic bullet to solve these problems. They didn't arrive overnight; they can't be solved overnight either. It's important that they continue to work with their surrounding municipal governments to a solution.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's economy suffers from a boom-bust cycle that this government needs to counter. By investing its funds in a drilling company, AIMCo is actually increasing the government's exposure to the energy sector's booms and busts rather than counterbalancing it. We're intensifying our risks rather than diversifying them. To the minister of finance: does the minister of finance have any strategy on this issue?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again this is a question particular to one investment by the Alberta Investment Management Corporation within the context of their policy. They have invested in a number of Alberta companies, and those kinds of information are public and are published every year. There's certainly no attempt here by this government, nor will there be, no temptation entered into to try and influence the type of investments that this particular group is doing when they're staying within the policy context that this Legislative Assembly has approved.

Dr. Taft: The Norwegians have a deliberate strategy to ensure their petroleum fund counterbalances the booms and busts of the energy sector. They also realize their fund could distort domestic investment decisions and imbalance their entire economy, so they require the fund to invest outside of the domestic economy. My question is to the minister of finance. Has the minister taken a serious look at the benefits of a policy requiring AIMCo to invest outside of Alberta?

Ms Evans: You know, Mr. Speaker, that actually is a very interesting perspective. I did spend some time talking to them in Norway, where they were absolutely sick about their investments. They lost $92 billion on their fund, and they had even further losses in some of their additional funds. They'd started out with roughly $400 billion, lost about 25 per cent of it, which is considerably more than we had proportionately in Alberta as losses. [interjections] One of the accusations that I continually get from people, if they're interested in listening, is that we should be investing in Alberta like every other place. This is the best place in the world to invest.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm not accusing the minister of anything. I'm trying to engage in a policy debate.

Any institutional investor holding 15 to 19 per cent, which is where this is likely to end up, of a publicly traded company's shares would normally be entitled to a position on the board of directors. Again to the minister of finance: is AIMCo planning to have a representative on the board of directors of Precision? If not, why not?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I believe this question came up from the opposition yesterday, whether there were any plans. There have been no plans that I am aware of. Nobody has provided me any information relative to such a plan. There is absolutely no way that we could anticipate that AIMCo would become a member of the board of all the various companies and corporations that they have investments in. I'm not even sure of the origin of this type of question, but to me that's a question that we could certainly pose to AIMCo themselves, and I'm quite sure they'd give the same answer: they don't see the value.

Plan for Parks

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation yesterday released a plan for parks. Alberta's population is projected to increase to 4.6 million people by 2035, greatly expanding the development footprint in our province. Now, while the new plan for parks refers to a process for nominating new parks, there appears to be no substantive objective set out in the plan which would preserve our rapidly disappearing landscapes such as the grasslands region. My questions are for the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Given that the expanding environmental footprint in our natural areas is happening, why is there no specific target in the plan to expand the provincial parks in our grasslands region?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. Some have said: why aren't there targets? We set out a process, and I think it would be a bit disingenuous ahead of a process, probably one of the biggest changes in land use, that we set out a target before we go out and consult with those regions. There is a way to nominate, there is a way to do this, but we need to be in the process because Albertans will decide this based on science and what they want in their park areas.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, in August 2006 it was announced that the Glenbow Ranch, west of Calgary, would be purchased and developed as an Alberta provincial park, and it was anticipated that public access would be allowed within a year or so after the park's creation. Now we are in 2009; the park is still not open. Why is the minister now advising Albertans that they won't have access to this park until 2012?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're actually hoping to get it open in 2011. But this question has been asked. This park has not been delayed. If you were to talk to the Harvie family, they would tell you how pleased they are with the resources and the planning that we've done. To be more specific, we had to do a bunch of studies in this area. There are very ecologically sensitive grasslands there. We want to ensure that the pathway systems and the way we move people don't destroy the very park – sometimes people can love a park to death – and we want to ensure that it's done right.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, all-terrain vehicle enthusiasts perceive that they are being squeezed, overregulated, and moved into fewer and fewer areas in the province. Will the minister assure ATV users in the province of Alberta that they will have an important place in the new plan for parks?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are really looking at a policy around trails in this province. I've mentioned many times in this House that myself and the minister of sustainable resources are working together with the recreation trail committee. But as to ATVs actually in the park, of 500 parks they're only in one park designation. That's the wildland provincial parks. Probably, roughly out of those 32 only half have access, and they're on trails, and they're just for staging. We're not looking at expanding them in the parks but at ways that we can create a better trail system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Reforestation Performance Information

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his April 2009 report the Auditor General noted that the Department of Sustainable Resource Development has yet to implement a process to publicly report on the effectiveness of reforestation activities. The Auditor noted that there have been plans to report for almost five years, but it has still not been done. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why has it taken your department so long to implement this recommendation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I'd like to acknowledge the importance of the Auditor General's criticisms and suggestions to our department reflected in the hon. member's question. I can report that the standard that was being developed was changed midstream, in part because of discussions with the Auditor General. I'd like to make it clear to the House that there has never been any question in the Auditor General's reports that reforestation is being done and done well in this province. The issue has been about reporting, public reporting of that, and that's an important difference.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. To view just a sampling of SRD reforestation failures, check out aerial photos of Cataract Creek, Wilkinson Creek, McLean Creek, and the Bragg Creek surrounding areas. Then shudder at the clear-cutting devastation in the Crowsnest. Reports are necessary, not only to reassure the public that industry is complying with reforestation standards but also to make sure that the standards themselves are adequate. The Auditor found no evidence of any internal reports which reviewed or assessed forestation. Why is your ministry not reviewing the effectiveness of reforestation practices in any formalized manner?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has gone from solid ground to real thin ice here. It is spring, hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, and the ice is getting thinner the more you talk. If he wants to cherry-pick around the province at areas that have been harvested recently and are in the process of regeneration, of course you can find some open spots. But I can take the member – in fact, he knows them – to areas that are now being nominated for national or international park status that were harvested 20 years ago, and now the regeneration is so good that they're being nominated for national park status. There's very good reforestation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking of thin ice, SRD progress is glacial. Your department certainly knows how to reap but appears clueless when it comes to sowing. By the time your land-use framework is implemented, irreparable damage will have been done to so-called parks and protected areas. The Auditor noted that compliance issues are not compiled and reported in a way which would be able to meaningfully analyze compliance trends across the province. How can the minister expect Albertans to be reassured that our forests are being responsibly managed when reforestation compliance is not effectively reported or managed?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, I think that when the new Leader of the Opposition took over, he replaced critics and put this one on ice, and we see why now. I'd like to direct the hon. member's attention to a report on reforestation that was posted on our website in February of '09, very recent. I'd also like to refer him to page 50 of the Auditor General's report, where he says: "We believe this quality control system will bring the necessary rigour to make monitoring for compliance effective when fully implemented." That is the Auditor General speaking.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Community Spirit Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the recipients of the community spirit grant program were announced to Albertans, including some in my constituency of Edmonton-Ellerslie. My questions are to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. How can you be satisfied with only 1,600 applications to this program when there are over 19,000 nonprofit organizations in Alberta?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first year of any program is a learning experience for everyone involved. Overall there's a good response from small, medium, and large organizations across the province, but we will work to ensure there are even more applications next year. We realized when we were halfway through the rollout of the program that we had only contacted 7,000 organizations, so I instructed my officials to contract through Service Alberta and make sure that we had the list of all 19,000 registered not-for-profit and voluntary organizations. We had repeated communication with them to make sure that they all knew about the program. Hopefully, next year, the second year of this program, we'll have more applications.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: does the minister really believe that this program will be enough to help organizations through the current economic downturn?

The Speaker: That's an opinion. Tie it into government policy, please.

Mr. Blackett: Mr. Speaker, this is just one of the community investment programs that are available to the nonprofit sector. Whether an organization receives $1,000 or $25,000, these are new dollars. The new program was introduced in May of 2008 to go as part of a $166 million program to a vital, important sector. It translates to 19 million new dollars to this sector. We've committed another $20 million in the community spirit donor program for this year along with the $80 million in enhanced tax credit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister. Some of my nonprofit organizations didn't qualify for the funding. Could the minister explain what criteria were used for the selection process?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, the criteria are pretty simple, and those decisions are made after they have met the criteria through the applications to my staff. The criteria are: do they have matching dollars or do they have matching volunteer hours or do they have matching donations in kind? Based on that, we make the determination if they're eligible or not. Over 1,600 organizations applied; 1,496 received funding. I think that by any measure that's a great program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:20 Natural Gas and Electricity Contracts

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Both in question period and in the budget debates our caucus has questioned this government's lack of support for consumers. Because of deregulation Albertans are locked into multiyear natural gas and electricity contracts at unreasonably high prices. To the Minister of Service Alberta: what action, if any, has the minister taken or is the minister going to take to let Albertans get out of these unfair contracts on an annual basis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to individuals, to consumers getting out of contracts, we encourage consumers to contact Service Alberta. At any one time we are investigating a number of situations where consumers are confronted at the door and asked to sign up for a contract. It's important that they contact us. We have tipsheets on the website as well. We are more than happy to assist individuals and to get the information out right.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is costing my constituents lots of money every month, and they cannot wait forever. To the minister again: when will the minister finally get around to putting this into place? How long do Albertans have to wait for this action?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe it's important to talk in general terms, but if there is, indeed, a particular situation, that individual needs to contact Service Alberta so that we can check into it. I can't comment if something is going on if I don't know what the particular question is or the history of the situation or how long they've had the contract, those kinds of questions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are not talking about a particular situation here. We are talking about everybody who has signed long-term contracts. To the minister again: why hasn't the Utilities Consumer Advocate been pushing for this kind of protection for consumers? Isn't that its job?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is involved in interventions, but an important part of the UCA is the role of education, educating consumers on any number of issues. We're in the process of finalizing the hiring of a UCA, and we are looking forward to moving forward on a number of initiatives to ensure that consumers know what they're getting into and know where to ask the right questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mental Health Services

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The secret government report we leaked yesterday says that Calgary has less than one-quarter of the psychiatric beds in the province, which, as a whole, has less than half the beds and community supports that Albertans actually need. When proper care is not available, patients end up in ER. In 2002 alone over 34,000 Albertans sought psychiatric treatment in emergency wards. Given that wait times in Calgary's ERs have climbed to a dangerous 16.6 hours, why has the health minister failed to act on the recommendations included in this internal report?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said yesterday. We have made significant commitments towards mental health capacity in this province and are adding beds on an annual basis. We recognize that in the past there have been some gaps, and we are working to address that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, when you're 1,500 beds short of the national average, 80 new beds, not all of which are actually dedicated to mental health, will only ensure the shortage continues. As a result, people who need mental health care are going to fill up our acute-care beds and our ERs. This is just like the long-term care fiasco, where we're shorting the system and the result is increased wait times, increased costs, but decreased care. Why, when government has known about this bed shortage for more than two years, is the health minister continuing to fail Alberta's mentally ill?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the real fiasco here is the position of this particular group, that somehow you have to stick people into a bed in an institution. Over the last number of years we have had a very aggressive policy of ensuring that individuals after treatment are integrated into the community, and that's been a successful program in this province. Just because some national statistic – we don't chase national statistics if they don't make sense.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What this government has is an aggressive policy of keeping things secret, and it's their own internal document that says that they're not doing well enough. As well, a spokesman from Canadian Mental Health said yesterday that mentally ill people are simply not getting the help they need from this government. Last year you scrapped plans to build a psychiatric wing in the south Calgary hospital and have made nothing but empty promises since. Given that mental illness is such a significant health care issue in Alberta, why did the minister refuse to release the report that points the way to improving the system?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday that this particular report along with a whole bunch of others helps formulate policy going forward. I've elaborated on the policy. The member, I think, or her partner over there actually released the report yesterday, so I'm not sure what the point of the question is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Wild Rose Foundation

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Budget 2009 funding for the citizen-led Wild Rose Foundation was removed, with funding decisions instead now to be made by the community spirit program. My question is to the Minister of Culture and Community Spirit. With the shifting of Wild Rose funding to the community initiative and other government programs, will the criteria now require matching funding on all grants, and will they be restricted to community facilities and functions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Blackett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to make a point of clarification, funding decisions will not be made by the community spirit program. They will be made by the representatives in our department who are responsible for all the different community investment programs. Our department right now is looking at creative ways to take the community initiative program, the community facility enhancement program, looking at the criteria for those and seeing if we can get an envelope of money and make that available on a nonmatching basis to these worthwhile community organizations and community projects. Budgetary requirements mean that we have to be creative and collaborative. I know that the sector has to do that, and I ask their indulgence and patience so that we can come up with a worthwhile plan that will work for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. Now that the granting responsibilities previously made by the foundation will be made within the Department of Culture and Community Spirit, what additional staff requirements will your department require?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to say that no additional staff are required because the excellent staff that have worked with the Wild Rose Foundation and helped administer that program for numerous years will still continue to be employed in my department. They will still help with the community investment programs. Hopefully, by utilizing their expertise and their knowledge and their outreach capabilities, we can help enrich our programs that exist for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question again to the same minister: what will the net savings be from streamlining the grant process?

Mr. Blackett: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't emphasize enough that the merging of operations improved the services that we provide to the not-for-profit sector and the voluntary sector and ultimately to Albertans. The goal is to make the grant process more efficient, effective, and transparent. In total these programs are being reduced by $7.8 million, but as I mentioned earlier, we're reviewing the criteria for our other programs to see if by being more efficient, more collaborative we can make money available to those worthwhile programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Postsecondary Institution Endowment Funds

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Auditor General again highlighted concerns about investments at postsecondary institutions. Many public colleges and institutions in Alberta do not have goals and policies in place for the preservation of their endowment funds, which total over $100 million province-wide. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Why has the department not provided any guidance or leadership for these institutions in the management of over $100 million in investments?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would think that the endowments amount might actually be a bit higher than that, but in truth all our postsecondaries are board governed. They have a certain amount of autonomy that is granted to them so that they have academic autonomy, but they also have some financial autonomy in the sense of money that they can raise in endowments that are given to them, not by this government but by philanthropy from other folks. Certainly, now that we have our new Campus Alberta secretariat and our new Campus Alberta Council of Chairs, these are the types of things that we'll be talking about on a pan-Alberta approach and recommending to those institutions that they bring together a pan-Alberta policy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister. The Auditor previously recommended, last fall, that investments be better monitored at Alberta's universities. In the year ended March 31, 2008, the University of Alberta lost $46 million on its investments held for endowment, and the Auditor's recommendation is still outstanding. Why is this recommendation still outstanding given that so many investment funds in the province are losing millions? Your office must show leadership, sir.

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I just overheard one of my colleagues say, it's wonderful to be able to predict the past. Certainly, there are a number of endowments and funds, including my own RRSP, that have lost a considerable amount of money over the last little while. If we could go back and change history, I'm sure that we could change the losses that the University of Alberta had on their endowments.

We take the recommendations of the Auditor General very seriously, as do all of our postsecondary institutions in the province. The recommendations were to the postsecondary institutions. My recollection is that the university is going to follow the recommendations and take the advice of the Auditor General.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure this House and taxpayers that the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology certainly takes the Auditor General's recommendations much more seriously than the President of the Treasury Board. Can the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology tell the House how much has been lost in investment income while the Auditor's recommendations go unfulfilled?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, no, I cannot. I don't have those numbers at my fingertips because I don't believe that the Auditor General's recommendations are unfulfilled. If you asked the Auditor General, he would tell you that many of these things take some time to be implemented, some time for new processes or new procedures to come to fruition. We're going to see that happen over the months and weeks ahead. Certainly, I expect that all postsecondary institutions in our province will take to heart the recommendations not only of the Auditor General but also of the department.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Postsecondary Institution Internal Controls

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's report from the Auditor General outlined a number of serious recommendations for postsecondary institutions, particularly when it comes to managing their finances. One institution, Grant MacEwan College, was identified for being unable to pursue or record campus parking fines over $700,000. My first question for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology: what is his ministry's role in ensuring that postsecondary institutions like Grant MacEwan manage their financial resources wisely and responsibly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As per the previous question, you know, publicly funded postsecondary institutions are governed under several acts approved by this Legislature: the Postsecondary Learning Act, the Financial Administration Act, and the Government Accountability Act. All of these relate to public funds that we provide to the institutions. All of these institutions are also board governed, and as board-governed institutions they receive fees or, in this case, fines from other sources, not public funds given to them by this Legislature but other sources. It is up to them and their policies that they have to develop to manage those. Certainly, the Auditor General is welcome for those recommendations, and Grant MacEwan is going to take them to heart.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Another recommendation deals with alleged fraudulent contracts awarded at Bow Valley College. Can the minister tell us his ministry's role in safeguarding Alberta's postsecondary students and the overall system from potentially illegal activities such as this?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be a bit careful here because, obviously, this is still under some investigation. I think the pertinent points here to the hon. member is that it was Bow Valley that found the irregularities, and it was Bow Valley that called in the Auditor General to do the investigation. The Campus Alberta institutions take the AG's findings very seriously. The Auditor General, actually, in his report commended Bow Valley for timely notification to his office of some suspected irregularities, and I commend the Auditor General for going in and helping us out with this because that's the way the system should work.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Seniors and Community Supports provided $24 million from the '09-10 budget to contracted agencies for recruitment and retention of PDD staff. This increase is crucial as turnover rates are far, far too high in these agencies and create many problems. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: can the minister tell Albertans how the $24 million is being divided amongst the six PDD community boards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to the PDD program and to ensuring that individuals with developmental disabilities are able to live and work and participate in their communities. We recognize how very important it is that there be qualified staff to support these individuals. The $24 million all by itself won't solve the problem entirely, but it will help. The money is divided amongst the six PDD regions, and there is a funding formula that divides the money up properly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. I actually was looking for the answer to how the formula is delivered, but I'll go on to my next question. Thank you for that.

Can the minister tell Albertans how specifically targeted recruitment programs are being used to help these agencies?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, recruiting and retaining staff in our PDD areas are extremely, extremely important. We have a number of programs that are being used throughout our colleges for disability workers, and we have private, not-for-profit and private, for-profit organizations partnering in those training programs.

The PDD formula that we use is an approved formula that supports all PDD clients throughout the province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will this increase in funding even begin to bring agency wages to parity with government staff that are working in the same field?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, in the last few years we've contributed millions of dollars towards the PDD program. It was 5 per cent just recently, last spring, and prior to that, in November of 2007, it was another 5 per cent. This $24 million will amount to close to 5 per cent again for our PDD front-line staff, and it will bring them closer to the government wages that the member refers to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Victims Restitution and Compensation

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents and I want our Alberta to be the number one global petroleum industry but also number one globally in toughness against criminal activities. We are pleased with the recent introduction of the victims restitution and compensation law. Given the general concern for property rights and the recent ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada, my question is to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister explain how this ruling affects Alberta law?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was very good news to hear the Supreme Court of Canada's ruling last Friday. The legislation that we passed was, we believed, constitutionally valid and constitutionally sound. We were pleased to see that the court did what we have always said the court should do, which is reflect the values of the community that we serve. I think that it's important to remember the essence of our act, which is to remove the profits of criminal activity from our communities and to compensate victims. This ruling supports our legislation and the hard work of our civil forfeiture office, and we'll continue to use this act with confidence to dismantle organized crime in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: since its implementation what progress and impact has our new law had on crime reduction and prevention?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important. As I've said in this House before, organized crime is a business. Civil forfeiture allows the courts to seize the illegal profits of crime and to use that revenue to help victims. This is a tool we can use to target those who victimize others. If you're dealing drugs in your car, we can seize your car. If you're running a marijuana grow op from your home, we can seize that home. Something that's very important is that we make it clear that this legislation puts Albertans on notice. If you're knowingly participating in criminal activity or benefiting from criminal activity, you put yourself in jeopardy of losing the tools of your trade or your ill-gotten gains.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. minister: how are the law enforcers in Alberta reacting to this new way of targeting the profits of crime?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've always said, since launching this initiative, that we need to ensure that the police have the tools to do their job. We've been up and running now for four months, and police agencies across this province are referring files to the civil forfeiture office.

Our legislation expands and extends the scope of powers that are already available under the Criminal Code. With our legislation we can seize property without a criminal conviction, but it's always the case, Mr. Speaker, that at the end of the day the courts will be the ones that will determine the conduct of the police. They will decide whether or not actions taken by the police under legislation are appropriate. We're confident in the work that the police are doing with this legislation. They're taking it seriously, and we know that the courts will apply the law effectively.

Thank you.

2:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and responses. In 30 seconds from now we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Oh, I'm sorry. Hon. members, please return to your places. The hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise had advised that she wanted to supplement an answer. My assumption was that in the first question today that was done, but if the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise wants to supplement an answer, permission will be given now, and an additional question will then come from the Official Opposition with respect to this matter.

Does the minister wish to proceed?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that it's been clarified, but I could, in fact, if you wish.

The Speaker: I thought it was, so that's why I didn't call you.

Sorry. You may depart. Boy, once that recess bell goes, it's hard to retract your decision, isn't it?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

National Soil Conservation Week

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring to this Assembly's attention that April 19 to 25 is National Soil Conservation Week. Soil and water are two necessary ingredients to sustain human life and produce food. Today it is more important than ever to preserve soil to ensure that future generations will enjoy the same rich benefits of home-grown agricultural products.

Development demands often take prime agricultural land out of production. Fortunately, researchers and inventive farmers are setting the bar higher for soil conservation management practices. Since 1991 conservation tillage practices in Alberta have steadily grown to represent about half of the annually seeded areas. Alberta farmers are effectively using direct seeding, no-till and zero-till practices.

A reduced tillage system contributes to the government of Alberta's climate change strategy as well by removing atmospheric carbon and sequestering that carbon within the soil. Farmers who have adopted these practices have been able to benefit from the Alberta carbon offset market since 2007. Last year, in fact, Mr. Speaker, 10 of the 25 registered carbon offset projects were no-tillage agriculture, which contributed a total of just over a million tonnes of carbon dioxide equivalences, or 30 per cent of the total carbon offsets.

I'd like this Assembly to acknowledge the efforts of dedicated soil and crop research scientists, professional agrologists, and forward-thinking prairie farmers who developed and adopted soil conservation techniques over the past seven decades. The Dirty Thirties taught us a valuable lesson, Mr. Speaker. It has been this cumulative effort that has rebuilt, maintained, and improved soil quality across Alberta and western Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Edmonton City Centre Airport

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not far from where I'm standing, the Edmonton City Centre Airport will serve a small number of its 20,000 annual passengers. These passengers will be comprised of oil executives, hobbyists, and members of this Legislature. The small assortment of small craft, mostly jets, have passed through the 217-hectare airport for far too long. While most cities in North America, especially fellow capital cities, would welcome with open arms and probably do a lot more than that to have a downtown airport, the Edmonton City Centre Airport has been all but closed to doing business in the downtown. Airports within Denver, Las Vegas, and Chicago, just to name a few, have thrived in an efficient, passenger-friendly atmosphere for decades. I seriously doubt that there are movements in those cities to shut down these lifelines of infrastructure. However, here in Edmonton there is such a movement to remove this valuable asset that should be used by all Albertans and the many flights that come from the rest of North America. Rather than abandon the airport, we should focus on long-term value added by open skies over Edmonton that are for all Albertans.

As it stands, the Edmonton City Centre Airport does not receive or send flights from southern Alberta nor reduce the environmental footprint because of the needless going back and forth from Edmonton to Leduc. The Edmonton City Centre Airport was extremely viable, but it is purposely being underfunded and underappreciated. This is short-term thinking for a long-term loss. If Albertans are confident that Edmonton will continue to be an important centre, they must ensure that this airport remains.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Primary Care Networks

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday I had the opportunity to attend the grand opening of the Lacombe walk-in medical centre. This centre is part of a primary care network, or PCN, which is a made-in-Alberta success story in providing innovative, flexible, and effective care to meet the needs of the community.

Primary care is the first point of contact that most people have with the health system, the point where people receive care for most of their everyday health needs. This type of care is typically provided by family physicians, nurses, dietitians, mental health professionals, pharmacists, therapists, and others.

The Lacombe PCN includes a group of family doctors and nurses and Alberta Health Services personnel who co-ordinate health services for patients. Services may include prevention, diagnosis, treatment, and follow-up of various health conditions and especially chronic, complex diseases like diabetes as well as geriatric concerns.

In just three years since the first PCN was launched in the province, there are now 30 PCNs in operation with many others in development. A PCN can be comprised of one clinic with many physicians and support staff or a team of physicians across several clinics. Each network has the flexibility to develop programs and to provide services in a way that works locally to meet the specific needs of patients while working within the provincial PCN framework.

Mr. Speaker, since the Lacombe PCN opened its doors, it has already enhanced the working relationship between doctors in my community. It also serves as an excellent example of how we can better connect people and communities to local health care services by matching the correct resources with people's needs at the right time.

PCNs, or primary care networks, represent a significant step towards achieving the integrated, effective, and responsive health system that Albertans deserve. I know that we will all reap the benefits for years to come.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Bill 42

Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 42, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009.

The proposed legislation in part is intended to give police and bar operators a more effective way to address gang violence and problem patrons in and around licensed premises.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 42 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader. Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, third time: do you want to move a bill?

Mr. Renner: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was temporarily disconnected.

I would move that Bill 42 be moved to the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you have one?

Mr. Mason: I'm a little disconnected, I guess, too, Mr. Speaker. It seems to be going around, but I do.

The Speaker: It's still April.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience today. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate staff were delayed in answering calls from residents, and hazards were created when there was only one staff person available to lift patients where two staff are required.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: Are there others?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, did you have another set of guests that you would like to introduce?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I do. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Well, we have to get the approval of the House, though, first, so maybe I should get that. Is it okay, hon. members, to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to introduce guests? I won't ask if anybody disagrees.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Ellen Parker, who has made Camrose, Alberta, her home since 1985. Ellen has worked as an educator in numerous capacities since graduating from the University of Alberta. She has also been an avid supporter of Canada World Youth exchanges and was a founding member of the former Camrose Waste Reduction Action Committee. She's here with us today to observe Committee of the Whole proceedings on Bill 19. Ellen is a passionate global activist, participating in campaigns for fair trade, gender equality, aboriginal rights, and the peace movement, and has been the federal NDP candidate for Crowfoot since 2004. I would now ask that Ellen rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Bill 23

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to begin debate on Bill 23, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009. I am proposing legislative changes to improve the assessment complaints and appeals process. The key objective of my ministry is to have a well-managed, fair, and efficient assessment and property tax system in which taxpayers have confidence.

In January 2008 Municipal Affairs staff began a comprehensive review of the current assessment complaints and appeals system. We consulted municipalities, municipal associations, businesses, property owners, and taxpayer associations, and we listened to their concerns. We heard that appeals are taking too long, that there is duplication in the process, there are inconsistent decisions, a lack of access to information, inconsistent qualifications of board members, concerns with a lack of accountability of all parties involved in the complaint, and concerns on costs associated with filing that complaint. As a result of this feedback, Mr. Speaker, I am recommending that we amend the MGA to introduce a new process that will improve the efficiency of appeals, improve the quality of decisions, and ensure that Albertans are treated fairly.

The key change will be to restructure the current board makeup. We will create three separate boards to hear complaints about different types of property. This will ensure that a complaint is heard once by the right board instead of twice by two separate boards. It will also eliminate duplication and preserve the taxpayers' rights to have their complaint heard based on the merits of the case. Under the new system an assessment complaint would go to one of three quasi-judicial boards based on the type or category of the complaint. Each board's role and area of responsibility would be clear and straightforward.

The first is the local assessment review board. Three trained members would be appointed by the municipality to hear complaints about residential property and farmland.

The second is a composite assessment review board. This review board will hear complaints about multifamily residential, nonresidential, and machinery and equipment. Two of three members will be appointed by the municipality while the third member will serve as the chair and will be provincially appointed. The elements of provincial oversight and impartiality are being maintained. I would like to point out that it is only after a complaint is made that the municipality must establish a local or composite assessment review board. For example, in 2007 only 37 municipalities besides Edmonton and Calgary would have needed to establish a composite assessment review board.

Mr. Speaker, the third board is the municipal government board. It will continue to hear complaints about the linear property and equalized assessment. We are also proposing that the complaint timelines be changed so the process is completed and decisions rendered by the end of the tax year for most complaints. We also want to implement realistic time frames for complaints to be heard. Timelines for disclosure will be increased, but we also expect decisions to be issued within the tax year. There will be consequences if disclosure requirements are not met.

Other changes proposed include mandating the training of board members to improve the decision-making ability of a board, ensuring an appropriate level of information is available to taxpayers to help reduce complaints, requiring disclosure of relevant information by all parties to ensure a fair complaint process, placing limits on fees municipalities can charge, and ensuring fees are returned to the successful appellants to ensure the process is affordable and reasonable. It should also be noted that two or more municipalities may continue to establish joint assessment review boards, enabling municipalities to share assessment review boards' resources and improve efficiency.

Based on our review I believe the changes we are recommending are necessary to provide taxpayers with the understandable, objective, and fair complaint and appeal system they deserve. Ideally, we want the changes in place for the 2010 assessment complaint schedule. I expect that any cost increases such as enhanced training will be offset by cost savings in other areas.

I would encourage all members to support this legislation, and I look forward to any discussion that they may wish to have. Mr. Speaker, I would like to close debate on this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: I think that the hon. minister is moving adjournment.

Mr. Danyluk: Yes.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 24

Animal Health Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise and move second reading of Bill 24, the Animal Health Amendment Act, 2009.

The Animal Health Act was proclaimed in part on January 1, 2009, along with three regulations: the reportable and notifiable diseases, the traceability premises identification, and the traceability livestock identification. The provisions of Bill 24 will allow Alberta to better prepare for an outbreak of a highly contagious livestock disease and respond to emergency situations quicker and more effectively to protect both animal and human health. Time is of the essence when responding to animal disease outbreaks to minimize the extent and financial impact of the outbreak.

The provisions in Bill 24 also ensure that Alberta is better able to minimize the risk to the public caused by those animal diseases that can spread from animals to humans. The proposed amendments to the legislation will revise penalties to ensure that low-risk minor offences are appropriate and not overly punitive, clarify definitions under the act, clarify licence names to reflect the authority to sell certain types of livestock medicines, add a provision authorizing the destruction of animals that have consumed toxic substances, and make minor administrative changes to facilitate more efficient and appropriate drafting of regulations under this act.

The development of the remaining regulations is expected to be completed by late spring of 2009. A consultation process has been undertaken to obtain appropriate input from stakeholders that would have concerns. All of the proposed regulations are completely consistent with Alberta's livestock and meat strategy. The amendments will allow us to facilitate growth of a globally competitive, sustainable agriculture and food industry and at the same time ensure public and consumer confidence in food safety. I look forward to the debate and receiving the support of members for proceeding with this bill.

Mr. Speaker, with that I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 26 Wildlife Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise before this Assembly and move second reading of Bill 26, the Wildlife Amendment Act, 2009.

Wildlife management involves hunters, the courts, fish and wildlife officers, and the public. Wildlife management protects habitat and biodiversity, agriculture, and the health and safety of Albertans. The Wildlife Act governs the management of wildlife as a Crown resource and enables the hunting and trapping of wildlife while providing protections and controls where necessary. The proposed miscellaneous amendments to the Wildlife Act will clarify how we plan to deal with some challenges around enforcement, sentencing, and wildlife control measures.

Mr. Speaker, wildlife control measures are needed where indigenous captive wildlife such as farmed elk, deer, and moose either escape or are unlawfully released from captivity. Wildlife control is also needed for controlled animals, which are nonnative species of animals that require a permit for live possession. Controlled animal permits are allowed for very limited purposes such as zoos and research. Under the Wildlife Act owners and those in charge of captive wildlife or controlled animals must make reasonable efforts to recapture an animal that has escaped. They must also report the escape within 48 hours after the escape unless the animal is recaptured within that 48-hour period.

We also need to ensure that our fish and wildlife officers have the support they need to carry out their other expected duties. At times there have been challenges to the authority of fish and wildlife officers to access land. For example, an officer needs to be given reasonable access to land to respond to a report of dead wildlife in order to determine whether the animal's death resulted from illegal activities. The amendments will authorize fish and wildlife officers with increased access to land to respond to reports of dead, injured, diseased, or dangerous wildlife and to monitor hunting activities while still protecting privacy rights.

The amendments also ensure that hunters follow the regulations for exporting wildlife. Currently an export permit is required to export wildlife or wildlife parts. Export permits are not issued for certain wildlife parts such as bear paws or bear gallbladders. It is recognized that exporting wildlife that is banned from export is a serious offence and warrants a potentially higher penalty. An amendment will therefore provide the courts with a higher penalty range to deal with those who have been convicted of this offence.

In addition to illegal exporting, we also need to ensure that big game and game bird meat is being used appropriately. The Wildlife Act also requires that big game and game bird meat is not wasted, destroyed, spoiled, or abandoned. Cases involving spoiled meat have been brought before the courts, but there have been problems proving to the courts what evidence was required to show that flesh that was once edible has become spoiled. In some cases fish and wildlife officers have testified to the poor condition of game meat by stating that the meat was no longer suitable for human consumption. Despite these testimonials the court did not accept the evidence that had been entered.

The amendments will clarify the rules regarding wastage of big game and game bird meat in two ways. Number one, Mr. Speaker, the methods to enter evidence that edible meat has been wasted or spoiled will be established and applied in the courts. Number two, the act will require edible meat to be kept fit for human consumption, to clarify what constitutes wastage or spoilage. Requiring game meat to be kept fit for human consumption will eliminate the defence that any meat in question was intended for animal food.

Lastly, there have been instances where people have incurred losses as a direct result of an offence. For example, client hunters have had their deposits stolen by persons posing as legitimate outfitter guides who are not able to or do not intend to provide the services. The amendments will adjust the creative sentencing provisions so that a court may order a convicted person to pay restitution to another person such as those client hunters who have incurred a financial loss as a direct or indirect result of the offence.

Wildlife management is challenging and continually changing, and these amendments will eliminate certain challenges in administering and enforcing the act. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 30 Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 30, the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2009.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Traffic Safety Act. The proposed changes include the following. A wording change related to the maintenance enforcement program replaces "cancellation" of an operator's licence regarding maintenance enforcement program payment defaults with "suspension" to address the administrative processes resulting from the different definition of terms. This change eliminates confusion and appropriately identifies those who fail to make payments as suspended drivers.

The next change creates a new class of investigators for the carrier and vehicle safety programs and driver training programs. These investigating officers will be dedicated to carrying out specialized technical functions under the Traffic Safety Act and its regulations.

The third amends the definition of peace officer in the Traffic Safety Act and clarifies the definition of peace officer to include the new classifications as well as certain police officers created under the Police Act, including the First Nations police officers. Mr. Speaker, this gives police officers who were inadvertently not included in the peace officer definition under the Traffic Safety Act the authority to enforce the act.

The fourth clarifies the authority to make regulations about the conduct of driver examiners, driving instructors, and the operation of driver training schools.

The fifth, Mr. Speaker, adds driver examiners, driving instructors, and the operators of driver training schools to the definitions of regulated person and therefore provides authority for a further compliance tool. The two amendments I just mentioned related to driver training and the operation of driver training schools stem from a 2008 court case and legal advice from Alberta Justice.

The sixth clarifies the definition of intersection safety device, introduced in the Traffic Safety Amendment Act, 2007. It is necessary to specify that these devices are capable of gathering evidence for traffic signal infractions or a speeding infraction or both. Without the amendment Justice believes the definition may be interpreted that an intersection safety device must be able to gather evidence for a traffic signal infraction and a speeding infraction.

The seventh, Mr. Speaker. Finally, this amendment adds vehicle rental companies to the list of businesses whose vicarious liability will be capped upon proclamation of the 2007 Traffic Safety Act.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate today on Bill 30.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:10 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 17 Securities Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak in Committee of the Whole and present Bill 17, the Securities Amendment Act, 2009. The proposed amendments are a result of a commitment from the Alberta government and all provinces and territories, except Ontario, to ongoing reform of our securities regulatory system under the 2004 provincial-territorial memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation. The support received at second reading of this bill is greatly appreciated. I would like to commend all parties for unanimously approving the second reading of this bill.

There were some points, however, raised by the opposition that I would like to take the opportunity to discuss. I believe it was the Member for Calgary-Varsity that did have a concern that the legislation does not address the idea of a national securities regulator. I want to suggest that provinces have been responsible for regulating securities markets for decades and have successfully created a national regulatory system through the implementation of the provincial-territorial passport system.

This system, Mr. Chairman, allows market participants to deal with the provincial regulator and have that regulator's decision or approval apply automatically in other participating jurisdictions. The move to a national regulator could take years. We are ready to move with the passport system now, and we are doing that. Alberta is strongly opposed to a single federal securities regulator. Securities regulation is a provincial responsibility, and the move to a single federal securities regulator would be an intrusion into an area of provincial jurisdiction. That's just not something that this government wants to see.

I also believe that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said she is seeking "a single set of rules that the province played a role" in creating. I wasn't quite sure where she was going with that. It almost sounded like she was seeking something that is exactly what we are doing with the passport system, Mr. Chairman. The passport system is a practical model that the provinces and territories, other than Ontario, have implemented to create a national regulatory regime that is flexible and responsive and which respects provincial authority. The passport system is founded on harmonized legislation rules that are consistently interpreted and applied throughout Canada. Alberta has been a leader in harmonizing legislation, and this bill continues that leadership.

In second reading, I believe, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo was concerned that government securities policy means lawyers and other people would have to deal with 13 regulators instead of just one. It is a myth that anyone has to deal with 13 sets of rules. The passport system gives a market participant streamlined access to Canada's capital markets by dealing with only its home or principal regulator and by complying with one set of harmonized laws. Despite the rhetoric, there is no empirical evidence to show that a single regulator model could deliver functional improvements to the Canadian securities regulatory system, which is already ranked by independent organizations as one of the best in the world.

Bill 17 builds on the work that Alberta has done since 2004 to further modernize, harmonize, and streamline Alberta's securities laws. I encourage all members of this House to give their full support to Bill 17.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will hand it over. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Not at this point, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 17 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That is carried.

Bill 19 Land Assembly Project Area Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this? I might add, hon. members, that we are speaking to amendment A1. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I will focus on the government amendments. I'll just wait for the minister's attention here. Okay. We were beginning to discuss these amendments last week, and we shall continue. So that the minister is aware, I'm going to be asking a few questions on point C of the amendment, which amends section 5. This is a pretty major amendment. What's proposed here is that all of the existing section 5 is struck out. All of existing section 5 is actually quite brief. It's really just two sentences that read:

5(1) Land within a Project Area may be acquired by the Crown by purchase or expropriation.

- (2) Land acquired under this section is under the administration of the Minister unless, before or after the acquisition, the Lieutenant Governor in Council directs that it is under the administration of some other Minister.

That's all of section 5 in the original bill. That's now done and being replaced by a somewhat longer amendment.

One of my first questions around the proposed amendment – and I'll focus on the proposed amendment 5(1), but this also applies to 5(2) – is around the time frames and the fact that there is, as I'm reading this, no reference to a time frame, I don't think. The proposed amendment 5(1) would read that "subject to section 5.1, at any time, at the request of the registered owner of land within a Project Area, the Crown shall enter into an agreement with the registered owner to purchase the land at market value."

Now, first of all, I think the word "shall." It's important to note that this is not a "may" or a "can"; this is a "shall." In other words, this is a legislative directive to the Crown that it must do something, as I understand this. But as I read through this proposed amendment in that section, I am concerned that there is no time frame. It doesn't say: shall enter into an agreement within one year or one decade or, you know, to be ridiculous, one century or something like that. There is no time frame. On the one hand it sounds very forceful while, on the other hand, there is an entirely open end to this if I am reading this correctly.

I'd like the minister to speak to that because I understand you'd need a certain amount of time to sort out market value, but after all there is a process for doing that here without any time limit on this. My concern – and let's be honest – is that the wheels of government can turn slowly, sometimes on purpose. This could stretch out . . . [interjections] Never? Never. Oh, I'm getting corrected by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who has never had his department do anything slowly, I guess.

Let's speak hypothetically. Seriously, if the government were to decide that it shall do something over the course of a decade, there's nothing here to stop it from taking that long. I'd like the minister to speak to that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. The intention with "shall" is exactly as you mentioned. It is: shall at the owner's triggering sit down and negotiate for purchase, and we're talking right away. The clarification . . . [interjection] Well, actually it does. In the bill there's reference to where it's budgeted every year for the purchase of land. Of course, with our past experience we have a general idea of how much land is purchased at different stages on the long-term projects. In some ways, of course, it's advantageous to government to do that purchasing earlier in the process rather than later, just so we're not dealing with the time constraints we have on some projects right close to the time that construction needs to be started.

The amendment to the bill spells out very clearly the steps that can be followed, and it does state "shall," which it hasn't in the past. Under past legislation – the hon. member is exactly right – the government had the opportunity to pick and choose the time that it wanted to purchase the land according to whatever determinations it made in that particular budget year. But what we've moved forward with, to better suit these types of projects, is a situation where the landowner triggers the compensation portion, and the government "shall" negotiate and sit down with the landowner and move forward with purchase of the land when they trigger it. Of course, the other thing that we see in projects like this is that many people choose to stay on the land and use it as they always traditionally have, until they get very close to the time of the project, before they sell the property.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I appreciate that the minister and I are just trying to clear something up here. I didn't get a lot of reassurance from that. Can the minister point me to where there is a time frame here? I mean, quite honestly, and all kidding aside, if a government wants to grind a landowner down, they could take years. They could take a long time for this to occur. Where is the time frame in here? I didn't get a lot of reassurance from the minister telling me that we have a process. I would like to see something a little firmer in here on a time frame. Maybe it's here. If it is, show me.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. When the member first started speaking about this, that is where concern comes in, where government "may" if you change the wording. When it says "shall" negotiate, the landowner does trigger it. It is budgeted for every year, and that is written in the bill. Section 5, that you're referring to, states very clearly that a landowner can sit down to negotiate the purchase of the land by the province. They can bring to the table whatever they feel is material to that negotiation. Should they not be satisfied with that, they can then move to the third party – and it makes reference to the Land Compensation Board or another board as agreed to by both parties, an arm's-length board – to bring the information to that table and have a determination made there. Should the landowner at that point still not feel that they're satisfied with that amount, it can then go to the Court of Appeal. Even after that there is still expropriation at the end of the process.

With respect to the timelines on it, obviously, there's a two-year time period when the consultation and discussion take place on the project before such time as the Lieutenant Governor in Council or cabinet actually have to vote to approve or turn down the project. At that time, once a decision is made that they would decide to go ahead with that project, the landowner can trigger that compensation at any point from there forward.

Dr. Taft: All right. Well, I think you are just going to have to accept that I'm not convinced by that because I don't see a time frame for this "shall." Once the process is triggered, if I'm the landowner, I say: "Okay. I see the project. We've taken the time. We've worked that out. Now I want to sell, so you shall as the Crown enter into an agreement to buy it from me." But I don't get a lot of reassurance from this that you need to do that even in my lifetime, frankly. Again, you know, I'm looking for direction here.

Now, this section in this amendment refers to section 28 of the Expropriation Act. I won't profess any expertise in the Expropriation Act, but I did just have a page bring me that bill, and I've had a quick look at section 28. Section 28 seems to give the Lieutenant Governor in Council and cabinet a pretty blank cheque. Again, I don't see in section 28 a lot of reassurance to the landowner that something is going to be done in an expeditious time frame or that the outcome is necessarily that fair. Section 28, as I read it quickly, gives the minister a blank slate, really. I don't see a lot of reassurance for the landowner in section 28. Do you want to respond, please?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we're staying with the amendments.

Mr. Hayden: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would suggest to the hon. member that when we say “shall,” I think that’s very direct: shall enter into negotiations.

With respect to the trust related to the timelines I would also suggest to the hon. member that if I put a number down there and said, “shall negotiate the agreement on the purchase price or compensation to the landowner within a 30-day period,” someone would be standing up and accusing me of rushing the negotiation and frightening a landowner. If I was to stand up and say, “shall do it within a one-year time period,” someone would still stand up and criticize me for rushing someone or for taking too long and delaying. I suggest, sir, that when we say “shall,” it means that the government shall sit down and negotiate. These, of course, are the people that we’re responsible to represent, and obviously we will do it in good faith.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. What I would find reassuring and I would bet you that landowners would find reassuring would be something like, “shall in an expeditious manner,” so that if it ended up in court, the court has some sense that taking five years to negotiate it is not expeditious. I agree, you know, that putting 30 days or one year or something could be problematic. But having a flexible time frame that nonetheless would indicate to the minister and ultimately, if need be, to a court that this was to move on expeditiously would be a worthwhile amendment to this amendment. I’d urge the minister to consider something like that.

If I may move on to the next paragraph under this same amendment, which is paragraph 5(2). I’ll just leave it – we don’t need to repeat that exchange – but again I don’t see any time frame or time limits on this either. We all know that court cases can drag out for years. Frankly, in any court case, ultimately, an organization like the government is going to have far more power than a landowner just because the government has, for practical purposes, unlimited resources. So I am concerned just about the aspects of that that open things up.

I will repeat what I said a moment ago under this amendment 5(3). I’ll try to abbreviate it a bit here. It reads:

If the registered owner requests that the Land Compensation Board make the determination as to the market value of the land . . .

And it would do that if negotiations broke down, presumably. It goes on that the Land Compensation Board has jurisdiction with respect to the determination of market value under this Act and may exercise the powers given to it pursuant to section 28 of the Expropriation Act.

That’s what took me to the Expropriation Act, and I read section 28 as giving just about all power it ever wants to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, so I am concerned there.

I will move on to section 5.1 of this amendment, in which the subtitle is Requirement of Land by the Crown. This is just a one-sentence section, and it reads as follows: “When the land within a Project Area is required by the Crown for or in connection with the public project, the Crown may acquire the land by purchase or expropriation.”

Now, I have a couple of thoughts on this right away. First of all, I’m wondering why this is needed because there is the Expropriation Act. We’ve outlined a process for purchasing the land. I don’t know why this section is needed, and I’d be curious to know what the legislative drafters told the minister to justify the existence of this. Secondly, my concern is: does this ultimately override the previous sections? In other words, when the chips are down, this would seem to give the Crown everything it needs to just go ahead and barge in, in any case. So why is this section needed, and does this actually trump everything else, in any case?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As the hon. member will see when we move to section D and the section being struck out with respect to the Expropriation Act, in the original version of the bill there was a section there for clarification purposes that the Expropriation Act is still available for use, to give some satisfaction to landowners that that still is an area that’s available to them. It was being misconstrued, I will say, by some people and used to indicate to people that the Expropriation Act, in fact, wasn’t available to them should they need it through this process.

When we talk about 5.1, that the hon. member is referring to, there are, of course, two ways that the land can be acquired. One is through a purchase through the three steps that we spoke about previously, and the other is, at the end of the day, with the use of the Expropriation Act and all of the restrictions and abilities that go with that for the protection of the landowners. That’s still available. Mr. Chair, that’s available to the federal government, to municipal governments, and to the provincial government, and it’s just stating it because we heard from Albertans that they were concerned that their right to use the Expropriation Act would not apply to this bill. Of course, it very much does, and we’ve stated it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to rise in Committee of the Whole and speak to Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. The minister has tabled four amendments, which affect sections 2, 5, and 13. These amendments are the result of members of this government first and foremost listening to the concerns raised by Albertans and addressing those concerns by making the amendments you see before you to the issues that were raised.

Since the bill was introduced on March 2, 2009, I have participated in many public meetings. The first one was in the village of Warburg in my constituency with two of my MLA colleagues. Soon after I attended one in Ponoka, then another in Ryley, where we were joined by the Minister of Infrastructure and several other MLAs. Then I attended two more, in Pigeon Lake and Innisfail, again with several MLAs and the ministers of Infrastructure and Transportation. On each and every occasion we were keen to hear what the constituents’ concerns were and worked closely with the minister and the department to ensure that they received the feedback we were hearing. It was from the feedback and the conversations we had with Albertans that the following amendments were drafted.

Section 2(2) was amended and now reads:

For the purpose of this Act and the regulations, a project is a public project if the project is

- (a) a project related to the transportation of people or goods, which may also include as part of that project a corridor of land for pipelines, pipes or other conduits, poles, towers, wires, cables, conductors or other devices, including any ancillary structures, or
- (b) a project related to the conservation or management of water.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment makes it clear that Bill 19 is designed to facilitate the construction of either a water project or a highway such as a transportation utility corridor. Furthermore, it is explicit that land assembled under Bill 19 can only be used for things like pipelines or transmission lines if and only if that land has already been assembled for another purpose such as a transportation utility corridor.

Mr. Chairman, section 2.1 has also been amended. Part (2) of this section now reads that “the Lieutenant Governor in Council may not designate an area of land as a project area if more than 2 years has elapsed since the plan of the proposed project was made available to the public.” In our discussions Albertans expressed concerns about the duration of consultations and advocated for a finite consultation period. This amendment gives those constituents peace of mind, assuring them that any consultation would be completed after two years. At that point the government would have to make a decision regarding whether they are going to proceed with the original plan and designate that land a project area or whether they are not going to follow through with assembling that land.

Mr. Chairman, the amendments to section 5 ensure that if the government chooses to designate a particular piece of land a project area, the landowner is fairly compensated. Section 5(1) reads: “At any time, at the request of the registered owner of land within a Project Area, the Crown shall enter into an agreement with the registered owner to purchase the land at market value.” In essence, at any time after the land is designated a project area, the landowner can choose to begin the negotiations to sell their land to the Crown. This means that a landowner can choose to maintain ownership of their property, continuing to use it until the government requires it, or they could choose to sell it immediately. Ultimately it is the landowner’s discretion.

Further to this, Mr. Chairman, if an agreement cannot be reached about the market value of the land, part (2) of this section allows for the owner to apply to the Land Compensation Board to determine the market value of the land. Should the registered owner choose to exercise their rights in part (2), part (3) applies to the Land Compensation Board, allowing them the ability to establish the value of the land just as they would if the request were made under the Expropriation Act. This provides them with several powers in order to draw a conclusion on the value of the land, including allowing them to hold formal hearings and to physically inspect the property.

In the event that a determination by the Land Compensation Board is unsatisfactory to either the landowner or the government, part (4) then applies. This section reads:

The registered owner . . . or the Minister may, within 30 days after receiving notice of the determination of the Land Compensation Board, appeal the determination to the Court of Appeal, and section 37 of the Expropriation Act applies to the appeal.

This part ensures that there is an additional mechanism for a landowner to be certain that they are being fairly compensated when selling their land to the Crown.

The last amendment is section 13. Mr. Chairman, this section was initially written to reinforce that Bill 19 was to work in concert with the Expropriation Act. However, it caused some confusion. Albertans were concerned that Bill 19 would override the Expropriation Act. It doesn’t. Regardless, the amendment is there to remove this section, thereby alleviating this fear and, therefore, providing clarity on the issue to Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, these amendments are in response to the concerns and recommendations we heard from our constituents, Albertans. The feedback from Albertans gave us a clear understanding of the elements of Bill 19 that were misunderstood and enabled the communication of these concerns back to the government. This democratic response has ensured that Bill 19 respects the rights of landowners while balancing the province’s need for future transportation utility corridors.

Indeed, as mentioned in earlier debate last week, this was also taken to the floor of the AAMD and C. After listening and questioning the minister on questions they had with regards to Bill 19, the assembly voted – and overwhelmingly supported the minister – to defeat an emergent resolution to delay this bill.

For myself and others this has been about listening to our constituents, going to meetings with them, meeting with them in our offices, over the phone, and bringing back their concerns and having those concerns addressed in the amendments we see tabled here today.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the members of government and all Albertans that have shared their ideas and suggestions. That process and the feedback that we have received and the amendments that have been tabled have made Bill 19, in my opinion, a better piece of legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

3:40

The Deputy Chair: Before we move on, hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has asked for unanimous consent to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I do apologize for having to interrupt the debate. I will be brief. We had attempted to introduce a number of people who are in the gallery today to listen to this debate, and at the time we did not have their names at our disposal. With the permission of the members of the Assembly I would now like to introduce the people who are in the gallery, who are very committed to following this debate and are very concerned about the outcome of the debate with respect to Bill 19.

I hope I have most of the names correct. I may miss some of them still, but I would ask that you rise as I call your name in order to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. The members in the gallery are Joe Anglin, Jan Slomp, Benz Rofacht, Jessica Ernst, Mary Binnette, George Binnette, Stewart Shields, Garry Mizera, Midge Lambert, William Munzie, Rod Olstad, Patty Davidson, Terry Smith, Sheila Sharko, Jim Slavin, Susan Junas, Edwin Erickson, Florence Stemo, and Ken Stemo. It does appear as though there may be a few others up there whose names I didn’t get, and I do apologize for that. I do want to say thank you very much for your demonstrated interest in this very important issue to Albertans. I would ask that all Members of the Legislative Assembly welcome these members.

Bill 19

The Deputy Chair: We will now continue with the debate on the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment. Okay. My concern with what I’m seeing from the government amendments is that it’s one step forward and two steps back. I don’t in fact see that there has been much accomplished through these amendments. Just let me give you one really quick example. When we looked at section 2(3) of the original bill, we had, “The Lieutenant Governor in Council may not designate an area of land as a Project Area with respect to,” blah, blah, blah, and then (a), (b), (c), (d). In (a) it talks about “has prepared a plan, in accordance with the regulations,” and for (b), “has made the plan of the proposed project available to the public in accordance with the regulations.” That “in accordance with the regulations” phrase appears in every single clause.

As always, we don’t get the regulations. We don’t get the regulations in advance of the bill that is tabled before us in the Assembly. Members of the Official Opposition keep bringing up this issue because we’re asked to approve a bill in which, over and over and over again, the salient clauses in the bill are all subject to regulations. All the detail of what is supposed to happen here is by regulations. That’s like saying: would I please admire your child who is yet unborn. I’d love to admire your child, but the child is unborn. I have no child to admire here, and I don’t want to go out on a limb and say, “What a lovely looking boy” when it could turn out to be a girl, and I wouldn’t know because there’s no child.

In many ways what the government keeps trying to do is exactly that. The child that I’m referring to is the regulations. Until we can see the regulations, these bills don’t make sense. They don’t give us any information at all. Legislation should be a plan. It should be a good enough plan that I can follow it, that these people who have joined us in the gallery can follow it, that people that want to download the legislation at home and read it can follow the bill. It should be written in clear and understandable language, and you should be able to actually figure out what the government is trying to do as a result of reading it. That is an impossibility here because everything is subject to, and the detail of which is supposed to come through, the regulations, which we don’t have as we’re trying to debate the bill.

We now have an amendment come forward from the government, and I thought: “Yay. Glory. It’ll be great.” I look at it, and the section that has been replaced, which is appearing here as 2.1(1): “(a) has prepared a plan” – is this sounding familiar? Yes, I think it is, Mr. Chairman – “in accordance with the regulations.” Wait. Let’s go to the next one: “(b) has made the plan of the proposed project available to the public” – yes, again – “in accordance with the regulations.” And on it goes in (c), in (d), and henceforth through the rest of the bill. Can I tell what is supposed to be going on here? Could I explain it to someone else? Could anybody else in this Assembly explain it specifically? No, they can’t because none of us have the regulations to be able to understand the detail of what the government is anticipating here. Even though we’ve got a series of amendments, in many ways we’re no further forward.

This is what this government keeps doing. The previous time this bill was up for debate in committee, I talked about buying a pig in a poke, and it ended up getting picked up in the media. Essentially, we’re being asked to approve something that we can’t see and we can’t test and we can’t examine in any way, shape, or form. We’re just supposed to go, “Oh, I guess the government means well, and I’ll accept that.” But we can’t accept that, no, and I won’t accept that. There are too many examples of where the government actually made a mistake and, gee, in some cases passed legislation that was unconstitutional and then had to redo it, or in some cases we’re still waiting for them to redo it. Sometimes they make a genuine mistake, or they don’t foresee the consequences of something.

We have the government trying to address an issue that it has identified it wishes to modify. Thus we had the original Bill 19. That didn’t go so well. We even have backbenchers that, I’m delighted, have joined in the discussion. We rarely have them join us in discussion of a government bill, but we’ve certainly seen that this afternoon. They feel compelled to get on the record in order to address concerns that have been raised by their constituents. We’ve got amendments brought forward by the government, but that didn’t really take us that much further forward.

I’ll just pick up on the section that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview was querying the minister on, the language that we’re missing from that section that’s appearing as amendment 3 from the government, which is, in fact, amending section 5. It talks about an agreement to purchase the land and that it shall be entered into. My colleague is correct. The language that’s missing here is any language that talks about time: “expeditiously” or other kinds of time language that you get in legal documents, “forthwith,” “immediately,” or a number of other examples of language that has to do with time. There is no language that has to do with time appearing in this amending section.

My further question on this is two things around compensation. Would this section address the time lag that takes place between when this idea to designate this particular area for future use by the government – does it take us from when that’s a twinkle in the government’s eye to the point where the landowner says, “Okay, I’m ready to sell,” and we have section 5(1) kick in? What is done about the devaluation, the lowering of the market value of the land that has happened from that twinkle in the eye to this point? If you start to negotiate from this point forward, you may have already had a devaluation in your land. If the government says, “Well, no, I mean, we do the regular due diligence that happens around the sale of land, and we look at the nearest ones or comparable property, and at this point in time or within the last six months it is X amount of money,” that may not be taking into consideration any devaluation that’s happened over the longer advance period of what’s contemplated in this bill. That’s the first question I have.

The second question is around the ability of the landowner to continue to negotiate contracts for the use of their land. I’m thinking grazing leases or access for oil and gas companies, in which a landowner can sign a contract for additional compensation. If they are now under the definitions of what is contained in Bill 19, is there compensation available to them if they’re not able to negotiate those kind of contracts?

I’ll see if the minister is willing to answer those two sets of questions for me.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to first speak to the reference to regulations. The hon. member made reference several times that the regulations aren’t there before them to take a look at and that they never are in government. Well, the hon. member is correct. Only an arrogant government would create the regulations before it has the legislation to guide it. That’s the way the democratic process and this process works in the House. The regulations are guided by the legislation, and the legislation with this bill, as with all bills, is the tip of the iceberg. It’s what gives the high-level direction of what we’re trying to accomplish.

The only part I really got, question-wise, out of that second section is where the member talks about the value of land. We talk about the compensation, and we talk about market value. Market value is determined by all levels of government. Everyone uses the same principle with respect to market value. It does not consider any sort of damage that might be done to a value by the project that’s going to impact that piece of property. The market value is a property unencumbered, as this one is at the time that government comes in and has a project that they need to do. All considerations on compensation can be brought to the table. This is the advantage of this legislation compared to what we’ve done in the past. As soon as a determination has been made that it will go forward, the landowner can trigger the compensation immediately if they want that to take place.

I'm going to talk a little bit about my personal experience, but I can also talk directly with respect to the two projects that we're familiar with now, the Anthony Henday and the Calgary ring road, over the past 30 years while land has been acquired, the value of those properties and the value of properties back in my old days. In fact, when you have a proper transportation corridor – and there are a number of members in the House with past municipal experience – you see the values increase dramatically. That is more the case. So with proper consultation with landowners at the front end of this project I as an Albertan and as a person representing Albertans would like to make certain that that's on the table so that they understand that they can be the speculator on land should they choose to be the speculator on land as it goes forward.

If this creates a situation that they find is not in the way that they want to operate, they can trigger the compensation, or as has been mentioned, they can continue to use the land exactly as they have right up until the government needs it for the project. At that point, should they not wish to use all of those tools that are available to them for compensation, in section 5 expropriation is still available.

Having been involved and even being personally involved where the provincial government needed land from my property for a transportation project, I am very thrilled with this bill and these amendments and its clarification. The hon. member is correct. The intention of the bill before the clarification and the changes were made was to ensure that the landowners were consulted, compensated, and treated fairly in this process. But there have been many fears that have been put out there, people that continue to go out and talk about this being used for the placement of a nuclear plant, for example, or for the transmission of power, for those sorts of things, and these amendments have cleared that up. All of those clarifications have been made.

We have a responsibility, and these amendments show the responsibility. We have a responsibility to the landowner, but there is a greater public good, too, and we have a responsibility to plan towards the future. We need to have good legislation that's responsive to all Albertans and also is responsive to the landowners. I think that we've captured it very well with these amendments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, specific, of course, to the amendments, Mr. Chairman, but a little democratic vignette for the benefit of the member, who, I understand, was elected six or eight months before the last election and, in fact, has served as a member of cabinet for a year. In fact, in most other provinces it would not be uncommon to have draft regulations to consider at the time that you were considering legislation on the floor. Alternatively, most other provinces still have an all-party legislative standing committee called law and regulations, to which the regulations are referred. All parties would be represented and would be able to examine and debate the regulations often at the same time and even previous to when the legislation comes to the floor. I understand that this is a one-party state, I understand that this party has been in place for 40 years, and I understand that you all believe that this is the way it is. But the truth is that this is the way it is only in this one province, and everywhere else in a democracy those regs are available as part of the process.

I know that this government likes to keep control of everything. I know you love those three Cs. You love that control. You love to be able to control the consultation process as well, and you – well, it's centralization as much as control. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has the floor.

Ms Blakeman: You know, Mr. Chairman, I'm always delighted when I can get any member of the government to engage, so I'm perfectly happy to have them heckle me. If they'll actually pay attention to what we're doing on the floor, I'll take it. I don't mind the heckling. It shows they are awake, which is an improvement over the status of things at some times in this place, so I'm happy to take it.

Now, back to where I was with the three Cs. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We are talking about a government that deals very much in centralization. It is centralization and control that it's increasingly interested in, how it hangs on to consultation, which is addressed in these amendments, and also compensation, which is also addressed in these amendments. Those are three themes that I am seeing play out not only in this legislation and these amendments but in a number of other sectors that we are seeing this government involved with.

For example, the Auditor General: control of that compensation so that he can't do the systems audits that he wants to do. It's an example that relates to the amendments, Mr. Chairman. The control and the centralization of that control and who is able to report to whom and a real hard push-back from these government members about having any additional officials report to the Assembly, like the commissioner of human rights or the child advocate. So those and compensation: again, the government really likes to use those three things to bully its way through. You know, if my party had been in power for 40 years, I might well do the same thing. I hope I don't. I hope I'm not there for 40 years because I think that's what happens.

When you get a government in place for 40 years, you get amendments like we're looking at here, and you get the rhetoric that we're hearing in this House about how we should all be grateful that they have replaced a series of amendments and replaced legislation that talked over and over again about "according to the regulations," which we don't have, with amendments that do exactly the same thing.

Overall I'm not seeing that these amendments accomplished what the government said that it was going to accomplish. In the real world, outside of these doors, would they be up or liable for claims of false advertising? Well, I think there's a good case to be argued there, Mr. Chairman. I don't see enough forward movement in what has been presented in these government amendments to allay the concerns that were raised or, more importantly, to make this a piece of legislation that is useful to the citizens of the province over the long term that protects both the citizens and the government.

