Mr. Speaker, there is merit to both sides of the argument. Motion 518 could potentially help seniors who are on fixed incomes. At the same time, we do have programs in place to support our aging population with their needs. I think it's an important dialogue. I look forward to continued discussion on this issue and will watch with interest further debate on Motion 518.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and join the discussion on Motion 518, which calls for exempting seniors from paying the education portion of their property tax. Our government recognizes the tremendous contributions seniors have made to our province, and a central focus of our government's economic recovery plan, The Way Forward, is to help seniors by supporting the programs and services they need most, such as health care and housing.

I believe this motion asks our government to consider an important change that could alleviate the tax burden on senior homeowners.

ers. Exempting seniors from this tax would especially help senior Albertans who are living on limited incomes. Senior homeowners could refocus the financial savings from this tax exemption to other priority areas. We know seniors still bear a cost related to home ownership, and with more money in their pockets they may be able to afford important home upgrades. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, seniors who have a less comfortable financial situation are often more reliant on community and financial supports. If we provided them with more savings, we could potentially reduce their dependence on the services and programs. The savings from this exemption for those seniors could largely outweigh the decrease in revenue to the Alberta school foundation fund as seniors represent a small portion of the taxpayers who contribute to this fund.

Alberta has the lowest percentage of seniors in comparison to other provinces. They represent only 11 per cent of our population. With this proportion of our population likely to increase in the years to come, this demographic shift would only slightly slow the increasing portion of education funding from the ASFF over general revenue. Moreover, providing an exemption from the education property tax would greatly assist many seniors throughout the province. These savings will allow seniors an opportunity to improve their quality of life by using their financial savings to supplement other wellness aids. I think this is just one of the many benefits our government should look at when considering whether or not to exempt seniors from this tax.

Mr. Speaker, at the latter point of their life seniors have often already supported their children and grandchildren through the primary and secondary levels of school, fulfilling their obligations to this essential service. Additionally, seniors have contributed to the tax base for years. This motion will assist those seniors who are on below-average incomes and dependent on assistance programs. Mostly and more importantly, the exemption put forth in Motion 518 will strengthen the financial independence of seniors. Alberta's seniors have contributed to building strong communities across this province and continue to help build these communities today. We need to assess every option we have to ensure that they are receiving the support they need and deserve.

I believe this motion proposes a fiscally sound objective that will assist our province's elders, and I am pleased to offer my support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with particular delight that I stand today to support this motion from my colleague from Lethbridge-West. I think it is a very good motion. As we all know, often a private member's motion will move into a private member's bill, or if it's really a good one – and in this case I would hope it would be that – it could move into a government bill, and then the discourse, of course, goes on a totally different level.

The Member for Lethbridge-West and I actually speak to the same seniors, so to put the Member for Airdrie-Chestermere's concern at rest, never, never have we ever been mixed up between who's west and who's east.

There are any number of ways that we can discuss this, but I think the concept that the member is bringing forward is that in some fashion we have to be able to give our seniors a break on their property tax if, in fact, we want them to stay in their homes. One of the other suggestions that could be brought forward, in addition to the two or three other concepts that are for further debate, could possibly be that some seniors could be evaluated on a means test, as they will be for their pharmaceutical plan. I know that that's very, very unpopular amongst seniors, particularly the older ones that we have today, who respect their privacy. They have their privacy, and to have to share all of this type of personal information is often very difficult for them, but I think that could be one fair way of at least looking at what we should be doing with these property taxes.

One of the other suggestions that I've heard but in a different fashion when I talked to different seniors' groups is that instead of the money going into general revenue, where basically the education tax goes at this point in time, it would go directly to the minister of seniors, and then from there those dollars could be put out to support seniors' centres, and then the seniors' centres could be providing many more services so that seniors don't have to go to doctors' offices, don't have to go to government offices. The care and the information that they would need would be at their seniors' centres. It was very interesting as I went across the province to four or five different areas, both rural and urban, if a municipality had strong seniors' centres with a large number of members, then they were very much in favour of that idea. But if they didn't have a seniors' centre that provided the extra and didn't have a large membership, they were basically opposed to that idea. I think that the idea has merit, at least to be discussed.

I would like to go back and just say that I'm certainly in support of this motion and thank the Member for Lethbridge-West for bringing it forward. I think it's time that we had this discussion. This is the first step. I'm trusting that next year we will be able to have steps 2, 3, and 4 and actually come to some sort of a consensus where seniors will get the break on the education portion of their property tax. Seniors have paid their dues.

I think that when we look at education – and I realize the importance of it. I think it's also very important that we support our seniors and keep them healthy. In the long run we may be educating our young but at a high, high cost to our health care if we have to look after seniors that can't live in their homes and have to come into the health care system. It is a bit of a catch-22. I think it's something that would certainly require more discussion. In terms of how we level off who is responsible for education, shouldn't it be the parents and, certainly at the postsecondary education level, perhaps the students themselves through loans and whatever? The seniors should get the breaks that they need to be able to live in dignity and respect to the end of their days.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the timing is perfect here. It's five to six. I would like to invite the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West to close the debate on Motion 518.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't speak for very long, but I sure appreciate the excellent debate that we've had on this motion. What's really been heartening to hear is the support that there is across the board for our seniors in the province of Alberta.

What I really wanted to take a minute to say is that through our minister of seniors and through the department and through many of our departments we have some of the finest seniors' programs in the country. We've made a real commitment to try to help our seniors stay in their homes. We know that it's cost effective for seniors to stay in their homes, it's cost effective to provide health care and other support services in their homes, and it's a much higher quality of life for seniors to be able to stay in their homes.

This is really an issue that's about fairness. Seniors that live in lodges do not have to pay property tax, so this is something that would allow a level playing field for all of our seniors, allow them to stay at home longer. I think that's been a goal of this government. I've heard our Premier talk many, many times about how critically important it is to allow our seniors to age with the highest and the best quality of life. When I go out and talk to seniors, that best quality of life is right in their own homes, right in their own communities, with their families, with their children, on their farms, in the places where they grew up, and I think we need to support that. This is a wonderful opportunity to do that. This is a chance for us to give them that little extra bit of help beyond all those wonderful programs. This is just to say thank you for all those years that you paid taxes, that you supported our children in their education. This is a little bit that we can give back.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 518 carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn until 7:30 p.m.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo tonight and join in second reading debate of Bill 61, the Provincial Offences Procedure Amendment Act, 2009. I look forward to this debate and seeing how it goes. I think this is, on the face of it anyway, on the surface of it, a pretty noncontroversial bill.

I do find it interesting that we're dealing with a Provincial Offences Procedure Amendment Act in advance of the report, at least the making public of the report. The Provincial Offences Procedure Review Steering Committee was set up to examine the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, and they're not expected to report to the minister until the spring of 2010. In a sense maybe we're getting the cart before the horse a little bit, but maybe we're not.

On the surface it looks like a pretty straightforward bill. It seeks to make the following changes. It would permit an accused to submit a plea via registered mail.

It would provide for greater reliance on affidavit evidence when prosecuting a Provincial Offences Procedure Act offence, for example speeding, where you have three officers participating in a speed trap. One of them is operating the machinery, one is eyeballing the cars, and one is flagging down the offending automobiles. This should allow the members who are not operating the equipment to offer affidavit evidence.

It provides greater waiver powers regarding time to pay applications. Some language changes allow for considerations based on a reasonableness standard. There's some cleaning up of terminology so that the Provincial Offences Procedure Act is congruent with the Interpretation Act. If people fail to pay their fines, it would also allow for their access to motor vehicle licensing services, hunting licences, fishing licences, municipal licences to be restricted. In addition, bylaw fines would be added to property tax assessments rather than requiring individuals to serve default time in jail.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, at this stage of the debate I think we can support the bill in principle and perhaps get down to a little more detailed examination of it at committee stage. At this point I'll be voting in favour of it and would recommend that my colleagues do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. At first look, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out, it appears to be sort of a cleanup, a generic get it all together into one act, although there are a series of offences or misdemeanors that are gathered together and mostly of the traffic nature, as was previously brought out.

The changes that are sought within this amendment include the fact it will permit an accused to submit a plea via registered mail, and that makes it somewhat easier to deal with. Obviously, if it's a not guilty plea, there will be a follow-up, but if there's a guilty plea, that speeds up the court processing because a court date can be provided.

It also is to provide for greater reliance on affidavit evidence when prosecuting a POPA offence, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned, the speeding concerns. It provides greater waiver powers regarding time to pay applications. Some language changes allow for consideration based on reasonable standards. Terminology was cleaned up so that the Provincial Offences Procedure Act is congruent with the Interpretation Act. As I say, it's an attempt, almost like an omnibus bill, to bring all the bits and pieces together under one heading.

If the accused fails to pay their fines, it would also allow for access to motor vehicle licensing services, hunting, and so on, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out. It lists right off the bat that there are several ways that we are going to come after you if you don't pay your fine. So those individuals who are driving around with a glove compartment full of tickets, whether they be parking tickets or speeding tickets, know that at some point, every time they attempt to register their vehicle, et cetera, they're going to have one whopping bill to add to that registration.

In general, this is a positive approach, and I would like to at this point thank the hon. member. This will be twice within the same session that I've thanked the hon. member for bringing this forward.

The Deputy Speaker: We have Standing Order 29(2)(a), five minutes of comments and questions.

Seeing none, does any other member wish to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 61 read a second time]

Bill 62 Emergency Health Services Amendment Act, 2009

[Adjourned debate November 19: Mr. Liepert]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It's obvious that we need Bill 62 to bring the health services – ambulance, EMS, and so on – from the fragmented circumstances they had throughout the province. In Lethbridge, for example, EMS, fire, and so on were one service. In Calgary we had a separation between the city running the EMS. Now it goes back to Alberta Health Services, which makes tremendous sense.

The question that came up arose from Frank Work, the individual in charge of FOIP. He expressed concerns, which I would appreciate hearing the hon. minister of health discuss or, for example, the hon. House leader, given his legal background. Frank Work expressed concerns about details being revealed of a personal nature that might interfere with a person's civil rights. He also, if I recall his argument correctly, indicated that a lot of the information sharing already exists, and therefore, after a fashion, that portion of the sharing of information was redundant. So he questioned it on two accounts: one, on the civil rights aspects of it, the rights to privacy. And if we already have a health bill that deals with this, why are we then repeating ourselves?

The bill purports to clarify a paramedic's ability to share information from the scene of a dispatch call to a peace officer for reasons of investigation. The Information and Privacy Commissioner has publicly stated, as I indicated, that this is not necessary. He also raised concerns about whether or not this information should be collected in the first place when it has to do with injuries being treated.

Now, we had a bill that had similar concerns. It was the crime bill where a person who is injured while undertaking a crime ends up having to pay their own medical bills. In this case it was a doctor's requirement at a convenient point, which wasn't quite specified, that they had to provide this information to the police, and again there were privacy issues with relation to this.

Now, the government's position is that this bill clarifies and legislates the ability of paramedics to share observational information with police to assist with an investigation. It also suggests that without this change there would be confusion as to whether this sharing of information would be in contravention of the HIA, which paramedics will come under when the Health Information Amendment Act comes into play. Obviously, it's important that we get this right so that when individuals are on the street and dealing in emergent situations, they're not saying: well, does this fit under the HIA, or does it fit under FOIP? They've got to know because, regardless, they're going to act immediately. They're going to do the best they can, but the degree to which they follow up or share the information with police officers will have to be explained to a greater degree so that there's no doubt about the expectation and compulsion of information sharing.

The IPC highlighted the fact that the HIA allows for information to be shared with police when there is a need to avert imminent harm and to protect public safety. So this proposed amendment is not only unnecessary but actually interferes with the HIA and the FOIP. That's the concern, as I say, that the individual in charge of personal information has put forward.

I'm not going to take up a whole lot of time at this point in debating the bill, but I'm hoping that the clarification will be provided that the hon. member, for whom I have great respect, in charge of FOIP has raised about the legality of the sharing of the information and the necessity. Hopefully that discussion and that information will come forthwith.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to get a few remarks on the record about this. It's a little bit of a tangent off, which is what this bill is directly speaking to, about the ability for paramedics to be able to share information with police officers. I still believe that the dual fire-paramedic emergency system will prove in the end to have been the most effective, certainly cost efficient. Most importantly, it will prove to be the fastest response, it will be the highest level of care outside of the hospital, and ultimately it will have saved many lives. I wanted to make sure that I can get that plug in for the dual system, our fire and emergency. It worked very well, and I believe it could have been probably initiated through this province under that system; however, that's not what the government has chosen to do.

By shifting the emergency health services to Alberta Health and Wellness – they weren't really legally considered sort of health service providers, and now by putting them under, they are. However, I think that was just, well, I guess, a legality because they may not have been legal. But, certainly, any of our dual systems were very, very effective in responding quickly to any emergency, be it motor vehicles or fires. All of the personnel that they needed on-site came together. I also think it's effective to have someone who is dually trained, where, in fact, they can fit into that emergency.

The other has already been mentioned. There's a section in this legislation that states that the proposed provisions of this legislation would override the Health Information Act and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I think that that's a very serious change in how people can expect to have their privacy respected. I realize that some of this is about helping the police solve crimes, and certainly I would not want to hamper that ability, but often in the heat of the moment, particularly in an emergency, information could be gathered and spread before it really could be determined that, in fact, that would be a legal way of doing it.

I think that people are at the mercy of this bill in many ways. As I say, I understand why they would want to pass on this information. I know that they do share some information, but paramedics would have to be trained over and above what they are trained to understand how it would impact a person's privacy when they share that with the police. Certainly, the police would have the understanding of if it would stand up in court, if that was what they were going to need, or if they needed information from blood tests, which would have been taken sometimes without the knowledge of the person that they are treating. The person could be in a coma or just unable to respond or to give their permission for that. So I think that there are a number of things in here that should be addressed to alleviate that concern that people's privacy, in the end, actually would be at risk.

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wish to use the five minutes under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, does any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to rise and join in debate on Bill 62, the Emergency Health Services Amendment Act, 2009. I was just frantically flipping through Hansard – unfortunately, I didn't quite get all the way through it before there was the opportunity for me to get up to speak – to try to find out exactly what the rationale is from the government for bringing forward this piece of legislation.

Mr. Liepert: You should talk to your researcher.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, we've only got so much time in the day.

Nonetheless, having gone through it, I see that the Privacy Commissioner has indicated some clear concerns and suggests that there is actually no particular need for this bill because the information can actually be shared in the interests of ensuring public safety and also in the interests of ensuring that there is no imminent danger allowed to take place. So then the question becomes: why is it necessary in this case to override either the Health Information Act or the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act? These are important issues. We brought in both those pieces of legislation in order to ensure that people's privacy is protected. There may well be a sound rationale here, but it's not entirely clear.

Organizations that work with and represent emergency service workers are themselves not entirely clear as to why this was brought into play, and certainly not all of them have been consulted. In addition, my understanding is that the Privacy Commissioner himself was not given the opportunity to meet with the drafters of the legislation before it went ahead. As I say, it may be something that's necessary, but I'm trying to get a sense of what it is that has changed that this has to be brought in now and what it was that wasn't happening previously that this bill is now trying to correct.

One of the outcomes I see of this bill is that the person who is attended to by an emergency service worker, who then has that emergency service worker share his information with the police, no longer has the ability under the Health Information Act or the freedom of information act to find out what information was actually shared with the police, nor do they have the ability to have the Privacy Commissioner review whether that information was appropriate. So again one asks: why is that? You know, certainly, in most cases you could see that it wouldn't be a big issue, but conversely there are other places where the accident itself is subject to litigation either criminal or civil, and the sharing of that information and the degree to which the information has been shared between parties is something that a person ought to have access to and information about. The fact that their ability to get access to that information through the Health Information Act is now being undermined by this act is a matter that we should be concerned about.

Now, again, I'm not necessarily saying that we don't support the act. We need to have more opportunity to review it to get a clearer understanding from the sponsor of the legislation about what particular problem this act is designed to correct and to get a clearer understanding of what other options were considered and rejected that might not have required us to once again undermine our privacy and protection legislation, as we seem apt to do these days with quite a bit of frequency.

With those introductory comments in place I look forward to hearing further debate, information about this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) allows for five minutes for comments or questions.

Seeing none, does any other hon. member wish to speak on this bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 62 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair shall now call the committee to order.

Bill 50 Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: We are on amendment A1. Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to start the debate with respect to the amendments that we have before us in the House on Bill 50. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I think it's been very widely recognized not only by our colleagues here in the Legislature but certainly by most Albertans that we have an extremely important and serious piece of business in front of us with respect to the transmission infrastructure in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, we came forward, of course, with a piece of legislation, that was tabled in this Legislature in the spring, and let it sit over the summer in order to give Albertans – and by Albertans I mean all Albertans, including all of the stakeholders relative to the transmission infrastructure – the opportunity to look at the legislation, to make comments on the legislation, to question it, and to propose alternative methods of transmission infrastructure and what might be done with respect to this piece of legislation that would perhaps make it more palatable to all concerned.

Mr. Chairman, we now have, I think, the results of a summer's worth of consultation with Albertans relative to the issue. I must say that AESO had around 40 open, public meetings over the summer with respect to the issue, and the Department of Energy conducted an additional 20 hearings around the province. From those hearings we gathered and coalesced a lot of information relative to this issue, so we came forward with a number of amendments. The amendments that we tabled last week include the opportunity here for us to clarify the issues and concerns that people had brought forward relative to the Alberta Utilities Commission's mandate to operate in the public interest.

Mr. Chairman, amendment A1 deals with that issue. What we have done is clarified the wording to make it very distinct that this piece of legislation deals only with the need that had been demonstrated by AESO for these pieces of critical transmission infrastructure. The amendment indicates that the need will not be heard by the Utilities Commission; however, everything else relative to these pieces of infrastructure will be heard by the AUC, and they must make their decision with the public interest in mind. Public interest would include things such as the economics around the issues, the issues of health if they arise, issues of environmental concern, and the like.

I think that this amendment is a good amendment that allows us to bridge a concern that has been expressed and expressed here on the floor of the Legislature relative to the issue of being sure that we are not – and I would repeat that, Mr. Chairman: we are not removing the AUC's mandated requirement to do their work and come to their conclusions, bearing in mind the public interest.

Mr. Chairman, I think that for the purposes of amendment A1 I would leave my remarks at that and look forward to continued engagement by all members of the Legislature. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Yes, debate will ensue now on the government's amendments to Bill 50. I see that the minister is trying to make some changes to a bill that we on this side of the House feel is very flawed. I see that he has addressed some of the concerns that he has heard, that the AESO has heard, that the Department of Energy has heard, that all government backbenchers, I'm sure, have heard from their constituents and from various people who have weighed in on this very public debate over Bill 50, certainly concerns that we've heard on this side of the House as well.

But these amendments don't address all of the concerns. They are quite specific in not addressing, I think, the concern at the heart of this whole debate. That concern, the heart of the argument on Bill 50, is very simply this: do you want to bypass the independent regulatory needs identification process or not? We do not want to bypass the regulatory process. The people who have been talking to us do not want to bypass the independent regulatory process.

A number of people, both ordinary Albertans and people who could be deemed to be authorities on the issue of electricity, electrical generation, electricity transmission have spoken out and made convincing arguments in recent weeks that the independent regulatory process is vital at both the needs identification stage and later on in the siting process. If all you do is wait till later on, after the cabinet, the government, a group of people in this House who are by no means expert in issues of electricity transmission have said, "Well, we're deeming this as critical transmission infrastructure, and it must be built," if you then bring the AUC, the Alberta Utilities Commission, into the process and have them do their due diligence and operate in the public interest as they're supposed to, while that remains important, bringing in the AUC to rule in the public interest on whether the pylons should go in your backyard, Mr. Speaker, or my backyard or Old Man Johnson's backyard after the cabinet has already approved construction is pretty much like closing the barn door after the horse has bolted. You may feel really good for having done that, and you may feel like you've made a difference for the future, but your horse is still missing. That's why it's key that the needs identification process be subject to the full independent regulatory process that it is up until such time as Bill 50 passes or Bill 50 passes unamended.

An independent regulatory process is good, Mr. Chairman, because it takes this whole thing with all the different points of view, all of the different arguments, puts it in front of people who have experience in weighing the relative merits of the different arguments, being able to bring some historical awareness and some background information to bear on the decision that they're about to make and being able to draw on expert opinion and determine whether this expert opinion is relevant or not and then making a ruling, a decision, a written decision, in which they have to lay out their rationale for making that decision. It makes it considerably less likely that the approval or not of the project and the conditions attached to the project or not, to that approval, will be driven by short-term interests, whether they're business interests or whether they're political interests.

The AESO is full of experts, Mr. Chairman. Unfortunately, those experts are essentially on the government payroll. They are not independent, in my view, or arm's length enough to be the only ones charged with making a recommendation – remember, I referred to this before – based within the constraints of their mandate, which basically says: if you detect any congestion whatsoever, the only answer that you're allowed to pursue is to build transmission infrastructure and then make a recommendation to a cabinet that is made up of a bunch of people from different walks of life, not expert in either the regulatory process or being the quasi-judicial weighers of the relative merits of arguments or knowing all that much, really, about electricity.

The heart of the argument is: do you want to bypass the independent regulatory needs identification process or not? The amendments that the government has introduced, I think, Mr. Chairman, make it clear that they do want to bypass the independent regulatory needs identification process, at least the minister does. We do not, so at this time I would like to move a subamendment to the government amendment which addresses this issue. I will give the pages these amendments to pass to the table and then pass around to the members present.

Thank you.

The Chair: We will pause for a few moments for the pages to pass the subamendment out.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, if I may ask for a piece of advice. This is a relatively long amendment. Do you want me to read it all into the record when we come back? [interjection] I'm asking the chairman, not the minister of health. I don't take the minister's advice.

The Chair: We will just call it subamendment SA1.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, please continue.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I hereby move subamendment SA1 to Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. All members of the House have it in front of them now. I will not read the entire subamendment at this time, but I'm sure that over the course of debate here I'll address the various parts in it.

Now, this subamendment may look fairly complex. Such is the arcane nature of legal linguistics and parliamentary procedure when we come to making law. But the intent and effect of this subamendment is very simple, remarkably simple, remarkably direct. It goes directly to the relevant question up for debate around Bill 50: do you want to bypass the independent regulatory needs identification process or not? The clauses of this subamendment pull out the sections that scrap the regulatory process, so let's debate this right now.

To start with, part A is struck out, and the following is substituted: section 1(3) is struck out. We want to strike out this section, Mr. Chairman, because it prevents the AUC from assessing whether or not the critical transmission lines are necessary for this province. We don't want to build unnecessary lines. We don't want to stick consumers, whether they be individual residential consumers or big industrial power users or anybody in between, with unnecessary bills. The AUC, in our opinion, should be holding hearings. That is what an independent regulator does. Those hearings are what allows Albertans to have their say. This is what proper consultation looks like.

Part B is struck out, and the following is substituted: section 2(6) is amended by striking out the proposed sections 41.2 and 41.3 and substituting "Staged development of CTI referred to in Schedule 41.2(1)." Mr. Chairman, from that point on, if you refer to the government amendment, you will find that the wording is exactly the same as in the government amendment. All we have done here is in effect change the numbering of the section by striking out the proposed 41.2 and 41.3 from the bill, which explicitly bypassed the needs identification process for critical transmission infrastructure. These sections would impact the Electric Utilities Act where it states that needs identification documents must be submitted to the AUC for transmission line applications. Our amendment would ensure that that must still happen for critical transmission infrastructure.

The new 41.2 on staged development comes from the government's own amendment. We would be keeping it, i.e. adding it to the bill, but we need to renumber it to 41.2 from 41.4 because we pulled two sections from the bill, as discussed just a moment ago. So this part remains in.

It would be interesting, as we go ahead and debate this: what does the minister have in mind for a staging time? We can't assess the impact of this proposal without knowing that. For example, a month-long gap between when these different stages start is pretty much the same as no staging whatsoever. A three-year-long gap, on the other hand, between stages starts to urge the question of why forcing these lines through without needs hearings was necessary in the first place.

Part C is amended in the proposed clause (v.5)(B) by striking out "or 41.3." This is a consequential change. The fact that in part B we've scrapped 41.3 is coherent across the rest of the government's amendment.

Part D is amended in clause (a) in the proposed section 1(2) by striking out "section 41.4(1)" and substituting "section 41.2(1)."

Another consequential change, Mr. Chairman. In part B we've changed the section 41.4(1) into 41.2(1) because of the removal of sections 41.2 and 41.3 from the bill. Our amendment here ensures that this again is coherent across the rest of the government's amendment.

It is a bit arcane. It's probably going to be very boring to read tonight's Blues back tomorrow as I described that, but it is necessary and necessarily complex to express, again, a remarkably simple and direct intent and effect, which is that we're pulling out the sections that scrap the regulatory process.

With that in mind, there is one more section. Part E is struck out, and the following is substituted: section 3 is struck out. Section 3 basically deals with one thing only, that critical transmission infrastructure should bypass the current needs identification process in the regulatory system. The easiest thing to do, Mr. Chair, and the cleanest and simplest thing to do is just pull the entire section as there are no other impacts.

So there it is. On this side of the House I don't think that we have any problem in principle with the government seeking to designate some transmission infrastructure as more urgent than others, some transmission infrastructure as perhaps more critical than others. I think that's their right, their prerogative. If they in their judgment accept the AESO's argument that it is critical to build a new line or two new lines, you know, with the capacity to carry up to 2,000 megawatts each of electricity, perhaps even more, between Edmonton and Calgary, okay. If they wish to designate a line or two going to Fort McMurray as critical transmission infrastructure – in other words, this is their top priority or one of their top priorities – no problem with that. Governments have to prioritize things; individuals have to prioritize things all the time.

In an odd sort of way, Mr. Chair, the minister, through his own amendments with the staging amendments, the staged development of critical transmission infrastructure referred to in the schedule in the bill, has pretty much acknowledged that the sky is not falling, the lights have not gone off, we are not hours away from rolling blackouts. In fact, we have some time to do this all. It has sort of put a question to the word "critical." It sort of puts a question to the whole notion behind this bill that this is so vital and we are so far behind that we have to do this all at once. Well, by the government's own admission now we don't have to do it all at once. We can take our time to do it, which I think gives the sense that we also have some time, through the AESO to transmission facility operators, to organize this thing better.

If it went off the rails a few years ago, and I think we can probably say that it did – I think the minister might agree that it did a few years ago and that we haven't kept up with the pace that we really should have although, parenthetically, Mr. Chairman, we need to re-evaluate that in light of the economic downturn and the fact that the rate of increase in electricity consumption is not going up the way it was – then fine. But we need to send a message to people who are in charge of building this stuff and planning this stuff and proposing this stuff that there is a process which starts with a needs identification hearing and a process leading up to that hearing in front of the AUC, which it properly should in all cases. If that stage of the process of getting a new high-voltage transmission line built takes six months or 24 months or whatever, then you'd best get going on it now if you think you're going to need that line to start construction in two or three or four years.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that, as I said in second reading, is flawed in principle. It's a bad bill in principle. I don't argue, I don't know if anybody in this House would argue that we need to start upgrading our transmission infrastructure. Some of it's getting old, not nearly as much as we've been led to believe by the ads on television and on the radio and in the newspapers, but some of it is getting old, about 40 per cent. We need to upgrade that because the older it gets, the more it's going to cost to maintain. We have had growth in population. We have had growth in our economy. We have had growth in electricity consumption. We need to keep up with that.

But we also need to remember, Mr. Chairman, that this is a bill that proposes a very old-school solution to any problems that we might have currently or might be anticipating in the years to come. This old-school solution says that we are going to continue to burn coal, pretty much the dirtiest way there is to generate electricity, to generate electricity in vast quantities west of Edmonton, and then we're going to ship that electricity all over the province. We're not going to even consider under Bill 50 the possibility that it might be in the public interest, in the consumers' best interests to generate that power a lot closer to where the people live who are going to use it.

I refer back to the report Transmission Policy in Alberta and Bill 50, published by the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy, co-authored by economist Jeffrey Church, electrical engineering professor William Rosehart, and doctoral student John McCormack of the University of Calgary a couple of weeks ago. I refer back to the study that they did, where they compared the anticipated cost from 2013 through to 2028. Of the two high-voltage power lines between Edmonton and Calgary – and I recognize the minister now wants to stage construction of that so that we wouldn't have them both right off the bat; still, they made the comparison because that's what was being proposed in Bill 50 before the government amendments came down – they compared that against an alternative that locates gas-fired generators in southern Alberta, close to the southern Alberta consumers who are using the power and getting that power from the generation plant to the consumer on the existing grid.

There were variables: the amount of wind power produced, the cost of greenhouse gas emissions, yada yada, line loss, that sort of thing, but they found, in taking those factors into consideration, that the cost of going with Bill 50, with the gold-plated Lexus transmission grid, is anywhere between $1.1 billion and $2 billion more than locating generation in southern Alberta. More. Both provide adequate electricity supply, both keep the lights on, both keep the sky from falling, but one costs up to $2.2 billion more. Now ask yourself, Mr. Chairman, and ask yourselves, hon. members: why would we spend $2 billion more, $1 billion more than we have to spend? Is it because there is no cost to generators, no cost of doing business, if you will, of actually getting the power that they generate from wherever they generate it to wherever it's going to be consumed? Essentially, they are charged nothing to be able to sell their power and transmit it from where they generated it to where you're going to turn your lights on, Mr. Chairman, in Calgary-Fort in a few days' time, when you're back home.

It's interesting. You know, we claim we've deregulated electricity. We've got Big Brother out of the way. We've got the public sector out of the way. We've got government out of the way. We're going to let the market take care of this, and the market is going to produce cheaper power for us. We're still waiting for that to happen, and one still wonders if Bill 50 is yet another attempt to try and make lemonade out of lemons, but I won't go there right now, Mr. Chairman. The odd thing is that deregulation as it's practised in this province so far only seems to work – and, by the way, it works great for the people who are generating the power – when the rest of us, the poor schlemiels of Alberta, and the poor big industrial schlemiels are subsidizing this thing.

The arguments have been made that, you know, if you go to another model, generating the power close to load, then you're creating zones in the province again, and you end up having different prices for electricity. Well, there are already different subsidies. The farther away the stuff is generated from where it's used, the greater the subsidy, in effect. Guess who's paying the subsidy? Us, the consumers, you and me and the big industrial consumers. We're going to be paying the freight if this whole grid is built and we start exporting power down to Vegas to keep the lights on and the casinos humming and the slot machines going all night long. I mean, let the people in Vegas generate their own power.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to more of this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. For anybody who is sleep deprived, I would suggest that what we're doing tonight is a cure for that deprivation.

What it boils down to is that the government is saying: "We don't need an Alberta Utilities Commission. We bypass it. We have the information. We have the expertise. We know what's right." We're going to do it our way, as the song goes. What I see ourselves doing, whether it's the government or whether it's the opposition, is the equivalent of daisy petal picking, but instead of a daisy, if you can imagine the various steel blades of the old-style windmills that were either used for pumping water or for generating a degree of electricity to an outbuilding. What we're doing is we're picking off a blade at a time, and we're saying, "Nyet, da," or we're saying, "Oui, non" or any other series, "Jawohl, nein," you know, a whole series of languages.

Mr. Denis: Keep the German going.

Mr. Chase: Das ist gut.

Another analogy is that it's the equivalent of a card game. We're each trying to trump each other. With our latest subamendment we're basically trying to return us to where we started from, which was the fact that we need an independent regulatory agent, and that's the Alberta Utilities Commission. We need a referee because without that referee the government will just roll over, whether it's steamrolling or any other type of rolling, individuals who don't agree with their concerns.

I'll give the government credit for this. With the amendments that the hon. Minister of Energy introduced, there's a degree of acknowledgement of the need for staged construction, for potentially sequential project development. I think how that came about is that the government realized this was too big a monetary mouthful for Albertans to swallow at any time. The notion of somewhere between $14 billion and $20 billion was just too much to be one large project. What the government has done is basically taken the spoonfuls of electrical energy and tried to sweeten the process by saying, "Well, in the end it may cost this amount, but we're going to do it in a series of one-offs, and the one-offs aren't going to hurt your pocketbook nearly as much." But the cumulative effects stay the same.

Another analogy that comes to mind is the end run, trying to go around the Alberta Utilities Commission or, with the government's amendment, basically running on the spot. Nothing is new; nothing has changed. You're still avoiding prioritizing. You're still avoiding the Alberta Utilities Commission and their expertise. I don't know whether the current members of the Alberta Utilities Commission are going to be discontinued, as was the case with so many of our former health CEOs. I don't know whether they're going to get bonused when they're laid off. But it makes no sense that we have a commission that is absolutely powerless.

What we're attempting to do with our subamendments to government amendment A1 is to piece by piece give back the Alberta Utilities Commission the authority to not only decide on the need for the placement of lines but also, as has been pointed out, the size of the line, varying from, I gather, 240 kilowatts all the way up to 2,000 kilowatts. Of course, when we go from that 240 to above the 500, my most recent electrical understanding is that the opportunities to bury the lines are severely reduced. I don't pretend to know all the reasoning, but I gather the ground serves as an added insulator, and with the amount of electricity that would be generated in an underground circumstance, no matter how well we attempted to insulate it, convert it when it came up to the above ground lines, if it's over 500, that possibility scientifically and according to physics no longer exists.

So we find that, like a person who's running on the spot, we generate little bits of spark and electricity, but there's no constant current developed, and suffering from the same problem as windmills, running on the spot, as soon as we stop, the energy ends with our ceasing to move. If anybody hasn't made that connection tonight, that's where we're at, a ceasing-to-move situation.

We're looking for the expertise that the government claims that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, or the cabinet, has, and the government does not have any more expertise, given their membership, than we have as opposition members. This is far beyond the grade 12 physics that I had such difficulty in dealing with, and that's why we need the independent judgments that hearings through the Alberta Utilities Commission provide.

What our amendment attempts to accomplish – and I'll go through the bits and pieces and try not to repeat what the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out. But because of the technical nature of the subamendment it's hard not to go over similar territory, keeping in mind that we want the Alberta Utilities Commission reinstated and that the government wants to bypass it.

Speaking specifically to the various parts of our amendment, we're suggesting that part A is struck out. We want to strike out section 1(3) as it prevents the AUC from assessing whether or not critical transmission lines are necessary for this province. We get into the definitions of what is critical, what is the priority, and unless you can start off with some basis of understanding, how can you go forward in terms of determining what's critical?

As the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie mentioned, that independent referee or the independent judge is extremely important, and without that balance that a judge organization like the Alberta Utilities Commission provides, how do you weigh the benefits? The government's answer is: "We'll do the weighing, and we'll tell you, you know, how many kilograms or, in this case, kilowatts are necessary. Thank you very much. Rest assured, you know, that the lights will be there in the morning." We're past the point of just open trust.

Part B is struck out and the following substituted: section 2(6) is amended by striking out the proposed sections 41.2 and 41.3 and substituting

Staged development of CTI referred to in Schedule

41.2(1) The Independent System Operator, with respect to the critical transmission infrastructure referred to in section 1(1) of the Schedule, shall, subject to the regulations, specify and make available to the public milestones that the Independent System Operator will use to . . .

In other words, it's simply saying that the Independent System Operator has a responsibility. It is outranked by the Alberta Utilities Commission; therefore, the Independent System Operator has to take its marching orders, or its connecting orders, from a higher body of greater authority.

One of our problems with Bill 50 is that the so-called Independent System Operator isn't so independent. The bonusing for the independent members on the Independent System Operator was dependent on a particular approval of a set of lines and directions that the government had put forward. So any notion of independence went out the window because they were expected to approve what the government had laid out before them.

"The transmission facilities referred to in section 4 of the Schedule shall be developed in stages in accordance with subsection (3)." Now, that appears to be something that the government believes in within its own amendment, that doing things in stages, dealing with things in sequence, creating a so-called chain of substations and bringing power online as needed makes sense, and we're grateful to the government for realizing that this thing doesn't all have to be done at once. But when it is done in its various pieces, there has to be a plan. That plan, which we have maintained all along and most recently through our subamendment, has to begin and end with approval by the Alberta Utilities Commission.

Section (3) of part B of our subamendment to government amendment A1 suggests:

The facility referred to in section 4(a) of the Schedule shall be developed first, which may initially be energized at 240 kV, and the Independent System Operator shall, subject to the regulations, specify and make available to the public milestones that the Independent System Operator will use to determine the timing of the development of the facilities referred to in section 4(b) and (c) of the Schedule.

Put simply, you've created a needs assessment through an independent regulatory process. It says, "Start here," and then before you get the approval for the next stage, you have to again go through the hearing process. There is a check and balance required. You can't simply just put up as much infrastructure wherever you want to carry whatever load you wish. The process has to be thought out.

Now, what's significant in our amendment is the striking out of the proposed 41.2 and 41.3, which basically give the government a carte blanche on the needs identification process for critical transmission infrastructure. This is rather important, that rather than the government saying, "Here a transmission line, there a transmission line, here and here and there and there," an Old MacDonald had a transmission line song in terms of where things are placed, it's calling for a plan. I know that the government's predecessor Premier was not fond of plans, but our latest development has talked about transparency and accountability, and we would suggest that that involves actually having a plan and, taking it one step further, sticking to it section by section.

Part C is amended in the proposed clause (v.5)(B) by striking out "or 41.3." This is a consequential change to ensure that the fact that in part B we have scrapped 41.3 is coherent across the rest of the government's amendments. In other words, we're doing in our subamendment what we've asked the government to do in its bill, and that's to have a connected relevance, whether it be developing priorities, placements of infrastructure, or the size of the load that is going to be carried by the line. Again, it's planning, and basically what we're asking the government to do is connect the dots, connect the towers, connect the lines.

Part D is again part of the interconnectedness of our subamendment. Part D is amended in clause (a) in the proposed section 1(2) by striking out "section 41.4(1)" and substituting "section 41.2(1)."

Again, without reconnecting to the government's original Bill 50 and its amended A1 circumstance, there would be a gap in the connection, so we're trying for coherency with this D part.

Then we have part E. That's rather simple. We're just saying strike it, lose it. Section 3 basically deals with one thing only, that critical transmission infrastructure should bypass the current needs identification process in the regulatory system. The easiest thing to do is just pull it because if the government isn't going to recognize the need for an independent regulatory process through the Alberta Utilities Commission, then section 3 basically becomes redundant.

At the risk of appearing redundant, I'm going to sit down and let other members engage in the process.

The Chair: Any other members wish to speak on subamendment A1? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on subamendment A1.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to rise to speak in favour of this subamendment to amendment A1 put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. This subamendment would of course further amend the amendment put forward by the government, which is an attempt to address the significant problems that have been identified in Bill 50 by a number of stakeholders throughout the province from all sides of the political spectrum, interestingly, most of whom are simply raising concerns because they see the potential for government quite generally to just simply go off the rails without anybody ever knowing about it or getting a full sense of reporting on what's happened.

This subamendment, as has already been stated, would amend the government's amendment to essentially eliminate completely those portions of Bill 50 that would limit the opportunity for public consultation around the construction of what the government has characterized as critical infrastructure. It would also as a result negate the concerns that exist as a result of the amendments proposed by the government last week that we commenced debate on this evening.

Just to talk a little bit, then, about the amendments that were put forward by the government and why, as a result, this subamendment that would eliminate those amendments is worth while. In particular, the government is suggesting that it can address the many and wide-ranging concerns that have been put forward by Albertans with respect to the lack of a public consultation process around the need for these huge capital investments. They believe that we could get around those concerns through the amendments that the government has put forward.

Just at the outset, one of the concerns that exists for me in the amendments put forward by the government, which would be eliminated were the subamendment to be passed, is this very amorphous notion of suggesting that hearings could go forward on matters relating to whether the project itself meets the public interest, but we would continue as citizens to be turned away at the door, if you will, should we want to raise issues about whether the transmission lines themselves are necessary for serving the needs of Albertans.

I have to say that I think that were that amendment to go forward without the House adopting the subamendments that have been put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, we would basically succeed in creating quite an effective cottage industry for that part of the bar which focuses on administrative law. To me, I cannot for the life of me begin to imagine how many applications we would get to sit through at all levels in the courts while the courts try to decide whether public interest, which by the minister's own admission can take into account economic considerations, is something that is or is not exactly like needs. So when you get into a consideration of what meets the needs of Albertans and whether that critical infrastructure is actually something that Albertans need and you talk about that, how is that different from where you're talking about public interest if, as the minister himself suggests, public interest also includes arguments around economics?

What we've basically done is we are on the verge, should the government's amendment go forward, an amendment that is a half-hearted attempt to quell political rumblings amongst Albertans who believe quite rightly that this government has gone off on its own little journey and completely forgotten that every now and then they have to look back at the passengers who theoretically elected them – in essence what we are going to do is we are going to create really bad legislation that most people are not going to be able to interpret or apply. We're going to spend a lot of time at the courts asking whether this particular issue that stakeholder A or B or C tries to raise at a public hearing is actually an issue relating to public interest or whether it's an issue that actually goes to the heart of whether or not the transmission line itself is needed by Albertans.

We basically, then, end up with a situation where nobody knows what's going to be going on, where the only people that are really pleased with this amendment are, as I say, the lawyers. Basically, we just wait around for a long time or don't wait around for a long time, depending on whether the government decides to go forward, while this issue is adjudicated over and over and over and over again because the government has decided to go ahead with such a poorly, poorly constructed piece of legislation.

The subamendment that was put forward by the Member for Calgary-Currie would deal in part with that issue by simply trying to get away from this silly distinction that the government is making, where they think they can quell the political unrest by allowing for hearings that consider public interest while still ensuring that Albertans never get to have a transparent assessment of whether or not the transmission lines in question are actually needed. I think that ultimately what we need to do is, you know, if there are transmission lines that represent a critical infrastructure that are necessary to go ahead, still go back to the original question, which is: what is it that the government is so scared of?

In the last three weeks, I believe, we've had three or four respectable, informed, engaged organizations put forward reasoned arguments around why these particular transmission lines are not actually something that are desperately needed right now. That's fine. Maybe they're right; maybe they're not right. But what's happening is that the government is going through this process where they're simply, you know, putting their hands over their ears and closing their eyes and humming really loudly, saying: "Can't hear you. Can't hear you. Don't want to hear you." I don't understand why it is that anyone would think that it is a mark of good governance that you wouldn't want to take that kind of issue that is so important and test it against the transparency and the rigour that would be available through a full public hearing process as is currently in place within our province. It simply doesn't make sense.

Then you get into a situation like this. It is so against common sense to suggest that we don't need to test these arguments notwithstanding that every day we have yet another reputable source suggest that the government's arguments are not accurate, that their science is not accurate and their predictions are not accurate and their economics are not accurate and their forecasts are not accurate. We have so many people suggesting that. The reasonable thing to do would be to say: "Well, you know what? We have a public, comprehensive, transparent regulatory process. We're not going to answer these issues. We're going to put it to that process, a process in which all Albertans can have complete faith. We will use that process to decide how to go forward." Instead, the government appears to be scared. They appear to be very scared of subjecting their arguments to any kind of substantial testing.

Then that leads one, quite rightly at that point, to question: "Well, what's going on here? It doesn't seem to make sense. What's the issue?" Well, is the issue that in the course of those regulatory hearings they're going to hear that what's really needed is the capacity to export power and that Albertans are going to be asked as consumers to pay for an infrastructure that facilitates and ultimately subsidizes export notwithstanding that they are not consuming good portions of that which will be exported ultimately? Is that something that the government is concerned would come out through a public hearing process?

Of course, at that point Albertans might say: "You know, we subsidize business left, right, and centre in this province. We're doing it all the time, and we're not really interested in having our utility bills go up to do even further subsidization of business. We don't like this." The government is not interested in having that piece of information come out through a transparent, principled, unquestionably ethical regulatory process, so as a result we have this bill in front of us. I don't know. Is that it? Is that not it? I don't know. Again, the only thing we can do is ask: why would the government resort to taking such an authoritarian and antidemocratic step, as they are taking in this case, that would be ameliorated were the subamendment that has been put forward here this evening to pass? You know, we have this issue.

Now, the government itself, of course, has suggested that through their little consultation process, their little committee, cost issues would be addressed. But, Mr. Chair, I have to say that I really have some serious concerns with that issue. Here the government told us that we didn't need to worry about consumers being gouged around power bills because they were going to set up a Utilities Consumer Advocate. Then they set up an advocate, and the advocate went off and got an expert report prepared. That expert report, in fact, concluded that we don't need these transmission lines, that they are excessively expensive, that they are not in the best interest of consumers across Alberta. The government has ignored their own Utilities Consumer Advocate.

If they're prepared to ignore their own Utilities Consumer Advocate, what in heaven's name is the value of yet another committee that's simply going to review bills every now and then and will be appointed by the government and, knowing this particular government, will never be allowed to make anything public, and if they do, it will, of course, come in the form of another brown envelope? Needless to say, the committee that the government is proposing to set up does not in any way address any of the concerns that so many people across the political spectrum and across the province have raised about this piece of legislation.

Again, that is why this subamendment ought to be passed, because the subamendment would simply eliminate the government's desire to bypass the transparency that comes from a public hearing process such that Albertans are not in a position of having to rely on the brown envelope, which has become the primary and, in fact, I would suggest in many cases, the sole means of ensuring that Albertans are ever given a clear outline about what this government is really trying to do.

As well, the subamendment would get rid of that part of the amendment that talks about the whole staged development issue under the government's initial set of amendments. Nonetheless, we have good reason to believe that the whole issue of the staged development is, again, another effort on the part of this government to engage in window dressing activities to hopefully, in their eyes, minimize the political problems that this bill is creating for them amongst even their own supporters. I would suggest that it's not going to minimize it because, again, the whole staged development issue is primarily window dressing. Most people argue that at the very least it might reduce costs to consumers in the very short term, but it's very unlikely to make any kind of difference in the long term. In fact, the Consumers for Competitive Transmission have noted that even if there's a reduction in the early years, the remaining cost impact is still very large and will further exacerbate the uncompetitive electricity cost situation.

That is, of course, yet another problem with the government's very communications-focused set of amendments, which I think are, again, as I said, an ineffective attempt to address political opposition to this bill, that do not substantially in any way change what the government is doing, which is to simply move billions and billions of dollars of investment behind closed doors. Whether you're talking about any particular element of the government's amendments, while they do show that the government must be feeling a little bit of political heat, perhaps brought on by the fact that their own membership was tied on whether or not to simply scrap Bill 50 altogether, nonetheless this attempt to turn down the political heat is simply window dressing and from a substantive point of view is not going to address the many concerns we have with respect to the government's decision to move this process so clearly behind closed doors.

The subamendment, as I stated before, would basically take the critical infrastructure piece and subject it once again to the public hearing process, which many Albertans expect should be in place. Again, until such time as the government can give any kind of rational explanation for why it is that in the face of so many competing expert opinions about the need for this type of investment, until they can give any kind of rationale for taking that and moving it behind closed doors, there's just simply no way that we can support that bill, that we can support the amendments, which do not ultimately alter that primary element of Bill 50. As a result, we must support the subamendment in the hopes that we can convince the government to do the right thing and simply manage these kinds of issues in an open, transparent, ethical way that reflects good governance, that is entirely justifiable and not requiring extensive explanation to people who can't help but notice the close relationship between the political arm of this government and the companies which stand to benefit greatly from Bill 50 going forward.

Ultimately, our view is that we need to ensure that Alberta consumers get the best deal possible and that the best infrastructure system is set up to most efficiently and inexpensively and responsibly from an environmental and health point of view provide them with the electricity that they need. It is not our view that it's government's role to move these kinds of decisions behind closed doors so that they can adopt strategies which result in huge subsidies to businesses that stand to make potentially large profits on the export of electricity that would be enabled through the construction of transmission lines, which at this point we can only question the need for given the broad diversity of expert opinion which is out there on the public record notwithstanding the government's desire to ignore it. With that in mind, we'll be supporting the subamendment.

The Chair: On the subamendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: On 29(2)(a)? Just a question.

The Chair: No. There is no 29(2)(a) at Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Hinman: No questions on that?

The Chair: Not in committee.

Mr. Hinman: Oh, okay.

The Chair: Is there any other hon. member wishing to speak on subamendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall on subamendment A1.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to stand up and speak in favour of the amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Currie. I'm going to do a little comparison here between the amendments from the government, from the Minister of Energy, and the subamendments brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Currie. The Minister of Energy is proposing that section 1(3) is struck out, and the following is substituted:

(3) Section 17 is amended by renumbering it as section 17(1) and by adding the following after subsection (1):

(2) The Commission shall not under subsection (1) give consideration to whether critical transmission infrastructure as defined in the Electric Utilities Act is required to meet the needs of Alberta.

The concern here is this particular section. However, the change being proposed here by the government does not actually do anything to address the concern.

The concern is that the bill is bypassing the needs identification process. The original wording of the bill is that the existing 17(1) in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act does not apply to critical transmission infrastructure. This amendment is changing that wording, for sure. By specifying that it is the needs identification process in particular that the commission cannot undertake with regard to critical transmission infrastructure, this amendment is trying to clarify that other hearings do still remain, such as for the siting of these lines, but that is not what section 17(1) addresses. This particular section is dealing only with the AUC's role independent of government to assess the need for the transmission lines, and if the commission cannot give consideration under 17(1) to whether the critical transmission infrastructure is required to meet provincial needs, then 17(1) no longer applies. It's as simple as that.

The amendment makes absolutely no substantive difference to Bill 50. It makes no substantive difference to one of the parts of the bill that does most of the damage to the current regulatory system. Therefore, that is why the Member for Calgary-Currie is proposing that part A be struck out and the following substituted: section 1(3) is struck out. We'd like to strike out this section as it prevents the AUC from assessing whether or not the critical transmission lines are necessary for this province. We don't want to build unnecessary lines.

The AUC should be holding hearings, and they should be going through the public consultation process. That would be the right way to go so Albertans have input as to whether we need certain transmission lines or not. That is what an independent regulator does. We don't want to take the independence of the AUC, which Bill 50 does. Those hearings are what allow Albertans to have their say, and this is what a proper consultation would look like.

Part B. Section 2(6) is amended by adding the following proposed section 41.3. This is coming from the amendments from the Minister of Energy, and that is addressing

Staged development of CTI referred to in Schedule

41.4(1) The Independent System Operator, with respect to the critical transmission infrastructure referred to in section 1(1) of the Schedule, shall, subject to the regulations, specify and make available to the public milestones that the Independent System Operator will use to determine the timing of the stages of the expansion of the terminals referred to in section 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Schedule.

(2) The transmission facilities referred to in section 4 of the Schedule shall be developed in stages in accordance with subsection (3).

(3) The facility referred to in section 4(a) of the Schedule shall be developed first, which may initially be energized at 240kV, and the Independent System Operator shall, subject to the regulations, specify and make available to the public milestones that the Independent System Operator will use to determine the timing of the development of the facilities referred to in section 4(b) and (c) of the Schedule.

This amendment by the government is trying to set out a staged approach to building this transmission infrastructure. This includes bringing the lines between Edmonton and Calgary up to half-capacity first and to full capacity later. Given the government's previous statements about how quite urgent all of the transmission infrastructure is, for them to now say that everything can be staggered over time doesn't make sense. After all, Bill 50 is calling this infrastructure critical. How critical can it be if it can all be staged over time? Why can't it just go through the regulatory process? There are no blackouts, and there are no brownouts there. We haven't had any so far, and there is no urgency to bypass the Alberta Utilities Commission.

The timeline that will be imposed on this staging is not revealed here. With stages that are only a month or so long, this supposedly more steady and measured approach to the critical transmission construction would be mere window dressing. If the stages are in fact substantial, then the question becomes: why is the government claiming that the infrastructure is so critical? Without an understanding of what the stage duration will be, the amendment doesn't appear to make any significant changes to the original bill.

That's why we are having this part B struck out and the following substituted in the amendment proposed by the Member for Calgary-Currie. Section 2(6) is amended by striking out the proposed sections 41.2 and 41.3 and substituting the following:

Staged development of CTI referred to in Schedule

41.2(1) The Independent System Operator, with respect to the critical transmission infrastructure referred to in section 1(1) of the Schedule, shall, subject to the regulations, specify and make available to the public milestones that the Independent System Operator will use to determine the timing of the stages of the expansion of the terminals referred to in section 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Schedule.

(2) The transmission facilities referred to in section 4 of the Schedule shall be developed in stages in accordance with subsection (3).

(3) The facility referred to in section 4(a) of the Schedule shall be developed first . . .

Mr. Hancock: We've got it here, actually. We have it already in front of us.

Mr. Kang: I'm just comparing them both.

In section B here we are keeping some of the proposals from the Minister of Energy.

(3) The facility referred to in section 4(a) of the Schedule shall be developed first, which may initially be energized at 240kV, and the Independent System Operator shall, subject to the regulations, specify and make available to the public milestones that the Independent System Operator will use to determine the timing of the development of the facilities referred to in section 4(b) and (c).

The important part of the amendment here is striking out the proposed sections 41.2 and 41.3, which explicitly bypassed the needs identification process, which is very important to have the Alberta Utilities Commission do that. These sections would impact the Electric Utilities Act where it states that needs identification documents must be submitted to the AUC for transmission line applications. This amendment would ensure that that must still happen for the critical transmission infrastructure.

Part C is amended in the proposed clause (v.5)(B) by striking out "or 41.3." This is just a consequential change to ensure that the fact that in part B we have scrapped 41.3 is consistent across the rest of the government's amendment.

Part D is amended in clause (a) in the proposed section 1(2) by striking out "section 41.4(1)" and substituting "section 41.2(1)." This is another consequential change. In part B we have changed the section 41.4(1) to 41.2(1) due to removing sections 41.2 and 41.3 from the bill. This amendment ensures that this is consistent across the rest of the government's amendments.

Part E is struck out and the following is substituted: section 3 is struck out. Section 3 basically deals with one thing only, that critical transmission infrastructure should bypass the current needs identification process in the regulatory system. The easiest thing to do is to just pull this whole section out so there is no impact on the bill.

What the amendment is trying to do is to put some teeth into the Alberta Utilities Commission so that the needs assessment is done before any work proceeds.

For those reasons, I'm supporting this amendment, sir. Thank you very much.

The Chair: On the subamendment does any other hon. member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on subamendment SA1.

Mr. Hinman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to stand up and to speak to this amendment on Bill 50. Although I understand, you know, the idea of trying to take this from the independent systems operator, the critical point of this – this is only a Band-aid, at best. I'm going to speak to it, though, and some of the other things that I feel that we really should be doing over and above this amendment, but this is all that we have before us at this point, so we'll speak on that.

You know, the problem that this bill is creating more than anything else in this amendment is trying to address the idea of critical. This government has taken the idea that if we can buffalo the people into thinking that this is critical and that the lights could go out any day – and of course any accident could happen which could put out the electrical grid here in Alberta but no higher risk tomorrow than yesterday. And that's part of life as we go forward. But what really is critical and what this House needs to look at and why we need to have some amendments – and, again, I'm going to keep reiterating that, really, this bill should be tabled for six months. What's critical is to at least wait to see what's going to happen in Copenhagen. It's critical on what the world's agenda is and whether or not they're going to pass a carbon tax. The problem here and what's not being addressed – what's going on here is a push to try and get this through, and it just isn't the right thing to do. So taking the critical area from AESO and putting it back to a regulatory system is vital.

The major difference between a government public hearing process and that of a regulatory hearing where relevant experts are brought in, where history is looked at, the whole position of the grid is brought in: that is what's critical for Albertans. We can't afford to spend billions of dollars on an infrastructure that really isn't needed, that isn't going to serve any purpose other than the speculation that down the road, perhaps, the Minister of Energy wants a nuclear facility in Grande Prairie. We can't spend billions of dollars on those things. Even in the dream of the PCs we need to look at what are the real needs of Albertans and what is the proper regulatory process that we should be going through.

It's interesting to look at the Netherlands and the system that they've got going there, where contracts with a counterparty have to be there before they enter the market to put bids in. Our whole system needs to be looked at. Why we need to really put a halt on this is so that we can take six months to see what the world's view is on a carbon tax, so that we can look at the problem that the parameters and the guidelines that were given to AESO aren't in the best interests of Albertans anymore.

We don't want this unconstrained power line throughout the province in case there's a nuclear facility that wants to go up somewhere or so they can put in another coal plant or two. That, in fact, is only going to add more gridlock, not help it. It's also interesting when you look at the overall picture, the analysis is that down south there is the possibility for 2,000 or 3,000 megawatts of wind-generated power, yet the constraint from the lines coming south up is there. If, in fact, we add more critical coal production in Genesee 3 and Genesee 4, that does add to the problem of being able to put reliability into our system.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

So if we're really going to look at some of the points that have been brought up, the hon. Member for Livingstone-MacLeod has referred many times to the wind generation that's down there, that that's an area that we need to look at building up and at a much more cost-effective analysis than these high-voltage DC lines. They're just not going to serve us well. It's interesting to also look at the fact that if we're to put more coal production up north – and I don't believe those companies are willing to step up to do that at this point until we know what the carbon tax is going to be and the outlook – by putting local generation close to the demand, specifically speaking, in Calgary, that actually helps the wind generation in the south. If we add more coal – and they like to have an 85 per cent capacity – that deters any opportunity for more wind to come on down in the south. But if, in fact, we put dispatched energy in the Calgary area, that actually allows for more wind generation to come online in the south. We need to really look at those areas and realize: do we have an opportunity to do that?

It's also interesting when we talk about the critical need and where this government has pushed and said: well, we have to do it now. The industrial users of Alberta and their association, IPCCAA, has identified 2,000 megawatts of industrial demand and that they would be more than happy, my understanding is, to work with AESO during the critical peak periods and to come online and offline and to get some breaks in order to work with that. There are so many areas where we should and could work to increase the efficiency, the cost base, and ensure that we have a grid that is reliable, that does transfer the power that we need, and that industry has the advantage of an efficient, effective system and isn't burdened with $14 billion of new infrastructure that really doesn't allow for any new efficiencies or growth in any real way that we don't already have.

I often have heard from some of my rural people who say, you know: when we go to town and we need to pick up some parts, we jump in a pickup and head to town. But this bill is the equivalent of saying: oh, we need to go to town; we're going to go buy a semi and get triple trailers on behind to get it there. This high-voltage DC line: all of the experts that have no connection with AESO, no vested interest, whether it's the Fraser Institute, the University of Calgary, the UCA, the commission, the report, say that these lines are not necessary. They would be the last link that would be put in if, in fact, there was power generation in the billions of dollars that was going forward in northern Alberta. If, in fact, those things were coming online, once the commitment was there, the export connections were made, the licences put up for bid, much as we see TransCanada is putting bids in in Montana and Wyoming right now, they could do the same up through Alberta.

The fact of the matter is that if the goal of this government is to export a pile of electricity or a lot of electrons, then let's be open and honest with Albertans. The situation right now is that we have our lines. When there's excess production and we don't need it – and like I say, the peak hours actually show through the night that when they're peaking their generation, we don't need it – they want to export it. They get a good deal on that, and we want that, that they can generate and produce here in the province. We get some money back, and they get a good deal on their cost of export because the lines aren't being used. But to spend $5.6 billion on this new critical infrastructure that needs to come forward critically and now, it just isn't so unless we're linking up, like I say, to massive power generation that's new and coming online that this government isn't forthcoming in bringing to the people of Alberta.

We need to do a better job. We need to be open and honest with Albertans. We need to show a long-term plan. Is there, you know, hydroelectric in northern Alberta or in the Territories that we're trying to bring down and want to be part of? Is there a nuclear facility going up in the Grande Prairie area, and therefore we need the high-voltage DC lines? Those are all questions that need to be brought up in a regulatory hearing.

Again, I'm going to go back to this idea that it's critical and that the government needs to go forward. I'd honestly ask the questions to not only the Minister of Energy but to cabinet and caucus. Do they really think that they understand and know all the ins and outs of the electrical grid and can make a better decision than the Alberta Utilities Commission? I don't believe so. Well, I know so, that the Alberta Utilities Commission is in a much better situation, and to take it out of their hands and to put it into the Minister of Energy's hands is not in Albertans' best interest. It's not in the best interest of our business. It's not in the best interest of consumers. We're going to add billions of dollars to the cost of our electrical system.

Once again, our Premier has said that there are going to be no new taxes. Well, then, that means no unnecessary new spending because if there's spending and if there's debt of $5 billion, $10 billion, $15 billion, that's going to reflect on the people of Alberta and the businesses of Alberta. We've been losing businesses in this last year down to the States. I believe that's partially because of the high taxes that are here. The property taxes in our cities have made it such that these companies are no longer viable here. Our dollar is strengthening to the U.S.

All of these things we need to stop. We've got to take a few steps back and realize where we might be in two years from now. Chances are that there will be a lot more problems with a higher dollar, with loss of industry, and again the population growth will slow. For us to spend up to $15 billion in the next 20 years – and they're saying in the short term just $4 billion or $5 billion – just doesn't make sense for Albertans. There is just no reason to pass this through and say that it's critical and that we can and will push this through for Albertans.

There are just so many disadvantages in taking these first two steps and, like I say, starting with these two high-voltage lines. It just isn't going to serve the purposes that we need. We haven't even looked at some of the many other various areas that we could look at. One of the other ones is the industrial producers. Are we working with them? The Netherlands. Iceland isn't a great example any more; their economy is in trouble. We want to be there for business and for business to realize that we have the lowest cost electrical production possible and are not putting extra pricing into the transmission that isn't necessary. Prebuilding the transmission in advance of these generators that are just possibly coming online isn't right.

I want to go back again and hit on the fact that our policy right now is a congestion-free policy. That isn't good. We've got to go and look at that and realize that the cost of delivering electricity can be substantial, and we need to bring it in line on a needs test. It's just wrong to take this out of the Alberta Utilities Commission and say: "You can't determine the needs. The Minister of Energy is in a far better position, and he's going to do that." The reduced regulatory oversight is going to cost Albertans billions of dollars in the future; again, not in our best interest.

We need to realize that the existence of constraints on the transmission grid isn't the problem that they're saying it is. It happens at 2 or 3 in the morning. We need to absolutely make sure that we go through a process, a regulatory process, not just a public hearing process, to in fact scrutinize all of these demands that this government is saying that industry and the people have here. It just isn't there. So with those and the many other flaws of this bill I would hope that we would continue discussing and realizing our short-sightedness and our desire, it seems like, for a quick political fix when, in fact, a long-term economical fix needs to be looked at.

Once again, I just want to reiterate the importance that if we're looking at spending this kind of money, realize that's going to be a real black mark on business in the province here. We can't afford this infrastructure upgrade. It isn't necessary. We need to remain within the current limits and realize that to redispatch energy locally is far more efficient. Again, it gives us the breathing room to look at what's happening whereas if we jump and start giving, as this government has already given the okay for the engineering of these two high-voltage lines, we're going to get to a critical situation: can we afford to have these industrial businesses here in the province with the added tax of this supercharged infrastructure that's going to be turned over to industry or else, ultimately, as industry is driven out, to the consumers here in the province, which really only use 16 per cent of the electricity that is being produced? So those are all concerns.

I would just like to kind of paraphrase a paragraph here from Transmission Policy in Alberta and Bill 50 by the School of Public Policy, that there are advantages to using an independent regulator to assess whether a transmission project is in the public interest. It is less likely that project approval and conditions will be driven by short-term political interests and more likely that the regulator's perspective will reflect long-term benefits and costs to the province. Regulatory agencies typically draw on relevant expertise, historical awareness and background knowledge to understand, evaluate and adjudicate complex issues. A public process allows for greater scrutiny of alternative points of view and provides a forum for public debate. The process also requires the regulator, through written decisions . . .

And this is important, "through written decisions."

. . . to provide their rationale for each decision. This is an important constraint on the potential for collusion between the decision maker and private interests.

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

So I would ask that we look at putting this to the side, that we keep looking at these amendments but realize that this is just not in the best interests of Albertans. We need to have a needs process. There's been nothing filed by AESO to the AUC. We need to realize that. Again, it's just not going to work for Albertans. If this government pushes forward with Bill 50, it's going to hurt industry. It's going to hurt the people of Alberta and put us at a disadvantage, when what we want to do is to leap ahead during these tough economic times. Realize that if we need some temporary fix and some more electricity, locally dispatched is a great way to go. More important, though, by using the generation with natural gas, we can and will increase our wind production because it can balance that whereas if we go to more coal and then we're still in this area where we're wondering whether or not there's going to be a carbon tax, it'll be a real detriment to our future.

We need to look short term at this time, realize that we're not in a critical situation. Let's wait and see what the governments around the world are going to sign into as well as our own government because it is going to have an impact on us. Sometimes the prudent thing to do is to wait, to analyze, and to objectively look at the market and where it's going.

With the new technology of the tight gas, it has changed the market. Two years ago the panic was that we can't afford to have gas-driven turbines; it's going to be a disadvantage. That's now changed. We actually now are in the situation of: are we going to be able to demand enough use of the natural gas here to keep a floor price up that's of value? It's far cheaper and more efficient to pipe gas to a local generator than to put up these massive high-voltage lines.

Yes, we do need some upgrades on some of our AC lines. I'm not saying that everything is bad and not necessary, but we need to, like I say, take a fairer look at this because it just seems that the bias is uncontrolled here. It's out of order. Again, we need to back up and realize that we're not in this critical situation, which is the storm that this government seems to want to declare, that the lights are going to go out and industry is going to leave, when it's going to be just the opposite. If this bill passes, if billions of dollars are put forward on these high-voltage lines, we're not going to be able to back out of this.

Again, we're increasing the debt to the Alberta taxpayers, to business. So I'd ask for this government to rethink. I challenge the MLAs that you need to get out and read these independent reports and to get up to speed because we haven't been given all the facts by this government. It's critical on this decision that we take a broader view than the narrow one that's being taken right now.