The larger picture here is about: how do we move ahead with that long-term, large-project planning? If we're going to grow up as a province and take our place, as everyone keeps saying, in the global marketplace, et cetera, et cetera, it is around transportation. It's around moving goods. It's around moving people. But it's also around our utility corridors, our environment, how we balance – I'd argue that we're imbalanced right now – between the energy sector and environmental protection. We need to be planning long term on that, and we need to be understanding how big the projects are. I want something that does that. As a citizen of this province I want to see those kinds of plans and that kind of process in place, and I am not getting it from this government. Do I see protection for the citizen here in balance with a government's ability to move forward on large projects like that? I don't think it's been accomplished in what I've seen here.

I know that there are other amendments that are going to be brought forward. I know that there are others that want to speak, and I have other colleagues that are interested in continuing to speak on these amendments. Maybe I will be convinced that they are more effective amendments than what I am seeing, but thus far I'm not able to support them in the manner in which they are currently presented.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and talk about the government amendment to this bill.

I'd like to begin by dealing with some of the aspects of the amendment, first of all the government amendment which puts emphasis on the consultation provisions and removes from the cabinet the unlimited ability to designate something as a public project. Mr. Chairman, I think that this supposed change is laughable. All the government is proposing to do is to take the same provisions about consultation – and the wording is identical except for the addition of the second amendment, which is detailed – and put them in their own section with their own title. It's just a matter of optics, and it involves no legislative change whatsoever. The main problem with this section is that although it requires landowner consultation, there are no details given about how that consultation will take place. That is not addressed by this change.

The second one, a time limit on the government for approving a project area under section 2. The government wants to amend it to place a two-year limit on the government to complete consultations and make a decision whether to approve a project area. But the part of the amendment that removes the ability for the Lieutenant Governor In Council, or the cabinet, to name anything they chose as a public project is beneficial. Now it's clear what a public project which can lead to the creation of a project area consists of: something that transports people or goods, something that involves water conservation or management. I think that this is a positive limit on the cabinet powers, but there's still no requirement that a public project under this act will be in the public interest.

The amendment requires the government to take no more than two years to assign an area as a project area from the time they first release the tentative plan to the public. This provision would be included in the new section about consultation requirements. This is probably an improvement as it keeps the consultation process from dragging on too long and keeps people whose land is being considered for a project from being up in the air for more than two years.

Mr. Chairman, here's the point. It's not the time limit that the landowners have been asking for. My understanding is that people want a time limit on how long an area of land can be designated as a project area before the government actually goes ahead with their project. As it stands, a person's land could be under a project area designation indefinitely with no guarantee of when the development will happen or if it will happen at all. The government can cancel the project at any time without consequence. The government may try to say that this amendment addresses people's concerns about the lack of timelines in the bill, but it does not.

Mr. Chairman, there is one here that we do like, and that is the purchase of land provisions under section 5. This proposed amendment does address a problem in the original bill, so this amendment might be a positive change. The ministry has insisted that they would be prepared to buy any land that was part of a project area from day one, but this was not enshrined in the legislation. The amendment would change that. It would guarantee that landowners were always able to sell their project area land at any point in the process.

The removal of section 13 is just an issue of clarification. Some people believe that section 13 of this bill was nullifying parts of or all of the Expropriation Act. That was not the case. Section 13 only says that actions under Bill 19 would not be considered expropriations. If the government had to expropriate project area land because development was imminent, then that action would be taken under the Expropriation Act, not under this act. To be clear, Bill 19 does not affect expropriations. The removal of section 13 is once again merely a matter of optics. It makes no legislative changes whatsoever.

This government amendment does not address a number of important issues. Landowners whose land is part of a project area still do not get any form of compensation for the development restrictions placed on their land. There is no limit on how long land can be under a project area order, and the government can cancel the project area order at any time without penalty. The details of the consultation process are still left to regulation, belying the government's claim that this bill increases transparency. The minister still has the power to choose which appeal body will hear an appeal of an enforcement order, giving him inappropriate influence over the hearing and ruling on the appeal. An injunction can still be sought for someone who appears to be "about to" commit an offence.

Finally, these proposed changes do not remedy the fact that no landowners were consulted in the drafting of this bill. These amendments do not address the concerns of Alberta landowners or of the NDP caucus. Given that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose an amendment to the government's amendment.

The Deputy Chair: If you want to have it distributed, we'll pause until it's distributed.

Mr. Mason: That would be great.

The Deputy Chair: Please send it to the table here.

We will label this subamendment SA1. The hon. member.

4:10

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will move that amendment A1 to Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended in part A, clause (b) in the proposed section 2(2) by adding "the project is in the public interest and if" after "a project is a public project if."

Now, if I can just address that, Mr. Chairman. I want to say first of all that this bill has more fundamental problems than any amendments that we can make here can solve even if the government were to agree to pass these amendments, which is unlikely. I think the government needs to go back to the drawing board and actually consult with landowners and other stakeholders before completely redrafting this legislation. However, these amendments will address a few of the many problems contained in the bill.

One of the most basic concerns about Bill 19 is that its definition of a public project does not include the requirement that it be in the public interest, and that is what this amendment does. Section 2(2) gives some guidelines for what a public project could be – something related to the transportation of people or goods, a road or railway, I guess; a land corridor for pipelines, cables, and other kinds of conduits or ancillary structures; or a water management or conservation project – but the bill does not specify that these must be in the public interest. Given that the project has to be considered a public project in order for land to be set aside for it under this bill, there should be some requirement that the project be something that is being done for the public good instead of just for the good of big business.

This amendment would require the government to justify any public project as being in the public interest. Most of the projects that government has talked about with regard to Bill 19, such as ring roads and transportation and utility corridors, would probably qualify as being in the public interest. However, I would say that a power line built for the commercial exportation of power to the United States would not. That would be, ultimately, for the courts to decide.

If an individual or group thinks that a government project that has been designated as a public project is not actually in the public interest, this amendment would give them legitimate grounds for complaint and appeal to the courts.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge the government to accept this amendment. As I said, this amendment will not in any way fix the bill. The flawed process and the flawed drafting of this bill will not be corrected. But it will eliminate the possibility, at least, that commercial projects for purely commercial reasons would not qualify, and the government would not be able to use the bill, use the legislation to sterilize landowners' lands in the interests of their friends in business. I think that this would provide a small improvement, and I would urge members of the Assembly to support this amendment to the amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister on subamendment A1.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I stand to speak against this subamendment. In the hon. member's preamble it seems that the member completely disregards the amendments that have been put in place that talk about a public project related to the transportation of people and goods. There is no possible way anyone could miss that that is in the public interest and something for the people of Alberta. I believe it's very clear.

Also, with the comments that were made – and I'm only going to make a small reference to them – in the hon. leader of the third party's time in the other order of government, that member put more restrictions on people's lands through his land-use bylaws in a month than this bill will put on in 35 years without compensation.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, the minister cuts me to the quick as a municipal councillor. He also served in municipal government. He rightly knows that good land use is essential to the functioning of any municipality, whether it's urban or rural, but that does not mean that you should trample on people's rights. You should follow a due process. Of course, if the city needs to take land, they have to use expropriation and provide compensation. They do not have the authority to just freeze somebody's land and say: you can't do anything on that land until we're good and ready to come along and buy it from you. You know, I know that. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has the floor.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I don't mind a little cheering and so on as I go, Mr. Chairman.

You know, the transportation of nuclear waste might qualify under this. Not everything, as the minister has said, is in the public interest. A pipeline shipping bitumen and our jobs with it down to the United States would certainly qualify in this government's assessment.

If the minister is so convinced that the definition already encompasses the public interest, then why doesn't he support this amendment? Why doesn't he? If the public interest is protected, there can be no reason not to add it in. It might be redundant, but it obviously wouldn't change the intention, as the minister has stated it.

I just want to indicate to the House that I believe this is an essential amendment in order to protect the public interest, Mr. Chairman. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the subamendment.

Dr. Taft: On the subamendment; A1 I believe it is. Who knows how many subamendments there might be.

Mr. Chairman, I'm interested in this subamendment. I'd be curious to know if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who sponsored this subamendment, has any formal reference to a definition of public interest. Is there a legislative basis for how public interest is defined, or is it something that would be worked out in due course?

Mr. Mason: As far as I know, it would be a matter of case law.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you. This subamendment raises an interesting point, and it's the conflict potentially between a development for, as the member said, purely commercial purposes versus a corridor for the public interest. The minister had an interesting response, and he's right to the extent that this amendment refers specifically to a project related to the transportation of people or goods.

Now, if I can just work with the minister here a little bit on getting as clear as possible, that would be great. Thank you. What I have with me – and I tucked this in my file many weeks ago – is actually the map for the Heartland transmission project, which is a proposed electrical transmission route from the Wabamun area up around the northwest of Edmonton, up past St. Albert and so on out to the Industrial Heartland. I guess that's why they call it the Heartland transmission project. Now, one of the questions I had, and I think this subamendment gets right to the point here: is there any possibility that Bill 19, once it becomes law, if it does, would be used to pave the way, as it were – or perhaps that's a poor choice of words – to assemble the land for this Heartland transmission project? Is that the kind of thing that Bill 19 would be used for?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. No, that's not possible. There's legislation for the management of pipelines or for transmission of power. There's separate legislation that deals with that. We do not acquire land as a province for private industry.

Dr. Taft: Still on the subamendment, Mr. Chairman, we're into some interesting and, I think, important – I think it's fair to say important – definitional matters here. Since we're on to the one about the public interest and what this piece of legislation would cover, I don't want to get too complicated here, but in part A of the amendment we get into subs and subs and subs. It says, "For the purpose of this Act and the regulations, a project is a public project if the project is," as the minister has said, "(a) a project related to the transportation of people or goods." But then (b) – we haven't spoken about (b) yet that I'm aware of – says: "a project related to the conservation or management of water.” Is the minister with me on the amendment? Okay.

Then we go to the subamendment, which would narrow this a little bit to the conservation or management of water that was in the public interest. I have been wondering about that section of this amendment for some time. Conservation and management of water is very broad. It strikes me that, well, that could include canals. It could include pipelines. We’ve put a number of bills through this Legislature for interbasin pipelines and the whole water system which, in fact, the hometown of the minister is served by, those pipelines stretching from the Red Deer River up as far north, I think, as Hobbema and as far south as, well, south of Stettler, anyway; I know that. It could include dams, it seems to me, if we’re wanting to manage our water system. It could include something like wetlands, which are gradually being recognized as an important flood abatement resource and an important natural resource.

My question here is that that’s wide open. One of the most contentious issues in this Legislature, which this minister will know about, I’m sure, because it certainly came up in Drumheller in the by-election, is the transportation of water from the Red Deer River through the Drumheller water treatment plant to a big shopping mall at Balzac. Now, that’s a commercial project. That water is being transported from one basin to another for purely commercial purposes. It’s not in the public interest. So if we do not accept this subamendment, in fact, it would seem to me that it’s very possible that this legislation could be used to allow water management such as we saw for the Balzac shopping centre. I’d appreciate the minister’s comments on that.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. No, that isn’t possible either. There’s legislation that deals with regional waterlines, and it’s not the acquisition of large parcels of land for that. I’m sure that the hon. member is aware of how the distribution of utilities works. That’s the legislation that would cover that.

There is also a restricted development area of the legislation that was designed for environmental purposes. When the member speaks about wetlands and areas like that, that legislation was designed for that and can be used for that should those types of areas be protected.

This is for the acquisition of large areas of land that would be involved in reservoirs or dams, where we’re talking about a large area of land being required for that particular project.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Certainly, anyone is welcome to jump in here. First of all, I just want to reiterate for the record that the minister is being very clear that this legislation would not be used for drinking water transportation or for anything of the like. This would be used, as he said, only to assemble land for dams or reservoirs. That’s interesting to know.

I am concerned, as Albertans have been for a very long time, about the assembly of a water transportation system to take water from north to south, from the Athabasca or Peace basin down to the Red Deer or Bow or South Saskatchewan. I’m concerned that this bill, in fact, can facilitate an interbasin water transportation project like that.

I have to say that I’m not convinced by what the minister told me on the water side that the subamendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood isn’t actually very well justified in common sense. We often hear from the Minister of Transportation how we need more common sense. Well, this is a common-sense amendment brought forward. I don’t see the problem with it. I think it would help reassure that some of these land assembly projects for reservoirs or dams or other such are genuinely in the public interest.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you. I’ll be brief. Don’t worry.

Mr. Mason: You don’t have to be.

Ms Notley: I’ll try to be. It happens every now and then.

It’s a pleasure to be able to rise to speak to this proposed amendment to the government amendment, wherein we would add the concept, the notion, of public interest into the definition of the types of projects which would come under the authority of this legislation.

I want to start by simply repeating the point made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, which is: if it is the case that these items which are listed in the legislation are actually in the public interest, what would be the problem with including that language in the legislation? It’s certainly the case that that language appears in other contexts. It appears in the Expropriation Act. I believe it appears in the Government Organization Act. I believe it was at one point a principle governing the now-defunct energy utility boards, however ironic that is. So it’s not that this government has in the past been uncomfortable with identifying the concept of the public interest as far as describing and in some cases limiting its authority. There’s not really been a good answer to the question posed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood to the minister with respect to why it is you would not simply agree to have that provision included.

The other thing that I am a bit confused about is that every time we put certain scenarios to the minister and say, “Well, would this be something that might be covered, or would that be something that might be covered?” the minister responds by saying: “Oh, no. That would be covered under this scenario or that scenario or this legislation or that legislation.” Of course, you know, we do have under section 3, which is not part of the amendment at this point, of the proposed legislation the notion of essentially giving the cabinet, the Executive Council of the government, the ability to override any other act or regulation that might otherwise limit the way in which the government conducts itself on a piece of land once it becomes approved as a project area. So there may be water management rules and regulations, there may be environmental rules and regulations, there may be other standards in place which we assume are in the public interest, yet section 3 of the proposed legislation would say that once this becomes an approved project area, those things need not apply if it’s not something that the minister thinks should apply.

You know, I’ve made this point in other debates before as well. The minister in response to our concerns says: “Oh, no. This idea or this example wouldn’t be included,” and “Oh, no. We’re just using this for huge reservoirs. That’s all we mean by water management.” Of course, as we all know, once the issue becomes a matter of dispute and once you take the act and go into the courts and say, “What does the act say? What does the act prohibit the government from doing? What does the act allow the government to do? Is it okay for the government to tromp on this set of rights or that set of rights?” then the courts only look to the language in the legislation.

That's all we're left with. They don't look to what the minister said in the House. They don't look to the assurances, where the minister said: oh, no; it's only for big reservoirs, and that's it. They simply look at the language that we have, which is water management.

Well, I don't know why it is that huge investments in, for instance, diverting water out of Peace River to provide the adequate levels of water necessary for a hypothetical nuclear power plant wouldn't be a form of water management. If that's the case, then what do we do? Is that in the public interest? What's the weighing? What's the assessment that has to be done? Certainly, by including this issue of public interest in the legislation, that gives us and the people of the province a greater tool with which to question the government's decision to take land for a project that involves water management with no other criteria than that.

Again, it just goes back to the original question, that there seems to be a tremendous opportunity for the government to exempt itself from a number of regulations and legislation that is already in place once the land becomes a designated project area. It would seem to me that it would be only reasonable to very clearly limit and define the circumstances in which that can be the case. Thus, I don't understand why it is that there would be any resistance to including in this clause the notion of public interest when, as I say, it exists in a number of other pieces of legislation that this government has utilized.

I really would like to hear the minister's response to that particular issue. If you think it's all in the public interest, what's the problem with including the language, when it already exists in other legislation in other contexts anyway?

Those are my comments, and I'd be interested in hearing the response.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It very clearly states a public project for the transportation of people or goods. Public projects, by their very nature, are in the interest of the public or they wouldn't be undertaken.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to support this amendment because I think it does bring some clarity to the overall legislation. As he was speaking, I could see how not having it in the act could be used by the government in its unique way. You know, this government has, shall I say, an Orwellian flair for language, so I could see how trucking toxic waste across the province can be justified by the government as being in the public interest because, in fact, the government has done that.

When we had Swan Hills and the deal the government had with Bovar, they weren't making enough money despite the fact that the government was paying them a guaranteed amount of money, and they wanted more business. The government said, "Righty-ho; no problem; we will allow you to bring toxic waste from other places and truck it across our beautiful province" so that the toxic waste treatment plant had more gunk to process so that they could make more money. This was all justified by the government of the day, which is the same government, by the way, that we're looking at, which is what happens when you have someone in place for 40 years. It's not a good thing. They justified that as being a reasonable thing.

I am seeking – and many people have been trying to assist me in this Assembly over the last 15 minutes – a definition of "in the public interest" that would work with what I am seeing proposed in the subamendment brought forward, actually, by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. We're finding that the term "public interest" appears in 121 statutes, and none of them really have a definition attached to them.

I know that as I speak the good people in the Legislature Library are trying to find me a dictionary definition or some overriding legal reference, you know, like the reasonable person test we have, for example, in law, to see if they could find me something that we would then understand is a definition of "in the public interest." I'm a little loath to let these guys across the way, my hon. colleagues, have at their definition of "in the public interest" because, as I've noted, they've managed to justify trucking toxic waste around the province as in the public interest in the past.

I was looking for something that I was a bit more comfortable with, so I've gone to the Random House concise version. They're not giving me "public interest" as such, but they're giving me "public." So it's "of or for the people as a whole; open to all persons; owned by a community." That's interesting. "Serving a community . . . ; generally known; familiar to the public, as a person; intending good to the community" as in public spirit. That would be useful if I could go on that one. "The people as a whole; a particular group of people having something in common; in public" as compared to in private.

If I put that together with "interest," it gets difficult. "A group financially involved in a given enterprise, industry; benefit or advantage." Okay. That might work for us if we could put those two together. "A sum charged for borrowed money; the rate for such charge." Unfortunately, it's not definitive enough.

I'm wondering if the member who has proposed the subamendment is able to provide something to me. I know they've referenced that it appears – and, indeed, it does – in 121 statutes but not in a definition, that I think both the sponsoring member and myself would be happy with given the one-party state that we live in. Perhaps the member could address my concern.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have looked up a definition of public interest for the hon. member, and it may or may not help her. I want to indicate, however, that putting public interest in the legislation means that ultimately that will be decided by courts, not by the government. Neither the hon. member nor I trust the government to define public interest. They will try to do so, of course, but if they do so in a way that's unfair or arbitrary in a situation, then it may ultimately be adjudicated in court. If that's the case, then that is the intention, and that's why my answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was that it would be a definition of case law.

I'll try to provide you with one definition which I have just found. It says:

The public interest refers to the "common well-being" or "general welfare." The public interest is central to policy debates, politics, democracy and the nature of government itself. While nearly everyone claims that aiding the common well-being or general welfare is positive, there is little, if any, consensus on what exactly constitutes the public interest.

That may not clarify things quite as much as I had hoped.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thank you.

4:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Just a brief comment. Until that last exchange I was seriously considering the merits of including the words “public interest” although it seems somewhat self-evident to me that when we talk about the transportation of people and goods, that by nature is a public project, and it is by nature in the public interest. But I was seriously contemplating the inclusion of that term. Would it be harmful?

Here we have two opposition parties that are fighting fervently for the inclusion of the words “public interest.” They (a) can’t agree on the definition, and (b) neither one of them knows whether it’s going to help them or not, yet they’ve tabled an amendment with that wording in it. Mr. Chair, I find it very strange.

I think the wording in the bill is self-evident, and I’m back to going with the bill as is.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I’m so sorry that the Member for Peace River has trouble understanding.

Mr. Oberle: I understand perfectly.

Ms Blakeman: No, I don’t think he does because the point is that it needs to be in the legislation so that the government cannot do something to the people that we don’t wish to have done. That’s why it needs to be clarified, and it needs to be in the legislation. [interjection] I am so good at getting people engaged, Mr. Chair. You must be so pleased with me today. I’m just delighted that we’ve had a second person engaged in debate in this House.

It is about underlining the importance of having it in the legislation and to have it clearly defined.

Thank you so much for getting engaged in the discussion. I’m always delighted to see another government member on their feet because it’s such a rare occasion in this House.

Dr. Taft: One of the things that debates do is to bring issues out and flush issues out and get people thinking. Again, this is a serious question to the minister, if I can do that. I was partly stimulated by the comments from the Member for Peace River, who made me think about Peace River, which made me think about nuclear power. I’m not actually being facetious here. Nuclear power stations need big pools of water for cooling. They need reservoirs.

Now, I am wondering if this bill could be used – because, you know, we don’t have to have every project transporting people or goods. What is to prevent this bill being used to assemble land for a dam and a reservoir to facilitate a nuclear power plant? What is there in here to pre-empt that or prevent that from happening?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you’re referencing that to public interest?

Dr. Taft: Yes, I am. Presumably it’s going to be a privately built nuclear power plant if it does go ahead, so it’s a matter of public interest.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Hayden: I think it’s clear what a public project is and what a private project is. This is for public projects, and what the hon. member is referring to is a private development and has no connection whatsoever.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As the minister said, it is a private project, but the private project will be supporting the public if they are selling the power. In turn, indirectly it will be for the public, so you can get around it. This is so broad, you know, the definition in here, so it could be used for anything. If you put this amendment in there, that will clarify things. That’s what we are trying to do here with the amendment. This is so open. This is so broad. Anything can be done under this section. Maybe the minister can clarify all that, please.

Dr. Taft: I have to get this on the record. It seems to me that what this amendment is doing and what’s being avoided by not supporting this subamendment is that this is a definitional game here. That’s all that this legislation is about. It’s simply saying, “For the purpose of this Act . . . a project is a public project if the project is,” and it goes on. So all this is just defining into existence one version of a public project, and it doesn’t give any broader reassurance. It doesn’t link it to anything else.

This, to me, is just a definitional game, and it would be a definitional game that would be short-circuited if we were to support this subamendment because then there is a broader reference to public interest, which, frankly, would be sorted out if it came to it by case law in a court.

As much as I’d like to be reassured by the minister, frankly, I’m not.

Mr. Mason: I’d like to close if I could, Mr. Chairman. I want to first deal with the whole question of the minister’s definition of the public interest, which was: if it’s a private project, it’s not a public project. But that’s not the definition contained in this amendment. The definition contained in this amendment says, “For the purpose of this Act and the regulations, a project is a public project if the project is . . . related to the transportation of people.” So it doesn’t matter if it’s a private railway or a public railway. If it’s related to the transportation of people in the definition of the act, it is, in fact, a public project. That is how this act with this amendment will define public projects. If it relates to the transportation of people, if it’s a pipeline, poles, towers, wires, cables, conductors – in other words, power lines – or a project related to the conservation or management of water, those are public projects regardless of whether or not it is a public organization, a government organization building them or a private organization and regardless of whether it is for the public interest or for private gain. So I just wanted to deal with that first.

Mr. Chairman, I was quite proud to be the first person to blow the whistle on this bill. I think the reaction from the public has been very strong and sustained, and I don’t think it has been toned down at all by the amendment that has been put forward. I think it’s interesting that it’s the NDP – and I don’t want to exclude my friends in the Liberal caucus – that have been standing up for the rights of property owners in this province against a government that is too powerful, too centralizing, too interested in the power of the state as opposed to the rights of the individual.

A lot of people might find that a little bit ironic, Mr. Chairman. I know that some members opposite find that ironic, but of course they’re only responding to their own stereotypes of the policies and principles that our party stands for. I just think that it is important that we recognize that we’ve tipped the balance between centralized government control and the rights of individuals and the rights, indeed, of property owners, and I think that they should be protected. I think that they ought to be protected. We need to find the right balance, and this act doesn’t have the right balance. I think that this particular subamendment would improve the situation.

I wouldn’t want to sit with you, hon. minister, because what you’re doing here doesn’t fit with your rhetoric. It doesn’t fit with the rhetoric of the Conservatives in this province that they're all for the individual, all for property rights. So, no, this government is too centralized, it's too secretive, and it needs a bigger opposition. Better yet, Mr. Chairman, it needs a new government that will actually stand up for the people of this province and live up to the principles which it espouses, which this government doesn't do.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back to amendment A1. Any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. We're back on the main amendment, correct?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. Thank you. My understanding of what the government was trying to address with this main amendment was a couple of areas specifically around the time limits that the government could hold the private land that they had an interest in, compensation, and – there were three Cs, I thought. My concerns that I had outlined previously were that although the government talks about a two-year time limit after they propose a project area before they actually put it into a project order, because that was open to such interpretation through the regulations, we in fact really didn't have enough specifics to understand exactly what it was that the government intends. I'm presuming that the minister will say, no, that he knows what he intends, but he can't share it with us using enough specificity of language so that we can all understand what that is meant to be.

As I have stated in the House before and I heard my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona say earlier today, nobody reads Hansard years from now to see what the minister said by way of explanation. You know, if it's not in the legislation, if it's not in the regs, nobody goes back and reads Hansard to see what was intended by government with this. They go off the actual legislation, so anything that we need in there should be in there.

Now, the government has chosen to vote down the inclusion of language around the public interest, which again I think doesn't help us with the specificity of what's being considered here. I would argue that it has not addressed the timing problem, and I would argue – and I think others have argued actually better than I – that the compensation issue has also not been addressed here. I mean, the government has enough members that they're going to vote this through.

There was a small group of people that travelled from throughout Alberta to be in the gallery today, and that's indicative of a larger number of people that are unhappy with the efforts of the government, and their unhappiness doesn't seem to have been alleviated by the government amendment. But I think that that's an indicator of a wider unhappiness with policies of the government and a distrust. You know, unhappiness with this particular legislation may not bring down a government, but a growing distrust that the government has the best interests of the public in mind does become more problematic for the government, I think. So I would have thought that they would take advantage of the opportunity that was presented with this bill, but that doesn't appear to be the case.

The final piece that I want to talk about around these amendments is consultation. I talked a little bit about this the previous time we were debating, but let me complete the argument here. What I keep seeing the government trying to do is organize different ways of consulting without actually consulting or without being in a position where they're held to what the stakeholders or the invited participants had actually directed the government to do.

I talked about the number of summits that we had seen. In the earlier days I'd gone to a gambling summit when I was the gambling critic, and I'd gone to a justice summit when I was, I think, the justice critic. Then they sort of petered out. Then we had two more attempts with the growth summit and the future summit. I never remember which order they came in. Oh, I'm sorry; those were preceded by the round-tables. That was it. There were the round-tables, the specific summits, and then we had the sort of catch-all summits, the clean-out-the-fridge summits where everything got discussed, which the growth summit and the future summit were supposed to be. In each case the public confirmed growing suspicion because they would go and participate in these, and we had all the people that were trained by community development that came out and put little coloured sticky notes up on the wall, and then they moved the coloured sticky notes around and would end up with a very bland statement at the end. People said: "That's not what I said. That's not what I came here to say, and that's not what I spent three days saying." But that's what went forward, and people became very suspicious that they were being manipulated. They weren't being consulted at all.

Frankly, public consultation is a pain in the posterior extension. You know, it's time consuming. It's expensive. People say stuff you don't want to do, and sometimes the public says stuff that's unimplementable. It sounds like a good idea, but it's unimplementable. But I would still argue that like democracy, yes, it's noisy and time consuming, but you've still got to do it, and you should do it with as much good faith as you can muster.

When I look at the consultation that's happening with this government, I think we've reached a new phase. This new phase seems to be sort of generic in-advance consultation, where a large consultation is held in very broad terms, very vague, that people are notified about. It's on the website, they have town halls, they move around the province, it goes on for an extended period of time, but nobody is very clear about what, in fact, government is talking about. Then the government says: "Okay. That's it. We've done the consultation. We know what we're doing, and now we're going to move forward." From then on any specific legislation that's brought forward where the public says, "Yes, but you didn't consult us," they go, "Yes, we did. We did that general consultation. Remember, a year ago? We've covered it. We're not going to go back and do anything specific anymore. We've done the general consultation."

I'm watching what the minister is doing around human rights consultation with great interest because I haven't seen that sort of broad generic one happen. We've certainly seen that happen in some other areas like land use or the consultation with the seniors around one of the pieces of legislation that they implemented, the Dependent Adults Act, for example. I think that's now what we're looking at by way of consultation. So the three Cs that I started with, which were around centralization, compensation, that's completed with consultation. Again, I think that few people would be happy with what is outlined as consultation in this act and the ability of people to bring the government to the table in a meaningful way to hear what their concerns are and with an expectation that those concerns will in turn be dealt with rather than be dismissed or cast in a different light.

Those are the concerns with the overarching themes that I'm seeing in this legislation. Speaking to the amendment, I understand that it was an attempt – but I think it was a very poor attempt – at trying to address the concerns. I can't say that I'm unhappy to see the government get raked over the coals by its citizens. I wish there was more of that, and I hope there is more of that because the more engaged the citizens get, the more pressure there is on us to be better legislators. I think that would be a good thing for all involved.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. We're still on this amendment A1, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chair: We're on amendment A1.

Dr. Taft: Thank you very much. I appreciated the comments from my colleague from Edmonton-Centre. I have a couple of questions still for the minister on this amendment, and they do relate to issues that have come this afternoon, particularly around the sentence of this amendment that reads, "A project related to the conservation or management of water." While the minister was able to say, "Well, it doesn't apply to certain things," he was able to also confirm, which was very helpful, that it could apply to the land assembly for reservoirs or dams. My general experience is that when something turns up in legislation, it's usually there for a reason. So my question to the minister is: can he tell us what reservoirs or dams may be in the works, maybe being considered, maybe even hypothesized, that would cause this to be written into the legislation?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you for the question, hon. member. There is not a project at this time that is before me. Of course, my ministry is responsible for acquiring lands for the projects that other program ministries bring to me. When we looked at what our past experience has been, using the RDA legislation for the ring roads as an example – of course, there have been other dams and reservoirs that have been established in the province – it's the assembly of large tracts of lands that are required for very large projects. Our ministry saw that it was in the best interest legislation-wise to make a good piece of legislation to ensure that we had that area covered, too. That's another area where we're talking about large amounts of land that would involve multiple landowners. Of course, reservoirs and dams, those types of projects, are the ones that are required.

As the hon. member, I'm sure, is aware, Mr. Chair, there are processes and legislation in place, as I mentioned before, for regional water systems. All of those things are covered. I know that the hon. member is very familiar with that legislation because of past projects where there have been concerns about water moving from one system to another, and I know the hon. member has been very involved in those discussions.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Just to be really clear here because, as I say, my experience is that things turn up in the legislation for more substantial reasons than what the minister just indicated. I believe that in the minister's own constituency there's this special areas project, I think it is, which involves water transportation out into sparsely populated areas of eastern Alberta. I don't know the status of that project now, but does this bill pave the way, for example, for a reservoir to be established for that project so that the water might actually be contained for a longer period than would otherwise be the case? There has got to be something somewhere going on that's leading this particular clause to be being put into what is, after all, a pretty controversial bill. If it wasn't needed, it probably wouldn't be here. So does this relate to special areas, or is there any project anywhere in Alberta under any ministry that this member is aware of that meets this sentence?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Chair, to the hon. member, I wish it did apply to that particular project because I'm a big supporter of it, and I would love to see it go ahead. Unfortunately, on that particular project it is a form of off-stream storage that's being proposed, but there isn't a requirement for a reservoir or a dam or any structure to be built because Mother Nature, actually, put all of the landscape in place to manage that particular project.

To the second part of the question: I have not been approached by any program ministry with respect to a specific project, but we do know – and the hon. member knows – how important water is. There's discussion that carries on with respect to the need for off-stream storage, which, of course, would be the reservoir-type situation, or to consider on-stream storage, which would be the dam situation, that we may in fact need to do just because of the amounts of water that the hon. member is aware goes out of our jurisdiction, over and above what we have agreements in place for.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Now, just on this theme, there are serious concerns for flood risks in the Bow Valley for Calgary. In fact, we've seen significant flooding in Calgary itself and in some of the towns immediately south of Calgary. I can't remember if it's Turner Valley or High River, in the Highwood River and Sheep River and so on. One of the concerns or speculations or theories is that those floods have been worsened because upstream there has been overforestation or there have been wetlands destroyed. Then that leads to the possible solution being some kind of water storage system upstream of Calgary and upstream generally in that area so that the water coming rushing down the mountains gets held back a little bit. Are those projects the kinds of projects that might be covered under this sentence? I mean, if this government is wanting to assemble land to help with flood abatement in the Bow basin, especially, you know, in the Calgary region, is that what this is for? There has got to be a reason for this sentence.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. To the hon. member: if the hon. member and all of our other colleagues in this House consider a project somewhere down the road that they feel best serves Albertans' needs with respect to the conservation or management of water, it's my duty as the Minister of Infrastructure to work with government to put in place those things that are necessary in order to accommodate your wishes. So should a project come along, I'll say, upstream of any community in this province where the hon. member and all of our colleagues decide that's necessary, I'm your servant.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: I had a question earlier. For the purpose of this act and the regulations a project is a public project. You know, there's a grey area between a public project and a private project. I will give you an example. We had Rancher's Beef. I think they walked away with $42 million from this government, you know. They came to Calgary, and the city of Calgary wouldn't give them the water, so then they went outside the city limits. That was a private project, but that was being set up in the interest of the public for the ranchers. How will we differentiate between the private and the public project? There is a grey area here, sir. You know, some private outfit may come here, and then they are going to do this in the public interest. How will we differentiate, you know, that it is a private project or it is a public project?

I'm going to take it to section 5(1). We are talking about the market value under this section. "At the request of the registered owner of the land within a Project Area, the Crown shall enter into an agreement with the registered owner to purchase the land at market value." My concern is: what kind of criteria are we going to use for market value? Will it be the present value of the day, or will it be the value a year ago or the value when you are going to take over the land, or will there be some compensation in between?

If the owner agrees to sell the land [to the Crown] and the Crown agrees to purchase the land but there is no agreement as to the market value of the land, the registered owner may apply to the Land Compensation Board or the Court of Queen's Bench.

How about the costs incurred, you know, for the poor little landowner? How is he going to stand up to the government? Is there any safety net in place for the landowner, that the government will be compensating him or her for their legal costs, if they incur any? This may drag on for a long time.

Those are my concerns, you know, with these amendments. What will be the criteria to find the market value? Those are the questions that I have for you, sir.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, a public project "related to the transportation of people or goods": it's quite a stretch to turn that into a butcher shop, so I don't think I need to follow that down any further.

With respect to market value, market value is an indicator that is not new to this legislation. As a matter of fact, market value has been used by all orders of government right back to my earliest and several of my colleagues in the House and members opposite even – I'm going back 30 years, pretty close; 25, 30 years. Market value, of course, is the indicator that all orders of government use, and it's based on the value of comparable properties without any encumbrances on them to be taken into consideration.

In the negotiation the other feature that's there – and one of the hon. members from the opposition party brought forward a reference to section 28 in the Expropriation Act as it relates to the negotiations. The powers there are not for government. The powers there are for a determination to be made by a third party like the Land Compensation Board, as an example, or another arm's-length group that's agreed to by both parties so that things can be brought to the table in the determination of the compensation that a landowner gets, Mr. Chair. That could be improvements that the person has on the property, any value that has been added to the property by that owner, plus the market value consideration on the land itself so that the land sales at the time that the person decides to sell are the ones that are used.

Market value is used, as I say, and has been for as long as I'm aware of by all orders of government, and the determination is at the time of the negotiation, the value at that time, so that if a person decided to use the land as they always have right down the line to within a year or two of the project being undertaken and then triggered negotiations with government, the market value at that time is the market value that they deal with. That's the principle that has always been used. It's the principle that all orders use.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've sat for the last two and a half hours, I guess . . .

Mr. Mason: Three.

Ms Pastoor: Three.

. . . and actually have enjoyed because I've listened to some of the debate, and I think it has been very good. That's partly why we're here, to be able to debate back and forth and ask questions and have them answered. I haven't really stood up until now to speak to this, but there was one thing, as I've listened over the last hours: "a project related to the conservation or management of water."

I remember in history, probably, once when I was at the Hoover Dam. In their museum in their interpretive centre there's a very large topographical model of the southeast of the United States. In that it showed what it looked like in the beginning, and then it showed as they added the dams and as they tried to play with nature and as they tried to move water. What they have now are dams and no water. I think when we have a sentence like this, we have to be very careful how we play with the water in this province. I come from southern Alberta. Water is exceptionally – exceptionally – important. But I will always remember – it stuck in my mind very clearly – lots of dams and no water. We certainly know where California and Arizona are today.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Mr. Kang: Mr. Minister, I was giving you an example of Rancher's Beef. Any other private project could be on the horizon or even in the future that will in turn serve the public. That's the clarification I was trying to get here for the grey area, that, you know, that private project could be in the best interests of the public. How will we differentiate between the two? That will be a private project, or that will be a public project. With an open-ended project related to the conservation or management of water or a project related to the transportation of people or goods, it could be CP Rail or it could be any ABC company. They want to do this in the public interest. How will this apply to their project? That's what I was getting at, sir.

The market value. There was this landowner by the airport, and they fought for years and years, and they couldn't agree on the market value. I know there's a definition for market value, but how will this system be made fair? You know, there should be something in there to speed up the process so this doesn't drag on in the courts for years and years. There was still no agreement, and there was some restraining order taken out by the city to kick them off the lands. That's what I was getting at, sir.

Those were my questions, my concerns as well.

Mr. Hayden: Just very briefly, Mr. Chair. The language is very clear. A project is a public project. There is no reference whatsoever in the act to deal with private projects, strictly public projects.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are you ready for the questions on the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

5:30

The Deputy Chair: It has been requested that the votes be severed, so there will be five votes.

[Motion on amendment A1A carried]

[Motion on amendment A1B carried]

[Motion on amendment A1C carried]

[Motion on amendment A1D carried]

[Motion on amendment A1E carried]

The Deputy Chair: Amendment A1 is carried.

This takes us to Bill 19 as amended. Any comments or questions on Bill 19 as amended? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to propose another amendment, and I'll pass that up to the chair.

The Deputy Chair: This will be amendment A2. I'll just ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood: you're moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona?

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll just take a moment. It's being passed out now.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move that Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended in section 10(1) by striking out "section 7(2)(a) or (b)" and substituting "section 7(2)." I briefly just want to explain that. If you go to section 10(1) in the bill, it says that you may appeal any matter under section 7(2)(a) or (b), but if you turn to section 7 of the act, you'll find that there's a longer list of things that an enforcement order may do. The present bill as it's written allows you to appeal (a) and (b) but not (c), (d), or (e). So the effect of our amendment is simply to allow an appeal of anything under section 7(2).

Right now the bill would allow an appeal of an enforcement order that may

(a) direct a person to cease the contravention specified in the order, [or]

(b) direct a person to stop doing something, or to change the way in which the person is doing it, but not appeal an enforcement order that may

(c) direct a person to take any action or measures the Minister considers necessary to remedy the contravention, including, without limitation, the following:

(i) the removal or demolition of a structure that has been erected or placed in contravention of the regulation; [or]

(ii) the restoration of the land to the condition it was in before the contravention occurred.

You also under the present bill may not appeal an enforcement order that directs you to

(d) state a time within which the person must comply with the directions.

Nor may you appeal an enforcement order that may

(e) state that if the person does not comply with the directions within a specified time, the Minister will take the directed action or measures at the expense of the person.

We believe that these three subsections ought to be subject to appeal in the same way as the first two. All of those things, I think, require some level of appeal, so I would urge hon. members to support this.

I want to say that I hope the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre doesn't have any definitional questions for me on this particular amendment because I note that our conversation the last time caused the hon. Member for Peace River to change his mind about voting for my last amendment, and I would really like to give him the opportunity to vote for this. I thought it would have been a unique experience to see the government whip actually vote against the minister on a bill that the minister had put forward. I think that's really thinking outside of the box for whips, and it would have been an interesting result to see indeed. So I'm hoping that the hon. Member for Peace River will be with us on this one, Mr. Chairman.

You know, with that, I just think it's a question of natural justice. It's just a question of allowing people the right to appeal any of these orders and providing those same protections with respect to those orders that might be made as have been made by the minister on the first two.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak against this amendment, and I do so because the enforcement actions that are described in this legislation are those that have been used for the assembly of lands in the past. They're actually identical. The record of this enforcement legislation, I think, speaks for itself when we say that in 35 years only one enforcement order was ever issued, and it didn't even get to the point of enforcement, and it wasn't issued to a landowner. In fact, it was a neighbour that required being served with an enforcement order. When I see enforcement legislation that works that well for 35 years, that's that well understood by landowners and works that well for government, I would suggest that we've got a winner.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I just think the wording of section 7 of the bill should concern everybody and probably does concern most citizens who've read it. What I'm referring to specifically is 7(1), which reads: "Where, in the Minister's opinion, a person has contravened a regulation." That's a very sweeping power to give a minister. [interjection] Sorry. The Minister of SRD said something?

Dr. Morton: Draconian.

Dr. Taft: Draconian. I think it's a draconian power – thank you – to give to a minister. What makes it doubly draconian, dreadfully draconian, drastically draconian, a genuinely dastardly piece of legislation is that most of what then follows cannot be appealed unless the amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is passed. I think we need to question the democratic basis of a draconian provision here.

I'll stop the silly word games because I think this is a serious issue. I think we need to question a law that defines an enforcement order as where, in the minister's opinion, somebody does something wrong and then actually prevents most of that section from being appealed.

I think that this is a reasonable provision if the minister is correct. I don't know if he is or he isn't. I'll take him at his word that those provisions haven't been needed. Then there's no harm in enacting this amendment. I don't see what the downside would be to enacting this amendment other than maybe forcing a slight revision to the drafting of the bill. Can I ask the minister, who has been very well engaged in this discussion – I want to give the minister kudos for that because a lot of ministers actually don't stay – what would be the drawback of passing this amendment, an amendment which to me just seems to give a basic, natural justice to a bill that otherwise does seem actually draconian? Is there a drawback to passing this amendment?

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak?

Dr. Taft: Well, I guess, Mr. Chairman, then, there isn't a drawback to passing this amendment. If there was, the minister probably would've said so. I think that it stands to reason that we ought to vote in favour of this, and I would urge all government members to just think this through carefully, to actually read what this amendment is addressing. It's very clear here that we are, through this legislation, curtailing people's basic democratic rights, and we are giving an enormous power to a minister that I think is unjustified. I am quite uncomfortable with the bill unless this sort of amendment is brought in.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Let me try this with slightly different wording, which is commonly used in law, which is to sort of flip it on its head and say: what is the harm? What is the harm that would be caused if this amendment was in fact passed – that, I think, is at the root of what my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview was trying to get at – if the following areas were appealable?

Currently section 7, where it's in the minister's opinion that someone has contravened a regulation that's under section 3, which is a very long section that talks about – well, I'll just refer people to it. In the hard-copy bill it's on page 4, but for those reading along at home, it's in section 3 of the bill. It's basically all of the control, restriction, and prohibitions section. So where someone has contravened that regulation, the minister can serve that person with an enforcement order, and the enforcement order includes directing a person to take any action or measures that the minister deems necessary, including the removal or demolition of a structure that's been put in place in contravention or the restoration of land to a condition that it was in before this contravention occurred. It includes stating a time that person has to comply to this and that if they don't comply with these directions within the particular time that is set out, once again, in ever-elusive regulations, the minister can take the directed – there are consequences to it. Let me shorten it by saying that.

What is the harm that is created here for the minister by including the section that says that the last words I just read through would be appealable? So far, the only one that can be appealed is the section that directs a person to cease the contravention and directs them to stop doing something or change the way they're doing it. But it doesn't allow them to appeal around the demolition or removal or the restoration of land and the timelines and complying within those same timelines. So what is the harm that is created, then?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the hon. member for the question. The enforcement actions in what you refer to are completely and totally consistent with the abilities of municipalities and the federal government in taking these actions to fix what's happened, like a land-use bylaw, as an example, or a zoning restriction with respect to the type of development that can take place. All of these things, all of these powers, are available right now to every municipality in the country to step in and do that.

Now, when we talk about fines and penalties that are referred to in the enforcement order, they are appealable through the courts. It is not at the decision of the minister or at the decision of government. The fines are appealable through the courts. To take action, to remediate a building situation, as an example, to move in: those are abilities that all orders of government have. They're not an abuse in any way, shape, or form. When a restriction is placed, be it by municipalities, by the province, or by the federal government, if they are not followed, all orders of government can move in, correct that, send the bill to the owner or put it against the land on a lien. I'm sure that hon. members with municipal experience in both opposition parties are very aware of that.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We're now on Bill 19.

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Chair, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Renner: Mr. Chairman, given the close proximity to the assigned adjournment hour, I would move that this committee now rise and report Bill 17 and report progress on Bill 19.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 17. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 19. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move that the Assembly call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:49 p.m. to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back.

Let us pray. We give thanks for Your abundant blessings to our province and to ourselves. We ask for Your guidance with our deliberations in our Chamber and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I had an opportunity to attend a prayer breakfast. Part of the conversation went to how important it is that we be with our children and include them in our lives and provide some guidance. You know, no town that I know does a better job of including their young and raising them and teaching them values than the town of Viking. It's a real honour for me to be able to introduce a classroom of kids from Viking and their teachers. Their teachers are Mrs. Muriel Hill, Mrs. Marlene Taylor, and their assistant is Mrs. Debbie Snider. There are about 40 of these young people here, and I really would like them to rise and receive the very special warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 19 grade 5/6 students from Fort Assiniboine school, which is located in the Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teachers Charlene Assenheimer and Debbie Breitzkreitz, program assistant Fleur Whitley, parents Ellen Carlson, Leah Holmes, and James Aitken, and principal Allan Menduk. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to welcome 13 fabulous students from Lakedell school in my riding of Drayton Valley-Calmar. These 13 bright grade 6 students along with parent helper Tim Belec, principal Clint Neis, and their teachers, Jennifer Chinnery and Arlene Jackson, have toured our Legislature and learned a great deal about our provincial government and our building. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a visitor from Lebanon. Mr. Abdul Majid Awad is visiting family and friends in Edmonton. Mr. Awad is one of the most prominent lawyers in Lebanon. Currently Mr. Awad is the head of the Protocol Department in the Prime Minister's office, the Rt. Hon. Fuad Siniora. Mr. Awad is accompanied by his brother Youssef, who is a resident of Edmonton. They are both seated in your gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second introduction. It's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 36 students from Father Lacombe high school, located in the beautiful constituency of Calgary-East. The students are accompanied by Dr. Adriana Bejko, Linda Almond, and Mr. Gabriel Arok. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a number of staff who are joining us here in the Legislature today who work throughout the Ministry of Environment. I understand that there are about 50 people here who have travelled from as far away as Lethbridge, Calgary, Red Deer as well as a number from the capital region. I know I share the same view as my colleagues here in the House when I say that these government employees are welcome here, and I thank them for joining us today. I appreciate your interest in the legislative side of government.

Mr. Speaker, on Earth Day I think it's most fitting to have so many people here who have built a career working hard to protect Alberta's environment each and every day. They're seated in the public gallery, and I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it's with great pleasure that I introduce three individuals today. The first is Mr. Marvin Romanow, the new president and chief executive officer of Nexen Inc. Of course, Mr. Romanow has replaced legendary oilman Charlie Fischer as president and CEO.

In addition to that, we have Mr. Pierre Alvarez, who's no stranger to members of this House. Mr. Alvarez is the former head of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and is the recently appointed vice-president of corporate relations for Nexen.

Third is a good friend who is the director of government relations for Nexen and, besides being a good friend, helps keep me in this seat in the Legislature. I would ask Mr. Brian Humphreys, Mr. Marvin Romanow, and Pierre Alvarez to stand and receive the welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of this Assembly two very distinguished guests. Miss Alora Deonie, seated in the members' gallery, is here to assist me in commemorating Cancer Awareness Month. Alora was diagnosed with Ewing's sarcoma two months before her 17th birthday. She's a remarkable young woman who, among other things, is considering pursuing nursing upon graduation from high school in order to allow her to become a pediatric oncology nurse and return to work in the same unit where she was treated less than a year ago. Miss Deonie is accompanied by Ms Angeline Webb from the Canadian Cancer Society. We're very grateful to have them here. I'd ask them both to rise and receive our warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions. It is with pleasure that I introduce to you and through you a young soccer team, known as Team India, seated today in the public gallery. Team India just won the Mini World Cup soccer tournament against Team England, that was held right here in Edmonton, with 76 teams representing 40 different countries. I had the privilege of having lunch with these fine young Albertans just a few minutes ago. Team India is led by coaches Nirmal Herian, who, unfortunately, was not able to join us today; Miles Hunt, who is here today; and Kanwaljit Sidhu as well the president of EDSA, a committed volunteer, Mr. Kahan Virk. I ask my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

For my second introduction it is also an honour to introduce to you and through you a constituent of Edmonton-Ellerslie and a prominent member of the community, Mr. Manjit Dhaliwal. Mr. Dhaliwal is the owner of many Liquor Mart retail stores in Edmonton and around Alberta and was a proud sponsor of Team India, whom I just introduced a few minutes ago. Mr. Dhaliwal was also a candidate for the Conservative Party in the 2004 provincial election. At this time I'd ask Mr. Dhaliwal to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Volunteerism is embedded in the fabric of all Albertans. It is this quality that has helped this province to lead this nation. I'm pleased to say that Albertans volunteer more than anyone in this country. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly seven staff members of Volunteer Alberta, which works to build the capacity of the volunteer sector by strategically connecting leaders, organizations, and networks. Seated in the members' gallery above are executive director Karen Lynch, Rosanne Tollenaar, Cindy Walter, Lisa Michetti, and in the public gallery are Trang Nguyen, Carol Cheung, and Gillian McDonald, a summer intern. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a good friend of mine, Mr. Paul Pharo. Paul flew up to attend the Premier's prayer breakfast this morning. He's an active member of our community, is on the University of Lethbridge Senate, and he's the incoming president of the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce. He's seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask Paul to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce a very distinguished guest to you and through you to members of this Assembly. This person is the president of a construction company in my constituency, and in 2004 he came in second for mayor of Calgary. He needs no introduction. His name is Oscar Fech, and he is sitting in the public gallery. I'd ask him to stand. Oscar is also a resident of Kingsland, a couple of blocks away from where I live. I'd ask that we please give him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly seven of my favourite hard-working staff members from the Kidney Foundation of Canada: Ms Heidi Erisman, Miss Joane Marot, Barb Foxall, Theresa Jenkins, Sabrina Sperber, Kerstin Kluge, and Sheelah Zapf. They're here today to promote National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week, which takes place from April 19 to 26. I will be discussing more about the Kidney Foundation and why they are here today in a member's statement later this afternoon. For now I would ask the visitors to please rise and receive the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce a couple from my constituency who are here in Edmonton for the Premier's prayer breakfast. This couple, Joan and Rod Dyrholm, are salt-of-the-earth Albertans, warm-hearted, hard-working, and tenacious. I'm proud to have them in our Calgary-Bow constituency. I ask Joan and Rod to please stand so that my associates can give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: As this is Earth Day, it's my pleasure to inform all Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta that 61 years ago today the hon. Member for Little Bow joined the world population. Happy birthday.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Cancer Awareness Month

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Cancer Awareness Month, held each April, and to salute the important work of the Canadian Cancer Society and its many volunteers throughout Alberta. The society's most recent statistics indicate that 2 in 5 Canadians will be diagnosed with cancer in their lifetime. In Alberta alone this means we can expect approximately 15,800 fellow Albertans to be diagnosed with cancer this year and more than 6,000 of us to die as a result of cancer.

For many the word "cancer" evokes fear of the unknown. Diagnosis marks the beginning of a devastating, overwhelming, and harsh reality for patients and for their families and communities. As we observe Cancer Awareness Month this year, there is much to be hopeful about. For instance, an individual diagnosed with cancer in the 1940s had a 25 per cent chance of survival, in the 1960s it was 33 per cent, and today the survival rate stands at 62 per cent, Mr. Speaker. These improvements are due in large part to the great strides made by cancer researchers, many of whom are supported by the Canadian Cancer Society, which last year contributed more than $49 million to the most promising projects in Canada. This funding supported several Alberta researchers, including Dr. Peter Forsyth, investigating one of the most highly aggressive types of brain cancer, and Dr. Frank Jirik, investigating lung cancer, the leading cause of death among both men and women in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, this investment in research together with advances in prevention and the tireless work of hundreds of volunteers that support patients and their families is the reason that, thankfully, we see Albertans like Alora Deonie living to tell their story. They have provided us with concrete hope for a future without cancer. As legislators may be ever mindful of their courage and determination as we work to improve our public health care system.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Flexahopper Plastics Ltd.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about a very successful Lethbridge business, Flexahopper Plastics Ltd. Flexahopper is the largest rotational moulder in the Pacific Northwest. They export all over the world and have 600 products and custom products for other manufacturers, including the aerospace industry.

This company was a spinoff from Duncan Industries, an enterprise my family owned, so I have watched as a father, Jim Spenceley, and then his son Bill built this company to the success it is today. These men had extraordinary vision, way ahead of their time. Jim made the company global, Bill made the company green, and they are leaders in their industry in energy conservation. That's the story for today.

The company implements green innovations from all over the world. They have had energy audits performed, acted on them, and saved major dollars in return. The plant has substantially reduced its environmental footprint and uses renewable energy sources such as wind energy from Bullfrog Power. The plant reuses its waste heat to heat the plant and will soon preheat plastic before the mould process and thereby reduce the heat required by the ovens. The truck fleet is all hybrids. Flexahopper is presently looking at a technology that can reduce their process energy use to 10 per cent of what it is now.

This company is a true example that a green dollar spent can create many more dollars and grow the economy in a responsible, environmental way. They should be commended for their vision and dedication.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Volunteerism

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize National Volunteer Week. The last Statistics Canada data show that more than 2 million Albertans over 15 years of age volunteered over 214 million hours, an average of 175 hours per volunteer, in 2004. In addition to the traditional areas of sports and recreation, arts and culture, services for the elderly or disabled, and programs that help integrate new immigrants into communities, voluntary organizations have also evolved with our changing social context to expand the engagement of volunteers into areas of suicide prevention, supporting victims of rape and domestic abuse, and mentoring the increasing number of disadvantaged young people, just to name a few. The impact from Albertans who give their time, talents, and energy to our voluntary sector is enormous. Together with the professionals in the 19,000-plus charities and nonprofit organizations the nonprofit voluntary sector adds support, balance, and value to the public and private sectors in our society.

Mr. Speaker, some preliminary studies suggest that volunteering increases the probability of feeling socially connected, accumulated through social relations among individuals within groups based on trust grown of participation and social engagement with others within the context of shared norms and expectations of reciprocity, or what is defined as social capital. Strong social capital, or strong social relations, are viewed as a potentially important remedy for social cohesion, harmony, and economic prosperity. An increasing number of countries and states are paying greater attention to the development of social capital in their communities. With the growing economic and social prominence of the nonprofit sector, initiating or supporting more empirical studies in this area would be beneficial for a fast-growing, highly mobile, and increasingly diverse province such as ours.

In closing, I would encourage that we all take time this week to thank those who volunteer and make our communities better places to live, work, and raise a family. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Bank of Canada this week took a bold step towards being transparent by stating that the current interest rate decrease will be held until the second quarter of next year. This was done primarily to combat a major problem in a recession, that of re-establishing confidence in the markets by letting people know what's going on. This is a lesson that the Alberta government needs to pick up. To the Premier: will the Premier begin to re-establish confidence and come clean about what other taxes will be imposed to deal with our deficit?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, what I did say yesterday, when the question was raised about tax increases, is that our goal as a government is to ensure that we remain competitive in all of the taxes, that we're the best jurisdiction in Canada and, indeed, North America to do business. We're committed to that, and we'll continue to do that.

Dr. Swann: Well, will the Premier begin to re-establish confidence also by clarifying to Albertans what health services are going to be on the chopping block?

Mr. Stelmach: I did say in this House last week, when questions were asked by the opposition, that we're going to have to make some very difficult and tough decisions. Our goal here is to improve access to health. It's also to improve quality of care but at the same ensuring that we sustain this health care system that all Canadians and Albertans enjoy for the next generation and the generation after.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: will he improve confidence further in this province by recognizing our unhealthy dependence on oil and gas revenue and show Albertans a long-term savings strategy?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a good point talking about a long-term savings strategy. In fact, when I look at other jurisdictions around the world, Alberta is the only jurisdiction here in the country of Canada and, indeed, in North America that has $17 billion saved to deal with these very difficult economic times. The other thing, just as a comment in terms of I think the hon. leader used the word "transparency" in showing direction: it's one thing to lower the interest rate to .25; it's another thing for the chartered banks to ensure that they give the same consideration to the consumer that wants to borrow money from the bank.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Wait-list Registry

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Mazankowski Heart Institute is not open. Albertans are waiting longer and longer in emergency rooms. The one-year deficit from Alberta Health Services is somewhere between $500 million and $1.3 billion, and now the Alberta wait-list registry is the most recent casualty of health system restructuring. This Premier and his government have no credibility in health care. To the Premier: why is the information system on the wait-list registry seven months out of date?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'll allow the minister of health to answer the technical questions. All I can say is that, once again, we're going to work together with all Albertans to ensure that the decisions that we make are those that are going to improve access, improve quality of care, ensure that no matter where you live in Alberta you do have equitable access to health care, and at the same time, though, ensure that the next generation enjoys the program. It's cherished. We're committed to publicly funded health care in the province of Alberta. We want to do whatever we can to sustain the program, and we will continue to work with all of the health care providers to make those difficult decisions.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, talk is cheap. How long will Albertans have to wait in order to see a real wait-list?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister of health is working with a number of health care providers. He has initiated discussions. That information, of course, will come back to government because at the end of the day we're the ones that will make the decisions based on the advice we receive. Once we come to that point, then we will of course communicate those decisions and work with Albertans to choose the best method of delivery in different parts of the province and ensure that we do stand above the rest in terms of health care provision in Canada.

Dr. Swann: Well, Alberta Health Services has been functioning for a year now, yet the Alberta wait-list registry is still providing seven-month-old information and still identified by health region, Mr. Premier. How will the Premier report on access to services in specific areas of the province since there is only now one provincial health authority?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I know that the health board has been in place for some time, but this is a monumental task. We're now consolidating all of the other health care regions into one in terms of the annual reports, issues tied to pension plans – believe it or not, each area had its own audited pension plan – all of the issues tied to staff sick leave. All of those things are coming under one board. The board has made, I believe, unbelievable progress, but it has a lot of work to do. That's why they're meeting publicly in different parts of the province, being very open and transparent with Albertans in trying to find a way to ensure good delivery of health services in Alberta.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Benefits Definition of Spouse

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The benefits package of government union employees defines a spouse as "a person of the opposite sex to whom you are legally married." Same-sex partners are covered under the document but are defined separately as a "benefit partner" instead of a spouse. This prejudice highlights the discrimination felt by the gay and lesbian community from this Tory caucus. To the Premier: why does the Premier's government continue to use outdated and dismissive terms instead of the real term, spouse?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. leader and some of his members were in the news conference when the CBC raised this issue, so you almost could tell that it was going to come up as a question today. Three times – three times – I had to repeat to the news correspondent the fact that it does not matter whether it's a same-sex or opposite-sex marriage; the benefits are the same. They're all treated fairly. That's the most important thing.

Dr. Swann: This is about a correct legal term, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier agree, then, that spouses, regardless of whether they are same-sex or opposite-sex relationships, should be defined equally?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, again, the very same question came up, and I said that the benefits apply fairly, equally to both, whether it's same sex or opposite sex. It's the importance of how the couple is treated, and that means in fairness, in equal benefits. It doesn't matter if it's opposite or same sex. That's what we're doing here in Alberta.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Premier is listening to the people who are most affected by this offensive decision. Will the Premier apologize to government employees, the people that actually work for him, who have been deeply offended by the manner in which the government has handled this issue?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, as minister responsible for human resources there are many relationships that are undefined or, certainly, don't meet either of the criteria of a spouse or same-sex marriage. There are people who live together. There are people who enter into interdependent adult relationships. The responsibility of our benefits program is to ensure that everyone who is entitled to the benefits gets the benefits. It's not the responsibility of our benefits program to drive social change or other aspects. Everyone in Alberta has the opportunity to go to the Human Rights Commission or court if they believe they have been slighted in any way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Long-term Care Accommodation Rates

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government met behind closed doors with executives from private care companies and is conspiring to double long-term care fees for seniors on fixed incomes. The Tory government has already tripled their drug costs, reduced their eye care coverage, failed to create the long-term care spaces they need, and now is planning to allow gouging of the few seniors who can get in. The question is to the health minister. When will this minister stop his relentless attack on Alberta seniors and stop letting private companies set his government's long-term care agenda?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, as is typical with this particular member, he has one of his fronts out there creating fear amongst seniors relative to our long-term care facilities. This ministry is responsible for the provision of care. The Ministry of Seniors and Community Supports is responsible for accommodation rates, and I'll let the minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Long-term care fees rose over 7 per cent just in November, and now the government wants to double them. Government officials are having closed-door meetings with private health care corporations, the very people who stand to make a profit on the backs of Alberta seniors. The result is that people who need long-term care in Alberta will not be able to afford it when they need it. Will the minister publicly identify the private companies he has met with in secret so that seniors know where to send their pound of flesh?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Looking after seniors in long-term care is a very important issue for this government. We do meet with the industry on a regular basis. They come to us, and they inform us of how well things are going and when they need some help. We have identified in our continuing care strategy that was announced publicly in December that we are looking at ways of changing how fees are administered. At this time we are not contemplating an increase in fees.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that seniors in many private long-term care facilities are not getting the care they need. They're missing meals, not being toileted, and they're being left alone in bed for hours because private health care companies need to turn a profit. Now this government is going to double fees because the private health care lobby has it over a barrel. My question is to the minister. Will you stand in this House today and commit that you will not increase long-term care fees for seniors?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I have to strongly disagree with some of the comments that the leader of the third party has made across the way. I don't know where he got the idea that we would be using a hundred per cent increase. He's quite out to lunch on that topic. We are reviewing concerns and issues with long-term care all the time, and we are inspecting them annually. We will bring up a website that will tell you anybody in long-term care that is not in compliance, and we're preparing that website now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Greenhouse Gas Emission Reductions

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've noticed in the last couple of weeks that there have been a number of reports relating to the environment that have been released. My questions are about those reports, and they're all for the Minister of Environment. Earlier today the minister released the 2008 results for the government's greenhouse gas emission reduction program, and the headline trumpets that the province has realized 6.5 megatonnes of reductions. How does the minister account for the actual emissions reductions within an intensity-based system?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question because I think there's been a lot of torquing going on over this issue of intensity versus real, actual reductions. The fact of the matter is that we have about a hundred emitters, large industrial emitters, in this province that come under our legislation. They are compelled to come into compliance with our legislation by reducing their emissions. We measure those emissions. They either contribute to a fund or they have real reductions. In this case these are real reductions due to investment in technology and offsets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. For the same minister. Last week the federal government submitted a national inventory report for greenhouse gases to the United Nations. Now, that was for 2007. It noted that national emissions had risen by 4 per cent from the previous year and 26 per cent from 1990 levels. This is something my constituents are asking me about a lot. Oil sands emissions are no doubt part of the growth in this increase of emissions, but I'm wondering what role the oil sands play in the overall emissions for Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the answer is that oil sands emissions play a role that is in keeping with so many other growth-related industries across the nation. Oil sands do contribute to an increase, yes, but the national growth works out to about 29 megatonnes, and oil sands account for about 3 megatonnes of that 29. In fact, Canadian emissions have grown by 155 megatonnes since 1990, and in 2007 the oil sands as a whole emitted 35. Yes, oil sands emits CO₂, but so does everyone else.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Olson: Thank you. The National Round Table on Environment and Economy released its recommendations last week on a national emissions reduction program, and they recommended a carbon price of $100 a tonne by 2020 and $200 a tonne by 2025. Our current price here in Alberta is $15. I'm wondering if the minister can explain where we're going with that.

Mr. Renner: Well, the member correctly points out that we have in place now a charge of $15 a tonne. In fact, in the announcement we made this morning, that generated about $82 million in 2008. But I remind you, Mr. Speaker, and all members that that $15 a tonne is the only jurisdiction in North America that is being assessed. Yes, we recognize that over time that number is going to have to increase, but we can't increase the compliance mechanisms in Alberta until the rest of North America catches up with us and puts some of their own in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Climate Change

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earth Day is a good day to set the record straight on Alberta's climate change strategy. The Minister of Environment has repeatedly claimed that Alberta is first on climate change, but according to the latest Environment Canada report, Alberta is world leader only in the production of greenhouse gases, not in their reduction, and we're dead last in air quality. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister reverse the government's present tepid commitment to wind power and its energy potential by working on the transmission line bottleneck in southern Alberta?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the issue of gridlock, so to speak, is the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, but I can tell this member that this government is committed to deal with the issue of access to the electrical grid. In fact, there are hearings taking place as we speak to deal with that exact issue. The wind is in southern Alberta. The demand is in central and northern Alberta. We need to be able to connect the two.

Ms Blakeman: I'm glad he agrees with me.

Back to the same minister: given that most of the 21 states and three provinces that have adopted absolute caps have put those targets into legislation, can the minister verify his statement from Monday that "as of today Alberta is the only jurisdiction in North America" that has any regulations on climate change?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are no other jurisdictions in North America that have in place and in operation legislated reductions on a facility-wide basis with respect to CO₂. I stand by my comments that I made earlier this week. They are true. I defy this member to prove me wrong.

Ms Blakeman: Happy to.

Next question back to the same minister: Harris from Calgary wants to know when Albertans can expect targets for renewable energy productions that are backed up by a long-term plan emphasizing energy efficiency – wind, solar, and geothermal – and reducing our reliance on coal-fired energy projection. That would be environmental protection.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, there are so many people that get wrapped up in this cloak of targets and aspirational legislation, but the fact of the matter is that it doesn't matter what your targets are if you don't have a road map to get there. We have a map to get there. We are moving the envelope along. The fact is that there are all kinds of targets all over the world. No one is meeting their targets except Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Page 47 of the Auditor General's 2009 report contains a follow-up to an earlier 2001-2002 audit on emergency preparedness. The AG felt a strong and urgent need to improve the co-ordination of emergency preparedness plans by government and a reassessment of the government's Emergency Operations Centre, which is located in the Edmonton-Calder constituency. My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What have you done to address the Auditor General's recommendations?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we do believe in being accountable and appreciate the recommendations that do come forward by the Auditor General. The Auditor did ask us to make a plan, and we did exactly that. We created the Alberta Emergency Management Agency in 2007, and it co-ordinates the government responses. We have updated the emergency plan, a comprehensive plan for the province and for the partners, and we have defined the role. The Auditor General and I are very happy with the progress that is being made.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. The Alberta Emergency Management Agency is doing a good job for a relatively new organization. There are undoubtedly some kinks to work out. What are you doing to ensure that the province is prepared for emergencies?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, we believe that preparedness is a continual and ongoing process. This year we are increasing training. We're exercising the plans for staff and partners. We're going to continue to improve on the co-ordination between ministries and between industry partners and the partners that we do have in emergency management to ensure that we have a good sense of preparedness for the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago at the Horizon oil sands project two workers from China were killed when the structure they were building collapsed. Yesterday 53 charges were laid against their employers under the Occupational Health and Safety Act. If those had been two paid farm workers killed when a grain silo they were building collapsed, no charges could have been laid because in Alberta OH and S doesn't apply to paid farm workers. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: where's the justice in that?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, any time there's any workplace injury or any fatality in Alberta, those things are unacceptable in this particular province. We are very, very actively working to reduce injury rates. We're continuously working with the minister of agriculture on the farm issues. We're looking at what could be done and what can be done. If those same things had happened on the farms, the workers' families have access to the courts as any other Albertan has access.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in responses to the charges being laid, the Premier boasted, and I quote: we've got to be clear to anybody that's doing business in Alberta that the safety of workers is paramount. End quote. He should have added: unless they work for our friends who run corporate farms. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: doesn't this government see that protecting all workers except paid farm workers is morally bankrupt?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, farm employers have access to WCB, and there is a certain amount of protection that's available through them. Farm workers are exempt under our existing legislation. As I indicated, we are looking at reviewing that. We've hired a consultant to work with the farm communities to see what can further be done.

Dr. Taft: Well, the minister knows that WCB is entirely optional on farms. The Premier, whose leadership campaign was bankrolled by corporate farms, yesterday said, and I quote: it doesn't matter whether it's temporary workers or Albertans; we do mean business when it comes to the safety of workers. End quote. This government alone in Canada exempts corporate farms from mandatory WCB, from OH and S, and from most of the labour code. To the same minister: why does this government grant rights to temporary workers from China but not to born and bred Alberta workers?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I think I've explained many times in this House that, you know, we recognize that the farms are places where actual families live and where individuals raise their particular families. We still recognize that farms are not the traditional workplace. They don't necessarily follow routines that occur from nine in the morning until five. We are monitoring the situation, and we're looking at seeing what changes can be made.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Special-needs Education Funding

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has been continuously recognized world-wide as among the few top educational systems. As leaders we should continue to raise the bar of excellence. Of great interest to my constituents and myself is how we teach those with severe disabilities. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Education. What is the minister doing to ensure that students with severe disabilities are receiving needed resources to enable them to learn and grow to their potential?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member and all members will know because we've talked about it in the House, we are working with the setting the direction for special education in Alberta process to redefine the policy framework by which we deliver education to all students and particularly to those who have special needs or special attributes. That setting the direction framework process will culminate in a conference in June. That conference will help us to define a policy framework and a new funding formula, which will be brought forward to work on implementation over the course of 2009 for implementation in 2010. That agenda has been clearly set out to all school boards in the province, and the process is under way.

Mr. Cao: My only supplemental question is to the same hon. minister. What is being done in the interim to ensure that the learning needs of students with disabilities are being met?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, all school boards have the obligation to make sure that all students in their jurisdictions get the educational opportunities that they need. We've been clear to them throughout this process that we would maintain the funding levels that we had in place until the process was completed and a new funding formula was put in place.

I should say that that funding formula funds every school board in this province at a higher level than the existing policy framework would actually call for. However, we have said to school boards that if they believe they have students that meet the funding requirement formula in its current state that we're not funding, we'd be happy to look at those situations and make sure that they get the funding for those students.

Gaming Conference

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, I've had some good times in Vegas, but I'd be hard pressed to spend $4,500 on a three-day trip there. To the Solicitor General: are you saying that the taxpayers were better served by your attending a conference in Vegas than spending three days at the University of Alberta's Gaming Research Institute?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Speaker, the hon. member yesterday in his preamble talked about knowing when to hold them and when to fold them. I would suggest that he should consider folding. When you get the opportunity to go to a conference and listen to world leaders on social responsibility regarding gaming – we have experts in our own province, but again it's good to get a world-wide perspective.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General said that he wouldn't waste this House's time by dealing with a $100 hotel bill, but these are public funds. We could conclude the debate if he would commit to tabling an itemized accounting for travel, hotel, and miscellaneous expenses.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me set the record straight. Airfare was $1,416.32. Accommodation was $1,729.27. Meals were $244.12. Of the $1,200 he talked about yesterday in incidental expenses, $1,121.38 was for fees to pay for the conference.

Mr. Hehr: I really thank the hon. minister for doing that. If he would have done that, he would have saved me some time and trouble here in the House. I thank the hon. member for saying that. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, anything further?

Mr. Lindsay: All I can say, Mr. Speaker: it's an honour to set the record straight.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Workplace Safety

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government distracts the public from its failures by waiting years before charging private companies that disregard worker safety. Yesterday's half-hearted attempt to appear serious about two fatalities at the CNRL tank farm is another example of this government doing far too little far too late. They can't even serve a third of the charges that they laid because the company is based in China. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: why won't you admit that your workplace safety standards are just too weak and contributed to these deaths?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a little earlier, we sympathize with those who have lost their lives. Any time somebody is injured or loses their life in Alberta, we extend our deepest sympathies and find it totally unacceptable. Having said that, we've got some of the best inspection services anywhere, and the fact that these charges were laid after a lot of research and a lot of work is a testament that we are taking this seriously.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing has become crystal clear in this investigation: CNRL had been chronically negligent in ensuring the safety of their workers. But we can't know how many other job sites exhibit the same negligence or whether the conditions at CNRL are even better today because this minister is relying on industry to self-report. He hasn't got enough on-site inspectors to keep an eye on things before accidents happen. Why is this minister letting oil patch executives set safety standards instead of establishing mandatory committees where workers can have a say in their own safety?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the oil sands activities, especially around Fort McMurray, are very, very busy ones. We've got thousands of people working there 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and in the oil sands activities the injury rates and death rates are amongst the lowest across the province of Alberta. They lead in terms of their safety records. Having said that, we do have additional inspectors on-site, and we do work with those individuals and do spot inspections and other inspections on those individuals that have the worst safety records.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this province is the only province in the country that does not have mandatory work-site health and safety committees. This government is more interested in spinning the image of a safe workplace than in actually making it so. These two men died because this government let industry get away with chronic, long-standing breaches in standards, period. No one is checking up on things, and this government doesn't care. To the minister: why won't you stop offering platitudes and sympathies and immediately implement mandatory work-site safety committees just like exist in every other province in the country?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, this government believes in working in partnership with employers, labour or safety associations, and employees to ensure that health and safety remain a priority even with the economic conditions that we're in. Just this morning I joined the Workers' Compensation Board and employees as a representative of government and saluted those companies who were very active partners in injury reduction. They earned $70 million in rebates for the work that they're doing. So we are creating an environment of safety amongst employees and employers and are actively pursuing those areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Innovation Voucher Program

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My constituents have long been looking for assistance in getting across that chasm between successful research and a finally successful commercialization. One of the first actions coming out of the nine-point technology commercialization action plan is the innovation voucher program. I'm aware that it's designed to give entrepreneurs a financial boost, but one of the key questions is: how are the funds being distributed? My question is for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. Are we sending cash directly to the companies applying for these vouchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Yesterday was a very important day in the voucher program as we did announce Alberta's first round of innovation vouchers, which totalled more than $5 million and through 24 different communities within the province, so across this province. They're going to expand the innovation capacity within the province. The dollars, or the vouchers, the cash does not go directly to the companies themselves. Rather, the vouchers are like a coupon to take to an approved service provider within the province to have whatever that application was for performed, and we are paying the provider.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is again for the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. With all of the program cuts in this recent budget how is there more money for a program like this?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we found when we had the initial round of applications was an abundance of great ideas being thought up throughout all areas of the province, and rather than say no to a whole raft of great ideas which will take us a step closer to that knowledge-based economy that we have the Premier's vision of, we reallocated some dollars within our budget to add more dollars to the voucher system, and I think that's a great investment on behalf of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question, again for the same minister: while government is assisting companies, what are the financial responsibilities of the participating companies?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, for generations this government and private stakeholders have written a number of success stories, and the voucher system is going to be another one of those positive stories in the book. But while this assistance enables small businesses to leverage their limited resources by sharing the costs of commercialization, the businesses must be willing and able to cover a minimum of 25 per cent of whatever those costs might be. It is a two-year program as part of kind of a pilot project. We're looking to see how well the program will work before we decide how much we may expand or change the program.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Police and Peace Officer Training Centre

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When times were good and his wallet was flush, the Solicitor General got plenty of attention about the Fort Macleod police college. Can the Solicitor General tell me why, after waiting these many years, a P3 partner is still being sought for the construction of this facility?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great opportunity to talk about a very worthwhile project down in Fort Macleod. As the hon. member indicated, initially we were looking for a vendor to come forward who would be prepared to build the facility using their capital, and we were prepared to lease the facility. That didn't work out the way we wanted it to, so we're now looking at a P3 partnership in the traditional manner and at other options. Hopefully, in a very short time we will be able to move the project forward because it's still very much needed in the province of Alberta.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you for that, Mr. Minister.

A further question. In the meantime I'm sure that we've been writing cheques. To the same minister: how much have Albertans spent on this project so far?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, I don't have those exact numbers here, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've done some work with our staff in regard to going out for requests for information on it. I can't put a number on that, but it's certainly nowhere near the price tag that the facility will cost at the end of the day. The information we have will help us move that project forward in the best interests of all Albertans.

Ms Pastoor: Well, I would accept anything in writing. Thank you.

On every previous occasion we've asked about this issue, the minister has assured us that everything is going according to plan. Mr. Minister, I think that you probably have spoken to part of this, but what is the plan now? Is the centralized training recommended by the MLA committee still a priority for this minister?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, it's an excellent question. Obviously, this particular facility is certainly a priority for this ministry and is a priority of this government, but in the economic times we have today, we have a number of priorities that we're trying to address. At the end of the day we'll see where it falls on the list of priorities.

School Capital Construction

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, Calgary is in need of new schools for its growing population and to replace or modernize older schools in the city. Last year the Calgary board of education in its capital plan requested 11 new schools and modernization of 14 more. However, according to the board none of these were approved in this year's Department of Education budget. My questions are all for the Minister of Education. How is the government planning to eliminate the backlog of schools required by the Calgary board of education when there's no funding for new schools in Calgary?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, Calgary and Edmonton have really been the two jurisdictions that have been addressed well in capital for education through ASAP 1 and ASAP 2. In fact, there are 19 schools being built or planned for early construction in Calgary as we speak, four of them in the Calgary separate and 15 in the Calgary public jurisdiction. Those schools will create 10,000 new spaces by 2013. The projected enrolment growth is 5,300 students by 2013. So not only are we addressing immediate enrolment growth pressures, but we're also replacing old facilities.

Dr. Brown: Can the minister advise the House how many new schools will be funded in Calgary in the next year?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have my doubt that they'll be able to handle any more than the 15 that are coming online in the next little while. That's a lot of schools to commission and put online. But, as I said, we're creating 10,000 new spaces in the next three years. There's a projected growth of 5,000 students. There's provision in there for modernization, for replacement of old facilities, and putting schools in the right places, which is one of the policies that this government has had. In the Calgary situation, while they are going to need planning for the future, currently they're in one of the best positions in the province.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary board of education says that it needs at least $40 million to address the infrastructure and maintenance backlog but last year received only $18 million and even less the year before. Will the minister ensure that the Calgary board of education gets the necessary funds to bring its maintenance standards up to par?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to entertain questions on this from the hon. member as we discuss my estimates in committee. I think that's next Wednesday night. He can perhaps help me with how we take the $97 million we have in that budget and stretch it across all the projected needs.

However, as I mentioned, 5,000 new spaces over and above growth projections: clearly, this will allow the Calgary board of education to replace the worst facilities that they have with new facilities, which takes that maintenance off the table. The other thing which I would advise them to do in the interim is to take the $35 million that they have in their operating surplus, take a look at the key areas of priority that aren't being funded, and perhaps, if some of them need immediate funding, put it right into that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Depriving severe special-needs children by freezing their limited support grants is an exclusionary practice which defies human rights legislation. The Minister of Culture and Community Spirit has trumpeted enshrining parental rights in legislation, but apparently this government considers children second-class citizens. To the Minister of Education: how do you justify investing less than half of what our B.C. neighbour provides in per-pupil annual support grants for severe special-needs students?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in the House, we're having a very good look at how we do the provision of special needs in this province. It's not unique to Alberta. That type of look has happened in Ontario and Saskatchewan. We need to go from a medical model to a needs-based model, and we need to make sure that we're providing the right kind of funding so that every student can maximize their potential and every student has the opportunity to learn. That being said, all jurisdictions across the province know that the process is in place. They're participating in the process. Parents are participating in the process, and they're very excited about getting that process right. In the meantime under our current model we are actually overfunding in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Does the minister expect Calgary's 1,000 special-needs school-aged children, their loving parents, and their dedicated teachers to put their lives on hold until his special-needs consultation process has concluded? B.C. is doing it now. What's our excuse?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we're funding the students in Calgary that are eligible under the policy framework for special-needs funding. In fact, we're funding almost twice as many students as are eligible under the policy framework for special-needs funding. That is exactly why we need to look at the policy framework, to make sure that it's not a question of the medical diagnosis of students but a question of the real needs in education for the students and how we make sure that every jurisdiction can provide the supports that these students need, whether they're assistive technology, whether they're aides, whether other types of instructional help. We're in the process of making sure that we get that right. In the meantime they're funded for twice as many students as they have.

Mr. Chase: It's your method of counting that's flawed.

Why does the Education ministry through its underfunding force Calgary public and Catholic school boards to rob regular-program

Peter to pay for severe special-needs Paul because this government refuses to recognize 337 severe special-needs children?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there has to be a methodology in place for how you determine who has special needs. There is a methodology in place, and as the hon. member quite rightly says, everybody agrees that there needs to be changes to that. We're in the process of developing those changes. However, I should say that there was a $30 million increase in special-needs funding last September, in mid-year, notwithstanding that under our current formula – I shouldn't say this too loud; the Auditor General might have a look – we're funding twice as many students as actually qualify under the formula. I'd also say, as I said earlier in the House, that the Calgary board of education has an operating surplus, so they shouldn't be taking any money out of other students' programs if they're having an operating surplus year to year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Aboriginal Relations Communications Budget

Mrs. McQueen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some recent reports indicate that the communication budget for the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations has nearly doubled over the past year. With both First Nations and Métis in my constituency can the minister tell us why his communication budget went from $237,000 up to $415,000?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed unfortunate when only partial information gets communicated to the public through the media or elsewhere. The fact is that the Ministry of Aboriginal Relations became a stand-alone ministry last year, and the costs related to that part of the budget reflect primarily staffing costs whereas this year those costs are carried forward and are added onto by supplies and services costs, publications costs, and other costs related to our new organizational structure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you tell us how this increased budget will benefit First Nations and Métis communities in Alberta?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the fact that we have a variety of very important programs that help aboriginal communities become more self-sustaining, more self-supporting, and overall improve the quality of life for those communities is one thing. Communicating them effectively to those partners, to those stakeholders, and to the public in general is absolutely, entirely another matter. In fact, it's more critical. As our Premier has often said, we have a lot to talk about, we have a lot to communicate, and we're very proud to do exactly that.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mrs. McQueen: That's it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Municipal Affairs Hosting Expenses

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Alberta Gazette on November 17, 2003, the Minister of Municipal Affairs spent entertaining at a minister's open house at the Alberta

Association of Municipal Districts and Counties $2,471. Last November the minister spent at an open house at the same event over $12,600. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Why did the minister's open house budget at this convention go up in six years by over $10,000, and the taxpayers must foot that bill?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't have the exact documentation, but I'm sure that the numbers that are used are being skewed to some sort of an advantage.

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order.

Mr. Danyluk: Let me say to you that in this particular situation, there is no doubt that there are 360 municipalities in Alberta with approximately five or six councillors per municipality. There are also support staff. It is extremely important that MLAs and I have an opportunity to meet and have discussions with those councillors and reeves and mayors.

The Speaker: I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and the hon. minister is just going to rethink the words he used a minute ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. The same event held on November 19, 2007, two months plus a couple of weeks before the provincial election in 2008, cost over $14,000. Why did this open house cost taxpayers 400 per cent, or over $11,700, more than the same event in 2003? Surely, we can have a party without billing the taxpayers for all this money.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, I do apologize for my wording.

The Speaker: That wording would be: "Skewed to some sort of an advantage."

Mr. Danyluk: Yeah. I'll apologize for "skewing."

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, what I will do is get an accountability to the hon. member opposite for the figures that he's asking for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I can appreciate that, but it's the taxpayers that the hon. minister owes an answer to for this lavish hosting expense.

Now, given that the Public Affairs communications expert has suggested that there's no hospitality budget not only in this hon. minister's department but in the entire government, what controls does the minister have on these hosting expenses when they rise so dramatically from one year to the next and one event to the next?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, part of the responsibility of my ministry is communication and having dialogue with municipalities and councillors, reeves, and associations. The input that I have is that what does take place under my ministry is under my jurisdiction. Do I have responsibility? Yes, I have responsibility.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses today.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you rose on a point of order, but the chair did interject. You heard an apology coming from the minister. Did that negate the reason to go forward with the point of order later?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker. For the minister's convenience I will photocopy the Alberta Gazette's respective pages going back to 2003 and send him a copy.

The Speaker: Perfect. Then there will be harmony.

We'll proceed to Members' Statements here in just a few seconds from now.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry for the mix-up that occurred at the beginning of today's question period.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure again to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 34 grades 10 to 12 students from Father Lacombe high school. The students are accompanied by their teachers Dr. Adriana Bejko, Ms Linda Almond, and Mr. Gabriel Arok. The hon. Deputy Speaker and I will be meeting with the group at 2:30 for a picture down in the rotunda. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have one more I forgot to mention at the beginning of question period. Mr. Fayssal Jamha is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Organ Donation

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, the week of April 19 to 26 is National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week in Canada. Organ donations save lives, improve the health of thousands of Canadians, and can even create long-term savings for our health care system.

The Kidney Foundation of Canada supports the development and implementation of government-funded provincial programs focused on living donors. By supporting the reimbursement of living donors for out-of-pocket expenses, the Kidney Foundation hopes to encourage more Canadians to donate. It is their hope that financial barriers will not discourage Canadians from donating an organ. Recipients of kidney transplants from living donors have shorter wait times for surgery and experience superior health care outcomes. In 2007, Mr. Speaker, 4,195 Canadians were waiting for a transplant; 71 per cent were waiting for a kidney. Organ donation is crucial to help save lives, especially kidney donations.

During this week the Kidney Foundation of Canada is encouraging Canadians to donate a kidney to someone in need. If you would like more information on kidney donation, please visit the Kidney Foundation's website at www.kidney.ca. I strongly encourage my colleagues and everyone in this House to become an organ donor. Saving lives begins with each and every one of us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Armenian Genocide

Mr. Dallas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Adolph Hitler said: who today remembers the annihilation of the Armenians? He then proceeded to methodically exterminate the lives of over 6 million Jewish people. Every year in April we remember the innocent Jewish victims on Holocaust Memorial Day.

On April 24 of each and every year people of goodwill around the world, including Canada and the United States, remember another genocide, the first genocide of the 20th century, the brutal annihilation of over 1 and a half million Armenian men, women, and children.

There is a connection between the Armenian massacre and the Jewish Holocaust. They were both predetermined, carefully planned genocides. Because the world did not hold the perpetrators accountable for their actions, Hitler correctly assumed that he, too, would be able to commit crimes against humanity with impunity.

Ronald Reagan, President of the United States, said:

Like the genocide of the Armenians before it, and the genocide of the Cambodians which followed it – and like too many other such persecutions of too many other peoples – the lessons of the Holocaust must never be forgotten.

As we join with other nations around the world in remembrance of family and friends lost in these massacres, we are reminded to reflect on other times of persecution and genocide. We can also remember and pay tribute to the brave Albertans who fought during the world wars and those who still fight today to defeat the tyranny of evil.

As we honour the memory of those who suffered in the many massacres that have darkened the history of the world, we can reaffirm a commitment to fight against racism, violence, hatred, and persecution. We can also remember that hope survives these atrocities. Today many people in Armenia and Turkey work together to support peace and reconciliation through the Turkish-Armenian Reconciliation Commission. If anyone in history should ever ask again, "Who remembers the annihilation of the Armenians?" we can say, "We remember."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Earth Day

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and recognize Earth Day, which, as you know, is an event coordinated world-wide every year to raise awareness of what each of us can do to lessen our impact on the environment. Today we can recommit ourselves to ensuring that the air, water, and land we all share is protected for this and future generations of Albertans.

It's also a day to remind us that sometimes the simplest effort can be a catalyst for change. In Lethbridge, for example, a group of dedicated volunteers is spending today cleaning up a portion of the coulee hills that surround the city as a part of the second annual Coulee Clean-up, that runs April 20 to May 10. These coulees act as a catch basin for trash and other debris that gets deposited there every winter during our southern Alberta chinook winds. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is just one of the many examples that demonstrate how simple acts can have a significant impact on our environment.

I know each member of this House has made a personal commitment to be greener, and I applaud every Albertan who has done the same. But I believe this year it is especially important to embrace the principles of Earth Day. This year, when the world is mainly focused on economic uncertainty, we must keep our eyes on the environment during these tough times. While it would be easy to drop our guard as we reach for economic recovery, we must resist taking the easy way out.

As legislators Albertans have entrusted us with the job of protecting the environment throughout this great province, a province that is home to some of the most incredible natural beauty to be found anywhere in the world. Mr. Speaker, I think all members can take pride in what we've achieved together. Our environmental laws are sensible and effective. They uphold the delicate balance between the environment, the economy, and responsible energy development, and they keep Alberta focused on doing the right thing.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all members of this House to join me in recognizing a day celebrated across the Earth for the Earth, Earth Day.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I would like to present a petition, which reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government not to proceed with Bill 19 (Land Assembly Project Area Act) and to consult directly with citizens and concerned landowners and their organizations before proceeding with any further changes to the way public land expropriation is conducted in the province.

The petition has 92 signatures.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling 18 signatures on the theme of petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "pass legislation that will prohibit emotional bullying and psychological harassment in the workplace."

Introduction of Bills

Bill 41

Protection for Persons in Care Act

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 41, the Protection for Persons in Care Act.

The act supports safeguards provided for seniors and persons with disabilities by enhancing the protection of vulnerable adults and ensuring abuse complaints continue to be addressed effectively.

[Motion carried; Bill 41 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 41 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a publication entitled The Potential Impact of Canadian Federal and/or Provincial Tax Credit Incentives for Volunteer Participation. It was prepared for Volunteer Alberta, Mount Royal College, and the Muttart Foundation.

My second tabling is the appropriate number of copies of the March 2009 survey findings, Impact of the Economic Downturn on Alberta's Nonprofits & Charities, prepared for the nonprofit, voluntary sector leaders of the ANVSI by the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two copies of a petition to table that I received last week at a public event in Edmonton. These documents are signed by people from Edmonton, from Ponoka, from Calmar, from Devon, from all over the province, actually. They are asking for a cease-and-desist order on the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness regarding the dismantling of our public health care structure. This petition was organized by the Friends of Medicare.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings. The first is a copy of the Peacekeepers Day program that took place at the Peacekeepers Park at what was once the air force base of Lincoln Park. In 1966 my father became the commanding officer of the personnel selection unit on that base, and we lived a mere stone's throw away from the monument. It was a moving and remembering occasion.

I would like to table five copies of the Vertigo Mystery Theatre's announced plays for the 2009-2010 season.

I would also like to table the appropriate number of copies of the TransCanada-Alberta Music Series, that took place at the Epcor Centre for the Performing Arts. Among the featured Alberta artists were Joni Delaurier and Troy Kokol, who wrote the wonderful song for Shane Yellowbird, Pickup Truck. It came to number one on the country charts.

It was my pleasure to be in the company of the Deputy Premier, who was a graduate of William Aberhart senior high school in 1967. William Aberhart senior high school in Calgary-Varsity celebrated its 50th anniversary this past weekend.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Did I get this straight? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity and the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore graduated in 1968 from high school?

Mr. Chase: May I rise?

The Speaker: Absolutely. I'd like to hear this.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Actually, I was graduating from Ernest Manning in 1967 at the time the hon. Deputy Premier was graduating from William Aberhart in 1967. We were centennial graduates.

The Speaker: That was a long time ago, wasn't it?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd have to agree with the length of time that appears to have passed since then.

I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific programs on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate that staff were delayed in answering calls from residents and hazards were created when there was only one staffperson available to lift patients where two staffpeople were required.

The Speaker: Actually, hon. members, I graduated from high school in 1963.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 20

Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just before I begin, I want to confirm to this House that I was born in 1975 and graduated in 1993.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for your indulgence. I'm pleased to rise today to begin debate on Bill 20, the Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009.

This government recognizes that retirement income is needed for Albertans to provide for themselves in their senior years, and that's not a reference to anyone in this Chamber. While Albertans participate in federal retirement income plans such as the Canada pension plan, we know that it is important for individuals to save for their retirement and rely on their own resources. Registered retirement savings plans, otherwise known as RRSPs, allow for self-employed individuals as well as individuals who do not have employer-sponsored pension plans to save for their own retirement.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, individuals who purchase RRSPs sold by a bank or credit union, also known as noninsurance RRSPs, have no creditor protection for their retirement savings. This means that creditors are able to recover the debt that they are owed from the money that is actually in the RRSP. The Insurance Act already protects insurance-based RRSPs from creditors, but currently noninsurance-based RRSPs have no such protection.

The amendments proposed in this piece of legislation will change the law so that creditors will not have access to the funds in noninsurance RRSPs, deferred profit savings plans, known as DPSPs, or registered retirement income funds, RRIFs. However, if the owner of the plan withdraws money from the plan, whether it's a one-time amount or monthly withdrawals, then this money is available for the creditor. This legislation does allow debtors to keep a specific amount of the withdrawal to provide for themselves and for their dependants as already prescribed by the act, Mr. Speaker. This is similar to the laws that currently apply to employment earnings. It's important to note that this new legislation will not apply where family maintenance orders are enforced.

Bill 20 brings our province into line with our neighbours, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, who have enacted or are enacting similar legislation, as well as the exemption in the federal bankruptcy legislation.

A provision is also being added to exempt registered disability savings plans, as I mentioned, RDSPs, from creditors, Mr. Speaker. RDSPs are a new plan that became available pursuant to the federal Income Tax Act just this past December 2008. RDSPs are intended to help disabled individuals or their parents or representatives save for long-term financial security for a disabled individual. An individual must first qualify for the disability tax credit in order to establish an RDSP. This government, through the ministries of Seniors and Community Supports and Employment and Immigration, has exempted RDSPs from the assets and income used in determining eligibility pursuant to the assured income for the severely handicapped, otherwise known as AISH; Alberta seniors' benefit, ASB; and income support, or IS, programs.

Mr. Speaker, complementary with these changes amendments have been made to the Trustee Act regulation to allow trustees to invest in RDSPs on behalf of their clients. Fully exempting RDSPs from creditors encourages families of persons with disabilities to plan for the future needs of their disabled family member. It also provides opportunities to increase their independence, which is consistent with this government's goal of independence for all Albertans.

I encourage all members to support Bill 20. With that, I move to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 25

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board on behalf of.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the schooling thing, I'm still sworn under witness and secrecy protection: I never went to school, I don't know anybody that did, and anybody that says they did is lying.

On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and Enterprise I would like to move Bill 25, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009.

Mr. Speaker, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2009, legally transfers the full pre-1992 unfunded liability to the government effective September 1, 2009. The amendment act will also incorporate changes to the payment and governance arrangements pertaining to the pre-1992 unfunded liability.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate.

Bill 27

Alberta Research and Innovation Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll let everybody keep guessing as to when I graduated, although I think you know, so you can tell the House if you'd like. It is my pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 27, the Alberta Research and Innovation Act.

This bill is an important step in my ministry's work to achieve one of the mandates given to us by the Premier. He asked us to develop and implement a framework that defines roles and mandates for the provincially funded organizations that support world-class research and innovation in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, if we want to be strong players globally, then we need to focus on the areas where we have jurisdictional advantage and align our priorities.

As outlined in the recent throne speech, the new Alberta Research and Innovation Act will strengthen and align the province's entire research and innovation system. It will promote and provide for the strategic and effective use of funding and other resources to meet the research and innovation priorities of the Alberta government and of all Albertans, which includes the development and growth of new and existing industries. The new model will help Alberta researchers and entrepreneurs better realize their potential as creators of world-class discoveries and products.

The act will enable my department to implement the new roles and mandates framework for the provincially funded research and innovation system. Enabling our government to align and strengthen the research system, we'll be better able to realize greater social and economic benefits for Albertans and others beyond our borders.

The organizations involved in this reorganization are the Alberta Science and Research Authority, Advanced Education and Technology's five research institutes – energy, life sciences, agriculture, forestry, and information and communications technology – the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research, operating under the trade name of Alberta Ingenuity, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, the Alberta Research Council, and iCORE. The legislation will allow us to transform these 10 existing entities into one new advisory body on science and innovation and four new board-governed provincial corporations.

Under the act the new advisory body will be called the Alberta research and innovation authority. Mr. Speaker, this board will be comprised of leaders from Alberta's science, technology, and business communities, and we expect it to also have members with national and international expertise. If we want to compete globally, we need to continue to receive high-level strategic advice to the government on key research and innovation matters. This advisory body will be an important element of the strategic planning needed and will build on the viable work that has occurred over the past number of years with the current advisory body, the Alberta Science and Research Authority.

Mr. Speaker, the world is changing. Research and innovation activities are becoming more interdisciplinary, with multiple teams working on particular research areas. The global environment requires Alberta to compete with many other leading jurisdictions. It was time to transform our advisory body on research and innovation, and this new authority will have a renewed mandate given to it by the government of Alberta.

As I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, the legislation also provides authority to establish four new provincial corporations. These corporations, which will be created by regulation, will consolidate the functions currently being undertaken by a number of existing organizations. They will facilitate strategic research and industry development in health, bioindustries, energy and the environment, and technology commercialization. One of the key roles of these provincial corporations will be to take government priorities and turn them into solutions, which is necessary if we want to be successful in diversifying our economy.

The first provincial corporation, the health organization, will work mainly in the context of a health research strategy.

The second corporation, bioindustries, will focus on our renewable resource areas of agriculture, forestry, life sciences, and biotechnology. While there are unique aspects of agriculture and forestry research and innovation that will be maintained, there are increasingly areas of common interest such as biorefining.

The third body, the energy and environment organization, will focus on two critical areas of research and innovation for this province. It will build on our strengths while also focusing on sustainability.

The fourth corporation will focus on technology commercialization and development and support for knowledge-based industries. This organization will be responsible for a number of things. The first will be to consolidate tech commercialization activities currently done by many different organizations. This would include the actions under our bringing technology to market action plan. The second will be to support the development of emerging knowledge-based industries. It will also work closely with companies and entrepreneurs to facilitate a clear path to access those programs, largely by working with regional organizations throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, the act sets out a governance model by creating two committees to promote co-ordination, integration, and accountability across the research and innovation system. The first is the Alberta research and innovation committee, which will advise the minister on the co-ordination, mandates, roles, activities, and initiatives of the provincial corporations established under the act. Members of this committee will include the chair of the Alberta research and innovation authority, the chairs of the provincial corporations established under this act, and potentially other members appointed by the minister such as the chair of the Alberta Enterprise Corporation.

The second committee to be established is the cross-government portfolio advisory committee. This committee, comprised of cabinet ministers, will further link and align government ministries' research objectives to the work of the new provincial corporations. This advisory committee will advise the minister on funding matters for the provincial corporations based on the strategic research and innovation plans developed by the corporation. This will strengthen our efforts to find real solutions to challenges being faced by Alberta today as well as discover economic and social opportunities from research activities.

Mr. Speaker, this approach builds on what stakeholders told us during our consultations. They said that our government's priorities need to be better aligned and that organizations need to work closer together as many research and innovation initiatives cross a number of disciplines.

Continuing to support basic research here in Alberta is an important foundation of the new framework. While it's not specifically addressed in the Alberta Research and Innovation Act, the ministry will be working closely with postsecondary institutions to identify research capacity requirements to support the long-term outcomes of the provincial corporations and also the research capacity requirements identified by individual postsecondary institutions. This support for basic research and innovation and the development and retention of highly qualified people will be critical for Alberta to be competitive in key areas of research and innovation. We remain committed to the principles of excellence and peer review for Alberta's research funding programs, and we will work closely with the postsecondary institutions and the new corporations on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, although it's not specifically addressed in the legislation, I would like to touch briefly on another important part of the overall framework, and that's a new service within the department that we're calling the connector. The connector will be a mechanism to direct inquiries from companies, researchers, and other interested parties and connect them to organizations and individuals that can address their questions and their ideas related to research and innovation. Many of these inquiries to the connector may also be directed to one of the four provincial corporations under this act, depending on the topic of the inquiry. Not only will our system be more aligned, but it will be easier to navigate. You could think of them as a concierge service for research and innovation.

The work that has taken place over the past year has brought us to this stage of development. We consulted with our stakeholders, who told us that the system is too complicated, too fragmented. We asked for input on two major consultations, one in July and another in October of 2008, as well as many, many one-on-one meetings over the past several months.

We also talked to other government departments that are linked to the Premier's mandate for our department, and we looked at the feedback from international panels that reviewed the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research in '04, the Alberta Science and Research Authority in '07, and Alberta Ingenuity in '08.

The feedback we received from all of these sources was quite consistent. They told us that we need to make some significant changes. The system is not as effective as it needs to be to achieve the vision. Roles and mandates of stakeholders aren't clear. Individuals and companies who need support have difficulties navigating the system.

The new framework will improve Alberta's research and innovation system by making it less complex, more focused on strategic priorities, more consolidated, with less overlap and stronger links between the players. It'll be more transparent for other government ministries and key stakeholders so that everyone can understand where they fit on the system. It's essential that we're better organized so that we can capture the most value from all innovations developed in Alberta and so we can attract top people from all around the world to come here and share their knowledge.

The pan-Alberta approach that we're taking with this framework is similar to what we did just over a year ago for Alberta's postsecondary education system. That's when we developed the roles and mandates framework that is seeing the concept of Campus Alberta take shape to better meet the needs of students, taxpayers, and society. With Bill 27 we're again looking for collaboration around common goals, especially as they benefit the taxpayer. With the foundation of the new roles and mandates framework for Alberta's provincially funded research system we have the principle of capturing value for both societal and economic benefit.

Government priorities are informed by and respond to market opportunities and societal needs. This link back is important because it will help us keep our priorities relevant. We know that the province will need to look to research and innovation for solutions to the challenges that we face. We want to build a system that can provide answers to society's questions and deliver on them. The new framework will support the R and D agenda of other ministries as they search for the solutions to issues like pine beetles or water research or developing carbon capture and storage solutions. The new structure will support emerging knowledge-based industries to diversify the economy, specifically around industry development, commercialization, and collaboration.

Mr. Speaker, it's difficult for many of the current organizations being transformed through this legislation to manage funding for long-term research and innovation projects when they operate within the limitations of government's fiscal year requirements. Research projects are typically multiyear in length, and funding can fluctuate on an annual basis due to factors such as the stage of the research. Therefore, the legislation includes a consequential amendment to include the provincial corporations established through section 7 of the Alberta Research and Innovation Act under section 2(5) of the Financial Administration Act. This will allow the new provincial corporations to carry forward funds not spent in one fiscal year into the next.

Mr. Speaker, the act continues the endowment funds currently set out within the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research Act and the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research Act. This model will continue as it provides stability to our research and innovation system by keeping the endowment funds in perpetuity and accessing a certain percentage of the funds each year to support excellent research and innovation. Payments from the endowment funds will be made based on a request from the minister of AET to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. To better manage and to sustain these funds, the legislation establishes a maximum percentage of funding that may be accessed from the endowment funds in any fiscal year. We will address any transitional requirements to move to this new funding model through the regulations to be prepared.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, these changes will give us a system that is focused on priorities but, most importantly, is responsive enough to deliver on those priorities. As a province of our size breaking into this global industry, we need to do it right.

So that's our new framework. It will result in changes in the roles for some players within the system. Those changes will result in new relationships among some of the players, but the players themselves are telling us that we need to make the changes so that we can have a better pan-Alberta research and innovation system. Ultimately, we believe the framework will allow us to be more successful in doing what needs to be done to address societal needs, add value to our resources, diversify into a knowledge-based economy, and be a serious global player in the new knowledge economy.

To make all of this happen, we all need to work together: the government of Alberta ministries, the postsecondary institutions, the scientists, the researchers, the corporations, the politicians, everyone.

With that, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 27.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 28

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to move second reading of Bill 28, Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

Sometimes good governance can be likened to a good hockey team. Some bills are all-star forwards, bringing crowds to their feet as they break in on a goal. Sounds good. Others are like stay-at-home defencemen. You know, they're colourful, they're overlooked all the time, but they're hard-working and effective. What's this got to do with Bill 28? Well, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that Bill 28 is the equipment manager. [interjection] Well, if we're talking about birthdays and who left school, I'm going to talk about hockey.

The Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009 might be kind of humble and overlooked, but it's nonetheless an important part here. As mentioned when introduced a couple of weeks ago, this is an overarching bill that will provide government with tools to help the province achieve goals set out in the provincial energy strategy while eliminating the inefficiencies found in the current energy legislation.

Now we're getting into the meat of it, Mr. Speaker. In all, Bill 28 will amend 10 and repeal two acts previously passed by the Alberta Legislature. Passage of this act will promote sustainable energy development and increase regulatory efficiencies. This includes amendments to existing legislation that will facilitate taking bitumen as royalty in kind, optimize benefits of oil sands production for Albertans. What's interesting in the amendment is that it doesn't restrict the province to collecting bitumen and only bitumen. The amendment anticipates that at some point the province may wish to consider royalty in kind for products from bitumen to attract a better price or to achieve a strategic objective relative to value-added processing.

The bill also facilitates expansion of the industry-funded orphan well fund, which a lot of people have had concern about, to include large facilities, including large in situ oil sands processing facilities, sulphur recovery gas plants, and stand-alone straddle plants. The key purpose of the amendment is to prevent the costs of abandonment and reclamation of large upstream oil or natural gas facilities from being borne by taxpayers should the original lessee become defunct. In such event the industry-supported fund would pay the licensee's share of costs.

I think these are the benefits that Albertans would appreciate. It also shows that the province and industry can work together to create economic opportunities for the benefit of Albertans while minimizing the industry's environmental footprint at the same time.

I think there are mutual benefits in even the most administrative aspects of Bill 28. I'll use an example of an electronic transaction, Mr. Speaker. At present industry and the Department of Energy conduct electronic transactions for everything from the sale of mineral rights to payment of royalties owed. Giving the department the authority to require others to conduct their business with the department through approved electronic means is therefore only common sense. Likewise, it makes sense to give the Energy Resources Conservation Board tools to enforce its collection of administrative fees from industry.

In turn, Bill 28 makes amendments to three different acts: the Coal Conservation Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, and the Oil Sands Conservation Act. Those amendments will streamline the regulatory process without affecting the ability of the ERCB to act independently to regulate safe, responsible, and efficient development of the energy resources. I'm speaking of the amendment to not require an order in council for ERCB-approved amendments to project approvals. Mr. Speaker, this doesn't change the application process; it simply eliminates the final sign-off. In other words, the substantial rule remains the same, but the process is streamlined.

Any amendments being sought by a project developer are going to be subject to public hearing if need be and adjudication by the ERCB, which is quasi-judicial. The proposed amendments will not change this, nor does this alter the requirement for developers to notify any potentially affected third party of the application.

There are examples where a clause or descriptive phrase is written one way, and I'll give you an example, Mr. Speaker. The Oil and Gas Conservation Act is written slightly different than the Mines and Minerals Act. If that clause or descriptor is to mean the same thing in both acts, then they should be written the same way in both acts, and this bill will accomplish that. It's also important that our vibrant energy industry and the legislation that guides it continue to evolve to ensure that it operates in the best interests of all Albertans.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, and without making any further comments on who's got the favourite hockey team, who's going to win tonight, I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on second reading of Bill 28.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:20 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair now calls the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 19 Land Assembly Project Area Act

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment that was moved, I believe, on my behalf by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood yesterday. That amendment, as has already been discussed, refers to amending section 10, which deals with the appeal and the scope of appeal available to people affected by the new bill. The amendment would expand the scope of the issues or the items that would be available for appeal and would therefore expand the redress which would be made available to those who believe that they've been in some way . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. The amendment has been defeated.

Ms Notley: Pardon me?

The Chair: Amendment A2, that was introduced yesterday, has been debated and defeated. Hon. member, do you wish to continue on the bill as amended, not the amendment?

Ms Notley: Absolutely. Sorry about that. I didn't read the very last pages, and I was misinformed as to the status of that amendment.

I've already spoken generally in terms of the merits of Bill 19, and as most members of this House know, we are deeply concerned about a number of different components to the bill. Ultimately, as we have said before, we are of the view that, really, all these amendments to the bill are not preferable to simply going back to the drawing board and revisiting the bill and engaging in a full, comprehensive consultation with the landowners who would be impacted by it as well as other Albertans who are concerned that their interests will be negatively impacted.

However, given that the government seems unprepared to engage in that kind of comprehensive consultation, I would nonetheless like to make another motion to the House with respect to that bill. I will distribute it now and wait for it to be distributed.

The Chair: While the pages are distributing the amendment, the chair shall designate this amendment as A3.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, continue.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes. I rise to make the following amendment. I move that Bill 19, Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended in section 12(1) by striking out "is doing or is about to do" and substituting "or is doing."

The rationale behind that proposal relates to the type of authority that the government is giving to itself through the current section 12 of the bill. The current section 12 of the bill gives to the minister the ability to go to the courts and apply for an injunction to stop people from doing things which are in breach of the act. There's no question that the concept of injunctive relief is not new. It's quite a reasonable concept, and it often appears in a whole bunch of different pieces of legislation. Injunctions have been around for as long as courts have been around, I assume.

However, this particular clause as it's currently constructed appears to us to provide far more wiggle room and ultimate authority to the government and to the government lawyers when they appear before the judiciary with respect to their ability to obtain an injunction than would normally be the case. In essence, what we currently see in section 12(1) is that where the minister applies to the court, if it appears to the court that “a person has done,” reasonable enough, “is doing,” very reasonable, “or is about to do,” not so reasonable, “any act or thing,” and then this is very interesting, “constituting or directed toward the commission of an offence under this Act,” the court may then go ahead and issue injunctive relief not only asking someone to refrain from that behaviour but also asking them to do something else altogether.

Now, to me this clause includes a significant amount of discretion and authority for the government that I think is unnecessary. There’s no question that in law there are, I guess, sometimes acts that if they occur, the minute they’re done, the damage is done. But that needs to be very, very limited. In our view this whole issue of “is about to do” something that would constitute an act that is “directed toward the commission of an offence” gives far, far, far too much breadth to the government.

For instance, let’s say the government were about to exercise some of its authority under this act and were about to designate a piece of land as a project area for the purposes of a dam being built. Let’s say a bunch of farmers got together to say that they were not happy with this. They were meeting, and in the course of that meeting there was discussion about doing something illegal. Now, the way this is worded right now the government could actually apply to the courts to get an injunction against the very meeting. They could actually tell the farmers that they can’t meet because – we don’t know – it may well be that the meeting will be directed towards the planning of the commission of an offence.

What this language does is create an offence, and it triggers in the government a right to take very significant action against Albertans too many steps away from the actual commission of an offence. It gives to the government the ability to assess that someone is about to do something, and the something which is prohibited is not even the commission of the offence; it’s something that is directed toward the commission of an offence.

Well, you know, I suspect that people do a lot of things prior to committing an offence. How do you decide what is or is not directed towards the commission of an offence? I would suggest that something like this could potentially be used to get an injunction against landowners actually meeting to talk about how they’re going to respond to an upcoming initiative on the part of government. I would suggest that this ultimately reflects the absolute worst-case scenario, the nightmare scenario of big government that everybody is constantly, particularly in this Assembly, railing against. Yet this is what this government is giving itself the authority to do or wants to give itself the authority to do.

What our amendment would do is essentially strike out the ability of the government to seek an injunction where someone is about to do something; rather, they would only have that ability where someone is doing something.

Now, at the end of the day one of the problems with – well, there are so many problems with this bill, as we’ve talked about before. But this is another clear example where in addition to giving government tremendous authority over the rights of individual Albertans, tremendous ability to overlook the public interest and the needs of not only landowners but of people who rely on the land being used in a certain way, that is in everyone’s best interest, it also just creates tremendous, tremendous uncertainty.

This particular section, we would argue, is one of those sections which also creates tremendous uncertainty. It is, in particular, the combination of the section that we’re trying to strike out and the phrase “or directed toward the commission of an offence.” As I say, when you put those two together, you are at that point two or three or four actions away from anything that is illegal. It’s incredibly speculative. It will put a tremendous chilling effect onto Albertans who wish to meet and engage and talk about their response to a particular government initiative, whether it is or is not ultimately in the public interest.

It’s with that in mind, then, that we are putting forward this amendment in an effort to reduce the level of uncertainty and to bring the government’s authority to take very excessive action much closer to the act, which would trigger it and which would rightly trigger it, so the commission of an offence. The commission of an offence should trigger the ability of the government to take very serious action, not the pondering of maybe in the future doing three things, at the end of which one might possibly commit an offence. That is an incredibly presumptuous and extensive level of authority and power that no government needs, certainly not this government.

The other thing that needs to be analyzed as well in that section is that were the government to actually have the court conclude that somebody was thinking that they might do something that, were it to be followed by another thing and another thing, might possibly lead to the commission of an offence, they not only have the authority to ask that person or ask the court to have that person refrain from doing that thing, but they can also ask the court to have that person do any act or thing that it appears to the court may prevent the commission of an offence under this act. Then suddenly there’s a broad range of remedies that the courts can seek against someone who may have thought about taking action in the future, that if followed by another action and yet another action after that, might ultimately amount to a commission of an offence. I think it just makes some sense that this language is far too extensive and that it gives far too much authority to the government, far too much discretion to the government, far too little certainty to Albertans.

Thank you.

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Chair, I rise in opposition to the amendment. By way of explanation, because of restrictions that are on land, this would be only used in an area where, in fact, the municipality has already informed the landowner that they’re in contravention of the development restrictions and has issued a stop order through the municipality before the court.

Another instance that is a possibility – and this is from experience, which is why the wording is in there – is that if someone was stacking the framing materials for a foundation on a right-of-way, that’s not a problem, but if they were bolting them together and digging in the ground, it’s in everyone’s best interest that that activity be stopped before the expenditure is made by the person and actions have to be taken to reverse that.

The wording in this is consistent with wording in other enforcement legislation that we have, and it’s there for that purpose: to save dollars for everyone. It comes from instances that we have actually been through already.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. This business of: just trust us; the wording is there in other documents. If it’s there in other documents and it has yet to be challenged, then I’m sure that under Bill 19 it will be challenged.

Every time justice is portrayed, justice is portrayed as a woman with a blindfold holding out a balance. The type of portrayal of justice that government is providing is an individual with crystal balls. They can look into the future and determine that an individual is going to commit a crime. Based on telepathy or ESP or their hocus-pocus looking into the crystal ball, they can predetermine that this individual whose land is about to be expropriated is likely to commit some type of a criminal offence in order to hold onto their land. That's a bit of a specious argument, to say the least. It's speculative. It's pre-emptive.

The government has already been caught illegally spying. They've been caught wiretapping when it came to electricity rights-of-way. Now they want to arrest people before they've committed a crime because they think that they might commit a crime.

Mr. Hancock: Do you have any idea of the difference between arrest and enjoin?

Mr. Chase: Well, we're enjoining in discussion, and right now you're arresting my conversation.

To continue, the whole notion of the predetermination of a crime, the unfulfilled lack of evidence that on the basis of suspicion alone you could prevent somebody from continuing on, whether they were enjoined or whether they were arrested or whether they were prevented in any manner from carrying out a legal opposition, is very concerning. The whole idea of guilt, you know, that you're innocent until proven guilty . . .

Mr. Hancock: That's what the court case is about.

Mr. Chase: And that's the whole point.

We tried to, as I use the term, save your bacon before by having this referred to committee so that you could do it right. That was rejected, so we're now specifically talking, through the chair, about A3, which is saying: let's deal with the past evidence, let's deal with ongoing evidence, but let's not attribute an action or an intent until such a point as it appears that the commitment is without a doubt.

Obviously, if somebody has a knife as opposed to having a stapler, and their hand is up here, then there's some type of restrictive action that is required. But in this particular case to presume that this individual is going to interfere in some way with the carrying out of, questionably, whether it's justice or injustice when it comes to expropriation is just too far fetched.

In the regulations associated with the TILMA bill, for example, the minister can reach back in time and change the rules. Now, that was rather ridiculous, but what's even more ridiculous is somehow hopping in the time machine, racing to the future, indicating that the person is going to commit something illegal; therefore, we'd better take them out of the game right at this point without any proof. It doesn't make sense.

Because the House leader does have the legal background which I lack, if he could provide examples of where suspicion of a crime or the committing of a crime is sufficient to enjoin an individual, that would be appreciated. The way I interpret this is that it's: "We believe you're guilty. Therefore, because we believe you're guilty, it's easier for us to deal with you, put you on ice, take you out of the game, remove you from participation, take you from a hearing and just simply isolate you. Then we don't even have to deal with you. Forget a hearing; we just simply disqualify you."

I will sit down and look forward to examples of how wrong I am.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to participate in the discussion this afternoon on Bill 19, specifically amendment A3, as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. There have been amendments to this legislation, of course, from the members of the third party, members of the government. I, too, have amendments to this legislation that, hopefully, at some point we'll get to.

However, we're specifically with the hon. member's amendment. My look at this in Section 12(1) certainly indicates – first off, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to say that I support this amendment. I think the members across the way should thank the hon. member for pointing this out.

If I understand this correctly, this amendment is to pull a section because the hon. member does not think that the minister and/or the court should be able to impose some rather restrictive penalties on landowners based only on suspicion.

Now, the entire section 12 is certainly a section that many, many different Albertans, whether they're urban or rural, whether they have property in urban areas or rural areas, have raised as being of great concern to them. I think that if we were to vote in favour of amendment A3, it would alleviate some of the concerns that have been expressed. We don't have to go too far between our legislative offices and our constituency offices to encounter an individual who will ask: "What's with that Bill 19? Why does the government need it?" Certainly, as time progresses and we get more and more information, you can see why the government is anxious to have a bill of this nature. I for one don't think it's necessary, but when you look at what the plans are in the short-, medium-, and long-term, you can certainly see where they want in some cases to act quite quickly.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity is right when the hon. member indicates that, of course, we don't need any more embarrassing spying incidents like the one that occurred in Rimbey over the regulatory hearing on the north-south 500 kV transmission line.

Now, last night in the Infrastructure estimates – and, Mr. Chairman, I'm not wandering here into another issue – I had a very interesting, detailed discussion with the hon. Minister of Infrastructure regarding the plans of that department and the government: what land they may need, when they will need it, and where they will need it for these so-called projects. After the rough start that Bill 19 has encountered, I can understand why the government is so anxious to amend it. I would like to compliment the minister on his interest and his desire to attend many public meetings and explain the government's side of the issue. I think that in this case the minister is to be commended, but he needs to listen to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in regard to – I'm not going to say repairing – amending this section 12.

Again, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion regarding amendment A3, I would strongly urge this House to have a good look at what the hon. member is proposing here and give it consideration because I for one think it would take a bad bill and at least make it better.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on amendment A3?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Yes. I think that maybe I'm just rising to close debate on this. I'm not sure. Anyway, I just want to respond to a couple of the points that were made, primarily by the minister, in response to the concerns that I've raised. He mentioned the fact that the type of scenario where this section of the act would be used are situations where, for instance, municipalities had informed the government that someone was in breach of land-use standards or land-use regulations. But my understanding is that were that the scenario in which this section were being used, then the section as it would remain should my amendment pass would still be perfectly satisfactory as a tool for the government to seek injunctive relief to stop the offence that they were concerned about. In essence, if the person or body in question had actually breached rules or standards in place by the municipality, then it is probably the case that they would fall under the phrase “is doing . . . any act” blah, blah, blah, all of which would be fine in terms of, again, if you believe this act is the way to go and in terms of a reasonable interpretation and administration of this act.

The other example that was given by the minister, again, on its face sounds kind of reasonable, but, you know, there’s an adage in the law for those few of us who periodically are forced to engage in that debate, and that adage is: good facts make bad law. Basically, you don’t just take one example and say: oh, this is about that example. What you do is you analyze the whole scope of implications of what your particular outcome, whether it’s a decision or whether it’s a legislative initiative, could mean.

So, yes, that piece of legislation would help the government stop the person who’s bolting together foundation pieces on a piece of land that they’re not supposed to be developing at that point, knowing that the bolting process precedes the inappropriate building. But I would suggest that, frankly, if it is the ultimate construction, the completed construction which constitutes the breach that the government is seeking to have stopped, then I think it’s quite reasonable that in that particular case the person proceeding to engage in what would ultimately be the commission of an offence simply has to accept the consequences of making the investment to do that.

This act already gives to the government the ability to ask the courts to not only ask the person to stop doing that thing but to do whatever else the government thinks would be helpful. That may well mean: take your building down. Yes, that is a costly outcome, but presumably if the person has committed an offence, that’s the risk they take. So there is actually still a remedy for the government under this section of the act for the example given by the minister were my amendment to be passed.

Conversely, though, if the amendment were not passed, here is another scenario which would be covered by the legislation as it currently exists. As I said before, say that there are four farmers who are very upset about the government’s designation of a project area. Say that one of those farmers had publicly stated that they were going to go out the next day and pour a concrete foundation. Say that that farmer was going to have a meeting with four others. Under this legislation the government could seek an injunction to stop that meeting from happening. What I’m saying is that that is too much. It is just too much. No government – not in Alberta, not in Ontario, not in the former Eastern bloc countries – needs that kind of authority. You need to be able to prove what’s happening. This would allow the government to basically stop meetings that are two or three or four steps away from any potential commission of an offence, and no government needs that much authority.

I urge you all to pass my amendment.

The Chair: Does any other hon. member wish to speak on amendment A3?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on amendment A3.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We are now back to Bill 19 as amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Speaking in committee at this time, Mr.

Chairman, it has been said before regarding Bill 19 just how controversial this bill is and how it limits landowners’ rights and implements control over their land. I can understand why the government was anxious to amend it. You know, this limitless government restriction on privately held land for purposes of future development is, I think, totally unnecessary.

The debate to date has been quite extensive regarding Bill 19. I couldn’t help but read Hansard. I listened yesterday to the debate on the intercom, but it was on and off because I was diligently preparing for the Infrastructure estimates, that occurred yesterday evening at 6:30, which I referred to earlier. I’m looking at Hansard on page 741 from yesterday, and the minister indicates:

Only an arrogant government would create the regulations before it has the legislation to guide it. That’s the way the democratic process and this process works in the House. The regulations are guided by the legislation, and the legislation with this bill, as with all bills, is the tip of the iceberg. It’s what gives the high-level direction of what we’re trying to accomplish.”

Now, certainly, I for one and many other members have suggested that perhaps the regulations be put forward. So much of this legislation is enabling legislation. The government can do, again, what it wants, when it wants, and where, but it’s routine – and I would remind hon. members across they way that it’s routine – for regulations to be developed.

This is not the first time that legislation such as this has been drafted and that regulations have been drafted at the same time. In fact, the Department of Energy had a cottage industry in this province with the drafting of regulations around electricity deregulation. That went on at the same time as various amendments to statutes were debated in this Assembly. That went on and on and on.

Surely, I don’t think that the Minister of Infrastructure was implying that a former Conservative Premier of this province, Mr. Lougheed, would be arrogant. One only has to look at the proceedings of this Assembly going back 30 years, when the hon. minister was probably in junior high, where regulations were routinely tabled. They were debated.

There’s no problem with a bill being drafted and the regulations that accompany that bill also being drafted and openly discussed. I would take exception to that series of comments from the hon. minister because we could have a look at the regulations and no harm would be done.

I’m, again, surprised – and I will express this on the record – that what the government has in mind with this bill through the regulations is not even part of the plan to date. I can’t accept that. I would think that the regulations, again, are drafted, and they’re somewhere not too far from the minister’s office. I think the minister, certainly, could provide all hon. members of this House and property owners throughout the province with a look, just a little peek, at those regulations, just to see what they have in mind.

Now, when we’re looking at some of the regulations that could be enforced, Mr. Chairman, we’re looking at regulations that include how to give notice of a plan, how to consult about plans, how much total land a project area can cover, regulations that authorize the minister to expropriate any estate or interest in land if the minister considers it necessary for the purposes of the act or regulations, and also regulations to allow an appeal body to be designated and, I would also assume, to be selected or chosen or hand-picked.

There’s a difference between choosing, selecting, and hand-picking. When you have a government that has been in power as long as this one – some of the current cabinet ministers weren’t even in elementary school when the Conservatives came to power – we have to be very, very careful about hand-picking because there are many people in this province with different views than the views that are expressed by the Progressive Conservative Party. People with different views and other suggestions should be considered for some of these boards or appeals commissions. It'll be interesting to see. I'm not going to surmise as to who would wind up on that appeals commission, but certainly I would rather doubt that the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity would be asked if he would wish to appear.

Now, when we look at other details, Mr. Chairman, in this bill, there's no better time than at committee to review this legislation. In section 1 we have the definition of terms, of course. Then we move on to section 2, which is the land assembly project area. I would urge all members of the Assembly to have a look at the 20-year strategic capital plan of the government, and I would urge all property owners and taxpayers to have a look at this document because it certainly outlines the government's plan or ideas for the next 20 years. You only have to have a quick look at this document to know fully well why this government needs Bill 19.

Now, I have to inform the hon. Minister of Education at this time that when we were discussing Bill 19 and the implications of this 20-year strategic plan, his name came up. It was the Minister of Infrastructure's suggestion to me when I asked yesterday evening regarding this strategic plan – and the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill asked a question in question period today about elementary schools and public schools, new school construction in Calgary. I found it quite interesting because in this plan, in the 20-year strategic plan, which Bill 19 is going to sort of administer, it is indicated that in the five years between 2003 and 2007 $258 million was spent on new school construction projects in Calgary. There were 30 new schools. If you look at the next page, there were in Edmonton during roughly the same time period – it's a little shorter time period in Edmonton, between 2004 and 2006 – seven new schools constructed, costing $48 million.

I had asked the minister for an explanation on this, and he suggested that I ask the Minister of Education, so perhaps tomorrow in question period – I'll give you a heads-up – you could explain why Edmonton got so little and Calgary got so much in regard to new school construction. During the same time student populations remained the same in both jurisdictions. I looked into this. In Edmonton, of course, we saw 15 schools closed in about the same time frame. Those numbers were startling to me, and hopefully I can get an answer.

Mr. Chairman, specifically regarding the 20-year strategic capital plan and Bill 19 I would again urge members, before I go any further with a detailed sectional analysis here, to have a look at that 20-year strategic capital plan.

Regardless of where your constituency is in the province, I think it is one of the most interesting documents you can look at on behalf of your constituents.

Now, we looked at section 2 briefly. This section, Mr. Chairman, allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the recommendation of the minister to of course designate one or more areas of land that, in their opinion, is required for a public project as a land assembly project area. There are a lot of ideas in that 20-year strategic capital plan that could be implemented through this bill if it unfortunately becomes law.