Again, we really have to question what the real plan is that's in there. What are they going to do? Is it a nuclear facility in the Grande Prairie area? Is it a merchant line that's going to be paid for by taxpayers' dollars? I see many people sitting over there amazed. What's he talking about? You can mark my words that they'll be coming through. If those high-voltage lines go through, it will be to the detriment of the people of Alberta, and it's not going to be in their best interest. We're walking into this. The government is walking into this with blinders on. It's not healthy for the Alberta taxpayers.

[Motion on subamendment SA1 lost]

The Chair: Now we are back to amendment A1. The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Webber: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to participate in Committee of the Whole for Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, and, in particular, the amendment A1 proposed by the hon. Minister of Energy. As we all know, this legislation, Bill 50 with amendments, will approve the need for critical transmission infrastructure projects, core projects, one of which is the Edmonton to Calgary project, which I will speak to later.

What I want to talk about now is how Alberta is outgrowing its electricity system. On one point I think we can all agree, that electricity is so important to sustaining our economic well-being and our high quality of life. Our system is aging. It's inefficient, and it's congested. It hasn't kept pace with growth in the province. We've come to a place where we need to act immediately.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore earlier stated: "We don't need that much power here in the province. We're meeting our current needs." I think he said that last Tuesday. It's page 1822 of Hansard, anyways. Well, I'm not sure what "that much" means to the hon. member, but here are some of the numbers for the rest of the Assembly. Alberta's peak demand in 2008 was 9,806 megawatts. That was a record peak demand even in the midst of an economic crisis. Not only that, our off-peak demand is relatively flat. Our average hourly low is about 8,000 megawatts. That's information that's available to anyone on the Department of Energy's website.

Putting that into context, Saskatchewan's total generating capacity is about 3,641 megawatts. That means that we'd need almost three Saskatchewan's worth of power on our coldest, darkest day. Mr. Chair, Alberta's growth in demand has been unprecedented. While the rest of Canada is looking at about 1 per cent growth in demand, Alberta's forecast is 3 per cent. That's the two Red Deer size cities analogy that we so often hear about.

That growth means an additional 11,500 megawatts' worth of generation in the next 20 years. We have more than 20,000 megawatts' worth of generation proposals, both thermal and renewables. The challenge for this province is: how do we make sure new generation can connect to the grid? That's where Bill 50 and the critical transmission infrastructure projects come in.

Now back to the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore's comments that we're meeting our current needs. Hon. member, I do agree that we are meeting our current needs, but the question before us is: are our needs being met in the most economical way? Are Albertans getting the best priced, competitive electricity supply, and will we continue to receive reliable electricity service in the future? We've heard so much about costs as they relate to transmission rates. What we don't hear are the costs that relate to energy rates, the amount consumers pay for the energy they use.

Albertans' wholesale electricity market is based on the principles of free, efficient, and open competition. A congested transmission system works against these principles. Congestion is when the Edmonton to Calgary grid is at full capacity and a generator has to be told to produce power because of its location, not because of its competitive price. Remember that in Alberta lowest cost electricity is dispatched first. As demand increases throughout the day, higher priced electricity will come online. With congestion, Albertans are not getting the best price for their electricity. Instead, they are paying a premium for the location of a generator. In addition, imported power may have to be used to meet demand. Alberta is a net importer, and the value of imports last year was about $266 million.

Now, we've heard some arguments for local generation. What gets left out of the debate is the impact that congestion and local premium-priced generation can have on the price Albertans pay for power. What this comes down to is unconstrained access to a transmission system which is required to facilitate development of new generation. That's the 11,500 megawatts we'll need in the next 20 years. That generation will come from a diverse list of sources: from coal, from natural gas, from hydro, wind, biomass, and cogeneration. New generation encourages competition, which in turn encourages competitive prices, which is a benefit to all consumers. The independent power producers will make decisions about the most economically efficient and innovative ways to add power to the grid.

Let's be clear: customers pay for congestion on the transmission system in the short term by paying higher energy costs. We need new generation and new transmission. The longer we delay, the greater the potential for unreliable service and higher prices.

Mr. Chairman, it is the job of the Alberta Electric System Operator, or AESO, to take a look at the demand for electricity, the forecasts and data from internal and external sources, and the proposals for generation and then come up with a long-term plan for meeting the electricity needs of Albertans. The AESO also consults with Albertans about the social, environmental, and land-use impacts of new transmission.

The Edmonton to Calgary project included in Bill 50, the two high-voltage DC current lines, is one of the projects identified by AESO as critically needed. The two high-capacity, high-efficiency lines in the Edmonton to Calgary project are a central feature of the AESO's long-term plan. This project will address the increased demand for power in southern and central Alberta. The project will also help to alleviate the congestion I spoke about earlier and will facilitate the addition of renewable and low-emission electricity sources like wind and hydro, biomass, and cogeneration. These two lines will connect to other parts of the province, strengthening a key piece of our electricity infrastructure. The estimated cost for this project is $3.1 billion, which is about $3 extra on the average residential consumer bill.

Now, we've heard many comments here in the House and outside on the steps of the Legislature about the cost of HVDC and the misconception that this is an overbuild. There are many benefits to choosing high-voltage direct current technology. Mr. Chairman, using this technology is about prebuilding and reinforcing the foundation of Alberta's economy. When it comes to cost concerns, HVDC gives us the option of staging the construction to meet the grid demand. In other words, you can build the linear piece now and add capacity to it as you need it. You don't have to build it all at once. It can be done in stages. This ensures that cost-efficiency and reliability are taken into account.

The second benefit is the reduced footprint of HVDC. This technology reduces the rights-of-way and easements needed. We know that the size of the existing towers is an issue for many landowners, and we believe HVDC will address some of those concerns.

Another issue that causes a great deal of concern for landowners is this business of having the power company come back through your land every time it's necessary to add another alternating current line. What landowners have said to us is: if you're going to come onto my land, put up the tower, do it once, and don't bother me again. That was a comment heard over and over again, Mr. Chair, during the consultations that AESO held on its long-term planning and the Edmonton to Calgary project.

While HVDC helps mitigate ongoing disruptions, HVDC is also more efficient, and the line losses are much smaller than they are with high-voltage AC lines. Reinforcing this central piece of infrastructure will have a cost impact. These costs are regulated, Mr. Chairman. In fact, transmission is fully regulated in this province.

One last point, Mr. Chairman. Albertans pay for the electricity service they use. It's consumer based, and those rates must be just and reasonable. If the lines are used to export power, the exporters pay a tariff. Those export payments can help offset and even reduce transmission costs to Albertans.

Bill 50 reflects the long-term planning that has been done. We know we need these lines. We know we need to offer Albertans the opportunity to have a say if they are directly or adversely affected. We also know that we need to act quickly. Delays will only incur higher energy costs to Albertans and the threat of unreliable power service.

On that note, Mr. Chair, I ask that all members support these amendments suggested by the Minister of Energy.

I also ask that we adjourn the debate, Mr. Chair.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Professional Corporations Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to table a series of amendments to Bill 53, the Professional Corporations Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, which extends nonvoting share ownership of professional corporations to immediate family members.

As you know, there has been constructive debate over Bill 53 in this House, and I know we're all on the same page when it comes to how the tax planning will work and who can benefit. There's been discussion over the interpretation of the current wording of the trust provisions. Under the current wording of Bill 53 there is some confusion that under certain trust structures the child of a professional could continue to be a beneficiary even after that child turns 18. That's not the intent of Bill 53. The inclusion of the trust provision was to provide a legal mechanism for minor children to own nonvoting shares, not to allow children to continue to be a beneficiary once they become adults. The current wording of the bill is that shares can be held by the children of the professional, shares of children could be held in trust, and shares must be transferred once the child turns 18.

The new proposed wording will make it clear that shares can be held by the children of the professional and that shares can only be held in trust for minor children. To achieve this, House amendments are proposed for the four respective acts ensuring that the word "minor" is added before children along with adding clarity that a professional corporation has 90 days after a child turns 18 to comply with the requirement that only minor children are beneficiaries of the trust.

These amendments, Mr. Chairman, should make the intent of Bill 53 abundantly clear to all those affected by the legislation.

Thank you.

Mr. Chase: I'm just seeking a little bit of clarification with regard to the minor children. When they reach 18, hon. proposer of the amendment, does that mean that they no longer qualify for shares in the corporation because they've reached adulthood? If you wouldn't mind answering, that would help me.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you. No. What it means is that at 18 they can no longer be held in trust, and those shares would have to be transferred to the adult child in his name.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on amendment A1.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. I appreciate that clarification. It makes it considerably more understandable. It does indicate that the sharing continues to go on into adulthood, and that was one of the concerns we had, as to who qualified: which members of the family and how much of the extended family could potentially benefit from the incorporated status?

One of the concerns that came up – and I sort of suggested that I was trying to balance the positives and weigh them against the negatives – is that people who are in these tax brackets, doctors, lawyers, accountants, are among the upper echelon of the tax regimes. They're not at the CEO state or quite at that point, but it would be safe to say that their take-home salaries are in the $200,000-plus category. Then we look at what's happening in Alberta at this point, where I think one of the more recent figures that I heard was over 75,000 Albertans unemployed, like the song: "The rich get rich and the poor get poorer. In the meantime, in between time, ain't we [had] fun?" In terms of the balancing, are we doing our economy and our general population a disservice by allowing people who are already at the upper tax brackets to maintain more of their wealth reserve for their family members but not necessarily then contributing to the well-being of Albertans as a whole?

I suppose what that brings into account is a discussion that I don't want to get into in any great detail on the nature of the flat tax and the nature of the breaks that we're already giving to people. We know that with the flat tax, for example, the people at the lowest end get a reasonable break if it's a family that's earning under $23,000. There's a break if there's an individual earning under $13,000. There's a break, but that break is basically funded by the middle class, that pays the majority of the taxes, and the middle class does not fit into that category of $200,000-plus. By reducing the tax impact, as I say, in the upper echelons of the upper middle class, we're putting more of a burden onto where most individuals fit in terms of the middle class; in other words, earning under $200,000. I'm talking about a family's salary, combined incomes as opposed to individuals.

I support the amendment, but I think it brings forward further discussion on the bill as amended, and possibly I'll save my concerns on the bill as amended. I think that this is a good clarification, and I support this particular amendment.

The Chair: On amendment A1, any other member wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I wonder if I might ask the Member for Lethbridge-West just for a clarification on part of this amendment. It would be on the first page, A, section 1(b)(v), striking out "or breakdown of the common-law relationship" and substituting "breakdown of the common-law relationship or a beneficiary of a trust attaining the age of 18 years." I'm not sure I've got that part through my head.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Thank you very much. In this place we're keeping the breaking down of common-law relationship but adding the beneficiary of a trust reaching the age of 18. That's when the shares would have to be transferred.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. So then this is just cleaning up the part to be able to add the minor child.

Mr. Weadick: That's right.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you.

The Chair: Is there any other member wishing to speak on amendment A1?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question on A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Hon. members, on the bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Thank you. Just briefly on the bill as amended. I appreciate the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West sort of dealing with the potential loopholes of the minor children and their inheritance and what happens in the event of the unfortunate death of a minor child, the breakdown of a common-law relationship. These are all definitive, helpful definitions that have been provided, and they're much appreciated.

I would be interested in the Member for Lethbridge-West or any other members in this House discussing the advantages and disadvantages of allowing families and professionals to establish corporations in terms of the lost tax revenue and if there is a belief that while we may lose in the tax revenue, there is the potential of greater expenditure and investment of the wealth as opposed to it just sitting in a trust account. I'm open to that discussion and debate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you. I appreciate the question that has been brought forward. The real tax advantages in the legislation fall at the federal level. With the ability to share the shares in the company with members of the family, that allows, when any dividends are paid, those dividends to be paid to those shareholders. So a spouse or a child could receive the benefits of the dividends and create a tax-sharing perspective. It's a very small amount provincially because, of course, we have flat tax. It would bring a few more people in, but it's really trying to create a level playing field.

Other professionals in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario have similar provisions to share this. Alberta is one of the only provinces in Canada not to have it. So this will allow us to have a more level playing field with those companies but also within Alberta. Any other professional – engineers, architects – can have professional corporations and can fully share that with their children, with their spouses. They're even allowed to have trusts and other things in there. This doesn't go as far as the other professionals, but it brings it closer. We want to make sure we can attract and keep professionals in Alberta, so we didn't want to create a situation where there is so much disparity that professionals may be lured away from here to maintain their professional trusts.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Mr. Chair, I appreciate the clarification. I certainly don't want to make this an argument between sort of a socialist, everybody benefiting and the capitalist, entrepreneurial circumstance, where, you know, you achieve every dollar you can possibly make and keep it close to your family and let the investments accrue interest, et cetera, et cetera. But I'm wondering if there's at some point a balance in terms of almost sort of a favoured status, where the average Albertan does not benefit from the investments accrued to selected professionals.

It's kind of a difficult argument because, you know, we're encouraging people to get the highest level of education and expertise they possibly can get, yet we want not only that expertise to be shared; we also want the economic benefits that have been generated to be shared. So, as I say, the quandary I have is that by allowing certain individuals with professional status to do better than other individuals who don't fit into those professional categories, are we potentially creating a special class of individuals at the expense of the sort of middle-class Albertan?

I know we're talking economic interests and Keynesian philosophies. I'd be interested in how we can see a benefit for all Albertans by providing special tax concessions to selected professionals.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I would encourage the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity to look at it from an entirely different perspective, and that is that small business is the generator of our economy. Small business creates more jobs. Small business creates more economic opportunity in this province than big business ever did, and small businesses right across the board, unless they're professionals, have the ability to organize their affairs so that family members can be shareholders.

In fact, family-run corporations are where small business starts. An entrepreneur with a good idea starts their business. Typically they will bring their family into the business, and their family will be a part of it. That is the nature of Alberta business. That's one of the things, that the innovation and the success, the drive in Alberta, is Albertans getting involved in business, setting up their company, and moving ahead and making something and giving something back. Typically it'll be organized around the family.

If you're a professional, however, you are in a different group. You can't do that. All this really does is bring professional corporations into the same realm as all other small business in the province. It's not about giving a special break to professional corporations. Rather, it's about creating the same platform for professional corporations as already exists for every other small business in the province.

Why would we do that? We would do that because professional corporations, like other small businesses, generate economic activity as well, because it makes a very, very insignificant impact to the tax revenue to the province because we have a flat tax of 10 per cent. So it doesn't really matter whether you're taxing it in the hands of the professional shareholder or other members of the family at lower income levels or those sorts of things. It's not a break that's going to take money out of the provincial tax coffers.

It may take a little bit out of the federal tax coffers and retain it for spreading around again in Alberta because most of the money that comes in actually goes back out even for most small businesses in the province. And the fact of the matter is that most professional corporations are in the realm of small businesses. Lawyers or doctors or accountants are professionals that carry on business in the province. They spend their money the same way everybody else does, to encourage more things to happen. I would just put that perspective to the hon. member, that this isn't about extending a privilege to a certain group of people, being professionals. This is about creating the same platform for professional corporations as exists for all other small businesses in the province.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I want to thank the hon. House leader for that explanation because it does help. I hadn't realized the extent that small business had breaks that professionals didn't.

A thought. My wife, myself, my daughter at one point were all teaching. Should this professional corporation be extended to teachers? You know, there are so many teachers, as you know from your own family, that several members of a family could in theory, if this were extended, be incorporated. Is that something worth pursuing, or should it be limited to the current professions that are now listed under the bill? Hon. Minister of Education, did you have any thoughts about the idea of extending the professional incorporation to, say, teachers, for example? Are there some natural extensions of the professional categories?

Mr. Hancock: It'd be a wonderful idea except that teachers are paid as opposed to earning income from selling a product or service. The paid professions don't quite fit into the same concept. There's not a similar opportunity. I mean, I would love to look for opportunities for teachers and nurses, for example, as paid professionals. But they do earn a salary as opposed to earning their income by selling services and products.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Thank you. I'd like to ask the Minister of Education, too. If somebody became a nurse practitioner, when they would work in a primary health unit, they could in fact be a professional that would contract their service to that primary health centre, which in that case would open it up to having them incorporate themselves.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I think that as new professions come on and they're recognized in terms of their organization, if they required or if they could operate through a professional corporation, then you'd want to extend the same type of opportunity to them.

The only distinction between a professional corporation and other corporations is that professionals cannot hide from their personal liability for their professional advice by putting themselves into a limited liability corporation. That's the distinction between a professional corporation and another corporation. If you're a professional, you have to be responsible for your professional advice, and you have to retain your personal liability for that, but there's no good reason to require you to jump through any other hoops that other businesses wouldn't be required to do.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the bill as amended.

Ms Notley: Thank you for the opportunity to rise. I've already, I think, outlined our caucus's concerns with this bill. There's no question that the exchange between the two opposition members and the Minister of Education highlights, really, the reasons for our concern behind this bill, where the Minister of Education clearly states that you wouldn't consider having teachers enjoy the benefit of this because, of course, they're salaried employees. This sort of goes back to our basic presumption: why is it that you get fabulous tax breaks and income-splitting opportunities if you happen to be a corporation or a small-business owner, but if you are a salaried employee, you're a sitting duck, waiting there to pay whatever premiums and taxes and additional user fees this government can come up with at any time? It makes no sense. A lawyer who works on staff and receives a salary versus a lawyer who has a professional corporation. It makes no sense.

An Hon. Member: Income Tax Act.

Ms Notley: That's my point. My point is that for income tax we should be taxing people on the basis of the income that they actually bring home and they earn and that these little tax loopholes don't make a lot of sense because there's, of course, a disproportionate number of people who get the benefit of these income-splitting opportunities. I would expect that there aren't a heck of a lot of families that enjoy the benefit of these income-splitting opportunities who are making $25,000 a year. It's an opportunity to defer taxes for a group that represents, effectively, the middle and upper middle and the upper, upper middle class. You know, it just really doesn't make a lot of sense. You can talk about equity between corporation owners, or you can talk about equity within the profession, or you can talk about equity amongst the population as a whole. The boilermaker who makes $150,000 and the lawyer who makes $150,000 a year: why does one get to attribute $75,000 to their spouse while the other one does not?

Mr. Liepert: One's a corporation.

Ms Notley: Exactly. One's a corporation, and one's an employee, and we must grind down employees at all possible opportunities if we are a Tory in Alberta.

Apart from one being a corporation and one not a corporation, I don't quite see the rationale between them. Is there a suggestion that a nurse doesn't contribute to economic activity? Is there a suggestion that if you are an employee, you don't grow the province; you don't generate economic activity? I'd like to hear this government tell the employees across this province that they don't contribute to the economic growth of the province. I'm pretty sure they do. I'm pretty sure they think they do. So what's the difference, other than that one is an opportunity for a select group to defer taxes while another group does not get the opportunity?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, at the risk of prolonging this debate, I'd like to make two points. First of all, any time any person who owns a company wants to spend the money personally, they have to draw it out of the company, and it's taxable in their hands. So they pay taxes on it just like any other wage earner pays tax on it. If you leave money in your corporation to grow the business and to grow economic activity, then you're growing economic activity. If you take it out for your personal use, it's income and you have to pay tax on it. The hon. member knows that.

The other piece, however, that she mentions is a very important piece, and that is: why cannot wage earners have the ability to split their income with their family? And that's a very good question. Unfortunately, she's in the wrong House to address it because it has to be addressed at the federal level. In my humble opinion, simply as a member of the Legislature, not on behalf of the government, we should be advocating to the federal government to allow a family to file a joint return and share their income, but that would be an argument for another day and another time and another place. That's not in our hands to do. What we do have the opportunity to do is to create a platform for economic activity and the drivers of economic activity, which is small business, to do what they can do and not to get in their way when they're creating opportunities so that we can have those wage earners earn as much as they possibly can so that they can take care of their families.

The Chair: On Bill 53 as amended, any other hon. members wishing to speak on it?

Bill 58 Corrections Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be made? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. It's interesting in this legislative fall session that we're having a number of bills that creep into the area of civil rights and sort of the potential loss of privacy, the loss of rights. If I were Stephen Jenuth, for example, I would have much greater informed reservations than myself as a former teacher. This bill makes changes to the Corrections Act in relation to the monitoring of inmate communications within correctional institutions as well as providing for earned remission in relation to provincial offences. Specifically, this allows for the passive recording of inmate communications. Those that are part of a privileged conversation, i.e. one with an attorney, will remain exempt.

Now, I'm a little bit mixed up by the terminology "passive recording." It seems that we're either recording or we're not recording. Then it gets a little bit more complicated, again, with the use of the word "passive." Obviously, the information is being actively recorded. But here's where it gets more convoluted. This bill will enable passive recording of inmate communications, which will be stored in a database, not to be listened to unless there are reasonable grounds to do so. You know, I taught English for a number of years. How do we define "reasonable"? Information that appears to threaten an individual: how do we know that that information appears to be threatening an individual if we haven't listened to the recording? Yet we've recorded it passively and are supposedly storing it, so at what point do we go down to the basement and pull out the tapes from November 23? What triggers the mechanism to play back the tape? That's the concern I have.

Various stakeholder groups have already referred to the use of these measures in Alberta remand centres as cruel and unusual. These aren't my terms. These are references that have been made. The Criminal Trial Lawyers Association has been vehemently opposed to the monitoring of remand inmates since similar changes hit the books in 2007. At that time Tom Engel, a well-known member of Edmonton's criminal bar, was in touch with us and encouraged the members of the opposition to make several amendments to the bill as it then was, including one that would have limited the use of communications monitoring to offenders rather than inmates.

I don't want to think that a person can use their jail cell to conduct crime operations and direct their individuals on the outside to perpetrate crimes, whether they be of a violent nature or a monetary nature. Yet at the same time because a person has been incarcerated doesn't mean that all rights are therefore suspended. I believe in restitution. I believe in an opportunity for reformation, which can only come through educational programs being offered in the jail. I do not believe – and I think maybe it comes from being a teacher for so long – that you give up on a person early on in the process. In the case of a repeat offender, obviously, they didn't get the message the first time, the second time, the third time. At that point do we simply say, you know: throw away the key.

It's a different circumstance when the crime is of a violent nature or of a pedophile nature or sexual assault circumstances, and a person will not accept either counselling or medical intervention. But how do we lump all these different offences and offenders into a situation and then talk in terms of terminology such as "passive"?

I see we have the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont here. I know he's got a legal background.

Mr. Rodney: Through the chair.

Mr. Chase: Through the chair, of course. I know we've got a teacher across the way directing another teacher to follow appropriate procedure. Completely appropriate.

Could you share with us your legal expertise as to where civil rights and criminal rights collide?

Mr. Denis: Pay my retainer first.

Mr. Chase: Yeah. That's right. I'm looking for some free legal advice.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I pleased also to speak to the Committee of the Whole about Bill 58, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2009. This bill will expand the monitoring and the recording of inmate communications, and it will also allow offenders of provincial statutes and municipal bylaws to earn remission for sentences. This bill is designed to make our legislation consistent with other jurisdictions, to encourage good behaviour and program participation by inmates, and it will modernize our approach to recording and monitoring inmate communications. Providing incentive for good behaviour and program participation by provincial statute and municipal bylaw offenders will help make provincial remand and correctional facilities safer for inmates, staff, visitors, and, ultimately, the entire community.

When inmates participate in programs to help them get back on track, we all benefit. During the second reading debate the overall tone of the discussion on Bill 58 was quite positive, with very few issues being raised. A few questions were raised, even by the hon. member just speaking, so I'd like to provide some information and clarification around the few issues that did come up. If this hon. member would listen carefully, he'll see that most of his issues will be addressed in what I'm going to say next.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo also spoke about monitoring and recording inmate communications of those awaiting trial. It's important to note that these communications will not be reviewed unless certain criteria are met. The director of a correctional centre must believe on reasonable grounds that the inmate communication will contain evidence, firstly, of an act that would jeopardize the security of the institution or the safety of any persons or, secondly, if a criminal offence or plan was being hatched to commit a criminal offence within the jail. That's when you would listen to these communications. Communications could also be reviewed if the communication is made to a victim or another person who would find the inmate communication threatening or intimidating to themselves. As well, communications could be reviewed to ensure the security of the institution and the safety of inmates, staff, and the public: everyone involved.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre raised the issue of privacy in light of rapidly advancing technology. As the Member for Calgary-Buffalo indicated, the Supreme Court of Canada says that there is a reduced expectation of privacy for prisoners who are incarcerated. I think that would just be common sense. If you're incarcerated, you've lost some rights. Again, it's important to note that there must be reasonable grounds to review these communications.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre also spoke about the collection and storage of recorded inmate communications. Regulations will be developed regarding the storage and retention of inmate communications.

The final area that was discussed during second reading was around privileged communications. The proposed amendments exempt communications between lawyers and their clients, so there are some communications that are exempt. The regulation which would accompany this proposed legislation may be expanded to include communications with other parties.

I trust this information will assist all of my fellow members in their understanding of Bill 58.

Mr. Chairman, passing the Corrections Amendment Act, 2009, will modernize our approach to inmate communications and align our legislation with other jurisdictions in Canada. This bill will also help to increase safety both in the community and in our correctional centres. These amendments will encourage inmates to participate in programs to help change their lives and to comply with the rules in our correctional centres. It will also give law enforcement another tool to intercept and prevent crime. Albertans deserve safe communities to live, work, and raise their families, and these amendments further support that goal.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on Bill 58.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I do appreciate the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka providing some background to questions that were asked. It's much appreciated. Part of the problem exists, as I've already suggested, in what is reasonable and to what extent is passive simply a collection of information which becomes active once it's actually being listened to.

Another concern that has been brought up is the almost interchangeable use of the terms "offender" and "inmate." Now, a person who is in a remand centre, for example, is an inmate. They can't truly be classified an offender until they've had a chance to appear before a judge and a hearing has been held. Obviously, if they're convicted, they're an offender, but until such time as they are, they're an inmate. The offender is a much more derogatory form of language, so we have to be careful how we're using it. That you're innocent until proven guilty, I believe, is still the case in Alberta. But these definitions have to be dealt with.

Section 1, definitions, is amended by adding (d.1), inmate communication. This is defined as any communication – oral, written, electronic – between the inmate and any other person. But it specifies, as the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka pointed out, that this will not include any communication that is defined as privileged. Privileged information would include conversation with an attorney, for example. This is where concerns regarding the use of "inmate" rather than a term like "offender" arise. Note that "offender" is not a defined term in the Corrections Act as it is today. When we're sort of flipping back and forth between inmate and offender, we have to make sure that our language is the same throughout so that we're not getting into the definition concerns that I mentioned.

It is troubling that this legislation is written in such a way that it will not need to be revisited as new forms of communication begin to be used. These are concerns that I bring up. Other concerns that come out of this, without wanting to belabour the point: how and for how long will the recordings be stored? Are there circumstances under which recordings will be deleted or not stored at all? For example, a person in a remand centre is having conversations. They're recorded. Then that individual goes before a judge. For lack of evidence or whatever the circumstance may be, they are not held guilty. They're acquitted. Is there anything within the bill that says, now that they're proved to be innocent or, at least, not guilty, the tapes will be erased?

I brought this up with regard to issues dealing with child welfare, where an allegation is made against an individual, and that allegation, when it comes to a court hearing, is proved to be false, yet that record, that accusation, that allegation follows that individual for the rest of their life. Well, similarly, will these taped conversations have a nondetermined life? I would suggest that unless we deal with the person who is found not guilty and start to give them back the rights that were taken away from them, whether it was the loss of their contact with their child or whether it's the fact they were inappropriately, incorrectly incarcerated, these are issues that are of concern.

I don't believe in a sort of generic, "Well, as long as we don't make too many mistakes on the average, it's okay if we keep these tapes for a lengthy time" or "It's okay if the person's slate is not wiped clean because there are probably more people that we're not catching than those that we're catching." We have to be aware of the balance between civil liberties, a chance to, as they say, be proven innocent and then not have the trappings of allegations or the taped conversations following the individuals. At what point does a person's privacy get restored? That would be a question I would have.

I see that the hon. House leader is back.

Limitations on recordings within this act. Are there any limitations, at which point the recordings would be erased? Do you or the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont have any sense of that? I'm not doing this to prolong. I'm just wondering: anywhere in the act does it state the length of time that the evidence will be collected and set aside even if a person is proven innocent? Maybe that's not something that could be approached because it isn't qualified in this act, and if it isn't, then there's a problem.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. Just briefly, earlier the Member for Calgary-Varsity had asked me for some legal advice. Tomorrow I can go down to the Law Society and reactivate my licence, he can pay me a retainer, and then I could just pay the fees to my professional corporation.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Through the chair, if the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont had a dental practice on the side, he could have two retainers.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak on Bill 58? Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 58 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 59 Mental Health Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments regarding this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, and I'll be brief. This bill purports to clarify the role of psychiatrists in issuing and overseeing community treatment orders. The bill also clarifies the criteria used by mental health review panels when reviewing community treatment orders, and the bill expands the range of people that the mental health advocate can request information from.

As I mentioned with regard to Bill 58, we're delving more and more into the civil liberties aspects of individuals and the safety of the community versus the privacy of the individual. Psychiatrists are professionals, and I appreciate their professionalism. We have the circumstance where, for example, today we tabled in the area of 6,000 signatures calling for Alberta Hospital to remain open basically at the status it was at the end of September, as the prayer read. My concern is that the farther away we get from the professional, from the psychiatrist, when we get into the so-called community treatment and we don't have the same type of professional connection that an organization like the Alberta Hospital has, then the ability to treat and to deal with community treatment orders gets somewhat watered down.

I recall – I believe it was 2005 – when we debated about a person, for example, who suffers from schizophrenia and doesn't take their meds. We had an interesting debate as to under what circumstance that individual should be committed to an institution and therefore forced to take their medication. It's such a delicate balance, as I say, between the rights of the individual and the safety of the community.

Again, I'm going to reference the Alberta Hospital because a wide variety of needs are met at the Alberta Hospital. We talked in question period, for example, about treatment for pedophiles. That's a very specific problem that requires very specific professional intervention, so the notion of a committed pedophile being in some sort of loose community program without the oversight of a psychiatrist's community treatment order . . . [interjection] Well, this is where I get worried about it.

On the other hand, hon. House leader, I don't want everybody incarcerated; I don't want everyone institutionalized. But when an institution is providing the variety of services, for example, that Alberta Hospital is currently providing, I'm not sure that the same degree of oversight and professionalism can occur in a community setting. This is where the balance, the privacy, individual rights versus collective rights come into the discussion. I raise this because in general we're supportive.

I would note that Alberta is the only jurisdiction that allows for community treatment orders to be issued without consent when a patient has a history of refusing treatment. A community treatment order is considered necessary to prevent harm to others. Possibly that's a good thing that we're intervening because of the harm that could be done to others. Counselling, medication, supervision, professional oversight – there aren't singular solutions. That's why when an institution such as Alberta Hospital offers this wide range of service where people don't have to be necessarily confined overnight but can receive the guidance when things temporarily break down, as is frequently the case with lesser degrees of mental illness, when we have this one-stop shopping type of facility, my concern is that expanding it into the community without having it as a backup may be the wrong direction to take.

I look forward to others. I note that on deck tonight we do have a doctor who, I am sure, in his front-line emergent circumstances has dealt with the disorientation of individuals suffering from mental illness, and the ability to direct them to the appropriate area within the hospital and for extended treatment, I'm sure, must come up on a fairly regular basis. I know, for example, that in the drop-in centre in Calgary it's estimated that one-third of the individuals are suffering from mental illness. If you could enlighten us as to your experience, that would be most appreciated.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity for speaking to this bill. It's a very important bill. As a front-line health care provider I will say that our professional organization that represents the emergency doctors of the province was consulted a few years ago. The issue with the Mental Health Amendment Act in 2007 was that they changed the criteria for involuntary admission from danger to harm. When a patient presents to us in the emergency room and they've been in and out of Alberta Hospital and acute-care facilities for mental health reasons where they've actually presented a danger to themselves or others, family members will often bring them in and say, you know: they've stopped taking their medications. Now, on that criteria of danger, it says on the form that we fill out, the legal form to certify patients to a hospital, that they must present a danger to themselves or others, but that pertains to that point in time. At that point in time they may not present a danger, but two or three days later they may.

There have been instances when very sick people have come in very early in their illness. They weren't a danger at that point in time, but the next day they were, and bad outcomes have happened. So that has been changed to the word "likely" to present a danger or harm to themselves or others, or likely to present a deterioration in their physical or emotional well-being. It allows us to intervene early and intervene when the loved ones of the family member know that they do need help and they need to be compliant with their medications.

Part of the issue with the community treatment orders is that we are allowed currently to hold patients against their will, but we can't treat them. The community treatment orders aren't reserved for everyone who's admitted to hospital for the first time or the second time. It's for patients who have chronic psychiatric illness, who have been admitted for over 30 days, who have had more than a couple of admissions. Many of these patients are many of the homeless people and many of the very vulnerable. They get off their medications, they lose insight, and they are unable to have the wherewithal to know that they need to take the medication that works for them.

Really, this is about earlier intervention and prevention because if patients don't take their treatment and they go a long time without it, then they're very sick. Then they need to be admitted for a very long time. So this is really about improving treatment, improving care, and keeping people in the community if at all possible. As I said, this is about actually bringing you into hospital earlier in your illness so we can get you out sooner and, really, to improve the care. This is not about the safety of society and privacy of individuals. It's really about the safety of the patient, safety of the individual involved. That's the primary concern.

With respect to Alberta Hospital, right now patients are not forced to take their medications. As I said, we can hold you against your will, but we can't force you. This isn't about forcing everyone to take medications, just those who absolutely need it. It's not the vast majority of psychiatric patients. It's a small number. Really, many of them are, unfortunately, the ones who are in the revolving psychiatry door, and many of them are homeless.

With respect to oversight, that was a concern for many of my colleagues about civil liberties and oversight, and this is where the mental health advocate will have the ability to get more information, to speak up for those patients so that they do have a voice who advocates for them, an independent voice, independent of government.

Now, sometimes patients need to be apprehended, where the family members say: look, here's a big problem. They bring it to our attention, but we have no legislative tool to ask the authorities to bring somebody who is likely to present a danger to themselves or others to the facility for treatment.

These are some of the amendments that we've made. I hope I've answered some of the questions for the Member for Calgary-Varsity. I'd be happy to answer more questions on this very important issue and very important piece of legislation for mental health patients.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on Bill 59.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak on this bill in Committee of the Whole. This is a very interesting bill, and it represents an attempt to balance against different issues. In considering my view of the bill as well as the remarks that I might make, I took the time to read over some of the remarks that were made when the legislation that this bill is amending was first introduced.

Of course, at that time, you know, members within this Assembly spent some time balancing their concerns against the need for treatment on one hand and the issue of civil liberties on the other hand. I believe, in fact, that in our caucus we ultimately expressed two different opinions on the merits of this bill.

However, it's interesting because I think that no matter where you get to in terms of the opinions, there was certainly one point that was made by the former Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, Dr. Raj Pannu. He was quite concerned about the civil liberties issues. He specifically said, you know, that this is the kind of bill that we need to have the capacity to bring back and review periodically because it gives such tremendous authority and there is, unfortunately, no ability to have a fully safeguarding mechanism of oversight. That was in no way a criticism of mechanisms of oversight that currently exist; rather, it was just a concern that because of the nature of the problem that's being dealt with, it was possible for there to be transgressions notwithstanding everybody's best efforts. So he made that point.

I think it's an interesting point that is relevant to this issue now. I think the key thing about this bill that I have some concerns about is the extension of the opportunity to order community treatment and/or medical treatment, which is sort of how it's characterized by the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, or the ability to apprehend patients to doctors who are not psychiatrists. I am a little concerned about this issue, particularly where it arises in very remote communities. It's because of this issue that I would really like to see this Legislature or through some other mechanism have the government report back on how this piece of legislation is actually being utilized.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark talked about his experience in the emergency room, and I've no question that in an urban setting – I've heard a number of tragic stories from people in my constituency about friends and family who needed to be subjected to treatment and kept in care because they weren't receiving treatment and that it was needed for their own best interests. I believe that to be the case, and I believe that there is some capacity here for that to happen in Edmonton.

My concern relates more to those rural areas where, for instance, earlier this fall I along with the leader of the third party travelled across the province and spent some time meeting with people in rural areas and hearing about the state of their health care. One of the most compelling bunch of submissions that we received was in the northwest part of the province, where we heard about the incredible lack of mental health services in the rural areas and in that particular part of the province. That, of course, just reinforced the information that our caucus released in the spring, which, you know, we received in the standard brown envelope, outlining an internal government report which also identified a tremendous lack of mental health resources in the rural areas.

Here's my concern. I heard from some people who presented to our task force about rural hospitals that have significant numbers of people with mental health issues and in many cases seniors with mental health issues who are in hospitals there. They'd have a number of patients in there and not one person on staff with any kind of mental health expertise. None of the doctors had mental health expertise. None of the nurses had mental health expertise. They might have a community mental health worker that would drive into the town once a week and may or may not ever deal with the people that were actually occupying beds in those hospitals.

So then my concern becomes: to what extent do we find ourselves in the situation where we have overworked rural family doctors who have nowhere near the expertise or the opportunity to develop the expertise in mental health ordering treatment against the will of, often, seniors in these facilities? While everybody thinks they're doing the best that they can – and of course no one is questioning the motivation behind this type of order and this decision to pursue the treatment in that way – at the end of the day we can question whether they have the expertise necessary and required to move forward in that particular way against the will of the patient.

I know that there is the opportunity in theory under the legislation or, perhaps, even the obligation for the physician to consult with a psychiatrist. But if your closest psychiatrist is six hours south and is not ever going to meet the patients that you're calling about, well, then, you know, what kind of safeguards do we have that that family physician is really prescribing treatment in the way that is in the best interests of that patient?

This is a real problem because outside of Edmonton and Calgary there is a dramatic, dramatic shortage of mental health professionals. Within that subspecialty of the medical profession that deals with mental health, we know that the rules are changing and the parameters are constantly shifting, and what's best practice this week will not be best practice a few weeks from now. So it's a very evolving and, frankly, less black-and-white area of expertise than, say, you know, orthopaedics or something like that. There are new drugs always coming out and all that kind of stuff. What we're talking about here is giving to these physicians the opportunity or the obligation, in fact, in some cases to exercise this authority and, I would suggest, without adequate levels of support.

Another concern that I have, again, because we're talking about the rural areas: where somebody who is not necessarily a psychiatrist orders apprehension or orders a community treatment order, I'd really like to know what the success rate is in these rural areas in terms of being able to actually implement that order.

Again, we don't have mental health beds throughout most rural regions of this province, and we certainly don't have community treatment centres in most rural regions of this province. So often it becomes a case of either sending somebody down to Edmonton and disconnecting them from their family, or alternatively the doctor makes an order but nobody follows up on it because nobody has the capacity to follow up on it.

We don't have enough family physicians in our rural areas, and we certainly do not have the expertise and the support services, as well, with respect to mental health. It's not just a question of having somebody that knows how to read what the pharmaceutical companies latest description is of drug A, B, or C that they're marketing. We also need to have, you know, therapists and people that can provide mental health support in our rural areas. Again, we have one of the worst records in the country, if not the worst record in the country, in terms of substantive provision of mental health services throughout the province and in particular in areas outside of Edmonton and Calgary.

What we would like to see ultimately with a piece of legislation like this is some mechanism through which the government needs to report back to Albertans how often these community treatment orders are used and how effectively they are used and what challenges the professionals have, particularly outside of Edmonton and Calgary, to ensure that that kind of treatment is there. Again, I'm not convinced that we are providing anywhere near the support to professionals. We don't have enough professionals, and we certainly don't have enough beds, whether in the community or outside of the community, to ensure that these orders can be acted on in a way that was intended when the legislation was first drafted.

While I think that at the end of the day this is one of these balancing acts, one of the things that this legislation is trying to balance against is the failure of this government to provide adequate mental health services in most regional areas. I would say that by voting for it and giving to family physicians the ability to do that which psychiatrists ought to be doing, we are effectively admitting failure. While it may be a short-term solution that's better than nothing – and I think of those families who are desperately seeking some type of treatment for their loved ones, so it's for them that I can't quite vote against it – on the flip side I think all of us should know that having to go to this kind of strategy is a reflection of our failure to provide for adequate mental health services across the province.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to stand and speak on Bill 59, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2009. I just want to get some clarification here from the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. It goes on to say that this bill will clarify the role of psychiatrists in issuing and overseeing community treatment orders. The next one goes on to say that this bill will also clarify the criteria used by the mental health review panel when reviewing CTOs. You know, how broad will the criteria be? What kind of fine line will we be walking here with civil liberties and keeping the best interests of the patient at heart? I have the personal experience of a patient with mental health problems, and it's very hard to handle the situation. This is a good bill. I'm sure the CTOs will definitely help to contain the situation of a patient, but my concern is the criteria. You know, how broad will it be

Those are the questions I have for the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, thank you. I'd just like to address a couple of the concerns from the hon. members on the other side. First, for the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, the criteria for community treatment orders. The three main criteria to hold a patient against their will are, number one, that they must be suffering from a mental health disorder; number two, that they are likely to present a danger to themselves or others; and, number three, that they cannot be treated other than as a formal patient. By that, I mean that other than filling out the legal form. Patients sometimes don't have insight and think they don't have a problem when, really, they are a danger to or are harmful to themselves or others. They have a mental health illness. We have to fill out the legal form to treat them. Those are the criteria.

There are many patients who have a psychiatric illness or a mental health illness. This doesn't apply to anyone with a mental health problem. You have to be very sick to fulfill those three specific criteria. For the community treatment orders to be valid, you have to have been admitted to hospital on a number of occasions as a formal patient. If I was depressed or if any other hon. member here had any mental health issues, we cannot just do a community treatment order for them. So I hope that clarifies a concern of the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Now, for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I appreciate her bringing up her concerns and her cautious support for the bill. I'd just like to say that in formulating this legislation, consultations took place with numerous stakeholders: the Alberta Alliance on Mental Illness and Mental Health, the Mental Health Patient Advocate, Alberta Health Services, the Alberta Medical Association, and the practising psychiatrists. These are the care providers who truly care for those who are vulnerable. Really, the idea here isn't to infringe upon patients' liberties. It's really to provide them the care that they desperately do require.

There are remedies. In fact, there is the Mental Health Review Panel. Secondly, there is the Mental Health Patient Advocate, whose role will be expanded to include the patients who are subject to the community treatment orders. Thirdly, patients can still access their own information even if they are a formal patient. They can get the help of the Privacy Commissioner to get their own medical records and information to help with their advocacy if they are a formal patient and they feel that they do not need to be there. So there are remedies for anyone who is certified as a formal patient.

With respect to rural areas I'm glad that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona brought this up. In fact, it's even more of an issue for those in rural areas. In all rural areas of Canada delivery of health care or any other service is a challenge. The hon. member is right: there aren't psychiatrists in every rural community. In fact, for community treatment orders to be valid, you would have had to have been certified on more than a couple of occasions to a hospital and be determined to have a significant mental health illness. Part of the legislation is that when a patient is discharged from a mental health facility, ongoing treatment recommendations be provided to that individual's family physician. That is a requirement of complying with these community treatment orders, so that way the physician or health care provider in that local rural community has some guidance from a qualified health care professional.

A requirement also is that the physician in the rural area must consult with a psychiatrist before exercising their authority under the act. So there is a psychiatrist, a specialist in the field, who is consulted. I will say that as somebody who was a family physician, we are trained in every field of medicine. We're sort of a jack of all trades, a master of none. All the family medicine physicians in the province train in all aspects of medicine, so they have had training. My first two-month rotation as a medical intern, in 1991, I spent on 9B south at Alberta Hospital. I've had a good chat with many of my colleagues at Alberta Hospital to discuss the issues that we're dealing with in mental health.

Lastly, with the advent of technology there is telehealth and tele mental health in order to improve access to care for rural areas, and that's a very good thing. Again, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the very important questions from the hon. members from across the way. They're raising important issues, and I hope I've addressed some of these issues to answer some of their concerns.

Thank you.

Mr. Kang: My question is: what kind of teeth, you know, are we going to have with the CTOs? The mental health patients say that they are well. They don't want to be in the hospital although they are sick. And then the hospitals and doctors say: we cannot hold them against their will. They may not be harmful to themselves or to others, but once they are out of there, who knows what they could do? What kind of teeth are the CTOs going to have? Will the hospital be able to hold them against their will even if say they are fine and that there's nothing wrong with them? Will there be some sort of assessment procedure followed after that?

That's the concern I have, that most of the time the patients say that there's nothing wrong with them. They just got out of the hospital. You cannot keep them in the hospital. They don't even want to go home; they just want to go wherever. They don't know where they're going to end up.

Dr. Sherman: To the Member for Calgary-McCall, again, I don't like to use the word "teeth." But he does raise a very important issue. As I explained: the three criteria. Part of this act was already proclaimed in September. Originally, before that act was proclaimed, the criteria were that the patient presents a danger to themselves or others.

To give you an example, I had a mother who I talked to. She had brought her son in, and at that point in time he didn't present a danger. We didn't have the ability to hold him against his will. Then two days later he committed suicide. The mother was very concerned because she knew of his mental illness. She was quite concerned and she was quite frustrated because we did not have the legislative ability to hold him although she as his parent and care provider knew that he was going to deteriorate.

So of the three criteria, one is that you must be suffering from a mental health disorder. This is why new forms came out in September of 2009 – and they're already in the front lines – that they're likely to present a danger to themselves or others and to suffer from physical and mental deterioration. Had that criteria been there, as a front-line health care provider we would have had the ability to listen to the parent and the care providers and say: "You know what? You know this patient really well. This patient has had many issues with the health care system. You're absolutely correct. We need to bring them in." This gives the physician the ability to hold them against their will.

Now, that's just the formal patient. That has nothing to do with the community treatment orders. That's just the ability to hold somebody against their will to protect them so that they don't hurt somebody else or hurt themselves. I hope that answers the question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I very much appreciate having a professional bringing forward this bill and being able to provide such detailed and eloquent answers.

I want to give you a very specific circumstance without revealing the name. An individual who contacted me in Calgary was transported by the RCMP from St. Albert to I believe it was the University hospital for a psychiatric assessment. The person wasn't uttering threats. They weren't jumping up and down on the countertops, but the MP in St. Albert wasn't sure what to do about this person who was protesting within the office. It wasn't sit down, but she was putting forward a series of concerns. So she's transported to the hospital, and while she's in an observation room she rings the emergency call button. No one comes, so she's concerned that she has been basically incarcerated within a hospital setting without any ability to have external contact.

In order to get attention, she takes her coat and stands up on the table and covers the camera. Well, that immediately brought a response, and from a security individual at the hospital the response was to toss this very diminutive person down onto the bed. Now, the individual was in that circumstance for three days. Would that fit into the category of a community treatment order? Under what sort of regulation would a person be held when they weren't uttering threats, when they weren't beating up on themselves? Basically, they provided a type of a nuisance to the individual, and I guess they didn't know what to do with them.

The RCMP came in on June 6. Then on June 9 the individual contacted Edmonton police and asked for a follow-up, an investigation in terms of the harm that was done to her when she was tossed down. In terms of dealing with the Edmonton police force, they indicated, for example, that her only avenue for seeking justice with regard to the rough treatment she had at the hospital was basically to get a lawyer and sue the hospital and sue the security service.

I know it's long and involved, but it's a true story. Would a community treatment order fit that circumstance? What other medical sort of reasoning would be allowed to hold a person for three days if not a community treatment order?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity for that question. Typically when police bring a patient into the emergency department, they're brought in under what we call a form 10. If the person has done something, either it's criminal or the police have made a determination that they may be suffering from an emotional or mental illness, so they fill in a form 10 to bring them to us in the front lines. Now, that allows the emergency department to hold the patient until the physician sees them, at which time the physician makes the determination whether the patient – again, those three criteria, suffering from a mental health disorder, is a danger or harm to themselves or others, and cannot be kept other than as a formal patient. Once a physician has made that determination, we fill out the form. That allows us to hold them for 24 hours, and then a psychiatrist would see them. Then the psychiatrist fills out a 72-hour form, but that is not a community treatment order. That is just when a patient has been brought in for assessment.

I can't comment on the specific case, but no, that's not a community treatment order issue whatsoever. The community treatment order issue is that you've got a sick patient who has been admitted as a formal patient, who has been in hospital for a long period of time, usually over 30 days, on numerous occasions, and they're likely to suffer a deterioration. Usually they're brought in by a family member who's concerned. Sometimes the family member comes and tells the doctor, "Here's the problem," but the patient is at home or somewhere else. The community treatment order allows us to fill out an apprehension order so that the police can go bring them for care, for assessment, at which time the medical professional will make the determination whether they're medically and emotionally fit or not. So the issue that you describe is not a community treatment order issue.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I appreciate the clarification.

With regard to the form 10, this person was basically held for three days, so it went beyond that. I guess there were some legitimate observation reasons. My concern is that there are a number of people whose major problem is poverty, and there may be shades of mental illness. But in the way they are sort of dealt with within the system, there seems to be a fair amount of flexibility within the system to hold them beyond the 24-hour period, where they haven't necessarily committed a crime other than to, you know, cause a mini ruckus. I mean by that a series of questions like: "Why are you doing this? Why are you doing this? Why are you doing this?" But they're not, you know, coming with a stapler or anything like this.

Anyway, do not feel that you have to prolong the discussion. This isn't the only case that I've heard of, and I just worry about people being kept within a facility for three days or longer without a community treatment order.

Bill 61 Provincial Offences Procedure Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to move an amendment to Bill 61, which I would like distributed at this time.

The Chair: We shall pause a bit for distribution of the amendment. The amendment shall be known as amendment A1 to Bill 61.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, please proceed.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The amendment that I've tabled is on behalf of the member of this Assembly for Edmonton-Castle Downs. It just is a couple of housekeeping amendments. In subsection 4(c) it simply adds "or another peace officer." It also adds after subsection 7(c) again "or another peace officer."

More importantly, it also deals with a new section after subsection (4), adding 4.1, which says:

A person who, without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies on the person, fails to comply with any condition of an undertaking entered into before an officer in charge or another peace officer is guilty of an offence.

The term "offence" is defined under the parent statute, Mr. Chair.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report bills 53, 58, 59, and 61 and report progress on Bill 50.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 58, Bill 59. The committee reports the following bills with some amendments: Bill 53, Bill 61. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 50. I wish to table all the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 56

Alberta Investment Management Corporation Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move third reading of Bill 56, the Alberta Investment Management Corporation Act, 2009.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Given the hour and the onset of brain freeze and the desire to provide an intelligent response as opposed to just a simple response, the concern that we had, which I first discussed in Committee of the Whole, was that by removing the deputy minister of finance from the board membership of AIMCo, there was a potential of some of the oversight being lost.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar introduced an amendment which was, unfortunately, defeated. That amendment would have given greater voice to the individuals who are directly involved in the oversight of AIMCo. The hon. member had suggested that of the individuals appointed under subsection (1.1), one must have had experience with the Local Authorities Pension Plan Board, one must have had experience with the Public Service Pension Plan Board, one must have had experience with the Special Forces Pension Plan Board, and one must have had experience with the Management Employees Pension Plan Board. In other words, he wanted the people who were affected by the AIMCo decisions to be represented within the board. Unfortunately, I was not able to participate in the debate at that time, but I would think that we would want the people who are most directly affected involved in the process by which large sums of money are being invested.

For that reason, I am suggesting that our membership will be voting against this particular bill because of lack of representation on the board.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on Bill 56?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 56 read a third time]

Court of Queen's Bench Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-West.

Mr. Weadick: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened to all of the debate very intently in the House during the course of debate on Bill 57, the Court of Queen's Bench Amendment Act, 2009. I appreciate the positive support that we've had from all members of the opposition and from members of our party during debate on this very important Criminal Code amendment. This will allow, as you know, Court of Queen's Bench justices to also have justice of the peace power so that they can issue all warrants. I would ask the House to support this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. member wish to speak on Bill 57?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 57 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we do now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:28 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, indeed, today it's my pleasure to introduce a couple of very classy ladies that I've been privileged to know for many years. One of them is a former member of this House. As many of you will remember, Judy Gordon was the MLA for Lacombe-Stettler from '93 to 2004. In fact, she was the first woman in Alberta to take the post of Deputy Chair of Committees. Judy has been the mayor of Lacombe since 2004 and is currently the chair of client services for the Alberta division for the board of directors of the MS Society.

With her is a lady that I had the privilege of going to school with, Joan Ozirny. She obviously paid a lot more attention than I did, Mr. Speaker, because she's been very successful. She is in her ninth year of serving as the MS Society chair of the Government and Community Relations Committee for the Alberta board of directors. All in this room are so terribly indebted to the people of Alberta that work and serve on these committees, that truly make life better for all of us.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask Joan and Judy, who are seated in your gallery, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a wonderful group of kids from Belmead elementary school. We have 32 visitors. They're joined by Ms Sachse-Brown, their principal, and by Mrs. Zimmer and Ms Eldershaw. This is a class that believes in leadership. They just had their youth parliament and elections. They believe in happy health and hope and love for our community. We have APPLE Schools projects as part of this project at the school, so this will be one of the healthiest schools in the province thanks to these young people. I'd like to ask them all to rise and ask my colleagues in the Assembly here to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to have this opportunity to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly some 22 very bright, energetic young students from the Bentley elementary school. Today they're accompanied by teachers Joan Gammie, Sharron Juuti, Ian McLaren, and principal Lane Moore. They also have parent helper Mrs. Jacquie Ruud. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly students from a school that has generated, to my knowledge, at least three members of this Assembly, including the Member for Edmonton-Centre; a former Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, Debby Carlson; and yours truly. So it's got a great record of producing politicians and all kinds of other people. The school I'm referring to is McKernan elementary and junior high. There are 47 visitors from that school with us today, two classes and four adults. The adults include Miss Hurst, Mr. Hordal, Mme Vachon, and Miss Palmer. I hope I get invited to speak to their class about government. I'd ask them to all rise and to receive the warm welcome from this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that you and all members of the Assembly took the opportunity today to take part in eye health and wellness day at the Legislature. We have representatives of the Alberta Association of Optometrists, three from that association, and I guess we have three members of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind also joining us here today. With the Association of Optometrists is Dr. Neepun Sharma, who is the president of the association; Dr. Aaron Patel, who is secretary-treasurer; Dr. Kevin Engel, a counsellor with the association; and from the CNIB Cathy McFee, who is the executive director for Alberta; Tim Lait, who is a library volunteer with the CNIB; and someone who is very familiar to all members of this Assembly, Bill McKeown, who is the vice-president of government relations, and I believe he's accompanied by his newest companion, Simba. I would ask all of them if they would rise and receive the warm applause of the members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the following individuals: Omer Ghaznavi, Dr. Naveed Ahmed, and Evan Chrapko. Mr. Ghaznavi and Dr. Naveed have come from Pakistan to visit us here today, and they represent Karachi Electric Supply Company, which provides electricity to a lot of the population of Pakistan. The purpose of their visit is to secure technology developed in Vegreville which converts cattle manure to electricity. Highmark Renewables has been instrumental in developing this Alberta-based technology. It provides smart, clean energy with low-carbon footprint and is an excellent example of Alberta's innovative and pioneering spirit thanks to the help of Evan and his team. I would encourage members to visit their website at www.highmark.ca. I'll ask my guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a very special guest in the public gallery today. Jody MacPherson is our vice-president of communications for the Alberta Liberal Party, with 20 years of experience in corporate communications and public relations. She hails from Okotoks, where she has lived for the past 15 years. Jody has been working mostly in health care communications and media relations for the past few years and was elected to her position in the party last April. She is also an activist involved with environmental and land-use issues in her community. I'd like to ask Jody to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature two very special guests here today. Ms Anila Umar, a constituent and recipient of the Governor General's award a few years ago, is here today with Miss Christine Dotzler, for whom she has been a mentor since they met at the Camp Quality program for children and young teens with cancer about a year ago. Miss Dotzler is a resident and student from Camrose composite high school and winner of the provincial gold medal in soccer. Christine is visiting the Alberta Legislature for the first time, and she is celebrating her 18th birthday here with us today. It's been a pleasure and an inspiration to meet Christine and be part of her very special day today. I would like to ask my guests to stand and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly eight bright, inquisitive students from the grade 10 social studies class at Austin O'Brien high school in Edmonton. These students are part of a select group of students whose class is designed to enhance their in-school experience. They're here today with their teacher, Mr. Brad Buttineau, to broaden their educational and community experiences. Earlier today they enjoyed a tour of the Legislature, and they're happy to be here today to observe first-hand the workings of the Legislature, democracy, and government. I would now ask that my guests, who are seated in the public gallery, rise to receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the House two young men who have driven all the way up here from Red Deer and Sylvan Lake in order to watch question period, and I'm going to tour them around the Legislature. I know they're going to enjoy the parry and thrust of question period. I'd ask them to rise as I introduce them. They are Steven Kwasny, and he is accompanied by his friend Jeff Chipley, who is a very good friend of my friend Kim Amell. I'm glad they're here today. I'd ask them to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to reintroduce one of our guests, who happens to be my constituent. His name is Bill McKeown, and his guide dog is Simba. Now, Bill has been a tireless advocate for the blind at CNIB, and he's been advocating for coverage of a recent drug that we approved, Lucentis, for macular degeneration and advocating to get books for the blind in the libraries. I'd like Bill to rise and receive the warm welcome of my friends here in the Legislative Assembly.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Equal Voice Mentorship Program

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I had the pleasure of hosting Equal Voice here at the Legislature. Equal Voice is an organization dedicated to getting women interested in politics. One of the activities that the group sponsors is the mentorship program called experiences. I have the pleasure of being involved in this program. Experiences gives young women the opportunity to job shadow women in politics and gain a greater understanding of the issue.

I've been mentoring a young woman from Calgary. At the beginning of our mentorship I asked her what she wanted to get from the experience, and I'd like to quote from her e-mail.

I want to be challenged. New challenges provide the experiences to learn and grow. I've already discussed the opportunity to get involved with youth mental health. It would be great if I could attend a meeting or an event with you. There is a lot I don't know about politics, and there's a lot I'd like to learn. Even just observing you at such events would be great. Any way to get involved would be welcomed.

This is exactly the type of thinking that mentorship should promote. If all of the other participants are as intelligent and as enthusiastic, then there is a future that is very bright. I want to thank the staff and the volunteers of Equal Voice for the tremendous work they do. I also want to acknowledge the great work that you do, Mr. Speaker, to promote women in politics. I've been given the opportunity through your office to attend the Commonwealth Women Parliamentarians Association conference. This is a great opportunity to network with women representatives and focus on issues affecting women.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Length of Legislature Sittings

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This will likely be one of the last members' statements of the legislative session. While some of my colleagues might rejoice at this, I for one am disappointed. This session has lasted a mere four weeks, approximately 16 days. No wonder Albertans are disenchanted with politicians. We hardly ever seem to be on the job in this House debating the issues. Among all Legislatures in this great country, on the average the Alberta Legislature is in session for the shortest period of time. You know, Premier Klein used the words "dome disease" to disparage the work of this Legislature, and I'm sorry to say that the successor administration seems to have taken this philosophy to heart. This administration has done nothing to improve the relevance of this House in the hearts and minds of Albertans.

Now, what I would like to propose is a radical idea, that the length of time that we spend in this Legislature is increased. The Legislature should remain in session longer, and our legislative sittings should become closer to the national average. Further, perhaps our work here would become more relevant, and Albertans would benefit with better legislation.

The processes our Legislature operates under are solid, but they take time to work. Bills need time to be debated, and the opposition will win some and will lose some. We'll lose many more than we ever win, but at the end of the day the more debate we have, the better the end product will be. Debate is not a bad word. Debate about the pros and cons and the heretofores and the what-fors of a bill isn't wasted time. More debate will make for better bills and better government. At the very least, by having us, the people's elected representatives, spend more time in the Legislature, it would improve the public perception of what, in fact, we do for a living. This in itself would be a step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Jackie Parker Recreation Area

Mr. Benito: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's future prosperity relies on its strong communities, and I am glad to be part of a government that is investing in our neighbourhoods. On October 30 I had the pleasure of helping to announce joint federal-provincial funding for an important recreation project in my constituency, the Jackie Parker recreation area, named for the former Edmonton Eskimos football legend. It was already a very popular winter outdoor site, with a skating surface, hockey rink, and toboggan hills to give local residents a recreation outlet during the frigid winter months, but thanks to a $500,000 investment from the Alberta government, the Jackie Parker recreation site will now be just as popular in the summer. The funding will help construct a unique spray park and playground, which will bring together families and children in the Woodvale neighbourhood to enjoy good company and warm weather.

I'd like to recognize the tremendous efforts of the Mill Woods Cultural and Recreation Facility Association, the Mill Woods Lions Club, and the Woodvale Community League in working together on this project. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of grassroots community support was needed to get this project off the ground. I think it's a great example of what can be achieved when engaged citizens take an active role in improving their own neighbourhoods and communities.

Together with the support of this government I believe that there are near-limitless opportunities to invest in communities all over the province to make them safer and stronger for future generations.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Anti-Semitic Graffiti in Calgary

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the constituencies of Calgary-Lougheed, Calgary-Elbow, and Calgary-Shaw received a most unwelcome visitor. I rise today to voice my outrage on behalf of all Albertans at the anti-Semitic graffiti that was spray-painted on Jewish institutions and public and private property. I condemn these despicable acts, which took place on sacred ground.

Mr. Speaker, I join with our friends on the Calgary Jewish Community Council in the following message. These were not just acts of simple vandalism. The Calgary Police Service has labelled them as hate crimes and rightly so. The perpetrator or perpetrators planned these crimes. They identified Jewish institutions in a number of locations. They chose a vile symbol, the swastika, which is immediately identifiable with Hitler's attempt to annihilate European Jewry. They chose alarming, hateful language such as "kill Jews" and defaced the Holocaust memorial, which honours the memory of the 6 million Jews who perished during the Holocaust. These acts targeted the Jewish community, but they were also attacks against every Calgarian and Albertan since they are an affront to the very values we all hold dear: respect for difference and acceptance of diversity.

Mr. Speaker, regardless of one's ethnicity, race, religion, orientation, or creed Albertans must work together to combat racism, bigotry, and anti-Semitism. Our Alberta government sends a message to our Jewish community: you do not stand alone. We must stand up for pluralism and acceptance. As Supreme Court Justice Rosalie Abella says: the real measure of your convictions is not in what you stand for but, rather, what you stand up for.

Mr. Speaker, I stand up for our Jewish community, and I say no to hate. I urge all of our colleagues and all Albertans to do the same.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

H1N1 Influenza Pandemic Planning

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday this government could not answer a single question as to why Alberta has higher hospitalization and death rates from H1N1 when compared to the Canadian average and to other provinces. Again to the Premier: can the Premier answer whether the reason for this sad fact could be that Alberta has more people with chronic conditions that put them at risk than other provinces?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that over the past couple of days this member has raised these issues. I have had the opportunity to discuss them with our chief medical officer of health. It's been well published in media over the last couple of days. In essence, there are a number of factors that relate to some of the statistics that the Leader of the Opposition has brought forward. Probably the most compelling one is that because we have moved to one health region and one reporting system, we have very much a system now that is a next-day system versus one that's much more sporadic. There are a bunch of other reasons I can go into.

Dr. Swann: Well, that's a difficult one to understand, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister saying, essentially, that the reorganization has caused such disorganization that it can't deliver a standard vaccine program in the province of Alberta that was planned for years?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, exactly what I'm saying is that it has a better reporting process because of the one system, one area that is focused on this particular issue.

There are a number of other issues, Mr. Speaker. As an example, as the member, with his background, would probably know, the wave of H1N1 comes from west to east. Obviously, it hit the western provinces some two weeks earlier than it hit the rest of the country. There are a number of factors that are involved. It's not a simple black-and-white issue.

Dr. Swann: Again to the minister: is the minister suggesting that it had nothing to do with the way the vaccine program was rolled out, open to all Albertans instead of targeted?

Mr. Liepert: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, Albertans know that having no plan does not stop this minister of health from making rash decisions. The minister stated in his speech to the AAMD and C that Albertans need to see the cost of health care. He has also said that he has no plans in mind for raising revenues. This is of little assurance to Albertans regardless of the Premier saying that there will be no new taxes. To the minister: is your solution going to be simply delisting more services so that Albertans will realize the true cost they have to pay out of pocket rather than through their taxes?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems like this particular member – I'm not sure if he was still in the House yesterday when I answered the question of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. In essence, the question from one of the councillors in that meeting was about us removing health care premiums, which I said and Albertans believe was the right thing to do.

However, I think that as Canadians and as Albertans we have our heads in the sand if we want to continue to say that everything can continue the way it is today. We need to have the discussion, Mr. Speaker. All I talked about was having a discussion. There are no plans to do anything that these particular members are referring to.

Dr. Swann: Well, if delisting is not what the minister has in mind, then, when is the minister going to share your ideas with Albertans?

Mr. Liepert: Well, we do that every day in this House, Mr. Speaker. We do that in sessions that this member is referring to. What we're doing is talking to Albertans. I consistently hear from Albertans. What I said to the media was that Albertans consistently say to us that they don't want to see health services diminished. They want to see a more effective, efficient health care system. [interjection] We need to listen to those Albertans and not listen to these folks over here. [interjection]

The Speaker: Okay. Let's pay attention because I do think that the members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood do want to participate in the question period, but if you do it now, I won't recognize you later.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This minister purports to be aware of every dollar spent on health care in this province. Can the minister explain why Alberta Health Services, according to last year's blue book, received an additional $600 million over and above what was allocated to the former health authorities – over and above what was allocated to the former health authorities? What was the extra $600 million used for?