Now, 2(2) sets out the criteria that these public projects must meet. They will be transportation corridors and utility corridors in the main, but the bill also provides for water management as well as any project the Lieutenant Governor in Council may call a public project. I'm not convinced. I was at one point convinced by the Minister of Infrastructure that this had nothing to do with electricity transmission infrastructure, but I can't say that with confidence now. I was buying it at one time, but whenever I look closely at this bill,

I can't accept that because things can change here, and they can change very quietly. They can be changed very quietly by this government.

Of course, this is a considerable . . .

Mr. Ouellette: Consult your colleague behind you and find out.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry, hon. Minister of Transportation. I did not hear that.

Mr. Ouellette: I said: didn't you hear your colleague behind you today in question period about how we need transmission lines in southern Alberta for the bottleneck?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I certainly did hear that. It has absolutely nothing to do – well, the minister is certainly entitled to his view.

I would point out that things can change, and things can be changed by this bill.

Now, when we're dealing with (d), we've got to remember, Mr. Chairman, that it simply states that a public project is any project the government calls a public project. There's no legislative framework here. It is simply up to the minister; it's a ministerial call.

I would remind the hon. Minister of Transportation of that. Your name did come up more than once, I must say, in Infrastructure estimates last night. It was quite interesting. You know, there was a division of the two portfolios, and I for one think, Mr. Chairman, that we should put them back together and save a few dollars. Now, one of these ministers would no longer be a minister, but that's the reality of these economic times. See how easily I'm distracted by this hon. member, Mr. Chairman?

Certainly, whenever we look at (3), this subsection requires that the Lieutenant Governor in Council undertake a plan for the project. There is also an undertaking that the plan be made public, and of course there's notification and consultation with the landowners in the project areas. But to what extent? This is where my questions earlier came from, the regulations. All these requirements will be determined later by the regulations, which, of course, no one is allowed to see. I cannot believe for a minute that there's been no consideration of these regulations along with the drafting of this bill.

We've got to look at this because this is a key section that is set up for weak regulations later. This will allow the government to offer merely nominal consultation, planning, and notification, in my view. The government can fulfill the bill's requirements but not actually undertake anything meaningful. What kind of protection does this section provide for landowners? Landowners have suspicions. Those suspicions are valid. So far, I don't think we have made any effort to restore public confidence in this proposed section.

If the government, Mr. Chairman, won't state what kind of consultation and planning is required and, instead, later puts it through the regulations, how can it claim to be protecting landowners' rights? One only has to look at the series of articles that have been published recently by individuals and groups regarding Bill 19 to know that there is quite an issue around protecting landowners' rights. Many landowners have been through this before with the ring roads in Calgary and Edmonton. I don't think we're going to have time to get into that. There were some winners and there were some losers in that deal, and the losers were certainly identified in the Calgary Herald editorial which was written earlier in March. It sums up that process rather well, in my opinion. I don't think I'll quote that – well, the minister of health is not here, so maybe I could.

Now, section 2(4) requires the government to notify and consult with owners of any late additions to the project area but does not require the government to consult all over again with existing landowners, and (5) blocks project areas from including Métis settlements.

Section 3, Control, Restriction and Prohibitions, is the notwithstanding section, allowing the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations relating to the project area that apply regardless of other legal and regulatory provisions. These include (a) and (b), controlling the use, development, and occupation of land in the project area but also giving the minister the ability to exempt land they choose from these regulations. This is considerable authority. This is a serious power. The minister is the arbiter of landowners' activities. How will these decisions be made? I had a look through Hansard, and I didn't see an answer to this question. Doesn't this lead, Mr. Chairman, to the impression that landowners have to be nice to the minister because of the power over land use that the minister holds?

I think we've got to do a thorough sectional analysis of this bill, Mr. Chairman, and I intend to do that. Subsection (c) allows for the regulations around the removal of structures and materials and animals from land as well as compensation for that removal; (d) allows for regulations regarding how these powers may be exercised. So this would be a regulation regulating the regulations, if I could use that idea. Shouldn't this be set out in the act? Now, (h) also is of note as it allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make further regulations about anything they want, and that's, of course, a standard clause with this and many other governments.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on the bill as amended.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Speaking to the bill as amended, I have been to a number of, I guess, public information sessions both on the northeast ring road and also on the southwest ring road, and when it comes to consultation, this government has an awful lot to learn. With regard to the northeast ring road, with very little consultation with the businesses and the individuals living in the northeast part of Calgary, including a trailer park, the government changed the design and routing of the ring road. What it did was cut off access for emergency services for a variety of businesses and individuals. From the business point of view, one of the businesses was a trucking firm. It added about 12 kilometres to their daily drive in order to access their own property and, obviously, the additional expense in gas and inconvenience.

Now, the northeast ring road is causing problems for Calgary planners when it comes to how it affects the airport. The proposed airport tunnel to try and make up for the fact that a large section of Barlow Trail, which is a north-south, frequently used roadway leading to the airport and of great convenience for Calgarians travelling to the airport, especially from the east side of the city – the way that the province has dealt with this particular project has not shown any tremendous degree of collaboration with the city. They basically have suggested to the city that you can't build a tunnel underneath a runway, yet my experience in Paris, France, where the runway went over several overpasses, shows that that kind of reasoning is flawed. The whole idea of Bill 19 and assembling land and plants is flawed in a whole series of areas.

When it comes to the southwest ring road, I cannot imagine the province taking on the Tsuu T'ina in terms of talking about expropriation to the same extent that it's willing to take on every other nontreaty individual in this province. Fortunately, the Tsuu T'ina and other First Nations bands have federal rights which supersede provincial rights whereas the everyday non First Nation individual is subject to the whims of the government in terms of whatever they determine through Bill 19.

The southwest portion of the ring road: it's now, I believe, 42 years and counting since the concept was first suggested. The Premier and the Minister of Transportation every once in a while get up or put out a little media release saying how much closer they are. I gather that at this point, in terms of acquiring that land, they've at least agreed upon an outfit that will set a price for the land, and I'm hoping that that price will be fair, obviously, to the First Nations, who are giving up a significant portion of their land to allow this roadway to go through it.

Again, I know from having talked to individuals on the Tsuu T'ina reserve that there's great conflict among the residents as to where exactly on the reserve this road should go. There's already an existing road with very few houses associated with it which is about six kilometres west of where the proposed ring road is to go. This western route has been favoured by members of the Crowchild family although older brother and younger brother have varying opinions on which route is best. The western route involves less interference. It crosses the Elbow River at a place where it is considerably narrower and would require less of a span and, therefore, less expense in crossing the wildlife area there.

Unfortunately, this alternate consideration was never given much value. The style of the bridge in terms of any of the architectural plans that I've seen are suggesting a low-level bridge, which would potentially block the movement of game and interfere with recreational activities, as compared to the bridge over the Bowness park, the expansion there, which is a wide expanse and high. There's a pedestrian road or bridge underneath, and as I recall, there is only one buttress or pillar that actually is located in the Bow River, so there's very little interference with the natural state of things.

The way the proposed ring road through the Tsuu T'ina right now and then up into the southwest part of Calgary on the other side of the reservoir is routed is going to interfere with existing wetlands. It's going to come very close to the back doors of a number of properties. The plan, as I understand it, currently is for a six-lane, three and three, as opposed to an eight- or a 10-lane circumstance that takes into account future needs.

Now, my understanding in this particular development is that there will be large rights-of-way where possible. Of course, behind Oakridge, I believe is the district, there isn't much room for the extra expansion, and that's why moving it further west would have been a good idea. To a degree some of the land except for the Tsuu T'ina has already been designated and set aside, and I don't recall any feuding or concerns about how that land was acquired. I believe the government, for example, worked with the Mannix family to acquire land that's currently being used right beside the western reserve of the Tsuu T'ina Nation. These were examples of co-operation and collaboration in terms of trying to get this southwest ring road going, which we don't see in terms of Bill 19.

Another example of co-operation that the province had a degree of input in – in fact, the former Minister of Education, the minister of health, was one of the key individuals involved in that – is the west routing of the LRT. The city worked with the school board because Ernest Manning, the school that I earlier referenced graduating from in '67, would be right in the middle of the tracks. So the city not only did a land swap with the CBE, but they also provided some extra funding, and I'm quite sure that the province supported both the city and the school board in terms of that choice. The choice was made in a collaborative, collegial fashion as opposed to being dictated.

Mr. Hancock: That was the Minister of Infrastructure who actually put that together, so when you give credit, give credit where it's due.

Mr. Chase: Well, I did. I just did. Hon. Minister of Infrastructure, you were part of the organization of that land swap? That's great. I commend you for your forethought in that decision. I was at the breaking of the ground of the new location for the Ernest Manning school. So to commend the Minister of Infrastructure, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, that was a very successful, collaborative effort.

Bill 19, however, makes the assumption that the government knows best. You know, it makes me think of the old camp song, only the government changes it: this land's no longer your land; this land is now our land; this land's not big enough for you and me. Throw in Git Along Little Dogies. This is what landowner after landowner after landowner – these aren't people that you can sort of sideline, call tree huggers or environmental pests or, you know, all these sort of demeaning, excluding terms. These are individuals who have farmed the land in the rural cases sometimes for generations. A number of MLAs who represent rural ridings: these are your neighbours, that live along potential future power corridors or high-speed rail or highway developments, potential sewer systems to expand existing municipalities, and they deserve to be heard.

What has happened previously in large-scale ring road projects is land speculation, flipping. It appears that depending not on what you know but who you know, there is an opportunity to gain an advantage by purchasing land that has somehow been discussed behind closed doors for a particular routing of a public system as is mentioned in the land assembly project area that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar brought out, a project to confine to a corridor of land pipelines, pipes or other conduits, poles, towers, wires, cables, conductors, other devices, and so on. It goes on and defines all the things that are supposedly in the public good.

Going back to the justice image and the balance, a balance has to be struck between public good and private property rights. Bill 19, obviously, even in its amended version – and as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar noted, he appreciates the Minister of Infrastructure trying to soften, take off some of the sharp edges of this draconian piece of legislation, but short of putting it through a tree shredder, you're not going to get rid of those sharp points.

Therefore, it continues to be a concern to landowners, whether they're in urban circumstances or rural circumstances, that they're not going to have a fair hearing. Based on the amendment that was introduced earlier by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, there is a presumption that anyone who interferes with the government's acquisition has the potential of being considered guilty, and an injunction can be nailed to their door or passed through their mailbox indicating that they have to desist from any further action that would interfere with the government's expropriation of their land.

I know that other members have amendments. They're going to try and help the government fix this bill. I wish them well. It is so flawed that I cannot imagine that without the help of the nonpartisan committee to which it was attempted to be referred, this will be able to be worked out by any one or collection of cumulative amendments.

Not wanting to slow the progress of the discussion, I'll take my seat and look forward to further discussion.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Now, certainly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill asked what we would do. Well, for one thing, we're going to be persistent and try to amend this legislation even further because it certainly needs it.

When we look at the whole discussion and the assertions that have been made that individual property rights are under attack and how this will work out in the future for landowners, we only have to again, Mr. Chairman, look at the past here. In 1974 we started with the restricted development areas around Edmonton and Calgary for the ring roads. The ring roads have been discussed in this House this afternoon.

Now, many landowners at that time, whenever we talked about the transportation utility corridors – and they were the land assembly project areas of their time – were very, very dissatisfied. Many had property that was devalued because no one wanted anything to do with property that may or may not be frozen for 10, 15, 20, sometimes 30 years. It was considered to be – and this is according to the Calgary Herald – an abuse of property rights then, and so now is Bill 19. The editorial in the Calgary Herald goes on to discuss the land assembly project areas, discusses the regulations, points out some very accurate observations about the regulations, but also notes that the proposed Bill 19 renders the provisions of the Surface Rights Act inapplicable and also for the Expropriation Act.

This is interesting. I had a look through Hansard while the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity was speaking at yesterday's debate and discussion on this bill. I'm not satisfied that we have given a clear explanation as to why these subtle changes have been made to the Surface Rights Act and, likewise, the Expropriation Act, but we need to have another look at this bill, and we need to go through the sectional analysis.

Mr. Chairman, when I find my copy of the bill – ah, here it is. There's a lot of paperwork involved with this bill; that's for certain. Now, we look at section 4. It's to discuss the notice of project area orders and associated regulations, again, and we require the minister to send notice to the chief administrative officer of the affected municipalities, to the provincial registrar, and to the last address of any people with land titles in the project area. We are also requiring similar notice of amendments of project area orders to be sent out – this is very important – and require similar notice of amendments to regulations governing project area orders. We are ensuring that while a notice is required, it isn't in any way necessary for the regulations to have impact. In other words, even if no notice is given, everything can still go ahead. This is another problem.

What is the point of having the notice if it isn't integral to the process? This shows the government's contempt for the landowners, in my view. If they really, really cared about landowners and property rights, then notification would be a necessary part of the deal, and failure to notify would cause the project to fail itself. It's not like the notification process is even particularly difficult. Ultimately, this is a sign that the government doesn't really care about notification and landowners. Now, hon. members across the way, if my interpretation of this section 4 is wrong, please speak up.

Also, if we look at section 5, at the guarantees that were there – and this is gone, as I understand it; I don't know whether it was amendment A1 or amendment A2 – we have to be careful that the guarantees are there that the landowner is going to get a fair value for their property. People were talking here in the past discussion about how landowners are going to be compensated for their land. That is an important issue.

Now, the obligations of persons with interest in project area land: this section ensures that people who acquire an estate or interest in land covered by a project area are still, of course, subject to the acts and the regulations and the direct authority of the government.

The enforcement orders. Now, here we're going to allow the minister under section 7 to serve enforcement orders against those who the minister deems to have contravened the regulations going back into section 3, set out what an enforcement order can do: require an action to cease, provide remedy for an action such as restoring land, set timelines, or inform that the minister may do these things at the expense of the individual or the corporation served.

Section 7(3) requires the reasoning for the order to be clear and for the order to be served on the person. That's pretty straightforward.

Section 7(4) allows the minister to change enforcement orders, amending, adding, or deleting terms or conditions. Now, at some point I think it's worth considering that this be amended. I think we should propose an amendment to this section cutting out the section that states that the minister can amend or add terms or conditions. This allows for additional penalties and powers outside the process set up previously. Mr. Chairman, we think this is unfair to landowners. The rules for enforcing these powers should be very clear. They should be concise. This section allows the minister, in our view on this side of the House, to increase the burden of orders far too easily. We will get to that.

Section 7(5), Mr. Chairman, allows a change to the enforcement order to be served to the person on which it was placed.

Section 7(6) deals with the Court of Queen's Bench, making it enforceable through the court system, of course, through the standard procedure of filing the orders.

Section 7(7) allows the minister to take whatever action the minister considers necessary to carry out the terms of the order and recover costs from the person accordingly.

Section 7(8) is an explanation of what these costs are.

Section 7(9) sets out how the minister may recover costs, including from someone who buys land from a person who has been served an enforcement order. This means that the enforcement order follows the landownership, not the person. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity may have an opinion on that – I suspect that he does – and how that will affect the value of said piece of property, Mr. Chairman, because that all depends, I guess. I don't know whether market forces will apply here or not.

Now section 8, requires that an enforcement order be served by personally serving it, sending it to the last known address, or sending it to the address of the registered land title. Subsection (2) of section 8 allows for the alternative method of serving an order such as electronically if given permission by a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. I would imagine that would be a fairly costly process to receive that permission.

Mr. Denis: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Did someone say yes? I would really appreciate it if I could have an update from the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont on that. He's a learned member of the Law Society. Perhaps he can enlighten us all on that.

Section 9 imposes joint and several liability in cases where multiple people have been served an enforcement order. This means that the minister can go after each and all of them, as I interpret that. Now, if I'm wrong, if my interpretation is incorrect, I would appreciate the minister on the record indicating that.

Section 10(1) allows for appeal of an enforcement order to a body established under regulations. We talked about that. I talked about my sincere hope that maybe at some point the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity or someone that the hon. member knows and suggests and recommends could be a part of that, or maybe we could even suggest Joe Anglin from Rimbey. Maybe he knows some people that would be suitable for this appeals body. [interjection] Yes. I'm delighted to hear, Mr. Chairman, that the government is considering taking some suggestions from Joe Anglin and the other folks around Rimbey. I understand they were here yesterday. Maybe they could come up with some names of individuals who would be interested in serving on this appeals body. Now, that's all outlined under section 10.

There are other directions here regarding orders that are filed with the registrar of land titles. Now, we are looking specifically at section 12(1). I forgot to do section 11(1). No, I'm sorry; we looked after that. Section 12(1) allows the minister to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for an injunction if it appears that a person has done or is about to do something. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona valiantly tried to correct that but was unsuccessful. Again, I think this is an extremely problematic section, and I commend the hon. member for that amendment. I'm disappointed that it was rejected. We do not think that the minister and the court, again, should be able to impose these kinds of penalties on landowners, as I said before.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one of the amendments that I would like to suggest and I would like to provide to all hon. members of this Assembly is an amendment to change the bill through an amendment that was passed yesterday, and that was amendment A1. I will circulate this and wait for your direction.

The Chair: While the pages are distributing the amendment, the chair shall designate this amendment A4.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please continue.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A4 for the record. I move that amendment A1 to Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended in part B, in the proposed section 2.1, by adding the following after subsection (3):

- (4) The designation of an area of land as a project area by the Lieutenant Governor in Council is limited to a period of 5 years.

There has been considerable discussion about this five-year time period so far in debate, but this proposed amendment adds a limit to the duration of a project area order. This, in our view, means that landowners who have a project area order placed on them wouldn't be faced with an indefinite period of time of the government blocking their land use. There would be a strict limit put on this. After five years if the land was still needed – and this is in answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud's question: what would you do with the land for the Anthony Henday Drive? – the government would have to reapply for the order and update the land. However, if the land was not needed, the project area would die out very easily, and the landowner would be given back full control of the land, knowing that the order no longer had any power over them.

That essentially would be the amendment. I would urge all hon. members to give it consideration.

I note to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud that there was a lot of surplus land left over when the land was purchased through the restricted development areas going back to 1974. As I said yesterday, there were some landowners who were losers and, of course, some landowners who – surprise, surprise – were big winners. There were land transactions going on there that, to say the least, were very interesting. The restricted development area, of course, was very large, and over a period of time much of the land that was deemed surplus to either the transportation utility corridor or the twinned freeway, or expressway, was sold back to the same people who sold it to the government in the first place, sold back to them in some cases for a dollar per parcel.

To think that we would have this five-year time limit and then have the government reapply for the order to update the land doesn't seem unreasonable. I would urge all hon. members, Mr. Chairman, to please consider this amendment at this time.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any hon. members wish to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Yes. Speaking in favour of the amendment, what it does is that it basically takes landowners out of a government-enforced purgatory, where they're sort of between heaven and hell and don't know what their fortunes are going to turn up. This defines it: you're in the circumstance for five years, and at the end of the five years there's an expectation of restoration, reclamation. If restitution is required because your land has been held up and you've been inconvenienced and there's been a monetary penalty because of this tie-up of your land, you had other purposes for it which were not taken into account, then this amendment referred to here as A4 covers that circumstance. It provides certainty for landowners, which does not exist currently within the regulations of Bill 19.

Now, this is one more attempt outside of a standing policy committee to approach getting this thing right. I cannot imagine entering into a deal with someone unless there were regulations that I was aware of, not government fine print that was to be determined later. If it was my particular land, if somebody wanted to set up a project in my backyard – they'd be hard-pressed between the gazebo, the greenhouse, the garage, and the extended balcony – if they for some reason decided to expropriate some of the limited space there because some city function needed to take place, I would like to think that in their wisdom, if they decided that my backyard was too small for them to accomplish this project that they had in mind, there would be some restoration, some restitution, some evidence of goodwill on the part of the individuals that, yes, my life had been interrupted. But, at least, it had only been interrupted for a period of five years, a definable period.

This government in some ways gets after Liberals for talking about governance and for clearly laying out the rules, but then it goes on in a sort of reverse circumstance and says: "If we need your land, we'll take your land. We'll give you whatever we feel is the acceptable going market price. Then, if we decide not to use your land at some time in the future, we'll talk." But there's no laid-out procedure. Amendment A4 tries to provide landowners with a degree of certainty, a degree of definition that five years from now it's either . . . or get off the pot.

Thank you.

The Chair: On amendment A4, the Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking to the proposed amendment, I'd first like to say that I would like to thank the hon. members for the intelligent conversation and discussion and reasonable debate that took place on the bill yesterday. With respect to today I would like to say that this amendment would make it absolutely impossible to serve the needs of Albertans for their transportation needs surrounding the large cities where we've just done the project. So I speak in opposition to an amendment that would basically make it impossible to provide Albertans with what they need.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. This may come as a surprise, but I think I'm going to disagree with the minister on how he has interpreted this amendment. To me, what this amendment is really only asking for is what the Premier has promised. It's asking for accountability, it's asking for open discussion, and it's asking for transparency in the processes that this government is responsible for. In five years a lot of things can happen. I also am a firm believer in reviewing something, and certainly five years is not too long to ask for a review. There's no reason that something couldn't sit there for 30 years or 20 years or however many years it's had to sit there for the Anthony Henday and some of the other ring roads.

Certainly, one of the things that we should be looking at – and I know that it has been looked at – is property that would be for a high-speed rail from Calgary to Edmonton. Then, certainly, it either has to hook up with an LRT or actually be high-speed rail to downtown. These are the kinds of long-range planning that governments are supposed to do. That's their job. Then when they go to get the land that is going to be required for a long-range vision like that, fair enough. But there's nothing wrong with reviewing it every five years because there are two different companies that are very interested in the high-speed rail, and I believe, if I'm not corrected, that both of those companies have a different idea of where it should go. I think one of them is looking at the old CP rail, which would allow some property, and the other company is looking at something else. So these kinds of things should be reviewed every five years. There's nothing wrong with opening it up.

I think that all we have to do is look at how quickly our economic situation has changed. We've gone from a surplus to a deficit. Although it does seem like overnight, I'm sure that there were more than many signs that certainly something was coming our way. So to be able to review is a good thing. Also, a review can put new information into the discussion, new eyes to look at those discussions. Certainly, new perspectives may be brought towards the original plan that was put in. As things go forward – I'll use the high-speed rail again. It was a kernel of an idea, and then it goes to people that might be interested, and then it goes into the land that would be required. If there is a review every five years, there's actually more information put into that particular file, that should be open and available to every citizen of this province. They're the ones that are going to end up paying for it.

For that reason I totally support this amendment. There's nothing wrong with it, nothing to be feared. I think it opens it up. As I said before, I think it fulfills the mandate that the Premier was looking for: open, honest, and transparent.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening to the discussion on the bill and on this amendment. Quite frankly, when you assess this amendment, it is totally impractical. Think about it. There have been two years of consultation and open public meetings, and then a decision is made that in fact this is the right place to designate as a project under this particular bill. If you're going to put something like this in – just think about it.

One of the other statements that's in the bill: as soon as there's a designation, the government has to be prepared to start purchasing from anybody that wants to sell along that route. So if we were to agree to this amendment, you'd have a situation where there could be a number of parcels already purchased. The owner of the properties now becomes the province. The individuals can continue to use the property the way it has been used in the past. As long as the integrity of the property is maintained, they can continue to use it.

Then you're going to have pieces where an individual decides, because they maybe feel that the value of the land is going to go up, they want to wait to sell. It may be 10 years. It might be 15 years. It might be 20 years, as the case with the current ring roads. Really, what you're doing is taking away the ability for the person to wait and, if there's appreciation in the value, that individual having the ability to gain that increased value. So this works against the landowner. I would be very, very upset if something like this was in place and there was a project that was going to go through some of my property. Basically, what this would make you do is make up your mind within five years, and maybe it's 20 years that you'd have the land if this wasn't in place.

This is a real backward step, but it doesn't surprise me because of some of the comments from Edmonton-Gold Bar this afternoon, again back to that nonsense that, in fact, the government sold land back to the landowner for $1. We've shown you time and time again in this House that that is not the case. What happened was that there would be a whole parcel of land. The government knew exactly how much land they needed in that parcel. They paid the top price for that land, and then when it was surveyed, the parcels that were left over – we knew the acreages would be, but the land physically now is separated, so it's turned back for $1. That was in the original agreements. There was no such thing as giving land back for nothing. We didn't own it in the first place. So it doesn't surprise me that something like this would come up when the hon. member still doesn't understand the way these transactions work.

One of the big things in all of this is that if the individual landowner is going to go ahead with the subdivision, they've got to go through the whole planning process under the planning act. If the government purchases it, you survey it, and you know where you're at.

So I would really urge people: don't fall for this. It's bad – it's bad – for the landowner.

5:00

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Well, thank you. Thank you very much to the hon. Member for . . .

Some Hon. Members: Rocky Mountain House.

Ms Pastoor: . . . Rocky Mountain House. Thank you. I understand where he's coming from. Actually, I was very, very involved when I sat on city council in some of the negotiations and, certainly, putting the land aside for the Canamex, so I'm not quite as perhaps out there as he may think I am. The whole point of it is that it's not stopping those agreements, but things do change over time. A farmer has made the agreement, the land is gazetted, everything is ready to go, but maybe they have to change something.

One of the examples I would use is that mess on Calgary Trail at 23rd – I think it's 23rd Avenue or 23rd Street. I mean, surely to heavens, if they'd thought about it ahead of time, they would realize that they would have needed a little turn thing there, a little whatever they're putting in, a cloverleaf or whatever they're trying to put in, because it's clearly a mess.

One of the other things is – and this is where farmers would be most interested – when we talked about the Canamex highway, the whole point of it is that it's going down someone's land. It's also dividing their land. The problem is – and this could well be reviewed if the Canamex changes or for any other reason – what's happening is that their land is divided, and they are going to have to go way around to go from one parcel of land to the other with their combines and their Rototillers and whatever else it is that they pull behind those big trucks. They are going to insist that we have . . .

Mr. Chase: Overpasses.

Ms Pastoor: . . . overpasses to be able to get their equipment over it because, surely, we are not going to put – my dream for Canamex is that it actually would be like an autobahn, and surely to heavens we will not be having a farmer and his combine going across an autobahn without an overpass.

So things do change. There's nothing wrong with a review. It has got nothing to do with the farmer's ability to have made the agreement. All it's asking for is a review so that when something happens, if the farmer's land is going to be freed up, then so be it. Then at that point they can do what they want. But to tie something up for 20 years on a huge, long-range plan like Canamex, I just don't see the logic in that. I really believe that reviewing every five years is for everyone's good.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert on amendment A4.

Mr. Allred: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd just like to make a few comments. Firstly, in reference to the last speaker, in her previous comments and even in these comments she spoke of a review. I just think it's worthwhile to read the amendment. It says: "The designation of an area of land as a project area by the Lieutenant Governor in Council is limited to a period of 5 years." What this does is it basically kills the bill.

This bill is for long-range projects, and long-range projects, as we've seen from the Anthony Henday, take a long time. It has been 40 years for the Anthony Henday. In fact, as I said the other day, it has taken 50 years since it was initially planned. Mr. Chair, really, we've got to look at the intent of this bill. It is for long-range projects, and there are provisions in the bill. If a landowner wants to sell, he can sell. I believe there are even provisions where he can get a leaseback, so he can stay on the land until it's developed, which might be 30, 40 years, whatever. But these are long-range projects, and they need a long-time horizon.

Therefore, Mr. Chair, I'm speaking against this amendment because it absolutely defeats the entire purpose of the bill. In fact, I would suggest that it may even be out of order.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I would certainly start with the comments from the hon. Member for St. Albert and work backwards. After five years if the land was still needed, the government would have to reapply for the order and update the property. Now, if the land was not needed, the project order would just die a natural death, and the landowner would take back full control of the land.

There's a public interest here, and the public interest is not being served by this bill. Property owners' interests are not being served.

Mr. Allred: Why not?

Mr. MacDonald: Because of the freeze that is put on your property, hon. member.

I can see why, you know, a five-year period is a contentious time period with this government. But I would like to remind hon. members that you can change the law regarding the Fiscal Responsibility Act. You don't need a five- or 10- or 15- or 20-year period to do that. The circumstances change. You change your mind. I would use that as an example of why five years is not an unreasonable amount of time. If it's good enough for some of your legislation which governs your ability to spend or save, if you can do it with that legislation, Bill 33, that is one example. [interjection] Now, the hon. Minister of Transportation is very anxious to participate in the debate, and I'm very anxious to hear what he has to say.

I would like to point out also that five years may be a time period that is of issue with this government, but my records indicate that it's six years since they initially shoved the spade in the ground over for the Mazankowski health centre at the U of A campus, and that's still not finished. I can see why there's a little bit of an issue on the other side with the five-year period, but property owners have told us that it is a reasonable amount of time.

Now, to the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House – I appreciated his historical vignette on this, Mr. Chairman – this land that he was talking about, these parcels that were for a dollar, show me on the record once and for all, show not only myself but the taxpayers who funded that, where it is written that the surplus land is returned to the previous owner for $1. You show us precisely where that is. If this land had considerable value as the road was constructed, why would the government not have sold that land at a profit itself and given the money back to the taxpayers who originally paid, in some cases, megabucks for that land, and why did not all previous landowners get the same deal that the hon. member is talking about?

Now, specifically regarding amendment A4, Mr. Chairman, I would like to conclude, before we call the question on this amendment, by urging all hon. members to please consider this because it is what property owners in discussions with us have indicated would be a reasonable amendment to this legislation.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: I would just like to explain in a very, very brief moment, but I'm just not so sure if you can explain anything nicely to them or if you've got to be nasty. I'm trying to figure out which way I should go on it.

The Chair: Be nice.

Mr. Ouellette: Okay. I will do that, Mr. Chair.

This is so simple, and I just don't know why you're not understanding that. It took us 30 years, and we still haven't finished the ring roads. Before we even started the ring roads, we'd been acquiring land. We don't want to build another ring road with taxpayers' dollars in five years. If the growth of Alberta would grow that much, not a problem. But, really, we're planning a ring road here for 30, 40, maybe 50 years out. If we don't protect that land now, we will never, ever be able to build that ring road. As you know, if somebody wouldn't have had the vision in this province to protect that land where we're building the ring roads today, we wouldn't be able to build them because the prices would've just been so far out of sight.

The answer to your other question, you were saying about giving land away for a dollar. What we really do when we buy this land – and we're doing it today – the surplus land that we have left after, we sell it at market value. In most cases we've made money for the taxpayer for it. Today there is the odd deal where to be able to acquire the land, guys make you write in the contract that they'll purchase it back at the same price we bought it for. There are some that we do that with. But we are very diligent on how we look after taxpayers' money.

A five-year option. You may as well not even protect land for a ring road because we know that in five years we're not going to outgrow the ring roads we have, so we're looking at 30 years out. We have to protect the land now, or we won't be able to build the ring road later. That'll be constituents right close to Edmonton and Calgary who are going to need these ring roads and all other Albertans and people that drive through the province that don't want to get tied up with in-city traffic. Therefore, that's why we need to protect the land till whenever we need it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on A4.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I appreciate that from the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Certainly, whenever you look at the 20-year strategic plan, the capital plan, you can see where the hon. member is coming from. But if we look at the ring road around Edmonton and the ring road around Calgary, there was a lot of speculation that went on, and not everyone was allowed to speculate on that land before it was purchased by the government. The majority of that land was purchased within the first five years of the restricted development area being implemented. And the hon. minister agrees with me. So the five-year term is not unusual.

If the hon. Minister of Transportation, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, has other additional information, I would appreciate getting it on the record. Where exactly are these lands that the government is proposing to set aside for these outer ring roads? You certainly mention them frequently, not only in the budget documents but in the strategic plan. Also on the Internet there's talk of this. Where exactly is this land? Is there a map? [interjections] The hon. member laughs, but I'm told there is a map actually. I'm told there is a map, and if what the hon. member has stated is true, then the government is obligated to show us the map.

What exactly is in your plans? What land are you contemplating or what roads are you contemplating expanding at some point in the future where you may or may not need this land to make this outer ring road? What land do you have your eye on in Red Deer and in Medicine Hat and in Lethbridge and in Grande Prairie and in Fort McMurray for these supposed ring roads? It's in your plan. It's in your plan, and if we're going to spend millions of dollars acquiring this land, then make those documents public. Make all the details of what you're planning to do with this bill public. Show us. Tell us what properties you're interested in and who owns them now.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on A4.

Ms. Notley: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm just rising very briefly on this issue. There have been very interesting points made on either side of the House with respect to this. I guess, notwithstanding, you know, I'm a big planner. People on my side of the House are all about planning. No question. Absolutely. We're planners. I'm a planner; I wish more people were planners. But it seems to me that even . . . [interjections] Yeah, absolutely more than two.

Even with those best laid plans and those people that do plan, sometimes the plan doesn't quite work out. It's very possible that I'm misinterpreting the intent and the outcome or the implications of this amendment; nonetheless, I'll carry on because what the heck. It would seem to me that sometimes, as I say, plans are made, and then suddenly they change.

For instance, I've been thinking about this and pondering this while I've been listening to this debate that, of course, there's been lots of discussion about ring roads. This is an opportunity for me to go off on my little urban environmentalist rant. Most people outside of this province understand that ring roads are one of the most dysfunctional municipal planning tools out there and that they are very problematic for healthy urban development and ought to actually be avoided and dismissed.

Yes, I know. The member of over there is looking at me with some chagrin. I suggest that you read up on it.

An Hon. Member: Chagrin?

Ms Notley: Well, it's all I can think of at this point. Yes, chagrin.

In fact, the way to go is to plan for public transportation, for sky trains, LRTs, that kind of thing, high-speed rail and that in the long run this is the way to develop our transportation system. The more we rely on this ring road, which creates increasingly unhealthy urban communities, the more we are doing a disservice to our population.

Now, obviously, that's not the majority opinion in this House right now, but one hopes that even this group will ultimately be just bombarded by the consensus that exists in so many other jurisdictions on this issue and that perhaps five years, 10 years, 15 years from now there may actually be some disagreement within a governing group. I won't say it's this one but a governing group, where they start to debate whether or not it's really the best plan to build yet another ring road around a city that's falling to pieces inside, that can't afford it's own transportation system. Maybe that's not the best way to proceed.

So the debate starts and the plans get put aside and the funding doesn't go forward. Then this land is sitting there in this undetermined, endless state, and the policy directives that initially drove the decision to set it aside are now shifting and changing, yet the people on that land have no capacity to engage or to assess and to ask for accountability about what the plan is. The plan is still the same as it was.

There's something to be said for requiring the government to check in again. Is it still the plan? Is it still the plan?

An Hon. Member: Beijing.

Ms Notley: I don't know why we're talking about Beijing. One member is talking Beijing and ring roads. I don't want to get into a discussion of cities with subways and metros and good public transportation and all of those places and then compare them to what every expert has said about our cities and how they are just models of planning nightmares.

The reality is that this stuff can change. When it does change and when the government essentially comes to a point where it's not planning to do the same thing that it has before, but the debate still continues, is there not some need at that point to check back in with the landowners, and is there not a mechanism through which that can be done? Perhaps this amendment is the mechanism through which that can be done. [interjection] I think it's very possible that it could be as well. It's all possibilities, you know, because I've laid out a whole bunch of different ways the language can be misinterpreted and misused, and I'm told to rely on the possibilities that are put forward by government. So I'm going to have to continue to deal in that.

In this case I think the amendment would require that government rethink and recommunicate its plans periodically rather than putting huge, huge tracts of land into an abyss that nobody can make use of for long, long periods of time while they engage in protracted debates about whether their plans made 20 years ago still make sense.

Anyway, that would be the end of my comments on this. I would certainly suggest that members should support the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. On amendment A4. I found this discussion and debate interesting. I would remind all hon. members of this House that our view is that ring roads are a necessary part of the planning of any major city. I would remind hon. members of Paris, France, with its périphérique, which is essentially an outer ring road. There's a lot of traffic on that. Paris, France, also has a very well-used, well-designed metro. Hopefully, at some point in the future Edmonton will have both a functioning ring road and also a subway system that is used by many of the citizens and that will be affordable.

Anyway, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the vote, please, on A4. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: On the bill the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act. I thank the hon. Minister of Infrastructure for his foresight in developing this piece of legislation. Bill 19 will provide an important tool for Alberta, allowing government to acquire land for major public projects for transportation or water management in a manner that is fair to landowners. Mr. Chairman, through the land-use framework consultation meetings as well as throughout the election campaign one of the common themes was the need for planned corridors. Actually, some of the opponents of this bill were actually calling for corridors, and they were constantly calling for a plan. I kept remembering this thing about a plan. Well, to have a plan you have to have legislation in place to create a plan. So here we are, Mr. Chair. We're at that point.

I would like to draw the Assembly's attention to a part that I find particularly important. Sections 2(2)(a) and (b) of this legislation address the types of project to which this legislation would be applicable. It states as follows:

- (2) For the purpose of this Act and the regulations, a project is a public project if the project is
 - (a) a project related to the transportation of people or goods, which may also include as part of that project a corridor of land for pipelines, pipes or other conduits, poles, towers, wires, cables, conductors or other devices, including any ancillary structures, or
 - (b) a project related to the conservation or management of water.

Mr. Chairman, I would first like to discuss (2)(a). This subsection clearly defines the extent of this legislation in relation to transportation corridors. Specifically, this would ensure that all future transportation corridors are organized and planned in an efficient manner and could incorporate utilities within the same area. Organized planning of transportation utilities is important for environmental, economic, and social reasons. For example, it is financially more costly to build infrastructure where it will have to be demolished or relocated.

It is interesting that some would be against this planning, but maybe they have not given it any thought. To have the carbon expenditure that they all talk about as well as the financial expenditure of constructing something major in an area designated as a corridor only to have that equivalent or even greater carbon expenditure and financial expenditure in the future to remove that structure is totally nonsensical. By ensuring that we plan ahead and consult with landowners on where future transportation corridors will be located, landowners will have input in the siting and location of corridors, knowing ahead of time where to build, which in the long run will save both landowners and taxpayers money. This is planning. Furthermore, by consulting and planning ahead, we can minimize any environmental degradation by choosing routes which avoid ecologically sensitive landscapes.

Mr. Chairman, those on the land know the landscape better than anyone else. It is difficult for me to understand why anyone, whether in this House or outside of this House, would be against consultation. It doesn't make any sense. This legislation is necessary to enact upon the organized planning of corridors.

The wording in section 2(2)(a) makes it clear that the focus of this legislation is for transportation projects. These large-scale transportation corridors could also include utility corridors which would parallel the transportation route. To be clear, it is not for large-scale transmission lines or nuclear power. This legislation recognizes the importance of establishing utility corridors within transportation corridors to ensure the efficient use of land, eliminating the one-offs half a mile apart or two miles apart. Stack as many compatible things in the same corridor as possible.

Organized corridor planning is a benefit to all Albertans. This is being made evident with our ring roads. With south segments of the Anthony Henday complete, people both rural and urban save time and gas when travelling around the city, which is also less carbon output. Upon completion of the Calgary ring road the same advantages will be afforded to the people travelling in the Calgary region. It is important for projects like these that Bill 19 is brought forward so that the large-scale assembly projects can be undertaken in a fair, open, and transparent manner.

Additionally, Mr. Chairman, section 2(2)(b) recognizes the importance of planned water conservation or management projects. Water management is extremely important to many regions of Alberta. It is through the development and maintenance of our dams and reservoirs that Alberta is able to meet its economic, social, and environmental objectives. We can look at rural Alberta to see the importance of dams and reservoirs in retaining water and managing water flow into specific areas of the province. Dams and reservoirs provide the necessary water supply for many communities across rural Alberta as well as irrigation of agricultural lands. However, these projects require significant planning and in some cases require the acquisition of land. Subsection (b) clarifies that this act would apply to such projects that are vital to so many communities across this province.

We can look at numerous water management operations in southern Alberta that enhance our quality of life and provide for a healthy and sustainable water supply. Some of these include Pine Coulee reservoir, Twin Valley dam, Oldman River reservoir and dam, Little Bow reservoir and dam, Paine Lake reservoir and dam, Waterton reservoir and dam, Chain Lakes dam, St. Mary reservoir, Chin reservoir, Travers reservoir. There are only two natural-water lakes south of Calgary; one of them is dry most of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that we need the ability to do these plans. There is no choice. In fact, you would think that more of the members across the floor would understand the necessity of this legislation, particularly based on the water needs of southern Alberta. Whether you're from Welling or any community in southern Alberta, reservoir water is essential for a stable and reliable water supply. Mr. Chairman, subsection (b) is essential for the organized planning of our future water management projects, that are crucial for the many sectors and communities across this province.

5:30

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, we would be doing landowners a huge disservice by not passing this legislation. This planning, this consultation, is only found offensive by those who find their part of the process in between the government and the landowner. They would rather not see the government sit down with the landowner, come to an agreement, and settle because they make their living out of the process, not out of the agreement, not out of the settlement. It's in between the two is where they are, commonly referred to as intervenors.

Mr. Anderson: Damn lawyers.

Mr. Berger: Not lawyers. Of course not. I'm staying right away from them.

Anyway, those are the ones who are offended, those who want to be in the middle.

Without organized and planned land assembly we could risk wasting valuable land in the construction of transportation corridors and water management conservation projects. We have to have this ability before something else is done on it.

Again, I thank the hon. Minister of Infrastructure for bringing forward Bill 19, and I urge all members of this Assembly to support it. It is good for landowners. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, you indicated to me that you wanted to join the debate.

Mr. VanderBurg: I have some comments with regard to the discussion that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod had. I know that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod did have the opportunity to attend some open houses regarding Bill 19 and some of the fearmongering that went on in the province. I'm not so sure that the comments from the opposition are what I want to take into my questioning to the member. It's the comments that I've had from good supporters of mine throughout the province and good supporters of this government in wanting to ask the Member for Livingstone-Macleod: where do you think this got off the rails? Was it a group politically motivated that had a chance to speak on this throughout the province, or do you think this was just lack of good communication?

The Chair: This is debate on the bill, not the question-and-answer comment.

Mr. VanderBurg: I've said my piece.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. I'd like to perhaps reply to the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. The concept of the bill and the fact that we have to amalgamate pieces of land for whatever – dams, as he has mentioned, and how important they are in southern Alberta. Of course, I don't believe that that is in question. As usual, often with this government it's not the what; it's the how. It's part of the how that we are asking to have amended. What would have probably motivated a lot of this conversation is the fact that we are – and I'm sure you are as well – receiving many, many letters and phone calls from concerned citizens about this particular bill.

One of the things that I would like to perhaps address is the love of the land, I think, that the member had spoken about. I've been very, very fortunate in my life to have always had a second home, so I really do understand the blessing that I've had by being able to have that land outside of the city. As a child I was fortunate enough to spend from when I was eight years old until I was probably 13 playing in the Netley Marsh, which is south of Lake Winnipeg. I watched that marsh change over the number of years that we've had our place there. It is still in our family. My brother has it. I can still go in the summer and take a canoe and go through that Netley Marsh, and trust me, I can see where all those changes have occurred.

I also have a place at Lee Lake, and over the 40 years that we've had it, I have physically watched an aspen forest move. As it died off at the end, it moved towards the lake. I know that we don't have the frogs. I know that we probably are down to four turtles. I've watched nature take its toll on the land.

I'm sure there are many people in the House that have been as blessed as I have been to be able to watch nature and to watch the land. Yes, of course, I do love the land, and I do realize that we have to be able to find a balance, and, yes, there is a need. I just wanted to say that I for one am very aware of the value of the land and the value of nature and how it can change and how it's supposed to change. That's just evolution, how it works.

The concept of this bill is fine. Again, the what is okay. It's the how that we're questioning.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to assure the Member for Livingstone-Macleod that I'm all for sitting down with landowners, but what Bill 19 does is sit on them, and it sits on their land for an interminable amount of time.

I appreciate the Member for Livingstone-Macleod bringing up water as an example. Water for life was the start of an interesting idea, but we still are so far away from having an accurate measurement of our aquifer potential. As the member from southern Alberta pointed out, the Oldman River is at its limit, and the government recognized that and will not allow any more draw from that particular river. As we move up the province from the south, where our greatest populations are, towards the north, preserving watershed becomes extremely critical. The Member for Livingstone-Macleod listed a number of dams and sort of man-made interventions.

I for one am looking forward to the land-use framework, and I'm hoping that the land-use framework is a circumstance that will be so well thought out, because it puts water at the centre of the discussion, that discussions like the controversy over Bill 19 will have a priority land use, and the first priority will be water conservation and preservation. Hopefully, that will dictate how other bits and pieces of land are used.

Now, one of the things that I would like to see under legislation that allows for a give-and-take, a discussion, a collaboration, a collegial sitting down, as the Member for Livingstone-Macleod suggested, is acquiring watersheds. This has been done in New York. It has been done in Canada around Vancouver. Other sort of forward-thinking cities, states, and provinces have realized that you've got to protect your most important resource, and that is the water. I would hope that where we already have Crown land in the form of parks or protected areas or other designated areas, we could work with surrounding ranchers or surrounding farms, work with people with woodlots and create that opportunity.

For example, the Nature Conservancy allows land to be protected. The growing need for protection in the southern area of the province and for native fescue, for example, which is rapidly being put in danger, is extremely important. It's the native fescue, with its deep roots, that is one of the few types of grasses that can survive in that southern area, that has not only the ability to sink its roots deep into the land and hold the land from erosion, but it also serves for domestic grazing purposes. It served the buffalo, and it continues to be a natural source.

So the idea of the land-use framework: connecting the province into six or seven priority watershed areas and then moving out from the importance of first protecting the water in all our considerations. In whatever use of the land, we have to ask the question: is this going to add to conservation, or is it going to detract from it? That will give us the type of argument that we need.

Now, in terms of the speed at which land is acquired, I want to give credit to the Harvie family and the fact that they didn't quite donate their land, but they provided the land to the province for park development at considerably below its commercial value for the creation of what I believe is going to be called the Glenbow Ranch park. Again, this is along the Bow River, and it's approximately 1,600 hectares, I believe it is, of land. I had an opportunity this past summer to visit the area. It concerns me that when we have such a wonderful gift, a wonderful opportunity, that the progress on creating this parkland and preserving it and protecting it is such a painfully slow process. This is why the former amendment was suggested in terms of: determine what you want to do, prioritize, have some sort of semblance of where it is that you want to go, and then, once you've made that decision, go for it, and if you can't get it going within a five-year period, then something is wrong with the plan or something is wrong with the initiative.

Examples of failed planning. I would suggest to look at how expensive it was and how long it took to expand Glenmore Trail over the Glenmore Reservoir. The individuals who lived along that trail were led to believe that only the first row of houses were going to be taken, and then it became the second row and the third row because the due diligence – and the province was involved in this interchange – was not there.

Another example of questionable planning is the expansion on 16th Avenue between University Heights and the Foothills hospital. There are still a number of unresolved issues there with regard to the lights, with regard to the way the road was built, whereby the wall is below the grade of the actual roadway, so it doesn't operate either as a visual barrier or as a sound barrier. So mistakes have been made. It's extremely important that planning out from the initial considerations be much more comprehensive and that there be much more consultation.

There are limited opportunities, as the Member for Livingstone-Macleod pointed out, in terms of occupation, in terms of water management in the southern part of our province. I remember the conflicts associated with some of the dams. I'm sure the Member for Livingstone-Macleod is aware of the conflict just about 20 miles down the road from Fort Macleod, where the Peigan reserve is, and the conflict with Milton Born with a Tooth over water rights and land rights and land access. Fortunately, no one was injured in that circumstance, but a rifle was fired, and there was literally a standoff in this particular circumstance because the consultation wasn't there. I'm not speaking in praise of Milton Born with a Tooth. I'm not suggesting that he was either a patriot or a terrorist. I'm saying that that's what can happen when there isn't a consultation process.

We've seen other circumstances in this province where trespassing occurred with very disastrous results. I bring out the example of what happened on the Weibo Ludwig family farm. That was a tragedy. It was a tragedy. I'm not saying that that was acceptable.

Mr. Snelgrove: It's just about the same as your speech on the tragedy scale.

Mr. Chase: Well, the hon. President of the Treasury Board may think that my speech is of a tragical nature.

Mr. Snelgrove: Irrelevant.

Mr. Chase: He's entitled to call my concerns irrelevant.

The point is that there are conflicts in this province. There are historical conflicts, and in the last one that I mentioned, there was a death associated with it. We don't want to drive people to the point where they consider illegal acts, but in the same manner, we don't want, as the hon. House leader sort of defended, to enjoin them before any kind of illegal action is even contemplated, never mind committed. [interjection] I appreciate the Member for Calgary-Nose Hill indicating that my legal understanding is improving. That's very reassuring.

When we get the land-use framework right, then debates that are taking place, for example, in the Longview area about the concern over the former Petro-Canada connection to the gas plant and the possibility of a pipeline and 80 creek crossings – then, hopefully, we'll have some ground and water rules that will simplify the task of prioritizing land use and also simplify land acquisition. I think that what Bill 19 is doing is literally putting the cart before the horse. Until we have the land-use framework as a guiding principle, any of these bits and pieces of legislation are not going to accomplish that end. So my encouragement would be to speed up the process and the understanding, the collaboration, the consultation with Albertans, and get the land-use framework right the first time so that we have the intent of water for life put into actual policy.

The confrontation, whether it's in a verbal form in this Legislature or fisticuffs at an ERCB hearing or spies infiltrating discussions, we've got to move on. If we're going to progress in this province, we've got to have ground rules that everybody understands, and Bill 19, unfortunately, does not set out those ground rules. There's too much left to regulations to be determined after the legislation in its multi-amended form goes forward.

Thank you for allowing the participation. I would like to invite the hon. Treasurer to add his comments. I believe he is a rural-based person, and he seems to have opinions on this process. He certainly has opinions on my opinions of this process. Unfortunately, at this time he is engaged in discussion with the minister of advanced education and does not appear to be desirous of participating, which is truly unfortunate because he is a man of rural roots and opportunities. It's unfortunate that there has been more critique as opposed to create, but I will sit down at this point and allow either the hon. member to participate or any other member who would like to contribute to this very important discussion on the future of Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The discussion and the debate on Bill 19 at committee certainly continues. We had an interesting dialogue, if I could use that word, on the debate when we were discussing the merits of amendment A4. When we look at the overall bill and the plans of this government – I've discussed this before – I think we need to have further discussion on this. The implications to the taxpayer, the implications to the property owners and, of course, to the government are significant.

Now, when we're looking at the plans of this government regarding infrastructure and property acquisitions, it is noted that the primary ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary will be completed within a few years. That's correct. It's also stated that negotiations to acquire the necessary land for outer freeways need to commence now.

Mr. Hancock: First of all, you plan where the road should go.

Mr. MacDonald: I can understand why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is sensitive about this government's record on planning. Whether it's on budget or whether it's on construction, there are issues around that ability to plan. I can understand why the hon. member is sensitive to that. He's welcome to participate in the debate at any time. I would note that, yet again, an example of the planning of this government, a fine example of it, would be the Mazankowski heart centre, whether it's surgeons and nurses that are needed to operate the facility or the fact that some of the engineering surrounding the completion of the project may not be adequate.

Mr. Chairman, we look at the outer ring roads and we look at Edmonton and Calgary, and we can only assume that somewhere in the Department of Infrastructure or somewhere in a mysterious planning department there is a group of individuals looking at a map of this entire province. They're looking at areas around Calgary, areas around Edmonton, and other urban centres like Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, St. Albert, Sherwood Park, Airdrie, and Lloydminster. These communities or cities will also require primary ring roads in the foreseeable future. Planning discussions, it must be noted, will be accelerated for the long-term plans to be established and parcels of land to be acquired to implement these plans. So this group has a map of these areas. I would think that it's already been determined which properties are going to be purchased.

Mr. Ouellette: Not a chance.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. Minister of Transportation says, "Not a chance," but I'm of the opinion that the decision has already been made on which areas are for . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but it's five minutes to 6, so the committee will immediately rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on Bill 19. I wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m. to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibilities laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly a group of grade 6 students from Camilla school in Rivière Qui Barre in my riding. This year their school gym became non-usable, and the community has come together along with the parents and facilities in the community. I want to commend both the teachers and parents and the students for making a difficult situation workable while we repair the gym. They're here touring the Legislature today and have had a great morning touring around the magic spot and whatnot. I'd like to introduce to you the teachers, Ms Amanda Langford, Mr. Mike Panstian, Mrs. Sandra Hollett, Mrs. Chancy Moores, and bus driver Mr. David Soetaert. They are seated in our public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce a group of enthusiastic, hard-working students from Kneehill Christian school, which is located just outside the village of Linden. They're here today to learn how democracy works, and I'm sure they won't be disappointed. They are accompanied today by teachers Miss Terri Miller and Miss Vicki Reimer as well as by parents and helpers Mr. DaVon Baerg, Mrs. Darla Baerg, Mr. Lorne Reimer, Mrs. Staphene Reimer, Mr. Dale Wiebe, and Mrs. Charmaine Wiebe. They're in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the gracious welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to welcome a group of wonderful students from Winfield school in my riding of Drayton Valley-Calmar. These 25 bright grade 6 students along with their teacher, Mr. Thomas Wilkinson, and parent helpers Mrs. Renee Harris and Mrs. Jeannette Chappell will be touring our Legislature, and I'll have the pleasure to be meeting with them later on today. They will be arriving during question period; however, I still invite you to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a group of students here today visiting us from Madonna Catholic school in Sherwood Park. I'm introducing this group on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Sherwood Park. They're accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Ray Rudanec, and parent helper Mrs. Tracy McCloy. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they all rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of 31 grade 6 students from Bassano elementary school. These young people travelled four hours on a school bus yesterday to be in Edmonton, are here this afternoon in the Legislature, and will be travelling back later this afternoon. They are accompanied today by their teachers, Miss Jeneen Armstrong and Mrs. Della Armstrong, and parent chaperones Mrs. Jodi Bjornson, Mr. Bill Kelly, Mr. Marty Holmes, Mrs. Tanya Moss, Mrs. Carrie Lassiter, and Mr. Darrell McCoomb. They are seated up in the public gallery, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of nine teachers from the Rotary group study exchange team from Belize. Rotary group study exchange teams provide young professionals and businesspersons an opportunity to experience their business or profession during a three- to four-week visit to another country. For the past two years this Rotary district in co-operation with Belize Rotary clubs and the Belize Ministry of Education has been sending a team of 24 teachers to Belize each summer to conduct workshops for teachers in that area in the areas of math, science, and language arts. Funding has been provided by the Rotary Foundation, Rotary district 5370 Rotary clubs, and a matching grant from the government of Alberta.

Today we have with us a group from Rotary district 5370's Belize literacy program. The purpose of the program is to assist Belize in raising its primary school completion rate, reduce the dropout rate, and improve teaching excellence. The group study exchange team is lead by two Rotarians from Belize, Dr. Eve Aird and Javier Moreno, and includes seven other team members of teachers, school administrators, and Ministry of Education officials: Erwin Arnold, Nelson Longsworth, Jerris Valentine Jr., Franzine Flores, Althea Spain, Glenford Parham, and Anthony Morris. They're joined by St. Albert teacher Bernie Hryciw and local Rotarian Marilyn Mucha. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd like to ask all of our guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly four very special people in the members' gallery today. Alyse Reid and Lynne Amyotte are University of Alberta students who have volunteered with the give a kid a lunch program. They are joined by Natalie Chesser and Linda Armstrong of the Unity Centre. I will give a statement describing more about their wonderful work today. I would ask these four guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted to introduce an individual who works very hard for the people in the city of Edmonton. We have with us, joining us in the public gallery, Jon Hall. Jon is the manager of marketing and communications for the Edmonton Real Estate Board. We were hoping to have him joined today by Bill Fowler, who is the director of industry and government relations for the Alberta Real Estate Association, but he, unfortunately, was turned back on the highway from Calgary. We do have Jon with us in the gallery, and I would ask him to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a prominent Albertan. Her family came from Barry, south Wales, to Irma, Alberta, in 1927, where they farmed. Her mother moved to Edmonton and became a teacher. Unfortunately, her father died when she was 10. This Albertan married and had four children, went to Grant MacEwan College and the University of Alberta, worked in information management, and was one of Alberta Ventures magazine's 50 most influential people. She wrote a story about an Albertan family. It's called No Corner Boys Here. The book won an Independent Publisher's book award, best nonfiction, Canada west category. The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright purchased a copy for every library in his constituency, and in Edmonton-Meadowlark we purchased a copy for every school in our constituency. This is a history of our province and the people in this wonderful province. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to ask Jean Crozier to rise so that she may be welcomed by my friends in this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to make a second introduction today to you and through you to all members of the House: two Albertans who are very involved in working with students with learning disabilities, improving the learning experiences and outcomes of these students, and furthering research in the realm of learning disabilities. They're here today as we table a white paper from the world summit on learning disabilities which was held in Alberta. With us today is Kathryn Burke, executive director of the Learning Disabilities Association of Alberta, the author of the white paper on behalf of the world summit organizing committee, an active volunteer working with children at risk, and the proud parent of a gifted teenager affected by learning disabilities. Kathryn is well published through her volunteer and professional activities and has presented all over Canada. With her is Michele Pentyluk. Michele is a registered psychologist practising in Edmonton who specializes in the area of learning disabilities. She is the president of the Learning Disabilities Association of Alberta and is also a popular speaker and author and has also presented all over Canada. I'd ask my two guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Give a Kid a Lunch Program

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier I introduced to the House four special people visiting the Legislature today. The Unity Centre does wonderful work and is located in my riding of Edmonton-Manning. Alyse Reid and Lynne Amyotte, two University of Alberta students, as a part of their degree have been volunteering with this great organization. Through their volunteering these students noticed how many clients of the Unity Centre were children and that most of them were going to school hungry. That's why Alyse and Lynne developed the give a kid a lunch program. This project, which ran from April 7 to 14, was very successful: $811 was raised in food donations and $695 in cash and gift certificates. This money will go a long way towards helping our city's most needy people.

I would like to congratulate these girls on their hard work and for helping those who are less fortunate than themselves. Our government will continue to support groups just like the Unity Centre through the funding available from Culture and Community Spirit. This will mean that organizations such as the Unity Centre can focus on helping Albertans and strengthening the community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Gordon Hansen

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the contributions of one of my constituents, Gordon Hansen, a long-time resident of Marlborough Park, who is entering his retirement. The Marlborough Park community was registered in 1973. Gordon saw a vision of a new hall and facility to replace the small hall in Marlborough Park, and he and another constituent, Doug Caswell, were instrumental in the planning and design of the new facility. The grand, multifunctional centre opened on May 23, 1987. Gordon spent most of his life serving on the board of directors and as a volunteer. Gordon's volunteer spirit also runs throughout his family. His son and daughter have also been involved with the organization.

The centre began to offer sports for youth and a preschool for the little ones. Mr. Speaker, Gordon was a huge part of the community by fundraising, bartending, helping out at bingos, and initiating Marlborough Park Community Association's participation at casinos for fundraising. Gordon was also the co-ordinator from 1998 until the present date. He has a reputation for knowing every single detail about the building that the association currently owns, including loose tiles and the number of nails. He oversaw the smooth running of all events held such as jelly bean dances, bridge tournaments, wedding parties, as well as dealing with the staff, purchasing, and reporting to the board of directors.

Gordon's hard work has earned him his retirement. The community will surely miss Gordon's involvement and his time spent within the walls of the Marlborough Park Community Centre. My best wishes go out to Gordon and his family. His dedication has made a profound impact on the residents of Marlborough Park.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Achievement Bonuses

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to talk about the achievement bonuses that have been provided by the government of Alberta for the last 10 years to senior managers of this province. The total for these bonuses exceeds $250 million. In fact, that's what we can glean from the annual reports.

That's the information that the government has quietly made available to the taxpayers, who have footed this big bill.

Now, when we look at the reaction of the senior government ministers, including the President of the Treasury Board, that surprises me because in 2006 Meyers Norris Penny recommended that bonuses of this nature compromise the independence and the impartiality of senior officials, including the officers of the Legislative Assembly.

The officers of the Legislative Assembly did the right thing, Mr. Speaker. They do not take achievement bonuses. But what did this government do so that they could control and manage the top levels of the civil service? They've continued with this practice while at the same time asking others to do with less. The others, I would remind the hon. President of the Treasury Board, include seniors; they include people with very, very little, if any, income at all. Meanwhile, this bonus structure, that has reached a quarter of a billion dollars, goes on without any proper accountability to the taxpayers. The government should be ashamed of themselves.

Thank you.

St. George's Day

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of St. George's Day. Historians tell us that St. George was an officer in the Roman army who died a martyr on April 23, 303 AD, for protesting the persecution of Christians. Over the centuries his fame grew, and by the sixth century the legend of St. George slaying a dragon was recorded, possibly as an allegory of his conflict with the Roman emperor, leading to his death.

In the 11th century he was adopted as the patron saint of soldiers, and in 1415 St. George was officially recognized as the patron saint of England. St. George was adopted as the patron saint of Scouting and of many other countries, including Georgia, Malta, Russia, Lithuania, Greece, and Portugal.

Seventeen centuries after his death the memory of St. George remains associated with the virtues of duty, defence of the poor and helpless, and bravery and heroism. The poet Edmund Spenser conveyed St. George's persona in his epic poem the Faerie Queene:

But on his breast a bloody Cross he bore
The dear remembrance of his dying Lord,
For whose sweet sake that glorious badge we wore
And dead (as living) ever he adored.

St. George's standard is the red perpendicular martyr's cross on a white background, which makes up part of the Union flag of the United Kingdom and of the flags of four provinces hanging in this Assembly. St. George has special significance for our province as his standard figures prominently in both our Alberta provincial flag and our provincial crest.

Today I'd like to recognize St. George's Day on behalf of our friends in England, those of English descent, and others around the world who embrace St. George and his heroic spirit and to wish everyone a happy St. George's Day.

Genome Alberta

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, Saturday, April 25 marks the 56th anniversary of James Watson and Francis Crick announcing the discovery of the double helix as the basis for the structure of DNA. In plants DNA controls the genetics and genetic selection which allows plants to thrive in different climates. Livestock farmers track the genetics of their herds to raise quality Alberta beef. In humans DNA is largely what makes us who we are. It determines the colour of our eyes and our hair. Unfortunately, it can also lead to a host of diseases.

DNA- and genome-based technologies and knowledge can provide the world with tools for better diagnostics, open the door to more informed choices in therapeutics, and offer lifestyle choices which promote health and lower the incidence of disease. In our province Genome Alberta is helping to put Alberta on the North American genetics map and ensuring that Albertans may be among the first to benefit from new discoveries. Established in 2006 through funding from the Alberta government and Genome Canada, this group is making good headway in the study of how genes interact with each other and the environment.

Genome Alberta is working with research organizations across Canada in tackling mountain pine beetle problems by looking at the complex interaction between the tree, the beetle, and the deadly blue stain fungus which ultimately is killing sections of our province's forest. Field crews are set to sequence the previously unknown genome of the fungus.

Genome Alberta is now launching a couple of new projects. In one project scientists will sequence the active genes of many important plant species, and in the second project they will look deep beneath Alberta's surface into hydrocarbon deposits, where naturally occurring microbes may be able to play a role in sustainable ways of extracting oil and in managing tailings ponds.

In the 56 years since the double helix was discovered, the world has come a long way in understanding and finding the genetic basis for many human diseases and conditions. With the work that Genome Alberta is doing, Alberta will soon be at the forefront of international metagenomics research and innovation.

April 25 is an important day in the world of science, Mr. Speaker. I encourage all members to recognize the achievements of Alberta's genetic science community.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Seniors' Pharmaceutical Plan

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in an unprecedented closed-door press conference this minister of health released his revised plans for seniors' drug coverage. Obviously, the government wants to control the message, and for this media release little has actually changed. To the minister. Under the old proposed plan, 60 per cent of seniors would pay nothing or less than before. Under the new plan 60 per cent of seniors will pay nothing or less than before. What, Mr. Minister, has changed?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the Leader of the Opposition endorses our new plan because he's absolutely right that under the plan 60 per cent of seniors today will pay less than they're currently paying for drug costs. We do want to ensure, however, that we have a plan for those who do have to pay, that there's some predictability around it, and that's what today's plan did.

Dr. Swann: Well, under the new plan many single seniors with an income between $12,000 and $24,000 a year will actually pay more. How can the minister say this is an improvement? Was he listening to seniors?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are two situations here that need to be clarified. Under the plan that we announced in December, we used total income. We have changed that by listening to seniors. The original plan was total income; the plan we rolled out today is taxable income, so we in fact did listen to seniors. But the key thing is: compare what we announced today to what seniors are paying today, and 60 per cent of seniors July 1, 2010, will pay less for drugs than they do today.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, what many seniors are asking us today is: why is this minister taxing seniors to make up for the mismanagement of this government?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall anybody talking about taxes. What we did was we introduced an optional plan – let's be clear; this is an optional plan – for seniors to give them some predictability with their costs. Yes, that is tied to income so that some close to 70 or 80 per cent of Alberta's seniors will be in some way assisted by government. Overall when this plan goes into effect, the government will continue to pick up 80 per cent of the cost of drugs for seniors.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that families of injured and killed farm workers "have access to the courts" just like any other Albertans. The minister knows, however, that there is no prosecution for occupational health and safety as there is for all other occupations in this province. To the minister: does the minister support a policy where the only way employers of paid farm workers can be charged with unsafe workplaces is if the families take this issue to court?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that I am always very sympathetic to any types of deaths or injuries no matter where they happen in the province of Alberta. I've also indicated to this House that farmers have other options that are available to them, and farm employees have options that are available to them. I also indicated that we did hire a consultant to talk to the farm industry out there to see what else could be done.

Dr. Swann: The minister again tried to dodge this issue by speaking about the unique circumstances of family farms. The minister surely acknowledges that there is a difference between a family farm and a corporate farm and that paid farm workers deserve the same rights and protections as any other employees in the province. What's your response, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, those are the areas that we're looking at at present. We're going to keep on working with the agricultural industry. We're going to see where we might be able to clarify some of those definitions and see if there is anything in addition that needs to be done.

Dr. Swann: Well, the minister and this government have been consulting on changes for many, many years. They've simply not only failed in their duties to these families, but they have failed Albertans and shamed us nationally. How many more years, Mr. Minister, will it take for you to do the right thing?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that we had hired a consultant to look at this. That particular person is to report to both my ministry and to the minister of agriculture over this particular summer. We will look closely at the options that will be before us and no doubt examine various ways to make distinctions between family farms as we know them and maybe corporate entities for possible regulatory and legislative purposes.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Condominium Property Management

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Condominium Property Act is heavily slanted toward the start-up of newer conversion condos but contains little for the ongoing problems long after the developer has gone. My constituents, some of whom are in the gallery today, are being left in untenable positions by large management companies who take fees from the condo boards but do not do the work, leaving the boards and the owners on the hook. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why is there no assistance available under the condo act to these condo boards who cannot get the work, including producing financial reports, from the management companies that they contract with?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is indeed a very serious situation, and I appreciate this question. With respect to some of the issues that have been raised through Service Alberta, under the Residential Tenancies Act there are certainly a number of things that we can do to support consumers and help them when they are faced by this situation, whether it's management fees or the work not being done. That's what has been made clear to me in some of the correspondence that I've handled.

Ms Blakeman: That was a nonanswer.

Back to the same minister. Given that the government offers others, like a renter, rights and protections or shareholder-investors rights and protections, why is there no section in the legislation which steps in to protect people who own condos when they are taken advantage of by property management companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, under the Condominium Property Act we are constantly looking and reviewing just to make sure the legislation is up to date and pertinent to the situations and the challenges that Albertans are facing right now with respect to condos not being attended to and some of the things that we need to look at. If there's a particular situation that I need to be aware of, I'd be more than happy to look into it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. What is happening here, Mr. Speaker, is that the little guy, the condo owner, and their board are expected to duke it out in court with large national property management companies with unlimited resources. How is that fair? Why can't the government protect these individual owners and their boards as part of the Condominium Property Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I will reiterate that with respect to changes or things that we need to look at under that act, we have to make sure that these changes are enforceable and effective. If indeed there are consumers that have situations, I need to be aware of those. I am aware of some situations that are going on, and we are currently looking at the legislation as we speak.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Strathcona.

Government House News Conference

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Today is a black day for democracy in Alberta. For the first time that I can recall, opposition MLAs have been physically prevented from attending an important government announcement. This was done on the order of this government to prevent the opposition from commenting on yet another attack on Alberta seniors and public health care. My question is to the health minister: why did this government order security personnel to physically prevent opposition MLAs from hearing and responding to a major government policy announcement?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I know that this particular member craves media attention, but if he'd take a look at the release that went out yesterday, it said: for news media. There are restricted areas there, and I'm afraid that, you know, it wasn't a town hall meeting. We didn't invite the president of the chamber of commerce or the mayor of Edmonton, and frankly we didn't invite the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it was a public building.

This is the most secretive government in Canada. Today's action at Government House shows that it is also the least democratic. Nothing could underline more clearly this government's contempt for the role of the opposition. To the same minister: why would the government take the unprecedented step of blocking opposition access unless it's afraid of what we have to say about yet another attack on public health care and Alberta seniors?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, that is just such a bunch of bunk. This particular government, this particular Legislature provides more funding to that party, which is not an officially recognized party. We do things that are unprecedented in this House. For that member to stand there and say that kind of stuff is baloney.

Dr. Taft: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government in the last election promised a more open and transparent government, but it has delivered the opposite. This is the most secretive and undemocratic government in Canada. To the same minister: why won't you admit that this Tory government misled voters with its promise of openness and transparency and that you tricked them on your plans to privatize health care as well?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, from what I'm hearing from my constituents, I haven't heard one of them say that I misled them at the door. When I was at the doors during the election last year, what Albertans told me was: we have an outstanding health care system; you've got to get the costs under control; you've got to make it more accessible. And that's exactly what we're doing. I'm not sure who he was talking to, but that's who I was talking to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today government announced changes to the new drug plan for seniors. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is government reintroducing premiums for seniors just a few months after eliminating health care premiums for all other Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, we need to make the distinction. The premiums that had been in effect – in fact, the removal of those premiums have given Albertans something like a billion-dollar tax break – were actually premiums that covered those procedures and those services that are under the Canada Health Act. In essence, this particular program is covering a service or drugs that do not fall under the Canada Health Act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question also for the Minister of Health and Wellness: why were the plan's income thresholds lowered rather than increased?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think what the member is asking is relative to what we announced last December because there are no income thresholds today. I think the unfair part of the program that exists today is that every senior, regardless of income, has to pay 30 per cent of their prescription costs. What we are finding is that many low-income seniors are not able to access the drugs that they need, so what we have done is we have simplified the income threshold. In fact, there is no income threshold. In essence, there is a premium. Government is assisting almost 80 per cent of Alberta seniors with those premiums.

Mr. Quest: Mr. Speaker, my final question is for the same minister. Why is government asking seniors to contribute to their prescription drug costs but not asking all other Albertans to also contribute?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, that's something that we've heard during this discussion that we had with seniors. I can only repeat that under this particular program the Alberta government assists to the tune of 80 per cent of drug costs for seniors. We do not do that for any other Albertan. If you're an Albertan and you're not a senior, you buy a plan, and you pay the premium. So to say that somehow we're putting a premium on seniors or making them pay for something that other Albertans don't pay for is incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Provincial Fiscal Strategy

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it became pretty clear at last night's budget estimates on the Ministry of Finance and Enterprise that the only strategy this government has for savings is to hope that the economy recovers next year sufficiently that by 2012 there might be some surplus dollars kicking around to start topping up the sustainability fund. It's pretty clear that this government has not developed a long-term fiscal vision, and I do not understand why there's a continued reluctance to do so. To the President of the Treasury Board: how much longer do Albertans have to wait before this government actually puts forward a comprehensive fiscal strategy that includes a long-term vision for savings, controlled spending, and a reduction in reliance on nonrenewable resource revenue to fund core government programs?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, there are those now today that can tell you exactly what was going to happen. They weren't telling us a year ago, but now they're brilliant in their ability to say what happened.

This government has charted a very clear and direct course to the future with a balance in savings in our heritage savings trust fund and the other endowments. We were prudent in putting into our savings account close to $17 billion in the unwelcome eventuality that times like this might happen. We have built an infrastructure that is second to none to enable the people of Alberta and industry to thrive. That's pretty good planning.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, why can't this government, why can't this minister wrap his head around the notion that you need to invest for the long term as well as saving short term to have cash on hand for emergencies, both simultaneously, at the same time, like walking and chewing gum?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, I guess he maybe has practised that at home. Good.

Mr. Speaker, it's clear. They have the opportunity to come out and say: "We wouldn't have built the hospital in Calgary; we'd have put that money in the bank. We wouldn't have opened the new wings in the hospitals or universities throughout this province; we'd have put that money in the bank so that we've got a savings account. You can drive over all the potholes you want in Alberta. Not us Liberals; we've got money in the bank."

It's not magic. There is a dollar. It's full of a hundred cents as opposed to no sense somewhere. You can't have it both ways. You can't spend your way out of debt and save your way into prosperity.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the only thing this government has practised, the only thing this minister has been consistent at is trying to insult the opposition.

He has no plan. He's never had a plan. He never will have a plan. Why is this government so reluctant to implement a long-term savings strategy? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that was the most intelligent question I've heard from him in this entire session. I want to thank him for asking how my family is. They're wonderful. They belong in a province that is prudent, that is forward-thinking, that is as transparent and open with our forecasts and our budgets as anywhere in Alberta.

Unfortunately, they have so little to hang their future opportunity on that they have to continually tell themselves how bad things are, and if they do it enough, they start to believe it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Carbon Emissions Monitoring

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of great interest and concern to my constituents and myself is the air we breathe, the water we drink, and the land we live on. The world is now hyped up about the danger of global warming and the debate on its causes. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Environment. The minister has always publicly stated that Alberta leads other jurisdictions in having taken concrete action in reducing harmful gas emissions while others are still talking about it. Can the minister tell us how the greenhouse gas emissions and their reduction are measured?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is absolutely right. There has been a great deal of discussion over the last couple of days on this whole issue of greenhouse gas and CO₂ emissions and measurement. What's so important to note is that we know that there are reductions because we have been measuring since 2003. It's not that we just started measuring last year and then invented somehow what our baseline is. We only established a baseline because we've been measuring since 2003. Without having that base, then I think that the criticism that somehow or other we're dreaming up a reduction could be valid, but the fact is that we have had measurement in place since 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: since the law of climate change and emissions management was approved through this Chamber, what has this unique Alberta law achieved?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that it has achieved is the development of a great deal of Alberta expertise on this whole issue of measurement. I've said in this House before that you can't put CO₂ on a scale and read the total and say: well, that's how much CO₂ was emitted. It's all based on chemical formulas. It's very complex. What we have developed in Alberta is a regime, that is third-party verifiable, that actually can determine with a great deal of accuracy the amount of CO₂ that is emitted from any particular facility.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: looking into the future, what kind of improvements can my constituents expect in the quality of the air we breathe, the water we drink, and the land we live on?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, directly as a result of legislation surrounding climate change and CO₂ management, we can expect that Alberta will be able to join the rest of the world in dramatically reducing the amount of CO₂ emissions. We're going to do that because we started small but learned a whole lot. We'll be able to apply what we learned on a much larger and grander scale, and CCS, which we've discussed in this House, is just one of the many tools. In the longer term protecting the air from greenhouse gas emissions will protect the results of climate change, the inherent water shortages, and others that the member refers to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Achievement Bonuses

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 10 years the government paid out over a quarter of a billion dollars in bonuses to hand-picked senior managers. In 2006 Meyers Norris Penny in an independent review of the salaries of officers of this Legislative Assembly determined that bonus measures would seriously compromise the independence and autonomy of those officers. My first question is to the President of the Treasury Board. Does this recommendation not also apply to deputy ministers and other senior government officials, whom you have so generously rewarded so that you can control them?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, the public service in Alberta has been asked to do over the years a very difficult but an incredible job of bringing good, sound public policy to implementation. I find it somewhat surprising that continually in here, day after day, the senior management, who are nonpolitical, have to listen to how poorly they are working or that other payment mechanisms that have been found to be truly successful in the corporate world, such as bonuses for performance being implemented in a corporate structure to try and save money, to try and build efficiencies, has somehow now become a bad word for them. I think they, actually, owe an apology to the senior management team in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why did the government continue to compromise the independence and the impartiality of senior government managers by ignoring the 2006 recommendations from Meyers Norris Penny to cut out the bonus program? You know full well that the base salaries of senior civil servants here are very generous, and they can certainly live on them.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we hardly set a salary here and determine whether you can live on it or not. We have to compete, as every other entity in Alberta has done in the past few years, with a rapidly expanding and very successful private sector. The size of the Alberta government can be debated, but it's around a $40 billion corporation where all Albertans are shareholders. Most shareholders demand of their corporation that you get the best people possible to implement your policies as a government. We have done that through different strategies. One of them is appropriate bonuses for senior management in our government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that over five years five individual positions on the Alberta Teachers Retirement Fund board received $1.1 million in bonuses, all of which were individually reported, separately reported, in the Department of Education's annual reports – these bonuses, and I emphasize this, were separate from other benefits – why did the government hide the quarter of a billion dollars in bonuses that have been paid out in the last 10 years by hiding it in the financial fine print? If it's good enough for one annual report, why is it not good enough for all the rest?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, I know the opposition thinks that I know everything that goes on this government, but we don't include all of the pension boards, all of the agencies, everything that has an indirect or direct responsibility to the government. I don't know of the situation that the hon. member has talked about specifically. I do know that our achievement bonuses are covered very clearly on a directive that is published on the Alberta government website. It's not a secret. It's an effective tool we use to attract and retain good talent.

Thank you.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, seniors have built this province, and we are indebted to them for their tremendous contributions. As part of the pharmaceutical strategy seniors were asked to make further contributions, leaving some seniors frustrated. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness: why are you asking seniors to pay more for their drug coverage than they do today?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the member is absolutely correct that the program that we announced in December had a fair level of frustration with seniors. I think it needs to be pointed out, however, that a senior's drug cost today at 30 per cent of the prescription is presenting some real difficulties for low-income seniors, so we set out to fix that. Maybe we didn't get everything right in our announcement in December, so we aren't afraid to say: if it's not all right, we're going to make it right. I'll leave it at that for the next question.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my second question is also for the Minister of Health and Wellness. The minister has frequently mentioned that helping those seniors in need is a priority. Is changing the seniors' drug plan contrary to that philosophy?

Mr. Liepert: No because what I was just talking about, Mr. Speaker, is exactly that, helping those in need.

But I need to make another point. This particular plan we announced today is not about the senior for today; it's about the senior of tomorrow. As we move forward, the number of seniors is growing, but along with that the income of seniors is growing. This business about one size fits all has to change in health care. This is one of the things that we're saying: if you can afford to pay and enrol in a plan, that's the way of the future.

Mr. Dallas: Mr. Speaker, my final question is for the same minister. Why are you basing this plan on income, especially with all the controversy over that aspect of the plan?

Mr. Liepert: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the only part that's based on income is in reverse. It's: at what level of income does government no longer assist you in ensuring that you can pay into what is a very good plan? I would like to repeat again that under this particular plan not only does government pay 80 per cent of seniors' drug costs, but some 80 per cent of seniors in one way or another will be assisted by this plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Oversight of Police Conduct

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has stated that the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team and the Law Enforcement Review Board provide adequate civilian oversight of police conduct. However, the head of the Edmonton Police Association believes that independent civil oversight is necessary to strengthen public confidence and adequately protect police officers. Last year there were 21 disciplinary hearings involving members of the Edmonton police. There was only one in Calgary. What is the Solicitor General doing to rectify this imbalance?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'm not sure there is an imbalance, and I'm not sure how each agency reports their internal disciplinary action. I'm completely satisfied that both chiefs of police, whether it be in Edmonton or Calgary, are doing a great job in regards to internal disciplinary actions within their agencies.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, during last year's estimates the minister indicated that the department was developing a new model for police complaints and disciplinary processes to encourage police professionalism and enhance public confidence. How about including independent oversight for the Edmonton Police Service in this new model?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, we already have a great model for public oversight in regard to policing agencies across this province. First of all, we have police commissions and police committees across the province who are appointed by elected representatives. They, in turn, appoint a chief of police who is responsible to them, so that is where the public oversight comes in.

Mr. Hehr: Well, we know we already have them, but people are calling for better ways. For instance, the Edmonton Police Association president, Sergeant Tony Simioni, wants independent oversight for simple reasons, to provide better service and to increase public confidence in the force. Will the minister tell me why he is so opposed to an independent oversight for Alberta policing agencies?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, as I've already indicated, we already have a public oversight process in this province that works very well. In regard to the concerns of a union representative for Edmonton Police Service I'm not going to get into management-union issues. The chief of police is assigned his duties, and we'll leave it at that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in the health minister's closed-door announcement this government broke yet another election promise. They said that they were going to eliminate health care premiums, but they just reintroduced them except this time it's just for seniors. If a senior makes more than $24,000 a year, she or he will be forced to pay under this plan between $400 and $800 a year in premiums. To the minister: why is this minister so committed to making seniors pay for this government's mismanagement?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me deal at the outset with this secret meeting. Any time you talk to the media, it's hardly a secret, and that's exactly what we did. So I'm not so sure what the two are all, you know, getting their hair on fire about. If they really want all the information, we'll be happy to send it over to them.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, any time you use public resources to keep the opposition out, it's a secret.

Now, a senior who takes in $2,000 a month before taxes has to pay at least $31 a month in premiums plus up to $15 for each prescription. The minister hasn't fixed their problem; he's just rebranded it. Because they're still going to have to choose between paying these out-of-pocket expenses and paying their rent, more seniors are going to go without, get sick, and end up in the hospital. At a time when we have nothing but a shortage of beds in hospitals, why is this minister committed to going after the very thing that helps keep seniors healthy and at home?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, about once every four years we ask Albertans: do you want elected officials who want to tax people? We ask them: do you want to give everything to people for free and increase taxes, or do you want to have people accept some personal responsibility? Every four years Albertans say no to them and yes to us.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, one year ago seniors were not asked by this government about this plan, so they got no say on it at all.

Now, the minister's announcement on insisting on including income testing. He's pushing some seniors to seek private health insurance, and he's keeping others from getting the drugs that they need. Why can't the minister understand that income testing undermines the universal public health care that Albertans demand and need and that seniors themselves worked so hard to build?

Mr. Liepert: First of all, Mr. Speaker, nowhere does it say that drug coverage has to be universal and paid for by the taxpayer. What we are doing is ensuring that those seniors who have the inability to pay, lower income, are in fact getting universal free drug coverage, which is an improvement upon today. I can only repeat that government continues to pick up 80 per cent of the cost for seniors' drugs, and I would suggest that's probably a program most seniors are quite appreciative of.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Conquest Vacations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The holiday is over for Conquest Vacations, and thousands of people are out of luck with their travel plans. Some are even stranded in other countries. Many questions are being asked with respect to what protections are in place for Albertans in situations such as this. My first question is for the Minister of Service Alberta. What strategies are organized within your ministry to assist Albertans who have been impacted in this particular instance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, this is a very unusual situation, and Service Alberta is encouraging individuals to contact our consumer contact centre so we can speak with them and give them some advice and hear about their experiences. Of course, depending on how they purchased their vacation, there are provisions under Alberta law to help travellers get their money back either from the company or from their credit card company. People can call us, and we'll review their situation and determine how we can best help them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. Other provinces such as Ontario have a travel insurance fund. Why is that not the case here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Travel insurance funds only cover vacations booked through travel agencies, and we well know that many individuals book their trips online. That certainly has evolved over the years, and it's only growing. Alberta does have a regulation called the Internet sales contract regulation, which does include cancellation rights for consumers doing business with a company on the Internet. Under this regulation if the consumer has booked their vacation with Conquest and they didn't get what they paid for, there are provisions for getting their money back.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following that, my final question to the same minister: how is it, then, that someone from this province who has booked their vacation online with Conquest Vacations actually gets their money back?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first step is that these individuals should contact Conquest Vacations first to request their money. If they're not reimbursed within 15 days, under our regulations a credit card company is required to reimburse them. For those who already started their travel plans and are being billed by their hotel, it is more complicated. We encourage them to come home, and then we can look at their situation. For someone else caught in this situation, there are very many variables. This is a new situation, and, again, please call our consumer contact line at 1.877.427.4088.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

All-terrain Vehicles in Parks and Protected Areas

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation, her staff, and my Community Service Committee colleagues for a brief but collaborative budget discussion Tuesday night.

If the first responsibility of this ministry is to protect, preserve, maintain, and hopefully expand our provincial parks and protected areas, which currently account for barely 4 per cent of Alberta's designated land use, then surely the second task is to celebrate and promote our multifaceted natural wonders to the world. Can the minister explain how the portrayal of two blond children romping on a British beach benefits Alberta tourism?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Ady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member makes the point that there are some 500 parks in this province, all of them beautiful – love them all – but when it comes to the promotion of this province, I can tell him that we do have a digital library in Alberta, some 25,000 images of all of Alberta. We encourage people to use those when they promote this province at all times, and we will continue to do that. I would say that we've done a good job with our digital library.

Mr. Chase: I don't understand, then, why British photos got into that mix. Let's celebrate Alberta.

Given the damage done in Ghost-Waiparous, Indian Graves, and most recently around McLean Creek, can the minister commit to restricting access to parks and protected areas to off-road vehicles other than those parks and trails designated for that specific use?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I've shared with this hon. member many times that we are looking at the trail situation in this province right now, not just for ATVs but for horses and hikers and bicyclists. That's why we had the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater meeting with both sustainable resources and the parks systems to take a look at this issue to see where we can safely and appropriately use these trails in all manners, and we'll get back to him as soon as we have that policy ready.

Mr. Chase: I look forward to that policy and the land-use framework policy especially.

In keeping with our Alberta Liberal caucus commitment to give Albertans a voice, Kelly from Leduc wrote in and would like to know, and I quote: why is this government spending money on expanding trails for ATVs in wilderness areas when the government's own survey shows that Albertans, at least those surveyed, do not want this?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had, actually, lots of surveys done in this province. We continue to consult a wide range of Albertans, and the land-use framework as well as the new parks plan is going to do further consultations in a region. So to say from one report that you should or shouldn't have: I don't know that that's as balanced as we want to be. We're listening to all stakeholders, and when we put together these plans, you'll see a multistakeholder vision with these regions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Taser Testing

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security released the results of tests conducted on tasers being used by police agencies in this province. Of the more than 400 tasers tested, about 12 per cent did not meet manufacturer specifications. My questions are all for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. While the results indicate that most of these tasers are operating as they should, can the minister explain to the Assembly what will happen to the 12 per cent of the tasers, or 50 devices, that did not meet manufacturer specifications?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, we just completed what we believe is the most comprehensive and largest independent testing of tasers in the world today. As the hon. member has mentioned, about 12 per cent of those instruments did not meet the manufacturer's specifications. I want to say that most of those devices that did not meet specifications were operating below those particular standards. I will say that all devices that were tested that did not meet the manufacturer's specifications have been pulled from service. Those that have been pulled will be independently retested before going back into service or destroyed. Those tasers that were operating properly have been returned to service.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: did the results of this testing get us any closer to determining once and for all if tasers are safe for usage by police in this province?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, when we started this testing, we said that we were conducting these tests to determine if these devices were operating within the manufacturer's specifications, and the vast majority of them are. While this will not quell the debate around safety of these tasers, it does provide us with more scientific information to share with law enforcement agencies and researchers to help in developing policy and training. We believe that these tasers are an effective tool to help police deal with violent and dangerous situations. Having said that, my department will continue to look at new information that will strengthen the strict taser guidelines that are already in place in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to the same minister: what about the remaining 550 tasers in Alberta that have not been tested? What does this minister's department plan on doing with them? Does he want to take them to Vegas?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I was going to go to Vegas and stay in some of the cheaper hotels, I may need that for protection.

Mr. Speaker, we will be conducting independent testing of the remaining tasers that are in use.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Health and Wellness told this Assembly, "I'm told by Alberta Health Services that they expect to have the Mazankowski centre starting to take patients next month." Today Alberta Health Services said publicly that they never advised the minister of this and that the Mazankowski will not begin taking patients until at least late summer or into the fall. Mr. Speaker, misleading this Assembly on an issue like that, I'm sure you'd agree, is very serious.

Mr. Liepert: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: where did he get his information that the Mazankowski was opening next month?

Mr. Liepert: The CEO.*

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. There seems to be, Mr. Speaker, a lot of political covering up when it comes to the Mazankowski. Last week Alberta Health Services' website showed that the hours of operation for virtually all their services were zero – I'll table the print-offs of that – but after I raised the question in the Legislature, the website was changed to make it look like everything in the Maz is up and running and taking patients even though it's not. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why can't the public get an honest answer on what's really going on at the Mazankowski?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the public will get an honest answer if they listen to the government, not the opposition. What I said was that there have been some real issues around commissioning the facility. You know, I'm not sure what this particular member wants us to do. If the technology is not one hundred per cent certain, does he want us to put a heart patient on a bed and say, "Well, it might work. It might not"? Is that what he wants? Say so.

Dr. Taft: I'm just looking for a straight answer on behalf of the public, the patients, and the staff, Mr. Speaker.

We've heard from this minister a whole range of different stories. He's distanced himself from the official opening, he distanced himself from construction management, and now he seems to be having all kinds of difficulties in working with Alberta Health Services. My question to him is: why is his working relationship with Alberta Health Services so strained?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the answer to the first question I suggested that the CEO had given me information that they expect to start taking patients in May. Now, I would suggest that if I'm talking to the CEO and he's giving me information, that is hardly what I'd call a strained relationship. What we have here, obviously, is a particular member of the Legislature who can't seem to give up his former job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Northeast Calgary Ring Road

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the northeast leg of the Calgary ring road is nearing completion, many of my constituents in the communities of Applewood, Abbeydale, and Monterey Park are concerned about the proximity of the road to their homes. Specifically, they are concerned that children playing behind their homes can wander onto the new road. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. Will there be any barrier between the homes and the road?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, we always fence off the road components in a transportation and utility corridor. The children would have to go through a barbed wire fence before they could get to that road. We encourage people, especially children, to stay away from transportation and utility corridors, and I sincerely hope that parents would educate their children properly, supervise their children, and really explain to them the dangers of playing by a high-speed roadway.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister perhaps may have meant to say "chain-link fence."

The residents are also concerned about the increased noise caused by traffic when the road is under construction. My second question is to the same minister. What can the minister do to ensure that there is not excessive road noise?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, engineering studies indicate that noise levels should not exceed the sound limits on that roadway. However, once the road is built, we will go out there, do the proper testing, and make sure that it's within our allowable limits. If we find that the noise exceeds the limits, then we'll engineer and fix the problem.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During construction they have also been forced to deal with issues like excessive garbage in their yards, dirt on their windows and their homes. My final question to the same minister: what is your department doing to ensure that the concerns of the residents are being addressed?

*See page 817, right column, paragraph 7

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I do understand that there have been some complaints over time of some dust and some debris blowing around. You always have a bit of that problem when you're under construction. It's one of the hazards of construction that needs to be done. Our contractors have been instructed – and I understand that they're living up to that – to water down the site whenever they can or whenever they notice that it's getting too windy. My staff have been instructed to make sure that if there's wind and some of the papers or the debris from the construction site blows around, you send guys out there and pick the stuff up. From what I understand, our contractors have been largely complying with these instructions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to, I think, put these questions aside and only have one if I might, and it would be to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why was I as an elected member of this House and a dedicated defender of seniors' rights thrown out of Government House this morning when all I wanted was to be part of a public announcement?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier and in this particular case, I would check to see whether anybody was thrown out of anywhere. That's a pretty serious accusation.

But what was clear in the invite was that it was a news media news conference. The last time I checked, that particular member was not a member of the news media. This was not a public meeting. No other elected officials or other business leaders were invited. I can say no more than that, other than the fact that if this hon. member, in fact, was thrown out of Government House, then I'd like her to stand up and acknowledge that. If she was told at the door that this was a news conference only, then I'd also like her to say that in this particular House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have an additional question?

Ms Pastoor: No. I'm going to let it go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Ms Pastoor: No, I won't. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: Sorry. I've already recognized the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Livestock and Meat Strategy

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency along with Agriculture and Rural Development have announced $30 million worth of grant programs which will be delivered by ALMA. This is very welcome news to many of my constituents as well as agricultural producers around the province. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: why are these programs necessary at this time?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. These programs certainly are critical to help the industry do things differently. We know that the status quo isn't working, and the idea behind the strategy is to better respond to what the markets are asking for. These grant programs will provide industry with a means to undertake projects that will improve our competitiveness by better responding to what customers and potential customers are asking for. Industry is now doing things differently, and it was imperative that as a government we shifted out of funding short-term to long-term solutions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. What makes this type of funding different from what we've done in the past?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, all of these programs focus on tactics identified in the Alberta livestock and meat strategy to help improve the long-term profitability, including differentiating products, diversifying markets, enhancing marketing effectiveness, fostering effective business models, and promoting a strengthened supply chain. When I announced the strategy last June, I also said that there would be no more ad hoc payments. Instead, we would focus on making the right investments that would move industry forward and into a profitable future.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: who is eligible for these programs?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, that's a good question, Mr. Speaker. These programs are certainly open to all industry associations, individual producers, and agribusinesses in Alberta. Anyone who falls into one of these categories and has a new, innovative idea that fits the objectives of a grant program is eligible. I would certainly encourage all industry members to put forward ideas and work with ALMA people to get the projects off the ground.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 104 questions and responses. In a few seconds from now I'll call on the last member to participate in Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Trade Unions

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Trade unions ensure that workers, who are the backbone of our economy, are treated fairly by their employers and by the government. They ensure that workers' rights are not forgotten in the rush to allow corporations to turn a profit. Jobs are being lost at an alarming rate in Alberta. Where a year ago there were far more jobs than workers, things have quickly changed. Now, more and more, workers need to access employment insurance, and good jobs are being replaced with low-paying part-time work. In times like this they need the protection of a union more than ever.

Safety standards are not in place for farm workers at all, and for the rest government provides only vague regulations, almost no enforcement, and refuses to legislate worker safety committees. As a result, Albertans need unions to help them keep safe in their workplace. We all benefit from the work of trade unions, be it in the livable wages that we enjoy, the pensions that will see us through retirement, equality in the workforce, recognition of human rights for underrepresented groups of people, and, of course, the weekend.

But, Mr. Speaker, in its ongoing efforts to place corporate profit above the interests of working Albertans, this government hangs onto a regressive set of laws, intent on doing everything they can to stand between workers and unions. It is time for this to change. Over the last few years labour groups have consistently asked that Alberta's labour legislation be made fair for all. They have called for a return to the right to strike for all workers, a ban on scab labour, first contract arbitration, automatic certification when the majority of workers sign up with the union, and the elimination of the Public Service Employee Relations Act. It is time for this government to treat all Albertans fairly and change the law to right the imbalance that exists only in this province.

Today we salute workers, we salute trade unions, and we ask this government to join us in finally doing the same.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) to advise the House that on Monday, April 27, 2009, we will deal with motions for returns 21, 22, 23, and 24.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 10 reports from long-term care workers indicating specific problems on shifts that were short-staffed. These indicate that some residents received their meals late, did not receive their bath, and were left in bed all day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is copies of a petition organized by the Friends of Medicare. It's a petition indicating a cease-and-desist order against the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness regarding the dismantling of our public health care structure.

My second tabling is in reference to my questions earlier in question period. It is a spreadsheet indicating the government's $250 million plus senior management achievement bonuses scheme over the last 10 years.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two different sets of tablings. One is documents I referred to in question period. They're printouts of the website from Alberta Health Services from before my questions last week on the hours of operation of the Mazankowski. These indicate hours of operation at zero. On the current website that's all been wiped out.

My second set of tablings is a range of correspondence on the government's policy on gender surgery. It's letters from Matthew Cadrin, Karen Hofmann, and a number of other people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 13, 2008, 189 people from around the world gathered in Lake Louise for the first-ever world summit on learning disabilities. International experts from diverse disciplines and backgrounds together with parents and individuals with learning disabilities attended the summit. The findings of the summit, as articulated in this white paper, fit well with the discussions and work that are taking place through setting the direction for special education in Alberta. I know from conversations with the steering committee and staff working on the initiative that the work done at the world summit will inform the setting the direction process. I'd like to table five copies of the report A Call to Action: World Summit on Learning Disabilities, that was held in Lake Louise April 13 to 16, 2008.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Acting Official Opposition House Leader.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the Government House Leader please inform the Assembly of the expected government business next week for the Assembly?

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tuesday, April 28, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading we would intend to introduce to the Assembly bills 29, 31, 32, 33, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, and 42. Those would be moved so that the Assembly would have the benefit of the initial speech indicating the purpose of those bills. That's the Family Law Amendment Act, 2009; Rules of Court Statutes Amendment Act, 2009; Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act; Fiscal Responsibility Act; Gas Utilities Amendment Act, 2009; Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2009; Tourism Levy Amendment Act, 2009; Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2009; Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2009; Protection for Persons in Care Act; and Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2009. We would anticipate being in Committee of the Whole on Bill 19, subject to progress today, and on bills 6, 7, and 9, and, time permitting, third reading of bills 4 and 17.

Wednesday, April 29, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 10, Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act; Bill 11, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 12, Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 13, Justice of the Peace Amendment Act, 2009; and Bill 14, Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act; for third reading bills 6, 7, 9, and 19; and as per the Order Paper.

April 30 in the afternoon under Government Bills and Order for second reading Bill 14, Carbon Capture and Storage Funding Act; Bill 16, Peace Officer Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 20, Civil Enforcement Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 23, Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 24, Animal Health Amendment Act, 2009; and in Committee of the Whole Bill 10, Supportive Living Accommodation Licensing Act; Bill 11, Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 12, Surface Rights Amendment Act, 2009; Bill 13, Justice of the Peace Amendment Act, 2009; and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, earlier today during part of the Routine there were some interventions with respect to purported points of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: No. I'll withdraw mine.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, you rose on a purported point of order?

Point of Order
Parliamentary Language

Mr. Liepert: I did, Mr. Speaker, and it's a very simple one. This clearly refers to Beauchesne under Alberta's standing orders. In the line of questioning the Member for Edmonton-Riverview said something to the effect that I had misled this House. I would ask him to withdraw those comments, please.

The Speaker: So you're making a point of order?

Mr. Liepert: Yes. I did.

Some Hon. Members: What's your citation?

The Speaker: Well, it was a citation under Standing Order 23, I'm sure.

Go ahead, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to explain, briefly, the exchange. We were informed earlier today from Alberta Health Services that the conversation with the minister had not occurred. It appears that we were misinformed. The minister is saying that the CEO of Alberta Health Services told him the Mazankowski Heart Institute will be accepting patients next month. At this point we'll take the CEO at his word, so I do withdraw my comments. We'll see how it plays out.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That's all very good. Well, actually, the chair was going to say something. I'm just going to say it anyway because it's Thursday afternoons that we always have these kinds of activities. What the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview actually said: "Mr. Speaker, misleading this Assembly on an issue like that, I'm sure you agree, is very serious." It's absolutely correct that there's an innuendo associated within there, and there's a direct relationship.

Then we heard the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond. But the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness probably was offside, too, because he did say something to the effect that if the public wanted the truth, they should actually "listen to the government, not the opposition." You know, there's a bit of cut and thrust in all of this.

I was going to call this a draw, but seeing as you have both clarified the situation, I really appreciate that as the chair because it provides for the ultimate harmony, and there's the suggestion that we can get along very well. So that's very good.

Mr. Snelgrove: Let's call it 4:30.

The Speaker: You want to call it 4:30? There's a motion put forward by the hon. President of the Treasury Board to call it 4:30. If all members agree, it will be done.

[Motion lost]

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 19

Land Assembly Project Area Act

The Deputy Chair: We're debating comments or questions on the bill as amended. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. We will certainly continue the discussion and the debate on Bill 19. I'm not satisfied, and debate at Committee of the Whole is the ideal time to try to improve this legislation as it exists. It has been amended, as you have correctly stated. There have been valiant attempts by various members to try to fix this legislation. Certainly, there are many, many people throughout the province who still have concerns and issues with this.

I know that there was a time recently – I guess I'll have to say that I was more idealistic – when I thought maybe the government would move this bill from any further discussion here in the Assembly out into the public, where the public could have a good look at this. If they wished, they could make suggestions. They could express their concerns through public hearings through the Standing Committee on the Economy. But that wasn't done, so here we are. We have this benevolent idea in the government benches that they certainly know what's best, and this bill is an example of that.

Now, when we look at what we're deciding here with the Land Assembly Project Area Act and refer back to what was said yesterday afternoon, Mr. Chairman, there was a bit of discussion on the original restricted development areas as they were implemented through, I think, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. When you look at the RDAs, as they were called, the result of those RDAs is, of course, the land that was assembled for the ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary. There was a restricted development area in Sherwood Park. There was one in Devon. What happened to the land in Devon around that RDA is a mystery in itself. Anyway, when we look at the plans of this government and we look at this legislation and we look at the maps of the ring road around Edmonton and the maps of the ring road around Calgary, what land does the government plan to acquire through this bill, if it does become law, for the outer ring roads?

Now, I was told yesterday that that's not in the planning stages.

Mr. Snelgrove: Relevance.

Mr. MacDonald: It's typical of that hon. member across the way to say "relevance." This hon. member, who's in charge of so much money – in fact, Mr. Chairman, I think I'm going to report that hon. member to the former Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, Steve West. I realize that he's . . .

The Deputy Chair: Talk to the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Hold on here, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] I still can't see it. Okay. I thought it was the map to Steve West's house. I suggest that you pay him a visit.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, we'll speak to the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Absolutely, Mr. Chairman. When we look at the Land Assembly Project Area Act and we look at the long-term plans of this government, the medium-term plans, and the short-term plans, this is legislation that they need to acquire the land for these outer ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary. You'll be pleased to know there are also plans afoot for a ring road around Medicine Hat.

There's one around Lethbridge. There's one around St. Albert, Red Deer, Lloydminster. Now, that'll be a delicate negotiation with the province of Saskatchewan. We're not going to go there.

Anyway, somewhere in the Department of Infrastructure – or maybe it's in Treasury Board because there's a lot of planning going on there, and we do know that the 20-year strategic Infrastructure plan is on the President of the Treasury Board's website. I'm not going to talk about this, but there was some suggestion before, during debate at committee, as to who exactly was in control of the 20-year strategic infrastructure plan, which this bill is very, very crucial to, whether it's the President of the Treasury Board or whether it's the Minister of Infrastructure.

Regardless, what land and where is it and how much is needed to fulfill the requirements of these projects? Has any of that land already been purchased? If these maps are drawn up, who has them? Who has knowledge of them? Is it the minister? Is it senior officials in the department? Is it the entire cabinet? I mean, we know the control that the cabinet is going to have around decisions relating to this bill. Who would make the suggestions that we need a ring road?

Let's look at Legal. Let's take Legal as an example. Does the outer ring road, Mr. Chairman, go as far north from Edmonton as Legal? Now, maybe the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology can enlighten the House. Does it go past Spruce Grove, or does it go on the other side of St. Albert? Where does it go? How big is it going to be? How much land is going to be set aside? Is there going to be a transportation utility corridor with those roads?

There is a lot of land to be purchased. There is a lot of information here. If we look at the past and we see what happened in Calgary and in Edmonton with the acquisition of the land for the ring roads, I think it would be in the best interests of public confidence and, certainly, interests of the taxpayer, to protect the taxpayer, if these proposed plans, these complete plans were made public because they're part of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I would strongly urge all hon. members of this Assembly to have a close look at the 20-year strategic infrastructure capital plan that I referred to earlier. It's a document from January 2008. It wasn't part of the election process, but it was a document that was developed by this government. It's on at least two ministry websites, and it is the details that would follow this proposed Bill 19, Land Assembly Project Area Act. It would be the fine print if this was to be the initial direction that we are going in.

Now, if these maps do exist – and the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology certainly implied that they exist, particularly in his area – I think they should be tabled. I think they should be tabled in the Assembly. I know we went into the argument about the regulations and why or why not we can see those before we pass this enabling legislation, but typical: the regulations are to follow, and we have this sort of trust-us attitude with the government members. But when you think, Mr. Chairman, that this information should be made available so the taxpayers can have a look, we could put these maps, these potential or possible or future ring road maps, on the Infrastructure website.

We used to have really detailed maps of the ring road around Edmonton and the one around Calgary. Those maps were front and centre on the Infrastructure website, but I was asking questions about some of the land deals surrounding those ring roads, and poof, Mr. Chairman, those maps disappeared from that website. But I suspected that, and I downloaded them in colour. I suspected that would happen.

I'm going to have to be more and more aware of that, Mr. Chairman, particularly after the events of today, which I can't believe. Government House would be in the Infrastructure department, and for members of the opposition, all parties to be banned . . .

The Deputy Chair: Talk about this.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. You're absolutely right. It's Thursday afternoon, and the minister of health has provoked me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, yesterday afternoon we went through this bill line by line, detail by detail. We certainly had a fairly good look at it, but there are some amendments that I think we need to discuss. Certainly, when I talked to particularly rural landowners, they had an issue around section 14, the offences. "A person who contravenes an enforcement order under section 7 is guilty." There has been a lot of discussion about that. Not only are they guilty of an offence but liable

- (a) in the case of an individual, to a fine of not more than $100 000 or to imprisonment for a period of not more than 2 years, or to both a fine and imprisonment, or
- (b) in the case of a corporation, to a fine of not more than $1 000 000.

I have had a few discussions with individuals regarding this. First off, Mr. Chairman, I said: if you had my job and you wanted to try to improve this bill and convince the government of any one thing, what would it be? I was surprised that many people wanted amendments to this section to reduce the $100,000 amount to $25,000, so I would like at this time, please, to introduce an amendment. I believe it would be A5.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll pause while that is brought to the table and then distributed.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I have a signed copy here. I would be glad to do that.

The Deputy Chair: Okay, hon. member, please continue. This is amendment A5. We'll be speaking to this now.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. Officially for the record, Mr. Chairman, I would move that Bill 19, the Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended in section 14(1)(a) by striking out "$100 000" and substituting "$25 000."

If the government is insisting that this proposed legislation go through the usual process here and we get through to third reading and it's imposed on the citizens whether they agree or disagree with it, I think it would be better if we were to reduce the penalty. There are certainly going to be individuals that are going to be affected by this. It is individual Albertans who have spoken out the loudest about this. There certainly have been, as we talked about yesterday, many editorials from various newspapers across the province that have had a lot to say about this bill and the direction that the government is going in. But it's the individual property owners that we've got to be thinking about here this afternoon.

I think $25,000 would be a reasonable amount if a person was found guilty of an offence under this act. I would like an explanation as to why the government thought $100,000 was their amount. It certainly seems to me to be excessive. I've been told by many different people that they feel that the government is high-handed here.

Before I take my seat, I would just remind all hon. members of the comments of Mr. Erickson from Drayton Valley-Calmar – I think he's the leader of the Green Party – who stated that he has met so many individuals, he's had so many discussions regarding this proposed legislation, and I suspect that he has not met the minister of health because he has not met anyone, Mr. Chairman, who is in favour of this bill.

The Deputy Chair: We're talking to amendment A5.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, we certainly are.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I would like to urge all hon. members of this Assembly to please consider reducing the fine amount for an individual from $100,000 to $25,000. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Does the minister wish to respond?

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment speaks to a maximum, and of course that would be determined in a court of law. The fact that no fine has been issued over the past 35 years under this enforcement indicates to me that we don't have a problem, so I oppose this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Yeah. Just to add to that, Mr. Chair, $100,000 is a maximum for very extreme cases. As was pointed out by the minister, this probably would only be used in extreme circumstances, where it may require a huge fine to prevent some corporation with deep pockets that would be intent on preventing some type of thing like the building of a dam or that sort of thing. I think it would not apply to the average farmer or landowner of little means such as myself. I'm a landowner, and I'm not concerned about this level of a fine in there because I know how these things work. You know, it seems to me that the opposition is looking at going through this bill one word at a time and wanting to strike out a word or add a word here and there.

I've been to some of these meetings as well. On the amendment, a lot of these people at these meetings have been intimidated into silence, actually. Some of them have approached the minister and told him that they support what the minister is trying to do here in the bill and that these amendment-type things don't concern them at all, but they're afraid to stand up at a public meeting because of the mood and the intimidation at the meetings. Quite frankly, one guy said: I'm afraid to get out of here with my skin. I talked to numerous ones one-on-one, and they told me the same thing. I got very few calls in my constituency – I got some opposed to this, but I got a lot that were in favour of it as it is. So I oppose the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much. I listened with great interest to the previous speaker and his comments. With respect, we are in Committee of the Whole, which does allow us to examine a bill line by line, clause by clause, word by word. So it's a perfectly legitimate way to examine legislation.

The second interesting thing he said was that, you know, the hundred thousand was really there for corporations, but in fact the way section 14(1) is set out, it says:

(a) in the case of an individual . . .

It's listed in the legislation.

. . . to a fine of not more than $100 000 or to imprisonment for a period of not more than 2 years, or to both . . . or

(b) in the case of a corporation, to a fine of not more than $1 000 000.

It is considering it in two different ways, and this amendment is amending section (a), which is talking about the individual.

I'm taking a step back, and I'm thinking: what is the point of putting punishment in legislation? It's meant to act as a deterrent from the get-go so that if people are aware of the legislation, they say: "Oh, boy, that's a stiff penalty. I wouldn't want to put myself in a position where that might come into play." Fair enough. That's what deterrents are for. Also, if it's actually enforced, it acts as a deterrent to others: "Well, you know, this actually did play out. Mr. So-and-so down the road a bit was convicted of this and, in fact, did pay a fine of X amount of money." Again, that falls under the deterrent section.

I think to myself: what's enough to be a deterrent to an average Albertan like me? A hundred thousand is like winning the lottery. I mean, a hundred thousand dollars is a lot, a lot of money, and to have to contemplate paying that out of my own resources, especially in a dispute with government, to which I've probably already committed a fair amount of funds to fighting the government or supporting others that are trying to bring forward their concerns around these land assembly projects, that's so far beyond a deterrent that it's into the realm of the magical or the horror film. A hundred thousand dollars is a lot of money for Albertans. So I think that in this case it has gone too far.

Mr. MacDonald: These guys spend that in hosting expenses, you know.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I understand that the government can blow that off in a hosting expense, no problem, but for most Albertans $100,000 is more money than they will have in their bank account at any time except for right when they retire, and hopefully they've got that much and more in their account when they do retire. For the rest of us that's just not happening or, at least, not in my world. That just doesn't happen.

I heard the reaction back from the government members: "Well, you know, it's a maximum, so don't sweat it. That'll never be issued." The truth is that you don't know that. You shouldn't be passing legislation and at the same time saying: well, yeah, I know that's the way it's written, but I don't think it'll ever happen that way. That's what's in the legislation. It says $100,000. It says that it can go up to a fine of not more than $100,000 or to imprisonment or both. That's what could happen. You can't be supporting legislation thinking: "Well, yeah, that's the max, but it'll never be laid out that way. It'll be less than that. Trust me. It'll be less than that. It'll be – I don't know – say, $5,000 or $10,000." Really? Does the member have that much control over the courts and what kind of fine a judge would levy in the end. I don't think that's a good way to go about making legislation.

The second point I want to raise is about the government's rebuttal of this: "Well, you know, in X period of time, in a long period of time" – 35 years I think I heard the minister say – "this kind of a fine has never been levied." Well, once again, not a great way to write legislation, guys, to say, "Well, this is what it is in the legislation, but honestly in a similar circumstance it has never actually come in to play, so don't worry about the amount." No, that's not how you write legislation.

You need to take it seriously, and you need to understand – I hope the government members do – that this is how you're writing it. This is the direction that you have given the courts in the interpretation of it, and you have to expect that this is the way it will play out. Yes, it says not more than a hundred thousand, but it is well within the courts' ability to levy a fine of a hundred thousand and levy it every time it comes before it. You can't be saying: "Don't worry about this. It's not over the top. It's not too much because (a) it'll never be implemented, or (b) it won't go to that amount of money."

Therefore, I support my colleague's amendment, amendment A5, which is reducing the $100,000 maximum amount to $25,000. I think that even $25,000 is a lot of money. I am looking at who is likely to be affected in most cases. We may well be talking about landowners that have owned a considerable amount of land, but that doesn't mean that they have a considerable amount of money in the bank correspondingly. I think $25,000 is still a scary amount of money for anyone to have to contemplate pulling out of their pocket and laying down in a cashier's cheque to the court should they be found in contravention of the legislation. I think that $25,000 as a maximum is high enough to scare people. Let's face it, if it's going to be levied under $25,000 – and it could be $5,000 – that's true as well for the other legislation. So it might as well be $25,000 as a maximum rather than the hundred thousand.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to speak in favour of amendment A5. I urge my colleagues in the Assembly to also support amendment A5. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Speaking to A5, I'm inclined to support this amendment, but I'd like to explain why. I hope that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills will participate for a few minutes in this discussion because I know he's eager and anxious. I'll get to the point I was going to ask him right away. Given that, as section 14 points out, this is only the section that applies to individuals and not corporations, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills said: well, this hundred thousand dollars would be used only in extreme circumstances. I think that was the phrase he used. So help me understand: what would be an extreme case where a hundred thousand dollar fine might be applied? Can the member give me an example of when that might be needed?

Mr. Marz: Specifically, no. Not right now.

Dr. Taft: I appreciate that. Just for the record, the member couldn't pull one out of thin air, but maybe with a bit of thought. I know he wasn't prepared for that, but it would help me balance this out, $25,000 versus $100,000, if I could sort of picture in my mind what it was meant to do. Anyway, I appreciate that, hon. member.

There's a point in principle that concerns me, and I'm very glad that the Minister of Justice is here. Here's what I feel I'm being asked to consider here as an MLA with this bill. Section 14, which we are debating an amendment to, proposes penalties in the case of an individual, $100,000; in the case of a corporation, up to a maximum of a million. Those are the maximums. Those are for offences, and it says here in section 14(1): "A person who contravenes an enforcement order under section 7 is guilty of an offence." So I then go to section 7 to see what would exactly be involved in the offence, and it says in section 7: "Where, in the Minister's opinion, a person has contravened a regulation made under section 3." Then it outlines what the minister may do. So now we're bumped, if I'm reading this correctly, to section 3.

Section 3 is a fairly long section; it's a bit over a page. It addresses several areas, and I'll briefly enumerate these, Mr. Chairman. What's crucial here is that it says that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations, and then there's a long list here:

- (a) respecting the control, restriction, prohibition or approval of any kind of use, development or occupation of land . . .

- (b) authorizing the Minister to consent to or approve any particular kind of use, development or occupation . . .

I'm abbreviating here.

- (c) respecting the removal of any buildings, improvements, materials or animals . . .
- (d) respecting the control, restriction or prohibition of the exercise of any power referred to in the regulations . . .
- (e) respecting the control, restriction, prohibition or approval of the dumping, deposit or emission . . .
- (f) making any or all of the provisions of the Surface Rights Act inapplicable.

I don't need to go through (g) and (h). My point is this: section 3 really empowers the minister to make all kinds of regulations in very important areas; section 7 then says that if those regulations are violated, they can be enforced by the minister; and then section 14, which, in fact, we are debating here – there is a clear logic, Mr. Chairman – provides the offence.

My concern as a citizen is that I'm being asked to approve a scale of offence – when I trace it back, I don't know what the regulations might be that the offence could be against. So I feel like exercising the principle of caution. If I knew what the regulations were, I would be more comfortable saying a hundred thousand dollars or a million dollars. But when I look at what's in the act and how broad those regulations could be and how they could affect everything from an order to remove a building or an order for land use or all kinds of things, I'm very reluctant as a legislator to go to the point of a maximum penalty of $100,000 under regulations I've never seen. It's really asking us to make an enormous leap of faith as an Assembly.

It's frankly compounded because – and this isn't anything personal – when I asked the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for an example, I couldn't even get an example. I'm very concerned that as an Assembly we're giving a penalty here for an offence we don't really have any knowledge of, we don't even have an example of, we don't have any regulations about, and that concerns me. So in the principle of being prudent and conservative, I'm more comfortable with the smaller fine. I am concerned about the intrusion of government into an area that's not spelled out here.

Those are my points, Mr. Chairman, and I quite genuinely ask members to consider that. If we had the regulations in front of us and could see what the offences would be, then maybe $100,000 is fine. Maybe it's not enough. But without those regs we actually don't know what the offence could be. So I think that we're prudent to support this amendment and be cautious rather than incautious.

I also do want to repeat the point made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre that for most individuals $100,000 is an awful lot of money. Most farmers I know, most Albertans I know are going to go a long way to avoid the risk of a $25,000 fine. Imagine if there was a $25,000 fine for speeding. I bet you not many people would be speeding anymore. So I just want to make those points for the record. Any debate on it: I'd love it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to comment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Yeah. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was asking for some examples, and of course any example anyone could give in this House, including myself, would be strictly hypothetical. For example, if we wanted to build a dam in this province at some point in time, there would be an RDA applied to all that property that would be flooded. If someone within the flood plain decided to start building houses down there or a recreational area along the river, would $25,000 be enough to deter him? He may feel: well, I've already got three built, I may as well keep building a dozen. Would $25,000 be enough for that? I don't know. The bottom line is that the amount, whether it's $25,000 or $100,000, would be determined by the courts. Up to $100,000 would be determined by the court, not by us, and that is a maximum for an individual that may or may not want to do that. That's an example that that could be applied to.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

3:30

The Deputy Chair: Any other members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to join in the discussion of this amendment. I listened with interest to what the Member for Edmonton-Riverview had to say with respect to this, and I've just been quickly rereading some of the sections that exist. Actually, what concerns me about the penalties, as we work backwards from assigning a penalty to how the offence is defined and then to who actually defines the offence – and I'd just like to point out that quite apart from the financial penalty contained in section 14, there is also a provision for imprisonment up to two years, which I believe is the maximum under provincial legislation, the maximum penalty of imprisonment that can be imposed under provincial jurisdiction; otherwise, it becomes a federal and criminal act. So we can put someone in jail and fine them up to $100,000 or both under this act, and that is done for someone who is found guilty of contravening an enforcement order under section 7.

As we work backwards through the legislation from section 14 to section 7, we see that, in fact, when someone "has contravened a regulation made under section 3, the Minister may serve that person with an enforcement order." So we move back from section 7, working backwards to section 3, and we find that the regulations, of course, are made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and those can authorize the minister "to consent to or approve any particular kind of [land] use, development or occupation of land in the Project Area" and so on.

What we have, then, is that the government, the cabinet, you know, as they meet privately, can make regulations, and if you don't follow the regulations, you get served with an enforcement order by the minister, and if you don't follow the enforcement order, then you can go to jail for two years. So I'm concerned. I share the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's concern with respect to this because I know that sometimes government gets it a bit wrong. To have the cabinet make a regulation and, ultimately, if you violate the regulation which they set – and there are very few constraints on what can be in those regulations – if you don't follow it and you get an enforcement order and you violate that enforcement order, you can be sent to jail or fined up to $100,000 or both.

I think that that is excessive. I think that if you're going to actually have fines on that scale, if you're going to have penalties of imprisonment of up to two years, we need to have a little bit more certainty about what kind of regulations we're going to see. I think it would be certainly preferable from my perspective if we could set out offences requiring imprisonment in legislation so that it can be debated in public rather than have the government make rules without public debate, the violation of which can result in people being faced with enormous fines or, in fact, imprisonment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate that I am convinced by the arguments put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview that would reduce the penalty here. I certainly would hope that we could also be looking at an amendment to reduce the imprisonment portion of the penalty or eliminate it altogether. I think that that would be something as well. It's great to reduce the fine from $100,000 to $25,000, but if you can still go to jail for two years, then we haven't really dealt with the problem completely. So perhaps we'll be able to deal with that.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, and have said with respect to this piece of legislation, I find it to be not only draconian but unnecessary. The imposition of penalties for basically refusing to go along with what the government tells you to do, if that's not putting too fine a point on it, is not something that I think we ought to be agreeing to. I certainly won't.

Based on that reasoning and the concern that I have about the bill in general, I am prepared to support this amendment, and I hope that other members will as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak to amendment A5? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. To certainly conclude discussion on amendment A5, I would like to express my gratitude to those who have spoken regarding this legislative amendment, not only thank you to those who are for it but to those, too, who are opposed to it.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has some more comments regarding this, and I would be delighted to take my seat and hear from the hon. member.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Ever so briefly I want to just reinforce my concern with the nature of this when not only are we being asked to enact a penalty of up to $100,000 and up to two years in jail for an individual who may be contravening regulations we've never seen, but it is also the case in this legislation – I've been uneasy about this from the beginning – that there are parts of this for which there is no appeal. In other words, the way this will be set up, for section 7(2)(a) and (b), I believe, there's no appeal. So we are being asked not only to rubber-stamp regulations we've never seen, but we are actually then passing a bill sections of which the enforcement relates to cannot be appealed.*

We as a Legislature, if we pass this as it is, would be creating a situation in which a landowner, who owns the land through full due process, fully paid for – you know, the buildings may have been in her or his family for generations – can be subject to an order made under regulations that we don't know, and it says here under section 7 that the minister may serve that person with an enforcement order directing a person "to cease the contravention specified in the order," and the landowner cannot appeal that, or directing a person "to stop doing something, or to change the way in which the person is doing it," and the landowner cannot appeal that. Then we are saying that not only can you not appeal, not only are you subject to regulations that we don't know anything about in this Assembly, but you could be fined $100,000 and be sent to jail for two years. It feels heavy-handed to me, Mr. Chairman. It feels like as an Assembly we're being asked, as I said, to take a leap of faith.

I'm doubly concerned when I realize that part of that relates to things for which the legislation prevents any appeal. Is this due process? It would be interesting, if there ever is a court challenge to this, if this legislation would stand all the way up. I don't know if there's due process in here or not when you prevent an appeal. I think everybody has the right to due process and appeal.

Anyway, I won't take more time of this Assembly. I just wanted to say that the more I think about this, the more concerned I am to be quite so heavy-handed.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Do any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. That was certainly an interesting observation by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Certainly, I don't see members opposite rising quickly to respond.

In conclusion on A5, I certainly would like to say that this amendment is a good amendment. It reduces the individual penalties to $25,000 or less for a person or persons. We on this side of the House think that the current penalties are far too draconian. We think this bill in itself is too draconian. This amendment, if it was to be passed, would go some way to reduce the impact of this legislation on landowners.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has summed it up very, very well, Mr. Chairman. Please, let's think of the landowners here and the valid issues that they have had regarding these proposals.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the bill as amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. You bet. Mr. Chairman, that was another attempt at taking bad legislation and trying to make it better. When we look at this, when we look again at the government's plans, we have to try again to improve this.

Now, I'm sure that there are landowners across this province who are questioning how this debate is transpiring. Certainly, there have been amendments from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. There have been amendments from the Official Opposition. There were amendments, of course, before we went to second reading on this bill, which is unusual. When you think of the political firestorm that has occurred, particularly in rural areas, over Bill 19, Mr. Chairman, it is worth while to again attempt to improve this legislation at committee.

Now, I don't know what's going to happen at third reading with this bill. I have no idea.

Mr. Liepert: It'll pass.

Mr. MacDonald: It'll pass. Do you think it's going to pass?

Mr. Liepert: When we get third reading.

Mr. MacDonald: Yeah. That's the confidence of the minister of health. Mr. Chairman, the minister of health is reading a newspaper over there, something he probably should have read when he was Minister of Education. I would like to call a point of order.

The Deputy Chair: There is no point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: There's no point of order. Okay.

It's quite odd. There seems to be a difference between the ATA News and the Globe and Mail.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, let's get back to the bill as amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Absolutely. I am, for the record, speaking of the bill, and we have wide latitude at committee, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this bill.

Since you weren't in the chair yesterday, I think maybe what I should do now is refresh all the members of the Assembly on the bill line by line, word for word.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, there's no need to refresh us. Everyone has had an opportunity to either read Hansard or see it online, so we'll continue on.

Mr. Mason: I didn't catch it.

Mr. MacDonald: There. Okay. For the benefit of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. When we look at the section analysis of this bill, Mr. Chairman, we have to realize – and this is for the benefit of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, who has been very busy doing his other duties and hasn't had a chance to review Hansard or look at the bill from yesterday. [interjection] Well, if he had known, hon. member, that he was going to be physically blocked from that event, he could have taken Hansard from yesterday with him and read it.

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Anyway, Mr. Chairman, when we look at this bill and, specifically for the benefit of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, we go through and we look at the definitions, we look at the definition of registered owner, we look at the definition of project area, project area order, public project, two words we don't see in there are "public interest" because, of course, the public interest has been neglected. This bill fails the public interest. It fails the property owners of this province.

Now, when we look at section 2, again, and we look at the land assembly project area – and we discussed this before, but for the benefit of the hon. member I would strongly urge you or your researchers to have a look at the 20-year strategic plan, the capital plan, that is the work of the Department of Infrastructure and the President of the Treasury Board. They're both sharing this on their websites. This is what the whole idea behind the land assembly project area is. When we see this 20-year strategic plan, we see why the government so quietly, so desperately wants this bill to become law so that they can go about their business acquiring specific, targeted properties in various locations in the province for their needs.

Now, I don't think anyone is going to be interested in speculating on the possible location of a nuclear power plant. But maybe there will be speculation occurring on some of the proposed ring roads or on other projects or on the rights-of-way, and this is what we've got to prevent once and for all for the sake of the taxpayers, speculation that drives up the price of land beyond any sort of market measure. That's what we have to do. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the government has failed to listen to our concerns on that. In fact, I don't think; I know they have. Now, that is why we have to look at this section 2, the land assembly project area, closely.