Mr. Liepert: Well, I'm having some trouble following the line of questioning, Mr. Speaker. My recollection is that this has all been well through the budgeting process. We debated estimates in this House. I presume what he's referring to is the additional dollars that were allocated. There was some one-time money, I recall, for transitional dollars. I'm going by memory here, but I know we've had those discussions not only in estimates but, I believe, in Public Accounts.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Long-term Electricity Contracts

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta consumers use electricity every minute of every day; therefore, an electricity system that is simple, clear, and predictable is the system that's in their best interests and the system they want. What they've got, however, is this government's deregulated dog's breakfast, with its 80 per cent deregulated rate structure today moving to 100 per cent price deregulation in a few months' time. They have to make a choice: do I go with ever-increasing price uncertainty, or do I lock into a contract and overpay over the long term? To the Premier: does the Premier think this is the system that's in consumers' best interests?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, if we look at all of the new generation that has been added in Alberta over the last number of years – generation coming from green energy, the most per capita kilowatts from wind, and we're now into biomass and will continue to build that availability of electricity generated from biomass – yes, it is in the best interests of the consumer because we not only have affordable energy, but we also have reliable. That's what the hon. member forgot to mention in his opening remarks.

Mr. Taylor: The Minister of Energy said yesterday that he thinks long-term electricity contracts, with their huge penalties for pulling out early, are a bad deal and that he wouldn't sign one even though – even though – this government has been promoting them as a good option for consumers in the past. To the Premier: where's consumer choice now?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, one thing that we won't do in this province, as I've seen happening in some other jurisdictions, is that when new generation is added, especially from wind and solar, the actual costs are delayed by a number of years, covered through borrowing money through a Crown corporation. In this province we pay for the electricity we consume now at the end of the month. We don't ask the next generation to pay for the costs of the electricity that we use today. That's not the Alberta way.

Mr. Taylor: This is not only about who's paying what, when. It's also about who's overpaying, Mr. Speaker.

To the Minister of Service Alberta: as the minister responsible for the Utilities Consumer Advocate, will the UCA now properly advise consumers that most long-term electricity contracts are bad deals? To do otherwise would imply that the Minister of Energy doesn't know what he's talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, there are many energy marketing providers out there, and the consumer has incredible choice as to what they need to do and what serves them best. With respect to the exit fees that go out, the consumer can make the best choice. As I mentioned previously, the UCA has a tremendous website that you can look at on a day-to-day basis and see what they're offering. So it's the consumer making the best choice they need to make for their family and their needs.

The Speaker: If you're ready, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Health Care Funding

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier continues to promote the billion dollar cut to health care, yet at the same time he's handing a $2 billion windfall to oil and gas companies to develop carbon capture and storage. I've got an idea where he could find the money for health care, and he wouldn't have to lay off a single nurse, close a single bed, or delist a single service.

Three guesses, Mr. Premier. Why is the Premier sacrificing our health care system to subsidize technology that industry should be paying for?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, the member is wrong. Last year the budget for health care was increased by $550 million. That is not a reduction in the budget. That was an addition: $550 million. The budgets are being discussed today. We know the pressures on health, and there'll be another increase. I don't know how large it's going to be, but it'll be a positive, not any of these cuts that the NDP are talking about erroneously and trying to, you know, create this scare in the public that the government is cutting back on dollars going to the health department. That is absolutely wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, apparently the Premier has forgotten about closing Alberta Hospital, closing beds, a hiring freeze on nurses, you know, and he has forgotten about a billion dollar deficit. This carbon capture scheme would be a joke if it weren't costing taxpayers $2 billion. You can line that up with the $14 billion that Albertans are going to have to pay for power lines they don't need, and it's clear that the priorities of this government are seriously wrong. The lucky winners are celebrating in their boardrooms with champagne and caviar while Albertans wait in hospital hallways for days without help. Instead of cutting nursing jobs and closing hospital beds, why doesn't the Premier scrap carbon capture and use the money to fund health care?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm glad he stopped to take a breath. We won't have to phone first aid.

Mr. Speaker, in all honesty, we have to ensure as Albertans that we protect our markets. We've seen the latest criticism just today from another Premier, from Ontario. We've seen criticism by an ex-American official that wants to put, of course, the oil sands to bed, to just shut them down. We have to do whatever we can to protect our markets. We have to realize that we export about $90 billion worth of resources out of this province. Those people that are exporting those resources pay royalties. They also pay taxes to the government, which, in turn, we spend on health care and education.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the connection between carbon capture and storage and what the Premier just talked about I think eludes most people. Enhance Energy just won a $500 million lottery paid for by people this government clearly doesn't care about: people lying on gurneys in hospital hallways, nurses who can't get jobs, seniors who can't get long-term care, and the mentally ill, whose hospital is being closed by this government. Why won't the Premier admit the obvious, that he cares more for the profits of oil and gas corporations than he does for Albertans trapped in an underfunded health care system?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, here's another flip-flop. At the beginning of the week he was supporting the oil sands; today he wants to shut them down once again. But, you know, let's just set that aside.

Here's the thing that is going to happen. The $2 billion that we are investing in carbon capture: a lot of it is going back into establishing pipelines to recover more of the resources that are already in the ground. When we drill oil and gas wells, we extract maybe 15 to 20 per cent of that resource. The other 80 per cent is still in the formation. By using CO₂, we can extract more of the resources using the very same road and the very same well site that was established a number of years ago. So we'll see a tremendous return on the original $2 billion investment, and that, again, will go back to our children for health care and education.

The Speaker: Was there a point of order raised there, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood?

Mr. Mason: Absolutely.

The Speaker: Okay. We'll deal with the point of order at the conclusion of question period.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I read over the weekend in one my weekly newspapers that the municipality of Hinton is disappointed in how the province is directing funds to fight the mountain pine beetle. It argues that the beetle can't be beaten. It argues that money should be spent preparing communities for life after beetles, not on eliminating today's threat. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. I and many of my colleagues in the forest industry think it's vital to continue the war on beetles. Can he tell us what his department is doing to protect the 38,000 jobs that depend on the forest industry?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the Member for West Yellowhead is absolutely right: now is not the time to give up on the fight against the beetle. I'm happy to report that we're not. Last weekend we were able to announce an additional $15 million to deal with beetle control for the remainder of this year. That money was matched by the federal government: $10 million. I'd like to acknowledge the good work of the federal MP for Yellowhead, Rob Merrifield, who helped get that assistance. So we have an additional $25 million to continue the fight against the spread of the beetle in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can the minister explain what additional funds and what programs will actually be put in place to fight the beetle infestation?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, that money will be directed where we get the best bang for the buck, and I'm not talking about the deer hunting season. These dollars will be directed to areas where there's the greatest potential to limit the spread of beetles. This means that in light of the summer inflight from British Columbia, which has pushed the leading edge into the Whitecourt-Slave Lake area, our control action will be focused on that area, the leading edge. Behind the leading edge, however, there will still be control action, focusing on salvage, regeneration, and wildfire control. There is money for that, again, a joint federal-provincial program. These are two different programs, two different ways of dealing with beetles, but they have the same objective, which is healthy, sustainable forests.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. What assurances do we have that the control program is not just throwing good money after bad and would be ultimately effective?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, we know that our control methods are working. The hon. member from Grande Prairie took me on a tour in August. We looked at areas where we had control and where we didn't. The difference was obvious. Our control methods do work. This is not a surprise. We've been advised by our counterparts in British Columbia, by the leading scientist from the Canadian Forest Service that Alberta is in the position where the infestation is small enough that management can be effective. If you want to see the alternative, go to British Columbia, where they said, "Let nature take its course," and they did nothing. The result is that they've lost 50 per cent of their pine forest. A young person growing up in the interior of British Columbia today may not see a mature pine forest until he is collecting old age security. We're not prepared to allow that to happen in Alberta. Doing nothing is not an option.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

New Home Construction and Inspection

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a response to concerns raised yesterday by senior citizens from Stony Plain, the Minister of Municipal Affairs said that he has consulted with the stakeholders on a review of residential construction practices. His department's annual report and the website list those stakeholders as industry, warranty companies, municipalities, builders associations, and the Safety Codes Council. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why is the Minister of Municipal Affairs excluding home and condo owners from a review that is supposed to protect home and condo owners?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the hon. member that I do not believe that we are excluding anybody. Yesterday there was a question that was brought forward by the hon. member opposite asking if I would meet with the members from Stony Plain. I'd be very glad to meet with those individuals. They did bring forward a proposal to my ministry at the time that we were initially looking at the information, the gathering of information. We did use the information that they presented to us and have used it in our discussions.

Mr. Kang: To the same minister again. This review has been bottled up for over a year, and you have given no indication that you intend to release the results any time soon. How many more senior citizens will be hurt by poor construction practices before you take any action, sir?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did ask my parliamentary assistant to do a review. He did that. He did provide a paper to me. We are meeting with a number of ministries that are involved, and it is going through the government process at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now to the Minister of Service Alberta. While Albertans wait for this government to release its recommendations, homeowners need protection now. Will the Minister of Service Alberta finally start cracking down on shoddy home builders by enforcing consumer protection legislation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, working with the Minister of Municipal Affairs is very important on this as it relates to the Condominium Property Act. As I said yesterday, I'm receiving a number of letters on many issues that people are facing, and they're very serious issues. We want to make sure that we can address all the issues so that when we come forward with help or what needs to be done, we're on the right track. That means working in conjunction with the minister, with the building codes as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Chateau Estates Access Road

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For over a year I've been advocating for a connector road between 84th Street and 100th Street N.E. to help alleviate access issues for my constituents of Chateau Estates. After much effort the land was acquired, and a commitment was made to my constituents to build this road. Can the Minister of Transportation explain why this road hasn't been built yet?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that this hon. member's constituents are very, very lucky to have such a hard-working, strong MLA pushing their strong issue. I will say that that road will be built. There's an issue, though, right now with gas pipelines that cross the road alignment, and we're dealing with that. My officials are working with the pipeline companies to modify the pipeline crossings so that we can get going on the road that the member is talking about. The road will be built.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm glad that the minister's department is working on this connector road, that I've championed for the last year.

Can the minister please tell me why the issues with the gas companies were not addressed prior to making the announcement?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did meet with some of the residents and the businesses. We know that this access road is a very important part of the ring road. When we began the design of the road, we realized that our standard practice for crossing the pipelines would not apply in this case. This is a safety issue. We had to alter our plans, and this caused a bit of a delay, I must admit. However, I want to emphasize to this hon. member – and he's been there lobbying every day for his constituents – that we'll get this road built as soon as we can.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhullar: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister, for your enthusiastic support of this project. Would you have any idea as to when the project can be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure this member and his constituents that this government is addressing their access concerns. I've got to say that I can't give them an exact date because that's what gets people into trouble. I told this hon. member before, and then there were some issues that came up, and it created a problem.

All I can say is that we're going to get at it as fast as we can, and hopefully we'll get it built in 2010.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Water Allocation

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's water market is about to get a whole lot bigger. Right now water is free for existing licence holders, but they can and have sold some of that water back to municipalities and to the province for huge profits. Instead of fixing this system, the government is making it easier and cheaper to sell water rights by weakening environmental regulations. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why is the minister willing to spend vast amounts of taxpayer money to expand certain people's ability to sell water?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the preamble that the member brought forward when she suggests that we're weakening the water regulatory system. I might suggest to her that it's quite the opposite. We are in fact strengthening the system. We recognize that we have a finite resource called water, and we have growth pressures from population, from economic development. Somehow we need to balance the two. We need to ensure that those users that have water are incented to conserve that water and share that water with those users that potentially don't have water. That's what it's all about.

Ms Blakeman: There's a better solution than water markets.

Given that the senior water licence holders have first dibs on water and that the licences for environmental protection are considered junior, or back of the line, what or who will protect the environment when the rivers are at their lowest levels?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, I believe that that responsibility falls to me, and I don't say so lightly. That's a job that we have to take seriously. In the reports that we tabled yesterday, all of the groups that have provided recommendations to us have made it clear that the number one priority needs to be a process that has a conservation set-aside that ensures that we have sufficient water in the system to have a healthy aquatic ecosystem. That's job number one.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Back to the same minister: given that watering lawns has the same priority under this system as basic human needs, drinking water, and the protection of the ecosystem, why won't the minister fulfill his mandate as an Environment minister and protect Alberta's water? Shut down the water market and overhaul the system.

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, the member has just made an outstanding argument as to why it's necessary for us to establish a value for water. Clearly, watering lawns should be a conscious decision that someone makes: "Is this the priority? Is this the highest value for this water?" Frankly, today there are no incentives whatsoever for anyone to conserve water, nor are there any disincentives whatsoever for those who choose to waste water.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Hate Crimes

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2008 Alberta hate crimes report was released on November 10, 2009. More and more research is supporting strategies of creating laws that criminalize hate violence, as in the U.S., and those that include the whole society by involving civil organizations and educational institutions to build understanding and co-operation, as in Europe. Hate incidence will grow and become bigger and more difficult to solve if ignored. My question is to the Solicitor General. What is your response to the Alberta Hate Crimes Committee's recommendation on the creation of an Alberta hate crime team under your ministry to ensure a consistent and professional response to all Albertans in relation to the prevention, investigation, and prosecution of hate crimes?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that police services in Alberta do a great job keeping Albertans safe from crime, including hate crime. They will continue to actively pursue crimes of this nature. I'm pleased to confirm that police investigations into any kind of crime in Alberta, including hate crimes, all adhere to the same written standards. Investigations are handled in a consistent, professional manner by every police service in Alberta. These standards are clearly outlined in the Provincial Policing Standards Manual, which is issued under the Police Act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. The Provincial Policing Standards Manual, published by the Solicitor General and Public Security, states that the police service shall have written policy governing the investigation of hate crimes. Can the minister tell me what has been put in place to implement these standards and what performance measures are developed for the purpose of accountability?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned, the standards for investigating all crimes in Alberta, including hate crimes, are outlined in detail in the Provincial Policing Standards Manual. Under the Police Act every police service in Alberta is held accountable for complying with these standards. We conduct regular audits to ensure compliance with these standards. If these audits identify an area of noncompliance, we hold the police accountable for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you. My last supplemental is to the Minister of Justice. The Alberta report also recommended the need to educate and support communities to stand up to hate so citizens know what they can do about it and how they can support targets of hate crime. As the lead ministry for the SafeCom initiative, what can SafeCom do to address the issue of hate crime in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Redford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that hate crimes can have a devastating and long-lasting effect on communities. We saw a great example of that yesterday in the Legislature, where members of this House joined the Premier in honouring those lost during the Ukrainian famine, which was an unimaginable tragedy which unfortunately happened. We know that vandalism like the kind we've seen in Calgary, which was referred to earlier, will not be tolerated, and our special prosecutions branch works very closely with the police to ensure that we can effectively prosecute hate crime. We also, through the safe communities fund, have the safe communities innovation projects, where we would be very happy to receive submissions from the community on pieces of work that they believe need to be done with respect to community education in this regard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Agriculture Supply Management Sponsors

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Five organizations established under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act of Alberta sponsored the Progressive Conservative annual general meeting. These organizations receive provincial government funding and are subject to provincial government regulations. To the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Alberta Milk is supervised by the Agricultural Products Marketing Council, which is appointed by the government of Alberta. Did this government-appointed board make the decision to be the sponsor for the PC Party's AGM?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I endeavoured to get the message across yesterday, supply management boards do not receive operational funding from the government of Alberta. Supply management organizations' revenue comes from service charges paid for by the producer memberships. That is how the money is spent, and how that money is spent is up to their membership. It has nothing to do with the marketing council.

Ms Pastoor: Alberta Turkey Producers and Alberta Milk have just received over $660,000 in project funding from the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency. Are these the hundreds and thousands of dollars in grants that the minister referred to yesterday as "the odd grant"?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, I think it's time that maybe I talked a little a bit . . .

An Hon. Member: Pretty odd all right.

Mr. Groeneveld: Oh, agriculture again; the chickens are coming to life.

A little time to talk about the supply management thing. The supply management organization sets production quotas for producers, which limits the amount of the commodity produced. They also have the ability to set farm gate prices, which is one reason why supply management is debated at the WTO. The federal government regulates overquota tariffs to prevent import of supply-managed products from other countries. It's unfortunate that these people have to come under this questioning.

Ms Pastoor: I'm not sure that the question is what they do. I think we all understand what their mandate is as to what they do. The question was: with the government money did they sponsor political parties?

My question is: does the minister not think it prudent to stop allowing these government-regulated organizations to sponsor political events?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, what these people do with their private money is up to them. But if you can come up with some proof of wrongdoing, please present it to me. I sit right beside the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. I'll share with her this wrongdoing, and we will investigate it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Environmental Impact of Oil Sands

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Environment dismissed a report calling on the federal government to take control of the cleanup of the oil sands, claiming that this is a provincial responsibility that he didn't want the feds to address. The problem is that the province is completely failing to deal with the many environmental hazards created by oil sands activities. Will the minister acknowledge that calls for more federal action come because of years and years of his government's practice of making empty promises with no real environment protection?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. The fact of the matter is that this government stands behind its record of protecting the Athabasca River and the watersheds surrounding the Athabasca River. This is one of the most protected and regulated rivers in all of the world, and for this member to say and infer in some way that this government is doing nothing shows her total and complete lack of knowledge of what reality actually is.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm very aware of what this government is not doing to protect the environment.

Now, this minister has continuously claimed that seepage from tailings ponds is not finding its way into groundwater supplies. However, this report asserts that as far back as '97 industry itself has been regularly acknowledging ongoing groundwater contamination from tailings ponds. Even though this government has the authority to prosecute for this environmental infraction, all they did was make the oil companies promise to keep them posted about attempts to avoid this in the future. So the minister is not protecting our water supply. Why not?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, we've dealt with this issue of seepage from tailings ponds on numerous occasions in this House. The fact of the matter is that there is seepage from tailings ponds, but there's also a collection system to ensure that any contaminated water that seeps out of the bottom of the pond is captured by wells and reinjected back into the pond. Any seepage that occurs beyond that would travel at a rate, I am told, of about two metres in 50 years. Two metres straight down in 50 years.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the report says that it's getting into the groundwater and it's a problem.

Now, meanwhile, it also notes both federal and provincial reliance on a CEMA process that is stalled and has yet to establish enforceable environment protection standards. The minister doesn't want the feds to take over, but at the same time he refuses to act. The people of Alberta don't care who protects their environment; they just want it done. So the minister needs to decide: will he lead, will he follow, or will he get out of the way? Pick one. Someone has to protect the environment. Why won't you?

Mr. Renner: This minister is taking his job very responsibly. Mr. Speaker, she gave me an option. I choose to be the leader.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Government Spending Relative to GDP

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have always believed there has to be some formal way to measure when a government is spending too little money, not that that happens very much around the world, and measure when government spending is too high, which can seriously unbalance the economy. Some studies indicate that government spending should fall within a specific range of GDP, some suggestions are between 20 and 30 per cent being fine, others suggest a broader range of 15 to 35 per cent, and still others are very specific at 20 or 22 or 27 per cent. My questions are for the President of the Treasury Board. Given that numerous studies have been done to show healthy percentage ranges of GDP that government spending can and should represent, has the president considered what size or range of GDP this government's spending should be?

Mr. Snelgrove: That's an interesting question. The GDP is certainly one of the fiscal tools that we watch as a government, as business watches as to how it can reflect a healthy economy or investment in the economy. As a provincial government we have continually ranked just by any measure well within the guidelines of healthy spending of GDP. The hon. member makes a very good point. But to measure the amount of GDP from government spending, also one needs to encourage: is it borrowed money that the government is spending? Is it money from outside sources? For example, Alberta receives a negative amount from the federal government. So to compare provincially on the same equation would be very difficult with a province like Quebec, for example, that receives so much external money and borrows so much money to operate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many people of my age, my generation and younger, have approached me from all across this province with a concern. It's interesting they're not overly concerned about this downturn in the economy or how we're handling the situation, but they are concerned about the next round of surpluses, and quite frankly some of them have said that they're terrified that without proper planning new surpluses could raise expectations, could lead to new program spending increases, which could mean we aren't prepared for the next downturn. To the President of the Treasury Board: given that I and those of my generation also deeply understand the cyclical nature of our economy and that the global economy, too, has cyclical downturns, what is the minister doing to ensure that we properly prepare not for this time, not for this downturn, but for the next cycle of up and down?

The Speaker: Well, okay. Hon. minister, speculation is not part of the question period.

Mr. Snelgrove: I'm glad he's on our side.

Mr. Speaker, what we're doing besides controlling government spending is simply understanding that the most important thing we can invest in is people. In people that's knowledge; it's the research that comes with knowledge. An educated economy is the solution to growing a bigger pie. We have control over our spending in here. We don't have control over the external forces that drive our commodity prices up and down. We are blessed to have a variety of commodities to deal with, but by building more of the new commodities – the information commodity, the finance commodity – we'll be able to diversify and expand our economy because I agree with him: we don't want to do this again.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the President of the Board: will the president consider some legislative parameters that would corral and guide government spending and savings decisions without being so binding as to remove the ability of leaders to make important and timely decisions on critical and emerging issues?

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've had a discussion about where the appropriate levels of spending are set, and I'm a firm believer in the democratic process of building budgets that Albertans support, believe in, and need. As we face the changing times that we're in, it's very difficult to all of a sudden see something so clear and open that our revenues will be stable, our expenditures will be stable, and the rest of our provincial partners will also be in an area that we can go forward together. I believe you need the political will that comes from internal and not from a legislated source.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Contracted Child Services Agencies

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to those who provide services to our children and youth, there is an extreme imbalance. Individuals who are employed by contracted agencies receive a fraction of the compensation that those employed by the government do while carrying heavy workloads. To the Minister of Children and Youth Services: why does this minister continue to place greater value on some of those who work to protect children while neglecting others?

Ms Tarchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd first say that we place value on everybody in this province that serves the needs of families and kids. Agencies play a very important role in delivering our services, and I can tell you that this ministry works very close with them in terms of working through their issues. I know that we've talked in the past. I think in the last four years we've given an additional $53 million towards their staffing issues.

Mr. Chase: Contracted agencies are getting closed down or closing because they don't have the fair compensation. They cannot keep their staff. How does the minister determine when to use a contracted, not-for-profit agency? Has the use of these organizations simply become a cost-cutting measure?

Ms Tarchuk: Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. We focus on quality. We've been working really closely with our contracted agencies, taking a look at best practices internationally. We have some really exciting pilot projects that are under way right now. I can tell you that with the correspondence and the conversations I've had in the last several weeks, our contracted agencies are pretty excited about the work that's under way.

Mr. Chase: Well, I would suggest the boys and girls clubs who lost considerable programming and Bosco Homes, who have lost their beds, aren't nearly as excited as you would let on to be.

Will the minister conduct a comparative review of the contracting practices and make the findings public to ensure that those working to protect our children are fairly compensated regardless of whether they are employed by a government or a contracted agency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had mentioned yesterday that we have some really good work under way with the child intervention panel. They're taking a look at how we're organized, whether we have the capacity to deal with the issues that were being dealt with. I would suggest that if this member or anybody else in this room has any good ideas, we do have a discussion guide. I would encourage everyone here and all Albertans to take part in that review.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Municipal Franchise Fees

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise again today to address the issue of local access fees on energy bills. On November 18, 2009, the Minister of Municipal Affairs advised that an average home in Calgary had a local access fee of $12.85 compared to one in Edmonton of $3.70. It raises the question as to whether Calgary consumers are simply being ripped off. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: is this minister aware of any reason as to why Calgary consumers are paying a local access fee three times that in Edmonton?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, I'm not aware of any good reason. This is a decision that is made by the municipality, first of all, how much to charge or whether to charge at all. These fees could be used for the maintenance of a road. They could be used for other lands to access or to operate the utility. Mr. Speaker, it is up to the municipality to justify the fee to their ratepayers and explain what it's being used for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. I raised this issue before Enmax president Gary Holden at the November 4 policy field committee meeting. Again, some of my constituents are simply saying that Calgary homeowners and tenants are being ripped off. To this same minister: what is the minister prepared to do about this?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I mean, this is a local decision. The decision to implement a fee is left up to mayor and council to decide what that fee should be or if the fee should be charged.

Mr. Denis: Finally, Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for Service Alberta. I know the Utilities Consumer Advocate deals with inquiries on these types of issues. Will this minister commit to an investigation to see why Calgary local access fees are so high and if there are any more hidden fees on electricity bills, and how long will this investigation take?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned last week, it's important to note that these fees are not set by utility companies but by the municipalities. As I indicated last week, we're very happy to work with Municipal Affairs on this. I believe there needs to be a broader examination of other fees and charges on utility bills. The Utilities Consumer Advocate would certainly be willing to participate in any review process. Consumers need to ask questions, and consumers deserve to have clear and understandable bills.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Government Expenses

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under this government we've seen the size of government expand to now include 24 ministries. It's definitely bloated at a time of fiscal restraint. My first question would be to the acting Premier. Will this government commit to reducing the size of the cabinet by four ministries and save the taxpayers of this province at least $50 million?

Mr. Snelgrove: You know, there are decisions that have to be made when a government runs a province. It's that simple. So if you think that artificially reducing the size of government and turning the decision-making process over to the administration is appropriate, then we probably disagree. We represent a large, diverse province with many competing interests and many issues. I can tell you that even with the number that are here, there are days when I don't know how many of them get their job done. To listen to a lot of the questions over there – they don't have to spend a lot of time practising for those answers. Mr. Speaker, it's not how many govern; it's how you govern.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, other Conservative governments in this province have done more with less size in their cabinet.

Now, again to the acting Premier: will the government commit to cancelling the deputy ministers' retreats that occur at country clubs and other resorts and save a lot of money that way?

Mr. Snelgrove: It never ceases to amaze me. They can take the public service here, as we discussed salaries and rollbacks before, and treat them as if they're just faceless people, and then they pretend to support the union. They can talk about the deputy ministers as if they're some people who aren't completely committed to doing what's right for Albertans, that don't spend probably twice as many hours a day at work than he does. These people put their heart and soul into governing. I have a tremendous respect for our administration, and I support them.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the acting Premier: will this government stop the practice of paying lavish perks for Alberta's international envoys such as the $59,000 fee for tuition at an elite private school in Washington, DC, and also the $109,000 high-end apartment that you rent in Beijing? Cut those out and spend the money here in this province on needy people.

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, that's the difference, I guess, between us and them. We believe we have products and things to sell around the world, and we need to make sure that our story gets out, from when Murray Smith first went to Washington and opened the doors for our interests to be heard in Washington to the great job Gary Mar is doing now. I can't believe that their suggestion is: "Everybody come home. The sky is falling, and we don't want it to land over in Beijing, where half of the world's people or their markets are centred. Don't be over there trying to sell to your markets. Don't be in Washington, our biggest neighbour. Come home. Let's all suffer in misery back here without a job or without anything. As long as everybody is unhappy, we're happy."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

H1N1 Influenza Immunization for Seniors

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our efforts to combat the H1N1 virus, Alberta Health Services has been doing an excellent job in having administered vaccinations to over 700,000 Albertans. Now clinics have been opened to include all Albertans, which, unfortunately, at times may yet result in potential lineups and lengthier wait times. Seniors in my constituency have expressed concerns about having to wait in lineups and stand in the cold for any length of time to receive the H1N1 vaccinations. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister inform this House if and when seniors will be able to receive their H1N1 flu shot directly at their doctor's office?

Mr. Liepert: Well, first of all, let's be clear, Mr. Speaker: there are no lineups, so anyone – be it senior, be it junior, be it whatever – can go to just about any clinic these days and not have to worry about a lineup. I wanted to clarify that preamble.

Relative to physicians, we have communicated with physicians last week, asked them to notify Alberta Health Services if they wanted to become part of administering the vaccine program. That program is being shipped this week to those physicians and pharmacists who choose to do so. I would think that by the end of this week some of them should be able to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some doctors say that the minimum number of H1N1 doses that they must order is 500, but some doctors say that they are unable to administer in such a short time or store this large quantity due to lack of appropriately required storage. To the minister: can the minister explain why the dosage level has been set at such an unreasonable level for these physicians?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Liepert: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. What the member is referring to is how it comes from the manufacturer. If we ship smaller doses – obviously there is manpower involved to put them into smaller packages. However, what the member is referring to is when we originally asked physicians to place orders. We are working with physicians to try to ensure that they have the ability to get smaller orders.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister inform Albertans, especially seniors and including students, when the H1N1 vaccinations will be available at seniors' facilities and schools throughout the province?

Mr. Liepert: Well, with respect to seniors' facilities, Mr. Speaker, as I said, many seniors have already chosen to become vaccinated, but what we will be doing is co-ordinating over the next few weeks both the seasonal flu and the H1N1 vaccine to be administered at seniors' facilities.

Relative to schools, we do not intend in the near future to be administering the vaccine in schools. We have to remember that in order for a schoolchild to be vaccinated, we have to go through the whole process of having parental approval. You know, many school-age children have already been vaccinated because on the weekend there were three days where families with children could come and get vaccinated. I think anyone who has the opportunity or wants to take the opportunity can get vaccinated in a number of areas, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 96 questions and responses.

Thirty seconds from now we will continue with the Routine and Members' Statements.

National Housing Day

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in recognition of National Housing Day, which was celebrated on Sunday, November 22. National Housing Day was an opportunity to raise awareness of homelessness and the need for safe and affordable housing in our communities. Throughout Alberta many organizations and agencies held special events in their communities, and many people took time out of their busy schedules to come together in honour of this very special day. I was pleased to attend the National Housing Day breakfast opening Opportunity Knocks in Calgary, and my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie attended the breakfast here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, homelessness and the need for affordable housing are broad social issues. They touch each and every one of us, and we must work together to address them. Our government is working in partnership with community agencies, the private sector, and other levels of government to meet Albertans' housing needs. We know that we cannot do this alone as the need is great, great in terms of the number of people affected and the profound impact these issues have on individual lives and in our society.

Mr. Speaker, we are making a difference. Our province is leading the way nationally to resolving homelessness and increasing the supply of affordable housing. Albertans are working hard to help our most vulnerable people to ensure that the needs of their local communities are met. They bring creativity, passion, and knowledge through supporting Alberta's 10-year plan to end homelessness and to create the affordable housing that we need.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that National Housing Day is a very important day, and I would like to ask the Assembly to join me in thanking those who work tirelessly in our communities and give so much to those in need.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Anti-Semitic Graffiti in Calgary

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to state that the type of hate-filled words and symbols recently spray-painted on several Jewish institutions in my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore must never be tolerated. Why did so many people come to Canada? Freedom, opportunity, and, for many, to escape persecution.

In 1889 Jacob and Rachel Diamond became two of the first permanent Jewish settlers in what was to become Alberta 16 years later. Since then some 8,000 Jews have made Calgary their home, and many live in my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. Many residents take part in and enjoy the services of the Calgary Jewish community centre. Some are grandchildren and great-grandchildren of Jacob and Rachel Diamond, who came to this land of promise over a century ago.

This senseless act of hatred directed towards our Jewish community was not only committed against the Jewish people in Calgary-Glenmore but against all Canadians and against all our collective sense of dignity and respect for others. These despicable acts were committed against all those who come and embrace our democracy along with the freedoms and opportunity Canada has to offer.

I have spoken with members of the Calgary police and commend them for their action, commitment, and dedication to finding those responsible for these criminal acts. We need to send a strong message of deterrent to anybody who wilfully commits so heinous a crime. The defacement of the Jewish institution in our community, particularly the defacement of the Holocaust memorial, is a despicable, cowardly act. For those Jews who escaped Nazi Germany only to be confronted with similar expressions of hate, discrimination, and intolerance here is wrong, and we must condemn it. For such things to happen today, over a century after the arrival of Jacob and Rachel Diamond, is a testament to the work that still has to be done to combat hate in all its forms.

I encourage everyone to attend the rally, Calgary Says No to Hate, at 5 o'clock this Thursday at the Boyce Theatre, sponsored by the Calgary Jewish Community Council.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a petition.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I do have a petition. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly [of Alberta] to urge the Government to redevelop Alberta Hospital Edmonton as necessary in order to maintain all services, programs, and beds operating as of September 1, 2009 at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

This petition has 1,410 signatures.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to present a petition, which reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly [of Alberta] to urge the Government to redevelop Alberta Hospital Edmonton as necessary in order to maintain all services, programs, and beds operating as of September 1, 2009 at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

This petition has 985 signatures.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give oral notice of my intention to seek leave to introduce Bill 216, the Alberta Outdoors Weekend Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice of a motion to be brought at the appropriate time:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of the bill at this stage shall be put forthwith.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table three reports. The first is the RCMP's annual report for 2008-2009. As Alberta's provincial police force the RCMP play a key role in helping to promote strong and vibrant communities so Albertans feel safe.

The second report I'd like to table is the 2008-2009 Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission annual report. Mr. Speaker, during 2008-09 the AGLC continued to ensure that Alberta's liquor and gaming industries are well regulated and well managed to the benefit of all Albertans.

Finally, I'd like to table copies of the 2008-2009 Charitable Gaming in Review. Last year charitable fundraising events such as casinos, bingos, raffles, and pull tickets raised $335 million to support over 11,000 community organizations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an e-mail I received from a constituent, Samuel Hester, whose spouse is a dentistry student at the University of Alberta. The e-mail details the tuition and fees that dentistry students pay, which total $40,000 this year. Mr. Hester writes: "Not exactly what I would call affordable education. This is already a real barrier for the working class."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. I am tabling with permission correspondence I have received from the following constituents regarding the government's proposed funding cuts to public education. They urge that we do not cut funding for our schools. These constituents are, individually, Deana Valacco, Brian Alloway, Diane Brouwer, Rosa Bruno, and Janice Stefancik. I appreciate their contacting our office and, again, giving us permission.

On another matter I also have a tabling from Jo-Anne and Paul Cassidy, constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are deeply concerned by the government's plan to close acute psychiatric care beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton with only a vague promise to replace them with some kind of community treatment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have tablings on two issues today. The first set is from a number of constituents who all gave permission. They're deeply concerned by the government's plan to close acute psychiatric beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton and are concerned that there's only a vague promise to replace them with some kind of community treatment. These letters are varied, and some of them are very powerful, speaking from personal experience with mental health issues. They are from Andrea Anielski, Bruce and Gladys Loowell, Dawn Noyes, Michelle Huot, Mary Hulbert, Gwendolyn Steckly, and Cathy Falconer.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I have eight letters from individuals who have written to express their opposition to cuts to the education system. Again the letters range quite widely, and they're all expressing individual views. They are from Alex Gillis, George Newton, Teresa Krohman, Theresa Petryga, Morgan Hordal, Brenna MacDougall, and Kate McIntosh.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. First of all, I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a joint report by seven environmental organizations that shows that the federal government is failing to enforce and implement numerous laws that are in place to protect the water for tens of thousands of Canadians who live near oil sands operations. This report was referred to by my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona.

I also would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition with 1,967 names. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of the Province of Alberta, hereby petition the Minister of the Environment, to exercise his discretion to require an Environmental Impact Assessment to determine the need for and examine the effect Waste Management Inc.'s proposed Class II Landfill, located within the County of Thorhild, will have on the environment.

The Speaker: Do you have more, hon. member?

Mr. Mason: That's all I have, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a tax commentary that was given to me by an accountant in Calgary named Jay Schmidt. It's written by Dale W. Franko. It talks about Bill 53, the Professional Corporations Statutes Amendment Act, which, I understand, was passed yesterday.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we're all aware, 20 years ago our federal counterparts pledged to end child poverty by 2000. Unfortunately, that didn't take place. They have restarted a pledge as of today. At the Bissell Centre today Public Interest Alberta introduced its latest research report entitled We Must Do Better: It's Time to Make Alberta Poverty-Free.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, again has to do with poverty issues. The Calgary Drop-In & Rehab Centre has been helping thousands of Calgarians with issues of poverty. This is their winter and spring 2009 Connection report celebrating 48 years of service.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period I asked a series of questions about the expenditure of government money, $2 billion, on carbon capture and storage. In his response to my second supplemental question the Premier once again told the House that I was not supportive of Alberta's oil sands. He suggested that we wanted to shut them down. There was nothing with respect to shutting down the oil sands in anything in my questions or the preambles.

Mr. Speaker, this has been the subject of a previous point of order in which I suggested that the Premier was not telling the truth and was subject, and rightly so, to a point of order and a ruling from yourself with respect to unparliamentary language with regard to that untrue statement by the Premier. In the end I was forced, reluctantly, to apologize for using that language.

Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 23, member called to order,

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member; [and]
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder; is the one which I would like to quote but particularly focus on "(i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." This has been a repeated transgression, in my view, on the part of the Premier, and notwithstanding the issue that was raised the last time he did that, he has continued to make that statement even though he knows that it is not true.

Under Beauchesne's 494 it says: "It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted." Now, Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly corrected the Premier, at first politely but with increasing concern that he continues to ignore the statements that I have made, that his claims about me or my party wishing to shut down the oil sands are false.

In the end it was I who ended up apologizing to the Premier, but I would really like it if the Premier, if you find in my favour, would actually show the courtesy and respect that befits his office and come into this Assembly and apologize for what he has done.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know what to do about this. I appeal to you to end this practice of the Premier to impute false or unavowed motives to me because, obviously, the Premier is not going to stop doing that in this House until we get a clear ruling from the chair, which is what I respectfully request.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the Blues at hand, so I don't have the exact comments which the Premier made, but I was listening quite carefully. I believe what the Premier said during the exchange with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood is something to the effect that this member is presenting yet another flip-flop. I remembered those words, so I went tracking through the books that I have on this to see if, in fact, the term "flip-flop" had been ruled parliamentary or unparliamentary. If we look under sections 489 and 490 of Beauchesne, you will see that "flip-flop" does not appear in either of those two categories. In other words, it's never an issue.

But I take it that that's partly at issue with what the hon. member is raising. Mr. Speaker, in this House, as we all know, there is often a difference of opinion. In fact, it's the normal fare of the day to have a difference of opinion in here, and we have the right to express it. There are disagreements that are very common, and that's exactly what you see here today. I think it's an issue of consistency, however, that is being driven at here. Sometimes members such as the one who has just spoken support various projects and various initiatives because of the employment opportunities they create, because of the economic benefits they create, because of revenues to the province, and whatever. And then on another occasion you'll hear the very same member talking about the very same issue negatively; in other words, not supporting it.

Now, whether the exact words somewhere in the member's repertoire included "shutting down the oil sands" or not, that is, to me, not the issue. The issue is that the tone of the questions that have come from this hon. member to the Premier and to other members of the bench in front here have often suggested non-support for oil sands and for oil sands activities, oil sands projects, and so on. That is what is at the heart of the issue here today, in my mind. It's a question of the tone that gets used in question period by the member who just spoke.

I would cite for you examples where this member who has raised the point of order has spoken out about health care and has said, for whatever his reasons might be, that we on this side of the House are somehow privatizing health care. There's no evidence of that, and clearly that's not what we're doing, but he keeps raising it. We sit, and we listen, and we let it go. If I were to stand and raise a point of order every time that I thought this member or some of the other members imputed a false or unavowed motive, Mr. Speaker, I or one of the other House leaders would be on our feet constantly, but we put up with it, and we just let it go. We have that similar sort of disagreement here.

Mr. Speaker, I would understand that today's exchange which is the subject of this point of order did not violate any rules of this House, did not violate any rules of our standing orders nor of any parliamentary tradition. I would argue that there was no imputation of a false or unavowed motive, that there was no malice in what the Premier said, that there was no loss of decorum in this House, that there was no significant interruption other than the member politely rising to his feet to say: I have a point of order. I would therefore ask that the Speaker consider these facts and find that, in fact, there was no point of order, but I will await your decision, of course.

Under 486 of Beauchesne it's very clear that tone and manner are important in this House. Under 486 of Beauchesne it clearly says:

It is impossible to lay down any specific rules in regard to injurious reflections uttered in debate against particular Members, or to declare beforehand what expressions are or are not contrary to order; much depends upon the tone and manner, and intention, of the person speaking.

And it goes on. I would suggest to you that the Premier's tone was very controlled, very matter of fact and dignified and polite and, ultimately, quite accurate. I would ask that the House consider that.

Mr. Speaker, I'll await your ruling.

The Speaker: Are there any others who would choose to participate? Well, then the chair will deal with the matter. First of all, to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, in your comments you referred to an event of some weeks ago that I need to clarify. The hon. member stated that he was forced to apologize. As I recall, I was the person in the chair. As I recall, I think on five occasions I basically gave the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood an opportunity, invited him to apologize. Invited him to apologize.

The member was in fact named, but the chair, because of his soft nature, chose not to bring to the House the results of a vote that would have evicted the member from the Assembly. If the member would have been evicted from the Assembly, the only way that the member could have ever returned to the Assembly would have been to come back to the Assembly and to have apologized. That, perhaps, might have followed the definition of the words "forced to apologize." My understanding of that, going back there, was that, in fact, "force" is probably the last word that the hon. member might have used on that occasion to describe what certainly was an opportunity given on five occasions to the hon. member to in fact do the right thing.

It was important to clarify the history because it basically leads to the use of words in this Assembly. Today was no different than some other days. There was no doubt at all that what was said by the Premier was said. The chair heard it, but what was said? Here's the Premier: "Mr. Speaker, here's another flip-flop. At the beginning of the week he was supporting the oil sands; today he wants to shut them down once again. You know, let's just set that aside." So it went, like, bang.

It is also very, very important that when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood quoted from Beauchesne 494, he quoted the first sentence of the section but didn't the next two sentences of the section. So let me quote what 494 says.

It has been formally ruled by Speakers that statements by Members respecting themselves and particularly within their own knowledge must be accepted.

And everybody agrees to that, absolutely, but here's the next couple of sentences.

It is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible. On rare occasions this may result in the House having to accept two contradictory accounts of the same incident.

So the chair basically has heard the arguments back and forth, and the Deputy Government House Leader certainly did point out the arguments with respect to tone and disreputation of the House and all the rest of that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood certainly has been given the opportunity today to clarify for the record his position on this matter, to basically point out that he thinks that the Premier in this case, the person who was responding, was incorrect in making certain statements. Whether or not the Premier believes he's incorrect is quite secondary to the fact because if he believes he is correct and we have to accept two different versions of the same incident from two different members on the same day, then both members basically have the right to do this.

So I accept that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood had an opportunity to rise in the House to clarify his position with respect to this matter. We've heard the arguments, and these points of order should not be used as advice to carry on debate. So we're now going to end this, and we're going to move forward.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Cao in the chair]

The Chair: The chair would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 60

Health Professions Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments? The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 60, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2009. The Health Professions Act provides the legislative structure that supports the regulation of health professionals by their health professional government bodies. Bill 60 amendments will keep the regulatory environment current. The amendments in the bill are routine amendments that have been requested by the colleges and reflect the evolution of the Health Professions Act.

There are two categories of amendments in the bill. First, the bill will amend the practice statements of three health professions. The practice statements contained in each profession schedule identify the activities that are subject to the regulatory control of the college. The colleges of acupuncturists, dentistry, and midwifery have requested that their professional practice statements be expanded to include teaching, management, and conducting research. The practice statements of other health professions under the act already include these activities. In response, Bill 60 will amend the practice statements for acupuncturists, dentists, and midwives. These amendments will allow their respective colleges to regulate the practice of members who are engaged in teaching, management, and research.

Second, the Health Professions Act reserves certain titles for each profession. This bill updates the titles reserved by three health professions. A reserved title may only be used by a qualified and registered health professional. For example, the Alberta College of Paramedics is developing in its regulations under the Health Professions Act the titles paramedic, primary care paramedic, and critical care paramedic, and several other provisional titles are to be added to the list of reserved titles for this profession.

The College of Pharmacists has begun the process to amend its professional regulation to accommodate pharmacy technicians as regulated members. The college has told government that the titles pharmacy technician students and professionally registered pharmacy technicians are required. The bill will also amend the title of schedule 19 to include pharmacy technician. This will clarify that the Alberta College of Pharmacists regulates both pharmacists and pharmacy technicians.

Lastly, Bill 60 will update the titles reserved for registered nurses in schedule 24 to include graduate nurse and graduate nurse practitioner.

The respective colleges for these health professions have either requested or have been consulted on these changes and support them. Mr. Chair, this bill demonstrates our recognition of the important role health professions have in our health system. It also supports this government's continued work with the governing colleges to ensure the legislation meets their needs. I ask the House to support Bill 60, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2009, and to move this bill to the next stage.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak in support of this legislation. I spoke to it briefly in second reading. I just want to reflect on a few things in committee while we're considering the legislation in really great detail here. The hon. Member for Strathcona has explained the bill quite well. I think that this bill reflects the ongoing changes that our health care delivery culture is going through in Canada and in Alberta and probably across the western world. I clearly remember, oh, probably three decades ago, when acupuncture was seen as some weird kind of oriental medical procedure that may or may not be helpful; likewise, other things like massage therapy. Over the last 25 or 30 years things like acupuncture and massage have moved into the mainstream of the health care delivery system and, in fact, are in many ways very helpful in keeping people out of hospitals and off of drugs and keeping people functioning well.

But, clearly, as that has occurred, the public needs to understand, when they're going to somebody: are they just hanging up a shingle to claim they are a massage specialist, or are they actually trained, and what are their standards? Likewise with acupuncture: what's the training; how can I be confident in the people I'm going to provide health services to me?

This bill does take some steps that will protect the public and will ensure proper standards are met in a broadening or broader range of health professions. I think it's also important that this legislation acknowledges that some of these people may well be engaged in research and other activities and that that's legitimate and appropriate, but it also needs to have some oversight. So I think we will probably continue to see the Health Professions Act come back to this Legislature as the years progress and other forms of health care move more from the fringes to the mainstream and demonstrate that they are actually supported by good science, good evidence, and that there does need to be some public protection around them.

I won't go into the details beyond that. The Member for Strathcona made a list of that, and it's readily available, but I did want to say that I think this is a step in the right direction for a stronger, more comprehensive health care delivery system in this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you very much. Just two points that I wanted to raise in connection with Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 60, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2009. The first is noting the expanded practice scope for midwives and how delighted I am to see the continuing progression of this profession in being able to have its services readily available to Alberta women and their families. My association with this goes back to 1989 with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues and the recommendation that that council made to, in fact, this government that midwives be recognized as a profession, which indeed we see here; that they be registered; that there be a professional scope of practice that would be recognized, and in fact that's happened; and thirdly, that their costs be covered under health care, and that has happened recently. So it's a pretty exciting time there, and I'm pleased to see the ability to "teach, manage and conduct research in the science, techniques and practice of midwifery" added into their scope of practice.

The second thing that I noticed was the concept of a technician level being added under the pharmacy section. I'm aware of a condition that we created in the Health Professions Act some time ago that we were not able to address in a satisfactory manner. It's coming back before this House again currently in the form of some petitions that members have been presenting to the House on behalf of constituents, and that is the profession of massage therapy. What we have in that profession is, essentially, two levels. One is a massage therapist, who has spent a considerable amount of time in training and also in a practicum situation. They've put in – and I'm sorry; I don't remember the exact number of hours – thousands of hours, let's say 2,000 hours, of practice.

Mr. Liepert: Twenty-two hundred.

Ms Blakeman: Twenty-two hundred is the higher level? Okay.

Then there's a secondary level of people offering massage services. It's what I tend to refer to as sort of the EvelineCharles spas or the spas that you find at the Westin or the hotels, which is sort of a relaxation massage, and those that were able to offer those services and charge for them, in fact, had taken a lesser amount of training.

So we had two levels, and when the Health Professions Act came before us to look at massage, we only accepted the upper level. Now, of course, you have the petitions from members saying that we need to be able to grandfather in all the people that did the secondary level of training and soon will not be able to charge for their services because that's what all of this professional oversight is about. You know, once you're accepted as a profession, you can hang out your shingle, and people know that there's a certain amount of training and practice that lies behind that, and they can trust in that. It's a protection device that the government offers.

The issue that has come to me repeatedly, partly because I'm the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, is that we have a number of people who are working in the sex trades who have trained and qualified in that secondary level of training for massage, and therefore they're absolutely certified. It's not allowing the municipalities to be able to distinguish in any way when they are trying to restrict or rezone massage parlours or people that are offering massage services as a loss leader to bring customers in. This is partly our fault in the provincial Legislature and partly on the doorstep of the city, but it has become a difficulty, particularly for the city people to deal with. They have no ability to distinguish, and therefore they must allow the business licence to be granted. Therefore, the businesses can start there, and they have no way of stopping them.

As we work our way through this, I'm hoping that we can be alive to the situation that we've created and hopefully address it in a way that will be helpful for those that are trying to plan their communities and to the city officials that are trying to have some control over and assist those people in doing that.

Thanks for the opportunity to just put that little nudge on the table, and again thank you for the expanded scope for the practice of midwifery. We are all very excited about having that available to us in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Yeah. Mr. Chair, I'd just ask that you call the question.

The Chair: Seeing no other member wishing to speak on the bill, the chair shall now call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 60 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 62

Emergency Health Services Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the chance here to make some comments. This bill has had an interesting though brief life in our caucus. When it was first tabled, I think last week, I looked through it quickly – it's quite brief – and thought: well, this will be a good bill to support. I believe it was the minister of health whose assistant actually briefed one of our researchers on this bill, and I think that's a gesture to acknowledge.

There was a bit of debate within our caucus, and this is, I suppose, the value of debate. The Member for Edmonton-Centre was more skeptical than I was. As the lead critic for this I was initially going to say: well, let's support it. What tipped me to express concerns was a ruling that came out from the FOIP commissioner, and that ruling happened to be fairly consistent with the views of the Member for Edmonton-Centre. So she won the debate, as she often does in our caucus. I'm sure that won't be a surprise to anybody here.

We are actually not going to support this legislation, and I think there is a principle at stake as well as some specifics. The principle is one of taking the advice of our legislative officers very, very seriously. When the FOIP commissioner or, for that matter, the Auditor General or the Chief Electoral Officer or the Ombudsman or the Ethics Commissioner gives advice or makes rulings, I think this Legislative Assembly needs to listen very, very carefully. It is that principle that drives my withdrawing support for this bill. I think it's important to stand by that principle because it's not just in this case, but it's with the Auditor General's report, that in principle it's too often ignored, and the Chief Electoral Officer's reports are too often ignored. I just feel that's a bad habit that we've formed in this Legislature.

Now, moving to specifics, since we are in committee, section 3, I guess, of this bill moves an amendment to section 40 of the original legislation, and it effectively overrides two very important pieces of legislation, the Health Information Act and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to briefly refer to and, in fact, quote the comments from the Information and Privacy Commissioner, whose name is Frank Work. On November 20 his office issued a release. The title is Emergency Health Services Amendment Act Raises Concerns. In the second paragraph the commissioner says, "This law goes too far and strips away oversight of decisions made to disclose the information to police." He goes on in the next paragraph and says, "I have heard law enforcement people say that there are 'many' examples of how privacy laws 'adversely' affect investigations into 'serious' crimes." This is not evidence. Then he adds – and I'm putting the quotes in so people will know that I'm using the commissioner's words – "This bill may leave ambulance attendants wondering what their priorities should be . . . treating victims or gathering evidence for police."

Then the commissioner says that he is very concerned that the bill trumps both the Health Information Act and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. In fact, the bill is absolutely clear, if we pass it, that notwithstanding what is in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act or in the Health Information Act, a whole bunch of things can occur. Really, this legislation is yet one more example of those two very important acts being overridden.

What the commissioner finally says at the end of this release is again a quote. "Government appears to be subjecting privacy laws to death by a thousand cuts by removing accountability safeguards with respect to disclosure of patient information."

Mr. Chairman, I think we should be paying careful attention to the comments of the commissioner. I understand – and this comes up over and over – that sometimes FOIP provisions and Health Information Act provisions can be really frustrating, and sometimes they can even get in the way of good sense and common sense, but we need to be exceedingly careful as a Legislature not to just willy-nilly begin whacking away and compromising the safeguards that are in those two bills. If I understand the work of the commissioner correctly, there is nothing in existing legislation that doesn't allow for ambulance attendants to co-operate with police and do things like that.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to get those concerns on record and again repeat, first of all, that the principle of respecting the advice from legislative officers I think is enormously important to respect, and secondly, I think we need to be very, very reluctant in this Assembly to override the safeguards of two fundamental pieces of legislation. Because of those reasons I will not be supporting Bill 62.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Ms Redford: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm pleased to rise today as Minister of Justice and Attorney General to speak to this very important amendment. My primary concern in this province has to be that justice is done and that criminals are held responsible for their crimes, and anything that interferes with that is of serious concern to me. Sound police investigations are essential to our ability to prosecute criminals, but they're also essential to something else, and that is the ability to resolve these investigations to support effective prosecutions so that victims can have confidence in the justice system. We have to make sure that victims have enough confidence in the system and that the community has enough confidence in the system to know that investigations will take place, that prosecutions can be effective, and victims can get on with their lives.

It struck me yesterday, when I was listening to some comments around this, that there seems to be a bit of a presumption that this would be some inappropriate power that would somehow allow the police to compel paramedics to provide information. This clearly sets out a framework where paramedics will continue to do their jobs in very confusing situations, but when they are asked a question, they will be able to make a decision to share information that may assist in an investigation without having the suggested penalty of a $50,000 fine hanging over their head. That, I think, is fundamental to why we need to address this situation.

Bill 62 reflects the option that has been chosen by the parties that are involved in this who have identified this concern: Alberta Justice, Alberta Health Services, the Department of Health and Wellness, and the Solicitor General and Public Security. Alberta Justice has worked closely with Alberta Health and Wellness to ensure that Bill 62 reflects the realities on the ground and the needs of the justice system while protecting health information privacy. It ensures that police have the opportunity to investigate serious crime by clarifying for ambulance attendants what information they can disclose to police at an incident. I've had the opportunity to speak to police and prosecutors across this province about this in the last month, and it's clear that there is an issue and there is a barrier to effective investigation that we must overcome.

Some of the most complex cases for police to investigate and for the Crown to prosecute are gang violence, both in terms of investigating people that are committing violence associated with gangs and investigating so that we are able to prosecute people who have created victims of gang violence. We can't afford to throw up additional roadblocks for law enforcement. It would be an unacceptable situation to have delays, compromised crime scenes, or a loss of evidence because these barriers do not allow for information to be disclosed to police.

Our police officers deserve every tool possible to do their jobs effectively, and just as we've talked about in this Legislature before with respect to other legislation, we have a justice system that has checks and balances. All of that is still there. Police and emergency health workers are front-line support. They're front-line responders. They have to make quick decisions under tremendous pressure. Bill 62 helps them to do their job. It makes it clear what information they can disclose to police at the scene of an incident. These amendments set out very specifically what can be included, and that, I presume, will become an important part of the training that emergency medical workers will have before they go out into the field.

In order to strike a balance between the protection of patient privacy and the larger goal of safe communities, EMS personnel must be able to provide the police with the information necessary to conduct an investigation. We've had discussions with EMS about this. Their concern was that it still had to be within their discretion. That is preserved in this legislation.

Without this critical information police will not be able to investigate some crimes, we will not have effective prosecutions, and we will not be able to prosecute offenders of those often very serious crimes. Our first concern should always be that criminals are brought to justice, that people can have confidence in the emergency service system, the first responders system, and the justice system, and that our communities are safe.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Well, yes, it was me that raised concerns about this bill. There were two sections in particular that flagged it for me. The first was, as a number of people have already noticed, section 3, which is amending section 40 in the Emergency Health Services Act, which basically overrides the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Health Information Act. As soon as I see that in another piece of legislation, the warning bells go off for me.

The second thing that flagged it is the list of information that an ambulance attendant may disclose to a peace officer. It starts with the name of a patient or another individual, the date of birth, and then information about the nature of the injury. And that was enough for me. I did, of course, read through the rest of the list, but that was enough for me because that is where you have personally identifying health information. You can tell who this is about.

When that information is disclosed – it's given from one person to another person about a third person – that third person should have the ability to have all of the protections and processes that have been built into the Health Information Act available to them. What this act does is take those away or take some of them away. Granted, the person may not be conscious, and therefore, you know, they may not be able to give permission to disclose personal health information about them between a second party and a third party. In some other instances outside the scope of this act that would be the end of it. Nobody is going to talk about that information. But it also includes some other processes about that individual's ability to go and find out what was said, to correct information about what was said, et cetera, et cetera. By overriding the act that gives them those processes and those protections, you've now taken that away from those individuals. That's when I go: no, no, no.

The minister talked about how there are checks and balances in the justice system and none of those have been taken away. Well, I'll argue a bit with that because in fact we ended up with a privacy information act and a Health Information Act because those checks and balances were not there. People readily disclosed other people's personal information all over the place because they could. There were no checks and balances. So we put those checks and balances in place, and they are called the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and the Health Information Act. That's what they were. So it's not acceptable to me to then have a bill that comes in and goes: "Well, no. Sorry. We're going to skip around that. We're going to remove it." That, in effect, takes away those very checks and balances that supposedly are there. This is people's personal health information that we're talking about.

I've talked about the consent issue. I've talked about the other processes that should be available to someone that would be removed because of the overrides that are allowed here, that it goes around the oversight. I talked about processes other people – I think the Privacy Commissioner talks about that oversight that is in place.

I want to shift gears a bit here and talk about another piece of this. This is basically going to one kind of a professional and asking them to give over information that is very important to another profession. We have medical personnel, first responders in many cases. That's what we're talking about here. They are not trained investigators. You know, they don't go to school and take classes on how to collect certain kinds of information, where to keep it, how to protect it, when you hand it over, all of those things. They are not investigators. They are not corrections personnel. They are not military personnel. They are not police. They are not trained to be investigators in matters that are going to end up in a criminal court. They are medical personnel. So the argument that this information that they collect and will be asked to hand over is critical to how the justice system works just does not sit right with me.

I would tend to say that if you have situations where something will not go forward, as the Minister of Justice was saying, because this information was not collected, then I would say: figure out another way to do this. But to go to a different profession and say, "We absolutely have to have you do all of this research, this investigation, and hand over that information, and it's critical for – what's it called? – the provision of justice" seems to me to be wrong. I can't think of any other area where you would be going to one kind of a professional and saying: "We really need you to hand over information. You don't understand why it's being collected or how it's going to be used, but it's really important, and it's going to be used in a court of law, and you've got to do it and hand it over to us."

I think there's a flaw here in expecting one group of professionals to essentially do the work that another group of professionals are highly trained to do with a great deal of attention to detail and the specific manner in which they are supposed to do things. To me those two things don't go together. If it's that critical and it's got to stand up in court and you've got a whole group of people that have been trained to do this, to then say, "Well, we'll get these people to do it, too," just does not make sense to me. I think that there is another problem that needs to be addressed if we're all depending on this information.

A little in the same way that the threat of power outages is getting a little old with me as to why we have to do certain things with our electricity system – you know, every time somebody wants to get something, they threaten that if we don't do it, it'll be a power outage. It's just gotten old with me. As soon as somebody threatens me with that, it's old. I'm sorry. I'm getting to that point when somebody says: this is vital to investigation and to stopping gangs. I understand that this is a critical problem. I understand that gangs are really causing us problems in our remand centres and in our correction institutes and in our court systems. I live in Edmonton. I've listened to this stuff long enough. I can read the news. But as an average citizen I'm thinking that there's a larger problem if that is the threat that is constantly being used against me. As a legislator when people say, "This has got to happen in order for us to be able to deal with the gang problem," it's just wearing a bit thin. It may well be true. The minister may be able to get up and give me facts and figures on it, but just as somebody off the street it's wearing a bit thin.

Once again, when I look at this piece of legislation, I'm not willing to support it. I'm not willing to support it because it does not honour the purpose and intent of two pieces of legislation that we put in place to protect people's personal information. To me this looks like it's going around it because it's easier to do that than to address the problem in another way. I will not accept taking a step back from protecting people's personal information, particularly their health information, because it's easier to do that than to do something else. I just think this is one beachhead we've got to protect. We've got to take a stand here. We can't let this be eroded.

Now, you know, Mr. Chair, I'm on this side. I've got eight colleagues here and two more and then two independents. I'm not going to win this one.

Mr. Liepert: Nor should you.

Ms Blakeman: There are 70 people on the other side. They're going to win it. I don't agree with the minister of health's assertion that I shouldn't win this. I think I'm right on this one. He disagrees with me. You have more votes, and you're going to win this. I still don't think it's right that you're going to win this, but you're going to win it. That's what the 70 votes are for.

I still think it's wrong what's being done here. I think it shows a willingness to take an easy way out rather than to continue to address the complexity of this issue. It is complex, and it's not easy. That probably also means that it's expensive. I still do not see that to be a reason why we take a step back from the legislation that we've put in place and the officers that we've put in place to be standing up and protecting people's personal and private information. It's just not good enough for me. I do not see a compelling reason that's been presented from any of the other speakers that I've heard or that I read in Hansard. I don't see the compelling reason that would make me take a step back for protecting people's personal health information, so I'm not willing to support it.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chair.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I think it's important that I get up and speak because I cannot believe what I'm hearing this particular member say. First of all, the member in her remarks talked about training ambulance attendants to become investigators. That's not their job. Well, she obviously didn't read the legislation because nobody is suggesting that ambulance attendants are going to be investigators. What the legislation clearly states – and I wish she would stay because I would like to respond to some of her comments.

Mr. Mason: Well, respond a little more nicely.

Mr. Liepert: We'll see how nice you are, member.

Mr. Chairman, we have a situation here. As I've said, we are not asking for ambulance attendants to have investigative powers. Frankly, what we are doing with this legislation is maintaining the status quo. The status quo today is that ambulance attendants have always co-operated with police, ensured that police had the appropriate information to conduct an investigation. What has changed is that we have moved ambulance attendants into the health services area and, therefore, now will fall under the Health Information Act. So all we're attempting to do by this legislation is preserve the status quo, and those who always want to preserve the status quo in health care I think would welcome this.

This is not what I know. This is what the chief of police has told me, has told the Minister of Justice, and frankly has told the world through the media. I'll give the member an example. This particular member who just spoke, Mr. Chairman, is a strong advocate for battered women, for women's shelters, for women's rights, and I think that's a noble way of handling her role. I recall hearing the chief of police in Calgary give specific examples of where their investigation could not proceed because ambulance attendants were not only not able to give information, but they were not able to even call the police if they saw a situation that they believed should be investigated. And I think that's wrong. I believe all clear-thinking people in this House would think this is wrong. So to stand on her high horse here in this House and hide behind some cloak of privacy of information is just plain wrong.

I think we need to get that on the record, Mr. Chairman. I would strongly encourage all members of this House to support this legislation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be able to rise again to speak to this bill now in Committee of the Whole. I certainly appreciate the minister clarifying once again the primary rationale behind this bill in that it was basically designed to deal with the fact that these municipal employees have been moved over to Alberta Health Services and now are subject to an act which previously they were not subject to. I now get the rationale for what's driving this.

Unfortunately, I still remain concerned about what it is that this bill is purporting to do, and the reason is this. In the past we had the Health Information Act that applied to health care providers regardless of whether they were doctors or nurses or community counsellors or psychiatrists or whoever. Those health care providers were governed by the Health Information Act in terms of when and under what circumstances they released information that came to them in the course of their treatment of patients. And be clear: oftentimes those people would be treating people who hadn't necessarily come to them voluntarily but came to them in emergent situations.

For instance, a psych nurse or a psychiatrist or an emergency room doctor would have a victim of a crime brought in directly to the hospital by the police or by themselves who might just come into the hospital. Those people were still governed by the Health Information Act. They would still in that case be, effectively, the first responders. They were governed by the Health Information Act, and the Health Information Act set out certain conditions under which that information those professionals garnered as a result of their interaction with the patient could be released to the police. They were the issues around imminent danger and public safety, those kinds of issues.

To go back to the minister's statements about, you know, women who are in abusive relationships. The fact of the matter is that psych nurses and emergency room doctors and family doctors and a plethora of other health care professionals become aware of those kinds of issues and have concerns around those kinds of issues in the course of conducting their jobs as health care professionals and have for some time under the Alberta Health Services rubric or the rubric for what was previously the regional health boards. That conflict that those health care professionals had to deal with when they became aware of this kind of information, the kind of information that the health minister gave as an example, and they wanted to deal with what they believed was in the best interest of the victim or the patient and what was also the patient's desire with respect to disclosure, all of that kind of balancing was considered and debated and analyzed very extensively when the Health Information Act itself was put into place. All we've done here is moved ambulance attendants into that group of people.

Now, ambulance attendants were not previously exempted from that group of people because of some special nature in terms of the job that they do. No. They were exempted because of an historical organizational background where they happened to be municipal employees and, as a result, were exempted. That's why they were not covered by the Health Information Act before. Then the government comes along and decides, for a number of policy reasons that they've argued rather extensively, that they want the ambulance attendants to be centrally employed through Alberta Health Services and governed through the same contracts and all that kind of stuff, with essentially the same employer as with other health care professionals. There's an interesting debate on that, whether that's the best thing to do or not the best thing to do, what it does to regional sensitivity and their ability to work with other service providers, all those kinds of things. But there was ultimately a decision made that they needed to come together and work as part of a seamless group of health care professionals.

Well, if you're working as part of a seamless group of health care professionals, why would you not have these people subject to the same rules and regulations that you had previously decided, after some great deal of research and consideration, needed to be subject to the Health Information Act? What's the rationale? Yes, it may require a change in the way they do business, but presumably the Health Information Act was already designed to deal with these kinds of issues, the kinds of examples that the health minister put forward to the Legislature, when they decided whether it ought to apply to nurses, psych nurses, emergency room doctors, family physicians, and any one of a number of other health care professionals who've become aware of information that may also have a bearing on a criminal investigation.

What we're doing, for whatever reasons, is sort of a very quick response. We've brought these ambulance workers into Alberta Health Services, and suddenly we went: "Oh, well. This is something we haven't thought about. This is creating a bit of a problem. Oh, well. Let's just change the legislation." But then we get into the issue of the fact that an officer of this Legislature, the Privacy Commissioner, has clearly identified to this Legislature that he has concerns around the implications of this decision for the privacy of patients. And there's good reason for that because, of course, we've also embarked on the whole electronic health information thing. At what point do we have the ambulance driver who gets to access the electronic health information and then has that in their mind when they come across a person who has been, you know, a victim of an accident or an injury or whatever, and then they have information through the system which is otherwise governed by the Health Information Act – they are not governed by the Health Information Act.