I agree with what the Minister of Infrastructure said earlier about the transmission corridors. That's a separate issue. That certainly is a separate issue. There's a significant bottleneck created because of electricity deregulation. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is certainly aware of that. He gets his power bill just like the rest of us. His power bill would be significantly higher than what it used to be, and it's going to be higher even still when the transmission lines have to eventually be paid for through the consumers' bills. Those transmission lines will be on a separate corridor I'm told. I would accept that, but anything can change with this legislation. What is now considered a utility corridor, well, we can change the rules, and we just might do that. With this government rules change all the time, and the rule changes that are made sort of discreetly, quietly are the ones they like the best, Mr. Chairman.

Now, we didn't talk earlier about subsection (2)(c), a project related to the conservation or management of water. That could include a canal. It could include an above the surface pipeline. It could be a pipeline below the surface. There are a lot of different issues around water conservation and management in this Assembly. I think this is the first session in a while – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview could refresh our minds – where we haven't had a stand-alone bill to transfer water from one river basin in the province to the next. A project that would be related to legislation of that nature would of course, I think, be captured under subsection (2)(c).

I don't want to open up this whole debate in committee on a discussion on water exports or transfer of water from the northern half of the province to the southern half of the province, where we could use more water. The allocations have been utilized. There are examples – and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is very concerned – of water transfers or parts of licences or portions of licences being sold. Under subsection (2) there is a possibility – and we have to be cautious of that – that that could occur under this land assembly project area. It could be a canal. It could be a pipeline. It's interesting.

Now, section 3 is, again, the powers of the cabinet. We had a discussion on that yesterday. The hon. member knows fully well the extreme powers of the cabinet. I would say that before the hon. member was, unfortunately, physically barred from attending a news conference today, it would have been discussed by that cabinet. That's another example, Mr. Chairman, of the extreme powers of this cabinet. In this bill the cabinet is going to have more power than they've ever had. [interjection] Too much power. Draconian power. The hon. member is absolutely right.

Now, section 3 was discussed during the previous amendment. [interjection] The hon. member is absolutely right, but there is one thing. In my view, this is why in committee we go over these bills word for word, line by line, paragraph by paragraph. Every hon. member is entitled to do that. Every member is entitled. Whether they want to participate or not, that's their business.

The government agency that we were referring to here in subsection (2), we're also debating – and I should find my Order Paper – another piece of legislation around the public agencies governance. This bill, Mr. Chairman, was one of the earlier ones: Bill 32, the Alberta Public Agencies Governance Act. Now, I'm not going to be able to find that. The definition of government agency means a corporation that is an agent of the Crown in right of Alberta, and any corporation, commission, board or other body empowered to perform quasi-judicial or governmental functions and whose members are appointed by an Act of the Legislature, the Lieutenant Governor in Council or a Minister of the Crown or any combination of them.

I believe that's the same definition of a government agency as Bill 32.

Now, Bill 32 in itself is interesting because that's legislation that has come from a government recommendation, and that was a recommendation that was used – and this is incredible. Legally, it's quite interesting. [interjection] The hon. Member for Peace River laughs, but his health authority in the Peace River . . .

The Deputy Chair: Through the chair. Hon. member, through the chair.

Please, quickly, tell me how Bill 32 relates to Bill 19, and we'll move on with Bill 19.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. If you will listen carefully, please.

The government agency that's listed here, I want to know if it's the same definition as in Bill 32 because there are implications to this. There was a legislative officer from this Assembly – to be exact and precise that was the Ethics Commissioner – who had a lot of discussion on the definition of a government agency. We need to be perfectly clear before we go any further with this bill what is meant because there are two, if not three, interpretations of what exactly a government agency is. It depends on who you talk to and in what context it's used, so it is quite important. If I could have some clarification on that, I would really appreciate it, Mr. Chairman.

Now, when we think of how on the Order Paper we're dealing with Bill 32 and how this government when they reorganized the health authorities and fired the regional health authorities, including the hon. member's one, they pretended it was already a law when it was only a recommendation – Mr. Chairman, you're absolutely right. That may not be part of this bill, but it needs to be a part of the official record of this Assembly.

Now, when we go on to section 4, that has been discussed as well.

We go to 5, the acquisition of land. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, certainly section 5 was reflected in his comments regarding the amendment that was previously discussed.

Section 6 is, of course, the obligations of a person with interest in the project area land.

Enforcement orders under section 7, the control, the restriction, and the prohibitions that are in section 3 are related. That was outlined very well by my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview.

When we look further, Mr. Chairman, maybe we should have a look at section 7, section 7(4)(a) to be precise, and consider what this will do. Perhaps an amendment to this section cutting out the authority that the minister has – the minister can amend or add terms or conditions. The members across the way may not be concerned about that, but landowners are. They've instructed us to at least get this on the public record. This allows for additional penalties and powers outside of the process that has been set up previously, and we think this is unfair to landowners. The rules for enforcing these powers should be very clear. This section allows the minister to increase the burden of orders too easily. So I would like at this time, Mr. Chairman, to propose an amendment to this section.

The Deputy Chair: We will pause while that is brought to the table and then distributed. Hon. members, we will title this amendment A6.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A6, for the record, would read that Bill 19, Land Assembly Project Area Act, be amended in section 7(4)(a) by striking out “amend a term or condition of, add a term or condition to or.” That would be deleted. If we were to do that to the bill, that would significantly change not only that section but some of the tone of this bill.

Now, the proposed amendment cuts out the section that states that the minister can amend, as I said before, or add terms or conditions. This allows, of course, for additional penalties, in our view, and powers outside of the process set up previously. Again, this is totally unfair to landowners. The rules for enforcing these draconian powers should be very clear. This section, if we allow it to remain, provides the minister an easy method of imposing cabinet’s will – I suppose I could call it that – on an innocent, unsuspecting landowner, who, certainly, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has pointed out very accurately, doesn’t have the resources that back up this government, legal or financial resources to defend their property rights. It’s not a fair fight.

I would please ask all members to give this amendment A6 consideration. I look forward to the debate and discussion on this. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I stand to oppose the amendment. In the conversation that took place where the member has been speaking about the concerns that are being brought forward, even though he got the president of the party’s name wrong – that’s another party; there’s a different president for the Green Party – I’m not just sure if this was another one that was brought forward from that information. It would be interesting if the members that are supporting this and bringing these forward on behalf of those people are familiar with all of the land proposals and policies that go with that party, if they’ve tied themselves that closely.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on A6.

Dr. Taft: Yes. On A6. Mr. Chairman, I rise first to briefly make a correction to some statements I made earlier. I believe I was actually mistaken and misreading the bill, and I think it’s important for the record because some people are following this debate. When I was indicating that the way I was reading the bill, section 7(2)(a) and (b) were not appealable, I think I was mistaken in that. I think they are appealable. For anybody following this and for the integrity of this Assembly I need to acknowledge that I think I was mistaken in that.*

As far as amendment A6 goes, I had noticed this myself when I went through the bill, this particular clause, and it did strike me as an area of concern, so I’m pleased that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has brought forward this amendment. I just have to question why we need to give the minister such power. Just to reinforce this for people who are following here, the clause right now reads:

- (4) The Minister may, by order,
 - (a) amend a term or condition of, add a term or condition to or delete a term or condition from an enforcement order.

That’s a very broad power. It’s a very broad power, and this one is in fact not just in the hands of the cabinet; it’s in the hands of a single minister. I think this amendment would curtail an unusual and, perhaps, even extreme power being granted to a minister without any great controls that we can see. Again, I need to refer to the point that we don’t have the regulations in front of us.

As far as I can see – and maybe somebody here can correct me – if we pass this bill without this amendment, the bill doesn’t seem to provide any limitations on the power that it’s giving this minister. It says, “the Minister may, by order.” It doesn’t say the minister in consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council or anything like that. “The Minister may, by order . . . amend a term or condition.” It doesn’t put any limits whatsoever on that. Or he may add a term or condition. Again, there are absolutely no limits on that, unless I’m reading this incorrectly. I’d welcome to be corrected on this, but it seems to be giving an extraordinary power to the minister here. I mean, after all, we are talking about an enforcement order that’s already been prepared under this act.

Let’s use the example that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills used earlier, which was a farm that was in the way of a planned reservoir going up behind a dam. The landowner refuses to comply, so an enforcement order is written under this act. Presumably that enforcement order is going to do everything that’s necessary. It’ll say that the landowner must leave the land or the landowner must desist from building even more buildings or whatever. If we already have that enforcement order, why do we need to give such extraordinary powers to the minister to amend it or to add to it?

Maybe the minister could help me with this, actually. I’m looking at the minister here. He’s been very helpful. I want to give kudos to this minister for sitting through these debates and responding in good faith to our questions. Mr. Minister, I’m referring here to section 7(4)(a), which is on page 8 of the bill. My question to the minister is: why would he or his successor need such extraordinary power? In other words, why would he need the legislative right to amend or add a term or condition to an enforcement order when that enforcement order is already written? It was very helpful to have the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills give an example earlier. Could the minister justify why that particular power, which strikes me as quite extreme, is necessary?

Mr. Hayden: The enforcement order can be issued, but with respect to any fine or any action taken, that has to go through the courts. Of course, that’s not determined. But the varying of an enforcement order and the changes that may be necessary to be made to it could be to remediate damages done on a right-of-way. Those are the types of things that, once issued, might need to be amended, to ensure that the right-of-way is put back in a condition that’s consistent with the land-use restrictions that are on it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I appreciate that. But aren’t those the kinds of things that would be in the enforcement order already? Why would an enforcement order be written up and imposed, if that’s the word, if it was incomplete? Wouldn’t that be done already?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Yeah. For the sake of clarity, in the enforcement order there could be extra actions and works that took place between the delivery of the enforcement order and the time that we actually could get to it. There could be extra considerations that would be required to be remediated.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much. This has been an interesting exchange. It strikes me that what we have here is essentially a “whoops, uh-oh” clause that allows the minister, or the Crown, the government, to go back on an action where a mistake was made or there was an omission, to be able to fix it. I’m a little reluctant to okay that kind of thing in an act.

Just given the resources that are available to the government and the period of time that’s now being anticipated to reach this point with what’s being set out in this act, even given that we don’t know what is in the regulations, I just would not expect that a mistake or an omission would be made. Essentially, that’s what I’m seeing this section, 7(4)(a) – it is the “whoops, uh-oh” clause.

I can’t tell you which is worse, the whoops or the uh-oh. You know, I used to run a small company, and I just hated it when I could hear the workers say that. You could tell by the tone of their voice that this was going to cost money.

Mr. Denis: You were in business.

Ms Blakeman: Business, yeah.

I honestly couldn’t tell you which was worse, when they went “whoops” or when they went “uh-oh.” I think, actually, probably “uh-oh” was more expensive.

That is what I’m seeing in this particular section. I guess if you’ve reached that point, given the amount of planning and anticipation and front time that this bill is anticipating, I think that if we’re at the point where there’s a whoops or an uh-oh, maybe there’s a much more serious problem than just having a situation where the minister can correct it through this particular section. I guess what I’m saying is that if this section needs to be used, then maybe there’s a much bigger problem and you need to re-examine the whole thing.

I would like to see that happen given the timelines that are anticipated in this bill, but it does strike me that this is what this is, and therefore I’m supportive of my colleague’s attempts to remove it from the act. I think it signals a much larger problem, and/or this is a sort of quick and dirty way of getting out of something or a cheap and cheerful way of getting out of something that maybe needs some more consideration.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Do other members wish to speak?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to rise to speak to this amendment, which is called A6. I’ve considered very carefully the comments that I’ve heard from some of my colleagues in support of this particular amendment. This particular amendment would amend, or change, section 7(4)(a), that allows the minister to “amend a term or condition of, add a term or condition to or delete a term or condition from an enforcement order.” It doesn’t amend (b), which allows the minister to cancel an enforcement order, and I think that’s wise. However, I do upon careful consideration find that I disagree with my colleagues on this point, so I’m going to speak for a little bit about why that is.

It seems to me that one of the things that I’ve learned since coming into the opposition and becoming part of this legislative process is that the government is not infallible. I know that may come as a shock to many of you. Based on careful observation of this government and of individual ministers, I have discovered that they occasionally make mistakes. Now, they don’t often admit that, but it’s true. So I think it follows from that, Mr. Chairman, that in terms of developing these enforcement orders, in terms of some of the things that the minister can do, it might be good to let them actually have a way to change their mind in case they do make a mistake.

For example, the orders under this could

- (a) direct a person to cease the contravention specified in the order,
- (b) direct a person to stop doing something, or to change the way in which the person is doing it.

Now, that’s an interesting bit of wording there. If you directed someone to stop doing something and then decided that by doing that thing, he or she wouldn’t really violate the intention of the regulation in the first place – in other words, you’d made, perhaps, a mistake – then you could use this clause to amend your order. I think that in this respect we could do it.

Take, for example, 7(2)(c)(i). That says that the minister could order somebody to take action to remedy a contravention; for example, “the removal or demolition of a structure that has been erected or placed in contravention.” Suppose somebody has built a structure, for example an outhouse, that is seen to be in contravention, and then suddenly the government realizes that it’s just an outhouse and it doesn’t really affect anything. You can knock it down in five years or whenever the government finally decides to move on whatever it is they want to build. So then the minister could change it. He could change, he could vary the term or condition, and I think he would be wise to do that.

You know, it’s with the greatest respect and regret that I find that I don’t agree with this amendment called A6 because I actually believe that the government needs to be allowed to change its mind from time to time. If, in fact, they brought in a very bad order and they came to their senses and realized it was a mistake, if we pass this amendment, the government would have no recourse.

Of course, they could get around it. They could withdraw it because wisely we haven’t eliminated section 7(4)(b), which allows them to cancel. They could cancel it, and then they could issue a new one with the changes. But I think it’s just simpler and more direct to allow them to amend it and change it, so I think this section of the act should remain unamended. I think we should defeat the act for reasons that I’ve stated, but I certainly think that eliminating the ability of the government to change its mind in the very rare cases that it makes a mistake is probably not a good idea.

While I won’t be able to support the bill, I will support retaining this particular clause and will, with the greatest of regret to my colleagues in the Official Opposition, not be able to support this particular amendment. But I encourage them to continue because most of their amendments have been very supportable, and I look forward to a continuing number of amendments from the Official Opposition as well.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to just briefly address the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with respect to the matter. I really don’t see what problem the opposition has with respect to this. I mean, if the minister has the ability to make these orders, the minister should certainly have the ministerial power to amend the orders. An example: if one of these orders provided for the various things that were specified in the draft bill, the removal or demolition of a structure.

Another thing that’s provided in there is that the minister may state a time within which there could be compliance. There may well be a circumstance in which the minister might want to give additional time to remedy or to rectify the situation or to take down a structure or to put the land back into a condition amenable to whatever use is being planned for it.

I think those provisions are entirely consistent. They're consistent with what happens in other legislation as well where there is a quasi-judicial body that has the ability to change an order. If you don't have that in there, the body then lacks that flexibility. So I think it's an entirely reasonable proposition, and I would urge members to defeat this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, I listened to the two previous speakers with interest, and I certainly can appreciate what they're saying. But if we were to pass this amendment, I would remind the House that the new section 7(4)(a) would read: the minister may – may; it's not shall – by order delete a term or condition from the enforcement order or cancel an enforcement order. So the minister can still change their mind. There's the odd time that they might make a mistake. The option is there with this amendment that if there was a mistake to be made, this would give them the avenue to correct it.

Now, in regard to the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, certainly, section 7(2)(c) would still be applicable. I can understand where the member is coming from, but this is not going to put too many restrictions and too many limitations on the minister. The minister, it is our interpretation of this, can still change their mind and delete a term or a condition from an enforcement order or cancel it. They still have those options.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, it is 4:25 p.m. According to Standing Order 4(3) we will now rise and report.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports some progress on the following bill: Bill 19. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It has been another excellent week of some excellent progress, as has been identified. On that note, I would move that we now call it 4:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:26 p.m. to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 27th Legislature - 2nd Session (2009)

Activity to April 23, 2009

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 200 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills with lower numbers are Government Bills. Bills numbered Pr1, etc., are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If it comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. [The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Today's prayer was authored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill. Let us be ever mindful of our responsibilities as elected officials. Give us the wisdom to serve for the common good of all Albertans, and help us to carry out our duties with respect and courtesy for all of our colleagues in this Assembly. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I would now like to invite all to participate in the singing of our national anthem. It will be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau. Please participate in the language of one's choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Chair of Committees.

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a unique group of individuals who are visiting the Legislature today. Joining us for their annual visit are some of the executive members from the Pacific Northwest Economic Region. PNWER has a great tradition that the current executive travels to all jurisdictions within PNWER. We're very pleased to have them here with us today and tomorrow meeting with ministers, members, and government departments. They've taken this opportunity to look at best practices that affect everyone in this jurisdiction, including energy, environment, health, and border issues. Mr. Speaker, the individuals are seated in your gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and remain standing when I call their names: Senator Lesil McGuire from the state of Alaska; MLA Mike Chisholm from the Saskatchewan Party, the government of Saskatchewan; Wendy Baldwin, consul and program manager for the consulate general's office in Seattle; Matt Morrison, the executive director of PNWER; and David Kettles, U.S. relations for International and Intergovernmental Relations. I'd like to ask the Assembly to greet them with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through to all members of this Assembly two very important people seated in your gallery this afternoon. With us this afternoon is Stan Woloshyn, a friend and former colleague, who served the constituents of Stony Plain and the people of Alberta for many years as an MLA and minister. Joining him is his grandson Scott Woloshyn, who attends St. Marguerite school in the constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. With your permission I would ask our special guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a rather large group of grade 6 students from St. Marguerite Catholic school in Spruce Grove. They're accompanied by a long list of teachers and parent helpers, which I'll go through in a moment. We have 110 students in the galleries accompanied by teachers Miss Lori Green, Mr. Joel Boyko, Mrs. Lori-Lee Carriere, Mrs. Judy Monea, Mr. Denis MacNeil and parent helpers Mrs. Brenda Canfield, Mrs. Sheri Ratsoy, Ms Kim Johnston, Mr. Larry Krahn, Mrs. Kerri Sutherland, Mr. Mike Woloshyn, Mr. Trevor Lein, Mrs. Carmen Victoor, Mrs. Jacquie Frend, Mrs. Monica Halvorson, Ms Shelley Bulie, Mrs. Tara Kozdrowski, Mrs. Patti Kocon, Mr. Paul Richard, Mr. Harold Properzi, Mrs. Rena Nielsen, Mr. Mitch Flaman, Mr. Richard Stirrett, Mr. Bryan Fehr, Mrs. Shannon Matsuba, and Mrs. Tammy Walsh. Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, they are in both galleries, 137 guests in all. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: I'm sure you bought lunch for them all.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members today a group of students and parents and helpers from Rimbey elementary school. There are 20 grade 6 students, very bright and eager kids, that asked good questions this afternoon; their teacher, Mrs. Cathy Coers; and some parents and helpers, Ms Lennie McFadyen, Mrs. Glenis Shaw, Mrs. Holly Trenson, Mrs. Margaret Tanasiuk, Mrs. Laureen Morton, Ms Pam Elliot, Mr. Glen Clark, and Mrs. Frances Beagle. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you 18 students and six adult chaperones, including their teacher, Heather Hempstock, from Bishop Routhier elementary school. Bishop Routhier elementary school is located in the Peavine Métis settlement, about 350 kilometres north of here. I don't know which gallery they're seated in, but I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a great group of kids. On Sundays when I go from MLA, I turn into a Sunday school teacher, so this is my Sunday school class. They're up visiting, and I'd ask them to rise as I name them: Jenae Feddock, Laura Stringham, Taylor Stevens, Jaden Feddock, Becky Cooper, Jon MacDonald, Linden MacMillan, Scott Broadhurst, Chris Pinter, and Myrna MacMillan, who is helping me today.

They're about to go and take part in some tourism in this province at West Edmonton Mall after question period. I'd ask that we all give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly today people I consider to be friends and, of course, colleagues. They represent the county of Camrose. They're up here in Edmonton today doing some work, and we had the opportunity, myself and the Member for Leduc-Beaumont-Devon, to have lunch with them and hear some of the things they're working on. I would like to have them stand as I call their names. They are the reeve, Don Gregorwich; councillors Kathleen Ireland, Harvey Benke, Glen Nelson, Doug Lyseng, and Al Radke; and Steven Gerlitz, administrator. They're behind me up here. I guess they've got us surrounded. I'd ask my colleagues to extend the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three guests joining us in the gallery today, all of whom have come to hear my member's statement and to express their concern about the fate of the Wild Rose Foundation and its funding. The first person I'd like to introduce is Danisha Bhaloo, who is the director of programming for the Edmonton inner-city children's project. This is a 14-year old project that has been providing recreational and educational programming to youth in the McCauley-Boyle Street community. Danisha, would you please stand?

Heather McPherson, please stand. She's the executive director for the Alberta Council for Global Cooperation, and with her is Auralia Brooke, who is the research and administrative officer for the same organization. The Alberta Council for Global Cooperation is a coalition of voluntary-sector organizations located in Alberta and working locally and globally to achieve sustainable human development.

Please join me in welcoming my guests to the Alberta Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you my first granddaughter, and first grandchild, Alyssa. She is a beautiful seven-pound, four-ounce little girl. Since she was only born 15 hours ago, she has to join us by television today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Pacific Northwest Economic Region

Mr. Mitzel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. PNWER, or the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, is a formal organization established in 1991 with seven original legislative jurisdictions: Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Alaska, British Columbia, and Alberta. The Yukon joined in 1994. In 2008 Saskatchewan became a partner as well.

Our former colleague Jim Horsman is one of the founders of PNWER. The original vision was to establish a region-wide organization that would address common interests and concerns, including energy, environment, climate change, agriculture, and, last but not least, border issues and trade movement of goods and services across our common borders, to reduce congestion.

PNWER has set itself some lofty goals, including promoting greater regional collaboration, enhancing the competitiveness of the region in both domestic and international markets, leveraging regional influence in Ottawa and Washington, DC, and achieving continued economic growth while maintaining the region's natural beauty and environment. I strongly believe that PNWER is reaching and surpassing these goals, and we should all be very proud.

After so many years PNWER has become so respected that many other areas are trying to use this association as a model to improve their respective relationships. The midwestern United States is looking at PNWER for keys on how to build on their own organizations.

I'm very proud and pleased that PNWER is very well respected in both Ottawa and Washington, DC. Along with my colleagues from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Calgary-Bow, and Calgary-North Hill, thanks for the opportunity to represent Alberta at PNWER.

Mr. Speaker, everyone was working in isolation on the issues that their jurisdictions faced, and only after meeting did everyone begin to realize how many of the PNWER jurisdictions are facing the same issues, thus the obvious need for working together.

Under the great leadership of the CEO, Mr. Matt Morrison, PNWER has indeed become greatly successful. PNWER has a great future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Wild Rose Foundation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Towards the end of March I began receiving phone calls, e-mails, and letters from people concerned that the Wild Rose Foundation would lose its funding in this year's budget, and on April 7 the monies available under the Ministry of Culture and Community Spirit to the NGO volunteer sector were cut by $7 million. This decision continues to be strongly opposed by members of the human services and voluntary sector.

There are two major problems that I have with this cut, and the first is practical. The government has eliminated all funding for the international development program, $1.3 million, cutting off support to a number of Alberta groups that work to better lives all over the world. The minister has also eliminated the $4.7 million grant pool that targeted volunteerism in human services in Alberta. Groups that offer counselling to AISH recipients, support for seniors, help to new Canadians to access services, and that support volunteerism have all told me that this cut will put their services in doubt at a time when they're needed more than ever.

The minister has told organizations who received grants from Wild Rose that they can apply under CIP or CFEP. How cruel. There's no extra money in either of those programs. In fact, CIP's budget has been reduced by $1.1 million. Nonprofit organizations will be competing with community groups, municipalities, arts groups, education, and others vying for CIP money, not just the same pie and more forks but a tartlet and more forks.

That leads me to the second problem, and it relates to this government's approach. It's an approach that they've used in health care, in human rights, and now in the NGO voluntary sector. This government divides and conquers. It cuts the most vulnerable first and then plays each vulnerable group against each other. In the budget debate the minister repeatedly said, “Well, which sector should I cut, then?” or “Would you rather I cut the arts?” It’s a ridiculous argument, particularly in light of the billions of questionable expenditures this government has wasted in health care reorganization, bonuses to well-paid deputy ministers, and a royalty scheme that nets us less money from our natural resources.

*As one person put it, we are all intricately woven together to create the fabric of our community: arts, culture, film, theatre, sport, museums, health, and human service. The government has failed the nonprofit sector, it has failed to support social development, and it has failed to provide a budget that supports strong, vital communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Vision Education Alberta

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One reason that Alberta is known for having one of the best education systems in the world is because it is a priority for our government to ensure that every student has access to high-quality learning opportunities. Students with disabilities may require extra supports to achieve their educational goals. This government, along with education stakeholders and community groups, is committed to ensuring that these students get the services they need to maximize their learning opportunities and outcomes and fully develop their personal potential.

The services for students with vision loss initiative was launched in May 2008 with a $9 million government commitment to enhance educational supports for students who are blind or visually impaired. Through this initiative, I’m pleased to say, Alberta students with vision loss can now access online resources, training, and support through one window, the new Vision Education Alberta website. The Minister of Education officially launched the website today over the noon hour.

Vision.alberta.ca is a unique place for Alberta students with vision loss, their families, classroom teachers, educational assistants, vision teachers, other vision specialists, and education stakeholders to access important information, including, Mr. Speaker, news and upcoming events; loan catalogues for alternative format materials, including Braille, large print, audio, and e-text; video training clips for specialized equipment; and other educational resources. This site is highly accessible for students who are blind or visually impaired, and it is designed to work co-operatively with assistive technology to ensure students fully benefit from the site’s offerings.

I’m pleased to rise today, Mr. Speaker, to honour this initiative and to encourage you and all members to visit the site to learn more valuable information about supports and services for students with vision loss.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Challenge North 2009

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the city of Cold Lake hosted the Northern Alberta Development Council’s Challenge North 2009 conference. The turnout was truly amazing, with approximately 200 delegates in attendance as well as our hon. Premier, six ministers, and 10 MLAs. It was a busy week filled with brainstorming sessions, workshops, and fun-filled activities.

Challenge North 2009 was an opportunity to share experiences, ideas, and solutions that help to outline and address the issues that northern communities are faced with. Through the discussion we were able to identify the risks, challenges, and opportunities that our communities will encounter as we move forward together. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has spoken a lot about the importance of strong municipalities as a means to create strong, vibrant communities. The conferences and the workshops like Challenge North 2009 help to build and strengthen the connections between our communities.

I would like to thank everyone who came out to Cold Lake last week to participate in the conference. I had a wonderful time, and I truly enjoyed the dialogue that took place.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Swine Flu Pandemic Planning

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The swine flu pandemic raises very real concerns for our strained health care system’s capacity to cope. As a former health officer I know the need for clear lines of authority; accurate, timely communications; and a well-supported health workforce. Last June the province’s four senior public health officers resigned en masse in large part because they felt that this government was not taking public health seriously. To the Premier: what capacity does this province have to deal with the flu pandemic?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there have been no confirmed cases of the influenza, but our health officials have been working very closely with the federal health department. We also increased surveillance for acute respiratory illnesses and are monitoring very closely. Once again, this weekend the minister’s staff was working very closely with the federal government.

Dr. Swann: In crowded emergency waiting rooms and clinics a flu virus spreads very quickly, very easily. What is being planned to prevent this?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Leader of the Opposition, with his background and training, will agree that it’s incumbent on all of us as members of this Assembly not to cause undue concern. The situation is such that our chief medical officer of health has put Alberta Health Services on high alert to ensure that anything that has indications of symptoms is brought to the attention immediately. As the Premier has indicated, there are no cases in Alberta at this stage although there are some elsewhere in the country. We continue to work with the federal government on this situation.

Dr. Swann: Well, every day we have people crammed into hospital rooms, gurneys in hallways, waiting in emergency departments. How will the system cope with increased demands of a pandemic?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we want to ensure that – and this is in the statement from the chief medical officer of health yesterday – the first contact if someone has concerns is with the Health Link to ensure that the right advice is given. Ideally we want to ensure that we’re treating these situations seriously but not necessarily in the public institutions, so we’ve done a couple of things. As of tomorrow the provincial lab here in Edmonton will be doing testing. It’ll be a 24-hour turnaround, so we’ll have results much quicker than we are today by having to send it out of province.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

*The text in italics exceeded the time limit and was not read in the House.

Physician Supply

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Alberta Health Services has quietly implemented an astonishing and unprecedented province-wide freeze on new physician hiring. We will not even be replacing retiring physicians. Instead of fulfilling his election promise, the Premier has supported that decision and is doing the opposite of what was promised. To the Premier: did the Premier approve this recent decision to freeze physician hiring?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we remain committed to our overall goal of increasing the number of trained physicians here in the province of Alberta. We've increased the number of seats in our training universities. Those physicians, of course, will take time to be trained and implemented into the workforce. But we know that we have some catch-up to do in terms of not only physicians but nurses as well and other health care professionals because we've seen an increase in our population and also an increase in need for the kind of services we provide.

Dr. Swann: Well, clearly the Premier doesn't get it, that the primary health care system is in serious jeopardy, and therefore the people of Alberta are in serious jeopardy. Which other vital health professionals are on the chopping block, Mr. Premier? Nurses, lab technicians? Where are we going from here?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with this issue about reductions the health budget in this province has seen the largest increase compared to other departments. Some departments got zero. Some got a modest increase of 2 per cent. Health got an increase of 4.7 per cent to ensure that we keep the momentum, keeping as many people as possible employed in delivering health services in the province. Was it a cut? No. It was an increase in the budget. So I don't know where they're coming from. They are saying that there are cuts and cuts. There's more money going into health at a very, very difficult time and economic situation.

Dr. Swann: Again to the Premier: how much money are you planning to save with these freezes on physicians?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's actually an increase in the budget of 4.7 per cent. You know, years before the percentage of increase was 10 to 14 per cent. We know – Albertans have told us – that if we keep increasing one budget at that rate while the projected increase in economic growth is dropping, then we will not be able to sustain this very good system we enjoy for the next generation. That is important. Always look to how you can help the next generation and sustain this very good program that we enjoy.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Precision Drilling Corporation

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The oil patch is a small world, where everybody knows everyone else and deals are often made over a handshake. If what ends up as a multimillion dollar merger or acquisition begins as a casual conversation between two insiders who have worked together on deals before, what business is it of ours in this House as long as it's just business? But if the public sector or public money is involved in any way, then it is the business of this House because then it involves the public interest. To the minister of finance: is the minister aware that the vice-chair of AIMCo and the founder of Precision Drilling are long-standing friends and business partners? I will table the relevant documents at the appropriate time.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, no, I'm not aware of that, and I guess I would have to ask: what business is it of this House? We have deliberately, by legislation, created a Crown corporation that is at arm's length. We neither politically interfere, nor do we get engaged in screening of investments, nor do I see the relevancy of it in this particular situation. I would assume that that connection must be made because right at this point I fail to see the relevancy.

Mr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said, I will table the appropriate documents for the minister to take a look at. Perhaps then she will see the potential conflict of interest here.

Can the minister produce proof to this House that the vice-chair of AIMCo recused himself from absolutely all discussions of this deal going back to mid-March, when it was first offered, or even earlier, when the idea would have first been raised?

Ms Evans: You know, my hon. colleague the President of the Treasury Board is absolutely right. They are not understanding, Mr. Speaker, in the opposition benches that AIMCo as a Crown corporation does not in fact consult with us in any way, give us any of the information. They have their own rules to follow. They are subject to consideration by the board. The board does its due diligence through the staff relative to investments they make. The best reason to have us not interfere politically is that you can't imagine how politically polarized that would be. We are no different than the Canada pension plan, which is totally separate. They go even further than we do to make sure that the audit is separate. Mr. Speaker, we are not involved in the day-to-day operation of AIMCo. I have no knowledge of this.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Evans: And, actually, I would suggest . . .

The Speaker: No. The hon. member has been recognized, please.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to ask the minister if she would please review what happened through the course of this deal and come back tomorrow and assure the House that there were no conflicts of interest and that all appropriate procedures and codes of conduct were followed.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, again, I'm not sure it's even appropriate to have this conversation on the floor of the House. This is a question that should be provided in writing to the chair of the AIMCo board. The AIMCo is accountable for it; this House is not. If this House starts taking the time to go through all of the minutiae of the detail there of AIMCo, then we're not doing the business of this House. These kinds of concerns can be tabled in letters to Mr. Charles Baillie, who is the chair of AIMCo and who has been duly appointed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Swine Flu Surveillance Measures

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While the swine flu virus has been spreading, this government has caused disarray in the public health system and has shrouded the department of health in secrecy. The minister forced top health officials out of the system, allowed syphilis infections to spread, and now he's keeping plans to monitor swine flu a secret. When his department spokesman was asked what specific measures were being taken to monitor the outbreak in Alberta, he refused to answer. My question is to the Premier. How can we know if your precautions against swine flu are sufficient when your health minister won't even tell us what he's doing to keep swine flu under control in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, once again the leader of the third party has made some allegations against the minister. The minister can respond.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the chief medical officer of health issued a statement yesterday. The statement is pretty clear. The same individual is holding a media conference as we speak, just to in fact actually say the same thing he said yesterday. I'm not sure why the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is making those accusations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the official for the department refused to say what surveillance methods were in place. How can Albertans have confidence in a government that claims to have surveillance measures in place for swine flu but won't say what they are? Swine flu could be the next pandemic, and this government is refusing to tell Albertans how our province is monitoring infection. Telling people to call Health Link if they've been infected isn't good enough. Albertans deserve to know what the government is doing . . .

The Speaker: Okay. There is a time frame, hon. member. Now I will recognize the hon. minister.

2:00

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I guess I have some difficulty understanding this particular member's motives here. What he is suggesting, if I hear him correctly, is that he doesn't believe the chief medical officer of health. He wants to hear from a spokesman from the Department of Health and Wellness. Well, how absurd can you get? We have the chief medical officer of health, who is clearly in charge of this particular issue, who is in contact with the federal Public Health Agency, other provincial agencies, issuing a statement yesterday, meeting through the media today, and somehow this individual calls it secrecy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, his own official refused to answer a direct question with respect to this matter, so I'll just ask the minister. What are the surveillance methods that your department is using in order to track the growth of the pandemic, or potential pandemic, of swine flu and its entry into this province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, again, I would suggest that all of us in this House, Mr. Speaker, have the responsibility to show some leadership, to show some leadership that doesn't start to try and make accusations that something is happening that isn't. The chief medical officer of health has been very clear. There are no confirmed cases in this province. I spoke to him just before coming into the House. He says that nothing else has changed. We have outstanding individuals in Alberta Health Services whose job it is to ensure that the health of Albertans is protected. I trust them, not him.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

High-risk Offender Website

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently there are approximately 19,000 registered sex offenders in Canada. Each and every one of them has committed horrific crimes that are devastating to their victims. Cory Bitternose is a repeat sex offender so violent that his sneaker imprints stayed on the face of a woman he viciously attacked. Today Bitternose is facing 46 separate charges in connection with recent attacks plus, ironically, one charge for failing to comply with the national sex offender registry. My questions are all to the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. How many registered sex offenders live in Alberta, and how many are featured on Alberta's high-risk offender website?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, according to the statistics from the national registry there are currently more than 1,600 registered sex offenders living in this province. Alberta's high-risk offender website contains a list of approximately 70 offenders who have been released into the community and are considered a high risk to reoffend. Our website is a repository of all high-risk offender public notification news releases that have been issued by police agencies in Alberta. Albertans can access the website if they want to know if a high-risk offender has been released into their community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Was Mr. Bitternose on Alberta's high-risk offender website? If not, why not?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, the individual the hon. member is referring was not on our high-risk offender website. For an individual to be put on our website, they have had to have been the subject of a media notification by police alerting the public to their release into a community. Our website has never intended to be an active list of all known registered sex offenders or high-risk offenders in Alberta. As for the national registry it is not a publicly accessible site. It is used as a tool by law enforcement to keep tabs on registered sex offenders.

Mrs. Forsyth: Given that the national sex offender website is broken, with ineffective legislation and faulty technology, would the minister consider adopting Ontario's national sex offender website, which is considered the best in the country?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, the question is very timely. Just this week a parliamentary review began on the Sex Offender Information Registration Act. This is the legislation that covers how sex offenders are registered in a national program. We anticipate some consultation by the federal government with the provinces and territories on expected recommendations from the review that will lead to amendments and improvements on a national system. A more effective national system will allow us to look at what all provinces could and should be doing within their own jurisdictions.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our emergency room staff are overworked, stressed, and some are reluctantly considering leaving the province's health care system because of the extraordinary pressures today. To the minister: what does the minister have to say to the 200,000 desperate Albertans who even now cannot get a family doctor?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, we have been very clear in this particular Assembly that solving our family doctor issue is not just simply a matter of finding more doctors. We need to ensure that we have a delivery model in place that uses all of our professions to the utmost of their abilities, and we are in the middle of ensuring that that is taking place. We will continue our recruitment of doctors. There is recruitment that takes place by some doctors in this province from outside. It's a number of situations.

Dr. Swann: That sounds like a contradiction to me, Mr. Speaker: continuing recruitment when there's a freeze on new hiring. Maybe the minister could explain that.

Thousands of cancer patients waiting for treatment will now face even longer wait times because this government refuses to hire new doctors. What is your response to Albertans, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'm not sure where this particular member is getting his information relative to a hiring freeze, Mr. Speaker. There was a situation with a recruitment process through the former Capital health region of recruiting foreign physicians. There were a dozen or so who had offers of employment extended, and those are being honoured. There were a number of other discussions where no particular offer had been extended, no even verbal commitment had been made. In light of the current economic situation that Alberta Health Services finds itself in, it is reviewing this situation.

Dr. Swann: Well, how can a minister of this government justify spending $35 million on horse racing, $25 million on a greenwashing campaign, and we can't afford to hire new physicians in this province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just explained in my answer that we are in fact hiring new physicians. Every particular program that Alberta Health Services has inherited from the various health regions is being assessed to ensure that we're getting value for dollars. This particular opposition is continually giving us good advice on how to save money. This is exactly what Alberta Health Services is doing, ensuring that their expenditures are justified before they simply write a blank cheque.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Apprenticeship, Trade, and Occupation Management System

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Some apprentices in my constituency and other parts of Alberta are waiting much longer than usual to get their exam results, record book updates, and other services they require. My first question is to the Minister of Advanced Education and Technology. What is the reason that these apprentices are being forced to wait so long for their results?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, recently we implemented a new computer system to increase the efficiencies in the apprenticeship system now and well into the future. As you well know and this House knows, we have extended the number of apprentices considerably over the last few years. This new system is going to be online. It's online access 24/7. When we launched the new system province-wide this February, the sheer volume of the records that we were transferring over did cause some delays in normal client service cycles. Our first priority – and it remains our first priority – is restoring client services so that the apprentices can get their marks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: how many apprentices in the system have been affected?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, the exam records of approximately 6,000 of the 70,000 apprentices that we have who were originally caught in this transition process is kind of the number where we're at. So far some of the things that we've done to get them back on track is that we've allocated more staff from the department to work on going back through our manual system. The exam records of about 2,000 of those apprentices are left to catch up on, but we expect to be caught up to those in about the next 10 days. There will be some further delays because this is an ongoing process. We continually have new apprentices coming into the system and registering. Front-line staff offices across the province are going to be working directly with the affected Albertans and ensuring that the client services are met.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: why did the department need a new system, and when will it be fully functional?

2:10

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, it's been about 25 years since the system has been updated. That's quite a long time. As you well know, there have been a lot of changes in our province over the last 25 years; in fact, a lot of expansion of the apprenticeship training program, a lot of expansion in what is going on in terms of how those apprentices are marked and the exams are done.

These systems are fundamental to record the accuracy and preserve the integrity of the apprenticeship training certificates. We knew that as we ramped up the number of apprentices that we have up to the 70,000 mark, we were going to need a new system to ensure the type of client service that apprentices in Alberta have come to expect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Ms. Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A game of semantics about climate change is played in Alberta. Instead of having a system which relates to other countries, we have a made-in-Alberta version that doesn't compare to anyone and which allows Alberta to claim all kinds of things out of context. The 6.5 megatonnes reported by the minister last week does not represent an actual reduction in greenhouse gases; it's a reduction of intensity of emissions. My question is to the Minister of Environment. In 2007 the large emitters reported 114 megatonnes of greenhouse gas emissions. Can the minister confirm what that number was in 2008?

Thank you.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the issue of savings is related to the requirements under our legislation that companies reduce their emissions over the base that was established in 2007. The member can be assured that there was a 6.5 million tonne reduction in emissions over what would have been in place had we done nothing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister. In the 2002 climate change strategy the target for 2010 was to reduce emissions, emission intensity, by 20 megatonnes. Given that it has taken so many years to reduce greenhouse gas emission intensity by 6.5 megatonnes, is the minister on track to see this reduction of some 13.5 megatonnes in the next 10 months?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the climate change strategy that this government tabled some time ago and that we are in the process of implementing projects that there will be a bending down of the curve notwithstanding a significant amount of economic growth, notwithstanding a few million more people living in Alberta, with a few hundred thousand new homes and automobiles and everything else associated with that growth by 2020, and we believe that we are on track to achieve that.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the same minister: given the concerns raised by the Auditor General report and others about the ability to measure and compare reductions and the language used when this government reports reductions in greenhouse gas emissions, will the minister commit to using more accurate and comparable terminology when discussing Alberta's emissions? I live in hope.

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, contrary to what this member would have us believe, Alberta is setting the standards. Alberta is establishing the protocols for measuring. Other jurisdictions look to Alberta for our experience, having been one of the only jurisdictions that has been requiring measurement since 2003 and that has had legislated reductions in place since 2007.

Vehicular Accident Statistics

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, vehicle collisions in Alberta seem to go up every year, and 1 out of 4 collisions in Alberta involve speeding. In 2006 the sheriffs began to patrol and conduct traffic enforcement on Alberta highways as a way to bring down collisions. My first two questions are for the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. How can Albertans know whether we're getting value for money by having sheriffs patrol Alberta's highways?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, traffic safety is, obviously, a key element of safe and secure communities, and Alberta's traffic sheriffs are working diligently to ensure safety and reduced collisions on our highways. Through collaboration between sheriffs, local police agencies, and the RCMP aggressive drivers and speeders are routinely targeted and held accountable for driving habits that can lead to serious or deadly collisions on our highways. We continually review and assess how traffic safety is enforced so that collisions can be reduced. We also receive many letters and e-mails from Albertans thanking our sheriffs for the job they're doing on our highways, and many of these individuals comment on the reduced speeds they now see on our highways. So, yes, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Brown: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll ask the question in a different way. What performance measures is his department using to assess the cost-effectiveness on an ongoing basis of the sheriffs in making our highways safer? What performance measures is he using?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my earlier answer, we get e-mails and letters from everyday Albertans expressing appreciation for the work our sheriffs are doing driving up and down our highways. I personally can see that speeds are reduced on our highways. Again, that's in large part due to the great work that our sheriffs are doing in this province.

Dr. Brown: Mr. Speaker, it's almost four months since the last calendar year ended. However, my office has been advised that even preliminary data for 2008 collisions won't be available until late fall this year. My final supplementary question is to the Minister of Transportation. Why are data on vehicle collisions, injuries, and deaths not more readily available so that we can assess the effectiveness of the sheriffs department?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, the collision stats are just about always released in the fall. The reason for that is that we need to receive and compile all of the different data, but we need to give time to the RCMP, the sheriffs, all the other enforcement agencies to compile all of their statistics. That said, traffic safety is a priority for this government, and as soon as we get the results, I will compile them and make sure that the hon. member gets those results. I've just been releasing the '07 results, and they've been getting all of those stats. That was from the fall of last year.

Taser Use by Law Enforcement Personnel

Mr. Hehr: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General isn't halfway through testing the taser arsenals of the Alberta police services, and already 50 tasers have been found to be operating outside of the recommended limits. Given these results, will the Solicitor General consider a moratorium on the use of the remaining untested tasers in this province?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, of the 400 and some-odd tasers that we tested, the ones that were pulled out of service were pulled out simply because they did not meet the manufacturer's specifications. When we made that decision, we weighed the possibility of public danger versus officer safety, and we believe that the prudent decision has been made. The remaining tasers will stay in operation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you. Are you not worried? With 50 tasers found in the first round of testing to be operating outside the limits, wouldn't it be more prudent to pull the remaining things before testing is done to give people some measure of assurance?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, we weighed that balance between public safety, officer safety versus pulling all the tasers, and I stand behind our decision. In fact, the results that we received were very technical results of testing. There was not one taser that operated from an amperage basis above the manufacturer's specifications. In total energy they were maybe one or two per cent higher. Again, they were pulled because they simply did not meet the manufacturer's specifications.

Mr. Hehr: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that a California study indicated that you are six times more likely to die in police custody after having been tasered, will the Solicitor General commit to a mandatory review by the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team for any incident where a taser is deployed during arrest or detention of an accused?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to speak to the study that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo mentioned, the California study, when he talks about six times the fatality rate over the course of a year. The person who did that study did not even check with the police jurisdictions to find out whether or not a taser had been used in the arrest of that particular individual.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mental Health Services

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government covered up the mental health report because it exposed their long-standing failure to fix Alberta's mental health system. The report said that the number of psychiatric beds in Alberta is well under half the national average, and since the NDP made it public, the health minister has been twisting the truth and holding up a criminal diversion strategy as a mental health fix.

Mr. Liepert: Point of order.

Ms Notley: To the minister: why won't you stop stealing bed numbers from other ministries which are not designed for general mental health patients and create real spaces to help some of the 20 per cent of Albertans who suffer from mental illness?

2:20

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the member is talking about. This particular province has invested some 600 million dollars into mental health facilities. We've been bringing on new beds. We continue to bring on new beds as part of our SafeCom initiative, and we will continue to do that.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, by chirping about these 80 beds and the safe communities strategy, this minister is playing bait and switch with people who need psychiatric care. He's piling onto the same 80 beds that the Attorney General has already earmarked to accept people involved in the justice system. Again to the minister of health: why are you using a crime-reduction strategy to cover up your failure to provide enough mental health care for the 20 per cent . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, hold on. The first time you used "twisting the truth," and now you're accusing the minister of covering up. I mean, let's get some temperate language in here if you want me to recognize you.

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, this particular government believes that you get a much better success rate if you work together as departments rather than separately. We've got an initiative under safe communities that involves some half a dozen or more departments of government. It is working well. We are continuing to put new beds into the system. Whether they are beds that are for mental illness or addictions, it's all connected to health care.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, last week the Attorney General said in committee that those beds were designed for people in the justice system. So for the rest of Albertans who have mental health problems, where are we? The number of psychiatric beds in Alberta is less than half the national average, there is little or no access to the most basic of mental health services in regions across this province, and for decades this government has rejected the need for adequate community mental health services. Why is this minister more focused on keeping the report secret instead of taking responsibility for this government's failures so far and adopting the recommendations of the report?

Mr. Liepert: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to refer this question to the Attorney General because the member is so offside in her numbers that it needs to be corrected.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to discuss this issue, I would say, not to clarify this issue. What this government does is treat all Albertans in the place that they need to be treated. When we were discussing last week how we would use mental health beds that were connected to the safe communities initiative, we talked about recognizing the fact that there might be people in the criminal justice system that had some other need. We don't categorize people as having a mental health issue or being a criminal. We will take a comprehensive approach to mental health and safe communities in co-operation with each other.

Minimum Wage Exemptions

Mr. Horne: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently I met with a constituent who drew to my attention a website operated by the Edmonton Social Planning Council. The website includes a forum where people can discuss issues which concern them. A recent topic in the forum concerned Alberta's Employment Standards Code, and the suggestion in the discussion was that the code allows for exemptions to the minimum wage for persons with disabilities. So I'd like to ask the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration how many companies have permission from the government to pay disabled individuals less than the minimum wage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is quite right. This provision allowing exemptions to the minimum wage does exist in the Employment Standards Code. However, there have been no permits issued or renewed since January of 2006, and no permits are currently in effect. As such, employees are entitled to the current minimum wage of $8.80 per hour.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for that answer. To the same minister: given, then, that no permits have been issued in the recent past, why does this provision exist in the Employment Standards Code?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, the provisions for minimum wage exemptions in the Employment Standards Code have existed for decades. When first enacted, they reflected a different philosophy towards disabled individuals than does exist today. It was seen as a way to support the integration of persons with disabilities into the workforce. When we receive a permit request, our employment standards staff work with the employers to determine alternatives to issuing that particular permit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the explanation.

Some of the respondents in this online conversation are maintaining that there are still cases in the city of Edmonton where disabled workers are receiving less than the minimum wage. Finally, then, to the same minister: what does the minister have to say to people who are making these allegations and suggesting that disabled individuals are working in $4-an-hour positions?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm saying that we need to get the facts. Let's get the information to us. We've posted a comment on the discussion group outlining what the current requirements are, and if any Albertans feel that their entitlement to minimum wages has not been met, that they're not receiving that from their employer, I encourage them to file a formal complaint with our employment standards. There's a lot more information that's available online through employment.alberta.ca in the safe and fair workplaces section.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Temporary Foreign Workers

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was recently reported that Chinese temporary foreign workers working in Fort McMurray were paid their wages only until auditors could verify they were paid. Then the money was transferred to bank accounts in Hong Kong. In the end these workers received only 10 per cent of their total wages. My first question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why is the government of Alberta still supporting a flawed temporary foreign worker program?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, Employment and Immigration has also determined that 132 Chinese temporary foreign workers employed by SSEC Canada on the Horizon oil sands project were not paid earnings from April to July of 2007. These funds are held in the government trust account now and will be disbursed to the workers who had not been paid for their work prior to their return to China. Those funds are there, and we're trying to identify all of the workers before transferring the funds.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how much money is the government of Alberta holding for the benefit of these workers and their families?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, we've begun the process of verifying individuals' identities and establishing that process for the distribution of unpaid earnings. It sounds like there's about $3.17 million that is owing. As we collect those funds, we'll be returning those to the workers. They'll be reimbursed accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that you spent over 58,000 taxpayers' dollars touring overseas last fall, and included in that trip was one stop in China, did you ask the Chinese officials about this matter and how you could contact these individuals so that they could get the wages, the 3.17-odd million dollars that you claim they are now owed because they were cheated out of their fair wages?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, our occupational health and safety officers interviewed several of the temporary foreign workers regarding those incidents. Basically, that's how we determined that those workers had not been paid. Certainly, we are concerned. We're trying to identify the individuals that have not received their full wages to make sure that we can return those wages to them.

Direct Energy Retail Marketing

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of my constituents in Whitecourt-St. Anne have contacted my office about the confusion that they have experienced caused by different services offered by Direct Energy Regulated Services and Direct Energy Marketing Limited. My questions are all for the Minister of Service of Alberta. What are you doing, Minister, to protect Alberta's energy consumers from noncontract regulated utility services versus long-term contract unregulated services?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following complaints from consumers and an investigation by Service Alberta, Direct Energy has signed an undertaking to ensure that its salespeople are clear about the company's different retail operations. Direct Energy has submitted a plan explaining how it will accomplish this, including details of its complaint process and sales staff training. Direct Energy must fully comply with that plan by September 30, 2009. Direct Energy has also paid $5,000 to Service Alberta as a requirement of the undertaking. The $5,000 will cover the cost of investigative work my department has conducted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's fine, but it seems like the issues come from door-to-door salespeople that seem to put pressure at times on my constituents. What is the advice that this minister gives to Albertans and my constituents when these door-to-door people arrive?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are, indeed, very strict rules in place regarding what door-to-door marketers can and cannot do. Albertans who do have concerns about any practices should contact us, and we will investigate. Again, it is so important that they let us know what's happening out there. Consumers do have the right to ask questions of anyone who tries to sell them something at the door. They are under no obligation to sign any agreement for electricity or natural gas. It's entirely in their hands.

Mr. VanderBurg: My final question is to the same minister again. When the minister's department gets a concern or a complaint from one of my constituents or any Albertan, how long does it take to get back to my constituents, and how are these complaints handled directly by your department?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past seven years the government has investigated 356 complaints against energy marketers, has followed up with 169 enforcement actions ranging from warning letters to criminal prosecutions. Typically the complaints come to the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Then they are investigated by the consumer unit in Service Alberta. With the intervention of the consumer services area nearly $160,000 has been returned to Alberta consumers as a result of electricity and natural gas settlements. We will continue to monitor the company's progress to ensure that all requirements of the undertaking are fulfilled and can take further enforcement if necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

School Capital Construction

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Education trumpeted the increase of over 10,000 student spaces by 2013, claiming that it will meet Calgary's growth pressure. Since 2003 the Calgary board of education has applied the province's space utilization formula, closing 13 schools, and is projecting the closure of another 15,000 student spaces over the next 10 years, a net loss of 5,000 spaces. To the Minister of Infrastructure: will the ministries of Education and Infrastructure stop pitting urban against rural infrastructure needs and review the approval process for school capital projects province-wide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The program ministries bring the infrastructure needs to my ministry to help provide these. With respect to Calgary, that the hon. member is referring to, we have 26 major projects under way right now, 20 of which are new schools and replacement schools, and our overall projects are going to put in place 32,630 new seats for students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It's important to note that that 32,000 figure is a province-wide figure, and it isn't meeting the requirements.

Given that during the past six years only one modernization project was approved in Calgary by the Infrastructure and Education ministries, will your ministries commit to approving at least some of the 11 high-priority preservation projects identified by the Calgary board of education?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hayden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the present time there are six major modernizations, additions taking place in Calgary. We are investing in infrastructure in Alberta at two times the closest jurisdiction in the rest of the nation, so if we're being accused of investing heavily, guilty as accused.

Mr. Chase: Since the cuts of 1993 this province has not kept up with infrastructure deficit. Given that the 2003 Commission on Learning report recommends that junior kindergarten to grade 3 classes have no more than 17 students, why is it that of the 122 schools that are in the Calgary board of education's jurisdiction, 77 still have more than the recommended number? That's progress?

Mr. Hayden: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak for the Minister of Education on the programming in the schools. I can only speak to the 129 major new schools, renovations, and modernizations that are taking place right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Nuclear Power Consultation

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents have expressed strong views both for and against the option of nuclear power generation as part of Alberta's energy supply mix. Last month the report of the Nuclear Power Expert Panel was released. The panel was asked to create this report to provide a basis for informed discussion in Alberta on this issue. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Could the minister explain how Albertans can share their views on nuclear power? That's 'nuclear,' not nuclear.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly would be able to do that. There's a workbook and a survey that have been created with information from a panel report that we recently received. It's available now, as of today, on an interactive website, and Albertans can provide their input electronically. They can request a hard copy to be sent by mail. We will guarantee Albertans that completing the survey will ensure your views are considered on this topic.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was receiving pronunciation tips from my friend the Minister of Municipal Affairs if you could imagine.

My second question to the same minister: in what other ways will the consultation process engage Albertans to ensure that all views are represented?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, we encourage all Albertans to get involved in this process. We think that by completing the workbook and the survey that's attached with it, they will have an understanding of the situation and be able to be involved. But to ensure that the process is comprehensive, there will be discussion groups, selected randomly, held across the province of Alberta, there will be meetings with stakeholders, and there will be a public opinion survey on the matter. An independent research firm is managing the process for us, and we believe that all Albertans will have an opportunity to respond.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A third and final supplement-tal to the minister. There is no formal proposal placed before the Alberta government at this time to build a nuclear power facility, but there have been discussions in the province since 2007. Could the minister inform this House as to when a decision will be made on this issue?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the decision will be made when we are satisfied that Albertans have had an opportunity to voice their opinion relative to the issue. The first step was to get the facts with the expert panel report. The next step is, certainly, to hear from as many Albertans as are prepared to give their opinion. The survey will remain open until the 1st of June, and the government will consider all of this input. It's a very serious and, we think, good opportunity for all Albertans to be involved, and we think that a provincial policy could be expected before the end of the year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Cost-shared Crop and Livestock Funding

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, for a government that doesn't like to be in the business of being in business, we once again see the minister of agriculture providing subsidies to big corporate farms. The federal-provincial agribusiness programs announced last Friday will give grants ranging from $100,000 up to $5 million for cost-shared crop and livestock projects. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development: why is this government now offering hundred thousand and multimillion dollar grants to big producers when last June he announced "the end of ad-hoc funding"?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member would like to clarify just a little bit exactly what he's talking about, maybe I could answer his question.

Dr. Taft: Well, I suppose I could send the minister printouts from his own website if he's not familiar with the program.

To the same minister: given that this minister told producers last year that if they can't run a viable business, they "need to consider ways to exit the industry," why is he now giving out big grants to private agricultural businesses? What are we supposed to believe?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly pleased that he brought that little issue up about exiting the industry. What I said and what I'll have to say time and time again in front of people: when we had the program, the monies were coming; if you were considering exiting the industry, now was probably the time to do it. Never once did I say that you had to comply with anything to exit the industry.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I'll send this material to the minister. It's from his own website, his own department.

To the same minister: if corporate farms are being provided with millions of dollars in grants, can the minister at least require that they are bound by occupational health and safety legislation to protect their paid workers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I'd just like to see the list of the corporate farms that are being offered a hundred thousand dollars' worth of grants.

But getting to where he just went, it's very interesting because he is so specific on what we should do with the farm occupational health and safety standards. Do you realize how many family farms are also corporate farms? Just think about some of this.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 102 questions and responses today.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness wishes to supplement an answer given last Thursday. That will provide an opportunity for the member to whom the answer was being given to raise an additional question.

Mazankowski Alberta Heart Institute

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important that I clarify an answer that I provided to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview last week. I will table five copies of a letter from the chair of the Alberta Health Services Board, and it's relative to the Mazankowski Heart Institute. I won't read the entire letter. I'll just read a portion of it.

It is now our expectation that the building will have achieved substantial completion and hospital handover by May 31, 2009. It will take approximately two weeks for the proper authorities to inspect and issue occupancy permits. Alberta Health Services staff will occupy the building on or about June 15, 2009, to be followed shortly thereafter by patient move in to general care and intensive care units, operating theatres, and procedure rooms.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the clarification from the minister, and I think we can probably put this issue to rest if there's just one more step taken. The Alberta Health Services website has a link to a detailed description of the Mazankowski Heart Institute, and over and over for at least two dozen programs it describes the institute as if it's fully up and running and taking all kinds of patients when in fact it's not. My final request to the minister on this would be to just have Alberta Health Services take down that link until the hospital actually is functioning and taking patients.

Thank you.

Mr. Liepert: We'll forward a copy of Hansard to the CEO of Alberta Health Services, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll continue the Routine momentarily, but might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the wheelchair team who won the silver medal at the 2009 Canadian wheelchair curling championships in Halifax. We have them in the two galleries. Up in the public we have Jack Smart, the team skip, and Bridget Wilson. If they could just wave. You see that they have their silver medals around their necks. Over in the members' gallery: Bruno Yizek; Anne Hibberd and her husband, Ken Kaufman; Tony Zummack, the coach; and Martin Purvis and his wife, Fran Purvis. I'd also like to introduce Donna Elms, my constituency assistant, and Sydney Crawford, my new STEP student.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, I'll see if I can get this one right. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly, as I indicated, 24 visitors, students from the Peavine Métis settlement. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they stand as I introduce them. Miss Heather Hempstock is a teacher. Mr. Bruce Joudry is the principal. It's rare that principals come, but it's great to have him here. The parent helpers are Mr. Al Holmes, Mr. Eric Filion, Mrs. Teasa Gauchier, Mrs. Dorothy Anderson, Mrs. Juliet Gauchier, Mrs. Natalie Cunningham, and a special guest, Mr. Brian Davies, who is a former teacher from Alice Springs, Australia. He also taught in Redwater, Alberta. That's not the kicker; it's the fact that he's 94 years old, and he's now joining the students here. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: In 30 seconds from now we will continue the Routine.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Aboriginal History Quiz

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, April 24, the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations and I attended the seventh annual Aboriginal History Quiz awards day at Prince Charles elementary school. Prince Charles is a school that is designed to meet the needs of urban aboriginal children and families through the Awasis program. The school uses the Alberta learning curriculum and integrates aboriginal content into all subject areas.

The goal of the Aboriginal History Quiz is for children to develop self-awareness, self-esteem, study habits, and pride in aboriginal culture by having the opportunity to learn about their history and culture. The curriculum areas of the quiz focus on social studies, language arts, the Cree language and culture, and native studies. The hon. minister and I had a chance to hear some of the questions that were asked and were extremely impressed by their difficulty.

I would like to congratulate all of the students that participated in the quiz and awards ceremony on Friday and thank all who attended. It was a tremendous success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Wind Turbine Technician Program

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak to this House about a success story in my hometown that highlights not only some very dedicated Lethbridge folks' but also this government's commitment to the development of viable alternative energy resources.

On April 15 officials at Lethbridge College learned that the college's wind turbine technician program had been selected the winner of the 2008-2009 program excellence award from the Association of Canadian Community Colleges. The six-month program prepares graduates for immediate work in the wind turbine industry. Thanks to a partnership with BZEE, which provides similar training in Europe and sets the standard that is recognized by most major turbine manufacturers world-wide, these grads can go to work anywhere. Many choose to stay here in Alberta, but others have gone and will go on to help develop wind power around the world.

Mr. Speaker, this program is unique in Canada and attracts students from across North America and around the world. It's an unprecedented opportunity for people to pursue a career in trades and at the same time be leaders in greening our growth and developing a renewable energy resource. A total of 27 people have graduated from the wind turbine technician program since its inception in 2008. Another group is set to graduate this coming July. Thanks to their education here in Alberta, these folks will become invaluable assets in the wind energy industry in southern Alberta and ambassadors of Alberta's commitment to developing sustainable energy alternatives for the future.

Mr. Speaker, this is just one of the many examples of research into alternative energy sources in southern Alberta. The Southern Alberta Alternative Energy Partnership, which includes Economic Development Lethbridge, is looking into a number of innovative ways to develop both wind and solar power and is doing exciting work in the area of biofuels. The partnership is currently working on establishing an integrated biodiesel refinery in southern Alberta and has done extensive research into waste-to-energy treatment alternatives that will not only reduce the environmental impact but will actually turn waste into usable fuels.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give notice of a point of privilege pursuant to section 15(2) of the standing orders with respect to some interference with my role as an opposition MLA that took place last week.

2:50

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Bill 36

Alberta Land Stewardship Act

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Administrator, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

With the input of Albertans, municipalities, and business and environmental organizations this government created the land-use framework tabled in December of 2008. This framework introduces a new approach to land-use planning, one that will meet the environmental as well as the economic and social objectives of this province.

To implement the land-use framework, I rise to table Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act, for first reading. This act creates seven planning regions in Alberta. It authorizes the creation of regional plans and requires compliance with those plans. It creates new conservation and stewardship tools that will protect Alberta's natural heritage on public and private lands. The Alberta Land Stewardship Act will provide a blueprint for sustainable growth, a policy balance that meets the needs of the present generation without compromising the opportunities of future generations.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the letter I referred to earlier in question period.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to discussion in question period today I'd like to table speaking points from the minister of agriculture, where he talks about changes to agriculture funding as well as programs under that department giving grants up to $100,000 and up to $5 million.

I also have three excellent letters from constituents, each one written in detail and at length, expressing concerns about cancelling funding for the Wild Rose program. They are from Alisha Brown, program manager for Spina Bifida and Hydrocephalus Association; MacKenzie Gordon, Students International Health Association; and Leslee Greenaway, co-ordinator of the Nyarut village community development project.

My very last tabling is a letter from Alison Dinwoodie expressing her opposition to the use of taxpayer dollars for pictures of foreign beaches to rebrand Alberta, and she also objects to pharmacare costs increasing for seniors.

Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to table five copies of corporate registration documents that detail a business partnership between the founder of Precision Drilling and the vice-chair of AIMCo.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of correspondence from a constituent, Marjorie Russell, who's very concerned about the elimination of funding for chiropractic services and believes it's limited thinking on the part of the government to shut out one profession and some of the citizens who use that care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On a purported point of order the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll be very brief. It's under Standing Order 23(h), allegations against another member. I believe you have already identified the fact that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona used the term "twisting the truth." She's been here long enough to know that that's unparliamentary. This is occurring far too often in this Assembly to have decent debate, and I would ask the member to withdraw that comment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me start out by saying that I haven't yet had the opportunity to actually look at the language that's been ruled parliamentary and nonparliamentary.

I would like, however, to give just a brief background to what led to my questions and my statement. In particular, as recorded in Hansard last week, on April 20, 2009, in response to questions from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood about a mental health report which had been released and which had clearly identified a number of deficits in the provision of mental health care to the general population in need of mental health care, the minister responded, "You know, in the last year through the safe communities program we've opened up some 80 new residential beds, and in this particular budget [we have allocated] some additional 42 million dollars."

Subsequently, on the evening of April 22, while I was participating in estimates debate with the Attorney General, this issue came up. As a result I asked the Attorney General – and it's again found in Hansard – about the 80 beds which had been referred to. I said: "Now, I know the health minister spoke about 80 beds, and I believe those were talked about for last year, or are those this year?" She responded: "This year." Subsequently in that debate she said: "Forty new beds to existing programs that are already connected into the justice system and provide services." Subsequently she also said:

One of the things that we need to determine – and it's one of the reasons that we're doing this now in the second year and didn't do it immediately in the first year – is that we want to ensure that when we do that, we're going to be able to connect them to the justice system. So your question about simply passing money over and having it sort of, you know, disappear in the health budget is exactly what we don't want to [have] happen.

My concern was that in responding to the questions from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the minister implied that the 80 new beds were a response to a report prepared for the ministry of health about the deficit in mental health beds for the general noncriminal population across the province. Subsequently it became clear that the 80 beds that the minister referred to in this House as the response of his ministry to that issue were in fact clearly designated for people in the justice system. That was what was in the Attorney General's comments to me in estimates.

So are the 80 new beds the truth? Yes. Was characterizing them in that way perhaps a twisting of the truth? That's what I thought. If, however, the Speaker confirms that that characterization is too close to the line, I'm prepared to apologize, and I wait for your ruling.

The Speaker: Did I hear you correctly, hon. member? You're withdrawing the comments and apologizing? Just say "yes," and we'll move on.

Ms Notley: Yes.

The Speaker: I can go on for 10 minutes on this. I've talked about temperate language. You withdraw the thing, apologize, and we're moving on. Nobody else is participating. The matter is finished. There's nothing more, Calgary-Nose Hill. I would have introduced you, but the matter is now determined with an apology, which is the customary parliamentary tradition.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a question of privilege. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, you will speak on behalf of?

Ms Notley: Yes, I will, Mr. Speaker, if I can just find my documents.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, this seems to be pretty much your purview, with respect to you. You might want to wait around.

Mr. Liepert: I don't. I've got other things to do.

The Speaker: Well, I'm sorry.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Ms Notley: I apologize, Mr. Speaker. They are right here.

The facts of the issue relate to a matter that occurred on Thursday, April 23, at about 11:15 a.m., where the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood attempted to attend a government news conference; however, he was barred from entering Government House, where the conference was taking place. When he asked why he could not enter, security staff told him that they had received orders from the minister of health not to let him in. It is our intention to argue that barring the leader of the third party's attendance constitutes interference with his role as an MLA and is, therefore, a breach of his privilege. I believe that this is the earliest available opportunity for me to raise this point of privilege. The incident happened too late in the day on Thursday to provide notice that morning. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, therefore, provided notice prior to the deadline today.

3:00

Obstructing members in the discharge of their duties is a breach of privilege. To quote Erskine May at page 143, "The House will proceed against those who obstruct Members in the discharge of their responsibilities to the House or in their participation in its proceedings." Attending government news conferences is a necessary part of the Member for Edmonton-Highland-Norwood's job as a member of this Assembly and as the leader of the third party. As an opposition leader his role requires that he be able to obtain a full understanding of government policy to be able to provide proper critique. Following government news conferences, he is usually expected to provide comment to media. In these circumstances it is crucial that he receive the information first-hand from the government rather than have it relayed to him through members of the media who are attending the news conference.

Furthermore, Government House is a public building. When the government invites the media there for an announcement, there is no reason why Members of the Legislative Assembly should be forced to wait outside. The government, therefore, uses public resources to provide information on a significant announcement of its policy to the media while excluding members of the opposition. Members of the Assembly should have at least equal access to such announcements as members of the media.

The Speaker ruled on a similar point of privilege in this Assembly on March 5, 2003. Yes, I know it's not exactly the same point. However, the issue at that time was that the media had been briefed on a piece of legislation which was on notice on the Order Paper but had not been introduced. The Speaker at that time ruled that a prima facie case of breach of privilege existed in that instance. The argument supporting that question of privilege was that the rights of a member of the Assembly were interfered with because the member was not provided the same information that had been provided to members of the media on a bill that was about to be introduced. To quote from the Speaker's ruling as it appeared in Hansard, the department briefing provided to the media concerning Bill 19 when the bill was on notice but before it was introduced constitutes a prima facie case of privilege as it offends the dignity and the authority of this Assembly. As the chair has noted on many previous occasions, the principle of ministerial responsibility holds that ministers are responsible for the actions of their officials and, in turn, are responsible to the Assembly for those acts.

Although the question that we are dealing with today does not involve a piece of legislation and, instead, involves a public policy announcement rather than a bill, we would argue that the effect on the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's ability to fulfill his role as a member is similar. That is, the media have information about public policy before he and other members of the Assembly do, yet the media then expects the member to provide comment on that policy.

The government makes numerous announcements on policy, but it should be pointed out that the announcement on Thursday was particularly significant as it dealt with the issue of insurance coverage seniors receive for prescription drugs and had been the subject of extensive debate within this Assembly in the previous two months. Since the government's original announcement on seniors' drug coverage in December there has been considerable public debate on this issue, and the change in policy announced on Thursday was a response to that debate.

On Thursday when the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood asked the minister of health why he was barred from the news conference, his reply, as recorded in Hansard, was as follows:

I know that this particular member craves media attention, but if he'd take a look at the release that went out yesterday, it said: for news media. There are restricted areas there, and I'm afraid that, you know, it wasn't a town hall meeting. We didn't invite the president of the chamber of commerce or the mayor of Edmonton, and frankly we didn't invite the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Now, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that as a member of this Assembly commenting on an issue with respect to public policy coming through this government, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood should not be characterized as a member of the public or the president of the chamber of commerce. Rather, to do so negates his role and his ability to perform his functions as a member of this Assembly.

When the member asked the minister why the government took this step of deciding to bar the opposition from the news conference, the minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, that is just a bunch of bunk. This particular government, this particular Legislature provides more funding to that party, which is not an officially recognized party. We do things that are unprecedented in this House. For that member to stand there and say that kind of stuff is baloney.

Mr. Speaker, according to the record of the House, that is where the matter stands.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I ask that you rule that a prima facie breach of privilege has occurred. Should you so rule, pursuant to Beauchesne's 114(2) I would move that this matter of a point of privilege be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I will recognize additional participants on this matter.

Normally at 3 o'clock we sort of come to Orders of the Day, and that allows individuals to bring a certain type of refreshment into the Chamber. Today, if you wish to have coffee now, consider it so. It can be brought into the Chamber, but this is really nonprecedential, of course.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to this purported point of privilege. I would like to refer to our own

Standing Order 15(1) where it states: "A breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any Member constitutes a question of privilege."

Then I also refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne 31(10).

The question has often been raised whether parliamentary privilege imposes on ministers an obligation to deliver ministerial statements and to make announcements and communications to the public through the House of Commons or to make these announcements or statements in the House rather than outside the chamber. The question has been asked whether Hon. Members are entitled, as part of their parliamentary privilege, to receive such information ahead of the general public. I can find no precedent to justify this suggestion.

Mr. Speaker, clearly, in my humble opinion, the reference in Beauchesne is almost a complete parallel to the circumstances that were described by the member. That being said, it is generally a practice of the government to include MLAs and opposition members, in particular, in news conferences. In this particular instance there was a technical briefing, that is not infrequently attended solely by members of the media. There was also a news conference that followed.

The issue of the previous ruling by this Speaker refers to briefing of the media of legislation prior to its being introduced in this House. Clearly, we were not dealing in this instance with legislation. We were dealing with an announcement of government policy. I refer you back to my reference in Beauchesne. That being said, Mr. Speaker, the Premier has made it clear through public statements that he considers it standard practice that opposition members should be involved and invited to government news conferences. That being the case, clearly there is direction being given to all members of cabinet with respect to the involvement of the opposition in future news conferences.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this instance has perhaps drawn the issue to the attention of all members and to the attention of the Premier and the government in particular. But I must reiterate that this clearly is not a question of privilege. However, I think that there is a reasonable solution that has been proposed and thereby adopted by the government for future reference.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to offer some comments and arguments on this particular point of privilege raised by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The Official Opposition, of course, has a keen interest in the outcome of this as, in fact, the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Official Opposition critic on seniors had preceded the leader of the third party to this particular government occasion and had likewise been obstructed from entering the premises and instructed to leave.

Mr. Speaker, I think this question of privilege is about interference. The way I see it, there are two issues to this. One is the obstruction in being able to enter the facilities. The second is whether the members were impeded in their work. In the case of our two members being refused access, their way being barred in attempting to participate in the media conference, was their privilege as members of this House breached? We have some historical background to that. Particularly, in Beauchesne 24 it talks about:

The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members.

In addition to that, I am guided by what appears in Marleau and Montpetit on page 55, in which it notes, "Thus, privilege came to be recognized as only that which was absolutely necessary for the House to function effectively and for the Members to carry out their responsibilities as Members."

I think that what is at the heart of this matter is the obstruction to Government House. If I may refer the Speaker to M and M, page 51, "The House has the authority to invoke privilege where its ability has been obstructed in the execution of its functions or where Members have been obstructed in the performance of their duties." Certainly, I think that to have an Official Opposition leader, a leader of a third party, and an Official Opposition critic attempting to attend a significant announcement of a change in government policy is part of the performance of their duty.

Further, I note that on page 65 of Marleau and Montpetit, referencing a report during the 13th Parliament, a special committee stated that "the purpose of privilege was 'to allow Members of the House of Commons to carry out their duties as representatives of the electorate without undue interference'." I argue that the barring of the way to the Government House media conference is undue interference. Their way was obstructed on the instructions of the government.

Finally, I note on page 85 of Marleau and Montpetit:

In circumstances where Members claim to be directly obstructed, impeded, interfered with or intimidated in the performance of their parliamentary duties, the Speaker is apt to find that a prima facie breach of privilege has occurred. This may be physical obstruction, assault or molestation.

Further, appearing on that same page is the reference that on October 30, 1989, Speaker Fraser ruled that a prima facie case of privilege existed when [the then Member for Windsor West,] Herb Gray . . . raised a question of privilege claiming that a RCMP roadblock on Parliament Hill, meant to contain demonstrators, constituted a breach of Members' privileges [because it denied] them access to the House of Commons.

We recognize a number of locations where members carry out their duties. This Assembly, this Chamber, is one. Where committees meet is a second. I believe Government House would be included in that as a place where we do business. The Annex to the Legislative Assembly is another place where members carry out their parliamentary duties and carry on their business. So this Chamber is not the only location, not the only precinct in which that business is carried out. I argue that barring a member's entry into any of those other locations I've outlined is an unnecessary obstruction and does impede the member's ability to perform their parliamentary duties. Of course, the roles of the Official Opposition and of other parties are recognized throughout Marleau and Montpetit, Beauchesne's, Maingot, and a number of others. I won't go on with various references that outline the duties of the Official Opposition there.

I think there is an argument that the physical obstruction and denial of access to the location did in this case constitute a breach of several members' privilege. I would argue that the Premier has in fact recognized that. But while I appreciate that this individual is the Premier, I would prefer to see the ruling come through the Speaker, which sets that out in Hansard and is able to be referenced henceforth by those of us in the House now and those that follow behind us, that members should not be impeded, physically particularly, in their attempts to carry out their work.

I think what's important here is the members' ability to access that policy announcement. The further communication and dealings with the media I am not as certain, in fact, are part of the members' businesses. It certainly is something we all engage in and that many of us are particularly enthusiastic to seek out. But the work that we do as legislators is a work that is focused on policy; it is focused on legislative development; it's focused on consultation with the citizens. That is the work that I think was impeded when the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Official Opposition critic for seniors, and the leader of the third party were barred access to the public policy announcement in Government House last week.

Thank you for the opportunity to present my points.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, sometimes there are situations that are different or happen at the same time and that maybe weren't preplanned. Thursday mornings this government holds its caucus meetings in Government House. We have for quite some time, and barring exception, we continue to do so. While it may be unfortunate that we had a media conference at the same time, I would suggest that on any other Thursday we would not allow the opposition members to enter Government House as we're conducting what is a critically important and necessary part of doing our business as legislators, as I'm sure they would probably keep their doors closed if they were holding a caucus meeting and we wanted to listen in. Quite frankly, I can't imagine.

Mr. Speaker, I guess, to get to the gist, I said that one thing is being barred from the facility, being stopped. The other one is about their inability to do their job. We're talking about a policy release that's not going to take effect until July of 2010. If this were an issue that was time sensitive, that would have prevented the opposition from commenting to the news before it was implemented or before it could have taken place – but this is a policy that is being developed. The minister has made absolutely no secret about it – we're going to go back and come forward with another policy paper – and made no secret that it would take effect in July of 2010. There is not an issue here of sensitivity, where the hon. members would not have time to comment. They probably have far too much time to comment without thinking about it.

If the hon. member is going to make the statement that he is unable to do his job because he was unable to get the factual information from the government news release, then he ought to be able to make the connection to us that at some time before in this House he had actually used the factual information from a government news release to help him do his job. Quite candidly, Mr. Speaker, it's simply about being in a place to contradict, to bend, to shape, to reply to whatever they need about the government news release. It has never been about them needing the context of the news release. It's about being in the right place to get in front of a camera and make negative comments about it. That's their job. That's their job, I guess.

Certainly, to satisfy myself that somehow not being allowed into the front row of the cameras at a government release around a policy paper that's not going to take effect until July of 2010 when the hon. member has shown quite candidly that not only doesn't he believe anything we say or do and is certain to repeat that – I'm not exactly sure how he could make the connection that not having a front row or having to wait half an hour to see on the news something that's not going to take effect for a year in any way, shape, or form impaired his ability to do his job. Lord knows, there are enough other arguments to go on about that.

But, unfortunately, we do hold our caucus meetings in Government House. We'll continue to hold them there on Thursday mornings. I would think the opposition would respect the fact that we don't try and go into buildings where they're holding theirs. If we've learned a lesson to not hold media briefings or if this were in this building, Mr. Speaker, I would agree. No one should be kept from media conferences in this building for this is the people's building. Caucus meetings are somewhat of a different manner.

I look forward to your good judgment.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, do you want to participate as well?

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, I thought you were going to start them.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you. I prefer to follow and make some comments with respect to this issue. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader has given us a quotation that the opposition or MLAs in general do not enjoy the privilege of having prior information from government announcements ahead of the public or ahead of the media. In fact, Mr. Speaker, what happened was that the media was given privileged and prior access to an important government policy announcement, and the government used physical obstruction in order to ensure that the opposition did not get the information until after it had been provided to the media. This is a very different thing than the hon. Deputy Government House Leader talked about.

I'd like to speak briefly about the question of location. The hon. President of the Treasury Board talked about the importance of giving access to the media facilities in this building as opposed to Government House or other potential locations for government announcements. In fact, the media room in this building, Mr. Speaker, is under the control of the government and not under the control of the Speaker, as are the facilities in Government House. This is an important distinction because, I suggest, the government could simply change the policy with respect to opposition access, so they could do what they've done at Government House in the media room in this building very easily. That's why I don't believe that this needs to be or should be left as a matter of government policy, which can change from time to time. If the government giveth, the government can taketh away. That is why I believe that it's important to have a ruling.

I want to be clear that we are not seeking unlimited access to government buildings or public buildings in this province. We have no intention of trying to attend a government caucus meeting. But I do want to point out that the government caucus meeting is not in the foyer of Government House any more than the cabinet table is in the media room in this building. It's on a different floor. In fact, the news conference was scheduled subsequent to the Conservative government caucus meeting. There is no question of us seeking access to Conservative caucus meetings. That is absurd, Mr. Speaker.

I just want to conclude by saying that when the government uses its authority to exclude opposition members from important policy announcements, it is an important question. I would equate it very much with the release of legislation. I think that the nub of it is that the media or the public were given prior access to a news conference dealing with an important public policy issue which we had raised in this House and debated in the House and that physical means were used to ensure that we were not present. I believe that that represents an interference in our ability to do our job.

I think that a reasonable and well-balanced policy that recognizes that the opposition and, indeed, all MLAs should not take the back seat to the media in important policy announcements or, as has previously been ruled, legislation is important for the functioning of our system here. To ensure that a proper balance remains, notwithstanding the very large size of the government, a small opposition needs to be protected from undue use of power by the government. I think that all Albertans will benefit if we have a clear policy with respect to this, which emanates not from the government but which emanates from yourself, Mr. Speaker, that ensures that the appropriate balance between the legislative and executive branches exists in practice here in our Assembly in Alberta.

That concludes my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for your attention.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I've been listening to the arguments on both sides of the House regarding this purported breach of privilege that occurred last week over at Government House. As a member of this Assembly who was barred at one point from coming into this legislative precinct, I have considerable interest in this point of privilege.

Now, I'll be concise. The hon. President of the Treasury Board suggested that Government House is on Thursdays routinely property of the government caucus.

Ms Blakeman: The room.

Mr. MacDonald: The room. Precisely. It looks like a room out of the Star Wars movie. But, certainly, it's the room.

I would remind the President of the Treasury Board that in the Annex the third party certainly shares, I believe, a portion of the floor that they have with members of the government caucus. If not, they're on the floor below. Certainly, the Official Opposition shares the third floor with members of the government caucus. There's no need to ban one group or another whenever there's an activity going on. We even share the washrooms. So this heavy-handed, ham-fisted behaviour last Thursday is inexcusable. When you look at what goes on in the Annex and compare it to the activity that happened at Government House, I certainly would think that there is a violation of the rights and the privileges of the Member for Lethbridge-East, the one for Calgary-Mountain View, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Now, just think about that and also the McDougall Centre in Calgary. While I'm here, I was very pleased to hear the Minister of Environment acknowledge that in the future the McDougall Centre will be open, and it will be open to opposition members as they wish. I was delighted to hear that from the hon. Minister of Environment.

3:30

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the House of the co-operation and the harmony – the harmony – that happens in the Annex between government members, Official Opposition members, and members of the third party. They do everything but share their own offices. They certainly share elevators, security, bathrooms. There don't seem to be any problems, so I can't understand why the government would be so draconian last Thursday at Government House.

Besides, it'll be interesting. There could be another privilege on this whole issue when Bill 34, the Drug Program Act – it's a money bill – is finally introduced and is before the Assembly. Now, that will be interesting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I take it that's it?

Well, I appreciate the comments from everyone. I just want to make a couple of comments before I give my ruling. We've reviewed this matter over the weekend, and I don't want to prolong it.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, please, it's the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly who has to fight the wars of disharmony between the Official Opposition and the third party when it comes to one square inch of space allocation. If one caucus gets one more square inch of space than the other one, I've got to spend days on it. So go whistle your harmony tune someplace else with respect to that because one gets one thing, and somebody else gets something.

Thank you very much, President of the Treasury Board, but the effective date of the statement, in fact, is totally irrelevant to the argument with respect to all of that.

I want to thank all members for their participation. Usually the chair takes a day or two to rule on purported questions of privilege, but this situation has been well known for a few days, and the chair doesn't want to prolong it any longer.

Essentially, the hon. leader of the third party's question of privilege is that his ability as a member was infringed upon in an unacceptable manner when he was denied entry to Government House for an announcement concerning the drug plan for seniors made by the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness on the morning of Thursday, April 23, 2009. Technically this alleged violation of the member's ability to perform his duties is characterized as a contempt.

For the benefit of those viewing the proceedings who may not be familiar with the location of various buildings in Edmonton, Government House is located a few kilometres north and west of the Legislature. It is next to the Royal Alberta Museum and is used by the government for various purposes, including caucus meetings and ceremonial events.

With respect to procedural matters the chair notes that the third-party leader provided notice of his purported question of privilege to the Speaker's office at 11:09 a.m. today, April 27, 2009. The events giving rise to the purported question of privilege occurred last Thursday. Standing Order 15(5) provides that a question can be raised "after the words are uttered or the events occur that give rise to the question." The member chooses to rely on the two-hour notice provision found in Standing Order 15(2). For the reasons that follow, the chair will consider that the notice has been adequately provided.

A similar issue concerning access to government briefings was the subject of a Speaker's ruling on March 7, 2000, at pages 286-287 in Alberta Hansard for that day. In that instance the chair ruled that denial of access to a press briefing in the media room in the Legislature Building was not a question of privilege. As the chair noted then, he does not have control over that room, and it is not booked through the Speaker's office. It is not part of the parliamentary precincts. Clearly, the same can be said of Government House and McDougall Centre in Calgary.

In the 2000 ruling the chair referred to a January 19, 1984, ruling by Speaker Francis in the Canadian House of Commons. The 1984 incident involved some members of the opposition being excluded from a media lockup where it was alleged that a copy of a bill was released prior to first reading. As the chair said in 2000 at 286 and 287 of Alberta Hansard, even in the federal Parliament, where the Speakers of the Commons and the Senate exercise control over the entire building, it has been held that restricting attendance at a media lockup does not constitute a question of privilege.

The chair went on to quote Speaker Francis' 1984 ruling at page 563 of Commons Debates for January 19, 1984.

The Chair obviously recognizes that the parties represented in this House may from time to time request rooms. They may or may not choose to invite members of the press. They may choose to invite their own supporters or include or exclude their own supporters.

They may on occasion include members of other Parties or not include them. This is not a matter for the Speaker to decide.

As the chair held then, allowing or not allowing a member to attend a media briefing does not constitute an impediment or obstruction to the member performing his or her parliamentary duties, which presumably is the category of privilege that the leader of the third party relies on. If the facts had been different and the question of privilege involved the denial of access to this Chamber or a proceeding in this parliament and on the precincts of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, this ruling may have been very different.

Accordingly, the chair finds that there is no prima facie question of privilege. The chair is, however, very pleased to hear of the position of the government and the direction provided by the Premier to members of Executive Council with respect to similar matters as this as we go forward.

The chair concludes by saying how ironic this really is. In the mid-1980s the Speaker, under incredible pressure from the opposition parties and the media, asked the government to take over further control of buildings within the precincts. The Speaker of the day approached the government. The government minister of public works, supply, and service at the time, who was myself, argued with the Speaker that that would be the wrong thing to do and that total control over the precincts should rest with the Speaker. The Speaker, however, as a result of the pressure from the opposition and the media parties at the time, convinced the government that it might want to assume some of the responsibility that the Speaker had previously had. Twenty-one years later I say that this is quite ironic.

This matter is concluded.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Clerk read the following written question, which had been accepted]

Hospital Ward Closures

- Q6. Mr. Mason:
Which hospitals had to shut down wards temporarily or indefinitely due to staff shortages between April 1, 2006, and January 31, 2009, which wards were shut down, and for how long?

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Executive Council Hosting Expenses

- M21. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of all hosting expenses under $600 in the ministry of Executive Council, itemized by event and amount, for each for the fiscal years 2004-05, 2005-06, 2006-07, and 2007-08.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, we do know from the Alberta Gazette the government's hosting expenses for Executive Council over $600 that are published. Certainly, in those years we can see where it follows a rather erratic spending pattern. It goes from $44,000 in 2004 to $145,000 in 2005, which was centennial year, and I can understand that because it was a very, very busy year for Executive Council. The following year it was cut back by about $50,000 to $94,000. In 2007 it went back up again to $106,000. In 2008 – these are calendar years; I will make that clear – it was $32,000.

There's quite a range of hosting expenses here. I think that in light of this range and in light of the fact that the government's hosting expenses over $600 have increased so dramatically in the last five years – in fact, they have gone from $480,000 to $1.4 million, so that's roughly a million-dollar increase over a five-year period. What exactly is going on in amounts below $600?

That is the reason for my request. I think taxpayers across this province would be very, very interested to know what these amounts are for the years in question, and I would expect that the government is quite able to provide those amounts.

Before I conclude, I would remind all hon. members of the Assembly that I was surprised, as were different taxpayer associations, to learn that there appears to be from the official government spokesperson no official budget for expenses of this nature, whether they're over $600 or below $600. This information should be made available, and that is the reason for my request through this Motion for a Return 21.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Premier to recommend that the members reject this motion. This motion would cover a period of time of four fiscal years. There would be an excessive cost and, frankly, an inordinate amount of staff time required to restore digital information, recover, review, itemize the records containing the details of all hosting expenses under $600.

The member is well aware and has noted that there is an opportunity for itemization for expenses over $600. There also is on each minister's website, including the Premier's website, a monthly summary of office expenses that can be accessed by not only this member but members of the public. Mr. Speaker, if the member is truly seeking specific information that he can't find on either of those two sources, it's recommended that he submit a FOIP request so that the appropriate costs, which, I can assure you, would be significant, can be allocated so that this member can satisfy his own curiosity in some kind of a fishing expedition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. To think that this hon. member considers me to be a curious fisherman; I am defending the interests of the taxpayers.

Now, I'm very, very disappointed that this motion for a return is being rejected. I can't imagine that there would not be a summary. I know there has been a lot of fiscal mismanagement by the government, but I cannot imagine that there is not somewhere in the deputy minister's office – the deputy minister, I remind the hon. Minister of Environment, must or should be signing off on these expenditures. It shouldn't be a lot of time. It shouldn't take a lot of resources to find this information because if the hon. minister – and we're not looking for his department. The President of Executive Council should be signing off on these expenditures, or the deputy minister should be signing off on these expenditures. If they're not, why not?

This shouldn't be hidden. These amounts should not be hidden like the achievement bonuses were in the global departmental budget. It surprises me that the government would reject this request. Mr. Speaker, the excuses that have been provided surprise me. I just cannot believe that there is no summary of this and that it cannot be provided in a timely and economical fashion. It just astonishes me.

When I look at how much money we have spent and some of the lavish hosting expenses, I can see why this is so far out of control, but I'm disappointed that the government, by rejecting this motion, indicates that they're not interested in getting it back in control. I'm very, very disappointed.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 21 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Sustainable Resource Development Hosting Expenses

M22. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of all hosting expenses under $600 in the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, itemized by event and amount, for each of the fiscal years 2004-05, 2005-06, 2006-07, and 2007-08.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you don't succeed, try again. That's what they taught us in 4-H club.

Mr. Speaker, when you look at what's published in the Alberta Gazette for amounts over $600, you have the functions. I want to pick one function that has been, in my opinion, totally out of control. This is the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties', affectionately called the AAMD and C, fall 2008 convention and minister's open house. Purpose. The purpose of this event: "promote the relationship with elected officials in municipalities from across the province." The amount spent was $12,659. The dates given are the 11th to the 14th of November 2008. The location is Peace River. Yes. People are looking around. I don't know if that's the correct location; neither does the hon. Member for Peace River.

Now, the year before that, the bill was a little bit bigger. This would be the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Alberta Transportation held a similar open house at the same event, but they held theirs in Edmonton. The bill submitted to the taxpayers was $2,780. I don't know why both departments couldn't have gotten together and saved the taxpayers a few dollars, but that didn't happen. If we're having this sort of out-of-control spending with those specific events, what's going on in amounts of $600 or less? Why is the government so reluctant to provide that information to the taxpayers? Forget about me; think about the taxpayers.

With that specific event and the $12,600 tab, we can go back to 2008, and the same function was $14,184, the minister's open house.

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes?

The Speaker: With the greatest degree of respect, it's Monday afternoon; it's private members' day. The question that you have in here deals with a motion for a return for expenditures under $600 in the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. It's very clear what the motion says: under $600, the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development. It would be really, really helpful to all private members, many of whom even have other business they want to conduct this afternoon, if we were to be totally onboard with the question and to be, in other words, relevant to the discussion. It would be helpful.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I am building a case here with a very valid example of just why we need this information. With this case we can see by going back a few years that the cost of this event was less than $3,000. When we look at the hosting expenses over $600 and see how they've increased, we need to know what's going on with the amounts under $600. You can clearly see there's more than a pattern here. We have no idea, if you look at the hosting directives, if alcohol or other spirits were provided, whether it was just for food. You have no idea. There is a difference in those directives because there are hosting expenses and those that are provided for what are called working lunches. Now, I don't know what the difference is, but apparently there is one.

With Sustainable Resource Development if we look at what was going on with expenses over $600 since 2004, through to 2008, well, we can see that there's quite a range. Taxpayers would be interested to note that in 2007, during the calendar year, SRD spent $100,000 in hosting expenses over 600 bucks. It was down in 2008, to $64,568. This is according to the Gazette, and the Gazette gives the details.

Now, I'm asking, with this motion for a return, for the details on what's spent under $600. I think it's a reasonable, valid request. If we look at this government's budget and where we're spending a lot of money, if we look after the pennies, the dollars will add up themselves.

I would certainly hope that we can get this information and that it won't be rejected like Motion for a Return 21. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, once again, to urge members to reject this motion. In the interests of saving a few pennies in unnecessary, repetitive words that are already recorded in Hansard, the arguments that apply to this instance also are the same as the ones that I have already enunciated with respect to the previous and, in fact, the next two as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to complete the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a dark day for openness and transparency in this province that our Motion for a Return 22 is being rejected, just like Motion for a Return 21.

In conclusion, surely there is a summary of these expenses available in the office of Sustainable Resource Development. Someone somewhere must be signing off on these expenses. My recollection of the Treasury Board directive is that this has to be done. If that's being done, there has to be a record. With our annual reports and the line items that are provided in those annual reports and the breakdown of those line items, this is not an unusual or an unreasonable request. I just am very, very disappointed that the government cannot provide this information.

We look at, again, hosting expenses and where they've gone. It's incredible, and it's disrespectful to the taxpayers to reject this motion. It would also be neglectful of the government's duty to provide this information because it's not the government's money; it's the taxpayers' money. Whether the hon. members across the way like it or not, we have a role in providing accountability by asking these questions and demanding that this information be made public. I cannot understand why this government is so reluctant to say: yes, we will provide that information. I have no idea what you're hiding.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 22 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Hosting Expenses

M23. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of all hosting expenses under $600 in the Ministry of Energy, itemized by event and amount, for each for the fiscal years 2004-05, 2005-06, 2006-07, and 2007-08.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's quite straightforward. If we look at the Department of Energy, the Department of Energy would be a role model for some of the others that are in amounts over $600, particularly the ministry of advanced education. In 2008, for instance, in the calendar year, according to the information I got from the Alberta Gazette, the Department of Energy spent $5,077 on hosting expenses over $600. The year before they spent $25,000. The year before that, they spent $18,000. In 2005, while some departments were spending well in excess of $100,000, the Department of Energy spent $3,676.

We can get all that information from the Alberta Gazette, but we cannot get the hosting expenses that are below $600. What's to stop two officials from a department with credit cards from splitting the bill so it doesn't show up as an amount over $600?

Ms Blakeman: Nothing. They've done it before.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member said: nothing; it has been done before. Well, this is why we should be getting this information from Motion for a Return 23, to just exactly see if this is a practice and how widespread it is. Certainly, if government officials, say, are to go out – let's pick a restaurant. We're not going to pick Denny's or Boston Pizza either. We're going to pick the Hardware Grill. Let's pick the Hardware Grill. A delegation goes out. Let's say that the spirits, the liquor or the wine, are put on one individual credit card and the meals themselves are put on another individual credit card. Those amounts are less than $600, but if you totalled them, they could be anywhere from $660 to $1,170. The taxpayers are none the wiser in any of this, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Employment and Immigration is looking at me, but yes, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre makes a very good point there. Certainly, if this is a practice that's going on, it should be stopped, and if it is a practice that's going on, taxpayers have every right to know.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Again, I'm going to repeat for the record that this information should be readily available because someone somewhere is signing off on this. If the minister looks perplexed, I think the hon. minister should after session today go back to his office and ask his deputy minister or one of the assistant deputy ministers for the list of hosting expenses that have occurred in those respective fiscal years, Mr. Speaker, that I'm requesting. I'm sure they're there, and I'm sure they're readily available. It's not a big deal to get them.

I think that in this case, with Motion for a Return 23, I'm very confident that in the interest of being open and transparent this government is going to finally understand and provide the information.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Minister of Energy to once again urge all members to reject this motion for a return for the same reasons I've already enunciated on the previous two.

[Motion for a Return 23 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

4:00 Finance and Enterprise Hosting Expenses

M24. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of all hosting expenses under $600 in the ministry of finance, itemized by event and amount, for each for the fiscal years 2004-05, 2005-06, 2006-07, and 2007-08.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This motion is similar to the other three. If we look at the Department of Finance and Enterprise and we look at what happened in the last five years with amounts over $600 as recorded in the Alberta Gazette, these are, I would say, reasonable expenses: in 2004, $1,228.

Mr. Campbell: Then why waste our time?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, in 2005, hon. Member for West Yellowhead, the bill jumped from $1,228 to almost $40,000. I don't think the taxpayers would consider that a waste of time.

Now, the next year they sort of remained about the same, at $33,000. The following year, 2007, they were down to $21,000. Then again in 2008 it more than doubled from the 2007 calendar year, to $52,867.80. That's in amounts over $600. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead can trot down to the library and look through the Gazettes and see for himself the function, the purpose, the amount, the date, and the location of those events. They're all over the place. It was amazing that last fall when the financial meltdown was in full force, there were many interesting amounts listed in excess of $600 from that ministry, many with various groups, various advisory groups and whatnot. Unless the government accepts my Motion for a Return 24, we have no idea what kind of hosting went on in amounts of $600 and less.

Perhaps the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, when he was conducting his review on condominiums, had some hosting expenses that were under $600. Maybe that's a work-in-progress. Maybe all that is being done through the ministry of finance. It could be being done through Municipal Affairs. It's hard to say what's going on with that review.

Again, when you look at the department and you look at the fact that these amounts have to be signed off, it's not unreasonable to request this information. It should be provided unless this is a government that for some reason or other doesn't want the taxpayers to know where they're dining and with whom and why.

Mr. Rodney: What are you trying to say?

Mr. MacDonald: What I'm trying to say, hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, is that if this government is sincere in their commitment to being open and transparent, this information will be provided through this request to the Assembly and ultimately to the taxpayers, who are footing the bill.

It's not long ago that we had a Treasurer, who has gone on to Ottawa, who used to stand in this Assembly and show us all the sweat-soaked loonie that that hon. member had on his lapel. We've forgotten about that, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: A gold-plated loonie.

Mr. MacDonald: It may have been a gold-plated loonie; I'm not sure.

It was a loonie, and the hon. member, the Provincial Treasurer at that time, was very anxious to remind all members of the House, regardless of which side of the House they were on, about that sweat-soaked loonie and what it meant. I think that if this motion is to be rejected, the spirit or the intent that was shown by that hon. member by wearing that loonie on his lapel will have been forgotten by this government.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of finance.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For reasons similar to what the previous House leader has provided on behalf of the ministers of Energy and SRD and on behalf of our Premier, on behalf of our Ministry of Finance and Enterprise I similarly reject the motion and would just identify that, obviously, ministers' expenses for 2007-08 can be reviewed and viewed on the website. Service Alberta has a website available. More specifically detailed information could be accomplished by a FOIP request.

I think one of the things I'd like to identify is that the hon. member keeps referencing this government. Well, since this last election occurred, one year ago, many of the charges he's looking for were with the previous government, certainly many of the same members but with the previous Premier. We have no difficulty having those researched and brought forward provided the hon. member would like to pay the charge. I mean, we're going into a situation where very detailed records are being asked for and over a period of time, a considerable lapse in time, which would be very costly. So also being somewhat mindful of the cost to this government and also mindful of the various areas for transparency in regard to expenses that he could avail himself of today if he chose, I think that we're being quite reasonable in this approach.

I have to go one step further. I really do reject some of the attitude that's coming from the member that would suggest that ministers of the Crown would go to a great extent to camouflage by the use of two different credit cards and all kinds of things. We're all listening to this, and I wish the schoolchildren of Alberta could be in here to hear someone make those kinds of allegations. Fair to do so because under the dome they can say virtually anything, but that truly offends me. If my grandchildren were here, they would wonder, "How can you let him talk like that about you, Grandma?" It's ridiculous.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to raise a couple of issues. I'm a citizen; I'm a taxpayer. I'm also fortunate enough to be a legislator. I know that members of the government feel that this is an easy hit against them, but frankly the members of the government make it an easy hit. They are required by legislation to give us the kind of detail that was laid out by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for expenditures that are over $600 but not under $600. That's why these requests have been laid out in the four different departments.

I understand that the minister of finance would be offended by the idea that somehow there were shenanigans going on around hosting expenses, but with respect, Madam Minister, we didn't invent that. We got the examples shown to us by predecessors on that side where procurement cards were used by executive assistants where expenses were split up. We weren't creative enough to dream that one up ourselves. We're building on the solid examples that have been laid before us by members of the government and their staff previously.

I think what's important to the taxpayers is that we understand why expenditures have been made and that they are reasonable and fair. If the government invites people to come and brief them on something or give them an explanation or give them some consultation or speak to them in some way and it happens over mealtime, particularly over lunch, fair enough. You know, they've been put out, and they don't have an opportunity to go and have their own lunch now, so lunch should be provided.

I think that where citizens draw the line is around alcohol and the provision of alcohol. I'll stop right there and say that in some countries that would be expected, but frankly if we're dealing on that level, those are probably hosting charges that are above the $600 level. I think that below that $600 level citizens have a right to say: was alcohol included in that? And perhaps it shouldn't be. Maybe that's an internal government decision that's already on the books. If it is, great. If it's not, could I possibly recommend it? I just don't think taxpayers should be paying for people to consume alcoholic beverages given that this is all supposed to be happening on working time.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has pointed out that there has been a stupendous increase in hosting since 2004. We are witnessing that in the above $600 category, which we're able to track. We have no idea if the same thing has happened in the under $600 category because we can't get any information on it. Truly, to say that, well, we should just go ahead and FOIP that, I'm sorry, but I've been around that racetrack before, and it was an absolute waste of my time, conjured up by members of the government, in which we got referred around and around and around about expenditures. Frankly, the freedom of information and protection of privacy was intended to facilitate the government providing information to the citizens, to the opposition, and to the media. What it has become is a giant cover-up, and it ends up costing the taxpayers even more money because the opposition and the media end up using their resources to pay the government in order to get access.

Why are we asking for so many documents? Well, because when we ask for something reasonable, we get nothing. So we end up having to cast a very wide net. There are always consequences to every action, and that's the consequence we've now come to with FOIP. The government has made it darn hard, the net gets cast wider, and then we get these ridiculous charges of tens of thousands of dollars for FOIP. That is not about accessibility to information.

If the government wonders where this is coming from, I just have to say: look back to yourself. There are enough documented examples where hosting was abused. It should be above board. It is the kind of thing that creates curiosity in the public and in the opposition, so fess up. Get it out there. Tell us how many people were there for lunch and why, and tell us what you were eating. Was it salads from Boston Pizza? Fair enough. That's the kind of careful, prudent management that I would expect. But there are too many other examples in front of us that we have managed to dig out in the past to stop us from continuing to do that kind of digging now.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre brings up a really good point when she says that there are consequences to everything that we do and that the government often brings some hardship upon itself because it acts in the manner that it acts. Well, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre it should be pointed out that there is a great deal of truth in what she says, that there are consequences for everything that we do, but the consequences don't flow only one way. They flow the other way as well.

For a prime example we don't have to look back more than five minutes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar will rise, and he will use my name, not by my true name but by my constituency, and insinuate that in my review of the building envelope under the building code I may be wining and dining and spending money inappropriately. He won't say it directly, Mr. Speaker, because he's a bright man, and he knows what the rules of the House are, but there are ways of tarnishing another person's reputation and making innuendoes just by squeaking by the rules, getting the message out clearly that you're suggesting that someone is doing something. "I'm not saying, but I'm saying," as kids in junior high school would say. That is just enough to get that information out there and insinuate what somebody is doing over there.

That's exactly what the member does, and I don't know what he would base it on. He has never travelled with me. He has no clue what it is that this review encompasses. He has no clue even whether there were any meals involved or, if there were, where they were, or were they day trips that, you know, perhaps didn't require. Maybe all the individuals who were submitting to this committee were actually coming here to the Legislature. He has no idea, no idea whatsoever, other than the fact that he knows that I am doing some kind of a review. That is enough for him to insinuate that now with this committee I'm wining and dining.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be honest with you. If it came to vote right now to decide whether I should release any information to him, I'd say to him: "Do it the hard way. If you're going to accuse me of things that you have no clue about, why would you expect me to assist you in your work as a member of the opposition? Do it the hard way. Dig it up." There is FOIP. There is process.

Second of all, Mr. Speaker, just open the newspaper. Over the last 24 hours children addicted to ecstasy died, members of my Somali community in Castle Downs are facing problems with law enforcement, there are issues with recession, and there is the swine flu possibly approaching Alberta. There are big issues that Albertans want us to deal with. They expect this Chamber to address some issues that they really, honestly care about, that really, really matter, and they pay big dollars to have us here, sitting in this place. They don't pay your salary, my salary, and for the lights that are on in this Chamber and the hundreds of people that work behind us to support us to discuss frivolous things only for the purpose of, hopefully, getting a one-liner somewhere in the paper, because that kind of stuff sort of attracts media attention, and you may be able to get that one-liner.

Mr. Speaker, the rules are clear. Anything over $600 has to be listed, and it is listed publicly on web pages. Anything under $600 – and that includes your $3 cup of coffee; that's under $600 as well – that stuff is not listed because the cost of listing it probably cumulatively would be more expensive than the actual bills. But there is a process that they can utilize. They can use FOIP. Use it if you think that there are any issues. If you want to FOIP my committee, hon. member, and make yourself look really foolish, go for it. Find out what dinners we had, where we had them, and how much the entire process cost.

He won't do it because he knows he won't find anything, but he will say it in the House so that it's on the record so that somebody can think that something wrong may have happened. That's shameful. It's unfortunate that our rules allow for that to happen, but they weren't intended for that.

To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, indeed there are consequences for everything that we do, but that goes both ways.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. To conclude the debate on Motion for a Return 24, I've listened to the last three speakers with a considerable amount of interest. I'll start with the latter and go back to the initial speaker. With the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, I've already been provided by various people in the condominium industry a summation of the hon. member's activities around the review, and I certainly find that interesting. I would remind the hon. member that FOIP is a very, very expensive process and that whenever we FOIP or ask a question, government members say: well, it should be on the Order Paper under a written question or a motion for a return. In Public Accounts they certainly provide that response. In regard to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has indicated, it is a revolving door for us. This government hides behind expensive FOIP schedules all the time. It's routine.

If we look after the budget for hosting expenses, we will have enough money left over to adequately fund programs and services to reduce and in some cases eliminate criminal activity. What we're saying is that by looking after these amounts – and the hon. member may think they're trivial, but they certainly are not. If you were to add up this entire government and these hosting expenses, they would be well in excess of $1.4 million, which is the amount 600 bucks and above.

Surely, in that department, Mr. Speaker, in the ministry of finance, it's frightening to think that the minister is not signing off on these hosting expense requests that come in in amounts of 600 bucks and under. I don't think the Taxpayers Federation would be too impressed with that activity. I would urge all hon. members across the way to have a look at the hosting expenses, the directives that come from the Treasury Board to control these expense amounts. If they were trivial amounts, there wouldn't be any need for this hosting directive from the Treasury Board. But there are two directives. In fact, they are amended routinely as times change.

This is in direct contrast with what the minister of finance has said. When we look at what we do know from the Alberta Gazette, regardless of whether it's the Klein era or the new era of the hon. Premier, we've seen hosting expenses skyrocket in amounts over $600. How do we know that that same trend isn't going on with amounts of $600 or less unless we get this information?

In conclusion, the hon. minister of finance was talking about schoolchildren. Well, I would remind the hon. minister of finance and the other hon. members across the way that there are many children in this province who through no fault of their own come to school hungry and stay hungry all day long. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs: when we think of our hosting expenses and we look at the extravagance, the lavish, wasteful spending of this government in the last couple of years, to think that there are children in our school system not only going to school hungry but remaining hungry all day long is shameful.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 24 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 203

Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009

[Debate adjourned March 16: Mr. Horne speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on Bill 203.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker, on the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. I have been reading this bill since the hon. member introduced it. It certainly is an interesting legislative initiative, and it is one that has created considerable interest. I have some questions regarding this bill at this time, and hopefully we can be provided with answers before we vote. Some sections of this bill are very reasonable, and for others there are questions.

However, with this bill I would like to know, in light of what happened with Elections Alberta and the fact that in the last provincial election, in March 2008, there was a great deal of difficulty in administering the two acts and getting that election up and running and getting people enumerated and trying to get some sort of control on it – the House has been through that matter many times, and I think we'll be dealing with that again. If these legislative initiatives to Bill 203 were to become law, who will enforce this, and will they have enough resources to enforce this? I know that with municipal elections you can certainly go to city hall in downtown Edmonton, you can go to Calgary, and you can look up the disclosure statements of many of the candidates. Exactly how this will be enforced, how much it would cost: I would appreciate an answer to that question.

In the definition of trade union that occurs, I'm curious why that definition was chosen. That definition, Mr. Speaker, reads:

“Trade union” means a trade union as defined by the Labour Relations Code, the Public Service Employee Relations Act or the Canada Labour Code (Canada) and that holds bargaining rights for employees in Alberta, and for the purposes of this Part all locals in Alberta of a trade union are deemed to be one trade union.

When this definition was drafted, did the hon. member consult, for instance, the Alberta Federation of Labour or the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, where they have many locals throughout the province, different locals that represent different workers? Were they consulted on this? For instance, the United Nurses of Alberta: were they consulted on this bill, and did they agree with this definition? Also, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta: were they consulted on this? If I'm reading this correctly, the AUPE, for instance, would be restricted and limited by this definition because, of course, they have locals all over the province, representing, as I said before, various locals.

Now, also, the limitations and contributions. It's different than the provincial limitations, which are $15,000, and then during an election period they're $30,000. Why was this amount – and this is in section 147 – not to exceed $5,000 in any campaign period? Why was that amount chosen?

Also, if I could ask regarding a definition, and I'm just looking for it here, Mr. Speaker. I can get to this later. There was a definition in here that I wanted to talk about that had reference to organizations as defined by the Income Tax Act of Canada. I believe I've found that; it's on page 7. It would be section 147.05. Which section of the Income Tax Act of Canada is the hon. member referring to? Is it 258? I think that's the section that I have my eye on, but I'm not sure. If the member could correct that, I would be very, very grateful.

Before I cede the floor to another hon. member, I would also like to know why the definition of the campaign period was written as it is in this legislation.

Those would be my comments, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Briefly I'd like to put my support behind Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009. The member sponsoring this bill should be commended on being perceptive in identifying an area of the municipal act that definitely could have used some updating and, shall we say, tweaking.

I think all Albertans would believe and even pride themselves on the fact that we want our elections to be as transparent as possible. Particularly when it comes to finances, they want to make sure that any and all money donated to political campaigns, be it in municipal or provincial or federal races, is money that was spent in accordance with how it was intended to be spent, meaning on the actual electing of their favourite or preferred candidate, and that also there is a transparency relevant to who is donating to whom and how much in order to be certain that there isn't a possibility of someone unduly influencing a particular candidate.

Lastly, I think Albertans would expect that following an election, if there is any surplus in a campaign, the surplus be declared so that not only those who donated money but pretty well the entire electorate have a clear understanding of how much money a candidate has raised, how he or she has spent the money, how much money they have in their surplus account following the election, and how that money will be disbursed.

Those rules are pretty well entrenched in our provincial statutes relevant to provincial elections. The federal government has done some recent changes, shall we say, tightening up their legislation on electoral financing. I think it is time that perhaps some of those ideas be also now transferred to municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, many important decisions – and some would frankly, maybe even rightfully, argue that some of the most important decisions – are made at the local level. Those are decisions that really impact us as citizens from day to day. Even though the budgets that municipalities operate with may not be in dollar value as big as they are provincially or federally, these decisions are very important. It's very important for Albertans to know how their elected representatives have been elected to their posts and how their campaigns have been financed. Hence, because of the prominence of the municipal governments, we now refer to them as governments. We see them as an order of government, which in the past wasn't the case. I think that if they are to be treated like governments, if they are to have the benefits of being known as orders of government, then they should also abide by some electoral rules that allow them to get to be government.

I'm looking right now in the bill at section 147.03(1): very common-sense principles that I don't think anybody in this Chamber or outside, in Alberta, would disagree with. Subsection (c) says, "Money in the campaign account shall only be used for the payment of campaign expenses." Well, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that that's natural. If people donate money for a campaign, they expect the money to be used only for campaign expenses.

Subsection (d): "Contributions of real property, personal property and services are valued." So if somebody gives you an office to use for the duration of the campaign, that actually has a market value. You should declare it as a donation. That's what we do in provincial elections.

Receipts should be issued to everyone who contributes to a campaign, and whether they have a taxable credit benefit to it or not is irrelevant. At least then they're receipted and accounted for, so there is a transparency built in.

Disclosure statements should be filed in accordance with the section of the act, of course, at the end. That's something that we do provincially as well.

Records should be kept by the candidate of campaign contributions and campaign expenses for a period of two years following the date of the election. That makes a lot of sense, Mr. Speaker, because if there is any question, there should be records to refer to for a reasonable period of time, obviously. Two years to me would appear to be a reasonable period of time.

"A campaign contribution received in contravention of this Act is returned to the contributor." That happens, Mr. Speaker, provincially. If a provincial candidate was to receive money for a campaign from outside of the province, for example, which is not allowed, if that was to be tracked down, that candidate would have to return the dollars to make sure that only appropriate contributions are kept within the campaign finances.

Mr. Speaker, most importantly, subsection (2) says, "A candidate who contravenes any of the provisions of this section is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine of not more than $1000." Here I perhaps would argue that a thousand dollars is not significant enough, but that's something that could be debated at a later point as we proceed with this bill. I think that a thousand dollars perhaps may not be sufficient to deter a person from breaching the act; however, you'd imagine that that person also would be disqualified from holding his or her post if significant breaches were found. So I would perhaps consider a higher fine.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, I think the bill is very well intended. It addresses a need that exists out there, and it will definitely give Albertans some peace of mind, knowing that when they donate money, the monies are spent just the way they intended the money to be spent and not in any other way. Also, it will give Albertans peace of mind that there is control on contributions and that there could not be – not to suggest that there is – any influence peddling relevant to the size of contribution to a candidate.

Again, I would like to thank the member sponsoring the bill and encourage the entire House to vote in favour of this bill because I think this is one piece of legislation that all of us could agree on.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to participate in the discussion today in second reading of Bill 203, the Local Authorities Election (Finance and Contribution Disclosure) Amendment Act, 2009, proposed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater. As democracy evolves across Canada and abroad, it has become apparent that the finance and contribution components of an election's various candidates and parties are important factors in determining the overall virtue of the electoral process. By extension, the value of the democratic process and the perception of government amongst everyday citizens hinges on the merit of the electoral process.

Legislation similar to Bill 203 has been introduced at the federal level and thus far in some provinces as well and has been perceived as a good measure. While our government has done so for provincial elections, Mr. Speaker, there's been no such regulation in regard to municipal elections. Bill 203 seeks to implement structure for municipal campaign financing similar to that which is already in place for provincial elections here in Alberta as well as a number of other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, municipal governance is vitally important in a diverse province like Alberta. In many ways Alberta's continued prosperity, as I see it, will rely on strong municipal governance and, by extension, a continually respected election process, as has been referred to by other colleagues. Municipalities manage many of the public goods and services that citizens use every day, and it is the citizens who in many ways are the best promoters of local government policies. As Albertans deserve confidence in the process that elects their mayors, aldermen, reeves, and councillors, Bill 203 seeks to enhance finance and contribution standards for municipal elections. While the province's electoral process at the municipal level has been sufficient to this point, we must make improvements where necessary consistent with government goals.

Bill 203 is forward looking and, as such, is not retroactive. This is an important point to our discussion as current municipal government members should not feel that their election to office is in any way being scrutinized after the fact. To be clear, we do not intend nor wish to convey a message to municipal governments and citizens alike that there is blame to be placed. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, past municipal elections have occurred under the purview of our government as is written in the Local Authorities Election Act. By this very fact we support the present-day state of municipal election results as they were implicitly sanctioned by the province. Bill 203 seeks now to enhance the electoral process at the municipal level consistent with our duty to Albertans to provide transparency of government and consistent with the same goals of the Local Authorities Election Act.

In considering Bill 203, Mr. Speaker, we recognize that it is intended to be implemented on a go-forward basis. Past election campaign finances will not be audited nor investigated for any municipal district, county, or city. Elected officials, for example, would not have to disclose financial contributions from past elections as these elections occurred under the Local Authorities Election Act as it stands, without the proposed changes.

One of the changes proposed by Bill 203 is in regard to unused contribution amounts, or surplus funds. I wish to provide some clarification to this point since surplus funds will require disclosure. Surplus funds are the amounts that are unused after a campaign but remain in the possession of the campaign; thus, these funds, if kept, are likely to be used in future elections if the candidate was to seek re-election.

Changes proposed by Bill 203 for the Local Authorities Election Act would require under the new rules that such funds be declared by July of 2009 if they are to be used for future elections. If surplus funds exist and are used for a campaign in the future, they are, for the purposes of disclosure, current funds for that campaign. However, as the bill is not specifically retroactive, limitations on the size of existing surplus funds will not be regulated, while funds raised under the new rules would be regulated. This is simply an issue of fairness, Mr. Speaker, as existing surplus funds are basically grandfathered. If any of these funds continue to exist and, acceptably, are intended for use in the future, they should not be subject to contribution limits, for example, as such rules were not a part of past decisions on campaigns. Rather, these funds raised according to the Local Authorities Election Act must merely be disclosed, as is appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that I've made it clear here that Bill 203 would require that existing surplus funds be disclosed if they're intended for future use but that the bill is not specifically retroactive and will not take anything away, so to speak. The ultimate result of this is fairness for all parties involved and the acknowledgement of the importance of municipal elections and the legislation that they operate under.

In consideration of the practical virtue and fairness of Bill 203 I urge the members of the House to support it, as I do, and I thank the Member for Athabasca-Redwater for bringing this matter forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll call on the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater to close the debate.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and thank all my colleagues who have spoken to this bill, given their comments, thoughts, suggestions. I think we've had some very good debate over what has probably been the longest two hours of debate I've ever been a part of. But, finally, here we are.

As I mentioned in my opening statements, Bill 203 would define provincial-wide standards regarding financial contributions in municipal elections and the disclosure of those contributions. These amendments that I've proposed would simply align the municipal election finance rules with those that already exist at the provincial and federal levels as well as in other jurisdictions across the country.

Without any further ado I will thank my colleagues for commenting on this and look forward to the vote and encourage everyone to support it.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

Bill 204

Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is sure an interesting day for municipalities here in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. We just had financing, and now we're going to talk about financing specific to Bill 204, the Provincial-Municipal Tax Sharing Act. At this point I would like to move second reading of Bill 204 and offer a few comments in support of it.

Mr. Speaker, I live in a city, like almost 80 per cent of the people who live in Alberta do. For some time I've noticed my city struggling with having enough money to provide the basic services that I as a citizen expect them to provide. At the same time that I'm watching my city struggling, I was until a few short months ago watching the province rolling in double-digit surpluses. To me this was an inequity that should not be. There is only one taxpayer. We should be able to work this out. So I started looking for some possible solutions to how we could have some sort of a revenue-sharing process between the provincial government and the municipalities.

First of all, the question is: well, was there a problem? Yes, definitely in the reading that I did, there's clearly a problem.

Frankly, I could see the problem as I walked down the street. I could see it, you know, as I read the letters to the editor about people unhappy with the litter pickup in their city or the number of times their road got plowed in the wintertime.

I was also able to read it in a number of different articles and commentary. I read through the AUMA resolutions. I read through AAMD and C. Certainly, there was lots of commentary in there about financing. Also in Canada West. The Canada West did a very good report which I would recommend to people, Delivering the Goods: Infrastructure and Alternative Revenue Sources for the City of Edmonton. It was released in June of 2008. Yes, there was a problem. Others had identified it. Okay.

So, two, was there a provincial role in this? Could something the province did or was capable of doing, legally had access to, address this issue? Clearly, the answer to that question is also yes. Essentially, we have a constitutional set-up where we have a federal government and a provincial government, and they divide up in the constitution who is responsible for what. That same Constitution also sets out that provinces create the municipalities under them. Yes, the province is responsible for creating the municipalities and the laws that go around them. Indeed, we just debated second reading of Bill 203, which talked about election financing for municipal elections.

When I looked at alternative revenue options for the province to share some revenue with the municipalities or for the municipalities to be granted by the province additional revenue generation, a number of things were suggested. They fall into a couple of general categories. Again, I will encourage people to read the Canada West document.

There are things like visitor-specific selective taxes. Those essentially are things like lodging and accommodation taxes, restaurant taxes, bar and pub taxes, beverage taxes, gambling taxes, et cetera. There are also vehicle-specific selective sales taxes, where we get into things like a local option fuel tax; a local vehicle registration tax; car rental tax; local tax on parking; vehicle ownership, or a wheel tax; special taxes on vehicle sales; et cetera. There's quite a long list that appears on page 31 of that document.

I was quite interested in a third possibility, which was called a SPLOST, which is a rather unattractive name but an interesting idea. That was essentially called a penny tax, but it was to fund infrastructure. I was really captured by what I was hearing from municipal councillors throughout Alberta but also others that, really, what we were dealing with here was an operating gap, and that's what I chose to try and address. What I've ended up with is what you see before you as proposed in Bill 204, which is about indexing grants to provincial income.

Now, Mr. Speaker, people that are following along with this particular debate may not be aware that private members get their placement in the bill draw literally by having their name drawn out of a hat. You've got to be having the blessings upon you to have a good bill draw. This is my 13th spring session. I have had exactly one other good bill draw. In those days in my caucus it was traditional that if you had an excellent bill draw, the best one actually, you handed it over to the leader, who got that position. In fact, that's what I did, and I got punted to the back of the bus with some number that was so high that I didn't even get the bill printed.

I was pretty excited when I was going to get an opportunity this year. In fact, I drew Bill 201, and I exchanged places with my colleague because we felt that that was a very timely bill and something that he really wanted to bring up. I am still pleased to have position of Bill 204 and to be able to bring forward and encourage my colleagues in the Assembly to have a good debate about municipal financing.

We've talked about: is it necessary? Yes. Can the province do this? Yes. What was really needed? Well, what I was told was that municipalities really needed three things. The property tax in municipalities, which is their primary revenue source, is not responsive to growth. So even though we're now in a recession, we are still expecting growth in a number of our urban areas in Alberta. It's not as fast a growth, but we're still expecting growth. They really do tell me that property tax is not responsive enough to growth. They have to build things and provide services on a municipal level. They cannot keep ahead of it and have an increasing operation gap.

They needed something that would respond to growth, that the city would be able to control how the money was spent, and that would be predictable to them. Thus, we have the revenue sharing that is laid out in Bill 204: specifically, take a portion of the provincial income tax, which includes personal income tax and corporate income tax – and it's a small amount, 2.5 per cent – set it aside in a separate account which would be created by cabinet within the next sitting after this bill passes, and then the money from there would flow back out to the municipalities for operational purposes, not capital, not infrastructure.

This legislation is based on the Manitoba model, which has been up and running for some time. I believe that their percentage is currently 4 per cent, and there was some talk about how they wanted to increase it to 6 per cent. We have a larger population base, and I think the 2.5 per cent that I'm asking for here is quite reasonable.

The idea behind this is that it is for operational spending, as I said, and that it's an unconditional grant. There are no strings attached. The province can't tell the municipalities how to spend it. It goes to them, and they decide on a local basis how they would be spending the money. It is for operating money – I'll repeat that again – not for capital. There are other grant programs in place. Also, the entire procedure and process would be examined and reviewed in one year.

So I did quite a bit of talking. I got a lot of correspondence back and a fair amount of support and some questions from municipalities. I didn't get formal responses from AUMA or AAMD and C, but in this province I wouldn't have expected that either.

I'm looking forward to a healthy debate on this. I think a number of members in here come from a municipal background and understand exactly what I'm talking about when I talk about funding gaps. I hope that the members will be supportive of my suggestions here, but I hope that there's a respectful and energetic debate more than anything. We need a wider discussion of the relationship between the province and the municipalities, and given that two-thirds of us live in those urban areas, this is an important part of that discussion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It indeed gives me pleasure to be able to stand up and have an opportunity to speak on the private member's bill today. This bill suggests that a portion of personal and corporate tax revenue be dedicated to ensure the sustainability of Alberta municipalities. Let me start by saying that ensuring the sustainability of Alberta municipalities has been and will continue to be a priority of this government. We know that strong municipalities are the key ingredient to strong communities and that strong communities are the building blocks of a strong province. The Premier has stressed his firm belief in this on numerous occasions.

Mr. Speaker, this government has consistently shown its commitment to fostering strong communities. That is why the Alberta municipalities receive a level of support that is unmatched in the country. In fact, that is exactly the reason that we did introduce the municipal sustainability initiative. Over the past two years we have provided municipalities with $900 million through the MSI, and this funding is having a real impact in our communities. In all corners of our province Albertans are enjoying the benefits of this program. They are seeing new roads, recreational facilities, emergency and police facilities that keep their communities safe, investments in underground infrastructure like water and sewer lines that provide essential basic services, and, of course, libraries, which play a critical role in the well-being of communities.

Mr. Speaker, the MSI also provides $50 million for operating. The member opposite talks about the necessity for operating. The two large centres had the opportunity to have some of their funding put into operating. Their decision was that they wanted all funding to come as capital, and that's exactly what we did.