I mean, it doesn't make sense, and I don't believe that the government has really thought this through. I think this was a very reactive response to a problem that they hadn't anticipated. They haven't thought the implications through, which, of course, is the point that the Privacy Commissioner himself is making. There are larger implications to what this does to the regime of privacy protection and particularly the protection of personal health information. So that's the concern that I have.

Again, the degree to which the government fully consulted with the Privacy Commissioner on this issue is also of some concern to us because he is an officer of the Legislature, and I would assume that role would command some respect on issues like this because, certainly, it's in his mandate. We ask him to provide assessment and comment on issues like this, yet it appears as though his concerns were ignored in the course of drafting and, ultimately, introducing this legislation.

I understand that there is an issue around balancing public safety, imminent danger, the need for the police to get information against the privacy rights of patients, but I also believe that that balancing act was completed under the Health Information Act as it relates to other health care professionals. I have yet to hear any kind of compelling distinction or rationale for why ambulance attendants would be treated differently than other health care professionals. I think that there are a variety of circumstances in which other health care professionals are, for all intents and purposes, first responders, and in those cases it's believed that they can still function under the Health Information Act.

The other thing that is of concern to me is that even if, ultimately, the government were to decide to move forward with this, why is it that the patient who has had their information shared with the police has no opportunity to find out what information has been shared with the police? That's a fundamental guarantee that they would have under the Health Information Act. It would not negate the ability of the ambulance attendant and the police officer to communicate with one another. It would, at least after the fact, provide the patient with the minimal right of knowing what information about them has been disclosed without their permission to other bodies.

It's concerning to me that other elements of the Health Information Act have not been preserved for the interests of the patient in this question. Again, I believe that's because this particular piece of legislation was drafted quickly and sloppily, without full consideration of the overall consequences.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are there other hon. members wishing to speak on the bill?

Seeing none, the chair shall now call the question.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Chair: We will continue debate on amendment A1. The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise again to continue debate on government amendment A1. Having had a subamendment of mine thoroughly debated by members of the opposition benches – and I don't believe debated by anybody on the government side – yesterday, last night, and then defeated, we will continue debate on the government amendment.

If I can refer you to some of the points that I made yesterday, we think that this government amendment, while it addresses some of the concerns that have been expressed by a whole raft of Albertans, both big and small, both corporate and private, does not address some of the key problems. One of the key problems that it most assuredly does not address, does not even acknowledge, is this notion that the needs identification hearing by the Alberta Utilities Commission would be done away with in cases where high-voltage transmission lines are designated as critical transmission infrastructure.

If you turn to page 11 of Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, there is a schedule there of critical transmission infrastructure, and it spells out what the government believes or proposes to call critical transmission infrastructure, transmission infrastructure not yet built but which is of such pressing need that it must be labelled as critical transmission infrastructure and, therefore, would not be subject to this needs identification hearing. There are a number of items in here.

- 1 Two high voltage direct current transmission facilities between the Edmonton and Calgary regions, with a minimum capacity of 2000 megawatts each.

Then it gives a general description of where the government foresees or projects those two lines going.

- 2 One double circuit 500 kV alternating current transmission facility connecting to the 500 kV transmission system on the south side of the City of Edmonton and to a new substation to be built in the Gibbons-Redwater region.
- 3 A new 240 kV substation to be built in the southeast area of the City of Calgary.
- 4 Two single circuit 500 kV alternating current transmission facilities from the Edmonton region to the Fort McMurray region.

Again, Mr. Chair, it gives some general description of what the government would see as the routing, not the siting but the routing, of those two lines. I make the point that it's not the siting, because the government makes the point repeatedly whenever anybody, be they members of the opposition or members of the public at large, brings up the notion that, you know, it really is kind of critical that an independent regulatory body like the Alberta Utilities Commission weighs in on all of this, hears the evidence from all sides, and then makes an impartial independent decision based on the facts as to whether these lines are needed or not. They say, "Oh, but don't worry about that because that will all come up at the siting hearings. The siting hearings will still be there. They'll still be in place. The AUC will still preside over those. They'll still call experts. They'll still bring the historical background and the other background into it. Everything will be good. You have nothing to worry about, absolutely nothing to worry about." Well, okay.

There are a few things to worry about. One of the things to worry about is that if you look elsewhere in the bill – and it may take me a second to lay my hands on that elsewhere, but I will get to that – it defines critical transmission infrastructure on page 6 as to what could conceivably be critical transmission infrastructure. It says that it "may contain any other matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary." Essentially, Mr. Chairman, what you have here is a scenario where the AESO comes in every couple of years with a 10-year plan, with a 10-year projection of the high-voltage transmission lines that we need to build in this province to make sure that there is zero congestion anywhere in the system. There can't ever be any congestion.

As the bill reads now, I mean, you have these few pieces designated in the schedule as critical transmission infrastructure today, but there's really nothing to stop the AESO from coming to the government two years hence with their next 10-year plan and saying, "Well, you know, the next raft of stuff we want to build: now, that's critical." So everybody who thought they were going to get a needs identification hearing in front of the AUC about those lines now discovers, "No, sorry; it's not going to happen" because suddenly in the last two years they've become critical.

Well, here's the basic contradiction. In the government amendment, section B, section 2(6) is amended by adding the following after the proposed section 41.3: "Staged development of CTI [critical transmission infrastructure] referred to in Schedule." Then it goes on to spell out that, in fact, not all of this critical infrastructure would be built simultaneously. If the amendment as it reads today is adopted, the amendment would set out a staged approach to building this transmission infrastructure, which includes bringing the lines between Edmonton and Calgary up to half capacity first and full capacity later, which includes building one, then the other of the lines between Calgary and Edmonton and the lines between Edmonton and Fort McMurray.

Given the government's previous statements about how urgent all of this transmission infrastructure is, for them to now say that everything can be staggered over time suggests that, oh, maybe things aren't quite as urgent as we thought they were. Bill 50 calls this infrastructure critical. A question. If I wanted to ask a nasty question – and, Mr. Chairman, I would never want to ask a nasty question – the nasty question would be: how critical can this infrastructure be if it can be staged over some time? Why can't it just go through the regular process?

I got to thinking. I got to thinking: "Well, you know, this is a bad bill, in my opinion. The principle of this bill is bad, but part of our job as opposition MLAs is to try and make things a little less evil." We tried to make this bill a lot less evil last night by bringing in our subamendment A1, that would have removed all the offending sections in the bill and the government amendment to that bill that scrapped the regulatory process at the needs identification level so that that stayed in. I mean, I have nothing against the concept of designating critical transmission infrastructure. That's nothing more than priorities, and that's okay. But I got to thinking: well, I tried to do the right thing, and we got voted down, so now I'm going to try and take a badly flawed bill and make it a little less evil, a little less flawed.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce another subamendment, if I could, to Bill 50, to the government amendments to Bill 50, limiting the amount of critical transmission infrastructure. I will pass these to the pages to distribute, and I'll await your call to continue debate.

The Chair: We will pause for the pages to distribute the amendment.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, please proceed.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. I would like to move that amendment A1 to Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, be amended as follows.

The Chair: It is now known as SA2.

Mr. Taylor: We will now refer to it as SA2. Hon. members, you have it in front of you, and I don't think that I necessarily need to read it for you. It'll be in the record as it is, and you can read it for yourselves. Let me speak to it briefly and then, hopefully, get some debate going.

Again, I admit, Mr. Chair that I would prefer to not be bringing this subamendment in because this subamendment does not do everything that I would like a subamendment to do. We tried that before and failed on that. This subamendment merely takes a bill that I still see as fundamentally and badly flawed and tries to make it a little less so.

Essentially, section 2 is amended (a) in subsection 2(a) by striking out the proposed clause (f.1) and substituting the following:

(f.1) "critical transmission infrastructure" means a transmission facility designated under the Schedule as critical transmission infrastructure; and (b) in subsection 6 by striking out the proposed section 41.1 and in the proposed section 41.3 by striking out "and an order under section 41.1(1)."

So what does all this do? Well, what this does is limit the amount of critical transmission infrastructure to only those lines in what would be the schedule to the Electric Utilities Act, section 2(13) of Bill 50. Okay? Just what's listed in the schedule on page 11 of this bill. Well, why would we want to do that? Well, for this reason: by bringing in a government amendment that seeks to stage the development of the various pieces of transmission infrastructure that the government has designated as critical in this bill, the government is acknowledging that not all of the most critical of critical transmission infrastructure needs to be built right away, that you can do it in stages. You can do first one, then another, then another, then another. Well, if that is true – and I believe it to be – then it follows logically that the other pieces of the grid as proposed in the AESO's 10-year plan, all of which could become critical transmission infrastructure the way the bill reads now, do not need to ever be labelled as critical.

What they need to have done is that they need to be subjected to a process that gets everybody going and working in a timely and organized fashion so that when today the AESO says, "You know what? Three or four years down the road we're going to need that line from point A to point B," they start the process now, taking into consideration, doing the backdating, doing the math, how long it takes to go through the needs identification process and get approval there, then how long it takes to let the contract, to go through the siting hearings, to actually start building the thing to the point where you flip the switch and you energize the line and everything is good and Bob's your uncle, right? Whatever that period of time is, I'm sure it's very, very predictable, very easy to project that over a timeline.

I understand from conversations that I've had with the minister and conversations that I've had with other people that part of the reason we're dealing with Bill 50 right now is because that process kind of went off the rails about three or four years ago. So as much as I would far rather we just vote this whole bill down as a bad bill and start again, I realize that's not going to happen. When my subamendment was defeated last night, I realized that the wagons had been drawn into the circle, the ranks had been closed, and this thing was going through in one form or another come you-know-what or high water.

So now I'm saying, well, then, why don't we take a more logical approach to this and say: we're going to cut you some slack. For the sake of argument here we're going to say: "Okay. Let's say that the high-voltage lines between Edmonton and Calgary, the high-voltage lines between Edmonton and Fort McMurray, the lines to the Gibbons-Redwater area, the new substation in the southeast Calgary area, all those things – let's accept it for argument's sake – are critical transmission infrastructure and that you're behind the eight ball on this. You should have started this process two or three or four years ago. We'll cut you some slack to fast-track this process, but the rest you can organize so that it can all go through the full process that it's supposed to go through," which means that it gets a full, independent regulatory hearing in front of an independent Alberta Utilities Commission. That commission decides whether that line and its social, economic, and environmental impacts are in the public interest should it be built in the first place. [A cellphone rang] That's not me. I'm very glad to hear that that's not my phone ringing.

You know, I think this is a subamendment that everyone in this House and everyone involved in the electrical transmission industry and the generating industry feeding into those lines and the distribution industry coming out the other end of those lines should be able to live with. This is nothing more than a subamendment that says: we recognize that you may have gotten behind the eight ball a few years ago and that now you need to play catch-up so that things don't go off the rails and we don't find ourselves in a situation where we might experience critical power shortages. But having done this, on the advice of the experts you keep referring to at the AESO, you've already laid out what those really, truly critical pieces of transmission infrastructure are. Even at that, through your own amendments you are now proposing that they're not all of equal criticality, that some can be built first and others can follow. Let's cut you that slack, let you do that, but let's put in effect a sunset clause on this notion of criticality and say that once this is done, Bill 50 is done for all intents and purposes, and everything else can proceed the way it's supposed to proceed.

This subamendment of mine would kill the automatic regulatory needs hearings bypass after this list on page 11 of the bill is built or after the process to get it approved for building is started. The government would instead have to add the infrastructure to the schedule through legislation, limiting their ability to just jam things through without public scrutiny, or they would have to just simply say to the transmission facility operators: "Okay. Do you want to build a line from Peace River because someday somebody might put a nuclear plant up there or because, you know, a nuclear plant has been licensed for there or whatever? Or do you want to build a line from the Northwest Territories because the Slave River hydroelectric project is under way or is about to become under way? Okay. Best get going on getting that organized now so that the lines are ready to be energized when the dam is built, or when the nuclear plant is built and the power is ready to start flowing, it's got someplace to go."

Much of the government's rationale is that the current needs identification approvals process takes some time, and we need this critical transmission infrastructure too badly now to go through that whole process. If that is the case and this subamendment in effect gives them that bye – right? – then there should be no need for the government to have to leave the door open for any more transmission projects to get bundled through as critical transmission. The government, the AESO, the transmission facility operators should have all learned their lesson and can in the future put the needs identification document into the process early enough to go through the process as it should.

That is the rationale behind this subamendment, Mr. Chairman. I look forward to debate on this. I hope that members from all sides will join the debate on this subamendment since we only got members from the opposition side to debate my last subamendment. Let's have at her, and we'll see where we go with this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party on subamendment SA2.

Mr. Mason: Yes, on subamendment SA2. Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to rise and respond to this amendment by my colleague from Calgary-Currie. I'm afraid that I can't support this subamendment. I regret that. I think there have been a number of amendments, and there may be some others that we can agree on with our colleagues from the Liberal opposition, but this isn't one of them. This subamendment essentially allows the government to go ahead with a critical infrastructure that it has already designated and sets that as the limit. No more after that.

But, you know, in deciding whether or not to support this, you have to consider what it is that will be allowed if this subamendment were by some amazing stroke of political something to be passed. We're talking, Mr. Chairman, about $14 billion worth of infrastructure expenditures which by and large are not necessary and which will continue to escape proper regulatory scrutiny and which many believe are designed to facilitate the export of electricity for profit by electricity companies, yet the infrastructure is paid for in its entirety by the ratepayers of this province. If we pass this subamendment, then we're going to allow all of that to go ahead. It is literally like closing the barn door once all of the horses, all 14 billion of them, are out the gate.

Based on the explanation I just heard from my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie, I don't think that I can support this subamendment. You know, if we look at how the government has structured the electricity system now, they've created an unregulated, for-profit, private system for the generation of electricity. New generation is not planned as it once was and as it is in other jurisdictions. It's not planned with the transmission necessary to get the new power generation into the grid and into the places where electricity needs it. Instead, it leaves it up to individual private companies on an entrepreneurial basis to build the power plants.

Mr. Chairman, a big, coal-fired, modern plant would cost you half a billion dollars. You know, they want these investors to make these decisions without a guarantee that they're going to be able to earn money on their investment. That's a huge risk to take, especially with lots of new types of generation coming on stream: the cogeneration that we were seeing in industrial sites up around Fort McMurray, the potential for wind power in southern Alberta, lots of microgeneration that can be in place. It puts the investors and investor-owned utilities in a real quandary on whether or not they're going to build and where they're going to build and when they're going to build.

To encourage them to do that because they've created a dysfunctional system where it's unlikely that most investors are prepared to take major risks on large-scale production, they have to provide some surety because they've done away with the regulated rate of return. What they're doing is making sure that there is a transmission system in place that will carry the power from wherever somebody wants to build it and transmit it to market. The way they're doing that is taking away the financial responsibility from the generators and placing it firmly on the electricity consumers. That relieves a significant burden and relieves part of the risk from the system.

They're trying to make it possible for their system to work, Mr. Chairman, but what they've done with this deregulation system is create a system and then try to figure out how it's going to work once they've done it. It's a bit like jumping off a cliff and knitting the parachute on the way down; you'd better be a pretty fast knitter.

The situation is that the AESO has to guess where people are going to make their investments. They have to, you know, provide a transmission system that's accessible to whoever might want to build something wherever they might want to build it because there's no planning. There's no system planning to match generation and transmission, so they have to overbuild the system. That's the first flaw in the problem and why I can't support the subamendment: because it still requires us to build a transmission system that is sufficiently robust, as they like to say, that no matter who builds what where, there is going to be a transmission line that they can connect to somewhere nearby. So it's hugely overbuilt.

The second reason is that it's increasingly clear that the critical infrastructure envisaged in this act is designed for the export of electricity to the American market. There is no other reason why you would build direct current transmission lines between Edmonton and Calgary because the distance between Edmonton and Calgary is not sufficient to justify that expense.

Direct current lines are much more expensive, and they are designed for long-distance transmission of electricity because the line loss is substantially less than in AC lines. You would never in your right mind build a DC line for a distance of 370 kilometres or whatever the distance is between Edmonton and Calgary – I used to know it as 200 miles; it was easier – but that's what this bill is doing. It's requiring these lines to be built and to be approved. The only reason for that kind of expenditure and that kind of line is a much longer distance of transmission than the distance between Edmonton and Calgary.

We know that they're building lines in the United States that will come up to the Alberta border that this will connect to. So if you can imagine, Mr. Chairman, what this actually is doing is building an infrastructure for an export of electricity for a profit by large electricity producers, and we have to pay for it so that they can get their electricity to market. We have to take the CO₂, we have to take the fly ash, we have to take all of the environmental consequences if some of this production is actually coal fired, and we don't benefit by it. The investors who own the utility benefit from that. That is just absolutely wrong.

I couldn't think of a more clear example of where this government picks the pocket of the ordinary Albertan in order to help their friends in the large energy corporate sector. We see it today with the CO₂ collection and sequestration proposal, the new CO₂ gas pipeline. You know, again the taxpayers are being hit in order to subsidize this government's friends in the energy industry. I don't think it's any different with respect to Bill 50.

You know, on balance it'd be great to limit the capacity of the government to add more infrastructure in the future. But for goodness sakes, they're overbuilding so much that I don't see any chance that they're going to have to build any new transmission infrastructure for the next 50 years because they're going from about a billion dollars' worth of infrastructure now for transmission to about $14 billion, so 14 times what we currently have all in in terms of our investment. This is an enormous investment.

The government's amendment still does not allow the electricity commission to disallow this because it's not needed. To me that says it's not needed. Otherwise, you wouldn't have to put that in a piece of legislation to tie the hands of the commission. I think that's clear. So with respect to my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie, I think this really is a question of trying to close the barn door after the horses are out. While it's useful in order to provide additional debate and time for additional debate, I think that's where its usefulness really ends, Mr. Chairman.

I thank my colleague for that opportunity, but I will not be supporting the subamendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on subamendment SA2.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It is a pleasure to rise and speak towards the subamendment that was put on the table by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie. I say that honestly and truthfully. We all know his amendment is trying to put lipstick on a pig, but at least he's trying to give it a little bit of colour, a little bit of flair, and a little bit of limits, allow it the ability to go out in public and not feel as embarrassed as really it should be. I really admire him for at least trying to save at least some of this from going forward.

Let's face it. If we look at even what the government has put forward so far on Bill 50, with its amendment, what is being proposed right now, as the hon. member from the third party indicated, is just not very good for the Alberta taxpayer, not very good for individuals in terms of receiving power, but it appears to be very good for people who are going to be in the business of exporting the power.

We look at this subamendment, and just to be clear, it is a subamendment that recognizes right off the hop that Bill 50 is a bad bill. I recognize that. This subamendment at least tries to take a bad bill that we would vote down to where we would hopefully say to the government: "Let's scrap it. Let's start again. Let's go back to using the Alberta Utilities Commission, where people can have their voice heard, where people can have a proper needs assessment, where people can have a proper placement assessment, and do it all in the one place where the government set it up." We recognize that this subamendment does not allow the Alberta people as much of an opportunity as throwing Bill 50 out the door would. However, it is at least a recognition of trying to save a little bit of what is done here towards the Alberta people.

The subamendment will limit the amount of critical transmission infrastructure to only those lines listed in what would be the schedule to the Electric Utilities Act, section 2(13) of Bill 50. Currently Bill 50 has an alternate definition of critical transmission infrastructure that allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to define any intertie, lines serving renewable power, or even, in particular, lines they consider necessary to be critical transmission infrastructure. All of that new critical infrastructure would then also bypass the regulatory needs hearing and be added onto Albertans' bills without a fair hearing. With this subamendment that automatic bypass would not happen. The government would instead have to add the infrastructure to the schedule through legislation, limiting their ability to just jam things through without public scrutiny.

What this amendment is trying to do. Let's just say, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie indicated, that the government has been asleep for the last eight to 10 years and didn't have any knowledge of the need, that Alberta's population was growing, that businesses were going to want to come here, that we had oil sands development, that lots of people were doing this, that, and the other thing, and that maybe our existing transmission lines would need to be restructured. Maybe the government was out shining shoes, shining carrots, shining whatever to keep things on the go, but they were not paying attention to what was happening in the transmission game. Let's just say that that happened. Okay? This amendment says: "Okay. This got away from you. You have to, you know, now try and do it."

We're going to give them that. We're going to recognize that, yes, they have been asleep, and they're going to now have to have this critical infrastructure. Okay. We do the line between Calgary and Edmonton. We do the line up to the Peace River country, and we strengthen a couple of lines going elsewhere. That would be fair enough. But with any of the other stuff that's going to happen, the additional tie-ins at other parts of the juncture, what this amendment will allow people to do is to bring the Alberta Utilities Commission back into play.

The Alberta Utilities Commission was set up, in particular, so that people would have a voice at a regulatory hearing to both hear and have a needs assessment, for that body to decide what kind of transmission would be best for that area – what kind would be cheapest for that area and what kind was needed for that area – as well as to hear some environmental impact studies as well as placement studies. This was really a great forum for Albertans to go to and get the whole evidence before the court, so to speak, and the court in this sense would be the Alberta Utilities Commission.

What this bill does is it allows at least some of that to partake at some point in the future. We all remember why the Alberta Utilities Commission was set up in the first place. It was to take the decision-making hands out of the politicians' pockets. Okay? That's why it was set up. They realized that governments feel pressure from individuals, feel pressure from big business, feel pressure from many sources of people, yet they don't know the transmission business that well. But guess what? That's why they set up the Alberta Utilities Commission. They are experts in the area. They are the people we've set up to hear these issues: to hear a needs assessment, to hear whether or not this type of transmission is good for a particular area, to understand the economics of it and to go forth from there.

That is why I will be supporting this amendment. It at least recognizes that the government has probably made a mistake and realizes: let's limit the mistake to actually just reinforcing the line, as they've indicated, where they want to, in section 2(13) of Bill 50. The other stuff, that they add on later, the tie-ins, some other things of that nature, will still be subject to a fair hearing, a fair hearing where Albertans can have their voices heard and present their arguments to the Alberta Utilities Commission.

I thank you for allowing me, Mr. Chair, to speak to this subamendment on this Bill 50.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity on subamendment SA2.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Yes. Speaking to the amendment in sort of a literary, poetic fashion, full of analogy and intrigue, if Bill 50 had a theme song, it would be a Joni Mitchell music box anthem: round and round in The Circle Game.

The Alberta Armageddon horseman of the electrical apocalypse merry-go-round has been going round and round, up and down, with no opportunity for Albertans to get on board, but they still have to pay for the ticket to power the government's spinning wheel.
The government grinder cranks out the tune to which Albertans must dance:
brownouts, brownshirts; blackouts, blackshirts;
ATCO, AltaLink, shares rising, coins in the cup: clink, clink, clink.
Science be damned. Government always knows best.
Utility Commission hearings: give it up; take a rest.
Hand over your wallets. Submit to our will.
Subsidize private transmission lines. Don't be so shrill.
Our amendment calls . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, please.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think we should invoke Beauchesne 459, relevance, and just remind the member that we're talking about a specific amendment. This is a serious and an important issue, and if he could please address the amendment, I'm sure the chair would be equally happy, as would the members.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, please stay on subamendment SA2.

Mr. Chase: Yes. Speaking to subamendment and the bypassing of the Alberta Utilities Commission, the failure to create priorities or stages to justify it, I'll continue, and you can call relevance as many times as it's necessary to do so.

Hand over your wallets. Submit to our will.

Subsidize private transmission lines. Don't be so shrill.

Our amendment calls for stages . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, please stay on subamendment SA2, and then we can proceed on without other information too wide.

4:40

Mr. Chase: That's fine. I'm working on it, and the fact that I am using poetry versus prose . . .

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. Mason: With respect to the . . .

Mr. Liepert: Has he got a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yeah. Maybe the hon. health minister could go through the chair and be recognized.

Mr. Chairman, on the point of order that was raised, the rules require that a great deal of latitude should be allowed members in trying to make their point. They don't always come directly to it at the beginning, but as long as they get to it by the end, I think that satisfies the rules.

The Chair: The chair has reminded the hon. member speaking to stay with the subject matter, please, amendment SA2, that we are talking about.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: Yes. Meanwhile, back at amendment SA2, I am trying to raise the level of debate. I have pointed out that this has been circuitous. I have talked about the merry-go-round image. I am going to continue, and if someone finds it objectionable, I'll start reading from this long treatise of what needs to be accomplished, what hasn't been done.

Speaking to the amendment:

Our amendment calls for stages.

Isn't that nice? Hold back your rage.

Transmission is a value at five times the price.

We put on our thinking caps. All will be well.

Pay up now, or you can go to – Follow the transmission lines down to Montana or Vegas.

Whatever money we charge you will lighten your wages.

Who needs hearings or oversight?

We're omniscient. Give up the fight.

Who wouldn't want a lovely transmission tower popping up in the back 40, providing nuclear power?

What's that you say? We don't need more transmission?
Get lost, you whiners. We shut down your commission.
Bill 50 may be dubious, it may not be right, but we don't care. We have the might.
Today we've managed to steamroll the opposition.
Although closure wasn't called . . .

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chairman, I don't know if this member is having a little bit of fun at the expense of everyone in the House or if he's just having fun all by himself. Either way, the fact is that under Beauchesne 459 relevance is a very serious matter in this House, and the fact that he has ignored that not once, not twice, is an affront to all members in this House, to the parliamentary tradition of what we're trying to do here in this reasoned and wonderful debate.

I think, quite frankly, Mr. Chair, you should perhaps, if you wish, remind him once again to talk to the subamendment. That is what we're trying to talk about. They have said oftentimes that it's a serious bill and that it's a serious amendment, and it's probably a serious subamendment, so let's hear the points for or against the subamendment and get on with it. Otherwise, he can save his poetry for another time.

The Chair: Hon. members, we have a point of order raised by the Deputy Government House Leader. Let's deal with the point of order.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, on the point of order.

Mr. Hehr: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chair. I've been listening with intent, actually, to the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's what I find, actually, intriguing remarks. Although they're not in a traditional format that we hear in this House, I see nothing in I believe it's 459 that says that arguments need to flow in any standard form. Because he chooses to use a very creative form, poetry, that goes through both the strengths and weaknesses of an amendment and what he sees as some of the things that other average Albertans have pointed out – that these transmission lines are being set up to ship power to the United States, that the average taxpayer is going to be saddled with large additional costs – those are all things I've heard in his poem.

If the hon. members on both sides of the House would continue to listen and see how the hon. member has creatively – I will give him that. It is creative, but he is still speaking on the amendment. He's still talking about the subsection that has been brought up here. I've heard it referenced twice in his poem, which I think is very good. Actually, I enjoy his format and the way he has brought these points to this House.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party on the point of order.

Mr. Mason: Thanks. I'll join in the submissions to you, sir, with respect to this. Beauchesne 511 says:

The freedom of speech accorded to Members of Parliament is a fundamental right without which they would be hampered in the performance of their duties. The Speaker should interfere with that freedom of speech only in exceptional cases where it is clear that to do otherwise could be harmful to specific individuals.

I would argue that the hon. member is making arguments in a different form, and it may be a little bit elliptical for some on the other side; nevertheless, I think that, necessarily, his right to do so should be protected unless the hon. members can show clear cause that it's not going to deal with the subamendment before us. But I suspect, having heard the hon. member in the past many times, that in his own way he's going to make a point that is relevant to this. I think that his creativity should not be stifled by those on the other side, who might just want to loosen their ties a little bit since we're in committee and relax.

Mr. Oberle: It's right and proper that the hon. leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, should point out the importance of free speech in this Chamber. I know that nobody would move to curtail the freedom of speech that each of us enjoys here. However, that occurs within the context of being relevant to the topic at hand, and that's very clear in Beauchesne and in other references. Mr. Chairman, all of us are constantly enthralled by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity's amazing ability to lyrically string together nonsensical facts, but the fact of the matter is that we're having a serious debate in here. If he could stick to the point and use the other tools available to him – like Members' Statements, like question period – to exercise his freedom of speech, the whole place would be better off for it.

The Chair: Are you on the point of order?

Mr. Chase: No. I'm continuing.

The Chair: Let us deal with the point of order first, and then we will continue. The chair has heard the arguments or the points from different perspectives here. The chair makes a conclusion that in front of the chair we have amendment SA2. From what I heard from the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, you have a very large latitude in expressing this amendment SA2. That has riled up some other members, okay? From that perspective, to go further in Committee of the Whole on the serious matter of Bill 50, I call on you to continue to focus on SA2 specifically. If the matter is not dealt with, then I have to recognize another member.

Thank you.

Debate Continued

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I'll come to a conclusion. The conclusion has to do with both governance and transmission. I must admit that I feel somewhat Chase-tised by the government today.

Two lines, Mr. Chair, and then I'll gladly sit down and release the floor.

It's time to roll over; give up the fight; reach for the switch; turn off the light.

The Chair: Any other hon. members to speak on amendment SA2? Seeing none, the chair shall call the question.

[Motion on subamendment SA2 lost]

The Chair: We are now back to amendment A1. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

4:50

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I did have an opportunity to speak in second reading with regard to the bill. I'm glad that the minister has responded with amendments that have gone partially in favour of what I spoke on on behalf of my constituents.

Again, Mr. Ron Stern writes me a letter with regard to the amendments, and he talks about:

Any further substantial increase [in electricity costs] will put the viability of a number of energy intensive plants at risk. These plants are the very ones that diversify Alberta's economy. Uncompetitive electricity costs will result in closures with an accompanying loss of thousands of jobs.

He does appreciate the changes made and, like the Consumers for Competitive Transmission, does acknowledge and appreciate that amendments to Bill 50 are helpful, especially the oversight committee. I think the oversight committee has an opportunity to work with the regulators and the planners to make sure that we have a well-planned system that's staged and that will address the economics that industry will face.

He also writes in his letter that he is looking forward to continuing to work with the government and with the planners "to find ways to lower costs while still providing the appropriate transmission upgrades." They are "relieved to know that the Government has that attitude and open-mindedness and look forward to working together in a detailed manner to find better, more economical and more competitive transmission solutions for Alberta."

I guess to sum it up, Mr. Chairman, the people I consulted with in my constituency that have a very large load are concerned. They're optimistic about the changes, and they're also grateful for the ability to work ahead, you know, raising their concerns with both the ministry and with AESO.

I will table the appropriate copies, Mr. Chairman, of the letter from Mr. Ron Stern that laid out his further concerns.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for giving me this opportunity to speak. I'm pleased to rise today in this Assembly to speak to the amendments on Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, during this Committee of the Whole. Over the summer this government held 20 information sessions in order to hear from Albertans as well as stakeholders on exactly what their concerns were about this bill. We all remember that the bill was introduced in the spring, and we had that opportunity through the summer to comment on it.

Now, these stakeholders that made these comments included residents; landowners; businesses; local, municipal, and provincial government officials; industry; aboriginal groups; and advocacy and environmental groups. There really is no truth to the allegations by some that there have been no consultations or discussions of needs or other concerns related to Bill 50. There have been many meetings. In fact, in the last few years there have been close to 300 meetings in total dealing with the needs and the issues regarding Bill 50 and the transmission lines.

As a government we have heard a few concerns from these meetings regarding Bill 50, and because of this we have proposed amendments to address them. I would like to highlight how these amendments to Bill 50 would provide benefits to Albertans. Mr. Chairman, the first amendment would change section 17 of the Alberta Utilities Commission Act in order to clarify that the AUC would have to consider the public interest when siting critical transmission infrastructure. The public interest includes the social, economic, and environmental effects that the transmission projects may have on specific areas as well as the rest of Alberta in general. The AUC already does this when siting transmission lines and facilities. However, the proposed amendment would ensure that the public interest is taken into account during the siting of critical transmission infrastructure as well. In this way Albertans would be guaranteed that their concerns and opinions are valued and taken into consideration. This amendment further proves that the interests of Albertans remain an absolute top priority for this government.

Mr. Chairman, since Bill 50 does not change the siting process for transmission facilities, this amendment would ensure that landowners' issues will be heard, impacts will be mitigated, and affected landowners will receive fair compensation. This amendment clarifies that the AUC would continue to address public concerns about where transmission facilities are located. Full consideration would be given to a number of issues, including safety, environmental impact, and the effect on nearby land and property owners.

Mr. Chairman, the second amendment would provide cabinet with regulation-making authority to establish a cost oversight committee. This committee would be made up of representatives of customers and the Alberta Electric System Operator, also known as AESO. Committee members would be able to access and assess transmission facility project costs, scope, and timeline information during the construction of these critical transmission projects. This committee would then pass this information on to Albertans. It would allow Albertans to be more informed about the cost of new transmission lines as well as any proposed changes to their electricity bills. It would also allow for more information to flow between transmission and generation companies and Albertans. This would help customers be more effective in AUC hearings, where the AUC determines practical transmission costs that are included in the customers' rates which are proposed by transmission and generation companies.

This committee would essentially monitor transmission projects during construction and relay information back to Albertans in a timely and transparent manner, and that's exactly what Albertans want. It would assist customers in monitoring and understanding variances and raising concerns during project construction and help them raise any issues concerning proposed rate increases by transmission and distribution companies.

Mr. Chairman, the third proposed amendment clarifies that the AESO must develop the Edmonton to Calgary and the Edmonton to Fort McMurray critical transmission infrastructure projects in stages. Under this amendment AESO is directed to develop these specified projects in stages to ensure optimal timing, cost efficiency, and reliability for Albertans. This way we can make certain that we are taking advantage of the economic situation such as cheaper labour and availability. These plans and these projects would be built as demand warrants.

Now, I just want to talk about the HVDC line between Edmonton and Calgary. This line can be staged in several sections. The last line in this corridor was built 37 years ago. As these new lines are being built, old lines can be taken down. Nobody complained – well, maybe people complained 37 years ago that they were being overbuilt then, but people are not complaining now about that because the lines are actually built, and they're using them. There are six of these lines between Edmonton and Calgary, and as we build the new ones in stages, the old ones can be taken down so that the footprint would not increase. Some of the old lines will continue to be used because they will serve central Alberta where the HVDC lines can't. My own hometown will continue to be served by the older lines, but if we were down to two lines or four lines, that would probably be adequate for that area.

Furthermore, building these two critical transmission projects in stages would help us induce and manage investment. Wholesale transactions of electricity today earn about $7 billion a year. Staging these two big projects would help put these investments into the context of the economy that they are intended to serve in the future over the next 20 to 30 years.

Mr. Chairman, these three amendments would ensure that we are developing critical transmission lines efficiently and effectively while continuing to put the interest of Albertans at the centre of all siting decisions. It would help make certain that we achieve our transmission needs while protecting public interest. The fact remains that we still must pass Bill 50 since there is a need for critical transmission infrastructure. No one disagrees with the premise that there is a need.

Mr. Chairman, I have personally met with numerous stakeholders concerning Bill 50, and I feel that these amendments have addressed the major issues that have been identified not only through personal meetings with these people but through committees and caucus meetings as well. Therefore, we have to do everything possible to ensure that this bill reflects the wishes of Albertans as well as achieves the province's transmission needs. This government has achieved this through the three proposed amendments, and these amendments will strengthen the bill as they will address the concerns raised by Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much. Speaking directly to the amendment as opposed to singing or poeticizing to it. The hon. member spoke about transparency and accountability. I would like to know where Albertans can find the minutes or the records of the various meetings that have been held. Have the minutes been put on a website by the Minister of Energy? We're hearing that Albertans have been involved since the beginning of the process, but no one's yet tabled any evidence of which way Albertans are thinking. Apparently, they're coming to these invitation events en masse and expressing their concerns.

The session that I attended with Gary Holden of Enmax had a very good turnout. There were a number of individuals from a variety of professions represented. The point that was being made was the importance of local transmission.

Very early on in second reading I talked about innovation and technology improving our current transmission lines. Nobody suggested that I was whistling in the dark when I talked about a product that's been put out by 3M, which by simply restringing our current transmission lines would carry three times the load and, therefore, would not require the extended footprint that is being contemplated with Bill 50, whether it's done in stages or not.

Now, the hon. member also talked about Bill 50 not being a part of determining the placement of the lines. Well, Bill 46, Bill 36, and Bill 19, I believe, already did that. Those were the bills that talked about basically providing whatever was market price at the time. It provided a resolution within I believe it was a two-year period for the value of the land, the exchange to be taking place. That was, I think, one of the amendments from Bill 46. There had been concern, and that amendment addressed the concern that the farmer's land or the rancher's back 40 or the cottage owner's land could be held up for years and years and years because the transmission line hadn't necessarily been approved or slotted.

Albertans want to have sustainable electricity. We're not arguing that there is a need for upgrading of our transmission lines, but the government has yet to convince the opposition and the ratepayers, the people who will be out of pocket considerably more coin, that the vastness of this project is necessary.

Now, the government responded to the vastness of concerns by trying to put forward the amendment that we're now discussing, the notion of doing things in developmental stages. But it's at the government's whim at what speed we go through these various developmental stages. The government, by doing the end run around the Alberta Utilities Commission and with a combination of the previous bills I mentioned – 46, 36, and, again, I'm thinking it was 19 – already can dispossess individuals of land. They can move the tower to the right so many metres, to the left so many metres, and there's no choice given to the landowner other than to submit and, you know: here's how much we're going to give you for your land.

There has been discussion about: do we go AC, do we go DC, and where is it appropriate to use one style or the other for the transmission lines? The point is that the direct current can only flow for certain lengths with certain limited amounts of kilowattage. Therefore, the notion that we can bury lines over 240 kilowatts or over 500 kilowatts becomes a moot argument. According to physics and science the heat that is conducted through the lines with the extra grounding of the burying underneath would create such heat as to basically burn out the lines. So we're stuck in terms of large transmission, the 2,000 kilowatts that are being talked about.

As I say, no one is arguing against the need for some transmission lines. But the way the opposition argument goes is: build the transmission where the need is as opposed to hauling it all the way down from northern Alberta from coal-fired generating plants. The Gary Holden, Enmax solution is: build it locally. In the case of Calgary he's saying: use natural gas. I've previously spoken that if natural gas becomes sufficiently expensive, then we can gasify coal.

The Premier today in question period sort of defended the use of $2 billion worth in sequestration. Well, I'd like to think that that sequestration would be applied to the gasification of coal if it turns out that it's a scientifically viable option. There has been so much discussion about sequestration and under what circumstances and how you keep the CO₂ under the ground. If it were to suddenly emerge, as it has in other countries, there is an explosive element to it. That science remains to be developed.

Albertans want their government to look out for their best interests, and simply inviting them to have a say but then not listening to what was said is disconcerting for Albertans. Albertans have not been told or explained to why it is that they have to pick up the entire bill for transmission lines they don't own. Yes, they get some power from that transmission line, but unlike a public utility, they're not direct shareholders. Why, they ask, do we have to subsidize AltaLink? Aren't they sufficiently profitable? Why do we have to subsidize ATCO? Why are these big players being provided subsidies when the government of Alberta says that we're no longer in the business of being in business? Yet these independent, private companies are given a carte blanche utilities monopoly. That is what is happening. There may be more than one, but together they're a corporate monopoly.

We've had individuals talk about what happens if these power lines are owned outside of Alberta. You know, we can be held for ransom by some foreign owner for the transmission of our own power. These are questions that to date the government hasn't answered.

We realize that at the end of the day Bill 50 by sheer numbers is going to pass. I hope that when hon. government members return to their constituencies, which I'm assuming will probably happen on a more permanent basis by the end of this week, their constituents come in and they ask them the questions that I'm asking now. I hope the members are able to provide them with answers.

I know that the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka had quite an interesting experience with regard to the debate over Bill 46. There were over 350 people in attendance, and they didn't like the answers they were hearing. The answers had to do with the placement of the transmission lines.

In the end it's the electorate that decides our political fate. If we've represented them in a democratic fashion and they see our worth, we'll be here again, but I really hope the government does a better job in consultation as they roll out the so-called priority stages without a critical needs assessment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair, for the last opportunity to participate in this power debate.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour for me to rise and speak to amendment A1 to Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. In speaking to this bill we talked to many constituents of Edmonton-Meadowlark. Right in the middle of my constituency is a transportation utility corridor, and this is a big issue for the good folks that I represent. In speaking to the bill we asked the constituents what their position was. I had to go to a town hall meeting at the Belmead Community League where we had 300 to 400 people. It was standing room only. You couldn't get into the room. My constituents were quite passionate and vocal about the issue. We had another meeting with about 1,300 people. Tonight, as we speak, there's another meeting where many of my constituents will be discussing this important issue.

Now, my constituents had many concerns, but the citizen group that represents most of my constituents doesn't question the need for this infrastructure to be built. Their main issue is how it's built.

In discussing the need, I'd just like to tell you a brief little story, a tale of two cities that I've lived in, one Edmonton and one a little village in which I was born. This wasn't an issue there because we didn't have transmission lines. In fact, we didn't have light bulbs. Just a candle was your light. When the sun came up, you had light. When the sun went down, you didn't. Then my family moved to another city in India. The advantage there was that you had some electricity, but it only came on for a couple of hours every day. That was great. People were really happy because it was better than having nothing.

Having moved to this country, I think it's been fantastic that we've always had energy. We've always had power. It's always been very reliable. Part of the issue that it has been reliable is that they built redundancy into the system 20 years ago. The fantastic thing is that we haven't faced any of these issues that many of my relatives in my motherland have to face today on a daily basis. In order to meet the needs that they currently have over there, they're building a record number of nuclear plants all over that nation, in India. We're not. So we have to look at where we came from.

Really, we don't need to look at our current needs. The lights aren't going out today. The lights are fine. We have security because of the system that we built 20 years ago. Our population has increased from 2.5 million to 3.5 million people. As you look at what we've done, the homes are bigger. We're heating larger homes. There are more lights in the homes. If you look in your own home, every member of the family has an electronic gizmo in the home. The computers are on all day long. The cellphones are plugged in. The stoves, the ranges – in the olden days the homes used to have just 60-amp service; now we're up to a hundred and some, 200-amp service. So we have more people in each home who are actually consuming more energy. Now, if we look in the future in greening our growth and greening our economy and greening our automobile fleet, we're having a lot of hybrid vehicles. In the future we'll be plugging our vehicles into the grid as well.

So my constituents have not questioned the need to build more energy. Now, my understanding is that during the peak hours we're purchasing energy from the neighbouring province at a very high rate, and then we're selling them energy at a very cheap price at the end of the day. Also, I'm told that since these lines are old – it was great technology 20 years ago, but with the advent of all the modern-day scientific research we have new lines, and they're losing less energy. So we can save an extra up to $220 million, maybe a little bit more, maybe a little bit less, in energy. We're producing a lot of energy that we're losing.

Now, we're moving toward cleaner forms of energy production with carbon capture and storage. We have natural gas and cogeneration. We have wind power in the south. My understanding is that we produce amongst the most wind power energy in the country. We have biomass and solar power energy, another greener source of energy, so it's more power on the grid. It only makes sense that just as you upgrade your home – you upgrade your furnace; you upgrade the wires in your house – we as a province upgrade our infrastructure, be it roadways or electrical infrastructure or even our gas lines to move a very critical thing that we need, which is energy.

We do live in a global marketplace. Within India's and China's emerging economies the worldwide consumption of energy will only increase in the long term. That's why I talk about the other world. They have 400 million people that came out of poverty into the middle class. We are an energy-producing province, and sometimes it takes a little bit of energy to get the other energy out so we can actually run our economies.

On that argument, the need, my constituents, the vast majority of them, have not questioned the need in Edmonton-Meadowlark. These are good people who I know may be impacted by some of the infrastructure projects that may be built. Of these projects the heartland region project could affect my constituents. Their main issue is – and that's where the amendments to the bill come in – the public interest. What's their public interest? The issues that they've addressed are, one, the health issues. Whether they're perceived or realistic health issues, I've come to the conclusion that their concerns of health will probably not agree with Health Canada's concerns on electromagnetic frequency. I think both sides are probably going to have to agree to disagree.

A big issue for them is declining property values. My constituents did understand that they purchased their homes on a utility corridor. They expected the Anthony Henday, and it's there. They have 240 kV lines, and they are there. What they're telling me is that they didn't expect to have 500 kV lines on these big towers in their backyards. You know, one of my good constituents, Wes Ursuliak, and his wife purchased their home, and they planned to raise their children backing onto the west end TUC. If this line is overhead, it'll be about 60 metres away from his home in his backyard, and he's quite concerned about that.

So the major part of the amendment I'd like to speak in favour of is the decision-making process to consider putting these transmission lines in and the siting and how they're placed, that the public interest be represented. In addition to the economic issues that concern my constituents, there's also quality of life, to include the social, economic, and environmental effects where these lines are placed. I made a commitment and promise to my constituents to bring this out into the House here.

For a number of my constituents costing is an issue, to pay for the lines. I'm glad that the Minister of Energy has introduced an amendment that addresses the costing, scope, and scheduling of these lines.

Do we need all these lines right away, tomorrow? No. As I said, right now there are no brownouts, so I think it's a wise decision to do these in stages and bring them on as we need them.

Mr. Chairman, the position I have taken on this is that I do believe that the infrastructure needs to be upgraded. In voicing my constituents' concerns, I'm hoping that the decision is made to locate them underground. My constituents and I have not suggested that they be put in the other end of town in another TUC, and we've not said they should be put in a rural area, in somebody else's backyard. We've said: please do them in our backyard; we're just asking that they be done underground in our backyard. I think Alberta can show some leadership. This has been done elsewhere in the world. I believe this may be the future for the rest of the country. Many of these other 200 kV lines are being placed underground. My constituents do realize it will cost more, but if you spread the cost amongst all Albertans, the cost will be minimal.

Mr. Chairman, these are just my thoughts I'd like to express to you and to my colleagues here in the Assembly. I'd like to thank you for the honour of standing up and speaking to the amendments, amendment A1 to Bill 50, as well as to the bill and as well as to speak up for my constituents.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise in committee on Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. This is the stage at which we discuss the impacts of the bill and, in this case, the amendments recommended by the government. There are three basic questions that come to mind in addressing these amendments. First of all, do they address the need to massively upgrade our infrastructure urgently and the contention around that urgency situation?

Secondly, if so, what type of electricity generation, and where is it going to be located? Does it address some of those questions that people are asking? Those have implications for other concerns, like cost and land value and health implications.

The third question is: how will the decisions be made in relation to this major new infrastructure investment? If these amendments don't address those key questions in a way that honours the public spirit of debate and public decision-making and public interest in the long term, then it behooves us on this side of the House to reject them.

The peripheral issues such as how it's going to increase consumer cost, whether they're buried or not, and some of the health concerns have clearly to do with a priori decisions around those first three questions. Do we need it? If so, where and what type? How will the decisions be made?

As I look at these amendments, section 1(3) being struck out, our concern is that the bill is actually, again, bypassing the needs identification process. The original wording of the bill is that the existing 17(1) in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act does not apply to critical transmission infrastructure. This amendment is changing that wording by specifying that it is the needs identification process in particular that the commission cannot undertake with regard to critical transmission infrastructure. This amendment is trying to clarify that other hearings do still remain such as for the siting of these lines. But that is not what section 17(1) addresses. My colleagues have indicated this, and I reinforce it here. This particular section is dealing only with the Alberta Utilities Commission's role independent of government to assess the need for transmission lines. If the commission cannot give consideration under 17(1) to whether the critical transmission infrastructure is required to meet the provincial needs, then indeed 17(1) no longer applies. It's as simple as that. We cannot support that.

Amendment section 2(6) is trying to set out a staged approach to building the transmission infrastructure. This includes bringing the lines between Edmonton and Calgary up to half capacity first, then full capacity later. Given the government's previous statements about quite how urgent all this transmission infrastructure is, for them now to say that it can be staggered over time is a contradiction in terms. After all, Bill 50 is calling this critical infrastructure. Therefore, why can it not, then, go through a regular process through the Alberta Utilities Commission, including public hearings? The timeline that will be imposed on this staging isn't revealed here, but the question becomes: why is the government claiming the infrastructure is critical? Without an understanding of what the stage duration will be, this amendment, therefore, doesn't appear to have any significant changes to the original intent of the bill, and we can't support it.

In part C, section 2(12)(b), the committee that is being proposed would give more public information on the lines but only once construction has started. While having more information is good, these lines then would be a fait accompli and the costs going onto consumers' bills anyway, whether the amounts are higher than originally quoted or not. All this committee will provide is more data. Surely, we can consider this, as it does provide more information, but to what extent this addresses the fundamental questions I began with is questionable.

Under amendment D, section 2(13), the amendment adjusts the proposed schedule that lists the first batch of critical transmission infrastructure, the four projects discussed in greater detail in the main bill. The changes are not particularly significant, with part (a) proposing the lines from Edmonton to Calgary in two stages rather than one and part (b) adjusting in a minor way the makeup of the Edmonton-Fort McMurray lines to allow for staging of that line.

The change to the Edmonton-Calgary lines could be seen as reacting to the criticism that this very expensive technology – some would say extravagant – is clearly an indication of overbuilding. The two levels of capacity backed off that particular gold-plated type plan at least initially, but the desire is still there to go up to a minimum capacity of 2,000 megawatts in the near term. As long as we have no idea as to how long it will be between these two stages of construction, then we have to see these lines as going to the full amount as soon as possible. It contradicts some of the earlier references.

Notwithstanding that, the change here to the schedule is not particularly important with regard to the principle of the bill. However, in its implementation the staging discussion in amendment B may well have some impacts that we need to be, I think, discussing in public contexts. That's where a public hearing would add some information here that's relevant to the public interest.

Under part E, section 3(3), it's difficult to know how this is going to apply in a substantive way to this bill. It removes one of the restrictions that section 3 places on the Alberta Utilities Commission, but it leaves in place others of equal force. What remains in the bill is the fact that "the Commission shall not refuse an approval of a transmission line . . . on the basis that, in its opinion, it does not meet the needs of Alberta." So the commission is still completely prevented from saying whether or not the transmission lines are needed.

As discussed under amendment A, the government seems to be trying to make clear that siting concerns are still the purview of the Alberta Utilities Commission. In that sense they can rule on the public interest of the transmission line, but when it comes to whether or not the line is actually going to be built rather than where, the Alberta Utilities Commission is barred. This is clearly not acceptable, not honouring the public process and the public interest, in our view, and not fixing the fundamental flaw, and, in our perspective, attempts to fiddle around with it and make it somehow more palatable.

Mr. Chairman, those are my main concerns about these amendments. They fundamentally fail the test of whether we have in place an ability to assess the need for the massive upgrade that is being proposed and, if so, whether there is going to be enough information, both scientific and public values expressed, around what type of infrastructure and where it should be located in the long-term public interest and, finally, how those decisions will ultimately be made in the public interest.

Thank you.

5:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon in committee to address some of the issues that I feel are important in the amendments to Bill 50. Most importantly, I'd like to point out the staging aspect. I believe this is the most important amendment we have for various different reasons.

Now, to go back a little bit, I'd like to make the House aware that in my particular constituency right now we have a total of 374 megawatts of wind power produced. That is 72 per cent of the province's wind power. In the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner we have 147 megawatts of wind power produced, capability right now. We have much more in both of these constituencies that have been applied for and approved but have no way of actually reaching a transmission line to be exported up the province to the need.

Now, everybody on the other side of House likes to wax eloquent about green power, the need for more green power. The fact is that if we go back a couple of years to February 10, 2007, the leader at the time of the Alliance made the comment to Todd Babiak of the Edmonton Journal that we have a cap on wind power in this province, and it doesn't make any sense that at the same time we have what he termed a small environmental disaster taking place, the oil sands. That's a direct quote that I can give to the chair if need be.

When we look at the staging aspect of this – we have all this locked-in wind power, and everybody likes to speak highly of green power – we have the ability to take green power from the south. Staged lines: we run enough lines across the south part of the province – I might add that we have the Peigan Nation there, the Piikani Nation, and the ability to produce I'm not sure exactly how much wind power, but it's significant, probably touches right along the lines of, let's say, the MD of Pincher Creek. It's already got 225 megawatts. We could easily have that much more on the Peigan-Piikani lands. It gives an opportunity for the nation to have an income stream, the ability to move that power up the province to a part of the province where that power is needed.

Now, if we think further than just today, which I hope we all do in this House or we're wasting our time being here – we're here for the future. In saying that, this power can be produced down there, taken across the south side of the province, moved up the east side directly into our oil sands area, where, hopefully some of our members of the opposition are aware, most of our machinery is run on electricity. Now, isn't that a novel concept? We have green power extracting carbon for other uses. Wow. That's almost a carbon credit, I would think. But we've also got an income stream for the people down there as well as the ability to utilize all this green power.

So we put all these things together and say: there's the staging end; we've got to go down once across the bottom, tie up all of our wind power, then take it up the province. All of you realize that there is not a city at the bottom of a wind generation tower. There's no point in putting them up if you can't transmit it, so transmission is of the utmost importance.

Now, at a policy field committee meeting a couple of weeks back Mr. Holden, that is oft mentioned here by the Member for Calgary-Varsity, had made the comment that he was fully in favour of wind power. It's his favourite thing, apparently, although Enmax and Mr. Holden intervened on the 240-kilovolt line that is currently being built across the south and tried to block it. I can't quite figure out why you would block something that you are vehemently in favour of because it would also apply as a backup to the city of Calgary. Like I've said before, there are no cities at the bottom of the wind towers.

We got that question out. There was never an answer other than that Enmax is fully in favour of wind power and that it's a great mix with their gas power. The reality is that that power production in the south end of the province is the only competition to the current area held by Enmax. I think that was more the reason for the blocking than anything else.

Not to stick on that point, another issue that has been brought forward was, I think, someone mentioned Bill 19. Bill 19 says that the first thing you have to do is go out and talk to the people, find the best route for that. I don't know where that comment comes from. We're talking about a needs bill here. This establishes the need. It says nothing about the siting; it's over here or over there. For the hon. member to bring that up – I have to say that another question I've heard in here was: what's the average age of our lines? Well, for everyone's information, it's 38 years. I can attest to that personally because I've driven around one my whole life that we'd farm around. Is it fun? No. But people need power. I'm sure that some of the power shipped on that line may have even gone into Calgary-Varsity's constituency. Do I like going around it? No. But we all need power. We know that.

We have to look to the future, build for the future, not stay stuck here where we can't do anything, we just have to stay where we are. Nobody moves; nobody gets hurt. We talk about how we can fire it by gas if we don't have the transmission lines, and we've made the discussion of coal. At that same policy field committee our Member for Calgary-Currie brought up the comment that in Ontario you bring coal from far, far away, unload it off the boat after it floats across the Great Lakes, and then you produce power. Well, that's wonderful. Now let's look at their carbon footprint. First off, we've taken the coal from the ground wherever it was mined, we've shipped it across the lake, we've unloaded it, we've reloaded it, we've burned it, and we've created power.

Here in Alberta all of our power generation is at the mine mouth. Carbon use is at the bare minimum. The transmission is the intelligent thing to do. To back up, to mix the different generation, you have to have transmission, but you don't want to haul the coal down to fire a plant as an alternative to gas when gas shoots through the roof again. Once again, we have to look to the future. The price of gas today will not be there forever. Are we going to tie our wagon to one thing only? Not this side of the House. Not my idea.

In saying all of this, the amendment, especially the staged part, is the most important thing we're dealing with here this afternoon in the amendments. But I urge everyone to look to the future, not today and not the past, and say: how do we make this the best for all Albertans? Give them the opportunity to grow and prosper and have a great economy in the future by moving forward with this, not running with our heads in the sand, hoping that the whole issue will go away, that no one will burn power in the future and we'll all live happily ever after. That utopia does not exist, hon. members. We have to look to the future and move in that direction.

I thank you for the time to address this bill this afternoon.

Mr. Chase: I agree with the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod that putting all our eggs in one basket is not the way to go. Gas will probably at some point – I don't know how far into the future because I don't have that ability to predict. I'm sure gas prices will go up. In so doing, they're going to help with our economy's recovery. That will be the other side of the balance of the coin.

You mentioned how capping didn't make sense, but this government capped wind power for a number of years. I think it was 2006 or 2007 . . .

Mr. Berger: Because there was no transmission to get it out.

Mr. Chase: I don't agree.

The Chair: The member has the floor.

Mr. Chase: Through the chair, of course.

If the government was wanting to bring that power online and develop the transmission lines, then that would have happened. But where the government has been for years and years and years has been subsidizing nonrenewable resources. That's been the preferred option. It's only been recently that the caps were taken off wind power generation.

Now, I am not, you know, waving a singular flag for Enmax and gas power. I don't have any shares in Enmax. It's a city of Calgary owned circumstance, so I guess my taxes help contribute to our local utility.

Going back to the notion of not one type of energy source being the answer, I have big hopes in the future for wind, but the problem is that the wind power is only there when the wind blows. I know that where the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod lives, it blows most of the time. I worked out of Coleman, and I worked out of Rocky Mountain House when I worked for – I'm temporarily forgetting the name of the gas company that I worked for, but we dealt with the lines. No. It's not coming. The point is that until we can come up with a way to store electrical energy, it's only one of the types of options.

The notion of the east-west transmission line. I mean, we've already got some established corridors that would do the least amount of disruption. Something that we've been recommending for some time is the twinning of highway 3 so that you would have the potential of running those transmission lines along an already acquired access that would be of value both from an economic point of view for land transportation as well as power transportation. There are certain routes that make more sense than others.

Also, that tie-in running east to west: we could tie in to both B.C. and Saskatchewan. Instead of exporting our power down to the States, we could have mutual trade agreements just like TILMA with Saskatchewan and B.C. for a more favourable back and forth in our transmission lines. I would suggest that east-west line makes considerably more sense than a long-distance north-south. I'm not in opposition to what you've suggested, hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. I think that east-west transmission makes a lot of sense.

I also think, as I mentioned before, that by relining our transmission lines with – you know, it seems like I have shares in 3M, but I don't. I'm certain that there are other companies with similar quality products. By simply changing the style of wire and increasing the ability of the lines to carry, there is less disruption, as I pointed out earlier.

What we need to be doing is using to the best of our ability all kinds of possibilities. That Alberta apparently has the largest number of sunshine hours in Canada is what I've heard. We would have the potential of solar energy, wind energy, the green types of energy that the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod spoke so favourably for, and I agree. I would much rather, when we had that opportunity to use renewable energy, whether it's wind or solar – there's been a fair amount of advancement in the river run style of energy. It doesn't have the same quantities that the other energy has, but it's considerably better than a dam circumstance, which requires flooding.

But what's been proposed, this north-south, at various times as that same type of transportation of power, there's been talk about the transportation of water. We've got our population in the south, and people have talked about intrabasin transfers of water from the north to the south, but whenever that happens, that's when we get a drought up north and sufficient rainfall for crops and so on down south. So it questions messing with Mother Nature and the effects of doing so.

It's important to know that we're not opposed to what can be defined by all individuals as critical transmission. We're not opposed to the notion of stages, providing they get a hearing, that the priority is established, that it's backed by science, that individuals feel that they've had an opportunity to hear from expert witnesses. You know, going back to what I said way back in the second reading aspects, the Compton hearing on the southeast sour gas wells was an education experience. Another education experience in terms of environmental hearings was what occurred with the Black Diamond-Turner Valley potential of combining and drawing from the reservoir that was in Turner Valley. Of course, there was controversy about that reservoir because of the number of oil and gas explorations. In fact, they had to actually move their reservoir from its initial plan – and that was a rather expensive circumstance – because there was a well on the very edge of the reservoir, and there were concerns about the potential of gas seepage.

The point is that without the Alberta Utilities Commission and a hearing process, citizens are left out. They have no opportunity to be informed. They have no opportunity to participate. With this government and its renewed leader – I would suggest renewed as of the November convention – the talk about transparency and accountability and democratic renewal: that has to go from the talk stage to the walk stage, and it's for those reasons that we need to involve our citizenry. We have to provide them with the light of information and the opportunity to discuss where the transmission lines should go and to what extent and with what speed they need to be brought online. The one-sided hearing process, where information is just taken in but doesn't seem to be recorded – it certainly hasn't been transmitted – becomes more of a PR circumstance than it has to do with science or power transmission.

Now, I don't want to take up the whole discussion. I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall has put a lot of preparatory work into his concerns. I'll sit down, Mr. Chair. I thank all government members for the greater patience they showed to my prose than to my poetry.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to speak on Bill 50. The concerns are that the bill, if passed, will bypass the regulatory needs identification hearing for transmission lines deemed to be critical by the cabinet and will impose billions of dollars of costs on consumers without ensuring that the projects are even needed.

We have been talking about the amendments put forward by the Minister of Energy. He's trying to correct the bill. The reasons given for Bill 50 are that we need to speed up the multibillion-dollar upgrades, to expand the aging and inadequate electricity network. Under the present law the Alberta Utilities Commission determines if the proposed transmission lines are in the public interest and satisfy the needs identification requirements and also where the lines are going to go in order to determine the siting of lines. But if the bill becomes law, it will strip the Alberta Utilities Commission's regulatory authority. Cabinet will have full control on how the projects are determined, and the commission will be prohibited from refusing to approve any projects which are deemed to be critical by the provincial government. The cabinet will set the criteria that the commission has to apply in the siting of the projects. So under Bill 50 any new proposed projects coming to the AUC for a public hearing will end, and public consultation is the only way to determine the viability, the feasibility, and the transparency of any project.

The Minister of Energy insists that to avoid blackouts in the province, we need to build the very critically needed transmission lines, and in the amendment proposed by the minister, now he wants to do staged development. If the need was so critical before, then why is the minister backtracking on the proposed bill? This goes to show that the minister is not even sure what he wants to do with the bill.

All the upgrades are needed. We need abundant, low-cost power for our future growth, for job creation. We understand that. All the upgrades are needed for our aging transmission network, but with the slowing of the economy, the growth in demand for power has also slowed. As the member pointed out yesterday, we had a peak demand of almost 9,800 megawatts in 2008, but this dropped down to almost 8,000. The projections are that an additional 11,500 megawatts of power will be needed in 20 years, but we don't need that tomorrow.

We're talking about zero congestion here. If we're talking about zero congestion, we should be talking about zero congestion around the Calgary airport. Barlow Trail will be closing in 2011, and they're going to divert 50,000 cars from Barlow to Deerfoot Trail, so we should be worrying about the congestion around the airport. The airport is the hub for not only Calgary but Alberta. Instead of spending $16 billion to $20 billion, maybe the government should be giving $100 million – I asked the Minister of Transportation to give serious consideration to having zero congestion around the airport by giving maybe $60 million for the airport tunnel. That will go a long way to helping not only the residents of Calgary northeast but Calgarians and Albertans as a whole. We cannot be building 20-lane or 50-lane highways to have zero congestion. I think that's too far-fetched.

It's going to cost us billions and billions of dollars, and when the issue comes about burying the lines underground, who knows what kind of costs will be incurred or if it will even help to solve the problem? I think we shouldn't be going full speed ahead with the bill.

With these amendments I think the minister has tried to address some of the issues. In amendment A he wants to strike out section 1(3) and under section (3) amend section 17. He wants to amend it, but that amendment is not addressing the concerns. The original wording of the bill is that the existing section 17(1) in the Alberta Utilities Commission Act "does not apply to critical transmission infrastructure." This amendment is changing that wording, for sure, by specifying that it is the needs identification process, in particular, that the commission cannot undertake.

With regard to the critical transmission infrastructure this amendment is trying to clarify that other hearings do still remain such as for the siting of these lines. But that is not what section 17(1) addresses. This particular section is dealing only with an agency's role independent of government to assess the need for the transmission lines. If the commission cannot give consideration under section 17(1) to whether the critical transmission infrastructure is required to meet the provincial needs, then section 1 no longer applies. It's as simple as that.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. I believe that as elected representatives we all want the best for our constituents. We want the best for all Albertans. We don't want the power to go out. We want it to be sustainable and predictable, but we haven't come to what the balance is between sustainability and predictability.

One of the most intriguing pieces of legislation that the government has introduced but not finished up on is the land-use strategy. My feeling is that if we had a handle on the land-use strategy and we talked about designated corridors, areas of protection – the idea was to divide the province into five or, potentially, six sections – then the discussions we're having about where transmission corridors might theoretically be placed would be an open and transparent process. Along with the placement of transmission lines we would also have protected areas and corridors for the rapid rail, for example, that people have various opinions on. But if we could establish particular corridors that were defined well in advance so that speculation didn't occur, then it would fit into this overall plan where the lines would be drawn. That doesn't change the fact that we believe the cost of the transmission lines should not be borne solely by the public, but that discussion would certainly help tremendously in terms of future planning for the province.

It's important that we work together on this. Unfortunately – some might say fortunately – this session is rapidly drawing to a close and leaving several bits of unfinished business that will go unattended. The opportunities to further debate, for example, Bill 206, the opportunity to even enter into discussions on Bill 209: these are all lost opportunities. But I guess we'll have another crack at it, probably, mid-February.

I wish everyone well in the discussion that will continue tonight, and I'm hoping that it will be fruitful. Possibly the government has more amendments to this bill that may bring it into line or at least closer into line with what Albertans have been telling this government and, certainly, telling opposition members.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but it's 6 o'clock, and Standing Order 4(4) requires that we recess until 7:30.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the committee is back to order. Please be seated.

Bill 50 Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: When we adjourned this afternoon, we were on amendment A1. Are there any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just can't tell you how thrilled I am. I've tried really hard to listen to all of this debate – we're now, I think, more than a week into the debate on this bill – on the Tannoy if I was back at the Annex, and if not, I have tried to follow along by reading Hansard. I cannot believe I did that, but I tried.