MSI is new money on top of other significant support that the government already provides to municipalities. Under MSI, Mr. Speaker, municipalities have the autonomy to determine local priorities and choose their projects to meet their citizens' needs. Unlike Bill 204 MSI also includes measures to ensure that we are accountable to Alberta taxpayers for funds provided to municipalities. Projects must meet program criteria designed to ensure that they will contribute to the long-term sustainability of Alberta communities. Municipalities must submit a long-term infrastructure plan as well as detailed information about each project to be funded through MSI. We are also developing an accountability framework to ensure that funds provided to municipalities are used to meet agreed-upon objectives. None of these accountability measures would be included in Bill 204, which would provide a fixed proportion of tax revenue unconditionally.

In addition to MSI, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta municipalities receive support from programs such as the Alberta municipal infrastructure program, the municipal transportation grants, the Canada-Alberta municipal rural infrastructure funds, and Alberta municipal support such as the underground petroleum tank site remediation program. In fact, last year municipalities received over $2.3 billion in direct funding from this government.

The Deputy Speaker: It's 5 o'clock. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business for today has concluded. The minister still has time to go the next time.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod.

Ecological Integrity in Land Reclamation

506. Mr. Berger moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to use site-specific native grasses and forbs in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes to ensure the preservation and integrity of our plant ecosystem.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour and privilege to stand today and open debate on Motion 506. The purpose of reclamation is to return disturbed land to a capability that is equivalent to or greater than what existed before. The use of native species to revegetate disturbed sites is already common for most reclamation projects; however, while the use of native species is encouraged, it is not mandatory. That is why I feel we need to ensure that any land being reclaimed on native landscapes in Alberta is reclaimed with only native grasses and forb species. This means prohibiting the introduction of foreign and/or invasive species into areas that are undergoing reclamation.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, the reclamation of specified land is carried out in accordance with the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, EPEA, the conservation and reclamation regulation, and also in accordance with the disposition and authorization issued under the Public Lands Act, the Forests Act, and the exploration regulation. These require that companies conducting activities that disturb land must remediate and reclaim the land in a way that will support activities similar to its previous use. However, similar to its previous use does not require the use of a hundred per cent native species.

Mr. Speaker, I want to discuss why it is vitally important for native species to be used in all future reclamation projects on native lands. Introducing nonnative, invasive species to native landscapes can have serious long-term effects both ecologically and economically. Invasive species have the ability to rapidly reproduce and displace natural vegetation, which may lead to many negative ecological challenges. For example, it can result in the crowding out of native plants, including rare and endangered species. Furthermore, the introduction of foreign species can reduce soil stability and water quality.

Mr. Speaker, many of the Alberta initiatives work to re-establish native species, especially along stream banks as well as areas back from streams, such as rough fescue, which provides for water retention and water filtration and is also a great carbon sink in the backcountry. Additionally, many invasive plant species can rapidly spread beyond the reclaimed area, causing considerable ecological damage. For example, highway corridors provide opportunities for invasive species to move rapidly through the landscape by being transported on vehicles or during the mowing of ditches. The seeds from these plants could also be introduced throughout a highway corridor during construction or utility improvements. That is why it is best to maintain native plant species throughout native landscapes. Maintaining naturally adapted grasses and forbs also leads to more efficient water use as well as enhancing the carbon uptake, which is beneficial for not only the plant ecosystem but our overall environment.

The introduction of nonnative species can also lead to negative economic impacts. When these invasive species spread onto agricultural fields and pastures, herbicides are needed to bring the weeds under control. Furthermore, weed control is increasingly becoming more expensive. In the agricultural sector invasive species not only require increased application of herbicides but can also result in reduced crop yields.

Mr. Speaker, foreign species can also negatively affect wildlife. Deer, elk, and many other species that feed on native grasses and plants are accustomed to their natural habitat. Invasive plant species that crowd out native plants can not only destroy the natural habitat of many animal species but can potentially poison wildlife. Further to this point, while invasive species may adversely affect wildlife, the same can be said about farm livestock. Part of what makes Alberta beef the best in the world is the natural grasses and plants that our livestock graze on. This is something we want to protect.

The economic impacts of introducing invasive species to native landscapes can be considerable. In fact, in 1999 the science adviser to the United States Secretary of the Interior suggested that invasive plants cause about $123 billion in damages every year in the U.S. In this province the economic costs of invasive species would also be surprisingly high. Controlling invasive species is one method.

However, it is best to not introduce these species in the first place, particularly on native landscapes.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate in Alberta to have some of the most pristine landscapes in the world, and I want to see it kept this way for many generations to come. I ask all the members of this Assembly to join with me and stand in support of Motion 506.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much for recognizing me. I'm very happy to stand up in the House in support of Motion 506. It's no surprise to me that it was brought forward by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. For anyone that's ever been in that constituency, they surely understand that it's God's country. I'm just a tad biased because my family originally came from that area.

He raises a number of very valid points. As we deal with a province in which there has been a lot of disturbance of the land through mostly oil and gas development but for a number of other reasons – exploration, seismic, you know, forestry roads, that sort of thing – we're learning some lessons. I think we've had to learn some lessons through consequences where we have seen that when you disturb the soil, basically, you open it up, and any seed that falls into it, that's what can take hold and grow, in some cases very invasive species and, in fact, noxious species. It can and does have long-reaching and detrimental effects on our natural environment.

I'm thinking of loosestrife, for example, which was immensely damaging to our wetlands. A really great plant; I had one in my garden. Man, did that thing grow, and it produced hundreds of thousands of seeds. It was so effective, and it was fabulous. My garden was filled with flowers until my neighbour came over and said: please get rid of that, and when you do, burn it and make sure that you pick every single seed out of the soil because it is prolific and invasive. It was. It took me years before I had finally got the garden rid of it because every spring it would come up again. I thought: wow; that's in a garden in a city with somebody that is watching it and trying to deal with the fact that it is such a prolific seed producer.

The problem with loosestrife is that once it took hold in wetlands, it just choked it out exactly in the same way it did in my garden. It just took it over, choked it out, and made just about any other native species very difficult to compete with it. It was not a good food source for the local animals. We were replacing, you know, good, easy-to-access nutrients for the animals and waterfowl that were frequenting the wetlands with this very woody stalk that was nowhere near as nutritious. That's one small example of how it can really get away from us.

I'm very supportive of what has been brought forward in Motion 506 by the Member for Livingstone-Macleod. I'm the Official Opposition critic for Environment. I've talked to a number of the groups that I deal with on this from the environmental and conservation side, and they are supportive of this as well. I think it makes sense, but sometimes we have to pass laws to remind ourselves to do the right thing, and this may well be one of those times.

We're expecting that if this motion passes and the government implements it, we could see benefits like, as I've mentioned, retention of the local biodiversity, certainly in the grasslands the appropriate grass. We've already lost significant grass out of the area that the Member for Livingstone-Macleod represents because the long grass we don't really have anymore. It doesn't really exist. It's gone. It has been taken over by the shorter prairie grass.

If you're in some of the museums down that way, I think particularly Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump – is that where it is? – there's an excellent example of the root structure. The root structure of the long grass is long; it's, like, three feet into the soil. With the short grass it's much less; it's about six inches. The long grass just didn't compete, and it's gone. We really, essentially, don't have it anymore.

I think, for some of the reasons that I've mentioned, that it does give our native flora and fauna an opportunity to continue to thrive, that it's going to increase the reseeding potential – we're not usually doing fertilization in those areas, but it would certainly reduce it if you're using an indigenous planting to the region – and trying to get as close to what was there before if you can't actually get what was there before. I'll hearken back to my references there to the short and long grass. The shorter grass is as close as you're going to get to what you had before in the long grass.

This is, I would argue, a common-sense motion. It's something the government should be going forward with. It is supported by the environmental and conservation groups.

I had one question. The member amended his original motion partway through. I'll just read the whole thing so that I can get to it:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to use site-specific native grasses and forbs in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes to ensure the preservation and integrity of our plant ecosystem.

The amended part is "on native landscapes." I'm not sure what was there before, so I'm not sure of the significance of the change there. Maybe he could get one of his colleagues to explain that if he gets a chance.

I remember a number of conversations with my uncle, who was for many years in the seed business, and he used to do a lot of reclamation projects. I remember being shocked at hearing that often there was no requirement of him to seed in a reclamation project anywhere close to what had been there before. Of course, he was a businessman, very successful, and he did what was most cost-effective, which was not always the native planting. Even back then I remember being disheartened by that because it meant that – he was selling seed for reclamation along the sides of highways and things, so covering a lot of land, and to hear that we weren't even trying to get back to anything close to what had been there before was pretty disheartening because we'd essentially changed the landscape. I think one of the lessons that we keep failing to learn is that you can't fool around with Mother Nature because sooner or later she'll get you for that. I think this is falling into line with that, and understanding and coming as close as possible to what is the native biodiversity is a darn good idea.

On behalf of my colleagues – I think all of them support this. I certainly do.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm in favour of listening to the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, okay. We've got some of them that are going to listen to the debate.

I'm going to certainly be encouraging my colleagues in the Official Opposition to support Motion 506. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to enter into debate on this motion. I, too, am intending to speak in favour of the motion. I think that this is in support of a good deal of work that we've been doing in Alberta Environment and, in fact, reflects to a very large degree the practice that has been ongoing for some time.

I want to address the question that the hon. member just brought forward with respect to the insertion of "on native landscapes" into the motion, and it is an insertion. It came as a result of some discussions between the hon. member and myself. There is a responsibility that we have for reclamation that applies not only to areas where there are native grasses but also in agricultural, cultivated lands. So it doesn't make as much sense to use native grasses to do reclamation in an area that is cultivated in the middle of a grain field. Obviously, it doesn't apply.

Also, there are instances where we do have industrial disturbances that are on the fringe of urban development areas where once the reclamation has been completed, they get incorporated into urban development, residential areas, and those kinds of things. Again, it wouldn't make sense to reclaim to native grasses and then come back a year later and remove all of those and put yards that may or may not have loostrate in their gardens.

Like everything, Mr. Speaker, we learn that sometimes there needs to be some degree of interpretation or some degree of ability for our people to be able to have some discretion when it comes to applying these kinds of rules. They tend to sometimes become hard and fast, and that's maybe not the most appropriate way to deal with it.

There are other ways that we need to deal with and encourage minimizing the disturbance and the effect, particularly on native grasses. While it's true that the use of seed that would be recognized as native is critical and important and we've since 2001 advised against the use of nonnative seeds to revegetate sites, we also endorse best practices for minimizing disturbance on grasslands. One of the most effective ways of doing that is by scheduling activities, drilling activities, for example, during the winter, when the ground is frozen. That has a huge impact on minimizing the impact.

The native plant species are an important component of our end goal within our environmental legislation, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, or EPEA. It's reflected in the upstream oil and gas reclamation criteria for grasslands and our recently revised reclamation criteria issued for forested land by Sustainable Resource Development. The issue of land reclamation is jointly delivered by Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. We're currently reviewing our upstream oil and gas reclamation criteria to strengthen the use of native plants on native landscapes. We're also committed to the use of native species on reclamation in the oil sands, and EPEA approvals support the use of native species in those areas as well. In fact, Sustainable Resource Development currently approves the reclamation seed mixes, including for those areas managed under EPEA approvals such as oil sands facilities.

For a moment I just want to talk a little bit about trees and shrubs. Although they're not necessarily part of what the member has before us, trees and shrubs for reclamation are also required to be native and from a local seed source, particularly when we're talking about the reclamation in oil sands. Any use of nonnative species of trees and shrubs needs to go through a very thorough evaluation process. The use of nonnative trees and shrubs is currently restricted to reclamation research trials and occurs only after a very formal review. Oil sands operators are developing a seed co-operative to ensure that a stable supply of native seeds is available. That's important because, particularly if you have large areas of disturbance, acquisition of seeds can be problematic. So the seed bank is an important vehicle for ensuring that we have reseeding available. The province is providing guidance in the development of this overall plan, and we plan to expand in the future to ensure that we include herbs and grasses.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the member on his initiative to bring this issue forward. I support the initiative with one cautionary note: we have to ensure that there is a degree of discretion that's involved in the application of a policy such as this to deal with some rare instances where it might make sense to have nonnative species in particular circumstances.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to speak in favour of Motion 506. The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod is a man of the earth, someone who understands that nature never rests and that bare ground never stays that way. Indeed, he has already mentioned rough fescue in his opening comments. Rough fescue is a wonderful grass. It's a grass that has often been equated with snow and used as cattle feed.

It is logical that we should approximate as close as possible the same species of grasses and forbs as were in a place prior to a disturbance. Nature enjoys generalities and adapts quickly to conditions, which is why so many plant and animal species can be found over a wide range of areas. Alberta folksinger Ian Tyson eloquently describes the coyote's range as extending from the tundra to the shores of Malibu. I'm sorry, I don't remember the name of the song.

Mr. Rodney: It's the shores of Malibu.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you. And so it is with grasses and forbs. Prairie species are reasonably common and highly adaptable. The reason that native species are not often used in reclamation is mostly a matter of supply as opposed to suitability.

The Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, a federally funded organization, has developed a nondestructive means of harvesting native grass seeds, a system that they perfected at the old Lethbridge research station in the mid-1980s. Imagine, if you will, walking with a pair of long pants through the prairie and your pants are polyester. Now, I know that disco is out of style and leisure suits are hard to find, hon. members, but my point is still served. As you return to the car, you will see the various seeds stuck to your pants and your socks. This is nature's way of propagating seeds over a wide area.

The PFRA, instead of being annoyed by the seeds sticking to their leisure suits and socks, saw opportunity. Using prairie ingenuity and an old Massey-Ferguson model 510 Western Special combine, the PFRA developed a combine harvester that does not disturb the prairie grasses. It is quite effective in stripping the seeds from the stalks. Because different prairie grasses go through seeding at different times, the converted harvester had to be light enough to travel over the prairie many times with minimal disturbances. In place of a straight-cut header, a large brush, not unlike that used on a street sweeper, is mounted above the combine table and rotates slowly, brushing seeds onto the table. This particular vintage of combine harvester, which predates the high-tech equipment used today, had fairly significant losses which resulted in volunteer reseeding as the machine progressed. Progress was very slow as nature does not yield her abundance in any particular hurry. Oftentimes it took them all day to brush and thresh a bushel of native seed. This particular bushel of seed, however, may have been enough to seed a hundred acres in combination with other plant species.

The real beauty of the PFRA machinery is the ability to travel across the same piece of native prairie harvesting different seeds at different times of maturity. Grassland is undisturbed, and indeed protected areas such as Grasslands national park in southern Saskatchewan are the perfect locations to harvest. All we need to make this an effective business model is a market. We have native seed. We have harvesting technology that we can license to independent operators. We have a ready market.

It makes sense to promote the idea of using native species for regeneration and reclamation. I applaud the hon. member for offering us the opportunity to develop and enhance not only the rural environment but also the rural economy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and speak in favour of Motion 506. Motion 506 urges the Alberta government to use site-specific native grasses and forbs in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes to ensure the preservation and future integrity of our plant ecosystem.

Currently companies that conduct activities that disturb land must remediate and reclaim the land to make it productive again in a way that will support activities similar to its previous use. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act sets out the regulations for conservation and reclamation of lands. It states: "The objective of conservation and reclamation of specified land is to return the specified land to an equivalent land capability." However, there is no requirement to use 100 per cent native species when reclaiming lands.

Invasive nonnative species can rapidly spread throughout the native grasslands as they have minimal controls to limit their spread. However, the severity of nonnative species varies. Timothy, for example, is commonly found in Alberta and throughout North America and is planted as a forage crop. Timothy is a perennial grass that is native to Europe. It was introduced to North America in the 18th century. Although timothy is not native to Alberta, it is much less invasive and harmful to the ecosystem. Timothy is commonly grown for horse and cattle feed, particularly because of its relatively high fibre content. While timothy is an example of a nonnative plant species that is less invasive and harmful, other nonnative plants can be much more invasive and displace beneficial native grasses.

It is important that reclamation projects control what they seed, particularly ensuring that they use clean seeds, without weeds, and foreign and unusual grasses. Motion 506 would encourage the use of clean seeds that are native to Alberta in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes. This would help prevent nonnative and harmful species from spreading in Alberta.

Naturally adapted grasses and forbs lead to more efficient water use and carbon uptake, which is beneficial not only for the plant ecosystem but our overall environment. Native plants have grown within communities of various grasses, where they have evolved together and provide habitat for a variety of wildlife species.

While some nonnative species are less harmful than others, it is important that we prevent the spread of the most harmful invasive species. Motion 506 would prevent the spread of harmful species by requiring the use of only site-specific native grasses and forbs in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that maybe later on the member would clarify the wording of "site-specific." I take it as the site in the area where the reclamation work is being done, not to the seed that was there before on the exact piece of ground but to the species that are growing around the site, so it's specific to that area and site. For example, up in my area a lot of the green zone has timothy growing in it, so if there's timothy growing all around this site, it wouldn't be harmful if timothy came back.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 506, which urges the Alberta government to use site-specific native grasses and forbs in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes. This would ensure the preservation and future integrity of our plant ecosystem.

Currently companies that conduct activities that disturb land must remediate and reclaim the land to make it productive again in a way that will support activities similar to its previous use. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act sets out the regulations for conservation and reclamation of lands. It states that "the objective of the conservation and reclamation of specified land is to return the specified land to an equivalent land capability." However, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act does not require the use of 100 per cent native grasses and forbs to be used when reclaiming native landscapes. Motion 506 would encourage the government to ensure that future reclamation would include the specific native grasses and forbs.

The use of native plant species would be beneficial in a number of ways. By using native grasses, reclamation projects would be using plant species that have already adapted to our region's specific geography, hydrology, and climate. Native plants have grown within communities of various grasses, where they have evolved together and provided a habitat for a variety of wildlife species. By introducing nonnative grasses, many of these native ecosystems are replaced and lost to us forever. Another advantage of native plants is that they develop a deep root system, which helps prevent flooding, controls erosion, and enhances biodiversity.

An example of a beneficial native grass in Alberta is rough fescue. Rough fescue was adopted as the official grass of Alberta on April 30, 2003, thanks to the hard work and dedication of the Prairie Conservation Forum. Though not as noticeable as the wild rose, it is, nevertheless, a symbol of Alberta. Alberta has the largest area of rough fescue grassland in the world and is the only place in North America that has plains, foothills, and northern kinds of rough fescue.

Rough fescue is a wonderful grass. It is among the most productive grasslands in North America in terms of providing valuable forage. This forage is very beneficial to both wildlife and livestock. Rough fescue is very important as prime winter forage because of its ability to retain high nutrient levels during the winter season. Rough fescue is invaluable to ranchers and wildlife throughout Alberta.

However, fescue grassland is one of the most threatened native grass communities in Alberta. According to Environment Canada fescue prairie once extended over 255,000 square kilometres in the prairie provinces. Less than 5 per cent of the original fescue prairie remains today. At 315 square kilometres the Little Fish Lake-Hand Hills block in Alberta is the largest piece of northern fescue grassland left. Invasive nonnative species can and have been rapidly spreading throughout native grasslands and displacing native grasses like rough fescue.

Motion 506 would help prevent the introduction of invasive foreign plant species in reclamation projects and would help maintain the integrity of site-specific native grasses and forbs in Alberta. It is important to protect the few things that are slowly being lost to us, and as a proud Albertan I feel that it is necessary to take all actions possible to protect and enhance through proper reclamation our native landscapes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Motion 506, which urges the government to use site-specific native grasses and forbs in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes. Essentially, Motion 506 aims to ensure the preservation and future integrity of our plant ecosystem by requiring that companies that disturb land must use specific grasses upon reclamation of land.

Alberta currently has stringent legislation regarding land reclamation across our province. Motion 506 would strengthen this legislation by requiring 100 per cent native species to be used when reclaiming native landscapes. This would continue Alberta's trend of being a leader in land reclamation throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta was the first province to legislate land reclamation, through the Surface Reclamation Act in 1963. This act provided a standard of reclamation for private land throughout the province. Over the last 46 years the act has been amended to require more stringent conservation methods, including a requirement for companies to strip the topsoil from the land and store it for future reclamation upon completion of the project.

In 1993 the Land Surface Conservation and Reclamation Act was replaced by the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Currently the reclamation of land is carried out in accordance with the EPEA and other conservation and reclamation regulations.

Mr. Speaker, last summer I had the opportunity to visit a coal mine in central Alberta with rural caucus and to observe the reclamation process first-hand. I was encouraged by the results I was able to see. There was a noticeable commitment from the company to leave the land in a condition equal to or better than how it was prior to the mining operation.

The passing of Motion 506 will serve to enhance the current regulations and, therefore, significantly improve the conditions of future land reclamation projects. Ensuring the use of site-specific native grasses and forbs could mean a variety of benefits for Albertans, in particular for those living in areas where land will be reclaimed. For instance, native grasses have adapted to a particular region's geography and climate over centuries.

In addition, native plants have also grown within communities of various grasses, evolving together and providing a vibrant habitat for a variety of wildlife species. If these same native plants and grasses are not returned following the reclamation process, this can directly impact the return of wildlife species to the area following reclamation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the use of naturally adapted grasses and forbs leads to more efficient water use and carbon uptake, which is beneficial not only for the plant ecosystem but our environment overall.

This compelling information illustrates that Motion 506 has the environmental interests of Albertans at heart. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod for bringing forward this important motion. I strongly believe that the benefits to our ecosystem promoted by this motion are significant. Therefore, I'll be offering my support to Motion 506.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to make a few comments. I certainly recognize that the constituency of Livingstone-Macleod probably has the best preservation of some of the native grasses in the province. My roots are also in God's country down there, and I certainly miss that country.

I'm not particularly conversant with native grasses per se, but I certainly do support the restoration of native species of all types. I'm not sure if this motion is intended to apply to native flowers, but I certainly hope and anticipate that it does. Particularly at this time of the year I certainly miss the wild crocuses and the shooting stars and the buttercups and the tiger lilies and some of those flowers that are very specific to the south country and in the native areas. I would hope that the intent of the motion is to broaden it to preserve all native species of that type because they certainly add to the beautiful landscape, particularly in southern Alberta, at this time of the year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are any other hon. members wishing to join the debate on Motion 506?

Seeing none, I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod to close the debate.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to comment on some of the questions that were left out there. I'd made a comment earlier about the availability of seeds and the process of growing some of them. Rough fescue, for example, has been reproduced, and it's now put out there in plugs and replanted into areas. It's started out in a greenhouse, then replanted as plugs into disturbed areas.

A comment on the flowers. Yes, for any of the flowers that are native to that area, if the seeds are available, they, too, would be welcome to be put back.

Site specific would mean specific to the site. If you're in an area of timothy, put it back to that. If that was not the native plant there and it had taken over already, then basically we would be looking at it differently than we would if we were in pristine native areas. Let's try and keep those exactly the way they are as much as possible, using common sense.

It was an interesting comment from the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti as we were in Australia last winter and toured one farm that had reseeded all of the farmland back to native trees and was now harvesting native tree seeds. That was his income now because they're replanting as much as possible to have an uptake of the water that is creating big salinity areas and blowing their soil out. The native trees are replanted on ridgelines. It takes the water up, and their lower areas are now producing better again. So there are opportunities, if we have this in place, for seed producers to come forward, and we already do have some in the province. There are concerns over the price of native seeds. The price of native seeds will become competitive if there are more people producing and capturing them.

I would like to thank all of my hon. colleagues who have spoken to the motion this afternoon. Mr. Speaker, I would like to again emphasize how fortunate we are in Alberta to have some of the most pristine landscapes in the world. To keep it this way, I believe this motion needs to be passed, to ensure that our native landscapes are preserved. That's why I have proposed this motion urging the Alberta government to use site-specific native grasses and forbs in all future land reclamation projects on native landscapes.

This past hour we have discussed the importance of our native landscapes, the effects of invasive species, and also the geographical diversity of this province. Overall, Mr. Speaker, I believe that by exclusively using site-specific native grasses and forbs in the future, reclamation projects on native landscapes are one way to ensure that our native grass species and forbs remain on our landscape for generations to come.

Just one more comment on our fescue grass. It's one of the few grasses in the world that can cure on the stump with the exact same protein level as it had when it was actively growing and green. It does provide a very important source of nutrition for all of our furry animals, as do sweetgrasses as well.

Therefore, I thank my hon. colleagues for their consideration of this motion and ask all hon. members to support Motion 506. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried unanimously]

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:44 p.m. to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. On this day let each of us pray in our own way for all who have been killed or injured in the workplace. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies, and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour of three introductions of grade 6 classes. The first that I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly is a group of grade 6 students from Sturgeon Heights school in St. Albert. They are accompanied by teachers Mr. Matt Ohm and Mrs. Lorna MacKay and teacher's assistant Mrs. Collette Hartmetz as well as parent helper Mrs. Dillis Brown. I believe they are in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is also a grade 6 class from my constituency. They are students from l'école Broxton Park school in Spruce Grove. I might add, too, that I chatted with them on the steps leading up to this Chamber. Both classes that I'm introducing have already participated in the mock Legislature. Among other things they passed school uniforms and separate schools for boys and girls.

L'école Broxton Park school is accompanied by teachers Mme Bérénice MacKenzie and Mrs. Fran Korpela and parent helpers Mrs. Teresa Yamada, Mr. Gary Lundman, and Mrs. Alana Regier. I believe that they are in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

My third introduction is on behalf of the Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security. It is a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of very special students from St. Matthew Lutheran school in Stony Plain. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would ask our special guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two good friends of mine, Laila and Alice Goodridge, who are sitting in the public gallery. Alice is a native of Hagen, Saskatchewan, but lived most of her life in Alberta and now is visiting us from New Westminster, B.C. Her granddaughter Laila is a native of Fort McMurray but, most importantly, is the president of the University of Alberta Conservative club. I'd ask that they please stand. Give them the traditional warm welcome. Thank you.

Ms Notley: Today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly members of the board of directors of the Alberta Workers' Health Centre. They are Russell Eccles, Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta; Wally Land, Communications, Energy & Paperworkers Local 855 from Hinton; Liz Thompson, Health Sciences Association of Alberta; Nancy Furlong from the Alberta Federation of Labour; and Kevin Flaherty, executive director of the Alberta Workers' Health Centre.

Today is the International Day of Mourning for workers who were killed and injured on the job. Last year 166 workplace fatalities were recognized by the WCB in Alberta. This number highly underrepresents the true totals since most deaths resulting from occupationally related illnesses go unreported as such. The centre believes that every worker is entitled to a safe and healthy workplace. It supports all workers, both unionized and non-unionized.

I would now ask that my guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: It's my pleasure today to introduce you to a person who arrived in the world a few years ago, a number of years ago, and that's the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill, who is experiencing an anniversary today.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration.

International Day of Mourning

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you. Every year on April 28 we take a moment to remember those who are seriously injured or killed on the job. Every one of these workers has family, friends, and co-workers. Their lives can be shattered in a split second. On this International Day of Mourning we renew our commitment to making sure Alberta workers come home healthy and safe at the end of their workday.

Mr. Speaker, 60,692 Alberta workers suffered disabling injuries in 2008. This was about 2,000 less than in 2007. However, there were also 166 workplace fatalities in 2008. I know we all agree that even one fatality is one too many, but 166 serves as a wake-up call since that is 12 more than in 2007.

We have strong workplace health and safety legislation in place in Alberta. We have a prime contractor clause that ensures there is one employer who has overall responsibility for health and safety at each work site. We perform five times the number of inspections we did 10 years ago, and we write almost 10 times the number of orders for safety infractions. Mr. Speaker, 2008 was a record year for Occupational Health and Safety Act prosecutions, with 22 convictions and over $5 million in court-ordered penalties against employers; 88 per cent of that money went to alternative sentencing to fund programs for the health or safety of workers.

Taxpayers expect us to do our job protecting workers by enforcing safety standards, and we do. We can still redouble our efforts to work with our partners and improve health and safety in Alberta workplaces because at the end of the day workplace health and safety is a responsibility governments share with employers, unions, safety associations, and workers. We expect our partners to do their part. The government will be reviewing the Work Safe Alberta strategy with these partners to see where we have been effective and where we need to improve. The budget for occupational health and safety has been increased by more than $5 million for the 2009-10 fiscal year so that we can implement any changes found to be necessary.

Fittingly, Mr. Speaker, North American Occupational Safety and Health Week takes place right after our day of mourning so that we can make people aware of the need for improved health and safety at work. A complete list of activities taking place across Alberta is available online at employment.alberta.ca/naosh. I encourage all MLAs to go to local events and show your support.

I know, Mr. Speaker, I speak for all my legislative colleagues when I say that our hearts go out to those whose lives have been forever changed by workplace injuries and fatalities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On behalf of the Official Opposition the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this International Day of Mourning those of us in the Official Opposition offer our condolences to the many friends, family members, and loved ones who have lost someone due to a workplace fatality. Workplace fatalities are avoidable tragedies, making the loss all the more heart wrenching and senseless.

The Alberta government must do more to safeguard the lives of all workers. In 2008 we lost an average of three workers per week as a result of workplace incidents or occupational disease. Workplace fatalities have risen 34 per cent in the last three years.

Albertans go to work to support their families and contribute to the Alberta prosperity and economic growth. Their hard work benefits us all, yet when it comes to protecting these people from avoidable workplace accidents, Alberta unfortunately lags behind other jurisdictions. Farm workers, for example, work without the protection of the Occupational Health and Safety Act. Workplaces are currently not required to develop or post health and safety rules at the job site. These outdated policies must be changed if we're going to be sincere in our efforts to finally reduce workplace deaths and accidents.

In addition, the Alberta government should implement mandatory health and safety committees for workplaces with 20 workers or more, and they should make accident investigation reports admissible as evidence at trials and public inquiries. Taking these actions now could save many lives and reduce the number of needless, costly workplace injuries.

I'm grateful to Alberta workers. Every day they roll up their sleeves to keep Alberta's economy going. The least we can do is to pass legislation that will make their workplaces safer so that they can return home each and every day after their jobs to their families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: This would be with respect to a request to allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to participate. I'll have to ask. If any member is opposed to granting unanimous request, please say no.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and also to members of the Assembly for giving me the opportunity to rise and speak on a day that has taken on greater and greater significance and is marked around the world.

Every year too many workers lose their lives as a result of work-related injury, illness, and disease. The numbers are discouraging. Workers shouldn't have to risk their lives or their health when they go to work. Mr. Speaker, it's not enough for this government to use vague language about renewing age-old commitments to making sure Alberta workers are healthy and safe at the end of their workday. It's not enough to say that we have strong workplace health and safety legislation in Alberta because, frankly, we don't. And it's not enough to say that we perform five times the number of inspections we did 10 years ago because it still isn't enough.

We owe it to the families left behind when a worker dies to do much better. It's time for this province to appoint special prosecutors to lay charges against employers when their actions cause death or serious injury. It's time for us to hire more inspectors to ensure employers comply with the law. It is time to ensure that all Alberta workplaces have mandatory health and safety committees. It's also time for this government to enact new regulations that deal with known dangers in today's workplaces, including workplace violence, exposure to toxins and carcinogens, repetitive stress injuries, and injuries caused by poor ergonomics, workplace harassment, and stress.

Finally, we need to remove that employer escape clause that says "as far as . . . practicable" from the health and safety act, where it does not belong. Every workplace death or injury is preventable. In the last 10 years 1,283 Albertans, some as young as 15 years old, have needlessly died in the workplace. How many more will be killed before this government finally takes the action we need?

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Student Engagement Initiative Media Award

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. April 26 to May 2 is Education Week in Alberta. Alberta students benefit from an education system that is progressive and engaging. One example of this is Speak Out, Alberta's student engagement initiative, that was launched in November of 2008 to encourage our youth in our province to engage with government in strengthening their education experience. To encourage students to speak out, a public service announcement was recently produced for Alberta Education. This excellent piece of work was recently awarded a bronze Telly award in New York for outstanding achievement in the educational category.

The Alberta Education Speak Out team worked in collaboration with Dynacor Media Group and student volunteers from across the province to create and produce an engaging, creative, and informative public service piece. Several students volunteered to be filmed and provided their perspectives on education, Mr. Speaker. Three students were from Edmonton, two were from Camrose, and the final pair were from the Fort McMurray area.

The Telly awards were founded in 1978 to honour excellence in local, regional, and cable TV advertising. Today the Telly is one of the most sought-after awards by industry leaders. The 29th annual Telly awards received over 14,000 entries, from all 50 U.S. states and five continents. This award for the Speak Out team is significant because it was selected from amongst submissions by industry giants like Disney, Harpo Studios, TSN, and Warner Bros.

I would like to direct members of this House to the Speak Out website, www.speakout.alberta.ca, where they can see for themselves the thoughts and ideas of the thousands of people across the province who have been engaging in this initiative.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate all those involved with the Speak Out public service announcement for their outstanding and creative work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Funding for Small Nonprofit Organizations

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on the Calgary Chamber of Voluntary Organizations' 2009 report entitled No Small Thing: Calgary's Small Nonprofits, Charities and Grassroots Groups, an exploratory study of 20 groups that had a budget of under $100,000 and under four paid staff.

According to Statistics Canada's national survey of nonprofit and voluntary organizations two-thirds of Alberta-based nonprofits and charities operated with less than $100,000 in annual revenue in 2006.

The study provided the following recommendations. Increased recognition and valuing of the contributions of small organizations to the development of healthy and vibrant communities, particularly by government, the corporate sector, and other large organizations, would help these groups to be included for research and future investments. More funding stability and improved funding practices are needed as small groups are particularly vulnerable to funding fluctuations. This would help support their core operating costs. Small nonprofits need increased access to affordable operating space that provides the opportunity to share office, reception services, file storage, and meeting space.

Participants identified the need for more collaboration between organizations in the face of competitive pressures, and providing support to interested groups would help to address difficulties in finding potential partners. Greater co-operative arrangement of business services such as audit and accounting services, insurance and benefits, human resource management, and web support would be helpful in increasing operating efficiencies and reducing costs. These small nonprofits also have a strong desire to build better connections with the business community. Lastly, in-kind donations of items like computers, software, and vehicles would help build the technology capacity of these groups and enable them to focus funds to service delivery.

Mr. Speaker, our small organizations are led by people driven by the cause of their organization, and the role they play in weaving the fabric of Calgary's volunteer landscape is indeed . . . [Ms Woo-Paw's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, you're going to give a statement today? Proceed.

Swine Flu Pandemic Planning

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Because of the developing swine flu threat, the World Health Organization has raised their pandemic alert level to 4 out of 5: a global epidemic, a new virus for which there is no current vaccine. This is the most serious alert level since the Hong Kong flu outbreak of 1968-69, during which a million people died world-wide.

Albertans can have confidence in the dedicated and competent professionals and ready availability of treatment, including antiviral drugs, but clearly this administration has no reserve in our underbuilt system, and Alberta is seriously compromised in providing timely, quality care for new cases and contacts.

While there are encouraging signs that this flu won't be as serious as the Hong Kong flu, it raises disturbing questions about Alberta's preparedness for any large-scale emergency, including industrial and vehicular disasters. Right now serious overcrowding and lack of hospital capacity is a fact of everyday life in Alberta's health care system. We simply do not have health care sufficient in professionals and space in our facilities to meet existing demand.

Emergency departments are so full that doctors are examining patients in their waiting rooms, and people with flu-like systems who come to these clinics or emergency departments expose others waiting for care. These must be isolated. Where are we going to find the isolation rooms in emergency and in clinics?

Some patients will need admission to hospital for treatment. Again, where are the isolation beds to deal with this? Already hallways are jammed with patients. Rooms intended for single or double occupancy have additional patients. In a worst-case scenario, with staff sick and off work from influenza, these challenges will be compounded yet again.

The unfortunate reality is this: Alberta, even after the SARS outbreak, reduced its investment in public health as well as beefing up spaces for professionals and patients. It seems that prevention is not a priority for the Stelmach administration. The solution is that we need to get back to the foundation of primary care: public health services, family doctors, nurses, and home care. Not sexy, just . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you've gone past the time frame allocated. Secondly, you violated one of the rules of the House by naming a member.

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Labour Protection for Paid Farm Workers

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Paid farm workers in Alberta are exempt from occupational health and safety, mandatory Workers' Compensation Board coverage, and the labour code. The government has been consulting on this matter for over a decade while 182 farm deaths and thousands of reported farm injuries have occurred. To the Premier: as a farmer why has your government in 2009 still not taken action to protect paid farm workers with the same rights as all other workers in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned a couple of times in the House over the last few weeks, the minister of agriculture and the Minister of Employment and Immigration are holding consultations with the agriculture community and other interested parties. Once the consultations are complete, then that information will come forward to government. We'll accept whatever we hear from the people and then look at how we can change legislation if necessary.

Dr. Swann: When, Mr. Premier? When?

Given that a provincial court judge has recommended that all paid employees on farms should be covered by occupational health and safety, an act which would prevent some fatalities, when will the Premier make the necessary changes to include paid farm workers under the Occupational Health and Safety Act?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the two ministers can inform the House of how the consultations are proceeding.

Dr. Swann: What does the Premier have to say to those injured farm workers and the families of those farm workers killed on the job, whose only option is to turn to costly lawsuits because this administration has failed to protect them and give them equal rights?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, whenever there's an accident – it doesn't matter if it's in a farmplace or a small business or large business – we take the issues very seriously. That is why we're holding the consultations. We'll bring forward the information to the House. We'll have an opportunity to discuss it and hear from all sides on the issue and come up with a policy that's going to serve Albertans well.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workplace Health and Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year there were 166 workplace fatalities in Alberta. That's three deaths per week. Joint work-site health and safety committees, a very effective tool to help reduce workplace accidents and deaths, are not mandatory in Alberta as they are in the rest of the country. They are only issued by ministerial order. To the Premier: why does Alberta continue to lag behind the rest of the country as far as providing efficient, safe occupational health and safety rules on our job sites?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the number of fatalities was up slightly. The number of injuries has actually decreased in the province of Alberta. That's given the fact that there was a large increase in the workforce in Alberta. We've got to find a balance and, certainly, prevent those fatalities. Many of them were traffic fatalities. There were some right on the job site.

I know that companies are working in partnership with the Alberta government. We're doing whatever we can to ensure that we protect the workers, that do a good job for all Albertans.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, a 34 per cent increase in workplace fatalities over a three-year period is not a statistic that's up slightly, as the Premier maintains.

Of the 24 workplaces which have a ministerial order to operate a joint health and safety committee, none are at an oil sands operation. However, there are ministerial-mandated committees at Lucerne Foods, Keyano College, and Sealy Canada. To the Premier: why are oil sands operations not deemed dangerous enough to have a mandatory health and safety committee ordered by your government?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the minister responsible has all of the information.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we're very, very concerned any time the number of injuries goes up. The hon. member talks about the oil sands. The oil sands lost-time claim rate is substantially lower than the average of all industries in Alberta. We continue to work with oil industries to make sure that they're as safe as possible. Again, the oil sands subsector is the second safest, right behind exploration.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. That's interesting. To the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration: one of the reasons why the oil sands operations are safer is because they're union sites.

Now, again to the Premier: today on this International Day of Mourning will the Premier commit to making joint health and safety committees mandatory at all Alberta work sites where there are 20 or more employees?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we'll work with industry to make sure that we find efficient ways of ensuring the health and safety of workers. The oil sands do have a good record. There are other small businesses; sometimes there are some issues there. We're going to work with all industry, both large and small, and work out a plan to make sure that we do protect the safety of workers in the province.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

AIMCo Governance

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In questions yesterday into AIMCo's decision to invest in Precision Drilling, it was established that AIMCo's vice-chair and the founder of Precision are business partners. That the founder of Precision Drilling stepped down from that company 16 months ago is not relevant. There are two things at issue here: first, that it is not good practice for an active investment banker to be on the board of AIMCo because of the inevitable potential conflict-of-interest problems and, second, that public agencies are accountable to their ministers even when set up to operate at arm's length. To the Premier: since it's pretty key if AIMCo is going to invest public funds here at home in Alberta business to follow best practices so that everything passes the smell test, what policies or codes of conduct are in place at AIMCo governing conflict of interest?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, AIMCo follows a code of conduct. We recently did a complete review of our agencies, boards, and commissions. That was additional work that the government did to ensure that we have a very clear delineation of responsibility. I'm sure that the AIMCo chair would provide any information very specific to whatever the member is asking.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given what the Premier just said in answer to that question and since this government has released the agencies governance framework and just recently Bill 32 as well, will the Premier point out to the finance minister that according to those documents she is accountable for AIMCo's activities and the codes of conduct they have in place? Yesterday in question period she didn't really seem to want to have anything to do with AIMCo.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, of course, that's a matter of opinion of the member. The province of Alberta has about $75 billion worth of assets that AIMCo is managing. They are doing a good job, especially in light of many of the issues that other fund managers are experiencing across the country and around the world. They made a decision based on the evidence that was presented to the board. In a democratic state, which we are here in the province of Alberta, yes, at the end of the day the responsibility lies with the highest office, which is the government of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if everything does pass the smell test, I wonder if the Premier can explain to me why one of the corporate registration documents I tabled yesterday regarding the business partnership, a document we accessed last Thursday off the Alberta corporation nonprofit search, was altered to remove all references to directors or shareholders of the company and, further, that it was altered on Sunday. I'll table those documents at the appropriate time.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, let's talk about the smell test.

Yesterday that hon. member got up in here and indicated there was a relationship of something untoward between Mr. Gosbee and Mr. Swartout. Swartout retired in 2007 and has no shares in Precision Drilling. Mr. Gosbee has no shares in the company and no personal interest in it. They have a business sideline that has precious little or nothing to do with it. It's a helicopter business to do skiing.

So it's all right for them to stand up and impugn two very successful, respected Alberta businessmen and then say: it's true because I've got a document. That's the smell, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

2:00 Nuclear Power Consultation

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to nuclear power, this government has put the horse before the cart. It is increasingly evident that the Tories have already decided to support the development of nuclear power in our province and are now making a big show of pretending to care what Albertans think. Under the guise of public consultation the government has a website full of so much pro-nuclear propaganda that it might as well have been paid for by Bruce Power. I want to ask the Energy minister: why won't he admit that this government has already decided in favour of nuclear power and is now merely attempting to convince Albertans to go along?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I will admit is that the government of the province of Alberta has a very solid program to go forward and ask Albertans for their opinion with respect to this very serious issue. It's very obvious that there are some members – there may be a number of them over there; I'm not sure – who have already made up their minds. Thank you very much for that. We will mark them down. However, I now want to hear from the rest of Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, he doesn't want to hear from Albertans. The evidence is clear. This government supports nuclear power, and they're providing one-sided and misleading information to Albertans to try and get them onside. Their nuclear panel was made up of hand-picked nuclear supporters and its findings predetermined. The government is misleading Albertans with pro-nuclear propaganda, and they're shutting ordinary Albertans out of consultation meetings. To the Minister of Energy: why are you denying Albertans the opportunity to speak up at public meetings if not because you want to shut them out of a decision that's already been made?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's worth the time to stand here and repeat again for – I don't know – the second or third time what it is we are doing with respect to the consultation with Albertans. What we're doing, the consultation that we're doing, the information that came out of the workbook that we produced in the last month or so: that was all based on research, not rhetoric.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, they're researching the ways that they can try and convince Albertans to support nuclear power. The proof is in the propaganda pudding. This Tory government's claim to open consultations is a sham. It's clear that their mind is already made up. Their nuclear power was biased. Their website is full of pro-nuclear propaganda. Its so-called consultations with ordinary Albertans are a joke. They're not even invited to your meetings. Again to the Minister of Energy: why are you pretending to care what Albertans think about nuclear power when the decision has already been made?

Mr. Knight: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what is one-sided and biased about selecting a group of individuals that would have the opportunity to be unfettered in their discussions relative to this issue. I don't know what's one-sided about the ability for every Albertan, if they so choose, to receive a workbook and some background information relative to this. That's not the only information they can receive. There is information that abounds on this topic. The members opposite are absolutely within their rights to give that information to anybody they would choose.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Alberta-Canada Growing Forward Program

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we heard in this House from a member opposite that the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development made an announcement around more ad hoc funding for agriculture communities. Our producers and processors in and around Lethbridge are very interested in funding support for agriculture. In an attempt to get accurate information that is based on fact rather than speculation and attempts to grab headlines, my questions are for the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Will you please clarify what type of funding was announced last Friday?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I believe the member opposite was referring to yesterday was the announcement of our Growing Forward programs, which are a collaboration between the federal and all provincial governments, but you'd never know it by the way the question was asked; I'll tell you that. It replaces the old agriculture policy framework and is not ad hoc funding. Quite frankly, it's the complete opposite of ad hoc funding. It's strategic grant funding that is designed to help industry be competitive, innovative, and proactive in managing risks. All programs are also cost shared, and industry must make their own financial investments in the projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the same minister. My agricultural producers and processing industries are facing incredible challenges from intense global competition. Can you describe some of the programs and what they will mean to the agriculture industry?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, Growing Forward programs in Alberta were specifically designed to achieve results that will lead to long-term industry success. A hog producer could apply for a grant to upgrade his facility to be highly efficient, which helps environment and the bottom line. A commodities association could opt to implement enhanced biosecurity measures programs for their membership. A food processor could enhance food safety protocols to adopt new, state-of-the-art technologies, quality-added and value-added opportunities. All of these programs enable Alberta producers in agribusiness to become competitive, profitable, and industry leaders.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. My final question is to the same minister. How has the agriculture industry responded to this announcement?

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, Mr. Speaker, unlike the member from across the way, who always seems to look for the worst in anything that happens in this province, the reaction from producers, processors, and commodity associations has only been positive. Yesterday I met two family-owned and family-run processors based right here in Edmonton who would be eligible for the program the member opposite tabled, and they were very appreciative of the program. These family-run companies employ quite a number of Edmontonians, but I suspect the members across the way really don't care about that. They only care about headlines and not about jobs and growth of Alberta business.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Physician Supply

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A decision to freeze hiring for doctors is a scary prospect, especially at these times. What's more concerning is that neither the minister nor the Premier seemed to be aware of the situation. The minister of health gave a response that was later refuted as incorrect by the spokesperson of the Health Services Board. The lack of communication or even understanding of what is happening by the members who are ultimately responsible for it casts doubt on their credibility in managing this health care transition. To the minister: will he clarify what is actually happening with the Health Services Board, and will there or will there not be a freeze?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reason the Premier and the minister of health refused to confirm the allegation made by the Leader of the Opposition is because it was not correct. Let me state for the record: there is no hiring freeze. I'll repeat that: there is no hiring freeze. We need general practitioners, family doctors, in all parts of this province, and efforts are going to continue to ensure that we, wherever we can, fill those vacancies. What has happened is that a number of positions that are more specialist in research are being reviewed to ensure that they fit within our focus on research in this province, going forward.

Dr. Swann: Well, the truth is, Mr. Speaker, that the Health Services Board is now backing away from the hiring freeze due to complaints from the medical and academic communities. Can the minister explain who was consulted before the decision was made to release the memo advising of the freeze?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only restate what I said in the first place: there is no hiring freeze. I can repeat it 10 times if it helps. There is no hiring freeze. There never has been a hiring freeze. What there is is a number of positions; a number of individuals internationally had been contacted for potential recruitment. In light of a new focus on medical research in this province we want to ensure that the right people, that fit within that medical research focus, are the ones that we actually recruit.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday a spokesperson for the Health Services Board dismissed this memo on a freeze, sent last Wednesday, as no longer valid and, quote, old news. End of quote. It's very concerning that changes are implemented in such a haphazard way, that memos are sent one day and then considered invalid the next. Why the flip-flop, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, this particular Leader of the Opposition has stood here on several occasions during this session and talked about smarter spending in health care. Well, I would suggest that as we develop a research policy within Health, working with the Department of Advanced Education and Technology, smart spending would mean that we should be recruiting people that fit within that research strategy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mineral Exploration Tax Credit

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have had several conversations about mineral exploration tax credits with many constituents. They believe that they're a valuable tool to encourage investment in our province in these uncertain times. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Why does Alberta not have a mineral exploration tax credit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta doesn't have a mineral exploration tax credit per se. Instead, we have other programs in the province of Alberta that were introduced to encourage development. Some recent ones that we've done are programs to encourage drilling and production of wells. On the mining side studies indicate that Alberta does have a favourable regime from the perspective of regulation, land-use rules, overall taxes, and business attractiveness. We remain open to suggestions to become competitive in areas where we're not competitive and remain competitive in areas where we are. I believe we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. It was announced that the province is developing these incentive programs to provide short-term, targeted assistance to junior and mid-cap companies. Can flow-through shares be one of these incentives?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again that's a very good question. The information that I have would certainly indicate that flow-through shares are currently allowed under the federal income tax system, in section 66 of the Income Tax Act, for qualifying resource expenditures.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, also to the same minister: what sort of incentives currently exist for mineral investment in Alberta?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, our strengths would include a great tenure system in the province of Alberta, an extensive mapping database that's provided through the knowledge and expertise of the Alberta Geological Survey. That is available to all explorers. We believe that the political stability in the province of Alberta is also a great incentive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Air Quality Monitoring

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's asthma rates are among the worst in the country, and Alberta is the only province that refuses to participate in the national air quality health index. This index emphasizes the link between air quality and health and is as simple to understand as the UV index. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why has the minister refused to adopt the national air quality index, when it would allow parents to turn on their televisions and find out whether it was safe to let their asthmatic children go and play outside?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has no opposition to a national standard. However, we have a disagreement with the federal government on how this particular standard was established. We have already in place in Alberta a detailed network of air quality monitoring systems. We're more than pleased to participate in any kind of a national reporting standard, but we don't want to take what we have in Alberta, which is a very detailed, quality system, and water it down so that it fits into some kind of a national system, where other jurisdictions don't have the capacity that we do to monitor it.

Ms Blakeman: Well, actually, the standards are weaker.

Can the minister explain why Alberta's measurement of five pollutants in isolation from one another and a 20-year-old method would be considered better than the new national standard, which measures the interactive effects of the three pollutants that are not safe at any concentration?

Mr. Renner: The answer to the question is that in Alberta we believe that it's necessary to monitor a much longer list of air pollutants because of the amount of emission sources that we have within this province. We feel that we have a unique circumstance here in Alberta. That unique circumstance needs to be dealt with in a unique way. I emphasize that we have a system in Alberta that we believe to be superior to the one that is being proposed through the federal government.

Ms Blakeman: Now, you shouldn't be going this one alone.

Back to the same minister: given the government's past support and use of population-based health studies for the UV index and for the campaign against smoking, does the minister support the use of these population-based health studies for air quality monitoring?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, air quality monitoring is something that is critical if we're going to be able to implement what we feel to be our priority, and that is the cumulative effects regulatory regime. We need to understand what the desired outcomes are, and we need to be able to understand what the monitoring techniques are that will be required so that we can determine whether or not we have achieved those outcomes. How they fit in or not with all of the ancillary kinds of information sources is very much part of that discussion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Second-language Education Programming

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the future economic and social success of our province so inevitably linked to international immigration and international trade, instilling an understanding of global issues and culture in our youth is critical. Perhaps the most salient expression of culture is language. My questions are relative to international language instruction in Alberta, and they're directed to the Minister of Education. How many schools or what percentage of schools in Alberta offer second-language programming for students in grades 4 to 9?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. All school jurisdictions across the province offer programming in second languages, and about 71 per cent of our grades 4 to 9 schools are offering those second languages, so a very significant proportion of our students have second-language programming available to them in grades 4 to 9.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. How does Alberta compare with other jurisdictions in Canada in terms of second-language programs?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we have in Alberta the widest range of language programming available in the country, including the choice of French language programming plus 10 provincial programs in Blackfoot, Cree, Chinese, German, Italian, Japanese, Latin, Punjabi, Spanish, and Ukrainian. As well as that, many of our school jurisdictions have locally developed programs in additional language areas such as Arabic, American Sign Language, Dene, Filipino, Greek, Hebrew, Korean, Nakota, Polish, Russian, Saulteaux, Swedish, Tsuu T'ina, and Vietnamese. International languages as well as our native languages here at home are very important to students and very important for the learning experience.

Ms Woo-Paw: I'd like to know if there's a difference in the offering of second-language programs between rural and urban jurisdictions in Alberta.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, as one might expect, there's a wider range of offerings available in urban schools, but it's important to note that our rural school jurisdictions also have a wide access to programming available. The Peace River jurisdiction, for example, offers German and Cree in addition to French-language programming. In Red Deer public schools you can take Chinese, German, Japanese, and Spanish. I might say that with distance learning opportunities students anywhere in the province can participate in virtually any language of their choice online.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

School Infrastructure Funding

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton's aging schools desperately need upgrading. Edmonton public is facing a $63 million asbestos liability, and 16 school preservation requests remain a high priority since none of the projects were approved last year. This isn't about asking for more money; it's about using limited resources more wisely. To the minister: given that the projected cost to preserve Edmonton's schools is $12.7 million more this year than it was last year, when nothing was done, will the minister commit to approving the projects with the highest priority this year so that costs do not continue to escalate?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd invite the hon. member to attend at committee on the estimates tomorrow night, and he can perhaps show how he can accomplish what he's talking about without spending more money or where, in fact, there could be a change in priority, from his perspective, as to where the $790 million that we're spending this year on new projects and maintenance projects across the province might be rejigged. We're spending more money than any jurisdiction on schools. We do have lots of work to do in the area, no question about that. We're looking for innovative ways to both stretch the dollars we have and to bring new dollars into the process. But it's a very important area: to make sure that we have schools where children need them.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Edmonton public board is facing a $700,000 deficit from previous relocations of portables and needs another eight portables moved, will the minister review the approval process to ensure that cost-effective practices which increase much-needed classroom space will be adequately funded?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been reviewing both the approval process and the capital planning process. We're working with school boards across the province and with the Ministry of Infrastructure to make sure that our capital planning and the capital improvement process are both effective and efficient and that we make sure that we can prioritize the most important areas based on health and based on capacity needs, based on where the highest priority is. Yes, so very much we're engaged in that process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Again to the minister: given that six years ago it was recommended by the Commission on Learning that classes from junior kindergarten to grade 3 should have no more than 17 students, why is it that out of Edmonton's 153 schools, 120 of those schools still have more than the recommended number?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a fairly complex issue, believe it or not. There has been a significant amount of resources invested in school boards right across the province to help those school boards achieve the class size initiative, and they have across the province at every level except the grades 1 to 3 level. I've had those discussions with the board chairs and superintendents across the province about the need for us to deal with that, but as the hon. member will know, it's about where the schools are located. It's about the class sizes in those schools and the capacity of those schools. There are a number of factors which go into making sure that we meet those class sizes where and when possible.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last 10 years 1,283 Albertans have died on the job, and each one of these deaths was preventable. However, ministerial regret and sympathy will prevent nothing if not followed by real action. More inspectors, mandatory committees with authority, clear safety standards, and special prosecutors: these are the things that would keep Albertans safe at work. To the Minister of Employment and Immigration: why won't the minister replace condolences with the real action needed to protect Alberta workers?

Mr. Goudreau: I think, Mr. Speaker, I did indicate in my statement earlier today that we are doing a lot. We're adding a lot more resources in safety inspections – we're working with those employers who show to be the most in violation – and we continue to invest additional funds and resources to improve the amount of inspections that we do. We are adding to the levels of prosecution.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't seem to be working. In 2006 124 people died, in '07 154 people died, and last year 166 people died. Every year the minister says that one death is one death too many, every year we have over 100 of those deaths, and every year the numbers go up. It's time for a demonstration of real ministerial responsibility, so here's a performance target for the minister. Will the minister put his job on the line for Alberta workers and commit to handing his job over to someone else next year should he fail to reduce the number of work-related deaths in this province?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to say again that workplace injuries or fatalities are totally unacceptable in the province of Alberta. We are recognizing that numbers change from year to year, but given our population growth and the amount of employment that we've seen, the numbers of new businesses in the province of Alberta, our workplace fatality rates have basically stayed constant. While we continue to remain very concerned about the increases in fatalities due to traumatic workplace injuries, the long-term trend for workplace injuries is again downward. We have a tremendous amount of actions and strategies aimed at reducing those traumatic injuries.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, the injuries in the province have not gone down; WCB has just renamed them. Meanwhile the number of work-related deaths is worse than the stats because countless victims are rejected by the WCB. For example, the Alberta Cancer Board says that far more people are dying from work-related ailments than this government admits. Why won't the minister stop repeating these platitudes and reduce workplace deaths by providing real legislative and inspection protection for Alberta workers and their families?

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, we are very concerned about these increases that the member talks about, so new government initiatives are proposed for a lot of areas. The Work Safe Alberta initiative is going into a new planning phase and will be recommending some targeted activities related to things like motor vehicle incidents, workplace traumatic injuries, cancer and other occupational diseases.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

FNMI Education Funding

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the 2009-2012 business plan, released previously by the Ministry of Education, a new business plan goal was revealed that focuses on success for First Nations, Métis, and Inuit – FNMI – students. My question for the Minister of Education is: why has it taken so long for the minister to take an interest in First Nations education, and why now?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, First Nations and Métis education has been part of the education business plan for a number of years. We've decided this year that it was necessary to be more focused and to concentrate greater efforts on the education needs of FNMI students. A number of reasons for that. First of all, the achievement gap between FNMI students and the general student population is significant and shows no signs of narrowing. We have the third-largest FNMI population in the country, and it's growing at a great rate. Children and youth are the fastest growing segment of the aboriginal population, and by 2017 they'll have grown by 39 per cent. It's always been important but never more important than now to focus on that particular area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. This may be an admirable goal, but it comes in a period of fiscal restraint. Is the minister going to provide additional funding to help school boards implement this new business plan goal?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we have for a number of years been providing supplementary funding for self-identified FNMI students, and this year that will be $1,155 per student registered. We have about 35,770 self-identified students, resulting in about $40 million. There's money already being invested in that area in this year's budget, but we need to make sure that that money is being invested effectively and that we're getting the results, so focusing in on what we're doing, sharing best practices, and making sure we have accountability factors in place so that we know that we're getting the results that we need.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister is about tracking results. Up till now school boards have not had to report on FNMI students' data publicly. Will they now do so under this new goal?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they will, but it'll take a little bit of time to get that in place appropriately. The reporting will be part of jurisdictional three-year education plans and annual education results reports, and that will start in 2010. We need to capture the information so that we can assess whether or not we're being effective, so the accountability piece is very, very important. But it's also important that we do it in a sensitive way, in a way that makes sense for the purposes not of demeaning or diminishing any particular category of students but making sure that we have the information so that we can be effective in the use of our resources to achieve the results needed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Reciprocal Drivers' Licences

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transportation has talked a lot about moves to improve driver licensing for many immigrants coming to the province. The government has full reciprocal licensing with only nine countries. Could the minister tell us how long it takes on average for an immigrant from India or the Philippines to get their driver's licence converted into an Alberta licence?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, when they follow the rules that are there, I can't tell him the exact timing because everything is different, but I can tell you that it's a heck of a lot faster than it used to be.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not a heck of a lot faster than what we anticipated.

To the minister again. Things may be better, but they aren't yet good enough. What is the minister doing to speed up this process?

Mr. Ouellette: I'm glad that he admitted that things are better, and they are happening faster. Mr. Speaker, we are always working with other jurisdictions. As you know, we have to verify the paperwork that comes in with the immigration people, and as fast as they can get that verified for us, we go ahead and issue them a licence.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not afraid to speak the truth. Things are getting better, but they are not good enough. We should be ready for the next boom.

To the minister again: will the government start a program to give temporary licences to drivers from countries without reciprocal licensing after they have passed their test and while the government is waiting on confirming the validity of their original licences?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we have looked into that. I think we are working on trying to proceed with some of that. The biggest thing you have to remember, that I say in this House all the time: the first thing we have to worry about is the safety of Albertans on our roads, and we have to make sure that they have the proper paperwork in place to get a reciprocal licence.

2:30 Municipal Transportation Funding for Calgary

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Transportation issues are in the forefront of the daily lives of Albertans, particularly in the communities that have experienced unprecedented growth in recent years, such as Calgary. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. What types of funding are available to municipalities to assist them in their local needs for transportation?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, my department alone administers roughly $1.3 billion to municipalities in this province for their infrastructure work, which I think is close to double any other jurisdiction in the whole country. Depending upon the particular program, the grants may be used for transportation-related projects, for water and waste-water projects. Municipalities may also access capital grants under the municipal sustainability initiative, which is under the Minister of Municipal Affairs. He may wish to supplement on how MSI works in the province or for Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: how much money is collected through the provincial gas tax, and how much of it flows back to Calgary?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, Calgary receives 5 cents per litre on all road fuel sold within the city limits. The provincial fuel tax is 9 cents per litre, so Calgary would receive over half of the money from our road fuel taxes within city limits. That works out to roughly $100 million for the city of Calgary. In addition to that, the federal government rebates $58 million in federal fuel tax to the city of Calgary, which flows through our department.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same hon. minister: can the hon. minister tell us the amount of transportation grants that the city of Calgary has received annually and the number of transportation-related dollars that the province spends directly in and around the city of Calgary?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, Calgary received roughly $350 million this year through my department's grants alone, just my department. We're also investing $425 million in the Stoney Trail northwest ring road and another $650 million in the northeast leg. We're hoping to start on the southeast leg next spring. That'll be another huge-ticket item. Finally, we're investing about $18 million in the Deerfoot Trail this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Athabasca-Redwater.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's workbook on nuclear power is very obviously one sided. For example, the workbook describes the capital cost of both coal-fired and nuclear plants as if they were exactly the same when nuclear plants can be far costlier to build. Does the Minister of Energy think his workbook on nuclear power is fair and accurate?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I would suggest that it's not one sided because an individual believes that it's one sided. Because a member has a certain view, that doesn't make it one sided. The research that's done there is credible and scientific, done from credible sources. There's a full bibliography in the panel's report. The workbook is based on the information in the report. It is not my research. It's done from credible sources.

Dr. Taft: Well, the workbook is one sided because it only presents one side of the case, and that's pretty obvious to anyone who looks at it. For example, the first nuclear power plant to be built in Europe in the last 30 years was to have opened next week in Finland, but it won't because it is as of today 37 months behind schedule and 50 per cent over budget. To the Minister of Energy: wouldn't the minister agree that this kind of information should have been included in this workbook?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't pretend that everything about every nuclear installation around the world is or is not included in the workbook. What I did say was that the research that was done there, done by credible people, backed up by credible scientific sources is all available for any member or any Albertan to look up for themselves if they would prefer to do that. The upshot of this whole thing is that this government has not made any predetermined decision about this issue. We are willing and open, and we are listening to the rest of Albertans before we make any decision.

Dr. Taft: Electrical users in Finland were promised that a new nuclear power plant would provide competitively priced electricity, but industrial users in Finland are now calculating that nuclear power will add billions to their electrical costs. This is the only example of a new power plant in the last 30 years in Europe, so it is relevant to what's going on here. If the minister is open on this issue, will the minister issue a second workbook that provides both sides of the nuclear debate instead of the one-sided view that the current workbook provides?

Mr. Knight: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you, the House, and all Albertans is that the workbook is a tool that we're going to use to engage Albertans. It was tested with average Albertans, who found that it was balanced and did not lead them to any conclusion.

Relative to the cost of nuclear energy the cost of that energy from a nuclear plant was from the panel's work. The panel considered information from the Canadian Energy Research Institute, the U.S. Department of Energy and national laboratory, the Public Services International Research Unit, the University of Greenwich, and the International Energy Agency.