Currently we are speaking to the government amendment which is on the floor with no subamendments. It doesn't seem to me that anybody has actually spoken directly to the government amendment that is on the floor, so I'd like to do that. Once the amendment has been dealt with, I'd like the opportunity to seek the chairman's permission to stand again and just speak more generally on the clause debate in Committee of the Whole.

Going back, I was going through my file, and I was noticing that, you know, I started to collect e-mails and letters and such from people back in the summer, which makes sense because the minister put this on the floor in the spring session so that there would be the opportunity for people to give him some feedback to the bill, thus all the wonderful people that I've had an opportunity to correspond with. But in listening to the debate and reading the correspondence, these are the issues that I've been hearing over and over again: the question of need, the question of crisis, the question of public consultation, the question of cost, the question of cost paid by others – I think we could refer to that now as the Lexus argument – the reliability of the line, and the question of whether the lines are for us or for export. There have been sort of subquestions there about how fast this needs to proceed, who pays, and who decides. As I see it, those are the issues that are live in this particular discussion.

What we saw coming forward in the government amendment was an attempt, I think, to address some of the criticism that had been levelled over the summer and, indeed, some of the issues that I just highlighted in that sort of shopping list. The first is section A, which deals with the needs question, as I understand it. I'm sure that if I'm wrong, the minister will be happy to correct me. He certainly didn't hold back from correcting anyone else. I think that what I see in the government's attempt to correct this is that we didn't really correct the problem with this amendment. The bill continues to bypass the needs identification process. So the changes that are being proposed by the government don't actually do anything to address that concern.

We have the original wording that the Alberta Utilities Commission Act does not apply to critical transmission infrastructure. Now we have a subamendment here that's being put in under section (2), which is being added under the original section. It clarifies, essentially, that other hearings are still in play, that they remain, that they're accessible, such as for the siting of the lines. The minister has been very clear that that continues to be available, but it's not what's being addressed here. The section actually only deals with the AUC's role independent of government to assess the need for the transmission lines. If the commission cannot give consideration under 17(1) to whether that critical transmission infrastructure, which is a term I keep seeing come up, is required to meet provincial needs, then 17(1) itself no longer applies. It should be as simple as that. So I'm arguing that there's no substantive difference made to Bill 50 by what we see in what we're calling amendment A.

If I can go on to section B of the amendment, which is amending section 2(6), appearing at the bottom of page 7, if you have a paper copy of the bill. Otherwise, it's essentially appearing under subsection (9). What's happening here is that there's a whole other piece being added in on staged development, 41.4 The previous section was 41.3. This is a whole big section that gets stuck into the bill as an amendment.

What we've got here is mostly around language: critical transmission infrastructure, CTI. Okay. It's subject to regulations, to "specify and make available to the public milestones that the Independent System Operator will use to determine the timing of the stages of the expansion of the terminals." But what's missing here is what the timing is.

It's one thing to come forward in the act and say: "All right. We're going to give stages. We're going to implement stages, or milestones, into the bill." Fair enough. But part of this was the issue around a sort of larger understanding of timing. If you tell me that you're going to do this in stages but you don't tell me how far apart the stages are – they could be a week apart, a month apart. I don't mean to be frivolous but quite genuine in saying that you haven't resolved the problem. To tell me that this is going to be staged and then not tell me what the increments are in the staging is not helpful. It doesn't move the issue ahead, or it doesn't resolve the issue that people were concerned about. So it talks about those milestones.

The second piece of it is that the facilities that are referred to "shall be developed in stages in accordance with subsection (3)." Subsection (3) talks about that the schedule shall be developed first, may initially be energized at 240 kV, and the ISO shall, subject to the regulations, specify, et cetera, et cetera. It says it's going to be staged and then doesn't tell us how far apart or even give us an example. Is it a year, or is it five-year increments? Nothing. If you don't give me those increments, it didn't make this meaningful. So that's not going to help.

Moving on to the next section, which would appear as amendment C, which, for people following along on the paper bill, appears on page 10. Again, it's another whole piece that gets inserted. It's under section 2(12)(b), and following (1)(v.4), we're inserting section (v.5). This talks about the establishment of a committee with the ISO, representatives of customers, and other persons determined by the regulation, which again gives us no detail, to provide records to customers in relation to construction of transmission facilities. This one I think is getting a little closer to what I was looking for in that it's supposed to be giving these records in relation to costs, scope, and construction schedules of the transmission facilities.

The second piece of it is that the records of the ISO, transmission facility officers, and persons directed under different sections must be provided to the committee for the purposes of doing the first, which is to provide that to the public that have asked for it. Essentially, this is giving the public more information on the lines, but again what's missing here is a timeline. I take it that this information gets passed on but once everything has already been approved.

Do you know what it reminds me of, Mr. Chairman? It's the whole process that we get involved with in trying to get information around P3s, especially around P3s but also around any kind of contract that the government does. We have a process in which the requests for proposals, or the old-fashioned concept of tendered bids, are always closed. We see the very initial request that the government puts out, but it's not very specific. We have no idea how the various entities are responding and what they are agreeing that they will do or not do to what level. We don't get to see that because it's always a closed process. From that the successful bidder is chosen, and they enter into a contract with the government. Then when we try to get information at that stage, we're told: "You can't see the contract. It's a contract with a third party, business product, blah blah blah. Sorry. You can't see it." So the public, the media, the opposition never get a chance in that process to see things.

When we were trying to determine, for example, how cost-effective it was and what was included and not included in the contracts for some of the P3s – the courthouse is one that comes to mind, and of course that one didn't proceed – we actually couldn't get any information about it. This process is a little bit similar, to me, because it says that the information will be provided, but it's provided once all the deals are made, all the contracts are out, and the thing is under construction. "Now you can have the information about it." Nice but not very useful because what are the people that now get this information supposed to do with it? Stand on the highway or down the middle of the right-of-way and go: "Excuse me. I've now got information, and I wish you hadn't done this. I have information that says that you could be doing it cheaper. Whoa. Stop. Don't put that up." You know, it's kind of lip service. It's addressing part of what people were so angry about but not in a way that ends up being meaningful.

You know, if pressed, I would say that, yes, I would support this particular section of the amendment more than I would support the previous two, but I kind of wonder what difference it would make.

Let me move on to D, section 2(13), which is appearing on page 12 of the hard copy. I'm sorry if I back up a bit. Here they're replacing the sections that you see currently and giving what is in effect a staging of the line that is supposed to go up to Fort McMurray. If you read the two of them, what was and what will be in this amendment, you get two different versions of it, but essentially it creates a staging for that line.

There's something else in here. In section (2) it talks about that the terminals should have an initial capacity of at least 1,000 megawatts each and be expandable to a minimum capacity of 2,000 megawatts each. Interesting. Remember that earlier I was talking about a reference that will turn up. This is the reference that turns up. It proposes that the lines can go forward in stages rather than all at once, and it's adjusting, as I said, in a minor way the connection between Edmonton and Fort McMurray to allow for the staging of that. Now, unless I've missed something, this is not dealing with the one that goes between Edmonton and Calgary.

I think the argument here is that it can get at that charge of overbuilding, the kind of Lexus complaint that we've heard, that with these lines, which are the HVDC lines, which are the more expensive technology, if it was felt they were overbuilding: you could see this amendment as addressing that. It allows it to kind of back off of that gold-plated status. But we're still getting that jump from 1,000 to 2,000 and no details in there about a minimum of one year in increments or a minimum of six months or five years. There's no timing involved with that. So, again, part of the same problem. You get a gold-plated approach, but it's a staged gold-plated approach. It doesn't really change the principle of the bill. Again, if I was pressed to it, it does include the staging, it does deal with the gold-plated, but it doesn't have a huge effect on the final shape of the bill.

Section E is amending section 19, which is on the bottom of page 12, and striking out "or is not in the public interest." Again, this is looking to me as though it's a cosmetic change that does not address any of the major issues that have been brought forward. It removes one of the restrictions in section 3 that was placed on the Alberta Utilities Commission, but it leaves in place others of equal import and force. So it's not even one step forward, two steps back; it's one step sideways, and another one back. It's just another dance step that leaves you standing in exactly the same position where you were.

The commission is still prevented from saying whether or not the transmission lines are needed. You know, what it reminded me of is a toggle switch. What you get is an off/on position. All we're allowing in a number of places in this bill is for the agencies in power to say yes/no but not anything else and not to deal with anything else.

I think the government – well, the government clearly set out in this bill to do something very specific. They feel justified in doing it. But, frankly, based on everything I've seen since and listening to the debate that's happened, there are a lot of experts not in this House – and that's not casting aspersions – who are questioning whether this is needed and how fast it proceeds and how expensive it is. There were a lot of them.

We had the University of Calgary School of Public Policy. I mean, there are statements like: "It is less likely that project approval and conditions will be driven by short-term political interests and more likely that the regulator's perspective will reflect long-term benefits and costs to the province." Then it goes on to talk about: "A public process allows for greater scrutiny of alternative points of view and . . . [requirements] to provide . . . rationale." So they don't seem very keen on it.

We had the Environmental Law Centre saying, "Instead of enhancing the transmission approval process, Bill 50 would make the problem of needs assessment and approval for transmission infrastructure in Alberta worse."

We had EDC Associates for the Utilities Consumer Advocate: "Much of the data and logic presented by AESO is unconvincing and overstates the sense of urgency."

We had the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta: "Forcing a new transmission build program on existing ratepayers that will treble and potentially quadruple transmission costs in the next 10 years, without any cost control or oversight mechanisms . . ." They go on.

One that I would have thought would have been a favourite of this government, which is the Fraser Institute, you know, with commentary like: "That's nonsense . . . Although transmission upgrades in Alberta are needed, the growth in demand for electricity has actually slowed in recent years and the network operators have determined there's no imminent adequacy gap under even the worst scenario." [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] I'll look for another opportunity.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before we continue, may we revert to Introduction of Guests? Are you agreed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere.

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly in this House tonight the 10th LDS Connors Hill Scout group with the Northern Lights Council. Slader Oviatt is one of the leaders here today. He's a very good friend of mine since kindergarten, when we both lived right by Sherwood Park, and actually we both attended Fultonvale in that constituency. He's also a very accomplished outdoorsman. If you want the most random trivia that you have ever heard, in 2004 he actually carried the flag of Sealand. I bet you that no one here knows where Sealand is, but he actually carried the flag of Sealand to the summit of Mt. Muztagh Ata, at an altitude of almost 25,000 feet. It's one of the biggest peaks in the world, in China. We're really grateful to have him. Slader is joined by fellow Scout and Venture leaders Bill Kwatic and Matt Burgess and the Scouts – you can put your hand up when I call your name – Andrew Gayleard, Grayson Gross, Mark West, John DeMaris, Dan Sherman, Dallin Backstrom, Scott LaVoy, and James DeMaris. Could we give them a warm welcome.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the opportunity to stand and debate some of the merits of Bill 50. I want to thank the member opposite for presenting opinions and a case in a manner in which it allows, I think, for some constructive debate relative to the issues that you bring up.

Initially you had three questions: how fast, who pays, and who decides? I think, Mr. Chairman, I can go through that, and perhaps there'll be a better understanding at the end of our debate on the relative merits of what we're doing and, of course, perhaps the downside of some of the issues we had prior to the amendments that we have in front of us.

How fast? The situation that we have in front of us, of course, is a culmination of about a decade's worth of work in the province of Alberta by a number of stakeholders. Of course, these have changed over a period of time because prior to 2003 and the new Electric Utilities Act we didn't have the structure that we have today, so this even precedes some of that. How fast is a good question because the initial AESO documentation that indicated the requirement for critical transmission infrastructure had a number of pieces of infrastructure in it that appeared as though they had to all be pretty much put together at the same time. We know that with these amendments and the staging that's going to take place, how fast will be addressed by the amendments. The pieces of infrastructure will be staged over a period of time, probably starting dates spread out over likely something in the neighbourhood of five years. However, that again will be determined by an assessment that would be taken to the AUC after the initial pieces are constructed, so there'll be trigger points that have to be met.

The second thing, Mr. Chairman: who pays? There has only ever in the province of Alberta – well, better not say ever. I believe that since about 1948 – and I think we were talking about this the other day – there was a decision and determination made by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, I believe, in that period of time, that the system in Alberta would be constructed by others other than the government. So it's always been an independently owned system.

There was a short period of time where there was almost on an experimental basis an opportunity to see if it would make a difference or make things more economic, more efficient if the generators were responsible to pay for part of the transmission system. It was short-lived, but there was a period of time. If my memory serves me right, it would have probably been something in the neighbourhood of five years. I don't recall exactly. It occurs to me that it was prior to the 2003 Electric Utilities Act and maybe sometime just after, something like that.

Anyway, what happened in those days was the system was vertically integrated, so you had a generator, transmitter, distributor, and retailer all piled up. The idea was that if the generator was responsible for part of the transmission costs, they would be more responsible in their business operations as an integrated company to be sure that the transmission costs were not exorbitant. However, I must say that it didn't really achieve anything because, in fact, what happened then was that those costs in those days under the regulated system were downloaded to the generator, the generator took it to the regulator with those costs rolled in, and the consumer still paid the bill. It was no different, really, than it is today. At the end of that scheme the consumers paid for generation, transmission, distribution, and retailing, the same way they pay for it today.

Who decides? Mr. Chairman, in order to address that concern, I have to deviate a bit from the amendment, but I need to address the question because I think it's very important. It is part and parcel of Bill 50 with respect to critical transmission. It's part and parcel not really of the amendment, but it belongs here. So if you would allow me, I need to explain to the House what AESO is. There's been a lot of talk around that AESO is an arm of the government, that AESO does whatever it is the minister wants, whatever the cabinet wants, whatever the government wants, or whatever somebody wants. But let's be clear about this. AESO is a legal entity that's created by the Electric Utilities Act. It specifically provides in the legislation specified that AESO is not part of a ministry, is not a provincial corporation, and is not an agent of the Crown. Its duties and responsibilities are those derived from the Electric Utilities Act and the related regulation, together referred to as the existing legislation.

Now, the connection. AESO board members are appointed by the minister, and thereafter their conduct is governed by the existing legislation. Short of making new legislation or amending the existing legislation, there is no role, no authority for the minister or the government of Alberta to interfere with or to be active in the day-to-day workings of the AESO. They are an independent body. The AESO under legislation must, by law, operate according to a mandate. Their mandate as they approach transmission planning includes things like, by the way, the Edmonton to Calgary reinforcement project. This is where people really feel the AESO is just out there doing something that I directed or somebody directed or because my friends want to do something. That's not the case.

The AESO under legislation are directed. They must assess the needs of market participants and plan transmission systems to meet the needs. They must make arrangements to expand the transmission system. They must forecast the needs of Alberta and develop plans to meet those needs. They must proceed with timely implementation of expansion. They must prepare and submit approvals to the AUC, and they're doing that. They must forecast future need and plan for transmission to be in place to meet the needs. They must plan a transmission system that can accommodate 100 per cent of the required energy use under normal conditions and 95 per cent under abnormal conditions in the transmission regulations. They must arrange to expand the transmission system so all the foregoing

2 per cent criteria can be accommodated. Exceptions may be permitted but only for limited periods of time and with the approval of AUC.

There's another issue that came up about nonwire solutions. Nonwire solutions under the legislation may be an acceptable exception but only in very limited circumstances and for limited periods of time. Geographic separation of transmission lines must be considered for reliability as well as locating lines in a way that reduces the size of the right-of-way required even if these indications may result in additional costs. It's the legislation that they operate under. We have not directed them to do anything.

That, I think, Mr. Chairman, leads into the rest of who decides. We have a system in the province. Since the Electric Utilities Act of 2003 this business had been set up with a number of units, and I know the member opposite knows them. The changes that took place in '06 with respect to splitting the EUB into the ERCB for an energy regulator and the Alberta Utilities Commission for a utility regulator set up a situation where who decides at the end of the day is always – always – the Alberta Utilities Commission. None of these pieces of infrastructure – not noncritical, not critical – can be constructed, can be commissioned, or can be energized without the authority of the AUC. What Bill 50 does with respect to that, who decides – and please remember what I said about the AUC's responsibility. We have never determined the need. The government of Alberta has never determined the need. The need was determined by AESO independently.

What Bill 50 allows the government to do is approve the need that the AESO determined. After that process takes place, the permit and licensing procedures that go forward will be determined under the existing system that's been in place since 2003. We think it is a very, very good system. It allows for any Albertan – any Albertan – to approach the AUC and ask to be an intervenor, ask for status at the hearings. Some – some – individuals may not be awarded costs, but many will be. We have things like the consumer's advocate. They have a mandate to go before the AUC to act on behalf of consumers in Alberta.

There will be a number of intervenors whose costs would be applied for and covered. I can think of people like, I'm sure, the industrial power consumers, probably people like the chemical producers, perhaps municipalities, and there may be others. But the decision point takes place there, in a quasi-judicial setting away from politicians and away from the possible situation that you might find in some jurisdictions where politics would enter into that decision. The decision rests solely with the AUC. I've explained, I think, Mr. Chairman, that we're not bypassing the needs. AESO identifies needs; we only approve.

The costs. Again, there was quite a bit of discussion there. If I may, the cost oversight committee, something that has never been here, will be here now. I tell you, I really think this is a very good piece of business. What has happened in the past is that you get through needs identification, you get through P and L, you start into procurement, construction, commissioning, and energizing. Mr. Chairman, what happened in the past, before this amendment, is that at the end of all of that and the piece of infrastructure is energized, the AUC then holds a tariff hearing. In the tariff hearing all of the wrapped-up costs, all the costs with respect to that piece of infrastructure, are brought to the AUC, and they make a determination there whether those costs are justified and right for that piece of infrastructure. When they reach an agreement that it is correct, then those costs are rolled into the rate base.

The way this works now – at that point, remember, none of the people that go to intervene in the tariff hearing would have had any opportunity to see the costs beforehand – with this committee they will be able to track the costs from procurement through construction through commissioning and energizing. When they go to the tariff hearings, they have all of the relevant information that they require to make a proper intervention on behalf of Albertans.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that is definitely a major piece of the amendments that we have in here, the other piece, of course, being talking about the AUC's need to operate in the public interest and the situation with respect to timing. There's the staging. I believe that I've covered most of the points.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, and my thanks to the minister for engaging in that. I guess a couple of observations in response. I think the question of who pays is really a question of a deregulation sandwich or a regulation sandwich. We have the generators as a private entity and deregulated. We have the transmission in the middle, which is handled by a not-for-profit society, which is AESO. Then you have the retail, which is also private-sector driven. Those become your deregulation sandwich. In your regulation sandwich you have the distributor in there as well. I personally prefer a regulated sandwich, but we've moved beyond that in this province, and I don't know how you would try and get back there again. I think that a regulated one ends up being better for the consumer.

Part of what I'm sensing in people's frustration around this bill is the sense that they're going to end up paying, and they don't have a lot of input. Now, the minister clearly disagrees with me and has walked through a system that he believes actually enhances their ability. But I'm thinking back to things like the Boston Tea Party because the point of that was that they threw their tea in the harbour because they were not going to pay taxes on it. They'd rather have thrown it in the harbour than pay taxes on it. The point of it was, you know, no taxation without representation.

What I see happening here is that there is a requirement that the consumer pays. The consumers are looking at this. They are looking at the current situation, they are looking at what the government is putting in place with Bill 50, and they feel that they do not get access into the decision-making process at the critical time, that there is no appeal process that is evident, and that they don't have a meaningful opportunity to halt the way things are going. I think that's the crux of everything. I think that's why people are so frustrated with this bill out there, outside of this building. They feel they are going to end up paying for something.

My colleague has made the point that most of the consumers of electricity in Alberta are not, you know, you and me. They're not individuals. They are the industrial sector and the commercial sector. Those are the people that are really going to end up paying. I think that when we listen to some of the arguments that have been made, including the ones that have been made by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who, to give him credit, actually debated this bill and spoke on the record more than once, his point was, you know – and that's always interesting because I find that if there's actually a good argument, people just present the good argument. But when they're a little uncertain about their argument, they end up getting up and trying to belittle their opponent, get up and say, "Well, you're not smart enough to grasp this" and "This is beyond you."

It was interesting because both times the Member for Livingstone-Macleod did that. He started to make an argument and then went off into just bashing anyone that didn't agree with him: they were stupid if they didn't agree with him, and did they not understand this? I listened to every word you said, member, and I followed it up.

Mr. Berger: I never said the word "stupid."

Ms Blakeman: No, you didn't use the word "stupid." That's true. You didn't use the word "stupid," but you certainly questioned people's intelligence and that if they were not going to go along with this, they were somehow – I mean, this was the last that you were talking about this afternoon, that if people didn't support this, we were somehow demanding that we go backwards and that there be no improvement. Nobody has said that on this side. That's not what part of the debate is. But it does indicate to me that, you know, if there were really good arguments there, you'd deliver the arguments as you believe them.

The Minister of Energy just did that, and he managed to do it without ever insulting my intelligence, my parentage, my belief system, or anything else. He believed in his arguments, and he put them on the record. I was really interested that not very many members of the government caucus, to be fair, actually spoke on this bill, but for a number of those that did, that was the way they approached it. Rather than putting the argument out, it was about insulting the people that had spoken against the bill, which is always an indicator to me that things aren't going well.

I got way off topic there, Mr. Chairman: Boston Tea Party, representation.

I think the fact that AESO is independent, fair enough. But who sits there to make those decisions, who are the decision-makers, is decided by the government. The government totally controls who ends up being appointed to that decision-making body. I'll just take a bit of a flyer here in my imagination, but I cannot imagine the Minister of Energy even on his most generous day, you know, appointing a known Liberal to that group, for example. I think the political process is involved in this by the appointees to AESO. Although it is supposedly nonpolitical and protected from that, I would argue that who gets on there is the political control. The minister says: well, from then on they're governed by the legislation. Yeah. But how they choose to work their way through that legislation is always in itself a political process.

The other thing: my understanding, and I could be wrong here, on the hearings that he was talking about. Were not those the hearings in which only landowners who were directly affected could participate? I think that there's a number of problems with those hearings in that they have been changed from what people believed they should have been entitled to, whether their costs are covered, how much notice they get, et cetera, et cetera, so their ability to directly affect the outcome is pretty limited.

I'll go on. I think the tariff hearings are part of what I was talking about before. You may get all of that information, but you get it after the fact. The deal is done. The car has been driven off the lot and is out of sight. The fact that you know how much the tires were and how much the windshield was: great. But the car is gone; it's already happened and moved away. I don't see that as, you know, a meaningful participation in the process. Further to that, if it's determined that something was too much, does the consumer get their money back? I doubt it.

I'm going back to my original take on the government motion, which is what is still before us on the floor. I think that, as I often feel with the government, they were trying to address something, but it was more about, "How can we look like we're addressing this?" than "How can we actually do it?" I still don't see a solid appeal process in here. I still don't see the incremental time that I was asking about that makes those stages meaningful. So I think that Bill 50 is not satisfying the criticisms that have been directed at it.

I'm sure there are others that want to participate in this debate, and I will give the floor to them at this point while I go through the rest of my notes and dig out the next go-round.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Liepert: Oh, he showed up.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You bet, hon. Member for Calgary-West, the Minister of Health and Wellness, I certainly did show up.

Mr. Liepert: I wondered where you were.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if you want to know where I was, I was at Rexall Place, Mr. Chairman, listening to a rather interesting presentation on our transmission system in this province or our lack of transmission planning in this province. There were many people at the meeting. There was a crowd on Wayne Gretzky Drive that was looking to find a place to park. How was it? It was a busy, busy place. I didn't see any Conservative MLAs there, but that doesn't mean they weren't. It was a big crowd.

Mr. Quest: We were here.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, you're here, and you're welcome to participate, hon. member, in the debate, in the discussion on Bill 50.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, when we look at the amendments that were proposed last Thursday by the hon. Minister of Energy, if the government thinks this is going to silence the thousands of people who have issues with this bill and with this transmission policy, they are going to be disappointed because the amendments that have been tossed out, whether it's A or whether it's B, C, D, or E, are certainly not what is going to satisfy the people I talked to earlier this evening. The people I talked to have been following this process for quite some time. Some of them have been attending meetings for close to a year.

Last summer there was a meeting in Morinville. There were well over a thousand people, I'm told, at the Agriplex. I would have gone, but I didn't have an opportunity. I did meet one of the landowners. Which constituency did this gentleman live in? I believe it would be Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, Mr. Chairman. This individual had land that was going to be intersected or divided down the middle by one of the transmission proposals, and he was very upset. Not only was he upset at how he was going to work on his land, how he was going to get from one piece to the other, but he was upset at this government because he feels that this government is no longer listening to him nor representing his best interests. He was very, very disappointed.

Now, the amendments this evening, Mr. Chairman: are they going to address any of the issues that other citizens who attended this meeting had, other citizens who are very concerned about the size of their bill? If we look at the long-term transmission system plan, we will see where AESO is estimating the monthly cost to be $8. We had received correspondence from St. Albert where the hon. member there had quoted the same figure of $8 a month for the cost of these proposed transmission upgrades. But people tonight at the meeting at Rexall Place were not satisfied nor convinced that was the total monthly cost.

We look at the estimate in the long-term transmission systems plan, and to their credit the board has it broken down. We've got to realize, Mr. Chairman, that the total bill has grown and grown and grown, and we know why. We have eliminated the long-term planning function for a long period of time. This long-term planning function was to grow or expand the transmission and distribution system as the population grew and as the economy grew.

We talked a little bit about this at second reading. Mr. Chairman, that's why we're in the trouble we are now. That's why we have a flawed bill and we have these amendments that are essentially a public relations exercise. The minister and his colleagues are hopeful that this is going to satisfy all the questions that people have raised since June, when this bill was first introduced. They certainly are not.

We heard earlier the minister talk about the needs application, AESO's role in all of this. He's correct, but ultimately the minister is responsible for appointing the board. Now, the AESO may be – may be – independent, but certainly it is the minister and it is this government that are calling the shots and writing or setting the rules by which they operate. Regardless of whether it's the transmission plan or if we look at the latest annual report of AESO, we can see where the problems are.

Now, one of the problems that was outlined to me earlier this evening was the energy policy of this government and the desire to export large volumes of electricity.

Mr. Liepert: There you go.

Mr. MacDonald: There you go.

Now, surely the minister of health has had a chance to read the annual report of the AESO, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] I'm not so certain that he has read all of the fine details in the annual report of the Ministry of Health and Wellness. If he has some spare time, he could certainly have a look at this, and he would see precisely what I'm talking about, and that is the difference – he's distracting me. I agree. Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Tie it into the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: I will tie it into the amendment through the interties that are proposed in this transmission plan. There are four. There's a potential fifth one over in Saskatchewan, between Fort McMurray and northwestern Saskatchewan, but we'll get to that in a minute.

Now, we look, Mr. Chairman, at the chart that outlines the import of electricity over a period of time and the export of electricity from Alberta over a period of time, the intertie statistics from 2004 through to 2008. Citizens from St. Albert, actually, that I talked to tonight asked directly about the government's plans for exporting electricity. You can go on the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie's computer, and you can see within two to three minutes what this government has proposed for electricity exports. If we look at 2004, we were in thousands of megawatts. Over a million were exported. It has declined significantly through to 2008, where we're about half that capacity. That's for total exports. Whether it's year over year or whatever, it's gone down. We need the power here. We need the power here, and the minister knows that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'm having difficulty seeing how you're going to tie all of that into this amendment here.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Please see if you can get to that.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay.

Now, when we look at imports of electricity, and we start at 2004 . . .

Mr. Knight: There's nothing about imports in the bill or the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: But, hon. minister, we're talking about the interties here.

Mr. Knight: Well, now we can have a discussion.

Mr. MacDonald: You bet, and we should have a long discussion.

The Deputy Chair: Please address the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Yes. See, they're distracting me again.

The Deputy Chair: Okay, then. Focus on the chair.

Mr. MacDonald: They're rascals, Mr. Chairman, pure and simple. They're just rascals. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we compare 2004 to 2005, 2008, we can see where our reliance on the interties for imports of electricity is very, very important. Regardless of how often this government and its spokespersons say that deregulation has been a success and we have all this generation capacity that's been created, that intertie report changes that because clearly that has not happened.

Mr. Chairman, we can talk and we can tell people and we can explain to people that what the government has done to date is working, that electricity deregulation is in our best interest – it's in the public interest; it's in their economic interest – but that's not so. That information on the flow of electricity into this province and out of this province through the interties tells the real story. It tells the real story.

Now, if someone were to look at this amendment who was at the meeting tonight in Rexall Place, for instance, and they were to see this and they were to read this and it was the staged development of CTI referred to in schedule whatever, Mr. Chairman, the critical transmission infrastructure includes those interties. The question of who pays for them and where has never been, to my knowledge, addressed by this government.

Now, this amendment, as we see it here: if you look at – and I'll be specific – amendment B, “subject to the regulations,” Mr. Chairman, you can clearly see that this regulation could be a blank cheque. We have no idea.

When we look at what started out as a possible $2 billion tab – and whenever we brought this up in question period about eight years ago, we received the same skepticism from the members across the way as I did when I started my remarks and the skepticism I received from the Minister of Health and Wellness. Eight years ago government members scoffed: it's impossible; that bill will never reach $2 billion. Now they anticipate that it could be $14 billion. It could go as high as $20 billion. That's in eight years.

Mr. Liepert: You should have let us build it then.

Mr. MacDonald: Didn't want to build any infrastructure then. The reason why, hon. member, there was no infrastructure built was because of the chaos and confusion that was created because of electricity deregulation. Investors weren't going to put their money down. Sorry. Investor uncertainty. You look at the generation side: same thing. Capital Power, as they're called, Mr. Chairman, and TransAlta had a joint venture to reduce risk. This huge bill that we're now looking at as a result of no long-term planning, this megabill, has grown and grown and grown. Generators, of course, don't have to pay a cent of it. That's another reason why consumers, not taxpayers but consumers, are so skeptical of this proposal.

Now, when we look at the critical transmission infrastructure and we look at the decisions around deciding what is to be critical transmission infrastructure, again, we have to be very, very leery, Mr. Chairman. I would like to point out to hon. members that we're looking at a problem, and I touched on this in second reading. The generation reserve margin is, in my view, a problem that is equal to if not greater than the neglect of the transmission and distribution system that has occurred under the watch of this government. Since generation of electricity is a competitive business in Alberta – and whether that's a good thing or a bad thing depends on who you talk to – the amount of generation developed in this province is determined by market participants, supposedly based on market signals. The Premier today in question period obviously hadn't heard of a location-based credit, the trusty old LBCs, which were a subsidy by this government initiated because we needed very quickly to site some generation in specific locations because of the transmission neglect.

Now, it's interesting to note – and maybe tomorrow the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie can ask the Premier why there is no adequacy reserve margin requirement defined by an authoritative body in Alberta. Perhaps the Minister of Energy in the course of debate this evening can tell us that, and we won't have to ask that in question period tomorrow. This is very, very important, Mr. Chairman, and it gets back to the staged development of this supposedly critical transmission infrastructure.

Now, the AESO, which the hon. members for Grande Prairie-Smoky and Edmonton-Centre discussed in their debate, expects that the market will continue to send the necessary signals to generation developers, motivating them to develop additional supply as it is required. Well, we hope so. I don't think we can blame anyone but this government when the lights go out. But they're looking for a scapegoat, and incredibly they were even going to try to pin it on the New Democrats here the other day, which I found interesting, to say the least.

The AESO, Mr. Chairman, uses a reserve margin as a proxy for the amount of generation added to the system due to these market signals. These market signals, in my view, are not a development of free enterprise. I'll never be convinced of that. I could present a lot of information here, but an effective reserve margin of 10 per cent is considered appropriate for the purposes of estimating the generation capacity that will be installed to meet total Alberta peak load. I would ask members here who have their computers and have them turned on to go to the AESO website and, before we go any further with discussion on amendment B as we know it, have a look at the long-term metrics that are reported there. You will see on the graph where in two to three years we are going to be operating with very little, if any, reserve margin. Very little, if any, Mr. Chairman. I think that is a major cause for concern. With our severe climate we could and we probably will run short of electricity in that time frame.

Now, while the government and while the cabinet are determining which lines should be built . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister of health.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to move adjournment of debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 60, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2009, and Bill 62, the Emergency Health Services Amendment Act, 2009, and report progress on Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bills: Bill 60, Bill 62. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 50. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 53

Professional Corporations Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of the Professional Corporations Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, on behalf of my colleague for Lethbridge-West.

The Acting Speaker: Do any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we had many questions earlier on Bill 53. I certainly understand the member's interest and his earnestness to tee up a meeting, but it was after session started, and it was very difficult to do. When we look at how this act is going to amend a number of statutes that govern or regulate various professions, we have to be very, very careful that we can afford this at this time. Earlier in debate we had asked a number of questions about how this will affect corporate taxes in this province. I wasn't satisfied with the answers. I reviewed Hansard – and I will apologize if somehow I missed it – and I looked at the debate as it progressed on Bill 53, and I did not see the details, the answers, the information that I was seeking from second reading.

Certainly, whenever you compare our tax structure to other provinces', not just on the personal level but certainly at the corporate level, we have some room. Fortunately, we have a competitive taxation system. I hope we continue to maintain that. With this government I'm never sure, Mr. Speaker, of that, but hopefully we will maintain that robust competitive advantage. But with this bill, when you compare all the tax rates and you see how we are in this province – and you only have to look at the annual report of the province of Alberta to recognize that we're very competitive, particularly with our western neighbours – on what this series of amendments will do I'm still waiting for the answers from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West. Until I receive those, I will not be enthusiastically supporting this bill. I need more information.

I know this bill will allow income sharing by members who have a registered professional corporation with their spouses and children. I'm not saying that there's anything wrong with that. I know other jurisdictions have successfully completed that. But when you look at our tax rates and you look at their tax rates, it is only fair to get the details as to exactly how much money this government anticipates losing. It's not a million dollars. That's the information we received at the time of the brief. I have been waiting patiently for that information. I have yet to receive it, and hopefully I will before we conclude debate on the Professional Corporations Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. Until I get that information, I will reserve judgment on this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I was hoping that there would have been answers back from the sponsoring member. The questions that I'd raised in Committee of the Whole fit into two sort of categories. One was around making the set-up for small businesses the same for Albertan companies as they are for B.C. companies. In other words, it was about TILMA. It was my understanding that this was supposed to harmonize – that's the word I'm looking for – and this was one of the areas that was supposed to be adjusted. It's being adjusted, but it's not being adjusted to harmonize with TILMA. I didn't get an answer about why the adjustments were being made in this bill, but they weren't being made so that they harmonized with B.C. What was the thought process behind that?

The second piece was sort of a part A and a part B, which was around there being no allowable use of holding companies, which is something that's pretty common for small businesses. Without that, they have to do a sort of little jig every couple of years to stay in adherence. I was curious about why that didn't happen.

Then there's the use of family trusts. It's very limited in this bill. My question was: why wasn't it more? Indeed, a number of issues have been raised by an accountant that had approached me with some very specific questions.

Then the last part was: what was the government expecting from the forgone revenue? That is somewhat linked to the question of my colleague who spoke previously. You know, forgone revenue is revenue that you give up when you put in something like an incentive. Tax incentives – let's face it – are a way that government can drive change. An incentive will cause people to want to do something. A disincentive will cause people to not want to do something. When you give up what would have been revenue into the general coffers by offering a tax incentive or disincentive, but in most cases an incentive, it means there's less money coming into the coffers. You have to have a way of measuring the effectiveness of that program, so you need to be able to say: "Okay. We've got X number of dollars not coming into the coffers. That's okay because the difference in that money we expect is going to get us X, Y, and Z."

We have not had anything put in front of us that would be able to justify that, and that's what I was looking for. Surely, a member of the government would not be bringing forward a bill without having considered that. You start to say: "Well, then, why are you not bringing it forward? You must have considered it. Why didn't you bring it forward? Why can't you answer my questions?"

I didn't start out having huge problems with this bill, but the more information that's being not delivered, the more problems I have with it. I think at one point there was probably an agreement that there would have been support for it, but that's kind of ebbing away now, both because it didn't do what it purported to do and it also fails to be able to set before me as a legislator some measurable targets to be able to say: this is what we expect to gain by having this bill in place. You know, if we're going to forgo, as my colleague said, a million dollars worth of tax revenue – other people say it's more. Fine. Whatever. Whichever it is, what are we getting for that? What do the people of Alberta get for the fact that they weren't able to collect that money into the general coffers and use it in another way. Okay. Then what are they getting? What are we getting for that forgone revenue?

It's the same as paying it out. Not taking it in is the same as paying it out, and when we pay it out, we have performance measurements about what benefit the taxpayer gets for that money that's paid out. If you don't bring the money in deliberately as a policy, you should be able to measure that as well. This is not new. This is a fairly accepted accounting practice, so why can't I get that information on this bill? That's all I was looking for, and I didn't get it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members that wish to speak? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mainly, the questions that I wanted to ask have been asked by the two previous speakers, my colleagues. I do think it's important. The bill itself I can understand. It's just bringing us in line with the rest of the provinces. It's bringing the professional people in our province in line with the tax exemptions that the ordinary small businessperson gets already in this province.

I think that if you're going to bring a bill of this magnitude forward, the numbers really should be there to see if, in fact, we may be losing valuable tax revenue dollars. Some of it is conjecture, of course, because what they're trying to do is offset the money that they would lose in terms of the ability to retain our professionals and, in fact, recruit professionals into this province. Certainly, I think we need doctors. I'm sure that this freeze on doctors and nurses isn't going to last forever and that we will be looking for more doctors and nurses to come into our province. I think that nurse practitioners may well incorporate themselves as well, which would put them under this bill.

I think that there is some information missing for us to really be able to make a very informed decision on how we should vote on this bill. As I say, the concept of the bill I think is fair in terms of how we sit in the rest of Canada, but we really should have those numbers to understand what it's going to cost us as taxpayers.

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 53 read a third time]

8:50

Corrections Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand and move third reading of Bill 58, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2009.

This bill will allow offenders of provincial statutes and municipal bylaw offences to earn remission for sentences and will expand the monitoring and recording of inmate communications. Mr. Speaker, allowing provincial statutes and municipal bylaw offenders to earn remission will encourage good inmate behaviour, reduce the offender population in our facilities, and make our legislation consistent with other jurisdictions.

The proposed Corrections Amendment Act will also allow for recording and monitoring of all inmate communications rather than just phone calls. Using the term "inmate communications" broadens the scope of communications that can be monitored and recorded. These amendments will provide us with greater opportunities to intercept and report active or planned criminal activity. I'm confident that this legislation will serve Albertans well as we modernize our approach to inmate communications and align our legislation with other jurisdictions in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Speaking in third reading to the anticipated effect of the implementation of Bill 58, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2009, I had a couple more questions. I wondered if there had been legal advice that had been given on the constitutionality of this bill. I know that we are dealing with people who, when convicted, have lost some of their rights of an expectation of privacy. This also covers, my understanding is, people in a remand centre.

My colleague had looked at an amendment that would have tried to change the language to indicate that it only affected those who'd been tried and convicted in a court of law. The problem was that, of course, you can only amend the parts of the act that are open in front of you. We would have had to go into a number of other consequential acts in order to correct that term in all of the areas. So it became more problematic, and we weren't able to do it. But you can see why we were trying to do it.

People in the remand centre have not been convicted. The first reaction I get is: well, they wouldn't be in the remand centre if they hadn't done something wrong. Not true. People are in the remand centre because there's a concern about failure to appear. Why do you get those concerns? Well, it's basically that courts want to know that if they let you go, you're going to come back or that they can find you to bring you back. People of no fixed address automatically get put in the remand centre. So anybody that's homeless, anybody that's on the street, whether they're guilty of that crime or not, is in the remand centre. There's a group of people – and it's not a small group of people – in our remand centre that doesn't fit into that category of: well, if they were in there, it's pretty much guaranteed they were bad. No. Actually, we can pretty much guarantee that they were homeless, and that's how they ended up in the remand centre. They get captured under this legislation.

I have an additional concern that we are far too quick to place people under surveillance for the convenience of the state. Let me put it that way. I don't think that the government and their agencies, like the corrections service and the police, come at this with any kind of subterfuge or ill will. They're trying to get a certain job done, and it's easier to get their job done if everything is laid out in front of them. I've spoken before in the House of how the police have said to me that, you know, they wouldn't mind it if everybody had a chip that could identify where they were on planet Earth. They'd find that kind of convenient because they feel it would help them get the bad guys earlier.

It just doesn't work. I mean, with the number of closed-captioned cameras that we've got, did it make our crime rate drop? No, it didn't. Guess what? The crime rate just moved over a block. Most criminals, particularly the ones that get caught, are pretty stupid, but the ones that don't get caught are not so stupid. Now we've ended up basically keeping our law-abiding citizens under surveillance. What was the point of that? They're decent people going about their life, but those are the ones that are showing up in the closed-captioned cameras.

I've gotten a bit off the specific purpose of the effect of Bill 58, but I have concerns about this. What I see is a very concerted effort from the government to place people in the remand centre and in corrections – and I think it's important to distinguish between those two – into facilities now where everything they do is under surveillance, including an area that used to not be, or at least not with the level of intimacy that they are now able to watch somebody's life. That was about the communication.

What this act has done is change everything from telephone calls to communication, which covers everything, particularly the familial video conferencing that will now be in place at the new Edmonton Remand Centre. All of those will be watched. All of those families who have not done anything wrong will be under surveillance, even if we get reassurances that: oh, we're not going to keep the stuff that is on the family. Really? Somebody is going to go through those tapes and watch all of that, so somebody else has heard that conversation between a husband and wife, a mother and a son, a father and a daughter, whoever, siblings, that they had every right to expect that their portion of was not going to be listened to by somebody else.

There you have a decent citizen who has now been listened to, has been under surveillance by an official, and they have done nothing wrong. There's no reason why they should be under surveillance, but they will be because of what's in this act. None of us ever expects to see ourselves in that position, but part of what I try to do is look at legislation and go: well, how would I feel if it happened to me? I'll tell you that I wouldn't be very happy if I went to visit someone, a brother, a nephew, a father – sorry that I'm naming all the males in my family; that's not very fair – my aunt, my cousin because they were in a remand centre, and I'm now on surveillance and somebody has listened to things that I said in confidence or in an intimate way to someone that was in those circumstances. How fair is that to me? It's not. But that's what this bill does. It captures that.

I think we should not give up our right to privacy without a fight. I don't think we should impose that or, rather, take it away from others without a great deal of thought. What I see here is ease. This is about ease of managing people who are in an apprehended situation. They're in a remand centre or a corrections facility. It's going to make it easier for them to monitor the communication. It's going to make it easier to watch people.

I'll be very interested to see if there's a way of coming back to me in a year or two or three and saying: "You know what? We're able to show to you that because we watched this, these intimate conversations between people, and we watched all of that communication from people that were incarcerated or in a remand centre, we've been able to reduce gang violence in corrections facilities by 50 per cent.” I’d be very interested if that’s able to happen because, frankly, I doubt it.

There are a lot of other ways of passing information and communicating that wouldn’t necessarily be caught on a camera or a telephone or even Internet communication, websites, whatever, or tracking, you know. This will allow them to go and track where people have been when they go online on a prison computer because it’s about communication. If you’re online and you’re communicating one way or another, you’re sending cookies out. That would count.

I mean, the discussion of gangs and trying to get at gangs has already been discussed once in this House. Clearly, it’s an issue that people are really concerned about. I think this is subjecting a whole bunch of decent people to surveillance by the state, and I don’t think that’s a good idea. I don’t support it, and I never will.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Solicitor General and Minister of Public Security.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I believe, had a couple questions in her discussion, so I want to assure the hon. member that, yes, we did seek legal opinion before proceeding with this bill.

In regard to her comments on remand, people are not only kept in remand because of concerns of failure to appear. They are also kept in remand for concerns of public safety and their own safety. I’ll also state that, yes, both remand and sentenced inmates will be monitored if reasonable grounds indicate that that would be necessary. We have been monitoring inmates’ communications in our correction facilities for a long time, Mr. Speaker, and in regard to this concern, this act really just brings that practice up to date to include all methods of communication.

The Acting Speaker: Standing order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much. Could I ask the minister how his department or his staff distinguishes between people in the remand centre who are in there on a concern about failure to appear and people who are in there because they’re considered bad guys? I don’t see how you can distinguish that. But please go ahead and enlighten me about how you manage to do that. Otherwise you are snooping on legitimate communication of someone who has not been convicted and is in a remand centre on a mental health issue or homelessness, where they have no fixed address, and that’s why they’re in the remand centre. How do you distinguish between those people? I bet you that you can’t, and you’re spying on those people the same as you’re spying on everybody else.

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, it’s not a matter of spying on anybody. It’s a matter of monitoring communications to ensure the safety of the facility, the safety of the people that we have in there. I don’t believe there’s a designation per se between whether somebody is in there because they may fail to appear or whether they are in there for serious charges. If the supervisors of that facility have reasonable grounds to suspect that the safety of that person, the safety of the public could be at risk, then those conversations are monitored.

Ms Blakeman: Is there a review process in place that is able to be monitored by an outside source or by an advocate or a prison ombudsman, that is able to look at that decision-making process and decide that it was valid? Or what scrutiny does that decision-making process and the criteria that the – I’m sorry, I missed the name of the authority figure that the minister referenced. But he said: well, I mean, the person can just make that decision on who’s likely to be a problem. Well, is that decision reviewable? Is it appealable? Who looks at it outside of that particular facility?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mr. Lindsay: Well, thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The person who I was referring to was the director of the facility, who makes the decisions as to whether or not those recordings will be monitored. Yes, his decision can be reviewed if there’s a complaint that comes forward. Depending on the nature of the complaint, it could involve the place of jurisdiction.

The Acting Speaker: On 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: How would an individual who had been incarcerated even know that they had been monitored and then be able to complain and ask for a review of the criteria upon which the decision was made to monitor them in the first place? Is there some indication of that, or do you just have to find out by accident?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, conversations are monitored, and if there was something going on that shouldn’t have been going on in regard to the issues that I raised, that person will certainly be aware of that because it would be brought to their attention. At that point in time they would have the option of going to an appeal process if they didn’t agree with it.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 2008-09 the provincial adult in-house custody population averaged 2,800 persons. Of the persons housed in provincial correctional facilities, 57 per cent were being held in remand and only 43 per cent had been sentenced. We can go back any number of years and compare the numbers of adults in custody, sentenced and in remand, in this province. The ones that are held in remand, do you think this monitoring is fair to them and their families?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Solicitor General, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Lindsay: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar’s numbers are right in regard to the percentages of people held in remand versus sentenced. Absolutely, we believe it’s fair to record those conversations and monitor them, again, if there are reasonable grounds to review those conversations. It’s all in managing the facility in the proper manner.

The Acting Speaker: On 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. I just wonder if I could ask a question further to that. I think that before very long the people on the street, who actually communicate with each other quite well, will be saying: okay, I’m not going to do anything until I can speak . . .

The Acting Speaker: The 29(2)(a) is finished.

Any other members wish to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, to the motion.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. I just wanted to clarify something. Clearly, people on the street communicate well, so the first thing they're going to learn how to do is say: I want to talk to my lawyer. So if they get the lawyer, will that lawyer-client be – I mean, that's confidential, so from then on, at least, they'll be able to talk to someone in confidentiality. Is that how that would work?

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. member on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Lindsay: Yes. To answer the question . . .

The Acting Speaker: We've moved to the motion. You're speaking on 29(2)(a), the five-minute question-and-answer period, with the hon. member, right?

Mr. Lindsay: Right.

In response to the question asked, Mr. Speaker, yes, the client-lawyer conversations are confidential and are not monitored.

Ms Pastoor: So when the people, who clearly communicate on the streets – I mean, that's going to be the first thing they say: I want my lawyer. Look at all of the extra work that's going to happen around that one tiny request when they don't want to be monitored otherwise.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Hearing none, does the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill wish to close debate?

Mr. Fawcett: No.

[Motion carried; Bill 58 read a third time]

Bill 59 Mental Health Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and move third reading of Bill 59, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2009.

This bill supports the implementation of community treatment orders. These CTOs are outlined in the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2007, which is expected to come into force early in 2010. Bill 59 demonstrates our recognition of the important role of mental health services in our health system.

I ask the House to support Bill 59, the Mental Health Amendment Act, 2009. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I apologize; I just haven't been able to get ahead on my reading on this one. I had a lot of concerns about the community treatment orders when they came forward under the Mental Health Amendment Act previously. I understand that this act was to address concerns specifically that were brought forward by the professional staff who were assessing and making the community treatment orders because they were having some trouble in the way the amending act had been done.

I didn't agree with the way the community treatment orders came through in the first place. I have some additional concerns now about how this rolls out when we move people from very – what's the word I'm looking for? – careful observation that they would be receiving, for example, as a patient in the Alberta Hospital Edmonton. They're moved into some sort of community treatment. I'm now seeing that this was probably linked, that these were not so much strings on a pearl but maybe sausages on a link of a longer term plan from the government to implement the community treatment orders, which allowed them to force people to take medication or to take their treatment, and this is going to specifically apply to people that are going to be released from Alberta Hospital Edmonton. So it was probably a much longer plan than I had anticipated at the time.

I think what we all agree is that we need to keep some beds for the intensive kind of treatment that some people will need, which is usually a fairly long time to get stabilized. People are in Alberta Hospital Edmonton for a year or two. They come into the community carefully and will sometimes end up back in Alberta Hospital for a six-month stint, and then they're out for years at a time. There has to be some facility in which they can find that sort of intensive treatment and protection, frankly. But I'm distressed now to see how the community treatment orders fit into that deinstitutionalization plan. I said at the time that it was a scimitar that hung over people's heads, and I think that's what I'm seeing here.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members wish to speak?

Seeing none, does the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark wish to close?

Dr. Sherman: Question.

Bill 60 Health Professions Amendment Act, 2009

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise tonight and move third reading of Bill 60, the Health Professions Amendment Act, 2009.

The Health Professions Act provides a legislative structure that supports the regulation of health professionals by their health profession and governing bodies. This legislation is at the request of or in consultation with all the colleges and professions affected.

I'll take my seat and see if there's any further discussion.

The Acting Speaker: Do any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

move third reading of the Provincial Offences Procedure Amendment Act, 2009.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 50

Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A1. Are there any comments or questions to be offered further with respect to this amendment to this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I haven't actually spoken to the government amendment yet. I've sort of referred to it, alluded to it a couple of times during committee debate so far as I brought forward our own subamendments to amendment A1. Those subamendments, of course, went down to defeat one by one as they were presented to the House.

I'll just very briefly comment on these government amendments and make the point again that while the Minister of Energy has brought, in his amendment A1, a number of changes to Bill 50 – and I do believe him when he says that these changes were brought about by some of the feedback that he and the government and government backbenchers have gotten from the people who've been on their backs about this very, very flawed bill – the amendments do not address one of the most fundamental flaws with the bill, which is the attempt to reduce the amount of public consultation that can take place. I don't mean public consultation over the course of the spring and summer and fall about Bill 50. I mean public consultation about the power lines that are designated, according to the schedule on page 11 of this bill, as critical transmission infrastructure.

Once this bill passes, should this bill pass – and what are the chances of it failing, I wonder? – and these lines are declared critical transmission infrastructure, that declaration bypasses the Alberta Utilities Commission and its ability to hold independent, impartial, needs identification hearings to determine whether this stuff is really all that critical or not.

As I made the point at an earlier opportunity to speak to this, the very fact that the minister is proposing as part of his package of amendments in A1 the staged development of critical transmission infrastructure – albeit with acknowledgement of my colleague from Edmonton-Centre's questions about the timing of the staging, there's nothing in here about this, so this could be nothing more than a legislative sleight of hand, I suppose. Realistically, I think that the fact that the minister is talking about staging development of these allegedly incredibly critical, we've got to have now or else the lights go off power lines suggests that they're not all that critical. They're not so critical that they couldn't be subjected to the usual impartial regulatory hearing process, which I believe they should be.

This government amendment does not address the issue of public consultation. It certainly does not in any kind of meaningful way that I'm aware of address the issue of the incredible cost of over-building the system. It does speak to this notion that there would be an oversight committee. Amendment C talks about the establishment of a committee comprising the Independent System Operator, representatives of customers, and other persons determined by the regulation, to provide records to customers in relation to the construction of transmission facilities, including records relating to the costs, scope and construction schedules of proposed transmission facilities.

Well, that's nice. I mean, I'm not going to object in principle to that. I'm not going to object to that. I don't think anybody on our side of the House would object to the notion of a little more oversight.

But let's be honest here, Mr. Chairman. The committee would give more public information on the lines and the costs of the lines but only once construction has started. So it's sort of like a quicker update, a quicker warning that you're about to get stuck with a bill for something you didn't want in the first place, and the bill is going to be higher than you thought it was, that sort of thing.

In amendment E, section 3(3) is amended in the proposed section 19(1.1) by striking out "or is not in the public interest." You know, how you read this proposed amendment as anything other than a purely cosmetic change is unclear. I know that there were some conflicts between the lawyers speaking for the Alberta Utilities Commission and the lawyers in the Department of Energy and I think maybe even the lawyers in the Ministry of Justice about whether the bill as it was originally written would take away the AUC's right, across the board, to operate in the public interest. I know there was some concern about that. Still, while this amendment may clarify that bit of muddiness, and I'm not even sure how muddy that muddy bit was to begin with, it doesn't address the fundamental problem of the AUC, which, I believe, is uniquely positioned, relative to any of us in this House, relative to AESO, or relative to anyone who might be a stakeholder or a proponent or a participant in any proposed expansion of transmission infrastructure in this province, to sit back, take a step back, and take an arm's-length view of what's being requested, what's being asked for here in terms of the size and scope of the bill and say that this is or isn't necessary, that this is or is not something that is needed. The AUC still cannot speak to that if this bill passes.

So in a sense, Mr. Chairman, it doesn't matter. It certainly doesn't matter as much that they can go back to addressing matters of the public interest around the environmental, social, and economic impacts of the line once the siting hearings begin if the need has already been dictated to them and to us, the people of Alberta, that this line is going through because of some electrical engineers at AESO, which I remain unconvinced is as impartial and arm's length from government as government would like us to believe – if it was, I don't see why it spent so much money on radio and television and newspaper advertising promoting this pig in a poke – or from the politicians themselves, no matter who's in government, no matter who's in power, because politicians are not experts by definition. A group of us are not going to be experts on issues of electricity transmission.

So the AUC can't do that needs hearing anymore. It's simply dictated to the people of Alberta, the power consumers of Alberta, that because the AESO recommended it, cabinet says: "Well, okay, it must be critical, then, so we're just going to ram this one through. You might have some say as to where the pylon goes that's closest to your property, but otherwise, you know, shut up about it." That's really what it boils down to.

Mr. Chairman, while I commend to a point the minister's efforts to try and take this very flawed piece of legislation and amend it in such a way that a quick reading of the amendments might persuade somebody who hasn't been paying really close attention that now suddenly this bill proposes to be not as flawed as it was before the amendments were brought down, there's no way I could possibly support amendment A1 because it does not do what needs to be done.

Mr. Chairman, what really needs to be done is that this bill needs to be ripped up, thrown in the garbage, and the minister needs to go back to square one and start again. But like I said before, what are the chances of that happening? Failing that, these amendments do not do what needs to be done to make this bill anywhere near a palatable piece of legislation, in my opinion, and I will be voting against the government amendments when the time comes.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: To the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Definitely to the amendment. Earlier, whenever we had a chance to discuss the amendment and we also had an opportunity to listen with interest to the discussion or the debate between the hon. members for Grande Prairie-Smoky and Edmonton-Centre, that was an interesting and informative dialogue. When we look at Hansard and we read the discussions that occurred between the two members, we also have to consider the role of AESO, the publications that they produce, the reasons why they produce those publications. Obviously, they're trying to sell Albertans on electricity – the distribution of it, the transmission of it, and before that the generation of it, certainly – and how the electricity supply and the price affect the economy.

This discussion that occurred when I entered the Legislative Assembly this evening and the discussion I heard in the previous hour and a half at Rexall Place regarding Bill 50 and the proposed amendments that we had before us in the House: it's like two different worlds. You have the consumers, who are faced with higher bills and towering infrastructure, some of it at 500 kV capacity. Mr. Chairman, you link all this together, and it is two worlds. It's a world where one group of individuals feel that their idea and their idea alone is the right and the proper one. That, of course, is Bill 50. Then we have public questions and very few answers, and in order to satisfy some of the questions, we bring forward these amendments. Again, these amendments are not going to satisfy the individuals I talked to this evening.

Now, we need to correct some of the misinformation that has been spread by the government.

Mr. Liepert: That you're spreading.

Ms Blakeman: It's competing misinformation.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it's not.

Now, I'm going to have a look. I took the opportunity, Mr. Chairman . . . [interjection] You see that? It's getting late in the evening.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. Now, the long-term adequacy metrics from this summer on the AESO website: I referred to them earlier, and I got a copy. We know we need more generation in this province, we know we need more transmission lines, but do we need what's proposed here in the critical transmission infrastructure, the blank cheque that has been offered here with this amendment?

Mr. Chairman, we look at generation projects that have moved to active construction. I talked earlier about TransAlta. This one is a 66-megawatt project. We have generation projects moved to regulatory approval. We have MEG Energy. We have Imperial Oil Kearl cogeneration, phase 1. We have the Morinville compressor station, which is only eight megawatts. We have Imperial Oil. We also have under this generation projects that have been announced, applied for AESO interconnection, and/or applied for regulatory approval. We have a windfall power-generating station up in Fort Nelson, and we have project 921, whatever that is. It's 165 megawatts. Generation projects that have been retired: Rosedale, just down the street here, 8, 9, and 10. There are 209 megawatts that are in the vicinity of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre's residence.

Ms Blakeman: Not anymore. They've taken it out.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. They've taken it out. The generators, I think, have been sent to some tropical island if I remember correctly.

Ms Blakeman: That's true, yeah. We sold it to somebody in the Caribbean.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

There are a lot of changes to generation projects, and all these changes are occurring at the same time we are changing Bill 50. We can talk about investor uncertainty, and this is another example of it. There's a list of generation projects that are under active construction. There's a total here of over a thousand megawatts. I mentioned TransAlta's Summerview 2; Keephills 3; the peaking plant over at Clover Bar; the Crossfield energy farm by Enmax, a 120-megawatt facility in Crossfield. We've got a wind farm at Blue Trail. Christina Lake, Horizon: there are a number of projects.

There are also projects with regulatory approval. There are 745 megawatts.

Then there's the wish list here, which is quite a long one. There are 316 megawatts, I believe. No, there are not; I apologize. There are a lot more than that on the wish list, and they're not added up. I would estimate the wish list to be at least 2,000.

The projects that are to be retired in the near future are TransAlta Wabamun 4. We talked about this previously. The city of Medicine Hat has 37 megawatts of gas-fired generation that they would like to retire.

Now, we look at – and I've got the details here for hon. members – our reserve margin, without intertie capacity and with intertie capacity. We talked about the AESO suggesting that we have 10 per cent. Well, by 2012 we're not going to have it. We're certainly not going to have it without intertie capacity. The intertie capacity: will it or will it not be considered critical transmission infrastructure? How will all this be decided? I can only guess, Mr. Chairman.

When we look overall at these amendments, certainly the Capital Region Board had questions. Did the minister consult with the Capital Region Board regarding these amendments? Are these five amendments as proposed going to satisfy their concerns regarding this bill, or will that just be an issue that's set aside or a series of questions that's set aside?

Now, I heard earlier this evening, before I came here, that Bill 50 is unnecessary. Citizens certainly expressed the view that existing laws regarding, Mr. Chairman, whether it's rights-of-way or whether it's what's to the benefit of the public – the public interest or the public good is not or doesn't appear to be a priority with either the bill or the amendments. A political fix is what we're looking at.

When we look at the critical transmission infrastructure as it's discussed and as it's defined here, there is no reason why, when the government is looking at this, they couldn't ask this question, and the question would be: what is an analysis of the true needs of the Alberta electrical system? What exactly is needed? Is Enmax in their proposal? Are they right? Is it a balance between generation capacity that is sited, as we said earlier, on the edge of the load or on the edge of the metropolitan areas? Is the $14 billion that's anticipated in transmission upgrades in the long-term transmission system planned by AESO the critical transmission infrastructure that's needed, or is it something less?

Now, earlier in debate there had been a lot of discussion about line losses, and I find that, Mr. Chairman, quite an interesting argument to pursue. I think the value of the electricity lost last year, in 2008, as a result of line loss was about $220 million. The year before it was less than that. I thought to myself: why would there be such a difference? Why would there be close to a $40 million difference in line loss? Well, the value of the line loss was determined by the price of the electricity. Now, it didn't really go up or down. It remains fairly constant. I think it's in terawatts. That's the measure that's used to indicate that.

There seemed to be a perception by some members in the debate here, not only on this amendment, Mr. Chairman, but throughout the entire debate on Bill 50, that the increase in line loss was forcing this $14 billion proposed infrastructure upgrade onto the ratepayers' bills. Well, I think we should have a little clarification on that. When we look at the proposed amendments and we look at the bill, what the government wants us to believe and accept, but I don't think we should because I think it is unacceptable, is that their project is needed because they simply say so. Trust us, and fork over the cash on a monthly basis on your bill regardless of whether you're an industrial, a commercial, or a residential consumer of power.

Now, we need to think carefully before we proceed any further with Bill 50 or even proceed with these amendments. There are those that have thought that they could help out the government with some suggestions as to what to do to get us out of this mess that has been created because we have no long-term planning, directly as a result of the chaos and confusion from deregulation.

We have a big bill to pay. We know who is going to pay it. It's going to be those consumers that I spoke about just a minute ago: commercial, residential, and, mostly, industrial consumers. I believe they are 61 per cent of the total consumption. Now, we know in this House that transmission lines should be built. There should be a plan so that as the economy expands, as the population grows we don't have this panic that we have now, Mr. Chairman.

Now, transmission lines don't generate electricity. As I said before, they consume power. Yes, transmission lines, as has been noted to me by an electrical engineer, can reduce losses, but the reduction in losses is not usually sufficient to justify the cost. This gets back to that comment I made earlier, Mr. Chairman, that the line loss for the year 2008 was about $220 million. The year before it was about $40 million less. New transmission lines should only be built when they are part of the lowest cost addition to the power system. By the lowest cost we should always consider, of course, those who are paying the rates, or the monthly bills: the consumers. New lines must be part of the most economical generation and transmission addition to the system.

I looked through the annual report of AESO, and last year we see where their manpower budget had increased dramatically, but there's a reason for that. I think they hired over 20 people, and they were certainly needed. Some of these people have unique skills and unique educations. Their expertise is in demand. When we look at that, the AESO can easily, I think, get additional skills if they need them.

I think there needs to be an evaluation of the long-term and present worth of any number of generation and transmission options for a range of load-growth patterns. I don't think this has been done. You look at the transmission plan, and you have options there. I'm not going to say that it's like a Christmas catalogue, but there are options there, and there are prices for this and for that.

I'm not going to digress, Mr. Chairman, but someone asked me about the nuclear option.

Ms Blakeman: You're not?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I certainly am not.

There was a bet placed on where the nuclear reactors would be. Clearly, if you have a look at the long-term transmission systems plan in this province, the reactor is not going to be, in my view, constructed in the Peace River country. I know Lac Cardinal has very little water there, but that's not the reason. I think it's going to be built over in northwestern Saskatchewan, almost due east of the oil sands developments by Fort McMurray. If we pass these amendments and then we proceed to pass Bill 50, part of that intertie or a portion of that line will be paid for by Alberta ratepayers. Who will benefit from that transmission line? That's hard to say. Maybe the government members can assure not only this member but the House and ratepayers in general that there will be some benefit to that.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: That takes us back to Bill 50 as amended. Any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I just wanted an opportunity to be able to speak a bit more generally while we were in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, yeah. Be general.

Ms Blakeman: Don't get lippy.

See, one of my observations about this bill is that it was created to address very specific circumstances, but it doesn't address those very specific circumstances and stop. There's been an argument that there was a need. There's also been an argument that that need has not been accurately reflected, so we've got battling experts here. If there was a situation where we needed the four lines that have been discussed, it needed to be done by the government in a way where they identified that this was critical, all the language that we've heard: that there was a reliability problem, that the need had been determined, that there was a crisis, that the cost was within reason and needed to be paid by the consumers so that the generators could take advantage of the transmission system. All of that has been established.

I still look at this bill and go: it was created for very, very narrow circumstances, almost a snapshot in time. Yet the bill makes this possible forever. I would have been much happier to support this bill if it had had a sunset clause or it had been established to say: "This is all we're going to do, these four lines over this period of time. The staging is going to happen in, you know, one-year increments or five-year increments, and that's it. We're done." This is where I think the critical mistake has been made. Aside from all the arguments of the battling opinions and battling experts, I think the critical mistake is that a bill has been created that will last for a long time, until, essentially, it's amended or – what's it called when they actually just get rid of it, where they completely cut a bill and just annihilate it?

Mr. MacDonald: Repealed.

Ms Blakeman: Repealed. Where the bill is repealed. Thank you. That's what I was looking for.

That's not what's happening here. We've created a bill in perpetuity for something that was to address a very specific need. That, I think, is where we're going to get into trouble somewhere down the road.

One of the issues that hasn't been addressed here, to my mind, is the concept of protection. It's something I've been thinking a lot about recently. This government party's philosophy is about less government and less regulations, and in some ways I agree with that. I think we certainly need to look at red tape for not-for-profits and for small businesses, for example. But I think that there's a role for government to play in protection.

It has to be government that sets up that protection that no one else will do. We should not be expecting the private sector to offer that protection. It's not their job. Their job is to go out there and make as much money as they can for their shareholders. That's what they're supposed to do. They're not supposed to check themselves and go, "Oh, gee; maybe I should be doing it this way" or whatever. They're just supposed to go for it. They will be limited by the legislation that's put into place, but it allows them, you know, to go full bore within those limitations. But you've got to have the limitations, and those limitations are protection.

What I see happening in a number of different areas in Alberta, but this is a good example of it, is where we don't see that protection for the consumers, for Albertans. You know, what limits, what requirements need to be in place to protect the consumers, the citizens, and the environment? Let's go a little further and have environment cover assets as well. What limits would need to be in place?

Let's look at this another way. Whenever there's a disaster, the first thing that happens is that people turn around and say: "Where was the government on this? Why didn't we have better building codes that would have stopped the buildings from sliding down the hill on us and killing us all? Why didn't the government look after this?" Ultimately, it is the government that's responsible. Sure enough, the next time around they put better legislation in place that does deal with those things, but they don't turn around and say, you know, "Where was the private sector on this one?" They don't turn around and say, "God had something to do with it." They turn around and say, "Why didn't the government protect us?"

That's my question around this bill: where has the government abdicated its responsibility of protection for the consumer with this bill? Part of that is the concerns that have been expressed repeatedly about a lack of access and a door in – a meaningful door in; let me qualify that – for the public around transmission lines and how they're going to be determined now. The government will be very quick to say that, well, AESO determines need. But, you know what? AESO has that toggle switch I talked about earlier tonight. It's an on-off switch. AESO determines more transmission lines or no transmission lines. That's all the toggle switch does. It doesn't determine anything else. It's just an on-off switch and nothing more.

That information then goes to the government. I will refer people to go back in the evening to the Minister of Energy's responses to my initial questions because he walks through that process pretty clearly. It goes back to a process in which a number of other regulators come into play in which there is meant to be public opportunity for comment. My concern there is that by the time, in a number of these stages, the public actually gets the information, I would call it too late. Nice to get the information, thank you, but it's too late for the public or the ratepayers, consumers, the landowners to be able to take that information and use it to change the course of affairs. They are only allowed to get that information when the process has moved to a place where they can't stop it and they can't affect the outcome. There's also a lack of an appeal process.

There were two things going on in the conversations around public consultation with this bill. One was the hearings that the government held over the summer. Fair enough; they had 20 of them. But if you just listen to the government members, you would think that it was 20 hearings in which people raised their hands and celebrated how wonderful and kind this government was. From what I've read in the newspaper reports and from some of the reports of people who were at these hearings, people were not happy with what the government was proposing and made that very clear. It's a bit sly to try and pretend that the people's reaction to what happened to this process was one of happiness and delight. I would argue that it wasn't.

Second is the concept of public consultation as this bill is implemented and rolls out in the future. That I've already referred to in that they get the information too late, and there is no opportunity for appeal in most of these processes.

In both of those areas I would argue that the government has failed to protect citizens and consumers. They failed to give them an access point that is meaningful. I would argue that what they have done here is that they failed to protect the consumers' money because the citizens have very little input – some would argue none, no input – into decisions being made which will cause them to expend their money.

When I look back, when I started in 1997, we were in the thick of the debate about deregulation. I was told over and over and over again that this was the bee's knees, this was the way of the future, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Well, we had reliable, predictable, stable, cheap electricity. Boy, do we not have that now. We went through all kinds of things. Yet again I'm being threatened with brownouts if I don't go along with this, with outages if I don't go along with it.

Well, how is that predictable and stable electricity? It's not. The one thing that the electricity rates, what the consumers pay, have not done is go down.

So you can articulate that amount of money to me in any way you want. You can break it apart on the bill or roll it all into one lump sum, which has been the argument, that we're paying the same amount of money; it's just split apart or rolled up. Frankly, it's just gone up. Every consumer looks at their bill, and that's why people get so irate when they go: how come I paid eight bucks for gas and $12 for delivery, and then the prices, the different fees, just keep adding on from that? We're pretty sure we weren't paying all of that when it was a regulated system.

The government, I think, has failed to protect the consumer, and the cost is going up and up and up. Let's face it. We're a northern province. With the exception of a few places in southern Alberta, we can't do without electricity and energy.

Mr. MacDonald: What do you mean, southern Alberta?

Ms Blakeman: Well, that's possible in some places. But for most places in this province, we need that stuff, particularly around our positioning re the sun. I mean, you can spend some nights in the year, a few of them, where the sun goes down at about 11 and gets up at 2 in the morning. Fair enough. But most of the time you need that electricity to have the lights on in this place.

The other interesting part of this is that at this point our utilities, our electrical suppliers, are about two generations removed from us. You know, 20 years ago the electricity utility and all the utilities, actually most of them, were owned by the city. So they were quite close to me. I was a citizen of the city, and the utility company was owned by the city.

Mr. MacDonald: Are we getting a Christmas card this year?

Ms Blakeman: Not if you behave like that.

Now they're rolled out, and they're one generation out from us. In fact, the city of Edmonton is two generations out because they've now created Capital Power and rolled it off even further. Enmax is another example of how that's happened in Calgary. It won't be long before that's rolled out again. We have companies from Russia, China, India, any number of other places that are buying our utility companies, and they're one layer out again. We don't have any control over those companies. We have no consumer loyalty or citizen loyalty anymore. But we do need protection. That's about all that's left. We need the government to make sure that we're going to be treated fairly and that there are consumer protections built into that for us.

I've talked earlier about that kind of cornerstone of democracy in the marketplace, which is that concept of no payment without representation. I think that's lacking in what we're seeing before us in this bill. I would also argue that businesses are incredibly important to this province. It's where a great deal of our wealth is generated. But, frankly, businesses are not citizens. They do not vote. I think it's important that we honour and recognize the position of citizen here and their ability and their access to be able to influence government in their policy-making. What we've got is that clearly business has access to influence government policy, but citizens don't have access to influence government policy.

Those were some of the issues that I wanted to raise while we were still in committee. I think the bottom line is that the public is paying significantly more for electricity, and most of them would say that they weren't getting a lot more. It's not necessarily more reliable than it was 20 years ago. The price is certainly higher. I think that with this bill we've put in place a number of processes we're going to find very difficult to control out in the future. Really, this bill was invented to address some very specific problems that were quite time limited, and now we've put a bill in place that rolls out without an end in the future. I think we should've done a better job with that, and I would argue that the government has failed the citizens and the consumers in offering adequate protection.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any other members wish to speak?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, all members, for that exciting and very informative debate as always. On that note, I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 50.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, thank you to all members. I would move that we now adjourn until tomorrow at 1:30.

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, the procession was led today for the last time by Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Ed Richard. Mr. Richard will be retiring following this session. Prior to serving the Legislative Assembly, Mr. Richard spent 32 years with the Edmonton Police Service. Upon his retirement as staff sergeant in 1997 he joined the Legislative Assembly security service. In November of 1999 he was appointed to the position of Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms. On behalf of all members I would like to express appreciation for Mr. Richard's committed service to this House and wish him the very best in his retirement.

Joining us today in the Speaker's gallery are many of Ed's family and friends, including his wife of 41 years, Jane Richard, his children, and five of his seven grandchildren. I would now ask all of them to rise, including the distinguished Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, to receive once again the warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation] Hon. members, that was a very, very nice acknowledgement of Mr. Richard's very dedicated service. Thank you.

Also in the Speaker's gallery today is a former Member of the Legislative Assembly, the former Member for Edmonton-Manning, who served in the 26th Legislature, Mr. Dan Backs. We ask him to rise.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 80 visitors to both galleries. These are visitors from Muriel Martin school in St. Albert. They are a hugely curious group of young people who certainly have assured the future of our province. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Jody Bialowas, Mrs. Katie Boyd, Mr. Rick Lof, Mlle Danielle Jean; parent helpers Mrs. Michelle Borrett, Mrs. Leanne Svenson, Mr. Bill Nelson, Mme Yolande Pejot, Mrs. Debbie Anderson, and Mrs. Tana Farrell. I believe, as I said, they're in both galleries. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. Horne: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members 49 very distinguished students from Keheewin elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. I believe they are also seated in both the members' and public galleries. They are accompanied today by teachers Mrs. Renie Wolodko, Mr. Mark Leenders, Miss Mona Kamar and by parents Mrs. Lisa Severin, Ms Cheryl Harts-horne, and Mrs. Christa Winters. I'd ask the students to rise and receive our traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fine group of southern Albertans. They are here today to show their overwhelming support for the future Alberta police and peace officer training college at Fort Macleod and to attend a meeting arranged at my request with the Solicitor General and Finance minister.

This project is of great significance to southern Alberta as you will see by the group of esteemed individuals I'm about to introduce. I would now ask them to rise as I call their names: Mayor Shawn Patience, Fort Macleod; Sharon Monical, Christine Trowbridge, Brian Reach, and Gord Wolstenholme, councillors for the town of Fort Macleod. Gord's father, George Wolstenholme, was an MLA here for the constituency of Highwood from 1975 to 1982. Also, we have Jordan No Chief, councillor of Piikani Nation; Mayor Rob Steel, town of Claresholm; Mayor John Irwin, Crowsnest Pass; Mayor Barry Johnson, town of Stavely; Mayor Melva Stinson, town of Granum; Mayor Dennis Cassie, Coalhurst; Henry Van Hierden, reeve of the MD of Willow Creek; and support staff Barry Elliott, Fort Macleod, and Martin Ebel, economic development, Fort Macleod. Also in the gallery we have Tracy Edwards, president of Lethbridge Community College. I think I have them all. Please give them the resounding welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you Edmonton's own Juventus U14 soccer team, who recently won the Canadian national championships for U14 boys' soccer. Congratulations to the players and coaches Kurt Bosch, Rob Mosele, Tony Mayall, and Richard Harris on this tremendous accomplishment. As a former coach for the Juventus Soccer Club I know first-hand how much time and hard work goes into coaching. Your dedication to these kids is greatly appreciated, and it is nice to see that hard work being paid off with the national championships. We have parents and other coaches in both galleries. I'd ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you today and through you to all members of the Assembly two people who are very important, integral, in fact, to the operations of HIV Edmonton. They, of course, are responsible for the cards and the red AIDS ribbons that you received on your desks today. I would ask James Mabey to please rise. James is one of our emerging leaders, our up-and-comers in Edmonton, and was recognized as one of the Top 40 under 40. He's the vice-chair of HIV Edmonton. With him today is John Gee. John Gee will be a familiar face to this Assembly because for a number of years he supported my predecessor, Michael Henry, running the Edmonton-Centre constituency office. John has given a great deal of time as a volunteer and as a staff member for various inner-city agencies and is currently the operations co-ordinator for HIV Edmonton. Please welcome these two gentlemen to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly an outstanding Albertan from the Grande Prairie-Wapiti constituency, Mr. Andre Harpe. Andre is very active in the constituency and has served on several community and provincial boards. We had a full house today, so I hope Mr. Harpe is seated in the members' gallery. I can't see him behind me, but I would ask that he please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood.

Mr. Mason: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Jiravej Sireelert, a grade 11 exchange student from Chang Mai in Thailand. Jiravej, also known here as Kevin, is currently attending Archbishop MacDonald high school and was sponsored as a Rotary exchange student by the Rotary Club in Thailand and is being hosted by the Rotary Club of Edmonton Northeast. Jiravej is spending an entire year here in Canada as part of the Rotary exchange program, and he's accompanied today by a member of the hosting Rotary Club, Karin Olson, who also is my wife. I would now ask that my guests, who are seated in the public gallery, rise to receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly members from the Camrose green energy action team. The team members take a political action approach to sustainable energy issues. The group collected signatures on a petition, which I will be tabling later today, asking this Assembly to reject nuclear power in this province. I would now ask that my guests, Denise Dufresne and Ellen Parker, who are seated in the public gallery, rise to receive the traditional warm welcome from this Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Climate Change

Mrs. McQueen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we are all aware, there is a significant climate change milestone approaching. Alberta will be part of the Canadian delegation attending the December climate change summit in Copenhagen. This is an important opportunity for Alberta to share its perspective on reducing emissions while maintaining a strong economy. It is a time to share details about our ongoing work to address climate change and our renewed commitments moving forward.

Alberta continues to take action now to reduce greenhouse gases while planning for a clean energy future. We are a global energy supplier with a commitment to responsible development.

Alberta's most well-known investment is our unprecedented $2 billion commitment to carbon capture and storage, but this is only part of the picture. Another example is Alberta's Ecotrust projects. Alberta's Ecotrust projects are technology-based projects that tackle climate change and clean air. We have already announced two Ecotrust projects. On October 1 the province distributed $7.45 million so that waste energy from Edmonton could be transferred to 1,600 homes in Strathcona county. On October 14 I had the tremendous pleasure of announcing a second Ecotrust investment of $20 million to support the creation of the Drayton Valley Energy Campus.

These are innovative projects that will help move Alberta towards a clean energy future, and I'm excited to say that there are more Ecotrust grant announcements yet to come. Mr. Speaker, significant progress can be made and will be made in tackling climate change through deliberate, meaningful, and ongoing investments.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

AIDS Awareness

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. AIDS Awareness Week started November 23 and culminates on December 1, World AIDS Day. In honour of this and with the kind permission and assistance of the Speaker you have each received a red ribbon symbolizing the fight against AIDS. Please wear it to signal your support of the campaign to increase awareness, provide support and help, and advocate for those living with AIDS. On the same card is the pin for HIV Edmonton, which is embarking on a campaign to celebrate 25 years since its inception in 1984.

Last week I attended a wonderful event honouring Edmonton's Michael Phair and the few individuals who gathered around his kitchen table to develop a plan to deal with the arrival in Edmonton of the first public case of AIDS. Michael did a retrospective of how AIDS affected Edmonton, what steps were taken, how networks were built, even the toll that the constant death of friends had on those very activists. It was a subtle reminder that we have come a long way and that we still have a way to go.

For their 25th anniversary campaign HIV Edmonton has planned a legacy garden, a coffee-table book to commemorate the champions of the HIV/AIDS movement in Edmonton, and a gala. I look forward to celebrating with you.

AIDS started out affecting what we thought was one specific group and now kills people from every walk of life. It particularly preys on the vulnerable, but no one is safe unless they take the precautions.

For this year HIV Edmonton is working with Starbucks on a World AIDS Day fundraiser, so please consider getting your coffee from them next Tuesday, December 1. As well, there is a vigil at the Citadel Theatre on December 1, and events are also planned for Calgary and elsewhere across Alberta.

Please support AIDS research. Congratulations to HIV Edmonton on 25 years of support for that community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Movember Movement

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the month of November thousands of men and women world-wide raise awareness about the risks men face in terms of prostate cancer, thereby seeking to increase early detection, diagnosis, and effective treatment. This movement is referred to as Movember and takes place in Australia, New Zealand, the United States, the United Kingdom, Ireland, and in Canada.

Created in Australia, Movember was inspired by the women's health movement and the idea that men were lacking a way to actively engage themselves in their own health. The rules of Movember are simple: men grow moustaches, women wear fake ones, no one can shave from the 1st to the 30th of the month, and everyone works together to raise money to change the face of men's health. Mr. Speaker, this is an incredible cause, that I stood for right away. Movember is in its sixth consecutive year and has raised over $60 million for prostate cancer.

I am a member of the LAO Team Mo, and to date my team has raised $590 for this cause, a number which we hope to double in the final days of this month. Indeed, on Saturday I will be auctioning off my moustache to raise further funds for this cause. If you'd like some information on how to get involved with that, please come and see me later.

To learn more about Movember and to donate to the LAO Team Mo and the fine moustaches like mine across Canada, please visit www.movember.com.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I take it that if one were to use tweezers and individually pluck out the whiskers, there would be double value, right?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Violence against Women

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 25, 1960, Rafael Trujillo, then the dictator of the Dominican Republic, ordered the assassination of three female political activists known as the Mirabal sisters. Their deaths united a nation against their oppressive dictator, who was overthrown the following year. In commemoration of the sacrifice of these three sisters the United Nations General Assembly designated November 25 as the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women.

Today also marks the launch of the White Ribbon Campaign, supported by more than 55 countries, to raise awareness of the need to end violence against women. In Canada the campaign runs until December 6, Canada's National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women.

Mr. Speaker, acts of violence against women impact Albertans of all backgrounds, cultures, and faiths and often go unnoticed and unreported. As elected members we must continue to work to ensure greater understanding of and education on these issues. It is an undertaking I know we can achieve because Alberta has a strong tradition of advocating for women's rights. It was five courageous women from Alberta who advocated for women's right to vote, and three of those distinguished women served in this Legislature. I am proud to serve as the MLA for a constituency that bears the name of one of those women, Nellie McClung.

Mr. Speaker, let us recommit ourselves today to continue to fight for a society free of violence against women.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Agriculture Supply Management Sponsors

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the last week this government has dodged the issue of government-directed organizations funding Conservative Party events. The refusal to even acknowledge how improper this type of sponsorship is reveals just how arrogant this government has become. Here's the issue. The minister of agriculture appoints the board that oversees Alberta Milk. Alberta Milk gives the minister's political party contributions. Now, to the minister: how is this appropriate?

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I can answer that question quite adequately. Since the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has brought this up the last couple of days, I'm a little bit curious myself to see how that operation works. These grants are for specific purposes with measurable outcomes that also require financial documentation. They are not association funding. The association applies for the grant, but the industry benefits. The government of Alberta does not give these people any operational money.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, to the Premier, then. Your minister appoints the board that oversees Alberta Milk. That organization gives money to your political party. Is this appropriate?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the boards are elected from the membership of the milk producers. The government does not appoint the milk producers' board, the egg producers' board, the turkey producers' board, the chicken producers' board. These are all boards in supply management, and they are elected from within their membership.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, this government is clearly out of touch with the people of Alberta and the ethical stance of most Albertans. This government has just cut education, cut health care, cut core public services but isn't at all concerned about government organizations funding political parties. Why are your priorities so backwards, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, first of all, these are not government organizations. These are producer groups, and it's their money.

Secondly, again, he keeps raising this issue of cuts to budgets. May I again remind the opposition that last year's budget in health was increased by $550 million? This is not a cut; it's an increase. As I said yesterday, we're working, looking at how much to increase the health budget for next year. There are no cuts to the budget, so again the information is wrong.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the government considering massive cuts, stakeholder groups have been speaking out for public education, only to receive a scolding by the Minister of Education. But teachers, school trustees, and parents are not to blame. They're not to blame for creating a climate of fear around education. The actions of the minister are creating a climate of fear. To the Premier. School boards and trustees are fighting for our children's education. This is commendable. Why is the government chastising them?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe the government is chastising anybody. The Minister of Education yesterday indicated that we have the most robust prebudget consultation that has ever happened with school boards in this province leading up to a new budget. What I said to the school board trustees yesterday and what I said to the ATA before is that it would be preferable if they engaged in a more positive way to engage the public positively about education. I have never used numbers in the discussion in terms of budget cuts. That is a number that the ATA made up and is using for their advertising process. All I'm saying is that I don't need 10,000 of exactly the same e-mail to tell me that people care about education in this province. People do care about education in this province.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, no good deed goes unpunished. Unlike this government, school boards know how to balance their budgets. How can the Premier defend raiding the school boards' savings and now threatening drastic cuts?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, school boards in the province of Alberta have accumulated roughly 400 and some million dollars' worth of surpluses in their budgets. The minister has met with them and asked, as we proceed with budgeting for the next year, that we may have to go to them and ask them to use some of their surpluses that they have accumulated over the years and keep any reductions in staffing or anything out of the classroom. I think it's a very reasonable ask, and most school boards that I talked to thought it was a reasonable approach.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, if the Alberta Teachers' Association's estimate of $340 million in cuts is, quote, greatly exaggerated, as your minister has claimed, then Mr. Premier, why not simply level with Albertans by saying how much you're planning to cut?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the budgeting process is an ongoing process. It hasn't come to a finite conclusion. It's totally imprudent, in my view – and I think the school boards share this; we've just spent all morning talking about how we go forward – to start from numbers and figure out what you want to do. What you really need to do is start with: what are the outcomes that you want to achieve? Then apply the resources you have to make sure you achieve them. That's what school boards are engaged with me in doing.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mental Health Innovation Fund

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health reported a budget surplus of almost $350 million in the annual report for 2008-09. He also reported that almost $25 million of that surplus was from cutting from the mental health innovation fund. To the Premier: if mental health is such an important service to the Premier, how can he support a minister of health who made such cuts to the mental health innovation fund?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about it that as we work through next year's budget in health, all of the areas will be looked at. This is one area, mental health, where we see an increase. It's something that perhaps people don't talk about a lot, and having met with a number of groups, including the minister of health, who has met with many, it is a scenario that we'll be looking at very closely to see how we can work through the challenges. Again, with our agencies that are out there, those support groups are putting together a good plan for next year.

Dr. Swann: The mental health innovation fund is meant to enhance the development and delivery of mental health services in the community. How can the Premier deny that cutting the spending of this fund is directly at odds with his plan to close beds at Alberta Hospital Edmonton and shift them to the community?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the annual report in front of me, but I highly doubt that it said: we cut. What we have done as part of our amalgamation of the Mental Health Board, nine health regions, the Cancer Board, and AADAC is that there's been a consolidation of funds. It's as much an accounting measure as it is anything else. If the hon. member can produce a document that we produced that said that we've cut, then I'd ask him to produce it and table it in the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, any money cut from mental health and addictions will just show up in housing, in children's services, Solicitor General, Justice, and other core programs. Does the Premier truly not see the connection between cost savings of properly funding mental health and addiction services?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think the member was in the House when we did our budget estimates last year. In fact, we have significantly increased our funding to support the children's mental health strategy, that we announced last year. You know, the Leader of the Opposition can try and twist the figures whichever way he wants, but in fact our mental health funding has increased and not decreased.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Nursing Workforce

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Health Services hatchetman Stephen Duckett has finally shed some light on this government's secret plan to cut the number of registered nurses working in Alberta hospitals. At a recent meeting senior nursing leaders and educators were told that there will be significant reductions in the numbers of registered nurses, accomplished by a hiring freeze and layoffs, and this is coming down the pipeline in Alberta hospitals. Fewer RNs will lead to increased patient mortality, increased hospital stays, and increased health care costs. My question is to the Premier. How can you support a policy that puts the lives of Albertans at risk by laying off nurses?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I think that we've all been in this House long enough to know that this particular member consistently uses information that is suspect. I'll use that term. You know, we've had his secret report by someone that we were going to be cutting long-term care beds. False. We have his secret report on mental health beds. False. Now we've got another particular situation here that is inaccurate. I would suggest that maybe he check his facts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. It's difficult with the most secretive government in Canada, but we get government reports that say what they're doing because they're sure not telling the people of Alberta what they're planning to do. You know, the truth in Alberta comes in a brown paper envelope because this government is so secretive. It's clear that layoffs of nurses are coming. This minister knows it, but he won't admit it. Why won't the Premier stand up in his place and ask his health minister to tell what the plan really is for nursing in Alberta? Come on; let's have it.

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, let me tell this member what the plan for nursing is in Alberta. You know, I have several meetings a year with the college of registered nurses, and every meeting they say that they want nurses to work more to their scope of training, their scope of practice. We want to make sure that nurses are part of the health care delivery system at the front end of the system, not the back end of the system. That's exactly what we're doing. I have another meeting next week with the same college, and it's my understanding that the college has been asked by Alberta Health Services because the particular documentation that the member refers to is actually incorrect, and they'll be adjusting that.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, did senior officials of Alberta Health Services tell senior nursing educators and leaders that there would be layoffs among nurses or not? Does the minister know? If he doesn't know, why doesn't he know?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, I will say what I do know, and I will table in the House the NDP news release of earlier today. I'll ask all members to take a look at this particular release, which is entitled Duckett's Move to Cut RNs Puts Patients at Greater Risk of Death. Now, how responsible is that of that particular member to make that accusation?

Government Spending

Mr. Hinman: Mr. Speaker, this government had over eight months to prepare its last budget. With a projected deficit of $4.7 billion and plunging revenues, they did nothing. This government spent $25 million on a new slogan, gave over $40 million in bonuses to top management, ignoring front-line providers, and over $13 million in raises to the Premier's Executive Council, almost the same amount as the cuts being made to education. It would appear that patronage payments and slick ad campaigns are more important than core programs for Albertans such as education. [interjections] Will the Premier please explain the priority of his spending?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I didn't quite hear the question because there was a little bit of a disturbance there, but I think he was talking about how we're working on next year's budget. Of course, for next year's budget we're ensuring that we will maintain the programs that Albertans endear, and those are health, education, supports for seniors, and of course we will build the infrastructure that's necessary as well. We're going to see 50,000 more Albertans move to this province, and we want to make sure that there is the school space and the hospital space available and any other needs that they may rely on government for.

Mr. Hinman: Perhaps his caucus would give the Premier some respect so he could listen to the questions.

Mr. Speaker, the current Executive Council and cabinet are failing Albertans in these tough economic times. Saskatchewan's conservative government is doing better. It is Grey Cup time, and Saskatchewan will be playing instead of Calgary. They will have their best talent on the field. Why doesn't this Premier have his best talent in cabinet and Executive Council? He has better. Will the Premier do the right thing and release his cabinet and Executive Council and appoint those with the best talent, experience, and competency, currently relegated to the backbenches, in place of his second-string cabinet ministers?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm not quite sure if there was a question in there or an oral statement. One thing, though, is that our two neighbouring provinces at the end of this year will be adding to their debt. This province will not be adding to the debt. We'll be using a cash surplus fund that we very wisely set up a number of years ago to help cushion the blow of the rapid drop of our revenue stream. Mr. Speaker, I know no other jurisdiction in the country of Canada or, indeed, in North America is in such a good fiscal position as the province of Alberta.

Mr. Hinman: Well, Mr. Speaker, if one listens, one may learn. That wasn't an answer that was acceptable to Albertans.

The exorbitant bonuses and wage increases were wrong and need to be returned to the taxpayers of Alberta. They are running a multibillion-dollar deficit at taxpayers' expense. Will the Premier do the right thing: release his cabinet and Executive Council, and appoint new ministers and Executive Council members at the salary rates that were in place before the last election?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, there are a number of things in that statement that the member made. First of all, the bonuses that he was referring to: last March I said that those would come to an end. They were more a supplementary payment, I think, to deputies, to senior management within government. So that's about $44 million that will not occur this year. Also, between cabinet and the Premier's office we have taken a reduction in the remuneration to those positions.

The other is that in terms of the overall government services we will ensure that we get the most value for dollar for every dollar that's spent on those services. We are going through a value review. All departments are pitching in. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has met with municipalities trying to narrow down the 77 different grants that there are and then 13 ministries down to one ministry and maybe four or five grants.

Then, of course, when we talk about giving money back, I think the hon. member did receive a relocation allowance, and since he's back in the building, maybe he wants to give it back.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

PDD Community Board Funding

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports said in this House that "some community boards are making in-year adjustments to their service provider contracts in order to meet their budget targets for this year." To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: can the minister tell the vulnerable people who rely on PDD supports how much each community board must recoup from the service providers in the middle of this fiscal year to meet their budget goals?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it's important for me to tell you that, especially in these difficult economic times, supporting Albertans most in need is a priority of this government, and our commitment remains to assisting the most vulnerable Albertans. We continue to focus on supporting PDD clients with the resources available. Funding for the PDD program alone has more than doubled since 1999 while the number of individuals served has increased by about 21 per cent. As part of this, this year's budget includes an increase to address the increasing complexity of client needs and caseload growth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't quite the answer I was looking for.

How can the minister defend this adjustment – read cut – when it makes it impossible for service providers to plan long-term program goals, let alone short-term goals, when they are told to hand back money to the government in the middle of a fiscal year?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that some community boards are making the in-year adjustments to their service provider contracts in order to meet their budget targets for this year. This is a process that we're doing throughout our different departments. It's a regular part of our business. All community boards are expected to balance their budgets.

As for next year our budget has not been finalized. As I said, like most government departments this is a process that we're in right now. We have increased the amount of money that has gone into our PDD budget. I want to remind everyone in this room that 95 per cent of our PDD clients also collect AISH benefits. That's another $704 million that this government puts out for our AISH clients on top of the $604 million that we put into PDD.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Partly answered my third question. If the minister is taking this action right now, in the middle of this fiscal year – I realize that the budget is being discussed right now, but these service providers need the information now so that they can properly plan. Are there any plans to work on a three-year budget plan rather than year by year by year? These people don't know what's going on, and we are losing service providers to the vulnerable people in this province.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, the way that we fund our service providers really hasn't changed over the years. I think that all of them are aware of the pressures that we are under. I visited a number of the service providers in the last 18 months, and I can tell you that we have some excellent service providers that are very innovative and creative. They've been able to look at their own budgets and see where they can stretch those dollars so that we get the best outcomes possible for all of our PDD clients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:10 Municipal Accountability

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past spring I introduced Bill 202, the Municipal Government (Municipal Auditor General) Amendment Act, 2009. Issues raised with this bill were about accountability and transparency of municipalities. All of my questions are for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What is the minister doing to ensure that municipalities are accountable and transparent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Danyluk: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans expect all levels of government, whether it be federal, provincial, or municipal, to be responsible and accountable with their tax dollars. I also want to emphasize that this is a priority for municipal leaders. What we have in place is the Municipal Government Act, that sets standards for financial reporting. We have the accountability framework, that is improving the reporting on grants, and more recently Bill 23, which improves assessment appeal systems. Ensuring that we have accountable municipalities is a priority for this government and also a priority for me.

Mr. Johnston: My first supplemental to the same minister: what is the minister willing to do to ensure greater accountability and transparency in municipalities?

Mr. Danyluk: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are some potential actions that we can take with the existing resources such as adopting cyclical municipal corporate reviews, requiring management letters to be made public, and developing a web portal to support better public access to information. A fourth is to ensure the independence of municipal auditors. There is no doubt that this process has sharpened our focus.

Mr. Johnston: No more questions, Mr. Speaker.

Domestic Violence

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, continuing to take the same action and expecting different results is the definition of insanity. At this time we have more women who are assaulted in domestic situations than ever before. Fifty per cent, half, of those women who approach shelters have to be turned away. Understandably, women with children get first access to shelters and services, but it guarantees that women without children will be turned away. My questions are to the Deputy Premier. What new approaches have been developed to specifically assist women without children who suffer domestic assault and violence?

Mr. Snelgrove: I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would be fair to say that Treasury Board doesn't get into the interministerial stuff. I will say that there is a sexual assault shelter in Lloydminster that I am very familiar with. I know that they have been working with the minister, with the department. The circumstances around so many are changing because there are so many different family stresses or situations. I don't have any specific response for her. She might be able to reappropriate her question to them, but I can tell you that we are very aware of the importance in our communities of these centres.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Solicitor General. Victims of domestic assault are victims of crime. So given that the victims of crime fund has amassed a considerable surplus in the range of $40 million, which continues to grow, what new programs for the prevention of domestic assault and violence have been piloted or funded through this mountain of money?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have the specifics on any particular program, but I will say that we have increased funding substantially over the last couple of years to victims of violence, including victims of family violence, so we are doing what we can.

Ms Blakeman: You fund $4 million a year and with a $40 million surplus.

To the President of the Treasury Board. As politicians we have utterly failed to deliver on promises to reduce child poverty and domestic assault. I'll remind everyone that children are not Cabbage Patch dolls. Poor children come from poor families. If they are single-parent families, 80 per cent of them will be headed by women. With all the resources that Alberta has compared to other provinces, why are we not leaders in these areas?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, it's really unfair to suggest that we're not leaders in caring for those in Alberta that are vulnerable. Not only on the issue that the hon. member brings up, we have probably, well, some of the biggest support programs, departments in the country. We fund the social aspect of vulnerable Albertans far in excess of any other province in this country. So to pick out a specific program and say, "There, you're not quite giving them as much as I'd like; therefore, you don't care about women and children in those areas" is just unfair, and it's not true.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Chestermere, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

Mr. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1976 Premier Peter Lougheed created the Alberta heritage fund. In this very room he eloquently asked this question:

Are we prepared as a province to put aside substantial sums of current revenues from the sale of non-replaceable . . . oil production for the sake of our children and for our grandchildren and not make it available for current revenue needs; to use it for that day when . . . the wells may have [run] dry?

My question is to the Minister of Finance and Enterprise. What is this government's plan to grow the heritage fund sufficient to replace our province's reliance on nonrenewable resources for our children and grandchildren?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The vision created by then Premier Lougheed continues in the kinds of work we've done today. At the end of the first quarter the heritage fund, which is our strongest savings portfolio, had grown to over $14 billion. There was $7 billion over the last four and a half years that had been saved and put into endowments and other kinds of savings funds and $17 billion that were put in the sustainability fund, in part last year reflecting a need for more short-term savings. But over the longer term we can count on moving past inflation-proofing in the good years to actually salting away more dollars into the heritage fund for the future of our children and grandchildren.

Mr. Anderson: That's good to hear.

Over the course of the heritage fund's history $30.9 billion in heritage fund earnings have been transferred to the province's general revenue account. Conversely, deposits into the heritage fund from general revenue over that period have only been $16 billion, leaving a net withdrawal from the fund of $14.9 billion. To the minister: after we are out of deficit, is this government committed to leaving annual interest earnings from the heritage fund in the heritage fund for the benefit of future generations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I add to the response I gave previously that in the last four and a half years the amount of money that we have provided has been the equivalent of 48 per cent of the resource revenues that have been accrued by the province, so we are moving in that regard.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just point out that the general revenue fund today is having the benefit of the interest accruals. That's true. But over the future, as we get back into a position of sustainability and once we have paid down this current deficit, we will return to the original premise of providing more dollars for the heritage fund from resource revenues.

Mr. Anderson: Since Alberta became debt free in 2004, nonrenewable resource revenue to the end of 2008 has amounted to $47 billion. In that same time period, however, only $3.9 billion of that $47 billion in revenues was invested in the heritage fund. To the minister: now that debt in Alberta is no longer a serious problem, after we are out of deficit, will this government commit to substantially increasing the amount of resource revenues directly invested in the heritage fund?

Ms Evans: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, that is the fond hope of everybody in this Assembly. I'd like to point out that when we have hit the deficit situation, the authors of the FIPAC report, headed by Jack Mintz, support what we're currently doing, which is paying off the sustainability fund once we are at a position to turn around before we go back and put the money into the heritage fund. I don't think there's anybody in here that is more dedicated to providing those savings for the future than our Premier. Unfortunately, today we find ourselves in a situation of planning ahead rather than acknowledging our ability to do it in the present.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Contracted Children's Services Agencies

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 209, Children's Services Review Committee Act, which did not receive debate this session, was intended to review systemic issues that contracted agencies under Children and Youth Services face with the objective of correcting the identified imbalances. When it comes to social services delivery, contracted service providers are treated by this government as second-class citizens despite their front-line, equally emergent roles. High staff turnovers result in detrimentally fragmented support for the most vulnerable. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: given that your ministry has similar issues with regard to contracted agencies, does the minister recognize an unfair imbalance in compensation between those employed by the government and those employed by agencies?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, if you look at the history of our agencies and of our institutions that we no longer want to continue into the future, you'll see that we started off by looking after all of our people with disabilities in certain areas. It became very clear that the best possible outcomes for our persons with disabilities were by living in their own communities. People stepped forward and became agencies to say: we want to look after our people with disabilities in our own communities, so let us do that. That's kind of the history of our contracted agencies. We have admitted that there is a gap between what's being paid in the older type care that we're giving to some of our PDD clients and the agencies that now look after in most cases our PDD clients. There is a gap. We have been trying to close that gap, and we are still working towards that goal.

Mr. Chase: I very much appreciate that response because, Mr. Speaker, admission is the first stage towards correction.

Does the minister agree that the contracted agencies in Seniors and Community Supports also face the same workload imbalances as those in Children and Youth Services, where contracted agencies are often left to do more with less?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, our contracted agencies do an excellent job. They have the same goal that we have, which is to make our citizens with disabilities a priority and to give them the best care possible so that we reach the best outcomes possible for them. They do have to take the dollars that we're able to give them and make them work for those best possible outcomes. Once again, when you look at the total number of dollars, $604 million for the PDD program alone for 9,200 people, I think that what we need to do is to work together to ensure that those dollars are working towards the best possible outcomes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate, as I noted, the minister's admission that there are discrepancies, that there are imbalances. Therefore, I'm asking: is the minister taking any action whatsoever to correct the systemic issues that are unfair not only to those employed by contracted agencies but also to the vulnerable individuals who receive services from them? When will these discrepancies be addressed?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I did admit that there was a gap in the pay scales between government paid and agency paid, but there is no gap in the care. The care that our PDD clients are receiving through our agencies is the best care that you could receive anywhere. I've visited many of them, and I know that even if they feel that they're not being paid enough – and you know what? I don't know if we could ever pay them enough because what they do is a tremendous – a tremendous – service to all Albertans, especially those with PDD. I appreciate the work that they've done so much, and knowing how much heart they put into it, we're working towards making things better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have witnessed first-hand the devastation when this government begins sharpening its knife. It's no wonder, then, that school trustees speak out when the government starts to talk about cutting their budget. But the Minister of Education wants them to shut their mouths and let him control what they say to the public, and he told them so yesterday. How dare the minister scold democratically elected school trustees for doing their job and defending the education system?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member go to www.davehancock.ca and read what I actually said before she forms a question that postulates what I didn't say.

What I did say to school board trustees is that I had engaged them this year in the most extensive prebudget consultation they've ever had, in a positive discussion about looking through the lens of: are we doing the right things, and are we doing them in the right way? When we're saying that we're doing the right things, are we achieving the outcomes we want to achieve? We ought to be able to look at everything we do to determine whether or not it's helping us to achieve our outcomes. They're all engaged in that process.

What I was concerned about was whether or not when they signed on to an ad campaign about stopping the cuts – and don't get me wrong. I love the engagement of Albertans in discussing education and its importance. But when they engage in that process, did they use public money that ought to be going to the classroom?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I actually have a copy of what the minister said yesterday, so I did actually read it. This minister's if you can't say something nice, don't say something at all approach is not only profoundly condescending; it also serves to oppress any form of democratic debate.

Now, we've seen it all before. When Lyle Oberg was challenged, his response was to send in the auditors. This government thinks that school trustees work for them, not for the people who elected them. How can this minister be so arrogant as to think it's appropriate to lecture and intimidate elected officials who are working to ensure that our children receive a decent education?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I just met with the school board chairs and superintendents this morning, all morning, talking, again, in the process of discussion about what we need to do and how we can do it better and how we can do it collaboratively. Not one of them was intimidated by me; I can assure you of that. They all engaged in a very frank, open, and honest discussion. Not one backed away from the challenge to discuss education in a forward-thinking, robust, optimistic manner about what we can do to make sure that every child in this province has an opportunity to succeed to the best of their abilities. That's what we're engaged in. It's not patronizing. It's open, honest, frank discussion about what's important.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite what the minister says, Alberta school trustees obviously don't believe the government is listening to their concerns, and the only way they could get the government's attention was by launching the Stop the Cuts campaign. Frankly, if the minister got 10,000 e-mails, I hope to goodness that he's finally getting the message. Rather than listening to their message, why did the minister choose to scold and bully and to get them to toe the Conservative line?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, over the course of this year we've engaged in Inspiring Education: A Dialogue with Albertans. It has been a process that has been going on for a full year of consultation with trustees, with parents, with teachers, and with the public. We had setting the direction for children with special needs, in which we engaged with trustees, with teachers, with school boards, with the public. We've had the School Act review. We're engaging with trustees, with the public, with school boards, with teachers. We now have, as I said before several times today, the most robust prebudget discussion that we've ever had in this province on education about how we go forward with the resources we have to achieve the outcomes we need to achieve. There can't be any more honest, open, frank, and responsive approach that I can think of. It's taken all of my time this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffer.

Collection of Personal Information in Licensed Premises

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I don't know exactly how I can follow that, but I'll do my best.

Recent amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act strive to make bars and restaurants safer in Alberta. Collecting personal information such as a person's age, name, and photograph is directly and reasonably related to increasing safety and security. However, the office of the Alberta Information and Privacy Commissioner has stated in recent guidelines: "It is against the law to scan or photocopy the entire face of a patron's driver's licence." A question to the Minister of Public Security and Solicitor General. In light of the recent amendments to the Gaming and Liquor Act, are owners of licensed premises permitted to scan drivers' licences of patrons in order to capture a person's name, age, or photograph?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont points out, the Gaming and Liquor Act was amended to allow bar operators to help them deal with problem patrons and make licensed premises safer. What it comes down to is that licensees should only consider collecting the age, the photograph, and the name of the patron if there are incidents of violence or other unacceptable behaviour in and around their premises, attempts by gang members and their associates or drug dealers to enter their premises, or significant numbers of attempts by minors to enter the premises. Scanning of a driver's licence is not permitted as some information on a driver's licence is not allowed to be collected under this legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the same minister consider expressly allowing the scanning of drivers' licences in order to capture the name, age, and photograph of a patron in regulations made to the Gaming and Liquor Act? [interjections]

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, spring must be coming. I hear some chirping in the room here.

The common-sense guidelines on the collection of limited personal information – name, age, and photograph – were developed with the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. It was important to work with the commissioner to have guidelines that would help licensees comply with the Personal Information Protection Act when collecting information under the Gaming and Liquor Act. The guidelines clearly state: "Should a licensee use scanning technology to collect a patron's name, age and photograph, the technology must be programmed to only collect this limited, specific information." So it is a possibility.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Denis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I suppose that if the opposition is upset here, I must be onto something good. To the Minister of Service Alberta: will this minister consider revising the Personal Information Protection Act or regulations made pursuant to the act in order to make it clear that a reasonable purpose for the collection of personal information from drivers' licences is, in fact, to make licensed premises safer for Albertans?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member is aware, we just recently completed a set of amendments to this legislation. It's important to note that when legislation is reviewed on an ongoing basis, anything to do on this matter of drivers' licences will be done in consultation with the Information and Privacy Commissioner. We have the most secure drivers' licences in North America. We want to ensure that Albertans have a good, secure document and that they know it's safe and secure as well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste Anne.

Earned Remission for Convicted Criminals

Mr. Hehr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government recently passed legislation that allows prisoners in provincial custody time off for good behaviour. At the same time the Justice minister has been advocating for the federal government to get tough on crime by eliminating two-for-one sentencing. To the Solicitor General. I guess the rationale for providing convicted criminals time off for good behaviour is to increase the effectiveness of our prison system. It also would seem the same rationale for two-for-one sentencing at the federal level. Accordingly, can the Solicitor General rationalize this apparent sucking and blowing at the same time on this issue?

Mr. Lindsay: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only sucking and blowing seems to be coming from the other side of House. Let me say that we're talking about earned remission. It's earned remission to encourage improved safety in the facility and to encourage our inmates to participate in programs so that they're better prepared when they come out to contribute to society. Earned remission is exactly that. It's earned remission to give them time off for good behaviour and to get involved in programs that are going to help them lead their lives in a more meaningful way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess while I'm on the point of clarifying things, I hope the Solicitor General can answer me: aren't these two mechanisms just giving prisoners time off for behaviour after they've been convicted criminals?

Mr. Lindsay: Again, Mr. Speaker, earned remission is simply what we said it is in the legislation. It's about earning the ability to get out before your complete sentence has expired. It puts it in the same parallel as federal legislation. Before this legislation was passed in this House, provincial and municipal sentences were not allowed any time off. So it was an imbalance where somebody could be incarcerated for impaired driving, for example, for six months, someone else under provincial legislation for six months, and the impaired driver, which is a more serious charge, could get out sooner than someone under provincial legislation.

Mr. Hehr: Well, Mr. Speaker, while some individuals may look at this legislation and say that it's an appropriate way to run a prison system, I'm not so sure that the average Albertan would share their view. Again to the Solicitor General: how much public consultation did your department do prior to implementing this legislation that will see convicted criminals get time off for good behaviour?

Mr. Lindsay: Mr. Speaker, we have consulted with Albertans, and the Albertans that I talked to do believe in fair and balanced sentences.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

AgriRecovery Program

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Cattle producers in Alberta are facing many challenges. Dry conditions this summer in some parts of the province added existing pressures by contributing to reduce the availability of feed. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. I understand that the Alberta

Beef Producers recently sent yourself and the federal agriculture minister a letter requesting funding under AgriRecovery. Minister, can you tell me what the status of this request is?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since receiving this request from ABP, the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, better known as the AFSC, has been working closely with the government and particularly the federal government officials. They're assessing if this qualifies for a response under AgriRecovery. While this assessment is under way, there are other programs that are kicking in and responding and helping to address the drought situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, thank you. Can the minister also tell us what the criteria for AgriRecovery is and when a decision is made on this request?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Groeneveld: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. AgriRecovery is meant to provide additional support to producers when a significant and unique disaster occurs and when existing programming does not address the situation. So the assessment will look at the severity and impact of the drought and to what extent it may be covered under the already existing programs.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, I guess, back to the same minister, then. If AgriRecovery is to provide assistance when other programs aren't applicable, in this situation what programs are?

Mr. Groeneveld: Mr. Speaker, Alberta producers have access to probably some of the most comprehensive programs in the country. This fall we introduced the cattle price insurance program, the first of its kind in Alberta, available only in Alberta. It'll help address the impact of the drought in future years. AgriInsurance and AgriStability are also available under Growing Forward, that is now in the new program. The AFSC also provides production insurance, hay insurance, pasture insurance, all of which respond to the effects of the drought. The truth of the matter is that people have to have an uptake of this insurance to protect themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Shelter numbers are up, rent subsidies have run out, people are waiting the same two years to get into affordable housing, and food bank use has increased in the province of Alberta by 61 per cent. Despite these facts, the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs returns from luncheons boasting about the great job she's doing. To the minister: will the minister admit that changes to the homelessness and eviction prevention program were more about improving the department's bottom line than keeping people in their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be pleased to speak to the rent supplement program that we offer to Albertans in need. It is based on a priority list. It's a program that has $90 million, that assists 40,000 Albertans. For the emergency side of the program I would refer to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who administers that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week it was reported that a disabled mother and daughter who lost their home in Camrose because of a fire may also lose their rent subsidy because they can't find an accessible apartment soon enough. What does the minister have to say to this family?

Mrs. Fritz: Well, Mr. Speaker, something that would be that serious, that I personally have not heard about as the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs, I'd ask the hon. member to give me that information, and that individual will be assisted immediately. But I have to tell you that with the staff that we have – they're excellent in the work that they do – I somehow think that they would have assisted this individual already. If not, hon. member, I'll look into that for you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will share that information with the minister.

Some disabled people, Mr. Speaker, have been denied a spot on the waiting list for accessible housing in Calgary because they're receiving rent subsidies for their current inaccessible, expensive housing. Why is waiting on a waiting list for affordable, accessible housing while collecting a rent subsidy considered double-dipping by this ministry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's another case where I would invite the hon. member to give me the information, and I will look into that and get back to you, hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Hunting and Angling Promotion

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hunting and angling have played an important role in shaping Alberta's social, cultural, and environmental heritage. While most Albertans do not object to angling, there appears to be a bit of an antihunter sentiment among the general population. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What have you done to encourage and support more youth to participate in hunting?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Morton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. Alberta's hunters and anglers are our best conservation stewards. They put their money where their mouth is, right into the habitat that fish and wildlife depend on. That's why we have put a lot of initiative into recruitment of the next generation of hunters. In the last three years we've introduced Provincial Hunting Day and Waterfowler Heritage Days, which create new youth-only hunting opportunities. We have free fishing weekends for youth and family.

I also want to take this opportunity to acknowledge and thank the groups that do a great job of training the next generation of hunters: Alberta Hunter Education Instructors' Association, Hunting for Tomorrow, and all the Alberta fish and game clubs around the province. They've trained thousands of Alberta youth in responsible and safe hunting practices.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: have any of the programs and initiatives you have mentioned brought in more youth, and how have the fish and game associations of the province contributed substantially to the training of youth in both fishing and hunting?

2:40

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, that's another excellent question. I couldn't have thought of it myself. I'm happy to report that resident youth hunters, under the age of 18, have increased 20 per cent in the last three years, from 5,300 to over 6,400. Resident hunters in the next age category, 18 to 30, have increased by four and a half thousand. This is part of an overall positive trend in hunting and angling. In 2008 we sold 3,000 more WIN cards, 12,000 more sport fishing licences, and 39,000 more bird and big game licences than we did in 2006. This is contrary to trends in other jurisdictions in North America. These young hunters are conservationists in training. The future is bright.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Prins: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Our youth hunters are very Internet savvy, so is your department doing anything to communicate with them online, and have you considered what other jurisdictions, even some parts of Alberta, are doing by allowing or enabling young hunters to train in restricted or controlled and regulated areas for efficiency and safety and security reasons?

Dr. Morton: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka must be reading my mind. I'm again happy to report to the House that this past year Sustainable Resource Development launched a new website, My Wild Alberta, that provides hunting, fishing, and trapping information to all Albertans. In the last less than 12 months we've had over 200,000 visits to this website.

Part of this website connects hunters and anglers to other partners. One of those is the AlbertaRELM system, which is a new online licensing system. Now Internet licences through the RELM constitute 19 per cent of all sales. Our goal is to reach 50 per cent by 2011. This is a realistic goal. For those hunters that participate in the draw system, 54 per cent of draws, over half, now go through the RELM system. So we're definitely into the electronic age.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that was 94 questions and responses today.

In a few seconds from now we'll continue with Members' Statements, but in the interim might we revert briefly to the Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to members for the Introduction of Guests. It is an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature some members of the Alberta Graduate Council, or AGC. This enthusiastic group is the provincial organization dedicated to representing and advancing the interests of Alberta's approximately 11,000 university graduate students. I had a great meeting with them yesterday. We talked about where we're headed in terms of research and innovation and funding in our postsecondary institutions. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I would ask each to stand as I call their name to receive the welcome of the Assembly. They are Jessica Mino, Rob Chernish, Richard Querel, and Floribert Kamabu. If I could ask all hon. members to give them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning for introductions.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, it's petitions and introductions.

The Speaker: Well, no. They're two separate. Do you want to deal with introductions now?

Mr. Sandhu: No.

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, did you have an introduction?

Hon. Member for Strathcona, did you have an introduction? Proceed.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Conrad Kreilein, who is visiting here from Kempen in Germany. I met Conrad a few months ago on a family trip over to Europe and learned that he had planned to travel to the U.S. and Canada, so of course we invited him to visit our incredible province. Here he is just a little bit late for summer. He's seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that he rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Okay. In a few seconds we're back to Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Ron Morgan

Mr. Boutillier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last night Fort McMurray lost one of its city fathers who served in building our city over the past 30 years as a native Albertan and resident of Fort McMurray. Alderman Ron Morgan was my friend and colleague and, certainly, a mentor to many. He died last night after spending over two years in the Northern Lights regional hospital. He was only 73 years old.

He served on city council, spanning from 1971 to 2001. He was the longest serving elected councillor in our city's history. He watched Fort McMurray and the neighbouring communities grow from a small town and hamlet to a new town under the province's New Towns Act to a city council and then to a regional council, which he was so proud of. He watched GCOS, Great Canadian Oil Sands, now Suncor, blossom. He watched Syncrude blossom. He watched the town grow from 5,000 citizens to now over a hundred thousand citizens. He had a reputation as a very proud alderman who treated every citizen fairly and with respect.

I had the honour of calling Alderman Ron Morgan my friend and colleague and mentor. When we formed the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo in the mid-90s, he was ever so proud.

He was considered the father of little league baseball. Recently a park was named in his honour in recognition of his great, outstanding community service in helping our youth. He was a very proud father, leaving behind six children, grandchildren, and one great-grandchild.

Flags are being lowered today in the region on behalf of and in respect for the Morgan family.

Recently while visiting Ron in the hospital, he said: you know, Guy, a city without a history is a city without a heart. I can only say today – and I'm sure members of this Assembly will join me – that to those who knew him, Ron Morgan had a heart. To his family and friends we offer our thanks for him serving Alberta and Fort McMurray. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Municipal Government (Municipal Auditor General) Amendment Act, 2009

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past spring I introduced Bill 202, the Municipal Government (Municipal Auditor General) Amendment Act, 2009. I'd like to offer my sincere thanks to the Assembly for considering this bill. Brought forward with this bill was the opportunity to highlight several areas that I believe needed improving; namely, accountability and transparency of municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 was referred to the all-party Standing Committee on Community Services. The committee had the opportunity to hear from Albertans from all across the province. I would like to thank all those that took the time to share their thoughts and concerns with the committee. Yesterday the Standing Committee on Community Services met to issue its final report on Bill 202, which will be tabled today by the chair.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the recommendations that are being put forth with this report. And I am pleased that the Minister of Municipal Affairs was able to bring a viable option to the committee that not only addressed the intent of Bill 202 but also the concerns that were raised by municipalities with regard to the bill. Not only is the minister committed to bringing forward meaningful and important changes, but I also believe that as a result of Bill 202, municipalities will take steps to further improve their accountability and transparency to their citizens. Though Bill 202 has not been passed, I am pleased that the notions of accountability and transparency in municipalities came to the forefront.

Thank you again to the Assembly and the committee for consideration of Bill 202. I look forward to seeing the minister's recommendations implemented.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, chair of the Standing Committee on Community Services.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Community Services it is my honour today to table copies of the committee's report on Bill 202, Municipal Government (Municipal Auditor General) Amendment Act, 2009, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and referred to the committee on March 16, 2009. Bill 202 raised many important matters, and the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays should be commended for his work in bringing the bill forward.

I would like to extend the committee's sincere appreciation to the organizations, municipalities, and individual Albertans who took the time to provide the committee with their submissions and presentations. I would like to thank the minister and officials from Alberta Municipal Affairs for their input on the bill and to acknowledge the support provided to the committee by the staff of the Legislative Assembly Office. I must also thank my fellow committee members, representing all parties in the Assembly, who worked together over the past several months to carry out a meaningful review of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the report recommends that Bill 202 not proceed. I would request the concurrence of the Assembly with respect to the report on Bill 202, Municipal Government (Municipal Auditor General) Amendment Act, 2009.

The Speaker: This is a request that needs the approval of the Assembly. All those in the Assembly who concur with the report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. The request is carried.

Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that present today or earlier today in the gallery were Mr. Guy Smith, president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, Mr. Dave Scragg, Mr. Doug Lehman, and Mr. Mark Reiter. They're here to observe the petition. As I table this, I'd like to express appreciation on behalf of the House for their commitment and that of their colleagues to serving Albertans with mental illness and mental health and for their co-operation in the review process currently under way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Sandhu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 3,000 concerned Albertans. The petition reads:

Also in attendance today for this presentation are Mark Wells, from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, and current Alberta Hospital employees Jose De Sousa, Willy Gardener, and David Climenhaga. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert. We're on petitions here now.

Mr. Allred: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a petition received in my office from constituents across Alberta. This petition states:

A total of 525 individuals signed their names to this petition. I'm pleased to present this on their behalf to ensure that their voices are heard in this Assembly and province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Denis: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present roughly 200 signatures on a petition, mostly from Calgary. The petition reads: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to maintain the current policy for distribution of charitable gaming proceeds." This brings the total petitions I've submitted relating to this item to about 1,500. I'll pass it to the page.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to present to the Assembly the requisite number of copies of a petition pertaining to the Alberta Hospital. This one says:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to redevelop Alberta Hospital [as has been mentioned in this House] as necessary in order to maintain all services, programs, and beds operating as of September 1, 2009 . . .

In closing, I want to also mention Guy Smith and those who are here from the Alberta union of public employees. I have petitions of 6,615 to submit to the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition received in my office from constituents in Calgary. I'm pleased to forward on their comments to all members for their consideration. A total of 100 individuals have signed this petition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Petitions.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions. The first one that I'd like to introduce reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, object to the development and use of nuclear power in Alberta, and we petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to develop an energy policy which encourages conservation, promotes the use of safe, clean, renewable energy sources and explicitly rejects nuclear power in this province.

This petition has 285 signatures, which are in addition to the 1,032 signatures presented on this petition last month.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is with respect to Alberta Hospital. It reads:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to redevelop Alberta Hospital Edmonton as necessary in order to maintain all services, programs, and beds operating as of September 1, 2009 at Alberta Hospital Edmonton.

The petition has 1,516 signatures.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've had a very productive fall sitting of the Alberta Legislature and given that we anticipate all legislation before the Assembly being completed as much as possible very soon, I would propose on behalf of the hon. Government House Leader the following motion. "Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the Legislative Assembly stand adjourned on November 26, 2009, upon completion of Royal Assent by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor."

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Bill 216

Alberta Outdoors Weekend Act

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 216, Alberta Outdoors Weekend Act.

This would designate the first weekend in May of each year as Alberta outdoors weekend in recognition of the importance of outdoor recreation to the people of Alberta.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 216 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Relations.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in question period today the minister of health referred to the Alberta NDP's news release and offered to table it. On his behalf I'd like to make that tabling now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mrs. Sarich: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. My first tabling is the appropriate number of copies regarding the minister's education leadership recognition awards, known as the MELRA, presentations to the Alberta School Boards Association zone 2/3 recipients for November 27, 2009.

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is regarding the minister's education leadership recognition awards, known as the MELRA, presentations to the Alberta School Boards Association zone 4 recipients on November 30, 2009.

I would like to take this opportunity to express appreciation, thanks, and congratulations to all the school board jurisdictions across the province for their hard work this year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have several tablings today. The first is a set of letters, most of them individual letters from constituents concerning education cuts and imposing education cuts. They are from Aaron Johnson, Nancy Antoniuk, Heather Jamieson, Rebecca Verveda, Harlan James, and Marie Jahner.

My second set of tablings, Mr. Speaker, is documents from quite an impressive meeting last night at Rexall Place, focusing on the burying of power lines in the Edmonton region. There are two sets of documents. One deals with the myths of power lines, and the other provides a lot of background to the meeting. I must say that of all the many, many public meetings I've been to in my life, that was one of the most elaborately organized.

My third set of tablings is correspondence CCed to me from Norm Dick who is very concerned about nongroup drug benefits and very upset with the government and the reply that he received from the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: Hon. members, I must now advise that under Standing Order 7(7) we've arrived at the conclusion of the daily Routine.

Well, I sat down hoping somebody would ask if there would be unanimous consent to conclude the Routine, but nobody did. I take it, Edmonton-Riverview, that you're requesting such?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, it would be my great delight to request the unanimous consent of the Assembly to finish the Routine. Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, letters from constituents Jeff Jenkins, Megan Berry, Jordana Hinton, and Laura Van Geel, all expressing their concerns about cuts to public education funding.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the required five copies of my letter and cheque dated November 17, 2009, regarding my donation to the Lethbridge Food Bank as per my pledge in the Assembly on April 2, 2004. Half of my MLA indexed pay raise of $146.25 is donated monthly to a food bank in southern Alberta because AISH should be similarly increased and indexed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the requisite number of copies of e-mails from Calgary-Varsity constituents Maureen Coulombe, Megan McCulloch, Diane Stinert, Bev Montgomery, and Hillary Johnstone, which were sent to the Minister of Education and the Premier urging them not to cut funding to education because the future prosperity of Alberta will depend on the knowledge and skills of its future generation. I applaud them for taking part in the democratic process.

Mr. Speaker, my second tabling is a letter to the Premier on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition from Donna Lowry regarding concerns over the closure of beds at Alberta Hospital. Donna states: "We are a family who, for over 35 years, have suffered with and over the mental illness of a daughter."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three sets of tablings. The first is a letter from the Forest Lawn high school parents' association providing their input on the redistribution of casino funding.

The second is a letter from the James Short parents' association doing the same.

The third is 95 letters from parents from the Monterey Park elementary school in my constituency providing input on the casino funding review.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an academic paper entitled The Impact of Nurse Staffing on Hospital Costs and Patient Length of Stay.

I also have another academic paper entitled The Impact of Hospital Nursing Characteristics on 30-day Mortality. Both papers were referred to by my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood in his questions today. Both papers show evidence that a higher ratio of RNs is linked to reduced costs and length of hospital stays and is also related to improved patient care and lower mortality rates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Bill McAree, Whitecourt town councillor and operations supervisor of Associated Ambulance, with regard to Bill 62.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Chief Electoral Officer Appointment

21. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee and recommend that Olaf Brian Fjeldheim be appointed as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would note that there was a lot of work done by the committee members, and the report has already been tabled in the Assembly. I think that at this point everyone here is just looking forward to perhaps a few other comments, if necessary, but at the conclusion support for this particular report.

Thank you to all members of that committee.

The Speaker: This is a debatable motion. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. This is an important motion, and it's one that I speak to with some gravity. Just to repeat, it says:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the report of the Select Special Chief Electoral Officer Search Committee and recommend that Olaf Brian Fjeldheim be appointed as Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we all know that elections are the foundation of our democratic process. They're the mechanisms by which every single one of us attains and holds onto or loses our seats. The administration of the electoral process has to be not only in fact but in appearance impeccable if we are to maintain the credibility of our voting process. It is the job of whomever we as an Assembly appoint to this position to make sure that that administration is conducted properly.

I think it is worth noting that this recommendation, as I understand it, was not the unanimous choice of the committee. I expect that that is a reflection of different views of how an election needs to be run and whether we need to step forward into the future or step backward into the past. The concern that we feel with this appointment is that while Mr. Fjeldheim is an honourable gentleman and unquestionably has experience in running an election, it is time in this province to embrace a future new approach to elections. With Mr. Fjeldheim's history of running elections in this province, going backward, we're concerned that an attitude of innovation and freshness and openness may be more difficult to achieve.

Now, I fully understand that he is going to be appointed, and I wish him the very, very best because although the general public doesn't realize it, he is one of the most important officials in this province.

I want to lay out a series of challenges to Mr. Fjeldheim when he becomes Chief Electoral Officer. I think that if we look back at the elections in Alberta in, say, 2001 and 2004, there were a number of concerns, and those concerns are reflected in many documents. One of the most important documents was submitted to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices in October 2006 by the then Chief Electoral Officer, Lorne Gibson, who only held his position for a relatively brief period. This report contains quite a number of recommendations, very fundamental recommendations for cleaning up what is a deeply flawed election process in Alberta.

The recommendations are fairly wide ranging. They include setting fixed election dates. They include a new, nonpartisan process for appointing returning officers. They include new ways of managing and building election lists and voter lists. In fact, what this document involves is a complete modernization and overhaul of Alberta's election processes. These recommendations were, in my belief, in my understanding, completely ignored by this government in the lead-up to the last election. In fact, that was an election that was plagued by many, many serious problems.

The report of the Chief Electoral Officer after the 2008 general election repeats many of those same concerns. I won't go through them; these are all there for the public to read. They address fundamental issues of how voters were identified on voter lists and note that a very significant percentage of voters had to be sworn in. It was, in fact, a swear-in rate – I'm quoting from page 52 of this report – of 26.9 per cent of voters. That's simply unacceptable. The appointment process for returning officers: again, completely unacceptable. Massive lineups at polling stations, delays in appointing returning officers, and on, and on, and on.

Mr. Speaker, the challenge that Mr. Fjeldheim faces now is to break with the past and to lead a modernization, a complete overhaul of Alberta's electoral process and to do it with the force of character that demands that this government listen. He has a challenge to defend democracy and build democracy in this province because we are watching election by election the voter process in Alberta decline. It turns up in an obvious number like the voter turnout, which was just over 40 per cent in the last election, the lowest in the recorded history of elections in this country from Confederation onwards.

It also turns up in the real experiences of people trying to fulfill what is, after all, the first right in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That first right is the right to vote in federal and provincial elections. Mr. Speaker, we in our office alone had an enormous number of complaints on election day from people who were not able to fulfill that right. They went to voting stations to vote, and they were turned away, or they were sent to other election stations and then sent to yet another one. They were denied access because of ID issues. They were denied access for all kinds of reasons. We also have well-documented cases, for example, of outright election fraud. We have a well-documented case of a returning officer opening a ballot box in the middle of election day, breaking the seal on a ballot box in the middle of election day. These kinds of irregularities are unbecoming of any democracy.

My challenge and our challenge in the opposition to Mr. Fjeldheim: don't return to the past; use this mandate you are certain to get today and build to the future and challenge all of us as members of this Assembly to bring Alberta into a leadership position nationally and internally in terms of election administration.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to drive home those points today because in many ways nothing is more fundamental to the value of democracy than how we run our elections. As we watch the corrosion of that process, as we watch widespread breakdowns of administration, we also witness the decline of democracy. We all need to stand up for that, and the person we charge with doing that day in, day out with every fibre of his being is the Chief Electoral Officer.

Mr. Speaker, I needed to get those comments on the record. This issue, believe me, will not go away. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the ability here to speak on this motion. As always, I really appreciated the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. They were quick and to the point and really highlighted some of the difficulty that has happened in prior elections, the most recent one in 2008. I, too, for the record realize that Mr. Fjeldheim is going to get this motion, and I, too, wish him well in pursuing what I hope is a brighter future for democracy here in Alberta. We can look back to the past, even the last election, and realize to a person here in this Legislature that it was not run in the best way possible. This was highly evident not only in the run-up to the election but, as well, in the aftermath, where we had many comments in the newspapers and otherwise that made brash predictions like: this was the worst-run election ever. Now, I have not been here in Alberta for the full 100 years of its time, nor have I taken part in all of their elections, but I think it's safe to say that some of those comments were warranted. Going back over a little bit of the history, we can see that.

In 2006 the former Chief Electoral Officer, Mr. Lorne Gibson, had put a report together, a comprehensive report that outlined a detailed process that would modernize the Alberta electoral process. Some of the points in there were crystal clear as to how to improve democracy. Who can argue with returning officers being appointed by a neutral proceeding on merit? Who can argue with set election dates? Who can argue with an increase in polling stations? Who can argue with better mechanisms for allowing people to get signed up to take part in elections? All of these goals were put into a report in 2006 that outlined a way for this government to act in a way that, I would feel, was in the best interests of democracy, by allowing and encouraging as many people as possible to participate in the election. Well, that was ignored.

Then came the election in 2008 – and I brought up some of those points here – which by anyone's account was not that well participated in, nor was it that well run. I don't know whether it was a chicken-or-egg thing that led to that happening. Nevertheless, it is what it is. We have an opportunity now to go ahead and fight for a better day in democracy.

After that election we also had another report, that was drafted by the next Chief Electoral Officer, which had many of the same recommendations put into place. During this legislative session I've asked the Justice minister: when will these recommendations be put into place? Will these recommendations be put into place before the next election, or are we simply going to go from 2006 to 2008 to 2012, never quite getting to the point where we put in electoral reform and some recommendations made by these past Chief Electoral Officers?

So on this note I'm encouraging Mr. Fjeldheim to be bold, to look at these recommendations, to act on many of these recommendations to improve not only democracy as it stands on election day but democracy as it stands in its lead-ups and its run-ups and its aftermath in all accounts. I am hopeful that his appointment will signal a day where we can look to Albertans participating more in elections, where we can go from a 41 per cent participation rate to something higher. These are difficult challenges for the new Chief Electoral Officer. I wish him well in this regard, and hopefully he will be able to implement some of these changes to make Alberta democracy work in a much better fashion.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, appreciate an opportunity to get on the record with Government Motion 21, which is the appointment, of course, of Mr. Fjeldheim to the position of Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta. I was on the committee. I had the opportunity to participate in a lot of the discussion that occurred surrounding this appointment.

The first thing I would like to say is that a lot of the discussions went on in camera, or behind closed doors, and I think that if we're going to restore confidence in the entire process, more of these discussions should go on in public. There is absolutely nothing the matter with having a public hearing. Individuals other than those that are on the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices could participate because there are many interested parties who have more than just a passing interest, if I can say, in the five legislative offices as we know them. I think that the office of the Chief Electoral Officer would be more widely known than some of the others for obvious reasons.

Hon. members previous had talked about elections and the conduct at election time of the office and the planning and the processes that lead up to E-day, and those are important comments. It's a very important time for not only the Chief Electoral Officer but his or her employees. I can understand where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is coming from because first-hand I saw problems with the last election. We brought them forward; we got them on the record. I couldn't believe that a ballot box at a mobile poll in our constituency was literally taken door to door in a seniors' residence, and selected people got to vote. I brought that to the attention of Elections Alberta, and as a result of that, I was – zap – selected for a random audit. I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was also one of the individuals or the constituencies or the campaigns that was chosen for this random audit.

I welcome an audit any time of our constituency's and our campaign's books. In fact, now that it's obvious that Mr. Fjeldheim is going to be reappointed, I hope this is going to be one of the focuses of his term, if I can use that word. I think each financial statement, not only from the party but from each constituency and during election time from each campaign, has to be audited. I can say, unfortunately, and I'm disappointed to say this – and this is one of the reasons why I did not support the candidacy of Mr. Fjeldheim – that my research certainly indicates this was not done in the past when he held the job as Chief Electoral Officer. I would say that the financial disclosure statements for every party, whether it was my own, whether it was the New Democrats, or whether it was the Progressive Conservative Party or the Wildrose Alliance or the Green, were just rubber-stamped, filed, put in a room, and between the hours of 8:30 and noon and 1 and 4 the general public could come in and have a look at them.

Now, I'm disappointed in that because I have seen errors in a lot of those disclosure statements. The biggest error I found was, of course, in the reporting of what we call the foundation fund, which is a large party trust fund that the Progressive Conservative Party has. Not only when Mr. Fjeldheim was working previously as Chief Electoral Officer but even before his time, that fund was not reported in a timely fashion or an accurate fashion according to the act. Nothing was done about it. We identified this, we brought it to Elections Alberta's attention, and basically we were told: thank you very much for the trouble, but we're not going to look into this. I found that very, very disappointing, Mr. Speaker. I was disappointed in Elections Alberta at that time, and unfortunately I continue to be.

Now, it's very important that all political parties file financial statements, that they do it accurately. I know there are a lot of volunteers involved in this and that mistakes will be made, but that's where the audit process would and should come into play, and it hasn't in the past. I would just like to remind hon. members that there have been some gaps in the past. There has been a lack of enforcement, and whenever that lack of enforcement has been identified, it's essentially been ignored, and I am very, very disappointed in that.

I would also like to add, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, on this motion, Motion 21, that we seriously consider in this House, when future legislative officers are recruited and their credentials are examined, that more of the meetings be held in public and that there be less emphasis put on discussions and deliberations in camera. I don't think it's in the interests of an open and transparent democracy. You look at our neighbours to the south and you look at some other jurisdictions, even in this country, where there is a very open and transparent process in the examination of the qualifications of various candidates for various legislative offices.

With that, I will cede the floor to any other hon. member who would like to participate in the discussion on Motion 21. I certainly wish the gentleman well in the next five years as he administers the Elections Act and our financial disclosures as we know them. I will certainly be visiting the office. I will be certainly visiting the room where all the filings are placed, and hopefully on my next visit I will see a complete audit done of each and every filing that's put in there, not just the people who complain, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and myself.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, and I'll speak very quickly, Mr. Speaker. The frustration that was experienced in Calgary-Varsity came from the head of our elections group, and her frustration was twofold. In one case it was how little time was given to train people who were brought on, so I would encourage our new appointee to make sure that the election is announced in sufficient time for trained individuals to be on the spot in the various polling stations.

Another frustration, that the individual and I shared, was the lack of updated census information. There had been recently a municipal census as well as a federal census, but for whatever reason that census information wasn't shared at the provincial level. So as many as a quarter of the individuals in a very sustainable, lack-of-movement community, that represents Calgary-Varsity, weren't on the voters list, and that caused the lineups.

Another recommendation that I would make to this individual is to consider the notion of allowing students to vote where they spend the majority of their time as opposed to having to send a sealed vote back to their constituency. Obviously, I'm speaking as a representative for the University of Calgary, where thousands of students were not well accommodated. Speaking of those students, for whatever reason the decision was made to close the polling station in the heart of the university centre at MacEwan hall. If we want young people, especially those 18 to 24 to participate, which has not been the case, then we have to make it easier for them.

Mr. Speaker, my last piece – well, actually two pieces of advice. The hon. Premier has talked openly about the possibility of the election, and he even gave a month, March 2010. The need for fixed elections would cause a lot of the problems that we're seeing to be dealt with.

3:30

My last comment, Mr. Speaker. We have TILMA. What I'd like to import from B.C. in terms of sharing is the idea of a citizens' assembly with a mandate to look at proportional representation. The last turnout, the worst in the nation's history, shows the lack of engagement, so anything that our new electoral officer can provide in terms of increasing engagement will be much welcomed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to get up and speak to Government Motion 21. In particular, as a member of the committee that reviewed the potential applicants and ultimately decided on the successful applicant in terms of the recommendation, anyway, with respect to the Chief Electoral Officer, I was able to attend all of the meetings but as a result of a very last-minute illness was not able to attend the meeting where the committee members went on the record with respect to their votes about the report and the recommendation that is now before the Assembly.

I'm pleased to be able to put on the record that, with all due respect to the candidate who is being put forward, I would have been unable to support the notion that the recommendation come forward here and, unfortunately, cannot support this motion at this time. Just for the record, then, is the fact that we have members who were on the committee who, coincidentally, were also members of the opposition who were not in support of this particular recommendation. I believe one member has already talked about how this particular appointment may well reflect a step backwards. I think that's a good overarching assessment of where this Assembly will go should they approve this motion.

I'd like to speak just briefly also on one issue and also mirror the comments made by a previous speaker about the fact that much of the deliberations on this issue were held in camera. While I understand the need to maintain the confidentiality of the people who apply, in particular those who apply who are not ultimately selected, I also at the same time believe we need to balance that against members of the committee having an opportunity to discuss substantively the strengths and weaknesses of the candidates that they observed and that are coming before the Assembly.

Unfortunately, we're not really in a position to do that in this setting because of the degree to which the decisions are all made in camera. I would like members to consider for future deliberations the possibility of moving the deliberation piece out of camera so that we can have a more transparent discussion about the strengths and weaknesses of the candidates that come forward and so that all members of the Assembly can be aware of those and so that the people of the province, should they be following the debate in the House, can also be aware of those strengths and weaknesses. As a result, I feel somewhat limited in the degree to which I can engage in that discussion.

What I will say, however, is that in going into the process as a representative of our caucus and as an individual member, there were certain characteristics and objectives that I was hoping to see reflected in the choice that we ultimately made. I was hoping to see a candidate selected who was very willing to consider issues of changing past patterns with respect to enforcement practices and becoming more vigilant in terms of making recommendations with respect to enforcement of the acts over which that officer has authority.

I also was hoping to have a person come forward who would be exceptionally enthusiastic about the issue of promoting an enhanced voter turnout or voter participation because as every speaker has already identified, we have a serious problem in Alberta. That anybody would ever undermine, negate, or dismiss the fact that we had probably less than 40 per cent of Albertans come out to cast a ballot is shocking to me. It is something which is a measure of an incredible malaise on the part of democracy in this province.

You know, while it's tempting for some folks who perceive themselves to have benefited from it – and I include myself in that category as well because, of course, I too was elected. The fact of the matter is that as people who are elected officials, it would seem to me that one of our first priorities ought to be to protect and enhance democracy and that we should be selecting someone who would also do that. I guess that at the end of the day I'm simply not convinced that that particular objective is one that will be a priority for this candidate. I hope I am wrong. I certainly want to urge that candidate to make that a priority.

The final issue that I would want to see, frankly, is having an electoral officer who is not concerned about the implications to one party versus another party when going about the job of reporting their findings, their reviews, and their recommendations. Clearly, that, I think, was at least one characteristic of the former Chief Electoral Officer in that the recommendations and observations that he included in his previous reports were sometimes embarrassing to particular members of this Legislature. Nonetheless, those reports were put forward in a way that was geared towards that person doing the best job that they felt they could to fulfill their mandate and to strengthen the legislation over which they have authority. I would want to see somebody who was prepared to engage in that same level of activity if it became necessary. Certainly, we know that this particular candidate did not ever engage in that kind of approach while he was in his previous position, so there is that concern.

I certainly hope that the candidate who has been selected and who I suspect the majority of members of this Assembly will vote to put in place will prove me wrong and will demonstrate a commitment to the things I was concerned about notwithstanding my doubts with respect to that. I do wish him the best of luck in his job. He has a tremendous challenge ahead of him. We have, as has been stated, scored a historic low in the country with respect to our last election. I would believe it to be the case that regardless of what is or is not in the legislation around our elections, no Chief Electoral Officer could feel that they had done or were doing their job were they not very focused on undoing what I would suggest is a blight that we should all be very concerned about. That is, of course, the low levels of voter participation in the last election.

I wish him the best of luck. Unfortunately, we will not be able to support this motion.

The Speaker: Others, or should I call on the Deputy Government House Leader to close the debate?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Government Motion 21 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 50

Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise this afternoon in the Legislature and move third reading of Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009.

Mr. Speaker, I fully realize the importance of this piece of legislation. I think that we have had a realization not only of the members of the Legislature here but members of the public and members of the industry community in the province of Alberta, members engaged in commerce in the province of Alberta, that this issue is extremely important for all Albertans.

I do appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that we've had an opportunity here to debate the merits of Bill 50, and I look forward, again, to additional comments of any members of the Assembly with relation to this piece of legislation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to join in third reading debate on Bill 50. This is a bill that we said from the outset we thought was a bad bill in principle. We tried to amend it and failed, and we still think it's a bad bill.

Here's one reason why. The AESO is mandated to make sure that we have an unconstrained transmission system in the province of Alberta, to make sure that there is zero congestion anywhere in the system. Yesterday in Calgary there was a meeting called the 10th annual Alberta Power Summit. A number of people were there. One of the speakers was Dr. Richard Tabors of Charles River Associates and MIT, the LEES laboratory. That's Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They know a thing or two about making the lights go on and stay on.

I want to provide the House here with two quotes from his presentation. Quote one: You can never achieve an unconstrained transmission system even when you ignore the cost. Economic markets move far more quickly than engineering construction projects. End quote.

Quote two: Nothing can be further from the truth than assuming that private-sector generation will be built just because the government has invested billions of dollars in transmission. The decision of generators is based on far shorter term corporate financial decisions. End quote.

We are talking here about billions of dollars, Mr. Speaker. We're talking in the absolute best-case scenario maybe $5 billion, and the much more likely scenario is anywhere between $14 billion and $20 billion.

This is a bad bill. It has failed a number of tests, as far as I'm concerned. It has failed to provide for appropriate and responsible public input. It has failed to provide an objective basis for deciding what kinds of transmission infrastructure are or are not critical, what kinds of transmission infrastructure should or should not be built in the public interest and the public need. It has failed to take into consideration that there are options, there are alternatives to building these massive power lines that I believe will deliver power to the people at considerably lower cost than this version.

I mentioned that we tried to amend this in committee. We brought in a subamendment to the government amendment that would have removed the sections that prevent the Alberta Utilities Commission from holding needs identification hearings on lines that the government has arbitrarily declared critical. That amendment failed.

We looked at the government amendment with its willingness to, among other things, stage the construction of these critical transmission infrastructure lines, the ones identified in the schedule on page 11 of Bill 50, the ones that supposedly we cannot live without. Suddenly the government amendment says: well, we can live without some of them for a little longer than we can live without others, so we'll stage the building here. Of course, as I mentioned yesterday in the House, the government has not seen fit to tell us what the time intervals between the stages would be, so the whole thing might be a bit bogus.

Through our second amendment we tried to put a sunset clause, in effect, into the bill and say, "Okay, let's assume" – and it's a giant leap of faith, I believe – "that the government really is correct in its assertion that we absolutely, positively must have these particular critical high-voltage power lines or else the lights are going to go off, and the sky is going to fall." Given that it has said that we can stage these, it has essentially telegraphed the message to any and all who would be involved in the planning, the proposal, the construction, and the design of high-voltage transmission lines that there is time to get your act together and follow a planning process that will involve a needs identification hearing, and if you think you're going to need that power line five or 10 years down the road, best get organized and get things going now. That got voted down as well.

So, Mr. Speaker, we're back where we began when we started second reading debate on Bill 50. This is, we believe, a fatally flawed bill. It denies Albertans, big and small, the opportunity to be involved in the process of identifying whether these lines are needed, and then it turns around and sticks us with the bill for them, and sticks us with that bill for something on the order of 40 years.

So we feel that we have no choice but to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 50, Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

The Speaker: Okay. We'll have it circulated. Just a second, sir, until it's circulated to everybody.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie would concur that this would be viewed as a hoist amendment?

Mr. Taylor: Yes.

The Speaker: Proceed, please.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief as I proceed because we have already given this bill extensive debate in this House. Those of us on the opposition benches, all parties in the opposition, have participated, I think, in a vigorous debate regarding the merits or lack thereof of this bill. We've had a difficult time, although not thoroughly pointless, engaging members of the government. To a person those who have spoken, and not too many have, have spoken in favour of the bill despite the fact that we know that they know that there is tremendous popular opposition to this bill. There is enough popular opposition to this bill that the government brought in its own package of amendments designed to address some of those concerns, but clearly not the ones that we think and that the people who oppose this think are the most vital concerns.

We tried to amend the government amendment, because that's the procedure that we have to go through as we make law in this Assembly, to make this very bad bill, first, a better bill, and then when that failed, a less bad bill. That second subamendment of ours was, by definition, a compromise. We did everything that we could do on this side of the House to try and make this thing work in the public interest. It still does not work in the public interest in our opinion, and therefore we are advocating that the bill be hoisted, and that is the intent of this amendment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that we, from this point on, will be debating the amendment, and I'm sure that there are others in the House who would like to get on the record about this. I think I'm clearly on the record, as are many others in this House, in terms of our opposition to the bill. So I don't feel that I need to say anything more about this. I'll turn it over now to my colleagues on all sides of the House to speak for or against the amendment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the process is pretty straightforward. There will be no 29(2)(a) applied to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie – he's the second person who's spoken – but 29(2)(a) will apply to speakers beginning now.

Secondly, the process is that all members may participate in this amendment. Once all members have participated, the question will be called. If the question is carried, if November 25, 2009 the amendment is in the affirmative, then that's the end of the matter: the bill disappears from the Order Paper. If defeated, then the question is immediately put on the motion for third reading.

So who would like to participate further? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology, followed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Please proceed.

Mr. Horner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to speak in opposition to this amendment because I have been following the debates in the House very closely. I've been listening to the concerns of constituents who have come to my office and sent me e-mails on what they thought Bill 50 was. I've heard about, you know: why are you stopping the public process of where we're going to put power lines? Bill 50 has nothing to do with that. There's been a lot of debate. As the hon. member said, there's been extensive debate in this House on Bill 50.

When Albertans turn on their taps for water, they want good, clean water. They want to make sure that it's there. They want us to plan ahead to put the infrastructure in place so that when they turn those taps on, they have healthy, clean, good water.

When Albertans are stuck in traffic, and they're trying to figure out how they're going to get to work on time or they're trying to get to where their loved ones might be on time, they expect us to plan ahead so that that doesn't happen. They expect us to figure out that there's going to be a need for future infrastructure, and they expect us to make it happen, Mr. Speaker.

Now, when Albertans go to turn the light switch on, they expect the power to be there. They expect the light to go on. Mr. Speaker, they expect us to plan ahead, to say that we're going to need transmission or we're not going to need transmission. They expect us to hire the experts that know what the load is going to be on the system. They expect us to hire the experts to give us good advice, and that's what the Alberta Utilities Commission is all about. They do want to have a say in where those lines are going to be located, totally separate to what Bill 50 is all about. They also want us to ensure that there's going to be an open and fair tendering process to build that infrastructure, and under the regulated electrical system, that's important. Bill 50 is going to allow us to do that.

The Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Speaker, has recently endorsed Bill 50, and I think that's an important step. It shows that the economic concerns of the capital region should be addressed by this as well.

So whether the hon. member believes that this is an important piece of legislation or not is his opinion. But introducing an amendment to effectively hoist the bill and kill the bill, I believe that's the wrong thing to do. I believe that the debate in this House has clearly pointed to the need for this legislation. As such, I am a hundred per cent in favour of us moving forward with the legislation and, therefore, opposed to the amendment and would encourage all members to defeat this amendment so that we can proceed with what Albertans need.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me some time to put it out on the record.

[Mr. Mitzel in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the next speaker is the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the amendment to Bill 50, the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, 2009. I don't think there's any question about the need for more infrastructure. The question is the process for establishing that infrastructure. I won't belabour the fact that Albertans are concerned that we're subverting a process that was established as little as 18 months ago to determine need and other elements of public consultation, including science and advisory input. This is major.

I think all we're suggesting is that in the interests of good governance, bringing power to the people in both a literal sense and a figurative sense, both sides rethink this and that in the interests of long-term stability and long-term, I think, public trust we postpone this decision because of the widespread concerns and, indeed, opposition to this reversion to a cabinet decision rather than having the very utility that we decided would be the regulator in this particular area of our development be directly involved. This really undermines, in many peoples' eyes, including my own, that this government has the long-term best interests of Albertans if they set up a commission to do this and then in the next instant take that power away on a particularly important set of infrastructure.

So I'm simply appealing to the common sense of the Legislature. We lose nothing by postponing it. We can bring it back again in the new year and, given an opportunity to reassess both the process and the public concerns about it, do it better.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Any members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to speak in favour of the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Currie. I've taken part in, I believe, all stages of the debate. I've actually, prior to coming into this House for this sitting, listened to many individuals, some arguing that Bill 50 or this critical infrastructure is necessary, some arguing that, no, it's not necessary, others saying they were unsure.

Some of these people on both sides of the argument are all very qualified. Mr. Gary Holden from Enmax: his qualifications are pretty decent in this regard. He has run a fairly successful company in his own right. He has some ideas on how the electrical system could best run over the next 40 to 50 years. Let's face it: he put his neck squarely on the line in taking on a government that has a lot of power and a lot of influence in this process, and I believe he did that because he thought Bill 50 was flawed. I also heard from some other people, people from AltaLink and some other individuals also, Mr. Steve Snyder, very smart individuals who say: no, Bill 50 is the right way to go; it's necessary that we do all this stuff for various reasons. I've also kept apprised of the two university professors who put together that university paper that appeared to me to be relatively clear, relatively concise, and contained some decent arguments on why we don't need Bill 50.

Basically, what I'm saying is that we've got a lot of experts on this situation. Here's what I've learned from this process. I've learned that I as a politician sitting here in the Legislative Assembly am not an expert on electrical transmission.

Mr. Rodney: Agreed.

Mr. Hehr: I thank the hon. member for agreeing with me on that statement.

However, if I look around this House, I don't see too many experts on electrical grid transmission.

Mr. Rodney: Agreed.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you again, hon. member, for agreeing with me.

More importantly, I don't see too many on the front bench. I know the Premier is not an expert on transmission lines and all this business. So that's what I've learned.

Looking at what I've learned and what was in place beforehand, just a mere 18 months ago we set up the Alberta Utilities Commission. Here's why I believe we set up that commission. That commission was set up to have a lot of very smart people who deal on a regular basis with people wanting to put in transmission lines, power, all sorts of stuff that is beyond me, an average Joe politician who has no idea about it, a person who is paid to listen to many sides of the argument and try and come up with an idea. But on this one I would never be an expert and never make the right call. That's why the Alberta Utilities Commission, I believe, was set up.

It takes it out of the hands of politicians and allows it to be made by a body that weighs scientific evidence and consumer need and makes these decisions in the best interests of both the consumer and business alike on keeping on the power, the lights, the heat, and all that good stuff in Alberta. Despite the government's protests – methinks they protest too much – I don't think that we are in a real critical shortage, with brownouts, blackouts, despite the abundance of money we've spent on these advertisements by the Public Affairs Bureau. I simply don't buy it. Other people don't buy it.

I believe that the reason this is really done is to take away people's ability to complain, ordinary people's, average Joe and Jane Alberta's, ability to go to the Alberta Utilities Commission and say: "I don't like X happening. I don't like Y happening. I don't think we need this power." They don't want to get into hearing the debate line by line, session by session, all the way down the row. I'll agree with them that this is probably a little bit of a difficult task and would stir some debate amongst many communities and may hold the government from time to time in some heat in various communities.

That said, I think it was set up as the right process. It's the right process to allow for both experts and lay people alike to discuss utilities and transmission lines here in Alberta. What the government has done in this House is take away that process, that ability for average Joe and Jane Alberta to get their ideas across as to whether they need the electricity and then to go ahead and see what is the best way for that power to be delivered, the best way and most cost-efficient way.

On this boondoggle we have going on right now, it's only the taxpayers who are paying for the transmission lines. They're the only ones with any skin in the game. They're the ones who are constructing what, by anyone's account, are star-studded transmission lines that can handle, apparently, electricity for the next 40 to 50 years and do all sorts of things. I have even heard it can sing and dance from some people. The Alberta citizens are going to be paying for this.

I hope that it won't be a boondoggle, but my suspicions are that at the end of the day the Alberta taxpayer is going to be subsidizing quite a bit when we had a system that would have heard their voices, heard their concerns, maybe come to the same conclusion, maybe not. But the thing was that we had set up this process for the correct reasons, to take the decision-making out of the hands of politicians and into the hands of experts.

I thank you for allowing me to put my comments on the record.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo points out that he's not an expert.

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Oberle: There was some agreement in the House on that point.

He then turns around and tells us that we're talking about electrical transmission that we don't need and power that we're not short of. Well, how exactly did he determine that if he's not an expert on the subject?

Mr. Speaker, he rightly points out that, in fact, none of us in this House are experts on the subject, and we shouldn't be determining need. I would point out that that's exactly what's happening here. We at no time laid out any charts or maps or kilowatt hours or anything else in this House in this discussion of Bill 50.

What we're doing here is passing a bill that allows the minister to approve a need designated by the AESO, who are, in fact, the experts, some 250 people involved over there. It doesn't put the decision of need on the floor of this House. It allows the AESO to forward expressions of need and the minister to approve them. That's what we're approving here. That only applies for critical infrastructure, by the way. The rest of the AUC approval process, the rate hearings, all of that, and all of the avenues for public input are all still there.

Mr. Speaker, I urge members to defeat this amendment. Let's move on with a bill that's right for Albertans. Our job here is to make sure there's a system in place that when somebody flicks their light switch, there's going to be power.

That's what we're doing, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore. [interjections] Hon. members, I called for 29(2)(a). No one spoke. I recognized the next speaker. He has spoken. This is the decision I made. Now 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on 29(2)(a) to the hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Peace River if he's aware that AESO seems to be biased. They were ruled biased by the courts. [interjections] No, they were ruled biased by the courts. The AUC has rejected many of their reports going forward. The AUC is the ultimate one who decides that, and by empowering AESO – and this bill will say that the AUC must receive anything from AESO that they declare a needs document – it's just wrong to bring that forward and act like AESO is the ultimate authority when they've been proven wrong twice in just the last few years. Why does the hon. member think that AESO should have the ultimate authority to declare needs when, in fact, they've been shown that they haven't been able to do that in the past?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only respond that should the AUC come up with a decision this member didn't like, he'd be standing here making the exact opposite argument. This member as well argues that he's not an expert on the power system but proceeds to tell us how to properly construct one. I can't help it. I think this bill is right for Albertans.

The Acting Speaker: Any other members under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Hehr: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My only comment in response, I guess, to the hon. member would be that, again, you know, "I think" doesn't really count for much. We had an expert. A way to go through this was through the Alberta Utilities Commission, and despite the fact that he deems we haven't usurped that right, we have. We used to have a needs assessment that went to the Alberta Utilities Commission. It wasn't decided by the AESO at the end of the day but by a body that's created, put together by this government to do this sort of stuff and given one mandate to do. I'd like to point out that in 2007 the AESO gave us an exact different plan as to what the type of need was for around this province.

I'll tell you what. To be honest with you, given that the AESO has changed their opinions twice in the last two years, I feel much more comfortable with this going forward to the AUC, where the things are. Would this not be better at the AUC than at the AESO? Why wouldn't it be better at the AUC?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, the exact opposite question could be asked, and I would also submit that this member, should the AUC come forth with a decision he didn't appreciate, would be also standing there making the exact opposite argument. It's simple.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess another question it begs in his response to say that we're not experts. The regulatory process of the AUC brings in experts and is a far different hearing than AESO, and it's challengeable in the courts. Even in the past that challenge is critical, but they've never filed a needs identification document to the AUC, which is currently what is mandatory under our laws here in Alberta. If AESO, in fact, said this crisis was there, why have they failed to file a needs document in front of the AUC? It hasn't been done. It's not proposed. It isn't a crisis.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak for any particular organization here, and we don't. These are independent bodies of this House. I point out again that should the AUC come up with a decision that this member doesn't agree with, then he would be standing here making the opposite argument. The fact remains that all of the access to the AUC regarding siting hearings and rate hearings is still available and will proceed, and everybody has a chance to appear before those as intervenors.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Taft: On 29(2)(a) to the hon. Member for Peace River. I am curious to know because this member's constituency may well be the home of a major nuclear generating station in the future: does the bill or the provisions of Bill 50 relate in any way to the plans to develop a major nuclear plant in the Peace River area?

Mr. Oberle: Well, Mr. Speaker, had the member read the bill, I guess, then he would know that, no, it doesn't.

Mr. Hinman: I'd like to ask one other further question. Is the member aware of the mandate or the policy which AESO has mandated to say unconstrained power lines in the province – watching the cost is irrelevant, just unconstrained power.

The Acting Speaker: The next speaker. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we're talking about today with the hoist amendment is credibility. This government under its new leadership proposed an improvement in transparency and accountability, yet what we've seen since the Premier took over is more and more decisions being taken out of the legislation process, where discussion can take place, and being moved into regulation. All we're getting is: trust us. We had a system where people could bring forward their concerns, where they could present scientific evidence, and that was the Alberta Utilities Commission.

I've referenced previously – and I won't go into detail – the type of hearing that occurred with the Compton circumstance. People brought forward best evidence. They testified, they explained their position, and they had that opportunity to do so because it was provided. Well, taking away the Alberta Utilities Commission's responsibility and putting the decision behind closed doors into the cabinet's domain takes away the authority of the people.

If we're truly interested in what people's concerns are, whether it be need or staging or cost, then people need to have that opportunity. I would suggest that the limited time that has been provided for debate may provide more information for people to consider the need for transmission or the placement of transmission, but they have no voice. That voice has been taken away from them because there's no hearing process.

Now, with other issues previously in this province – and I go back to I believe it was 2001. Along with an election there was a plebiscite with regard to the election of Senators. So we have instruments that can be used to allow people to voice their concerns, and if we don't use the existing instruments that we have, then people are going to be feeling shut out of the process. Why would they then want to cast a vote when less and less and less opportunity is being afforded for that vote to mean anything?

In terms of talk versus action – what is being said as opposed to what is being done – I give the Premier credit for creating standing policy committees. We all have an opportunity during standing policy committees to express our viewpoints, and as is the situation within this Assembly, there is the opportunity for votes to be taken. You know, the reality is that the government has earned a majority both in this House and, therefore, on the committees. But the beauty of the process – and it's the same beauty of the Assembly process – is that there's a Hansard. There's a record. The public is made aware of what is being discussed, but in this particular situation we do our best to interpret what our constituents believe. I find it rather difficult to believe that in 13 constituencies people are very opposed to the lack of accountability, the lack of an opportunity to have their views heard in the form of the Alberta Utilities Commission, but in the remainder of the province, the 70 other seats, that problem doesn't exist. So it concerns me that we're not allowing any kind of democratic participation.

Now, we've had other individuals talk about science-based evidence. We've had a little bit of slagging going on about: you're not an expert; what do you know? I freely admit and I'm sure members opposite would rise in chorus to say that I don't know a whole lot about electricity. But with regard to my hon. young colleague from Calgary-Buffalo he's gone through in depth the reports that have been provided by experts. I've read through the material but I doubt very much to the extent that the young gentleman has, yet he's basically being beat up because he's not an electrical genius.

It's our job as parliamentarians to provide leadership, not only representation. It's our job to provide information of value so that individuals can decide what it is that is necessary. Taking that opportunity away and simply saying, "We're doing what's in your best interest; just trust us," or using the fearmongering that is so frequently targeted at the opposition when we raise an opposing viewpoint, suggesting that any time soon the lights are going to go off and we're going to be in brownouts and blackouts – if that is the case, if that is the sort of Armageddon apocalyptic circumstance, then lay out that evidence. Argue your case. It should be third-party, peer-reviewed evidence that can stand up and give Albertans the type of direction that justifies the costs that are associated with this project.

All kinds of costs have been thrown out there. We've heard: it's only going to add $8 to your bill. We've heard that by the time the projects are finished, even given the ongoing reduced labour and materials costs, it might be in the area of $14 billion, and it might go as far as $20 billion. We've heard the government talk about: "We've heard what your concerns are. We're not going to build it all at once; we're going to build it in stages." But there aren't any definitions. You know, what's a stage? What is critical transmission? What is a needs assessment?

It's pretty hard to carry on a debate or a discussion of philosophy without some sort of definition and common understanding, and that is not provided in Bill 50. Bill 50 says simply: trust us; we're acting in your best interest. Yet the interests that appear to be acted upon are the interests of private utility companies. We're being asked to pay the bill to increase the share value of companies like AltaLink and ATCO, but we don't have any say or any share in the direction of the company. The benefit we get back is that, yes, our lights are going to go on and, yes, our heat is going to go on. But at what cost? The bottom line here is that we have no idea of what the cost will be. The government appears to believe that it is better to do things the old way than to look at innovation and possibly new ways of dealing with things.

Yesterday in committee I was pleased when the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod talked about the availability of a significant amount of wind power, which is southern-based and would definitely, without lengthy transmission lines, feed into the communities of Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Calgary. Hooking up to that transmission makes absolute sense as opposed to bringing it all the way down south. Another transmission line that makes sense is taking it from Wabamun, for example, a reasonably short distance to Edmonton. A reasonably short distance although, obviously, a longer distance would be to Fort McMurray to help out with the oil sands projects. There are some smart routes. To suggest that Wabamun coal-fired power is the answer to Lethbridge's circumstance is not correct.

We've also heard the argument that gas is going to go through the ceiling, and therefore we need these coal-fired projects. Even though they belch and we have the highest respiratory disease counts in Alberta, we're supposed to do it because that's the way it was done.

I've offered alternatives in this debate. I've talked about the gasification of coal. I have talked about, as has the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, bringing on wind power. Yesterday I talked about solar power. We also have geothermal. A lot of this power transmission can be built close to the areas where it's required, as Enmax is proposing.

The government is basically ignoring all the signs and saying that the type of transmission lines, which they have not clearly defined nor clearly located, are necessary, "So trust us." I have much greater faith in a collective discussion where experts judge the value of the information given and then come up with a ruling rather than any individual member in this House, no matter how intelligent they are, making a singular decision with the help of their cabinet members or, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore pointed out, putting so much faith in AESO versus the Alberta Utilities Commission, which has an oversight governance role.

To the hon. Member for Peace River: is it a crime to oppose a particular decision? You're saying that if we're opposing AESO, at some point we might oppose a decision made by the Alberta Utilities Commission. So what? The point is that if the argument we make has a degree of sense, then it should be considered. There is no chance for that consideration to take place because the Alberta Utilities Commission has been taken out of the game, and the government's closed-door dictatorship has replaced it.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, on the amendment the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been lots of discussion. There has been lots of debate pro and con about the bill, but the majority of it, according to the newspapers, news releases, and all the hearings, has been against the bill. According to government, you know, Bill 50 will streamline the process of approval of new transmission lines by eliminating the public hearing process. Although we need the upgrades – nothing has been done for the last 20 years – we are not in dire straits. The demand for electricity has gone down as the demand in growth has gone down. We need an abundant, low-cost supply of power for job creation, for our economic growth.

This bill has not only been opposed from this side of the House. This bill has also been criticized by the Tory Party constituency associations and the usually pro-Conservative organizations like the Fraser Institute as well as economic and landowner groups and lots of industry consultants and also a Calgary-based utility, Enmax.

According to the Minister of Energy, you know, he insists that we need these projects, that they are very, very critical to prevent blackouts and that we don't want to be freezing in the cold on dark nights. But lots in industry are questioning the exaggeration by the minister.

There's going to be a shortcut in the process if Bill 50 is passed. There's criticism about the cost of all those new transmission lines. It goes from $5 billion to $14 billion to $20 billion to $25 billion, so we are not even sure about the costs. In the year 2007 AESO said that it would be 3 and a half billion dollars. In three years we haven't doubled in population or we haven't doubled in industry growth, but all of a sudden there's a big demand for power. I don't think AESO has really done their homework.

The University of Calgary School of Public Policy is saying that those two large HVDC lines that are proposed are economically inefficient because the DC lines, as was said before, are good for long hauls, not for short hauls.

The Alberta Electric System Operator assumes those forecasts. Also, it raises doubts that the state of the reliability and the supply adequacy indicates the need for an emergency process. There's really no critical issue here. You know, if it was so critical, then there would not be any amendments put forth by the Minister of Energy to build it in stages. Even in stage building there's no clear indication: will it be a year apart, two years apart, five years apart?

All the reports are saying that it is better to have an independent regulator like the Alberta Utilities Commission determine the need for projects rather than having the Alberta cabinet or AESO unilaterally making that determination. It is less likely that the project's approval and the decisions will be driven by short-term political interest and more likely that if the regulators do it, their perspective will affect the long-term benefits and the cost to the province.

Regulatory agencies typically get all the experts in, and there will be historical awareness, background knowledge to understand and evaluate, and there will be an open and transparent consultation process, a public process that will allow for a greater scrutiny of the alternative points of view and provide a forum for public debate. The process also requires the regulators, through written decisions, to provide their rationale for each decision. Passing Bill 50 will bypass all that about the public hearing process.

According to the Environmental Law Centre, the bill would make problems for needs assessment and approval for transmission infrastructure in Alberta even worse. Here we are trying to speed up the process, but we are getting the opposite reaction from the stakeholders and from the people who are concerned about Bill 50. Even the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta says that forcing a new transmission build program on existing ratepayers will treble and potentially quadruple transmission costs in the next 10 years. Are we trying to fix the deregulation mess here? It's not clear. It's just a matter of trust.

By giving it more time and considering the bill, maybe we can come up with a better bill. The Member for Calgary-Currie tried to bring in subamendments to the amendments from the Minister of Energy, and we tried to fix it, but all those amendments were defeated. I think this is a bad bill. I think we should put it off for now and come back in maybe six months, a year to consider it. We are not in dire straits.

For those reasons I support this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, on the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to rise to support the amendment from the Member for Calgary-Currie on a perhaps different principle than has been raised before now. We've heard a lot of talk about the needs of the electrical system and who's an expert and who isn't and what routes and what capacities and all of that. I think there's clearly a concern here that this particular legislation short-circuits, shall we say, the due process that is normally in place and that because of that short-circuiting, it may well lead to errors in the routing or other technical decisions and market decisions. But that's been hashed out, and I think those are legitimate points.

What I want to do, though, Mr. Speaker, is reflect on this particular bill in the context of a much larger pattern that this government is following, and that is a pattern of centralization and politicization that is antidemocratic and, I think, is also jeopardizing the long-term political culture and economic prosperity of this province. I'm going to range widely, but take my word for it, it all relates back to this pattern and the reason that I cannot support Bill 50.

Now, Bill 50 takes control away from the due process of a quasi-judicial body and removes decision-making from the purview of that quasi-judicial body and puts it directly into the hands of cabinet. That is an unacceptable step, here, Mr. Speaker, but it is part of a larger pattern, and it's a pattern that gets played out over and over and over to the point where it's clearly an operating culture of this particular government, probably an inevitable one after this party has been in power for half a lifetime.

We've seen it played out, Mr. Speaker, as recently as this spring, when through a single, unexpected act of this government all the regional health authority boards were dissolved, and the Cancer Board was dissolved, and AADAC was dissolved. There was an enormous centralizing of control into the hands of the minister and his hand-appointed board, who were recruited at the public expense of over $130,000 by the minister's campaign manager. Now that's, in my view, an abuse of power.

There was a day, Mr. Speaker, when health boards were a broad reflection of our society. They contained through separate nomination processes members of local city councils, representatives of faith groups, representatives of a range of organizations. Today we have one health board whose members are hand-picked by the minister of health. Of course, he was just following the pattern that this government has really refined to an art. They deepened this pattern years ago with school boards, when they effectively removed any local decision-making power from the school boards by removing their local taxation authority.

I think many Albertans would be shocked to learn that the school superintendents hired by each of their school boards actually have to be signed off individually and approved by our Minister of Education. So we have a pattern in which school boards, which are the original form of local government and which precede the government of Alberta and, in fact, the existence of the province of Alberta, have been brought to heel through the consolidating, centralizing, and politicizing processes of this government.

We watched the same thing happen with community lottery boards. There was a time, 10 years ago or so, when community lottery funds were distributed by local boards, and in the face of great controversy and opposition this government emasculated, in fact dissolved, those boards, and brought control of lottery funding right into the hands of MLAs, government MLAs, I must say, not opposition MLAs. I've never been consulted on how lottery funds are handed out, but we do know through internal correspondence that government MLAs have access to all kinds of lottery funds to hand out. So we've seen the centralization and the consolidation and politicization of lottery funds, Mr. Speaker.

We're watching this same thing occur with land use. A piece of legislation went through this spring which gives the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development very heavy-handed powers over how people live on and use their lands and how land may or may not be managed by local governments or by individual landowners. So the very land that we walk on now is under the too-direct control, in my opinion, of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Again, what do we see? A pattern of centralizing control and of politicization. It was one of my own constituents who said to me: boy, that land use bill is a surefire way to lead to corruption. You know, favours and speculation and so on: a stage is set for them to occur, and that's a real problem.

We watched this same pattern play out, Mr. Speaker, in the centralization of control over research funds. Now, Alberta has had a very proud history of independent research funds. The most famous example is the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, but there are several others. The oldest is the world-famous Alberta Research Council, which has been around, I believe, since the 1920s. There are several others: ingenuity funds, engineering funds, and so on. All of those existed. They were controlled by independent boards or separate boards, and they were functioning close to the front lines. What did we see there? Just like in Bill 50, Mr. Speaker, we saw all of that control centralized. If you read the government's background paper on that, why? Because this government wants those research funds to serve the mandates set by the Premier. Talk about centralizing control. As if people in the Premier's office or this cabinet are going to be able to decide where the real innovations in scientific discoveries are. They aren't. That's not how it works.

The same pattern played out in great controversy in the agriculture sector with the red meat strategy last year, where we watched the beef producers and the pork producers and all kinds of people lose their right to elect their own directors and control their own organizations because of the pattern and the habits and the culture of this government to centralize control, to mistrust its own citizens, and to politicize decision-making.

Well, that pattern is playing out once again in Bill 50, Mr. Speaker, where this specific legislation spells out that it's no longer quasi-judicial bodies of experts weighing the public interest and hearing a range of testimony from all kinds of experts but, rather, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Premier and his cabinet, who will decide where transmission lines are routed and what their nature will be. Every time this pattern plays out is another nail in the coffin of healthy democracy in this province. Every time this pattern plays out, we subject our electrical system or our health system or our school boards or our red meat producers or our research funds or you name it to the risk that if a particular interest captures the attention and the commitment of a single cabinet minister, we can see a whole sector rearranged, as we saw happen in the health system and as we are seeing happen now to our electrical system.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is bad legislation based on undemocratic, dangerous principles, and everyone who goes along with supporting this legislation is behaving in an undemocratic manner and putting the long-term viability of our electrical system not at less risk but at greater risk. That's why I support this amendment, and I oppose this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, are there other members who wish to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak at third reading here this afternoon on the amendment as proposed. I believe that it is necessary. When I had the opportunity to attend the well-organized meeting at Rexall Place last night, it's clear that consumers are not ready for this bill, for this legislation, and they're certainly not ready for the significant costs that are going to be downloaded onto their bills as a result of this legislation if we don't come to our senses and realize that this amendment certainly may not be in the interests of the generators or those that own part or all of our transmission system, but certainly it's in the interests of consumers.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, in debate, there is no doubt that we need to upgrade our transmission system in this province. The reason why it's in such a state of confusion and chaos is this government's former electricity policy deregulation. The hon. member talked earlier about the Charles River Associates group from Massachusetts appearing in Calgary quite recently. Well, this is the same group that advised this very same government on how to proceed with electricity deregulation and how to set up what is now a folly – that is, the power purchase arrangements, the auctions – that allowed our generation capacity, that was paid for by consumers through their monthly bills, to be sold off for a song to various enterprises, including formerly EPCOR, Enmax. There are quite a few organizations, including, of all outfits, Enron. Enron was a successful bidder on some of the power purchase arrangements.

When we consider what's going on now and the haste that this government is in to do what they want with the transmission system and to send the bill to the consumers, essentially what we're doing with this legislation is again allowing the government to proceed in what they consider to be a benevolent way and that they will do what's best for consumers. It may not be in the public interest, but the consumers will pay the bill.

This is what we're getting with Bill 50. Now, Bill 50, as it stands, if it was to move through this House even further and become law, is undemocratic, it's an unreasonable approach to transmission, and it's so typical of this government. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview articulated many different policies and programs that this government controls but discreetly controls. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt the regulatory process needs strengthening, but the regulatory process can't be bypassed. Bill 50: that will occur. Why not improve the process so all Albertans can be involved in the discussion? Albertans are expected to pay the dramatic increases in the bill – some people say that it's $300 a month; the Premier, I think, was quoted in the paper saying that it's a $100 a month – but this is the same government who promised that if we'd stick with deregulation, we would see our power bills go down.

I know that whenever the Minister of Transportation is poring over his department's budgets, he is looking at the power bills in various offices and depots that are under his ministry throughout the province, and I know he's very concerned about the increase in the power consumption in the bill. I know he's not confident, like the Minister of Energy, in signing a long-term contract because he knows the taxpayers would be ripped off on a monthly basis for the duration of the contract. I know that, Mr. Speaker, to be true.

Now, the chief executive officer of Enmax is indicating that many of the lines that are proposed in Bill 50 are unnecessary and that more generation can come on stream in and around Calgary. This has been one of the proposals that the Alberta Liberals have been suggesting to the government for a number of years: build the generation on the edge of the load. But, no, we're going to build a transmission system and then see where the promoters and the developers of the generation capacity want to site their plants. It does not make economic sense, but then again we have this government with its big majority that just wants to bulldoze over the normal regulatory process to get these lines built.

Now, this is not the first time that this government has used sort of a discreet, sly way to avoid the regulatory process or override it. When Murray Smith was the Minister of Energy, going back quite a few years now, of course, on behalf of the government he overruled what we had at the time, the EUB, and downloaded all the costs that we're discussing in Bill 50 onto the bills of consumers. Before that, the regulatory process had suggested it be equally divided, 50-50, between consumers and generators. But, hey, we've got to protect those that make donations to us: that would be the attitude of this government. I think it is disrespectful and it is neglectful, if I could use that term, towards consumers.

Now, Mr. David Gray, who is executive director of the Utilities Consumer Advocate office, has recently, after he left office, made very clear how much of a bad deal power deregulation is and continues to be. He indicates that it could well result in power and gas bill hikes of hundreds and hundreds of dollars, and we know that to be true. I certainly wish he had spoken out more when he was in office, but who knows what would have happened to him. He could have been removed from office.

Now, with this deregulated system, how it was designed, consumers were the big losers. The generators and those with the generation assets were the big winners. The same thing is going to happen with Bill 50, Mr. Speaker, unless we take the sound suggestion that has been presented to the House by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie and hoist this legislation and go back to the drawing board. This government has gone back to the drawing board on many, many different issues, and there's no harm in admitting this was a mistake. No one is asking for the resignation of the Minister of Energy for this Bill 50. What the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie is presenting to this House this afternoon is like a mulligan in golf, and I really believe we should take it.

If the government would like, I could set up some meetings with them for their benefit where they can hear directly from some professional engineers who have other alternatives than to force all these costs onto the bills of consumers. They can fix this problem once and for all, but the government will have to finally admit that this rigid ideology they have towards deregulation simply has not worked, will not work. Please, let's unplug deregulation and go back to a system where power is provided to consumers at the lowest cost possible. Not only does that apply to generation; it applies to transmission as well.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague, and I thank you for the opportunity to participate in the debate.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Minister of Transportation under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Ouellette: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I believe I have to stand when I listen to some of that rhetoric from him saying that he knows exactly what I'm thinking. Let me tell you one thing for sure: he absolutely doesn't know. Never mind what I'm thinking; I don't think he knows much about anything that he's talking about here today. Let me tell you that everything he's talking about is the regulated side. Everything to do with transmission and distribution in this province is regulated. Is he saying there's a problem with that? Maybe we should be deregulating that side. Would that make the hon. member a little happier? He keeps talking about deregulation and how bad it is, and what we're dealing with here is regulation. Maybe he can answer me. Maybe he wants that deregulated, then, so that it works a little more smoothly for him.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I'd be delighted to answer that. Nowhere in my remarks at third reading or committee or at second reading did I say that the transmission system in this province was not regulated. Certainly, whenever we talk about the generation side, we all know that that is deregulated, and we all know what has happened. But what we do know with the regulated system: there are certain parties, certain corporations who are going to benefit economically from this bill as it is currently written if it is not withdrawn from this Assembly, and it's consumers that are going to pay billions of dollars unnecessarily because of this folly.

If we can compare deregulation to regulation and we compare the record of this government, we can clearly see that with the rigid ideology, the Father Knows Best attitude that we had back in 2000, when we initiated electricity deregulation, we know what that has cost consumers. Now we're seeing the bill for this regulated transmission and distribution system that this government is proposing. The only winners in this will be the owners of the transmission and distribution system, and it is owned by individual for-profit outfits. It's not owned by a public utility, for instance.

The minister can carefully review Hansard, and he will clearly see that this member did not once refer to the transmission system as a deregulated part of the whole electricity system in this province, so sorry about that.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is still available.

Seeing none, I recognize, then, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad of the opportunity to speak in third reading in favour of the hoist motion that is before us on the floor. I, as you know, listened to most of the debate and tried to keep up on Hansard for that which I wasn't present for or able to listen to on the program sound and had a good exchange with the Minister of Energy in Committee of the Whole back and forth on some of the observations that I had made or that I had heard others make, but I'll admit that coming into this, I wasn't exactly warm to the idea. To be honest, I think the government failed to make their case around this bill, and that's why I'm supporting the hoist motion.

I don't think this bill is savable, and I don't think it should pass. I think it should be sent back. Somebody else was referring to a mulligan, the golf term, where it's like a do over, but it's completely without any kind of recrimination or bias. Indeed, I think that's what we do need to do here.

Really, I came at this from two ways. There are two sorts of responses that wash back against me. One is that this bill was actually created to address a very specific set of circumstances: you needed the four lines; you needed to be able to do them now. Well, to be fair, that was about opportunities not taken in the past. For us to have to be put into a hurry-up mode because there was a failure to plan or to put things in place from the government, really I don't think that the cost, the burden of that should be borne by the consumers and by the citizens. If the government was able to make that case of urgency, which, I would argue, they didn't, but if they were able to make that case for urgency, then it should have been specific to the problem at hand. What we've ended up with is a bill that goes far beyond that.

I find that kind of decision-making problematic, whether it's done by the government or whether it's done by almost anybody or even in your home life. You know, if you make a very broad policy decision based on one little problem in your house or in your personal life, you find that when you go to apply that to the next situation, it doesn't fit exactly, yet you gave very specific parameters to your policy because it was designed around one problem. Now you're trying to apply it to other ones, and it doesn't work. That was the initial point that I had a problem with, that it was designed for a very specific set of circumstances, and it doesn't stop there.

I would have been warmer to this idea if it had had a very specific sunset clause in it, which essentially was one of the subamendments that my colleague was trying to make to make this bill a bit more palatable, and that was not acceptable to the government. They want, you know, all or nothing.

[Mr. Marz in the chair]

Then I thought: well, okay; if you're going to try and make the case for this whole thing, then make the case. I think government failed to make the case. I think they failed to make the case on need. There have been battling experts, but I'm impressed enough with the experts that I've heard that make the point about the AESO and that their case is unconvincing and overstates the urgency.

I think the government failed to make the case for the level of expense that is going to be required for what is anticipated in these lines and the kind of lines they are. I think the government failed to make the case that consumers should be paying a hundred per cent of the cost when they have no legislative input to the need, to the cost, or almost anything else.

This is where they pop up on the other side and say: oh, they get to have input on the siting; the AUC can still do the siting hearings. Well, I don't mean to be disrespectful, but whoop-de-do. You know, that's a pretty small compensation for the fact that we've now committed a whole bunch of people to an awful lot of money over a very long period of time, but hey, here's the prize in the cereal box; you're going to get to decide where it goes. It doesn't quite make the case for me, Mr. Speaker.

I think that there were other options that were available, and the government failed to consider them. I think there's also an argument that the government failed to make the case to show why consumers should pay for lines that were built for export, and clearly one of the lines is built for export. We hear from the Member for Calgary-Glenmore that, you know, there are some negotiations going on in Las Vegas around one of these lines that is definitely going to tie into what we're doing. Why on earth are the consumers in Alberta paying for that? Where is the protection that we would expect the government to be making on our behalf as consumers and as citizens? That's a role that only the government can play. I've talked about that before, too.

I think the other and the final point for me is that the government has failed to show why the consumers are paying today for overbuilt lines which will not be used for some time to come. There were some modifications that the government made through their amendments. I feel that they danced around the real issues. You know, yes, we're going to get provided some information, but we only get provided that information once construction is already started. Again, it doesn't come up to the mark on participation, particularly for those that are footing the bill.

Having watched this long process – and we've now been debating this for a week and a day – I think the government failed to make the case. Therefore, I am in support of the hoist motion that's in front of us, and I urge my colleagues in the Assembly to do the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the debate.

Ms Notley: Thank you. It's a pleasure to be able to rise to speak on the amendment of the bill, which of course is the last opportunity to speak to the bill in third reading, having already outlined our concerns in second reading and in Committee of the Whole.

I am speaking in favour of this amendment. It seeks to achieve the same objectives I sought when introducing the amendment in second reading to have the matter simply referred to committee and not addressed. Nonetheless, here we are. All of our efforts collectively to have this bill referred in a way that would result in its garnering a great deal more consideration and not going forward in its current form have been unsuccessful to date. It's for that reason, of course, that I'm supporting this last effort to hoist.

There are a number of general sorts of technical issues which, of course, have been canvassed at some length around why the actual lines that are contained within this bill don't make sense and why the very need for them, which the bill short-circuits the assessment of, ought to be questioned. You know, we've heard critics raise issues around whether or not the north-south line is long enough to justify at this point DC construction. If it's not, what exactly do we have planned further down the road?

We know that the demand forecasts that have been relied on by AESO are traditionally very volatile and that there are good reasons, which a number of experts have identified, for us to consider whether those demand forecasts ought to be reviewed and completed again because we don't know whether they remain valid.

We know that there are other options that are out there to address the kinds of concerns that the government identifies as underlying this particular bill or the substance of the bill, which are the lines in question separate and apart from the justification for why it is we don't need to engage in a needs assessment. But we have heard that there are other options that are out there; for instance, looking at new generation build patterns and, therefore, changing the need in that respect.

We also know that AESO, that the government continually refers to and says is above board, this expert group that is completely independent and whose word is set in concrete, never make a mistake, never change their position. What they say now is exactly what we need because they are absolutely right. They are the complete experts, and they are uninfluenced by any outside influence. Except we have a problem. In 2007 AESO suggested that we needed to build about $3.5 billion worth of infrastructure, and now, a mere two years later, that has multiplied three- or fourfold. Apparently they have changed their mind, and apparently what they told us before wasn't correct. Fine. If their mind can change that dramatically in two years, one wonders why it is that we should be accepting everything they say with blind faith.

Nonetheless, all of this sort of leads to the question of whether or not this level of construction that's being advocated by the government through this bill is really something that's being undertaken to deal with electricity reliability issues or whether, in fact, it's being done to address future export plans. If we are really dealing with future export plans, then what we need to consider is the fact that, you know, maybe Alberta consumers want to pay for this infrastructure because they believe it's really important for them to chip in in order to subsidize the company investments that will ultimately bring them profits for export. Or maybe they won't. But they need to know if that's what they're actually being asked to do, and of course they don't because we're not getting any kind of clear explanation from this government with respect to this.

Yet many experts, not the government's experts but other people who are experts – and I don't believe anybody really has been very successful at undermining the credibility of a number of the people who've weighed in on this issue in opposition to it – have suggested that the bill that is being proposed by this government cannot possibly be focused solely on addressing reliability issues, that in fact it can only be seen to be a matter of building infrastructure that will support export but doing so on the dime of the Alberta consumer. Then the question becomes: when it's exported, does the external consumer to whom it's exported pay the infrastructure costs, and if they do, does the company to whom it's paid give them back to the consumer in Alberta? I don't know. We don't know. We don't know any of this, so it's really not a good thing.

We have issues around whether or not the actual lines identified in the bill are necessary, but the bigger problem with the bill ultimately is that it, of course, removes the ability of the public to engage in assessment of whether these lines are necessary. As we've said repeatedly before, this is a bad thing.

It's not only bad for consumers, as I've just outlined, but it's also bad, frankly, for the environment. The reality is that this whole area in this province – as much as this government wants to pretend that the way it was 50 years ago is the way it will be 50 years from now and that there will be no change and if we stick our heads into the sand and pretend that there are no environmental issues and that there aren't other places in the world where people are furiously working on more sustainable energy strategies, strategies that may well profoundly impact the economic plans that this government has today, if we continue to do that, we're going to make really bad plans. We're going to do that by asking Alberta consumers to pay for the cost of our really bad plans.

For instance, we have an energy strategy document that the government introduced back in whenever it was, January or February of this year, which actually states in the very heart of it that we can't expect renewable energy to play any kind of major role in Alberta's energy future for at least 50 years. Really. Fifty years. So the government is making plans on the assumption that renewable energy will not be a key component of our energy strategy for at least 50 years. This is the kind of presumption and assumption that will underlie this government's decision to compel consumers to spend $14 billion on an infrastructure plan that assumes that renewable energy will not be a key part of our energy strategy for 50 years. Absolutely shocking, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely shocking.

The rate at which technology and public opinion and, frankly, absolute obligation are changing such that we need to review our approach to and reliance on renewable energy is exponential. We thought it changed a lot in the '90s, but we didn't really know what we were talking about until we saw how much it has changed in that last nine years. Just watch in the next 10 years how much more it will change after that. That issue is something that's not going to go away, yet we're planning on the basis of a strategy that assumes that renewable energy is not something this province will be particularly involved in for at least 50 years.

This process and the decision of the government to negate the needs assessment component of the transmission infrastructure that they're designing and to keep experts who are independent and not on the government payroll out of the process is, in fact, something that will ultimately hurt the environment because it's going to push us into a strategy which responds only to the very, very blinkered analysis of this government on that particular issue, which refuses to acknowledge and adjust to the reality of changing opinions and technology as they relate to environmental issues.

Now, as I mentioned before, the other piece to this legislation which is so important, of course, is the decision of the government to effectively take what is a public and transparent issue and move it behind closed doors. You know, I just want to sort of quote. I guess it was in 2007, after the government was quite embarrassed, as it should have been, by the shenanigans that occurred at the EUB the last time one of these transmission lines was being considered. After that arose and after, you know, there was a lot of denial about what had arisen and when, ultimately, it could not be hidden any longer and when it came out that there had been such inappropriate action at the EUB, the chair of the EUB ultimately agreed to scrap the hearings around that application. He said that the board was going to go back to square one. In 2007 what he said was that the new panel will perform a fresh review of every issue, including whether the project is necessary. Then it went on to a whole bunch of other issues.

I recall that, of course, the government relied on that kind of assertion quite a bit to try and swim through the political controversy that had been created by that whole debacle. Yet here we are now, two years later, breaking that promise, backing out on that and saying: "No, we aren't going to go back to the drawing board. We're tired of consulting with people. We're tired of independent experts having an opportunity to publicly state their opinion. It's messy. It's embarrassing for us. We just don't want to be bothered to do it." That's what brings us to the point that we're at right now.

Of course, throughout this session and previously, certainly, members of this caucus, of the NDP caucus, have often characterized this government as secretive. Of course, members on the other side take great fun because we, apparently, say that quite a bit, and sometimes they'll think it's very fun to start, you know, shushing us because we say it so much. Maybe it's a laughing matter, but maybe it's what's really going on. For anyone to suggest . . . [interjection] Indeed, it happens now, and that's great. It's all very amusing, but here's the deal. You're taking something that is quasi-judicial, transparent, public hearings, full record, everyone has access to it, and you're taking that out of the public, and you're sliding it behind closed doors, and that's it. We're done. But somehow you think we're making it up when we call the government secretive. I don't think so.

I think this is a monumental symbol of what is probably the biggest characteristic of this government right now, which is their desire to dispense with any sort of open debate or opposition or challenge and instead to just sort of run it like a corporation and see the voters as inconvenient irritants to be pushed aside at the earliest opportunity. That is ultimately why we have concerns about this bill and why it is that I have to support this amendment.

The final point that I just want to make, of course, is that repeatedly throughout this debate government, who, of course, do have loads of resources at their disposal to have people write them speaking notes and talking points – and they can reach into their ministries and get more speaking notes and talking points on various technical issues, and then after they've gotten all those resources allocated to them, they can get up and say: oh, the opposition doesn't know what it's talking about when it, you know, gets into the merits of this particular bill. They can say that.

They say that if you're not an electrical engineer, you really ought not to be even out here questioning this bill. There may be something to that, which, of course, goes back to the original position, which is why there should be independent electrical engineers, independent scientists, independent researchers, independent stakeholders, who do have an opportunity to contribute to an independent process that evaluates need. That's what this government is eliminating. In the same way that the opposition members are not necessarily experts on every element of what this bill purports to do, neither are members of the cabinet. That's why this ought not to be a decision of cabinet but rather should remain a decision that is reached through a more transparent and rigorous public process.

That is what the outcome would be were the amendment passed, and that's why I support it.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Seeing none, any other members wish to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore on the amendment.

Mr. Hinman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the time that's allotted to be able to discuss the importance of the hoisting of Bill 50. I wish to speak to that. I speak in support of this. It is critical that this bill be hoisted and brought back in six months' time, and I wish to expound on why it is so critical, that this bill is not in the best interest of Alberta taxpayers and industry here. We want to restore the Alberta advantage, not continue to undermine it as this bill will do, surely, as it goes forward.

I stand to speak on behalf of what I call the true fiscally conservative and socially responsible Albertans throughout this province. They're very concerned with the way this government is unnecessarily spending taxpayers' dollars. There are three or four points this government has brought up on this bill. This government declares that it's required, they claim that it's needed, they claim that it's critical, and they use this fourth reinforcement that it's important. Nothing could be further from accuracy as far as the electrical system currently in place in Alberta could be.

Therefore, that's why this needs to be hoisted, why it needs to go through a proper regulatory process. Though I'm not one in favour of government red tape and the long problems that that can cause, it still is critical. I really appreciated the Member for Edmonton-Riverview as he discussed the undemocratic process that's going forward, the centralization of power and decision-making that's being put into the cabinet of this government. [interjection] As the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar wants to declare – what was that? Commies? It's a concern, and when we have these good members bringing that up, I think that Albertans need to take a step forward and realize that we have a real problem here at the Alberta Legislature with the current government and the direction that they wish to go in centralizing power and decision-making into cabinet and the Premier's office.

We need to ask some critical questions. It disturbs myself and many Albertans that have contacted me, the casual commitment of $3.135 billion to put in these high-voltage, they say, DC lines. To me they're still PC lines. They're politically connected companies that are going to put these lines in place for their political friends.

It's not for the people of Alberta. There are just so many things that people have sent to me. This bill has so many flaws, Mr. Speaker, and they've been brought up so many times. Because of all the flaws we need, again, to hoist this bill and come back in six months. It needs to go before a regulatory hearing. It needs to go through a needs process, and it hasn't done that. It would fail to do that, and that's why this government is pushing it through.

They have embarked on a multimillion dollar advertising campaign. Their own members tried to institute a policy change to oppose this bill at their AGM. The government's corporate partners of Bill 50 are conducting their own public relations campaign to influence newspapers throughout the province. If we go back to 2004, the projected cost of a single AC line between Calgary and Edmonton was less than $500 million. This government is committed to a massive overbuild at the cost of Alberta taxpayers and Alberta industry. This government wants to commit to a 4,000-megawatt politically connected line that isn't in Alberta's interest.

Is this government even aware of the local generation options that are out there? I've heard from some government members when I was speaking to them that they're concerned about a monopoly in the south. It's very easy to open it up for a competitive bid. When we look at the possibility of 3,000 megawatts of wind generation in the south, the most important thing that could happen, if that's what we wanted to do, is to have a dispatch ready between Calgary and southern Alberta. If there was a dispatch capacity to match that wind generation, it would easily allow us to continue developing that, and I believe that that's a choice that many Albertans would look at. The cost of that southern line upgrade is being overlooked, and we're putting first these two high-voltage PC lines that just are not required.

It's interesting when you listen and talk to the experts and the reports. These high-voltage lines, DC lines, are very questionable over short distances. I equate this to investing at this point for a short distance. Again, of course, though, if the hon. members from northern Alberta know that they're bringing in nuclear power, well, then that changes the whole dynamic of investment to build these lines because we're going to export, and those exporters are going to pay their fair transmission fees, and we're aware of that. Then that would change this discussion. But they continue to say: "Oh, nothing of the sort. There's no purpose." Three hundred kilometres, though, for an HVDC line? It's not economically viable. Is there another agenda in the back? They continue to fail. They're really putting their foot in their mouth by saying: "Oh, no. We just want this short high-voltage DC line".

The other question. There are so many things that are not proven yet when it comes to the technology of these high-voltage DC lines that could possibly have a dramatic effect on our pipelines in the ground. We have a tremendous amount of underground pipelines for our gas and oil industry. There are questions, and there hasn't been enough research yet to see what that would do to the lifespan of those pipes in the ground. It's something else that needs to be discussed, and it would probably only be discussed in front of a needs hearing and a regulatory process. Very, very concerning.

Why has this government eliminated the independent regulator? Does it see itself above the requirement for independent, arm's-lengths review? What does this mean for landowners and other stakeholders with legitimate concerns? There are so many areas.

There are a few other areas I guess I want to go over here briefly. This is going to be a new tax. For the government to spend $3.15 billion, up to $14 billion, is a debt on Alberta taxpayers, and that debt must be paid; therefore, that is a new tax.

This is a huge overbuild. We need to address the line loss. We need to address zone pricing. We need to address congestion. We need to address the age. This government continues to propagate that these lines are old and rickety after 20 years. We need to address the short supply that this government says we're into. We need to discuss the centralized decision-making. Again, the good Member for Edmonton-Riverview did an awesome job today of reviewing all of the things this government has done in the last year to centralize power and decision-making.

We need to address and look at the cost of energy, Mr. Speaker. Energy is critical for our competitiveness going forward into the future. I have spoken at length about the loss of the Alberta advantage, the $25 million this government spent on a new logo because they knew the Alberta advantage was gone, a total waste of taxpayers' money. All of these areas are of great concern.

Let's just talk for a minute about why this bill needs to be hoisted so that we're not taxed with an immediate $3 billion. The cost of energy is critical. Agricultural people are under immense pressure right now trying to make ends meet, and the cost of energy is critical to them. Whether they're drying their grain, whether they're irrigating, whether they're running their harvesting and seeding equipment, all of that is related to power. They have a lot of electrical power that's involved in grain drying and in irrigation, and we can't afford an increase on the line cost to those companies.

The forestry and pulp industry, again, is at a critical point. With our rising dollar our competitiveness in exporting is being undermined. They cannot afford an increased tax and cost to the electricity that they use in their pulp and paper, in their production of plywood and other wood products. We need to look at the running of high-tech equipment. Even such simple things as the magnetic resonance imaging equipment takes a lot of power. If our power bills go up, our costs go up.

It's interesting – oh, I don't see it in the report that I have in front of me right now. I've got so many expert reports. But the building operators . . . [interjections] They laugh at the idea of reading the experts' reports. It is comical.

Ms Pastoor: They can't understand it.

Mr. Hinman: Well, the good Member for Lethbridge-East says that they don't understand it. She's been here longer than me, wiser than me. Perhaps she spends more time over there.

But the bottom line is that the experts' reports are critical. Why does this government laugh, and laugh out loud, at the idea of doing some research and looking at the things? They're not willing to answer the questions. The questions are critical, Mr. Speaker. Let's go over some of the questions that are brought up, some critical questions about transmission bills. There are so many that should be asked. Are the north-south lines mainly for export? That really does need to be addressed. Bill 50 is a huge blow to competitiveness because it actually forbids competition for wires and forces uneconomic choices.

5:30

Is our infrastructure old? No. The answer is it's not. Even AltaLink, when they're promoting their own company, brags about how new their lines are. They don't need upgrading.

AESO's 10-year plan. There are many reports out that say it could cost as much as $1,700 a year for a family of four. Are these questions going to be asked by the minister? Absolutely not. [interjections] They even laugh in here. There's no chance in the future that they're going to ask these. We need to ask these questions, Mr. Speaker.

Another: what is the actual cost? Who pays for the electrical transmission? It's interesting that 61 per cent of the electricity being used is industry. If those lines go in there, it's going to be a huge cost to industry. We need to look at that.

Like I mentioned earlier, dispatch capacity between Calgary and southern Alberta is critical if we want wind generation to come on, yet there is nothing in the future talking about that or a competitive bid for it to come forward. This bill needs to be hoisted. It needs to be come back in six months.

It's interesting, you know, that TransCanada had a video out in Oakville, Ontario, about a generation project that they posted in September of 2009. This is what they had to say. "A new gas-fired power plant needs to be up and running by 2013." Again, if it's critical and we have a supply shortage, the only quick and fast answer is to put in gas-fired generation. If it's critical, that's what we need to do. But they say, "to ensure a reliable and adequate supply of electricity for the area. Placing it close to the demand eliminates the need for costly upgrades to the transmission system." What a novel idea. Who would have possibly thought of that? Obviously not this government and for sure not the minister. They're not looking at that.

Why does our electrical policy forbid alternatives to wire? We need to ask that question. What is the easiest and most efficient way to get power around the province? The transmission regulation prohibits the Alberta Electric System Operator from considering economic alternatives to wires except in unusual circumstances. That isn't in the best interest to say that wires are the only solution. That would be like talking to our communications people and saying that there is no more wireless technology being allowed; you have to look at wires and lines and fibre optics. This is a draconian bill. It's going backwards. It's not looking to the forwardness.

It's interesting that the New Zealand Electricity Commission concluded that an Alberta model would result in overbuilt transmission and higher prices for consumers. I think I read somewhere where the report actually said that our system was nuts in the direction that we were going forward, a major concern.

Why does the minister need to have the power of Bill 50? It's interesting that Bill 50 gives it authority to designate critical transmission infrastructure, Mr. Speaker, and to decide who gets to build it. They don't even put it up for an open, competitive bid. They're just going to say: you guys build it; here it is. We get to declare it. But on June 8 through order in council they gave that to them. Then what did they do? They gave the go-ahead to two companies to start doing the engineering for these high-voltage DC lines. On August 25 they gave the go-ahead. The question is: was this action even legal? Was it ethical? Was it necessary? I don't believe that it was. Again, if you pass it, it can be legal. But is it just? No, I don't believe it is.

Mr. Speaker, there are just so many areas that need to be looked at. We need to have a competitive electrical grid. There is no question about it. There is no question that there are areas that need to be boosted.

Again, I'll say: between Calgary and Edmonton less than $500 million. We look between Calgary and southern Alberta and the huge opportunity for wind. Let the free market come in there and decide if they want to do it.

Line loss, something that many members keep bringing up and talking about: regardless of how much electricity is transmitted, industry experts claim that the normal transmission system should experience its losses in the range of 5 to 7 per cent. [Mr. Hinman's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available. The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Well, you've mentioned the concerns over singular development already preapproved prior to Bill 50. You've talked about the insider experience of companies like ATCO and AltaLink. Are you concerned that this government is getting back in the business of being a business, that they claim they've left long ago?

Mr. Hinman: Well, thank the hon. member for that question. There's no question in my mind when you look at the power that is given to the minister in Bill 50 that this is a blatant abuse of democracy and the rule of law. In a needs process – I mean, the hon. member said that, oh, we'd complain if the AUC had it. Well, what's interesting in a regulatory needs hearing is that that can still be challenged, and it's interesting that it has been challenged in the last five years, and they lost in a court of law. So not only are we losing the democratic process; they're bypassing the rule of law, which jeopardizes incredibly the safety of the people and, I want to say, the economic soundness of our province and the Alberta advantage that we have.

You just have to look and read between the lines. Why would they be doing all these things? Either they're ignorant of the facts going forward and they're being told we need these things and they buy it, or else they understand very well the old PC way, their political connections, and what we need to do to reward these people in order to keep them as our friends. They can't have any friends that are just friends; they've got to always reward them, it seems like, in this time and era and this economic downturn.

The Acting Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the hon. member opposite has on a couple of occasions indicated something to do with the fact that some of AESO's work, and he talks about other people's work, has been overturned – overturned – by a court of law. I'd like to ask the member if he would argue with the fact that in 2007 a decision or application was vacated – a decision or application was vacated – due to irregularities with the then EUB. It had absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with AESO.

Mr. Hinman: Well, I believe the member is mistaken when he said that it has nothing to do with the other thing. That was a needs hearing. [interjections] Again, they like to cackle like chickens who laid an egg, and they don't know what the egg even has in it. It's a major problem, Mr. Speaker. It was vacated – and I don't know if I've got the document right here – but the reason why it was vacated was because of the bias of the information that AESO put forward. The reason why it was vacated was because they showed the bias of AESO in the evidence that they brought forward and said that they didn't show the needs. Again, the root of this whole thing is because of their inability to show the needs, that they're vacating all of this precedent that's been set for years and passing Bill 50 so they can just declare it. We need to go back to a needs process. It won't pass the smell test for the AUC, and it certainly won't pass in the courts with these high-voltage PC DC lines.

The Acting Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. The hon. member was talking earlier about the line losses, and he was interrupted, naturally, by the members across the way. The AESO report, the latest annual report, indicates there is $220 million of value in electricity lost throughout the province in line losses, and the government maintains that it's of significant interest that we try to reduce those line losses.

Mr. Hinman: Excellent question. Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. It's interesting because AESO's own reports show that in 2007, 2008, and 2009 the year to date measured 4.1 per cent, 3.8 per cent, and 3.5 per cent respectively, far below the 5 to 7 per cent that's tolerable under a good electrical grid system. So that line loss is just natural. It's no different than saying that our car doesn't get 200 miles per gallon unless we were to drive it in a vacuum with no resistance. There's resistance. The average is 5 to 7 per cent, and we're running almost half of that here in the province. The critical needs; again, it doesn't pass on the congestion on it.

The Acting Speaker: Section 29(2)(a) is still available. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Taft: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I noticed the Member for Calgary-Glenmore was getting a lot of grief. [Dr. Taft's speaking time expired]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, November 26, 2009

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we, the members of our province's Legislature, fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of our people. Let us be guided by these principles in our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to introduce to you a group of very distinguished Albertans who work very hard on behalf of the Last Post Fund. Founded in 1909, the fund is sustained by private donations and by Veterans Affairs Canada. It seeks to ensure that no eligible veteran is denied a dignified funeral and burial for lack of funds. The group who are in the Speaker's gallery ensure that this is done regardless of circumstance. As I call out their names, if they would rise, please. Here to commemorate the Last Post Fund's centennial year are Jim Corbett, president; Brigadier General Bill Buckham, past president, and his wife, Keatha; Bill Rawluk, chairman; Lieutenant Colonel Brian Murphy, past president and honorary legal counsel; counsellors Mary Jane Belec and Rick Morrissey; Major Ken Usher, Alberta branch manager; and Susan MacEachran, who has received assistance from the fund for the burial of her late husband, Grant, earlier this year. I would invite our guests to receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly some 24 grade 6 and 7 students along with their teachers, Mr. Dean Townsend, Mr. Ian Murdoch, Mrs. Alanna Merklene, as well as helpers Mrs. Darlene Duncan, Mrs. Clare Cole, and Mrs. Norma Nicolay. Many of these students are neighbours of mine as Condor is a hamlet about 20 miles east of Rocky Mountain House. I would like them to stand and have the Assembly give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my privilege today to introduce to you 61 students from St. Joseph's Collegiate school in Brooks. These students have travelled on two buses about five hours to get here yesterday and will travel home this evening. They are very excited to learn and eager to change the world. It was my privilege to speak to these students in their classroom about three weeks ago. They are accompanied today by four teachers, Mrs. Calin Musgrove, Mr. Jason Andrusiak, Miss Angela Bidyk, and Ms Marie Cailliau, and parents and helpers Mr. Mike Hollinda, Ms Trena Tait, Ms Leanne Anderson, and Mrs. Patty Schimmel and also bus drivers Mr. Garry Stein and Mr. Richard Young. I would ask them all to rise and enjoy the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education and Technology.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of Albertans who represent my ministry's corporate services division. Corporate services is responsible for various corporate functions, including finance, administration, corporate planning, performance management, legal and legislative services. They've announced a great deal of tools and management systems to support our department in the implementation of our business plan. We have thirteen visitors today in the gallery. I'll ask them to rise as I call their names: Ms Edith Wong, Ms Alyssa Moritz, Mr. Michael Bell, Mr. Benedict Dy, Mrs. Alicia Garcia, Mrs. June Sawchuk, Mr. Shane Stuber, Ms Cheryl Vaillant, Mr. Terence Fung, Mr. Michael Rivest, Mr. Jas Deol, Mrs. Emilie Mahabir, and Mr. James Fan. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that all members give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Community Supports.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can't see my guests in the members' gallery, but they may be in the visitors' gallery, so I'll introduce them anyway. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests, Miss Luanne Whitmarsh and Mr. Brandon Powell from Calgary. There you are. Luanne Whitmarsh is the CEO of the Kerby Centre and leads 40 staff and over 600 volunteers at the centre. Luanne is a registered social worker who feels passionately and energetically about the people and programs at the centre. Brandon Powell is a strategic planning consultant with expertise in business, economic development, and urban and regional planning. Brandon has been consulting with the Kerby Centre over the past year to help them rebrand and to provide strategic planning for the centre's future. Please join me in welcoming Luanne and Brandon with the warm traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Elizabeth DesCamp. Elizabeth is visiting from Calgary with Luanne and Brandon. Elizabeth is the director of the older adult program with Calgary Family Services, and she's shown an outstanding commitment to seniors in the community. Elizabeth and her staff have made a tremendous impact on the lives of seniors in Calgary. They've significantly increased their quality of life, especially through the elder friendly communities program. Elizabeth is standing here in the Assembly. Would you please join me in giving her the recognition that she so deserves.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Mr. Groeneveld: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly communications staff from the Alberta Livestock and Meat Agency, or ALMA. Joining us today are communications officers Carmen Palamarchuk and Nicole Paradis-Clancy, administrative assistant Amrit Matharu, and communications co-ordinator Gen Handley. ALMA is a bridge organization focused on achieving an internationally competitive and profitable livestock and meat industry for Alberta producers. They're seated in the members' gallery. I see that they're standing already, so I'd ask the House to please give them the usual warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the month of November thousands of men and women worldwide, myself included, have been growing moustaches or wearing fake ones to raise awareness and support for prostate cancer. I spoke about Movember in a member's statement yesterday. This afternoon I have the distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the other two members of my LAO Team Mo, who between the three of us have raised just a hair over $1,200. These two gentlemen have worked hard all month to raise funds for this important cause by growing and grooming their 'staches, and it's not been easy for them to grow a moustache that small. I would ask both Mr. Ryan Algar, legislative assistant, and Mr. Graeme Ireland, assistant to the director of government members' caucus, to please rise so we can see their moustaches way down here and receive the traditional greeting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's obviously hard to follow, and quite frankly I don't think I want to follow that. [interjection] Yeah, and no amount of money, sir, will make me do that.

1:40

It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some absolutely inspirational individuals working in the area of adult literacy, here today. At work, home, school, and play literacy helps build meaningful connections with others and supports everyone's ability to make good decisions throughout their lives. Today's guests are led by Ms Carol Aube-Girard of the Edmonton Community Adult Learning Association, Margaret Rutherford of Edmonton public library, Candice Jackson from Literacy Alberta, Delena Tsang from Star Literacy, Adrienne Laughington from the Centre for Family Literacy, Rachel Posch from Edmonton John Howard Society, Susan Skaret from the learning centre, and Bonnie Caron and Iris Ayers from Project Adult Literacy Society. They're also joined by Beverly MacKinnon, the 2005 Canada Post literacy award recipient, as well as many students from the learning centre and from PALS. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay.

Ms Woo-Paw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature two very able advocates from the Alberta Graduate Council. With us today are Mr. Ryan McCarthy from the University of Calgary, whom I had the chance to meet about two years ago as a presenter at a leadership program. With Ryan is Mr. Christopher Skappak from the University of Alberta and chair of the Alberta Graduate Council. During my meeting with a representative from the council earlier this week I discovered that Christopher is the Chris that my son has talked about ever since he started university here in Edmonton six years ago. I see that you also have other colleagues here with you, and I would like to ask all of you to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On September 16 the Rozsa Foundation of Calgary awarded their 2009 award for arts administration. Of the nine nominees, five were from Edmonton, including the recipient of the award. Today I'm very honoured to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly those five Edmontonians for their amazing, creative hard work on behalf of Edmonton's premier arts organizations and festivals. Joining us today in the public gallery is Shelley Switzer, who is the producer for the Edmonton street performers. She was also recognized in the spring with a mayor's award for innovative artistic direction. With her are, also, Penny Ritco, executive director of the Citadel Theatre – Penny, please rise – Mary Phillips-Rickey, the general manager for Edmonton Opera. Unfortunately, we're missing Todd Janes, who is the general manager for Latitude 53, but we do have the recipient of this year's Rosza award for arts administration, Tom McFall, who is the executive director of the Alberta Craft Council. As a special treat Penny's sister Marilyn Kennedy, who is visiting from Ontario, was also able to join us today. Please welcome these distinguished arts administrators.

Members' Statements

Last Post Fund

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great honour to rise today and mark a very important anniversary, the 100th anniversary of the Last Post Fund.

Mr. Speaker, I take you back to the year 1909 in Montreal. A veteran named Arthur H.D. Hair, moved by a powerful sense of patriotism after finding out a soldier was buried without a proper funeral, acted to ensure that every soldier was buried with dignity. Mr. Hair's actions launched a national nonprofit organization dedicated to the honour of our veterans.

Over the past 100 years the Last Post Fund has never deviated from their principles, principles of dignity, compassion, and respect that presided over its birth. In co-operation with Veterans Affairs Canada the Last Post Fund ensures that no eligible veteran is deprived of a dignified funeral, burial, and headstone for lack of financial resources, as befit those who have served their country in wartime or in peace.

Since 2009 is the centennial year, the Last Post Fund organized a series of commemorative ceremonies across the country to honour the thousands of veterans who have made the ultimate sacrifice of their lives to serve our great country. Mr. Speaker, the most important of these ceremonies took place this year on June 21 at the National Field of Honour, located in Pointe-Claire, Quebec. On that day the first cemetery in Canada entirely devoted to veterans was designated as a national historic site by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

Through the course of its history the Last Post Fund has arranged funerals and, where necessary, burial and a grave marker for more than 145,000 veterans – 145,000 veterans. This is an astonishing number and shows that this fund plays an integral role in honouring our veterans.

Mr. Speaker, as noted earlier, the Last Post Fund is a nonprofit organization, and any donations to the Last Post Fund allow this organization to continue its work, from establishing commemorative projects across Canada to placing markers for veterans who lie in unmarked graves to supporting the Last Post Fund's National Field of Honour.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to pay tribute to Mr. Arthur Hair and his associates, who started this worthwhile organization, and all those who donate and assist the fund in their goals. I would like to end with this quote from the Last Post Fund: "To honour and protect in death seems but a small return to those who have protected their country in life.”

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Arts Administrators

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I was able to introduce four of the five Edmonton arts managers who were nominated for the Rozsa awards. I am proud, proud fit to bursting, of these wonderful administrators. All of them work in the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre.

As an arts administrator in my life before politics I so admire the skills, discipline, imagination, and talent these dedicated people have. They run organizations with multimillion-dollar budgets. They account for every penny to several levels of government and to the private-sector donors. They do more with less year after year after year.

Given the field, it is high praise indeed to honour Tom McFall as the recipient of the 2009 Rozsa award. For 10 years Tom has reinvigorated the Alberta Craft Council. He's created a centre of excellence by developing strategic plans with the board, establishing a downtown gallery and a shop to showcase and, more importantly, sell his members' fine crafts. Under his direction Alberta has increased its international reputation with Alberta fine craft artists exhibiting at the Smithsonian and now in South Korea at the 2009 Cheongju International Craft Biennale in Cheongju.

Like his colleagues, Tom is passionate, savvy to the market he works in, and collaborative with other artists and arts organizations in Edmonton and in Alberta. That is the secret weapon, Mr. Speaker. Alberta artists work together to survive in what can be a hostile environment. Tom has also volunteered his time with various art advocacy efforts and continues to provide leadership when asked.

I urge my colleagues to support these people and their organizations directly. Consider buying theatre tickets for volunteer recognition. Use the Craft Council items for silent auction contributions. Advertise in a festival brochure.

My admiration and respect to all of you, my administrative colleagues, and especially to you, Tom. It's very impressive. I know your staff and your family are very, very proud of your work. We are all grateful for what you all have brought to Edmonton and to Alberta.

Thank you so much.

Chronic Pain

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to share information about National Pain Awareness Week, which is recognized during every first week of November. The goal of the campaign is to increase awareness of the debilitating effects of chronic pain and promote the need for more research into effective treatment for chronic pain.

National Pain Awareness Week was created by the Canadian Pain Coalition, a patient-led organization which includes clinicians, researchers, and educators. Six million Canadians suffer from chronic pain, which interferes with quality of life and productivity and which places huge demands and costs on our health care system.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure many of us here today have a personal experience in this regard. People in pain miss work. They spend time in the hospital, and they visit their doctor often.

According to the Pain Coalition in Canada there's a large gap between what is known and what is practised in the treatment of pain. Activities and events during National Pain Awareness Week aim to make the public and health care professionals aware of the need for greater knowledge of the causes and treatments of chronic pain, including a number of methods that cost nothing extra: prevention, good nutrition, and a regular exercise regime.

In Alberta we have a number of excellent centres and clinics that provide pain assessment and management for a wide range of health conditions. Additionally, the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research supports numerous research studies that investigate how pain can be better treated and controlled, but the truth is that every Albertan needs to become more informed about this significant health concern and actively seek new and better ways to avoid and conquer chronic pain.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mental Health Innovation Fund

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister of health said that he did not cut the mental health innovation fund. However, the Health and Wellness annual report, which the minister signed off on, shows the fund was completely unspent last year. To the Premier. This fund was budgeted for but not spent. You say it was a reduction, but reducing spending by 100 per cent is a cut. How can the Premier deny this?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity to look into what the member raised yesterday, and there was a three-year commitment of funding of $75 million to the mental health innovation fund, which was distributed at previous regional health authorities and now to Alberta Health Services. It went for some 36 projects. However, all $75 million was not allocated. There simply was a surplus of some $25 million, and that's going to be flowed as we move forward into the next budget year. So for the hon. leader to say that when you have a surplus, that's a cut, I mean, that math just doesn't make any sense at all.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier is concerned about the state of mental health treatment in Alberta and getting people out of hospital, into community, this is a fund that would help that. Can the Premier explain why this money specifically budgeted to improve mental health was not spent?

Mr. Stelmach: As the minister indicated, there was $75 million available. It was available to those authorities that presented good, worthwhile projects, and the money that was expended was expended on those projects. There's $25 million that's in surplus. It may be used for other worthwhile projects that may come forward, but as the minister said, the money will flow forward.

Dr. Swann: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, the mental health innovation fund was not spent, and it's not budgeted for in '09-10. Could the Premier explain why the program has now been permanently cut?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it hasn't been permanently cut. What I said earlier was that we have extended the $25 million into the next budget year. In addition, we've committed, through our children's mental health strategy, three-year funding of $50 million. I will repeat what I said yesterday. Going forward, we are allocating additional dollars to mental health in this province, not less.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Budget

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today's quarter update proves this government has taken no action to stop the fiscal swings our province is plagued with. We have a $4.3 billion structural deficit, and the government is just sitting on its hands hoping things will get better. The only action taken was to cut core public services without providing any details as to the impact these cuts will have on Albertans. To the Premier: outside of relying on natural gas prices to increase, how is the government going to remove the structural deficit he got us into?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the issues we're facing as the province of Alberta are external factors created by a world economic recession that, again, was placed upon our shoulders by some of the irregular banking regulations across the country. We have done a very good job in preparing for this by setting aside $17 billion in the surplus gas fund. We call it the sustainability fund. We will use that fund to cover three-quarters of the anticipated deficit over this year and next year, and the other quarter will come from trimming our spending.

Dr. Swann: We now know that millions and millions of dollars will be cut from education, health care, and children's services, but we don't know how. Why is this government so secretive about where they're finding these cuts?

Mr. Snelgrove: Mr. Speaker, we took a very progressive step forward when we decided that it was probably more prudent to take some thoughtful reflection and look very carefully into government and see what we can do better. It's absolutely a tribute to the public service and to our administrative directors that we've been able to remove nearly a billion dollars out of government spending, and they don't even know where it happened.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, when faced with a need for fiscal constraint, why did this government choose the core public services of health and education as the biggest places to cut rather than reducing the bloated size of this cabinet?

Mr. Liepert: Mr. Speaker, it would take a Liberal to think we could cut $180 million out of the cabinet.

Let me deal with the health issue because that's the largest percentage of dollars. You know, we have a $12.8 billion operating budget in health care, Mr. Speaker, and if you take 1 and a half per cent variance, that's $120 million. This particular department is strictly run on demand: public demand, physicians' demand. We have to make some projections. What we've been able to find is less demand by physicians on the electronic medical records, less cost for prescription drugs because more generics are coming on stream. I guess I would ask the Leader of the Opposition: does he not want us to show those savings to Albertans?

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask my questions to the Premier, not the minister of health, who can't budget to save his life. To the Premier: why is this government cutting $80 million from public education when it continues to support horse racing and ineligible farm fuels to the tune of $65 million?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to education the minister has had a good dialogue with school boards. The school boards are sitting at about 400 and some million dollars' worth of surplus. He's asked school boards to dip into those surpluses starting this year to take any reductions or any kind of cutbacks out of the classroom. He's been able to do that, and school boards are co-operating. That just shows that the government has a good working relationship with the school boards and is leading in this plan.

Mr. MacDonald: I don't believe that because I saw evidence of the working relationship between the school boards and the Minister of Education the other morning at breakfast.

Again to the Premier: why is the government cutting $188 million out of the health budget when you could shrink the size of cabinet by four and save $54 million and leave the public health care budget alone?

Mr. Stelmach: I know that we're nearing the last few hours of this session. But, boy, if you took $54 million for four ministers and you divided that by 23, then multiplied it again by the $54 million, that is – I don't know where they're getting these figures.

Once again yesterday just all kinds of misinformation and, you know, blue skying everything. Again, the same evidence here. We know that we have to find $2 billion in our budget. We will do that. I said yesterday that we were going to do that while protecting the core services of this government. We're getting a good buy-in from municipalities, from school boards, from the Alberta Medical Association, everyone. They're all working together as Albertans to make sure that at the end of two years we're back in the black and we're putting money back into the sustainability fund.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. The Premier knows he has no intent of protecting public services. Why is this government spending millions of dollars on marketing firms, branding campaigns, and the Public Affairs Bureau while it's cutting the budget of public health care, public education, and children's services?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, our exports value at about $100 billion. We have to be very diligent to ensure that we have the correct factual information out in all our markets, whether it be on what we're doing on air emissions, climate change, water strategy, just ensuring that the markets that we export to don't close the doors because of continued misinformation, most of that misinformation, quite frankly, coming from the party opposite.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Support for Alberta Families

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has failed Alberta families. The rollout of the H1N1 vaccine was a failure of leadership that ignored high-risk populations and became a national embarrassment. Health care faces cuts and chaos while energy companies receive billion-dollar subsidies for enhanced oil recovery. Why is the Premier forcing struggling Alberta families to pay the price of this government's bungling, its secrecy, and its misplaced priorities?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, that's the difference with a government that looks forward to the future and actually puts some common sense into where we spend our money. The $2 billion that we have set aside for carbon capture and storage will in the end reduce the cost of coal-fired electricity because we will reduce the amount of carbon that will be put into the air. Secondly, the other project that was just announced the other day: we will use carbon dioxide to go back to the established oil fields and get more of the resource that's in the ground, and we'll do that without building any more roads, destroying any more trees, or drilling any more wells. There's about 60 per cent, at least, of the resource in the ground, and we're going to use carbon to extract it. Then, in fact, we'll get much more than the $2 billion in royalties.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's failure to protect public health care is undeniable, and what's worse is that it's deliberate. Operating under a veil of secrecy, this government has an agenda to privatize health care, which is causing increased hospital wait times, worse care for seniors, and bed closures. The Premier has failed Albertans, and he's taking the province in the wrong direction. To the Premier. Why won't you admit your secret? Families get less while your corporate sponsors of this Progressive Conservative government get more.

Mr. Stelmach: Looks like even the leader is getting tired.

Mr. Speaker, we have, I believe, found good balance in our budgeting process given the fact that we are facing a significant drop in the price of natural gas. For natural gas every dollar change in gigajoule of one unit is about a loss of $1.1 billion to our budget. The other is that for every penny increase in the Canadian dollar compared to the American dollar annualized we lose about $221 million. Those are the kind of balls in the air that we're balancing to make sure that we have the correct projections, protect our programs, yet at the end of two years ensure that we have money to put back into the sustainability fund to protect us for another recession or economic downturn that may come for the next generation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This Premier insists on putting his corporate friends ahead of ordinary Albertans. Every month Alberta families will look at their electricity bill and be reminded that this government is picking their pockets to benefit power companies. In the meantime, services are being cut across the board. When will the Premier admit that he's failing Alberta families by forcing them to pay more for less?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I guess, the hon. member doesn't get a chance to look at his bill, but he'll find that the price of electricity actually has dropped. That's a plus. We have the most generation increase here in Alberta compared to other provinces, oh, and, by the way, the most green energy generated per capita, no matter how you measure it, right here in the province of Alberta, which really is known for its energy on the hydrocarbon side. We've done a tremendous job leading the nation in terms of generation and also keeping the costs low.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Funding for Fort McMurray Area

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week in this House the minister of the Treasury Board – I don't call him president because it sounds too expensive – the word that he said was that he may consider cutting funding to Fort McMurray, the goose that's laying the golden egg. I know he didn't really mean that because he understands the value. My question to him from the folks in the coffee shop is this: have you decided to give more money to the Minister of Transportation? We actually see work being done on highway 63 that we hadn't seen all summer long. Have you given him some more money?

Mr. Snelgrove: Magically – magically – there is a very comprehensive plan, Mr. Speaker, that deals with the infrastructure rollout all across Alberta. You know, one of the things that happens in many different provinces is that you may have areas of high economic activity, but it's localized. In Alberta we've got growth that covers the province. Naturally, a great deal of it stems from Fort McMurray. We've allowed the Minister of Transportation – we've encouraged it. He's the one lobbying for it. We have been building infrastructure in Fort McMurray at a terrific pace, and we'll continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While driving back to my constituency last weekend, around the Wandering River area I saw about 30 to 40 kilometres of clear-cutting that's going on, which is evidence of work that citizens that I speak to in the coffee shop can see. To the Minister of Transportation: I'd like to know what the plan is relative to the dollars that are being spent on highway 63, such an important corridor to the oil sands development in transporting goods and also to citizens.

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've got to give this hon. member kudos. He's always out there fighting for his constituents. He's sometimes not sure what they want, but he's always out there fighting for them anyway.

I will say that the President of the Treasury Board actually doesn't give anybody anything. He's a real – I don't know what you would call the President of the Treasury Board. He likes to make sure he gets things done right, but sometimes you have to talk about people being a little tight, you know? Anyway, I will say to the hon. member that we're working very, very hard on the highway to Fort McMurray. We are doing about 35 kilometres of brushing there right now. The second phase on our two interchanges up there is just getting under way. Our five-lane bridge is coming along very strong. We're doing a lot of work in that hon. member's constituency.

Mr. Boutilier: The first part of the response, I think, was bordering on the G-word, gibberish. The second part of the answer was pretty good. That is comforting to know.

My question is again to the Minister of Transportation. I know the Treasury Board is recognizing the golden goose. We want to continue to feed the golden goose that generates revenues. I have to ask you: do you support the golden goose being fed relative to highway 63, and in fact what can you do to enhance the funding to help the oil sands in the future in terms of growing the business to ultimately generate more revenue for all Albertans, including Fort McMurray?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I don't really call it the golden goose. I actually honestly believe that we have to look after all Albertans. I do believe that Fort McMurray is a huge opportunity for this province. I think we do everything in our power to keep all the people that work up there safe. We want to generate as much economic development as we can for them, but in the meantime, we're going to keep up with the infrastructure that's needed for those people to have a good quality of life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Climate Change

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. People want this government to be strong on the environment, to be a leader, to protect us, and to do something concrete on climate change. What citizens see is a lot of talk, lots of pretty pictures, and very little action. To the Minister of Environment: will the Premier go to Copenhagen and show leadership and not just protectionism for business as usual, like Alberta's coal-fired power plants?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's good timing that the member should ask this question. I just returned as little as half an hour ago from Ottawa, where provincial environment ministers met with the federal minister, and we talked about just that issue: what is Canada's position going to be in Copenhagen? I don't have a lot of time to go through a large position in 35 seconds, but if she will ask some supplementary questions, I'll be more than happy to provide a little bit more information.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I hope it's about action, not just talk.

Back to the same minister: given that Alberta has excelled at doing as little as possible and the U.S. target is much tougher, is Alberta prepared to leap from doing as little as possible to the U.S.'s more demanding standards?

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has indicated that we support the position that has been adopted by Canada, and that position is that there would be a 20 per cent reduction. The United States just came out yesterday and announced that they would be aiming towards a 17 per cent reduction by 2020. There's a one-year difference in the base year between the two. You do the math, and it works out to about the same thing. Alberta is prepared and is committed, and in fact Albertans expect the government of Alberta to meet that commitment.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Back to the same minister. Well, given that this government would have Alberta's emissions continue to increase until 2020, how will the minister ensure that Alberta meets its part of the federal target of a 20 per cent reduction below 2006 levels by 2020?

Mr. Renner: Mr. Speaker, part of the plan – and the member knows very well – is the application of technology. That technology takes some time. Technology such as carbon capture and storage, technology such as transformational technology that greens energy production takes some time. The fact of the matter is that this world, this Earth, is going to be dependent to some extent on hydrocarbons for the next 15 to 20 and perhaps even 30 years. What we need to do in Alberta is ensure that we have the same degree of effort, the same commitment to CO₂ reduction that the rest of the world is taking.

H1N1 Influenza Immunization Program

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently Canada's top doctor bluntly stated her frustration with the nasty politicking that has erupted around the H1N1 response. Yesterday, Anne Doig stated that both doctors and patients are frustrated that politicians waged a war of words alleging mismanagement of the nation's response to H1N1. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Mr. Minister, you have been quoted saying Alberta's vaccination program has been a success. On what basis are you making these assertions?

Mr. Liepert: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member's preamble refers to something I'm going to table later in the House, five copies. Yes. It is some comments made by the head of the Canadian Medical Association, and I'm going to table them for the purposes of the Leader of the Opposition, who reminds us constantly that he is a physician, so that and he can see what the head of the Canadian Medical Association thinks about some of his antics over the last few weeks.

What has been a success, Mr. Speaker, is that as of the end of day yesterday some 800,000 Albertans have been vaccinated with the H1N1 vaccine. That's roughly 24 per cent of our population. I want to take this opportunity as this Legislature winds down to encourage all members, all Albertans to continue to go and receive their vaccinations. I'm going to go on Saturday to get mine, and I hope that everyone in this Assembly by the end of this weekend is vaccinated.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bhardwaj: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. H1N1 has dominated the news. My constituents from Edmonton-Ellerslie, especially those with a chronic illness, are asking how they will be able to receive the seasonal flu vaccine with such a great focus on the H1N1 program.

Mr. Liepert: Well, the member is absolutely correct that during the rollout of the H1N1 vaccine program we had to temporarily suspend the seasonal flu vaccination. But I am pleased to say that starting on Monday, Mr. Speaker, at all the mass immunization clinics you can receive both your H1N1 and your seasonal flu vaccine. In addition to that, we are now in the process of getting our H1N1 vaccine out to physicians and pharmacists, those that want to administer the vaccine. At the same time, you can go to those particular physicians and pharmacists, and you'll also be able to receive your seasonal flu vaccine.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Postsecondary Education Costs

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the session concluding, the minister of advanced education has one final chance to provide clarity and comfort to postsecondary students concerned about the affordability of their education, which would also provide a sense of job security for support staff and for untenured professors. If the minister of advanced education is going to entertain sizable increases to tuition, will he also revisit lifetime student loan limits to ensure that graduate students do not find themselves unable to borrow to finance their education?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, all things are being reviewed, and we will be reviewing lifetime loan limits. They are also a cost pressure that we have in our department, and I would reiterate again as I'm sure the hon. member will be going back to the headlines to do his research: there are no proposals in my department at present for any increases above the CPI maximum for tuition.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The beauty of Hansard is that we have a historical record, so when I ask the minister in the spring why he didn't follow through with his review, it'll be there on record. Will the minister admit that a provincial arts and culture endowment, as we have urged for some time, would have helped to cushion vulnerable graduate students in the social sciences and the humanities from the worst of the downturn?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, our comprehensive research institutions are struggling with the endowments that they have, that they've become somewhat dependent on in some areas. Certainly, we're reviewing all of the funding mechanisms that we have for our postsecondaries. In fact, we've been working with our postsecondary partners over the last 12 to 15 months on the potential of a new funding framework that we might be able to use that would help all faculties. We intend that in the new year we're going to be looking at that as potentially being brought forward as part of our budget process. The hon. member will have ample time to debate my budget here in this House in the spring.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Yes, postsecondary institutions are struggling with the recession's effect on endowment funds, but the logic that they would have suffered even greater losses had their endowments been higher is a little bit abstract. Instead of giving institutions arbitrary one-off exemptions to raise tuition above provincial caps, why doesn't the minister simply return the setting of tuition rates to the provincial Legislature, where they were, rightfully, before they became the sole discretion of the minister under Bill 40?

Mr. Horner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have something in the thousands of different programs that are offered throughout the 26 postsecondary institutions in the province. We have thousands of various different tuition levels. I don't believe that anyone has ever brought forward into this House a list of all of the tuitions and then asked this House to debate whether or not those tuitions are higher or lower or correct. I believe that the process that we have in place with the CPI cap is a very valid process. It's one that protects students from across-the-board increases higher than what the consumer price index is and will continue to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Big Prairie Road Bridge

Mr. Marz: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past month a bridge on the Big Prairie Road over the Little Red Deer River was totally destroyed by fire set by vandals. The cost of the removal of the rubble is over $70,000 alone, which I understand has been made available to the county of Mountain View by the Minister of Transportation, and I appreciate that. The people are concerned that the creosote-treated lumber that's now in the river – and the river is freezing up – has not yet been cleaned up. To the Minister of Transportation: when can the community expect this cleanup and removal to be completed?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to tell the hon. member that I am aware of this unfortunate incident. My department has been working with the county, providing advice on how to deal with the removal of the truss and burned material from the waterway. We have provided $84,000 through the local bridge program. I understand that the county has received quotes for the project, and I'm sure the work is going to begin, if it hasn't already, very shortly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thanks for that, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the replacement costs are well over $2 million for a new bridge. Could the minister explain whose responsibility it is to replace this bridge?

Mr. Ouellette: Well, Mr. Speaker, this bridge is a local bridge, so the county would be responsible for its replacement. That said, the county can apply for provincial funding under the local bridge program, but I have to tell you that the program has been fully committed for the '09-10 year. We have also asked the county to provide information on other crossings in the area to evaluate priorities that could assist with future funding decisions.

Mr. Marz: Again, thanks for that to the Minister of Transportation. But, you know, the constituents regularly use this bridge for daily trips to work, moving agricultural equipment, also for emergency services. They're very concerned about the reliability of detours because of the constant flooding of the river. Is there any other assistance aside from what the minister already stated, such as an emergent fund that maybe could be accessed for this type of structure?

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, we would review any funding request based on priorities and available budget. The county can also use some of the provincial grant funding that is available to municipalities. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we give hundreds of millions of dollars to municipalities every year to try to help with their infrastructure. They could use the rural transportation grant money, the AMIP money, the MSI money, the new deals for cities and communities. There are a bunch of different grants that I'm sure would be eligible in order to do that project.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms Pastoor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The '08-09 annual report for Seniors and Community Supports showed that $42 million was unspent in AISH supports last year. This is money that was debated in budget and was meant to support Alberta's most vulnerable people. To the Minister of Seniors and Community Supports: what is the minister's reason for such a large amount from AISH supports not going to those who need it most and whose workers are quitting because of lack of funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As anybody knows if you've ever been involved in the budget process, you have to do projections for the year ahead. One of our projections included an increase in the caseload for AISH clients and an increase in the caseload of seniors who might be going into assisted living facilities because we have a supplementary accommodation benefit for them. In that year the uptake that we expected didn't happen, and that's why we had that extra money in the budget that she saw in the report that she received the other day.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Pastoor: Yes. Perhaps part of the uptake was because some of the rules had been changed, and it's more difficult to get into these programs.

Can the minister explain what happened to the $42 million from AISH and the $54 million from income support for seniors that went unspent last year? Is this money still on your books, or has it gone back to general revenue?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to remind everybody that in last year's budget, announced for April 1, we gave an increase of $100 in the AISH allowance for each of our 40,000 AISH members. That would be $1,188 per month.

Getting back to the question that I was just asked, what we did was reallocate the money within the budget. We used some of that money for lodge modernization improvement. We have lots of lodges throughout this province that need some modernization. We've put money towards that, and we've put money towards more capital projects for assisted living for our seniors.

Ms Pastoor: Thank you to the minister for that. I actually have two questions, so now I'm in a quandary. I'm going to go to my true, standard question that I ask every six months. Why will the minister not commit to indexing AISH supports in the same way that MLA salaries are?

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, we all know that projecting our budgets is a very difficult exercise. Projecting the future is a very difficult exercise. I want to make sure that the programs that we have for our most vulnerable people in this province are sustainable into the future. I think the way that we conduct our AISH program, which is a review every two years and this year an increase of a hundred dollars per month, an increase probably never seen before, are the reasons why I want to be able to maintain the flexibility of having that review every two years and giving more than a cost-of-living increase when necessary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Support for Children in Care

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to the most recently released quarterly report, the Ministry of Children and Youth Services admits that there were 37 incidents of abuse to 58 children in the minister's care between January and March alone. The majority of these involved some form of abuse at the hands of foster parents. Now, the minister has known for years that they don't have enough foster parents or adequate resources but this year could only point to a net increase of 37 foster parents. Since the minister so clearly has so much more work to do to protect our children, on what planet could she have concluded that her ministry could afford to hand over $16 million to the Provincial Treasurer?

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, they're correct in that we had $16 million. I'm pleased to say those savings are being made without impacting any children or families in this province. About $5 million of that will be savings through the hiring freeze. Again, those positions have nothing to do with front-line workers, which is great. The rest of the savings are all discretionary funding. So I can assure this member that it is not going to impact families and children in this province.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, no impact means no improvement.

Now, in his annual report the advocate expressed considerable concern about how kinship care is failing Alberta's children. Since he works directly for the minister, his criticisms have to be tempered. So when he expresses concern, we know it's an issue screaming for attention. The report suggests that funding, support, and placement of kids in inappropriate situations are areas of current ministry neglect. Clearly, the minister has more work to do. Clearly, you couldn't afford to lose that money. How can you justify reducing your budget by one single cent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are so many things that I could address there. First of all, I know that the advocate is very supportive of our kinship program. As far as improvements, what we're all about is continuous improvement. I've said before that this is a very immense system. It is a high-risk business. What's really important and what I do not support is undervaluing or discrediting our staff. What I do focus on is minimizing risks, which is very important, and maximizing our strengths. How we do that is through our commitment to continuous improvement.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are chronic problems, and there is no evidence of improvement. Now, this government is fond of comparing our current deficit and money management issues to a family budget, but every responsible parent knows that you don't increase your mortgage payments if it means that you're not going to be able to feed your kids. The minister is the de facto parent for roughly 9,000 of Alberta's children, but she's not acting responsibly. Why isn't the minister advocating for enough money to address the long-standing failures of her ministry rather than writing a cheque to the minister of finance for funds she can't afford to lose?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we are acting responsibly. Again, when we talk about improvement, I mean, we've done nothing this year but demonstrate over and over the commitment to improvement. That was through the foster care review, through the work that's being done through the kinship review, the advocacy review, and it's not just reviewing the system; we actually have been acting on all recommendations that are coming forward. I would suggest to this member – I know that she's well aware, and I've mentioned it to the House before – that right now under way we have a child intervention panel that's taking a look at our entire system to really check out whether we have the capacity to deal with all kinds of social issues that are emerging. I would suggest that there is a call for public input. If anyone goes to our website, there is a discussion guide. We're seeking advice, and I would suggest that this member, if she's got any feedback to provide, goes ahead and does that. We'd welcome it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Rocky Mountain World Heritage Sites

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents and, for that matter, constituents from Livingstone-Macleod to north of Peace River are concerned by media reports this week that more provincial parks may be included in a new Parks Canada submission to expand Canadian Rocky Mountain parks world heritage sites in Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Tourism, Parks and Recreation. Could the minister please explain what is happening and how this report came about?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. I've seen the media stories that have been arising from the national parks draft management plan document, which mentions a proposal to include provincial parks in the expanded world heritage sites. But in this province we are implementing the plan for parks, and we're using the government's land-use framework as the vehicle for how we decide these policies. We're not actively working on this. I have not allocated any budget to it. The hon. member is right: we would extensively be consulting with his constituents if this was in fact happening.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. Does your department plan to move forward on the expansion of the Rocky Mountain sites under a UN designation, and if so, what limitation would it put on the province to manage its own provincial parks and wilderness areas?

Mrs. Ady: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me be clear first. We manage the provincial parks. Even if there was a world heritage designation put on it, we would still manage the provincial parks. But as to the UNESCO designation, it is a good thing. There are 15 in this country. We have five. We're really proud of that. It tells the whole world: we've got some special stuff here you want to come see. So it's not a bad thing. But let me reiterate to this member: we manage the provincial parks, and we will continue to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Secondary Ticket Sales

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the Grey Cup approaching, this government has chosen to leave ticket buyers totally unprotected from inflated ticket prices from secondary ticket sales. A Service Alberta spokesman has even admitted that Alberta has recently scrapped its only antiscalping law. To the Minister of Service Alberta: why won't the minister protect Grey Cup fans from being ripped off?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to ticket reselling, that is indeed under the Fair Trading Act, and the Fair Trading Act does have protection under that act. I have to say that of the 140,000 calls we get to our consumer line, we've only had about 20 calls on ticket reselling. That's really important to note here. With respect to the Grey Cup event happening in Calgary, it's really important for consumers, if they are going to purchase a ticket, to know that it is a valid ticket and to do their homework.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister clearly doesn't understand the Fair Trading Act. As we have already argued on another issue, the Fair Trading Act only requires a corporation to disclose just how much they are charging consumers but doesn't protect against scalping practices. So to the minister again: given that Internet sales sites like Ticketmaster have nearly a monopoly on tickets for major venues, how can the minister say that people should simply choose not to buy tickets from Internet scalping sites? Won't the minister admit that the government has to take some action on this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the issue of Ticketmaster right now, the federal Competition Bureau is looking at that very issue as we speak. With respect to the price of tickets, as Minister of Service Alberta it's not my job to tell Albertans what they should be paying for tickets, and that's what's really important here. The consumers have the power in their hands to buy valid tickets, and I would encourage them to purchase tickets from reputable sources.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Kang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All that Ticketmaster has done is to change the way consumers are directed to secondary websites. That doesn't solve the problem. To the same minister again: given that the governments of Saskatchewan and Ontario have introduced legislation to crack down on secondary ticket sales, why is Alberta moving in the opposite direction by eliminating Internet scalping protection for consumers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Klimchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am indeed aware of the new legislation that has been proposed in Saskatchewan. It's really important to note that here in Alberta with the whole ticket reselling business, there are new ways of approaching it, paperless tickets. There are a number of issues. With respect to protecting consumers, the regulations that Service Alberta has recently developed with respect to heat submetering, payday loans, and gift cards, those are the regulations that protect consumers and protect their pocketbooks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Oil Sands Global Image

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, as the climate change fearmongering and rhetoric heats up leading up to the Copenhagen summit in a couple weeks, hilarity has ensued with an individual, who shall remain unnamed, spreading convenient lies about Alberta's oil sands operations. Could the hon. Minister of Energy provide this Assembly and all Albertans assurances that these convenient lies are just that?

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the government of the province of Alberta works extremely hard developing policy and working with our industry partners to address the concerns around greenhouse gas emissions. We do have energy input reduction programs. I would suggest that perhaps some individuals may want to park their airplanes and look a little closer to home with respect to the greenhouse gas emission problem. Now, the Jacobs report will indicate that mined bitumen feedstock into U.S. refineries, in fact, is more CO₂ friendly than California thermal-assisted heavy production.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Fawcett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the hon. Minister of Energy as well. What is the minister doing to protect the ingenuity, risk, and hard work of Albertans in developing one of the world's most innovative energy and environmental operations from the convenient mistruths of someone who is only interested in self-promotion and turning a profit based on fear and misinformation?

Mr. Knight: Well, I think that now we have a situation here where the world – the world – is recognizing the work that the province of Alberta is doing under the leadership of this Premier with carbon capture and storage. It's stellar work moving ahead. It is an inconvenient truth that individuals have had periods of time – one I could think of, eight years – to ratify international treaties that would help to clean up issues that they have. He did nothing. He had his chance, and he did not lead. Mr. Speaker, this government will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Contracted Children's Services Agencies

Mr. Chase: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In responding to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the children's minister referenced an internal review that is being conducted. I hope that review will be tabled early in the next spring session and not sanitized like previous child advocate reports.

Social agencies now have a timeline placed on their funding to help children with a range of disorders from fetal alcohol syndrome to drug addiction and behavioural problems. To the minister: if the funding is limited by time rather than progress, how will these agencies be able to care for children without provincial funding once their time runs out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Tarchuk: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually not sure which review you were speaking to. If it was the child intervention panel review, we do expect a report in the spring and recommendations, and certainly that would be public.

I didn't quite catch the second question. Maybe you could forward me some more information on what you're speaking about with timelines.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. The reason you didn't hear the second question was that your hon. members were shouting.

How can the minister be sure that funding based on unfeasible time limits will not negatively impact quality of care for these kids? Hopefully, the Member for Calgary-Egmont didn't prevent you from hearing that question.

Ms Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I assume the member – are you talking about contracted agencies? [interjection] No, I didn't understand the question.

Anyways, again, if you want to give me some details. I can tell you that our contracts with contracted agencies are focused on what's best for the child, and timelines do not enter that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Chase: Thank you. Outcomes-based. Social workers, doctors, psychologists, and agency service providers working under the auspices of the ministry have no clearly established responsibilities. Without clear roles and responsibilities we have seen that kids fall through cracks that, Ms Minister, have now become crevasses. Why is the minister not clearly defining these roles for outcomes-based options?

Ms Tarchuk: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that he identified what he is talking about with outcomes-based. I think what's really important to state here is that we are not moving forward on outcomes-based formulas without working with our contracted agencies. I said the other day that, you know, our agencies are fairly enthusiastic about that. They're passing on those opinions. We're finding that where outcomes-based exists elsewhere, they're seeing awfully good results. So I certainly would stand behind the movement of working with our contracted agencies to try to improve outcomes for kids.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Oil Sands Air Quality Monitoring

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Acid rain and its effect on our lands and waterways are serious concerns of my constituents and all Albertans. My question is to the Minister of Environment. Claims were made in the media this past summer that we have stopped testing for acid rain in the Fort McMurray region. How are my constituents who live in close proximity to industrial development like the Cold Lake oil sands and Fort McMurray oil sands being protected if the government is putting less of a priority on testing for acid rain?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can assure this member and her constituents that testing, in fact, does remain a priority for this government. We do need to be vigilant. Acid deposition sampling has been in place in this province for in excess of 30 years. We have been reviewing that program, and we've determined that there are 12 areas in this province that have intensive emissions that warrant regular, ongoing monitoring. In other areas in the province probably intermittent monitoring is appropriate. I can assure the hon. member that the results of all of this monitoring are indicating that we do not have an issue. We do not have a problem with acid rain and acid deposition, and our job is to keep it that way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Leskiw: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplementary is to the same minister. Factors contributing to acid rain such as industrial development are expected to increase in coming years. What is the government doing to ensure that our lands and water resources are protected in the future in areas like Fort McMurray and Cold Lake?

2:40

Mr. Renner: Well, Mr. Speaker, we take our responsibility extremely seriously. I mentioned that we have been testing for 30 years, and that testing has indicated that there is not a concern with acid deposition that would pose any risk to the environment. That being said, it's a known fact that there is expanding industrial development in this province, and it's absolutely essential that we be vigilant to ensure that this situation that currently exists continues to stay in place. I will assure the member that that will be the case.

The Speaker: Well, the time has expired. Hon. members, we have a very, very full Routine to get through before 3 o'clock. That was 90 questions and responses today. I'm not going to stop the Routine. We're going to continue to move very quickly.

Helping Our Students to Succeed Project

Ms Calahasen: Thank you. The helping our students to succeed, otherwise known as HOSTS, project operates in three High Prairie schools and serves grades 6 to 9 students and their families. Grades 6 to 9 is a crucial time in a child's life as they begin to develop physically, mentally, and emotionally. Unfortunately, it is estimated that 10 to 20 per cent of Canadian youth are affected by mental illness resulting from anxiety, depression, substance use disorders, and other mental health issues.

However, research shows that community-based mental health services such as the HOSTS project that support families and communities are part of prevention and early detection as well as part of the solution in avoiding the much greater downstream costs resulting from the prevalence of mental health illness in Canada. Consistent with the best practice literature regarding child and youth mental health services, the primary goal of the HOSTS project is to promote resiliency skills in students, skills which enable youth to bounce back from life's setbacks and challenges. Toward this goal, the HOSTS project provides one-on-one support for students at risk, develops and implements prevention and health promotion initiatives within the schools, and connects students and their families with community resources and services.

Over the past two and a half years the HOSTS team has built strong relationships within the High Prairie region and with the staff and students in their schools. These relationships have allowed HOSTS to play a vital front-line role in prevention and early detection of youth mental health issues in the High Prairie region. More so, the HOSTS project has come to serve a critical role in the lives of students who are at risk of falling through the cracks. The success of the HOSTS project in High Prairie has been facilitated by its foundation in community partnerships, which have allowed the development of a truly unique and dynamic team approach to mental health capacity building within the schools.

The team consists of a project co-ordinator; a youth success coach; an aboriginal mentorship coach; a health and wellness coach, who is contracted through Alberta Health Services; and an addictions counsellor, who is contracted through Alberta mental health and addictions services. This complement of roles has fostered a holistic approach to student mental health and well-being. As a result, the students and families of the High Prairie region are the lucky recipients.

Congratulations. You truly are making a difference.

International Day of Persons with Disabilities

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Next Thursday, December 3, marks the International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Proclaimed by the United Nations in 1982, this day is dedicated to improving the understanding of disability issues and affirming our commitment to the rights of persons with disabilities. It is also a day set aside to celebrate the courage and achievements of our fellow Albertans who live with disabilities and in particular their many contributions to our economy, our culture, and an improved quality of life for all.

Around the province the International Day of Persons with Disabilities celebrations will feature presentations of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities awards of excellence. These awards honour and recognize Albertans with disabilities and those who support them in four categories: education, employment, community, and public awareness. Mr. Speaker, as a province we have a collective responsibility to ensure that people with disabilities receive the supports and services they need to participate to the fullest possible extent in community life. The focal point for much of this work in Alberta is the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities.

I am very proud to serve with such a distinguished group of Albertans. Under the able leadership of Chair Marlin Styner of Red Deer, the council continues work in critical areas, including the expansion of sustainable employment opportunities for disabled persons and the development of standards for universal, barrier-free design. I look forward to providing further updates to the House on this work in the new year.

Mr. Speaker, as parliamentarians we have the opportunity and, I believe, the duty to support the work of the council and that of other community organizations working in this area. I invite all members to participate, if possible, in their local communities in events on December 3.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Carbon Emissions Reduction

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the world's leaders gather in Copenhagen to discuss a new climate protocol, this government continues to promote its laughable intensity emissions limits. Reductions based on intensity targets are insulting to the Copenhagen process and endorsed only by the remnants of the failed Bush administration. The government is always willing to capitulate to industry while the issue of climate change remains at the environmental forefront internationally.

There is a marked unwillingness and an inability to balance environmental needs with industry demands, and any attempts by this government in recent months to dispel this notion are merely window dressing. While the Premier ignores the threat of climate change in the hope that it will just go away, our largest trading partners are moving to introduce absolute reductions of greenhouse gases, and it is likely that these plans will penalize imports from countries that refuse to acknowledge environmental realities and take meaningful steps to clean them up, countries like Canada, provinces like Alberta. This lack of leadership paves the way for the federal government to ignore the imminent need to act, and all of this leads to Alberta's and, indeed, Canada's embarrassment on the international stage.

We have a responsibility not only provincially but nationally and internationally to ensure that we are adhering to a meaningful emissions reductions scheme. Instead of concrete actions with viable solutions, this Premier prefers to waste taxpayers' money by committing a total of $2 billion of provincial money to a carbon capture and storage project that is more focused on enhanced oil recovery than it is on environmental protection, that is still experimental, and that is yet another subsidy for very profitable oil and gas corporations. What this government needs to do is realign its priorities and come up with concrete, enforceable targets which will take into account the social and political and environmental issues at stake in the ongoing development of the tar sands.

The world will be watching us next week in Copenhagen and asking questions that this government won't be able to answer, primarily because our Premier can't be bothered to attend. The international community will be demanding that we act in an environmentally responsible and sustainable way. We all know we can. We need to. The cost of inaction is unacceptable.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka as chair of the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment.

Mr. Prins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of the report of the Standing Committee on Resources and Environment, which provides a summary of the public presentations received by the committee at its November 2 and November 4, 2009, meetings respecting various issues within the Resources and Environment Committee mandate.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Bhullar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and present a petition from the good people of Chateau Estates, whom I very happily represent. It states: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to build a road to replace 84th Street that will connect Chateau Estates Park to 16th Avenue."

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, with 72 signatures representing residents of Calgary and area, states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to:

- Grandfather the rights and status of all currently-practicing Registered Massage Therapists . . . in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting two petitions today. Actually, they are of the same nature. The first one, with 5,778 signatures, represents residents of Edmonton and area, and it states:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta or its representatives, including Boards and Commissions, to locate double circuit 500kV transmission power lines 800 metres away from homes, schools, daycares, hospitals and [even] environmentally sensitive areas or locate them underground.

That's the first one.

The second one, with 1,088 signatures, represents the residents of Edmonton and area, and it states:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta or its representatives, including Boards and Commissions, to locate double circuit high voltage transmission lines (550 KV) away from residential neighborhoods or locate them underground.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to represent the voice of my constituents. I will keep continuing to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore it's my pleasure today to table the member's petition – and I read – pertaining to:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to redevelop Alberta Hospital [as has been mentioned in this House] as necessary in order to maintain all services, programs, and beds operating as of September 1, 2009.

I submit today over 5,000 signatures.

2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Liepert: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I thought I'd help the opposition out a little bit since they do the bulk of their research through the local media. I would table five copies of a story that's in the media quoting Anne Doig, the president of the Canadian Medical Association, who is urging on behalf of doctors and patients politicians to quit waging a war of words alleging mismanagement of the nation's response to H1N1: "As a family physician whose primary focus is her patients, I say this partisan political posturing must stop."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder in his position as deputy chair of the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee.

Mr. Elniski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to section 15(2) of the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund Act and as deputy chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund it is my pleasure to table the 2009-10 second-quarter update to the fund. Copies will be distributed to the members this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona.

Mr. Quest: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition with 674 names mainly from Strathcona county and the Edmonton area. It reads: "We, the undersigned, are opposed to the construction of a high voltage power line across or within sight of the Country Side Golf Course in Strathcona County."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dr. Sherman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of a petition with 120 signatures from students at NorQuest College asking for continued support of the Alberta Works learners' program and oversight of educational institutions who administer the Alberta Works learners' program. The petition states:

We the undersigned Residents of Alberta, Petition the Legislative Assembly to pass legislation that will increase the Alberta works Learners fund and pass legislation that will make Educational Institutions Responsible for properly monitoring incoming and outgoing students based on their career goals.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of mismanagement, I have a tabling today that summarizes the wasteful spending of this government. It totals $577 million, including one item of $1.7 million in lottery grants to golf courses based on a 10-year average. It's a summary of spending cuts that could be made without gutting public health care, public education, or children's services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Xiao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just right before we started this session, two little children came to my office to drop off the signatures they collected in my constituency. Their names are Jessie and Cassidy. They collected 102 signatures, and it states: "Bury powerlines, please." I'd like to table these signatures.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity.

Mr. Chase: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today dealing with funding shortfalls. My first tabling is a budget submission from the Alberta Graduate Council. This report outlines the priorities of Alberta's graduate students such as continuing current scholarships, increasing base funding, maintaining tuition levels, supporting international students, and providing operating funding for research.

My second set of tablings includes five copies of the brochure entitled Solutions: All That's Missing Is U, from Homeless Awareness Week, which took place September 14 through 20 in Calgary, which illustrates that homelessness is still a growing problem, with the number of people needing a place to sleep in Calgary growing at a rate five times the rate of population growth this year.

Next, I have five copies of the list of 2009 FCSS-funded programs and services, all of which have worked tirelessly for years on making funding dollars stretch as far as they can and providing services that are obviously essential to society and which save untold dollars in government spending through their involvement in the not-for-profit sector.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I have the requisite number of copies of the 2008 report on Calgary's FCSS program and 2009 funding recommendations, which I received after having the pleasure of meeting with Alderman Connelly; Martin Hornstein, the executive director of the Learning Disabilities Association of Alberta, Calgary chapter; and Debra Hartley, social planner, family and community support services with the city, and which highlighted how FCSS-funded agencies are facing increasing demands for services without increased funding resources and focusing on how preventative services save dollars over time and are one of the best investments government can make.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a petition which was circulated in the area of Norwood school in his riding. The petition reads:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government to do more to protect our community schools in Edmonton's inner city. Our City Centre Education Project schools are an integral part of our communities and are essential to the revitalization of our neighborhoods. Don't close our schools.

The petition has approximately 1,300 signatures.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter from Mr. Ron Stern, president and CEO of Alberta Newsprint Company. Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I do, I just want to congratulate those that have sacrificed their facial hair for some money. I will say that in our caucus we raised a hundred dollars to shave the Minister of Municipal Affairs very quickly, and then we took a look and raised $500 to not shave. So that's it.

On behalf of the minister of finance, Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2009-10 quarterly budget report for the second quarter. This quarterly report has already been provided to all MLAs. We have also made this report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. Accordingly, I wish to table the required number of copies of the second-quarter fiscal update, 2009-10, which serves as our amended fiscal plan.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Snelgrove, President of the Treasury Board, report of selected payments to the Members and former Members of the Legislative Assembly and persons directly associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, year ended March 31, 2009.

On behalf of the hon. Mr. Liepert, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Health Facilities Review Committee Act the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee annual report 2008-2009. Pursuant to the Health Professions Act the Alberta College of Occupational Therapists annual report 2008-2009; the College of Alberta Dental Assistants annual report, June 1, 2008, to May 31, 2009; the College of Alberta Psychologists annual report 2008-2009, with attached financial statements; the College of Hearing Aid Practitioners of Alberta annual report 2008-2009; and the College of Registered Psychiatric Nurses of Alberta annual report 2009.

Projected Government Business

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'd be very interested to hear from the Government House Leader what projected government business he anticipates for next week. I'm assuming it's more along the lines of returning to our constituencies and going back to work there.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, in anticipation of the Assembly adjourning this afternoon right after completion of Royal Assent by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor, I am going to advise the House that there is no projected government business to report.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Page Recognition

Mr. Cao: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker and all hon. members. Each day of the session we are served by the dedicated efforts of our pages. Daily they show patience and understanding of our many demands. On behalf of all members of this Assembly and as Deputy Speaker I would like to present each page a Christmas gift to say thank you and to wish a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to our pages and their families. Now, I would like to ask the head page, Conor Smyth, to receive his gift and to distribute our gifts to other pages. I would ask all members to show our sincere appreciation for the pages. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 7(7) now kicks in as the chair is to advise all members of the Assembly that we've arrived at 3 o'clock. If we want to continue the Routine, there have been several here asking for permission to revert to introductions. Is anybody opposed to waiving the Routine to deal with the introductions?

The Speaker: Thank you very much. First of all, the hon. Minister of Energy, who should be smiling today because he is currently celebrating his 44th wedding anniversary with his very young bride.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Swan Hills, 44 years ago today. First church wedding in Swan Hills, and there was no church.

It gives me great pleasure and it's an honour for me to be able to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of my department staff. They're in the members' gallery. As I read out their names I'd ask them to stand, please: Tim Grant, Rhonda Duncan, Ian McKay, Bevan Laing, Jason Adam, Murray Anderson, Susan Sangalla, Matthew Good, and Kristin Stolarz. They were instrumental, of course, in the work that's been done relative to the transmission system and the bill that we had recently before the House, and I would ask all members of the Assembly to give them a warm and generous welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Oberle: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our government members' caucus staff. This is a fantastic group of young professionals. I find it absolutely invigorating to work with them. This is me invigorated. From my own office we have Lisa Stachniak and Graeme Ireland. From the research and communications branch we have Jeri Romaniuk, Nickolas Bailey, Chad Barber, Ryan Barberio, Elizabeth Clement, Andre Despins, Kim Gaudet, Josh McGregor, Natalie Sigalet, Jonathan Koehli, Christine Myatt, Brock Harrison, Eldon McIlwain, and Patrick Naud. And we have legislative assistants Jan Aldous, Ryan Algar, Emly Anderson, Tracy Arnell, Courtney Banman, Lianne Bell, Colin Connon, Lindsay Cooke, Tawny Elliott, Damon Enns, Ashley Geis, Sarah Desharnais, Kate Jenvey, Wendy King, Robyn Kowalski, Jonathan Huckabay, Hana Marinkovic, Brock Mulligan, Renee Reitsma, Marshall Thiessen, and Dianne Wills. I would like to ask that all members join me in thanking these dedicated individuals, and I ask that we give them the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Orders of the Day

Adjournment of Fall Session

23. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the Legislative Assembly stand adjourned on November 26, 2009, upon completion of Royal Assent by His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

The Speaker: Hon. members, that motion is neither debatable nor amendable, so I ask for your concurrence.

[Government Motion 23 carried]

Royal Assent

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

[The Premier and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

The Speaker: Hon. members, in the year 2009 we started sitting on February 10. Today is November 26, but to the end of sitting yesterday afternoon in 2009 we sat for 63 days, including 10 evening sittings. In 2008 we sat 56 days, which included 36 evening sittings. The number of minutes this year that we've sat is 17,342, compared to 18,665 in 2008. The number of hours we have sat in 2009 is 289 hours and two minutes, compared to 311 hours and five minutes in 2008. Interestingly enough, while we sat fewer hours, more words were spoken. This year in 2009 to 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon 2,317,404 words were spoken. Oh, sorry. That's incorrect. A few less than last year, which was 2,455,104.

The number of words spoken by members in standing committee meetings this year was 1,188,234, compared to 898,705 last year. The number of hours of committee meetings to date this year, in 2009, is 140 hours, 57 minutes not counting meetings held in camera, compared to 110 hours, 23 minutes for 2008. So there's a substantial increase.

In Oral Question Period we had 14 occasions this year in which 17 sets of questions and answers were asked, as compared to 2008, when there were 11. This year we had 11 opportunities when 18 sets of questions and answers were provided. Last year it was 24. This year we had one occasion on which 19 sets of questions and answers were provided. Last year we had two. Last year we had two occasions on which 21 sets of questions and answers were given as compared to this year. The total number of questions and answers as of yesterday was 6,080, an average of 96.51 per day. Last year there were fewer questions asked, 5,643, but they averaged 102.6 questions and answers per day.

Government bills that have received royal assent to now is 46, but in a few minutes from now there'll be 16 more added, so that makes

62. Last year it was 52. The number of government bills presumed to be left on the Order Paper this year is zero compared to one last year.

Private members' bills which received royal assent this year is two, the same as last year. We've now had 46 private members' bills passed since the changes were made.

In terms of sessional papers to noon of today it was 696, compared to 641 for 2008.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

The Speaker: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit His Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Norman L. Kwong, CM, AOE, and the Premier entered the Chamber. His Honour took his place upon the throne] [applause]

His Honour: Standing ovation. What did I do? Thank you very much, hon. members. Please be seated.
